

CANADA

HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

FIRST SESSION—THIRTIETH PARLIAMENT

25 Elizabeth II

VOLUME XIII, 1976

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE FIFTH DAY OF MAY, 1976,
TO THE SEVENTH DAY OF JUNE, 1976, INCLUSIVE

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

Published under the authority of the Speaker of the House of Commons by the Queen's Printer for Canada

Available from Printing and Publishing, Supply and Services, Ottawa, Canada K1A 0S9

95568—1½

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, May 5, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSAL TO STATION ELEMENTS OF SEARCH AND RESCUE GROUP IN NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. A 20-hour time lag before the search and rescue centre in Halifax reacted to the loss of a Canadian fisherman off western Newfoundland emphasizes again the lack of co-ordination between responsible elements of and weakness in Canada's effort to provide a rescue capability. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian citizen lost on Monday has still not been found. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House orders that elements of Canada's search and rescue group be deployed and stationed in the province of Newfoundland immediately, pending the report of the task force on search and rescue policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can only be presented to the House when there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO PERMIT COST OF LIVING INCREASES IN PENSIONS OF RETIRED MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES AND MOUNTED POLICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to present a motion concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House urges the President of the Treasury Board to introduce at an early date the necessary amendments to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, so that retired Canadian Armed Forces and Royal Canadian Mounted Police personnel will have their pensions escalated annually in accordance with the rise in the cost of living, commencing in the year following the year of retirement, regardless of age, thus ending the discrimination that applies to many of such personnel.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Under Standing Order 43 the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STUDY ON AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce an urgent motion of pressing necessity.

Since the average cost of premiums for automobile insurance in Canada increased by 25 to 30 per cent last year and since they will go up by 45 per cent this year for an ordinary car and 100 per cent for a commercial vehicle, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette):

That this House immediately discuss the entire record of automobile and other insurance and shed light on the real operation costs of that business to protect Canadians who are already tackling other problems as a result of inflation.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

* * *

[English]

HEALTH

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF MEANS OF MAKING CANADA SELF-SUFFICIENT IN THE PRODUCTION OF VACCINES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to present a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that by its failure to create a national capability to produce enough A-swine influenza vaccine to meet our own needs the government has endangered the health of Canadians; and in view of the fact that the executive vice-president of Connaught Laboratories, our most important supplier of vaccines, has stated that Canada could very quickly become self-sufficient in large-scale vaccine production, and that "it would be a very small price to pay for not having to rely on outside sources in other countries who can only help us when their own needs are fulfilled, especially in a potential epidemic situation like the one we may be experiencing this year," I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

● (1410)

That the question of the means by which Canada might most speedily be made self-sufficient in the production of vaccines be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs for study and report.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

ENERGY

PROPOSED COMMISSION TO MAKE INVENTORY OF CANADIAN RESOURCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to discuss an urgent and important matter.

As the federal government does not have the means to evaluate scientifically Canadian oil and gas reserves, and as it has become urgent to assess our energy resources because we use a considerable amount of oil, which resource is not renewable, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That this House order the government to take all necessary steps as soon as possible to create, with the approval and participation of the provinces, a commission on Canadian resources which would be responsible for estimating our energy needs for the next 25 years as well as the availability of adequate reserves to meet the needs of all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, it requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

REQUEST FOR REFERENDUM ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that Canadians are completely opposed to Bill C-84 aimed at abolishing the death penalty, that the government seems determined to ignore the opinion of the majority of Canadians on this subject and that democracy cannot survive nor prosper unless the views of the majority of citizens are taken into account, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette):

That this House examine immediately the possibility of a national referendum on the question of capital punishment and this before the final vote on Bill C-84 is called, to enable hon. members to vote according to the will clearly expressed by all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL SECURITY

ALLEGED INSTRUCTIONS ISSUED BY PRIME MINISTER TO SECURITY SERVICE—POSSIBLE CONTRADICTION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. General M. R. Dare, the Director General of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Security Service, indicated in a letter to Mr. Robin Bourne, Chairman of the Security Advisory Committee of his ministry, that the RCMP received instructions from the Prime Minister in effect restricting the inquiries of the secret service with regard to certain of its investigations in mid-1975. Can the minister inform the House whether he is aware of these instructions issued by the Prime Minister to the RCMP with respect to their investigation, and whether he had any input into the decision to issue such instructions?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member mentions my name, I think I might be permitted to reply. I prefer to begin by saying that I did not recognize the existence of this letter from our top security person to our second top security person. I am somewhat distressed that such a letter exists and is in the hands of the public. I, personally, only read this letter for the first time five minutes ago when I was in the House. I can state unequivocally that there are at least two inaccuracies in the letter. I understand that it is being referred to a cabinet committee in order to see if the instructions therein are exact. Such reference has not taken place.

Therefore, it is inexact to say that anything contained in this letter is government policy.

Mr. Nielsen: Since the Solicitor General choses not to answer my question—

Mr. Trudeau: He can answer, too.

Mr. Nielsen: —as to whether or not he was aware of these instructions which the letter sets forth, clearly indicating personal interference of the Prime Minister with the investigation of the RCMP, let me ask him this. On November 27, 1975 in response to a question by the hon. member for Halifax as reported on page 9492 of Hansard for that date, the Prime Minister stated:

> . . . when the police or the Solicitor General informed me that they were going to carry out an investigation of some well known member of the Canadian public, whether Liberal, Tory, NDP or somebody outside, I always told them, "Look, do your duty; I do not want to interfere in any way."

The Prime Minister went on to say, as reported on page 9501:

> . . . there are no orders, no theory and no practice under which the police must ask my permission to talk to any minister, any member of the House of Commons or any member of the Canadian public.

In the light of that statement, taken together with the letter which the Prime Minister says he has read, I ask the right hon. gentleman whether he does not consider the issuance of guidelines restricting RCMP inquiries into any segment of the Canadian public to be in direct contradiction to government policy as stated by him on November 27, 1975.

Mr. Trudeau: The short answer, Mr. Speaker, is no. The longer one is that such guidelines were not issued and do not exist. That is why I say there are some inaccuracies in this letter. The statement I made, and which the hon. member quotes—I have not refreshed my mind with respect to it and it is obviously ad lib—still stands as I heard it now. This does not mean that the police do not operate under ministers and under a government responsible to parliament; if they ask us for instructions in the pursuance of their duties it does not mean we cannot examine the matter. This has been the subject of study by a royal commission set up some years ago followed by indications from this government as to the manner in which it wanted the security force to exist and operate. Unlike the opposition, we have confidence in the RCMP and we do not rely on gumshoes to do the work which we believe the police can do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REASON PRIME MINISTER ISSUED INSTRUCTIONS TO SECURITY SERVICE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I might observe that in the light of the Prime Minister's reply some doubt arises as to whether or not General Dare should continue in his present post, having regard to what he says in this letter. But may I put this question to the Prime Minister: since it is the primary responsibility of the Solicitor General to oversee the function of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, can the right hon. gentleman explain why he took it upon himself to issue the directives that General Dare says were issued rather than direct the matter to the attention of the Solicitor General who has to take responsibility for the RCMP?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer to that is quite simple. I hope the hon. member will not, when I give it, use, as he did, the words, "interference with the work of the RCMP". There were no guidelines issued by me or any interference by me. There is a cabinet committee on security and intelligence which oversees the operation of government agents in the area of security and intelligence. Certain conclusions were reached which were communicated to the police. They were not communicated by me personally or under my name. They were the object of a cabinet decision. If the letter says and implies the contrary, it is just an indication of mistakes in the letter. This bears out what I was saying earlier—that the letter contains several errors.

* * *

[Translation]

NATIONAL SECURITY

INQUIRY WHETHER PARTI QUÉBÉCOIS MEMBERS EXEMPTED FROM INVESTIGATION BEFORE BEING HIRED

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question also concerns the right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Dare states in his letter that, because of discussions held concerning investigation criteria for employees who are to join the civil service, normally an investigation should be done for those individuals. Mr. Dare says that in the case of a member of the Parti québécois he would have been asked by the Prime Minister not to carry out an investigation, except of course, if this individual had been involved in a violent incident. Is Mr. Dare telling the truth or not? That is the question I am asking the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I bring the attention of the hon. member to the fact that General Dare himself comes to this conclusion in his letter. Apparently the text reads as follows:

> Consequently, I believe that . . . consequently the Security Service . . .

That is his own conclusion from a directive issued by the cabinet, which, in my opinion, does not say that at all. And this is why the letter has been referred to the committee on security and intelligence to establish whether General Dare was drawing valid conclusions. However, I repeat that, in my opinion, his conclusions are not valid; that is why the matter was referred to a cabinet committee.

INQUIRY WHETHER INVESTIGATION MADE ON ALL MEMBERS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): A last supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

For greater clarification, according to the Prime Minister's reply, I understand that if it sees fit the RCMP will conduct an investigation about any person belonging to the Parti québécois, the Liberal Party, the Tory Party or any other party.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would add something else. When the government considers the appointment of anyone to a civil service post that involves security, or even when an appointment is made by order in council to a post involving security, we always ask the RCMP to provide us with a file on that person and advise us on subjects they feel we should be aware of. This applies, I repeat, to members of the Liberal Party, Progressive Conservative Party, Parti québécois, Social Credit Party and to those who do not militate in any political party.

* * *

[English]

INDUSTRY

ALLEGED OBJECTION OF UNITED STATES TO CANADIAN SUBSIDIARY OF PRATT AND WHITNEY ENTERING INTO CONTRACT WITH ROLLS-ROYCE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I resent the fact that the Prime Minister left out the NDP in his list. It simply means that of course we are "super safe".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The minister said yesterday that nothing has happened in the Pratt and Whitney of Canada case which would "inhibit development in Canada". Since Pratt and Whitney of Canada stopped their development work following instructions from their parent firm after the U.S. department of justice opinion on the matter, having done so on the clear legal understanding that the parent firm in the United States, following this opinion, would have been subject to legal action had the work in Canada not stopped, would the minister now please explain just what he meant yesterday?

● (1420)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I will to a degree, Mr. Speaker, but as I pointed out yesterday I am waiting for additional information from the United States and our sources there as to just what is the legal position. The point that I was making was that the informal opinion was not in itself something that would necessarily inhibit the company from a legal point of view. I think the hon. member is indeed correct that, as a result of the informal opinion having been given, a stop has been put on the work, so in that sense his position is thoroughly consistent. The point that I was making was that it was not a legal decision in the United States that had caused the situation but company reaction to what I understand was an informal opinion. Whether that stop is of a permanent nature is what I am seeking to find out.

I mentioned to the hon. member yesterday that the information that I have, which has not been confirmed by official sources, is that it is now likely that there will be an informal inquiry made in the United States to determine what will be the reaction of the United States government. If and when that occurs, of course, we will decide what action by the government of Canada or by my department is most suitable in the circumstances.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am not going to ask the minister to repeat that answer, but the gist of what he has said is that the action of the company located in Canada has resulted in this development work, which would have provided up to 1,000 jobs, being in fact stopped. Therefore I would ask the minister this question. Is it not the case that the work was stopped in Canada precisely because, in the legal view of the parent firm in the United States, had the work been proceeded with they would have been subject to legal action in the United States? If it is the case, does this not clearly represent interference in Canada by an outside country and corporation?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I certainly will not ask the hon. member to repeat the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: At the risk of being evasive, which I assure the hon. member I do not want to be—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Come on, Don.

Mr. Jamieson: I think hon. members will understand that what is involved here is a highly technical legal question. I should like very much, in terms of giving him a detailed answer, to get something in writing, which I have not had up to the moment. I have tried to answer to the point that I can on the basis of what is essentially hearsay, in the sense that people have been giving me various reports of what has happened. I have not seen anything in writing. As to whether or not this kind of action, if in fact the framework the hon. member has outlined is correct, is of concern, let me say it is of great concern. I repeat, once I have all the facts I will be looking at them in terms of further action that can be taken regarding what appears to be at the moment something very damaging to the Canadian economy and Canadian industry.

* * *

COMBINES

DATE OF REQUEST THAT DIRECTOR INVESTIGATE ALLEGED INTERFERENCE BY UNITED STATES WITH CANADIAN SUBSIDIARY OF PRATT AND WHITNEY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I would add, and a violation of Canadian laws now in existence. I should like to direct my final supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Since Section 31.6 of the Combines Investigation Act stipulates that interference by an outside country occurs if a company in Canada makes a decision which is the result of an "instruction" or "intimation of policy" from another country or outside person, I should like to ask when the head of the Combines Investigation Branch had this particular case brought to his attention, which clearly involves a contravention, and when can we expect action from the government before these jobs are permanently lost?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I brought the matter to the attention of the director for investigation the moment it was brought to my attention, which was, frankly, yesterday morning and not before. The director has the case in hand. He fills, as you know, a quasi judicial function. His first job is to make certain that our law is as the hon. member presumes it to be and as I presume it to be. He is seeking information from the United States. If he finds that the Department of Justice of the United States has interfered to the degree that it could cost jobs to Canadian subsidiaries, then I suggest it is about time for this government to do something to prevent any such further interference with the domestic scene, because we need all the jobs we can get in this country for Canadian workers. We do not want that type of inference by a foreign country, particularly if it is in clear violation of our laws. However, we want to make sure what are the facts.

* * *

[Translation]

FINANCE

PROPOSAL BY ONTARIO TO ADOPT TWO-PRICE SYSTEM FOR OIL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Minister of Finance.

He announced a readjustment of oil prices within a few months so as to keep them in line with world market prices. Now, quite recently, yesterday or the day before, the premier of Ontario suggested a two-price system, for oil namely one which would prevail on the home market since we are entitled to pay below the international rate, being ourselves oil producers, and the other on the international market.

Is the Minister of Finance aware of this solution? Did he contact the Ontario premier? Is he in a position to advise us whether or not the government is prepared to consider this dual pricing to safeguard and protect the interests of the Canadian consumer?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of this suggestion but it is my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who held talks with his Ontario counterpart. Perhaps the hon. member may wish to put his question to him.

* * *

● (1430)

ENERGY

PROPOSALS BY ONTARIO TO ADOPT TWO-PRICE SYSTEM FOR OIL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

This is the same question. I would like to know whether there have been communications between his department and the government of Ontario about the adoption of a two price system for oil, that is a Canadian price for Canadians and an international price, with a view to protecting Canadian consumers and allowing them to pay less than the international price?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows I am sure, of course, we already have a two-price system. We have one price for Canadian consumers, which protects them against the international price, and we are selling our oil at international prices. The proposal that the Ontario government has put forward is a very complicated system which would deal with the various elements in a very complicated way and would not provide any additional funds for the exploration and development of Canadian resources which in my view are desperately needed.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I want to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Is the minister in a position to give details? I understand he has just told us there now exists a two-price system, one price for eastern Canada and another for western Canada, as we have a two-price system in the north of the province of Ontario. In Rouyn we pay for gasoline about 14 cents a gallon more than in Kirkland Lake, and these two places are only 50 miles apart. That is a two-price system. But this is the point I want to make . . .

An hon. Member: It is the difference between Whigs and Tories!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): If you do not believe me, come and you will see that it is how things are.

Mr. Speaker, I want to know whether Canadian consumers can draw any benefits from the development of their own natural resources. That is where we would like to see a two-price system, in which there would be one price for Canadian consumers and another, an international one, for the other countries, in order to make transactions with other countries and protect Canadian consumers. Is the minister in a position to say whether steps are being taken to achieve that?

[English]

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the government has taken steps to protect the consumer ever since the oil price increase in 1973.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: For those who would laugh, just let me mention that the bill, in terms of the subsidy for the Atlantic provinces alone since the start, will be by the middle of this year very close to $1 billion. The hon. member probably has not made the important distinction between retail prices which are governed by the market arrangements within the provinces and which are not under the regulation of the federal government. The federal government has provided to Canadians one price. It is $8 per barrel at the wellhead which is roughly $4.50 below the international price. If the Ontario government has any plan to impose one retail price for gasoline in the province of Ontario, that particular proposal has not been raised with me.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF GUIDELINES ISSUED TO SECURITY AGENCY BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. Will the Solicitor General table a copy of the guidelines which were issued to the RCMP by the Prime Minister restricting the security services inquiries and will the Solicitor General table a copy of the Role Tasks and Methods of the RCMP security service as the Prime Minister specifically referred in an interview with General Dare to sections (a) to (f) in that document.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I just learned about this some minutes before the question period as well, and I am not quite sure I know what they are talking about. I intend to look into it and get as much information as possible.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, is the Solicitor General, who is responsible for the RCMP, indicating that he is not aware of any guidelines which were issued by the Prime Minister or by a cabinet committee which controls the activities of the RCMP?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the different directives from time to time. As a matter of fact, the security service is guided by provisions of the Privacy Act in respect of the use of electronic surveillance. There are other directives as well which are put forward from time to time. However, in answer to the direct question, I am not sure what the hon. member is talking about. I have not read the article which is the basis for this and I intend to get all the information before answering the question.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF DUBÉ INQUIRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he has taken any steps to implement the recommendations of the Dubé immigration practices inquiry, in particular as it relates to the need to establish regulations governing immigration counsellors and a tariff of fees for their services.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I gave a detailed answer to this question before the standing committee when my estimates were being discussed about two or three days ago. I would need more time than is permitted to give a detailed answer now, but the short answer is that almost every recommendation of the Dubé Committee has been implemented or is being implemented now. With regard to the specific reference to the very important and significant question of questionable practices by so-called immigration counsellors, we are looking very seriously at this in terms of the development of a new immigration policy and new legislation which we hope to place before the House this fall.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

POSSIBLE MISAPPREHENSION OF GENERAL DARE ABOUT GUIDELINES FROM PRIME MINISTER—NUMBER OF MEETINGS WITH GENERAL DARE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question relating to the answers he gave to questions of my colleague the hon. member for Yukon. I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman if General Dare is under some misapprehension with regard to the Prime Minister issuing guidelines to restrict RCMP investigations. Will the Prime Minister report now or in due course how this occurred and also state how often he and General Dare meet in any given period for discussion of security matters and where the Solicitor General fits in, if he does?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, in the letter which apparently was quoted it is apparent to me that General Dare was asking for instructions of a cabinet committee. That is why I answered earlier that his answer obviously was not final and he was drawing conclusions which he was not sure of himself and which I have stated are erroneous. With regard to how often I meet with the general, I am not sure what the relevance is of that question.

An hon. Member: Twice a week?

Mr. Trudeau: Twice a week is overstating the case.

* * *

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

NUMBER OF DIRECTIVES ISSUED BY PRIME MINISTER CONCERNING INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, given the Prime Minister's professed concern for the independence of the RCMP can he advise the House if he has issued directives in other instances involving the conduct of RCMP investigations and if this is the case could the Prime Minister inform the House of the nature of those directives and those occasions which he felt warranted them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The way in which the question is phrased, Mr. Speaker, leads me to believe the hon. member was not here or was not listening when I answered the first question. I indicated quite clearly that there hade been no directives issued by me in the case.

PENITENTIARIES

REASON FOR TRANSFERRING TWO INMATES FROM ARCHAMBAULT TO WARKWORTH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Could the Solicitor General explain to the House what possible justification there can be for transferring, under pressure, two dangerous criminals from Archambault maximum security prison to the Warkworth medium security institution which is not designed or operated to handle this kind of criminal?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the decision was made late last night. In the process of negotiations, the inmates had put several demands to the authorities. All the other demands were rejected. However, this demand was accepted only on the condition that when they went to Warkworth they would be given a security classification test and that there would be no guarantee they would stay there if they did not meet the classification. One of the inmates had been at Warkworth and had asked to go back there. We told them that in these circumstances, to resolve the hostage-taking incident, we would send them there but there was no guarantee they would stay there if they did not meet the criteria of the institution.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious why the criminals concerned asked to go to Warkworth. It is a completely different type of institution. I would ask the minister would he not agree that this display of weakness on the part of the government will invite similar violent pressure by dangerous criminals in maximum security institutions to be transferred to medium security institutions which are not in any way designed to handle this type of criminal whose lifestyle is completely different. If the Solicitor General has any doubts about the kind of lifestyle in these medium security institutions, I suggest he ask Harold Ballard of Maple Leaf Gardens.

● (1440)

Mr. Allmand: It was exactly for those reasons that we would not give them any guarantee that they would stay at Warkworth, and it was considered that if they were willing to go to Warkworth, even for a short period of time, it was a good way to resolve the conflict and possibly to save two lives.

Mr. Hees: I am sure the minister is confident that they will not stay in Warkworth long because this type of criminal is the kind who will probably lead a jail break out of Warkworth in the very near future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED DEPLOYMENT OF SEARCH AND RESCUE GROUP IN NEWFOUNDLAND—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that there has been another unfortunate incident in which a Canadian fisherman was lost, and in view of the time lag of 20 hours before search and rescue were able to react, I wonder if the minister would, since there have been so many incidents, direct that elements of the search and rescue group be deployed to the province of Newfoundland with aircraft capable of providing surveillance and patrol capability.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly look into the circumstances surrounding the alleged time lag. With regard to the possibility of deploying search and rescue personnel and equipment to Newfoundland the hon. member will know that we have examined that on a number of occasions in the past. It has not been found to be cost effective.

An hon. Member: What about lives?

Mr. Richardson: However, my colleague, the Minister of Transport, and I have been examining on an urgent basis ways in which we can improve the search and rescue capability, and the comments of the hon. member will be kept in mind.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Life is involved.

Mr. Marshall: It is difficult to imagine why a price tag should be put on the saving of lives or the capability to save lives.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Marshall: I emphasize that since the first of the year there has been only one rescue out of seven operations by airsea rescue, and everything points to the fact that the reaction time between leaving Halifax and entering the zone is at least two and a half hours. I hope the minister will reconsider and see the need for deploying the elements to the province of Newfoundland so they can react more quickly and save more lives.

Mr. Richardson: These facts will be borne in mind when the study which is taking place is fully under way.

* * *

HEALTH

MEASURES TO PROTECT VISITORS TO OLYMPIC GAMES AGAINST POLIO—POSSIBLE USE OF SABIN ORAL VACCINE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the great anxiety felt over the discovery of wild viruses of polio, and the fact that only approximately 30 per cent of young people in the province of Ontario have any antibodies against all three types of polio virus and no protection, excepting the neuromotor system, against the wild viruses of polio, I should like to ask the Minister what steps will be taken to protect those people visiting the Olympic Games in Montreal.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have been assured by Connaught Laboratories that there is a plentiful supply of vaccine.

The population is encouraged to get vaccinated if this has not been done recently. Both in August of 1974 and in July of 1975 I instructed that inserts be put in with family allowances asking mothers to see that their children be vaccinated, and the only other piece of advice I can give is for people concerned to get their vaccinations from the usual sources from which they have been getting them in the past.

Mr. Rynard: In view of the short time left for total immunization I should like to ask the minister, as the senior health minister of the provinces, whether he would advise the use of the Sabin oral vaccine, which would protect those people attending the games.

Mr. Lalonde: We asked the national advisory committee at their meeting of October 30 and 31 of last year to study the matter of all the vaccines presently used in Canada against polio, and that particular committee has reported that both Salk and Sabin vaccines were found to be suitable to fight polio. so I am not in a position to advise at this stage as to whether one should be preferred over the other.

Mr. Rynard: I should like to ask the minister if he checked into the fact that the Sabin vaccine is the only one which protects against the neuro-muscular type of polio and other manifestations of the disease.

Mr. Lalonde: I will check into that, but I understand that this is not the advice we received from the national advisory committee.

* * *

STATUS OF WOMEN

PROPOSED PENSIONS FOR HOMEMAKERS AND CAPITAL GRANTS FOR CHILD CARE CENTRES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his capacity as minister responsible for the status of women. Now that ten days have gone by since the delegates of the national action committee respecting the status of women were here in Ottawa and in light of his having met yesterday in Winnipeg with the National Advisory Council, is the minister in a position to state whether the government is prepared to introduce further specific measures to improve the status of women such as federal grants toward the capital cost of child care centres and the provision of pensions for spouses who are homemakers?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as far as the latter part of the question is concerned, the government put forward very progressive proposals to the welfare ministers conference last February. Most provinces endorsed the general principles of the proposals we put forward. They asked for time to study the details, and as the hon. member knows, the support of two thirds of the provinces having two thirds of the population is required before I can put forward any amendment to the Canada Pension Plan.

As far as the first part of the question is concerned, I remind the hon. member that as the law stands at the present time we are providing more generously than any social service for day care in Canada at the present time. This is the only social service for which we are allowing the depreciation of the capital cost as a cost eligible for cost-sharing. In addition, we are also cost-sharing the cost of rented space, so at the present time we are cost-sharing on a very generous basis, more generously than for any other social service.

I have indicated that I intend to introduce in the fall a new piece of legislation called the social services act which will provide, I hope, for even greater flexibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Paul Martin would have been proud.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Rather than these generalities would the minister indicate when the government is prepared to contribute to the actual or original capital cost of day care centres?

Mr. Lalonde: I fail to see the generality of what I said, and I will ask the hon. member to be more specific.

* * *

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CONSULTATIONS WITH UNITED STATES CONCERNING PRINCIPLES GOVERNING SEAWARD EXTENSION OF BOUNDARY LINE

Mr. Lloyd R. Grouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, April 30 I asked the Prime Minister two questions with regard to Canada-United States boundaries, and in the absence of an answer, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State (Fisheries).

Since Canada maintains the equidistant principle in the seaward extension of the boundary dividing the land mass between Canada and the United States, while the United States claims the fundian channel divides the fishing banks on the Atlantic coast, has the minister or any of his officials held recent talks with the Americans on this topic, and if so, can he inform the House on the progress being made, in view of the valuable groundfish, lobster and scallop fishery as well as possible oil, gas and minerals in this area?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, the matter was raised when we met with the state department officials handling problems relating to fisheries last week in New York. It will also be raised at the bilateral talks between the Canadian and American governments which are to take place next week in British Columbia. Meanwhile, the reciprocal arrangement which exists between the Americans and ourselves has been extended for one year, to April, 1977. I do not hide the fact that we will have some complicated boundary negotiations with the United States.

● (1450)

BASIS FOR ISSUANCE OF OIL EXPLORATION PERMITS FOR GEORGES BANK BY UNITED STATES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): A supplementary question. The United States Bureau of the Interior recently announced it is considering leasing something like 206 separate sites on the Georges Bank, totalling 1.2 million acres of ocean, to offshore oil explorations. Of these sites 138 are very important fishing grounds and I understand 50 are spawning areas for haddock, whiting-hake, herring and yellowtail flounder. Since ownership of this bank is obviously in dispute, can the minister tell the House if any informal agreement between our two countries exists and if none does, on what basis can exploration permits be issued to oil companies probing the resources of the seas?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I am more familiar with the fisheries aspect than the exploration aspect. With the hon. member's permission, I will take the question as notice.

* * *

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

INQUIRY IF FREE VOTE ON BILL C-84 WILL INCLUDE CABINET

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Will the free vote on Bill C-84 be free to the cabinet?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: Otherwise, how was your caucus this morning?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a freer group of men and women still has to be found in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

FINANCE

VIEW OF MR. JOHNSTONE OF THE ANTI-INFLATION BOARD ON EXCESSIVE GOVERNMENT SPENDING—MINISTERS POSITION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As the executive director, Robert Johnstone of the Anti-Inflation Board is reported this week as saying that "There is a point at which high rates of increase in government spending, incurring of substantial deficits, and high rates of money growth would blow the (anti-inflation) program to smithereenes," would the minister indicate if he agrees with this view and specifically does he know of any provincial or municipal governments which are allowing such excess spending increases or deficits and if so, who are they?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, all governments in Canada are exercising restraint against increases in government expenditure and, of course the Bank of Canada has been following a tighter monetary policy which has been the subject of complaints by the hon. member because of high interest rates.

EFFORTS OF MINISTER TO REDUCE DEPARTMENTAL EXPENDITURES—POSSIBLE REFERENCE OF ESTIMATES TO ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. In view of all governments following such restraint, and dealing with the minister's own spending estimates for salaries and related matters which we find have jumped by 15.5 per cent for the current year compared to a 9.5 per cent increase last year, would the minister indicate what steps he is taking to ensure that this 15.5 per cent estimated hike in his own spending will not materialize? Would he also explain to what extent he feels he can reduce his spending to meet at least the 9.5 per cent level of last year's increase and be within the AIB guidelines?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as usual the hon. gentleman's arithmetic is somewhat faulty. As indicated to the committee last night, of course the government is bound by the collective bargaining agreements already entered into. I am confident that the Treasury Board will be able to keep settlements with respect to the Department of Finance and other departments, well within the guidelines.

Mr. Stevens: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the minister is so confident concerning his own arithmetic, would he be willing to refer his own estimate increases to the AIB for a ruling to decide whether the increases are within the guidelines? Also, would the minister now confirm that his budget will be brought down on May 25, so that the nation can have a look at what this relatively highly paid staff has produced?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would have no difficulty referring them but since they obviously will be within the guidelines I see no necessity for doing that. As to the date of the budget, I will be prepared to indicate that to the House next Monday.

* * *

TRANSPORT

PURPOSE OF RELOCATION SUBSISTENCE FUND FOR AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS—APPLICABILITY TO ALL CONTROLLERS IN QUEBEC

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Has the government offered to set up a linguistic relocation subsistence fund for air traffic controllers and, if so, what is the purpose of the fund?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions concerning the terms which might be available for air traffic controllers located in a control centre which is designed to become a bilingual control centre, who are unable to operate in a bilingual control atmosphere, and who will therefore seek to be relocated rather than take the necessary training. The discussions are really related to recognizing the special circumstances of the transfer involved and indeed are therefore a better condition of transfer than is available generally.

Mr. Horner: A supplementary question. Does this fund or assistance apply to all air traffic controllers within Quebec?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the proposal is to have it available to those who find it difficult or are unwilling to accommodate themselves to a bilingual control atmosphere. In that sense it applies to all of them who are in that situation.

POSSIBILITY ONE THIRD OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS WILL LEAVE QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO CONTINGENCY PLAN

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Transport. Since there has been a request on behalf of approximately 100 traffic controllers out of some 270 in the province of Quebec, and remembering that air traffic control is a highly demanding occupation that does not readily lend itself to overtime work, has the government formulated any contingency plans should the contemplated exodus of up to or over one-third of the air traffic controllers in the province of Quebec take place?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the difficulty of having an adequate number of air traffic controllers who can control traffic in the two languages was a reason which I gave at the time of setting out the gradual schedule rather than a more rapid one for the implementation of bilingual air traffic control within the province of Quebec. I can say to the hon. member that the most recent report I have is that the number of controllers interested in moving is rather lower than the figure he is using which would be closer to the figures I have seen for both those desiring some training and those wishing to move.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO SAFETY ASPECT OF USE OF BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I believe the figures show that 62 air traffic controllers are taking active steps to leave the province and another 37 are contemplating doing so as soon as possible. Would the government at the present time be receptive to the idea of setting up an independent public inquiry to determine conditions for air safety in Quebec so that we may set this whole question to rest once and for all?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to show the hon. member that we are not at all hesitant about any kind of examination of our procedures in regard to air traffic control and the safety involved. I should remind hon. members, however, that this whole discussion is based on a plan of progressively offering additional air traffic control services in the two languages in the province of Quebec. The whole plan was based, in the case of instrument flight operations, first of all on very carefully testing and developing procedures with the co-operation of airline pilots and controllers in order to be absolutely sure they are safe. We can assure the Canadian people that we are confident the moves we are making in regard to bilingual air traffic control will be fully consistent with the high standard of safety which Canada has always had.

* * *

POST OFFICES

ALLEGED DISCONTINUANCE OF STREET CORNER BOXES FOR THE COLLECTION OF MAIL

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Is it now the policy of the Post Office Department to discontinue use of postal letter boxes on street corners as a further cutback, except in communities where there is door to door delivery service? The postal letter boxes I refer to are those used for mailing letters.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, it is not a very rigid policy. If the hon. gentleman would give me a particular case of hardship as a result of some negligence or action on the part of the Post Office, I should be glad to rectify it.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, this cutback in service affects all citizens but in particular our senior citizens. Will the minister reconsider this policy? As an example, of where it has taken place I will use the town of Neepawa, Manitoba.

Mr. Mackasey: It is a beautiful town and I shall do everything to accommodate the senior citizens.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the following communication has been received:

Government House
Ottawa

5 May, 1976

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Bora Laskin, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 5th day of May, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Jolly de Lotbinière, Administrative Secretary to the Governor General.

● (1500)

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs Considering Bill C-83 while the debate is now proceeding in the House of Commons on Bill C-84, which is part of the security package.

When this peace and security package was presented, Bill C-83 entitled "An Act for the Better Protection of Canadian Society against Perpetrators of Violent and other Crime", and Bill C-84 entitled "An Act to amend the Criminal Code in Relation to the Punishment for Murder and Certain Other Serious Offences", by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), both bills were linked together. In fact the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) in his speech on what is known as the abolition bill presented the question of gun control as the answer to control murder, and at that stage he too linked both bills together. The government linked both bills together in a peace and security package.

The personnel who are interested in the debate on Bill C-84 are also interested in the debate in committee on Bill C-83. I want to make this important point of order with regard to the arranging of business. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, because you are the only one who can protect our rights, since we are confined to the committee when the other debate is going on here as part of the same peace and security package—

An hon. Member: Where were you Monday night?

Mr. Woolliams: I happened to be here. The hon. member does not know I was here because he was absent. I do not know where he was.

The personnel on the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs naturally want to consider the debate on abolition and yet are being tied to their places on the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee because the whole strategy and plan of the government, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and the House leader is to ram legislation through. They know that crime is on the increase and they want to sell the idea to the Canadian people that they are doing something about it. In fact, they are doing absolutely nothing about it.

They flaunted their own law that they passed 2½ years ago in reference to murder. They have postponed the penalty for murder while a number of people are waiting in jail, having been convicted of killing police officers and prison wardens. Therefore my point of order is that the committee should not and must not sit while the House is considering the bill to abolish capital punishment. I have a right as a member of parliament to listen to the debate in the House of Commons. I should not be denied that right by being confined to a committee because of the Liberals over-powering majority in the House that runs slip-shod over parliament and, in particular, members of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I realize that timetables are tight. However, this is not a question of a tight timetable. It is a question, I repeat, of a government making up its mind to ram through a bill against the will of the people of Canada and the will of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Be serious.

Mr. Woolliams: I have never been more serious in my life. You, Mr. Speaker, are the only one who protects the rights of the individual members of parliament. Our rights, as they exist, exist and continue to live because you have been elected to the highest office in the House of Commons. I make this appeal to you. Should members of parliament, in particular members of the opposition who have a duty to fight Bill C-83, not because of its intention but because it is the most horrible, badly drafted legislation that has come before the House of Commons, not be in the House?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I am using this as part of my argument on my point or order. The facts that I set out now are to substantiate why we should not have two hearings going on at the same time in two parts of this institution.

I was in this House of Commons when we had a Progressive Conservative government. The then 49 Liberals refused to sit on committees while the House was sitting. the Right Hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), because he believes in democracy and the supremacy of parliament over a powerful government such as we have today, gave into that.

I am told the government wants to get the bill on the abolition of capital punishment out of the road. It wants to rush it through. I am speaking for thousand of Canadians today who are writing letters to all members of parliament on all sides of the House, and who are concerned about these bills and concerned about crime.

We have heard six witnesses with reference to Bill C-83. Our party is co-operating in every regard. However, even the written briefs are pushed through. Members are denied the right to present full argument on the briefs being presented. They are given only 15 minutes in committee. A few members are only given ten minutes, and there are many on the list who are not allowed to ask a question. The government is ramming through this legislation against the will of the people of Canada.

I am asking, therefore, that there be a directive that a matter that comes before the House in one package cannot be debated in two places at the same time. When the debate on the abolition of capital punishment commenced the other night, there were only 53 members in the House. I was one of the 53.

The committee is being asked to sit and consider one part of the package, and the House the other part. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, as guardian of the rights of parliament, to give a directive in this regard because it is the same package. I make this special appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, because the government is running slip-shod over parliament, the people of Canada and, indeed, its own backbenchers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I will direct my remarks through you to the government House leader. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has made a good point with regard to the proper consideration by this House of Bill C-83 and Bill C-84. As he pointed out, the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) in his speech the other night said it was part of one package. On that ground the Chair ought to consider the situation very carefully. The government House leader has a particular responsibility to consider the operation of parliament.

There is another side to this debate which is also important. One of the two bills before parliament, C-84, is a bill on which there will be a free vote and for my argument I am overlooking the question asked today by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). I presume that bill will not be discussed in caucus. It is the kind of bill on which each member will make up his or her own mind on one basis or another and, on that basis, decide how to represent his or her constituents.

In that context, it is important that every member of this House of Commons be at least afforded the opportunity of coming into this Chamber and listening to the debate on Bill C-84. This debate, perhaps more than any other, does not advance a party point of view but involves persuasion. All members must admit there is an atmosphere about this place which one cannot capture. There can be nuances to argument that one cannot capture from the pages of Hansard. In addition to what the hon. member for Calgary North has said, even though there are some difficulties in the committee system, I respectfully suggest that these difficulties are not insurmountable for the government. They ought to be surmounted so that members who are being asked to reach a difficult decision with regard to Bill C-84 should have an opportunity of listening to the debate.

● (1510)

I admit we are restricted by the fact that committees do sit while the House is sitting, but surely those members who are concerned with one part of the whole peace and security package in a committee ought not to be deprived of the opportunity of participating in the debate in the House. To my mind it is incongruous that the present situation should continue to exist.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and I ask the House leader, to take note of the fact that the bills, in their essence, are completely different from each other and that special consideration is due to members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in this particular case, not only because of what the hon. member for Calgary North has said but by reason of the nature of those two bills.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order, as a member of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, in support of what has just been said by my House leader and by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). The difficulty I experience, as one member of the House, is this: my constituents expect me to participate in the work of parliament and they have shown a special interest in Bill C-83, as is exemplified by the amount of mail I have received with regard to it. As a consequence I should be participating in the work of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs during its clause by clause consideration of the bill in a meaningful way, by contributing to the discussion and moving amendments.

At the same time my constituents expect me to be in the House to take part in the debate on Bill C-84, another important bill in which they are taking great interest, as are all the people of Canada. They expect me as their representative to take part in that important debate so that I can make up my own mind and put forward the views of my constituents if it happens that my views do not coincide with the majority of theirs.

My House leader made the point well when he said there had been no input from caucus on this issue and presumably, since there is to be a free vote, this is the case on the other side of the House as well. Consequently we are all expected to take part in the debate and listen to the arguments expressed by other hon. members, and then cast our votes according to the dictates of our consciences so as to best serve the interests of our constituencies and our country. But we are denied the right to do this as a result of the management of the business of the House by the government House leader. He has taken what has been a package, what was presented to the House as a package, and split the package, and now he tries to split the House, something he cannot do.

Another point I should like to make has to do with the scheduling of committees. It is very relevant to my argument. Tomorrow, for example, while the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs is sitting, four other committees will be meeting at the same time to examine estimates—Labour and Manpower, Miscellaneous Estimates, Agriculture, and National Resources and Public Works. My hon. friend reminds me that the National Capital Commission committee will also be meeting at the same time.

Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we are expected to take part in the clause by clause examination of Bill C-83 in the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. We are expected to participate, also, in the extremely important debate in the House on Bill C-84. Third, and not necessarily in this order of importance, we are expected to carry out our principal responsibility in this place, that is, the voting of supply. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how can we carry out this responsibility, the examination of estimates and, dependent upon that, the voting of supply, when there are ten committee meetings taking place tomorrow, beginning at 9.30 in the morning and carrying on past 8 p.m. at night? I ask the government House leader does he take parliament seriously, or does he think this is a joke? I can assure the House leader that we look upon the examination of Bill C-83 and upon the debate in connection with Bill C-84 as being of the utmost importance. I also say we have a responsibility to examine all the estimates, and I submit he is denying us that right by having 14 committee sittings on the same day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. Because my hon. friends have put our case in such a compelling manner I intend to be very brief. I would point out to Your Honour that I raised a similar point of order with respect to the Standing Committee on Agriculture sitting at the same time as agricultural matters were being discussed in the House of Commons in the course of the present session.

If the Committee on Agriculture were sitting while a bill affecting justice and legal affairs was being considered in this Chamber, that would be one thing; we would have to determine our priorities in terms of the topics under consideration. But here we find one part of the peace and security package being considered in two different forums at the same time, and affecting people who are very closely involved in each of these debates. If the government House leader is serious he will review this matter and make other arrangements. It would not necessarily mean the suspension of the sittings of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. Surely some provision could be made for the committee to sit at times when the House is not debating the capital punishment bill.

There is another matter I should like to bring to the attention of the government House leader. Would it not be possible to cut down the number of sittings which members of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs presently face? Members of that committee who, it must be remembered, have other duties as well, face an extremely arduous task on the basis of the present program of six sittings a week, and this for an indefinite period.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that as the spokesman for the House of Commons you have the right, as guardian of the rights and privileges of our members, to rule that there can be no debate on capital punishment legislation at times when the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs is sitting to consider the other part of what has been described as a legislative package. I hope favourable consideration will be given to this point, not only by Your Honour but by the government House leader who has now come back from a holiday.

● (1520)

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I want to make myself the spokesman for our party on a point of order so well put forward by the official opposition. I think this discussion on Bill C-83, which comes from the same department as Bill C-84, is held at the same time as the House of Commons examines Bill C-84. Now, I think both bills should not be discussed together, one in the standing committee and the other in the House. First—

Mr. Blais: Do you want to sit until July?

Some hon. Members: No, until August.

Mr. Beaudoin: Until August, that is it. We know we will adjourn in August because there are only 20-odd days left for government business: there are six days for discussing the budget and the rest is alloted to the opposition. Therefore this means we know in advance that we cannot finsih the study of current business for June 30; it would be a mistake if one thought so.

Second, we are here to make a serious consideration of the legislation. I think the point of order raised by the official opposition is in order, and perhaps more for our party than for the Progressive Conservatives because we are only 11 in the House of Commons and we must be everywhere at the same time. With due respect, I suggest that this be taken into consideration, in view of the fact that we have to be at both places at the same time to discuss almost the same issues. I would also like to make one small remark at this time: the other committees sitting for the consideration of estimates or other issues could very well sit, for it is not at all the same thing. But as Bill C-83 and Bill C-84 come from the same department, they should not be studied at the same time.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am rather taken aback by the remarks of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) because I have been discussing the business of the House with representatives of all parties.

Mr. Woolliams: But nobody ever agreed to this kind of nonsense.

Mr. Sharp: There was no reaction like this, Mr. Speaker, though I can understand there are difficulties. May I point out to the House that debate on Bill C-84 has only just got under way; it began on Monday of this week.

Mr. Woolliams: You have had six meetings about this.

Mr. Sharp: There could not have been any substantial conflict on this matter because we have just begun debate on Bill C-84, which I recall was introduced by my colleague on Monday. So it could only have been on Monday and possibly today that a conflict might arise.

It is very difficult to know how to schedule the business of the House toward the end of a session of this kind. I can assure hon. members that as House leader I shall try to do it in a way that will facilitate debate. As I understand it, the committee dealing with Bill C-83 is very anxious that it should meet as seldom as possible while the House is in session, and indeed is trying to give priority to morning sittings, and to make them long so as to minimize the possibility of conflict.

I hesitate to say this to the hon. gentleman, but since we have only just begun to debate Bill C-84, his outburst at this time really seems to be quite unjustified. I do intend to meet with the House leaders, as they know, and I hope we can discuss this subject. I believe that this House would like to proceed to deal with both these measures as expeditiously as possible, with as free a discussion as possible, and that is also our view.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question has been raised and contributed to by quite a number of members. I have attempted to give an opportunity to each party at least to be represented in putting forward a view. I see there are one or two other members who want to contribute to the point, but some who wanted to contribute have had the opportunity.

I am sure all hon. members realize at once two or three things. First of all, the grievance or concern that has been expressed is not new to this House. It has been raised many, many times in the past, though I must say not very frequently in this particular parliament but rather in previous parliaments. It is a very familiar concern with hon. members such as those who have participated in the discussion this afternoon, who are attempting conscientiously to fulfil all of the obligations placed upon them, and who find carrying the workload both in the House and in committee impossible at times.

While I think hon. members express a concern that is deeply felt, at one and the same time I am sure they will realize that the provisions of the Standing Orders are such that standing committees are empowered to sit while the House is in session. I do not say that in order to recommend it or to comment on its advisability; everyone knows the difficulties that this creates. I say it only because it concerns my jurisdiction in terms of attempting to make any order which may or may not determine when House committees can sit.

I hope that there are channels through which this kind of problem can be settled. It is certainly a matter for settlement among those who are ordinarily charged with some responsibility for coming to some agreement as to the progress of business through the House. The good will that attends discussions and arrangements is essential to orderly proceedings, and it is hoped that following the remarks of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) the good will that has prevailed in the past will not fail us at a time when there is so much important business before the House.

It is difficult to see an area in which my authority could extend to make any other arrangements. However, I hope consideration will be given to this in the negotiations.

Though this is not meant in any way to diminish the importance of the subject matters that may be discussed on these days, it has already been noted that there are quite a number of opposition days remaining. If it becomes necessary to have extended sittings of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in respect to this very important bill, it might be that those days ought to be pre-empted for committee sittings of that sort in order not to conflict any more than is necessary. However, these are only reflections. If the Chair can be of any assistance in the negotiations, as always I am more than ready to assist; but I am reluctant to enter with any authority an area where the Standing Orders do not at this moment appear to give authority.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) said I was unjustified in raising this. I would bring to his attention, through you, Sir, that at this very moment the debate on the abolition of capital punishment is about to recommence and there is a committee meeting being called. That is the reason I raised the point. I do not think I was unjustified; I think I had a proper and necessary grievance. As far as I am concerned, he is imputing motives. I did this because I believe I have to do the work for my constituency and for the opposition so far as justice affairs are concerned. I appreciate your sympathetic viewpoint. I only hope that the President of the Privy Council is as sympathetic as Your Honour and not as wishy-washy as he always is.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the reason I felt it unjustified is that I had called a meeting of House leaders for this afternoon and it would have been only courteous to have laid this complaint before his House leader so he could have talked to me about it.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 4,956, 5,103, 5,147 and 5,196.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

AUTOMOBILE WARRANTIES

Question No. 4,956—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. Did the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs request automobile companies operating in Canada to provide it with copies of all hidden, secret or good-will warranties on their products sold in Canada in the past ten years, and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, what are the names of the companies which provided copies of their good-will warranties and, in each case (i) in what years (ii) for what models (iii) for what particular work?

2. Did the Department or any agency of the Department receive requests for information on hidden or goodwill warranties and, if so (a) how many (b) what information was provided and did it include copies of specific hidden or good-will warranty programmes of automobile companies?

3. Did the Automobile Protection Association provide the Department with copies of any hidden or good-will warranty programmes of Canada's automobile companies and, if so (a) on how many companies was such information provided (b) on what dates?

4. Did the Department send copies of such documents to enquiring consumers and, if not, for what reason?

5. (a) How many persons are working for the recently created automotive section of the Department (b) was particular automotive knowledge and/or experience a prerequisite for being employed (c) what other criteria were necessary for employment (d) what are the functions of the section?

6. Has the Department consulted with the APA in its attempts to deal with the problems of hidden or good-will warranties, given their expertise in this area?

7. What action has the Department taken on a complaint made two years ago by the APA concerning advertising by STP for oil and gas additives and is any action contemplated?

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. The former Minister did request this information from the automobile manufacturers and distributors in Canada. In general, the response was that internal company documents would be provided to the Department only on the condition that they remain confidential. This restrictive condition was not acceptable to the Minister, and he was not in a position to insist on its removal.

2. The existence of unpublicized post-warranty adjustment programs not made available to all owners became a subject of public concern in March, 1975. From that time until mid-March of 1976, the Department received over 400 enquiries relating to automobile warranties. In addition, the disclosure to the public of these programs resulted in more than 2,000 complaints alleging premature failure of vehicles or components, and seeking compensation. To consumers who contact the Department concerning automobile problems, officers provide copies of documents provided by the Automobile Protection Association which pertain to the specific problems experienced by the consumer. In addition, each consumer receives general information about consumer rights and company obligations within the contractual warranties. In the case of the Ford Motors Company, consumers are provided with details of the company's policy on post-warranty adjustments relating to automobile corrosion.

3. The association provided copies of internal documents from two Canadian and one United States companies. These documents were sent or given to the Department on March 21 and November 5, 1975.

4. Yes: see also the answer to question (2).

5. Initially two officers were assigned responsibility for the Department's work on the problem area. They were chosen for their experience in handling automobile complaints, and in problem analysis and policy development. Before the remainder of the Unit could be staffed with officers having appropriate experience and expertise in the automotive field, the companies refused to co-operate with the Minister by providing documents which could be released to the public. At the present time, apart from handling automotive complaints and enquiries, policy is being developed in the more general area of warranties and guarantees.

6. Yes.

7. The result of an inquiry by the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act into claims made by S.T.P. for their gas treatment product resulted in the referral of a Summary Evidence to the Attorney General of Canada on January 30, 1974. After careful and extensive consideration of the matter and in view of the fact that the company had discontinued the use of the performance claim which had given rise to the inquiry the matter did not result in a charge being laid. Since the revision of the company's advertising, the Department has received no further complaints.

JACQUES CARTIER TERMINAL—PORT OF MONTREAL

Question No. 5,103—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What is the estimated completion date for the Jacques Cartier terminal now under construction at the Port of Montreal?

2. What is the estimated total capital cost of the facility including the amount allocated for the take-over of existing break bulk facilities to be incorporated as part of the terminal?

3. Have any commitments been made by shipping lines and/or terminal operating companies to use the terminal and, if so, which shipping lines and/or terminal operating companies?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows. 1. The estimated completion date is April 1977.

2. The estimated total capital cost, including the amount allotted for the takeover of existing break bulk facilities to be incorporated as part of the terminal, is $5,500,000 exclusive of portainers for which a lease is still under consideration.

3. It is planned to operate the Jacques Cartier Terminal as a public facility and no contract has been concluded with any terminal operators or shipping lines.

MIRABEL AIRPORT

Question No. 5,147—Mr. Stevens:

1. What was the total amount expended, itemized to reflect the purpose of all main expenditures, by the government directly or indirectly on the Mirabel Airport up to March 31, 1976?

2. As of that date, what further monies have been committed, itemized to reflect the purpose of all main expenditures, with respect to the project?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport):

	(1) Accumulated Expenditures to March 31/76 ($000's)	(2) 76-77 Estimates ($000's)
Land Acquisition	16,772	400
Land Development and Improvement	6,700	300
Grants and Compensation	7,349	—
Airfields	76,386	1,200
Air Terminals	78,360	1,700
Utilities	20,790	900
Roads and Parking	32,212	1,200
Operations Facilities	11,661	300
Unapplied Common Construction Costs	10,367	300
Project Administration	37,252	1,479
Recoverable Capital Costs	5,627	—
Equipment	9,646	500
Headquarters Charges	—	638
Total	$313,122	$8,917

IRVING CASE—LEGAL FEES

Question No. 5,196—Mr. Howie:

What was the total amount expended to April 5, 1976 for legal fees and expenses for the prosecution of the Irving interests under the Combines Investigation Act and to whom was it paid?

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Cost of New Brunswick Newspapers Prosecution[1], William L. Hoyt, Q.C., Hoyt, Mockler, Allen, Dixon & Godin, Fredericton, N.B. (Crown Counsel); Legal fees, $132,566; Disbursement, $31,278. T. Joseph Scanlon, Dean of the School of Journalism, Carleton University, Ottawa, Ontario (Special Assistant to Crown Counsel Consultant); Fees, $9,100; Disbursements, $3,367. Winnifred Johnston, Saint John, N.B. (Witness), $630. Total: $176,941.

---

[1] Does not include travelling expenses and time of Department of Justice personnel and of officers on the staff of the Director of Investigation and Research.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand at this time.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE RESPECTING PUNISHMENT FOR MURDER AND OTHER SERIOUS OFFENCES

The House resumed, from Monday, May 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand that Bill C-84, to amend the Criminal Code in relation to the punishment for murder and certain other serious offences, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

● (1530)

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): I should like, Mr. Speaker, to resume my speech on capital punishment which I began on Monday. At that time I was concluding that aspect of my speech respecting the impact of TV on the perception of violence in our modern society. In this latter connection I wish to continue for a moment.

It appears to me to be abundantly clear that we in Canada live in one of the most peaceful societies in the world, bar none, yet in the many meetings I have held in my own riding I have found, like so many of my colleagues, that many of my constituents are convinced that we live in a volatile, violent, and highly dangerous society.

I have already indicated that television has played a considerable role in this disproportionate impression of a violent world, but I have said nothing to date of the significant impact of news coverage, particularly when any atrocity or act of violence or of inhumanity, wherever it may happen in the world, is played up in the most dramatic and often bizarre way possible. It is no wonder that, being constantly bombarded and exposed to this sort of news coverage, we conclude, often subliminally, that the violence we see distilled and capsulized from around the world on a daily basis is really the condition in our country and neighbourhood.

It is astounding that so many who think that our streets and homes are unsafe and that there is a thief or criminal on every street corner have themselves rarely ever met one. Their essential fear is not based on personal observation or experience at all, but on hearsay, and the impact of the media upon them. Our minds are constantly focused on the abnormal and we begin to believe it is the normal condition of society.

[Mr. Lee.]

Many have become partially, and others almost exclusively, the victims of the modern media and we are now beginning to see the fruits of the fear and apprehension that is being created in society as a whole. Such impact has become the condition of society living almost exclusively on a diet of media realism, devoid of substantial reality. I am not blaming the media nor a gullible public. I am simply saying that perhaps we are beginning to perceive an insight into ourselves and our relationship with the media that had been hitherto inadequately appreciated.

The present demand for capital punishment as a solution to violence is only the beginning, because when it is discovered that capital punishment does not solve the problem the public believes is the fact, the public may well clamour for a type of law and order which would attack the very fabric of our judicial system and the sacred and historic provisions upon which it is based.

This exaggerated fear, based in part on fantasy, is already beginning to express itself through many who suggest that perhaps we can no longer afford to presume the citizen innocent until proven guilty. That is too awkward an approach when we want instantaneous justice. Many want a highly expeditious justice, which is more reminiscent of frontier days of old than of civilized civilization. I believe that in the past the pendulum may have swung too far in favour of the criminal with inadequate cousideration for the real need to protect society. I do not think we can correct the situation by swinging the pendulum too far in the other direction, paying too little attention to the rights and privileges of citizens in our society who may be rightly or wrongly charged with a criminal offence. We really need a proper balance in our society; a balance in considering this highly emotional and divisive question.

It will be a sad day when, through a false perception of reality, we end up destroying some of the more fundamental freedoms of rights and protections that have been built up over the years on behalf of individuals simply because the public thinks it is essential in order to protect itself from a perceived but artificial and unreal world.

People advocate capital punishment as though it would spell the end to violence. Such is self-evidently not the case. I am not suggesting in any way that all is well in the world and that there is no need for changes in our present law, nor indeed that the proposed law before us is in fact perfect. Obviously changes are required not only in the law but in the administration of justice and in the enforcement agencies which are responsible for enforcing justice in our society. This we can achieve, but I do not think we need to over-react.

As I have said earlier, as politicians we must deal with the perceptions the public has, but surely as members of parliament and as legislators our first obligation is to deal with the condition as it in fact exists.

The fourth element of my speech today deals with the hard facts relating to crime in our society and what effect capital punishment would have on the occurrence of these crimes. Quite evidently, and as a caveat before dealing with these hard statistics, I should indicate that there is a shortage of hard information. It is extremely difficult to do a lot of research and collect enough information to be able to come to the kind of conclusion all of us would like to reach. I am sure it would be of interest to members of parliament and the public at large if I relate the hard criminal statistics in Canada to those of the United States and other countries of the world to see how we fare in that relationship. Unfortunately the bases of our statistics in this and in other countries are not really comparable and do not lend themselves to ready or accurate comparison.

In addition to this, the fundamental definition of murder or capital homicide has varied in this country over the years and, indeed, in all other countries with which we would like to make comparisons. Nonetheless, and in spite of this reservation regarding the shortcomings of statistical data available, I think there is some justification in looking at the facts that are available.

First of all let us look at the volume of reported crime in Canada during the years 1962 to 1970. In 1962 there were 796,675 offences reported to the police, and 34,954 were violent offences. Violent offences in that year constituted 4.4 per cent of actual offences reported.

There has been a gradual increase in the number of offences during that period which is not particularly dramatic, culminating in 1970 with 1,574,135 offences reported to the police, of which 92,372 were violent offences. The percentage of violent offences rose from 4.4 per cent to 5.9 per cent.

Violent offences in all categories related to the population figures in Canada indicate that in 1962 the rate per 100,000 population was 226.6. In 1970 this figure has grown to 494.4. In other words, they more than doubled, clearly indicating an increase in violence in society. However, the operative point is, what kind of violence and how do we as legislators best deal with the growing trend? That is the central question.

Criminal homicide in 1962 constituted three quarters of one per cent of all violent crime in Canada. In 1970 criminal homicide constituted less than one half of one per cent. This alone illustrates that although there was an increase in criminal homicides during those nine years in absolute figures, from 265 in 1962 to 425 in 1970, criminal homicide as a percentage of violent crime had indeed shrunk and not grown.

● (1540)

Let us turn our attention now to another aspect of violent crime. The average rates over the nine-year period in the five categories of violent crime are as follows: criminal homicide .52 per cent, attempted murder .24 per cent, wounding and assault 86.18 per cent, rape 1.28 per cent, and robbery 11.78 per cent. These statistics illustrate a fundamental point relating to capital punishment. Capital punishment is directed toward criminal homicide only, and this is the area where there is the least growth in violence. Its retention in my view does not have any effect on the larger categories of violent offences such as wounding, assault, rape, and robbery, which constitute over 99 per cent of all violent offences in our society.

If the public wants more peace and security then clearly we as legislators must deal not only with the question of capital punishment and how to deal with murderers but the larger and ever increasing problem of other forms of violent criminal activity where capital punishment has no place in the minds of any of us in our society. Simply, in terms of protecting human life we must look at the problem of loss of life in society in proper perspective.

In 1970 there were 425 criminal homicides. It is generally accepted that only about 30 per cent of these were premeditated homicides. In the same year the death rate for motor vehicle accidents was 5,312, and for boating and water accidents 1,205. I do not have the statistics for the thousands who died in our society each year through all other kinds of accidental mishaps. Clearly these facts alone indicate that the danger to our population through non-criminal accidental death is much more severe than that which faces our citizens through criminal activity and homicide. More recent statistics indicate that in 1973 there were 475 murders, 2,773 suicides, 6,429 motor vehicle fatalities, and 13,476 other fatalities. In other words, 97.8 per cent of violent or accidental deaths are from sources other than murder.

The incidence of crime statistics is very closely related to drug and alcohol abuse. It is estimated that in British Columbia which has the highest per capita crime rate in Canada, approximately 70 per cent of all crime committed in that province is related to drug and alcohol abuse. If we want to solve crime in society we must get down to the nuts and bolts of the question, deal with its root causes and forget about capital punishment as a final solution to our ills.

It is estimated that as high as 90 per cent of victims of criminal homicide knew their killer. This illustrates an important point that criminal homicide is largely committed between friends, families, neighbours, lovers and so on, and not by the so-called criminal element of society. One has the vague impression that the public have an unwholesome fear of being murdered by some unknown criminal in society. The facts do not bear out this kind of concern.

A point which flows from the above statistics is that those who commit murder in the domestic or neighbourhood context are generally, up until that moment, normal law-abiding citizens and commit the crime either through passion, temporary mental derangement, or a unique and specific motive arising from the special relationship between the two parties involved. Such persons, I am informed, are rarely even remotely inclined to commit the same kind of offence again. Indeed they must be punished, but in my view one who says that this group must be hanged to provide protection for society is not facing the realities of the situation. I know of no evidence that a person in this group has ever committed an offence of that calibre for the second time in this country.

These statistics, like all statistics, are very confusing but they do indicate clearly that there is an increase in violence in society, but in proportional terms, not for premeditated murder. Therefore capital punishment, although it may be desirable to some, will certainly not be a solution to the problem of violence in society.

Now let us for a moment take a look at the bare facts in relation to a new look at what the government's response has been to the perceived problem of the public in our society. Let us look briefly at the new peace and security package the government has presented. There are three bills that have been introduced to deal with these questions. Capital punishment must be viewed in the light of these proposals taken as a whole because they constitute a package to deal with this central question.

Bill C-71, dealing with bail reform, switches the onus so that under this legislation the individual must now prove that he will not constitute a threat to society after release on bail. I think this is a welcome change which gives a great deal of protection to citizens in our society against dangerous criminals who might be too readily released on bail.

Bill C-83, which is presently before the standing committee, deals with the following items. First gun control is invoked, consisting of licensing of all gun users. I am not saying this bill is perfect but I support its central thrust of making sure that guns are not given to people or may not be purchased by people who are mentally deranged, have a history of violence in our society, or who perhaps have been regular abusers of drugs or alcohol and so on. I made a speech on gun control only a few days ago in the House of Commons and indicated my concern about that legislation. Therefore I shall not go into the subject further now.

Second, Bill C-83 deals with crime inquiries on the provincial level which are now being authorized through this legislation to fight organized crime in a more effective way. I think that is a responsible response.

We have further expanded detection and electronic surveillance to allow additional police powers so that we can deal further with organized crime. Dangerous offenders who may constitute a threat to the safety of the public are now subject to indeterminate sentences so that they will not be re-released into society if they continue to constitute a threat to the safety of the public.

There is also a broadening of the activities in relation to crime prevention and the imposition on all levels of government of stronger measures to ensure adequate custody and safe technique for release of inmates.

Bill C-84, with which we are dealing now, essentially covers the question of capital punishment, treason, and other offences of that nature. It deals with the problem in the following ways. First, first degree murder is redefined with a penalty of life imprisonment and with no eligibility for parole in less than 25 years.

Second, in respect to first degree murder, the judiciary may recommend a reduction of the non-parole period to a point not less than 15 years.

● (1550)

Third, community membership is proposed to be included on the Parole Board in the determination of whether an inmate will be released on parole into a given community situation.

Fourth, first degree murder is defined as premeditated, and in addition to that, any homicide relating to police officers or prison guards, or murder committed together with hijacking, kidnapping, rape or indecent assault. All other murders will be considered second degree murder. The penalty here is also life imprisonment with no parole eligibility in less than ten years, and the court is entitled to extend this period to a point not exceeding 25 years if it believes it is in the public interest.

In so far as temporary leaves and absences, day paroles from prisons and so on are concerned, those sentenced to life imprisonment will not be eligible for parole except in the last three years of their non-eligibility for parole period. In addition there will be a mandatory one to fourteen years added on for anyone convicted of a crime committed with the use of firearms. That is over and above the penalty they would normally receive for the original offence.

The next point I want to talk about for a moment is the feeling that so many have that our prisons are insecure and that the amount of time served by people in prison has become less and less over the past few years. I myself was surprised to learn that during the period from 1961 to 1968 those who had their death sentences commuted to life imprisonment had served an average of 12 years in prison. Those who had been sentenced to life imprisonment served an average of 6.2 years. However, during the Trudeau administration, from 1968 to 1974 those who had their sentence of death reduced by commutation served 13.2 years, which is more than such persons served in the preceding period prior to this government coming into office.

Those who had been sentenced to life terms also served more time than the same group during the period from 1961 to 1968 because the time they spent in prison went up from 6.2 to 7.7 years.

Let us look at the proposed legislation with regard to the time a person will in fact spend in prison. Those convicted of first degree murder will spend up to 25 years in prison instead of 13.2 years, unless a judicial review proposes to reduce the pre-parole period to less than 25 years, but more than 15 years, and the Parole Board agrees. That is a very substantial change. In the case of those sentenced to life imprisonment the 7.7 years actually served in the period from 1968 to 1974 will become never less than 10 and could go up to 25 years. I think that this illustrates to the public that their perception of this government being soft in terms of length of time being served by those convicted of criminal offences simply does not wash.

These are tough measures to combat crime in Canada, particularly violent crime, and I basically support them. However, there is still more to be done, particularly with respect to uprooting and eliminating the underlying causes of crime in society.

I should like to make a few brief comments about capital punishment per se. First, I am not opposed to capital punishment in principle. To vote for capital punishment would not in any way offend my conscience. I understand that a large percentage of those who are opposed to capital punishment oppose it because of some deep philosophical or theological reason. I believe, without any doubt in my mind, that the state clearly has the right to impose capital punishment if the protection of society genuinely requires it. The question is, to be adequately protected, does society require capital punishment? My position is a more pragmatic one based on my considered reason and judgment. My judgment is based on research and a careful consideration of the arguments which have been put forward by those who advocate capital punishment.

My opposition to capital punishment is based on several considerations. First, in my judgment capital punishment does not provide a deterrent against murder. Statistics neither prove nor disprove this statement. It seems to me that the burden of proof rests on those who think it is a deterrent when they are asking society to take another person's life. Second, no state should impose a penalty more severe than is required to protect the integrity of the state or the safety of its citizens. Capital punishment violates this principle. Third, capital punishment as a mandatory sentence for first degree murder would limit the number of convictions and result in more murderers being free in our society than would ever happen without capital punishment.

Fourth, statistics clearly show that our judicial system is fallible and that the risk of hanging innocent persons is too great. I think there has always been a presumption that it is better to let a guilty person go free than to incarcerate or hang an innocent one. I think that is fundamental to our whole institution and system of justice.

Fifth, the retention of the death penalty will create the false expectation that we will reduce the incidence of violence in our society, and I just do not believe that is true. Sixth, the retention of the death penalty will divert public attention away from determining ways and means of identifying and eliminating conditions which give rise to violence. Seventh, the state will not create in society an abhorrence for violence by resorting to such methods itself under the guise of protecting society.

In my view this new peace and security legislation which I have briefly detailed in my speech is a more reasonable and responsible approach toward the reduction of violent crime in society than the death penalty could ever hope to be. This new package will maximize protection for society as a whole, provide a more meaningful deterrent against crime in society and should eliminate the anxiety of many of our citizens respecting law and order.

As I have said, a great deal still has to be done to restore confidence in the law itself, its enforcement agencies and our judicial system. As parliamentarians all we can do is make value judgments and hope that the legislation we pass is sound, reasonable, and effective. We all know that such laws are not carved in stone, and if further changes need to be made the future will give us an opportunity to make them.

Many will be disappointed if the death penalty is eliminated, but I am confident that they are basically reasonable people and that they will support this proposed legislation and give it a fair and reasonable trial.

This new package is tough law, probably as tough, if not tougher, than criminal law in the vast majority of civilized nations. It substantially corrects the abuses of the past and significantly provides greater protection for the future.

In light of the present evidence and the arguments I have heard I am persuaded to believe that the broad public interest would be best served by the abolition of capital punishment and the passage of the two bills we have before the House and the committee to restore in our society the kind of law, order, and protection for our citizens which all of them expect and have a right to receive.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am very impressed by the words of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), and certainly by the number of factors he put before the House in the last few minutes with respect to the arguments which he saw as being of a pragmatic nature, as he indicated, leading him to believe that the abolition of the death penalty should now be finally approved.

I hope to keep brief the main substance of my remarks because I think the nature of this debate is such that it will be important that many hon. members can take part in the discussion. As a member who has taken part in at least two previous debates on this subject, there may be a number of other members on both sides of the House who would question whether I had anything of a substantial nature to contribute—

● (1600)

Mr. Chrétien: Just give us the page numbers.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I could give the page numbers and let the minister go back and read the speeches. Perhaps they are better. I think there are a couple of misconceptions which are new, however, and I want to deal with them. There are also two basic aspects of what we are faced with in the legislation which I hope to touch on, perhaps by way of emphasis rather than with new material.

First of all we have to look at the context in which we approach the present debate. I know the debate is theoretically, and I suppose legally, on the subject of whether we will abolish the death penalty. As hon. members and the public realize, this is increasingly becoming a kind of theoretical issue. Since December, 1962, a large segment of the general public realizes that we have had a de facto abolition of the death penalty, and there have been many requests, petitions, letters and statements with regard to reinstitution of the death penalty. We should face the fact, however, that for well over a decade it has been accepted that the death penalty has not really been an option either in the minds of the courts or in any other aspect of the criminal justice system.

There is a real danger in having an unreal discussion, as if we were going to start something new next week or next month and have not had almost a decade and half experience with it already. That experience should quieten to a degree some of the hysteria about the great danger to society if capital punishment is abolished. Through a decade and a half of abolition I do not think people have been terrorized in the streets.

I have been increasingly impressed by the high degree of acceptance in Canadian society, compared to a great many other countries in the world, of the security that exists here. It is true that individual instances of violent behaviour are reported from time to time and that, particularly in urban areas, there has been some intimidation that tends to make people fearful. I am very much inclined to the view of the previous speaker, however, that we are in much greater danger of being terrorized by the kinds of violence portrayed on television and in the media, and by the kind of reports that come to us from time to time of brutal and tragic crimes.

By and large Canadians are a law-abiding people. The de facto experience we have had for almost a decade and a half has not greatly endangered Canadian society. It can be argued that the very fact that there has been a gradual understanding of and experience with de facto abolition has led some people to realize that there is perhaps more to be gained by declaring once and for all that capital punishment is not acceptable than there is by lingering in the kind of twilight zone that faces us under the present law.

Second, there have been growing comments and criticisms in recent years about the government not obeying the law. I have heard that somehow or other, with the partial abolition established in 1967, and renewed in 1973 for a second five year period, the government had failed to obey the law. Having passed a law to the effect that capital murder is now confined to the killing of a police officer or prison guard, persons who were convicted of those charges were not executed and so people felt the government had failed to live up to its responsibility. I find this very strange on a number of points.

The practice of commutation by the cabinet did not commence in 1967 or 1960; as hon. members know, it goes back beyond the history of our country. Even before the new act was proclaimed in 1968 there were many more commutations under the old law. Before the act came into effect in 1968, 17 people received commutations under the old law but the government has not been criticized for that. Since enactment of the new law in 1968 only five commutations have taken place. I am concerned that members of the government have done so little to explain this to the people who do not realize the difference between what the law states in regard to sentences for particular crime and the responsibilities of the government and of the monarch in the circumstances.

According to the 1975 version of "Martin's Criminal Code," Article 684 (1) states:

> The Governor in Council may commute a sentence of death to imprisonment in the penitentiary for life, or for any term of years not less than two years, or to imprisonment in a prison other than a penitentiary for a period of less than two years.

That states very clearly that in each and every case of a capital sentence the government not only has the right, it has the duty to make a decision whether it will allow the sentence of death to stand. In the five instances since the new law came into effect in 1968 the government said in effect it would commute in almost every instance to life imprisonment. As has been said by the previous speaker, this has usually resulted in longer sentences than were imposed prior to that time.

It seems to me that when the public or individuals complain the government has not obeyed the law, it is because they do not understand the law. The law makes it clear that the government has an obligation to consider commutation in each and every case. If that were not sufficient, according to "Martin's Criminal Code" article 686 states:

> Nothing in this act in any manner limits or affects Her Majesty's royal prerogative of mercy.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

This means quite simply that since 1968 if people wish they can criticize the judgment of the government on whether in each and every instance it should have exercised commutation. I think it is really playing fast and loose with the truth, however, to say that the government has not obeyed the law in those instances. If there are members in this Chamber who take that view I would point out that by the end of the first five year period in 1973 when no executions had taken place under the partial ban of 1967, I do not recall that any individual member advocated or put forward an amendment for the removal of article 684. Considering the number of lawyers we have as members of the House I am surprised that no one has challenged the legality of the government's action in the courts. If there are some who feel the government has not acted according to the law, let them take the matter to the courts and have it resolved. I just make those two points by way of introduction, Mr. Speaker.

● (1610)

I want to come now to the central part of the consideration of what is before us in this bill. First let me say I am delighted that the government has finally taken the issue in hand to make de jure what has been a de facto situation for about 14 years, that of abolishing the death penalty once and for all. I realize the government has in some ways created some difficulty for itself in doing this.

While having exonerated it to some degree with respect to its actions under the law, I take strong issue in terms of tying in with this abolition the punitive and, frankly, irresponsible aspect with regard to sentence which is related to this abolition of the death penalty. I find it difficult to believe that the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), their colleagues and advisers spent very much time talking to the people involved in the criminal justice system, particularly the penitentiary system, with regard to the implications of this part of the act in terms of its acceptability, enforceability, viability and, perhaps most important, the aspect of security for the Canadian public.

Many members here have had the opportunity to examine in some detail our present penitentiary system. It is not a happy situation. I am sure many on both sides of the House will admit that the reason we have a high rate of recidivism is, indeed, the whole penitentiary system. However, to argue in this legislation that we can trade-off the removal of one barbarous, cruel, and unacceptable form of punishment for one that is not equally as bad but is certainly moving in that direction, I find the rationale difficult if not impossible to understand.

I believe that the government has in a sense weakened its own presentation by representing to us in this bill the fact that the real protection is to ensure the people are locked up for such an enormous length of time that they will never be in a position to again be at large and be able to commit a subsequent and similar crime.

I do not have to quote statistics to the minister. However, they indicate to a very large degree that people who serve prison terms for capital crimes in many instances offer some real hope and possibility of rehabilitation. However, by this particular approach we even deny that to be a fact. While the substance of abolition is fundamental and I support it, I hope that the unrewarding approach with respect to sentencing is reviewed, both in the context of when this bill goes to committee and subsequently. If the Solicitor General and the government maintain this position with respect to the totality of this bill, I believe that subsequent Ministers of Justice or Solicitors General will have to revise that aspect of it accordingly.

I want to come to the two points that concern me on the basic issue of whether members of parliament should finally make the decision to abolish the death penalty. The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) stated quite clearly that there is a basic assumption about the utility of the death penalty which I have never been able to accept even for an instant. It is that the level of certain offences must have a penalty so serious that there can be no doubt in the minds of a possible offender, or those who have already committed a crime, about just how seriously the government and the general public treat these kinds of activities on the part of an individual or a group of individuals.

If one takes that position, and I know that quite a few people do, I find it difficult to accept that the adoption by the state of a means of violence, the most total we can think of, that of taking a human life, will somehow set an example that society should subsequently emulate. I find this a totally illogical position, certainly illogical for the vast majority of the general public who to try to believe that governments have great responsibility to set an example in terms of normative and responsible public behaviour.

If we as members of parliament, individually and collectively, believe that one of the greatest if not the greatest offence that any individual can commit is the taking of another human life, what is the rationale that would allow us, for reasons of some kind of justice or working of the law, to commit that very same offence? It is true we would do it under certain accepted guidelines, principles, procedures and tests of validity. However, if we believe that when an individual or group of individuals commit a murder the state must emulate that, I find that the most faulty and self-defeating kind of reasoning imaginable. In fact I would have to say that the use of capital punishment by the state is a final and total admission of failure.

I am not anxious for our government or any government to be committed continually to what I can only see as a total admission or irresponsibility and failure. That is why it is so important that members of parliament representing the general public not fall into that trap. More than that, beyond the argument some people make for the legitimate use of state violence there is the motivation that has to be put on the table before us this afternoon.

The day before yesterday, the day we began this debate, I had a journalist in my office interviewing me about something totally removed from capital punishment. We got on to capital punishment because it is a subject that people seem to talk about very easily. She told me of an experience she had. She said she had recently been visiting in a jail. She ran up against a situation where a criminal who had been locked up got hold of a gun and shot a guard. She said she previously had no feelings one way or another about the question of capital punishment, but when she really got angry and thought about this criminal shooting the guard, she felt there was only one thing good enough for that individual and that was capital punishment. When I asked her whether she came to that conclusion because she saw this as a question of justice or a question of deterrent or revenge, quick as a whip she replied "revenge, what else?"

It is not a pleasant quality in the human make-up, but we mislead ourselves if we believe there is not in all of us a quality or at least a possibility of wanting to retaliate. I am no different from anyone else. When I read of a brutal slaying of an innocent child, the taking of a life that appears senseless, stupid and tragic, my immediate reaction is one of simple blind retaliation, the desire for revenge against the individual who has been so sick as to steal the life of a fellow human being. However, simply because I have that motivation of revenge does not in any way justify it being an acceptable principle, or position for the state on which to operate.

I have to say that to the degree that we, any of us, allow ourselves to operate on that basis, we are not asking for the good order of society, to the degree that we want to see some element of retaliation or revenge. There is far too much of that in our whole prison system today. To the degree we respond to that and allow it to motivate us in establishing guidelines to social responsibility we are not seeking really to provide some framework of order and security; we are really asking for some kind of return to the law of the jungle and anarchy. That is always a possibility. No society, no community can ever say it has arrived. We have been exposed to enough tragic experiences in this century to realize this is always a danger we face.

● (1620)

This brings me to the final point I want to make this afternoon. It is really the basic point I want to make. I went back and looked at the speeches I made previously. I tried to say it before, but now I see it more clearly perhaps—this is one of the advantages to debating this thing once every two or three years—you finally come down to what is the essential position that you must adopt.

I think there is an essential issue here that all of us have to face. It isn't the question which has been raised—as a matter of fact, I raised it myself ten years ago—about whether the state had the right to take a life. That was mentioned, I think, just a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Ontario. I suppose that in a theoretical sense the state always has that right, but that is not really the issue we face here. It is not even the question of deterrence, because as has been pointed out we are dealing here with the human animal and we have not reached the level of sophistication where we can quantify the basis on which individuals make decisions and commit actions. God help us if we ever think we have arrived at that point. We are not going to solve it on the basis of the theoretical right of the state to take a life, or the more subjective analysis of statistics and psycho-analysis which might come into play in this modern age with respect to deterrence.

To my mind the basic issue is the whole question of our respect for human life. If I am asked to say on what basis I make a decision to abolish the death penalty today, I have to answer that it is because capital punishment is no solution at all. In fact the very desire to retain the death penalty is in itself a great affront to any individual who believes there is no higher value, in an absolute sense in terms of the duty of the state, than that of preserving human life. My goodness, I really should not have to say that in this Chamber where we vote billions of dollars each year to enhance, protect or secure human life through various health and welfare programs and a whole variety of laws and regulations.

If we really believe that central to our responsibility as legislators is the enhancement and protection of human life, I know no justification for saying that somehow or other some people can be used as a kind of means to an end. I have heard the rationale many times that it is an acceptable principle—I have heard it advanced many times in this debate—that from time to time certain individuals should be executed as an example, as a deterrent against the future kind of crimes we want to avoid. What this says to me is that some people, a few people, not very many people, perhaps only two or three, or five or ten, can be used as a means to a greater good. I find this not only misleading but dangerous.

An hon. Member: Hitler said that.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Thank you. I am grateful for that comment because it is exactly what I am trying to say. I do not want to use that kind of scare tactic here but there is not that long a connection.

When you make the argument that certain people in a society are expendable, for whatever reason, then it is not too long a trip to say that perhaps a number of people are expendable. We live in a time when we are being told continually there are all kinds of goals we should be achieving.

We live in a time in which sometimes when we analyse our economic and social situations we tend to look at people as one of the factors in an over-all system, as one of the factors in production, for example, as one of the commodities to be manipulated or induced to take a particular action from the standpoint, say, of monopolies or of large-scale industry. There is a terrible danger and pressure, right now, in our time because of the corporate strength of institutions to manipulate and abuse and mislead people for some purpose, whether it is for the maximization of profits, or large corporate growth, or national prestige. If we succumb to any one of these pressures we will, of course, be providing for ourselves the most inhuman kind of society possible.

I do not apologize for the time spent in the House debating the issue of capital punishment because to me it is a cornerstone for the appreciation of human beings, men and women both individually and collectively, and if even to some small degree we can say there are certain basic principles on which the state operates, that we have a certain basic view of man that says he cannot be a means to an end, that man is always an end in himself, then we cannot even for the sake of justice think of manipulating and abusing and occasionally executing people, we will have made some small advance in the nature of our society.

What I am saying to members on both sides of the House today and to the general public is that I believe that it is terribly vital for the future sense of responsibility, security, and most of all for human dignity that we should not allow to exist in our country, and presumably as an example to other countries, not continue even in a kind of de jure sense, the option of the state for capital punishment. It is clear to me that we must once and for all reject the notion that people, no matter who those people may be, can be expendable. We as a state are committed in the most basic way possible to the enhancement and preservation of human life.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the member who has just resumed his seat, the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) who, in the name of the right to live, the dignity of life, suggests that nobody, especially members of parliament, should legislate to maintain death penalty. Bill C-84 has given rise to many comments throughout Canada. In some areas of the country, some people advocate the abolition of the death penalty or the passage of Bill C-84, while in others, in my opinion, the controversy is somewhat general and represents about the same percentage across the country.

When the hon. member for Egmont says that, from a Christian point of view, we cannot interfere with a human life, I ask him then why we have jails in Canada. Why send anyone to jail? Is life emprisonment so much better than the method advocated to get rid of criminals and murderers, not necessarily in a spirit of revenge but out of respect for law and order? This is still important. When we see a red light on a street corner, it does not mean to go ahead but to stop. Someone may go ahead just the same, but at his own risk. If a car drives through the green light in the other direction, the person that voluntarily crossed the road on the red light may be killed. The red light does not say: You are going to be killed. It says: Stop. I think that capital punishment is the red light that says: You have no right to kill. If someone kills just the same, let him suffer the consequences of his action.

Mr. Speaker, I said earlier that capital punishment is a controversial issue throughout Canada and public opinion is almost equally divided. We are discussing Bill C-84 and the freedom of the members to vote for or against it. However, we feel that some instructions are given in spite of the free vote. For instance, Liberals who are retentionist are advised to stay home when the vote is taken in the House. The same thing might happen on the Progressive Conservative side, because in the present situation, people are well posted after reading press reports. The Progressive Conservatives are divided. Some are retentionists, others are abolitionists. On the Liberal side, it is the same thing: Some are abolitionists like the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). They want Bill C-84 to become the law of the land. As far as the New Democrats are concerned, they are for the complete abolition of capital punishment.

Mr. Speaker, in spite of the pressures exerted by various organizations, not only policemen but public organizations throughout Canada, the Solicitor General sticks to his guns. He is an out-and-out abolitionist even at the cost of his seat if the government should fail to support him. Mr. Speaker, as I already suggested in this House several times, why not hold a referendum on Bill C-84 concerning the abolition of capital punishment?

I am sure the right hon. Prime Minister and the Solicitor General are opposed to a referendum because they are afraid to go to the people. And yet they pretend to be the people's representatives. They tell us how much they like the people. But when time comes to consult Canadians on such a serious matter as capital punishment, the Solicitor General says: If capital punishment is not abolished, I will resign. I say to him that he does not even have the guts nor the slightest desire to resign because this is exactly what the people of Canada would want him to do right now. And I say that the people's attitude is not totally prompted by a desire for revenge, it is not so. On the contrary, they want to maintain capital punishment for the sake of justice.

An hon. Member: But it is for the protection of honest people.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): As I often said, we must determine whether society must be protected against criminals or criminals against society. This is the question we must ask ourselves today.

In the correspondence we get from Canadians of all regions we see they are in favour of maintaining capital punishment. Last fall, I attended hot line programs in Montreal, Edmonton and Toronto, and people were calling me from everywhere, asking me questions and giving me their views—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. Minister of Justice on a point of order.

● (1630)

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I understand that the hon. member has just attacked and commented on the absence from the House this afternoon of my colleague, the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). May I point out that while the bill is in his name I am here in the House as Minister of Justice representing both myself and the Solicitor General, who is in Montreal on parliamentary business meeting with various groups concerned with gun legislation, which is certainly no exhibition of a lack of courage.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I see some wise guys applauding over there. That does not change anything at all because the Minister of Justice is just as responsible for the bill as is the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General was here just 15 minutes ago with a motorcycle leather jacket, and was listening to the hon. member who spoke before me. If, on the other hand, the Minister of Justice wants to put on the hat, if it fits him, let him do so, I have no objections, but I want to continue my remarks and talk about the Solicitor General who will still have the right to speak when he comes back to the House if he is held up in Montreal today. Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, we received petitions, recommendations and suggestions from different intermediary bodies, and also from police forces. That the Minister of Justice knows, and so does the Solicitor General.

I have here, for example—and it is not so old, May 3, 1976, when the Metropolitan Toronto Police Association questioned 68,705 people and asked the question No. 1 in that letter. I believe that other members in the House received it also. It is a letter from Sid Brown, president of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Association. Here are the questions and answers. The first question is as follows:

[English]

Should capital punishment be retained only for the murder of on-duty police officers and prison guards?

[Translation]

The answers were as follow:

Yes: 4,855 No: 55,425

Not only for policemen and guards. Let us move now to question No. 2:

[English]

For the murder of any citizen during the commission of an intended or planned crime?

[Translation]

Capital punishment for those people. That is the answer of the public.

The public's answer: Yes, 55,374, to maintain capital punishment for premeditated murder; No, 8,516. That represents quite a large majority, almost 80 per cent and even more than 80 per cent.

Question No. 3:

[English]

Should the capital punishment issue be decided by a national vote of the Canadian people?

[Translation]

By referendum: Yes, 55,282; No, 3,444. So it is clear, Mr. Speaker, that those people here—the policemen's association—are in favour of maintaining capital punishment.

Question No. 4:

[English]

Are you opposed to capital punishment because of the method of execution used (hanging)?

[Translation]

Yes, 9,954 are against the hanging method but 44,258 who do not care about the way the murderer is executed, but about the execution of the murderer convicted of abominable, premeditated murder.

By the way, I might say here that we do not want to see capital punishment imposed as it was 50 or 40 years ago because at that time you ran the risk of hanging an innocent person, a man who was not responsible. But we say that in all cases of premeditated murder, when we are absolutely sure of the guilt, then capital punishment should be maintained. In all other cases we should have imprisonment sentences, but let no one suggest or make us believe that we are again going to hang innocents. The Minister of Justice knows what we mean and he knows that we absolutely refuse to hang any person when we are not absolutely sure that he is guilty. We do not want to take any risk. The case must be clear, obvious and definite.

Furthermore, we are not the only ones in this House to take a similar position. Montreal and Toronto newspapers take the same position too. However, some people in Canada do not behave this way, they go against the whole world: the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General, the Prime Minister of Canada and some Progressive Conservatives. As for the New Democrats, they are always in favour of capital punishment. They are so illogical that they are in favour of abortion too, in favour of killing an infant even before its birth. But once it is born, it's a different matter. The murderer who kills his victim should not be touched. This is their overall, their general policy: Kill the innocent and let the criminals, the bandits, the murderers live.

Mr. Speaker, we are not very much in favour of this theory. Now I come to Question No. 4, where 44,000 persons answer that it is not the method used which makes them endorse capital punishment in Canada. Question No. 5, I ask which method would you use? Some choose the electric chair. Others suggest the gas chamber, others poison. They suggest giving poison to an individual as you give poison to a dog; or the firing squad—

● (1640)

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: How about drawing and quartering?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I will send them to you.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Let them spend an hour or two in the House!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Excuse me, I did not hear.

Mr. Gendron: Let them spend an hour or two in the House!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): My hon. friend might settle the matter during the next elections, he needs only stay home.

Mr. Speaker, Question No. 6:

[English]

"If you are opposed to capital punishment in any form what alternative punishment would you prescribe?"

[Translation]

The answer of the public: 168 suggest rehabilitation treatments and psychiatric treatments; no parole, 1712 and parole, 194. That is not really much out of a total number of 68,745. Here, 87.6 per cent of the answers are favorable to capital punishment.

When the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice goes to his riding in Vancouver for instance to speak about abolition, I receive dozen of letters from British Columbia people who ask that capital punishment be maintained. Lately I made a sort of survey in my riding and I sent a questionnaire to all residents, not only to people I knew but to everyone. Out of 813 answers from my riding, 86.9 per cent were in favour of capital punishment. When I talk opinions throughout the country, it is about the same thing: in Toronto this percentage was very much the same—87.6 per cent; in my riding it is 86.9 per cent and in Montreal there are ridings where this figure is even higher with 86 or 87 per cent in favour of capital punishment.

Mr. Speaker, while we face all these demands and all these suggestions, we have here in Parliament a government and minister who present to the House a bill such as Bill C-84. I think honestly and sincerely, from the bottom of my heart, that these people should resign to make room for others so that we have here people who truly represent the opinions expressed by their constituents and the Canadian people. I have heard the Solicitor General repeat often that there are means other than capital punishment to protect our society. I am still waiting for these means which will protect our society. In Montreal, I do not know how many murders we have had since the beginning of the year and one hears here in the House about ways and means to rehabilitate criminals. We let a murderer loose in the street, he kills or he perpetrates a hold up. Just recently a murderer who had been sentenced to life imprisonment was released and soon afterwards was again arrested after a holdup. The judges and the lawyers do not know what to do with this kind of situation.

Recently, there was the case of a youth of 14 who had not been sentenced to death but had committed a holdup in a small shop with a loaded gun. The owner defended himself and killed the youth of 14. But then the judge gave him a lecture saying: "Do not you think that for a theft of $40 you went just a little too far. It is the judge's intelligence which dictated those words to him. If the amount stolen had been $40,000, that would have been beter. It is not the amount of dollars stolen from the grocer which is important but the fact that the young boy was armed to the teeth. If the small shopkeeper had not defended himself, he would have been killed. But the judge did not think of that. "Do you not think that for $40 you went just a little too far?" Our judges must be naïve to say that in court to someone who tried to save himself but is treated like an idiot by a judge who thought himself intelligent.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know if I shall be charged with contempt of court, but if the judge finds that the shoe, fits, let him wear it. There is a limit, after all. The police are hindered, they have to cope with gangsters all year long. One is arrested, put into prison, two hours later he is out on bail. He is charged with murder, but is told: Your trial will take place only in July, so you are released. Give us $25,000 bail on property or ask your aunt or uncle to sign the form. You meet the guy on the same street, the same sidewalk, in front of the same policemen. What happens? We see what happens in Montreal. Montreal is not the only city.

An hon. Member: That is most exaggerated.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): No! Listen to that, "exaggerated". Come with me and I will show you.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for I do not know which constituency does not know that these guys are released almost immediately after they are arrested. Young offenders do not stay two hours in prison after robbing right and left, sometimes ten or twelve times in a row. They are brought before the court, and they are told immediately: For rehabilitation, we take your word. Do not commit the same offences! And he is immediately sent back in to the streets.

● (1650)

Mr. Speaker, we talk a lot about Montreal but the same happens in Toronto. We find the same thing in Regina and Vancouver. There is a shortage of justice at the present time. We pass—

Mr. Benjamin: On a murder charge?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): We pass—Any charge! We pass regulations, we pass laws and the governments are first in failing to enforce them. We have seen this! These days, especially in Montreal, since it is in our province, we hear every morning, on the radio, on all open-line programs, people objecting to the abolition of capital punishment not because they want vengeance, but because they want justice. They are afraid to walk freely on Sainte-Catherine street or any other street in Montreal. The representatives of Montreal ridings know it. The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc) knows it. Everyone complains and here, in Parliament, the Solicitor General, who comes from Montreal and is aware of it, would, if he took a referendum or made a survey in his own riding, obtain exactly the same results as we do. But he persists in saying: I favour the abolition of capital punishment. Mr. Speaker, let us look at the surveys made among members of Parliament. In La Presse, in an article by André Ouimet, in the Parliamentary Bureau, in the Ottawa Journal, we find the following:

Death penalty will be abolished

This shows the results obtained after interviews with members of parliament. This article says, and I quote:

[English]

A recent Gallup Poll showed that 69 per cent of Canadians surveyed favoured a complete return to the death penalty—not only for murdering prison guards and policemen but also 'any innocent person.'

[Translation]

This has been done here in Ottawa, and everywhere in Canada we have obtained 69 per cent. In fact it is 70 per cent; I would say it is more than that, it is 86, 87 per cent. Mr. Speaker, why is the government afraid of the referendum? Because it knows it would be beaten on that issue. We have here a letter from a concerned Canadian from Edmonton in Alberta who is in favour of maintaining capital punishment. This letter originates from Mr. M. Marleau from Edmonton. The Solicitor General has a copy of it. This letter states: "Mr. Stanfield knows Peter Lougheed". It is addressed to the Attorney General of Alberta, to the RCMP Commissioner, to Chief Constable R. Lunney, and to myself. Here again, it states clearly—

An hon. Member: You are important!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, that is right! But I am telling you about it because if you are not hitting the headlines, you will at least know what those who do receive on the Liberal side. Mr. Speaker, about letters and articles in favour of maintaining the capital punishment, I have a letter here from Sudbury, Ontario. It is not far from the place of one NDP member. I have another one from New Westminster in British Columbia, Dr. Calverly who says:

[English]

Dear Sir:

We are trying to recommend that you decide upon and vote in favor of retention of the death penalty. We also recommend that you use your influence to ensure that it is implemented where there are no extenuating circumstances to warrant stay of execution.

[Translation]

He even is against changing rulings, against exemptions.

[English]

More humane and acceptable methods than hanging should also be considered.

[Translation]

He is against hanging but for capital punishment.

[English]

Both of us were born and grew up in the heartland of Canada. We are well qualified psychiatrists who have spent the past twenty-five years interviewing and treating Canadians from all walks of life. We feel that this background and experience qualifies us to offer you an opinion on this subject, and that we have both a professional and social responsibility to do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this letter comes from New Westminster, British Columbia. It is signed by Dr. M. O. Calverley and M. R. E. Helgason, also a physician. There are also two psychiatrists—

[English]

Mr. Gilbert: They bury their mistakes.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Oh, yes; you are much better than the doctors in this country. I know they can make mistakes as you are making a mistake right now.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the New Democrats are always wrong.

[English]

You always think you are right but you are never right.

Here is a letter addressed to Mr. Réal Caouette, Parliament Buildings, Ottawa. It is from a United Church woman.

[Translation]

This one comes from the United Church Women and I am not too sure whether or not the hon. member who spoke before me is not a United Church Women "preacher" as we say.

[English]

Dear sir:

I have noticed your excellent stand on behalf of capital punishment and am taking the liberty of sending an extract from the book of Dr. Emil Brunner on the lex talionis. This throws new light on a great law which has been criticized by the abolitionists of the death penalty.

Do you think that a man who herds 30 people into a restaurant closet in Montreal and causes their deaths deserves to go on living?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this letter was dated in late March: Thanking you for your help. She is a member of the United Church Women. I have another one here from the Church of Pentecostal Assemblies of Canada dated April 30 and signed by Mr. Charles Yates, General Secretary, about Bill C-84. He gives a complete list of the various areas where churches are working in cooperation with this one and where they ask for the retention of capital punishment. In the province of Quebec the situation was different. I even think that the synod of Catholic Bishops asked for the abolition of capital punishment. It is their right. As a Catholic, I am for the retention of capital punishment. When I was a little boy at the primary school and later in college I was told that murderers should be hanged, that there was no other solution. It is none of my business if those people changed their minds today but I did not change my mind. I am still convinced—

An hon. Member: They have become more civilized.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): This is called the degradation of evolution!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): This is what degradation of evolution is. We see it in full evolution. We see now what evolution is, with the members of the common front in the province of Quebec. If capital punishment came from them, it would be good but as it does not, it is bad. Inasmuch as their own carcass is preserved, it is right. If by misfortune the carcass is a little disturbed, then they switch, period.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister—

[English]

This is a transcript of the Prime Minister's interview with Mark Raines, M.P.

[Translation]

—on February 12, 1976, when the Prime Minister was in British Columbia, he was interviewed on television by Mr. Mark Raines and he said this:

[English]

MARK RAINES: It's not a crime to murder a politician in cold blood.

PRIME MINISTER: . . . or a housewife, a mother of several children. No, I think my position on this, and it may have been misreported, is not one of conscience. I think society has a right to defend itself unto death, just as in self-defence you're allowed to kill somebody who's trying to kill you. If society could only survive by hanging those that were trying to destroy peace and security then it would be permissible.

[Translation]

The Prime Minister said this in British Columbia. Here, in Ottawa and in the province of Quebec he does not say this at all. In the province of Quebec he says: I am in favour of the abolition of capital punishment. In British Columbia, he said to a reporter who was interviewing him:

● (1700)

If it is dangerous for society, I suggest that capital punishment should be reinstated.

[English]

But to me that's a practical judgment, as the judges make all the time when one pleads self-defence. If you kill somebody in defence who was only going to box your ears, you know you've used too much force and you're guilty. If you kill somebody in defence who's trying to kill you then you're exonerated. I think society is in the same position. If we hang people who are really destroying a society, then we're allowed to do it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, these days I think that some people, particularly in the common front, should not have it as easy as they do now. When one gets to the point where he challenges the law or tells people: If we do not like the premier of the province of Quebec, we will throw him in the Lachine canal to get rid of him. An exasperated, offended, mad guy who is quite prepared to drown the Quebec premier if he does not win his labour-management dispute against the Quebec government, it is simply anarchy that seems to grow ever stronger in the province of Quebec.

It is unfortunate, but we have come to encourage violence and violence arises from something: a general relaxation of discipline. We have forgotten to enforce the law. Parents are told: Listen, if your children do wrong, do not spank them. Don't! Because this is not a nice way of punishing them. With all these changes, we have come to the point where children challenge their parents and show total disregard for them, where teachers have no more respect for school boards, where school boards have no desire to respect governments. We are now living in a kind of condoned anarchy, a kind of anarchy that is even encouraged in certain areas by those people who think they represent the public's views.

Mr. Speaker, there is violence on television, in movies, over the radio, in theaters, there is violence left and right. And we wonder why at 12, 13, 15 and 16 our young become so violent. Unless we give our young people principles of public morality, a sense of respect for authority and discipline, certainly our society will not be worth much within 10 years from now.

To uproot violence, there need only be some true respect for the law.

Mr. Speaker, we are living in a violent society where everyone is frightened. Provincial premiers are frightened, in Quebec like everywhere else; ministers are not safe. Threats are made by telephone and by letter. People throw all sorts of things. We see what is happening throughout the world, in Beirut, in Africa, in all countries or nearly all, there is violence, nearly nothing is tolerated, people kill each other.

Here, in Canada, we watch what they do. Everyone admits that these people behave wrongly, that they should not use violence. We admit this, but we let our society go towards exactly the same situation as that which exists in those countries. In Montreal, union leaders like Charbonneau, Pépin, Laberge and others, or about half a dozen men, are responsible for what is now happening and what will happen in 5 or 10 years. Mr. Speaker, these men have no respect for anyone. They do not respect the law. They do not respect any member of parliament or any politician. Let those people form the government, and then we will see purges the likes of which are seen in the U.S.S.R., Czechoslovakia and other communist countries.

Mr. Speaker, we do not need those people. We want to protect society. But let us protect this society concretely.

That is why I appeal to the government, to the Minister of Justice and to the Solicitor General not to force the Montreal Liberal backbenchers to hide when the time for voting will come.

In hope that in a month or two when the debate is over people will not run away to Montreal to avoid voting. But I am afraid of that. They call it a free vote to throw dust in the eyes of the people of Canada, but when the time to vote comes, people run away. There is a reception, something here, something there, and they do not vote at all for or against the abolition of capital punishment.

And the people from Montreal, you know, even from Sherbrooke, know quite well that the people are in favour of maintaining capital punishment in a proportion of 80 to 90 per cent. The ministers are under some occult force pushing in favour of abolition of capital punishment—someone is pushing for sure—it is up to us members of Parliament not to push but to face the music. There will be no pushing but let the Liberal members in their caucuses tell the ministers squarely: You people, your Bill C-84 is not going to pass. The election, we will cope with that. It will be a lot easier for you to get reelected by voting against abolition of capital punishment than in favour. It is the same thing for Progressive Conservatives.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I want to say this: In my party, the Social Credit Party, we are 11 members and we all advocate retention of capital punishment, not in a spirit of vengence, no, but in a spirit of justice. If a man is so heartless as to attack the life of another, he should be prepared to put his own life on the line. He is well aware of the existing law, he knows it, if he wants to defy it, let him pay for the damages, that is justice and order . . .

An hon. Member: Will you be here to vote?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I hope so. If I am in hospital, I shall be unable to be here to vote. My hon. friend knows very well that I shall vote to retain capital punishment.

Mr. Pelletier: That is because you believe it!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, it is because I believe it.

Mr. Pelletier: We can believe something else.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): No, you should believe what your constituents tell you to believe. In your riding, 80 per cent of your constituents are in favour of capital punishment.

Mr. Pelletier: We have brains to use them.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, I understand. But your voters were not intelligent when they elected you. It is one or the other.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will go back to his riding—he knows full well I am not lying—where his electors are in favour of retaining capital punishment. I am convinced they will watch how he votes in this House. The hon. member is answerable to his electors, not I.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will have to manage with his electors but I say, in the province of Quebec, the people expect us to vote for retaining the death penalty and I say that, in the other provinces in Canada, in Toronto, in the maritime provinces, even in Saskatchewan, British Columbia and Alberta, everywhere, and to the same extent, the people want or recommend retention. That is exactly what we are going to do and I ask hon. members who are really free, to vote for maintaining the death penalty.

[English]

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, it is quite novel to be able to take part in a debate which is entirely non partisan, for a change. I think that is a crucial point to make, especially for this side of the House, because there is considerable opinion throughout the country that this bill to abolish capital punishment is a partisan move by the Liberal Party. Although retentionist resolutions have for many years been rejected by national Liberal conventions, I think that rank and file members of our party throughout the country are seriously divided on the question, at least as divided as hon. members on this side of the House.

The question posed in Bill C-84 is not one of government program and not one in which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) are forcing their own convictions down the throats of their colleagues. Rather, it is a question of conscience and a question of moral choice to be exercised in one's own right.

However, I must emphasize one small point of procedure in the debate on this matter which has been alluded to by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and was substantiated in the question period today. It is unfortunate that members of the Treasury benches have been denied their right to make this moral choice because of cabinet solidarity. This has tended to confuse public opinion and has tended to give the impression that Bill C-84 is a Liberal bill. As we shall see often in this debate, this will be a very free vote, so free, in fact, that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the former leader of the opposition will vote for the bill, along with many of their colleagues. The list of speakers on this bill is long, and like the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) but unlike the hon. member who preceded me, I do not propose to take my full time in the debate.

I should like to deal with two aspects of capital punishment, first in the context of the present social and economic climate, and second with due respect to the hon. member for Egmont, in the context of the rights of the state to exercise absolute power over the life and death of the individual.

Let us look at the current climate upon which present public attitudes toward capital punishment are based. It may be remembered that immediately after the second world war public opinion favouring retention was as high as present polls indicate it is now. And no wonder, for two generations had come to be brutalized by the effects of two world wars. Death on the battlefield, on the seas, and in the skies was an everyday occurrence. The enemy was to be killed; it was a matter of survival.

Capital punishment polls in the late 1940's were a spillover from the hostilities of the war and reflected the cynicism and despair of the era. No wonder that sensitivities to the human condition were blunted.

● (1710)

However, post war prosperity returned Canada to normal. Pockets were full, bellies were full. And we all know, Mr. Speaker, that when one's pockets and one's belly are full, one is more considerate, compassionate and tolerant—considerate, compassionate and tolerant toward all beliefs, to all races, to all creeds, and even tolerant toward deviant behaviour which, I believe we would all agree, has a sociological rather than congenital origin.

Attitudes toward retention of capital punishment softened in the late 1950's and 1960's. Yet over the past few years these attitudes have once again changed. Why? To explain this, Mr. Speaker, one need only read the debates in this House over the past few years.

Our mixed economy, which has been so successful for the past 30 years, has suffered severe reverses. I do not have to dwell upon the evils of stagflation and the pressures of urbanization that have rocked this country of late because the problems are familiar to us all, and all sides of the House have been grappling with their resolution.

It is my contention, Mr. Speaker, that communities or individuals when threatened tend to harden positions, to resent authority, and to disrespect abnormal points of view. This is what has happened in Canada and it is a terrible shame. Despite economic problems, Canada has weathered the storms of the past few years. Unlike some of our major trading partners we have not seen living standards decline, we have not seen massive unemployment, and we have not seen an absolute erosion in investor confidence within our country.

Yet Canadians have become an angry mob and we all know, Mr. Speaker, the dangers of the mob and mob rule—quick response to irrational impulses, lack of mercy and instability prey upon the weaker elements within the society. So we hear cliches like, "There are too many immigrants coming to Canada, too many non-whites"; "Our education system has fallen apart and is producing illiterate and undisciplined students", "The morals of young Canadians are depraved"; "Let's bring back the strap"; "Criminals are running loose on the street"; "It's not safe to go out on the streets at night"; "Criminals in prison are treated like hotel guests"; "M.P.'s are feathering their own nests with a salary increase"; "All politicians are crooks". Mr. Speaker, scapegoats are easy to find in hard times.

Of course protection to the individual in society must be given, as the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) has so eloquently stated. Bill C-83, now before the committee, is a step toward improving that protection for all Canadians.

The popular view in my constituency and the Toronto area in general is to put the question of capital punishment to a national referendum. This would certainly mean rule by the people in the literal sense; but the passions of the people run high. For me, the spectre of the disorder on the streets of Paris in 1792-94 develops in the scenario of a nation governed by referenda.

Countries that revert to putting questions to referenda often find that more problems are created than are solved. The Canadian referendum of 1944 on the conscription issue intensified racial and regional opinion and created tremendous difficulties, difficulties which were only spared the government by the conclusion of the war. The same analogy may be drawn with the 1975 United Kingdom referendum on the European Common Market, and the recent Italian referenda on divorce and abortion. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it could be argued that the results of the recent Italian referenda have helped to destroy the unity of the Christian Democratic party and precipitated the present political instability in Italy.

Like the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) I will take my chances with the theory of representation as clearly enunciated by Mr. Edmund Burke, and followed by many politicians in this House and the British House over the past 200 years.

To summarize my first point, I believe the present hawkish attitude toward capital punishment is a product of the social and economic environment in which we now find ourselves. Of course there are those who are for retention as a result of conviction, but there are those in the Chamber who are being stampeded by opinion polls and constituency surveys. These members are doing the community an injustice. More than that, positions of convenience betray the very ethics and essence of the high office to which we in this Chamber are elected. No, Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General is right—our efforts must be directed to better protection of the individual and property, better methods of crime detection, and further empirical research on the psychological and sociological courses of crime.

The second aspect of capital punishment with which I propose to deal is to put the matter in the context of the state's right to have absolute power over the life and death of the individual in society.

The state embodies the collective will, but it must be remembered that in the final analysis each individual will is paramount. The ultimate responsibility of the state is to protect the rights, the person, and the property of each of its constituent members. The fundamental right of each individual in society is the right to life, and any abrogation of that right must be rare and impeccably justified, not only in criminal law but in natural law.

History is littered with examples of tyranny by the state. The power of the state is omnipotent and must be checked at every turn. Even in this great country, the state's record has not been unblemished when it comes to protecting the rights of the individual. Look at the treatment of our native population, the treatment of aliens in the second world war, and more recently the War Measures Act.

The state on short notice can become the most ruthless element of repression; the state that can legally terminate the life of a criminal can, under duress, terminate the lives of other socially "unacceptable" people. Look around the world, look at Greece under the generals, Brazil, Chile, Cambodia, Rhodesia—the globe is rife with régimes that commit repression and assassination in the name of the state. Look back 40 years and see the extermination in the Nazi death camps, legitimized by a frenzied whipping up of the collective will.

I know the immediate response to these arguments is, "Oh, that can't happen in Canada". Those who believe this wear blinkers and have no appreciation of history. Think of Argentina, the most sophisticated of Latin American countries 30 or 40 years ago and look at her now—rampant political kidnapping and assassination—the politics of witchcraft. Think of Lebanon—only three or four years ago—the progressive, economically vibrant outpost in the Middle East, shattered by internecine struggle—jungle warfare in concrete urban canyons, moods can change overnight. No, Mr. Speaker, democracy and respect of individual rights require constant vigilance. The state that can kill one of its own once can kill a thousand times thereafter.

At the risk of digressing somewhat from the actual provisions of the bill, I should like to argue further that the abolition of capital punishment and its inherent implication of sanctifying the right to life can be linked to another question that is currently before the nation and another that is waiting on the political doorstep. I refer of course to the questions of abortion and euthanasia. I do not want to go into the substance of these questions, but merely point out the principle involved in abortion and euthanasia in my mind is the same as the principle involved in the matter of capital punishment—the right of society to make a subjective moral judgment as to the value of continuation or termination of a life. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely against euthanasia for any reason, and abortion as a method of birth control by the parent or the state. Furthermore in each of the three issues the possibility of any metaphysical factor cannot be discounted, cannot be disproved, and as with our concept of justice must be given the benefit of the doubt unless otherwise established.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that although I have tried to take a fresh approach to the question of capital punishment, that does not mean that I do not agree with the standard abolitionist arguments as admirably spelled out by the Solicitor General, my colleagues, the hon. member for Ontario, the hon. member for Egmont, and the hon. member for Greenwood. Capital punishment is not a deterrent; the possibilities of an irreversible injustice are real; and the existence of the "final solution" intimidates juries in capital cases, resulting in the unjust mitigation of sentences and even outright acquittal. I therefore support this bill wholeheartedly.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, when I last spoke on the capital punishment issue in this House on May 22, 1973, I supported the extension of the trial period of partial abolition for a second five-year term ending in 1977. That trial period will not end for 20 months. Now we are suddenly confronted with a bill that would abolish the death penalty completely. It is impossible to evaluate the effectiveness of the trial period since the federal cabinet, in commuting every death sentence put before it, has thwarted the very intent of the partial abolition step.

It might seem that, as one who hopes that Canada will one day be an abolitionist country, I would welcome this bill. But I do not. The government's action in bringing in a total abolition bill now is an underhanded way of evading its responsibility in carrying out the present law. It will be impossible to build public support for total abolition while the public thinks that the enforcement of present laws, including the partial abolition law, is too lax. We must move forward slowly, surely, and honestly if real progress is to be made.

● (1720)

Canada is not ready for total abolition. A chief reason is the growing crime rate combined with the government's ineffective dealing with crime. Violent crime in Canada increased 90 per cent in the ten year period 1965-74. In 1965 there were 243 murders in the country; in 1974, 545. The murder rate in this period has doubled from 1.2 per 100,000 population to 2.4. Despite the fact that 38 policemen and jail guards were murdered in this same ten year period, no convicted murderer has been executed. Is it any wonder that the public is upset? Far from there being support for an abolition bill there is a strong demand for retention of full capital punishment.

Public confidence in the administration of justice is further weakened by the parole system. The actual time served in prison by 42 murderers paroled between 1968 and 1974 averaged only 13.35 years. In 1974 alone, 1,019 temporary absence permits were issued to inmates convicted of capital murder. It should be clear to all of us that the public does not want convicted murderers paroled in an average 13 years, or out on day passes. The public has a perfect right to demand the highest standards of safety in society; what the public sees is growing crime and weak law enforcement. It is in this climate that the government introduces a total abolition bill. What grotesque timing!

Much as I desire abolition, I cannot vote for it at this time. It is not sufficient in parliament to vote for a principle regardless of the applicability of the principle. It is clear to me that abolition would seriously divide the Canadian people in a way that would risk the credibility of both law and the democractic process. In other words I cannot isolate the principle of abolition from real conditions in our country. The reality is that it is better to keep capital punishment in limited cases than to rush total abolition and diminish respect for the law.

I fall back on Aristotle for my guide in this judgment. He writes in Politics: Book IV:

> The best is often unattainable, and therefore the true legislator and statesman ought to be acquainted not only with (1) that which is best in the abstract, but also with (2) that which is best relative to circumstances".

I believe Aristotle is telling us here that we ought not only aspire to the ideal but take account of circumstances, and even be prepared to preserve an inferior type of law if necessary.

A capital punishment debate always raises the question of an MP's conscience. Should the MP always follow the wishes of a majority of his electors even when his conscience would lead him in an opposite direction? We are dealing here with the highest question members of parliament can face, the question of life itself. We cannot slough off our responsibilities in the guise of adhering to questionable public opinion surveys. We are responsible to our constituents and to parliament itself to use our best judgment in resolving the capital punishment issue.

The people who sent us here must be able to evaluate our reasoning process. To insist that the MP always vote the popular opinion would be to turn him into an automaton. On the other hand I do not regard my right to enter the House of Commons as a licence to do whatever I want. I accept my responsibility to my electors, but I interpret that responsibility as one in which I should form unbiased opinions and come to mature judgments as best I can.

I have the greatest respect for those many constituents who press on me their belief in the reinstatement of full capital punishment. Their argumentation contains within it the frustration at seeing the murder rate climb and murderers freed after 13 years. But it does not follow from this that full capital punishment is the answer. In fact the evidence in support of capital punishment as a deterrent to murder is inconclusive. The answer lies rather in a firm and fixed sentencing for violent crimes, a tightening of the parole system, effective gun control legislation, and a rooting out of the causes of violence.

Only when the public has confidence that such measures have been put into practice, resulting in a discernible decrease in the crime rate and a resulting increase in the feeling of safety in society, will the public generally be ready to consider abolition on its own merits. This is the argument I put before the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) in a letter last July 11 when rumors began about a new peace and security program. I urged the Solicitor General to demonstrate his commitment to justice by strengthening law enforcement without touching the present capital punishment law. I said it was wrong and divisive to couple a crime prevention bill with total abolition. Put crime prevention into place, reassure the public about the enforcement of law, and only then reopen the capital punishment question. Of course, Mr. Speaker, my suggestion resulted in just the opposite course by the government.

Immediately following Bill C-83 on crime prevention we now have Bill C-84 on total abolition. The government has made a package of the two. Bill C-83 is not even out of committee where considerable improvements in it must be made. Yet the government is rushing abolition.

I have therefore to ask myself why the government could not wait until the expiration of the present capital punishment law before introducing abolition. The only conclusion I can come to is that the government wants the successful passage of abolition now to remove the distasteful duty of considering the commutation of 11 convicted murderers now awaiting execution—three of them now past the judicial appeal stage, scheduled for July 15, 1976.

The government has the statutory right to commute death sentences, but more commutations would convince the public beyond all shadow of doubt that the government will not carry out executions, which is tantamount to ignoring the intent of the present law which provides the death penalty for those convicted of murdering policement or jail guards. The government ranks will clearly be split on carrying out executions; a storm of political protest will erupt if the present law is seen to be continually ignored. Therefore the government has taken the expedient course of changing the law, and moreover, getting this change out of the way well before the 1978 election so that, hopefully, the public will have forgotten such legislative manipulation.

The issue we face at this time, Mr. Speaker, is not the pure principle of abolition, but respect for law and the legislative process. The government has so muddied the waters that a vote against this bill cannot possibly be construed as a vote against the principle of abolition. It is rather a vote against legislative expediency and manipulation. It is a vote for justice. Only justice being done now, and being seen to be done, can prepare the way for an abolition bill in subsequent years that will be capable of winning public support in a calmer atmosphere.

What is the proper course for the government? It should apply the crime prevention bill as improved in committee, and then extend the present capital punishment law for a third five year period. Let the public judge, on the evidence of its application, whether it is a good law. Only then should we be asked in parliament to make a definitive judgment on whether this country should live under an abolition or a capital punishment law. But free us from political machinations in such a deeply moral question. The common good demands that we take more time in coming to a final answer.

● (1730)

I want to emphasize that I will continue to work toward those circumstances that will ensure the viability of an abolition bill. I believe in a morality which excludes violence as permissible conduct. The sanctity of life is my starting point. When a murderer violates the sanctity of life by an act of violence on his victim, how is the sanctity of life preserved by another act of violence on the murderer, this time by the state? If we accepted execution as retributive justice in an earlier period, we should be thankful that society is becoming more sensitive and that there is a movement throughout the world for total abolition. I believe that in Canada, through the tolerant and patient application of the law, we can employ more effective means of protecting society against all crime, including murder.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Mr. Speaker, I regret I should have to follow the speech of the Pontius Pilate on the other side of the House.

Of all decisions we as legislators are called upon to make, surely this one is the most vital. We are, quite literally, being asked to decide between life and death. Mr. Speaker, my personal decision is to choose life.

I believe that to take human life is an action most foul. To take it in the name of the state does not, in any way, diminish the hideousness of that action. Only self-defence, in the most extreme of circumstances, could possibly justify this brutal, irrational and irrevocable step.

Would capital punishment act as a defence mechanism? Would it protect society? If we are to judge by statistics, then the answer is no. The possible deterrent value of capital punishment has been exhaustively studied. Staggering statistics and data, collected throughout the world, indicate a contrary value.

To place the matter nearer home let me point out that our policemen, unlike their U.K. counterparts, are armed. Criminals know, therefore, that in attacking our policemen, they face what could be in effect summary execution. That they are not deterred by this risk is evidenced by the sad number of murdered policemen.

In attempting to eradicate disease among humans it never occurs to civilized people to eradicate the diseased persons. Murder too is a plague, the most virulent of all social malaises; but in seeking to stem its proliferation I feel we should look carefully at its causes and work with all our might towards its prevention. This, then, would be the ultimate defence of society which must be our primary aim.

Greater minds than mine have studied, and continue to study the causes of violence. The death penalty itself breathes an atmosphere of violence into the society which uses it. Capital punishment stands for and teaches the moral that human life ceases to be sacred when its usefulness is questioned. This is a particularly dangerous lesson in troubled times such as ours. What our time cries for is a lowering of the level of violence in our society.

I mentioned causes of violence and there are many, but by and large I believe that violence is to a great extent the product which results from the placing of too little value on the worth of life. Those who truly respect life do not take it. The antidote for violence is therefore to emphasize the worth of life.

There has, alas, been an unhappy increase in the rate of violent crime, but there has been a parallel increase in the incidence of violence in our physical and cultural environment. The atomic bomb which was heralded as the culmination of scientific genius by its makers, brought to the survivors of Hiroshima the macabre spectre of on-going contamination and debility. From there we have moved to another, less dramatic, but more insistent seeping of violence—the kind we see daily on our TV screens—a cultural nourishment fed in indiscrimate doses to our children. Are we, as parents and educators, so innocent of our offsprings' guilt?

One of my favourite Canadian authors, Eric Nicol, has summed up the situation much more eloquently than I could:

> The person who actually pulled the trigger, must accept his share of the guilt, but how large that share is, no one has established with any degree of accuracy. This is why justice is such a distant relative of law and order. For starters the condemned should be accompanied to the gallows by Mum and Dad. Something went seriously wrong between the cradle and the noose. Somehow the cuddly little kid got transformed into "an animal". The chances that his parents are totally innocent, genetically and sociologically, in that strange metamorphosis, are extremely remote. Okay, so we have the killer, Ma and Pa in the death cell. Maybe Grannie and Grandpa too—right? There is still lots of guilt to go around. For example, should we not demand a share of the death penalty for the mongers of violence? The cold-eyed characters who push TV violence like Kojak and Cannon, and the motion picture violence of the various "Godfathers", "Mandingo", "Rollerball", "Jaws"—how do you measure their cumulative effect on a susceptible mind?
>
> The trap-door is getting a bit crowded. The hangman can use the services of a commissionaire to handle the queue. Yet the list of the guilty is barely begun, even after we include those of us who shout "Kill Him". At the football game, then look shocked when one of our team's linemen relaxes by dismantling a civilian. The prisoner strapped to the electric chair affords only so much room for others to sit on his lap. But we cannot, in all fairness, omit the culpability of developers, urban planners, politicians and others with a vested interest in the kind of depersonalized environment that abets the crazed sniper on the roof of the high rise, the senseless strangling in the park. We may wonder how a society can become so dichotomous in its philosophy as to see determinism as the main factor in illness, unemployment, divorce, abortion and a host of other crying shames, yet sees the killing of a policeman as 100 per cent an act of free will. Perhaps the answer is that society is so uptight with the frustrations of daily living that many of us are frantic for a sacrificial goat. Hang a few people, they feel, and maybe we can arrest the decline and fall of our mutual fund. If we can't kill inflation, dammit let's kill SOMEBODY!

Now let us look at those who have paid the supreme penalty in a society very similar to ours. Are they usually the well-educated, the well-bred, or those who can fully afford the luxury of expensive legal ingenuity, well versed in plea bargaining? An examination of sentences imposed by California juries in first-degree murder cases over an eight-year period in the 1960's revealed that 42 per cent of the blue-collar workers convicted of murder received death sentences while the comparable figure for white-collar workers was 5 per cent. Does this imply that people have died only because they could not afford a lawyer who was specialized and highly skilled in criminal defence? Discovery and proof of mitigating circumstances and the rebuttal of evidence of aggravating circumstances may require costly investigation.

● (1740)

With reference to this latter point, former Governor DiSalle writes:

> I have never seen a person of means go to the chair. It is the well-heeled gangster, the professional killer who can afford the best legal talent to defend him, who gets off with a lesser sentence. It is the poor, the illiterate, the under privileged, the member of the minority group—the man who, because he is without means, is defended by a court-appointed attorney—who becomes society's blood sacrifice.
>
> The court-appointed defender, diligent though he may be, is always handicapped. Sometimes he is inept—there is no criterion of experience in criminal law to guide a court appointment—and always he lacks the staff and funds available to the prosecution. Without funds and personnel to investigate the backgroud of jurors and witnesses, to check alibis and examine the evidence before trial, the court-appointed attorney and his client have two strikes against them before they even enter a plea.

Then, of course, there is the possibility of error. Which of us does not shudder to remember the fate of Timothy John Evans who, in 1950, was hanged in Britain for murders actually committed by John R. Christie? Sixteen years later society acknowledged its horrendous mistake and granted Evans a posthumous pardon. His body was then exhumed and finally laid to rest in consecrated ground. Cold comfort!

Perhaps Canada can benefit from the experience of other countries and recall a statement made by the Belgian minister of justice in 1930, after 67 years of abolition of capital punishment:

> The lesson has been learned that the best means of inculcating respect for human life is to refrain from taking life in the name of the law.

I would like to rebut yet another argument frequently advanced by retentionists who hold the view that a 25 year mandatory jail sentence is less humane than the death penalty. But is it really? To put forward such a thesis is surely to debate the quality of life, but is this not a secondary consideration if the primary requisite, life itself, does not exist?

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I speak on this subject of capital punishment having knowledge of murder cases in my own constituency. Upon reading Bill C-84, which proposes to abolish capital punishment for persons convicted of murder and to replace it with a sentence of so-called life imprisonment, I have found it to be merely another instance in which the federal government has chosen to disregard the rights of truly innocent citizens.

Where is the conscience of our government and its officials? Continually they overlook public opinion. Today I have heard people reacting to public opinion in the wrong manner. Public opinion is very important, but in this instance it has been overlooked. The government is overwhelmingly ignoring the obvious wishes expressed by the majority of constituents across Canada. The petition presented to the House of Commons on May 1, 1975, attracted little respect and much contempt in this House.

Being from a city which has experienced first hand the tragedy of savage and brutal premeditated murder, it is not difficult for me to understand why my constituents are so forcefully demanding the full reinstatement of capital punishment. The common arguments supporting this view may seem rather meaningless unless you have been personally involved and have seen the effects of such violence on a total community. What would be your reaction, Mr. Speaker, if this press release, which I quote in part referred to members of your family, neighbours, or fellow citizens?

Two slain Moncton police officers may have been ordered to dig their own graves, found the digging tough in frozen ground, and moved elsewhere. The two were found buried in shallow graves Sunday, shot through the head and wearing handcuffs. One handcuff was not fastened in each case. The bodies were found buried on a hilltop near a spot where two graves appeared to have been started, but not finished. The policemen's revolvers, portable radio and other articles were found by the unfinished diggings.

Two other "diggings" had been found near where the revolvers were located, but police could not speculate on who had apparently tried to dig at that spot. The two policemen, one a 47-year-old father of four and the other a 33-year-old father of two, had been missing since early Friday when they stopped to inspect a car suspected to have been involved in . . . kidnapping.

Certainly situations such as this one require more than the 25 year sentence suggested by this bill. Should the life of one who threatens society be preserved when individuals of this kind have so painstakingly planned the death of two innocent victims? Surely there is no means of rehabilitation which could instil in the mind of a murderer a conscience, the element of mind he obviously so severely lacks. Surely we must realize that a mere 25 years of free room and board are no deterrent, and definitely no solution, to such a grave problem as murder.

Let us pause for a moment to consider this situation. A person has committed murder and been sentenced to 25 years. This offers society, at best, a questionable and doubtful partial and temporary security from the killer. Having the greatest incentive to try and escape—and escape they do—it is not unlikely that in doing so two or three guards could be killed. What is to stop the prisoner from successive murders of this nature? Certainly the threat of another prison sentence, added to what already seems an indeterminable length of time, has no restraining power over an individual capable of murder.

The thought that to take the life of another would ultimately bring the destruction of his own being would most definitely produce an obstruction in the mind of the murderer, a mind in which the only element dear to self is self. Let there be no doubt then that the death penalty is a deterrent.

Let us turn to some numerical facts with regard to this matter. Disciples of and adherents to abolition constantly use the argument that during the period between 1957 and 1970, while capital punishment was a written law in this land, murders increased from 129 to 420—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member will be permitted to continue at the next resumption of this order.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by Major A. G. Vandelac, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

[Translation]

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the right hon. Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to give in Her Majesty's name the Royal Assent to the following bills:

Bill C-92, An Act to provide for compensation for former prisoners of war and their dependants and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof.—Chapter No. 95.

Bill S-8, An Act respecting the use of national safety marks in relation to motor vehicle tires and to provide for safety standards for certain motor vehicle tires imported into or exported from Canada or sent or conveyed from one province to another.—Chapter No. 96.

Bill S-3, An Act to amend the Quarantine Act.—Chapter No. 97.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 6.01 the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, May 6, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

STATUS OF WOMEN

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO IMPROVE STATUS IN BUSINESS COMMUNITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, under Standing Order 43, to move the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House notes the appointment by the minister responsible for the status of women of a committee to advise him on the business community's progress on status of women issues, the said committee being composed of senior representatives of Canadian business and industry who will meet with the minister twice a year, and this House, noting in particular that of the eight members of the committee seven are men and only one is a woman, condemns this gesture as sheer tokenism and calls on the government to come forward with positive steps to upgrade the status of women in this country's business community.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

FEDERAL PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

SUGGESTED REDEFINITION OF ROLE OF MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce an urgent motion of pressing necessity.

Considering the alarming conclusion contained in the report of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities that within five years the structure of the municipal government as we now know it will disappear; considering that this means the absolute seizure by the state of this sector, as was the case with school boards which completely lost their autonomy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That this House immediately discuss the actual role that should be fulfilled by the municipal government which is the base of our Canadian democracy system and, at the same time, the government level closest to the citizens, to prevent completing the creation, as provided, of another administrative monster of the centralizing state.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

* * *

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEED INCOME FOR HOMEMAKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to present a motion concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that the increase in the cost of living forces a growing number of women to leave the household to find a job enabling the family to make both ends meet, and that a high number of women would rather stay home to take care of their children instead of working out, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That this House examine the possibility of establishing a guaranteed income for homemakers wishing to stay home to take care of their children, so that it enables families to meet the ever rising cost of living across Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

* * *

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

SUGGESTED RETURN TO PROVINCES OF RIGHT OF DIRECT TAXATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since the agreement, concluded between the government of Canada and that of the province of Quebec under an act approved on May 13, 1942 concerning the suspension of certain wartime taxes, expired on March 31, 1947; also, in view of the fact that the said agreement had been concluded so as to allow Canada to provide a maximum effort during World War II and that the said war has been over for 31 years; that the government of Canada recognized at the time that the province of Quebec, in making this commitment, did not relinquish or turn over any part of its sovereignty nor any of its rights, powers and privileges under the Constitution; and that it also appears from subsections 2 and 9 of section 92 and also from section 121 of the British North America Act that a provincial legislature is entitled to levy direct taxes on its territory to constitute a revenue for provincial purposes, I move seconded by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette):

That this House urge the federal government to return as soon as possible to the province of Quebec all rights of direct taxation that it borrowed from the said legislature for wartime purposes since the province of Quebec had agreed to suspend temporarily the levy and collection of certain taxes on income and corporations only for this purpose.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

● (1410)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL SECURITY

PARTICIPATION OF SOLICITOR GENERAL IN GUIDELINES ISSUED TO SECURITY SERVICE—MEETING WITH GENERAL DARE

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I appreciate the nervous reaction on the other side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Questions were raised yesterday about a serious apparent discrepancy between a position taken by a senior public servant and the Prime Minister. I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General who yesterday told the House at page 13196 of Hansard, that he intended "to get all the information before answering the question". Considering any guidelines which were issued by the Prime Minister or by a cabinet committee with regard to restricting RCMP inquiries into any segment of the Canadian public, will the minister now advise the House if he was aware of the guidelines referred to specifically in the exchange of correspondence between General Dare and Mr. Bourne and if he participated in any way in the decision to issue such instructions?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, since yesterday I have looked into this matter thoroughly. I have found that what is in question is a cabinet decision with respect to the operations of the security service which had been conveyed to the RCMP. This cabinet decision dealt with, among other things, and confirmed that the RCMP should not survey legitimate political parties per se, but of course individuals in all political parties should be subject to surveillance if they are suspect with regard to criminal activities, subversion, violence or anything like that. That cabinet decision was based on a document that I had submitted to cabinet. It had first been screened or dealt with by the cabinet committee on security intelligence. A decision had been made and submitted to full cabinet. Cabinet confirmed it and it was passed on to the RCMP.

I guess the difficulty has arisen through the use of terminology. General Dare described the conveyance of the decision of the cabinet as guidelines. It was really a cabinet decision. It dealt with general operations only of the security service and did not deal with security screening of applicants for the public service. It did not deal with that. The letter of General Dare asked for clarification as to whether the general operations and policies might apply to the security screening, and that is what led to the further correspondence.

Mr. Clark: The letter of General Dare did not make a specific reference to the cabinet but rather a quite personal specific reference to the Prime Minister and to a discussion with the Prime Minister. I wonder if the Solicitor General has spoken with General Dare regarding this matter, and I wonder whether he can tell the House if it is still the position of General Dare that there was a discussion with the Prime Minister and, as stated in the February letter, that the Prime Minister issued certain guidelines and that the Prime Minister spoke specifically of the Party Quebecois.

Mr. Allmand: I did meet with General Dare this morning.

Mr. Fairweather: It must have been a happy meeting.

Mr. Allmand: It was a very good meeting. General Dare was really speaking about his participation in the meeting with the security and intelligence committee, and there was no direction from the Prime Minister. Of course, the Prime Minister was part of the committee, as were many other ministers and members of the security community who participate in those meetings, but the decision General Dare was talking about, the cabinet decision, was a decision of the cabinet as a whole and the cabinet committee as a whole and was not the result of any private meeting between General Dare and the Prime Minister.

POSSIBILITY PARTY QUEBECOIS MENTIONED BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Since this has become a part of the public record, will the Solicitor General tell the House now whether the Prime Minister, to use the language of General Dare, spoke specifically of the Party Quebecois?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): We do not make public the private discussions which go on in cabinet and in cabinet committees. It is true that when we were discussing these general guidelines we discussed how they might apply to many political parties, but this only confirms what I have announced in this House on many occasions when people asked whether, for example, members of parliament, members of trade unions or members of political parties are subject to surveillance just because they belong to those groups, and I have always answered that they are not. However, the members of any legitimate group can be subject to surveillance if they are suspected of criminal or subversive activity, and that is what was being discussed.

Mr. Clark: Is it the position of the Solicitor General and the government of Canada that General Dare was incorrect and not stating the facts when he said in his letter that the Prime Minister spoke specifically of the Party Quebecois?

Mr. Allmand: I attended those meetings, and while different things were discussed, I cannot remember who discussed what. However, what I discussed with General Dare this morning was the decision of the cabinet committee. He has confused the decision of the cabinet committee with perhaps the input of different people in making up the final decision.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You have a selective memory.

TO WHOM GENERAL DARE REPORTS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to pursue the questioning of the Solicitor General to try to determine precisely what apparatus exists within the government with respect to this whole area. Yesterday the Prime Minister refused to indicate the frequency of his meetings with General Dare, nor would he indicate whether the Solicitor General was in fact present at those meetings. Can the Solicitor General advise the House of the line of command which exists for General Dare? Does he report to the Solicitor General or directly to the Prime Minister?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, General Dare reports to the commissioner of the RCMP who in turn reports to me, and I report to the Prime Minister and this House.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF MAINTENANCE OF INDEPENDENCE OF FORCE

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister made repeated references to this cabinet committee on security and intelligence which oversees the operation of government agents in the area of security and intelligence and at which certain conclusions were reached which were communicated to the police. I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister might give the House an explanation of the terms of reference and membership of such a committee, and is it the position of the government that RCMP inquiries may be restricted by such a body, or is the independence of the force to be maintained regardless of conclusions reached or instructions communicated to the RCMP?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the independence of the police is protected. Of course, the government has to take responsibility for all matters lying under its jurisdiction, but in pursuing that objective it does not interfere with the independence of the police.

* * *

● (1420)

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBILITY OF UNDERWATER LISTENING DEVICES ON EAST AND WEST COASTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Would the minister tell the House whether a Lieutenant-Commander Barry Ridgewell and/or other members of the Canadian Armed Forces have been searching the continental shelf off Canada's west coast for certain underwater listening devices and, if so, would he tell us what they have found?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, they have not been searching for such devices.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question. Apart from whether or not they have been searching, according to news reports perhaps they should be. Would the minister tell the House whether the government has any information, either from observing trawlers or any other source, that would lead them to believe that a foreign power has established underwater listening devices either off the west coast or the east coast of Canada?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, we have no evidence whatever that that has been done.

Mr. Broadbent: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister explain to the House why a presumably responsible officer in the armed services of Canada has made such a contention, and if what he says is a blatant falsehood would the minister tell the House what disciplinary action the government plans to take?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I think the words used would have to be a little more clear. I do not think there was any suggestion that there were devices of that kind.

Mr. Broadbent: He said there were.

Mr. Richardson: I think the commander was describing that the type of work he is engaged in and that his training could be used for a number of purposes, such as for locating resources, sunken ships or aircraft, and that there was also a possibility that it could be used to find devices of the kind described if they were there. He was talking about the possibility of this, not about the fact that they were there or that he had seen them.

* * *

[Translation]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

EVIDENCE BEFORE CRIME COMMISSION BY JUDGE LAMER—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF INTEGRITY

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice.

Did the Minister of Justice ask his deputy for a complete report on the evidence given by Judge Antonio Lamer before the Inquiry Commission on Organized Crime? In the affirmative, can he reassure the House about the integrity of the new chairman of the Law Reform Commission?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the House previously, my predecessor discussed this question with the deputy attorney general. I have asked to be apprised of the report that was given to my predecessor but I have not yet received it. However, may I say that I have no information that would indicate any lack of integrity on the part of the chairman of the Law Reform Commission.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO NEW CHAIRMAN OF LAW REFORM COMMISSION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Solicitor General.

Has the minister been informed about the questionable acquaintances of the chairman of the Law Reform Commission and does he intend to order an inquiry to know whether a man who assumes responsibilities so fraught with consequences intends to advocate in a disguised manner reforms likely to encourage criminality rather than discourage it?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—MAXIMUM AMOUNT PAYABLE BY GOVERNMENT—POSSIBLE GUARANTEE OF LOAN BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. In reply to previous questions the Minister of National Defence has declined to reveal either the rate of interest which Lockheed will pay on the loan from Canadian banks or to say whether the total interest payments would be in excess of $111 million set aside for such payments by his department. However, on Monday the Minister of Supply and Services told reporters that, whatever terms are negotiated between the banks and Lockheed, the government will pay no more than a maximum which is fixed in the contract. Would the Minister of Supply and Services now tell the House what this maximum fixed figure is, and would he now provide copies of the contract in compliance with his previous commitments?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, we have negotiated with Lockheed the maximum charges the federal government will assume and they have been incorporated in the contract, which is now in escrow. Of course, if Lockheed can achieve and finalize negotiations with Canadian banks, then the contract will be in force and we will table it in the House. In the arrangement with Lockheed, it is understood that if it can obtain better terms and conditions with Canadian banks the federal government will benefit, but if it cannot, then Lockheed will absorb the additional cost and responsibility.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why the minister does not wish to answer the question by giving a figure of what percentage of interest is involved. The government has stated repeatedly it will not guarantee a loan to Lockheed, yet the minister on Monday told reporters that in case of a Lockheed bankruptcy the government would assume the payments made until that point, and that the banks are protected to that extent. If that does not amount to a government guarantee I do not know what does. Therefore, I should like to hear the minister's explanation of why a commitment to repay the banks for money loaned to Lockheed does not amount to a guarantee.

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, there is no more guarantee than the one the federal government would have to face if the federal government were providing the financing through appropriation. That means that if there are any risks for the Canadian banks they have to be settled with Lockheed, not with the federal government. We do not give any guarantee on any loan to Lockheed.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR ASSESSMENT OF ENVIRONMENTAL DANGERS BEFORE ESTABLISHING RADIOACTIVE WASTE DISPOSAL SITE NEAR PORT GRANBY

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and is in respect of a 470-acre parcel optioned by a governmental agency under his jurisdiction near Port Granby, just west of Port Hope, for the purpose of a radioactive nuclear waste disposal site. Will the minister give the assurance to me and the House that procedures such as outlined, for instance, in the provincial government's environmental protection act, which require a full public assessment of the environmental dangers and the requirement of public hearings in respect of a matter such as this, will be followed either before the government goes ahead with completion of the purchase, or inevitably uses it as a radioactive waste disposal site?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to convey this representation to the federal-provincial task force which is concerned with the clean-up of the Port Hope situation. As the hon. member may know, there are a number of federal government and Ontario government departments involved. I believe the Ontario Department of the Environment is specifically concerned with the licensing arrangements for such a new disposal site.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED GUARANTEE OF PUBLIC HEARINGS BEFORE APPROVAL OF RADIOACTIVE WASTE DISPOSAL SITE AT PORT GRANBY

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is then directed to the federal Minister of the Environment. As both he and his colleague in the Cabinet must know, if the federal government wants to waive completely all these guarantees in the provincial legislation it can and quite frequently has done so. The federal Minister of the Environment has within his personal discretion the authority to give an undertaking right here and now that these guarantees of public hearings and full public disclosure of the environmental assessment will be made before this site can be used for radioactive dumping purposes. I would ask the minister then, because it is within his discretion, to give that undertaking to the House now.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I cannot add more to what has been said by my colleagues on this. We have a general work force with the government of Ontario, and this is surely a problem on which we are going to proceed. We are studying this problem of nuclear waste in the region of Port Hope. We are going to look into this problem jointly with the government of Ontario, and we are ready to consider whatever recommendations are submitted to us.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, if, as the minister contends, the province of Ontario does have something to do with this, I would ask whether the federal government will follow the requirements and guarantees written into the provincial government's legislation rather than relying on the rather arbitrary provisions which exist in his own legislation?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think in this regard we will have to consult with the government of Ontario. I am sure we are going to co-operate with that government and it will accept the standards we propose. Even if they do not do it immediately they have the programs to do it and we do the same thing. There is no doubt that we will support the government of Ontario.

* * *

● (1430)

PENITENTIARIES

MEASURES TO PROTECT CORRECTIONAL OFFICERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General a serious question concerning a bill now before the committee. This is in a different field. Once again we have seen correctional officers and institutional staff members held as hostages. The last situation was at the Archambault institution. We can be thankful that they were released without a murder such as happened in British Columbia. The Solicitor General in answering a question, said that the only way to prevent such occurrences is to lock up everybody. Has the Solicitor General come up with a policy or plan to protect the correctional officers from this kind of harassment and danger and would he now tell us what the plan is because I say to him in all seriousness that the situation in our institutions across Canada is very precarious.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, part of the plan is in the peace and security program, the administrative side, in which it is mentioned that first of all we would move to the construction of smaller institutions containing 150 to 180 inmates to allow for greater segregation of inmates. Also this type of institution would provide better security and rehabilitation.

Second, in response to the unions and the administration we have agreed to have a more intensive training and retraining program for correctional officers including training in such things as crisis and hostage situations. Furthermore, there are many security arrangements being introduced. I would not be able to state them all here, but I would be willing to send them to the hon. member.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUGGESTED IMPROVEMENT IN BAIL PROVISIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Well, Mr. Speaker, that program looks like something that will be done three years from now. I should like to ask the Minister of Justice, because not only are officers being held as hostages but most of our penitentiaries are like sieves, whether he has looked into the matter of Nichols and Gamble, one of whom was on a charge of murder and the other attempted murder, who came to Calgary while on bail and robbed a credit union, murdered a police officer and held two civilians for 47 hours as hostages. Has he worked out with the attorneys general of the provinces a plan to use their judicial discretion in favour of public safety—I emphasize that—rather than in favour of criminal violators. The new bill is not the solution because the discretion will be exercised by the same judges. What is the answer?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as a courtesy from the Attorney General of British Columbia I received a full report from Mr. Gardorn on the particular case to which the hon. member referred. The two alleged gentlemen to whom the hon. member refers applied for bail and their bail applications were contested by the provincially appointed Crown counsel at the time. However, a decision was made by the magistrate involved to allow them out on bail. As the hon. member knows, effective April 26 the bail changes I proposed to Parliament came into effect. They are designed specifically to avoid a situation such as that at Calgary. I have urged publicly and with the attorneys general that their Crown prosecutors across the country take note of those provisions and use them effectively because it seems to me that the changes made in Bill C-71 give Crown counsel a proper argument to use before any Justice of the Peace or magistrate that people who are a danger to the public should be kept in jail pending trial. I would hope Crown attorneys across this country will take note of my remarks.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ALLEGED INQUIRIES ABOUT MEMBERS BY PRIVATE DETECTIVES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General.

Since in the course of matters recently considered by Parliament some allegations were made that private agencies or detectives were hired by some Canadians to investigate the behaviour of members, could the Solicitor General tell the House what he intends to do to make sure that no member is subjected to undue investigations from private detectives or agencies and that the rights and privileges of parliamentarians are always respected in an institution where freedom of action and speech is the very basis of our political system?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it has been brought to my attention that a private detective agency has been hired by certain political figures or parties to investigate—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That is very interesting.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I cannot hear the Solicitor General. I must say the reason I cannot is that the noise is coming from behind him, rather than from across the aisle.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it has been brought to my attention that a private detective agency or agencies have been hired and have investigated members, not only in respect of their public but their personal lives. I intend to have this looked into as quickly as possible.

* * *

FINANCE

PROPOSED ADVICE TO CANADIAN BANKS NOT TO PARTICIPATE IN LOAN TO CHILE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am suffering from a slight cold. For that reason I am waiting until the hubbub subsides before I put my question. Mr. Speaker, I would put my question to the Acting Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Finance or perhaps to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister aware that according to the Wall Street Journal and other sources, Canadian banks are proposing to join with United States financial institutions in the making of loans of $100 million to $125 million to Chile, and in light of the repeated condemnation by the Canadian government of that régime which is based upon oppression and torture, and in view also of the grave financial and economic conditions in Chile where there is enormous debt and rampant inflation, will he advise any Canadian banks that it would be wrong as well as unwise for Canadian banks to be involved in any such loans.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the report nor am I in a position to judge its authenticity. However, I will certainly take up the matter.

* * *

MUSEUMS

REASON FOR DISMISSAL OF SOME EMPLOYEES—POSSIBILITY OF TRANSFERS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State of which I have given him informal notice a couple of hours ago. Notification of dismissals has been given by the National Museums Branch to many public servants who have long tenure. Will the minister explain the rationalization of this move and whether the public servants involved will have some security in other elements of the public service.

● (1440)

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question. As he has noted in his question, no career public servants have in fact been laid off at this point. As the result of the restraint program, 28 positions have been designated as redundant and over the next three months the corporation will try to find work for the 28 in question.

POST OFFICE

DATE OF COMPLETION OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH SUPERVISORY PERSONNEL—DECISION OF ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. In view of the long drawn out negotiations with supervisory personnel and the fact that some of these supervisors are being paid at a lower rate than the personnel they supervise, can the Postmaster General indicate when a new contract will be announced?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, that matter was settled several days ago. If the hon. gentleman is referring to the reclassification procedure with regard to supervisory personnel, he will be pleased to know that it has been completed to their satisfaction. As for current labour negotiations, personnel issues as well as non-monetary issues have been resolved.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, will the AIB be applying the same terms of reference to the supervisory group as they did to the CUPW group during their negotiations?

Mr. Mackasey: I cannot prejudge what the AIB decision will be. I imagine that if any change has to be made, heavy stress will be put on the historical relationship between all the groups, CUPW and LCUC as well as the supervisors in both groups.

* * *

SEARCH AND RESCUE

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENTS CONCERNING SINKING OF "SAN JUAN"

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence who yesterday placed a price tag on the safety and security of Canadian fishermen when he said he would not respond to the request to have the search and rescue group deployed because it has not been found to be cost effective. This will prove to be to his discredit. My question today is prompted by the report tabled in the House by the Minister of Transport earlier on the sinking of the fishing vessel San Juan and on questions relating to the same subject tabled in the House earlier this week by the minister. In the investigation by the Minister of Transport there is the following statement:

At no time during the search was the "San Juan" itself actually sighted, only the flare from the vessel at 0345 being visible to those aboard the "Bartlett".

Yet in his reply to me earlier this week the minister stated that visual contact was established by the coast-guard ship at 3.30 o'clock and maintained until 4.30 o'clock. That is a very serious discrepancy considering the fact that two fishermen were lost in that accident. There is a serious contradiction there. I ask the minister if he can explain it or if he will cause a ministerial investigation of that serious contradiction to be carried out.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): I will look into the facts that have been presented, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE

REASON FOR DELAY OF MAIL AT CLINTON, ONTARIO

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Notices of a meeting were sent out to dairy producers from the agriculture and food office in Clinton, Ontario on Tuesday, April 20. On Tuesday, April 27, one week after the mailing of these notices, many had not been received. Can the minister advise us what is going on in the Post Office when an ordinary procedure, such as getting such notices a few miles to their destination on time, cannot be carried out, or does the fact that they were not sealed and that only a 6 cents stamp was put on them could cause this kind of delay?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I would have to inquire whether the delay was intentional or unintentional and whether the circumstances mentioned by the hon. member, the fact that the letters were unsealed and the fact that probably insufficient postage was placed on them, are correct. I will investigate today and report to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. McKinley: Surely the minister should know whether it is general policy within the Post Office Department that unsealed mail with a 6 cent stamp on it takes longer to arrive to its destination than first class mail. Can he at least give us that information? Further, let me say that I will send the pertinent information to the minister.

Mr. Clark: Do it by hand.

Mr. Mackasey: I must apologize, Mr. Speaker. I did not think the hon. member wanted general information but was referring to something specific. I would like to be useful. If the hon. gentleman will bring the specific case to my attention, I will give it extraordinary attention because of my great affection for the hon. member.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LAY-OFFS AT HM DOCKYARD, ESQUIMALT—ASSURANCE OF WORK ON REFIT OF HMCS "SASKATCHEWAN"

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Defence. Can he assure the House, in the interests of preserving the strength, morale and integrity of the highly trained civilian work force at the HM Dockyard in Esquimalt, that he will issue instructions immediately that all lay-offs from the competent staff of this force cease forthwith?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will make inquiries concerning that representation.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Can he assure the House that all work on the refit of HMCS Saskatchewan, which is to start next month, will take place with this force at that base?

Mr. Richardson: I will also make inquiries concerning that representation, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

[Translation]

FISHERIES

POSSIBILITY OF UNILATERAL DECLARATION OF 200-MILE LIMIT IF LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE FAILS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fisheries.

Considering the apparently inevitable failure of the Law of the Sea Conference, in spite of the effort to reach an agreement on the 200-mile limit at the conclusion of the conference now being held in New York, could the minister assure the House and all fishermen in Canada that the Canadian government will take a unilateral stand in this respect without too much delay?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the joint statement as yet; it had not been tabled this morning. There is no doubt that, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said, 1976 is a critical year for Canadian fisheries and in that sense we intend to take our responsibilities and do whatever is necessary to protect our interests.

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—PROPOSAL TO LIMIT LAND-BASED NICKEL PRODUCTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of this day to those of us interested in the law of the sea, may I address an extraordinary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or to the Acting Prime Minister. This deals with the report out of New York today that a proposal will be laid before the Law of the Sea Conference that limits be placed on production of land-based nickel reserves in order to encourage production of minerals on the ocean floor. Has the government adopted an official position with regard to this particular proposal?

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, several proposals are under discussion at the conference, including some that are quite controversial, such as the one to which the hon. member just referred. Canada, of course, could not accept any text which would have the effect of damaging the land-based nickel production in Canada.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

OLYMPIC GAMES

EXTENSION OF LOTTERY TO ASSIST WITH DEFICIT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. It is reported in the press in a dispatch out of Quebec City today that the Quebec finance minister, Mr. Raymond Garneau, and the President of the Treasury Board have agreed to create a national lottery to run until 1979 which is expected to produce $300 million to assist in the anticipated Olympic's deficit. The proceeds are to be used after 1979 for the development of Canadian athletes. I should like to ask the minister if he intends to bring the establishment of this national lottery before parliament before it is implemented before the end of August this year?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to make a statement on this subject. Indeed, I had some conversations with the Quebec Minister of Finance about self-financing programs for the Olympic Games but they are not completed.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether it is correct to say these discussions have taken place with Julien Côté who, it is anticipated, will be appointed the national lottery chairman. I should like also to ask whether it is the minister's intention to bring this matter before parliament before a final decision is made?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, nobody was met because no decision has been made up to now. Of course, any new policy in this area will be presented to the House, and I hope we will have a favourable vote from all parties represented in the House if we put forward a measure along that line.

* * *

● (1450)

HEALTH

FREEZING OF FUNDS FOR MEDICAL RESEARCH—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO ILL EFFECTS

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Can the minister tell the House whether he has read the statement of the medical director of the Canadian Tuberculosis and Respiratory Diseases Association that the freeze imposed by the federal government on medical research could have disastrous effects on the health of the average Canadian and, if so, can he tell the House what he intends to do to reassure Canadians who are naturally concerned at the thought that financial restrictions in the medical field threaten the quality of medical care, as stated by Dr. Dirks?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I did not see the particular statement referred to me by the hon. member but several similar statements have been made in the last few weeks. I want to point out to the hon. member that the funds allotted to the Medical Research Council have not been frozen as such. In fact, they were increased by over $1 million.

Still, many researchers in particular consider that increase inadequate, and I am endeavouring to find ways of recovering funds elsewhere to give greater assistance to medical research. I find myself in a quandary but I have already advised researchers that the government does consider this a serious matter. I do hope that we will be able to improve the situation.

* * *

[English]

COMMUNICATIONS

POSSIBILITY GOVERNMENT TELEPHONE COMPANIES WILL BE PROHIBITED FROM OWNING CABLEVISION STATIONS—DISCUSSIONS WITH MANITOBA AND SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. In her recent discussions with her provincial counterparts did the minister give any indication of a change in federal policy which prohibits government telephone companies from owning cable T.V. plants?

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): No, Mr. Speaker, in my conversations with provincial ministers I certainly did not mention any changes in policy in the way indicated by the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: I am interested in the hon. minister's reply, Mr. Speaker. Specifically, however, did the minister have any conversations with the ministers of communications of Saskatchewan and Manitoba about this subject at the time it was before the CRTC and both governments were applicants before that body? If there were discussions, especially before the decision of the CRTC, would the minister not think this might infringe upon the integrity and/or independence of the CRTC?

[Translation]

Mrs. Sauvé: No, Mr. Speaker, I did hold discussions with the Saskatchewan and Manitoba ministers on the technical equipment ownership issue. Since the telephone companies in these provinces are owned by provincial governments, they would like to make the best of this ideal tool to proceed with a rational and economical development of cablevision.

They advised me also of their views on a more efficient way of using this tool if all the matter of ownership were left to telephone companies. We have discussed that problem. I did not make any commitments in resolving this problem although I understand perfectly the rationale of the proposal of the two provinces and to which I give full consideration.

[English]

GRAIN

STABILIZATION PLAN—NUMBER OF FARMERS NEEDED TO MAKE PLAN OPERATIVE AND NUMBER OPTING OUT

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. It is supplementary to the question put on Monday by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. Could the hon. parliamentary secretary give the House some figures as to the percentage or number of farmers opting out of the western grain stabilization plan and could he also tell the House what numbers are needed to make the plan operative?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give an accurate figure to a precise digit, although my information within the last couple of days is that it is substantially below the 10 per cent we had allowed in our general calculations when preparing the legislation. We anticipate that in the long run close to 90 per cent of western farmers will wish to participate. We welcome assistance from all members which would help to bring the tremendous value of this legislation to the attention of western farmers.

Mr. Elzinga: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The parliamentary secretary did not share with the House the information on the numbers needed to make the plan operative. As already over 10,000 grain farmers have declared in writing their intention to opt out of the plan, would he inform the House if the government plans to make available to farmers the same proposal that will be available to the government; that is that the contribution will only be on paper as recommended in Bill C-87?

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, on the general question of how many producers are required to make the plan operative, of course it is designed to work with any number of producers but the more that participate the greater will be the general stability for the grains economy. For those who participate, however, the program will be perfectly effective and supportive. On the question of the provisions contained in Bill C-87, I would remind the hon. member that the bill simply allows the contributions of the government to the grain stabilization fund to be deferred until the money is needed; when it is needed it will be paid into the fund with interest.

* * *

CANADA ELECTION EXPENSES ACT

LEGALITY OF PAYING FOR PRIVATE INVESTIGATORS OUT OF FUNDS RAISED UNDER ACT

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. It concerns the use of private investigators by political parties. Would the minister check into the legality of paying for such Nixonite tactics from funds raised under the Canada Election Expenses Act?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Who do you think you are, Robert Redford?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUGGESTED MEETING WITH PRESIDENT OF LABOUR CONGRESS TO AVOID GENERAL STRIKE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. On Tuesday I brought to the attention of the minister the fact that the CLC would be considering resolutions, one of which would be to mobilize for a general strike. The minister said he was concerned about it and that we all should be trying our best to avoid this. I hope he would think that a personal audience with the president of the CLC is in keeping with any plan to avoid a strike. Has he met with the president and if so, what has been the result?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this matter and general labour matters with the president of the CLC on many occasions.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister discuss this matter again with the president of the CLC in order to advise him of the gravity of the situation prior to the convention? This is what we are interested in.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think the president of the CLC is aware of the concern about resolutions of this kind. I shall probably be talking to him on several occasions in the next week or so, but he is aware of the situation.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH GREAT LAKES SEAMEN—REQUEST FOR CONCILIATION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Minister of Labour. In light of the fact that contract negotiations have broken down between seamen, masters and officers and the Great Lakes carriers and that they have asked for a conciliation, what action has the minister taken in connection with this?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we are discussing this with the parties concerned to find the most appropriate way to bring them back together. Many of the issues have been ironed out over the last few months. I think we will be able to arrive at a procedure to bring the parties together.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question. Would the minister undertake to report to the House next week what progress he has been able to make? The deadline on the contract is June 1.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

PROTEIN PREMIUM FOR PRODUCERS WHO SHIP IN CAR LOTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, I shall address my question to his parliamentary secretary. What action has been taken in light of the request of the Palliser Wheat Growers Association that producers who wish to ship their grain by producer car lots receive a protein premium?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member a detailed reply today but I will undertake to get it and report very shortly.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise a point of order. I wonder if I might ask the government House leader about the business for the balance of the week and for next week.

● (1500)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon, as the House is aware, we will take votes on the report stage of Bill C-68. We shall then revert to second reading of Bill C-84. the intention of the government is that debate on second reading of that bill will continue until conclusion, except for interruptions for allotted days, the budget if it should be delivered before debate on second reading of Bill C-84 is concluded, and perhaps report stage and third reading of Bill C-81, the MPs' pay bill.

I should add, for the information of hon. members, that the House leaders have agreed to recommend that the taking of a recorded vote on second reading of Bill C-84 will be subject to an order of the House, which I shall in due course, after discussion with the other House leaders, bring before the House, but not necessarily at the immediate conclusion of the debate itself. I say this so that hon. members can be assured there will not be a surprise vote or that they will have to carry on the debate unnecessarily in order to avoid a vote at an inconvenient time.

As a means of facilitating the planning of the remainder of this session by the various parties and members, I wish to designate in a preliminary way— I emphasize that it is a preliminary way and I may need to alter some of these days later—the list of allotted days. For next week the confirmed allotted days will be Wednesday, May 12, and Thursday, May 13. The other days I shall designate more tentatively. They may be subject to change, perhaps because of the introduction of the budget and for other reasons which may appeal to those who are involved with the management of the House. The other suggested allotted days are Monday, May 17; Thursday, May 20; Friday, May 21; Tuesday, June 8; Friday, June 11; Tuesday, June 15; Wednesday, June 16; Monday, June 21, and Tuesday, June 22.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, and wonder if it is the appropriate time to raise it. Can the President of the Privy Council say if the government intends in any way to commemorate the thirty-first anniversary of D-Day, and if Canada presently intends to participate in any commemorative ceremonies in France?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I frankly admit that I have not taken the matter under consideration, but I shall now as a result of the hon. member's suggestion.

* * *

[Translation]

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS AND STANDING ORDERS

Tenth report of Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders, in both official languages—Mr. Loiselle.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[English]

SEARCH AND RESCUE

PRESENTATION OF PETITION BY CONSTITUENTS OF ST. JOHN'S EAST AND ST. JOHN'S WEST, NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 67, I wish to present a petition, signed by 25,080 people in the constituencies of St. John's East and St. John's West, praying that search and rescue aircraft, ships and personnel be immediately stationed in the province of Newfoundland to provide security and protection for Canadian fishermen.

PRESENTATION OF PETITION BY CONSTITUENTS OF HUMBER-ST. GEORGE'S-ST. BARBE, NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 67, I, too, wish to present a petition, signed by 12,240 citizens of the constituency of Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, praying that search and rescue aircraft, ships and personnel be immediately stationed in the province of Newfoundland to provide security and protection for Canadian fishermen.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Order Paper Questions

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 4,946, 5,023, 5,024, 5,045 and 5,098.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—BAGGAGE SECURITY

Question No. 4,946—Mr. Reynolds:

1. During 1975, by month, what was Air Canada's cost for the Uniguard Baggage Security System at the Vancouver International Airport?

2. What percentage was this of the total cost of the service at the Airport?

3. During 1975, how many articles stolen from the baggage ramps were reported to the Airport RCMP?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. January, $2,315.65; February, $1,725.67; March, $2,277.71; April, $2,546.36; May, $2,815.51; June, $2,460.09; July, $2,456.69; August, $2,206.25; September, $2,407.92; October, $2,491.42; November, $2,143.70; December, $3,724.07.

2. January, 46.10 per cent; February, 39.02 per cent; March, 42.31 per cent; April, 41.73 per cent; May, 40.82 per cent; June 45.10 per cent; July, 44.22 per cent; August, 39.60 per cent; September, 43.72 per cent; October, 45.07 per cent; November, 42.78 per cent; December, 44.15 per cent.

Transport Canada advises as follows: 3. None.

CNR—PENSIONS TO RETIRED EMPLOYEES

Question No. 5,023—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. How many retired employees of the Canadian National Railways are in receipt of pensions of less than $25.00 per month?

2. How many are in receipt of a pension of $25.00 per month?

3. How many are in receipt of pensions of (a) $25.01 to $29.99 per month (b) $30.00 to $39.99 per month (c) $40.00 to $49.99 per month (d) $50.00 to $59.99 per month (e) $60.00 to $69.99 per month (f) $70.00 to $79.99 per month (g) $80.00 to $89.99 per month (h) $90.00 to $99.99 per month (i) $100.00 to $124.99 per month (j) $125.00 to $149.99 per month (k) $150.00 to $199.99 per month (l) $200.00 to $299.99 per month (m) $300.00 per month or over?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. Two hundred fifty-six.

2. Two hundred seventy-four.

3. (a) 216; (b) 550; (c) 508; (d) 414; (e) 1,349; (f) 570; (g) 476; (h) 423; (i) 1,108; (j) 1,422; (k) 3,048; (l) 6,302; (m) 9,869. In a number of cases the amounts of pensions paid by Canadian National Railways do not represent the total pensions payable to employees for railway service. Pensions payable by CNR to international employees (service in both Canada and United States) relate to their service in Canada only. Such employees also receive annuities payable under the U.S. Railroad Retirement Act or the Social Security Act for service performed in the United States. For example, in the group receiving pensions under $25 a month, in 1975, there are 41 former international employees who also receive U.S. Railroad Retirement or Social Security annuities in respect of CN service rendered in the United States. In addition, there are various pension agreements between CN and other Companies, such as Canadian Pacific Limited, CP Telecommunications and the Ontario Northland Railway, where each Company issues separate cheques for its portion of the total pension. Only the pension payable by CN is in this Statement. Also, since the passing of the Pension Benefits Standards Act by the Federal Government on October 1, 1967, there are 28 employees who have terminated service with CN and are receiving rather small compulsory deferred pensions for service performed only from October 1, 1967. The balance of those receiving small pensions are employees who elected early retirement (before age 65) with reduced basic pensions ($25) and employees who had very short service and very small contributions.

CNR—MONEY ON BOOKS OF PENSION FUNDS

Question No. 5,024—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. What was the total amount of money on the books of the pension funds of the Canadian National Railways as at (a) December 31, 1973 (b) December 31, 1974 (c) December 31, 1975?

2. What rate of interest was earned on these funds during (a) 1973 (b) 1974 (c) 1975?

3. What amount of interest was credited to these funds during the years ending (a) December 31, 1973 (b) December 31, 1974 (c) December 31, 1975?

4. What amount of money was added to these funds from employee contributions during the years ending (a) December 31, 1973 (b) December 31, 1974 (c) December 31, 1975?

5. What amount of money was added to these funds as regular or current contributions by the Canadian National Railways during the years ending (a) December 31, 1973 (b) December 31, 1974 (c) December 31, 1975?

6. What amount of money was added to these funds in any other way by the Canadian National Railways during the years ending (a) December 31, 1973 (b) December 31, 1974 (c) December 31, 1975?

7. Is money owed to the above funds by the Canadian National Railways and, if so, how much and what arrangements are being made to meet such debt?

8. What was the total amount paid out of the above funds in pensions during the years ending (a) December 31, 1973 (b) December 31, 1974 (c) December 31, 1975?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. As at December 31, 1973, $1,049,845,076; as at December 31, 1974, $1,170,070,599; as at December 31, 1975, $1,295,992,657.

2. To calculate the yield we have used the Statistics Canada formula and the information requested in Questions (1) and (3). Under this formula, the investment is deemed to be Opening Investments plus Closing Investments, less earnings divided by two. On this basis, the yield is: 1973, 5.20 per cent; 1974, 5.76 per cent; 1975, 5.95 per cent.

3. Year ended December 31, 1973, $50,010,249; year ended December 31, 1974, $61,131,731; year ended December 31, 1975, $69,727,964.

[Mr. Goodale.]

4. Year ended December 31, 1973, Net: $36,893,626; year ended December 31, 1974, Net: $47,897,419; year ended December 31, 1975, Net: $51,609,714.

5. Year ended December 31, 1973, $77,839,494; year ended December 31, 1974, $83,838,271; year ended December 31, 1975, $94,746,365.

6. Year ended December 31, 1973, $9,847,150; year ended December 31, 1974, $12,030,905; year ended December 31, 1975, $14,766,374.

7. At December 31, 1975 Canadian National Railways owed the payment due for December, $6,434,908, which was paid in January, 1976.

8. Year ended December 31, 1973, $75,358,688; year ended December 31, 1974, $84,672,803; year ended December 31, 1975, $93,567,159.

OTTAWA-QUEBEC JOINT PROGRAMMES ON HEALTH INSURANCE

Question No. 5,045—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

Briefly, from 1970 to date, what have been the Ottawa-Quebec agreements concerning the financing and administration of joint programmes on health insurance?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): For the administration of the hospital insurance program including the calculation of advances and federal contributions, but excluding any federal payments in respect thereto, there is a federal-provincial hospital insurance agreement between the Minister of Social Affairs of the Province of Quebec and the Minister of National Health and Welfare. This agreement has been in effect from January 1, 1961, and is similar to all other federal provincial agreements made under the terms of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act and the Hospital Insurance Regulations. For the purpose of making financial settlements with the Province of Quebec in respect of amounts payable under the terms of the agreement described above, there is a special agreement between the Minister of Finance of the Province of Quebec, the Minister of Finance of Canada and the Minister of National Health and Welfare. This agreement is under the terms of the Established Program (Interim Arrangements) Act, and is with respect to the period effective commencing January 1, 1965. The agreement was to expire after December 31, 1970, but it has been extended periodically, and is still in force at the present time. Since November 1, 1970, costs incurred by the Province of Quebec for medically required services of physicians, and certain surgical-dental procedures performed in hospitals, have been shared by the federal government under the terms of the Medical Care Act. While general requirements are contained in this Act as necessary conditions that must be adhered to by a province in order to qualify for federal sharing, there are no formal agreements.

GRANTS TO CANADIAN SKI ASSOCIATION

Question No. 5,098—Mr. Matte:

1. Since 1974, has the Department of National Health and Welfare granted any money to the Canadian Ski Association and, if so, how much?

2. How much money did each province receive?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes, 1974-75, $415,094; 1975-76, $435,181.

2. The funds were paid to the Canadian Ski Association for such projects as coaching development, athlete training, national and international competitions and administration. It is therefore not possible to give a province-by-province breakdown of these expenditures. The only contributions paid directly to individuals are grants-in-aid designed to assist the better Canadian athletes who wish to continue both their educational and competitive careers. The following list indicates recipients according to province for the years 1974-75 and 1975-76.

CANADIAN SKI ASSOCIATION

1974-75

Newfoundland	Nil
Prince Edward Island	Nil
Nova Scotia	Scallion, Bryan	$1,000
	Wilson, Joan	600
Quebec	Blackburn, Yvon	1,200
	Cloutier, Karen	300
	Cousineau, Alain	450
	Goodman, Russell	900
Ontario	Graves, Richard	900
	Kreiner, Kathy	600
	Oughton, Carolyne	600
	Podborski, Stephen	2,000
Manitoba	Nil
Saskatchewan	Nil
Alberta	Haining, Vanita	300
	Osness, Joan	1,800
British Columbia	Aiken, Gary	600
	Cooper, David	600
	Budwer, Douglas	1,124
	Miller, Esther	600
	Murray Wm. David	225
North West Territories	Firth, Sharon	1,000
	Firth, Shirley	1,000
	Lennie, Ernest	900

1975-76

Newfoundland	Nil
Prince Edward Island	Nil
Nova Scotia	Wilson, Joan	600
New Brunswick	Nil
Quebec	Cloutier, Karen	1,200
Ontario	Graves, Richard	1,800
	Podborski, Stephen	600
	Sjolund, Kurt	2,400
	Wilson, Gordon	300
Manitoba	Nil
Saskatchewan	Nil
Alberta	Nil
British Columbia	Nil
North West Territories	Firth, Sharon	1,000
	Firth, Shirley	1,000

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House resumed, from Friday, April 30, consideration of Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It was previously agreed and ordered by the House that the votes on certain motions were to be deferred until this time. Accordingly, in a moment the bells will ring to summon the members, it being understood, of course, that because the vote is a deferred one the bells will ring for 15 minutes.

Before hon. members are called in, I wish to tell the House that there has been discussion on more than one occasion as to the order in which the votes on the motions ought to be taken. The Chair had indicated earlier that it would prefer to take the votes on the motions in the following order: first motion No. 2, then motions Nos. 1, 3 and 4. There has been some discussion since that original proposal was made, and it is understood that a different order would be appropriate. Obviously, the discussions concerned only the first three motions; the amendment to motion No. 4 will have to be taken last. As for the other three motions, motion No. 3 would have the effect of striking out all of clause 1 of the bill, motion No. 1 would have the effect of striking out a portion of the bill, and motion No. 2 would have the effect of introducing a new phrase into a portion of the clause.

The Chair must therefore be guided by one of two principles. First, we could take the votes in such a way that, after taking one vote, we would obviate the necessity of taking others. This would put the Chair in the unenviable position of attempting to anticipate the results of votes, which I personally feel the Chair ought never to do. It seems to me that there is more virtue to the second principle, that is, to take the votes in such a way as to ensure that votes will be taken, rather than to obviate the necessity for the taking of votes.

In this instance, for example, if the votes were to be taken in the reverse order, if the motion calling for the abolition of the whole of clause 1 of the bill were to be taken first and affirmed, the other votes would never be taken. It seems to me that any member who has proposed a motion and had it discussed by the House is entitled to see it come to a vote. Therefore, the more sensible order, it seems to me, would be to take first the motion which introduces a new phrase into a clause, motion No. 2, then to take the motion which would strike out part of clause 1, motion No. 1, and, finally, to take motion No. 3 which proposes to strike out an entire clause. In that way, all members who have proposed motions before the House for discussion will be assured that they will come to a vote.

Therefore, pursuant to the previous order of the House, the deferred motions on Bill C-68 will now be taken. Call in the members.

Medical Care Act

The House divided on motion No. 2 (Mr. Brisco) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 132)

YEAS
Messrs.

Alexander
Allard
Andre
(Calgary Centre)
Baker
(Grenville-Carleton)
Balfour
Beatty
Beaudoin
Benjamin
Blackburn
Brewin
Brisco
Broadbent
Caouette
(Villeneuve)
Clark
(Rocky Mountain)
Crouse
Darling
Dick Dinsdale
Dionne
(Kamouraska)
Douglas
(Nanaimo-Cowichan-
The Islands)
Elzinga
Epp
Fairweather
Firth
Forrestall
Friesen
Gauthier
(Roberval)
Gilbert
Halliday
Hamilton
(Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton
(Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hnatyshyn
Holmes
Horner
Howie
Hurlburt
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Jones
Kempling
Knowles
(Winnipeg
North Centre)
Knowles
(Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
Lambert
(Edmonton West)
La Salle
Lawrence
MacDonald (Miss)
(Kingston and the Islands)
MacKay
MacLean
Macquarrie
Malone
Marshall
Masniuk
Matte
McCain
McGrath
McKinley
McKinnon
Munro
(Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Neil
Nowlan
Orlikow
Paproski
Peters
Ritchie
Roche
Rodriguez
Rynard
Scott
Stanfield
Stevens
Stewart
(Marquette)
Symes
Towers
Whiteway
Woolliams
Yewchuk—80.

NAYS
Messrs.

Abbott
Allmand
Anderson
Andres
(Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Basford
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Blaker
Blouin
Breau
Buchanan
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss)
(South Western Nova)
Campbell
(LaSalle-Émard-Côte
Saint-Paul)
Caron
Chrétien
Clermont
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Demers
Douglas
(Bruce-Grey)
Drury
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Faulkner
Fleming
Foster
Francis
Gauthier
(Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goodale
Goyer
Gray
Guay
(St. Boniface)
Guay
(Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Harquail
Herbert
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Isabelle
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Langlois
Laniel
Lapointe
Leblanc
(Laurier)
LeBlanc
(Westmorland-Kent)
Lee
Lefebvre
Lessard
Loiselle
(Chambly)
Loiselle
(Saint-Henri)
Lumley
MacDonald
(Cardigan)
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Mackasey
Maine
Marceau
Marchand
(Langelier)
Marchand
(Kamloops-Cariboo)
McIsaac
McRae
Milne
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Nicholson (Miss)
O'Connell
Olivier
Parent
Pearsall
Pelletier
Penner
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Poulin
Prud'homme
Railton
Raines
Reid
Roberts
Rooney
Roy
(Timmins)
Roy
(Laval)
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Sharp
Smith
(Saint-Jean)
Stanbury
Stewart
(Cochrane)
Tessier
Trudel
Turner
Watson
Whelan
Yanakis
Young—113.

[Mr. Speaker.]

● (1530)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The question, then, is upon motion No. 1 standing in the name of the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk).

The House divided on motion No. 1 (Mr. Yewchuk) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 133)

YEAS
Messrs.

Alexander
Allard
Andre
(Calgary Centre)
Baker
(Grenville-Carleton)
Balfour
Beatty
Beaudoin
Benjamin
Blackburn
Brewin
Brisco
Broadbent
Caouette
(Villeneuve)
Clark
(Rocky Mountain)
Crouse
Darling
Dick Dinsdale
Dionne
(Kamouraska)
Douglas
(Nanaimo-Cowichan-
The Islands)
Elzinga
Epp
Fairweather
Firth
Forrestall
Friesen
Gauthier
(Roberval)
Gilbert
Halliday
Hamilton
(Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton
(Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hnatyshyn
Holmes
Horner
Howie
Hurlburt
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Jones
Kempling
Knowles
(Winnipeg
North Centre)
Knowles
(Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
Lambert
(Edmonton West)
La Salle
Lawrence
MacDonald (Miss)
(Kingston and the Islands)
MacKay
MacLean
Macquarrie
Malone
Marshall
Masniuk
Matte
McCain
McCleave
McGrath
McKinley
McKinnon
Munro
(Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Neil
Nowlan
Orlikow
Paproski
Peters
Ritchie
Roche
Rodriguez
Rynard
Scott
Stanfield
Stevens
Stewart
(Marquette)
Symes
Towers
Whiteway
Woolliams
Yewchuk—81

NAYS
Messrs.

Abbott
Allmand
Anderson
Andras
(Port Arthur)
Andres
(Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Basford
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Blaker
Blouin
Breau
Buchanan
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss)
(South Western Nova)
Campbell
(LaSalle-Émard-Côte
Saint-Paul)
Caron
Chrétien
Clermont
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Demers
Douglas
(Bruce-Grey)
Drury
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Faulkner
Fleming
Foster
Francis
Gauthier
(Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goodale
Goyer
Gray
Guay
(St. Boniface)
Guay
(Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Harquail
Herbert
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Isabelle
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Langlois
Laniel
Lapointe
Leblanc
(Laurier)
LeBlanc
(Westmorland-Kent)
Lee
Lefebvre
Lessard
Loiselle
(Chambly)
Loiselle
(Saint-Henri)
Lumley
MacDonald
(Cardigan)
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Mackasey
Maine
Marceau
Marchand
(Langelier)
Marchand
(Kamloops-Cariboo)
McIsaac
McRae
Milne
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Nicholson (Miss)
O'Connell
Olivier
Parent
Pearsall
Pelletier
Penner
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Poulin
Prud'homme
Railton
Raines
Reid
Roberts

Messrs.

Rooney
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Sharp
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stewart (Cochrane)
Tessier
Trudel
Turner
Watson
Whelan
Yanakis
Young—113.

● (1540)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The question is now on motion No. 3 in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

The House divided on motion No. 3 (Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 134)

YEAS
Messrs.

Alexander
Allard
Andre (Calgary Centre)
Baker (Grenville-Carleton)
Balfour
Beatty
Beaudoin
Benjamin
Blackburn
Brewin
Brisco
Broadbent
Caouette (Villeneuve)
Clark (Rocky Mountain)
Crouse
Darling
Dick
Dinsdale
Dionne (Kamouraska)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fairweather
Firth
Forrestall
Friesen
Gauthier (Roberval)
Gilbert
Halliday
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hnatyshyn
Holmes
Horner
Howie
Hurlburt
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Jones
Kempling
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
Lambert (Edmonton West)
La Salle
Lawrence
MacDonald (Miss) (Kingston and the Islands)
MacKay
MacLean
Macquarrie
Malone
Marshall
Masniuk
Matte
McCain
McCleave
McGrath
McKinley
McKinnon
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Neil
Nowlan
Orlikow
Paproski
Peters
Ritchie
Roche
Rodriguez
Rynard
Scott
Stanfield
Stevens
Stewart (Marquette)
Symes
Towers
Whiteway
Woolliams
Yewchuk—82

NAYS
Messrs.

Abbott
Allmand
Anderson
Andras (Port Arthur)
Andres (Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Basford
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Blaker
Blouin
Breau
Buchanan
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss) (South Western Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul)
Caron
Chrétien
Clermont
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Demers
Douglas (Bruce-Grey)
Drury
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Faulkner
Fleming
Foster
Francis
Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goodale
Goyer
Gray
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guay (Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Harquail
Herbert
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Isabelle
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Langlois
Laniel
Lapointe
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent)
Lee
Lefebvre
Lessard
Loiselle (Chambly)
Loiselle (Saint-Henri)
Lumley
MacDonald (Cardigan)
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Mackasey

Medical Care Act

Messrs.

Maine
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
McIsaac
McRae
Milne
Munro (Hamilton East)
Nicholson (Miss)
O'Connell
Olivier
Parent
Pearsall
Pelletier
Penner
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Poulin
Prud'homme
Railton
Raines
Reid
Roberts
Rooney
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Sharp
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stewart (Cochrane)
Tessier
Trudel
Turner
Watson
Whelan
Yanakis
Young—113.

● (1550)

Mr. Speaker: I declare motion No. 3 lost. The question is on the amendment to motion No. 4.

The House divided on the amendment to motion No. 4 (Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 135)

YEAS
Messrs.

Allard
Beaudoin
Benjamin
Blackburn
Brewin
Broadbent
Caouette (Villeneuve)
Dionne (Kamouraska)
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Firth
Gauthier (Roberval)
Gilbert
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Matte
Orlikow
Peters
Rodriguez
Symes—18

NAYS
Messrs.

Abbott
Alexander
Allmand
Anderson
Andras (Port Arthur)
Andre (Calgary Centre)
Andres (Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Grenville-Carleton)
Balfour
Basford
Beatty
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Blaker
Blouin
Breau
Brisco
Buchanan
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss) (South Western Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul)
Caron
Chrétien
Clark (Rocky Mountain)
Clermont
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté
Crouse
Cullen
Cyr
Darling
Daudlin
Demers
Dick
Dinsdale
Douglas (Bruce-Grey)
Drury
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fairweather
Faulkner
Fleming
Forrestall
Foster
Francis
Friesen
Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goodale
Goyer
Gray
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guay (Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Halliday
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Harquail
Herbert
Hnatyshyn
Holmes
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Horner
Howie
Hurlburt
Isabelle
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Jones
Kempling
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Landers
Langlois
Laniel
Lapointe
La Salle
Lawrence
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent)
Lee
Lefebvre
Lessard
Loiselle (Chambly)
Loiselle (Saint-Henri)
Lumley
MacDonald (Cardigan)
MacDonald (Miss) (Kingston and the Islands)
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacKay
MacLean
Macquarrie
Maine
Malone
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)

Messrs.

Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)	Parent	Scott
Marshall	Pearsall	Sharp
Masniuk	Pelletier	Smith (Saint-Jean)
McCain	Penner	Stanfield
McGrath	Philbrook	Stevens
McIsaac	Pinard	Stewart (Marquette)
McKinley	Portelance	Stewart (Cochrane)
McKinnon	Poulin	Tessier
McRae	Prud'homme	Towers
Milne	Railton	Trudel
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)	Raines	Turner
Munro (Hamilton East)	Reid	Watson
Murta	Ritchie	Whelan
Neil	Roberts	Whiteway
Nicholson (Miss)	Roche	Woolliams
Nowlan	Rooney	Yanakis
O'Connell	Roy (Timmins)	Yewchuk
Olivier	Roy (Laval)	Young—176
Paproski	Rynard
	Sauvé (Mrs.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment to motion No. 4 lost. The question, therefore, is on motion No. 4 in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 4 agreed to.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill B-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, be concurred in.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURES RESPECTING PUNISHMENT FOR MURDER AND OTHER SERIOUS OFFENCES

The House resumed, from Wednesday, May 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand that Bill C-84, to amend the Criminal Code in relation to the punishment for murder and certain other serious offences, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to continue where I left off in this debate yesterday when I was referring to certain numerical facts. During the period between 1957 and 1970, when capital punishment was supposedly still the law of this land, the number of murders increased from 129 to 420. The abolitionists argued that this really was no increase in the murder rate because, of course, this allowed for the greater population in the country—but it still leads to the conclusion that the murder rate has more than doubled. May I remind the disciples of abolition, however, that during this 13-year span only once was the written law on capital punishment enforced. How can one test the merit of any law by this type of standard? I only wish the government were half as lackadaisical with the enforcement of laws pertaining to taxes as with the enforcement of laws pertaining to capital punishment.

[Mr. Speaker.]

● (1600)

Again, may I address the assembly of abolitionists—who, incidentally, represent only 13 per cent of the population, according the latest poll—who feel that the only meagre argument for capital punishment is vengeance. Vengeance plays no part in my argument. Protection of the lives of the innocent is the main reason supporting the law on capital punishment. Some believe that the death penalty is un-Christian, unethical or barbaric. I consider myself to be a Christian, but I have no qualms whatsoever in seeing a once, twice or thrice-convicted murderer suffer for his misdoings.

In committing premeditated murder, the individual has brought upon himself, by his own conduct, this supreme penalty. He is then the author of his own misfortune. Persons who murder or commit any other type of capital offence do not choose to be children of God but, rather, children of wrath, and therefore are not brothers in Christ, if we want to divide people in religious terms. If we are Christians, they are not our brothers but children of wrath.

In view of the fact that the case involving the death of the two Moncton policemen on Friday, December 13, 1974, is still being considered by the Supreme Court of Canada, I will refrain from any further reference to that black day. Neither will I make reference to the cost to the province of New Brunswick, or of the cost to other provinces in such cases.

Our judicial system may not be perfect, but it is the best that has yet been employed and devised by man. There is a preliminary hearing, a trial with a judge and a jury of 12 free men, an appeal to the appeal court of the province, and a further appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Let us examine the experience of our neighbouring country with regard to the retention of capital punishment for premeditated murder. A ruling by the United States Supreme Court in 1972 voided capital punishment laws. However, by the end of 1973 the death penalty for murder was reinstated by a large majority of the states of the United States of America. The increase in violence in the country resulted in louder and more persistent demands as the only means whereby society could be adequately protected. People ask for justice, not revenge. Justice which sentences a murderer to a 25-year term in an institution, with excellent fare, provision for the entertainment of his guests, medical services and a friendly and assiduous array of psychologists and psychiatrists, constitutes no formidable dissuasion to most wrongdoers—certainly not to hardened and experienced post-graduates in wickedness.

Abolitionists proclaim as an imperative that no crime, however dastardly, is deserving of the supreme penalty. According to the new ethic of these people who would obliterate the death penalty in every conceivable instance, such is the sanctity of human life that the killer's right to his continued existence may, under no circumstances, be denied him. It is now customary, in fact, to equate an execution for premeditated murder with the crime itself and to consider one as reprehensible as the other. However, there is no evidence that the genial spirit of "live and let live" and of coexistence with known criminals has resulted in any greater measure of public safety, but just another ugly offshoot of the permissive society. It can be ascertained that under present conditions, sparing hardened criminals means condemning others—innocent people—to pay the price with their lives. The only thing that remains to be known is who will the next victims be and how many will there be.

It is a sad commentary on our morality to consider the criminal more important than innocent society. Laws must be made to protect the innocent, not subject them to the possibility of being victims of heinous crimes. Those who denounce capital punishment often claim that an inconsistency exists in the fact that governments, whose purpose is supposedly to deter people from killing one another, should consider it necessary to indulge in what they consider legalized killing. They fall back upon the theory that the state is altogether without right to assume a prerogative that is God's alone. Admittedly, the taking of a human life is offensive to humane persons, and this is the reason executions, when they do take place, are no longer performed in public. However, that which is aesthetically repugnant to our senses might on occasion have to be endured.

The government has a duty to protect itself and its citizens. The alleged moral issues involved in the judicial taking of a human life must be distinguished from the practical and expedient. The denial of the state of the moral right to take the life of anyone becomes all the more incredible in view of the as yet unquestioned right of a private individual to kill in given circumstances. This indicates that what is now condemned by the abolitionist faction is not the taking of a life per se but the taking of it in some quasi-ceremonial and orderly manner.

With great doggedness, opponents of capital punishment continue to press for its abolition because it does not provide absolute assurance that each and every murderer will be deterred. Obviously, the prospect of an untimely end does not impress every human being in precisely the same way and to the same degree. It must be recognized, nevertheless, that the main strength and force of a law consists in the penalty attached to it. Above all, fear of the consequences is certain to be more vividly felt in the case of an offence being deliberately planned than in one that is committed on impulse. A somewhat parallel observation could be made of some motorists who seem to have no concern about repeatedly having to pay fines, but it has not yet been suggested that for that reason penalties for improper driving should be given up as useless. Are we also to do away with the penalties for theft, forgery and smuggling because the penalties are so often ineffectual?

It is frequently argued that a man who has been hanged for murder might on later verification be found guiltless. However, the revised criminal procedure now almost everywhere in force does provide almost iron-clad guarantees to an accused person. He is safeguarded by stringent laws of evidence, and he is seldom lacking experienced counsel. Invariably, a verdict of murder is subject to minute scrutiny through a series of appeals and reviews.

Indeed, a trial is meant, by its very nature, to distinguish between that which is certain and that which remains unconvincing. In by far the greater number of acquittals the accused is discharged, not after being certified innocent and harmless but only because the charge against him has not been proved beyond all reasonable doubt. Be it remembered that in cases where any doubt remains it is always the accused who is entitled to benefit. Often the charge against the accused is easily substantiated, the testimony of the prosecution's witnesses fully corroborated and all contradictory evidence conspicuous by its total absence.

Many hon. members who favour abolition of the death penalty will tell you that our social environment is responsible for many of the worst crimes committed by our social misfits. They advocate legislation which will create more effective social and economic programs to remove the causes of crime, improve treatment for alcoholics and drug addicts and improve education and recreation programs in the belief that the pursuance of such measures will do more to lower our crime rate than the application of penalties after the fact. These members are living in a highly idealistic dream world which they have the naïveté to believe in and which, because of the perversity of human nature, I do not. There has never been a time, in all the history of man, when the number of criminals in society has dropped so low as to make punishment unnecessary. This will not happen in the future, either, because people have always been, and will continue to be, motivated by such things as greed and avarice. Reading the news items of each passing day substantiates this conclusion.

When we speak to the issue of capital punishment, we would do well to keep the word "justice" in mind. It is "just" that a criminal be punished for a misdoing. It is also "just" that the punishment fit the crime. The death penalty should be imposed on a murderer because it is the severest form of retribution for the severest form of offence. As moral creatures we are accountable for our actions. As human beings we have rights, but with every right there is corresponding responsibility. A person convicted of premeditated murder has earned no rights because he has shown no responsibility whatsoever to society.

● (1610)

Although capital punishment may be distasteful, are we prepared to abolish it and sacrifice the basic principles and elements of justice? Shall we continue to plead for pardons for murderers, a practice which destroys the law itself and, with it, the carrying out of justice?

A factor which has influenced some members of the abolitionist faction on the subject of capital punishment is the method of execution which has been used in Canada in the past—hanging. Because of its unpleasant nature, it is inclined to cloud the discussion with emotion that is not really relevant to the issue involved. Some impassioned appeals for abolition have been based on lurid descriptions of hangings which have taken place. Moreover, it is lurid and difficult to watch; it is difficult to have seen the result.

It is important that the members of this House distinguish between principle and method.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, it is my feeling, that of my constituents and of the majority of Canadians, that this House must without further delay fully reinstate capital punishment in Canada. Certainly, the last hope for the protection of our innocent citizens is that the death sentence be fully retained and fully enforced. Capital punishment is necessary. This ultimate penalty is, unfortunately, the only penalty that can possibly suffice for such a horrendous and ultimate crime as murder. It should be applicable regardless of whose life is taken, be it that of a criminal, guard, policeman or any other human being. In this connection I speak not only as member of parliament but as a lawyer, having practised as a defence counsel, prosecutor and in the capacity of chief magistrate of a city and thus involved with the police department and as a representative of responsible citizens. I ask hon. members to vote, not emotionally, not on party lines but responsibly for the retention and complete reinstatement of capital punishment for all premeditated murders, and its full enforcement.

Mr. Speaker, the general public of Canada—the people who we as members of parliament represent—are fed up with the horrible results of a socialistic, permissive society foisted upon them to a great extent by politicians in a hurry for the opportunity to obtain votes. The country is looking for moral, economic and political stability. The nation is in need of leadership and an adherence to basic fundamental principles. They cannot be obtained or sustained with a continuation of the soft permissiveness evident in our penal and parole systems.

This bill to abolish capital punishment, Bill C-84, is aligned with soft permissiveness and is repugnant to the wishes of the majority of Canadians. If any bill were to be presented to this House on capital punishment, it should be a bill for the complete reinstatement of capital punishment and a realization that is must be fully enforced. The solidarity of the federal cabinet will prevent a free vote on this subject. The solidarity of the federal cabinet will mean a complete reversal of the needs and wishes of the people of Canada. The solidarity of the federal cabinet will, again, leave a bad taste in the mouths of Canadians and will result in further cynicism toward parliament and our so-called system of parliamentary democracy.

Surely, we must be responsible to the people of Canada. Either we abide by their wishes or we put the subject of capital punishment to the people of Canada by way of a referendum. It need not be an election referendum, but a referendum to be held now, between elections. I suggest that the federal cabinet does not have the courage not to commute the sentence of murderers and let them suffer the death penalty; likewise, it does not have the courage to put the issue before the electorate by referendum. What do they fear? They fear the decision of the people. Mr. Speaker, there should be no fear. People are usually right and they know what is going on. People know the difference between right and wrong, and they have given us the message for full reinstatement of capital punishment.

I will vote against Bill C-84, and in so doing it will be not only a truly free vote but one representing the collective, majority conscience and view of my constituents and the majority of good-thinking, decent Canadians.

[Mr. Jones.]

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to take part in this debate. In 1973 I voted to retain capital punishment. I believe that on an issue of such grave importance one must reassess one's position. During the past three years I have done a great deal of soul-searching on the issue. I have studied statistics on the causes of crime and the ever-increasing crime rate. More important, I have consulted with and listened to the views expressed by constituents. The majority of my constituents favour the retention of capital punishment, as do the vast majority of Canadians. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I will again vote for the retention of capital punishment.

The legislation as it now stands is a complete farce, as was pointed out by my colleague for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) who said, and I quote:

> The law will be obeyed only when it is respected. The law will be obeyed only when it is just. The law will be obeyed when those in high office respect and carefully guard our traditions and constitution, the dignity the law demands, and the dignity which we expect from the judiciary, the executive, parliament and the administration of justice. Nothing short of that standard is acceptable to us on this side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, where are our priorities? According to the government's own statistics there were 185 murders in Canada in 1961. By 1974, the number had risen to 545. Yet the government chooses to ignore the recommendations set forth by Canada's various police forces, including those of the RCMP, the world's most renowned law-enforcing body.

Let us now look at Bill C-84, an act to amend the Criminal Code, which was introduced into parliament on February 24, 1976. It provides for a minimum sentence of imprisonment for life for a conviction of first degree or second degree murder. First degree murder is defined as a murder which is planned and deliberate and includes the murder of a police officer, a prison official or a murder committed during the commission of certain offences. Second degree murder is defined as any murder which does not amount to first degree murder. The bill provides that where a person is sentenced to imprisonment for life in respect of conviction for first degree murder, he is to be sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole until he has served 15 years of his sentence. In respect of a person who has been convicted of second degree murder, he is to be sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole until he has served at least ten years of his sentence or such greater number of years, not being more than 25 years, as is determined by the sentencing judge.

Since December 29, 1967, the death penalty for capital murder has been limited to cases where the accused, by his own act, has caused or assisted in causing the death of a police officer or a prison officer acting in the course of his duties, or counselled or procured another person to do any act causing or assisting in causing the death. Since 1967, 33 policeman and two prison guards have been slain, but the cabinet has not permitted the convicted murderers of these officers to be put to death. They have either had their sentences commuted to life imprisonment or are awaiting such commutation. No matter how you look at it, capital punishment has been abolished for the past ten years in Canada. It is now time to examine this question again and ask ourselves, do we need to restore capital punishment for first degree murder?

Capital punishment is no doubt upsetting to many people. But there are many things in life which are necessary and unpleasant. For years, numerous clergymen, lawyers, sociologists and others have agitated for humanization of our penal system. Their efforts have succeeded in making our legal system more humane and more just. But in recent years I believe we have gone too far. Social scientists and criminologists have emphasized that society generally has created an environment which caused the criminal to act in the manner in which he did, and therefore society, not him, is to blame. But a battered society has discovered that these abstract theories linking crime to environmental causes do not translate into concrete programs to protect citizens against violent crime.

● (1620)

There are two sorts of argument in favour of the retention of capital punishment. First, there is the doctrinal or philosophical point of view which may be summarized as follows: human life is so sacred that every means must be used to protect it; he who takes away life deserves death. There is also the argument of deterrence: if, in taking away a life a man knows he is risking his own, he will not kill. There has been a great deal of debate about whether the death penalty is a deterrent, how much of a deterrent, and whether it is a greater or lesser deterrent than life imprisonment. Statistics support both sides of the argument, depending who quotes them. One argument is that most criminals plan a crime on the basis that they are going to avoid any penalty and that is the basis on which cold-blooded murders are committed.

But if we do not know whether the death penalty will deter others, we are confronted with two uncertainties. If we impose the death penalty and achieve no deterrent effect thereby, the life of a convicted murderer has been expended in vain, from a deterrent viewpoint. There is a net loss. If we impose the death sentence and thereby deter some future murderers, we shall have spared the lives of some future victims. As for prospective murderers, again they, too, are spared punishment because they will have been deterred. In this case the death penalty will have led to a net gain, unless the life of a convicted murderer is valued more highly than that of the unknown victim or victims. Being deterred from murder, the would-be murderer is spared imprisonment.

The calculation can be turned around, of course. The absence of the death penalty may harm no one, and therefore produce a gain, namely, the life of the convicted murderer; or it may kill future victims of murderers who would have been deterred, and thus produce a loss, namely, the loss of victims' lives. To be sure, we must risk something certain, the death, or life, of the convicted man, for something uncertain, the death, or life, of the victims of murderers who may be deterred. This is in the nature of uncertainty. When we invest or gamble, we risk our money for an uncertain gain. Furthermore, there is no shortage of reported instances wherein more than one homicide has been committed by the same culprit either as a result of not being apprehended in time, after being erroneously acquitted, or during an escape from prison.

This being so, it cannot be questioned that once a killer has been liquidated, he is for ever incapable of killing again. Considered in this light alone, it would seem that the death penalty in the past has achieved at least one purpose. If, in general, the threat of punishment is conceded to have a deterrent effect, then the severer the punishment, the greater the deterrent effect; and, logically, the death penalty should have the greatest deterrent effect of all. Like natural dangers, punishment deters those who are tempted to break the law. However, the threatened punishment may be so light that the advantage of violating rules tends to exceed the disadvantage of being punished. In this case the feeling of obligation tends to vanish as well.

While considering the question of the deterrence of capital punishment, we must examine the situation and position of crime and murder in present-day society. Statistics have demonstrated a grave increase in the number of violent crimes, namely, murder, attempted murder, manslaughter, assault, rape, and armed robbery. With regard to the murder rate in Canada, a criminologist in a recent study noted that the analysis of murder statistics during the period 1961-70 indicates that there has been an increase in the incidence of murder in Canada over the whole period, but that this increase was slow at first, gaining momentum since 1967.

Serious though this upward trend in the murder rate is, when we speak of a particular sentence or a punishment as a deterrent we ought to refer to the following statistics compiled by Dr. Jayewardene, a professor of criminology. He calculated, from available data, the murder rate and expectancy of punishment for the years 1965 to 1970. In 1965, the murder rate was 1.5 per 100,000 of the population over seven years old. The expectancy of the death penalty for those murderers was 0.2 per cent, the expectancy of life imprisonment 16.8 per cent, the expectancy of other imprisonment 20 per cent, the expectancy of probation or suspended sentence 1 per cent, and the expectancy of no punishment 61.9 per cent.

In 1970, the murder rate was 2.3 per 100,000 of the population over seven years old. Expectancy of the death penalty was zero per cent, of life imprisonment 13.5 per cent, of other imprisonment 24.6 per cent, of probation or a suspended sentence 0.6 per cent, and of no punishment 61.3 per cent. These statistics show that a good many murderers are not apprehended, are not sent to trial, are not convicted of a lesser offence or are not convicted at all. This demonstrates the need not only for stiffer penalties for murder but for better law enforcement in the apprehension and conviction of criminals.

Where murder is premeditated, it is only common sense to assume that not only the consequences in the event of detection, but also the chances of detection are ordinarly taken into consideration. Anyone who thinks criminals do not weigh the possibilities of getting caught and do not understand they could be executed is living in a dream world.

Three conditions are essential to the sound administration of justice: swiftness, certainty of arrest, and severity of punishment. We must make sure these conditions are restored in the administation of our criminal justice system. Throughout this continent there has been a gradual decline in the administration of justice. Sentences imposed, while utterly destitute of uniformity, have nevertheless been notably reduced from those formerly regarded as the norm. For larceny and other offences generally, sentences are invariably far below the maximum prescribed in the written codes. Between 1961 and 1968, 28 individuals serving death-commuted sentences were paroled after spending an average of 12 years in prison prior to release. Between 1968 and 1974, this figure rose to an average of 13.3 years for the 42 persons paroled from death-commuted sentences.

Obviously, I and the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), who spoke yesterday, researched data in the same area, but the hon. member for Ontario did not tell the House and the people of his constituency that 42 persons were paroled while serving death-commuted sentences: he refrained from mentioning that fact. Perhaps he did not want his constituents to know, or he did not want the House to know. I thank God we went to the same place for our research data. I am presenting the picture as it is, and telling my constituents the whole story. I think what the hon. member did was wrong. If we are to present a case, we should present it all according to the data we obtained from research, and not stop in the middle of a paragraph.

No wonder people today do not understand the courts and our judicial system. The man in the street is quickly losing faith in justice. Officials in society seem to be on the side of the criminal. Crime rates rise, not because of social or economic conditions but because persons realize that little or nothing will happen to them even if they are convicted. Re-establishing capital punishment and stricter punishment in general for social crimes will restore greater faith in our judicial system. It will give greater confidence to persons who wish to lead good lives and will give them a greater sense of security. Thereby, society will benefit. The old concept of reward and punishment will not be a relic of the past. It will reverse the too often criminal trend of present-day society.

● (1630)

Philosophers and theologians have argued that the state does not have the right to take the life of a citizen even if he has been convicted of an atrocious crime, because it is not up to the state to dispose of human life, which is God-given and not a gift from the state. The right of an individual to take the life of another in defence of his person is hardly contested. Why is it proper on occasion for a private citizen to take the life of another, while the state may not do so under any circumstances? The state has the right and the duty to defend the community against outside aggression, such as in time of war, and within the country, for instance in case of treason, crimes against the state, and so on. To the extent of taking the life of the aggressors and guilty parties, the citizen has the right to protect his own life by killing whoever attacks him without any reason. Thus, the state can do the same when a criminal attacks and endangers the life of the community by deciding to eliminate, summarily, another human being.

Capital punishment must be retained in order to prove the sanctity of the most precious thing, which is the gift of life; it embodies the repulsion and horror that we feel for the greatest crimes. Society has the right to protect the integrity of the human being and the life of its members against what threatens them. The argument in favour of life imprisonment as a substitute for the death penalty is fallacious. If the state is to be denied the right to take the life of one of its members, then by the same token it should be denied the right to deprive that member, in perpetuity, of his liberty which excludes him from all hope of freedom and rehabilitation.

Those opposed to the death penalty frequently argue that there is always the possibility of an innocent person being executed through error, and that to avoid such tragedies it would be better that no one be executed.

The likelihood of judicial error has been diminished enormously through the institution of courts of appeal in all criminal matters. Invariably, a verdict of guilty of murder is subject to minute scrutiny through, not one but a series of appeals, and not infrequently by retrials. Stringent laws of evidence reduce still further the possibility of judicial miscarriage. The art of cross-examination, skillfully used by able and experienced lawyers, whether employed by the accused or appointed under a legal aid program, make corrupt and perjured evidence more difficult than ever. Organized bodies of opinion, along with a vigilant press, stand in readiness to raise the alarm on any suspicion of judicial railroading.

Much is made of the comparatively remote possibility of an innocent person being hanged for a crime he did not commit, yet hardly any notice is ever taken of the lethal aftermath that can follow an erroneous acquittal. It is ironic that when known killers are liberated, no similar fears are voiced as to the possible consequences to some innocent persons as yet unknown. Wanton murder is so extremely morally wrong that the punishment must remain proportionately severe in order to emphasize the outrage of society; otherwise the potential murderer will infer that society no longer regards the crime as most heinous and even if, from the philosophical point of view, the death penalty may have doubtful legitimacy, it nevertheless represents a political necessity for the protection not merely of society but of the social order itself.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), in explaining Bill C-84, justified the imposition of a 25-year minimum sentence, instead of capital punishment, as being more humane treatment of a convicted murderer. But is it more humane treatment? Long prison terms may justly be criticized as being repulsive, as being punishment of the sort condemned in the language of the constitution of the United States of America as cruel and unusual. A sensitive society must shrink from the infliction of such prolonged punishment as it should shrink from the torture. In most cases, it is not a punishment which fits the crime but punishment which balances slow, psychic death against the sudden killing. Those who speak or think humanity must forget long prison terms. A person who has spent many years behind bars and concrete walls degenerates beyond recognition into a class close to vegetation.

If the Solicitor General hopes to achieve the rehabilitation of convicted murderers, and therefore justify their escape from death, how can he expect a person who knows that he will be behind bars for such a long time to honestly try to rehabilitate himself? Long, mandatory prison terms will give rise to a situation in which the maintenance of discipline within prison walls will become increasingly problematical, requiring more staff and, not least of all, placing in jeopardy the lives and morals of the rehabilitative elements of the prison population.

In any event, capital punishment is required in the case of a subsequent murder in prison or in the course of escape by a convicted murderer because if this existing deterrent were removed, apprehension would exist concerning the safety of the prison staff and the general public from prisoners for whom, because they were already serving a life sentence, a further sentence of imprisonment could have no deterrent effect.

Capital punishment must be retained and restored. Any threat of punishment—be it death, imprisonment, fine or chastisement at school—once recognized as a mere bluff obviously ceases to be a deterrent. Our concern should not be for convicted criminals but for law-abiding Canadian citizens and the victims of crimes committed by criminals. Perhaps here we should be speaking for the dead, not for those who caused them to die.

The notion of an orderly society is beginning to erode, and when erosion starts who knows where it will end? This falling away of society from its reliance on the upholders of law and order must be halted. There must be punishment for committing crimes, and that punishment must be carried out. Society will no longer tolerate subservience to that philosophy which sees all criminality solely in terms of sickness, and therefore devotes more attention to its alleviation than to the alleviation of the unrest that the sickness—if that is what it is—is spreading throughout society.

● (1640)

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is about three years since I last rose in the House of Commons and addressed myself to the issue of capital punishment in Canada, and I think in that interval, whatever side of this question we as members of parliament come down on, we must admit that we have seen an increasing problem of crime and an increasing concern by the public across Canada, especially in our major urban areas, about the increasing danger to public safety and well-being. Because of that increased problem of crime and increased fear of the consequences of crime, the government did have a responsibility to bring forward legislation at this time which would reassure the public and counteract the increasing crime which we face.

I believe that not only the peace and security package which is now before committee and which has had second reading in this House, but also this bill will toughen the law to give Canadians better public safety. It would be very sad indeed if it is not brought to the attention of the public that this bill, which will abolish capital punishment, will in turn greatly broaden and strengthen the Criminal Code in combating the most serious criminal elements.

First, however, in addressing myself to this question today I should like to deal with the issue which seems to be central to most debates on capital punishment, and that is the question of deterrence. By hanging or executing, is society going to deter others from crime? Initially, I admit, there is one deterrent effect, and that is that the person who is hanged certainly cannot commit crime again. Beyond that, however, I think there is a great deal of evidence which casts doubt, if it does not altogether finish the argument, as to whether the death penalty is a deterrent. In "The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science", as far back as 1952 a report was presented by a man named Schuessler entitled "Murder and the Penalty of Death". One excerpt from that article reads as follows: > —statistical studies have uniformly concluded that the death penalty is inconsequential as a deterrent and that relative frequency of murder in a given population is a function of the cultural conditions.

As far back as almost a quarter of a century, careful analysis brought that forward. Perhaps the leading expert in the United States on the question of the death penalty is Professor Thorsten Sellin. As a result of his study on capital punishment and abolition from 1955 to 1967 he reported:

> —on the whole the abolition states, as is apparent from the findings, seem to have fewer killings but the differences are small. If this, then, is the argument upon which the police are willing to rest their opposition to the abolition of capital punishment, it must be concluded that it lacks any factual basis.

In Great Britain, the royal commission on capital punishment held hearings from 1949 to 1953 and reported as follows:

> The general conclusion which we have reached is that there is no clear evidence in any of the figures we have examined that the abolition of capital punishment had led to an increase in the homicide rate or that its reintroduction had led to a fall.

From the special commission for investigating abolition of the death penalty in capital cases for Massachusetts, in 1958, I quote the following:

> There appears, in fact, to be no greater deterrent effect in capital punishment than in a sentence of life. It does not contribute to the reduction of murder, it is simply an easy and harmful way of satisfying the need "to do something about it".

Having presented that evidence from the United States and from Great Britain, ranging from as far back as 24 or 25 years ago, I should like finally to argue that over the years commissions which have carefully studied this question have repeatedly come to the conclusion that society's killing is not a deterrent. Now I simply want to put forward a very simple comparison of abolition states with retention states in the United States. In 1970 there were 75 murders committed in Minnesota, or two per 100,000 population. In the same year there were 88 murders in Wisconsin, or two per 100,000 population. In 1970 there were 30 murders in Rhode Island, or 3.2 per 100,000 population. Minnesota, Wisconsin and Rhode Island are all abolitionist states. On the other hand, some of the highest murder rates are found in states where capital punishment has applied for a long time. For instance, in 1970, in Florida, where there is capital punishment, there were 860 murders, or 12.7 per 100,000 population. In 1970, there were 377 murders in South Carolina, or 14.6 per 100,000 population.

Having dealt with the question of whether the death penalty is a deterrent, and hoping that hon. members will consider the opinions of those august bodies in North America and in Great Britain, and also the comparative statistics which surely suggest that the death penalty has not been an effective deterrent in the United States where it has been carried out, I will then move on to the law as it will remain if this bill is not passed by parliament. At the moment, the law says that the killers of policemen and prison guards on duty are liable to capital punishment. No other kind of murderer ever is liable to the same extreme penalty.

I have the greatest respect for Canadian police forces, for the RCMP, and certainly for the police force in my own area of metropolitan Toronto, but in all fairness it should be pointed out that police officers and prison guards go into their work knowing the risks they face and they are trained to be prepared for those risks. I am arguing that the law as it is now constituted simply does not seem to be fair. If we investigate statistics of the average of fatalities on the job for 10,000 employees in Canada from 1964 to 1973, the highest on the job fatality rate is for miners. The second highest is for loggers, then fishermen, transport workers, labourers, and police officers rank sixth. Following that are craftsmen and—I see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) looking my way—farmers.

The fact is that there are many jobs in Canada where the risk of losing life at work is much greater than it is for police officers. That does not detract for one moment from the seriousness of their work and the fact that the state must provide them with some protection in the most responsible manner possible. However, I believe it does suggest that the existing law is not fair or equal and does not consider the reality of statistics with regard to murder and also statistics on death on the job in Canada.

I should like to talk for a moment about whether the existing law, capital punishment, is in fact an effective form of justice. Does the law, as it now stands, make it possible for the judicial system to carry out penalties and to deter crime? On the question of whether capital punishment is effective, I should first like to quote from Professor Fattah's study on the deterrent effect of capital punishment, which was done for the Department of the Solicitor General in 1972. In that report he says:

> If it is true that the promptness and swiftness of punishment are important factors to its effectiveness, then capital punishment should be the least effective since the time-span between a murder and execution is usually much longer than other crimes. The slowness of capital punishment is something inherent in its very nature.

I will quote one of the most distinguished law enforcement officers in the world, the commissioner of Scotland Yard, Sir Robert Mark. In a speech given in Toronto in August of last year, Sir Robert Mark said:

> The best deterrent to crime is the likehood of detection followed by the certainty of conviction rather than the reliance on savage penalties unlikely to be applied in many cases because a proper finding of guilt is prevented by the operation during investigation and trial of safeguards rightly designed to protect the innocent from a sentence of death . . . I am therefore opposed to the death penalty and so are most of my senior and most experienced colleagues simply because its continuance prevents the reforms necessary to increase the effectiveness of criminal justice.

● (1650)

So, Mr. Speaker, from both the report prepared for the Department of the Solicitor General of a study of the issue here in Canada, and from the commissioner of Scotland Yard, we have strong statements to the effect that if you want effective justice, if you want the criminal element to appreciate that the worst of all crimes will be seized upon and punished, then the most effective justice is not the death penalty.

May I also address myself for a moment to the question of the injustice of the death penalty. While there are many arguments in this area, I simply want to refer to one or two in particular. I believe that most people will accept the statistics in the United States showing that poor people—blacks, poor whites and minority groups—are executed in numbers far disproportionate to their more affluent, and in most cases white, neighbours. If capital punishment is a deterrent, it would seem that these groups who have suffered most from capital punishment would be the most obedient.

Again, the converse is true. Surely the reality of the situation is that cultural and social conditions help to contribute to the development of a criminal character. People who are underprivileged or denied certain advantages are more likely to enter upon crime. The latest figures available indicate that there are 114 people under sentence of death in the United States. Of these, 61—more than half—are black and three are American Indians. All, or almost all, are poor or not capable of expensive legal procedures. Lack of money for adequate defence and investigation in turn can lead to mistakes.

So that if we say, Mr. Speaker, that we want on our law books the ultimate of all penalties, that of taking away life, which means you cannot later appeal, or if there has been a mistake seek redress, or give the person the opportunity of rehabilitation, we are saying that someone who is rich who commits the most terrible of all crimes will not die. I can find no example—and I challenge any member of this chamber to find one—of a wealthy, white person in North America having been executed in the last several decades. On the other hand, we can find examples of poor, underprivileged people, people who come from such an environment, who have been executed. In effect, this means that you are applying the law unequally and discriminating against those who are maladjusted, those with distorted minds who come from a poor environment. But not the wealthy whose crime is just as serious. Lewis Lawes, for many years warden of Sing Sing prison, is quoted as saying:

> Not only does capital punishment fail in its justification, but no punishment could be invented with so many inherent defects. It is an unequal punishment in the way it is applied to the rich and to the poor. The defendant of wealth and position never goes to the electric chair or to the gallows. Juries do not intentionally favour the rich, the law is theoretically impartial, but the defendant with ample means is able to have his case presented with every favourable aspect, while the poor defendant often has a lawyer assigned by the court . . . with no experience.

Surely, when someone such as the warden of Sing Sing prison, which has contained so many notorious inmates within its walls, comes to such a conclusion we must seriously consider his views. Finally, on the question of the injustice of the death penalty I should like to quote the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) who had this to say:

> There is no equality among individuals who are charged with murder. For example, you do not hear of many wealthy men going to the gallows.

Reference has been made by one of my colleagues on the other side who spoke in favour of retention to holding a referendum. May I briefly point out that in Canada, as I understand it, a referendum has, and would have, no force in law. It would be a recommendation to parliament, and parliament would still have to decide. Surely this is why we are elected here, to consider responsibly the material and evidence put before us and to reach a decision. Let me just point out, however, that in California, where a referendum does have some force, such a referendum was taken a year or a year and a half ago and overwhelmingly called for the death penalty. In the six months that followed, the murder rate increased markedly.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth)—Northern Affairs—Issuance of new permits to drill for oil on native land—Government position; the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek)—Sports—Reason for alleged double standard in dealing with South Africa; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen)—Penitentiaries—British Columbia—Suggested need for reorganization of staff—Confidence of minister in administrator.

It being five o'clock p.m. this House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions (papers).

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Motion No. 34 in the name of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). Shall the motion stand at the request of the government?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think it has been agreed that we shall proceed with No. 70 and let the others stand.

Continental Shelf Boundary

ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON—CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN CANADA AND FRANCE ON CONTINENTAL SHELF BOUNDARY DISPUTES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe) moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all minutes of meetings, letters and telegrams pertaining to the negotiations which have taken place between the government and France on the continental shelf boundary disputes with regard to the France-Canada boundary around the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

He said: Mr. Speaker, first of all there is a small dilemma in that there appears to be a typographical error in my motion as printed in the order paper. Reference is made in line five to the United States. It should read "France," not "the United States." I think there is agreement on the other side that the motion should be considered with that change.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members have heard the suggested change made by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). It is probably a printing error, but whatever it is I am sure hon. members will agree to allow the hon. member to make that correction.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Marshall: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I ask for a debate on this motion in view of the implications that this tiny island of St. Pierre and Miquelon can have in regard to Canada's position in proclaiming a 200-mile fisheries zone or economic zone, or indeed the extension of limits to the edge of our continental shelf. I see no reason why my request for documents or for the production of same would be harmful to Canada's position during negotiation and discussion with our friendly neighbour.

I also want to know, as well as every Newfoundlander, in view of the province's proximity to St. Pierre and Miquelon, what will be Newfoundland's future in regard to its offshore resources, resources that are vital to its future economy. We also want to know what is the position regarding settlement of adjacent boundaries.

If one looks at a map, Mr. Speaker, one will see that the islands lie, at their closest point, 14 nautical miles south of Newfoundland. But, more important, a Canadian island, Little Green Island, lies only three miles from the French coast line. In ongoing negotiations between Canada and France, which continue in secrecy, evidently Canada's view is that a median line should be drawn between Little Green Island and St. Pierre which would put the boundary 1½ miles from the French coast. The French maintain that the boundary should be mid-channel between their islands and the Burin peninsula, which would give no territorial sea rights to Green Island.

● (1700)

The islands were ceded to France by Britain by the Treaty of Paris in 1763 and the Canadian government, and rightly so, is of the opinion, at present, that Canada should have a chance to renegotiate the terms inasmuch as they were agreed upon by two other countries, Britain and France. The islands are less than ten miles by ten miles in area and are inhabited by citizens who fish, fur farm, and it has become a tourist attraction. On the basis of its sovereignty position, France is claiming ownership of the mineral resources of about 20,000 square miles of continental shelf and can base its claim in international law under the Geneva convention of 1958 which, by article 6, established the doctrine of equidistance for the determination of boundaries between the continental shelves of opposite and adjacent countries.

Under this doctrine, France claims offshore gas, oil and mineral rights from the median line to the nearest parts of Canada on three sides, and southward more than 200 miles to the outer edge of the continental shelf. But, Mr. Speaker, because this large area is so out of proportion to the size of the French colony as compared to Canada that we, Canada, are seeking and are taking the position that special circumstances as mentioned in the Geneva convention justify another boundary delineation which would give a smaller area to France. I am in support of this position.

In 1967, France issued an oil exploration permit covering the islands and adjacent waters to Petrosar, a company in which the French government has a large interest, and in the next year the French government passed a law regulating and proclaiming sovereign rights over the exploration for and exploitation of natural resources of the continental shelf adjacent to the French territory, specifically including overseas French territories. In the same year, Ottawa retaliated by issuing permits to Gulf and Mobil oil which overlap the French permit, and since that time there has been no accord in negotiations, unless, Mr. Speaker, this accord is also being kept in secret and is one of the reasons why I was asked to remove my notice of motion.

It is apparent from what I can gather, Mr. Speaker, that neither side wants to go to the International Court of Justice as both have telling and reasonable arguments. Needless to say, other matters, such as agreements on fishing rights and responsibility for pollution, will be dependent, as well, on the outcome of these negotiations which evidently are taking place, the contents of which are not made available.

From what I can gather, too, there is an agreement regarding fisheries between France and Canada in the area between the French islands and the province of Newfoundland, but the agreement is simply a convenient arrangement to take care of the fisheries problems for now and has not settled the question of ownership of the continental shelf resources. This agreement provides:

> No provision of the present agreement shall be interpreted as prejudicing the views and future claims of either party concerning internal waters, territorial waters, or jurisdiction with respect to fisheries or the continental shelf resources, or the bilateral or multilateral agreements to which either government is a party.

Let us look at the factors which are relevant to the present position as it refers to the Law of the Sea conference. Canada's submerged continental margin, which can include, if we stand up for our rights, both the continental shelf and the continental slope seaward to the ocean depths, is estimated to cover almost two million square miles, an area about half as large as the total land area of Canada, the second largest in the world, exceeded only by the U.S.S.R. Yet, Mr. Speaker, Canada will not take the position, as she should, that we should rightfully claim priority over a little blob of land ten miles by ten miles in area, and keep negotiating because we continue to be good fellows with other nations, to the detriment of Canadians.

Under the schedule of the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada, as it applies to the province that I represent, these terms express the following:

> On, from, and after the coming into force of these terms of union hereinafter referred to as the date of union, Newfoundland shall form part of Canada and shall be a province thereof to be called and known as the province of Newfoundland.

More important, Mr. Speaker, No. 2 of the terms relates "that the province of Newfoundland shall comprise the same territory as at the date of union, that is to say, the island of Newfoundland and"—I stress this, Mr. Speaker—"the islands adjacent thereto". Unfortunately, this only refers to the coast of Labrador as delineated in the report delivered by the judicial committee of His Majesty's privy council on March 1, 1927, and approved on March 22, 1927. Unfortunately those who signed the agreement with Canada forgot the adjacent islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, which were not even mentioned, or at least this emphasizes the lack of foresight and ignorance of the resource potential off Newfoundland's shores by those supposed experts who were reputedly sincere in their efforts in joining Canada.

I feel that I should make reference to the more current situation that exists in St. Pierre-Miquelon, and I do so as a result of the fact that I was interested enough last year during the summer recess to visit that island to assess personally the situation vis-à-vis Canada's interest, and hopefully to come to some conclusions because of the passive interest indicated by Canada. My visit was prompted, firstly, as a result of Canada's closing of eastern Canadian ports to the Russians as a result of their overfishing, and this again emphasizes Canada's lack of attention to the effects of St. Pierre-Miquelon. Needless to say, agreement was reached after discussions with the Soviets to reopen the ports to Russia, but we should not be deluded into thinking that the Soviet Union could not have used St. Pierre as an alternative port.

We were led to believe that the port facilities were not extensive enough to handle foreign trawlers but, Mr. Speaker, extensive plans are being made to expand port facilities. The harbour development work undertaken during the last decade offers much improved facilities for foreign fishing fleets. The harbour can accommodate up to 40 vessels at a given time, and with proper control as to timing of the arrival of vessels the port could handle many more. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, in the last year for which figures are available, 1972, there were 1,136 visits made to the port of St. Pierre by vessels from 22 nations. Spain, for example, made 585 visits. Reference to "Harbour Notes" information also discloses that the services offered for supplies, fuel and water are as good as those offered in Newfoundland or Nova Scotia ports, and costs are generally competitive with, or in some cases lower than, in those two provinces. Certainly from what I could conclude after my visit, they are not going to stand idle, and it is obvious that further closing of ports in Newfoundland would see an upturn in investment and activity in St. Pierre to expand its port facilities, and this is already taking place.

I feel it is worth while mentioning that I visited a new, massive fish plant which to my mind would put to shame anything that I have seen in the Atlantic region.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to point out how unfortunate it is that the excellent remarks of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) have not been listened to by more than one supporter in the official opposition, and for several minutes during his excellent remarks there was no one in his place except the hon. member himself.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is a point of order. There are committees sitting at this time.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): That's a good point of order; a very good point.

Mr. Paproski: If this is the kind of game the government wants to play, we are prepared to play the same type of game.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): What game? There is no game.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must say I agree with the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) that this is not a point of order, and I think it does not help the debate in any way.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I have as many good friends on that side as I have on this side, and I am sure they are listening.

An hon. Member: Even more.

Mr. Marshall: We have our friends to the left who are listening.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is what counts.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I was saying that I think it is worth while mentioning that I visited a new, massive fish plant which to my mind would put to shame anything I have seen in the Atlantic region. The plant has a capacity of 500,000 cubic feet and two air-blast freezing tunnels of 10 or 12 metric tons per day each. The warehouse has been granted duty free status; that is no duty is paid on goods brought in for freezing and/or storage and subsequently shipped out of the islands.

It was obvious to me that even though the fishery has been declining, new, modern vessels are being added to the fleet from France. Similarly, only one small section of the plant was being utilized. One does not have to be too imaginative to conclude that expansion of the industry is seriously being considered, perhaps by agreement with other nations, to process their catches there. I think I should mention too, Mr. Speaker, that during my visit I was received by the commissioner and was shown every courtesy, even to the use of his official chauffeur-driven vehicle with the head of tourism as a guide while I visited the various points of interest.

● (1710)

I must say, too, that Canada has many friends amongst the population, and I noticed with pride that even a few Canadian flags were flying. However, Mr. Speaker, I feel very strongly about this matter and I say to all members of this House who are showing an interest in Canada's impending declaration to extend her limits that the existence of this little, minuscule blob of land could cause serious complications to Canada's position. Indeed, as I see it, St. Pierre, on behalf of France, could extend her limits to 200 miles and claim, as I indicated before, and is claiming, ownership of the mineral resources of about 20,000 square miles and can base its claim under the 1958 Geneva convention which, by article 6, established the doctrine of equidistance.

France claims equidistance between Burin and St. Pierre, a distance of 14 miles. Canada feels, and rightfully so, that the equidistance line should be drawn between Little Green Island and St. Pierre, a distance of three miles. While I realize that the situation may be delicate, I am sure, through the good relations that exist between Canada and France, that mutually acceptable agreements can be worked out. But, Mr. Speaker, the stakes are high, not only because of the valuable resources that exist, the ownership of which must be decided upon, but also because of my province's involvement, its claims against those resources and ownership and its rights as part of Canada.

I ask the obvious question: In the ongoing negotiations with France, that are now taking place, is the province of Newfoundland, whose economic future is vital to the extension of Canada's limits, and whose stakes are high in the determination of ownership of the resources off its coasts, being consulted in the ongoing negotiations between Canada and France; and if not, why not? Just what is the position of Canada vis-à-vis St. Pierre-Miquelon when she extends her limits to 200 miles or to the continental shelf?

I feel very strongly, however, that a most important matter becomes vital and necessary at this time; that is, Canada should be thinking seriously of making a proposal to France with the objective of acquiring the French islands on some mutually agreed basis. In this way Canada could solidify her sovereignty and certainly tidy up the precarious and continuing controversy which will persist over the years over ownership rights involving the two countries as well as the province of Newfoundland. Certainly, a feasibility study could be carried out on the social and economic benefits which would result, and the surrounding factors. While some might consider this a delicate proposal, I feel it is time that Canada asserted her historic rights to correct the mistakes made when the islands were ceded to France by Britain in 1763; and we must assert our position due to historic changes that have taken place in the 213 years that have elapsed. I feel that France would, or should, consider such a proposal seriously.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would welcome participation by my colleagues. I know they will support my motion for production of papers so that parliament can look into all the factors pertinent to a declaration of Canada's position vis-à-vis the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Continental Shelf Boundary

[Translation]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am eager to take part in this debate because, as you all know, I represent a constituency where water is predominant. Indeed everyone knows that lake Nipissing is not as big as the Gulf of St. Lawrence, but in any case we know what a coast is. However, this is not what I want to talk about.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I understand that the topic and proper response to the subject matter and merit of the remarks of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) will be handled by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Baker), as well as by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Landers). My comments will be directed basically to the procedural aspects of this particular motion.

It is regrettable that in effect these debates on notices of motions for the production of papers tend to be rather academic, in the sense that we do not deal with the merits of the notice of motion for the production itself but, basically, with the subject matter which motivated the member to present the motion in the first place. Effectively, we ignore and do not give sufficient importance to this particular procedure which becomes more and more essential to the proper functioning of this House and the role each member plays as an individual and as a private member.

This particular procedure was intended to involve debate on whether certain documents ought to be presented to this House and ought to be produced by the government. What has taken place in the past is that certain documents have been requested of the government, and upon these particular documents not being produced the motion has been transferred for debate before this House at a given time, namely, private members' business.

Effectively, what has developed is exactly what is taking place today. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe is presenting a matter that is very close to his heart and to the heart of his constituents. He debates that particular subject matter and does not at all seek to obtain production of the documents in the full knowledge that they will not be produced. He does not attempt to persuade the members of this House that the documents in fact ought to be produced, because he recognizes full well that the documents he seeks to have produced do not fit into any of the categories that are internationally recognized as being documents producible by governments.

The hon. member is seeking to have produced telegrams, letters and communications which reside within the realm of external affairs and exchanges between governments. It has been recognized by legislation passed in the United States and Sweden that that sort of material is privileged and ought not, in the public interest, be produced. We note from the remarks of the hon. member that he did not seek the production of those documents because he effectively recognizes this.

Mr. Marshall: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member evidently was not listening. I was giving the background to the reasons I wanted the papers produced, so that we would have the whole picture and could decide on the importance of having those papers produced. The hon. member may say I was only trying to bring up this topic because of my interest in it, but he is only taking up the time of the House unnecessarily.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I was about to indicate that last week I had occasion to be in England and take part in a seminar on the question of freedom of information. The question of the production of documents was one of the matters discussed at that particular conference, and I felt this was a singular opportunity to indicate to the members of the House what my personal views are with regard to this particular procedure and to express, as well, my regret that the initial purpose of this procedure has been somewhat diverted. It has somehow not been dealt with in the way initially intended. I simply wish to indicate that the committee on statutory instruments presently is studying the matter of freedom of information.

● (1720)

Sufficient time is not being devoted to this issue by the House, nor are members of parliament being urged sufficiently to pay more attention to what is happening in that particular committee to make sure that the recommendations forthcoming from the committee relating to freedom of information will include a transformation of this procedure so that it becomes meaningful, and so that it becomes one where the effect of the motion that is presented is to seek, bona fide, the production of documents and not to present requests for documents knowing full well that they cannot be produced in the national interest, and not to seek, as the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe has attempted to do, to transform Canada into an acquisitive nation attempting to take over territory that has been recognized in international relations as being foreign. I suggest to him that perhaps more time should be spent more constructively in dealing with these matters by discussing the merits of the whole procedure with which we are presently engaged.

[Translation]

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I listened with enormous interest to the comments made by my colleague from Nipissing (Mr. Blais), who just came back from a seminar on motions for the production of papers, and he has said ten times better than I would have been able to what precisely concerns me, for this motion No. 70 which we are now debating is only one of those presented by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall).

Before coming to the discussion of the production of papers, rather than of the beautiful province of Newfoundland, the treaties of the Union or the heartfelt speech which the hon. member made in support of our efforts and concern for the well-being first of Canadians and second of our human brothers, which have been described at the Law of the Sea Conference by all our ministers, and especially those from eastern Canada, I want to tell him how much I sympathize with his motion, unless he meant it as a joke, to the effect that another province of Canada should become in majority French-speaking. This will indeed enable me, in the future, to pronounce the name of his constituency in French, "Sainte-Barbe", which was the original name. I was a bit surprised to hear that the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe wants to reverse the course of history and come back to the state of affairs which existed before 1763. He wants our department to simply acquire a parcel of foreign territory. I am slightly surprised by this wild suggestion. Another proposal which also surprised me was that following his first visit to St. Pierre-Miquelon, he certainly took French lessons, for which I want to congratulate him.

He worried because the U.S.S.R. seemed to try to manipulate France and get hold of its port facilities first, and then spread its supremacy. As I know France, however little I know it, I do not worry about its whole autonomy nor about its great shrewdness in dealing with foreign affairs.

[English]

I am therefore convinced that my hon. colleague opposite will go back to St. Pierre and Miquelon, and after a few more summers he will surely get the feel of the people of these islands and he may decide that he would like to see Newfoundland join them, instead of the other way around. However, this is being facetious. I am simply following the line of reasoning that he had introduced into this discussion—to my great surprise, I must admit.

This motion is framed in a way which may be unintentionally misleading since the choice of language implies that with respect to the geographical area mentioned there is an actual "continental shelf boundary dispute" between Canada and France. The word "dispute" is capable of a variety of different interpretations including, in the most negative sense, one meaning that intractable and irreconcilable differences have arisen between both sides and that each side has, as it were, drawn battle lines. I know he referred to 1763, but surely we are in 1976 and there is no such problem now.

While the delimitation of the continental shelf boundary between Canada and France in this area remains to be settled, we on our side hope that agreement can be reached in an amicable and neighbourly way. Indeed, to date consultations which Canada has had with France in this regard have proceeded on the basis of full co-operation between the two countries concerned.

The question of the delimitation of continental shelf boundaries between two or more states whose coasts are opposite one to another, or where the territory of one state is opposite the territory of another—such as in the present case—involves complex considerations of international law.

[Translation]

I too read, and I am no more of a specialist than my colleague the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe but since I have been parliamentary secretary and even before when I was only a member of the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, I too read many documents issued before or after the third and the fourth Law of the Sea Conference. Since the hon. member has been sitting in this House longer than I, he knows the complexity of this problem much better than I. He also knows that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) comes from a so-called maritime province and he knows to what extent he has always be concerned with the improved condition of the Canadian people. He knows very well, and I am sure that nothing enables him to suggest that there is the slightest matter for concern in the case he puts forward in this House, which relates to a motion for papers. He may perhaps retort that when one says that the matter is complex one is really trying to hide behind too secretive an attitude, with a view to keeping back information instead of revealing it.

On the other hand, I am sure he will agree in recognizing with me that the mere reading of the papers of consultant geographers, assisted by experts in other fields who make up our law of the sea teams, illustrates without a shadow of a doubt, in the case of the public documents we know, how difficult it would be for laymen like us—and even for specialists, for that matter—to decide lightly that setting the limits of the continental shelf is an easy matter.

He need only refer to the text we studied in Committee on External Affairs and National Defence at the time of the 3rd Conference on the Law of the Sea, held in Caracas in August 1974, and to the paragraph which does not apply here, I believe, to the definition of territories, of archipelagic territorial waters, to know that the problem is decidedly multiple in its aspects, highly technical and very difficult to discuss, all the more so, without a black board and chalk.

● (1730)

[English]

If I come back to the question directly related to the production of documents, namely, the fact that the ongoing conference and the decisions that should be reached there could well have a bearing on any settlement of the continental shelf boundary between Canada and France in the area of St. Pierre and Miquelon thus changing the applicable legal rules presently contained in the 1958 convention on the continental shelf, to which both Canada and France are parties, and which would normally set out the legal guidelines for settling the boundary in this area, the hon. gentleman will agree with me that if we are a responsible government we should not interfere at this time and produce documents which, by the way, cannot be produced.

Canada and France have held discussions on the delimitation of the continental shelf off these two islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. The discussions were held on a confidential basis, as mutually agreed by both sides, given the fact that important questions of rights to seabed and other resources are involved. The last round of consultations took place in 1972, at which time the legal issues were considered. Both sides noted the complexities of the issues involved, and particularly the complicating factor which would obtain should the international community accord coastal states rights to extend their jurisdiction beyond the limits now recognized by international law.

The records of these confidential discussions must, in the interest of Canada's relations with another country, be maintained as non-public documents. It would be wholly inconsistent with our understandings with the French authorities for us to publish materials which contain references to the French position.

Moreover, other material such as letters and telegrams pertaining to the discussions, and which may reflect on the Canadian position to be taken as and when discussions resume, must also remain as classified or confidential, in order to avoid prejudicing the Canadian position.

It is therefore in the interests of maintaining Canada's objectives in the settlement of this issue that such documents remain undisclosed. Disclosure would have a counter-productive effect on the conduct of external relations both with respect to the immediate matter of concern and Canada's position in other sensitive areas, and on related Law of the Sea issues as stated in motions Nos. 71, 72, 73 and 74 standing in the hon. member's name.

As to the more legal and procedural aspect of documents, the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) already described the framework as to when this tool of parliamentarians should and should not be used. I will simply refer my colleague opposite to the guidelines on motions for the production of papers, applicable in the case of the present motion, which were tabled by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) on March 15, 1973, when he was president of the privy council. Those guidelines established criteria to be applied——to determine when some official documents or papers of the government would be exempted from production.

[Translation]

When he tabled those guidelines, the hon. Mr. MacEachen said, and I quote him in closing:

[English]

We believe that members of parliament require factual information about the operation of the government in order that they may carry out their parliamentary duties. That statement is included in the general principle. We are also aware that the desire to make available as much information as possible must be balanced against effective public administration, protection of the security of the state and rights to privacy. It is always a delicate matter of judgment to balance the desire to make information available with the effective administration of the government, security of the state and other considerations.

I will not review the judgment of my colleague. I merely observed at the beginning of my reply to him that he made a beautiful speech on both Newfoundland and the Law of the Sea Conference, but unfortunately I shall have to ask him to withdraw his motion for the production of papers.

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I am going to be very brief in dealing with the fisheries aspect of the motion. Noting his suggestion at the end of his speech that Canada or Newfoundland take measures for the acquisition of the territory of St. Pierre and Miquelon I can only conclude—and I am sure Newfoundlanders would conclude—that on the one hand the hon. gentleman is out to destroy the great tradition of rum running and, on the other, is in favour of possible instant bilingualism on the south coast of Newfoundland. That appears to be a Liberal policy.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You mean the rum running?

Mr. Baker (Gander-Twillingate): If you look at our maps and the history of the battles between the French and the English in Newfoundland you will notice that the territory of St. Pierre and Miquelon did not come under the control of Newfoundland. It seems somewhat unusual to have two small islands off the south coast of Newfoundland in which the people speak exclusively French—and Parisian French I am told. In fact some universities send their students down there for the summer months. I do not know why they do not send them to Montreal.

The hon. member who introduced the motion is absolutely correct that a problem exists with respect to the proposed 200-mile limit in the negotiations presently being conducted at the Law of the Sea Conference.

Negotiations between Canada and France with regard to the delineation of the continental shelf around the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon were suspended indefinitely in 1970, and have not been resumed.

Exclusive fishing zones were established off Canada's coasts in 1971, by the creation of fisheries' closing lines following amendments, in 1970, to the Territorial Seas and Fishing Zones Act and to the regulations made under the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act.

Bilateral phasing out agreements were concluded with those countries that had been previously fishing in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, as well as within the 12-mile territorial sea established by the 1970 amendments.

During the phasing out negotiations with France which were signed on March 27, 1972, a line was adopted that "determines the limit of the territorial waters of Canada and the zones submitted to the fishery jurisdiction of France". The line only runs along the north and east coasts of the islands and does not encircle them.

● (1740)

The phasing out agreement also established the rights of Canadian and French vessels on either side of the line; coastal boats may continue to fish in areas where they have traditionally fished. As for larger vessels, up to a maximum of ten French trawlers, maximum length 50 metres and registered in St. Pierre and Miquelon, are permitted to fish along the Canadian coast and in the Gulf of St. Lawrence on an equal basis with Canadian trawlers, Canadian trawlers registered in Atlantic ports receiving reciprocal treatment off St. Pierre and Miquelon. That agreement is in existence today. The 1972 agreement provides for a general right of French nationals to continue to fish in any extended zone of Canadian fisheries jurisdiction off the Atlantic coast, with reciprocal rights for Canadian nationals off St. Pierre and Miquelon.

The European Economic Community is in the process of determining a common fisheries policy and the effect of this on the status of the waters off St. Pierre and Miquelon with respect to other community members is not clear. There are reports that the islands' status with respect to France may be changed from that of a territory to that of a department. The effect of this on any EEC common fisheries policy is also uncertain.

In conclusion may I say that officials of the Departments of External Affairs and Environment are keeping in close touch with developments with a view to determining an appropriate time for resumption of bilateral discussion of the continental shelf boundary issue.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak briefly on the motion presented by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall).

Mr. Abbott: But the hon. member was not present to hear him speak.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I can only say to the hon. gentleman whose constituency escapes me—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mississauga.

Mr. Crouse: —to the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott), who said I was not here to hear the hon. member's speech, that I, as official fisheries critic for the opposition, read the hon. member's speech prior to delivery, which the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe can confirm, and am therefore aware of the arguments he presented to the House.

The hon. member raised a matter of great importance to Atlantic Canada, indeed to the entire nation, as it involves the control and management of the seas and of fishing limits off St. Pierre and Miquelon and jurisdiction over minerals. Actually the value of such offshore resources in the area is unknown at present. Therefore we, as members of parliament, must be aware of what Canada and France discussed regarding the ownership, management, and control of this important area.

The author of the high seas doctrine, the Dutch jurist Hugo Grotius, wrote in 1609 that most things become exhausted with promiscuous use. This is not the case with the sea. It can be exhausted neither by fishing nor by navigation, that is to say, in the two ways in which it can be used. The famous jurist was right in his time, but what he said does not apply today. During and even before the three decades since 1945, man found other uses for the seas. It is now used by massive fishing fleets using sophisticated methods which the fishermen have organized, with vacuum cleaning effect. We are considering such points at this time.

We have over-used or, perhaps more properly, misused the sea. Ancient and vast though it is, the sea cannot continue to be exploited and misused in this manner. Like everything else in the world, it has its limits. Human technology, as hon. members know, has now enabled us to fish whole species to virtual extinction. I am thinking of haddock, red fish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and of some of the cod fish in the area.

Man-made pollution from all sources damages fish and bird life and fouls the coastlines we use for recreation. Pollution can even upset oceanographic systems on which we depend for our climate and oxygen supplies.

I could go on at some length about the importance of Canada's establishing some control over this area. At the Law of the Sea negotiations in Geneva last year, which I was privileged to attend, unfortunately there were few discussions about the ownership of the areas surrounding St. Pierre and Miquelon. This, apparently, is considered a grey area. Apparently discussions are going on in secret. But we, as parliamentarians, must treat this question with more seriousness than apparently government supporters have treated it this afternoon. This is a serious and important matter, but it is not the only area in Atlantic Canada causing us concern.

Although what I am about to say may not be relevant to the point raised by the hon. member for Humber-St. Georges-St. Barbe, I would remind the House of difficulties concerning another area off the coast of Atlantic Canada, Georges Bank. The fishermen of Atlantic Canada are worried about the lack of negotiation and discussion with regard to Georges Bank taking place between the Department of External Affairs and American authorities. Here is an area off the coast of Atlantic Canada in which Canadians claim that the equidistant principle applies. If, in international discussions, that principle finds acceptance, Canada can rightly claim jurisdiction over about three quarters of Georges Bank, where we carry on a prolific scallop, lobster, and haddock fishery, to name just a few species. It is possible that we shall find oil, gas, and minerals in the area.

The Americans say that the equidistant principle does not apply to Georges Bank. They claim that the Fundy channel divides the area between Canada and the United States. If that concept is accepted in international law, Canada stands to lose jurisdiction over about three quarters of Georges Bank.

In support of the American claim the American Department of the Interior recently considered issuing some 206 permits to American oil companies to explore for oil and gas in the area. This is an area containing some 136 prime fishing grounds, of which at least some 50 are the chief spawning areas of haddock, hake, whiting, herring, and yellowtail, to name some of the important species which form the bulwark and main resource of our fisheries in Atlantic Canada. I fail to understand how the government cannot realize how important this area is to Canada.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): They don't care.

Mr. Crouse: Obviously they do not care. I know, as a maritimer and Nova Scotian, that the fisheries account for about 2 per cent of our gross national product. We must keep emphasizing this point if the fisheries are to get the recognition to which they are entitled. We always appear to be low man on the totem pole. When we come to the examination of the estimates, the amounts accorded to fisheries and their development are very low.

Mr. Abbott: Because you are Tories?

Mr. Crouse: The hon. member for Mississauga says it is because we are Tories. I hope that that statement which the hon. member made from his seat, from which he usually makes his statements, which all too often are erroneous, is definitely not correct. I hope that Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Newfoundland are not being penalized because the people in those provinces prefer the concepts of the Conservatives to the hypocrisy of the Liberal party. I see that time is running on.

● (1750)

Miss Bégin: Speak to the motion now.

Mr. Crouse: Would the hon. lady like to continue her remarks? I listened quietly, patiently, and politely to her. I do not make it a policy to interrupt. I am sorry I cannot name her constituency.

Miss Bégin: Saint-Michel.

Mr. Crouse: I follow a course in this House of not interrupting my colleagues or those who support the government.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): She said you are doing great.

Mr. Crouse: If that is so, that is fine. I am in a section of the House where the sound does not carry.

In conclusion, I support in principle the request of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe that the present administration give serious consideration to his request for the production of papers that will inform, and hopefully encourage us to understand better the steps being taken by the government to secure agreement.

It is perhaps the secrecy that surrounds the government's activities that causes us the most concern. We are as interested as anyone on the other side in trying to reach a suitable accommodation which would lead to a proper settlement of the areas that I mentioned, St. Pierre and Miquelon and the Georges Bank areas, both of which represent prolific fishing areas, not only to the fishermen of Nova Scotia but all of Atlantic Canada. Therefore, I hope that serious consideration is given to this request and that some action is taken by the government in the not too distant future on this important matter.

Mr. Mike Landers (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have learned something today. The hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) pointed out that at one time there was only one member of the official opposition present in the House. I am glad to see that since they learned I was going to speak the number increased fivefold.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Naturally I look forward to the speech of the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Landers). However, if the opening of his speech is any indication of its content, he might drive us all away.

Mr. Landers: Since their numbers have increased fivefold, I can only assume that they came to learn something.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Landers: Before starting this esoteric speech I wish to point out that not only was the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Landers) present in the House when the point of order was raised, but also the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) whose mother came from Saint John, New Brunswick. Therefore the southern coast of New Brunswick was represented not only in body, but also in spirit.

Basically the documents requested are not being made public because they fall under exemption No. 3 in the "Guidelines for Notices of Motion for the Production of Papers," under which are exempted:

> Papers dealing with international relations, the release of which might be detrimental to the future conduct of Canada's foreign relations; (the release of papers received from other countries to be subject to the consent of the originating country).

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the following exemptions apply in whole or in part to the documents requested: Exemption No. 10:

> Papers relating to negotiations leading up to a contract—

In this case a possible international agreement. Exemption No. 15:

> Internal departmental memoranda.

Motion No. 70 requests copies of all minutes of meetings, letters and telegrams pertaining to the negotiations. Phrased in these terms there can be little doubt that the motion requests documents falling under exemptions Nos. 3, 10 and 15.

Looking first at exemption No. 3, it seems reasonable to assume that there would be general agreement on not releasing documents if the release of the documents would be detrimental to the future conduct of Canada's foreign relations.

I see that I have run out of time, although I have much more to contribute to this particular debate.

An hon. Member: Carry on.

Mr. Landers: As I was just going to say, Mr. Speaker, the point at issue is whether the release of the particular documents requested would actually have such detrimental effects.

In this case there can be little doubt that there would be detrimental effects. The negotiations in question have been conducted on the understanding that they were confidential. To release the documents requested would be to make the negotiations retroactively public. In effect this would amount to a breach of an understanding, and this could scarcely fail to have detrimental effects on the future conduct of Canada's foreign relations.

Furthermore, the documents requested include communications from a foreign country, and under the guidelines it would be necessary to obtain the consent of the originating country before releasing the documents concerned. In this connection it is worth while recalling that the communications from the country concerned were received in confidence. The opposition is asking for documents to be produced that were received in confidence.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not usually object, but the motion I presented concerns Canada's position in the world in international agreements. It not only affects the livelihood of Canadians, but Canada's position. It could affect many starving people in Third World countries.

I do not like to criticize any member, but this has become a joke. I wish I had not even presented the motion. I could have presented it in my own district through the press. It is disgusting to have to listen to this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock, the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURES RESPECTING PUNISHMENT FOR MURDER AND OTHER SERIOUS OFFENCES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand that Bill C-84, to amend the Criminal Code in relation to the punishment for murder and certain other serious offences, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, when I left off this afternoon just before private members' hour I had attempted in the time then spent speaking to deal with the issue of whether capital punishment is in fact a deterrent. I had tried to address myself to the inequity of the existing law whereby only murder committed against policemen and prison guards on duty would bring that most severe of penalties. I attempted to discuss the justice of that penalty itself and whether justice would be better and more effectively carried out with the proposal in the legislation we are debating today.

I also discussed whether there was great injustice in the death penalty in that statistics prove that when the death penalty is carried out killers with wealth do not hang, and killers from a background of poverty do. I also attempted to refer briefly to the issue of a referendum, and in closing just before private members' hour I pointed out, and I simply want to re-emphasize, that while a referendum would have no force in law here in Canada and the decision would still be made in the House of Commons, I think it is very significant that in California, where the referendum forum does have some power in law, only a number of months ago the state voted overwhelmingly for the death penalty, and in the months following the murder rate rose markedly. Certainly it was not a deterrent there where the public had every expectation, as did the criminal element, that the death penalty was again to be carried out.

Now I should like to talk about the bill itself and about how it is different from the existing legislation. First, rather than have any capital punishment whatsoever, that would be abolished, and instead people convicted of first degree murder would spend at least 25 years in jail before they could be paroled. There is one exception to that, and it is an important exception. Before a triumvirate of three judges someone who had spent at least 15 years in prison could appeal for consideration that their behaviour had been so exemplary that they might be considered for earlier parole. If those three judges in concert agreed that that convicted murderer should be so considered, then the Parole Board in turn—with its new, changed membership, as proposed in the peace and security bill, with membership from the community into which the convicted would be released—would further consider whether it would be willing that such a person should be paroled.

I am pleased that the press has not placed great emphasis on this 15-year period, because while I very much support that part of the bill it is only a glimmer of hope—but a very important glimmer if some incentive is to be left when such a terrible penalty is imposed on the most serious of all criminals.

Having said that, I should like to hark back, as I did when I began my speech, to three years ago when last I spoke on this issue in the House of Commons. At that time, in the Commons, through releases to the media as well as in committee I, along with the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), proposed just about precisely what is included in this bill, and if I can in all honesty and sincerity say so, I believe if the government had accepted that proposal three years ago for a 25 year minimum sentence and for a broadened category of the most serious crime before parole consideration, we would not face the dilemma we face today. In fact we could have given the public a more effective law over the past three years.

It is tragic that sometimes it takes the government quite a while, with the burden of work it faces and the systems it must go through, to realize that on occasion its backbenchers, rather than its planners, can come forward with ideas which are in tune with the public mood and demand, much more quickly than does the bureaucracy.

At any rate, having given myself and the hon. member for Saint-Denis a pat on the back, I should admit that the 15 year clause is an addition which was not proposed at that time, and it is one I very much support.

While I am doing some light knuckle rapping I should also note that as a backbencher on the government side—certainly my hon. colleagues who are here tonight will agree with me—I find it very difficult indeed to get the attention of the media very often. I am somewhat amused that three years ago, when I proposed something with which the government did not agree, I received a great deal of consideration from the media. This time around when this proposal is being taken up once more, I am lost in the deep ranks of the backbenches.

● (2010)

Having put in those few notes I want to continue by saying, in support of the bill itself, that not only is the 25 year clause a very severe penalty which surely will be an effective deterrent, but it will also make it easier for juries to come to a conclusion. One of the arguments often advanced, I think a very credible one, one that has been put forward by Sir Robert Mark of Scotland Yard, to which I made reference earlier today, is that the process of justice is very long and that it is very hard to get a conviction from the jury when the penalty is death. On the other hand, if the jury is not faced with that ultimate decision, I believe that we will obtain more convictions and that the law will thus become a more effective deterrent.

It is also tremendously important that the Canadian public realize that we are not softening the law in this bill; in the total picture it is very much a toughening of the law. No longer is the penalty death only for the killing of police and prison guards on duty, which has meant perhaps for ten or 11 years of incarceration before parole. The law is being broadened to take in the other categories of offences, such as premeditated murder, hijacking with murder, kidnapping with murder, and a whole series of sexual offences with murder. So I suggest we will have a much broader and tougher law covering a much wider range of the most serious of all crimes.

While I believe that Bill C-84 will in fact be a more effective and fairer means of dealing with those found guilty of murder, I also believe that we must bear in mind, that if the bill by itself does represent a toughening of the law which will bring about added public safety, although murder is the most terrible of all crimes it is but a very small proportion of the total area of violent crime. I should like to place on the record a few statistics to put this into perspective.

In 1962 there were 265 criminal homicides in Canada. This represented .75 per cent, or three quarters of one per cent of the total number of violent offences. In the same year there were 27,076 woundings and assaults, representing 83.1 per cent of the total number of violent offences committed. Four years later, in 1966, there were 248 criminal homicides, four tenths of one per cent of the total number of violent offences. In the same year there were 45,373 woundings and assaults, or 87.2 per cent of the total number of violent offences committed. Moving on to 1970 there were 425 criminal homicides in Canada, which was four tenths of one per cent of the total number of violent offences. In the same year there were 78,979 woundings and assaults, representing 85.5 per cent of the total violent offences.

What I am trying to point out, Mr. Speaker, is that capital punishment, or in its place a very severe jail term, will affect only the most minute portion of crimes committed in the whole broad area of criminal activity in Canada today. That is why, while this bill stands on its own, the peace and security package is equally if not more important when it comes to dealing with the 85 per cent or 87 per cent of violent criminal activity that takes place in Canada that does not relate to murder.

Much has been said about public opinion polls and the fact that they overwhelmingly show that the Canadian public are calling for capital punishment. I believe that the overwhelming number of Canadian citizens have focused on capital punishment because of their fear, having read reports, and from their own personal knowledge of increased crime on our streets. I believe that if the Canadian public were asked to sit down for a period of time and consider this issue, they would in fact realize that capital punishment alone will not bring them what they desire. In turn, Mr. Speaker, what the government is proposing in the peace and security bill, and in this broadened bill to deal with the most serious of all crimes, will be much more effective.

I should point out to the House that in my own party there has been some experienced and thoughtful debate on this issue. We came to the conclusion in convention last November that there should be a free vote on the issue of capital punishment as a separate item. We decided legislation should be introduced to abolish capital punishment, but the convention also wanted to tighten bail and to increase penalties for violent crime. Having had a chance to debate those issues and to consider them, a majority of the delegates, selected from various constituencies across Canada, arrived at the conclusion that the Canadian public would reach. If they would only stop long enough to consider these issues. If we could have their attention, we could explain how this abolition bill is toughening the law, not easing it and will improve public safety.

In turn, while this issue can be a very emotional one for either side, I did say at the convention when I had the floor that if anyone attacked or maimed my wife or child I suspect that I would personally want to tear them limb from limb before killing them, but that I would hope society at such moments would rise above one's own personal agony and hell. I very much believe that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: I now want to deal with what I call the leaders' syndrome. I should first like to quote the contribution made by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the 1973 debate. He said:

> The most understanding of persons, in the face of lawless activity, will harden his attitude and will refuse to accommodate changes. Out of fear for his safety, and for the safety of his loved ones, even the most merciful of men becomes unwilling to assist the wayward.

If that applied three years ago, Mr. Speaker, it certainly applies a lot more today when we consider public opinion and our need to answer it responsibly. The Prime Minister continued:

> ... in this debate of the issue of capital punishment, I suggest that the premise from which we must begin our discussion is the basic one of the safety of Canadians. Our criminal laws, our penal system, our reform programs will be of little value if they do not respect the right of Canadians to live their lives without fear of criminal activity. The attributes of mercy and forgiveness cannot thrive in circumstances of fright and uncertainty ... The laws are not designed with any thought to trading off the safety of men, women and children in the pursuit of some social experiment.

Again that very much applies today; the proposed changes to the law will bring about measures to meet the public's demand for increased safety.

The Prime Minister went on:

> The choice of punishment... must be other than vindictive for no society can be vindictive and remain healthy.

While I do not have a quotation tonight from the late Lester B. Pearson, it will be surely accepted on all sides of this House that he too very much believed in abolition.

The former leader of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), said this in the 1973 debate:

> I see no evidence that capital punishment is an effective deterrent.

He added:

> I do not want to be pontifical, but I think Edmund Burke was right when he said an MP has a duty to exercise his own judgment. It is my responsibility to exercise my judgment and this is what I am doing, not out of any sense of arrogance or superiority with regard to other Canadians, but in full belief that it is my responsibility to make up my own mind and to exercise my judgment.

Those are the comments of another abolitionist.

The leader of the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), had this to say in the 1973 debate:

> I was elected, as were all members of the House, not simply to respond to the prejudices of our community. That is not my work here.

We are elected to look at the evidence in every case, whether it is capital punishment, taxation, or any other matter. We are elected to look at the evidence, to consider the well-being of mankind, including our constituents, and to make an honest decision.

The current leader of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), said in the 1973 debate that 49.1 per cent of his constituents indicated that they would support a policy which meant the imposition of prison terms which really meant life imprisonment, or long imprisonment, instead of the death penalty. He went on:

It is important to reassert and respect the responsibility of parliamentarians to decide ourselves, in the final analysis, what course the country should take... The member of the Canadian parliament has a different and more difficult duty—the duty to be responsible to his constituents—to act in the way in which his judgment and conscience direct, and then to be judged. Our job is to judge; our fate, and restraint, is to be judged.

The new leader of the Progressive Conservative party is an abolitionist too.

The Progressive Conservative party is the only party in the House with three current or former leaders sitting in the House. I can go back to the remarks of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), who gave the famous Edmund Burke quotation of 1774:

Certainly, gentlemen, it ought to be the happiness and glory of a representative to live in the strictest union, the closest correspondence and the most unreserved communication with his constituents. Their wishes ought to have great weight with him: their opinion high respect: their business unremitted attention.

But, his unbiased opinion, his mature judgment, his enlightened conscience, he ought not to sacrifice to you—to any man, or to any set of men living.

We have those words in the records of the House of Commons.

● (2020)

The last Prime Minister of Canada, the former Prime Minister of Canada from the Progressive Conservative party, and two other leaders of the Progressive Conservative party have come out and supported the idea that we have a right to our own views and a right to reach a conclusion. There must be some significance in the fact that all these various men chosen as leaders by the people of their political philosophies from across Canada, have taken this position in recent years and are abolitionists. Surely their judgment, which was considered as the basis for giving them the leadership of their parties, is the same kind of judgment which has led them to be abolitionists.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: In conclusion, I simply want to state that my position on this matter has been established since long before I became a member of parliament. I am answerable to my constituents. It will be no easier this time to vote for abolition of capital punishment than it was in the past to fight for it. But I do have a responsibility to carry out a trust and not to echo a mood or entrench a misunderstanding. I do gain some strength from the fact that many other people of greater experience, wisdom and respect, share my view. However, I support this legislation as it is before parliament on this occasion particularly because I truly believe it will be more effective in providing the Canadian public with safety and security.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, this bill, C-84, proposes to abolish capital punishment. I shall vote against the bill, and by so doing of course I shall vote to retain the death penalty for those who commit premeditated, first-degree, cold-blooded or capital murder, call it what you will.

I say to you and to my fellow members of this House, Mr. Speaker, that no single issue, certainly since my first election over three and a half years ago, has caused me more personal concern and torment, and I do not think that is too strong an expression, than the issue of capital punishment.

There have been more complex issues during this period. I have only to think of our efforts to deal with the economy and inflation. There have been more frustrating issues, and I think of unemployment insurance and the energy crisis. There have been more heated issues, and we only have to go back as far as the recent so-called judges' affair.

However, in over-all terms the death penalty or its abolition is such a tremendous mixture of values and considerations that it defies, at least for me, a logical or rational approach to the problem and, frankly in my judgment, is incapable of a solution that will continue to be acceptable to all segments of our Canadian society and to all regions of our country.

Likely most of us have by now, and maybe have had for some time, a definite opinion on this issue, but the considerations that prompted us to formulate this opinion are not nearly so definite. A great deal of opinion has been based on religious considerations, and I think quite validly so. Much of my mail and personal representations that I have received have this basis. What is difficult for me, and I am sure some of my colleagues share this difficulty, is that we find different church groups taking diametrically opposite views on the retention or abolition of the death penalty.

Similarly, I have many constituents, and I am sure I am not unique, who are members of a certain church who will disagree firmly and openly with the official view that the church has taken. I suppose, therefore, I should not be too confused or even too surprised when I see two individuals in support of completely opposite positions quoting me the same holy scripture. That is the nature of capital punishment.

Another consideration involves the general concern regarding law and order, and in many cases it goes certainly far beyond concern. I detect a very real fear. Are our Canadian cities destined inevitably to become the Detroits of tomorrow? People see an increase of some 25 per cent in the number of murders committed in roughly a five-year period, and they want a solution. Generally people who are in fear look for a quick, simplistic, and understandable solution.

The abolitionist, on the other hand, will say with some justification that we should not have an emotional reaction to the problem but that we should work to create a society where law enforcement agencies, penal institutions, and rehabilitation officers work to eliminate the necessity of execution.

There are, of course, other considerations and there are other arguments, including the element of deterrent, the motive of revenge, the protection of society and on and on.

In the last three and a half years I would estimate I have received over 200 pounds of printed material on this subject in letters, telegrams, pamphlets, even books and petitions. I have received representations from thousands of my constituents. I have listened to or read every word of the 1973 House of Commons debates on the extention of the five-year trial period with respect to the murder of police officers and prison guards, and I have participated, as I am sure most of my colleagues have, in countless panels, talk shows, radio hotlines, etc.

From all of this I have concluded only one thing which is fundamental to the issue, and that is that there is no one right or wrong solution. There is no one argument that is so persuasive as to overrule all others. There is no one principle or consideration whose value is so important that one can disregard all other principles and all other considerations.

I have to ask myself where this leaves me as a federal representative. As I see it, and I hope I do not over-simplify, I have only two alternate courses of action. I can vote to retain or abolish death by hanging according only to the dictates of my own conscience, or I can vote in a way that will reflect the consensus of those I represent. Indeed there are some of us in respect of which the two coincide, where one's own conscience and the consensus of his riding are identical on this issue.

At this point, if you will permit me, I want to digress for a moment to comment very briefly on the so-called trial period of the past eight or nine years wherein only those persons convicted of murdering police officers or prison guards have been subject to a sentence of capital punishment. I reject this trial period outright as having any meaning in its resolution and its results, and really I suggest it was without acceptable principle in its original formulation. I say this for two reasons.

First, the application of the death penalty, depending on the victim's occupation, leads to some rather ridiculous situations. For example, the hired assassin who attempts to assassinate the Prime Minister for example, if his aim were accurate and he succeeded would not be subject to the death penalty because his victim, our Prime Minister, is not a law enforcement officer. On the other hand if his aim were not so accurate and he happened to kill the RCMP constable who normally is at the Prime Minister's side, then he would be subject to capital punishment.

The same situation would apply if a bank robber went in and deliberately killed a bank teller. He would not be subject to the death penalty. However, if in trying to escape he were to fire at random into the street and kill a police officer, then he would be subject to the death penalty.

I am the last to deny law enforcement officers the protection they need and deserve. I agree that the murder of such an officer must be deemed a capital murder. However, I point out that there are other murders which should fall into the same category and should be subject to the same sanctions.

[Mr. Jarvis.]

My second reason for rejecting this trial period as meaningless is the simple fact that since the trial period commenced there have been 36 police officers and prison guards murdered. In the cases where convictions were secured every murderer has either had his death sentence commuted by the cabinet or is in the process of making an appeal for commutation, or is simply awaiting the results of this debate.

The royal prerogative of mercy has been established for centuries in our common law, and I support it wholeheartedly and, furthermore, agree that it is the cabinet which should continue to exercise this prerogative. However, to say we have had a test period of capital punishment for murderers of police officers and prison guards is, in my judgment, ludicrous when every such convicted murderer has had his sentence commuted, virtually automatically, by the cabinet.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) may take exception, which is his perfect right, to my allegation of automatic commutation of death sentences. I do not withdraw it. In his March, 1975, statement entitled "The Prevention and Control of Violent Crime in Canada", the Solicitor General said:

I must make it clear, however, that the decision to commute in a specific instance does not establish a precedent in any way whatsoever.

I do not accept this statement as accurate, much as I regret saying so. Even if I did, I would have to ask the Solicitor General, who says he will resign if the death penalty is reinstated, what other conclusion or what other perception can Canadians have, except that no matter what the circumstances of the murder, the death sentence will be commuted automatically by the cabinet?

Let me quote very briefly from a recent article by Charles Lynch who says:

Politics, as now being practised blatantly by a government that has shown itself utterly unwilling to sanction the use of the death penalty, is trying to strike a bargain that will abolish the hypocrisy of pretending that the noose is still there, when it isn't.

● (2030)

I return to what I feel is the basic decision of a member of parliament: should he or she vote according to his or her own conscience, or according to the wishes of his or her constituents? First, I wish to emphasize, and I wish to make it abundantly clear, that I respect the right of any member of parliament to choose either course of action. Both alternatives are not only justifiable but indeed honourable.

It would never occur to me to be critical of some of my colleagues because they choose to vote according to their own personal feelings, any more than I would challenge the right of others to attempt to reflect the wishes of the majority in their constituencies. What is more important is that you, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, and most importantly my constituents, have the right to know what course of action I propose to take, how I will vote, and why. I choose to reflect what I believe to be the feeling of an overwhelming majority of my constituents, and I will vote to retain the death penalty for those convicted of premeditated murder.

Let me acknowledge that my decision has been made a little easier because my own personal views have become more compatible with those of my riding in the last three and one-half years. Upon my first election I had just completed a legal career that included a limited amount of criminal defence work, including the defence of a capital murder charge. I confess readily that this case caused me, as a lawyer, a great deal of anguish, to such a degree that as I said during the 1973 capital punishment debate I could not possibly be objective about this issue and, therefore, I felt it improper to vote according to my own conscience. I suggest to you today that, next to accused murderers themselves, among the least logical and least objective persons, with regard to this issue, are lawyers who have practised criminal law.

Since 1973 I have had an opportunity to study parts of some reports, particularly those dealing with penitentiary riots and, much as I regret saying it, in some cases we are dealing with those who can only be described as "mad dog" killers and, an equally contemptible group, paid assassins. As a result of this exposure I do not find myself so disturbed about voting for capital punishment as I did in 1973.

The second point I wish to make is that to vote according to the views of one's constituents, a member of parliament must have an overwhelming or convincing consensus in his riding. My last questionnaire—and I doubt it was any different to that of many of my colleagues—showed 89 per cent in favour of the death penalty for cold-blooded murder. The questions in that survey were extremely carefully and fairly worded, the answers were tabulated by computer, and the results were well publicized in my riding. I am convinced of the accuracy of the results, and I am equally convinced that those replying were a representative cross-section of my riding.

My third reason for voting against this bill is that I reject unequivocally the accusation that a member of parliament who votes according to the wishes of his or her constituents, on the capital punishment issue, does so for his own political gain at the next election. I reject that outright. In 1973, during a shaky minority government, we had a capital punishment vote and shortly thereafter a general election. Just as many of those who voted for retention were defeated as those who voted for abolition and, similarly, just as many on both sides of the issue were re-elected. I know what it is to lose votes on election issues. Many members of our party were defeated during the last election for whatever reason—and I do not pretend to know—but capital punishment is not one of the issues which elects or defeats a member of parliament at a forthcoming election.

Fourth, I reject the accusation that one who votes according to the wishes of those he or she represents is abrogating his or her responsibilities. In the House of Commons, and in the various standing committees of which I have been a member, I have voted over the past few years on 300, 400 or 500 occasions, or maybe more. I have voted along party lines; I have voted according to my own conscience; I have voted to defeat the government, and I have voted to support the government. On only one occasion did I vote to reflect directly the views of my constituents, and that was the capital punishment vote of 1973.

Certainly there were numerous times when my vote did coincide with what I presumed to be the feelings of my riding. Generally the value of my questionnaire results has been to assist me in making my point in caucus or committee meetings. You know, Mr. Speaker, and I know, that I cannot consult with my constituents on every issue. Sometimes there is not enough time. Usually I should have studied and been better informed than my constituents on most issues before parliament. The upcoming vote on capital punishment will be only the second occasion that I have voted to reflect directly what the majority of my riding wish. For that I do not feel compelled to make any apologies.

Much was said during the 1973 debate on capital punishment about members who proposed to vote according to the wishes of their constituents. Almost invariably those who were critical of members who voted in this way quoted Edmund Burke or John Stuart Mill. It is implied that a member who votes according to the wishes of his or her constituents is nothing more than a computer, a head counter, or a reflector of public opinion. If any of my colleagues in the House wish to attach these or other labels to me, they are of course free to do so. I submit that this is utter nonsense. When I—and others—on only two occasions in over three years, out of hundreds and hundreds of votes, choose to reflect an overwhelming consensus of the people we represent, I do not feel that, all of a sudden, I have rejected a prevailing political philosophy that I should, generally speaking, base my decisions on my own best judgment.

On many occasions during my relatively short tenure of office I have voted against what I believed were the wishes of my constituents. On many occasions I had no time to consult with my constituents on specific issues; on other occasions there was no question in my mind that, because of research and other facilities available to me, I was in a better position to make a judgment than most of my constituents on a particular issue of the day. However, Mr. Speaker, I am one who firmly believes in the widest possible consultation with those who selected me to represent them. I have found this communication helpful and, in many cases, enlightening.

I believe it is part of my responsibility to consult with my constituents, and I believe further that their opinions should be of substantial significance as one element, among others, that assist me in making a particular judgment. Frankly I do not think that this makes me merely a computer to reflect public opinion. To the contrary, I believe this consultation makes me a better decision-maker and, of equal importance, permits my constituents to be part of, and closer to, their government.

Fifth, I have a certain difficulty in convincing myself that, in issues such as capital punishment, my conscience is superior to the collective conscience of those I represent. I suppose one might defend such a position by saying that because members of parliament have received such a tremendous volume of research and other material on capital punishment they are better informed than most; however, as I have pointed out, so much of the material is contradictory and confusing that I cannot adopt this position. Furthermore, it seems to me to be more than just presumptuous to say that my moral character or integrity or ethics are superior to 89 per cent of my constituents. Is there some miraculous moral transformation that takes place in an individual who has been fortunate enough to secure more votes on election day than his two or three opponents? All of a sudden does he become better fitted to determine moral issues?

● (2040)

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, I understand that on many issues I should be better equipped intellectually than many of my constituents because it is my job to be better informed, to have studied more, and to be better equipped. However, I find it difficult, indeed impossible, to extend that position by saying my moral conscience is better than the conscience of those I represent.

Finally, let us look directly at the issue. I have attempted to avoid the use of statistics because all too often they are misleading or, at the best, not very helpful. However, it is important to put into perspective the numbers of convicted murderers with whom we may be dealing. Prior to 1968, when a person could be executed for capital murder, statistics show that in the previous five years, during which there were 200 to 300 murders a year, the following numbers were sentenced to death, although most had their death sentences commuted, and indeed there have been no executions since 1962. In 1963 there were 12 such sentences; in 1964, 5; in 1965, 17; in 1966, 11; and in 1967, 10. Therefore we are talking about less than 10 per cent of all convicted murderers who could be executed. Of that 10 per cent none would be executed if the jury recommended mercy because commutation has been virtually automatic in all such cases.

I have no statistics for the last nine years because during this period capital murder cases involved only the murder of a police officer or prison guard, but I expect the proportion of premeditated or cold blooded murder remains about the same as the pre-1968 figures.

In his March 1975 statement that I referred to earlier, the Solicitor General said:

> Given the sudden, unplanned nature of most homicide, it appears unlikely that most individuals who commit murder take into account the existence or non-existence of capital punishment before carrying out the act.

What kind of red herring is this, Mr. Speaker? We are not debating capital punishment for murder resulting from domestic quarrels or other hot-blooded or impulsive murder. The Solicitor General does no service to himself or his government with such foolish statements. Of course the death penalty does not deter such killers. The killers the Solicitor General should be concerned about are the cold-blooded assassins—the inmates who choose to execute prison guards—hardened criminals who are ready, at the drop of a hat, to use a firearm in the commission of a robbery or similar offence.

I am the first to admit that the return of capital punishment in itself will not solve the problem of law and order in Canada. It is only but one small part of a very complex and urgent problem. On the other hand, I cannot reject the death penalty as a useless element in law enforcement.

I wish to make one other point regarding the government's conduct in bringing in this legislation. This bill has been highly touted as providing for a minimum 25 years prison term in place of execution. The Solicitor General has said this 25 year provision is harsh, that it may be counterproductive with respect to rehabilitation, that it may increase the problems in our prisons and for our prison guards. He does not know whether the 25 year rule in capital murder cases will act as a deterrent.

In view of all this I, and others, must ask why the 25 year minimum rule? And the only answer that I can find is that the government, by instituting the 25 year sentence provision, may garner enough votes in this House to abolish capital punishment. It is the price it will pay to eliminate the death penalty which is unacceptable to it.

What happens then if this bill is passed? There are two classes of murder. A person convicted of either class may receive a sentence of life imprisonment. In spite of the sentence is the murderer eligible for parole? Sure, in the case of first degree murder, the minimum 25 year rule applies. Does this mean that a murderer convicted of a cold blooded murder has to wait 25 years to become eligible for parole? No, that is not what the bill says. It says that after 15 years a convicted first degree murderer may have his case reviewed. What does all this mean? It means that life imprisonment is not life imprisonment, but 25 years. And it means that 25 years is not really 25 years, it is 15 years. And the government wonders why the Canadian public is confused and angry.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jarvis: I hear shouts of "no" to my left. I defy hon. members to convince me—and I have a great deal of respect for their judgment—that 25 years is 25 years, because it is simply not the case even in the event of conviction for capital murder.

May I conclude on a more temperate note, Mr. Speaker. The important thing for all of us to understand today is that neither Canadians nor their MPs are unanimous in their views on the death penalty. People feel equally strongly and equally emotionally on opposite sides of this issue.

To those of my colleagues who oppose the death penalty, may I say that I freely and readily acknowledge the validity of the principles that they have adopted in forming their opinion.

Therefore, while I cannot and will not ask them to agree with my position. I do ask, and I do hope, that they will respect the principles that I have adopted in reaching my decision to vote for the retention of capital punishment.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, this is the fourth time that I have participated in the debate on capital punishment. You will recall that it was Mr. Larry Pennell who introduced the legislation in 1967 which set in motion the abolition of capital punishment, and at that time there were certain restrictions. Because of my participation in the other debates I will impose upon myself a limitation of time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: I am rather proud of the debate thus far because there has not been the acrimony and the emotionalism which could easily creep into this type of debate. I have not heard the abolitionists say that capital punishment is sadistic, barbaric or savage, and I have not heard retentionists say that abolitionists are misguided do-gooders. I am sure all of us appreciate the approach hon. members are taking during the debate and the respect that we have for each other's views.

I am opposed to capital punishment for five specific reasons. First, capital punishment is incompatible with my moral and spiritual concepts of reverence for life. Second, capital punishment is not a deterrent. Third, capital punishment presents the awful possibility of putting an innocent man to death. Fourth, capital punishment eliminates the purpose of punishment which is for the person to make amends, reform and rehabilitate. Fifth, capital punishment would be a backward step in the development of our system of justice.

I have said that capital punishment is incompatible with my moral and spiritual concepts of reverence for life. We have developed a system of values regarding human life, human dignity, and human worth, from religious considerations, experiences of others, and our own. The Bible contains five key words: vengeance, justice, mercy, love and forgiveness. In Genesis the Lord said "vengeance is mine", but man said "no", and imposed death for the taking of another life, for adultery, and for the blaspheming of God. Then we find Amos, seeing the poor being ground into poverty, shouting from the hilltops, "Let justice roll down like a mighty river and righteousness like an everlasting stream". We also find Hosea who saw his wife committing adultery and spoke of showing mercy toward others. Finally we find Jesus who thought and demonstrated redemptive love and forgiveness, even in death.

We are in the process of developing a heightened and enlightened awareness of human life, human worth and human dignity, and we must not allow ourselves to return to the dark ages of revenge and retribution. That is why I am proud of the Canadian Council of Churches, which represents many religious persuasions, for giving their leadership and their convictions, and for setting the moral tone in teaching this important subject.

● (2050)

I was rather proud yesterday to hear the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), a former United Church minister, set a very high tone in this debate and give his reasons which were mighty persuasive.

Sir Edmund Burke has been quoted many times and I think he has the core of the thinking of most of us—that we have a responsibility to our constituents to study the matter of capital punishment, and other social and economic issues, and to exercise our good judgment and our conscience. I am sure most of us are attempting to do so.

The second reason why I am opposed to capital punishment is that it is not a deterrent. If it were a supreme deterrent, murder would have stopped in Biblical times. Surely it would have stopped in the eighteenth century in England where they had 350 capital offences which called for a sentence of hanging. But I am persuaded by the statement of Britain's Royal Commission on Crime in 1952 which stated:

> ... the general conclusion we have reached is that there is no clear evidence in any of the figures we have examined that the abolition of capital punishment has led to an increase in the homicide rate or that its introduction has led to a fall in homicide rates.

This conclusion has been confirmed by the studies of Professor Sellin, and studies in the United Nations. I think they have reached the simple conclusion that the evidence with regard to capital punishment as a deterrent is not clear either way.

I was rather impressed with the opening argument of the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), leading spokesman in the debate for the Conservative party. He said the reason that most of us do not commit murder is fear of death. If that were so there would not be any murders today. I think the reason that you and I do not commit murder is because of our moral values, because of our spiritual values, because of our social values, because of our fiscal and physical well-being, and because of the exercise of our self-control and self-discipline. These are the main reasons why you and I are deterred from committing murder, Mr. Speaker.

It seems to me that we should be looking at the causes and cures of crime rather than at the penalties. I was very impressed with the evidence given by Professor Cyril Greenland of McMaster University who has studied in depth the problem of violence in our society today, and who made a particular study of criminal violence. After studying approximately 400 persons who had been involved in crimes of violence he came to four conclusions why we have violence today—first, a severe deprivation in social and economic well-being; second, poor housing and unemployment; third, alcohol and drug problems; and fourth, no attention paid when help was sought.

It seems to me that we have to direct our attention and our resources to solving these problems of violence by creating a society where we do not have wide gaps in economic and social well-being but where we have a decent housing scheme, full employment, some control with regard to alcohol and drugs, and where, when attention to a problem is sought, it is given.

The third reason why I am opposed to capital punishment is that it permits the awful possibility of putting an innocent man to death. May I say, once he has been put to death it is irreversible. In fairness, there has been no conclusive evidence in Canada that an innocent person has been put to death. We have had shadows cast in at least three cases I know of, however. One was the Wilbert Coffin case in the Gaspé in 1956, when he was charged with the murder of three American hunters. Before he was put to death he was subjected to six reprieves. There was the Steven Truscott case, with a dissenting judgment by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall of the Supreme Court of Canada who expressed serious doubts with regard to the guilt of Steven Truscott. Now there is the Raymond Cook case in Alberta.

In the United States between 1893 and 1971 there were eight definite cases where innocent persons were put to death. In Great Britain between 1945 and 1968 there were at least three cases. The most dramatic of these was the case of John Christie, who was hanged for the murder of his wife and child on the evidence of his neighbour, Evans, who later admitted to the crime. The bodies were found in Evans' home along with the bodies of five or six other women. That case brought to stark reality the possibility of putting an innocent person to death.

The fourth reason why I am opposed to capital punishment is that it eliminates the purpose of punishment, which is the reform and rehabilitation of the individual, and not vengeance and retribution. It may be said that the advocates of retribution are sometimes the families or close friends of the murdered victim because at times they feel vengeance as a sign of their hurt and helplessness. What they need in those times is friendship and solace, and the healing power of time.

May I repeat for hon. members the case that happened in the riding adjacent to mine in Toronto, the riding of Greenwood. A police officer was killed, and René Vaillaincourt has been convicted of the murder and is awaiting a decision on this bill. The wife of the murdered officer, Mrs. Maitland, wrote to the hon. member for Greenwood saying that both she and her late husband were opposed to capital punishment and that she was prepared to forgive and extend mercy to this person.

If punishment is to be reformative and rehabilitative, an opportunity must be given to re-educate the offender. To achieve this goal some control of his time is necessary. That is why we must have a sentence which involves the educational opportunity as this is more likely to promote the well-being of society.

I am sure hon. members will recall the famous Leopold and Loeb case in the United States when Clarence Darrow came to the fore. These two young men had committed murder, but he argued that rather than suffer capital punishment they should receive life imprisonment. In those days it was very difficult to persuade the judge and jury, but he succeeded. Both were sons of very rich men. Loeb was later killed by a fellow prisoner, but Leopold spent many years in prison. He was paroled to work in a laboratory in a mission hospital in Puerto Rico, and spent ten years there as an X-ray technican. At the age of 55 he returned to school and obtained a master's degree in social work. He then became a consulting psychologist and a research associate for a medical school where he made a study of leprosy in Puerto Rico. His service to many suffering people was a credit to himself and to the advocates of the abolition of capital punishment. That does not mean that all persons who have committed crimes and are sentenced to life imprisonment are going to reform and be rehabilitated and make amends the way Leopold did, but I think his story is worthy of consideration.

Western civilization would have missed a great deal in its culture and moral development if Moses had been deprived of his life for killing an Egyptian, if David had been killed for conspiring to murder Uriah, and Paul for co-operating in the death of Stephen, and for voting death to the early Christians.

● (2100)

My fifth reason for opposing capital punishment is that reimposing capital punishment now would be a step backward in our system of justice. I remind the House that in Great Britain, in the 18th Century, there were 350 capital offences. In 1957 the death penalty was limited to a few offences only. In 1965 it was suspended, and in 1969 abolished. Events of recent years have tested the British stand on capital punishment. Terrorist activity in Northern Ireland prompted the introduction of motions in the British house in 1974 urging the return of the death penalty for terrorist activities. On both occasions the vote went against bringing back the death penalty.

I recall my 17-year-old son coming home after having toured England and Scotland. I said to him, "Son, what do you think of England?" He said, "Dad, I can sum it up in one word." I said "What word is it?" He said, "Civilized." It seems to me that the British people are civilized in the sense that they respect human life, human worth, and human dignity.

In Canada we have modified our treatment of murderers. I give full credit to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and Davie Fulton for bringing forward legislation in 1958 which limited capital punishment to certain kinds of murder. There has been a further development. Since 1962 no one in this country has been hanged. In 1967 Larry Pennell, now Mr. Justice Pennell—and Mr. Speaker must know him well—was instrumental in bringing forward law which limited hanging only to convicted murderers of policemen and prison guards. The United States Supreme Court found capital punishment to be a violation of the eighth amendment of the U.S. Constitution in that it constitutes cruel and unjust punishment. Forty-four member countries of the United Nations have abolished capital punishment.

Abolitionists, besides favouring the abolition of capital punishment, are under the duty of supporting measures which will protect society from the increasing incidence of crimes of violence. By bringing forward Bill C-83 the government took the right step. The bill deals effectively with the question of guns, parole, and dangerous offenders. But it must not stop there. We talk about reforming and rehabilitating criminals; therefore we are under the duty of bringing forward programs which will do this, which will allow prisoners to develop as human beings and take their rightful place in society.

In addition we must separate the various categories of criminals; that is why classification is important in any penal program. We must build smaller prisons and replace older, larger prisons with more modern ones. We must protect the police and prison guards, and we are under the duty of making sure they are adequately trained to protect themselves and society. I hope the recently passed law for tightening bail regulations will be effective.

A report on young offenders has been brought forward, but legislation so far has not been based on it. We considered a young offenders' bill in 1970. Fortunately that bill died on the order paper. The bill was based on the adversary system concept. That concept has no place in criminal justice. I think we should abandon the adversary system in criminal justice and adopt a system which will enable us first to look at the offence, then at programs which will either cure, rehabilitate or reform the offender.

The challenge to build a better society is ours. It is up to us to uphold the sanctity, worth, and dignity of human life. The challenge is ours. May we have the courage and determination to accept it.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak today on what is, without doubt, one of the most difficult questions facing this parliament. As a newly elected member this is my first opportunity to deal, on the floor of this Chamber, with the issue of capital punishment. I would begin my comments, Mr. Speaker, by commending both the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) for their eloquent and impassioned articulation of the issue.

My objection to the death penalty is based upon the conviction that it is both futile and immoral, and that the interests of society would be best served by its abolition. As I have listened to and read the opinions of those who would have us retain the death penalty, I am struck with three basic arguments. The first argument in the case for capital punishment was outlined by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). He argues that the death penalty is a much greater deterrent than any other form of punishment, so that its abolition would result in an increase in the incidence of murder. The second argument, presented so often by the many form letters which have landed on my desk, has been that public opinion, which seems to demand its continuance, cannot be ignored. The third argument is perhaps the easiest to dismiss; it states that with crime as it is, now is not the time for abolition. It is my intention, Mr. Speaker, to deal with all of these arguments, demonstrate their falseness and, in so doing, challenge those who would claim otherwise.

The hon. member for the Yukon, opening the debate for his party, was led to the conclusion, which he admits as being oversimplistic, that death must be a deterrent. I can agree with the hon. member only insofar as he admits his reasoning to be oversimplistic. As the great Tory Senator, Grattan O'Leary, said in the last debate:

> I do not think any civilized mind, any educated mind, with all the evidence we have had before us during the last half century, can stand in this Chamber and say he still believes in capital punishment ... There is nothing on earth, no evidence anywhere by anyone, to show that capital punishment does deter the further commission of such crimes.

Let us deal for a moment with the question of the deterrent effect of capital punishment. A great deal of investigation and years of research by some of the ablest minds of the world have been done on the value of capital punishment as a deterrent. Those who have spoken before me have pointed to the findings of many of these studies. I wish to add to their argument by citing the work done by the Norwegian criminologist Johannes Andenaes, who, after years of research, concludes:

> But with regard to the very specific deterrent of capital punishment we have learned one thing: all the studies ever made, all the statistics ever compiled, all the data ever processed have failed to produce one shred of evidence that capital punishment has ever been a deterrent to murder.

This confirms the opinion of the British Royal Commission of 1949-1953 on the subject of the death penalty. It determined:

> That there is no clear evidence in any of the figures we have examined that the abolition of capital punishment had led to an increase in the homicide rate or that its re-introduction had led to a fall.

Indeed, a comparative study of homicide rates between abolitionist and retentionist jurisdictions in the United States has indicated that the average homicide rates are greater in the retentionist states. A similar comparison of European jurisdictions based on Interpol data would indicate that "For the most part, states which have abolished capital punishment have lower rates of murders and attempted murder". In Mexico, a UN study also noted no relationship between the presence or absence of the death penalty and homicide rates in different states.

I am not suggesting that abolition will lead to a lower homicide rate. However, for those who have stood in this Chamber and claimed that death was, must be, was bound to be, could not help being a greater deterrent than any other form of punishment, I can only point to the overwhelming evidence which would indicate that the murder rate varies independent of the death penalty. Indeed in 1868 public executions were abolished in Britain, largely because of evidence before the Royal Commission of 1866 that of 167 persons who had been under sentence of death in one town during a number of years, 164 had themselves witnessed a public execution, in consequence of which the commission concluded that those who argued that public executions had great deterrent effect were wrong.

I would argue, Mr. Speaker, as did Sir Samuel Romelly, leader of the movement to abolish capital punishment in the last century, specifically that:

● (2110)

> 1. The chief deterrent to crime is not barbarity of punishment but certainty of conviction. The former only results in decreasing the latter and is therefore futile.
>
> 2. Brutal punishments accustom the people to brutality and themselves tend to increase crimes of violence. Basically put, Mr. Speaker, violence breeds violence.

As Archbishop Temple, who has written much on the subject of the death penalty, stated:

> With regard to the chief quality of effectiveness in deterrent punishment, it is not the severity of the penalty inflicted, but the certainty both of detection and of the exaction of the penalty required by law.

In this regard, for the period 1961 to 1974 only 14 per cent of adult suspects charged with murder were convicted of the original charge of murder, and 46.4 per cent were convicted of a lesser offence than murder. A study in Britain indicates that the conviction rate for murder rose dramatically after the death penalty was abolished. Such data would indicate that jurors are, as the Solicitor General indicated on May 3, 1976, loath to convict for capital murder, but are quite prepared to convict for a lesser offence where life is not at stake.

A great deal has been said in this debate and in previous debates which has sought emotional and religious justification of the death penalty. The law of capital punishment, while it pretends to support a reverence for life and justice, does in fact destroy it. I say with all the conviction that I can muster that I am persuaded that the message to be gleaned from the teachings of Christ written in the New Testament is one of love and charity.

The story is told of a sailor who was shipwrecked on an unknown shore and feared for his life. Scrambling up a cliff, he suddenly caught sight of a gallows and exclaimed, "God be praised! I must be in a Christian country". I reject the arguments of those cynics who would exchange the true Christian principles of reverence for life, compassion, and atonement, for revenge, callousness and punitive justice. Execution cheapens life which we must cherish and nurture.

We must also concern ourselves with the irreversibility of the death penalty. While I share with all members a high regard for our judicial system, the possibility of error is always present. Professor Charles Black of the Yale Law School, in his book "Capital Punishment: The Inevitability of Caprice and Mistake" concludes that capital punishment should never be inflicted, not only because it is wrong on moral grounds and ineffective as a deterrent, but because the vulnerability of the criminal justice system to caprice and mistake cannot be improved or eliminated. Certainly the Christie case in England raises some very serious questions about the imperfection of the judicial system and the absoluteness of capital punishment. Such an eventuality is a situation which we cannot ignore nor accept.

Many people believe that it would be unsafe to let murderers live, with the chance that they might gain remission of their sentence and return to the streets and kill again. Unfortunately the popular mood is formed on the most exceptional and unfortunate cases.

Uniform Parole Reports data consistently report that homicide, and indeed violent offences in general, are the crimes associated with the lowest recidivism rates.

I would but bring before the House the case of Jim Casey and Thomas Shand. Jim Casey, convicted in 1956 in Vancouver of killing a policeman, had his sentence commuted and was paroled in 1968. Casey's former prison classification officer has said of him:

> I firmly believe that Jim Casey is the finest example alive for the cause of abolishing capital punishment. He epitomizes what can be done with time, patience and insight.

The Mayor of Saint John, New Brunswick, where Casey now lives, added his praise:

> He's an extra special type of man and a tremendous influence for good in our city—especially with young people.

It is my hope that the peace and security package might further this kind of rehabilitation. I would also like to mention the case of convicted murdered Thomas Shand of Winnipeg. In a very moving letter to the pastor of a church which had befriended Shand after his conviction, he wrote:

> For a year and a half now, I've been preparing for death and in a sense, even welcoming it, just for the peace of mind I would get, knowing that I would never again harm a human being, or they me. Now I must find reasons to go on living, with the hope that some day I will be released from prison to make a contribution to society to amend the wrongs I cast on so many. I know that a debt of this nature can never be fully repaid, but I shall strive . . . to right the wrongs, so that one day my family and friends may walk without shame, and that the family of Ronald Houston may be compensated for their grief.
>
> Up until about six months ago, I was a firm believer in capital punishment, thinking that death was the only solution. I, like so many others, read or heard somewhere the eye for eye and tooth for tooth was the only answer, not even knowing who said it, or for that matter, in which part of the Bible it could be found. All we knew for sure was that it said so in the Bible, so therefore, it must be the right way to do things. We never stopped to take into consideration the time, place, people, or the environment in which they lived. I'm not saying that today the situation is any less violent, but I can say that the majority of people are more civilized and educated, and are interested in finding out why some of us do what we do and, if possible, correcting these malfunctions before they do irreparable damage to ourselves, or those with whom we come into contact. Unfortunately, there are still many of us who do not believe in the "seek and cure system." We would like to get the problem over with as soon as possible, by meting out confinement or, in some cases, execution. It wasn't too many years ago that as many as 200 crimes were punishable by death.
>
> Some of our reasons for urging these punishments were guilt and fear, knowing that perhaps we could have possibly prevented the crime if we had acted sooner, by giving a little of our time and understanding to some child who needed attention and genuine affection. Each and every child in this world has at one time or another called out to us, begging us to hear them, love them, and, yes even sometimes to discipline them. In many cases their pleas fall on deaf ears, because a lot of us are caught in our own selfish needs and just don't have the time or patience to hear that child's cries. There are two other main reasons why people believe in confinement and capital punishment which I'll name, but won't go into, because they are both self-explanatory. One is vengeance and retribution, and the other is that it will serve as a deterrent and warning to those who might have ideas about going astray, which in my opinion is pure fiction, and probably the greatest hoax of all times.

[Mr. Daudlin.]

The testimony of Thomas Shand, who as a child was brought up in a series of foster homes and who completed only the eighth grade in school, should humble us all.

Before I briefly mention the matter of public opinion, I would point out to hon. members an observation made by Albert Camus and in doing so encourage members to read his essay, "Reflections on the Guillotine". In his arguments, Camus relates the role of alcohol to crime and states that the proportion of alcohol's responsibility in crimes of murder is shooting. "The State that sows alcohol", says Camus, "cannot be surprised to reap crime".

In a letter from the United Church of Canada, Presbytery of Essex, it was pointed out to me that a study conducted in Philadelphia over a five-year period found that 60 per cent of killers and or killed were under the influence of alcohol. Recent disclosures at trials in Canada would indicate a similar situation. This is a cancerous problem to which the Solicitor General's office and the Department of Health must be prepared to pay greater heed. We must be ready to deal with this problem, and deal with it expeditiously.

I want now for a moment to deal with the extent to which we as members should have regard to public opinion. I am certain that it is important for governments and members to be sensitive toward, and to take account of, the opinions of the public before legislating on important issues. In deciding to what extent effect should be given to public opinion we must determine to what extent that public opinion is well informed and instructed.

● (2120)

In examining the work done by Dr. Fattah I am led to believe that the anxiety of the public is based on arguments which, earlier in my remarks, I rejected as being invalid. They are based, for the most part, on an emotional case for public execution. I need not remind hon. members, as has already been done, of the tradition of Edmund Burke, Sir Winston Churchill, and the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), all of whom have pointed out that a member of parliament owes his constituents not his only his industry, but his judgment as well, and he betrays, instead of serving them, if he sacrifices it to their opinion.

I think it is unfortunate that several hon. members of this Chamber, long prior to any debate or discussion of the issue, have determined how they will vote on only the smallest of questionnaire responses. By refusing to examine the issue in a critical manner they have done, not a service, but disservice to their constituents.

In conclusion, the death penalty has no place in the compassionate, humane society we all seek to build. Hence I urge with all the conviction I can muster that this House do abolish the death penalty.

As long ago as 1930 the British select committee on capital punishment summed it all up, and I quote:

> . . . and as it is the more humane spirit in our people that makes a more humane penal code possible; so, on the other hand, in humanizing our punishments, we will yet further humanize our people. On the one side, and on the other, humanity will beget humanity, as nobleness enkindleth nobleness.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, this is the third debate on capital punishment in which I have participated. I have listened carefully to the speeches in the debates of the past parliaments. I have read everything available to me on this subject, and my conviction still remains. Notwithstanding the arguments of those who favour capital punishment, I cannot support that conviction. I hold these views, I hold them strongly, and I hold them fully in the knowledge that they may not necessarily coincide with the views of many in my constituency. Indeed they may not coincide with the views of the majority of my constituents. Just as I respect their views, I feel equally that they will respect mine.

The Police Brotherhood of the Newfoundland constabulary, together with their brothers all across the country, conducted a newspaper campaign in which they requested those people who support capital punishment to write in their names in support of a national plebiscite. In my city 106 responded. I make no comment on that except to say that I owe a responsibility to these people, and that is to put forward their views here tonight. That I am endeavouring to do.

I know that they feel just as strongly in favour of capital punishment as I feel against it. Notwithstanding the low response to the newspaper campaign, I know that there are many across the country who share their point of view, although it is interesting that the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police through their spokesman, Chief Harold Adamson of Toronto, their national president, said this in a press quote of March 26:

> As an alternative to capital punishment, we're satisfied with the 25 years, so long as the man is not released before then.

I do not subscribe to the view that this matter should be the subject of a national plebiscite or referendum. I believe members of parliament were given a mandate by their consituents, by the people of Canada, to exercise their judgments in dealing with all matters relating to the national interest. The vote on the bill now before the House is a free vote. It is a vote in which each member votes according to the dictates of his own conscience, without regard to partisan considerations. That fact makes it incumbent upon all of us as members of this House to inform ourselves as much as possible, and to base our convictions upon the information available to us, and to vote according to those convictions.

I should like to put forward the views of the Canadian Council of Churches because they, very dramatically and very correctly, coincide with my own. I think it is only right that I should put them forward because the Canadian Council of Churches has the responsibility of moral leadership in this country, and the Canadian Council of Churches represents the eight major denominations in the country. I will quote very briefly from its submission:

> The taking of the life of the murderer by society does nothing to recompense the victim, his family, or society itself. Indeed, it involves often more suffering for innocent members of the murderer's family.
>
> Retention of capital punishment can be interpreted to mean that society is saying that human life is worthless when it crosses the boundary of our expectations. Thus it invites more violence by sanctioning the execution. The cure for violence is not more violence.

The council goes on to answer those who selectively quote from the Old Testament to support their position for the retention of capital punishment.

The council makes some recommendations in its brief, and I will put these recommendations forward because I support them, because they accurately reflect my own views, and I think they are worth placing on the record:

> (a) provide young people and adults with meaningful and satisfying employment and outlets in healthy recreation. We are informed that homicide tends to increase as unemployment grows.
>
> (b) develop the kind of penal institutions now being experimented with which will send persons back into society, not more skilled in crime, but better prepared to make a new start.
>
> (c) reduce the consumption of liquor and other drugs. The records will show a high proportion of violence being committed while under the influence.
>
> (d) improve our capacity to recognize and deal with mental illness. Many murderers are mentally ill and may need extensive treatment and restraint.
>
> (e) minimize the showing of violence on television and in moving picture theatres.

With respect to the last recommendation I was very encouraged by the speech of the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) to the Canadian Association of Broadcasters. She showed an acute awareness of the gravity of the situation in North America with respect to its preponderance of violence as a means of providing entertainment, and I hope she will go on to translate that concern into regulations, either by way of a directive to the CRTC or by way of legislation in this House. The evidence is in. We have it on very good authority, not only in this country but also in the United States. For example, the Surgeon-General of the United States after a two year exhaustive study came to the conclusion that there was in fact a correlation and a casual relationship between crimes of violence and violence on television. He came to the conclusion that televised violence, with which the media on this continent are so preoccupied, increases aggressive behaviour in young people as well as in adults.

Perhaps more important, televised violence conditions people to accepting violence, and that probably is the greatest threat of all. It makes them passive to violence. I laud the minister for her speech, and I hope she will go on to translate her words into meaningful action.

● (2130)

I was touched by the speech of the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), who spoke from deep conviction. I was equally touched by the speech of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen); he too spoke with conviction. They put forward the arguments in a very clear, convincing and concise way. I, sir, hold the view—and I hold it very strongly—that until we attack the root cause of crime and violence in this country—and I have dealt with one aspect of it, violence on television—it matters very little whether or not we pass this bill, because it has been established to my satisfaction, and to the satisfaction of the Solicitor General, that capital punishment is not a deterrent.

Until we make some positive progress toward eradicating poverty and the symptoms of poverty—the slums and ghettos—we will continue to have crime and violence. Until society and our national government, working with the provinces, provide funds to make available proper day care facilities, a healthy environment, and good sound education for the children of broken homes and of single parent families, I believe we will have young people growing up feeling socially disadvantaged, having no respect for authority or for the law.

I believe too that until we take positive and meaningful steps to teach our children the danger of alcohol and drug abuse, we will continue to be faced with major social problems in this country. We can make a start, Mr. Speaker. I laud the concern expressed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) over the excesses of beer and alcohol advertising in this country, this tendency toward the peer group kind of advertising. Until we curb this sort of thing and recognize that we have a major social problem in Canada of teenage alcoholism, we will continue to have youngsters going astray.

Our jails and penitentiaries are populated by the young, the socially disadvantaged, and the poor. A few months ago I had a very moving experience, certainly one of the most traumatic experiences in my life, when I toured Dorchester penitentiary, an institution that really has no place in modern society and which should have been torn down years ago. What struck me about that institution, apart altogether from its medieval-like walls, cells, and solitary confinement areas, were the inmates. They were the poor, the disadvantaged, the socially short-changed, the young—the minority groups.

I believe that the words of the Solicitor General have great relevance here. If I may paraphrase him, he said that the application of capital punishment in the past has been unfair because it has been applied disproportionately to the poor, to the unrepresented, and to the minority groups. If hon. members want to see evidence of that, Mr. Speaker, they should visit the maximum security institutions of this country.

I am voting for this bill, Mr. Speaker. I will support it although I am not at all happy with some of its aspects. Nevertheless I support it because I am opposed to capital punishment. I support it not out of any sense of arrogance. I do so out of no sense of moral superiority or of superior judgment. I do so out of very sincere conviction, conviction that is very deeply held. I do so out of the conviction that it is morally wrong to take the life of another, be the executioner the state or an individual.

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, for many of us in the back row on both sides of this honourable House the question now before us is before us for the first time in our capacity as legislators. I am sure that no matter what position we take, that of retention or that of abolition, there is not one new member who has not agonized over this most important of all questions for many weeks, yes many months. The decision that we make as to retention or abolition of capital punishment will have long lasting and far reaching effects on this great country of ours.

I do not have the background that many members of this House have in bringing forth their points of view and arguments either for retention or for abolition. I simply want to state my view, a view that I have spent many hours agonizing over and considering.

Without fear of contradiction, Mr. Speaker, I would class this deliberation which we are embarking on now as the most important one that we will make in our young careers as legislators, and for that matter the most important decision for this honourable body since January of 1973 when the five-year extension of abolition of capital punishment was passed. You know, Mr. Speaker, it is not too often that politicians get a second chance at legislation, a chance to reconsider their position, perhaps a chance to correct a mistake—if the extension that was agreed to in 1973 was a mistake. But we have it now, and I for one hope that we will take a very close look at the decision we are going to make within the next few weeks.

You may be aware, Mr. Speaker, that there is a current saying going the rounds among the public at the present time—one I am not altogether pleased with. It is "Try it, you'll like it". The people of Canada have been trying abolition of capital punishment to some extent or other for close to 10 years, and I think it is fair to say that society in general has found that it does not like it. Judging from all the reports I have heard, people have emphatically given the indication that they do not like what is happening in society and would like to see a return to capital punishment. They have let the members of this House know in every way they can that they wish the death penalty reinstated for premeditated murder, for premeditated murder not just of a police officer or a prison guard but for crimes of passion to a certain extent, as well as, for the hijacker, the terrorist, and those who commit murder through the perpetration of an offence such a bank robbery or armed holdup.

If there is one thing bothering the police officer and the prison guard in carrying out their duties, Mr. Speaker, it is being segregated from the rest of our population. Should we return to the death penalty I think this is one aspect we must take into consideration.

Take the case of police officer whose wife is a bank teller. If a holdup should take place in a bank and that police officer goes to investigate, perhaps the individual involved, the perpetrator of the crime, would fire two shots, both at the police officer, both missing, but one striking the police officer's wife who was still carrying out her duty as a bank teller. The person who fired those shots while committing the indictable offence of holding up the bank could not be sentenced to capital punishment if he hit the policeman's wife, yet both of them were taking the same chances in carrying out their occupations.

● (2140)

While I must express my concern and appreciation for the feelings expressed by various members of this House, particularly the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), who are all opposed to capital punishment, I certainly say I respect those feelings and the feelings of members who have given a similar indication tonight. However, I do not share them, and it is without any twang of conscience that I intend to vote against this bill on second reading, at the report stage, and at third reading as well.

Abolition of the death penalty brings up the simple question, do we abolish the death penalty? Should members of this House in their wisdom decide to carry out that plan I believe it will mark a dark moment in Canadian legal history, and of which I want no part. What would we really accomplish by abolishing the death penalty from the Criminal Code? I submit to you, absolutely nothing, for in doing so will we have truly abolished capital punishment? I think not. We will simply have taken control of capital punishment out of the hands of the state and legal authorities, where it belongs, and put it into the hands of those who have no scruples or compunction as to how it should be used. It will then rest entirely at the discretion of the criminal and criminal element who will use it without fear, and certainly without compassion.

In the ten years since the abolition question has come up in this country we have seen an increase in crime and criminal tendencies unheard of before in the history of this country. Just quoting a few statistics, and I do not want to get into statistics because I truly believe they can be made to show whatever you want to show, in Quebec in 1955 there were 17 murders, and in 1965 there were 53. However, last year there were 217.

The Solicitor General has stated there has been no disproportionate increase in the number of violent crimes. It seems to me someone has some figures wrong some place. In 1966 the number of violent crimes committed totalled 69,656, and in 1973 that total climbed to 114,760. That is an increase some place along the line of 65 per cent in those seven years with crimes such as murder, manslaughter, rape, and wounding included in those totals. As recently as February 17 of this year it was reported for the first time in metropolitan Toronto that the number of murders committed during a period of just over one month, from January 1 to roughly February 15, 1976, exceeded the number of people killed in car accidents.

I certainly do not intend to get into a discussion of statistics with the minister or any member of this House because it is true, as I have said, that statistics can be made to do or show what is required of them. This question cannot be settled by the use of statistics. It can only be solved by each member of this House reaching a well thought out personal decision, a decision such as I have spent much time over the past year and a half trying to reach.

I would say there is no one in the House who would desire more than I to be able to say: yes, society in Canada and the people have reached a stage in our evolution where the death penalty is no longer needed, and we have reached a stage in this country where people have a respect for the law and a respect for each other's right to the extent that a deterrent such as the death penalty is no longer required.

Such is certainly not the case, and I am sure the minister and members will have to agree that there has been an increase in violent crime in this country, not just murders but acts of violence perpetrated as never before in our cities right across this land. I believe, fervently and with all sincerity, that the capital punishment section of the Criminal Code is a deterrent, and that is what we must base our final decision upon when deciding the eventual conclusion of this debate, that is, whether capital punishment will be retained or abolished.

There are many ways in which my opinions differ from those of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I have to agree wholeheartedly with him when he explained that his belief that the death penalty is a deterrent took root during his early experience in the armed forces, an experience shared by many members of this fine House. I hope not too many in this honourable House have come face to face with death as did that hon. member, whether during World War II or the Korean war. I would certainly hope our young men never have to face that proposition in the future, like many others, and like one or two in this House who have served in our police forces, who entered a building in the dead of night which had been broken into, and who have come face to face with an armed and determined assailant. If any of us had this experience or this confrontation I do not think he would be able to stand up and say that at no time is death a deterrent, or that death is not uppermost in the individual's mind at that time. In that event I do not think there would be many questions about which way we would vote.

Let me relate a couple of experiences I have been told about which took place in two separate border cities in Canada. These are not personal experiences, but they are experiences of others I know personally and with whom I have had contact. Both were police officers who came upon armed and determined criminals, not from this country, during the commission of an attempted robbery. In both these unrelated instances the two police officers confronted the criminals in question. Both officers were facing death as the criminals in question were determined, armed, and with an advantage over the police officers. They were determined not to be apprehended.

In both these cases the criminals asked the police officers point blank if the death penalty was still in effect in this country for the murder of a police officer. Both officers replied that it was in respect of the murder of a police officer in the performance of his duty. I am assured that in both instances the criminals at this point turned over their firearms to the officers and the arrests were completed.

Someone may be able to convince me that the death penalty is no deterrent, but he would certainly have a hard time, as would any member of the House, convincing either of those police officers. In those particular instances the death penalty was a deterrent, and one which in all likelihood saved their lives.

I would agree with the Solicitor General that the death penalty cannot be proved by statistics to have an effect on gangland killings and hired killers. However, I believe the death penalty must have a deterrent effect on those who would commit premeditated murder as a last resort, and those who pause for the shortest period of time to weigh and balance the consequences of their actions. This is just one more thought put in the person's mind at this most crucial moment.

Retention of the death penalty I feel may save one, two, three, four or five lives of Canadian citizens, whether they be police officers or otherwise, over the period of a year. If the retention of the death penalty in the Criminal Code should save the life of one innocent Canadian this year or next year, then it is worth while retaining.

● (2150)

In 1973 my predecessor, Mr. Ross Whicher, summed it up when he said that when any country begins to think more of the criminal than it does of the victim, then that country is indeed in a horrible state of affairs. That statement is as true now as it was then. I believe capital punishment should be reinstated in Canada for the criminal who has committed first degree murder beyond a shadow of a doubt. I believe it will make Canada a safer and better place in which to live, and I shall vote to that effect in the forthcoming division.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, as I look at the clock and see that it is five minutes to ten I wonder whether it would be in order to call it ten o'clock now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Actually the Chair has no objection to asking if hon. members agree. I should like to make sure, however, before doing so that the hon. members who are interested in the adjournment debate, the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) and the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen), are here.

Is it agreed that we call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—ISSUANCE OF NEW PERMITS TO DRILL FOR OIL ON NATIVE LAND—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I have received this time tonight to deal with a matter I first raised in the House on April 7, and again on April 8. I realize the House has before it a great number of pressing matters and therefore I appreciate the opportunity to return to this matter.

At this time I should like to correct a slight mistake which appeared in Hansard when my question was recorded on April 7. I was not asking about oil exploration permits, as Hansard would have us believe. I was speaking of the 68 exploration permits that were issued to several companies to look for uranium in the Keewatin and Baffin regions of the Northwest Territories. These permits were issued on March 29 of this year. Although they themselves are important I suppose what is really at issue here is the attitude of the government when it issued the permits.

Time and time again I and many others have watched this particular minister and top officials of his staff act with almost total insensitivity toward the native people, their goals and their feelings. This matter of the uranium permits is just the latest in a long string of insensitive acts. I feel it is important to use this as an example of how this department and this minister carry out their duties both in respect of Indian affairs and northern development.

The other person who publicly complained about this incident was James Arvaluk, president of the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada. I want to say for the benefit of the parliamentary secretary who is assigned to answer me that both I and Mr. Arvaluk are well aware of the process of receiving permits for exploration work in the North. We are both aware that at some point down the road short public hearings will be held on the application of these companies to receive land use permits. However, that is not at issue. What is at issue here is the government's discourtesy in not forewarning the ITC that these permits were coming forward, and the inexcusable action of the minister in not even being aware that they had been issued.

Also for the benefit of the parliamentary secretary I should like to give some background of this incident. It began several years ago when the department authorized a sum of money to be given to the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada for research into the land claims of the Inuit. After four years of work the ITC presented to cabinet its proposal for the settlement of Inuit land claims in the Northwest Territories. From the remarks made at that meeting on February 28 of this year I, and other observers, thought both sides were willing to co-operate with each other and that the negotiations for the Inuit land claim were off to an amiable start.

The government received the ITC proposal and said it would study it. The government even asked for some meetings to clarify parts of the proposal. I understand that one of those meetings has already taken place. As I said, this tells me that the negotiations over the Inuit land claims have started. On March 29, a series of exploration permits were issued. These were permits to explore for uranium, and they are by no means singular. The government has been issuing these things wholesale for the past several years—permits to drill for oil and gas in the Beaufort Sea, permission to carry out seismic testing in Lancaster Sound, and so on. However, there is a difference now. All that land is the subject of land claims negotiations.

I and the ITC, as well as many others, view the act of granting permits of this kind without informing the ITC as nothing but an act of extreme bad faith.

On April 6 the ITC delivered a letter to the minister to outline their grievance which, I repeat, is serious. It is felt that the whole negotiation is in jeopardy. The next day when I asked my question in the House the minister was not even aware of the matter. There is no excuse for this. The land claims issue should be of utmost importance to this department. The people concerned seem to be too busy handing out exploration permits to care about this matter.

To add insult to injury, several days later the minister had the nerve to send a patronizing and highhanded letter to the ITC explaining the nitty-gritty details of how one should go about obtaining an exploration permit. The letter goes on to slap Mr. Arvaluk on the hand for making his letter public. I guess that is a high sin in a department that does all its work in secret.

So, there you have it. A minister and a department charged with the task of dealing with native people and with settling land claims would seem to be too busy helping southern companies grab resources while the grabbing is good. The minister does not even take the time to keep himself informed about a matter that could ruin the negotiations. Perhaps the minister does not have control of his department; perhaps he is a minister who just does not care. I do not know for sure, but that is my opinion at this time. When will the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) realize he has responsibilities in the field of Indian affairs and northern development, and act more responsibly in respect of the native people of this country?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the 68 prospecting permits questioned by the member were issued as such permits are issued every year on April 1. These prospecting permits are issued consistent with the general administration of lands in the north, and grant to the holder the right to explore for minerals within an area designated by the permit. This is done by officials of the department and is not a matter ever referred to the minister.

It is true that there was no consultation with the public prior to the issuance of the permits in the tradition of strict confidence of the prospector. However, if these prospectors wish to start exploration programs, they, the permittees, must apply for a land-use permit. These applications are forwarded to any and all affected communities; in addition there is a 42-day period required for consultation before any decision is made.

A few short weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, I was much impressed with the honour and integrity displayed by the Inuit-Tapirisat on February 27 as they presented their proposal for sharing Nunavat. I find it surprising, therefore, that on the Tuesday of the very week in which the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) raised this question, some two days later James Arvaluk and executive members of the Inuit-Tapirisat met with the minister for one and one half hours and discussed a wide range of concerns, followed by an additional hour and a half meeting between the Inuit-Tapirisat representatives and departmental officials, and never once in those three hours was the matter of prospecting permits even mentioned. Yet on that same date these same representatives wrote a letter to the minister of such seriousness and deep concern that his resignation was sought by them on this issue. Discourtesy, Mr. Speaker, like courtesy is a two-way street.

● (2200)

I can only say that knowing as they do that consultation must take place before a land-use permit may be issued, and having spent a full three hours in discussion and consultation on the very day of their written complaint, the Inuit-Tapirisat have shown a rather surprising course of action, and I am afraid that unfortunately it calls into question the heretofore automatically accepted good faith of the Inuit-Tapirisat.

Adjournment Debate

PENITENTIARIES—BRITISH COLUMBIA—SUGGESTED NEED FOR REORGANIZATION OF STAFF—CONFIDENCE OF MINISTER IN ADMINISTRATOR

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, on March 29 I raised a question in the House with the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) regarding the problems facing the administration within the B.C. Penitentiary, and I asked the minister whether he did not agree that the administration of the B.C. Penitentiary requires immediate and undivided attention to bring about a radical reorganization of the staff structure as well as of its philosophy. My concern has been the fact that there has been a very high turnover in the staff at the penitentiary.

I visited that institution soon after I was elected, and then again not long after that. The one thing that impressed me was the fact that among the guards there is a very high turnover. I cannot really blame the administration entirely, especially when I learned some of the facts that faced them. They have to hire people off the street for about $3.60 or $3.80 an hour. They have to give the guards on-the-job training, and by the time these men are trained for very sensitive positions they find a better paying job.

If you find someone for $3.60 or $3.80 with good qualifications, how do you keep him when there are other job opportunities all over the country paying much better than that? As a matter of fact the guard who showed me around the penitentiary had been there about 19 years and he was making less than $6 an hour, yet we expect him to be a specialist.

Soon after I got back to Ottawa I spoke to the Solicitor General about this, and his immediate retort was that it was the job of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chétien). That is entirely true, but it is the Solicitor General's job to fight in cabinet to provide the kind of funding that will make the penitentiary service operate the way it should. He is responsible for that chain of command.

I am not really speaking of more spending or of adding to the total budget of the government, especially when it is talking about austerity. I am speaking of the rearrangement of priorities within the government. The Solicitor General speaks continually about rehabilitation in prisons, he speaks of this in grandiose terms. At the same time he does not provide the kind of personnel that can initiate a program of rehabilitation within that service. The reason he does not do that is that the kind of personnel that would be qualified can find plenty of other opportunities to do the same kind of work for better pay.

There is one other point that I would like to bring to the attention of the House, and again it is a matter of a rearrangement of priorities. The administration of the Pacific region has a staff of approximately 80 in its Vancouver office. I hasten to add it is in the Vancouver office, not in the penitentiary at New Westminster or at Matsqui. But is it in a hostel, a cluster of mobile homes, or even in a renovated warehouse? No, Mr. Speaker, the Pacific region office is in the Pacific Centre, which is probably the most expensive office space not only in Vancouver but in all western Canada.

What does the Solicitor General mean when he says this is the job of the President of the Treasury Board? Such a statement is consistent with the pattern established by the government. The bureaucracy is top heavy even though that mitigates against the proper administration of the service that is supposed to be provided. If there is a divisional region then there has to be a division head who must have several assistants; they have executive assistants; each one of those has a secretary, and then of course there is the information office. By the time the superstructure is in place there is no foundation to carry it.

As I said earlier there is a staff of approximately 80 in Vancouver to operate the B.C. Penitentiary, the jail at Matsqui, and the minimum security system, a ratio of about one officer in Vancouver to ten inmates. What kind of stupidity is that, Mr. Speaker? If the Solicitor General is serious about a wholesome, creative, and effective penitentiary service he will rearrange the financial priorities and the administration of his department without bothering with the President of the Treasury Board. He should hire people for the penitentiary service who can do the job, and he will be able to hire them if he offers attractive salaries.

I challenge the Solicitor General to take his job seriously. Put the money where it ought to be—in the direct service of those who are directly responsible for the safekeeping of criminals who are a hazard to society. If he were to funnel the money to the foundation rather than the superstructure we would have a penitentiary service with good morale. Staff turnover would be reduced, and we would have the kind of peace and security that the government purports to want for this country.

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be here with the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) in the late show. I should like to refer to the question he asked on March 29, 1976, when he stated that 33 of the 43 members of the socialization division of the British Columbia Penitentiary resigned or transferred in 1975, and 75 per cent of the custody division are in the service less than six months.

The Commissioner of Penitentiaries advises that the socialization division of the British Columbia Penitentiary consisted of 43 members until a few months ago, when three of these members were transferred to organize the regional reception centre, Pacific region. The socialization division therefore consisted of 40 positions. During the last calendar year 15 of these became vacant through five resignations, six transfers to other positions, three transfers on promotion, and one member deceased. Mr. Speaker, 12 of these positions have been filled and three are now vacant. Slightly more than 35 per cent have left, and not all because they were dissatisfied. The hon. member had the figure at 75 per cent.

There has been a significant reduction in the turnover of personnel during the first quarter of this year. Since the hostage-taking incident in the summer of 1975, some changes have been made in the organization of the institution. Emphasis has been placed on staff training within the institution, and a staff training officer has been appointed and provided with training facilities. It is anticipated that this change in approach to staff training will have a positive effect on staff morale, by making the staff more aware of management philosophy and concerns within the institution.

● (2210)

A new assistant director of services has been appointed to replace the former incumbent who had retired. A new assistant director of security, a person who is a staff-oriented leader, has been appointed. A new assistant director of industry was also appointed and given the task of reorganizing the industrial shops in order to provide more work and increase production. It is anticipated that these new appointees will bring a new vitality and increased stability within the institution.

The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock also stated that some 75 per cent of the custodial staff at the British Columbia Penitentiary had less than six months of service. In fact only 34 out of 187 officers employed in custody in 1975 had less than six months of service. This represents some 18 per cent of the custodial force. The staff turnover is considered normal in the province of British Columbia in this type of employment.

At this time I should like to repeat an earlier statement made by the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), that he has full confidence in the administrator of the British Columbia Penitentiary. As he said earlier in the House in answer to the oral question of the hon. member, the hon. member will probably be ready to reconsider his opinions of the British Columbia Penitentiary administration when he reads the report which it is expected will be released in the near future.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.13 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 7, 1976

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. BAKER (GRENVILLE-CARLETON)—REFERENCE TO REMARKS OF MR. AUGUSTE CHOQUETTE

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has given the Chair notice of a question of privilege and also advised the Chair that there seems to be some disposition in the House that the question of privilege is of such a nature that it ought to be taken forthwith.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleagues with respect to this matter. I regret very much that it is necessary to deal with this question on a day set aside for the discussion of pollution and its effects on native people. Therefore, I shall be very brief with respect to this matter.

Mr. Auguste Choquette is quoted as saying before an open court and I quote:

—if everyone who had ever taken or given $600 or $700 bribes in their life were arrested, 50 per cent of the MP's would no longer be sitting.

● (1110)

He also said:

I know it because I was an MP for five years.

Clearly, he means MP's performing as members of parliament.

The source of these remarks and the wide distribution they have been given forces our attention. An institution as venal and corrupted as Mr. Choquette asserts this parliament to be would have no right to respect from the Canadian people. If true, the remarks must be acted upon and the historical penalties exacted; if they are false, a public declaration by Mr. Choquette must be made withdrawing the slanderous accusations against half the members sitting here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): As you know, Mr. Speaker, the remarks are almost certainly a question of privilege. Standing Order 76 and Beauchesne citations 434, 435 and 108(5) deal directly with bribery. The last citation calls the offering of a bribe "an insult not only to the member himself, but to the House"; and the acceptance of a bribe has always been "a grave offence, which has been visited by the severest punishments". On page 138 of May's 18th edition, the penalty described is imprisonment or expulsion from the House.

Acceptance of a bribe is a serious form of corruption and Beauchesne 111(h) states that "imputations against members of corruption in the execution of their duties" is a breach of privilege. Citation 110, in describing "high violations" against the House, provides:

The same rule applies to a charge against a member for conduct which renders him unworthy to sit in Parliament and to criticize the House for not expelling him.

So gross an accusation, Mr. Speaker, must surely be justified with facts, or apologized for at the bar of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It seems to me important that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections examine Mr. Choquette and establish the facts for the sake of the reputation of parliament and all its members. I therefore move:

That the accusation that a substantial proportion of the members of the House of Commons have been in receipt of bribes be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I eagerly support the comments of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). I am certain, for that matter, that all members of the House will agree with me. Mr. Speaker, like all members I was appalled at the report of Mr. Choquette's statement.

[English]

It is essential, and no one will question, that the integrity of all members of this House be protected. It is with that thought in mind that I fully support the motion made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we are all pleased that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has raised this important issue at the first opportunity. I think both he and the previous speaker are to be commended for the brevity of their remarks. It seems to me that the case is so clear that it does not need extensive debate. I hope that Your Honour will find there is a prima facie case of privilege and that the motion made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton will therefore be ruled in order.

We all feel that when someone like our former colleague, Mr. Auguste Choquette, makes a statement of this kind, especially when he makes it in open court, he should be called upon to answer for it, to substantiate it or to withdraw the serious charges he has made. I hope that very shortly this matter will be before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I should like to echo something the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) said the other day in another connection, and that is that when things like this are said, or when improper things are done, it is not just one party in the House or a few individuals here, but it is the whole institution of parliament that comes under a shadow. It is really serious that there is such cynicism in Canada, as there is today, about this institution and about democracy, and we should be taking the most positive steps we can to correct this situation. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I indicate our readiness to support the motion that has been presented to you this morning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I think that the motion which has just been presented should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections because, on the one hand, if false allegations have been made, I think it is the interest of all members to protect themselves; this is the only way they can protect themselves; and on the other hand, if the allegations are true, the public will know what is going on in Parliament. I for one am very satisfied with the motion, and I think that we must clarify all these allegations coming from all sides and all these so-called bribes we hear about every day. It would be one of the first opportunities for the Committee on Privileges and Elections to shed some light on these matters, and if it is successful in doing so, we will have to continue. That is why I am in favour of this motion.

[English]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should just like to add one word. I endorse the motion, but I want to emphasize something that may have been said in order to make it very clear. Traditionally, we in Canada have had very dedicated men and women in our public service, and traditionally they have been known as people of high integrity. As I read the statement, if it is correctly reported, it is not only a slight on every member of parliament, as well as every person who has been a member, but also a slight on the dedicated people in the public service of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. For very obvious reasons it is clear that the motion enjoys widespread, if not unanimous, support, and I would be surprised if it were not unanimous. If the Chair were to have any hesitation in putting the question at this time it would only be in respect of the ironing out of procedural difficulties which might be involved. I do not see why that cannot be done in a preliminary way by the committee, if in fact the matter were to be referred there.

For example, in respect of the motion it does occur to me that some reflection should occur, until perhaps later in the day or until Monday, regarding the form of the motion itself and other paragraphs that may be added. I wish to make it very clear that there is not the slightest doubt in the Chair's mind that the question ought to be put to the House. After all, it should be stressed that a decision which is made by the Chair is often referred to as a decision as to whether or not a prima facie question of privilege exists. That is a convenient phrase, but the fact of the matter is that it is not entirely correct. What the Chair is doing is simply making a decision as to whether the proceedings ought to be stopped in order to give priority to a motion which has been raised under the title of a question of privilege. There is not the slightest doubt in the Chair's mind that this ought to be done either now or at an appropriate time.

The only reason I suggest a time lag before putting the question is that there are things to be considered as, for example, the language of the motion, which obviously had to be prepared very hurriedly, and, secondly, the powers the committee ought to enjoy, as well as the other powers the House may wish to exercise in respect of this sort of thing. After all, this is a statement not made by a member over whom the House has some jurisdiction, but a statement made by someone outside. It may be necessary that the House exercise some special powers in that regard. It may also be that there may be some conflict with some privileges of a lawyer pleading a case in open court; I do not know. However, it occurs to me that the Chair ought to make clear, and I now wish to do so, that I am prepared to interrupt the proceedings now to put this question or I am prepared to give the House a bit of time to reflect on the polishing of the motion, only from a procedural point of view, to make sure that after reflection the motion in fact does include all the powers the committee ought to enjoy to investigate a matter of that sort. I would appreciate some guidance from the members in that respect.

● (1120)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate what you have said and I think, having regard to the importance of the question, it would be the wish of all members of the House that the committee be completely empowered having regard to the subject matter or empowered to the extent it can be. I for one, as the mover of the motion, would certainly have no objection. I hope those who spoke in support of it and the members of the House generally would have no objection to the delay for the reasons you suggested.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to endorse the position taken by the House Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party on behalf of the government. We are very anxious that this question of privilege should be thoroughly aired and that everything should be done to minimize the effect upon this honourable House of the alleged statement by Mr. Choquette.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we agree to the delay, but I think it would be a good idea to have the motion finally drafted and presented sometime later today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair certainly understands that sentiment. Certainly, from my point of view it would be most undesirable to give any indication at all that the House is in any way delaying dealing with this matter. It is a matter of the utmost importance. I wonder, in light of the absence for example, from the motion of the name of the person who is connected with the statement, whether there should be some consideration of the power that the committee ought to have. It might be that during the question period some consideration could be given to that, and some polish could be given to the motion, so that at the end of the question period there might be an appropriate motion to be put. I might invite the co-operation of the House later in that regard and re-raise the matter at the time the question period concludes which, I would think, should be in about 50 minutes from now bearing in mind the ordinary duration of the question period on Friday.

Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF GOVERNMENT'S POSITION ON RENEGOTIATION

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday in the meeting with the United States Commerce Secretary the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce agreed that there is no need to renegotiate the auto pact. I appreciate the minister's desire to be a good host. However, I think the Prime Minister should give this House a full explanation as to how that position enhances our national interest. Would the Prime Minister explain the government's position on this and table all the background material that led the government to this position.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the member is asking me for a statement. I will convey the question to the minister concerned.

Mr. Balfour: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is again directed to the Prime Minister. I understand there are differences of opinion about the timing and nature of any changes. However, I would have thought the government at least would have kept the option open on the matter of renegotiation. Is it the position of the government that the existing terms will ensure in 1976, and over the medium term, balance in all aspects of automotive trade? If so, would the Prime Minister explain the basis for such confidence?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to draw these further remarks to the attention of the minister.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE GOVERNMENT WILL MAKE EFFORTS TO RESUME NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I appreciate the difficulty here because the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who was involved in the negotiations is not here today. On April 30, 1976 the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce advised the House that political events in the United States during the balance of this calendar year may make it difficult to complete negotiations for any changes in the auto pact. That is recorded at page 13029 of Hansard. However, the United States Secretary of Commerce indicated that the United States election would not stand in the way of further talks on the auto pact this year. Would the Prime Minister assure this House that every effort will be make to resume talks on the renegotiation of the pact, as soon as possible, now that the assurances have been received that the political climate would not preclude such talks?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that hon. members are making various representations. I understand also that the minister is travelling with the United States Secretary of Commerce and is in Toronto, I believe. I, myself, was engaged in a meeting with the first ministers, so there has been no discussion between Mr. Jamieson and myself. I will draw these various questions to his attention or his excellent parliamentary secretary will do that on my behalf.

PROPOSED COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY INTO CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT

Mr. Bill Kempling (Hamilton-Wentworth): My question is again for the Prime Minister. Reference was made in Mr. Richardson's remarks yesterday to the fact that major auto firms were ordering parts from third countries, which may be a factor contributing to the serious deficit of the auto parts industry. This reflects the fact that the auto pact is a bilateral agreement from the U.S. side and a multilateral agreement from Canada's side. Would the Prime Minister give serious consideration to the establishment of a special committee of this House to inquire, report upon and make recommendations with respect to the difficulties in the Canada-U.S. auto pact and of the auto parts industry under the Canada-U.S. auto pact?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Perhaps the hon. member could raise that with his own House leader and it will be discussed with the House leaders of the various parties.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF NEED FOR CHANGES IN VIEW OF DEFICIT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Prime Minister. Although it concerns automotive trade it is not a detailed question which would require a ministerial reply. It concerns overall government policy. In view of the minister's statement that no changes are required in the autopact,—presumably reflecting government policy—and given the fact that the purpose of the pact, and I quote from the preamble, was to ensure "fair and equitable" growth in the industry for both countries, and since we now have had a cumulative deficit of more than $5 billion in the 111 years of the pact, $2 billion of which came last year, does the Prime Minister agree that it is government policy that no changes in such an unbalanced situation are required?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, here again the hon. member is asking me a question about a statement made by the minister which obviously I have not had time to see. If he is asking a general question about changes, let me remind him that a couple of years ago on this side we were talking about changes in the auto pact and the hon. member was awfully shocked that we would even be contemplating them. So the government's policy changes, and so does the opposition's.

Mr. Broadbent: As is frequently the case, the Prime Minister has his facts wrong. The changes the government was talking about a few years ago were to remove the safeguards in the pact, at which time the Prime Minister was under pressure from the U.S. because they had a slight imbalance of $200 million in 1970, and they were raising hell. We now have a deficit of $2 billion, and I would like the Prime Minister to tell the House when the Canadian government will start raising that issue in a forceful way with the Americans.

Mr. Trudeau: I do not accept the facts as stated by the hon. member concerning the attitude of the government, but it does point out that sometimes the pact works to the advantage of one country, sometimes to that of the other. The hon. member certainly cannot blame the government for having wanted two years ago to look at the pact so that in the long term it would work in the interests of Canada. What I am saying is that then he was afraid of any change and now he wants changes. He should be more consistent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the changes we favoured a few years ago are precisely the ones which, had they been implemented, would not have led to the kind of massive deficits we have today. When the Prime Minister says that sometimes the pact works to the advantage of the U.S. and sometimes to the advantage of Canada, does he see that a deficit position for Canada in eight of the 11 years with a cumulative imbalance of more than $5 billion is the kind of ebb and flow in such an agreement that his government favours continuing in its present form?

● (1130)

Mr. Trudeau: What the hon. member conveniently forgets is that before the pact came in we had an enormous deficit, and it was this Liberal government under the present Minister of Public Works which brought in this pact, which has worked very favourably for Canada. We now have a much better situation than before the Liberal government brought in this change.

Mr. Broadbent: You had better check your figures.

* * *

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

DAIRYING—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF DELAY IN DISTRIBUTING NEW REGULATIONS CONCERNING QUOTAS

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

Having received many complaints from my area about the publication and distribution to dairy producers of the new regulations on production quotas and considering that such delay hinders the planning of their future production, can the minister tell us today when he expects to send those new regulations to dairy producers?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the provincial marketing boards, associations, public utilities or whatever they may be are the ones which are to distribute these, and if they are not distributed, I will check and find out why.

* * *

ENERGY

OIL—AGREEMENT THAT PRICE SHOULD NOT EXCEED UNITED STATES PRICE

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Now that the first ministers conference is over—and I realize that no agreement was reached on price yesterday—I wonder if the Prime Minister could tell the House and the country whether at least an agreement that the price of crude oil in Canada should not rise above the average price of crude oil in the United States was reached.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that was something we all agreed on, including the producing provinces.

* * *

RESOURCES

CANADA'S POSITION ON MINING OF SEABED—CONSULTATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Arising out of the failure of the Law of the Sea Conference to agree on a treaty governing the exploration of the mineral resources of the deep seabed the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has had conversations with the United States secretary of commerce, Mr. Elliott Richardson, on the subject of commercial uses of the seabed. Given the fact that the United States is keen to proceed with the exploration of the mineral resources of the deep seabed, an activity which has very serious implications for Canada, can the minister tell the House Canada's position on this important matter and inform us if it is his intention to hold immediate discussion with his United States counterpart in order to learn the U.S. position and hopefully to resolve this thorny problem?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will understand that that is a very general question which was part of the discussion which took place yesterday between the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and his counterpart in the United States. As a minister of energy I do not have any direct counterpart in the United States; therefore, I would expect the discussions to take place between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and perhaps the state department of the United States.

CANADIAN RESPONSE TO DR. KISSINGER'S PROPOSALS FOR MINING SEABED

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have one brief supplementary for the Prime Minister. In his address to the Law of the Sea Conference on April 8, Dr. Kissinger said that if the deep seabeds are not subject to international agreement, the United States can and will proceed to explore and mine on its own. However, he said he would favour partial international control through a council which should reflect the interests of producer and consumer states most concerned with deep see mining. Canada is clearly one of these. He also said that the United States would agree to accept a temporary limitation for a fixed period only on the production of seabed minerals tied to the projected growth in the world nickel market. After this period seabed production should be governed by overall market conditions.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister what the Canadian response has been to these proposals as put forward by Dr. Kissinger.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will inquire, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTION CANADA CALL CONFERENCE TO DECIDE BOUNDARIES OF LAND AT BOTTOM OF THE SEA

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is on the same subject, and it is also addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of the failure of the Law of the Sea conference of yesterday, and in view of the fact that the present international law is based on the Canadian proposal of 1958, namely, that the land at the bottom of the sea belongs to the littoral state, would the Prime Minister now consider, since this was a Canadian proposal in 1958, that Canada now should take the lead and call for a conference of the nations of the north Pacific and the north Atlantic to decide what the boundaries of the land at the bottom of the sea in these two respective oceans are?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who will be returning from the Law of the Sea conference, will be interested in these suggestions.

PRIORITY OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES CONCERNING EXTENSION OF BOUNDARIES 200 MILES SEAWARD

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister can say whether the Canadian government has assigned a very high priority to negotiations with the United States on the determination of the boundaries between our two countries on the west coast, on the north coast and on the east coast, as they will extend out to the 200 mile limit. There are extremely important matters at issue here, and I wonder if the Prime Minister is really aware of how high a priority must be attached to those negotiations and when they are going to begin.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I heard the Minister of State (Fisheries) answer a similar question a few days ago. I agree that, in view of the results of the Law of the Sea Conference, this question has added urgency. I am sure it has rather high priority.

* * *

[Translation]

BILINGUALISM

INQUIRY AS TO WAY FEDERAL SUBSIDIES ARE SPENT

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

With regard to bilingualism in education, could the minister tell the House how federal subsidies for bilingual education are divided among provinces. Can he assure us that those funds are indeed devoted to provincial bilingual education programs?

[English]

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to do that. In the case of the province with which I think the hon. member is concerned, it is roughly $8.9 million per year. As to exactly how that is expended I would have to give him a more elaborate answer, probably later this day.

* * *

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

PROTECTION OF RIGHT OF PROVINCES TO OBJECT TO AMENDMENTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I know he was busy yesterday discussing with the premiers the energy problem, but with reference to the constitution, was there any agreement with regard to that? Second, will the Prime Minister assure the House, and in particular the small provinces—I am perhaps speaking now out of a little selfish interest in reference to western Canada—that whatever the mechanisms in the criteria for amending the constitution are there will be some mechanism to protect the small provinces, and that it will not be only Quebec or Ontario which will have the right to veto any changes when the constitution is home?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question, the premiers informed me that they are having their ministers meeting, I believe within the next fortnight, on this subject, and that they would be in a position to report to me on the success or otherwise of that meeting at the first ministers meeting on June 14.

On the second part of the question, if the hon. member refers to the letter I tabled in the House which I addressed to all the premiers about a month ago, he will see that under the various options there are indeed ways in which amendments to the constitution can be stopped by the western provinces if they so desire.

Mr. Woolliams: I am familiar with the letter, but I should like some assurance. The hon. member for St. John's East raised with the Prime Minister the fact that the various leaders of the provinces are in some accord that the constitution should be home in Canada. However, whatever method is adopted there should be some mechanism to protect the rights of western Canada and other small provinces, and these mechanisms should be spelled out. Under the BNA Act provincial rights are protected.

Mr. Trudeau: That seems to be the same question. The hon. member will find the answer in my letters, if he wants to read them. He will find a more detailed answer in the reports on the Victoria conference of 1971 in which he will see the formula agreed to by all provinces, including the western ones, for amending the constitution.

* * *

MUSEUMS

REASON FOR DISMISSING EMPLOYEES AND REPLACING THEM THROUGH CONTRACTS WITH PRIVATE FIRMS

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Some 28 full time employees of the national museums of Canada have been laid off—many without notice—in an effort to reduce departmental man years. Can the minister explain the rationale in terminating the jobs of experienced security personnel and truck drivers, then hiring employees at public expense through contracts with private firms to replace them?

● (1140)

Hon. Hugh James Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I answered part of the question yesterday. The hon. member added a few more wrinkles and I shall answer those in more detail later this day.

Mr. Symes: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister's statement was a non-answer. As 80 more employees may be declared redundant, will the minister give a commitment that public employees will be given adequate notice of their job termination and not laid off from the national museums or other museums until replacement jobs can be found for them?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, that is precisely part of the answer I gave yesterday. That was, in part, an answer to the hon. member's question of today.

Mr. Symes: But it is not being done.

Mr. Faulkner: The hon. member contends it is not being done. We shall discuss that later.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGED FEAR OF MEMBER FORCE WILL ATTEMPT COUP D'ÉTAT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Can the Solicitor General confirm the very obvious fear of the hon. member for Montmorency of a coup d'état in this country by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and, if the minister feels the same way, has he alerted his cabinet colleagues to this terrible and monstrous probability so that alternative security forces will stand by with bayonets drawn au qui vive—such groups as the Armed Forces, the EMO and the Canadian Boy Scouts?

Mr. Paproski: And General Dare—me and my shadow!

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I know of no evidence to support the allegations made by the hon. member for Montmorency.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is recognized for one serious supplementary.

Mr. Lawrence: Sir, I wonder if the minister really shares the opinion of his colleague. If he does not, does he not feel that such comments seriously jeopardize the credibility of that great force?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I do not share his opinion. Members are free in this House to express their opinions, and the hon. member expressed his opinion, but I do not agree with him.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO ALLEGATIONS BY MEMBER OF USE OF PRIVATE DETECTIVES BY CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Solicitor General.

In yesterday's edition of Le Devoir, there is an article in which the following extract is found:

> Outside of the House of Commons, the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) stated that he did not have any evidence that could be connected with the hiring of private detectives . . . by the Progressive Conservative Party as such, but that numerous indications suggest a plot being conducted behind the scenes . . .

This statement is strangely similar to the allegations made by Mr. Choquette yesterday, in Quebec City. Therefore, would the Solicitor General be prepared to discuss such allegations with his colleagues and make a report to the House?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, I have received complaints about private detectives investigating the public and private lives of members. I am looking into that further. Until I get more information I will not comment.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDS FOR RESEARCH INTO DIABETES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Because the government introduced an austerity program, the minister cut back on funds for research projects. I suppose people in all fields of research ask for special attention. I am particularly concerned about research projects to do with diabetes and the production of insulin. In view of Canada's enviable reputation in this field, will the minister reconsider what he is to allocate to this particular field of research, and fund it as it deserves to be funded?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell the hon. member first of all that with regard to production of insulin, I am told that the production in Canada is quite adequate to meet present needs.

As for the allotment of funds for research, in the field specifically mentioned by the hon. member, I must say that admittedly that field is very important. I would remind the hon. member, however, that I am not the one who decides on how those funds are shared among the various branches of medical research. I am not the one, as minister, nor are the officials of my department, the ones who divide them up. The funds are allotted by an autonomous and independent body known as the Medical Research Council whose decisions in the field of medical research are taken by experts and not by myself.

[English]

REQUEST FOR FUNDS FOR INVESTIGATION OF ACUPUNCTURE

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister recommend to the appropriate committee which deals with the allocation of funds to medical research that more funds should be made available for investigation of acupuncture treatment?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall draw the hon. member's representation to the attention of the Medical Research Council. The Medical Research Council receives Hansard and I am sure they will note the hon. member's representation. That is all I can do, I think, about the hon. member's question.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO SAFETY ASPECTS OF USE OF BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport in connection with air safety? As there is a great deal of uncertainty and concern these days about the role of air traffic controllers and as the minister replied the other day, as reported on page 13200 of Hansard, to this effect:

> . . . I should like to show the hon. member that we are not at all hesitant about any kind of examination of our procedures in regard to air traffic control and the safety involved.

Is the minister prepared to recommend an examination of the technical aspects of air safety and the cost to the travellers? I ask this because of the additional costs air lines will need to absorb because of some movement in this country with regard to the linguistic re-allocation of air traffic controllers.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises two separate and distinct issues, possible additional costs and the nature of additional procedures which may be involved. I think this involves broad policy which must be judged in terms of balance of interests, or in terms of the kind of judgment made by this House when it showed widespread support for the official languages policy. On the issue of safety, however, I assure hon. members, as I have assured them many times in the past, that we are dedicated to the introduction of safe techniques and procedures before we introduce bilingual air traffic control in Quebec, in the field of instrument flight rules. We have undertaken research and development in this field with our simulator. Actually, the program got under way yesterday.

Mr. Horner: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to gather from the minister's reply that the department and the minister do not favour allowing this highly technical subject to be examined by a competent committee?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that, precisely, is what we are doing.

Mr. Horner: I am talking about an independent committee.

Mr. Lang: We have the co-operation of the various air line associations and groups representing pilots and controllers. They are working, with the simulator, in the development of procedures. The question of a specific additional inquiry is being discussed in another context these days. As I said earlier in the House, I have no hesitation with regard to any kind of examination of techniques and procedures we shall be using. We shall be satisfied and I am sure that those involved in the program will also be satisfied that we have evolved safe procedures.

* * *

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF SENDING HELP TO EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS IN ITALY

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Yesterday, a tragedy occurred in northern Italy where an earthquake struck. As tens of thousands of Canadians come from this area, can the parliamentary secretary tell the House whether a report has been submitted to her on this subject and whether the government of Canada is taking special steps to help the victims of this disaster?

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have received reports inasmuch as telex communications are possible. We were very sad to hear that an earthquake apparently killed at least 132 people up to now, in the areas of Udine and Padua, in northern Italy. However there were no reports of Canadian citizens being involved.

Let me take advantage of this opportunity to express our deeply felt sadness to all Italo-Canadian families of Frioulian origin and our sympathy to the Italian government. I shall simply add that CIDA is in close contract with the International Red Cross and the Canadian Red Cross to determine whether we may be of any help.

* * *

● (1150)

[English]

HEALTH

POLIO VIRUS IN OTTAWA AREA—SUSCEPTIBILITY OF STRAIN TO SALK VACCINE—REASON FOR DELAY IN TESTING

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. On May 3, in the minister's absence I directed a question to his parliamentary secretary regarding the five strains of polio virus which had been found in two sewage treatment plants in the Ottawa area. I asked whether these virus samples had been sent to the biology laboratory. The parliamentary secretary stated they had just been sent and that no report had been received. I now want to ask the minister two questions. First, can he tell us whether the report of the biology lab has been received and whether these strains are suspectible to Salk vaccine? Second, why, since the department knew of this since last January, were these tests not made at an earlier date.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the data relating to the 15 polio viruses that were isolated in the Ottawa area were reported at the symposium held at the University of Ottawa on January 23, 1976 at which were present officials from the local health authority, the Ontario health authority, and the federal government. Our report to the University of Ottawa indicated that ten of the 15 polio viruses were classified as vaccine-like. The remaining five strains showed no reaction with Sabin vaccine anti-serum, but could not be characterized, I repeat, could not be characterized as virulent strains. I am advised that it is rather difficult to establish the origin of the five polio virus strains, but the polio virus is a relatively stable one. Therefore, immunization with either Sabin or Salk vaccine would be quite adequate to meet the problem in this instance.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact there is a difference of opinion among medical authorities as to whether Salk vaccine has only limited application for certain strains and Sabin vaccine provides complete immunity, will the minister advise the House whether the tests have been received from the biology lab, as I am sure the minister would not want to carry on or have the province carry on an immunization program only to find out the vaccine they have used provides only limited protection.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member, being a layman in the field like myself, will not want to create undue fears vis-à-vis the effectiveness of the existing vaccine in Canada. I might advise him that the National Advisory Committee on Immunizing Agents met last October 30 and 31 to study the matter of all vaccines presently used in Canada, and proposed an immunization schedule. Both Sabin and Salk vaccines were found suitable to fight polio. They are both acceptable ways of treating polio. With regard to these particular strains that have been identified, I am advised that there is no reason to doubt that either vaccine would be adequate to combat them.

* * *

[Translation]

CRIMINAL CODE

REQUEST THAT BILL C-84 BE REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General.

In view of the importance of Bill C-84 and the interest it arouses throughout Canada, would the minister indicate whether he would agree to the bill being referred to the Committee of the Whole instead of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, that would be something which should be discussed with the government House leader and the other House leaders. I guess they would have to take that suggestion under consideration.

* * *

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—POSSIBILITY OF CONTINUING EXPENDITURES—SUGGESTION TRAFFIC NOT BE DIVERTED TO MIRABEL—CONSULTATIONS WITH ONTARIO

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. With $137 million already spent or committed to be spent on the proposed Pickering Airport, an amount equal to 43 per cent of the amount spent on Mirabel, which may be a white elephant, large in size and small in usage, will the minister indicate if this type of spending on Pickering is to continue with respect to an airport which, if completed, will not be needed and, indeed, may sit isolated without roads or services?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I completely disagree with the hon. member's reference to Mirabel which will turn out to be a superb airport available to serve the Canadian people very well indeed. There is a rather greater problem in the area of Toronto because of the decision because on the part of the provincial government to stop completing the Pickering Airport after they had participated in the decision on the location of the airport.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: At that time, we had spent most of the money to which the hon. member refers in acquiring the land which was needed for the airport. We had not forecast the strange, quick change of position, on the part of the Ontario government and, therefore, did not build that into our planning. The current costs are essentially for maintenance of the land and for finalizing the purchasing of the land. We intend to maintain that land, certainly for the present time, because all of our figures still indicate the need for additional air services in the Toronto region which cannot be supplied at the present Malton site and, therefore, create real difficulties for the whole Toronto region.

Mr. Stevens: As the minister's own parliamentary secretary told this House only ten days ago that there had been little or no growth in Toronto air traffic during 1975, and in view of the minister's inference today that somehow we are heading into capacity problems in Toronto, will the minister assure the House that he is not going to use that trumped-up excuse that there is a limited capacity in Toronto to divert airline traffic through Mirabel to salvage the white elephant they are now living with in Mirabel.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member has put on the record his confidence that there will be no traffic problem in the Toronto region in days ahead. There will come a day when he will be haunted by that remark. The fact is that while the actual growth in 1975 which had been anticipated on the basis of past and other experience did not take place in quite the same way due to a lot of conditions in the economy, the volume of traffic in Toronto at that particular point in time at the end of the year was still higher than had been forecast some years before for a particular point in time for that particular year. There is in fact a real capacity problem facing us in the Toronto area in the near future. I will have to seek many methods of attempting to alleviate that problem in order to minimize the inconvenience that will be caused by people wanting to travel to and from Toronto. That may well include a changing of flights to other airports wherever possible in order to minimize traffic in Toronto. I will have no alternative because of what the province of Ontario has done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: In view of the minister's last answer, I would like him to confirm, yes or no: May we anticipate that they will do nothing to activate the Pickering Airport site in the line of completing that proposed airport until at least sometime after 1980? In reference to the Ontario government, can the minister tell us what discussions he has been having with the Ontario government, if he feels so frustrated concerning their attitude?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, we have been having discussions with the Ontario government about this problem. At this point in time, the Pickering site is being retained as a real option. There is a difficulty in that, notwithstanding even an early decision to go ahead with construction, there might well be a lag between commencement and completion which would result in traffic problems in the Toronto area. This is the view we have, based on figures which so far as I know have not been contradicted. That is really the fundamental point; these figures stand; they are figures we have produced and no one has argued significantly against them with regard to traffic. We are, therefore, exploring the various techniques but we are not prepared to make a decision to go ahead with an airport at this time when the provincial government is unwilling to build the roads and other infrastructure which would ordinarily be associated with it. Whether we will ever change that position, I would not want to forecast.

* * *

● (1200)

NATIONAL SECURITY

REQUEST CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENT IN GENERAL DARE'S LETTER CONCERNING SCREENING OF SEPARATIST SYMPATHIZERS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On Wednesday the right hon. gentleman denied the suggestion in General Dare's letter of February regarding specific application of guidelines regarding the Parti Québécois when he said:

> This applies, I repeat, to members of the Liberal party, Progressive Conservative party, Parti Québécois, Social Credit party and to those who do not militate in any political activity.

Could the Prime Minister then explain the statement in General Dare's letter which reads:

> Consequently, the security service cannot be expected to provide security screening information to deputy ministers and heads of agencies in accordance with ICSI guidelines relative to "separatist sympathies, associations and activities..."

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member reads on he will see in the next paragraph that the General is apparently uncertain of the consequences that he must draw, because he is asking for this subject to be discussed in the security panel.

Mr. Lawrence: How about tabling the letter?

Mr. Paproski: It is an inter-office memo from the PMO's office!

Mr. Trudeau: It seems that the Sun forgot that particular part of the letter.

Mr. Sharp: Selective journalism.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I cannot find this particular paragraph. The fact is, and I believe it was well explained by the Solicitor General yesterday, that General Dare was a little uncertain of the consequences he could draw from the cabinet decision. He was stating it and then asking that it be referred for discussion to the officials. As I said to the House a couple of days ago, I think it was an honest error on his part and would have been cleared up by the committee had the letter proceeded in the normal way rather than being leaked to the press. I am obviously still distressed about that aspect of it—that a letter between the highest security officer and the second highest one would be leaked in that way. I think it is of concern to every member of the House, too, that a leak which is obviously destined to destroy my reputation and credibility should have been deliberately put into the hands of the press and treated that way by the press. I am thinking of the editorial in the Sun this morning or yesterday morning which is obviously scurrilous, inaccurate and venomous.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF GUIDELINES ON SECURITY SCREENING—AUTHORIZATION OF ALLEGED RAID ON OFFICE OF TORONTO "SUN"

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister consider tabling for the House and the country the guidelines in respect of the activities of the RCMP in this area? Also, would he give this House an assurance, since he seems to be rather concerned about the activities of the Sun, that no member of cabinet authorized the raid by the RCMP on the office of the Toronto Sun which just took place this morning.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I cannot believe my ears, Mr. Speaker. If it is true—

* * *

AIRPORTS

DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF GRANTS TO BUILD AND UPDATE FACILITIES IN SMALL COMMUNITIES

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Members were advised by his department that in March announcements would be made regarding grants to build airports and to update those already in existence in small communities. Can the minister advise the House when this announcement will be made, as many communities are being seriously inconvenienced by the delay and uncertainty of funding?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have no immediate date to announce but I will take the hon. member's representation seriously and look into the situation.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

COMMUNICATIONS

POSSIBILITY GOVERNMENT TELEPHONE COMPANIES WILL BE PROHIBITED FROM OWNING CABLEVISION STATIONS—SUGGESTED PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. In view of the exchange we had yesterday, it is clear that the minister did have conversations with several ministers of communications, particularly those of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, on the subject of government telephone ownership of cable television, notwithstanding the matter was before the CRTC and parliament. I wonder if the minister could assure the House that before anything definitive on such a major change in government policy as the ownership of cable TV plant takes place, the matter could be either given to the CRTC for an open hearing of all interested parties or at least be referred to a committee of the House, so that other parties could put their views forward?

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am a little confused by the question of the hon. member. If he means the ownership of cablevision infrastructure, I can only repeat that there has been no such change in the policy. The CRTC still requires specific conditions before granting a licence, including that cablevision companies must own the largest part of the infrastructure although it has never made it a matter of general policy.

I repeat, I discussed this matter of cablevision infrastructure ownership with the ministers of Saskatchewan and Manitoba and with other persons. Did I discuss it with regard to applications now before the CRTC concerning licence granting? No. I discussed it only in general terms because it is a problem of interest to provincial ministers of communications. I do not intend to intervene whatsoever in the process of regulations of the CRTC.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's rather lengthy answer. Because of the importance of the ownership of cable TV plant, however, and the fact that the discussions were with the ministers of Saskatchewan and Manitoba about government telephone ownership of cable TV plants, and that there are other areas of telephone ownership of cable TV plants, could that larger question be directed to the CRTC for a public hearing of all interested parties, some of whom obviously were not involved in the discussions with the minister? If that is not possible could the minister discuss with the House leader if an appropriate committee could have a discussion and hearing on this very important issue?

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion is an interesting one. I suppose there is a point at which this whole question of ownership could be referred to a public audience held by the CRTC. That is one way of dealing with the matter. Another way, of course, is to formulate a general policy regarding ownership of television plants to be discussed by myself and the provincial ministers. At a later stage when Phase II of the legislation goes through the House, when I table it, perhaps it will be a little more clear how I can impart to the CRTC matters of general policy.

BANK OF CANADA

CONSTRUCTION OF TEMPORARY BULLETPROOF CASH WICKETS IN NEW BUILDING IN OTTAWA

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Public Works. Could the minister tell the House if it is true that about half a million dollars is in process of being spent on some bulletproof cash wickets in the new Bank of Canada building on Sparks Street? Is it also a fact that these temporary cash wickets are to be torn down and replaced with permanent wickets in a year's time? If this is the case, does the minister not think some other arrangement could be made so that this duplication would not be necessary?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, as I think the House is aware, the Bank of Canada is a semi-autonomous agency and does not come under the administrative jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works. In this instance, this particular bank has not sought our advice.

* * *

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

THREAT OF WITHDRAWAL BY MANITOBA—DISCLOSURE OF OVERHEAD AND COST OF PROCESSING

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fisheries but in his absence, I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. It has to do with remarks made by the provincial minister of fisheries in Manitoba relating to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation and his threat to withdraw from the corporation. The reasons he gave were inadequate disclosure by the corporation, high processing costs and low return to the fishermen. In view of these remarks by the provincial minister, would the parliamentary secretary indicate whether or not the corporation now intends to make a full disclosure with reference to their overhead and the real cost of the processing of inland fish?

● (1210)

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the remarks quoted by the hon. member but the Minister of State (Fisheries) had to leave a few moments ago to catch an aircraft flight. I will make sure that the hon. gentleman get his answer at the beginning of the week.

REQUEST OF GROUPS TO BE ALLOWED TO SELL OUTSIDE THE CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF FEE FOR SERVICE CONCEPT

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that it is the fishermen's money that has been used for capital investment in this processing plant, would the minister also take into consideration the request by several groups and associations of fishermen—and I emphasize several—that they have the privilege of being a designated area so they can sell their fish outside of the corporation; and would he also give serious consideration to the concept of a fee for services which has been proposed by several groups of fishermen in Manitoba?

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the minister will take that under consideration, as the hon. gentleman suggests.

* * *

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMMING FOR INUIT

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Secretary of State which relates to the recent brief presented to the Canadian Radio-Television Commission by the Inuit Tapirisat Association. In view of the fact that there are only 30 minutes out of 112 hours of TV broadcasting directly related to the Inuit community, can the minister indicate whether the CBC will give serious consideration to the Inuit Tapirisat recommendations which include more educational programs in prime time, rather than the consumer oriented and frequently violent program that is radically different from their lifestyle?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. member that assurance.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

EFFECT OF PROPOSED NATIONAL PARK IN SOUTHERN SASKATCHEWAN ON IRRIGATION PROJECTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Is the minister aware that the proposed national park in southern Saskatchewan could adversely affect irrigation projects in that area, which projects fall under his department? If he is so aware, does he see a solution to the water storage problem?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the matter raised by the hon. member. I believe the officials of PFRA are, and I will get in touch with them to find out whether there is anything that I can do.

* * *

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—REGULATIONS GOVERNING CHANGES IN CONTRACTS WITHOUT CALLING TENDERS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Central Nova asked whether CAIM, the consortium of consultants retained for Mirabel, has discretionary powers with regard to authorizing changes in tenders or procedures which would permit those who have submitted successful bids to receive change orders or additional payments without public tender.

The answer is that the CAIM group of consultants has no such discretionary authority. Under the terms of the contract with the Department of Transport CAIM is to assist in the preparation of tender packages and to assist in the assessment of subsequent tenders, but I wish to make clear that it is the Department of Transport that has the responsibility for calling the tenders, reviewing the tenders received, and awarding the subsequent contracts. CAIM may, of course, recommend change orders to the general manager of the Mirabel project but that is as far as their role goes.

There is another question to answer, Mr. Speaker, if I may have the indulgence of the House.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Chrétien: The opposition do not want to know the truth, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again this raises the very difficult problem we face. On occasion it is necessary for ministers to indicate that they will secure information and give an answer at a later date. There was a moment or two before 12.15 when this question period was due to expire, and I gave that time to the minister in order for him to answer the question.

This raises two difficulties. First, the answer is longer than would be permitted in the question period; secondly, the hon. member who put the question is not in the House, and there is no time for supplementaries. There does not appear to be any sensible solution to this problem.

An hon. Member: It should be done on motions.

Mr. Speaker: If every time the answer to a question is deferred there is going to be a statement on motions, we would have one every day. There is no simple answer to this, but obviously at this moment I cannot let the minister continue.

Mr. Chrétien: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I must tell you that half of what I read was repetition of the question. The question was so long that I had to give an indication of what I want to reply to. But if they do not want to hear the truth, they should stop making smears in the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the minister indicates his bona fides by making a smear now on our colleague, the hon. member for Central Nova, when he is not in the House. This only underlines the difficulty that you face, Mr. Speaker. With all deference, I suggest that the proper thing for the minister to do is not only to wait until the hon. member for Central Nova is present in the House, and have the courage to face the member who posed the question to him—

Mr. Paproski: They are afraid.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: ... but it is also incumbent upon the minister to take the opportunity on motions.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Once again it is evident that there is no satisfactory solution to this recurring problem; that has been amply demonstrated.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. BAKER (GRENVILLE-CARLETON)—REFERENCE TO REMARKS OF MR. AUGUSTE CHOQUETTE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, during the interval that has just been broken by this "friendly" exchange there have been discussions among representatives of the parties respecting the form the motion should take. I think I should say at the outset that all of us are extremely grateful for the assistance of the parliamentary counsel and the officers at the table with respect to this matter.

We considered the possibility of expanding the motion in a detailed way, but it was decided that perhaps that ought not to be done, that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections had sufficient powers and that if they required any additional powers in order satisfactorily to deal with the matter, they could return to the House. I am satisfied the temper and mood of the House in respect of this matter is such that those powers would be given willingly.

If Your Honour finds this motion acceptable, the chairman of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, the hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore (Mr. Blaker), has in a preliminary way moved with the greatest speed and I am sure all hon. members are grateful to him for the speed and interest he has shown in this matter.

The upshot of our discussions is that I would suggest to Your Honour a motion which, if it could be, would be seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) but which, for our purposes, will in fact be seconded by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais). I would move:

That the alleged accusation by Mr. Auguste Choquette that a substantial number of the members of the House of Commons have been in receipt of bribes be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

I hope you will find that motion acceptable, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I stress that the principal question that the Chair has to decide is whether or not the proceedings of the House ought to be interrupted in order to put such a motion. I have no hesitation in making a decision in the affirmative. It is, therefore, moved by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), seconded by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais):

That the alleged accusation by Mr. Auguste Choquette that a substantial number of the members of the House of Commons have been in receipt of bribes be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

* * *

● (1220)

PETITIONS

ACCEPTANCE OF PETITION PRESENTED BY MR. McGRATH

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the table the twenty-ninth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and finds it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

ACCEPTANCE OF PETITION PRESENTED BY MR. MARSHALL

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the table the thirtieth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS AND STANDING ORDERS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER FEES PAID BY BRITISH COLUMBIA TELEPHONE COMPANY RESPECTING BILL S-11

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 99, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders be authorized to consider and make recommendations upon the fees paid by the British Columbia Telephone Company in relation to Bill S-11.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the motion being presented pursuant to Standing Order 99. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are marked by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3069, 3267, 3470, 3769, 3950, 4116, 4171, 4173 to 4176 inclusive, 4,180 to 4,186 inclusive, 4,188 4,189, 4,191, 4,309 to 4,332 inclusive, 4,505, 4,516, 4,611, 4,771, 4,772, 4,778, 4,841 to 4,854 inclusive, 4,958, 4,970, 4,984, 4,990, 5,015, 5,017, 5,025, 5,040, 5,044, 5,114, 5,144, 5,153, 5,164, 5,182, 5,202, 5,223, 5,236, 5,243, 5,294, 5,338, 5,353 and 5,354.

Order Paper Questions

[Text]

PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP—APRIL 25, 1974

Question No. 3,069—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 32 on the subject of the Prime Minister's visit to certain places in Ontario commencing April 25, 1974, what are the names and job designations of all persons on any of the flights listed with the exception of the Prime Minister or members of the press?

2. What was the total cost to the taxpayer of this entire trip and did the trip specifically include a visit to the annual meeting of the Ontario Liberal Party in Sudbury, Ontario?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In so far as the Prime Minister's and Privy Council Offices are concerned: 1. April 25, 1974—Ottawa to Hamilton, MOT Viscount: The Prime Minister; Hon. John Munro; Bob Murdoch, PMO; Colin Kenny, PMO; Peter McGuire, PMO; Al Donnelly, PMO; Dal Warrington, Press; Fred Chartrand, Press; B. Stewart, Press; Don Dixon, Press; Rudi Wolf, Press; D. Beauchamp, Press; Mike Lavoie, Press; Jim Ferrabee, Press; Claude Hénault, Press; Jack Derouin, Press; Geoff Stevens, Press; Jean-Marc Poliquin, Press; François Rouleau, Press. April 25, 1974— Hamilton to Toronto, DND Helicopter: A. The Prime Minister; Insp. Russ Harding, RCMP; Colin Kenny, PMO; Bob Murdoch, PMO; Dal Warrington, Press. B. Al Donnelly, PMO; Cpl. Jack Prout, OPP; Dave Isaac, Press; Hal Jones, Press; Jack Derouin, Press; Jean-Marc Poliquin, Press; François Rouleau, Press; Claude Hénault, Press; Fred Chartrand, Press. C. Peter McGuire, PMO; Sgt. T. Lafontaine, RCMP; B. Stewart, Press; Don Dixon, Press; Rudi Wolf, Press; D. Beauchamp, Press; Mike Lavoie, Press; Geoff Stevens, Press; Jim Ferrabee, Press. April 26, 1974—Toronto to Woodstock, DND Helicopter: A. The Prime Minister; Hon. Gene Whelan; Insp. Russ Harding, RCMP; Colin Kenny, PMO; Dal Warrington, Press. B. Al Donnelly, PMO; Cpl. Jack Prout, OPP; Dave Isaac, Press; Hal Jones, Press; Jack Derouin, Press; Jean-Marc Poliquin, Press; François Rouleau, Press; Claude Hénault, Press; Fred Chartand, Press; Bob Murdoch, PMO. C. Peter McGuire, PMO; Sgt. T. Lafontaine, RCMP; B. Stewart, Press; Don Dixon, Press; Rudi Wold, Press; D. Beauchamp, Press; Mike Lavoie, Press; Geoff Stevens, Press; Jim Ferrabee, Press. April 26, 1974—Woodstock to Sarnia, DND Helicopter: A. The Prime Minister; Insp. Russ Harding, RCMP; Colin Kenny, PMO; Bob Murdoch, PMO; Dal Warrington, Press. B. Al Donnelly, PMO; Cpl. Jack Prout, OPP; Dave Isaac, Press; Hal Jones, Press; Jack Derouin, Press; Jean-Marc Poliquin, Press; François Rouleau, Press; Claude Hénault, Press; Fred Chartand, Press. C. Peter McGuire, PMO; Sgt. T. Lafontaine, RCMP; B. Stewart, Press; Don Dixon, Press; Rudi Wolf, Press; D. Beauchamp, Press; Mike Lavoie, Press; Geoff Stevens, Press; Jim Ferrabee, Press. April 26, 1974—Sarnia to Sudbury, MOT Viscount: The Prime Minister; Bob Murdoch, PMO; Colin Kenny, PMO; Peter McGuire, PMO; Al Donnelly, PMO; Fred Chartrand, Press; B. Stewart, Press; Don Dixon, Press; Rudi Wolf, Press; D. Beauchamp, Press; Hal Jones, Press; Mike Lavoie, Press; Jim Ferrabee, Press; Claude Hénault, Press; Geoff Stevens, Press; Jean-Marc Poliquin, Press; François Rouleau, Press. April 26, 1974—Sudbury to Ottawa, MOT Viscount: The Prime Minister;

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Marc Lalonde; Sen. Gil Molgat; Bob Murdoch, PMO; Colin Kenny, PMO: Peter McGuire, PMO; Al Donnelly, PMO; Fred Chartrand, Press; B. Stewart, Press; Don Dixon, Press; Rudi Wolf, Press; D. Beauchamp, Press; Mike Lavoie, Press; Jim Ferrabee, Press; Claude Hénault, Press; François Rouleau, Press; Geoff Stevens, Press; Jean-Marc Poliquin, Press; Jim Moore, PMO.

2. In addition to expenses indicated in reply to question 32, travelling expenses of PMO staff totalled $756.64. The trip included activities in Sudbury.

PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP ACROSS CANADA

Question No. 3,267—Mr. Cossitt:

What aircraft is the Prime Minister using for his current trip across Canada for the purpose of explaining the government's controls programme to the Canadian public (a) what is the total cost of keeping such aircraft in the air per hour (b) what is the total cost for waiting time of such aircraft on the ground (c) what are the names and job designations of all persons on board the aircraft at any time during this trip (d) what are the names and annual salaries of all crew members (e) what is the cost of the entire trip to the Canadian taxpayer including transportation, accommodation of the Prime Minister and anyone accompanying him, and the accommodation of crew members (f) what is the exact flight itinerary of this trip showing the places visited and arrival and departure times?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In so far as the Prime Minister's and Privy Council Offices are concerned: (a) and (b) $970 (see reply to question 4,110 answered March 12, 1976). (c) and (f) See Statement following. (d) See reply to question 69 answered February 3, 1976. (e) $1,060.47 (see also (a), (b) and (d)).

Sections (c) and (f)

Date	Depart	Time	Arrive	Time	Passengers
October 21/75	Ottawa	09:15	Winnipeg	12:10	Prime Minister
	Winnipeg	17:25	Regina	18:35	R. Murdoch	—PMO
October 22/75	Regina	16:25	Ottawa	19:00	R. Robert	—PMO
					R. Coleman	—PMO
					The Hon. J. Richardson	—Min
					J. Moore	—PMO
					R. Goodale, M.P.	—M.P.
					A. Donnelly	—PMO
October 24/75	Ottawa	09:40	Toronto	10:35	Prime Minister
	Toronto	21:55	Ottawa	22:40	Mrs. Trudeau
					Michel Trudeau
					C. Kenny	—PMO
					P. McGuire	—PMO
					I. Macdonald	—PMO
					Babysitter

HOTEL ACCOMMODATION

Question No. 3,470—Mr. Cossitt:

Has the (a) Chateau Laurier (b) Carleton Towers (c) Holiday Inn (d) Skyline (e) Talisman (f) Park Lane (g) Quai D'Orsay received business from the government since June 1, 1970 and, if so, in each case (i) how much (ii) for what purpose (iii) from which departments?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The information requested is not readily available. To provide an accurate reply in its entirety, would entail a lengthy and costly examination of the accounts of every department and agency including their regional offices. The costs in manpower and time to undertake such a large amount of work would be prohibitive.

USE OF AIRCRAFT BY PRIME MINISTER TO VISIT CERTAIN ONTARIO POINTS

Question No. 3,769—Mr. Cossitt:

What means of transportation will be involved in the scheduled visit to certain Ontario points by the Prime Minister commencing Friday, December 12, 1975 (a) how many and what government aircraft are involved (b) what is the cost per hour of keeping such aircraft in the air (c) how many hours of flying time are involved (d) what is the cost per hour of keeping such aircraft on the ground (e) how many hours of waiting time are involved (f) what is a complete list of all flights to be made by such aircraft on the trip including take-off and arrival times and places to be visited (g) what is a complete list of all persons that will be involved on the aircraft at any time during the flights?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): (a) Transport Canada Lockheed Jetstar CF-ETN. (b) and (d) The cost of keeping the aircraft in the air and on the ground is $970 per flying hour. (c) An estimated two hours and 15 minutes. (e) An estimated 10 hours and 30 minutes. (f) and (g) Proposed Itinerary and passengers—see attached list. (All times Eastern Standard).

NOTE: These answers are based on information available as of December 11, 1975.

Order Paper Questions

Date	Depart	Time	Arrive	Time	Passengers
December 12	Ottawa	0900	Hamilton	1000	Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau Mrs. P. E. Trudeau Mr. B. Murdock Mr. C. Kenny Mr. R. Coleman Mr. P. McGuire Hon. J. Munro Mr. G. MacFarlane
	Hamilton	1015	Toronto	1040	Mrs. P. E. Trudeau
	Toronto	2100	Ottawa	2150	Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau Mrs. P. E. Trudeau Mr. B. Murdock Mr. C. Kenny Mr. R. Coleman Mr. P. McGuire

GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY AGREEMENT

Question No. 3,950—Mr. Jelinek:

1. What has been the total cost to the government respecting the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement by the International Joint Commission?

2. What was the total cost in (a) 1972 (b) 1973 (c) 1974 (d) 1975?

3. Is there an estimated time for completion of the project and, if so, on what date?

4. Is there an estimated total cost for the project and, if so, what is the amount?

5. Has the United States done their fair share in the clean-up of the Great Lakes?

6. What has been the total expenditure by the United States for the clean-up of the Great Lakes and, what was the total expenditure for (a) 1972 (b) 1973 (c) 1974 (d) 1975?

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Total costs to the Government of Canada for programs related to the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement of 1972, estimated to the end of 1975-76, were $280,138,000. This figure includes estimated government expenditures of $2,612,419 incurred through the International Joint Commission during the same period.

2. (a) 1971-72: $31,331,000, (b) 1972-73: $38,928,000, (c) 1973-74: $84,289,000, (d) 1974-75: $66,835,000, (e) 1975-76: $58,755,000.

3. The Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement was signed on April 15, 1972. The agreement specifies that it is to remain in force for a period of five years and thereafter until terminated upon twelve months notice being given in writing by either party. It further specifies that programs directed to the achievement of its water quality objectives be either completed or in the process of implementation by December 31, 1975. That date is not however a termination date but rather specifies a target date for certain activities. The process of cleaning up the Great Lakes is inevitably a long one, and the IJC, in its Third Annual Report on Great Lakes Water Quality, speaks of a decade or more before the goals of the Agreement can be fully realized.

4. No. Given the nature of the challenge and the indefinite time frame, it is impossible to estimate the total costs involved to all the governments concerned. Future costs will depend on the degree wo which the parties respond to ongoing recommendations of the International Joint Commission in respect of activities necessary to achieve the objectives of the agreement.

5. The government is satisfied that the United States is making a sincere effort to live up to its commitments. Despite some delay in early implementation of United States programs, action has now been taken by the United States authorities to accelerate activities required to meet the objectives of the agreement.

6. According to information provided by United States authorities, the total expenditure to 1975 is $2,353,000,000. This figure represents only costs to the United States government. By years: (a) $225,000,000; (b) $419,000,000; (c) $509,000,000; (d) $900,000,000.

CHARTERED BANKS ASSETS—GRADUAL INCREASES

Question No. 4,116—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 3,888, what has been the gradual annual increase of assets for each of the chartered banks from 1967 to 1974?

2. What has been the main factor causing an increase of assets (a) for each bank (b) during each year?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. The following table shows the over-all annual increase in assets of each chartered bank in each year from 1967 to 1975.

2. The table also includes for each bank in each year the increase, or decrease, in major categories of assets and the proportion of the increase in total assets attributable to each category.

Chartered Banks

Annual Increase of Assets

1967-1975

	Nova Montreal		Toronto-Scotia		Dominion		Provincial		Commerce		Royal		BCN		Mercantile		Columbia		British Unity		Total
	$MM	%	$MM	%	$MM	%	$MM	%	$MM	%	$MM	%	$MM	%	$MM	%	$MM	%	$MM		$MM
1968 Total	686	(11)	1,078	(26)	920	(27)	116	(18)	861	(12)	964	(12)	177	(14)	34–	(15)–	34				4,802	(15)
NHA Mortgages	26	(15)	16	(14)	17	(18)	4	(133)	13–	(8)–	2	(1)	13	(72)	–	–	–				65	(9)
Personal & Business Loans	236	(9)	240	(15)	324	(22)	54	(17)	302	(10)	275	(9)	68	(14)	24	(27)	5				1,529	(12)
For. Currency Assets	123	(13)	729	(54)	417	(59)	2	(17)	107	(8)	323	(17)	17	(142)	46–	(51)–	11				1,683	(27)
Canadian Securities	253	(23)	99	(18)	80	(13)	20	(13)	428	(25)	277	(20)	75	(23)	1–	(6)–	14				1,245	(21)
1969 Total	1,334	(20)	727	(14)	854	(20)	122	(16)	859	(10)	1,453	(17)	260	(18)	5	(3)	40	(118)			5,654	(16)
NHA Mortgages	31	(16)	28	(22)	25	(23)	8	(114)	12–	(8)–	66	(35)	18	(58)	–	(–)	–	(–)			164	(20)
Personal & Business Loans	469	(16)	161	(9)	375	(21)	68	(19)	532	(15)	496	(15)	113	(20)	38	(34)	17	(340)			2,269	(16)
For. Currency Assets	906	(84)	396	(19)	375	(34)	1–	(7)–	691	(49)	1,099	(49)	3	(10)	26–	(59)–	1–	(9)–			3,442	(43)
Canadian Securities	121–	(9)–	34	(5)	33	(5)	2–	(1)–	351–	(17)–	153–	(9)–	9	(2)	6–	(37)–	10	(71)			547	(8)–
1970 Total	577	(7)	426	(7)	196	(4)	207	(23)	1,849	(20)	1,173	(12)	236	(14)	1–	(1)–	47	(64)			4,710	(11)
NHA Mortgages	37	(16)	16	(10)	6–	(4)–	5	(33)	10–	(7)–	47	(18)	9	(18)	–	(–)	–	(–)			98	(10)
Personal & Business Loans	15	(–)	102	(5)	47	(2)	65	(15)	27–	(1)–	60	(2)	63	(9)	9	(6)	16	(73)			350	(2)
For. Currency Assets	264	(13)	198	(8)	113	(8)	18	(138)	1,019	(48)	601	(18)	43	(134)	6–	(33)–	8	(80			2,258	(20)
Canadian Securities	265	(21)	100	(15)	49	(7)	86	(49)	449	(25)	202	(13)	80	(19)	2	(20)	11	(46)			1,244	(19)
1971 Total	1,435	(16)	715	(11)	1,121	(21)	328	(30)	350	(3)	1,585	(14)	373	(20)	96	(50)	57	(47)			6,060	(13)
NHA Mortgages	84	(32)	53	(31)	56	(43)	15	(75)	147	(112)	128	(42)	24	(41)	–	(–)	–	(–)			507	(47)
Personal & Business Loans	446	(13)	373	(18)	293	(13)	84	(17)	701	(18)	770	(20)	79	(11)	51	(32)	43	(113)			2,840	(17)
For. Currency Assets	547	(24)	48	(2)	300	(19)	196	(632)	925–	(30)–	219	(6)	14–	(21)–	15	(125)	16	(89)			402	(3)
Canadian Securities	295	(19)	142	(18)	217	(27)	24	(9)	537	(24)	300	(17)	192	(39)	4	(33)	8–	(23)–			1,703	(22)
1972 Total	1,158	(11)	1,457	(21)	999	(15)	413	(29)	1,901	(17)	1,813	(14)	406	(18)	101	(35)	66	(37)			8,314	(16)
NHA Mortgages	84	(24)	63	(28)	49	(27)	28	(80)	296	(107)	128	(30)	67	(82)	–	(–)	4				719	(45)
Personal & Business Loans	889	(23)	570	(23)	648	(26)	122	(21)	1,097	(23)	1,101	(24)	257	(31)	84	(40)	41	(51)			4,809	(24)
For. Currency Assets	144–	(5)–	547	(20)	268	(14)	155	(68)	387	(18)	273	(7)	36	(59)	14–	(52)–	20	(59)			1,528	(11)
Canadian Securities	77	(4)	44	(5)	31	(3)	74	(26)	311–	(11)–	113	(6)	67	(10)	11	(69)	5–	(19)–			101	(1)
1973 Total	3,086	(27)	1,786	(21)	1,875	(25)	261	(14)	2,800	(21)	3,596	(24)	616	(23)	197	(51)	74	(30)	99		14,390	(24)
NHA Mortgages	75	(17)	47	(16)	98	(42)	22	(35)	119	(21)	84	(15)	60	(40)	–		2	(50)	4		511	(22)
Personal & Business Loans	1,463	(30)	650	(22)	838	(27)	240	(34)	1,122	(19)	1,395	(24)	415	(38)	109	(37)	54	(44)	45		6,331	(26)
For. Currency Assets	1,302	(49)	928	(28)	619	(28)	35	(9)	1,174	(45)	1,855	(42)	106	(109)	21	(162)	16	(30)	13		6,069	(39)
Canadian Securities	5–	(–)	56–	(6)–	86	(8)	14–	(4)–	56–	(2)–	150–	(7)–	48–	(6)–	56	(207)	6–	(27)–	25		168–	(2)–
1974 Total	3,242	(22)	3,135	(30)	2,434	(26)	467	(22)	2,845	(18)	3,306	(18)	823	(25)	112	(19)	164	(52)	43	(43)	16,571	(22)
NHA Mortgages	26	(5)	28	(8)	28	(8)	32	(38)	118	(17)	76	(12)	70	(34)	6		4	(67)	–	(–)	388	(14)
Personal & Business Loans	1,407	(22)	895	(24)	749	(19)	242	(26)	1,711	(25)	1,456	(20)	371	(25)	48	(12)	82	(47)	40	(89)	7,001	(23)
For. Currency Assets	955	(24)	1,546	(37)	1,345	(48)	146	(35)	287	(8)	298	(5)	179	(88)	1	(3)	29	(41)	8–	(62)–	4,778	(22)
Canadian Securities	230	(12)	351	(38)	139	(12)	29	(8)	139	(6)	527	(26)	39	(6)	41	(49)	14	(88)	1–	(4)–	1,508	(16)
1975 Total	592	(3)	2,543	(19)	1,720	(15)	502	(20)	3,313	(17)	3,541	(16)	746	(18)	569	(84)	143	(30)	30	(21)	13,719	(15)
NHA Mortgages	74	(14)	98	(27)	45	(13)	47	(40)	290	(36)	119	(17)	82	(29)	4	(67)	15	(150)	–	(–)	774	(24)
Personal & Business Loans	827	(11)	794	(17)	821	(17)	191	(16)	1,433	(17)	1,823	(21)	247	(13)	463	(103)	93	(36)	25	(29)	6,717	(18)
For. Currency Assets	630–	(13)–	1,211	(21)	355	(9)	149	(26)	1,499	(37)	1,402	(21)	257	(67)	43	(123)	11	(11)	4	(80)	4,301	(16)
Canadian Securities	56	(3)	9	(1)	165	(88)	33–	(9)–	34–	(3)–	135–	(5)–	59	(8)	49	(40)	–	(–)	1	(4)	87	(1)

[Mr. Trudel.]

PSYCHIATRISTS AT LECLERC

Question No. 4,171—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at LeClerc and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil. However, inmates transferred to medium and minimum institutions from a Regional Reception Centre or a maximum institution are always medically screened. Should an inmate be in need of psychiatric treatment while in a medium or minimum setting, he would either be seen as an out-patient by a visiting psychiatrist or, if his condition were serious, be transferred to an institution that provides such treatment. Inmates who are receiving psychiatric treatment on a full-time basis are detained at one of the three Regional Psychiatric Centres operated by the Canadian Penitentiary Service or, in some instances, receive treatment in provincial hospitals.

PSYCHIATRISTS AT COWANSVILLE

Question No. 4,173—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Cowansville and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Please see reply to question No. 4,171.

PSYCHIATRISTS AT STE-ANNE DES PLAINES

Question No. 4,174—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Ste-Anne des Plaines and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Please see reply to question No. 4,171.

PSYCHIATRISTS AT ARCHAMBAULT

Question No. 4,175—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Archambault and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Please see reply to question No. 4,171.

PSYCHIATRISTS AT FRONTENAC INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,176—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Frontenac Institution and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Please see reply to question No. 4,171.

PSYCHIATRISTS AT MONTÉE ST. FRANCIS

Question No. 4,180—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Montée St. Francis and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Please see reply to question No. 4,171.

PSYCHIATRISTS AT BEAVER CREEK CORRECTIONAL CAMP

Question No. 4,181—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Beaver Creek Correctional Camp and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Please see reply to question No. 4,171.

PSYCHIATRISTS AT PITTSBURGH INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,182—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Pittsburgh Institution and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Please see reply to question No. 4,171.

PSYCHIATRISTS AT QUEBEC FEDERAL TRAINING CENTRE

Question No. 4,183—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Québec Federal Training Centre and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Please see reply to question No. 4,171.

PSYCHIATRISTS AT COLLINS BAY INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,184—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Collins Bay Institution and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Please see reply to question No. 4,171.

PSYCHIATRISTS AT WARKWORTH INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,185—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Warkworth Institution and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Please see reply to question No. 4,171.

Order Paper Questions

PSYCHIATRISTS AT BATH INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,186—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Bath Institution and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Please see reply to question 4,171.

PSYCHIATRISTS AT LANDRY CROSSING CORRECTIONAL CAMP

Question No. 4,188—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Landry Crossing Correctional Camp and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Please see reply to question 4,171.

PSYCHIATRISTS AT OSBORNE CENTRE

Question No. 4,189—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Osborne Centre and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Please see reply to question 4,171.

PSYCHIATRISTS AT ONTARIO PRE-RELEASE HOSTEL

Question No. 4,191—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Ontario Pre-Release Hostel and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Please see reply to question 4,171.

SUICIDES AT QUEBEC REGIONAL PSYCHIATRIC CENTRE

Question No. 4,309—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Quebec Regional Psychiatric Centre?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1970, Nil; 1971, Nil; 1972, Nil; 1973, 1; 1974, Nil; 1975, Nil; Total, 1.

SUICIDES AT ONTARIO REGIONAL PSYCHIATRIC CENTRE

Question No. 4,310—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Ontario Regional Psychiatric Centre?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1970, Nil; 1971, Nil; 1972, Nil; 1973, 1; 1974, Nil; 1975, Nil; Total, 1.

[Mr. Poulin.]

SUICIDES AT PACIFIC REGIONAL PSYCHIATRIC CENTRE

Question No. 4,311—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Pacific Regional Psychiatric Centre?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES AT MILLHAVEN INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,312—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Millhaven Institution?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1970, Nil; 1971, Nil; 1972, Nil; 1973, Nil; 1974, 1; 1975, Nil; Total, 1.

SUICIDES AT LECLERC INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,313—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at LeClerc?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1970, 1; 1971, Nil; 1972, Nil; 1973, Nil; 1974, 3; 1975, Nil; Total, 4.

SUICIDES AT SASKATCHEWAN PENITENTIARY

Question No. 4,314—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Saskatchewan Penitentiary?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1970, 3; 1971, Nil; 1972, 2; 1973, 4; 1974, Nil; 1975, Nil; Total, 9.

SUICIDES AT COWANSVILLE

Question No. 4,315—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Cowansville?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES AT STE. ANNE DES PLAINES

Question No. 4,316—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Ste. Anne des Plaines?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES AT ARCHAMBAULT

Question No. 4,317—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Archambault?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1970, Nil; 1971, Nil; 1973, 1; 1974, 1; 1975, 1; Total, 4.

SUICIDES AT FRONTENAC INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,318—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Frontenac Institution?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES AT ROCKWOOD INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,319—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Rockwood Institution?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES AT STONY MOUNTAIN INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,320—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Stony Mountain Institution?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1970, 1; 1971, 1; 1972, Nil; 1973, Nil; 1974, Nil; 1975, 1; Total, 3.

SUICIDES AT JOYCEVILLE INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,321—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Joyceville Institution?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES AT MONTÉE ST. FRANCIS

Question No. 4,322—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Montée St. Francis?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES AT BEAVER CREEK CORRECTIONAL CAMP

Question No. 4,323—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Beaver Creek Correctional Camp?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES AT PITTSBURGH INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,324—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Pittsburg Institution?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES AT QUEBEC FEDERAL TRAINING CENTRE

Question No. 4,325—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Quebec Federal Training Centre?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1970 Nil; 1971, 1; 1972, 1; 1973, 2; 1974, Nil; 1975, 2; Total, 6.

SUICIDES AT COLLINS BAY INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,326—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Collins Bay Institution?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES AT WARKWORTH INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,327—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Warkworth Institution?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES AT BATH INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,328—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Bath Institution?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES AT SASKATCHEWAN FARM ANNEX

Question No. 4,329—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Saskatchewan Farm Annex?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES AT LANDRY CROSSING CORRECTIONAL CAMP

Question No. 4,330—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Landry Crossing Correctional Camp?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

Order Paper Questions

SUICIDES AT OSBORNE CENTRE

Question No. 4,331—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Osborne Centre?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES AT ONTARIO PRERELEASE HOSTEL

Question No. 4,332—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Ontario Pre-release Hostel?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES AT DORCHESTER PENITENTIARY

Question No. 4,505—Mr. MacKay:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Dorchester Penitentiary?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1970, 2; 1971, Nil; 1972, Nil; 1973, Nil; 1974, Nil; 1975, 1; Total, 3.

SUICIDES AT ONTARIO REGIONAL RECEPTION CENTRE

Question No. 4,516—Mr. MacKay:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Ontario Regional Reception Centre?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1970, Nil; 1971, Nil; 1972, Nil; 1973, Nil; 1974, Nil; 1975, 1; Total, 1.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT—LOANS IN ONTARIO

Question No. 4,611—Mr. Holmes:

What are the (a) names (b) locations (c) head office addresses of the firms and/or individuals receiving loans in the Province of Ontario under the Small Businesses Loans Act for the period April 1 to September 30, 1975?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): The names and addresses of individual businesses receiving loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act are confidential. Small businesses in Ontario received 380 loans for a total value of $5,657,867 in the period April 1 to September 30, 1975.

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

Question No. 4,771—Mr. Herbert:

By department, how much of the $60,500,000 in the 1975-76 estimates for student summer employment is included in the forecast expenditures in the 1976-77 estimates?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Forecast 1975-76 expenditures, by department, for the 1975 Student Summer Employment and Activities Program as provided in the 1976-77 main estimates are as follows:

Department Agency	1975-76 Forecast Expenditures ($'000)
Agriculture	100
Consumer and Corporate Affairs	60
Energy, Mines and Resources	100
Indian Affairs and Northern Development	1,276
Manpower and Immigration	40,452
National Capital Commission	182
National Defence	7,665
National Film Board	77
National Health and Welfare	1,046
National Revenue	86
Secretary of State	8,480
Solicitor General	36
	59,560

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

Question No. 4,772—Mr. Herbert:

During which months was the $386,000 in the Supplementary Estimates (B) 1975-76, for student summer employment expended and how many persons are engaged in the programme on either a permanent or temporary basis?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): The funds were expended in February and March, 1976. A total of 232 persons were hired during this period on a temporary basis to work in the Student Canada Manpower Centres; an additional 850 students will be hired on a temporary basis for this activity during 1976-77.

ADVERTISEMENTS OF METRIC SYSTEM

Question No. 4,778—Mr. McKinley:

1. For the fiscal year 1975-76, what funds have been disbursed by the government for advertisements of the metric system in Canada?

2. For the fiscal year 1976-77, what funds have been allocated for advertising of the metric system in Canada?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. (a) In so far as the Metric Commission is concerned there have been no paid advertisements of the metric system in Canada. (b) For the fiscal year 1975/76, planned disbursements for other information activities were $1,523,800. (See Metric Commission Second Report).

2. (a) As per 1(a). (b) For the fiscal year 1976/77, planned disbursements for other information activities are $2,737,500.

SUICIDES AT FERNDALE

Question No. 4,841—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Ferndale?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES—MATSQUI

Question No. 4,842—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Matsqui?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES—MOUNTAIN INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,843—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Mountain Institution?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1970, Nil; 1971, Nil; 1972, Nil; 1973, 1; 1974, Nil; 1975, Nil; Total, 1.

SUICIDES—AGASSIZ CORRECTIONAL CAMP

Question No. 4,844—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Agassiz Correctional Camp?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES—WILLIAMS HEAD

Question No. 4,845—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Williams Head?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1970, 1; 1971, Nil; 1972, Nil; 1973, Nil; 1974, Nil; 1975, Nil; Total, 1.

SUICIDES—BOWDEN

Question No. 4,846—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Bowden?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES—DRUMHELLER

Question No. 4,847—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Drumhelller?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1970, Nil; 1971, Nil; 1972, Nil; 1973, Nil; 1974, Nil; 1975, 1; Total, 1.

Order Paper Questions

SUICIDES—BRITISH COLUMBIA PENITENTIARY

Question No. 4,848—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at British Columbia Penitentiary?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1970, 2; 1971, Nil; 1972, Nil; 1973, Nil; 1974, 2; 1975, 1; Total 5.

SUICIDES—PANDORA CENTRE

Question No. 4,849—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Pandora Centre?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES—GRIERSON CENTRE

Question No. 4,850—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Grierson Centre?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES—OSKANA CENTRE

Question No. 4,851—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Oskana Centre?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES—ALTADORE CENTRE

Question No. 4,852—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Altadore Centre?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES—SCARBORO CENTRE

Question No. 4,853—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Scarboro Centre?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

SUICIDES—BURRARD CENTRE

Question No. 4,854—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of suicides at Burrard Centre?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

Order Paper Questions

LOANS BY CHARTERED BANKS

Question No. 4,958—Mr. Matte:

From 1973 to date, what was the amount of loans granted each chartered bank in Canada?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): I have been informed by the Bank of Canada as follows: The amount of loans granted by each chartered bank in Canada since 1973 is as follows:

	Increase in total loans[1] outstanding between December 31, 1973 and January 31, 1976 ($ millions) Total	In Canadian $
Commerce	4,226.2	3,135.3
Royal	5,409.0	3,710.2
Montreal	3,801.9	2,737.5
Toronto Dominion	2,473.7	1,746.7
Nova Scotia	3,639.2	1,767.3
Nationale	1,093.3	887.1
Provinciale	762.6	660.6
Mercantile	582.9	507.0
British Columbia	203.2	188.5
Unity	59.4	53.2
Total	22,251.4	15,393.4

[1] These loans include day, call and short loans, loans to provinces and municipalities, and other loans.

PORTFOLIOS HELD BY HON. C. M. DRURY

Question No. 4,970—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Since his appointment to the Cabinet, what portfolios has the Honourable C. M. Drury held and what was the date of each appointment?

2. What (a) are the names (b) were the dates of appointment (c) were the dates of departure of each (i) executive assistant (ii) special assistant (iii) senior member of his exempt staff since his original appointment to the Cabinet?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. Sworn of the Privy Council on April 22, 1963; Appointed Minister: Minister of Defence Production, April 22, 1963 to July 5, 1968; Minister of Industry, July 25, 1963 to July 5, 1968; Minister of Trade and Commerce, April 20, 1968 to July 6, 1968; President of the Treasury Board, July 6, 1968 to August 8, 1974; Minister of Public Works, August 8, 1974 to present; Minister of State for Science and Technology, August 8, 1974 to present; Acting Minister of Finance, September 10, 1975 to September 25, 1975.

2. (i) Executive Assistants

(a) Name	(b) Dates of Appointment	(c) Dates of Departure
Wanklyn, F.	1963	1966
Porteous, T.	April, 1966	April, 1968
Abbott, T.	April 20, 1968	July 6, 1968
Piper, J. T.	May 6, 1968	August 5, 1968
Drummond, K.	August 27, 1968	May 1, 1970
Szablowsky, G.	June 1, 1970	November 14, 1970
Beaulac, A. G.	December 14, 1970	March 31, 1973
Lalonde, G. R.	August 9, 1974	present
(ii) Special Assistants
de Lotbiniere Panet, A.	March, 1968	August, 1968
Dunn, P.	August 27, 1968	August 29, 1970
Stikeman, T.	July 27, 1970	March 24, 1973
Rochon, J. J.	September 1, 1971	September 19, 1973
Orange, D.	September 29, 1971	Present
Lalonde, G. R.	March 26, 1973	August 8, 1974
Brunet, V. P.	September 30, 1974 and January 20, 1975	October 22, 1974 April 8, 1975
Mathieson, K. D. H.	September 30, 1974 and December 8, 1975	October 10, 1975 present
Ward, R. E.	April 1, 1975	present
Ramsden, J.	February 16, 1976	present
Dube, P.	March 15, 1976	present

(iii) nil

BUTTER IMPORTS

Question No. 4,984—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

For the year 1975, by month, how many pounds of butter were imported (a) from what countries (b) at what cost?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports the following: Imports of butter into Canada in the period January to December 1975 amounted to 10,063,900 pounds for a value of $5,897,000. The Canadian consumption of butter during 1975 was 11.53 pounds per capita, or 263,266,000 pounds in total. The amount imported into Canada during 1975 was 3.82 per cent of the total amount consumed. The following table shows the amount imported by month from each country of consignment and the average price in cents per pound.

Imports of Butter—1975

	January			February			March
Country	Lbs.	$	Unit Price	Lbs	$	Unit Price	Lbs.	$	Unit Price
United Kingdom	300	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Australia	1,138,800	705,000	0.62	4,480,000	2,601,000	0,58	—	—	—
New Zealand	—	—	—	1,962,900	1,135,000	0.58	2,481,500	1,456,000	0.59
Total	1,139,100	705,000	0.62	6,422,900	3,736,000	0.58	2,481,500	1,456,000	0.59
	April			May			June
Nil	Nil			Nil			Nil
	July			August			September
United States	200			Nil			Nil
	October			November			December
United Kingdom	Nil			Nil			200

	January to December 1975
United Kingdom	500	—	—
Australia	5,618,800	3,306,000	0.59
New Zealand	4,444,400	2,591,000	0.58
United States	200	—	—
Total	10,063,900	5,897,000	0.59

OPERATION AND EFFICIENCY OF RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE

Question No. 4,990—Mr. Jones:

1. Have steps been taken to improve the operation and efficiency of railway passenger service between (a) Ottawa and Montreal (b) between Montreal and Moncton and other points east and, if so, what are they?

2. Is the Minister of Transport and the Department of Transport considering meeting with Members of Parliament from the Maritime Provinces to discuss suggestions as to how to improve and create greater efficiency and increased patronage for passenger service in and out of the Maritime Provinces?

3. Has consideration been given to increasing the quantity and quality of work which can be done at the Canadian Railway Shops in Moncton?

4. What inspection services are provided for checks of (a) trackage (b) railway equipment (c) rail cars before being released for service?

5. Does provision exist in Canadian National Railways to encourage staff on passenger cars to report problems with equipment and railway cars and, if so, what is it?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Transport Canada advises as follows: 1. As part of the Railway Passenger Program announced on January 29, the railways and the government are now preparing plans for the improvement of corridor services of which the Ottawa-Montreal route forms a part. Some changes will be announced by CN in the April timetable. An announcement on a corridor demonstration project is to be made in the near future. Public hearings on the Montreal-Maritimes service will be conducted by the CTC and will be completed by late 1977. These hearings will follow a similar format to those now underway on the Montreal-Vancouver trans-continental services, permitting the public to comment on and provide inputs to the developments of future plans for these services.

2. In reviewing the Montreal-Maritimes services the views of all interested parties, including the Members of Parliament from the region will be sought. I would be pleased to receive the suggestions of the Honourable Members on these Maritime services. The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

3. The quality of work done in the Railway's shops has been and is of a high standard. Canadian National does not normally compete against private industry in the solicitation of work for its shops. Every effort has been made this year to introduce work of a railway nature into the shops to help minimize the effect of lay-offs. A major passenger car upgrading program was approved early in 1976 and, although passenger work is not performed in Moncton, that shop did benefit because of the need to offload freight car work from other railway shops.

4. (a) The frequency of inspection varies according to the class of track but generally: 1. Track is inspected so that not more than two calendar days elapse between inspections. These regular inspections are performed by an experienced employee riding on a track motor car or Hy-rail car, at slow speed. The Roadmaster must make at least one of these inspections each week. 2. Twice a year a walking inspection must be made. One of these inspections must be made by the Roadmaster; the other must be made by the Track Foreman. 3. Once every three weeks during summer conditions and once every week during winter conditions the track ride quality must be checked by riding a train. These train inspections must be done by a Roadmaster. 4. If there are conditions anticipated, such as earth slides, floods, extremely high or low temperatures, forest fire hazard and vandalism, track is inspected more frequently. (b) and (c) CTC regulations require mandatory and operational inspections of all rail equipment prior to being released for service. These regulations are further augmented by Company developed inspection procedures. These requirements are of a continuous, trip and periodic nature and are so designed to ensure that all critical rail equipment components are thoroughly inspected within a predetermined period of time.

5. A special form for Reporting of Defects has been in use for quite some time. All road service personnel are instructed in its use and disposition. It is a requirement that all noticeable defects be reported to ensure repairs at terminals or, if possible, enroute.

PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNT

Question No. 5,015—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. What was the total amount at credit in the Public Service Superannuation Account as at (a) March 31, 1973 (b) March 31, 1974 (c) March 31, 1975?

2. What rate of interest has the government paid for the use of this money during the fiscal years ending on the dates noted above?

3. What amount of interest was credited to the Public Service Superannuation Account during the fiscal years ending (a) March 31, 1973 (b) March 31, 1974 (c) March 31, 1975?

4. What was the total amount paid out of the Public Service Superannuation Account during the fiscal years ending (a) March 31, 1973 (b) March 31, 1974 (c) March 31, 1975?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): 1. (a) $4,945,750,813; (b) $5,427,502,239; (c) $6,420,297,891.

2. Quarter ending June 30, 1972, 1.4601; September 30, 1972, 1.4659; December 31, 1972, 1.4778; March 31, 1973, 1.4931; June 30, 1973, 1.5042; September 30, 1973, 1.5252; December 31, 1973, 1.5364; March 31, 1974, 1.5490; June 30, 1974, 1.5642; September 30, 1974, 1.5900; December 31, 1974, 1.6259; March 31, 1975, 1.6363.

3. (a) $184,190,199; (b) $202,866,916; (c) $227,008,801.

4. (a) $137,073,425; (b) $163,297,280; (c) $184,831,352.

SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS ACCOUNT

Question No. 5,017—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. What was the total amount contributed (a) by employees (b) by the government, to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account during the year from April 1, 1974 to March 31, 1975?

2. What was the total amount paid out of the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account, during the year from April 1, 1974 to March 31, 1975, in the form of pension supplements and to how many individuals were such pension supplements paid at any time during that period?

3. What was the balance at credit in the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account (a) as at March 31, 1974 (b) as at March 31, 1975?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): 1. (a) $20,743,268.31; (b) $20,743,268.31.

2. $58,877,913.05 was paid as pension supplements. As at March 31, 1975 there were 101,437 recipients of pension increases.

3. (a) $34,864,550.82; (b) $76,315,285.96.

CHARTERED BANKS—ESCALATION OF PENSIONS WITH RISE IN COST OF LIVING

Question No. 5,025—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

Has the Minister of Finance, or the Inspector-General of Banks acting for the Minister, since March 17, 1975, had any discussions with the chartered banks concerning the need for the pensions paid to their retired employees to be escalated annually by an amount at least equal to the rise in the cost of living and, if so, can the Minister now say whether the chartered banks are implementing this practice with respect to their retired employees?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): As was the case in March 1975, government policy continues to be to avoid the imposition of extraordinary conditions on private pension plans. The chartered banks, however, continue to be conscious of the needs in this area and are pursuing the previously reported practice of making supplementary payments to their older pensioners with increases in the cost of living being the primary factor in the determination of the amount of the supplement.

DATE OF NEXT CONSOLIDATION OF STATUTORY ORDERS AND REGULATIONS TO STATUTES

Question No. 5,040—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government advise on what date the next consolidation of the Statutory Orders and Regulations to the Statutes will be published?

Mr. Francis Fox (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): It is anticipated that the next Consolidation of Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments will be published on or before July 1, 1977.

PROPOSED EXPANSION OF ST. LAWRENCE ISLANDS NATIONAL PARK—PROPERTY APPRAISALS

Question No. 5,044—Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton):

1. What is the relationship, if any, between the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and Parks Canada with respect to the projected expansion of St. Lawrence Islands National Park?

2. (a) How many real property appraisals have been carried out in the area of the projected expansion of the St. Lawrence Islands National Park (b) how many properties are affected by the appraisals undertaken to date (c) is such appraisal work continuing?

3. How many properties have been acquired through the execution of agreements of purchase and sale as of the date hereof?

4. How many properties has the government under option as of the date hereof?

5. (a) At the time the Minister lifted the freeze on the Park expansion, how far had the negotiations gone (b) what is the present state of the negotiations for the Islands of Wallace, Hay, McDonald and Leeward?

6. Have any other negotiations taken place since December 11, 1975, for other islands or mainland property within the general proposed boundaries of the park other than the negotiations referred to?

7. In what manner is the amount of $300,000 contained in the 1976-77 Estimates to be spent and will such expenditures relate to both island and main shore properties?

8. What are the names and addresses of the owners whose property will be purchased with the $300,000?

9. What are the names and addresses of the real estate agents and/or brokers handling the sale of properties for and on behalf of the existing owners?

10. What are the names and addresses of the real estate agents and/or brokers or others handling the purchase of properties on behalf of Parks Canada?

11. Has the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development received any communication from the Government of Ontario asking that the project for park expansion and acquisition of property therefore be halted and, if so, what (a) is the text of the communication (b) was the response of the Minister?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. There is no relationship.

2. (a) A total of 17 real property appraisals were initiated in the area of the proposed expansion of St. Lawrence Islands; (b) 17; (c) appraisal work is continuing only for that part of Hill Island for which it was previously indicated we would conclude the purchase.

3. None.

4. Two properties.

5. (a) Although no definite commitments to purchase were made, negotiations had been undertaken by both sides in good faith and had proceeded to the point where owners and/or their representatives, in reasonable expectation of completing negotiations, had incurred costs, or otherwise would suffer financially as a result of a breaking off of negotiations. (b) With respect to Wallace Island, negotiations have ceased and are not being renewed. An offer to Purchase for part of Hay Island was accepted by the owner February 25 and is expected to be received by my Department from the Department of Public Works momentarily. An Offer to Purchase for part of McDonald Island and all Leeward Island was accepted by the owner

February 9. A recommendation for purchase of this property has been made to the Governor in Council.

6. No.

7. Funding provided in 1976-77 Estimates will be expended in the appraisal and purchase of the three remaining properties for which we have obligations and which were previously announced and for expenses directly related to these purchases, such as legal fees. No further lands will be purchased until the Advisory Committee has been established, and that Committee has recommended on a master plan for park expansion and development and a master plan has been approved.

8. As negotiations have not yet been completed this is considered to be privileged information, the release of which would violate the buyer—seller agreement.

9. Part Hay Island, Part McDonald, all Leeward Island, Alan Bickerton, Realtor, Bickerton Agencies Ltd., 395 Pine St., Gananoque, Ontario. Easterly Portion of Hill Island, Legal representation is by John B. Henderson, Q.C. of Henderson, Hart, Johnston, Fournier and Algie, Barristers and Solicitors, Equity Building, 61 King St., East, Brockville, Ontario. K6V 1B2, but all contact and correspondence to this point has been with Mr. Jan David, President of Hill Island Ltd., who is acting as a development consultant and adviser to the other owners during negotiations.

10. Property Services, Capital Region, Department of Public Works, 140 O'Connor Street, Ottawa, Ontario.

11. No.

INSTITUT DE PROMOTION DES INTÉRÊTS DU CONSOMMATEUR

Question No. 5,114—Mr. Jones:

1. Did the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs announce that an amount of $55,000 was granted to the Institut de promotion des intérêts du consommateur and, if so, was a comparable grant given to English-speaking organizations?

2. (a) What are the aims and purposes of the Institut de promotion des intérêts du consommateur (b) who are its officers (c) on what date was it incorporated?

3. Is the organization confined to French-speaking consumers in Quebec and, if so, who is responsible for (a) English-speaking consumers in Quebec and other parts of Canada (c) French-speaking consumers outside Quebec?

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Yes. In 1975-76 the department funded 21 organizations under the Consumers Assistance Grants Program. $333,000 was given to five organizations serving both English and French consumers; $90,780 was given to 12 organizations serving English speaking consumers; and $85,000 was given to four organizations serving French speaking consumers.

2. (a) The objective of L'Institut de Promotion des Intérêts du Consommateur is the improvement of the quality of life of Quebec people through consumer education and information. (b) This voluntary organizations is governed by a board of directors with 16 members representing a wide range of interests. The general director is Gilles Robert. (c) The organization was provincially incorporated November 4, 1971.

3. The Organization publishes information material in French. (a) English speaking consumers are served through a variety of governmental or local voluntary agencies. During the last fiscal year the department awarded grants to 17 organizations which serve English speaking consumers including five bilingual organizations. (b) The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in awarding this grant, has encouraged IPIC to make its publications available to French speaking consumers outside Quebec.

PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP ON JUNE 7, 1975

Question No. 5,144—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Prime Minister use a government-owned aircraft to travel to and from Quebec City on June 7, 1975 for purposes of attending a Liberal Party function honouring the Minister of Transport and, if so (a) what is a full description of the aircraft (b) what was the cost per hours of flying time (c) what was the total cost of the trip to the taxpayer (d) where did all flights originate and terminate (e) what are the names of all persons on board at any time during the trip?

2. What is the (a) name (b) job designation (c) salary of each crew member?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In so far as the Prime Minister's Office is concerned: 1. The Prime Minister travelled to Quebec City on June 7, 1975. (a) MOT Jetstar. (b) $970 (see reply to question 4,110 answered March 12, 1976). (c) Travelling expenses: $314.94. (d) and (e) Toronto—Quebec City; The Prime Minister; Bob Murdoch, PMO; Colin Kenny, PMO; Ian MacDonald, PMO; The Hon. John Munro; F. Viola, Labour; G. McGaffrey, Labour; Quebec City—Ottawa The Prime Minister; Bob Murdoch, PMO; Colin Kenny, PMO; Ian MacDonald, PMO; G. McCaffrey, Guest, Labour.

2. See reply to question 69 answered February 3, 1976.

WELLAND-PORT COLBORNE AREA

Question No. 5,153—Mr. Coates:

1. Has the Welland-Port Colborne area been designated as a bilingual district with St. Catharines as the regional centre and, if so, who made the decision?

2. (a) What are the names of the persons who served on the committee that made the decision (b) how was the selection of the membership made in each case (c) what were the qualifications of each?

3. Were studies made within the area and, if so (a) what type of studies (b) who made them (c) at what cost?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

FIRE ALARM SYSTEMS AND PROCEDURES IN GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS

Question No. 5,164—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Mr. David Morley, a Deputy Secretary of the Treasury Board, receive a letter dated January 19, 1976 signed by Mr. C.A. Edwards, President of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, on the subject of fire alarm systems and procedures in government buildings?

2. Did the letter state in part "very grave dangers to government employees, members of the PSAC and others, exist as a result of inadequate as well as non-existent fire alarm systems and procedures in federal government buildings"?

3. Did the letter list five alleged examples of what it called such deficiencies?

4. Did the letter also state in part "the lack of equipment, trained personnel and testing procedures presents, in our opinion, a serious threat to the safety of our members employed by the Government of Canada?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. Yes.

4. Yes; (Arrangements have been made by the Treasury Board Secretariat for meetings between the Dominion Fire Commissioner's office (Department of Public Works), which is responsible for fire safety matters in Federal. government buildings, and representatives of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, to discuss the matters raised in Mr. Edwards' letter).

MOVING OF MARKER BUOY

Question No. 5,182—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Department of Transport investigate the moving of a marker buoy in the St. Lawrence River main channel between Hillcrest and Black Charlie Island near Brockville, Ontario, a distance of approximately 75 yards downstream and 25 yards closer to the mainland into shallow water on or about April 1, 1976 and, if so, with what results?

2. Was it established that this dangerous situation to St. Lawrence Seaway shipping was caused by huge swells thrown-up by a United States Coast Guard vessel travelling at excessive speeds in Canadian waters and, if so, what are the details of any protest filed with American authorities?

3. Did officials of the Department publicly state at the time of the incident, that Canadian authorities have no recourse of action against the American Coast Guard cutters speeding in Canadian waters and, if so (a) for what reason (b) on what date and under what agreement did Canada surrender its right to deal with such foreign vessels breaking the laws of the country?

4. Does such a condition interfere with Canadian Sovereignty and, if so, what steps will be taken to remedy this situation?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. The buoy was found to be off its station and was replaced in its advertised position.

2. No. Movement of the buoy was probably caused by ice. A USCG vessel was reported by a private citizen to have passed through the area at high speed. This information was passed to the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, the vessel's operational authority at the time of the passage.

3. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) Not applicable.

4. Not applicable in view of the response to Part 3.

ST. LAWRENCE ISLANDS NATIONAL PARK—ACQUISITION OF LAND UP TO MARCH 31, 1976

Question No. 5,202—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the Estimates for 1976-77, which show a sum of $300,000 budgeted for "acquisition of land" in the St. Lawrence Islands National Park up to March 31, 1976, what is the land which was acquired or which was in the actual process of being acquired up to March 31, 1976 and, what is the legal property description in each case?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): No property was acquired up to March 31, 1976. Properties in the actual process of being acquired up to March 31, 1976 are as follows: (A) Part of an island now known as MacDonald Island in the River St. Lawrence, Township of Leeds, County of Leeds as shown on Plan No. 120 registered in the Registry Office for the said County and containing 1.0 acres, more or less; and Islands numbered 12B and 12C (known locally as Leeward Island) in the River St. Lawrence opposite the Township of Leeds in the County of Leeds according to Registered Plan No. 120 of the islands in said river. (B) Lot 1 according to Registered Plan 313 in the Township of Leeds, in the County of Leeds (part of Melville or Hay Island); and part of Melville or Hay Island in the Admiralty Group of the Thousand Islands opposite the Town of Gananoque in the Township of Leeds in the County of Leeds, containing an area of 60.35 acres, more or less.

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT AT MALLORYTOWN LANDING—ST. LAWRENCE ISLANDS NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 5,223—Mr. Cossitt:

1. How many students will be hired for the summer by Parks Canada at Mallorytown Landing Park in the St. Lawrence Islands National Park and, in each case (a) how many will be required to be bilingual (b) are all applicants being asked if they are bilingual at the time of applying?

2. Is the government aware that this Park is used primarily by local English-speaking residents of the Leeds County area and by English-speaking visitors from the United States and, if so, what is the purpose of insisting on bilingualism?

3. Has the government kept exact statistics or made a survey of the number of non-English speaking persons who make use of Mallorytown Landing Park during the summer months and (a) if so, what was the result of such survey (b) if not, will any bilingual requirement be dropped in order that local English-speaking students will be able to have an opportunity of being hired for the positions?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mallorytown Landing is not a park in itself but mainly the mainland visitor services area to the St. Lawrence Islands National Park in total. The following information is in response to the question but in reference to the St. Lawrence Islands Park.

1. The Parks Canada Program has a total of 42 positions to fill for the summer at St. Lawrence Islands National Park. Any person from the local area possessing the qualifications required for the jobs is eligible for employment. (a) Twenty-seven of the 42 positions have been filled with summer students. Four of the 42 positions require a knowledge of both official languages. Thirty-one people from the local area have been hired for the summer, of which total, 16 are students. (b) Only applicants being interviewed for the bilingual positions were asked if they were bilingual. Two of the four bilingual positions were filled through the Summer Student Exchange Programme between Quebec and Ontario.

2. The government is fully aware that this Park is used primarily by local English-speaking residents of the Leeds County area and by other English-speaking visitors but regardless of this fact, in keeping with the spirit and intent of the Official Languages Act, must ensure that services to the travelling public are provided or made available by the Program in both official languages should they be required, as per Section 10 of the Act.

3. Surveys or exact statistics have not been compiled on the number of non-English-speaking persons making use of Mallorytown Landing but, by the same token, the opportunity for employment of local English-speaking students has not been hindered by a high demand for a bilingual capability as per our response to Question 1.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—RATES

Question No. 5,236—Mr. Forrestall:

How much higher, in percentage terms, would the rates, in the St. Lawrence Seaway, have to be to make it fully compensatory and discharge the spirit of the obligations placed on the corporation under its statute?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority advises as follows: For the year 1976-77, the projected income from tolls would have to be increased by 310 per cent to enable the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority to discharge its obligations under its Act (in thousand).

(a) Expenses 1976-1977—$38,556; Capital Expenditures—$2,228; Total $40,784. (b) Income—$26,980. 40,784/26,-980 = 151 per cent or 51 per cent more. (c) Interest—$45,750. 40,784 + 45,750: Total $86,534. 86,534/26,980 = 320 per cent or 220 per cent more. (d) Repayment of Capital—$24,000. 817,500/34 years = $24,000. 86,534 + 24,000: Total $110,534. 110,534/26,980 = 410 per cent or 310 per cent more.

RATES—CARGO

Question No. 5,243—Mr. Forrestall:

What is the Department of Transport's best estimate on what rates would be required for the year 1976 on cargo moving through the St. Lawrence Seaway to make the Seaway fully compensatory if the following assumptions were met in full (a) a cargo flow identical to that experienced in the year in which the St. Lawrence Seaway enjoyed the largest tonnage in its history (b) the same ratio of bulk cargo to general cargo rates which prevail at the present time (i.e. 40¢ per ton vs 90¢ per ton) (c) capital costs and capital debt to be totally recovered by the year 2010 (d) all operating costs for the year 1976 to be recovered from cargo assessments?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority advises as follows: Under the assumptions indicated in the question, the rates for cargo moving through the St. Lawrence Seaway would have to increase to approximately $1.65 per ton of bulk cargo and to approximately $3.70 per ton of general cargo (in thousands).

(a) 1973 Income from tolls—$24,700. (b) Rates are $0.40 per ton for bulk and $0.90 per ton for general cargo. (c) Capital repayment—$24,000; Interest charges—$45,700; Expenses—$40,700: Total $110,500. 110,500/24,700 = 4.1. Bulk cargo rate of $0.40 × 4.1 = $1.64 per ton; $1.65 per ton. General cargo rate of $0.90 × 4.1 = $3.69 per ton; $3.70 per ton.

MEMBERS OF CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

Question No. 5,294—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. What is the name and address of each member of the Canadian Dairy Commission?

2. Were any members of the Commission milk producers before their appointment and, if so, were they producers of natural or industrial milk?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Powers, Ellard R.R. 1, Beachburg, Ontario; Thibaudeau, Jules R.R. 2, Thurso, Quebec; Johnson, Horace M. 1285 Cahill Dr., Apt. 706, Ottawa, Ontario.

2. Yes, all three members were milk producers before their appointment, E. Powers—integrated fluid producer, J. Thibaudeau—industrial milk producer, H. M. Johnson—fluid producer.

HOTEL ACCOMMODATION

Question No. 5,338—Mr. Cossitt:

Has the Inn of the Provinces received business from the government since it opened and, if so (a) in what amounts (b) for what purpose (c) from which departments?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The information requested is not readily available. To provide an accurate reply in its entirety, would entail a lengthy and costly examination of the accounts of every department and agency including their regional offices. The costs in manpower and time to undertake such a large amount of work would be prohibitive.

HOTEL ACCOMMODATION

Question No. 5,353—Mr. Cossitt:

Has Chateau Montebello received business from the government since it opened and, if so (a) in what amounts (b) for what purpose (c) from which departments (d) on what dates (e) what was the total amount received from all departments (f) in each case, what are the names of (i) senior Public Service officials (ii) Cabinet Ministers involved?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The information requested is not readily available. To provide an accurate reply in its entirety, would entail a lengthy and costly examination of the accounts of every department and agency including their regional offices. The costs in manpower and time to undertake such a large amount of work would be prohibitive.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION—LOANS

Question No. 5,354—Mr. Neil:

1. By province, how many applications for loans under Part IV of the Farm Credit Corporation Act were received and how many were approved?

2. What was the average amount of each such loan?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture):

Part IV Loans under the Farm Credit Act, 1975-76*

Province	1. Loans Approved Number	2. Average Amount $
British Columbia	10	61,930
Alberta	146	68,790
Saskatchewan	132	68,853
Manitoba	36	44,192
Ontario	154	76,368
Quebec	16	57,906
New Brunswick	5	42,600
Nova Scotia	2	55,400
Prince Edward Island	3	53,467
Newfoundland

* Statistics are not maintained on number of applications by Parts. Applications under various Parts of the Act are processed in the same manner. They are not identified by Part until approved.

* * *

[English]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 3,720 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

[Text]

CHICKEN IMPORTS AND EXPORTS

Question No. 3,720—Mr. Rondeau:

1. From 1970 to 1975 what was the (a) value (b) number of broiler chickens (i) imported (ii) exported?

2. (a) Which companies imported and exported the chickens (b) in each case, what quantity was involved?

3. With respect to the operations, how long are importation permits valid?

4. In 1975, how many companies held a permit for the (a) importation (b) exportation of broiler chickens?

5. During the past five years, what was the value of broiler chickens imported and exported by Jos Friedman Company of Saint-Lin, Quebec?

6. What subsidy was granted by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to Jos Friedman Company of Saint-Lin, Quebec?

7. During the past five years (a) what was the value of broiler chickens bought by Air Canada, Canadian National, the National Harbours Board, other Crown corporations, the Department of Supply and Services and the Canadian Penitentiary Service (b) what proportion was imported?

8. On the average, at what price were the broiler chickens (a) imported (b) sold and in what way were they sold?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Blais: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED GOVERNMENT INACTION IN FINDING SOLUTION TO PROBLEM OF POLLUTANTS

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent) moved:

That this House deplores the government's insensitivity and lack of action with respect to the critical problem of pollutants; in particular, that of mercury poisoning, which has had a destructive effect on the economic, social and health status of native people.

[Mr. Whelan.]

He said: Mr. Speaker, in a very personal way, I do not recall an issue that has concerned me more than that of the problem of mercury and its many ramifications. This motion before the House is in response to the government's insensitivity to the mercury problem and its obvious pretence that a social, economic and health crisis is non-existent. The problem has been particularly devastating to the native community. In human terms, it has been a tragedy of appalling proportions, and in the eyes of Canadians and the international community it has been a national disgrace.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), who extols the virtues of the government's role in the development of a health care system, has viewed the problem with minimal interest and action. The minister was content to relegate the matter to an interdepartmental committee which is well recognized as the sophisticated bureaucratic method that is utilized to diffuse a non-priority item. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan), who has a very special responsibility and mandate on behalf of native people and who should have provided strong, decisive leadership from the outset, has conveniently played the game of jurisdictional authority, again at the expense of native people.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand) has never viewed the problem in a serious manner and, indeed, a former minister of the environment, when addressing the executive council of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association at the Royal York Hotel on April 8, 1970, clearly indicated that a problem did not exist. I quote as follows from his text entitled "The Polluter Must Pay":

> Fortunately, we have caught our mercury problem in time. We have caught it before there has been any real danger to human beings. Once spotted, we have closed the fishery. Either that or we have bought up all the fish and had them destroyed. Nothing has escaped the watchfull eye of our federal inspection service, a service which is regarded the world over as tops.

I want to emphasize that the problem bridges provincial boundaries, that the problem today has grown in scope and magnitude and has ramifications, in my view, that demand a very strong federal presence. I want to make it emphatically clear that the major responsibility rests with federal authorities. Indeed, as the debate unfolds today I have no doubt the federal government can, and should, be censored for its role, or, more appropriately, its lack of role in this sordid affair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Holmes: Historically, the federal government has had a callous attitude in dealing with health problems affecting the native people—which constitutionally, I must remind the House, is a federal responsibility. Farley Mowat, in his book "The Desperate People" describes the virtual extinction of the inland Eskimos of the Keewatin district in the Northwest Territories. His chronicle of events should have served as an irrefutable argument for the necessity of immediate government intervention when the mercury problem first appeared. Father René Fumoleau, a priest with years of service in the north, in his recent book "As Long as the Land Shall Last", in describing the 'flu epidemic of 1928 relates the unbelievable medical tragedies suffered by the aboriginal people of that day and the failure of the federal government to respond to a crisis situation that affected human lives.

For a moment I would like to reflect on that tragic period in Canadian history as related by Father Fumoleau, because it is analogous to the problem we are debating today. If we substitute the word "mercury" for more familiar medical terms such as "tuberculosis," "smallpox", "measles" or "Spanish 'flu" which afflicted the natives of that day, one will find an amazing similarity not only in terms of human tragedy but in terms of government inaction.

Dr. Bourget, during his visits at that time to the territories in 1928, described a race attempting to survive but slowly dying from the white man's sickness. Influenza killed at least 200 in his area along the Mackenzie River in three weeks. Dr. Bourget predicted at that time that tuberculosis would become more active as a result of the Indian's weakened physical condition, yet despite pleas to Ottawa for medical help at that time his advice was ignored—and, of course, his predictions became reality.

In the years following the epidemic, Ottawa, despite the warning, actually reduced funds for the medical care of Indians. Between 1931 and 1934 the total budget for health services for all Indians in Canada dropped from $1,050,000 to $793,000, which included salaries for doctors, nurses, and transportation. By 1936 the government was paying less than $12 per year per Indian in the Northwest Territories for all medical services—and this was for a native population riddled with acute and chronic illnesses. Government directives during that period bordered on the inhuman and can best be characterized as lack of response to a problem which was felt by those in authority in Ottawa to be either exaggerated or of no importance.

The director of Indian Affairs advised all agents on January 14, 1934, that the department would expect a reduction in drug expenditures and demands of about 50 per cent. His directive went on to say that there would be no funds for tuberculosis surveys, treatment in sanatoria or hospitals, of chronic tuberculosis or other chronic conditions, nor in fact for any treatment except for acute sickness. In 1939 the department issued the following directive to Indian agents across Canada: a reduction of one day in the average length of stay of sick Indians in hospital would save about $15,000; it should not be difficult to save $10,000 in drug costs by limiting the amount of cough medicine, linaments, tablets, and so on, given to Indians. That black period in our history has reappeared in a new form, namely, mercury poisoning.

● (1230)

I have no doubt Canadians are shocked by these events and would consider the circumstances unconscionable in our society, yet it is precisely such an issue that is before us. As I stated previously, we have a social, economic and health crisis similar to the previous examples; but because new terminology—namely, mercury poisoning or Minamata disease—has been introduced, the government has attempted to mesmerize the public into believing the problem will magically disappear, and consequently has abrogated its responsibility to deal with the issue in a decisive and responsible manner.

I have been astonished by those in government who use the feeble excuse that mercury poisoning is an exotic disease recently discovered. Let me briefly place the matter in perspective. The mercury-contaminated fish problem came to the attention of the world in the city of Minamata, Japan, in 1953. Hundreds have died from that experience and thousands remain crippled, with an uncertain future. The problem has been well documented in the United States, Iraq and Sweden, again with scores of deaths and permanent neurological disability.

In 1964, at a major international conference, Dr. John Sprague, representing Canada from the Fisheries Research Board, was informed of the seriousness of the mercury problem by Dr. Jun Ui, and despite Dr. Sprague's interest and concern on returning to Canada no action was taken. In 1969, Jensen and Jernlov published the first report of aquatic organisms converting mercury to the far more toxic methyl mercury. Dr. Leo Buffa represented Canada at the International Mercury Conference at Prague in 1973 to obtain information for chloralkali regulations. At the international conference in Stockholm in 1970, Minamata patients were present with appropriate medical documentation. Surely the federal government was aware of these developments, and with the knowledge of industrial complexes in Canada utilizing mercury it could have taken active measures during this period to assess the magnitude of the problem.

Let me briefly refer to the Canadian situation. A brief prepared by the University of Saskatchewan and presented to the federal Department of Fisheries and Forestry in May, 1969, pointed out abnormal levels of mercury in fish taken from the Saskatchewan River below Saskatoon. Four months later, high mercury levels were found in fish taken from the Wabigoon River in northern Ontario. The discovery spread to the English River, and consequently the Wabigoon and English River systems were closed to commercial fishing in 1970. Mercury levels in fish from Clay Lake, northwest of Dryden, had the highest readings anywhere in the world, including fish obtained from the Minamata area. The Manitoba government lost its court case in the Supreme Court of Canada against mercury polluting companies upstream of Lake Winnipeg. Other parts of Ontario, including Lake St. Clair, the Detroit and St. Clair Rivers and the Ottawa River, have been affected. The Bell River system in Quebec is seriously polluted.

Following the ban on commercial fishing in Ontario forgivable loans were received by the affected fishermen. Despite the inadequacy of these loans, can the government possibly explain why the commercial fishermen at Matagami have not received one cent in compensation? Can the government possibly explain why Dow Chemical was forced to change its process for handling effluents during 1970, yet the same action was not taken with Dryden and Domtar. The FMC plant in Squamish, British Columbia, has displayed effluent technology effective since 1971. One can only ask why this knowledge was not utilized by the federal government in establishing their chloralkali regulations.

Mr. Speaker, there are other examples. Surely the evidence is overwhelming that the federal government has had knowledge of a serious mercury problem for several years, but despite this fact it has displayed blatant disregard for the seriousness of the problem, and only recently—and, I might add, under intense pressure—has it indicated some concern.

What has mercury pollution meant in human terms? The results have been devastating. We have seen self-sufficient native communities disintegrate. We have seen native people demoralized, and social chaos rise from the ashes while politicians and officials appear determined to pretend that no problem exists. Alcoholism, drunkenness, violence, crime and poverty have replaced self-sufficiency. Confrontation between the native and non-native population has replaced the need for a united front to fight a common enemy. The native, with his loss of traditional lifestyle, with his loss of independence and loss of dignity, has become the victim trapped in the jaws of an insensitive government.

As an example, among the principal benefactors of the fishing industry, both commercial and guiding, were two Indian reserves in the Dryden-Kenora area, namely, Grassy Narrows and White Dog. Others affected were shore workers in handling, processing, marketing, transportation and in supplying boats, gear, fuel and other commodities and services. What were the results? These two communities, which had previously been economically self-supporting, now are idle, dependent upon government handouts, and the people live in dread of the effect mercury will have on them and their children.

Before 1969 and the closure of the water system to commercial fishing, the total welfare budget for White Dog was substantially less than $50,000. By 1972 the figure was $93,550, and by 1974 it was $162,000. At Grassy Narrows the figure was less than $30,000 bere 1969, and had risen to $90,000 in 1971 and $122,000 by 1973. Prior to 1970, Ontario had 2,000 fishermen—56 in the Wabigoon, English and Winnipeg River systems. After the March, 1970, mercury fishing ban, approximately 240 Ontario fishermen were out of business, including all but three of the 56 in northwest Ontario. An estimated 250 natives from the two reserves were employed at tourist camps as guides, cooks and other jobs. Not only did they receive wages, but they frequently received gratuities and gifts to supplement their income. What has been the reward for these guides and tourist camp employees? Not one cent in compensation, but the risk of developing Minamata disease and the prospect of a number of guides recognized as high-risk patients having to return to guide work and continual eating of contaminated fish.

I do not for a moment underemphasize the impact the mercury problem has had on tourist camp owners, both those who have closed their doors in response to the health hazards and those who have remained open. Similarly, I do not under-emphasize the impact it has had on tourism in the area. All have suffered losses. However, the problem transcends the instinctive response of some individuals, fearful for their future, to use surreptitious methods, for reasons of self-interest, with risk to both native and non-native people. The government's lack of response to these fears has, predictably, undermined the seriousness of the mercury problem, and by procrastinating it has not only compounded the fears of those affected but has delayed a positive response to the overriding issue of a serious environmental health problem.

[Mr. Holmes.]

On Tuesday, April 13, Bob Kabestra appeared before the Standing Committee on the Environment. His testimony was not one of anger or vengeance: it reflected the wisdom of his years, yet a sense of hopelessness for the future. Bob Kabestra had been a successful commercial fisherman, independent, self-sufficient and proud of his accomplishments. When his commercial fishing business was suspended he was making a good income: he owned three homes, three trucks, three boats with motors, nets and other equipment essential for his vocation. With the stroke of a pen, all his dreams and accomplishments were erased. Does the government have a conscience in response to his fate? Have they taken any action which would indicate he is a human being with a serious problem? Bob Kabestra does not think so, and I agree.

● (1240)

I should like to say a few words about Minamata disease, or mercury poisoning. I find it inconceivable that there should remain people who believe the disease entity is a myth and does not exist. Excluding the documented deaths and cases in other countries, I have stated in the past, and will repeat, that Minamata disease is a reality in Canada and I anticipate additional cases will be documented in the future. Dr. André Barbeau, director of the neurology department of the Montreal Institute of Clinical Research, well known for his discovery of L Dopa used in the treatment of Parkinson's disease, and who has worked with Japanese specialists in studying Minamata disease, has clearly demonstrated its presence in Cree Indians in Quebec and has also described symptoms in two white people.

From testimony we received at the standing committee on April 13, which has been confirmed by numerous articles, he has identified six definite cases, ten probable and several others tested as possible. Time does not permit a detailed analysis of the medical implications. Suffice it to say that there is overwhelming evidence related to such matters as length of time before symptoms appear, the added risk of continued exposure to those with known, elevated levels of mercury, the problems related to pregnancy, genetic and congenital problems, to indicate with a high degree of predictability that additional cases will appear. In addition, I am most concerned that a request which was placed before the Minister of National Health and Welfare by the president of Treaty No. 3, Fred Kelly, asking for assistance and for Dr. Barbeau to appear in that area as a known expert in neurology has received no response as yet from the Department of National Health and Welfare. Perhaps we will have some response in that respect today.

Notwithstanding the fact that there are individuals in government who are deeply concerned about the problems related to mercury—and I believe this view is shared by individual members in all corners of this House—I must re-emphasize that the government has not provided leadership to resolve, or indeed to formulate an effective program to deal with mercury and its many ramifications. Indeed, the government's record of inactivity is not only inexplicable but it is inexcusable. I have no doubt that government speakers will make reference to the recent rash of activity that has occurred within various departments on an ad hoc basis, but as Fred Kelly, president of Treaty No.

3, so aptly described the situation at the standing committee meeting on April 13, 1976, activity can only be measured in terms of effectiveness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Holmes: If effectiveness is the appropriate criterion, and I readily accept that definition, then the federal government has failed dismally by not putting forward proposals in this respect. With the knowledge of a critical mercury problem in the hands of the government for several years, who on the government side is prepared or is able to defend the long period of inaction? There is no defence; there is only rationalization.

Why did the federal government refuse to invoke the federal Fisheries Act in the early 1970s before the chloralkali regulations were introduced? It was apparent the polluted waters crossed provincial boundaries, and if the act had been invoked and the Dryden plant had been closed for one day it would have alerted the native people, and indeed the surrounding communities, to the various procedures that would have been available to them in the courts.

We have evidence of a federal interministerial committee with NIB participation and provincial observers who had a mandate to collect and co-ordinate information concerning mercury. Prior to 1975 the meetings were infrequent, and despite numerous recommendations it was apparent their mandate was too restrictive; they had no decision-making capability and no secretariat to handle the workload. Again, no satisfactory explanation was given as to the lack of local native participation, and the lack of decision-making authority has made the body ineffectual.

The federal government was aware of the FMC plant in Squamish, B.C., that has had the technology since 1971 to keep their mercury discharge below the provincial and federal regulations, yet the regulations introduced are not based on this known FMC available and practical technology. There is no apparent effort to correlate the various scientific studies and to co-ordinate a plan effectively to overcome the adverse effects of pollution. In this regard it should be noted that on examination of mercury effluent reports from major chloralkali industries in Canada it was found there have been monthly averages during which the mercury discharge was above the standards set by regulation. Again, no explanation or action.

It is my understanding that the government is presently considering funding a litigation study, and hopefully we will have a response from the government in this regard before the debate is concluded. There is no effective way to place a monetary value on the destruction of a traditional way of life, yet compensation must be considered a priority item. The federal government has seen fit to assist in similar situations, for example, in James Bay. Is it any wonder the native communities have lost faith in the government? They have ignored native requests, native involvement and have simply responded with ad hoc, makeshift programs.

Testimony revealed that as recently as September, 1975, a native proposal for $60,000 to $70,000 to have mercury workers assist with the problems in the native communities was rejected by the Department of National Health and Welfare because they refused to recognize the presence of a mercury crisis. I have not heard serious objections raised to the $2.5 million directed to the Dryden Pulp and Paper Company from the Department of Regional and Economic Expansion, of which approximately $600,000 was spent in converting to a mercury-free process. However, when the transaction occurs under the umbrella of a public relations program, without regard to social, economic and health problems in the native communities, is it any wonder that cynicism and loss of confidence in the government prevails?

The critical problem of an alternate protein source of food has existed and continues to exist. I sense the importance of this matter has struck a respondent chord with government. But, again, the evidence is not convincing that the problem has been resolved. Let me also point out the obvious difficulties of convincing the native people in the communities affected to discontinue eating a long-standing stable of their diet when non-natives continue to eat fish from contaminated waters. In this regard I should also point out that there are studies to indicate abnormally high mercury levels may appear in these same individuals who consume contaminated fish for short periods, I ask the government, is this practice safe for the uninformed transient, and can the government assure these people that they will not be affected by this health hazard?

I ask the government, which undoubtedly has the authority, why they have refused to ban fishing in critical areas where cases of mercury poisoning have been clearly established. What are the government's plans to feed the natives at Matagami and Mistassini, Quebec, whose diet in the past consisted of 250,000 pounds of fish annually? Can this be replaced by other game? What other alternatives does the government propose? Will the government give favourable consideration to the excellent in-depth brief presented by the grand council of the Cree which includes the screening program for mercury in fish during 1976 at the Mistassini, Waswanipi and Niemiscau regions of James Bay?

● (1250)

This debate would not be complete without a comment about the Environmental Contaminants Act. I recall that when this legislation was introduced it was described as the most progressive piece of environmental legislation in any nation, and as the panacea to cure all environmental health problems. I viewed with skepticism the effectiveness of the bill, and I recall vividly the wide ministerial discretion which was embodied in it. One would be hard pressed to find an act in which the word "may" was used more frequently than in the Environmental Contaminants Act. The basic philosophy of the act can best be described as closing the barn door after the horse is out. The act has not been effective in this instance, and I respectfully submit that it requires significant amendments if it is, in fact, to be an effective piece of legislation to prevent environmental health hazards.

Out of this morass of callousness, insensitivity and pretence I think the question can logically be asked: Is there a solution? I believe the answer to that is an unqualified "Yes". Above all, the government must demonstrate a positive attitude, not only by words but also by action. It must demonstrate, in unequivocal terms, the necessity for a strong federal presence to deal with the basic issue of a major environmental problem which affects both Indians and non-Indians alike.

For the immediate problem related to the communities directly affected by mercury pollution there is an obvious need for a central co-ordinating committee with a mandate for action and with meaningful input by those affected—in particular, native organizations. The natives have lost confidence in government and a legion of workers at this stage, irrespective of their good intentions, would be viewed with distrust and in my opinion would prove to be ineffectual. Confidence can only be regained at this late date by meaningful involvement of the communities affected and assurance of direct contact with the decision-makers.

When native reports have been rejected, when long-standing questions remain unanswered, when inconsistencies in the law exist, when endless delays for action are common, and when nameless faces revolve through desolate communities without solutions, is it any wonder the natives view with skepticism the sincerity of the government? Re-growth, the re-establishment of self-sufficiency, independence and a sense of dignity can only emanate from meaningful community involvement. I believe the Indian people have shown they are reasonable, capable and responsible in their approach to the problem, and their involvement should be a major priority.

There is an obvious need for a mechansim to serve as an early warning system for future environmental health problems so that decision-makers will have immediate information available to them. As I indicated previously, there is an obvious need for the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to provide funds for legal aid. In this regard, the Minister of the Environment, in the same address to which I made reference at the outset, stated later in his speech to the executive council of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association:

> Our Freshwater Fish Marketing Board has already spent more than $300,000 helping to contain the mercury problem on the prairies.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Holmes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try to be brief in summarizing the remainder of my comments. I was quoting the Minister of the Environment, who said:

> There, the local fishermen have been prevented from starving during the winter months. But the Canadian taxpayer cannot be expected to foot this bill for ever. Naturally, we are looking around for someone else to take the government off the hook. I suggest this someone else is the polluter. He must pay the bill in respect to mercury pollution, just as the Electric Reduction Company Limited footed the bill in respect to elemental phosphorous in Newfoundland in 1969.

Perhaps before termination of the debate the government will express in clear terms its present policy in this respect. There is need for a comprehensive review of the appearance of mercury in the Canadian environment, and surely this must be orchestrated by the federal government. Notwithstanding the fact that we have a mercury problem of crisis dimensions, with many known factors, there continue to be many unanswered questions related to mercury which require comprehensive research and, again, surely this is a role for the federal government. The necessity for such research becomes more readily apparent when government members attempt to defend the indefensible by exploiting gaps in our knowledge, for political advantage, rather than admitting the obvious: that a problem exists. This approach is about as logical as rejecting cancer as a disease entity because we cannot effect a cure in all instances and because large gaps in knowledge persist which will only be bridged through research.

I have referred to the federal Fisheries Act and to the Environmental Contaminants Act. Suffice it to say that the former has not been invoked at times when it would have been constructive, and the latter requires amendments if it is to accomplish the goals for which it was introduced.

As I indicated by examples at the outset, and more specifically by the mercury problem, the entire attitude of the federal government toward the health of our native people is deplorable and is tantamount to negligence. I know the Minister of National Health and Welfare is aware of the health status of native people, yet minimal corrective action is taken. Finally, I must emphasize that the mercury problem does not exist in isolation but is a prototype for innumerable environmental health hazards, many of which are directly related to occupations, but an equally large number are of potential risk to unwary Canadians. However, this is another topic. I have discussed this problem in the House on previous occasions, and simply reiterate at this time that there is clearly a role for the federal government to assume responsibility for the co-ordination of an effective program for environmental health problems which are clearly distinguishable from the traditional health problems identified with our health care system, which has been a provincial responsibility.

From the point of view of long-term planning, I was particularly disappointed that the Minister of National Health and Welfare rejected the fifth recommendation in the interim report entitled "Exposure to methyl mercury in Grassy Narrows and White Dog reserves". Dr. T. W. Clarkson, professor and director for the centre for environmental health sciences of the medical school of the University of Rochester, called for the establishment of a national centre in environmental health to deal with environmental health hazards from methyl mercury and other pollutants. I spoke of a similar concept in this House on February 26, 1973, utilizing the national problem of drug and alcohol abuse as an example, and I suspect that this reasonable and responsible recommendation by Dr. Clarkson will receive the same attention and will gather the same dust!

I should like to conclude with one quotation from a favourite book of mine. Incidentally, the author was a physician. It is from "The Story of San Michele", by Axel Munthe, which I recommend to all hon. members. In a special preface for the American edition, he wrote:

> The greatest writer of short sensational stories I know is life. But is life always true?

Mr. Speaker, I will await the government's response to his observation and his question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, before I begin my remarks on the important topic before the House, may I congratulate the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes) for the excellent speech he made before lunch.

Some of the aspects of mercury poisoning relate to the poisoning of fish in the lakes, rivers and streams of this country. I have had some experience in looking after fish—believe it or not. In my office I have a couple of goldfish in a bowl. Every day I clean out the bowl and put in fresh water and food. Every day the fish eat the food, use its energy and put the waste product back into the water. There is no filter or pump in the bowl, and you can imagine how the bowl looks at the end of the day. It is so cloudy you can hardly see the fish. But that is all right for the fish, because it is my responsibility to come in the next day and flush out the bowl.

I think hon. members have been talking about the same sort of problem which troubles my fish. The difference is that no one seems willing to take the responsibility of flushing out our much larger fish bowl. There is another difference, Mr. Speaker. In our case the fish who make the water dirty are not the same fish that have to live in the water.

Hon. members will, I am sure, talk a great deal about mercury pollution and the poisoning of fish by mercury. Human beings consume these poisoned fish. But that is not our only concern. Most of us know that mercury-poisoned fish are eaten by bears, seals, otters, wolverines and other forms of wildlife on which our native people depend for their living. Really, what we are talking about is not new in Canada and is not restricted to Ontario and Quebec. For a number of years we have known about the presence of mercury and other industrial pollutants right across the country. We have known about this, but today we still quarrel over jurisdiction and liability. If we are to let the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) lead the way, we shall probably end up quarrelling over freezers.

Let us look at part of the record. In the Maritimes, as far back as 1971 officials in Nova Scotia were setting up task forces and other government agencies to examine how mercury was affecting the swordfishing industry. That was five years ago. We have just heard about conditions in Quebec, the province in which a company was allowed to dump mercury in quantities greater than the government's new regulations allowed to be dumped. They did this for a whole year after those regulations went into effect. Four of the people who show symptoms of Minamata disease live downriver from that plant.

I have heard some researchers claim that if and when the government releases enough money to do a thorough study of northwestern Quebec, we shall find that all that region is contaminated by mercury. If we move to Ontario, we can isolate three separate areas which are contaminated by mercury. The northeastern part of the province is contaminated, including Lake Timiskaming. The water from that lake drains into the water of the Ottawa River which flows just behind your chair, Mr. Speaker. Still in Ontario, there is the English-Wabagoon River system. Mercury from these waters has caused symptoms of Minamata disease, as other hon. members have already pointed out. What is more, we have known about mercury contamination in the area for over five years. Then there is the St. Clair river, the first place, I think, to feel the effects of mercury pollution. We have known about that, too, for over five years.

I now come to Manitoba. That province is polluted by the same source of pollution which affected northwestern Ontario. We have know about mercury in Lake Winnipeg since at least 1970. Manitoba can also boast—if that is the appropriate term—of mercury pollution in two other river systems, the Saskatchewan and the Red rivers. We knew about pollution in those rivers as far back as 1970. Of course, Saskatchewan is represented on our list by the Saskatchewan River.

Then there is Alberta. If you read Time magazine of September 26, 1969, you will find a little story about mercury contamination in that province. It seems that mercury-based fungicides used on seed grain was the source of that contamination. It caused 100 per cent of the upland game birds tested in the southern part of the province to have mercury levels in their blood between 5 and 16 times greater than the maximum acceptable level. We knew about that in 1969, Mr. Speaker.

Then there are a couple of candidates for our list from what they call God's country—British Columbia. Back in April, 1970, the government had to close Upper Howe Sound to all fishing because of mercury contamination from a chemical plant in Squamish. Just to prove I am not being prejudiced, when I make this little list, I will throw in some examples from my own constituency. We seem to specialize in arsenic in Yellowknife. In 1969 researchers knew about it and did not tell anyone. We have mercury, too. In Yellowknife, in 1975, researchers from the National Indian Brotherhood found two little children who had excessively high levels of mercury in their hair. We also have fish with some of the highest readings in North America around Great Bear Lake and Tuktoyaktuk.

● (1410)

That is only a partial list, but it comes from right across the country. Right across the country we have documented cases of mercury contamination going back five and six years. We know what happened in Minamata, and we know that it takes over 100 years for a river system to flush itself of this pollutant. If we knew all these things, why in the name of all that is holy did we wait until 1976—when we have documented cases of congenital Minamata disease—to have a debate in this House? What has the government done in all the years that it has possessed this knowledge? Nothing, Mr. Speaker—nothing but the bare minimum to protect itself from obvious charges.

I would like to recommend that hon. members opposite pay a visit to some of the native communities affected by this pollution, or at least to look at pictures of victims in Japan. Then they would get an idea of what this disease does and how painful, crippling and long-lasting the symptoms are. Then there is the most unjust thing of all about this pollution, the victims. Who are they? It is not the plant owners who must live with the fact that their children will never be able to speak to them. It is not the members of Canada's "go-go" consumer society who will have their livehood taken away. They will not be forced to live the soul-destroying life of welfare hand-outs. It is not the people who produce the chemicals, or who consume them. The people who must bear this pain, this incredible cost, are native people. It disgusts me.

These are people who have learned to live with the land; who treat it as the source of their life and their culture; who respect the land. They are the ones who are being forced to pay this price. They are paying it so someone else can sell newsprint cheaply in New York, so someone else can benefit from the sale of our mineral wealth abroad. That is what this kind of pollution is, Mr. Speaker. It is a kind of tax, a kind of hidden cost of operation. We are living high and paying very little for it right now—at least most of us. The people who are picking up our tab for the free and irresponsible ride we are taking are native people. They choose to live a life close to the land, and when we destroy that land we destroy them. I cannot think of a slower, more agonizing way to destroy a person than Minamata disease.

Members opposite have chosen from their ranks an insurance salesman to look after the affairs of Indians. They tell me that insurance salesman are pretty good at figuring odds, longshots and that kind of thing. Well, if his department knew about the possible damage that mercury could do five years ago, they sure played a longshot. They gambled that if they did nothing, nothing would happen. They were wrong. They did nothing, and we now have children who are being born with Minamata disease. This happen because the honourable insurance salesman opposite does not understand the land. He and all the others like him are too busy developing frontier resources to worry about the mess they left behind in the last place they visited.

What they do is bash away to capitalize on undeveloped natural resources with adequate or untested technology. That is the cause of this problem. If the silver mine owners in northern Ontario had known in 1910 what they were doing with all the mercury they were dumping into the lake, if a responsible government had known the reaction, then we would not be in this situation now. However, they did not know, we are in this situation, and we still have not learned. We still have not learned because the expert on the longshots over there is still "gung-ho" on using untested and inadequate technology in the north. He is gambling that the same thing that happened with early chloralkali plants and silver extraction methods will not happen with the new technology in the north. He just does not understand what land means to native people. Look at the half-hearted solutions he has come up with. In Quebec, he and the people like him are going to make up for the lost protein by shipping in freezers. They ship in these freezers and then expect that extra moose and beaver caught during the hunting season will replace the fish. Well, by my rough calculation this method will wipe out the entire moose and beaver population in a very short time. That is what I call long, range planning! In Grassy Narrows the plan is to go with the freezer trick and add a lot of welfare. Eventually they are going to relocate the people. This is typical of the mentality displayed opposite: if you dirty up the fishbowl, so what, just move on. We native people know that you cannot just move on, and people like the insurance salesman over there will have to learn it soon. When they have finished leaving their mark on the Arctic, there will literally be no place left to move. They will have to start living in the sediment of their own fishbowl.

[Mr. Firth.]

There has been a lot of buck-passing on this issue between the provincial and federal authorities. The responsibility clearly lies across the aisle here. The problem crosses provincial boundaries; it is a federal matter. The problem involves disruption of whole economies, and that is a federal matter. The problem involves native people; that is a federal matter, too. We have had five years of governments closing down fisheries, sending in freezers and grand welfare schemes. Why did we not see money, large amounts of money, committed to research into a means of stopping the destruction caused by mercury in the nervous system? Why did we not have pollution inventories in all areas where the possibility of mercury and other heavy metal pollution exists? We knew about it over five years ago. If we had done it then, maybe one or two of the people who now have Minamata disease would be healthy today.

Why, in 1972, when the new regulations for mercury came into effect, was there any mercury allowed at all? Everyone knew at that time that the chloralkali process was becoming outdated. Everyone knew that as soon as the present equipment had been written off it would be replaced by a process that did not use mercury. Why did the government not ban it entirely then? It would have cost the pulp and paper industry a lot of money, for one thing. They would have had to replace all that equipment early. But what has it cost the Cree of Mistassini? What price do you put on a child with congenital Minamata disease?

For 400 years native people have tried to help the European adapt to this land. It was easy at first. He needed our food and our ways to survive. However, we were unable to teach them one thing: you cannot destroy the land because the land sustains you. Now that we are one step away from filling this continent completely, I hoped that this lesson would have been learned. Apparently it has not. Look at it this way. We have tried to maintain our culture, based close to the land, for 400 years. It has not been easy. We have paid. Goodness knows we have paid. We have been forced to share our land with a culture that tried to assimilate us—tried to make us like them. Well, it did not work—at least until they invented this new tactic of destroying the very basis of our lives. It does no good to give us fish from other lakes. It does no good to give us welfare and take away our self-respect, and no good to move us to another place. These things do no good because we know that you cannot move away from your own fishbowl once you destroy it.

● (1420)

The government should finally start to act, to assess the damages where they belong, that is, on the companies that did the polluting in the first place, and from the public purse because the public allowed it to happen. We should have massive funding to work with the Japanese to find ways of containing mercury in both the environment and in the human nervous system. We need the development of alternate economies where our own have been destroyed, economies that will give native people their livelihood without the extremely high cost of welfare.

For a long time the government has allowed criminal negligence to occur and, Mr. Speaker, we do not need any more freezers.

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us today focuses on the critical problem of pollutants and in particular on mercury poisoning. I should like to deal primarily with the technical aspect of this problem and try to illustrate the perspective of the problem with respect to time—relating what has been going on, why it has and is taking the time it has and is taking, and what results there are and can be expected.

This is an area which primarily relates to research and development. One of the big problems that I have found in parliament in Ottawa is that most people do not know what research and development is, how it works and how long it takes. Research and development is not like a water tap that you can turn on and off. You can turn if off all right, but it will take seven years to turn it on again and get results. That is a good example of the time it takes to get results when tackling a serious problem such as this one and all the problems of pollution that face us in this generation.

There are several problems of pollution which are extremely important—asbestos, with the problem of asbestosis and radiation, especially natural radiation where you have radium which decomposes into radon, and radioactive gas. Government and industry have tackled this problem. In the mining of uranium ore, Eldorado Mines has installed extensive ventilation equipment to remove the radon gas in order to prevent miners being exposed to it. There are lead and arsenic and the problems of pollution and poisoning that have resulted from their use and abuse. We have learned more about them and how to eliminate the problem. On the question of organic phosphates, it is not too many years since Shell was bragging about TCP—tri-cresyl phosphate—in gasoline. Now, a decade later, we realize that this is a serious chemical pollutant which causes serious toxic problems which have to be dealt with. We are now trying to come to grips with the problems of organic phosphates.

The Great Lakes is another classic example of a problem that took years and years to develop before it was finally recognized and action was taken. Even though a tremendous amount of work is being done on the problem, it will take many years to clean up the Great Lakes, the worst one being, of course, Lake Erie. Although a lot of work has been done over the last decade, a great deal more still has to be done. The signs are, however, that we are beginning to win this terrible battle on pollution.

The motion before the House primarily deals with mercury and I will concentrate most of my remarks on that problem. It is only one of a vast array of pollutants, however, that we have to deal with. To illustrate how seriously the federal government considers this problem, I would point out that the federal Department of the Environment is the largest technical department of the federal government. There are many times when I wish other departments had more money to spend on technology and people to do research and development. This is an important area of the environment, however, and the federal government takes it seriously.

Is mercury a new problem? Is it a new material? Far from it, Mr. Speaker. You will recall that the manufacture of hats involves mercury. You will have heard the term "as mad as a hatter", or you may remember that in "Alice in Wonderland" there was a character called the Mad Hatter. The madness was due to mercury poisoning. When mercury is ingested it goes to the brain, the liver and the kidneys. It has deleterious effects on the brain that result in madness. Mad hatters have been known for a long time. Government and industry finally realized the danger and took steps to eradicate it. In 1947, as a result of the joint effort of government and industry, the mercury process for the treatment of rabbit fur in the making of hats was discontinued and an acid-carotin process was used to treat fur for the manufacture of hats. Mercury is no longer used in the hat industry and we do not have that pollution problem.

There are several sources of mercury, Mr. Speaker. The natural sources are the degassing of the earth's surface, evaporation by wind action, and volcanic action falling again on the earth's surface as rain. These sources contribute up to 50,000 tons per year—no small amount, Mr. Speaker. The contribution from manufacturing processes is about 10,000 tons per year, or one-fifth of what occurs naturally, both organic and inorganic. These come from various sources such as the chloralkali process which contributes about 25 per cent, the electrical industry which contributes a further 20 per cent, the paint industry which is responsible for 15 per cent, control and measuring devices a further 10 per cent, and the balance from such uses as dentistry where you have mercury amalgam, and detonators which use mercury fulminate.

Mercury is also released in the combustion of fossil fuels. Mankind may liberate up to 20,000 tons of mercury per year in the environment both as organic and inorganic mercury. This may be localized in hot spots where you have combustion—near mines, smelters, chemical plants and other areas of large-scale combustion. Mercury contamination on this earth is not due only to manufacturing, commercial and industrial uses. What are the levels of mercury that we must be concerned about? No element on this earth exists in zero concentration. Sometimes the amount is very difficult to measure, but we should know the problems and the limits. In humans, mercury is measured both in the blood and in the hair. Twenty parts per billion is now regarded as the maximum acceptable level although 100 parts per billion was the previous level, now this is retained as the lower level of the "at risk" group.

Mercury turns up in fish. I will explain more about how that happens later. In uncontaminated water—water completely removed from any commercial source of mercury pollution anywhere in the world—fish are produced with a range of mercury of .03 to .2 parts per million. So with no mercury contamination from an industrial source there will still be residual mercury in fish. There is no such thing as fish without any mercury content at all. The question is, what level is safe? The lower level recently suggested for fish when it forms a significant proportion of the diet, as with the Indian people, is .2 parts per million. The maximum level of tissue mercury acceptable in fish for commercial purposes is .5 parts per million. I will to refer to these levels later, but I wanted to put them on the record as a frame of reference.

The knowledge of how mercury gets into fish is very recent. In the fall of 1969, in Sweden, two scientists discovered that metal mercury in biologically active water such as that found in rivers very slowly converts into methyl mercury. Methyl mercury is a very toxic substance which is absorbed by many biological creatures, including fish.

● (1430)

It was in 1969 that for the first time it was realized that what had originally been thought of as inert material, metallic mercury, was able to change into a very toxic poison and get into the biological system. In the following spring of 1970, a few months later, action was taken by the provincial government of Ontario which launched a legal action against several companies in the chemical producing area near Sarnia, Ontario. The action was launched against Dow Chemical of Midland, Michigan, Dow Chemical of Canada in Sarnia, and against Wyandotte Chemicals of Michigan. Unfortunately, that legal battle is continuing to this day and is still not resolved. One of the reasons for this long delay is that a statement of claim had to be filed and was not filed until last year. The defence could not file their claim until a claim had been filed by the claimants.

Although the court case is not yet resolved, this did not stop the company from taking action, and it immediately took preventive measures to curtail the leakage of mercury from these mercury cells that were producing chlorine and caustic soda, or sodium hydroxide, in the Dow plant at Sarnia to the levels prescribed by the provincial government. They gathered as much information as they could, as quickly as possible, and came to appreciate the problem involved in trying to keep mercury down to a negligible level. They had to reduce it down to a teaspoonful a day, but still felt that was not satisfactory; so they ended up spending $40 million to replace this process by a diaphragm process whereby no mercury is used at all; the electrolyte mercury in this chlorine cell is changed to salt brine which is used instead. With no mercury in the process, there is consequently no mercury contamination or pollution.

It was the decision of the company to spend $40 million. This is no small expenditure, as I am sure hon. members will appreciate, and caused the company several problems in coming to this decision. This action was taken in 1970 and the new process, the diaphragm cell, was completed in 1973. In that year the mercury cells were closed down and the buildings torn down. So that Dow Chemical of Sarnia no longer has any chlorine cells in the mercury process, or any mercury pollution.

What was the result of that mercury going into the river system? Some of it very slowly, as we found out, became methyl mercury and was picked up by plant life in the area, consumed by the fish life and was incorporated into the liver and brains of the fish. The people downstream from this are the Chippewas of Sarnia, some of them living on the reservation on Walpole Island. There are 1,400 people located in the Lake St. Clair area. Several samplings were taken during the early 1970s and these confirm that there was a problem there of mercury pollution. Blood samples have been taken for quite some time, as recently as November and December of 1975. Of these recent samples, which are part of an ongoing program, 162 results were obtained. Some 150 were under the 20 parts per billion level and only one was over the 50 parts per billion level, indicating a serious problem. So that 150 out of 162 results proved to be well below the level prescribed by the health officials. A health education program has been started and persons with levels over 20 parts per billion are being retested and will be retested every three months. A review of the dietary habits in this area indicates that there is little reliance on fish as the principal source of protein, and therefore a protein replacement program was not required, as it has been elsewhere in Canada. That gives the House a few details as to what one company has done, how it was done and how it fits into the total program.

[Mr. Maine.]

The federal government, with provincial co-operation, has taken a number of steps over the past five years to deal with the health threat posed by high levels of mercury found in fish that are the staple diet of Indians living in boreal areas. In a joint statement last September, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the then Minister of the Environment, and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development expressed the federal government's continuing grave concern regarding the health threat to Indians who continue to catch and eat fish known to be contaminated with mercury and outlined further measures being taken by the government to deal with the problem.

The ministers indicated that the federal government had taken steps to deal with mercury pollution problems in two areas, Dryden in northern Ontario and Quévillon in northwestern Quebec, and to head off similar situations elsewhere. Fish taken by the Grassy Narrows and White Dog Indian bands from the Wabigoon-English River system are unsuitable for human consumption due to mercury contamination. The Dryden Chemical Company is known to have discharged significant quantities of inorganic mercury prior to the institution of effluent controls. Similarly fish consumed by the Cree Indians in the Waswanipi-Lac Quévillon area of northwestern Quebec have been contaminated by mercury from natural and industrial sources, including the Domtar complex. The health threat arose as a result of inorganic mercury being converted to toxic methyl mercury by bacteria in bottom sediments and entering the aquatic food chain and accumulating in fish tissue.

The ministers outlined a program that has been carried out with the co-operation of the provincial authorities in regard to health protection measures. Several measures are being taken and I should like to list them for the House. One has been a mercury control program which was instituted beginning in 1970. A second measure was inspection programs by the fisheries and marine service of the Department of the Environment to ensure the safety of all fish products marketed in Canada. A third measure involved the departments concerned carrying out for several years a campaign for educating the Indians in the two areas about the true dangers of eating contaminated fish. These areas were closed to commercial fishing in 1970 and have remained closed since that time.

Fourthly, Mr. Speaker, a health team familiar with the mercury problem has been working in each of these areas. Fifthly, alternative food is being provided to the Grassy Narrows and White Dog bands through the co-operation of the provincial authorities and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. A similar program is being developed for those affected in northwestern Quebec.

Sixthly, the province of Ontario has identified lakes where Indians can fish safely for food, and community freezers are being provided to store these fish. The last measure undertaken concerns economic development opportunities, including the establishment of a canoe manufacturing facility and shoe factory, which are being pursued with the assistance of other federal departments.

The Department of National Health and Welfare began to monitor the levels of mercury in humans in northwestern Ontario and northwestern Quebec in 1971 when the levels of mercury in fish were found to be above the limits permissible for human consumption. Mercury levels in blood and hair samples were found to be elevated in persons with a dietary history of significant fish consumption from contaminated areas. As a result, an educational program was commenced in both areas warning people to stop eating the contaminated fish.

In addition, a group of Indians from northwestern Quebec who had blood levels in excess of 100 parts per billion of mercury was admitted to the Montreal Neurological Institute for a complete assessment. A similar group from northwestern Ontario was investigated in Winnipeg. In addition to routine hospital tests, detailed neurological examination as well as electromyelograms and nerve conduction studies, electroencephalograms, audiograms, visual field determinations and blood cytogenetic studies were carried out. No findings specifically attributable to methyl mercury excess were detected. The results of these tests were reported to the persons concerned and made public in summary form.

● (1440)

There is no known effective treatment for damage to the nervous system caused by mercury poisoning. Japanese experience indicates that mercury poisoning may develop from chronic exposure to mercury, even at relatively low blood mercury levels. For these reasons and because the mercury levels in fish caught in the areas concerned will remain unacceptably high for some years, even with controls on further pollution, National Health and Welfare has based its health protection efforts on warning the people not to eat contaminated fish, while monitoring their health status. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, with provincial co-operation, has arranged for the provision of fish from alternative sources in northwestern Ontario and is developing similar plans in northwestern Quebec.

On finding in 1974 and 1975 that blood levels of mercury in some individuals in both northern Ontario and northwestern Quebec were still in excess of 100 parts per billion, and even above 500 parts per billion in three people in northwestern Quebec, the education and monitoring program has been intensified. Dr. Tom Clarkson, an international authority on mercury toxicity, has been engaged by National Health and Welfare and has conducted an epidemiological assessment of the problem on the reserves in northwestern Ontario. An interim report was released in January of this year.

In addition, a fully equipped departmental mobile laboratory has been set up so that on-site blood and hair analysis can be carried out. Local practitioners are co-operating in the program. The Department of National Health and Welfare is sending in medical specialists, neurologists and opthalmologists to assist the health team on the reserves in screening for signs of mercury toxicity. A nutritionist is counselling the people on diet supplementation and compiling dietary histories.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I understand that as the person replying to the main mover, he is entitled to 30 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is my understanding that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) will be the main government speaker.

An hon. Member: What is that tie you are wearing?

Mr. Maine: Mr. Speaker, I have been questioned about my colourful tie today. It is a cub neckerchief. I should like to interject and explain that today, from the riding of Wellington, we have 75 cubs who are present in the gallery. I have the distinct honour and privilege of being one of their cub leaders.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: You can sit down now.

Mr. Maine: I understand that priorities on the opposite side of the House are not in respect of public welfare and public well-being.

To continue, in northwestern Ontario, community people have been hired to intensify the educational program using local approaches in getting across the importance of not eating fish taken from contaminated areas. Working with community health representatives, health professionals and health educators, they have developed an audio-visual program and have commenced a household by household campaign. Similar programs are being developed in northwestern Quebec.

The government is looking for co-operation from the native associations and native leadership to assist in explaining the problem to the native people. The government has encouraged and supported the involvement of the native people in efforts to come to grips with the problem. Government support has included the provision of funding for a visit by a native group from the Dryden area to Japan to see at first-hand situations in Japan where the established case of mercury poisoning in a fish-eating population has occurred.

A previous environment minister said that regulations controlling the discharge of mercury in chloralkali plant effluents were enacted in early 1972. The Dryden plant began operating in 1962; the Domtar plant at Quévillon in northwest Quebec has been operating since 1967. From the time the control requirements were initiated, mercury losses in chloralkali effluents have been reduced to 1 percent of pre-control levels. In general, levels of mercury in fish from the English-Wabigoon Rivers system have decreased from average levels of 4 parts per million to approximately 2 parts per million since mercury control regulations were instituted. The plant at Dryden was converted to the non-mercury process in November of last year.

Although direct discharges of mercury to receiving waters have been drastically reduced during the last three years, ministers are concerned with the large amounts of mercury discharged during past decades. Bottom sediments of some river systems are contaminated with mercury. That contamination undoubtedly continues to find its way through the aquatic food chain. Considerable effort is being devoted at this time to finding solutions to this problem. Fisheries and marine service scientists at the Freshwater Institute in Winnipeg are examining mercury in various levels of the ecosystem in the waters of northwest Ontario in order to determine the rate of disappearance of mercury from the environment.

During my tour of the fisheries laboratory in Halifax last month I was able to learn that mercury studies have been conducted there on harp seals in conjunction with the University of Guelph. They have been detecting and determining the effects of mercury on seals and the mercury poisoning of herds, since it is known that these seals have had a high content of mercury and have been eating fish contaminated with mercury. The program was completed after a year of study and the results have just been reported.

Studies also at Halifax are going on in the area of cod where their reproductive system is being investigated to see if this may not be one of the factors contributing to the depletion of fish stocks off the maritime coast. Other contaminants are also being looked at at the same time. In addition to mercury, this includes arsenic, cadmium, polychlorinated biphenyls and organic phosphates which I mentioned earlier. Ministers noted that the problem in northwest Quebec was more difficult to deal with because there are high natural levels of mercury in the waters of certain lakes and rivers. In addition, the Indian people of the Waswanipi area have a nomadic lifestyle that involves a broad area and with few fixed communities.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to go on record as disagreeing with the mover of the motion who said that the government is inactive and has done nothing. I think I have shown by my comments that the government has been very concerned, very active and has an ongoing program.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Maine.]

Mr. Maine: Not only has the government been active, but advisory groups to the government have also been very active. I would like to refer to the Science Council report "Policy and Poisons" which was started a month ago and deals with five areas of pollution which are of great concern. These five areas involve lead, asbestos, a group of organic chemicals, oxides of nitrogen, radiation and, of course, mercury. This study should be finished in a year's time and covers various legal, social, technical, economical, industrial and environmental aspects of the problem. I think I have adequately proved that the government is active, as is the scientific community. A great deal has been done, much is being done and a great deal still has to be done and I am sure will be done.

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin today with a quotation from Solzhenitsyn, who said:

> I used to think that experience of life can be handed on from one nation to another and from person to person. But now I am beginning to have my doubts about this. Perhaps everyone is fated to live through every experience himself in order to understand.

How true that rings today after the experience of Japan. The Minamata disease was so clearly evident, so clearly misunderstood and misinterpreted here in Canada. I think we should begin by looking at the problem briefly.

We have just heard a dissertation about the great things being done by the government of Canada. That speech flies in the face of the expert witnesses who appeared before the committee. They gave a more true and more accurate picture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wenman: Who were those witnesses? I speak today neither as a chemist nor as a scientist of any kind. My references are not from politicians but are from the great academics of our nation and nations abroad.

● (1450)

I shall quote the expert testimony of Dr. Peter A. Larkin from British Columbia, and Dr. Louis Azzaria from Quebec. From Ontario I shall quote Dr. Clarkson. I shall also quote the environmentalist writer, Ms. Smith. Testimony was presented before the committee. At the committee it was stated that the World Health Organization safety level for mercury in fish has been set at .5 parts per million. Testimony showed that Canadian waters register at ten times that. The government even has conceded that the levels in some areas of Canada are 15 to 30 times greater that the safety level in respect of mercury pollution. One case at the White Dog reserve is described where the blood level of an infant at birth was 100 parts per billion. Other tests showed that it would take 100 years for the environment naturally to process the mercury currently there to a state that would reach the international standard set by the World Health Organization.

What do we see? We see that it will take 100 years just for the natural dissolution of the mercury in our environment. In answer to my question whether there is an overall increase or whether the increase is stabilized the expert witness said that it is certainly going up. So we are not merely talking of the problem of today, but an increasing problem. He said:

> If we compare the figures of the thirties with the figures for the seventies, there is a fourfold increase. So we are certainly going up. That is the direction we are going.

That is the specific and expert testimony. In addition to that and other testimony, I might quote from Dr. Peter Larkin, who said:

> I think it might interest the committee to know, that there is, to my knowledge, no comprehensive review of the occurrence of mercury in the Canadian environment, and a review would be desirable.

Dr. Azzaria says:

> The important issues are the people who have been affected by mercury poisoning—They have definite cases of mercury poisoning. This is where the priority lies.

Ms. Smith, co-author of "Minamata", says:

> —both in Minamata and previous outbreaks in Japan—the effect was not noticed in the human population until several years after contamination had begun.

We heard other testimony from the government side to the effect that the blue fin tuna caught off the east coast of Canada is not allowed to be consumed in Canada, while we do export for consumption in Japan, of all places. We hear from Dr. Azzaria that some of the mercury has been transported aerially long distances from important industrial centres in North America. We heard, also, that there has been very little variation in the Greenland ice sheet between the year 800 B.C. and 1952. There had been very little variation in the increase in mercury contamination, while in the period 1962 to 1965 the concentration in that icefield doubled.

These are just some of the statements which show that the problem is not in hand. The solutions are neither known nor implemented. The fact that this is so is a condemnation of the government of Canada for its ineffective action in respect of this program. We have just heard a scientific-dissertation by a chemist. I want to say to the members of this House that this is not merely a matter of chemistry or a dissertation. Let us look at the problem that really exists. As I stated in respect of an earlier quotation, this is a problem in which somehow it seems that everyone is fated to live through every experience himself so to live. I hope no member on the opposite side of the House will ever have to live through Minamata disease.

I still feel they have an obligation to try to understand the feelings of the people suffering from this disease. In that respect, I shall send to the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) a book of pictures that will help him understand—because he is a member and parliamentary secretary—the feelings of the people who suffer from this disease. Let us look at some of the quotations. What does this disease do? How does it affect the human body? I shall quote again from the expert evidence of the witnesses. This is an indication of what Minamata does in relation to the human being who suffers from it. In extreme cases you can see a person having terrible convulsions, with twisted limbs, and collapsing. However, in most cases what happens is that there is a severe inability to co-ordinate. If you want to reach for a glass of water, you have to be able to think very hard to be able to move your fingers.

Then there is further testimony to this effect concerning what Minamata is like and how it reacts. Children are born completely crippled, with very severe mental retardation. They are often blind, with twisted limbs. They are unable to walk, unable to eat on their own, and so on. The children born after the occasion in Japan are now attending regular schools. It is found that there is a mental deficiency of 29 per cent, and much higher percentages of sensory disturbance and co-ordination problems. These are the real problems which exist and which we must learn to feel and understand. We learned that Lake Winnipeg, the St. Lawrence River, Lake Erie, Lake St. Clair, the Ottawa River, the Saskatchewan River system, and the Red Deer River were only a few of the major bodies of water in Canada polluted to a significant degree with mercury.

Worst of all is the English-Wabigoon system near Dryden in northwestern Ontario and northwestern Quebec. Residents in both these areas show dangerously high concentrations of mercury in their blood and hair, and some display the early symptoms of Minamata disease. Mercury poisoning, or Minamata disease, occurs when inorganic mercury, usually from chemical factories, is discharged into bodies of water and lodges in the bottom sediments. There it is converted by bacteria into toxic organic mercury, which works its way up the aquatic food chain to man. It then attacks the neurological system, leading to physical deformation, mental deterioration and eventually death.

In pregnant women, excessive levels of organic mercury can lead to abortion or to the birth of mentally retarded or congenitally deformed children. No one knows the true extent of mercury pollution in Canada. In the cases of mercury poisoning that we are aware of, the federal government has attempted to shift the responsibility to the provinces. As Mrs. Smith put it: "I have seen something that I would have to call extreme inaction." That is a description of the government's program that was described to us earlier today. What needs to be done? Dr. Larkin summed it up this way:

> In particular, there are needs for research on how you might remove mercury from fish in processing them for human consumption, research on medicines that might increase the rate at which people might eliminate mercury that they had taken into their food. There is particular need for research on techniques of removing accumulations of mercury from bottom sediments in rivers and streams. There is need for search concerning safe levels of human consumption of different forms of mercury, the rates at which they are eliminated and the kinds of damage they do, including the effect on unborn infants.

● (1500)

> I think it is important to realize that the research that is needed on mercury is of a very sophisticated nature. It is the sort of area in which I would think it was essential that there should be federal involvement . . .

I also think there should be federal funding. Certainly such research programs are cheap at half the price when you consider that in Japan corporations and government have paid out $83 million in claims to victims of this disease.

In addition to that, while we recognize the need for long-term research, as Ms. Smith also said, we need to recognize that now is the time for immediate action to ensure that people do not continue to consume contaminated fish, because there is evidence that this is occurring at present.

We also require an immediate and comprehensive review. At present there are such unrelated reviews with respect only to water, but we should move far beyond the surveillance and examination of water because we find that the basic sources of from 40 per cent to 65 per cent of mercury in the environment are unknown.

In addition to a comprehensive review we must examine the monitoring systems and we must police them better. We were told in the testimony before the committee that at present the monitoring systems are not standardized. The tests that are taken are ineffective, inaccurate, and deceptive because they are taken at times of the year when mercury levels are low and in areas where people are not eating a full diet of fish. So the monitoring program, as stated so ably by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes), should be reviewed, and if time allows me I will go into that in detail in a few minutes.

Let us look at government action on these programs. It seems to me that the action of the government has resulted in inaction, or at least inadequate action. Let us look at what its supporters did in committee. When we sat in committee, what was the response of our counterparts on the Liberal side? There were attempts to discredit witnesses and attempts to block motions calling for further and full investigation into this matter.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Shame!

Mr. Wenman: Not only that, but we hear that the government has withheld information from the House and this committee. A direct quotation from the testimony states—

Mrs. Holt: Shame!

Mr. Wenman: The hon. member who feels that these are clichés I am sure understands—

Mrs. Holt: I said "shame". Your House leader keeps saying "shame" every third word.

Mr. Wenman: It is this government that should be ashamed. They should hang their heads in shame.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wenman: Instead of saying "shame" why do you not read the minutes and listen to our speeches? If you did, you would condemn the government, as we must do here today, because we should not have to have this debate in the House of Commons. We have it because you refuse to listen to the native people who have Minamata disease. It should never have been necessary. It is the kind of attitude displayed by the government that has made it necessary. The hon. member had better be prepared to answer the following question. Perhaps she will stand up and say a few words in answer to my question. The witness stated in the committee:

This report was written in 1972 and investigation was begun in 1975. There have been allegations that this was not made public until 1975. I think this should be clarified.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Wenman.]

Mr. Wenman: Why was the government afraid to let this come out in the debate? What was this information about, and why was the investigation into the source of the distribution of mercury into the environment of northwestern Quebec not made public sooner? Perhaps the hon. member will answer this question. Government members were afraid that we would bring this information to the public through this debate. We hope that through this debate we will force this inactive government into action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: Don't use such negative words. Be more positive.

Mr. Wenman: I appreciate the intervention of the hon. member who says, "Be more positive". I have been positive. I have made positive suggestions. I hope the hon. member will use the energy which she is using here to prod the cabinet ministers who are not here today into action. I have great concern and feeling for people with Minamata disease and for the fisheries, the water, and the resources of Canada.

Mrs. Holt: Be more positive.

Mr. Wenman: I understand that today it will not be possible to have here the three cabinet ministers who are most closely involved in this problem, but surely we could have had one minister present during the debate, surely one could be here to respond to what we have to say on this problem. Perhaps the hon. member opposite will send them a copy of Hansard and ask them to read it so they can hear about this problem.

The president of Dryden Chemical Limited asserted that effluent mercury had been reduced to about one fifth of an ounce per day last year, and yet the Ontario government report contradicts this and states that the level of readings ranges from 60 to 60,000 times the normal level. We have given industry too much credit for their conscience, and unfortunately it will be necessary for the government to monitor them much more severely. The government has brought in mouthpiece legislation such as the Contaminants Act, which sounds great, but how effective it is was shown by the fact that mercury pollution in this country is not stabilized, is not decreasing but increasing.

I could go on for a considerable length of time but there are other hon. members who wish to speak. I should like to conclude by stating that the distant call of the ancient loon is disappearing from wilderness lakes and is being replaced by the hollow cries of Minamata disease victims as they cry out to a distant, cold, and incomprehensive government. I call on the government to see these people today, to listen to them, to hear them, and to hear the cries of their afflicted brothers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words in this very important debate on the problem of mercury pollution in Canada, especially in northern Ontario, a region which I represent in my constituency of Sault Ste. Marie. The concern that many of us have on a nation-wide scale has been dramatized recently by the revelations of mercury poisoning in the water systems of northwestern Ontario, especially in the White Dog and Grassy Narrows Indian reserves.

● (1510)

One does not have to dramatize mercury poisoning. Anyone who has witnessed even still photographs of what that does to the nervous system and how it creates deformity in human beings, and anyone who has seen films of victims of this kind of poisoning will know that it is a dreadful and shattering experience to see fellow human beings in fits of convulsion because of an industrial pollutant like this which has been allowed to go into our river systems, into fish, and hence into the human food chain.

This disease is not new. It has been thoroughly researched in Japan because there have been hundreds of victims of mercury poisoning there, and the native people of northwestern Ontario and elsewhere have been concerned about the pollutants which large industries have been pouring into the air and also into the water systems. Evidence of mercury poisoning has been building up in the Grassy Narrows and White Dog reserves for a number of years, and despite the evidence and the current revelations, especially the testimony on Minamata disease of expert Japanese scientists who have visited the native people, we see the companies responsible ignoring their responsibility and denying that they have anything to do with the pollution problem.

We see governments not taking action to clean up the pollution mess or to compensate the native people for the loss of their jobs and the destruction of their environment. We also see the general public which, except for a brief "tut, tut" when it sees a newsfilm or reads an article, lapsing back into complacency about this very severe problem which is destroying the livelihood and the health of a number of Canadians.

I weigh what I am going to say with careful concern and consideration, but I believe that had this been a white community at White Dog or Grassy Narrows, this mercury pollution problem would have been cleaned up years ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Symes: It is an indication of the latent racism of Canadian society which says that as long as it is out of sight, society is not concerned, and if it involves Indians or native people, society is even less concerned. That is indicated by the lack of action of both the federal and provincial governments. If it had been a white community, there would have been such a public outcry and such concern among our political leaders that we would have seen the environment cleaned up very quickly, and we would have seen the proper compensation forthcoming.

Mrs. Holt: That is cheap racemongering.

Mr. Symes: We have only to remember the situation at Port Hope to see how quickly the government moved to provide compensation and clean up facilities.

Mrs. Holt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am deeply concerned that in a House which should be as responsible as this one should be, there is deliberate racemongering, and I resent it very, very much.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Symes: I said that I weighed those words very carefully and I could not find any other conclusion to be reached that explains the inaction of the government when human lives are at stake. That has been going on for years. This government knows it, and so does the provincial government. What other explanation can there be for this lack of action and this lack of concern?

While I commend the federal Conservative party for raising this issue, I wish it also had taken some action and used the influence it has in getting the provincial Conservative government of Ontario to take some positive action in its areas of jurisdictional responsibility.

Mr. Dinsdale: That is the purpose of debate.

Mr. Symes: We know that since 1960 mercury has been put into the Wabigoon and English River System by the Dryden Chemical Company, a subsidiary of Reed Paper Ltd. In May of 1970 the Ontario government announced that the mercury pollution problem was not serious in this area and that it would go away in a few months. We have heard expert testimony that it will take at least 100 years for the river system to cleanse itself of this dangerous pollutant.

In 1973 the Ontario Conservative government put up signs saying "Fish for Fun" for all the people who were fishing in that river system. The native people of these areas do not fish for fun, they fish for their livelihood, to feed themselves and their children, and that kind of callous action is little compensation or relief for people who depend on fishing for their well-being.

In March of 1975 the Ontario government sent letters to reserve residents telling them either to eat no fish, to eat less fish, small fish, or fish with lower mercury levels. Where is responsible government concern demonstrated in that kind of action and advice for the native people?

In 1975 Japanese scientists familiar with Minamata disease visited the Grassy Narrows reserve and began investigations to prepare a report to prod political leaders to take some action and clean up pollution, but what did the provincial minister of natural resources, Leo Bernier call them? He called them a travelling pack of troubadors. That is how the provincial government viewed respected scientists and their concern for the problems of the native people.

In April, 1975, evidence showed that the Dryden Chemical Company had been emitting seven and a half pounds of mercury per day into the river system, whereas the native people and the rest of Canada had been assured by the government that the amount was only a few ounces per day. We have, supposedly, effective anti-pollution legislation at both the federal and provincial levels to give governments power to regulate pollution in terms of discharge into the air or into the water system. If seven and a half pounds per day, which exceeds the maximum level, is being emitted, why is that allowed to go on? Again, the answers are not forthcoming. It is indicative of a callous indifference on the part of the provincial and federal governments.

The provincial government offered freezers to the people on the reserves to store non polluted fish or to encourage them to hunt for game and other food sources. As my colleague, the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) pointed out, that kind of policy would deplete the animal food supply in the area within a few short years.

In terms of human health I have pointed out that the disease is a terrible one for any human being to suffer. There has been research in Japan, Sweden, and Canada to try to bring about a solution to the problem. Despite the fact that so much research has gone on, the frightening thing is that much of it has not become public knowledge or implemented, and that the results of that research are not used to solve the problem. There was a five year test program on the Grassy Narrows and White Dog reserves. There was a joint Quebec-federal government mercury investigation in northwest Quebec. The report was presented in 1975. The federal Department of National Health and Welfare sponsored environmental research to study the blood and hair tissue of people living in areas which were thought to be contaminated. We have all these reports, but still no action.

The National Indian Brotherhood has conducted its own independent study. It has made recommendations, and still, except for more pious promises that further research will be done, there has not been effective action to control this dangerous pollution problem. The governments at both levels are aware of the problem but they deny their information to the native people. They have told the native people to be patient, that more research must be done, and that the problem is not as serious as they think. In the meantime we see more and more evidence of children, men, and women having symptoms of mercury poisoning or Minamata disease. It has affected the health of native people, their whole livelihood, their incomes, and their standard of living.

● (1520)

I now wish to put on record the story of Mr. Joe Payash, a 30-year-old man with seven children, who lives on Grassy Narrows Reserve, northwestern Ontario. In the story to which I am referring he explains the economics of the reserve. This man, Mr. Speaker. is taking welfare for the first time in his life. Last summer he was a guide at one of the fishing lodges. He will probably return next summer despite the dreadful knowledge that the traditional shore lunch of mercury-laden fish he must eat each day with the tourists who have hired him may some day kill him. He is paid $24 a day for guiding two people in a boat, and has done it all his life. Today he has stomach pains and a tightness across his chest, which may or may not be symptoms of mercury poisoning. He does not know. The last time his blood was tested he was told he had 210 parts per billion of mercury, a dangerously high level. The currently acceptable maximum level believed safe by the Ontario government is 100 parts per billion. As he says, "But it's the only way I can work, the only way I know how to earn a living."

It is not good enough to send freezers so that the native people may store non-contaminated fish. It is not good enough to say to them, "We need to do further studies." It is not good enough to say to them that we cannot enforce our environmental laws, and it is not good enough to tell them we don't know if the Dryden chemical plant is the polluter. Those people face economic ruin while the government delays and does not bring forward adequate programs which can help to redesign the economy of those affected areas.

It is interesting to note that the native people of those reserves now live in a state of welfare because, through no fault of their own and because of lack of effective environmental laws in this country, an industry has polluted the river system from which they gained their livelihood. Before 1969 the total welfare budget on White Dog Reserve was below $50,000. By 1974 the budget had risen to $162,000. Similarly, on Grassy Narrows Reserve the total welfare budget in 1969 was about $30,000. By 1973 it had risen to $122,000.

We have heard stories of the social disintegration of families and neighbourhoods in the area, of people turning to drink in desperation, of alcoholism which is rampant and increasing, of increased violence involving assault and shooting, of husbands and wives separating and children suffering because homes are broken, all because the government has not accepted responsibility, or has not made private industry accept responsibility for destroying the livelihood of these people.

In the limited time available I will try to make positive suggestions as to a course of action the federal government can take. The federal government cannot pass the buck and say this is a provincial responsibility, because the English-Wabagoon river system crosses the provincial boundaries and therefore comes under federal jurisdiction. The federal government has the power, under environmental laws, to get tough, and it will if it seriously wants to do something about the problem. It can say to polluting companies, "Clean up." The federal government can introduce legislation which will make the companies compensate the victims of the pollution the companies have caused. It is not good enough to slough off the problem and say that the companies have not polluted. The problem is there. The companies have polluted. It is time they accepted their responsibilities.

The federal government can assist the companies to install better equipment which will prevent pollution of the environment. It can do this by passing laws and, if necessary, by giving tax incentives to speed the process. As well, we can adopt some of the suggestions made by the Japanese scientists who visited northwestern Ontario. Their recommendations, based on their expertise and experience, are well worth-while. They recommended as follows:

1. . . . Stop all consumption of the contaminated fish and make the natives aware of the seriousness of the situation.

2. An intensive and indepth examination be performed on all the inhabitants of the area by competent and experienced physicians.

3. That such a study be carried out under the auspices of Dr. Newberry, the reserve's resident physician, because he understands the situation and is knowledgeable about the Dryden-Kenora mercury pollution problem.

4. That native people and other concerned citizens ask for comprehensive compensation to pay for the damage to the health and life style of the Dryden-Kenora residents.

5. 'Continue and promote the co-operation and exchange of experience with the victims in Japan, as well as with the supporting experts, domestic and foreign.'

6. All data on mercury pollution be made public, especially to those concerned.

7. Participation of natives in the decision making bodies dealing with White Dog-Grassy Narrows mercury pollution.

Acting on such suggestions can do more to solve the problem and help the native peoples than all the government's pious platitudes, past programs, and readings from government press releases. It is not good enough for government members merely to talk. The problem is there. It is the result of government inaction. I call on the members of this House and the people of Canada to make sure action is taken to save the health and livelihood of the natives of Grassy Narrows and White Dog reserves, and of other areas of Canada which are affected by such pollution.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to inform—hon. members that if the Minister of Environment, the hon. member for Langelier (Mr. Marchand), cannot be present in the House this afternoon to hear and take part in this debate, it is unfortunately because—and he apologizes—he had to fulfil a commitment he undertook some time ago. Of course he tried to cancel it but it was impossible, and I ask you to accept his apology. He asked me to take part in the debate and to make note of the representations and opinions expressed by the various members so that we can discuss the matter next week. And I can assure you that his officers will carefully examine hon. members' comments.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that although the government's colleagues and critics seemed to indicate that the cabinet was not worrying enough about this environmental problem and about the damages that pollution may cause in many fields, particularly the one to which today's motion is addressed, mercury. I must say that the federal government and the cabinet, and I am sure that applies also to all my colleagues on this side of the House, are very concerned about the problems of pollution. The Department of the Environment employs the most scientists, and they have been working regularly for several years at analysing all causes and effects of pollution. It suggests to the government and its various departments the actions and the precautions that it should take to put a stop to the pollution which has happened throughout the years because of a lack of foresight and also maybe a lack of knowledge. It is particularly important to prevent this pollution from continuing and to reject new formulas or technologies which could endanger the environment.

Of course, it is easy to criticize. However, it is not so easy to apply solutions which take into account not only pollution, but also several economic factors. I would like to congratulate the hon. member who proposed the motion now before the House since it allows the House, of course, but also members of the press, through the information media, to make the population more aware of the need that governments must now face, the need for the population to support and understand the action that all levels of government must take to solve the problem of the environment.

It is not always easy to impose measures to fight and prevent pollution because these measures often restrict freedom and increase business installation costs. Also in many cases, and I am now talking as minister responsible for Regional Economic Expansion, several industrial business construction or expansion projects are postponed for a long period and even abandoned because estimated costs to meet the requirements that we now impose on industries are such that the profitability of the business is placed in jeopardy. Naturally, businesses must then postpone their project.

I think it is normal to stiffen requirements in this area, and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has become more and more demanding in the last few years, and each time we are in doubt about an application, we refer it to the Department of the Environment so that it can make a recommendation on the proposed investment. This delays the examination of applications and I even receive criticisms from promoters on the one hand, and representations from my colleagues in the House on the other hand asking me why we delay so much in making the decision. Because of this analysis process concerning all the implications of a particular study we must sometimes delay our decision.

● (1530)

Mr. Speaker, in the 60s some very complex environmental problems imputable to mercury appeared in Japan and Sweden. This prompted environment experts in Canada to launch in 1969-70 a national inventory of mercury uses and its risk for the environment.

As there was a possibility of contamination of mercury treated seeds, the experts started a North American wildlife study. Following that research and particularly the study by the Canadian Wildlife Service, Agriculture Canada prohibited the use of mercury based longicides in 1970-71 under the terms of the Pest Control Products Act.

By the end of 1969, after serious warnings concerning the incidious mercury pollutions in the central provinces, the Fisheries Research Board of Canada launched studies aimed at controlling the contamination level of fish. Several takes of fish from Lake Winnipeg, Saskatchewan River, Lake St. Clair and Lake Erie contained up to nine parts per million of mercury, which instigated the provincial authorities on the advice of the federal department of fisheries and forests to close several commercial fishing zones throughout Canada. At the same time, provincial governments made rod fishermen aware of the risk inherent in eating fish from some areas. On the other hand, the efforts aimed at preventing a high consumption of contaminated fish among the local population was not a complete success.

As is was already recognized in Sweden, it was established that mercury contamination came mainly from industrial sources. A good number of pulp and paper mills used mercury derivatives in their process. When the inquiries demonstrated the seriousness of the mercury problem in North America, the pulp and paper industry voluntarily stopped to use mercury cells as early as 1969-70 which eliminated mercury discharges in the environment, except for minimal quantities related to combustible raw materials and chemical products.

The chlor-alkali industry that produced chlorine from mercury cells was also identified as major source of contamination. In December 1970, the federal Minister of the Environment asked that industry to reduce voluntarily its mercury wastes, while legislation was being drafted. Generally speaking, the industry co-operated and the mercury discharged in liquid from, estimated at almost 148,000 pounds a year in 1970 went down to about 6,000 pounds annually as early as in 1971, and to 800 pounds a year over the period from 1973 to 1976.

In March 1972, Mr. Speaker, Environment Canada edicted regulations on mercury waste from chlor-alkali plants. Under the Fisheries Act, those regulations limit the quantity of mercury the plants can discharge into the receiving waters. Taking into account the technique available to the industry, the maximum rate of discharge of 1 millionth part of mercury for each ton of chlorine produced has been set as the standard. Since May 1972, all chlor-alkali plants file daily reports on their discharges, as well as their purchases of mercury, regardless of what use it made of it.

Over that period, Environment Canada officials have met the representatives of several companies to discuss their mercury control programs and their compliance to the requirements. In addition, the plants have been supervised by provincial authorities or staff members of the Department of the Environment in order to check the data they have supplied.

According to the files of the department, direct discharges of mercury into water streams have been reduced to a level corresponding to about 1 per cent of that at the time the problem was discovered. Those files have also demonstrated that the total consumption of mercury by chlor-alkali plants is only about half what it was before 1970.

● (1540)

In spite of that substantial reduction, we consider the present consumption as being much too high. The plants have been unable to provide a complete report on their mercury consumption. This summer environment Canada expects to table regulations establishing mercury discharge standards for chlor-alkali plants under the Clean Air Act. The discharge of mercury in the atmosphere by chlor-alkali plants using mercury cells have been estimated at 26.4 tons in 1970 and at 12 tons in 1975. It should be reduced at 2 tons yearly as a result of the application of new measures against air pollution.

We are also trying to find a solution to dispose of dirt and solid wastes from chlor-alkali plants. The most widely used procedures are burying and filling up, but there is also a mecury recovery procedure used by a small number of Canadian plants. We are convinced that regulation and procedures for mercury recovery will reduce mercury use and provide a better control.

In 1973, the CIL plant in Hamilton and the Dow plant in Thunder Bay closed down, and the two Dow plants in Sarnia have phased out their mercury cell system and switched to the diaphragm cell which does not use mercury. In 1975, the mercury cell euipped Reed Paper Company plant in Dryden began using the diaphragm cell without mercury. With the implementation of regulations establishing mercury emission standards for chlor-alkali plants, the old plants will have to convert gradually from mercury cell to non-mercury systems.

[Mr. Lessard.]

Of course, we are aware of the other mercury contaminating sources, such as municipal sources, resistant paints, electric appliances, batteries, as well as mercury emanations from foundries and coal combustion. Added to this industrial contamination is the mercury from natural sources which is found in movement in our waters. The department is carefully monitoring and assessing the mercury from those sources. In addition, it has been evaluating the mercury content in sediments, water, fish and wildlife in order to determine the trends and locate the areas where the problem is serious.

As a result of the steps taken by the industry and the government, I am glad to announce to the House, and I think we will all agree on this, that the situation is improving. A report to be made public shortly by the department shows that the mercury concentration in the waters of western Canada has decreased considerably in the early 70s. The improvement in the west are apparently due mainly to the regulations applicable to chlor-alkali plants, the prohibition of mercury-treatment for grain and the application of purification measures in the industry as a whole. Several areas which had been closed to commercial fishing have been reopened or show signs of reduction of the mercury content of the fish or other forms of aquatic life. Most of the sediments recently formed in the areas affected contain less mercury than those formed at the end of the 60s.

As a matter of fact, the programs of the department have been reasonably successful and markedly reduced the loss of mercury in the aquatic environment. However there are still mercury residues in sediments, mostly downstream from former industrial sources. Unfortunately, these residues will continue to contaminate water bodies and fish for many long years to come. To a large extent, human history is made up of a series of innovations to solve problems. Faced with a challenge, we react by solving the problem and by exploiting its solution. But now, we know the answers. We find that a great number of solutions we adopted have merely served to create further problems, often very serious, and we meet these problems in a great many endeavours of human activity. Regardless of the environment or other problems, our pas conduct comes back to haunt our future.

What we must do, both as individuals and as a society, is to learn to see beyond the immediate advantages derived from our actions, to learn to consider secondary and tertiary, and even more remote consequences. Of course, it is always difficult to evaluate. I know that it is not easy. However, we cannot afford to let immediate advantages outweigh long-term considerations. Too often decisions and measures have been made according to their primary consequences, namely the immediate benefits. These consequences often lead to a chain reaction of prolonged secondary and tertiary and even more remote effects and their public impact can neutralize the initial advantage.

Unfortunately, we have always taken so much time to discover or to determine the long-term effects that to a certain extent we have become the slaves of the immediate advantages and that we have integrated them in our culture. Thus, even before the obviousness of disastrous effects in the long run, it is sometimes hard for us to admit that our original decision was wrong and to try to find an alternative. On the contrary, sometimes we remain fascinated by the short-term advantages and we try to make the system more sophisticated to prevent its long-term effects, as far as possible. It is obvious that we should be more careful, more rational while making our decision. We must look beyond the immediate benefits and attempt to assess the long-term effects. This choice will allways be hard to make.

In the environment area, we have begun changing the way we make decisions. It may be in the environment that the effects of short-term decisions were most evident. Several past benefits are becoming problems now—something we have learned not so long ago. Thus it was only in the late 60s that the results of our actions appeared, both for the planet and for ourselves. From then on, we started to progress, to make better decisions.

The first step was to meet immediate needs. Knowing the effect and the nature of air, earth and water pollution, our natural reaction was to take immediate steps to avoid and, if possible, repair the damage. To do so, we issued various standards and instructions governing the quality of environment and we also regulated some known detrimental operations. It was also the onset of a new technology to control the polluting elements at discharge.

It goes without saying that this approach, though valid, is not sufficient. We must undertake a second stage, prevention, and this is what we are now doing. We are now learning to assess the long term implications of our actions, the real future costs. This is extremely important, not only for the quality of our life, but for our very survival.

Both to set the pace and to increase its knowledge, the federal government through the Department of Environment has established an environmental assessment and review process for ongoing projects of which it is part and which are likely to affect the environment. Not only does the value of such a process lie in the progress which may stem from it but also in the fact that it is a first step towards a valuable consideration of the consequences of our actions.

It is obvious that this process is still in the early stages but it works. Its real value will depend on the way it will prompt others to adopt similar assessment mechanisms with regard to the environment and other realms of human activity. Rational decision making is being impeded whenever we do not have the necessary knowledge to proceed with valuable pre-assessments. For instance, we do not possess sufficient knowledge to delineate the border line between what is a hazard and what is not. We must always take costs and benefits into consideration.

Some people are against the use of aspirin, even if it has been easing the pain of many people for quite a number of years, and it will very unlikely be withdrawn from the market because of the pernicious effects it may have on a very small minority. D.D.T. is accepted by the body under a certain level, even if it can be dangerous for human beings as well as for other living organisms. But, if the use of D.D.T. had been forbidden 30 years ago because of its dangers, millions of people would have died in the meantime from certain diseases, and probably from hunger.

When we are unduly concerned over the unfavourable effects of a particular thing, we might forget about interesting innovations. So we must decide whether what we get from preventing some technological damage is more important than what we lose if we stop all progress. Mr. Speaker, the answer to this problem is, of course, research. If we agree that evaluations are essential, if we want to take the right decisions, we must be prepared to study very carefully the impact of each alternative.

Another very heavy constraint in this country is that of constitutional jurisdictions. The Canadian political system constitutes in fact a mosaic of various jurisdictions that often paralize us, or at least slow down decisions and action. To speak more clearly, in certain areas of activity decisions and actions by an administrative level have an important effect on others. This is particularly true in the area of environment. One of the annoying characteristics of agreements in that respect is the following: people coming under a particular administration tend to think that the outside harmful effects of their actions do not concern them. That is untrue, of course. We cannot allow jurisdictional limits to restrict the assessment of our actions. This would be abdicating our responsibilities.

Intergovernmental cooperation is a basic must in carrying out the urgent tasks of environmental management. Without that cooperation no political or institutional structure and no distribution of power and responsibility can work. So the essential key to success in managing tomorrow's environment is in short enlightened cooperation based on knowledge and respect for the respective roles of the various levels of government. The notion of development in harmony with nature is based on the application of ecological principles not only with respect to industrial activity but also all our institutions and our culture. Ecology, the science of system indivisibility and interdependence, requires a form of reasoning common to several disciplines and behaviour based on intercommunication. So there is place for symbiotic relationship between individuals, institutions, regions and states. We all know the interaction that exists within our ecosystem and, consequently, we can understand the overall meaning of the term "development in harmony with nature."

We want to elaborate a conceptual representation designed to promote development in harmony with nature in Canada. The basic concepts reside in the fact that ecological principles must permeate the essence of social institutions, culture, the lifestyle and industrial activities designed to provide the goods indispensable to survival. But if those concepts are to continue to exist, develop and take a concrete form, we must solve the main conflicts of national priorities.

Therefore we shall have to develop a social justice and live within the confines of restraints imposed by our environment. This is a fundamental duty: growth in harmony with nature must neither sacrifice the present for the benefit of the future nor the future for the benefit of the present. We must rather apply the wisdom of environmental principles to the development of social institutions, of a life generating system and of ways of livelihood. Mr. Speaker, we are all very aware—and I think Canadians are becoming ever more aware—of the importance of protecting our environment, but we must remember at the same time that all governments and all Canadians are also willing to continue to have a standard of living, a quality of life which is among the highest in the world. This is why in this statement I emphasize this challenge, with which we are faced now, of properly assessing the impact of decisions we have to take both on the environment and the quality of life, the standard of living, indeed on incomes and our national economy as a whole.

It is always difficult to decide when confronted with such dilemmas. When a major industrial development is planned in an area or a province, or in the country, and that the economic benefits for the country and the area concerned are being considered, the effects it will have on the environment as a whole must also be weighed. It is always difficult to make a choice. Canadians, I think, can be assured that the present government will do its best to ensure that industries and various governmental agencies take all precautions so that industrial or other developments be carried out with maximum respect for the environment. And if we have no other choice, if it is obvious that the environment must substantially suffer from investments or the growth of an industry, the government will then have to make the difficult choice and refuse that such investment be made in the hope that they can be made in other areas which are equally productive, and which will naturally make a contribution to the economy, while respecting environmental requirements.

I thank hon. members for their contributions and the views. You will understand that I do not necessarily accept all the criticisms that have been voiced because I believe they were overstated in some cases, but on thing is obvious—today's debate, our exchanges of views will most probably contribute to promote the cause of environmental protection as a whole.

● (1550)

[English]

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my colleague, the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes), for moving this important motion today in which he censures the government for the shocking neglect of the problem caused by mercury poisoning. Frankly, as a member of parliament I am ashamed how little this issue has been raised in the House of Commons, and as a Canadian I am angered by the apparent low priority that the government places on the well-being of other Canadians whose health and lives are in imminent jeopardy.

I listened with a great deal of attention to the comments of the two government members who have spoken so far. I could not help but feel a little sorry for the role in which the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Maine) has been cast. He is a colleague and friend of mine, and I have a high regard for him. I think he came to parliament out of a great sense of human concern for people in this country, and I am sorry to see him cast in the role of an apologist for the government in which he is required to rehash old government news releases, periodically injecting scientific jargon into them.

I was not, however, so surprised by the minister's performance. If the translator translated what he had to say correctly, he explained it was his responsibility today to make excuses—that is the word the translator used—for the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand) who could be with us today. Certainly making excuses is precisely what the minister did.

[Mr. Lessard.]

The minister says that the Minister of the Environment had other appointments which he could not break, that he had a responsibility to attend them and that he could not be with us here though he would have liked to be. If the minister says that is the case, I accept it. But where is the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), and where is the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan)? Surely their stake in this is every bit as great as that of the Minister of the Environment? I am appalled that when an issue like this, which comes before parliament so infrequently, is raised the ministry is able to put up only one minister to speak in the debate, a minister who has no direct jurisdiction in the matter and whose role is to act as an apologist for the government.

Listening to the government spokesman one would feel, if one believed everything that was said, that either there really is not all that much of a problem, or that it will go away by itself, or with the assistance of the great initiatives that have been taken by the government. Frankly it rings a bell in my mind, in fact it was rung this morning when my colleague, the hon. member for Lambton-Kent quoted a speech of the Hon. Jack Davis when he was the minister of the environment. This was the quotation that my colleague read, and I would ask other members of the House of Commons to compare this statement with statements that have been made by government apologists so far. He said:

> Fortunately we have caught our mercury problem in time. We have caught it before there has been any real danger to human beings. Once spotted, we have closed the fishery. Either that or we have bought up all the fish and had them destroyed. Nothing has escaped the watchful eye of our federal inspection service, a service which is regarded the world over as tops.

Mr. Davis may be gone, but his speech writer lives on. We have been able to see today that he is still well employed in the ministry and certainly has contributed a great deal to the speeches made by members on the government side so far.

Other members on this side have or will be dealing with the health, Indian affairs, environmental and fisheries aspects of this serious problem. In my remarks I will try to address myself primarily to the jurisdictional considerations in order to establish that the federal government has now, and it has had for some years, all the constitutional and legislative authority it needs to deal with mercury pollution. Sadly, what it does not have is the will to do so.

Before considering this question of jurisdiction, however, perhaps in order to bring the effects of federal neglect into sharper focus I should briefly describe the effects of mercury poisoning upon human beings. Dangerously high levels of mercury contamination have been found in the blood of a number of people in northern Ontario and northwestern Quebec, and the early symptoms of mercury poisoning have already become apparent in some of them. Early symptoms of mercury poisoning include a numbness and tingling of the mouth, tongue and limbs, with the accompaniment of tunnel vision. A Minamata disease victim experiences an inability to concentrate, an inarticulate manner, long periods of apathy, extreme fatigue, and emotional instability. The eventual outcome of this disease is the disfigurement of the body and finally death.

● (1600)

Resistance to mercury poisoning is greatest among strong adults, and while a pregnant woman may show no signs of mercury poisoning herself, she can pass high concentrations of mercury into her child within the womb. The newborn infant may show symptons of mercury poisoning. The symptoms include mental retardation and a condition similar to cerebral palsy.

The effects of mercury poisoning are progressive and irreversible. There is no room for error. The government must take a realistic and comprehensive look at this matter, or suffer the moral consequences of its inaction.

It is with a deep sense of regret that I, along with my colleagues, feel compelled to rise in the House today in order to chastise the government for what can only be described as an irresponsible and shortsighted mishandling of the mercury pollution problem which prevails in many of our country's inland waters. My investigation into the mercury pollution problem of this nation has revealed a shocking sense of complacency within the federal bureaucracy.

Government officials are anxious to convey to the public the impression that everything possible is being done in the federal realm to solve this problem. I regret to say that this is not the case. Although the government, at least since 1970, has been aware of heavy metal contamination in the Wabigoon-English River system, six years of discussion and testing have revealed that it has abdicated its moral and constitutional responsibility to effect a quick solution to this problem.

The federal government has skillfully used the principle of provincial property rights as a "catch-22" clause to free itself from responsibility in the cleanup of contaminated waters.

To date the government has been successful in leaving the impression that environmental concerns relating to the pollution of our nation's waters lie almost solely within the jurisdiction of provincial governments. When my office questioned Ontario environmental officials about the apparent jurisdictional problems between the province and the federal government, their reply was that no jurisdictional problem exists.

While provinces own the watersheds within their boundaries and exercise their jurisprudence with respect to property, the province of Ontario administers only the provisions for testing and reporting contained within the federal Fisheries Act and does not enforce that act's prohibitions and sanctions. Enforcement of that part of the Fisheries Act lies within the auspices of the federal government.

Present federal involvement in the area of mercury pollution includes the efforts of a number of government departments. The Department of the Environment has formulated chlor-alkali regulations for industry and conducts an inspection service for all fish products marketed in Canada. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development exercises its jurisdiction over Indians on reservations by assisting projects intended to provide alternative employment opportunities for Indians dislodged from the fishing industry following the ban on commercial fishing along the Wabigoon-English River system. The Department of National Health and Welfare is monitoring mercury levels in natives of northwestern Ontario and Quebec, and is providing an education program to persuade Indians not to consume contaminated fish. Beyond these activities, the prevailing Ottawa attitude seems to be that further initiatives to clean up the problem must come from provincial quarters.

Federal footdragging in the area of mercury pollution is difficult to understand when one considers the long history of federal interest in the well-being of Canadian fisheries. One of the first pieces of legislation passed by the federal government in 1867 was the Fisheries Act. Section 91(12) of the British North America Act awards the federal government jurisdiction over seacoast and inland fisheries and gives it the competence to legislate in respect of pollution of waters in so far as pollutants adversely affect the fisheries. The anti-pollution provisions of the act were revised in 1970 to prohibit the deposit of, to use the words of the act, "deleterious substances" in any water frequented by fish or in any place where deposits may enter the water except as authorized. Under the provisions of this act the federal government may exercise its authority to establish national water pollution standards. In 1972 the Department of the Environment established national chlor-alkali standards for industry.

Both my colleague, the hon. member for Lambton-Kent, and I have read from the address which the Hon. Jack Davis, former Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, made to the Canadian Manufacturer's Association in 1970. Perhaps I could refer to that again. In that address he solicited support from the Canadian public for amendments to the Fisheries Act which pertained to water pollution. The minister declared:

> The polluter must pay . . . the industry which caused the problem must solve the problem. It must not only improve its housekeeping but also make amends for sloppy practices in the past. It must clean up its operation and it must compensate others who have been hurt by its negligence.

The Fisheries Act amendments have been in place since 1970, yet what has happened to the promise of federal action? The water resources of both the provinces of Ontario and Manitoba, in the case of the Wabigoon-English River system, were contaminated by effluent traced to the Dryden Paper Company's chlor-alkali plant in Ontario.

The Manitoba government has attempted to prosecute the Dryden plant under Manitoba law, and the Supreme Court has declared this unconstitutional. The fact that the Manitoba government failed in its attempt to prosecute the Dryden Paper Company for damage to Manitoba waters in the recent Supreme Court decision clearly reveals that the federal government must take responsibility for the problem. Yet no charges have been laid against the Dryden plant as provided for under the Fisheries Act, despite the fact that federal authorities clearly have the jurisdiction to do so. It seems that this tired Liberal administration is more prone to rhetoric than to action.

My office has enquired to ascertain why no charges have been laid to date. I am sure many members of this House would be interested to learn the reason. Frankly, the bureaucrats could not supply the answer. As a matter of fact the Department of the Environment did not seem to have many answers to supply about anything.

During my period of investigation into this matter the director of the water pollution control directorate was unavailable for comment as he was out of town upgrading his facility in Canada's two official languages and he will not be available for another six months. The director's assistant was unavailable as well as he was out of town attending a conference and would not be back for a couple of weeks. The assistant's assistant was likewise not in his office. Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I now harbour grave suspicions that the Department of the Environment comprises only a contingent of embarrassed receptionists. There can be little wonder why the government seems to resemble a rudderless ship.

Does the government not take the plight of Grassy Narrows and White Dog reserve Indians seriously? The government of Japan takes the problem of mercury poisoning very seriously. On Wednesday it was reported that two businessmen from the Chisso Corporation at Minamata were charged with the involuntary manslaughter of seven people who died of mercury poisoning.

In Canada, Section 176 of the Criminal Code may be employed where it is established that a common nuisance has caused physical injury to any person or has endangered the life, safety or health of the public. While it is not necessary to prosecute offenders at Dryden under the Criminal Code, it is essential that the government's conspicuous jurisdictional dodging be resolved.

Mercury pollution is a national problem. It has had its effects felt in at least nine of ten provinces and the territories. Witnesses testifying before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry on April 8 professed that mercury pollution is a growing international problem. Recent scientific studies conducted on the Greenland glacial fields indicated mercury pollution is a by-product of the world's growing industrialism. It is a long-term problem.

● (1610)

Canada has more to lose from unchecked mercury pollution than almost any other western nation. The Grassy Narrows and White Dog experience has vividly underlined the social and economic consequences of mercury pollution for our native people whose social structure is built upon a fish economy.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has displayed a shocking lack of leadership with regard to his handling of the problems at the Grassy Narrows and White Dog reserves. Although section 91(24) of the British North America Act places the well-being of Indians on reservations within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been anxious to push his responsibilities on to other ministers. The minister has taken a very narrow view of this problem. This side of the House is not satisfied with the minister's makeshift solutions and evasions.

[Mr. Beatty.]

Along the Wabigoon-English River system many Indians are continuing to eat contaminated fish because the Indians doubt the sincerity of the government and because they really have little alternative. Thought must be given to moving the Grassy Narrows and White Dog reserves to a non-contaminated area if consumption of contaminated fish continues. To date, none of the minister's officials have proposed this possibility to the natives.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has a responsibility to Canada's northern peoples to demonstrate some concern and to urge his colleagues to cease their jurisdictional juggling. A great deal of research is needed to conduct further studies on all aspects of mercury pollution. The federal government must arm itself with expertise so that it may also deal with mercury poisoning in the international context. I understand environment Canada is currently conducting an internal task force examination to determine future research and development needs to deal with the mercury pollution problem. The federal government must co-ordinate and catalogue a national effort to gain the knowledge to deal with our mercury pollution problems.

The immense human and economic problems caused by mercury poisoning in Canada are clear. What is distressing is that the government's concern is not. Where there should have been action, there has been paralysis. Where there should have been explanations, there has been silence. And where there should have been basic concern for the health and lives of human beings, there has been indifference.

There is much about life in government which I have found challenging and stimulating, but I have also noticed that the day-to-day atmosphere of crisis here in Ottawa can distort a person's perspective and dull his sense of outrage at attitudes, policies, and actions that would offend deeply the average citizen. After a few years in this environment it becomes easy to view human tragedies as case histories, and human beings as simple statistics. We have heard that happen today.

I fear that it is that desensitization that has struck both parliament and the whole of the federal structure when it comes to mercury poisoning of human beings. That is the reason why the issue has come before parliament so few times, and it is an indictment of this institution that so little has been said about it in this Chamber.

The people of Canada are not indifferent to the human tragedies in northern Ontario and northwestern Quebec. They cannot understand and they will not tolerate the jurisdictional buck-passing that has taken place between federal and provincial authorities. The federal government has today—and it has had for years—all the jurisdiction it needs to deal with this problem. What Canadians from one coast of this country to another demand is that the government use that jurisdiction and act now before more damage is done.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes) has brought this matter before the House. While I disagree with some of the statements he made I think it is an excellent proposition to have such a subject brought before the House hopefully for a rational debate rather than one full of sound and fury. It should be a debate not of condemnation but of rationale, because I am sure it is the intent of the House not to say that someone did something right or that someone did something wrong but that we are at a certain point in time, and let us go forward from this point.

The dangers of mercury contamination of the environment were first brought to the public's attention by two major tragedies in Japan in the late 1960's, one of which was instrumental in giving the effects of mercury contamination in the human body the name Minimata disease. Since this time the dangers and effects of this type of environmental irresponsibility have been extensively reported.

Canadian experience in this regard began with the dumping, between 1961 and 1970, of a considerable amount of mercury into the English-Wabigoon river system by the chlor-alkali plant of the Reed Paper Company in Dryden, Ontario. This matter is of concern to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development because of the presence on the English-Wabigoon river system, and downstream from the Reed Paper Mill in Dryden, of two Indian reserves. These are the Grassy Narrows and Whitedog reserves. The concern of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in this regard was not expressed only in relation to the dangers posed to the health of the residents of these reserves, whose population now totals 916. It was also over the threat that the consequences of the mercury contamination of the English-Wabigoon river system would totally destroy the social and economic fabric of the Grassy Narrows-Whitedog Region.

Once the possibility of mercury contamination had been raised, the government of the province of Ontario in light of the dangers of this dumping practice, as evidenced in Japan, investigated and found that the levels of mercury in fish in the English-Wabigoon river system was some twenty times greater than the maximum safe level for human consumption. In 1970, therefore, the effluent from the Dryden mill was reduced by provincial order, commercial fishing in the English-Wabigoon river system was banned, and tests were conducted on residents of both the Whitedog and Grassy Narrows reserves in order to determine the affect on the inhabitants of the mercury contamination. The steps which have been taken to investigate and treat the effects of mercury contamination on the native population of the Dryden area were taken by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Department of National Health and Welfare, which on behalf of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is providing health care to the Indian population of the Dryden area, the Department of the Environment, and the appropriate departments of the government of the province of Ontario. Indian Affairs has, however, played a much more direct role in helping the residents of Whitedog and Grassy Narrows overcome the tragic effects of the mercury contamination on their economic and social traditions.

I welcome the fact that members on the other side have brought up the matter of the social and economic disruption, because in addition to being a health problem it is also an economic and social problem.

The mercury contamination, quite simply, kicked the props out from under the entire way of life of these people. Because of the high contamination levels in the local fish, all commercial fishing which had previously been one of the main occupations was halted. In addition, some of the guiding and tourist businesses on the English-Wabigoon river system closed their doors which have not opened since. The result was severe unemployment and severe dislocation in respect of the lives of these people. At Grassy Narrows, for instance, there are 78 employable males. However, after the collapse of the fishing and tourist industries, only 14 band members, or 18% of the total male labour force, had year-round employment. At Whitedog, the situation was worse. Equally tragic was the fact that the traditional food supply of the Whitedog and Grassy Narrows reserves was fish, the same contaminated fish from the same contaminated river system.

The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, ever since this tragedy was first revealed, has worked hard on behalf of both the Grassy Narrows and White Dog reserves, and although the situation is still a most serious one—and, Mr. Speaker, I will not make apologies for the fact that it is a serious one, because it is and I will say so—considerable progress has been made.

With respect to the problem of providing an alternate food supply, several important steps have been taken. In conjunction with other departments, an educational program is being carried out to warn the band members not to eat fish from the contaminated rivers. The program includes letters to heads of household, and visit to all houses to discuss this problem on a one to one basis. I am sorry the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) is not present because he indicated, I am sure with no malicious intent—

● (1620)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He will be back in a minute.

Mr. Anderson: —that letters were the only thing that were sent out. However, letters were sent out, and person to person visits to every home in the communities were made. The development of a suitable Ojibway language audio-visual explanation program has been carried out, as well as the preparation of a 15 minutes videotape film in the Ojibway language. I think there has been some insinuation that this has been a very slap-dash presentation. I disagree, Mr. Speaker. This is not the intent of the department. They have provided what I think was a very well laid out and carefully thought out plan. The only further step that could be carried out is to have a department official present with each member of each family to make sure they do not eat contaminated fish.

I am certain that the native people have been provided with ample warnings through the one-to-one contact which has been provided up to this point. In addition, a local nutritionist has been employed to work with the bands in researching food supplies and providing dietary advice regarding alternate sources of food. A resident of each reserve has been hired to help the nutritionist and other government health staff, and regular meetings are being held with the band leadership to monitor the progress of the program.

The department has also worked to identify lakes which are free from contamination and which can be safely fished for food, as has been mentioned, and has provided community freezers to the reserves for the storage of mercury free fish which is caught, and also for the storage of fish which being trucked in from other areas by the Ontario government.

I would also like to point out to hon. members that the recent trip by five Indians from the Dryden area along with their advisers to Minamata, Japan, was financed by the federal government, with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Department of National Health and Welfare, and the Department of the Secretary of State all sharing the cost. This trip, despite the rather sensational coverage by the media, was a very important and very effective educational session and, I believe, has resulted in a much better understanding of the causes and effects of Minamata's disease on the native people in the area concerned.

I also noted that the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie asked that the government take part in a five or six part program, one part of which was to be an exchange program with the Japanese. This has already been started, with the hope that the people in the affected areas will realize the dangers resulting from the eating of contaminated fish, and we hope this will be of some benefit to them.

I would also like to point out that it is not enough just to resolve the problems which have been created. We must also work for the future and try to restore some form of social and economic stability to this troubled area. This the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is attempting to do through a wide ranging series of projects, both short-term and long-term, to help these people whose employment activities have been drastically curtailed. The fact that the health of these people has been affected must be taken into consideration, as well as their loss of employment opportunities.

In addition to the regular programs for economic development, which are of course available to all Indian bands throughout Canada, a number of specific projects have been initiated by the department to provide short-term employment for area residents. These include the development of local government administration and the hiring of a community worker for each reserve; work opportunity projects for brush cutting and road clearing and for the construction of docks and sheds for fish gear; tree planting; a school lunch program; a LIP grant for a garbage disposal program; training on the job moneys for such things as counselling and an economic development officer; the installation of water and sewage services for community buildings; and a general reserve clean-up and painting. These and other short-term employment projects have been provided in order to help bridge the gap between the severe socio-economic dislocation caused by the mercury contamination and the coming into effect of programs for more long-term employment opportunities. In all honesty I must deny that no funds were provided for the employment of these people whether on a short-term or a long-term basis.

Two of the proposals for long-term employment opportunities which should be mentioned are the canoe factory and the shoe factories. Ground work has already been laid for two shoe factories to commence operations on reserves in the Dryden area. One of these will be located in Grassy Narrows. A feasibility study has also been initiated to investigate markets and production cost factors for the possible manufacture of fibreglass canoes, also at Grassy Narrows.

I mentioned earlier that as a result of the mercury contamination only 14 members of the Grassy Narrows band—out of a possible 78 in the male work force—were employed at one point. This figure is now up to 42 persons and is an indication of the extent to which the socio-economic conditions on these reserves have been stabilized. While the department, along with other government departments, does not consider it acceptable, it is an indication of the direction in which employment is progressing on this reserve.

I think that the key factor for all hon. members to recognize is that the one thing we have learned in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is that you cannot come in with programs and dictate to the people in the areas what they should be doing for their well-being. I hope that we have learned that lesson and I think we have, because the only way in which the people of the area will develop into a socio-economic unit with a high employment ratio is as a result of the enthusiasm and sense of pride in their own communities which these people are exhibiting, and which I believe is now building up in these reserves. This will do more than all the assistance we can give them to ensure a stable future for this area. This is now happening and I have every confidence that the initiative and leadership which are now being shown by the Whitedog and Grassy Narrows bands will produce significant results in the months ahead.

Before closing I would like to discuss briefly the problem of mercury contamination as it relates to northwestern Quebec. The discovery of mercury contamination in this area from both natural and industrial sources has raised concern for the safety of the Indian bands in the area. In response to this an educational program sponsored by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on the dangers of eating mercury contaminated fish is being carried out. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and the Department of National Health and Welfare are in the process of intensifying the dissemination of information related to mercury poisoning through the use of appropriate audio-visual material, band meetings, and seminars for community leaders and health workers. A joint nutrition committee is also being established by the two departments to research the most appropriate proteins to replace the contaminated fish.

The mercury contamination problem in northwestern Quebec is made more difficult, I am afraid, by natural levels of mercury in the waters of certain lakes and rivers, and also by the more nomadic way of life of the residents of the area as compared to the Indian of northwestern Ontario, as has been mentioned by one hon. member. However, the department is now carrying out a survey of the local labour force, educational levels, and skills acquired so that band councils, with the support of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, can plan and develop adequate and realistic solutions to the health, social, and economic problems created by this tragic legacy of our modern industrial development.

I thank the hon. member for Lambton-Kent for having brought up this subject on an opposition day. I trust that we are realistic enough to realize that in the very complex society in which we live there will be substances which will be toxic and about which we are not aware at this date. I think it is the function of the government as far as possible to try to predict what these substances will be. However, when these matters do arise, surely the government must act with speed and dispatch.

● (1630)

The question raised by the hon. member is whether speed and dispatch have been observed here. When we are dealing with people we cannot go into an area, dictate what they will or will not eat, or what they will or will not do. This is done by a slow process of education and working with them. In that way these problems are solved, and in all sincerity I feel this is the way it has been carried out. This is the way it will be carried out, and I trust that in the future the people in these affected areas will have not only healthy lives but lives of full employment during which they can work as other Canadians, trusting that the approach of the government is the right one. If the solution is a slapdash method of trying to bring in quick relief without having basic studies done, I think that presents as much danger as we are being accused of allowing to exist at the present time.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate, and I should first like to congratulate the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes) on his very thought provoking address on this issue.

We must ask ourselves, is mercury poisoning Canadians, and will Canadians die of mercury poisoning? I submit that these questions are of increasing concern because mercury can no longer be ignored as a lethal environmental pollutant. These questions demand our attention because some Canadians have blood mercury concentrations within the range associated with mercury poisoning in other countries, notably, Japan and Iraq.

There is no doubt that mercury can kill and maim. During the last two centuries an estimated 8,500 persons have been poisoned by mercury, of whom perhaps 700 died. Mercury poisoning must therefore be considered a hazard to public health wherever mercury is used and wherever mercury is discharged into the environment. This is certainly true for Canada, but so that the entirety of the problem of mercury as an environmental pollutant can be understood, wider aspects of mercury pollution, those relating to Canadian society, must be considered as well. Consider, for example, some of the effects of mercury pollution.

In industry vast quantities of mercury are used in a variety of technological processes. In 1967 world consumption of mercury was 7,364 metric tons, a large proportion of it being used by a few industrial nations. For example, the United States of America used something like 2,127 tons. In Canada chlor-alkali plants, pulp and paper mills and the electrical industry consume much of the total mercury used. For example, in 1969 chlor-alkali plants used some 100 of a total of 140 tons required by industry.

With this industrial use large amounts of mercury are discharged into the environment. Of the total of 7,364 tons of mercury consumed by the world in 1967, 2,573 tons were lost to the air and 2,045 tons, it is estimted, were lost to the waterways.

As well as having an effect on health, mercury pollution in Canada has had ecological, socio cultural, political, racial, and international implications. With other factors it has disrupted the lives of Indians and has radically altered their traditional way of life, for the fish on which so many Indians depend for protein have become contaminated with mercury discharged into waterways from chlor-alkali plants and paper and pulp mills. This is particularly serious in northwest Ontario and northwest Quebec. Not surprisingly, the sociological effects of mercury pollution have had a political impact, and federal and provincial authorities have been accused of making light of the dangers of mercury pollution to man and environment in Canada. Nor is it surprising that mercury pollution in Canada has had racial implications, for the Canadians who have the highest mercury concentrations are Canadian Indians.

Finally, there is an international twist. Japanese victims of mercury poisoning have allied themselves with Canadian Indians of northwest Ontario, as have Japanese environmentalists, in an attempt to help Canadian Indians bring their plight to the attention of the federal government. Japanese physicians with much experience in mercury poisoning have examined Canadian Indians and, convinced of mercury poisoning in these Indians, have taken a stronger line than have Canadian physicians on mercury pollution in Canada. Unfortunately there is as yet no agreement on the clinical diagnosis of mercury poisoning.

Mercury has long fascinated man. It was been dubbed a mineral of a perfectly singular kind. Ramazzini, the father of industrial medicine, spoke in the eighteenth century of the most cruel bane of all that deals death and destruction to miners and of course Lewis Carroll's Mad Hatter lives on as a symbol of the damage done to the nervous system by mercury. The Mad Hatter conjures up an image of poisoning due to inorganic mercury, and this form of mercury poisoning was for long the most familiar. Today, however, because of the burgeoning of sophisticated technological processes, it is poisoning from organic mercury which is of major concern. Methyl mercury in particular damages the central nervous system irreversibly and sometimes fatally. The experience of several countries merits the attention of Canadian professional people.

It was in 1965 that a Japanese factory doctor in Minamata, a small town on the western coast of Kyushu in southern Japan, reported that an unclarified disease of the central nervous system had broken out. Soon, some 30 persons were found to have contracted the disease, now known as Minamata disease, during the previous three years. Diligent investigation finally disclosed that the disease was a disorder of the nervous system caused by poisoning with methyl mercury.

The disorder appeared to affect only fishermen and their families in and around Minamata. The patients evidently ate large amounts of fish and shellfish from Minamata Bay regularly, which were found to contain high concentrations of mercury, of the order of 5 parts to 20 parts per million. The concentration of mercury in the mud of Minamata Bay was related directly to the proximity of the sample tested to a plastics factory in Minamata which produced vinyl chloride, an inorganic mercury compound being used as the catalyst. A similar disorder was produced in cats by feeding them fish contaminated with methyl mercury.

Another outbreak of Minamata disease occurred in Niigata, Japan, in 1964 and 1965. It was virtually identical with the disease which had broken out in Minamata. To December, 1974, 798 persons in Japan had been verified as having Minamata disease, and of these some 107 died.

The Japanese experience is relevant to the Canadian situation because the Canadian Indians, in whom high blood concentrations have been found, are like the Japanese of Minamata, heavy fish eaters, and fish in some Canadian waters have high concentrations of mercury. However, the Japanese data are less useful than those of studies of methyl mercury poisoning elsewhere because blood concentrations apparently were not documented at the time of intoxication.

The experience of Japan and other countries is a useful but disturbing background to the Canadian experience, but the Canadian experience also is disturbing. Vast quantities of mercury have been dumped into Canadian waterways. Between May of 1972 and April of 1975 major chemical companies were unable to account for up to 65 per cent of the mercury purchased. One plant in northwest Quebec lost something like 7,437 of 11,248 tons of mercury during this period.

Evidence of mercury pollution of Canadian waterways has been available since 1969 when the South Saskatchewan and the St. Clair rivers were found to be contaminated. A contaminated river may require up to 70 years to cleanse itself through natural processes, so methyl mercury will persist in Canadian waters for many years to come.

Mercury concentrations in fish in some Canadian waters exceed the federally acceptable upper limit of 5 parts per million. In 1969 concentrations of up to 10 parts per million were reported in fish in the South Saskatchewan River, and since then concentrations several times 5 parts per million have been measured frequently in many Canadian waters.

Canadian Indians, like Japanese fishermen, are heavy fish eaters. If mercury concentrations in the fish eaten by these Indians exceeded one part per million, which has happened on some Indian reservations, the daily safe limit of 0.03 milligrams of methyl mercury will be exceeded.

● (1640)

High whole-blood mercury concentrations in Canadian Indians were first reported in 1970, when the maximum concentration of 385 parts per billion was found in an Indian of the White Dog community in northwestern Ontario. The following year Indians from the northwest Quebec communities of Matagami and Miquelon were found to have abnormally high whole-blood concentrations. Government authorities have been monitoring mercury contamination since 1971, but extremely high concentrations were reported as late as July, 1975. Not surprisingly, government authorities have been charged with being indecisive and slow to take action to correct the situation. In part, any indecisiveness of action stems from lack of agreement on what constitutes a positive diagnosis of poisoning.

A further charge directed at federal and provincial authorities concerns a wait-and-see attitude. Public opinion suggests that the policy is to wait until symptoms appear before it is admitted that Canadians are being poisoned by mercury. This attitude also is attributable to lack of agreement on diagnosis, but steps have been taken to reduce further exposure to mercury among the Indians; thus, fishing has been restricted, uncontaminated fish have been supplied to Indians, and extensive monitorings and research have been initiated.

The bulk of Canadians' food supply is, of course, free from hazardous mercury contamination, with some important exceptions. One important area where there is significant mercury contamination has already been referred to, namely, the fish in the English-Wabagoon and Bell river systems of northwestern Ontario and Quebec, which comprise the traditional food supplies of the two native groups discussed earlier. Another exception is swordfish, the sale of which in Canada and the United States is still prohibited because the mercury levels are higher than 0.5 parts per million. The published data confirms this point uniformly. An official of Environment Canada stated early in April, 1976, that the mercury levels in swordfish are regularly monitored and that they remain at an average of about 0.9 parts per million. This level has remained unchanged during the past five years. The official further stated that the level was not and is not expected to change, because the mercury in the oceans is from "natural" sources, as opposed to the preventable mercury pollution which comes from human sources.

The banning of swordfish sales in Canada after 1970 and the simultaneous ban on exports to the United States was especially damaging to my native province, Nova Scotia, whose fishermen caught almost all the swordfish for Canada. Landings alone in 1969 were worth more than $4 million. In a fisheries economy the value of these swordfish when exported was, of course, many times that figure.

In legal and biological terms the situation is quite clear-cut. Swordfish contain, on average, about twice the acceptable level of mercury, and it has been proven that almost all this mercury is present as methyl mercury. Further, there is every indication that this has always been and will always remain the case. In this respect the situation differs subtly from that facing inland fisheries, inasmuch as most of the inland mercury contamination originates from man-made sources. However, because swordfish are contaminated they cannot be sold in Canada. Because the U.S.A. has adopted the same 0.5 parts per million standard, the fish cannot be exported to that country, because U.S. federal law under the Federal Food and Drug Administration controls the importation of fish.

An anomalous situation has arisen in the United States with regard to the sale of swordfish. I point this out because individual states do not have to abide by federal health standards. Some states, namely, Maine and Massachussetts, allow their fishermen to sell their swordfish catches within the state. But this fish is banned from inter-state commerce by United States federal law. Needless to say this situation is confusing to fishermen and confusing to observers in Canada, because of the double standard that it creates. However, state actions will have no overt bearing on Canadian sword-fishing, because United States federal law is predominant in matters of import and export.

A second anomaly is present in this situation. While swordfish or any species of fish containing more than 0.5 parts per million of mercury is not acceptable for sale in Canada, such fish can be exported to other countries, provided the importing country's standards of health protection allow the importation. Thus Nova Scotia fishermen may be free to export their swordfish catch to Japan, which apparently has a higher acceptable contamination level—an ironic situation, considering the Japanese experience at Minamata and Niigata. However, fisheries officials have stated that the Japanese, who catch their own swordfish off Japan, are willing to pay only about 25 cents per pound for Canadian swordfish, or about half the prices needed by our fishermen to make the venture economically viable.

When we consider that the known levels of mercury in swordfish are not greatly in excess of tolerable levels, it seems to me that some research should be undertaken to lower the mercury content in swordfish. This could be done through different processing methods. It seems to me that, as the world's population grows and there is a continuing demand for protein, some method must be found to use these fish which, landed, weigh anywhere between 25 pounds and as much as 500 pounds; it could be done by mixing the flesh of these fish with that of other, smaller fish which contain lower amounts of mercury. By doing this the mercury content could be brought down to the tolerable limit of five parts per million. Actually, this process is now taking place in the tuna industry.

Tuna containing mercury levels in excess of five parts per million are mixed with the smaller Bonita tuna, and the mixed fish is marketed as flaked tuna. There is nothing wrong with flaked tuna, and its mercury content does not exceed the tolerable limit of five parts per million. This process which may be examined by the fishing industry, government, and scientists gives us hope that, in future, the delectable swordfish may be processed in the same manner.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the question of whether some Canadians are being poisoned by mercury is not easy to answer, but there is sufficient evidence that methyl mercury is harmful and that some Canadians do have unacceptably high whole-blood concentrations of mercury. Because of the sinister possibility of mercury-induced irreversible brain damage the current situation demands our full attention. I submit that action is required. What should be done?

First, the multidepartmental approach to mercury poisoning in Canadians should be replaced by one that is the responsibility of a single group. At present three governments, several government departments, at least one outside consultant, various local authorities, numerous neurologists and many other interested persons have separate responsibility.

In addition, various task forces and conferences on mercury contamination have added to the wealth of information now available on mercury poisoning. What is required is a cohesive effort to synthesize this information and the approaches of the past so that the Indians, the group mainly affected, can be given a clearer indication that a constructive approach will be followed.

Second, still more needs to be learned on the effects of methyl mercury, particularly its subclinical effects. Much of the information we have today is based on outbreaks of mercury poisoning elsewhere, the relevance of which to the situation in Canada is not entirely clear. Much more basic research is required into the problem of dose and response; and more epidemiologic research is needed concerning, for example, the degree to which mercury poisoning is irreversible, and autopsy findings in those known to have been exposed to high mercury whole-blood concentrations.

Third, it is desirable that differences between Canadian and Japanese neurologists, and between Canadian neurologists, be resolved. This will not be easy because these differences stem from differences in interpretation of clinical findings relating to Canadian Indians examined. In part the differences are attributable to a fragmented and quasi-political approach to the problem of mercury poisoning.

Finally, we need a mature philosophical approach to the management of environmental problems, of which mercury contamination is but one. The current approach is a stopgap one, for like so many environmental problems, mercury contamination is just one of many that require solution at any one time, and the solution to any one problem, then, is inadequate. Many of those who are trying to deal with an urgent problem must simultaneously be dealing with others; this is true, for example, of the medical services branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare which is attempting to overcome the difficulties of mercury contamination in Indians while also dealing with many other unrelated matters, despite limitations in personnel and resources.

● (1650)

It is in part a matter of priorities, but to a much greater extent our current problems have a more fundamental origin: Canada lacks the aggressive environmental legislation philosophy of a country like Sweden, which puts teeth into its environmental legislation and muscle into the actions required.

Preventive medicine is always less glamorous than therapeutic medicine. Yet if the health of Canadians is to be preserved, it is issues such as mercury pollution that are likely to be more important in the long run than many other apparently more pressing issues.

Mercury Poisoning

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House the fact that the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) is sitting in the high office of the chair of Speaker, something we do not often see for a private member. I thought that in order to get your name on the record of Hansard, I would bring this matter to the attention of all members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Stewart (Cochrane)): The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) is very kind.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Now you have his name on the record also.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity to elaborate on the program presently being undertaken by the Department of National Health and Welfare concerning mercury poisoning.

Mercury poisoning has become a familiar topic with those who read newspapers. Scarcely a week goes by without some new article or some report of a new revelation or finding. Yet a growing recognition of the problem now known as Minamata disease began only in the mid-1960's. Due to this growing awareness, testing was first initiated among the Indian people living on reserves, in areas of known mercury pollution in northwestern Ontario in 1970, and in northwestern Quebec in 1971. It was as a result of the health finding of these tests that the medical services branch of the Department of Health and Welfare undertook an educational campaign to encourage persons in the areas so affected to limit their intake of fish which had been contaminated by mercury.

Since that time, much more information has become increasingly apparent. The Department of Health and Welfare bases its program to combat the problem on the following premises: First, the mercury levels in fish are still hazardous and will remain so for some years; second, damage to health from mercury poisoning. Once it has progressed to this stage it is believed to be irreversible. There is no absolutely sure "safe level" for all individuals. There is, however, uncertainty about the seriousness of the effects of low levels of exposure over a long period of time.

Third, the emphasis must therefore be on prevention of intake of mercury. In practical terms this means that no contaminated fish should be eaten. Fourth, for this reason emphasis is placed on educating people not to eat any contaminated fish at all, rather than simply encouraging them to reduce their intake, and on helping them to adjust to other eating habits. Fifth, this must be accompanied by a health monitoring program which identifies those most at risk and concentrates advices, assistance, and health surveillance on these individuals. This program specifically involves the indentification of those persons at risk by means of blood and/or hair tests. This includes, particularly, fishing guides and their families, and pregnant mothers.

The purpose of such identification is to monitor the progress of such persons at risk in terms of their mercury intake, and therefore their blood mercury levels, and to perform periodic testing of persons at risk in order to ensure that blood mercury levels are, in fact, falling. It involves conducting clinical examinations of persons at risk to determine the presence of disease due to mercury; and conducting a nutritional program to determine first of all to what extent persons in affected areas rely on contaminated fish in their diet and, secondly, to investigate alternative sources of protein, that is, sources which are both available, affordable, and acceptable.

It should be noted that in the course of this nutritional program the safe level of mercury in fish for this particular population already at risk has been redefined at 0.2 parts per million, instead of the present level of 0.5 parts per million generally accepted as safe for those populations not at risk. In addition, the Indian Affairs Branch is advised of any necessary measures that are required for protein replacement in such a program.

Since the initial testing in 1970, the department has been active in some 25 Indian communities. Over 3,000 people have been tested by blood and/or hair sampling. To date the major involvement in this area has been in northwestern Ontario and northwestern Quebec. I should like to deal with each of these areas, northwestern Ontario first.

Since the winter of 1972-73 a yearly health survey has been carried out by the province of Ontario with the support and assistance of this department. Such tests established that blood levels of mercury were not falling. Adequate numbers of persons were not coming forward for testing, and concern was expressed that a survey carried out in winter did not accurately reflect maximum periods of fish intake.

As I am now coming to a complex part, perhaps I might call it five o'clock.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Stewart (Cochrane)): It being five o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that under Standing Order 58(11), the proceedings on the motion are now ended.

[English]

It being five o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday next at two o'clock. I wish hon. members a good weekend and a fruitful and pleasant Mother's Day.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, May 10, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXPRESSION OF CONCERN FOR FAMILIES AND REQUEST FOR INCREASED AID TO EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS IN ITALY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity that has to do with the deep concern and participation of all members of this House in the face of the catastrophe which took place last week in Northern Italy, and in view of the evident contribution made to Canada by people from that region, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin):

That this parliament go on record expressing its deep concern to the families of the survivors and that the government consider the desirability of

(a) intensifying and increasing its assistance through the Canadian Armed Forces in Europe;

(b) participating with financial assistance; and

(c) consulting closely with the Italian authorities so as to maximize the Canadian efforts in alleviating the suffering of the affected population.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 can be presented to the House only if there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

SEARCH AND RESCUE

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF PROVISION OF LIFEBOATS FOR NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to present a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Another Newfoundland fisherman has been lost on the west coast of Newfoundland, the second in a week, emphasizing again that, the Ministry of Transport's overall concept to provide lifeboat stations in the Atlantic Region does not include any stations in Western Newfoundland. It further emphasizes the complete lack of strategic planning for surveillance, patrol and protection of Newfoundland fishermen and all mariners in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House orders that the decision to provide four new lifeboats, none of which is presently intended for Newfoundland, be reconsidered by a combined committee of Transport and Communications and Fisheries and Forestry, to offset the evident deficiencies in strategic planning by MOT and to include rescue lifeboats for Newfoundland, thus improving Canada's search and rescue service in the area of greatest need.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such motion can only be presented to the House if there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF RAID ON OFFICES OF THE "SUN" IN TORONTO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Considering the fundamental importance of a free press to a democratic society, and considering that the RCMP raid on the offices of the Toronto Sun on Friday, May 7, is an apparent abuse of the Official Secrets Act, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instructs the Solicitor General to make a statement which will provide a full explanation of this raid, including who initiated it, who authorized it and under what law it took place.

Mr. Speaker: The motion under Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Paproski: Warren Allmand said no.

Mr. Allmand: I said, nuts!

[Translation]

AIR CANADA

SUGGESTED DEBATE ON DENIAL OF USE OF FRENCH BY PILOTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an important and urgent matter.

As the new regulations intended for the flying personnel of Air Canada constitute a glaring injustice towards all Quebecers, and it is unacceptable that Quebec pilots should not be allowed to communicate in French with other Francophones on Air Canada planes flying from sea to sea, while Quebecers represent almost one third of the Canadian population, and the Official Languages Act, passed by Parliament in 1969, grants the French fact the same status, the same rights, as the English language in all parliamentary and government institutions, as the federal government advocates bilingualism to the extent of spending considerable amounts of money to promote it, as there are two official languages in Canada, and as, in addition, French has the priority in Quebec, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That this House adjourn its business immediately to allow a debate on concrete measures to be taken to redress the injustice and affront Air Canada has done to Canadian culture by edicting new regulations, and that the use of French be authorized as soon as possible in the flying cabins of Air Canada planes to meet the standards of a bilingual Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

* * *

● (1410)

[English]

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT OF INQUIRY INTO BEEF INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, that being the matter of the report of the special beef inquiry that was placed on the desk of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on April 27. Because of its importance to the beef industry, and the uneasiness caused by the speculation surrounding some of the recommendations, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Agriculture table the reports so that a thorough public discussion can be held.

[Mr. Allmand.]

Mr. Speaker: A motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be made only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO ASSURE CIVIL JUDICIAL AUTHORITY BE PROTECTION AGAINST ABUSE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I too rise under the same order. In view of the obvious challenge to a free press inherent in the recent raid on the well-known paper the Toronto Sun by the RCMP, in view of the provisions of section 11(2) of the Official Secrets Act which permits search warrants to be issued by "an officer of the RCMP not below the rank of superintendent where the case is one of great emergency", and in view of the fact that the reputation of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), while important, may not be a matter of great national emergency, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the Minister of Justice be requested forthwith to bring in amendments to the Official Secrets Act in order to ensure that the civil judicial authority remain as the sole protection against the abuse of either political or police power in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be made only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

OLYMPIC GAMES

REQUEST THAT MORE QUEBEC ATHLETES PARTICIPATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce an urgent motion of pressing necessity.

In view of the prestigious nature of the Olympic Games, in view also of the federal government's strong refusal to participate directly in the financing of the estimated deficit, considering, moreover, that Quebec is almost completely responsible for the material realization of those games and that its citizens alone will have to pay the deficit of $1 billion, considering finally that the Quebec government put forward special programs, particularly "Mission Quebec 76", to bring the number of athletes from Quebec to 30 per cent of the national delegation, and considering the fact that Canadian federations for each of the Olympic sports seem to strongly disregard athletes from Quebec, who would barely represent 20 per cent of the Canadian athletes, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is responsible for sports in the country, order an inquiry into this matter so that a fair portion of Quebec athletes take part in the Olympic Games.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provision of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL TO INFORM UNITED STATES OF DISAGREEMENT WITH PLAN TO MINE NICKEL FROM SEABED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the United States has presented a proposal to the Law of the Sea conference which calls for the mining of nickel from the seabed at a minimum 6 per cent annual rate of increase, in view of the fact that it has been suggested that this rate of increase in the mining of nickel from the sea would mean the extinction of the nickel industry in Canada in a very few years, and in view of massive unemployment in large areas of the country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That the Canadian government immediately inform the government of the United States of its opposition to the American plan, and that the particular workers who are so vitally affected by these developments be involved in any government plans or strategy.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF VICE-PRIME MINISTER OF THE NETHERLANDS, MR. VAN AGT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to a distinguished visitor in the Speaker's gallery, His Excellency Mr. A. A. M. Van Agt, the vice-Prime Minister and Minister of Justice from the Netherlands.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

DATE OF PRESENTATION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance whom I should like to compliment on his enthusiastic participation in the "Mackasey Roast". I should say, too, that we may raise it as a matter of privilege if any more "cabinet roasts" occur outside of the House of Commons.

I should like to direct a question to the minister with regard to his next performance. Would he tell the House when he will be presenting his first budget?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the Leader of the Opposition for the kind compliment. Of course, he will recognize that there are not generally as many targets like that particular one for that kind of occasion. Let me say in answer to the second part of his question that I intend to present the budget on the evening of May 25.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I concede nothing regarding the targets on the other side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

FINANCE

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF ECONOMIC FORECASTS—SMALL BUSINESS REPRESENTATION ON TAXATION ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): We understand that as part of the contribution to the post-control policy development the Department of Finance has prepared a five-year economic forecast. Will the Minister of Finance confirm that that kind of forecast has been undertaken and, if so, will the minister agree to immediately direct that forecast to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs so it can be studied along with the economic review?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would not regard the department's work in this regard as being forecasting. The department has, of course, been engaged in examining various possibilities which might occur in the development of the international and Canadian economies. I would think it not advisable to try to predict so far in advance what the events may be. Under the circumstances, it would seem to me the work to this point is not of the kind that could effectively be referred to the committee.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I continue to regret the refusal of the government to lay before a committee of the House of Commons and the people of Canada some indication of the options it is considering in forecasting, on which the government is acting in preparing budgets. I wonder whether the minister could tell us now if there will be appended to the budget address, or included in the budget, some indication of the long-range forecasting on which budget plans will be based?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I just say with regard to the reluctance to commit ourselves to long-range forecasts, and I think it is a fair observation to make to the House, that when a figure of that kind is given in a forecast the qualifications that necessarily surround it are immediately forgotten and it is as though the figure were stated as being definite for all time. In fact, in economic planning I think the appropriate course of action is to look at some options which might occur if different eventualities took place, particularly those beyond the control of the government. The budget will obviously look at the future and try to draw some conclusions with regard to the coming 12 months, but will not in any detail go beyond that period.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, that kind of fear about forecasting is not shared by virtually any other country with a parliamentary democracy. Of course, these other countries also do not share the existence of secrecy which is apparent here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the government is prepared to put anything on the Table or take parliament and the people of Canada into its confidence? The white paper of last October promised to establish consultative mechanisms for economic policy development.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. Leader of the Opposition has asked four questions now and this is the second preamble. I wonder if I could ask the hon. member to put his question.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is going to follow up on the agreement of his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, to provide small business representation on the taxation advisory committee by providing small business a formal place in whatever mechanism is established regarding post-control policies?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly be glad to continue the close co-operation we have had with the small business sector of the economy, particularly in the work of the Canadian Independent Business Committee, in considering in particular whether a representative of that group might effectively be involved in some formal discussion with government work, as the hon. Leader of the Opposition suggests.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

RESPONSIBILITY FOR RAID ON OFFICES OF THE TORONTO "SUN"—REASON FOR HASTE IN ISSUING SEARCH WARRANT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Given the importance of a free press to a democratic society, particularly its right to operate in a non-harassed way within the rule of law as we know it in the west, I should like to ask under whose authority the RCMP raided the offices of the Toronto Sun last Friday? I ask this particularly because under the Official Secrets Act an inspector of the RCMP can act on his initiative and issue a warrant if the case is "one of great emergency" and "that in the interest of the state immediate action is necessary." Was it done under the Official Secrets Act or if not under what authority was it done?

[Mr. Clark.]

• (1420)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the warrant to search was issued under the Official Secrets Act and fully in accordance with the law. No political persons were involved in the decision. As a matter of fact we learned about it only after the fact. The search warrant was obtained in pursuance of an alleged infraction of the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Broadbent: Well, Mr. Speaker, given this extraordinary assurance—I say "extraordinary" in light of the facts as we know them at this point—would the minister mind expanding on his answer. I quoted what seemed to be the relevant section of the act which refers to a "great emergency" or a situation in which "immediate action" was necessary. Would the minister kindly, given the importance as I say for a free press to operate in our society unharassed by the RCMP, expand on his answer and tell us precisely why such speedy action was necessary and what was the great emergency involved.

Mr. Allmand: Well, Mr. Speaker, under the law I was not involved in the decision. The RCMP went to a justice of the peace and obtained the search warrant in accordance with the statute. The justice granted the warrant. I think any question with regard to the legality should be put to the Minister of Justice. I cannot explain it. I was not involved in the decision in any way whatsoever.

STATUTE UNDER WHICH WARRANT TO SEARCH OFFICES OF TORONTO "SUN" ISSUED—OFFICIAL WHO INITIATED THE ACTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I should like to do precisely that and go to the Minister of Justice because presumably he will have done some checking on such an important matter over the weekend. Will he confirm that the action was taken under the Official Secrets Act, and if so under what part of that act, what specific official initiated the action and what official issued the warrant.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the name of the Justice of the Peace or the official who may have issued that warrant, either under subsection (1) or subsection (2) of section 11 of the Official Secrets Act. I wish, however, to thank the hon. member for asking the question so that I might have an opportunity to correct statements that have appeared both in news stories and editorials in—the Sunday Sun—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Basford: —saying, and I quote—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Basford: —where it is alleged that I issued such a warrant and no such warrant could be issued—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if he wants to return to this subject on the Orders of the Day, well and good, but this does not go, the smuggling in of an answer for self-satisfaction.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Having taken the Leader of the Opposition to task about an undue preamble I can scarcely do less in respect of the minister. If he has an answer to the specific question put by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby I think he should answer.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the specific answer to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby is that I do not have the name of the Justice of the Peace or the superintendent who may have issued—

Mr. Broadbent: "Who may have"? Don't you know?

Mr. Basford: —the order under Section 11, either subsection(1) or subsection(2). It is clear, in answer to the hon. member's question, that no such warrant was issued by me nor do I have such authority to issue.

* * *

[Translation]

AIR CANADA

DENIAL OF USE OF FRENCH BY PILOTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

Could he tell the House whether it is true that Air Canada has prohibited the use of French in its plane cabins alleging that it could be a source of misunderstandings? If such is the case, has that policy been approved by the government?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. There was a directive which Air Canada had issued which indicated that English would be the language used in technical work, and that was really in accord with the fact that our own regulations on instrument flying require that language generally to be used. The directive is open to a broader misinterpretation which Air Canada will be correcting in some detail, but I can assure the hon. member that it was never intended to stop casual or ordinary conversations in French between anyone but only related to the use of the English language in technical communication which is required at present under our regulations.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Since the reason given by Air Canada to justify its prohibition of French in plane cabins is that the use of French could become the source of misunderstandings, could the minister tell the House whether he is aware that such reasons suggest that, to avoid misunderstandings among French-speaking and English-speaking people, the government will have to ban the use of French as official language in Canada or separate Quebec from the rest of the country?

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member does make that suggestion seriously, and I hope he will take Air Canada at its word that the directive was meant to relate solely to technical language. Indeed they will be explaining that in more detail.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGES—REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION WITH INTERESTED GROUPS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. The minister has indicated that changes in the control program may have to be made at the time of the budget. Without inviting the minister to say anything about the budget at this time, I should like to ask him whether he has decided to make changes at that time and, if so, in what way is the minister consulting directly the various sectors of the economy on this matter?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Anti-Inflation Board and the government have been looking at many of the representations we have received about the operation of the anti-inflation program. We intend to make announcements in the context of the budget with respect to lines of change which of course will then be followed by a period of consultations on the preparation of amendments to the guidelines.

* * *

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

PARTICIPATION OF LABOUR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that the president of CLC has indicated that the congress is not going to form part and parcel of the Economic Council of Canada, I wonder whether the minister could assure the House that he will seek out a meeting with the president of the CLC this week in order to impress upon labour the need for it to discharge the very important responsibility given to it as a member of the Economic Council of Canada? Can the minister assure us of that?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): We have been taking that position with the CLC for the last couple of months, both in private and in public meetings.

Mr. Alexander: The minister has evaded my question. All I am asking is whether he will assure the House that he will meet with the president of CLC this week in order to impress upon labour the need for labour to discharge its responsibility with respect to the Economic Council of Canada, from which the minister will have to acquire in due course.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It does not seem to me that it is particularly necessary to seek a panic meeting this week to tell them what I have been telling them for the last two or three months.

* * *

INCOME TAX

BASIS UPON WHICH RELIGIOUS GROUP NOTIFIED OF DANGER OF LOSING STATUS OF CHARITABLE ORGANIZATION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue and it has to do with the cancellation of a march and a presentation of position by a religious group last weekend, of which I am sure the minister is well aware, with respect to the advocating of the Christian cause in iron curtain countries. I wonder if the minister can indicate on what basis his officials notified this group that they would be jeopardizing their charitable tax status, and whether he thinks it is appropriate for his department to make a definition as to the kind of representations that are legitimate and those that are illegitimate.

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the regulations are quite clear as to what groups can in fact qualify for the charitable donation certificate. In this particular instance this group had lost its right to be considered a charitable group as a result of failing to file a particular report. They are now making an application to be reinstated. In the course of that they indicated they would be taking part in this political activity or moving in this particular political arena. Jurisprudence in the courts indicated this goes beyond what the act allows. There are four clear items under which an institution qualifies as a charitable organization. In effect, they were going one step beyond the promotion of their religion.

● (1430)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: If hon. members are interested in hearing the answer, I am trying to give it. This was not given as a ruling of the department; it was given as an indication—and as a courtesy—that they might run this particular risk. We asked them to consult their lawyers, to look into the matter and to see if the jurisprudence did in fact tell them this. It was a matter of courtesy, and it was a suggestion.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Perhaps there is some disagreement about the nature of the course of events. I wonder if the minister can confirm that in respect to this specific demonstration officials of the minister's department contacted directly representatives of this organization and warned them that they would in fact jeopardize their status. Could the minister confirm that there was no request by the organization of Revenue Canada but that an initiative was taken by his department to forestall this specific demonstration?

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Cullen: I suppose we could get into a question of semantics. It did not seem appropriate when this particular group was endeavouring to be reinstated, that if it ran the risk of losing that reinstatement as a result of participating in that activity, it should not be brought to its attention that it should consult its lawyer. It seemed appropriate and courteous of my officials. I applaud my officials for taking that initiative, if they in fact did.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Can the minister indicate whether his officials took this action as a result of either reading a newspaper ad or by being contacted by third parties who asked that action be taken by the department to forestall this demonstration by this particular religious group?

An hon. Member: Did you get a call from the Soviet embassy?

Mr. Cullen: In taxation we do not speak that particular language. No, we did this as a courtesy to the individual group because it had lost its charitable donation status. The group advised that it had made application to get that status back, and in the course of that we indicated that if it participated in this particular move it might be jeopardizing that status and that it should consult its counsel.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

ARREST OF ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS WORKING AT TORONTO AIRPORT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration of which I gave his office notice this morning. It involves the Towers Cleaners operation at Toronto international airport. I wonder if the minister could advise the House whether nine employees of that company were arrested approximately three or four months ago for being illegal immigrants in Canada?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I did receive notice of this just before I came into the House. I know of some arrests at the airport about a year ago, in July of 1975. I want to follow up on the results of that, and since the hon. member has indicated a more recent occurrence. I should like to check on that before I give a definitive response.

* * *

AIRPORTS

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ALL EMPLOYEES HAVE SECURITY CHECKS

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I gave the minister's office notice at 9.30 this morning, not just before question period. My supplementary question is to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister advise whether his department has taken any action since those arrests to ensure that all employees working at federal airports in Canada have security clearance checks before they get jobs in airports?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look at the procedures to see if any change is required.

* * *

[Translation]

AIR CANADA

DENIAL OF USE OF FRENCH BY PILOTS COMMUNICATING WITH AIRPORTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Further to the answer given by the minister to a question asked earlier by one of our colleagues that the prohibition of the French language would apply to the technical aspect of air communications, can the minister inform the House what he means by the technical aspect, the air-ground or ground-air communications between pilots and the control tower, or whether he intends to include any conversation between flight personnel on a Crown company aircraft?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think in its wording it would seem to apply to technical conversations, that is to say working conversations of a technical nature between the pilot and co-pilot. From the comment which Air Canada made I am not sure if it was ever intended to apply in that detailed fashion, and that is why Air Canada is issuing an explanation of it and will be issuing a longer directive to replace the rather short and misleading one which it has issued.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ISSUING WARRANTS TO SEARCH OFFICES OF TORONTO "SUN"—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Prime Minister has to be absent from time to time. I intended to direct some questions to him, and I will reserve my right in that regard after having directed questions to the Minister of Justice, who says he does not know anything about the issuing of these warrants, which actually constitute, on the face of it, infringement of freedom of the press. When asked by the press about the circumstances, the Prime Minister said "shove it".

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Solicitor General said he does not know anything about it. I ask the minister to advise whether this is a conspiracy of silence on the part of members of the government, each passing the buck to the Mounted Police to get out of the difficulties in which they find themselves.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the RCMP operates within the confines of the law and general directions by the government, but the government does not interfere in individual investigations; it follows the law.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the minister recall that a few days ago in connection with the laying of charges by the Mounted Police in Ottawa rather than in Quebec the government took the attitude that this was very wrong and that the Mounted Police should not make such decisions without government concurrence and agreement?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the minister this: what are the provisions of the statute—and I know the provisions, but I want the minister to enlighten the House—with regard to the issuing of warrants in respect of serious emergency conditions in connection with the security of Canada? Does the law not require the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice to have some responsibility?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will be glad to hear the postponed explanation of the minister in a moment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have got them all asking. Even the former minister of justice, when he carried on to upset the administration of justice—

Some hon. Members: Question.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the Solicitor General, does he want the House and the country to believe that he was as surprised as the Prime Minister pretended to be when asked questions by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar on Friday?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the right hon. gentleman put his question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have much difficulty getting attention, but I must make my question simple so that the Solicitor General can understand me. Is the security of this nation not in jeopardy as a result of the fact that the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice know nothing about action to be taken regarding one of the most serious offences which can be committed against the security of Canada?

Mr. Allmand: The law does not require that the Solicitor General or the Attorney General be consulted or approve when a warrant is issued under the Official Secrets Act. If the right hon. member knows the law so well, he should know that that is clearly in the law. Obviously, the judge was satisfied that the warrant should be issued and issued the warrant.

An hon. Member: It was a J.P.

Mr. Allmand: The justice of the peace. With respect to the earlier question, the government did not say that the RCMP should have laid charges in Quebec. In that particular situation the RCMP had the choice of having the case taken in Ontario or Quebec, but we felt that there was a need for further guidelines to the police in a general sense and not in an individual sense.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: In the question the right hon. member for Prince Albert mentioned both the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice, so I should like to answer that part of the question which referred to the Minister of Justice, namely—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, this should be done on motions.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

● (1440)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely, I can at least hear the preamble.

Mr. Nielsen: The question has been answered.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the law is perfectly clear. Under section 11 of the Official Secrets Act a Justice of the Peace may issue a warrant on the information that there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that an offence under the act has been committed or, where there is an emergency situation a similar warrant may be issued by an officer of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police—

An hon. Member: Who issued this one?

Mr. Basford: —not below the rank of superintendent. In this case no such warrant, no such action, is required by the Attorney General of Canada. No action was taken by the Attorney General of Canada.

An hon. Member: Who issued the warrant?

SUGGESTION COMMITTEE COMPOSED OF PRIVY COUNCILLORS INVESTIGATE LEAK OF LETTER TO TORONTO "SUN"

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. This being a very serious matter and one that strikes at the fundamental foundation of freedom, namely freedom of the press—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: This government, through its Prime Minister has spoken in a most caustic, libellous manner of the Toronto Sun and its publishers and of course, there is no action for anything spoken in the House. The Prime Minister said that the letter in question was not fully understood, that the officer in charge of security apparently did not understand. Everybody excuses the government and the government excuses itself. As security must be kept from public notice so that this will be cleared up, would the minister give consideration to having the Prime Minister and the officer in charge of security place their views before a committee of the House composed of members of the Privy Council—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, these hon. gentlemen have never heard of that place! I ask him that because this is too serious to be brushed aside in the manner in which the government is endeavouring to do. If this is done, members of the opposition who are members of the Privy Council, and who are sworn to secrecy, will find out where the Ethiopian is through the explanations that the government gives.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I find it very difficult to take the comments of the right hon. gentleman seriously.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: You have made that mistake before.

Mr. Sharp: The Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General have all said they had no knowledge of this affair.

An hon. Member: That is why we want an inquiry.

Mr. Sharp: The right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert pays no attention to what anyone says. He accused the Prime Minister of being a liar. I want him to repeat that to his face when he appears here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: I can't believe my ears.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No matter how far he departs from the truth, I would not go that far.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ISSUANCE OF WARRANTS TO SEARCH OFFICES OF TORONTO "SUN"

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Justice. I am not at all clear from what he said whether the warrant was issued by a Justice of the Peace, which has to be done on information on oath, or whether it was issued under section 11(2) of the Official Secrets Act by some official of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. If the minister does not know the answer, would he try to find out and tell the House who did it, who was responsible for it and, furthermore, will he make sure that this House sees either the written order of the official of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or the information on oath upon which this action took place?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: On motions.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to find out this information but this is a question which should really be directed to the Solicitor General—

An hon. Member: Passing the buck.

Mr. Basford: I am amazed at the right hon. member for Prince Albert talking about freedom—here is the right hon. gentleman who talks about freedom of the press and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There remains about 15 minutes of the question period. I think it might be better if we could stick to questions and answers.

Mr. Clark: Who advertised in Le Jour?

SUGGESTION SOLICITOR GENERAL SHOULD BE CONSULTED BEFORE WARRANTS ISSUED TO SEARCH NEWSPAPER OFFICES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question and I should like to address it to the Solicitor General. I am perfectly prepared to get the information that I asked for from the Minister of Justice at some later date, if and when he takes the trouble to find out the facts. My question is, in a matter so important as the freedom of the press and a warrant to search through the files of the press, even though there is no legal duty to consult, would the minister not think it wise to inform the Royal Canadian Mounted Police before taking the action which might be the highest infringement of that basic right of Canadians, the right of a free press, to be consulted about it? Does he not take that to be an advisable step?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there is also an important question to be considered and that is, whether we want the elected person, the political person, to be involved in the operational aspects of criminal justice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AID TO EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS IN ITALY—GRANTING OF LICENCES TO CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS RAISING FUNDS

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I would put to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and/or the Minister of National Revenue. In light of the earthquake tragedies in northern Italy is it possible to expedite the granting of charitable tax deduction licences to facilitate the fund raising by Canadian Italian groups and others for this purpose?

[Translation]

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have not received any direct call for governmental aid from the Italian Red Cross. Several Canadian groups, however, have taken the initiative in raising funds. I might point out that those funds can be forwarded to destination through officially recognized charitable organizations under the Income Tax Act, and donors will then get official receips for income tax purposes. Among those organizations are the Canadian Red Cross, OXFAM, CARE and the Canadian Catholic Organization for Development and Peace, to name just a few.

* * *

[English]

TRANSPORT

BORDEN-CAPE TORMENTINE FERRY SERVICE—INCREASED FARES AND REDUCED SERVICE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which concerns last week's announcement that only four ships will operate on the Borden-Cape Tormentine ferry service this summer, an announcement which follows upon another one of vastly increased fares on that service. Will the minister cause a re-examination to be made of this unwelcome combination of increased costs and diminished service, and will he find a means of forestalling this latest contribution to the weakening of the economy of the maritime provinces and the widening of regional disparity?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows that in response to the local desire, the ferry has been or is being transferred from one service to the other. He refers to the increase in fares but as I indicated to the House before, and I am glad to do so again, action has been taken by the government to moderate increases in the deficits incurred by ferry services but not eliminate them. In fact, there will be more of the taxpayers' money going to support these services than in past years and by a significant amount. In view of the need for some restraint, I hope the hon. member will recognize that there has been no price increase for some years but there is a need for increased service.

Mr. Macquarrie: A supplementary question in reference to the local wishes. May I ask the minister if the government of Prince Edward Island requested withdrawal of this boat from the Borden-Tormentine service?

Mr. Lang: If the hon. member is referring to transfer, there was some general support for this. I will check to see specifically whether the Minister of Transport in that area requested it.

EFFECT OF INCREASED FERRY CHARGES ON ECONOMY OF NEWFOUNDLAND—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the Gulf ferry fares to Newfoundland have increased up to 100 per cent and in view of the fact that the public service utilities commission asked the Canadian Transport Commission or CNR to roll back the increase in bus fares, in view of the fact this will deter and stultify the only industry left in Newfoundland, will the minister investigate this vast increase to alleviate the problem of the future of Newfoundland on an economic base?

● (1450)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member would not want to mislead the House by his reference to 100 per cent increases of that nature in view of the fact that the bulk of the increases were very small in percentage figures. In fact, there was an increase in the amount attributed to the ferry part of a rail service, but that does not indicate an increase in rate, but a difference in sharing. In general, we have increased certain peak period charges for both passengers and traffic to attempt to assure there will be a better spreading of the load in order to save money which would otherwise be required for additional ferry facilities. I hope that when the hon. member and his colleagues are looking at government restraint in spending, they will appreciate doubly the increase in the amount being devoted toward payment of deficits in these services where the increases are rather modest after many years of no increase at all.

* * *

INDUSTRY

REASON FOR DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION OF POLYESTER YARN PLANT BY DUPONT AND LAY-OFFS BY ELECTROHOME—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has the minister looked into the causes which brought about the decision by Du Pont of Canada to delay the start of construction of the $50 million polyester yarn plant at Coteau-du-Lac in Quebec and to lay off 125 workers, and also the decision by Electrohome to lay off 400, in order to find out if the causes of this delay of construction and these lay-offs can be corrected by government action, and if so, what action does the government plan to take?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of these questions. I met quite incidentally with the people concerned at lunch hour today. Therefore, I can give an up-to-date assessment with regard to the Du Pont situation. It is, in fact, related to imports of polyester yarn which follows on to a problem with what is known as the double-knit type of fabric. Part of this problem has been due to a drop in the market of the United States which has resulted in sales into Canada at depressed prices. As the result of the explanations I received today from the industry, we are looking into that to see if there is a cause for taking action. Also, there was a general view expressed that this was a temporary situation. There was a reasonable degree of confidence that it would correct itself over time. In the meantime, we are looking to see what kind of action should be taken. I emphasize that, primarily, it is because of the situation in the United States.

With regard to Electrohome, that is a more complex problem. Electrohome, being a totally Canadian company, has been proven to be more vulnerable in some respects to a drop in sales of television sets than some of the integrated or multinational companies. They are taking a three week layoff in order to correct an inventory problem. We are discussing with them, and with the industry in general, what is a very serious problem with regard to the future of the television industry in this country.

* * *

[Translation]

AIR CANADA

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON USE OF FRENCH BY PILOTS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

As two of my colleagues have already raised that question, the minister will understand the importance of it; in view of the statements made by Quebec newspapers regarding that so-called decision made by Air Canada and which seems to be openly questioned by the minister's statement, I would like to ask him for the guidance of all Quebecers whether he would be prepared to make a new statement saying whether French-speaking pilots will or will not be able to speak French, or at least issue a press release to inform adequately the newspapers on that issue.

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I made the position perfectly clear. The hon. member is simply repeating the question and the issue. I indicated to him that the Air Canada directive may well have been open to this interpretation, although I understand the phrase "technical language" is in the directive. Even that may have been interpreted more widely than was intended. If Air Canada intends to elaborate on that, I will be happy to let the hon. member and other hon. members see the elaboration.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary.

As the Minister of Transport announced a few months ago the use of French in air-ground communications in a few airports in the province of Quebec, will the decision made today by Air Canada prohibit the use of French in air-ground communications at airports where the federal Department of Transport has already authorized the use of French?

[English]

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker, it certainly is not. It certainly was not intended to in any way limit the use of French, if that were possible, between a pilot and air controller in those airports where visual flying rules allow communication in the French as well as the English language. However, it should be appreciated that most of the Air Canada flying is, indeed, according to instrument flight rules. Therefore, the rule in that regard has not changed. While we are looking very closely at the development of procedures which will allow in the province of Quebec some IFR communication in French as well as English, we have to stick very strongly by the rules. Until the rule itself can be changed, because the procedures are safe, the present rules must be enforced.

ENERGY

PROPOSAL BY NOVA SCOTIA RESPECTING COST OF ELECTRICAL POWER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the premier or the government of Nova Scotia has made a proposal to the government of Canada with respect to the cost of electrical power as a result of a dependence on oil? If so, what is the general nature of that proposal and what has been the response of the government of Canada?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there has been received from the premier of Nova Scotia a proposal setting out in rather general terms a particular position of the province of Nova Scotia. I think the Prime Minister has already made clear that this proposal was accepted in the sense that it would be studied and that the premier of Nova Scotia would be advised at a later date as to what his position, if any, would be on it.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to indicate in general terms the nature of the proposal of the government of Nova Scotia?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I would want to ensure that the nature of the correspondence was of a kind that could be made public. I will find out whether the premier of Nova Scotia would like to have that proposal made public. I do not see any reason why we would have an objection.

* * *

HIGHWAY SAFETY

POSSIBILITY OF RECALL ORDER ON CERTAIN FORD MOTOR VEHICLES—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Since the Motor Vehicle Traffic Safety Branch of the Ministry of Transport has initiated a defect investigation involving both the premature rusting of certain Ford motor vehicles along with a problem in the steering assembly of Ford motorcars built since 1965, when is the minister going to order a recall of these dangerous vehicles built since 1965, involving both the rusting and the steering assembly? What precise measures does the minister intend to take to protect the lives of Canadians in this regard? Will the minister be making a full report to the House?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the department's record of safety is well known. The hon. member knows if there is any basis for a recall because of safety, that action is taken forthwith. There are some issues involved in this situation which are arguable from a legal point of view. It is true the department is watching the situation in relation to the idler arm very closely.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF PROVIDING FOR CLASS ACTIONS—COMPENSATION FOR RUSTING OF FORD MOTOR VEHICLES

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Will the government introduce class action legislation in this House so that individual consumers may be protected in provinces other than Ontario? Has the minister read the documents pertaining to Ford's U.S.A. secret warranty program J-67, as a result of which the United States public have been protected against premature rusting? What does the minister propose to recommend to the Canadian people in the interim so that they can be compensated by the Ford Motor Company? Will the minister meet with Ford officials once again and make sure that Ford owners will be compensated forthwith? Will he impress on the Minister of Transport that this question involves safety here and now, and that a recall is a matter of imminent importance?

● (1500)

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for asking three unrelated questions.

An hon. Member: You drive a Ford, Bryce, don't you?

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member will appreciate that since the question of alleged premature rusting of Ford automobiles is before the courts in Ontario and the subject of anti-combines investigation here in Ottawa, I do not want in any way to presume that Ford is guilty of anything at the moment. On the matter of class action, we intend to make part of the second phase of the competition bill. And, yes, I have read the warranty which exists; and, yes, I do intend to meet, as I did late on Friday, with Ford officials some time this week.

Mr. Grafftey: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Since Ford owners in the United States were fully compensated without any buck-passing to the courts, everybody having acted in a spirit of goodwill independent of what was happening before the courts, will not the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs speak up for the Canadian consumer, meet with Ford officials immediately and make sure that the individual Canadian consumer who has obviously been prejudiced is compensated immediately?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the Ford Motor Company of Canada also has rights under our law. Whether it is guilty or not will be determined by the courts.

An hon. Member: You cannot speak of guilt in this connection.

Mr. Mackasey: If the company is found guilty, I will move very fast to look after the difficulties of consumers who may have been in some way affected by the Ford Motor Company.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister of Transport suggested that perhaps I was misleading the House, although he was sure I would not want to, with regard to some figures I mentioned to do with the gulf ferry service. Even though I do not have the document in front of me, I was quoting from a table of figures showing increases charged for service across the gulf between North Sydney and Port aux Basques. It indicated that the rate for camper-trailers was to be increased by 100 per cent. I brought this matter to the attention of the minister and the House because the government helped with the development of Gros Morne national park and the increased rate would deter tourists from visiting this part of Newfoundland. I can produce those figures if the House wishes. The facts are as I have indicated, and are supported by CNR.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise on the same point of order. I appreciate the hon. member drawing the attention of the House to the fact that when he looked with his microscope for a figure, he found one. That was my point. I tried to make the point that this is not a sort of general matter, as the hon. member may have managed to suggest.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I note that the Prime Minister entered the House just at the end of the question period. No doubt he was preoccupied with other serious matters. I wonder if the House would unanimously agree to allow the Prime Minister to say something about an important issue, about something which to many appears to be a clear infringement of the freedom of the press of Canada. I say this in light of the raid by the RCMP on the Toronto Sun this past weekend.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is inaccurate, at least, to portray such a point as a point of order. The routine proceedings of the House countenance statements on motions, which can accomplish what is being sought without the consent of the House being necessary. Whether this will take place in the ordinary course of business is something which shall be seen only later in the day; but this can be accomplished without consent.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe. I think the minister ought to make clear that this is not a microscopic point, as the announcement made this week with respect to the Northumberland ferries means there is to be a 100 per cent increase in all ferry rates this summer. The increase was approved by the minister's department and by the Canadian Transport Commission.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

Fourteenth and fifteenth reports of Standing Committee on Transport and Communications—Mr. Campbell.

[Editor's Note: For text of above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[Mr. Marshall.]

[Translation]

LOTO-CANADA

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS AND STATEMENT OUTLINING OPERATION OF ORGANIZATION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 42 (1), I would like to table an information document on Loto-Canada, the national lottery which the government has decided to launch. This document is available in the two official languages.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the House of the government's decision to set up, administer and manage a national lottery, most likely until late 1979, to enable the public, on a voluntary basis, to ease the deficit incurred by the Olympic Games in Montreal in 1976, and the Commonwealth Games in 1978 in Edmonton. The House will be given the opportunity before the end of June to express its opinion on the government's decision. The new lottery, Loto-Canada, will be launched for good in September 1976, that is to say after the last draw of the Olympic Lottery.

From the beginning of the lottery until the end of 1979, if Parliament approves and if the two sides of the House are agreed, 82.5 per cent of the net profits will be earmarked for the 1976 Olympic Games and the 1978 Commonwealth Games. During that period, 12.5 per cent of net receipts will be shared among the provinces according to sales made under their jurisdiction so that, in the whole, the share of Olympic Lottery receipts will be maintained. We hope that provincial authorities will continue to earmark these funds to assist amateur sports. The other 5 per cent of the net receipts will be used by the federal government to finance programs related to physical fitness, amateur sports and recreation.

We have not yet established a formula for sharing the lottery's net receipts after 1979. These matter will be dealt with as soon as possible in co-operation with the provinces.

On the whole, the creation of Loto-Canada will maintain for Canadians the opportunity they have had since 1973 to assist, on a voluntary basis, in developing amateur sports and in improving the physical fitness of citizens. It is, of course, a most worthy goal. So far, the Olympic Lottery has been exceptionally successful: at the last count, it has generated $168 million for financing the Olympic Games. From now on, the new national lottery will be a means of attracting and channelling the contributions of Canadians to help finance a variety of initiatives in the field of amateur sports, physical fitness, recreation and large-scale sporting events which may take place in the various parts of Canada in the future.

I want to point out that the government's initiative is fully consistent with its defined and often-reiterated policy regarding the Olympic Games, namely that no direct contribution from the general revenue of the federal treasury would be allocated for their financing, but that steps would be taken to ensure the success of financing programs.

A new Crown corporation will soon be incorporated, pursuant to the provisions of the Canada Business Corporations Act. The name of this new corporation will be Loto-Canada Inc.; its role will be to administer and operate a lottery under regulations made by the governor in council pursuant to paragraph 190(1)(a) of the Criminal Code.

Needless to say, the lottery administration charges will come out of its gross revenues. Therefore, it will not cost anything to the Canadian taxpayers. The government will make sure, Mr. Speaker, by implementing the necessary controls, that the company will comply with the highest standards of integrity, prudence and efficiency in the management of the citizens' voluntary contributions.

I am convinced that all members of the House and all Canadians will join me in conveying to the organizers of the Olympic Games of 1976 and the Commonwealth Games of 1978 our wishes of good luck and overwhelming success.

[English]

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by thanking the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) for his courtesy in making a copy of his statement available to me earlier. We shall be interested in looking at the regulations which he tabled. Sir, the statement we have just heard, and the apparent proposal of a resolution concerning the extension of the Olympic lottery, represents but the latest chapter in one of the sorriest performances of this sorry government. Indeed, on the subject of the Olympics, the government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) have consistently tried to play both sides of the street, embracing the Games in one context and virtually disowning them at other times and places. That has happened with the predictable result that as far as the federal government is concerned, we have the worst of both worlds.

● (1510)

[Translation]

The essential and primordial consideration is that the games affect not only the good name of Montreal and Quebec, but also the reputation of Canada as a whole. This reputation has already been on the line since 1969 when the Prime Minister wrote to Mr. Brundage of the International Olympic Committee to assure him of the warm support of the Canadian government for the request of the City of Montreal to host the summer games. As stated on many occasions by spokesmen for our party, such as the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) and the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek), we think the government should have taken their share of national responsibility in this matter instead of having only an indirect and irresponsible participation.

[English]

I look back over the records, Mr. Speaker, and note various statements by the Prime Minister, statements such as the undertaking of February 2, 1973, to "do everything possible to help the Games organizers maintain the cost at the lowest possible level", and the assurance he has given friends on my left as to sharing a desire that the thrust of these Games be on people and not on monument-building.

Putting aside the question whether, on its own records, this government is capable of helping anyone control expenditures, it should be very clear that these statements by the Prime Minister have had no practical or effective meaning whatsoever.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: That, sir, speaks for the performance of this government. Our position, Mr. Speaker, remains clear and straightforward.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I am not surprised, Mr. Speaker, that the government benches should be surprised to hear from a party that has been clear and straightforward on this question. We want these Games to be a success, not simply for Montreal and for Quebec but for all of Canada. We are prepared to support any reasonable proposition directed toward making them a success.

[Translation]

Consequently, we will support the principle of this resolution because, although it comes late, it is apparently the only practical means to prevent a massive increase in taxes for Quebecers with an average salary. However, our support must not be interpreted as a carte blanche; in fact, we make serious reservations on this resolution.

[English]

Concerning the apparent intention to act by order in council and approve by resolution, we in this party question the procedure. Given that this proposition is very much a financial one, and given the magnitude of the operation that we are being asked to approve, I ask the House whether the spirit, if not the letter, of our rules does not demand more than a simple resolution. I say to the government, bring in a bill. If time is the problem, we are ready to discuss that through the House leaders. I can tell you right now, Mr. Speaker, that we would prefer to spend two or three days on this important matter rather than on a resolution in respect to televising our proceedings, which seems to be among the priorities of the government House leader.

We are most certainly concerned about the open-ended nature of this government proposal which amounts to a unilateral appropriation of a new revenue source. In that respect, let me make our position clear. We are prepared to support a temporary extension of the lottery to help meet the deficit of the Olympic Games. We are not prepared to support any attempt by this government to create a new slush-fund for itself by a back door manoeuvre in an area that rightfully belongs to the provinces. I am sure that in taking that position we can count on the strong support of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) who assured us, when he introduced the Olympics bill in January, 1973, that—if I may quote him from Hansard—"the federal government is not in the least interested in operating a national lottery".

We will want, as well, Mr. Speaker, an assurance that this time we will finally receive the full accounting, even on a post facto basis, which has for too long been denied the people of Canada. We want this matter referred to a parliamentary committee where we can receive a full, independent and public accounting of expenditures and spending practices employed in regard to the Olympics project.

Finally, we want some guarantees from this government that this is it; that there are, in fact, iron-clad undertakings on the part of the various other governments involved to meet the whole Olympics deficit; that this temporary extension of the lottery is the final proposal to be placed before this parliament; that we will not be asked a little farther down the road to approve yet another "final" federal offer of assistance. And let me be clear, Mr. Speaker: we want more than the word of the Prime Minister on this score; we want some guarantees that we can rely on.

We support the principle of this resolution. It is the least we can do for the people of Quebec and Montreal who have a right to expect better of their supposed leaders, including those who sit across the way. But we want to receive a lot more from the government than we have had today, and we most certainly reserve for the debate our right to move appropriate amendments.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, considering the fact that last Thursday the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) told my colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), that conversations about this matter had not yet been completed, it is amazing that by Monday he is ready to present a proposal to the House. I wish we could get speed like this in respect of some other measures.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that we were given notice of this statement shortly before the House convened at two o'clock, but I must point out that that hardly gives a caucus the opportunity to meet and take a final decision on an issue as important as this. As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) pointed out, this is a double-barrelled, or even a triple-barrelled proposition. When we have a had a chance to consider the whole matter there may be a difference of opinion within the membership of this caucus on some of its details.

However, sir, there are one or two points that are very clear which we want said right away. The leader of the opposition has dealt with the aspects of the matter that concern the deficit of the Olympic Games. The position of this party with respect to federal spending on the Games has been made clear time and time again, yet we are aware of the fact that something might have be done such as the temporary extension of the lottery which is now taking place. But, sir, the proposal in this statement is not just that something be done about the immediate situation; the proposal in this statement is that there be established a Crown corporation to conduct state lotteries for all time. There is no end to it. There is a proposal in more or less specific terms about what will be done with the money for the next year or two, but after that it is suggested that the money be used to finance physical fitness, amateur sport and recreation. On that, Mr. Speaker—

● (1520)

An hon. Member: What's wrong with that; are you against it?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asks whether we are against that. I thoroughly believe in physical fitness. Just look at me!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is because we believe that physical fitness, amateur sport and recreation are important aspects of Canadian life that we think they should be financed out of general taxation and, therefore, paid for on the basis of the ability to pay.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We do not believe that aspects of life as important as physical fitness, amateur sport and recreation should be financed by gambling, which calls on the poor to pay for it, instead of taxation which is levied according to ability to pay.

We also feel therefore that this proposal to put the federal government into the lottery business for all time is economic retrogression of the worst kind. What is the point of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) announcing a budget in which he is going to propose tax measures, if the government is going to accept the proposition that when money is needed it can be raised through lotteries and gambling? It is a move completely in the wrong direction, and so far as the aspects of this proposal that relate to the future are concerned, we are opposed to them. This makes it clear that the government does not take physical fitness, amateur sport and recreation seriously, and it makes it clear that if the government gets into trouble with something else—health costs, veterans' pensions, or what have you—which it cannot afford, it will say, "We can go in for gambling again," and the whole business of taxation and redistribution of wealth in this country would be completely shot.

We find ourselves more or less in the position which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) indicated, namely, that this House may have to do something about the Olympic Games and should do something about the Commonwealth Games. But bring that proposition before us in clear terms, and do not ask us at the same time to commit Canada to a government lottery under federal authority on a permanent basis. We are completely opposed to such a regressive step.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to thank the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) for having made available to us a copy of his statement.

As far as the members of the Social Credit Party are concerned, the Olympic Games are a national event which will benefit the whole country. If the games are very successful, Canada's reputation will benefit at the world level. Consequently, in all our interventions dealing with the Olympic Games, we requested that the federal government contribute adequately to the financing of the games. It is evident, Mr. Speaker, that the taxpayers will have to pay the deficit of the games. The deficits will be paid from tax money.

The question now is: Which taxpayers will foot the bill? Those in Montreal, in Quebec or in Canada as a whole? As I said, Mr. Speaker, the whole country will benefit from the Olympic Games in Montreal. Therefore, we feel the Canadian government should contribute directly, and not only through the Olympic Lottery and the sale of coins, which are an extra levy on the taxpayer. We have no objection to programs such as the Olympic Lottery and the issue of coins, but we believe the federal government should not limit its contribution to these programs, which cost nothing to the government. I repeat Canadian citizens are paying that money over and above their taxes.

We believe the federal government should announce its willingness to pick up the tab for the olympic deficit. Since the whole country benefits, the whole country must pay. Any other arrangement is unacceptable, because it would put the burden on a fraction only of the Canadian taxpayers, namely Montrealers and Quebecers, whereas Canada as a whole will benefit.

Such has been our position since the Olympic Games were announced, and certainly it is shared by all those who believe the games are the business of all Canadians, in other words the Canadian government.

Let us not forget, Mr. Speaker, that the games will be opened by the chief of state, rather than Quebec's premier or Montreal's mayor. This is another proof that the games are first and foremost the central government's direct responsibility. In that respect, we believe the new lottery announced today by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) is in no way a federal government initiative to assume their responsibilities, but simply a means of passing the buck to the average citizen who will be facing another tax, albeit voluntary.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is difficult to be delighted, because a lottery is opium to mislead people and falsely raise the expectations of the poor.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the President of the Treasury Board—and I am happy, in asking it, to see that the President of the Privy Council is here to hear it. In view of the fact that as House leaders we have had difficulty persuading the President of the Privy Council that there is parliamentary time between now and June 30 to deal with certain important matters in which we are interested, may I ask him how he was able to persuade the President of the Privy Council that there is parliamentary time for this matter before June 30?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it depends on the formula the leaders of all parties would endorse to have a debate on that motion. Substantially, it is the same bill that we had in the past, except that for the next three years, it will be under federal government control and that under the Corporations Act and the Criminal Code, we could create a Crown corporation without having to pass legislation.

However, there are many ways to put forward this project for the approval of the House and I am sure the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) will have discussions with his counterparts of other parties. We could even proceed by a budget item, if needed, but I would rather submit to the House a motion which would be debated during one day, and then we could have a vote. Or we could accept the suggestion that the opposition leader (Mr. Clark) kindly put to us, that is adopt a bill after all stages in two days.

[English]

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the event the government does not adopt the suggestion that a bill be introduced, what controls will parliament have regarding the allocation of funds after the deficit of the Olympic Games has been met? What provision will there be for parliament to control the disposition of funds coming from a Crown corporation operating a national lottery?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I intend to bring forth regulations, and so on, at a later time. The Crown corporation will be under a minister and there will be an opportunity, under the normal estimates procedure, for members of the House of Commons to examine the operations of that Crown corporation. Because the money will be coming in until 1979 under federal control, this will be an instrument through which the House of Commons can request an annual presentation to an appropriate committee regarding the operations of this lottery.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, if I understood the minister correctly, he is suggesting that the Crown corporation operating the national lottery will operate under regulation. If those regulations are passed by order in council, they can be altered by order in council. I would ask the minister what guarantee parliament would have that no allocation of funds for any objective or purpose set out in the regulations would be subject to change without being referred to parliament. Does the minister think this is the kind of responsibility which ought to be given to the government, or is this the kind of abdication of power which parliament should be asked to accept?

● (1530)

Mr. Chrétien: I think, Mr. Speaker, that the way I am proposing to do it—and this will come to light later, depending on the procedural activities—is that if we have a Crown corporation established by order in council, we propose to make sure that there will be ample control of the spending and operations of this corporation, more than in respect of any other. There will be a minister directly responsible. Five per cent of his budget will be money coming from that Crown corporation, and he will have to justify the operation of that corporation when he defends his own estimates. In that way, members of parliament will have absolute control over the changes, if there are any, in the regulations that will be passed under this order in council.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I am amused that the minister would suggest he would be prepared to introduce a bill. If we would agree to an extremely limited debate on what, in effect, is the appropriation by the government of Canada of an entirely new revenue source over time, I would ask him and his colleague the government House leader, since they apparently have no objection in principle to the introduction of a bill—which obviously is the proper way to proceed—why they are not prepared to introduce a bill without the condition of some kind of a time-muzzle being placed on parliament when we are discussing a matter of this consequence.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think one must realize we are in a very difficult time-frame with this operation. There have been many precedents in this House concerning the creation of Crown corporations of this nature, both under Conservative and Liberal administrations.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Not for a lottery.

Mr. Chrétien: Not for a lottery; for the creation of a Crown corporation. The House of Commons had occasion to debate at length a few years ago the pros and cons of a lottery when we approved the Olympics lottery. It was debated and voted on in this House of Commons. Members of parliament cannot claim that they have never had occasion to debate it. It was debated and voted for. The only change at the present time is that this lottery will come under the control of the federal government, rather than the control of the organization in Montreal as is the case now. I am sure the bringing of that lottery under more control by this House of Commons should be the last thing to which the opposition would object.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, will the minister give us an unqualified guaranteee now that there will be a reference to a standing committee of this parliament which will allow an unfettered examination, after the fact if necessary, of all of the affairs relating to expenditures in regard to the Olympics, and that that kind of examination will not be limited in any way. Can we have that guarantee now?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the management of the Games and the management of the operation which led to the construction of the stadium, and so on, are not under federal control; they are under the provincial administration and the municipal administration in Montreal. I have spoken to representatives of the Quebec government and with the mayor of Montreal. They have said to me that post facto they would be delighted if there were kind of a look into it and, if needed, an inquiry and that the facts could be passed on to a committee of this House.

However, I do not believe it would be wise for us to move now when for years we have said that the administration of the construction for and the operation of the Games was to be under municipal and provincial administration. If we come in later, after the fact, as the leader of the opposition seems to suggest, this would be terribly unfair, because the House of Commons has never asked the government of Canada to make such control over the Games but, rather, that it help the Games be self-financing. We have voted many schemes in this House and have taken some responsibility in the matter of television and security, but we have left the control with the people in Quebec. I am confident that if there should be something wrong in the operation of the Games, the democratic mechanism in Quebec can take care of that.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the President of the Treasury Board could indicate a couple of things. First of all, in view of the fact that the government has totally changed its position with regard to the operation of a national lottery, and has indicated that by the establishment of this new Crown corporation it would continue to operate, as I understand it, such a lottery in perpetuity, can he indicate, apart from the fact that there is need to finance a considerable aspect of the deficit of the Olympic Games, what in fact are the reasons the government is taking this action?

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Second, in view of the considerable implications there will be, both in terms of the revenue program of the government and in terms of its own future taxation policies, plus the disbursement aspect of cost-sharing with the provinces in the areas of responsibility indicated by the minister, will he tell us whether there has been any consultation with the provinces, because certainly this would be an area in which I think the various provincial governments would have a considerable interest.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we have decided to proceed with this program until 1979 because we want to carry out the word of this House; and I understood the leader of the opposition to say he would be in favour of a loto financing scheme. This is completely voluntary. No Canadian will be forced to buy tickets. No money will be taken from the federal treasury. This is merely to permit all the citizens of Canada to help people who have organized the Games to finance them.

The reason we are stepping in is that after months of consultation it was not found possible to have an agreement for a lottery operated by the province, and we felt it was our duty to do this at this time because the Olympic Games have had their first Olympics lotteries, which have had great success, and we thought it would just be fair to give them the opportunity to carry on for a few more years so that some additional benefit may be received from all Canadians.

In terms of the financing, whatever is the end result, 40 per cent of the tickets already have been sold in the province of Quebec, and we felt it would be a fair contribution, if Canadians want to do it, to help the Quebec government and the Montreal authorities make sure that these Games will be a great success. Nevertheless, in spite of this scheme the great bulk of the deficit will still rest on the shoulders of the Quebec provincial government and the municipal government. I am merely asking today that all Canadians co-operate in helping the province of Quebec and the citizens of the city of Montreal to make the Olympic Games a great success.

I might say that in spite of the difficulties they have had so far, in terms of technical results and in respect of the organization of the site, everything seems to be on-stream and I am quite confident that the Games will have a great result and all Canadians will be proud of their success. Of course, we are inviting all Canadians to contribute, if they wish to do so, in respect of the deficit of this great national venture.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure the minister has yet answered the first part of the question. I suppose he indicated, in respect of the second part, that there has been consultation. In respect of the first part, am I right in assuming there is no final end point or self-destruct time in respect of this new Crown corporation to operate a national lottery, or will it expire at the end of three years?

Mr. Chrétien: The way I see it, Mr. Speaker, I want this lottery to go on until 1979. In my statement I mentioned that I would like to discuss with the provinces the future of this lottery after 1979. If there should be a very obvious wish on the part of members of this House that this be completely destroyed after 1979, I am willing to consider that.

Mr. Clark: Why not write it in?

Mr. Chrétien: The information I have received so far from some provincial governments is that they would like to talk about the possibility of sharing, after 1979, in greater proportion. Now, provinces receive 12.5 per cent of the net proceeds of that lottery. I would like to consider different sharing after 1979, but if it is the wish of the provinces and of members of this House that we use the noose and hang the project after 1979, I, myself, do not mind.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the minister on the matter of costs. I think that the minister has realized that there is no doubt in the mind of our colleagues of the opposition. We want to support, encourage or assist those who will be called to pay that deficit.

However, Mr. Speaker, I think that as a Canadian and a Quebecer, I know that many Quebecers are greatly concerned about those huge costs. There are surely some justifiable reasons. Now my question is as follows: Could the minister responsible, for the information of those who will defend that legislation, invite the COJO authorities to provide the best possible explanations? Up to now the Canadian people have not been sufficiently informed and that would enable us to support such a measure to the extent that those huge costs are justified. Those are the particulars which we would like to obtain and I wonder what information the minister could provide.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated, I had discussions with the mayor of Montreal and with the provincial government. They indicated that they wished that the reasons for the frightening escalation of the costs be made public. I believe that their main concern now is to make sure that the Olympic Games will take place and will be a success, and I think that this aspect of the problem will certainly give rise to discussions in Quebec and in Montreal after the Olympic Games. I will be pleased to transmit to the provincial and municipal authorities the wishes of the members of the House and in turn to give the House or an appropriate committee all the information from the government of Quebec.

As for launching a comprehensive inquiry now, interrupting now the project managers and asking them to spend days and days in the corridors of Parliament while they should be terminating their work, I think it would be most inappropriate, all the more so since the provincial and municipal authorities assured me that it will be possible to forward all the information concerning the question asked by the hon. member directly or indirectly to a committee of the House when I will be present to justify the bill or the proposal. As a matter of fact, I would like to have time to discuss it now but unfortunately there are only 5 or 6 weeks left before the House is adjourned and there are a number of precedents when Crown corporations have been established by order in council. I think that such action is justified now, but I would like to appear sometime before a committee of the House to give hon. members all the necessary information.

● (1540)

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board a question. He said that the bulk of the income received from this Crown corporation running a lottery will go toward covering the deficit of the Olympics. Can the minister tell the House whether that, in fact, puts an onus on the people of Canada—or the parliament of Canada, since a bill will have to be passed by parliament—if the lottery does not raise the amount needed to cover the deficit or any part of it? Will we have backed into supporting that deficit from the general revenues of the country?

Mr. Chrétien: I am happy that the hon. member has put this question to me. My answer is "no". Our only commitment is that as this lottery has been established by Quebec, by the Olympic Games, and has been a great success, we are giving them the opportunity to continue for three more years. If the lottery is a great success, after all, it will bring more revenue after the Games than if it is not a success. But that is the only commitment we have made to them.

The policy of this government is still the same. We do not intend to take any money from the treasury to cover the deficit, but we are willing to allow the operation of this lottery to continue for three more years. Many people were skeptical about the lottery when it was first started two years ago: I was one of them. The government predicted it would bring in revenues to the tune of $90 million. By the time the Games are over, it will be almost three times as much because the response of the Canadian people to it has been very good.

Of course, there is a little of the puritan approach to raising money that way, and being as puritan as anyone else, I had reservations about the lottery. Now I find that Canadians are enjoying the Olympics lottery. Let us consider the example in Ontario, where I think there was the maximum amount of objection to a lottery, but now we find Wintario so profitable as to be an embarrassment to the Tory government in Ontario because they are giving money all over the place and they are embarrassed by the amount of money they are distributing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would like to conclude the questioning by recognizing, on a supplementary question, the hon. member for Nickel Belt and the hon. member for Battle River followed by the hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont and the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I find the minister's answer rather strange. At present the lottery is run by the organization which is running the Olympics. The provincial government of Quebec has stepped in to take over responsibility for getting the facilities ready; therefore, they have accepted the responsibility. Why would the minister not allow the province of Quebec to be responsible for the lottery, rather than having the parliament of Canada sponsor a national lottery? After all, Wintario, as he has pointed out—which was sponsored by the province of Ontario—has been successful. The western provinces are getting together to put on their own lottery. It seems to me that financing the Olympics should be the responsibility of the government which has accepted responsibility for the Games.

Mr. Chrétien: The answer to that question is that the Quebec government has tried to secure the approbation of the other provinces to carry on with the lottery after next August, and there are only a few which have agreed to one more "tirage", to use a good French word, or draw, following which the lottery could not operate any longer. That is why we have had to step in to establish a national lottery in order to achieve goals which everyone seems to favour apart from some members of the hon. member's party. It is strange to see that party supporting the establishment of a lottery in the western provinces such as Saskatchewan, Manitoba and British Columbia a few years ago, and to hear now their representatives in the federal government exhibit a guilty conscience when it comes to a lottery at the national level. I am rather surprised at this double standard.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am opposed to it at all levels.

Mr. Malone: My question arises out of concern for some sectors of our economy with respect to this lottery. This has already been indicated previously. I should like to ask the minister whether any research has been done in connection with the concept of a lottery as to the sectors of our economy from which the people who buy lottery tickets come—whether they are from the lower economic sector or the middle class. I thing it is relevant, because if the government is going to use lotteries as an ongoing practice for raising funds, then it switches away from a progressive income tax system to one that is retrogressive and puts the burden on the backs of people in the lower socioeconomic bracket.

Mr. Chrétien: My understanding is that the tickets are bought all across the board by people from all classes in our society. But generally speaking, if a person who makes $5,000 a year buys one ticket, he is using more of his income to pay for that ticket than a person who makes $50,000 a year. I think the burden is heavier on the lower income people than on the middle-class people, because people do not usually buy a pile of tickets but only one or two.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Montreal area, I want to thank the minister for his decision to extend the Olympic Lottery program for a three year period.

In view of the tremendous success of the Olympic Lottery, could the minister tell the House whether forecasts have been made concerning the amount which could then be allocated for the financing of the Olympic deficit over a three year period, from the returns of the future Canadian lottery?

Mr. Chrétien: The amount?

Mr. Lachance: —the forecasts of the amounts?

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

Mr. Chrétien: Well, Mr. Speaker, it really depends on the success of this lottery, and there are two items which are to be taken into account.

First, the national lottery we want to establish will have four draws a year instead of three, and I do not know if, with four draws a year, the number of tickets sold for each draw will diminish. Second, as far as revenues are concerned, a certain amount, which we still do not know, will have to be spent to finance the deficit, if any, of the Commonwealth Games in Edmonton. The combination of these two elements creates a certain degree of uncertainty, but we can already assess that the amount will rise to about $300 million.

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the President of the Treasury Board for his initiative today and I am certain that my sentiment is shared by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board first how much of the 82.5 per cent which were to be used for financing the 1976 and 1978 games will be allocated to the 1976 summer games and to the Commonwealth Games and then if these funds will be used to finance both the administration and capital expenses of games.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have just said that I do not know exactly which amount will be allocated to the Commonwealth Games in Edmonton, because we have already launched a fairly important assistance program for these games. As for the money itself, the revenues, they will be used to finance the deficit of the Olympic Games. Of course, the COJO will self-finance itself, which means that the organization of the Olympic Games will finance itself. I think that the deficit will come mainly from the necessary infrastructure for the holding of the games, and the money will be used to finance this particular deficit because, as I have already said, the COJO, with its self-financing programs of stamps, coins and the lottery will have managed to finance itself.

* * *

● (1550)

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3,843, 3,844, 3,854, 4,094, 4,095, 4,932, 4,960, 4,966, 5,065 to 5,074 inclusive, 5,111, 5,137, 5,218, 5,238, 5,256, 5,331 to 5,334 inclusive, 5,364 and 5,365.

[Text]

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Question No. 3,843—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. With reference to the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Development Plan, what measures have been taken to achieve the objectives included in the Fisheries Development Programme of (a) developing quality control practices (b) monitoring quality at market level (c) integrating waste product use with anti-pollution controls?

2. Are there specific criteria for evaluating the effectiveness of such measures and, if so (a) what are they (b) what progress has been made in reaching the objectives?

3. Are further measures (a) planned (b) under consideration and, if so, what are they?

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Fisheries)): 1. (a) and (b) The development of quality control practices and inspection of fish and fish products related to interprovincial and export trade is a continuing function of the Inspection Branch, Fisheries and Marine Service, Environment Canada. This function is not directly related to the fisheries sector of the Prince Edward Island Development Plan. (c) The general policy of Environment Canada is to integrate waste product use with anti-pollution controls insofar as it is practical to do so.

2. Not within the P.E.I. Development Plan.

3. The Fish Inspection Branch of Environment Canada, under its program, is continually studying ways to improve fish quality.

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Question No. 3,844—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan, what measures are (a) planned (b) under consideration for Phase 2 to provide to fishermen (i) catch failure insurance (ii) price supports (iii) productivity incentives?

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Fisheries)): None. The Fisheries and Marine Service of Environment Canada is studying a program of Net Revenue Stabilization for all Canadian fishermen. The Department also recently announced a $44 million temporary assistance program to take effect on April 1, 1976 under which direct payments will be made to all groundfish fishermen for first quality food fish. Fish processors will also benefit from this program which is not related to the fisheries sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan.

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Question No. 3,854—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. With reference to the Port Consolidation Programme under the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan (a) what new facilities have been and/or are being built (i) at which ports (ii) what was and is the cost of constructing each (b) what new facilities are presently planned (i) for which ports (ii) at what cost for each (c) what facilities and at what ports have been (i) abandoned (ii) allowed to deteriorate below pre-programme levels of upkeep and what is the estimated saving in upkeep from such measures in 1974?

2. For each port (a) designated (b) not designated under the Programme, what has been the change in usage figures between the year in which the Programme was first implemented and 1974?

3. What is the estimated loss of income to non-designated ports as a result of the Programme?

4. What is the estimated total increase in fuel costs (boat and car) to fishermen as a result of travelling further to designated ports?

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Fisheries)): 1. (a) (i) and (ii) 1974: West Point—skidway, $16,000; Launching Pond—landing extension, $100,000; Beach Point—wharf extension and dredging, $100,000; Red Head—landing extension, $40,000; North Lake—wharf extension, $70,000. 1975: North Lake—wharf extension, $55,000; Beach Point—wharf and dredging, $230,000; Skinners Pond—wharf reconstruction, $72,000. 1976: Alberton—wharf and fill, $150,000; Beach Point—wharf extension and dredging, $20,000; Miminegash—wharf extension, $100,000; French River—wharf extension, $100,000. (b) (i) and (ii) Alberton—wharf and fill, $100,000; Howards Cove—landing extension, $100,000; Launching Pond—landing extension, $26,000; Malpeque—landing extension, $120,000; Naufrage—landing extension, $80,000; Red Head—landing, $50,000; Rustico—harbour improvements, $450,000; Skinners Pond—harbour improvements, $700,000; West Point—breakwater improvements, $500,000; Tignish—south breakwater extension, $150,000; Rustico (Robinsons Island)—harbour improvements, $2,000,000 est. (c) (i) Anglo Rustico, South Rustico, Basin Head, Cape Traverse, Chapel Point, Haydens, Sturgeon Bridge, Kiers Shore, Little Sands, MacFarlans Cove, MacPhersons Cove, North Cardigan, Poplar Point, Rocky Point. (c) (ii) the above stuctures have been allowed to deteriorate below acceptable standards due to the changes in the level of fishing activity. Savings in upkeep have not been calculated.

2. (a) Savage Harbour, Naufrage, North Lake, Graham's Pond, Launching Pond, Beach Point, Wood Island, Red Head, French River (South), Malpeque, Tracadie, Rustico, Milligan's Shore, Alberton, Tignish, Skinner's Pond, Miminegash, Howards Cove, West Point, Egmont Bay. (b) Approximately 75 other harbours have not been designated under the program, of which 14 are being abandoned. Most of the 60 remaining undesignated harbours will be maintained. Usage information is not available.

3. There has been no appreciable change in usage to date because the program has not been in effect long enough for the expected transitions to take place. It is estimated that there has been no net loss of income.

4. To date, the fishermen are still operating at both designated and non-designated ports. It is estimated that there will be no net average increase in fuel costs.

MELVILLE (HAY) ISLAND—LAND PURCHASE BY PARKS CANADA

Question No. 4,094—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the statement by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in January, 1976 that his Department would be acting "in bad faith if we did not continue through to the conclusion of a sales agreement" with the owners of the largest part of Melville (or Hay) Island in the St. Lawrence River because of the advanced state of negotiations (a) what are the names and job designations of all persons conducting such negotiations on behalf of the government (b) what are the names and addresses of all persons conducting such negotiations on behalf of the owners of Melville (or Hay) Island (c) on what date and in what locations did such negotiations take place?

2. Is the Minister aware that this island was still listed for sale on February 1, 1976 with real estate agents and available for purchase on the open market?

3. In what way does the government account for this obvious discrepancy between the Minister's statement and, if negotiations are not advanced for government purchase, will the Minister agree to extend the freeze on land purchases in the area by Parks Canada to include Melville (or Hay) Island?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) It is not in the tradition of a non political public service to disclose names of officials who perform tasks in the course of their duty. (b) Bickerton Agencies Ltd., 395 Pine St., Gananoque. (c) Contact was established with the agent in Gananoque, August 20, 1975 and discussions held concerning possible purchase. Subsequent contact was primarily by telephone up to December 12, at which time all works was suspended. Negotiations were resumed February 6 at which time it was agreed an option to purchase would be submitted.

2. Yes. Negotiation for acquisition on behalf of Parks Canada does not require the property to be withdrawn from the open market.

3. Negotiation for Hay Island was undertaken in good faith by both parties up to but not including a definite commitment prior to the decision to freeze acquisition. While no legal commitment was made, negotiations were undertaken with the reasonable expectation of an option being offered. With the announcement on park expansion and the subsequent withdrawal of our presence as a potential buyer on the open market, those who legitimately hoped to dispose of properties have been adversely affected to the extent that other potential purchasers are reluctant to take any action. Because the course of events has had a probable detrimental effect on the value of the particular properties we considered as priority purchases, it was felt we should proceed. We do not feel the purchase of part of Hay Island will prejudice the intent to actively encourage the participation of all levels of government and private interests in the preparation of a park and discussions on expansion.

WALLACE ISLAND—LAND PURCHASE BY PARKS CANADA

Question No. 4,095—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the statement by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in January 1976 that his Department would be acting "in bad faith if we did not continue through to the conclusion of a sales agreement" with the owners of Wallace Island in the St. Lawrence River because of the advanced state of negotiations (a) what are the names and job designations of all persons conducting such negotiations on behalf of the government (b) what are the names and addresses of all persons conducting such negotiations on behalf of the owners of Wallace Island (c) on what date and in what locations did such negotiations take place?

2. Is the Minister aware that the owners of Wallace Island told a public meeting at Escott, Ontario, on February 14, 1976, that (a) the island has not been for sale (b) the island is not for sale (c) they have never had any negotiations with the government on the matter nor has anyone else acting on their behalf?

3. In what way does the government account for those discrepancies between the Minister's statement and the statement by the owners of Wallace Island and, if the government has not conducted negotiations for Wallace Island, will the Minister agree to extend the freeze on land purchases in the area by Parks Canada to include Wallace Island?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) It is not in the tradition of a non political public service to disclose names of officials who perform tasks in the course of their public duty. (b) Bickerton Agencies Ltd., 395 Pine St., Gananoque. (c) Contact was established with the agent September 9, 1975 in Gananoque and subsequent discussions, primarily by telephone continued to December 12, at which time all further work ceased. Negotiations were resumed February 6.

2. Yes. I am aware that a person, who apparently has an interest in the larger portion of Wallace Island, made such comments.

3. The discrepancy appears to stem from information which my Department considered valid upon which to act and the subsequent actions of certain persons claiming to own property on Wallace Island. My Department was advised in writing on August 25, 1975 by Bickerton Agencies that two properties, which when combined comprised the whole of Wallace Island, were for sale and a value quoted. In an ensuing assessment of priorities to meet fiscal restraints it was decided to pursue only the smaller parcel. Accordingly negotiations were not continued for the larger parcel. Because of difficulties encountered in determining who represents the owner of the smaller parcel no recent negotiations have taken place. In light of this I am having all of Wallace Island included in the freeze.

MONEY OWING TO MR. RICHARD HOLDEN

Question No. 4,932—Mr. Herbert:

Is any money owed by the government to Montreal lawyer Mr. Richard Holden, and (a) if so (i) in what amount (ii) for what services (b) if not, is there an unsettled claim from Mr. Holden?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): There is no money owed to Mr. Richard Holden by the Government of Canada. Mr. Holden submitted an account to the Minister of Justice in relation to legal services rendered at the request of Mr. Justice Kenneth C. MacKay in the prosecution of the Honourable André Ouellet for contempt of court. This account was for a total amount of $21,053.02 for fees and disbursements. The account has been forwarded to the Minister of Justice of the Province of Quebec as the prosecution of this matter falls within the jurisdiction of this Province.

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO LES ÉQUIPEMENTS LAPORTE INC.

Question No. 4,960—Mr. Kempling:

Was a grant, loan or other assistance given to Les équipements Laporte Inc., Granby, P.Q., by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the fiscal year (a) 1974-75 (b) 1975-76 and, if so (i) in what amount (ii) for what purpose?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned the answer is nil.

RMC—FRENCH SPEAKING TEACHERS AND CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 4,966—Mr. McKenzie:

1. How many French speaking faculty members have been hired at the Royal Military College, Kingston, Ontario since January 1, 1975 (a) what were the criteria for hiring them (b) what courses do they teach (c) what is their total combined annual salary (d) how were the positions advertised (e) in what publications (f) at what cost?

2. (a) How many has the Treasury Board approved for the 1976-77 academic year (b) how many will the College request for the 1977-78 academic year (c) how are their salaries determined (d) by what department are their salaries negotiated?

3. Has a decision been made to build a new classroom development at the College for the bilingual programme and, if so (a) who authorized it (b) what are the criteria for the building (c) who designed it (d) at what cost (e) were tenders called for the design and, if so, was the lowest tender accepted?

4. Were tenders called for the construction of the building and, if so (a) how many firms offered bids (b) what was the (i) highest (ii) lowest bid (c) what is the name of the firm that was awarded the contract and was this the lowest tender?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. Five (a) Criteria for hiring was professional qualification to teach at the third year university level in the specialty with doctorates preferred. (b) Electrical Engineering, Engineering (Physics), Chemical Engineering, Mathematics. (c) $88,700. (d) Advertisements in professional journals, daily newspapers and direct approach to Deans of Engineering of Canadian Universities. (e) La Presse, Montreal; Le Devoir, Montreal; The Gazette, Montreal; La Tribune, Sherbrooke, P.Q.; Le Soleil, Quebec City; Le Droit, Ottawa; Globe and Mail, Toronto; University Affairs; Journal of the Chemical Institute of Canada; The Journal of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada; The Journal of Physics in Canada; Canadian Association of University Teachers (a journal); Order of Engineers of Quebec (Journal); The Engineering Journal; Chemistry in Canada. (f) $3,406.30.

2. (a) Forty-three. (b) Ten man-years in addition to the 43 man-years approved for 1976/77. (c) Salaries are determined in accordance of scale of pay for University Teachers as approved by the Treasury Board. (d) Treasury Board.

3. Yes. (a) Treasury Board. (b) 55 faculty offices (3 at 225 sq. ft.; 52 at 150 sq. ft.); 22 research and lab areas varying in size from 300 to 1,000 sq. ft.; one computer science area (approx. 3,700 sq. ft.); instruction areas in the form of 25 syndicate rooms, 5 classrooms, and 2 amphitheatres varying in size from 420 to 1,260 sq. ft.; miscellaneous areas approx. 5,100 sq. ft. for storage, administration, lunch rooms and rest rooms. (c) The firm of Mathers and Haldenby. (d) $258,565.83. (e) No.

4. Yes. The construction was implemented by two separate contracts. One was for the addition of a North Wing to the Massey Library and the other one for outside services (i.e. utilities and landscaping). (a) North Wing, four; outside services, two. (b) North Wing (i) $4,783,160. (ii) $4,389,000. Outside services (i) $1,204,900. (ii) $994,300. (c) North Wing,—Bramalea General Contractor (Peel) Ltd. of Bramalea, Ont., who was the lowest bidder. Outside services—Taggart Construction Ltd. of Ottawa, Ont., who was the lowest bidder.

NOVA SCOTIA—FUNDS INVESTED FOR RESTORATION OF HISTORIC SITES

Question No. 5,065—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. Since the inception of Heritage Canada, how much did the government invest in the Province of Nova Scotia for the restoration of historic sites?

2. (a) How many historic sites have been restored (b) what is the name and location of each (c) what amount was granted for such restoration in each case (d) by year, how many permanent jobs were created for the administration and maintenance of such sites?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. $5,000,006. (to Feb. 27/76)

2. (a) Nine. (b) (i) Alexander Graham Bell—Baddeck. (ii) Grand Pré—Grand Pré. (iii) Halifax Citadel—Halifax. (iv) Port Royal—near Annapolis Royal. (v) York Redoubt—Halifax (Purcell Cove). (vi) Fort Charlotte—George's Island, Halifax Harbour. (vii) Fort Anne—Annapolis Royal. (viii) Fortress of Louisbourg—Louisbourg. (ix) Halifax Waterfront Buildings—Halifax. (c)(i) $417,800. (ii) $2,700. (iii) $527,900. (iv) $42,800. (v) $88,500. (vi) $30,000. (vii) $42,200. (viii) $4,051,600. (ix) $625,500.

	1973-74	1974-75	1975-76 (to February 27, 1976)
(d) (i)	0	0	1
(ii)	0	0	1
(iii)	1	0	0
(iv)	0	0	0
(v)	0	0	0
(vi)	0	0	0
(vii)	0	0	1
(viii)	3	1	5
(ix)	0	0	0

PEI—FUNDS INVESTED FOR RESTORATION OF HISTORIC SITES

Question No. 5,066—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. Since the inception of Heritage Canada, how much did the government invest in the Province of Prince Edward Island for the restoration of historic sites?

2. (a) How many historic sites have been restored (b) what is the name and location of each (c) what amount was granted for such restoration in each case (d) by year, how many permanent jobs were created for the administration and maintenance of such sites?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. $61,786 (to February 27 1976)

2. (a) Three. (b)(i) Fort Amherst—Rocky Point, near Charlottetown. (ii) Pope House—Charlottetown. (iii) Government House—Charlottetown. (c)(i) $42,900. (ii) 7,600. (iii) 8,700.

	1973-74	1974-75	1975-76 (to February 27, 1976)
(d) (i)	0	1	0
(ii)	0	0	0
(iii)	0	0	0

Order Paper Questions

SASKATCHEWAN—FUNDS INVESTED FOR RESTORATION OF HISTORIC SITES

Question No. 5,067—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. Since the inception of Heritage Canada, how much did the government invest in the Province of Saskatchewan for the restoration of historic sites?

2. (a) How many historic sites have been restored (b) what is the name and location of each (c) what amount was granted for such restoration in each case (d) by year, how many permanent jobs were created for the administration and maintenance of such sites?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. $953,797 (to February 27 1976)

2. (a) Four. (b)(i) Battleford—Battleford. (ii) Batoche—Batoche. (iii) Motherwell Homestead—near Abernathy. (iv) Fort Walsh—near Maple Creek. (c)(i) $93,800. (ii) 60,200. (iii) 49,000. (iv) 892,600.

	1973-74	1974-75	1975-76 (to February 27, 1976
(d) (i)	3	1	2
(ii)	0	0	1
(iii)	0	0	0
(iv)	1	2	2

QUEBEC—FUNDS INVESTED FOR RESTORATION OF HISTORIC SITES

Question No. 5,068—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. Since the inception of Heritage Canada, how much did the government invest in the Province of Quebec for the restoration of historic sites?

2. (a) How many historic sites have been restored (b) what is the name and location of each (c) what amount was granted for such restoration in each case (d) by year, how many permanent jobs were created for the administration and maintenance of such sites?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. $3,499,976 (to February 27 1976). 2. (a) 13. (b)(i) Croix Jacques Cartier—Gaspé. (ii) Cartier House—Montréal. (iii) Maison Laurier—Villes des Laurentides. (iv) Fort Témiscamingue—near the town of Ville Marie. (v) Québec City—Walls and Gates—Québec City. (vi) Cartier-Brébeuf—Québec City. (vii) Fort Lévis—Lévis. (viii) Parc de l'Artillerie—Québec City. (ix) Les Forges du Saint-Maurice—Trois Rivières. (x) Carillon Barracks—Carillon. (xi) Fort Chambly—Chambly. (xii) Coteau-du-lac—Coteau-du-Lac. (xiii) Fort Lennox—Île-aux-Noix.

2. c)(i) $ 2,400. (ii) 31,200. (iii) $ 2,200. (iv) $ 80,800. (v) $466,870. (vi) $186,600. (vii) $247,600. (viii) $1,756,900. (ix) $204,000. (x) $38,600. (xi) $101,700. (xii) $31,700. (xiii) $604,300.

	1973-74	1974-75	1975-76 (to February 27, 1976)
(d) (i)	0	0	0
(ii)	0	0	0
(iii)	1	0	0
(iv)	0	0	0
(v)	1	0	0
(vi)	2	0	1
(vii)	−1	0	0
(viii)	1	4	0
(ix)	0	1	3
(x)	0	4	0
(xi)	1	−1	0
(xii)	1	−1	0
(xiii)	0	−1	0

NEWFOUNDLAND—FUNDS INVESTED IN RESTORATION OF HISTORIC SITES

Question No. 5,069—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. Since the inception of Heritage Canada, how much did the government invest in the Province of Newfoundland for the restoration of historic sites?

2. (a) How many historic sites have been restored (b) what is the name and location of each (c) what amount was granted for such restoration in each case (d) by year, how many permanent jobs were created for the administration and maintenance of such sites?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. $452,177 (to February 27 1976).

2. (a) Six. (b)(i) Signal Hill, St. John's. (ii) Cape Spear, near St. John's. (iii) Castle Hill, Placentia. (iv) L'Anse aux Meadows, 25 miles north of St. Anthony. (v) Port au Choix, Port au Choix. (vi) Moravian Mission, Hopedale, Labrador. (c) (i) $134,500. (ii) $11,800. (iii) $96,600. (iv) $187,550. (v) $116,200. (vi) $12,000.

	1973-74	1974-75	1975-76 (to February 27, 1976)
(d) (i)	0	1	1
(ii)	0	0	0
(iii)	0	0	0
(iv)	1	0	1
(v)	0	0	1
(vi)	0	0	0

NEW BRUNSWICK—FUNDS INVESTED FOR RESTORATION OF HISTORIC SITES

Question No. 5,070—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. Since the inception of Heritage Canada, how much did the government invest in the Province of New Brunswick for the restoration of historic sites?

2. (a) How many historic sites have been restored (b) what is the name and location of each (c) what amount was granted for such restoration in each case (d) by year, how many permanent jobs were created for the administration and maintenance of such sites?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. $360,324 (to February 27, 1976).

2. (a) Three. (b)(i) St. Andrews Blockhouse, St. Andrews. (ii) Fort Beauséjour, Aulac. (iii) Fredericton Military Compound, Fredericton. (c)(i) $9,000. (ii) $208,-950. (iii) $153,000.

	1973-74	1974-75	1975-76 (to Febuary 27, 1976)
(d) (i)	0	0	0
(ii)	1	0	1
(iii)	0	0	0

BRITISH COLUMBIA—FUNDS INVESTED FOR RESTORATION OF HISTORIC SITES

Question No. 5,071—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. Since the inception of Heritage Canada, how much did the government invest in the Province of British Columbia for the restoration of historic sites?

2. (a) How many historic sites have been restored (b) what is the name and location of each (c) what amount was granted for such restoration in each case (d) by year, how many permanent jobs were created for the administration and maintenance of such sites?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development):
1. $530,142 (to February 27, 1976).

2. (a) Four. (b)(i) Fort St. James, Fort St. James. (ii) Fort Langley, near Langley. (iii) Fort Rodd Hill, Victoria. (iv) St. Roch, Vancouver. (c)(i) $371,900. (ii) $59,200. (iii) $207,000. (iv) $55,000.

	1973-74	1974-75	1975-76 (to February 27, 1976)
(d) (i)	0	1	0
(ii)	5	0	0
(iii)	0	0	1
(iv)	0	0	0

ALBERTA—FUNDS INVESTED FOR RESTORATION OF HISTORIC SITES

Question No. 5,072—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. Since the inception of Heritage Canada, how much did the government invest in the Province of Alberta for the restoration of historic sites?

2. (a) How many historic sites have been restored (b) what is the name and location of each (c) what amount was granted for such restoration in each case (d) by year, how many permanent jobs were created for the administration and maintenance of such sites?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development):
1. $145,959 (to February 27, 1976).

2. (a) One. (b)(i) Rocky Mountain House, Rocky Mountain House. (c)(i) $75,300.

	1973-74	1974-75	1975-76 (to February 27, 1976)
(d) (i)	1	0	0

ONTARIO—FUNDS INVESTED FOR RESTORATION OF HISTORIC SITES

Question No. 5,073—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. Since the inception of Heritage Canada, how much did the government invest in the Province of Ontario for the restoration of historic sites?

2. (a) How many historic sites have been restored (b) what is the name and location of each (c) what amount was granted for such restoration in each case (d) by year, how many permanent jobs were created for the administration and maintenance of such sites?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development):
1. $1,165,408 (to February 27, 1976).

2. (a) Nine. (b)(i) Bellevue House, Kingston. (ii) Fort Malden, Amherstburg. (iii) Niagara Complex, Niagara Peninsula. (iv) Fort Wellington, Prescott. (v) Woodside, Kitchener. (vi) Fort St. Joseph, St. Joseph Island. (vii) Sir John Johnson House, Williamstown. (viii) Inverarden House, Cornwall. (ix) Rideau Canal. (c)(i) $94,200. (ii) $103,700. (iii) $674,000. (iv) $97,750. (v) $38,600. (vi) $296,-600. (vii) $102,600. (viii) $7,000. (ix) $114,800.

	1973-74	1974-75	1975-76 (to February 27, 1976)
(d) (i)	0	1	2
(ii)	1	1	1
(iii)	−1	1	1
(iv)	0	1	0
(v)	0	1	0
(vi)	0	0	1
(vii)	0	0	0
(viii)	0	0	0
(ix)	—	—	—

MANITOBA—FUNDS INVESTED FOR RESTORATION OF HISTORIC SITES

Question No, 5,074—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. Since the inception of Heritage Canada, how much did the government invest in the Province of Manitoba for the restoration of historic sites?

2. (a) How many historic sites have been restored (b) what is the name and location of each (c) what amount was granted for such restoration in each case (d) by year, how many permanent jobs were created for the administration and maintenance of such sites?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development):
1. $301,069 (to February 27, 1976).

2. (a) One. (b)(i) Lower Fort Garry, Selkirk. (c)(i) $513,400.

	1973-74	1974-75	1975-76 (to February 27, 1976)
(d) (i)	2	0	4

Order Paper Questions

COMMERCIAL VALUE OF FISHERIES HARVEST—ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC COASTS

Question No. 5,111—Mr. Forrestall:

What is the government's best estimate of the commercial value of the annual fisheries harvest taken within 200 miles of the (a) Atlantic (b) Pacific shores?

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Fisheries)): The commercial (landed) value of the annual fisheries harvest taken by all countries (including Canada) within 200 miles of the Canadian coasts is estimated for the year 1974 at: (a) Atlantic Coast $350 million. (b) Pacific Coast $125 million. Prices received by Canadian fishermen were used to estimate the value of foreign catches.

HALIFAX INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—CAR PARKING

Question No. 5,137—Mr. Crouse:

1. What method does the Department of Transport use to facilitate public parking at the Halifax International Airport?

2. (a) Who is responsible for the operation of such public parking (b) how was the decision reached (c) for what period of time is it to be operated under the present arrangements?

3. Is the public parking facilities at the Airport satisfactory from the point of view of demand and, if not, what efforts does the Department intend to undertake to provide additional space?

4. Have any complaints been directed to the Department relating to inadequate parking space?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. To facilitate short-term public parking, 60 metered parking positions are provided. These spaces are metered for one hour parking duration. In addition to short-term parking, a parking lot which accommodates 729 cars is provided for long-term parking.

2. (a) The metered parking is administered by Transport Canada officials. The public parking lot at Halifax International Airport is operated under a management fee contract for Transport Canada. Canadawide Parking Services Ltd. is the present operator of the parking facility. (b) The decision to award the contract to Canadawide Parking Services Ltd. was reached by means of a public tender call. (c) The present contract expires August 31, 1976 and Transport Canada will call public tenders in the very near future.

3. The parking lot is inadequate to meet the demand. Expansion of the facility to accommodate an additional 502 cars is included in the Airport Development Plan for year 1977/78. The inadequacy has been recognized for some time, however the project has had to be deferred in favour of other local projects of higher priority.

4. No complaints have been recorded.

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—COST FOR IMPROVEMENTS

Question No. 5,218—Mr. Stevens:

1. What is the total estimated cost for improvements now underway at Toronto International Airport for (a) Terminal Number 1 (b) Terminal Number 2 and, in each case (i) what is the nature of the improvements (ii) on what date will they be completed?

[Mrs. Campagnolo.]

2. (a) What was the total cost to the government for the destruction of the Shell Service Station facility required presumably as a result of the improvements to Terminal Number 2 (b) what was the nature of the costs (c) what compensation was paid to the owners or operators of the Station (d) on what date was the Station (i) opened for business (ii) closed?

3. What was the original total cost for (a) Terminal Number 1 (b) Terminal Number 2 and, in each case, on what date was it first opened for business?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. (a) $21,301,000 in November, 1975 dollars. (i) This consists of Terminal Building modifications to structural, architectural, mechanical and electrical work related to vertical transportation, west court modifications, holdroom expansion, public arrivals waiting room, international inspection and inbound baggage systems; outbound baggage system and air conditioning. (ii) December 31, 1978. (b) $41,088,000 in November, 1975 dollars. (i) This consists of approximately 750 feet expansion to Terminal Building including structural, architectural, mechanical and electrical works associated with Stage 3 imporvements and to the interface with the parking structure project; furniture and furnishings; environmental improvements; Apron expansion associated with Terminal II and related services; elevated road (curb) construction and other areas requiring finishes such as tenant relocation and improvement facilities. (ii) September 30, 1978.

2. (a) $57,637.40 paid to date, balance due contractor $6,288.60. (b) Demolish, excavate, backfill, remove and dispose of the abandoned service station including underground tanks, roofs, etc. (c) $400,000. (d) (i) August 1, 1964. (ii) August 1, 1975.

3. (a) $24,460,000. February 20, 1964. (b) $39,413,000. April 1, 1973.

NOTE (1): The cost figures for question 3 do not include utilities services, roads, furnishings and fixtures.

HALIFAX—DARTMOUTH PORT—SHED RENTAL CHARGES

Question No. 5,238—Mr. Forrestall:

What is the present position of the Minister of Transport on the shed rental charges to be imposed on the Port of Halifax-Dartmouth by the National Harbours Board in June 1976?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Since the proposed marine terminal policy was proposed for discussion last year, the National Harbours Board has received valuable comments from various groups. In response to the suggestions, the original proposal was recently amended and will be reviewed by the Port Authority Chairmen concerned later this month. No decision has been made regarding implementation of the effective date thereof.

CUSTOMS PRE-CLEARANCE AT INTERNATIONAL AIRPORTS

Question No. 5,256—Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West):

Was a notification sent by April 1, 1976, to the Government of the United States by the government as required under the Canada-United States Bilateral Air Agreement for the introduction of customs preclearance at international airports and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Government's intention to introduce pre-clearance at Edmonton and Calgary in the fall of 1977 was recorded in a Memorandum of Consultation between the Canadian and United States delegations signed at Ottawa on March 4, 1976. As further recorded in that Memorandum, the two delegations have also agreed to hold a technical meeting at the end of April to approve final plans.

NEW INVESTMENT PROPOSAL

Question No. 5,331—Mr. Nystrom:

1. Was a new investment proposal made by Borsig GMBH of West Germany, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Babcock, also of West Germany, and Hartmann Patentverwertung GMBH of Switzerland, to establish a new business in Calgary, Alberta, under the name Borsig Hartmann Valve Ltd., a business to be engaged in the manufacture of a broad range of ball valves, largely for sale to the oil and gas industry and, if so, what is the total and/or per share price of the transaction, including the value of share transfers or other considerations?

2. Who are the principal shareholders of Babcock of West Germany and Hartmann Patentverwertung GMBH of Switzerland?

3. Do Babcock of West Germany and Hartmann Patentverwertung GMBH of Switzerland control and/or partially own, directly or indirectly, any other businesses in Canada and, if so, in each case, what are the holdings by percent of control and value?

4. What will be the effect of the establishment of this petroleum refinery on (a) the level and nature of economic activity in Canada (b) resource processing in Canada (c) utilization of parts, components, materials and services produced in Canada (d) exports from Canada (e) productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, product innovation and product variety in Canada (f) competition within any industry or industries in Canada?

5. How many persons will be employed once the new plant is established?

6. What is the degree and significance of participation by Canadians in the business enterprise or new business and in any industry or industries in Canada of which the business enterprise or new business forms or will form?

7. How will the establishment of this plant be (a) compatible (b) incompatible with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policy objectives of any province likely to be affected by the new plant?

8. What is the significant benefit to Canada of the transaction?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned: an investment proposal to establish a new business in Calgary, Alberta was made by Borsig GMBH of West Germany and Hartmann Patentverwertung GMBH of Switzerland. The proposal was allowed by the Governor in Council on April 6, 1976 (P. C. 1976-816). All information with respect to a person, business or proposed business obtained in the course of the administration of the Foreign Investment Review Act is privileged and may not be released except as provided in section 14 of that Act.

COMPANY TAKEOVERS

Question No. 5,332—Mr. Nystrom:

1. In the takeover of Dispenser Division of The Oshawa Group Limited of Islington, Ontario by Moccomat Beverage Systems Limited of Islington, Ontario which is controlled by Douwe Egberts Koninklijke Tabaksfabriek Koffiebranderijen Theehandel B.V. of the Netherlands, what percentage of control will Moccomat Beverage Systems Limited of Islington, Ontario—a company controlled by Douwe Egberts Koninklijke Tabaksfabriek Koffiebranderijen Theehandel B.V. of the Netherlands acquire?

2. What is the total and/or per share price of the transaction, including the value of share transfers or other considerations?

3. Who were the principal shareholders of Dispenser Division of The Oshawa Group Limited of Islington, Ontario and what control, if any, will they retain in the company?

4. Who are the principal shareholders of Douwe Egberts Koninklijke Tabaksfabriek Koffiebranderijen Theehandel B.V. of the Netherlands and what are their holdings in the company?

5. Does Douwe Egberts Koninklijke Tabaksfabriek Koffiebranderijen Theehandel B.V. of the Netherlands control and/or partially own, directly or indirectly, any other businesses in Canada and, if so, in each case, what are the holdings by per cent of control and value?

6. What will be the effect of the takeover on (a) the level and nature of economic activity in Canada (b) resource processing in Canada (c) utilization of parts components, materials and services produced in Canada (d) exports from Canada (e) productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, product innovation and product variety in Canada (f) competition within any industry or industries in Canada (g) employment within Dispenser Division of The Oshawa Group Limited of Islington, Ontario and within the industry?

7. (a) How many persons did Dispenser Division of The Oshawa Group Limited of Islington, Ontario employ before the takeover (b) how many are presently employed?

8. (a) What are the unions, if any, who represented the employees (b) did they approve or disapprove of the takeover (c) was their opinion sought?

9. What is the degree and significance of participation by Canadians in the business enterprise or new business and in any industry or industries in Canada of which the business enterprise or new business forms or will form?

10. How is the takeover (a) compatible (b) incompatible with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policy objectives of any province likely to be affected by the takeover?

11. What is the significant benefit to Canada of the takeover?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): See reply to question No. 3,954 answered on March 2, 1976.

COMPANY TAKEOVERS

Question No. 5,333—Mr. Nystrom:

1. In the takeover of Canada Carbon and Ribbon Company Limited of Toronto by Columbia Ribbon and Carbon Manufacturing Co. Inc., of Glen Cove, New York, and Marline Resources Company Inc., also of New York, what percentage of control will Columbia Ribbon and Carbon Manufacturing Co. Inc., of Glen Cove, New York, and Marline Resources Company Inc., also of New York acquire?

2. What is the total and/or per share price of the transaction, including the value of share transfers or other considerations?

3. Who were the principal shareholders of Canada Carbon and Ribbon Company Limited of Toronto, Ontario and what control, if any, will they retain in the company?

4. Who are the principal shareholders of Columbia Ribbon and Carbon Manufacturing Co. Inc., of Glen Cove, New York and Marline Resources Company Inc., also of New York and what are their holdings in the company?

5. Does Columbia Ribbon and Carbon Manufacturing Co. Inc., of Glen Cove, New York, and Marline Resources Company Inc., of New York control and/or partially own, directly or indirectly, any other businesses in Canada and, if so, in each case, what are the holdings by per cent of control and value?

6. What will be the effect of the takeover on (a) the level and nature of economic activity in Canada (b) resource processing in Canada (c) utilization of parts components, materials and services produced in Canada (d) exports from Canada (e) productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, product innovation and product variety in Canada (f) competition within any industry or industries in Canada (g) employment within Canada Carbon and Ribbon Company Limited of Toronto, Ontario and within the industry?

7. (a) How many persons did Canada Carbon and Ribbon Company Limited of Toronto employ before the takeover (b) how many are presently employed?

8. (a) What are the unions, if any, who represented the employees (b) did they approve or disapprove of the takeover (c) was their opinion sought?

9. What is the degree and significance of participation by Canadians in the business enterprise or new business and in any industry or industries in Canada of which the business enterprise or new business forms or will form?

10. How is the takeover (a) compatible (b) incompatible with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policy objectives of any province likely to be affected by the takeover?

11. What is the significant benefit to Canada of the takeover?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): See reply to question No. 3,954 answered on March 2, 1976.

COMPANY TAKOVERS

Question No. 5,334—Mr. Nystrom:

1. In the takeover of Dominion Coachcraft Industries (Canada) Ltd. of Regina, Saskatchewan by Standard Auto Glass Western Limited of Winnipeg, Manitoba (Standard Auto Glass Western Limited is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Vanfax Corporation Ltd. of Montreal, which in turn is wholly-owned by Libbey-Owens-Ford Company of Toledo, Ohio), what percentage of control will Standard Auto Glass Western Limited of Winnipeg, Manitoba acquire?

2. What is the total and/or per share price of the transaction, including the value of share transfers or other considerations?

3. Who were the principal shareholders of Dominion Coachcraft Industries (Canada) Ltd. and what control, if any, will they retain in the company?

4. Who are the principal shareholders of Libbey-Owens-Ford Company of Toledo, Ohio and what are their holdings in the company?

5. Does Libbey-Owens-Ford Company of Toledo, Ohio control and/or partially own, directly or indirectly, any other businesses in Canada and, if so, in each case, what are the holdings by per cent of control and value?

6. What will be the effect of the takeover on (a) the level and nature of economic activity in Canada (b) resource processing in Canada (c) utilization of parts components, materials and services produced in Canada (d) exports from Canada (e) productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, product innovation and product variety in Canada (f) competition within any industry or industries in Canada (g) employment within Dominion Coachcraft Industries (Canada) Ltd. of Regina, Saskatchewan and within the industry?

7. (a) How many persons did Dominion Coachcraft Industries (Canada) Ltd. employ before the takeover (b) how many are presently employed?

8. (a) What are the unions, if any, who represented the employees (b) did they approve or disapprove of the takeover (c) was their opinion sought?

9. What is the degree and significance of participation by Canadians in the business enterprise or new business and in any industry or industries in Canada of which the business enterprise or new business forms or will form?

10. How is the takeover (a) compatible (b) incompatible with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policy objectives of any province likely to be affected by the takeover?

11. What is the significant benefit to Canada of the takeover?

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry Trade and Commerce): See reply to question No. 3,954 answered on March 2, 1976.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Question No. 5,364—Mr. Cossitt:

Has a policy been established by the Department of Agriculture that all Order Paper questions pertaining to the Department must have answers prepared within fifteen days of the questions being asked and (a) if not, what is the exact number of days allotted for the answering of such questions (b) if so, what are the reasons that Question No. 3,240 concerning the use of government aircraft by the Minister and members of his family has remained unanswered since October 21, 1975?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): (a) The general policy of the government regarding written questions is that they will be replied to as quickly as possible. While it would be ideal to have all written questions replied to within fifteen days and this is urged upon Ministers, this is not always possible. Strict adherence to such a policy would require the institution of a system similar to that found in Great Britain and accepted by M.P.'s where interim replies frequently are given or, more frequently the Minister replies that he will write to the hon. member. The length of time required for preparing replies to written questions among other factors depends upon the length of the question, its complexity, the availability of information, the number of departments and agencies involved, and the number of questions directed to the particular department of agency. (b) The Government takes responsibility for the answers it provides to questions and for the process involved in replying to such questions. It is not appropriate therefore to provide information about internal administrative arrangements.

ORDER PAPER QUESTION 3,240

Question No. 5,365—Mr. Cossitt:

1. On what date was Question No. 3,240 received by the Department of Agriculture from the Privy Council Office and what are the names of any persons assigned to prepare the answer?

2. Was an answer to the Question prepared a number of weeks ago and, if so, on what date was the answer completed?

3. Were representations made by the Minister, his Executive Assistant or anyone else acting on his behalf that the answer be altered and, if so, in each case (a) on what date (b) by whom?

4. Was the answer forwarded to the Minister for signature and subsequent transmittal to the Privy Council Office and, if so, on what date?

5. Has the Minister signed the answer and, if not (a) for what reason (b) on what date will he sign it?

6. If the Minister has signed the answer, has it been transmitted to the Privy Council Office and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The Government takes responsibility for the answers it provides to questions and for the process involved in replying to such questions. It is not appropriate therefore to provide information about internal administrative arrangements.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the parliamentary secretary would simply clarify whether question 5,204 was included.

Mr. Blais: It was not, Mr. Speaker; it was scratched.

* * *

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 3,838 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

[Text]

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Question No. 3,838—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. With reference to the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan, for each year since 1965, what was the (a) number of fish processing plants in operation in PEI (b) number of pounds of fish processed (i) at all plants combined (ii) on an average per plant (c) percentage of the total PEI fish catch processed in (i) PEI (ii) outside PEI (d) total market value of fish products processed in PEI in (i) real dollars (ii) constant dollars (e) average market value of fish products per plant in (i) real dollars (ii) constant dollars (f) percentage change over the previous year in market value of fish products produced (i) at all plants combined (ii) on an average per plant (g) number of weeks in operation (i) of all plants combined (ii) on an average per plant (h) number of workers employed (i) at all plants combined (ii) on an average per plant (i) number of man-hours of employment (i) at all plants combined (ii) on an average per worker (j) total income paid to workers at processing plants in (i) real dollars (ii) constant dollars (k) average income paid per worker in (i) real dollars (ii) constant dollars (l) number of fishermen who worked part-time at processing plants (m) average percentage of family income for all fishermen derived from employment in a processing plant?

2. Have any fish processing plants in PEI received financial assistance from the government since 1969 and, if so, as totals (a) what were the sources of this assistance (b) from each source, what were the (i) amounts (ii) types (iii) purposes of assistance (c) what percentage of financial assistance went to (i) processing plant consolidation (ii) creation of new processing plants?

3. For each new processing plant since 1969 which received assistance under the Regional Development Incentives Act (a) what procedures were followed to ensure that the decision to give assistance complemented the overall fishing sector strategy and objectives (b) was consideration given, prior to the awarding of assistance, to the potentially negative effects on processing plants already in operation and, if so (i) what negative effects were foreseen (ii) what were the advantages of the new plant which outweighed these negative effects (iii) have the actual negative effects been more or less serious than originally foreseen?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Blais: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURES RESPECTING PUNISHMENT FOR MURDER AND OTHER SERIOUS OFFENCES

The House resumed, from Thursday, May 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand that Bill C-84, to amend the Criminal Code in relation to the punishment for murder and certain other serious offences, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to participate in this debate on Bill C-84 and make my position known loudly and clearly. When this matter came before parliament in the past, I had opportunity their of speaking. I had the opportunity to speak on May 22, July 23, and again on an amendment on October 18, 1973: and let me state categorically that I have had no reason to change my stand.

I listened with interest to the remarks of the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) who opened this debate. He stated, and rightly so, that society is outraged and is demanding capital punishment. He then went on to quote from many experts supporting abolition. However, those on the other side of this subject can quote from just as many experts supporting their case. I think we are all well aware that the Canadian public is concerned about crime and wants peace and security. Furthermore, it feels that a longer term of imprisonment will not deter would-be killers.

Many polls have been taken. The most recent which I received was dated May 3; it was from the metropolitan Toronto police association. I believe all hon. members received it. It showed that 68,745 responses to their questionnaire were sent in, showing 87.6 per cent of the people in favour of capital punishment. This government seems willing to fly in the face of public opinion and use every means within its power to pilot this bill through.

There is no question that the government will be ably assisted by the press gallery and the media, those great moulders of public opinion. Let me point out that this is one particular area in which the media has not been successful. When reporting on this bill, the news commentators on the national news are depicted with the sinister noose on the screen behind them. It might be an idea, for a change, for some of them to put the noose around their own necks. Again, this morning, on the "Canada A.M." program I believe it was Dennis MacIntosh who mentioned that this matter would be discussed in the House today—and the sinister noose was in the background. Let there be a change in reporting, and let us see on the television screen some of the murder victims. I can assure the House that this would portray a pretty gruesome scene. I hope hon. members will give serious consideration to victims, rather than murderers, when they cast their vote and stand up to be counted.

I hope, also, that hon. members will give some thought to the feelings of the great majority of Canadians. The Solicitor General has pointed out that he hopes to convince the 60 or so new members of parliament that they should vote for the bill as they are the ones who will decide the outcome. He says this bill is not perfect. That is an understatement. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), who began the debate for the official opposition, stated that he was somewhat cynical about the proposed free vote as far as the government side is concerned. I am aware that there are several abolitionists on this side of the House and nothing I could say would change their minds. I respect the views of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), for example, even though I do not agree with him.

Mr. Alexander: And vice-versa.

Mr. Darling: I recall the Solicitor General some months ago stating that on this legislation there would be a free vote except for the government. I presume he meant the cabinet.

Mr. Allmand: I was wrong.

Mr. Darling: You bet you were wrong, sir. I am aware that the will in all probability vote 100 per cent for the bill even though some of them, if they were free to do so, would vote the other way. I point out that it seems ironic that there are 262 members in this House—there are two vacant seats at the present time—who represent all walks of life, and therefore one would expect they would reflect the views of the average Canadian. It would seem only logical that, not in the neighbourhood of 87.6 per cent but probably 70 per cent of the members of this House would feel the same way as the average Canadian. I recall a question asked in this House last Wednesday by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt), who I see in the House this afternoon. She asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the following:

Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Will the free vote on Bill C-84 be free to the cabinet?

That was a straightforward question, and from all sides of the House there was "Hear, hear." The Prime Minister stood up, and this was his pronouncement:

Mr. Speaker, a freer group of men and women still has to be found in Canada.

Certainly, that was a very diplomatic way of saying that all 28 or 29 members of the cabinet will vote as the Prime Minister sees fit. No one can tell me that those august men and women are all abolitionists. It may be of interest to parliamentarians that Ronald Reagan, the former governor of California, for a good number of years was an abolitionist, but he now states he is against the law which makes the death penalty unconstitutional. He says:

When I was governor, I saved the lives of 12 murderers. They were paroled or released, and now their score is 34 murders. They killed another 22 people.

I have listened to a good number of speeches on Bill C-84. Hon. members on both sides have spoken with feeling. I was most impressed by the remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche), who is one of those members who has had second thoughts. In the previous vote on capital punishment he supported the government, but has now come to the conclusion that Canada is not ready for the total abolition. He stated that he had done a great deal of soul-searching before coming to this decision.

• (1600)

We are dealing with one of the most important pieces of legislation to come before this House: we are dealing with life and death.

Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) are constantly talking about peace and security—and I am wondering, for whom? It is my view that this bill, if passed, will only provide peace and security for the criminal element and murderers. And let me point out, Mr. Speaker, that I am not talking about murderers who have committed crimes of passion, or of drunken brawls. I am talking of cold-blooded, premeditated murder or the mafia-type killing—the killing of people during armed robbery and rape, and, of course, the killers of police and guards.

I should just mention, Mr. Speaker, that just before I turned off the television on Saturday night a movie came on entitled "Assassination Bureau", which I watched for a few moments. That movie would give ideas to anybody who wanted to get rid of an enemy. All they would have to do is contact this bureau or one like it.

Mr. Speaker, let me point out, also, that there should be longer mandatory sentences for armed robbery involving an offensive weapon, and longer sentences for people caught carrying offensive weapons; and, of course, longer sentences for crimes involving hard drugs. There are certain cold-blooded and violent murderers who cannot be rehabilitated. They have already committed murder and will do so again if given the opportunity. It is because of this that I feel the death penalty should be retained for certain types of violent murder.

Mr. Speaker, I have mentioned the death penalty, but I do not necessarily mean hanging, as I am opposed to this and feel that a much more humane method should be used, as long as the killer is permanently removed from society as quietly and efficiently as possible. Let me repeat that we are not ready for total abolition, the chief reason being the growing crime rate, combined with the government's present way of dealing with crime. Violent crime in Canada increased 90 per cent in the ten-year period 1965 to 1974. In 1965 there were 243 murders in the country; in 1974, 545. The murder rate in this period has doubled, from 1.2 per 100,000 population to 2.4. Despite the fact that 38 policemen and jail guards were murdered in this same ten-year period, no convicted murderer has been executed. Is it any wonder that the public is up in arms? A great majority of Canadians are now demanding a return to full capital punishment.

Let us now look at attempted murder. In 1961 there were 74 attempted murders in Canada—a rate of .5 per 100,000 population. In 1967 there were 139 attempted murders, a rate of .9 per cent, and in 1974 there were 524 attempted murders, a rate of 2.3 per cent. The actual number of attempted murders in 1974 was between seven and eight times the number of only 13 years earlier in 1961. In other words, by the grace of God only are the murder figures for 1974 not even worse. Over the same period, the death penalty has been increasingly modified in Canadian law and, indeed, not implemented at all. The murder rate has doubled and the attempted murder rate has quadrupled.

Mr. Speaker, now that we are engaged once again in serious debate on the subject of capital punishment, it is time for all the experts to reappear. There are more experts on this subject than on any other subject I can think of, with the possible exception of the Canadian economy. They are a dime a dozen, and come to think of it, that is just about what they are worth. For some strange reason, most, if not all, of these experts are abolitionists. These are the people who insist that we demean our own society when we take the life of a brutal and sadistic murderer. These are the people who maintain that capital punishment is not, and would not be, a deterrent to deliberate murder. They have all kinds of data and statistics to support their arguments. When their statistics are put to the test, we find that their supporting arguments are based on the very same data as my own—no better and no worse.

The plain fact is that there is no reliable data available either to me or to the experts. We are all on our own and there is no more evidence available to support my position than there is to support the position of the abolitionists, except for the great increase in murders which those of us who still favour the retention of capital punishment can quote. They cannot be denied.

I think that I have made my own position clear, Mr. Speaker. I am a retentionist and I make no apology for it. I repeat that on the basis of existing data and evidence, or rather the lack of it, my position is just as tenable as any taken by the experts. I think that I have now made it equally clear that I do not intend to juggle any figures to build my case for retention of capital punishment.

The debate on the pros and cons of capital punishment has raged for many years in Canada. Running parallel to this debate I have noticed a strange sort of pattern develop in our society, fed by the tedious arguments of social workers and do-gooders of every conceivable stripe. These people are first on the scene when a person is charged with a serious crime such as a violent assault, and especially a brutal murder. They are there before the innocent victim has even had a decent burial and before the accused can be brought to trial.

We are told, first of all, that the accused is not to blame for the crime: society is to blame, and the accused murderer is just as much the victim as the person who was murdered. While I do not intend to employ figures to support my position as a retentionist, I will say, Mr. Speaker, that it is a matter of record that the average murderer gets more attention, more sympathy and more assistance than either the victim or the family of the victim. There are all kinds of people who are standing by today to run to the defence of anyone charged with murder or any other violent crime.

Next we are told, if it happens to be a crime for which the death penalty is prescribed on conviction, that the death penalty is barbaric and inhumane. In support of this argument we are told that the death penalty has been abolished in Great Britain, Pango-Pango and any other place that happens to come to mind. We are told the death penalty is out and the only civilized method of punishment is a long prison sentence.

What happens when a long prison sentence is imposed on anyone convicted of murder? We hear that this, too, is inhumane. The idea of keeping a human being caged-up for 10, 20 or 30 years sends these social workers and a couple of cabinet ministers across the way into a frenzy. How can a modern, civilized society be so barbaric as to even consider caging up human beings as though they were animals in a zoo, they ask? So we have things like weekend passes, supervised and unsupervised leave, time off for good behaviour and, of course, early parole.

What happened to the poor victim, Mr. Speaker? He, or she, has been conveniently buried, and just as conveniently forgotten. We have a new victim to consider—the poor, misguided victim of society. We must all rush to the defence of this victim and we must ensure that no harm shall come to this unfortunate and misguided individual. When I think of the way these people so callously dispose of the victims of crime in their haste to rush to the defence of the criminal, I want to go into a quiet corner and bring up. I also get pretty angry, Mr. Speaker.

It takes a really twisted mind to regard the victim of a premeditated murder as simply a figure in a tally book. It takes an unusual mind to regard the murderer as someone who deserves, and even demands, the sympathy and indulgence of the very society upon whom he or she is preying. I disagree in the strongest terms that we demean our society when we take the life of a convicted murderer. I think, instead, that we demean society and ourselves as legislators when we refuse to take whatever action is necessary to protect the lives and property of law-abiding citizens of our country.

Social workers and do-gooders can afford the luxury of misdirected sympathies and concerns. If other crimes are committed, or if society suffers further misadventures when its theories backfire, then it does not really matter: it is back to the drawing-board. These experts on social conduct hold themselves to be above rebuke and censure. They hold themselves to be unaccountable—and they have at least two champions of their cause over there on the government benches.

I say to the Minister of Justice and to the Solicitor General that their responsibility is not to the bleeding hearts, to the innovative, misguided social workers and the other assorted do-gooders in our society. Their responsibility is not to the well-being or the comfort of those convicted of violent crime; it is to millions of law-abiding Canadians, people who must wonder at times whether there is anyone on their side. I strongly urge those two ministers to consider resigning if they cannot take their responsibilities seriously because of preconceived notions about capital punishment.

● (1610)

Unfortunately for the two ministers, they cannot afford the luxury of playing around with innovative social experiments. They cannot afford the luxury of showing how civilized they can be by turning dangerous criminals out on the streets just to see if they will commit more crimes and then bring them back to coddle them some more. I am not a retentionist because I want to see the state take the life of criminals; I am a retentionist because I have seen this government's stupid and senseless experiments in prison reform fail utterly over and over again.

Like the vast majority of Canadians, I am fed up with a system that allows, and even encourages, the criminal element in our society to hold law-abiding citizens at ransom. I might say that I am a retentionist for the very same reason that the two ministers across the floor are abolitionists. They say there are no figures or data to support the view that capital punishment would be a deterrent to murder. I could say that I am a retentionist because there is no real evidence to support the view that it would not be a deterrent. I support the theory that the very real fear of having to forfeit one's own life if convicted of murder would deter at least some murders, and longer mandatory prison sentences might reduce the numbers of other types of violent crime.

The real problem facing us is not whether the longer prison sentences proposed in this legislation would prove to be a workable alternative to the death penalty. The problem will be the same one that has plagued us for the past ten years, the failure of this government to carry out the will of parliament. I believe it was in 1967 that parliament adopted the present law regarding capital punishment. It was a compromise solution, partial abolition, and the compromise was proposed by the government of that day, essentially the same one that we have today.

We know now, and we have known for a very long time, that the government had no intention of abiding by the compromise legislation adopted by parliament in 1967 or in 1973. The present law calls for the death penalty for convicted murderers of policemen and prison guards where the court does not recommend clemency. All of us know that although there have been more than a score of convictions for such murders since that time, not one death penalty has been carried out; they have all been commuted by the cabinet—and those awaiting execution at the present time can be assured that their sentences will also be commuted.

Those of us who are retentionists—and we are by far the majority, according to all the polls on the subject—do not trust this government to carry out the law with respect to longer mandatory prison sentences in place of the death penalty. I am sure that most, if not all, of us could be swayed in favour of at least ensuring that convicted murderers and other violent criminals would be prevented from endangering law-abiding citizens. Before I would accept this solution in place of the death penalty, I would have to have to have that assurance, Mr. Speaker, and I simply cannot place that kind of trust in this government. We have already found in this and many other areas that the government, on the floor of this House, cannot be trusted to honour a commitment.

A couple of weeks ago the legislature of the state of Maine abolished the death penalty in that state and substituted a mandatory prison sentence. While that may sound just like the kind of solution that the government proposes in this legislation, there are some differences in the Maine legislation that might just make it work. For one thing, they have removed most of the discretionary powers of the parole board with respect to convicted murderers. The sentence has to be served. That is the one aspect of their legislation that gives it a chance of being an acceptable alternative to the death penalty. For instance, a person serving a 25-year term for premeditated or capital murder must serve the time without possibility of parole. The only time that can be commuted is that earned for good behaviour. That is certainly a more sensible and reasonable way to handle the problem than the one we have had for the past several years where convicted rape murderers, for instance, have been given passes from prison to go out and commit more rape murders.

In the legislation we are debating here, Mr. Speaker, there is still discretionary power in the hands of the Parole Board to decrease the sentence of convicted murderers, people who have committed deliberate, premeditated, heinous murders. This is not a deterrent and it is not an acceptable alternative. When you are dealing with today's enlightened social reformers, you just cannot win. It seems that they are winning their fight to abolish the death penalty, so one would naturally assume that they are prepared to settle for longer mandatory prison sentences with little or no possibility of parole. Not so, Mr. Speaker. They have a new angle, one that makes most reasonable people wonder just who, or what, these people are for.

We are now told that if we impose longer prison terms than the usual 20 years to life, where convicted murderers are back on the street again after a couple of years on weekend or day passes, it would be difficult to rehabilitate them. Right now, I believe the average time spent behind bars for murder is about seven years. Of course, as I mentioned earlier, there are the customary passes that are handed out holus-bolus to prisoners who have the ear of the Parole Board, and there is the provision for early parole. In fact, it is doubtful that violent criminals are treated more gently anywhere else in the world than they are in Canada.

It is strange that while the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General are telling us that punishment is not a deterrent to crime, our Department of External Affairs cautions Canadians travelling abroad that most countries mean what they say when they sentence people to prison terms for smuggling, drug offences and the like. They caution our young people to avoid getting involved in criminal activities while they are in such places as Mexico, the Middle East and countries where the laws are stricter than our own for these offences. The plain fact of the matter is that there is a deterrent effect in imposing severe penalties for severe crimes.

Canadians who have run afoul of the police and the courts in Israel, the Arab countries, and other places where Canadians are serving prison sentences, know that there is a deterrent value in these stiff sentences. There are numerous examples of these people warning other young people who travel the world in search of fun, or whatever, to avoid getting into trouble in countries where severe penalties are imposed for drug-related crimes and other offences. Any thinking person would certainly deduce from that that there is certainly a deterrent value in imposing a sentence that fits the crimes. I certainly do not propose to exact the death penalty for drug-related offences in Canada as they have in Iran and Iraq, but it has had a dramatic effect in controlling drug trafficking in those countries.

To get back for a moment to rehabilitation of prisoners in our penitentiaries, I do not consider that to be the number one priority. What I would consider a high priority is the rehabilitation of as many law-abiding citizens as we possibly can, and I am thinking mainly of the hundreds of thousands of people who would be almost immediately rehabilitated if they could only find a job. This is where I would place the emphasis and, as I have said many times, my sympathies are with the law-abiding and the innocent victims of crime. When they are looked after I will consider looking after the interests and the rehabilitation of those who have been convicted of anti-social behaviour.

● (1620)

Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General apparently tried to beef up his case for abolition by commissioning Ezzat Fattah, chairman of the department of criminology at Simon Fraser University, to conduct a study of public attitudes on capital punishment. While Fattah and the Solicitor General call it a study, it is anything but an objective study. It is, in fact, a prejudiced, slanted, selective presentation summing up the views not of the public but of Fattah and the Solicitor General.

Fattah states categorically that public opinion polls on capital punishment are not true indications of public sentiment. He goes on to say that the people who supported a return to capital punishment in the polls were generally right-wing bigots, usually from the older age groups, insecure, socially maladjusted, ignorant, uneducated and ethnocentric. Fattah says people themselves are not competent to decide whether or not capital punishment should be restored and that the small group of enlightened men and women in parliament should make this decision. I am not sure I could take this as a compliment. When I consider how poor Fattah's judgment is with respect to the Canadian people, I cannot place much faith in his judgment of parliamentarians. Oddly enough, Fattah seems totally unaware of the fact that the majority of members of parliament in 1967 and 1973 favoured, and today favour, a return to the noose.

The Solicitor General deceived us when he failed to tell the House that he had commissioned Fattah to write a biased report that purported to show public support for abolition. Rather than helping the Solicitor General's case, this report has had the opposite effect. Fattah had many of us fooled when he sent an abridged version of his report to the newspapers and passed it off as simply a letter from an interested observer of the capital punishment controversy. He destroyed any credibility he might once have had by making himself party to a deliberate deception. I think the Solicitor General should make a clean break from the report and from its author, Ezzat Fattah. He should admit that it was a serious mistake to try to pass off this report as an objective analysis of public opinion, and admit that it was in fact a sham and a fraud.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I have not changed my views with respect to the necessity for retaining capital punishment and I was not impressed by the Solicitor General's speech at the opening of this debate. I am a retentionist because I feel it is time for us to decide once and for all whether we are going to use all the weapons in our arsenal in an all-out fight against violent crime, or whether we will continue to give the advantage to the criminals. I do not trust the government to honour any agreement to keep convicted murderers behind bars for a minimum term; so I must opt for the one method which will ensure pubic safety and which will serve notice on criminals that we have run out of patience.

In recent weeks I have received innumerable letters from constituents, the majority asking—indeed demanding—the return of capital punishment. I do not know the exact proportion in favour of a return to capital punishment, but I think at least ten favour a return for every one who does not. A good many people go so far as to say that all first degree murder should be punished by capital punishment. Some feel more strongly than I do on the subject.

I think that we should consider a more humane way than hanging of dispatching the murderer. I think others have read in Hansard the sort of questions which were submitted by the metropolitan Toronto police association on the subject of capital punishment. The association asked this question, among others: "Are you opposed to capital punishment because of the method of execution used (hanging)?" Hanging, of course, is a gruesome way of getting rid of the murderer. The public response was, 9,954 opposed; but 44,258 definitely wanted to retain hanging.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to make a long speech at this time. Briefly, I want to make two points in answer to some of the contentions made by other hon. members of this House and raised in the debate. While I have served in two previous parliaments, this will be the first time I shall be called on to vote on this question.

Every elected member of a legislature, Mr. Speaker, has to answer to his or her conscience on the basic question of whether to lead or reflect public opinion. Many hon. members who have spoken in this debate—as nearly as I can tell, every one of them an abolitionist—cited Edmund Burke of a century and a half ago to the effect that it would be a matter of an individual member's conscience how he or she voted on an issue after being elected. With all due respect, I cannot accept this position in regard to capital punishment.

Over a number of years I have serious reservations about the effect of capital punishment and have never been persuaded that it is an effective deterrent. The long, statistical arguments, many of which have been reproduced, including some raised by the minister in introducing this debate, have to me been inconclusive. It seems to me that the increase or decrease of crime and violence is more related to fundamental social and economic conditions in the community than it is to absence or presence of capital punishment.

I do believe, however, that an elected representative must lead on occasion and also reflect public opinion on other occasions. Since the days of Edmund Burke, many things have changed. The electorate is much more literate, for better or for worse. Many more people follow public events and are better informed. Public opinion is now capable of being analysed and measured through the device of polling techniques. To say that the job of an elected representative is to pay no attention to public opinion, but simply to act according to his or her conscience will not, in my opinion, be good enough in this situation.

To me, sir, it is a basic principle that laws must be enacted with the consent of the governed. A law that is not accepted by the overwhelming majority of people to whom it must apply is not a good law. A law that is enacted to represent minority opinion, in the face of a contrary, majority public opinion, will not be respected. It will bring the entire law-making process itself into disrepute.

As a boy in the Ottawa Valley, I can remember the arguments of the prohibitionists against the use of alcohol. I can remember, also, the extent to which the law was violated, and the countless times reputable citizens in the community indicated their complete disrespect and contempt for the law. Eventually, despite the very convincing arguments of the dedicated people who were committed to the abolition of the use of alcohol, the law had to be changed. The law had to reflect the customs, attitudes and mores of the people to whom it applied.

The hon. gentleman who preceded me as the representative for Ottawa West conducted a poll and received the same kind of result that I did when I conducted a poll on this subject. In short, about 73 per cent of the 15 per cent of all households which responded in Ottawa West to a questionnaire distributed on postmen's walks were in favour of capital punishment for some situations involving, particularly, brutal and callous murder. The hon. gentleman who preceded me in office, when he faced this kind of result, said he did not care what the public thought and he would vote according to his conscience. I criticized him and said he could not, and should not, do that. I accept the consequences of the criticism I directed against him at that time when I now face, in this House, the responsibility of voting. All the evidence which I have seen from Gallup polls or any other source indicates that the majority of people in our society favour capital punishment being limited to extreme cases.

● (1630)

There are those who say contemptuously that an elected representative is not a mere opinion poll-taker, not a mere automatic reflection of measured public opinion. This goes without saying; there is no argument about it. But it is a long way to go from that position to the extreme argument that public opinion itself can be disregarded.

I have consulted my voters on a few basic issues of conscience—on gun control, on abortion and on capital punishment. I do not propose to consult them on day-to-day items of legislation because it is practically impossible to do so. It seems to me, however, that the consultation process should be applied on basic moral questions in the community, and legislators have to give careful attention to the results of this consultation process.

The second point I want to make in this debate is that I cannot accept the mandatory 25-year minimum term without hope of parole for those convicted of class one murder. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I think that the distinction between class one and class two murder is a desirable feature of the bill. I do not believe, however, that it serves the interests of rehabilitation or of developing within prison institutions the atmosphere in which rehabilitation of other prisoners is possible if we stick to these long, minimum terms. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I think that the 25-year sentence was designed to make abolition palatable and acceptable to the community. Abolition, it is argued, yes; but let us make sure that people who are particularly brutal and callous in murder are never let loose again to inflict injury on anybody else.

I find it very interesting, Mr. Speaker, to cite a study by Dr. John Huberman, a consulting psychologist. I know that authorities can be cited either one way or the other, but Dr. Huberman says quite frankly that those who have committed two or more murders are not likely to be cured; that those who have committed particularly bad crimes of violence are not likely, within the confines of the prison system, to be changed in fundamentals. If I may quote him, he says this:

> I consider totally inappropriate the government-sponsored alternative of giving murderers a "real" life sentence.

Then he says:

> Let us remember that so-called maximum security institutions are not "totally secure". We get almost daily reports of escapes of dangerous criminals.

And again:

> While psychiatry and psychology have discovered means to change certain human behaviour, no methods have been discovered so far to cure murderous tendencies, short of brain operations or drugs which would turn the individual into a "safe vegetable".
>
> This would seem more inhumane and degrading than death itself when administered under painless circumstances; as would seem to most of us spending our remaining total life in a penitentiary with its concomitant deprivation of friends, sex and a useful contribution to humanity.

I am even more worried about what happens in an institution when a number of long-term prisoners are incarcerated in it. It seems to me that they brutalize the whole institution itself. They brutalize other prisoners and enforce their own code of conduct upon the institution. They brutalize the guards. They brutalize the correction officers. They make the institution itself the kind of place which condemns not only the long-term prisoners who have nothing to lose but many other people who unfortunately are incarcerated in the same institution and suffer penalties that go above and beyond their ordinary prison sentences.

I should like to refer to another study I found interesting, as reported in the Ottawa Journal of March 11 of this year. Dr. Elliott Barker, developer of Ontario's treatment program for the criminally insane, and his associate, Dr. Henry Boyd, medical director of the centre, say they are opposed to capital punishment but that the death penalty is a lesser evil than mandatory sentences of up to 25 years, as proposed by the federal government. The report continues:

> Forcing killers to remain in the prison subculture with no hope of parole will doom chances for rehabilitation, the two psychiatrists said in an interview. Such a move will also introduce an element which threatens all work done to date in criminal rehabilitation.
>
> Under the present penal system, a killer sentenced to 15 years who is treated and found safe may be returned to society after five years.
>
> "But if he knows he's going to be in for 15 or 20 years you cannot treat him," Dr. Barker said.

For these two reasons, Mr. Speaker, because I think that majority opinion is so clear and so uncompromising on the subject, and also because I cannot accept the principle of mandatory, long-term sentences without hope of parole, I am compelled to vote against this bill.

I should like to make one other short observation. The method of execution by hanging is barbaric and should be replaced by something more humane. There are those who say that there are no humane ways of killing people, and perhaps this is true. But, again, public opinion seems to demand that hanging be replaced by something else, possibly the electric chair or the gas chamber. If this bill does fail to carry, I hope the government will immediately examine alternative means of carrying out capital punishment for a very small proportion of murderers, those responsible for perhaps 1 or 2 per cent of the murders currently committed in Canada.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, may I commence by saying that I find a lot of wisdom in the remarks of the speaker who preceded me, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis). Since the bill has not yet passed third reading, we do not know at this moment whether or not there will be abolition of the death penalty in Canada. Nevertheless, I think we have to conclude that hanging is not the right method of execution, if execution be the result of the vote in the House. I do not think it takes any wisdom at all to realize that if the people who collect dogs in our streets were to hang them in the dog pound, the SPCA would soon be after them. So, obviously, hanging is not the proper method to use. I am not a happy hanger, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, I think this issue can be examined from many different perspectives. We can examine statistics and various data, but I think it should be put on record in this debate that most of the data we are given are irrelevant. Such information it is meaningless in that it bears no relationship to this particular issue.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) brought forth a lot of statistical analyses dealing with capital punishment, but I would underscore the fact that such data are unimportant except if they can demonstrate valid correlation. When doing experiments or conducting research work, one soon comes to realize that data become meaningful only when the two given factors of comparison remain the same or one of them is controlled. If dependent or independent variables are controlled, you can get meaningful data. I think that the only meaningful data that are important are that the murder rate has doubled in the last decade and that there has been an increase in violent crime in this country. Those two facts are meaningful to me.

I think we must examine the way to handle this particular issue, Mr. Speaker. I take a view that is somewhat different from those I have heard speak on this subject previously. I believe that we live in the context of a cultural system in society. We do not find an individual cultural system defined in our law books, and often it is not very clearly defined at all. For example, in Egypt we know people stand much closer together when in social conversation than they do in North American countries. In Greece and Italy people practice a lot of touching, whereas we tend to be much more distant in our culture. Under our cultural system in North America we practice the concept of behaviour, punishment and reward. From its abolitionist position it appears that the government has looked at behaviour in society and said that it does not like what is happening, but it is focusing entirely upon the issue of capital punishment.

I, too, do not feel happy about people killing one another, Mr. Speaker. Whether the practices of the last 5,000 years have been right or wrong, I feel that society is focusing more on punishment and is not doing nearly enough to focus on the behaviour of human beings, both individually and collectively, in our society today. If we look at this bill and at the whole complex pattern of behaviour, reward and punishment, we will find that we can in fact begin to do some of those things within society's obligation to decrease the rate of crime.

● (1640)

Another point I should like to bring out is that many of the people who argue in favour of the abolitionist stand do so on the principle that there is a higher ethic in a society that takes this stand. I would challenge that idea. Where is the higher ethic if you legislate into law an abolitionist state at a time when the vast majority of people want to retain capital punishment? I suggest you achieve no higher ethic in this way. You achieve no higher ethic when you have people who wish to retain capital punishment and you legislate abolition because of some legal policy on capital punishment. This in no way increases the ethic in society.

The focus, then, of this whole question of capital punishment ought to be along these lines: if there is to be an abolitionist state, the government must earn the right to that state. It must consider the factors which affect the behaviour of human beings in order that we can decrease stresses in our society, and by decreasing those stresses, hopefully we can then decrease the amount of violent crime. We should follow the formula that a decrease in violent crime takes place as you increase the assurance of comfort for the people in society in order that they become more and more willing to adopt a position of abolition.

Just to list some of the approaches we could be taking, to focus not on the punishment end of the question but on the behavioural end, something ought to be done about violent shows on television, something ought to be done about violence in sports, and some action obviously needs to be taken in relation to our child abuse laws. We must focus more attention on proper nutrition in this country. We can demonstrate much more clearly than in respect of other data put forward that many violent crimes take place because of poor nutrition. Something has to be done to ensure that Canadians have a proper diet.

We must do something about the state of the economy. I will come back later to some data in that regard. This government can certainly take the blame for increased violent crime in this country as a result of the way it has messed up our economy. We can see a correlation between an increase in crime and a slump in the economy. We can also see a correlation between an increase in crime and lack of work—and the government's record in this regard is not very good. It can also be pointed out that there is an effect as a result of architectural design, the design of our cities and an increase in noise levels. These all have an effect on society and they all tend to lead to an increase in violent crime. We can talk about the policies of the government as they relate to drugs and alcohol, and the list goes on and on.

Children today, as they grow up in Canadian society, have in many ways been deprived of the notion of creative play. What happens in our society today is that every child is organized. He is not only organized but is organized to compete. In hockey, football and baseball games today we have all the children competing and trying to win, pitting one against the other and against the other kids who cannot play. We have lost the situation in which we have creative play. I simply suggest that is another factor that adds to the stress level, and the stress level is the background to many of the dangerous situations we have today.

Let us look at some of these factors as they relate to the suggestion that we pay more attention to behaviour than to the punishment factor. We have the researchers Braginsky and Braginsky who have pointed out as follows:

> Jobless men feel small, and talk the language of insignificance. Even if a new job patches up self-esteem, they still hurt from a gut-level cynicism about society.

The article goes on at quite some length and points out that those who are at the lower edge of the economic bracket, and those in a jobless state, suffer considerably more stress and also have a higher ratio of crime and violent crime. I simply point out that the record of our government has not been strong at all in terms of looking after the economy in order to provide meaningful employment for people. If this government took the view that it should focus more on the factors that affect behaviour, and paid less attention to other things, it would perhaps not have to focus so much attention on the question of the nature of punishment. We can review this whole situation again from the point of view of economic worry. Another article by Berkeley Rice points out:

> Not surprisingly, economic fear builds a boom in mental illness, alcoholism and suicide. The news is that government planners don't worry enough about the psychic and medical cost of recession.

In this regard we find that whenever we have economic slumps or a lack of meaningful employment, or when we have high rates of inflation, the government has to take a good portion of the blame for the increase in violence that coincidentally takes place in society. That, too, is one of the factors we ought to be looking at in terms of decreasing violent crime.

The position that we have a formula involving behaviour, reward and punishment with an increase in violent crime in society, and therefore that we should focus on the punishment situation, is a completely misunderstood concept. I would suggest, again, that any government which wants to be an abolitionist government must earn that right. Obviously, the cultural system we live in that places punishment itself in relation to the shaping of behaviour is lost on a public which will never accept that until the government has earned the right through creating a state of real peace and security in our Canadian society. Another article points out the following:

> When the University of Michigan's research center for group dynamics interviewed 2,000 men, they found that the traditional killers of the industrial revolution—long hours, heavy workloads, and pressing responsibilities—now produce less anxiety, stress, and physical illness than do seemingly easier work conditions.

What this really points out is simply that those who have boring jobs have a much higher rate or level of mental and physical stress. Let us look at some other aspects to which the government has failed to apply itself in terms of putting its focus on the entire area of behaviour, reward and punishment pattern as a total package rather than just focusing on the capital punishment question. Let us consider television and its effect on the over-all behaviour pattern of our children.

[Mr. Malone.]

It has long been recognized that this was a potential danger, and in recent years studies in this area have clearly indicated that violent television programs have in fact caused children to play in a more aggressive manner. The play patterns of children, in turn, effect both the skills and attitudes of the adult organism as it develops from childhood. The great French researcher, Piaget, notes that play helps the child to assimilate the world and shapes his concept of reality. In this way we find that a child's play pattern is developed and influenced by television, and as that child grows this becomes his perspective of reality and what the world in which he lives is like. Likewise, the French primatologist, Jean Claude Fady, has demonstrated the direct correlation between play and reasoned attitudes in serious behaviour. Again, Kathy Sylva and Paul Genova, at Harvard University, have very closely linked children's play patterns to the acquisition of skills and problem solving abilities. I simply put this forward because it has been clearly demonstrated that television plays a very important role in how children develop their subsequent attitudes toward adult society and life.

It is important to note here that when we are talking about violence in our society we are not simply talking about the question of whether we should have capital punishment. I suggest it may not make an iota of difference, whether or not we have capital punishment, to our rate of violence; but I believe it is important that this House should begin to recognize that if we are to have a parliamentary system that listens at all to its constituents, and if we are to recognize the mood of the nation as such and understand its demands, we must do certain things before we begin to talk about this being an abolitionist state.

● (1650)

To those who take the position that they can act irrespective of the views of their constituents, I simply ask: What are constituents for, if they are not to be listened to? In spite of the fact that we have the understanding and ability to provide the stimuli that would enhance a generation of free and creative children, we are content to marinate their young minds in a never-ending sea of violence. That violence, in turn, stimulates play patterns that are aggressive. How can we help but have a violent society when many of our building blocks are cemented together with a violent language and a violent art? I suggest it is the character of North America that we have a violent background to our cultural structure. In Psychology Today for April, 1976, in an article entitled "The Scarey World of TV's Heavy Viewer", researchers Gerbner and Gross made the following statement:

> We have found that people who watch a lot of TV see the real world as more dangerous and frightening than those who watch very little. Heavy viewers are less trustful of their fellow citizens and more fearful of the real world.

I think that bears some review in respect of what is happening in society today. Again, in another research article they say they have demonstrated that the heavy viewing of television does influence the viewer's perception of the world and the common distortions of television become perceived as reality by the viewer. It has been noted by researchers that those who are heavy viewers of TV have a corresponding false conception about the role of women, the ratio of professionals to labour, and threat versus safety in society. When we consider that 250,000 adult people have written to Marcus Welby for medical advice, surely we must ponder on the degree that television distorts reality for our children and young people who watch television programming. Because I think this is a very important piece of data to share with members of this House, perhaps I might quote the following:

> More than half of all characters on prime time TV are involved in some violence, about one-tenth in killing. To control this mayhem, the forces of law and order dominate prime time. Among those TV males with identifiable occupations, about 20 per cent are engaged in law enforcement. In the real world, the proportion runs less than one per cent. Heavy viewers of television were 18 per cent more likely than light viewers to overestimate the number of males employed in law enforcement, regardless of age, sex, education or reading habits.

Mr. Speaker, I would submit that if in prime time viewing one half of all the characters are involved in some form of violence, surely the government does not have the right or privilege at this time to be talking about reward or punishment relating to violence in our society but, rather, should be doing something about the very factors which shape the behaviour of human beings whether they be nutrition, the state of the economy or child abuse. In other words, the government should be dealing with television in some meaningful way and should be dealing with the question of housing and architecture, because all aspects of these things show that in those areas where they are poorly planned and organized or structured, the stress levels on humans increases. It is not without surprise that we learn that the murder rate in apartments is far higher than it is in individual dwelling homes.

When we begin to study something about the effect or crowding and what this does to stresses in people, we begin to recognize that all we have to do with rats is to put too many in a cage and they begin to take on violent reactions one to another. They will even go to the extreme of eating one another, which is not normal behaviour for a Norwegian rat or a white rat. Yet when there is overcrowding this happens. That certainly must be part of the perspective of why we have per 100,000 people such an increase in the violent crime rate as we go from the small rural communities to the larger cities in this country.

So I would say that on the whole question of whether or not we should have an abolitionist state, my position simply is that this is a condition that the government must earn. It is a position one earns by not focusing first on the question of what punishment. We have derived a society from 5,000 years or more which believes that punishment and behaviour are factors related together in a cultural context. Without the government first having done those things that give a sense of true peace and security—not just the words in Bill C-83 or in Bill C-84, but an earned sense of peace and security to the populace of this nation then it has no business forcing a new moral structure on Canadians.

To continue with some of the comments on violence in television, I would point out that violence on television leads viewers to perceive the real world as more dangerous than it really is. That, in turn, has shifted the thinking of children into the belief that as they gear up for adult life, they must in fact be prepared for violence. It is also a cultural orientation, largely because of television, that in our society it is manly to be violent; that one of the characteristics in respect of a boy proving manhood is that he be able to react and respond in an aggressive and physical manner.

The heavy viewers were 30 per cent more likely than light viewers to pick such fearful estimates as it is 50 or 100 times more likely that there would be threat of death to them than there was for those who were lighter viewers of television. I think that points out some pretty interesting data from some studies, which should give us some perspective concerning whether or not the government has earned the right to bring in capital punishment or an abolitionist state at this time.

I intend to vote against Bill C-84 because I think it is a case of ordering priorities. It is not a case of whether or not one should be an abolitionist. It is a case that the whole nation, if that is the right position, will come to that conclusion when the people have felt there is a real and true sense of peace and security in this society. The nation will come to that view when we do those 50 to 100 things governments at all levels ought to be doing which make for a more peaceful and contented society.

Mr. Speaker, I have further comments I would like to make in this discussion. However, I note that it is five o'clock. Perhaps we are at a good breaking point when I might call it five o'clock, and I will resume at 8 p.m.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Transport—Date of report of task force review of search and rescue operations; the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—External Affairs—Possibility ratification of non-proliferation treaty being requirement prior to sale of nuclear reactors.

It being five o'clock, pursuant to order made on Friday, February 27, 1976, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Shall motion No. 2, in the name of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) stand?

An hon. Member: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Stand at the request of the government. Notice of motion No. 15, in the name of the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan); shall the motion stand?

An hon. Member: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Stand at the request of the government.

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I believe there is agreement, through the usual channels, that today we will deal with motion No. 13.

Mr. Paproski: That is agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Herbert: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The item just referred to by the parliamentary secretary is the twelfth item on the order paper. I note that the eleven preceding items have been allowed to stand at the request of the government. I note, also, that there is a total of 63 items under private members' notices of motions that have been placed on the order paper since the start of this session.

● (1700)

Of the 11 items that have been allowed to stand, four date back to the start of this session on October 10, 1974, and another five are also dated 1974. The other two are dated January, 1975. As a result of some efforts I made earlier in this session to get some order into this chaos of private member's hour, we were supposed to receive notice of business that was coming before us. Now this reaches us about the middle of the week, on Wednesday or Thursday, by which time we have had two private members' hours.

In order for us to have any idea of what business is going on, I think we should revert to the original procedure when an improper argument, or no argument, is presented as to why an item should be left on the order paper. I can understand it under certain circumstances such as the absence or the illness of an hon. member, or other good reasons. But when items remain on the order paper, as they have, for almost two years, I suggest there is something wrong with our procedures. Could we not have some assurance that the government will explain to us why it is willing to pass over business in this fashion?

While I am on my feet, may I say that I intend to rise tomorrow on the matter of public bills, because so many public bills have been passed over, including three bills of mine, and nobody took the trouble to call me.

Mr. Paproski: Shame on you guys.

Mr. Herbert: Obviously, the procedure is not working satisfactorily and I think there should be an explanation from the government as to why we are following the order in this fashion, so that we can have some idea of what we are doing here during private members' hour.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to delay proceedings on this order of business that has been agreed upon. I should like to indicate to the hon. member that if he has complaints about the way that these matters are being dealt with, I wish he would advise me prior to making his comments.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

The procedures are dealt with in the usual way. The notices are dealt with in the ordinary sequence. We accommodate as many private members as we possibly can. As the hon. member has pointed out, evidently there are members who cannot be here when a matter is to be disposed of, and therefore the item is stood with the consent of all parties, so that not only hon. members but the departments are made aware of the matters that will be debated.

This is the first complaint I have had relating to any of the matters that have been disposed of during private members' business. I should like to point out to the hon. member that we are now operating under a special House order which permitted the reinstatement of an item in private members' hour, nowithstanding the fact that under the rules the item would have expired as a result of the length of this particular session. At that time there had been no complaints relating to the way in which we were disposing of these items. Neither have I received complaints from hon. members opposite. As was indicated to me by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), that is one of the more efficient procedures that we have at present.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Who is he?

Mr. Blais: I have listened to the hon. gentleman. I was not aware that he had been bypassed on any of the matters that he wanted to have debated in the House. If he has a matter that precedes any of the items that have been debated, and he has not been consulted, then surely there is something wrong and I undertake to look into it very seriously. However, I wish to point out to him that we are all private members attempting to dispose of as much business as we possibly can, and we hope we are dealing with these matters with complete fairness.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I point out, Mr. Speaker—whatever validity the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) may have with respect to his position—that a week ago today this very item was called. It was then 5.30 p.m.—we had taken some time to vote on an aspect of a certain iniquitous matter—and the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) requested that the matter be stood over until the next time and that it retain its position. There could be a nice legal argument as to what position was to be retained, but it was certainly understood that the next time there was private members' hour this motion would have priority and would be called. As I say, the hon. member has an argument with respect to the general matter of private members' business, but it seems to me that today is a special case.

It is not often that I answer for the government and appear to be an advocate for the hon. member for Yukon, but I think we should proceed as indicated.

Mr. Nielsen: Certainly, what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has just said can be found on page 13087 of Hansard, which is tantamount to a House order that we would be on this subject today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I should like to point out to the hon. member that I will take his point of order under advisement. I should also like to point out that on May 3, as recorded at page 13087 of Hansard, the following exchange took place:

MR. SPEAKER: The immediate difficulty with that is that tomorrow is an opposition day. I take it the intention is that it be on the next appointed day.

The House has heard the terms suggested by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). Is it agreed that motion which would ordinarily be called at this time will be put over and will retain its priority until the next appointed private members' hour, and in the interim the Chair will prepare whatever ruling was anticipated. Is that agreed?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

MR. SPEAKER: It is so ordered.

Mr. Herbert: I can only assume that I did not properly convey my feelings in this matter. I am not objecting to the business being called before the House today. I am objecting to the fact that 11 items of business, nine of which date back to 1974, and two to January, 1975, are allowed to remain on the order paper. I am not objecting to today's business.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that I do not believe the government should have the right to dictate what takes place in private members' hours. That is the right of the private member. If private members choose not to have their business come forward, that is their right. I do not believe the government should impose on the House of Commons what is to be taken up in private members' hours, as has been suggested by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert).

* * *

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR APPLICATION OF CONSTITUTIONAL PRINCIPLES TO TERRITORIES

The House resumed, from Monday, May 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Nielsen:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should immediately introduce legislation to implement the resolutions of the Yukon Territorial Council and the Northwest Territorial Council requesting that the government apply those principles of constitutional and democratic development that will establish a fully representative and responsible system of government to the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories respectively.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. When notice of motion No. 13 was being considered last February 3, 1975, the Chair expressed reservations about the procedural acceptability of a proposed amendment by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) which reads as follows:

That the subject matter of motion No. 13 be referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development for further study and that the committee be authorized to travel to the Yukon and Northwest Territories to hear witnesses.

Hon. members will recall that at that time the Chair took this proposed amendment under advisement. The Chair would like to point out to hon. members the provisions of the Standing Order 46 which are as follows:

When a question is under debate, no motion is received unless to amend it; to postpone it to a day certain; for the previous question; for reading the orders of the day; for proceeding to another order; to adjourn the debate; to continue or extend a sitting of the House, or for the adjournment of the House.

In my opinion, the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie does not seek to achieve any of those objectives. It raises a new question not contemplated in the notice of motion of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and it seeks to increase the powers of a committee beyond those set forth in Standing Order 65(8) by allowing the committee to travel. It must be stressed that when a committee wishes its powers to be increased, it must seek that authority from the House itself through a report which requires notice of 48 hours. The same rule also applies to members of the House. In short, the hon. member is raising by way of an amendment a substantive motion which requires a different notice.

I should also like to draw the attention of the House to citation 203(5) in Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, which reads:

An amendment was ruled out because it raised a new question which could only be considered on a distinct motion after notice.

● (1710)

For these reasons, I regret that I cannot accept the amendment and therefore cannot put it before the House. The hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. If the hon. member speaks now, I should point out to hon. members that he will close the debate.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Who will close the debate?

Mr. Nielsen: The last time this matter was debated—

[Translation]

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, you have said that if the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) took the floor, he would close the debate on this motion. Are we debating today a new motion or is it the debate of February 3, 1975 that is resumed?

An hon. Member: Yes, we are going on.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is my understanding that we are resuming debate on motion No. 13.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on the same point of order. It was my error that I was not listening to your comments at the time. Was there some indication that the hon. member had already begun, or had made initial remarks on this motion?

Mr. Nielsen: It is in Hansard for February 3, 1975.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Yukon moved the motion. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mrs. Campagnolo) had the floor on February 3.

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I must admit that this is a rather long speech because it appears to have gone on for a year and a half. However, I appreciate very much your recognizing me today so that we can once again discuss the matter of the Yukon provincial status.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I do not know where this hour has gone. So far there have been fifteen minutes spent on points of order raised by hon. members opposite. I am sure hon. members would like to see the motion disposed of. From the debate of February 3, 1975, I was under the impression—and far be it from me at any time to want to curtail the hon. lady—that she had concluded. She did not call it six o'clock on that day, and I suggest that if someone other than myself is to be recognized—and I thought I had been recognized—the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) feels pretty strongly about speaking and wants to speak. However, I really think the hon. lady had perhaps exhausted and completed her remarks last year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is my understanding that the parliamentary secretary has three minutes left in her speech.

Mrs. Campagnolo: I greatly appreciate the fact that the Chair has allowed me my three minutes after a delay of a year and a half, so I will be quite happy to compose myself for a three-minute speech on the matter of provincial status as proposed by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). In view of the fact that such a great deal of water has gone under the bridge since our previous discussion, I think at this time it might be fair to reiterate the motion itself. The motion reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should immediately introduce legislation to implement the resolutions of the Yukon Territorial Council and the Northwest Territorial Council requesting that the government apply those principles of constitutional and democratic development that will establish a fully representative and responsible system of government to the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories respectively.

As a matter of fact, in the intervening time we have found that indeed there has been progress made in the two territories of Canada. We have indeed seen changes in the administration which indicate that the Yukon and the Northwest Territories are progressing down the road to self-realization at a rather rapid rate.

Mr. Nielsen: Down the tube.

Mrs. Campagnolo: I did not hear the hon. member. In any event, I should like to bring to the attention of my hon. colleagues the fact that Bill C-51, the Northwest Territories Representation Act, was enacted by parliament on March 13, 1975, to be precise. This bill amended the British North America Act and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act to provide a second seat in the House of Commons for the Northwest Territories. This is another indication of the progress which has been made in the recognition of the two northern territories. It also provided for the establishment of a boundaries commission, as is the case in the provinces, to hold hearings and to make representations with regard to the division of the two territories into constituencies.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

I am sure I do not need to list the reasons for the second seat, as the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) on several occasions in the past pointed out the difficulties of his mandate due mainly to considerations such as the size of his constituency and the important cultural, economic and geographical differences between the western and eastern areas, not to mention the communication and transportation problems involved in the extremely large expanses of the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

I am sure the last thing this government would want to be accused of would be to have gambled on the future of the Territories and to have undermined their promising potential by having proceeded too fast in pushing them forward to a new status.

Mr. Nielsen: Try us.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the time.

[Translation]

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take this opportunity to resume debate on the motion put forward by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). Even though over one year have elapsed since the House dealt with this matter for the last time, the hon. member does not seem to know precisely what has been done regarding the resolutions referred to in the motion. This situation is perhaps explained in part by the fact that he cannot precisely mention those resolutions.

When the motion was put forward for the last time in the House in February 1975, the hon. member referred to motion No. 1 of the Yukon territorial council, dated January 23, 1968—as recorded on page 2851 of Hansard of February 3, 1975. However, he did not refer to other resolutions.

I dare say he might have been thinking of motion No. 40, adopted by the Yukon council in April 1966. Now, the motion of 1968 is almost indentical to motion No. 40; or perhaps was he thinking of motion No. 28, agreed to by the Yukon territorial council on March 30, 1972?

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Take either one.

Mr. Cyr: Or perhaps he was thinking of two motions that the Yukon council passed on March 27, 1974, regarding Bill C-9? We do not know precisely to what resolutions of the Northwest territorial council the motion is referring to. And now, he has just told us to take either one. It could be the one that was passed on March 28, 1974, after the council had examined the provisions of Bill C-9 to amend the Northwest Territories Act.

● (1720)

Mr. Speaker, I dealt with this aspect of the motion because I think it is important, in view of the time that has elapsed since Motion No. 13 was officially introducted the last time, that is a year ago, it is important to know, as much as possible, to which resolutions the hon. member of the opposition was thinking when he presented his motion in October 1974, with a view to examining it and give it all due attention. After my remarks, doubtless my colleague for Yukon could advise the House in this regard so that, I am quite confident we will, we can better understand the scope and effects of the proposal and, therefore, have a clearer idea of what its results will be.

May I be allowed to review the resolutions I defined, in the light of the national objective of the government for the north, and the legislation passed by Parliament and put into force by the government, in order to take stock of the progress accomplished in terms of the objectives of the proposal.

Hon. members will certainly recall that a former Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) who is now President of the Treasury Board had defined the government's national objectives for the north, the priorities for northern development and a plan of action for the 70's when he appeared before the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development on March 28, 1972. The minister said this, which I quote:

> The statement is not a detailed blueprint for the future, nor an attempt to cover all areas of northern policy. It is in no sense a White Paper, a "grand design" or a rigid 10-year plan. It is not an announcement of brand new policy in the North. It has been anticipated in ministerial statements on numerous occasions, in speeches in the North and at many conferences—wherever northern policy was being discussed. It is a consolidation and an explication of recent policy decisions and orientations. It is a comprehensive and coherent presentation of what the government seeks to achieve in the Northern Territories, showing how the government intends to deal with opportunities and problems arising there.
>
> The statement presents a flexible framework of policy guidance for government plans and operations in the north—those of federal departments and agencies and both territorial governments. For the first time, the Canadian people can see clearly the nature of the government's approach to northern development and the future direction of Canada's policy in the north.

With its approach based on evolution the government indeed answered the main part of the territorial councils' resolutions to the largest extent possible. During recent years, significant changes took place in both territories. The increasing rate of oil and gas operations and the growing awareness of the natives who became interested in the role they may play in northern development, partly contributed to emphasize the value of the north. To this are added the factors related to geographical situation, population, basis of taxation, economic growth and experience in managing the territories, which all relate to the realization of the objectives of political and constitutional autonomy. The Yukon and the Northwest Territories stretch over wide expanses but harbour relatively few people.

Thus, the Yukon covers 207,076 square miles and has a population of about 20,000; the Northwest Territories cover 1,304,903 square miles and have a population of about 38,000.

Fiscal revenue is low compared with general territory expenditures and, until now, the total economic growth has been limited. For instance, Mr. Speaker, I note that in 1975-76, the fiscal revenue of the Yukon, including revenue from all sources and an income tax replacement subsidy, totalled 64.8 per cent of the global territory expenditures. In the Northwest Territories, where fiscal revenue is low compared with general expenditures, the corresponding figure was 33.5 per cent. The federal government must cover the rest of these expenditures. Following a resolution passed March 17, 1976 by the Yukon Council in favor of a territorial income tax, negotiations on the subject are going on between federal and territorial officials. All this emphasizes the need to act cautiously in granting political and constitutional autonomy to both territories.

However, Mr. Speaker, enormous progress has been accomplished these last few years. All the members of both territorial councils are elected by general elections. This has been the situation in the Yukon since 1908, Mr. Speaker, and in the Northwest Territories, since Bill C-8 was passed in 1974. The provisions of this bill has granted the wishes of the Yukon Council to increase to eleven the number of its members—the proposed increase was from seven to twelve—and gave the councils the right to set the number of their members in the future. An executive committee responsible for advising commissioners in their duties has been established in both territories. These committees include members of both councils, appointed and recalled by commissioners on the recommendations of the councils.

The Yukon Executive Committee was formed in 1970 while that of the Northwest Territories was formed only in 1975. I also note that both territorial councils have been authorized to set themselves the amount of their indemnities and allowances under certain amendments brought in in 1970 by the Act to amend the Yukon Act and the Northwest Territories Act.

Mr. Speaker, under motions No. 40, 1966, No. 1, 1968 and No. 28, 1972, the Yukon asked the minister then responsible for the administration of the Yukon to increase the membership of the Council, to appoint an executive committee, to put under members of the council the administration of territorial departments, to delegate to the council jurisdiction which would allow it to establish its own indemnities and allowances, to increase to 12 the membership of the council and to assign a third member to the executive committee. These changes have been achieved within the government policy which is intended to promote the constitutional and political development of the Yukon, which I mentioned earlier.

I said also that the Yukon has been electing a council for a number of years already. Progress towards a responsible government began in 1970. The expansion of the council and the appointment of a third member to the executive committee will contribute, I am sure, to the achievement of a responsible government.

But any higher objective at this point would extrapolate on the facts in respect of the territory's financial and population situation. Fully responsible government is to all practical purpose tantamount to government of a territory with provincial status. Such government would no doubt involve resource administration, which would of necessity add to the financial burden. I have serious doubts, as certainly does the hon. member opposite, whether the Canadian government can now grant fully responsible government while retaining responsibility for Yukon's viability.

The cabinet would act in an irresponsible way if they took such a position. It is the hope of the government, and hopefully that of the Yukon people, that when territory administration becomes fully responsible, it will be self-sufficient and will not have to constantly come to Ottawa to beg for funds.

As for the Northwest Territories' Council it gave its support to Bill C-9 in the resolution already referred to. The people in that area also look forward to the day when their administration can move up to political and constitutional self-government. But I think it is desirable to give them some time to adapt to the changes involved. I realize my hon. friend from Yukon wishes this to be accomplished during his term in Parliament. He hopes to become the first premier of the province of Yukon, but I do not believe this can be done now. The government should be in a position to closely monitor developments to ensure timely changes. The ministers will above all wish to take into account the political situation in the territories when following the practice of naming councillors to the executive committee.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, the government has demonstrated its willingness to prepare the emergence to full government responsibility by both territorial administrations. I feel, as stated in the national purposes for the Canadian north, that the transition must be made in accordance with the wishes and aspirations of the inhabitants of the north. Considering the increased participation of northern natives in territorial affairs and their representations to the government, it can be concluded that those wishes and aspirations are changing. Time is necessary to consider their meaning.

Mr. Speaker, even if I somewhat took the member for Yukon to task this afternoon, I must thank him for providing to the House the opportunity of considering northern development, an issue increasingly affecting almost every Canadian. I told him that if he intends to set up his own political party in the new province of Yukon, he could suggest as Lieutenant Governor a native of the Territories.

● (1730)

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question? I know that some of the hon. member's ancestors went to the Yukon during the days of the gold rush. Does he not think that by what he is saying he is causing them to turn over in their graves?

Mr. Cyr: Yes, and they also married Indians.

[Translation]

Today we saw and examined the progress made in this area in recent years, and we are now aware of the need to bring in other changes. I think those changes are only a matter of time. I am also convinced that the government will bring them about just as effectively as those that have already been made.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding I would be remiss if I did not point out that when I was chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development we had the opportunity to visit the Yukon on a number of occasions, and even the Northwest Territories, and I must say that we received a warm welcome.

I also think that my colleague for Yukon will remember that the new leader of his party, the hon. member of Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), when we went to Inuvik, Tuktoyaktuk and Yellowknife in August 1968, was at that time on his honeymoon trip with us.

And that was in 1968. I think it is worth recalling that trip we made with the hon. member for Rocky Mountain in the north on that occasion because he was interested in those two territories. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I think that concludes my remarks on motion No. 13 now before us.

[English]

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have this opportunity to say a few words in this debate on the motion put forward by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I will read the motion so that it will form part of the speech I will send to my constituents in order that they will know what remarks I have made in this House. The motion reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should immediately introduce legislation to implement the resolutions of the Yukon Territorial Council and the Northwest Territorial Council requesting that the government apply those principles of constitutional and democratic development that will establish a fully representative and responsible system of government to the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories respectively.

This is a very important motion and I am happy to see it debated here. It is time that something was done to change the situation in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. We have a colonial situation. Although we have fully elected bodies, they can be overruled by an appointed civil servant. That is an intolerable situation in this day and age.

I believe, as I am sure many other northerners believe, that we can capably look after our own affairs in both territories. Many people doubt whether we can pay our own way. If we are not doing so now, we certainly could with the utilization of the natural resources in that part of the country.

We are only asking for a democratic right that most Canadians now enjoy. What kind of government would be most suitable is a point that could be debated. Certainly it should be one that is fully responsible, with full taxation powers and so on. The argument about there not being a big enough population does not hold water.

I remind the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) of a certain visit to the north. I was happy to hear him refer to a visit to the Yukon and Northwest Territories. I remind him of what took place at Whitehorse in the Yukon on December 12, 1972. At that time the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development was travelling in the north. The hon. member will recall a motion passed by that committee, which was chaired by the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan). I am sure the hon. member for Gaspé voted in favour of that resolution calling for full responsible government for the Yukon. The hon. member now seems to speak completely against what he voted for in the Yukon. He said one thing when he was in the north, and now says something else when he is here.

Mr. Paproski: He speaks with forked tongue.

Mr. Firth: We are only asking for a democratic right that most Canadians enjoy. I say that we can pay our own way, considering what we have in the Northwest Territories. I will only give a partial list. There are two gold mines operating in the city of Yellowknife, and a lead-zinc mine operating at Pine Point. We have the tungsten mines near the Yukon-Northwest Territories border. We have Imperial Oil, which has been operating for many years at Norman Wells. We have gas being syphoned out of the ground at Pointed Mountain. We have other mines near the Great Bear Lake area. We have all kind of natural resources, renewable and non-renewable. We have the fishing and fur industries. Our people pay income tax; some pay business taxes. I am quite convinced that we are capable of paying our own way.

● (1740)

I do not think one can put a price tag on democracy and say that you can have democracy only if you have the cash with which to pay for it. I think democracy is a basic human right which most Canadians enjoy. I do not see why we should tolerate the continuance of a colonial-type government in the north. After all, the north is one of the most important parts of Canada. In future many important decisions will need to be made about the north, decisions about which northern peoples should have the most to say.

I do not say we should instal in the north a carbon copy of any provincial government. That point was raised earlier and ought to be debated further. The question ought to be considered in northern terms and decided by northern people, whose wishes ought to be respected.

I will not take any more of the time of the House. This is an important motion and I do not wish to talk it out. I suggest that we put the motion to a vote. I conclude my remarks in the hope that this extremely important motion will be put to a vote now.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I am happy for this opportunity to rise and talk on the motion presently before the House. Indeed it is my view that the motion, first introduced in 1974 by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), presents a special interest since it deals with a question debated at length both in the north and in this House over a number of years.

While reading over the debates of February 3, 1975, when the hon. gentleman introduced this motion requesting the application of principles of constitutional and democratic government in the two territories, I noted that the hon. member referred to some discussions which had previously taken place during the deliberations of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development which on that occasion took place in Whitehorse. In particular the hon. member for Yukon quoted the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier). I raise this point as it concerns what the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) said a few moments ago.

As I said, the hon. member for Yukon quoted the words of the hon. member for Sherbrooke, who had expressed sympathy for northern residents' aspirations. The hon. member went on to remind the House that a standing committee motion calling for territorial government reform and the introduction of appropriate amendments to the Yukon Act had been adopted unanimously.

Mr. Nielsen: By the committee.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I see no contradiction in what the hon. member for Yukon says. He tried to present a certain matter as constituting a difference of opinion between members of the Liberal caucus and the government.

In my opinion the hon. member's motion calls on the federal government to commit itself to a policy which is already being implemented, and which began to be implemented some years ago.

Mr. Nielsen: Rubbish!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): In my view the fact that the standing committe motion was adopted unanimously confirms that the present government's policy has received the agreement of all parties. However, although we may all agree on the principle of constitutional development for the two territories, we may differ on the methods of arriving at the same objective.

While the hon. member for Yukon is in a hurry and appears, at least in theory, to be favouring a rather "go-go" approach leading to a sudden change, not to say a break in the continuity of the evolutionary approach, the present government has opted for a more progressive approach which will permit it to avoid the drawbacks inevitably linked to rapid change. I shall have the opportunity to develop this point later, if time permits.

For the time being I wish to concentrate on the achievements of the government in recent years regarding the constitutional development of territorial government. I said a few moments ago that the government adopted a progressive approach. Because of that the government has been accused of being colonial and paternalistic, for example, by various theorists who dream about great principles but forget about the practical aspects, the vital needs of the population concerned. We must not forget these. On the other hand it is false to say that the progressive approach we have taken has been the equivalent of maintaining the status quo. To suggest that the situation has not changed extensively in the last ten years is unfair.

I remind my colleagues in this House that only ten years ago there was no territorial government of the Northwest Territories as we know it today.

Mr. Firth: There is still no adequate government.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): At that time the Commissioner was operating from Ottawa, with the assistance of a handful of civil servants. Only in 1967 was he transferred to Yellowknife, when the government acted on the recommendation of the Carrothers Commission which, by the way, saw most of its recommendations put into practice by 1970.

Mr. Nielsen: Who wrote that?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The hon. member asks who wrote this. I wrote it since the hon. member spoke. It is easy to follow the hon. member, because he tends to repeat the same thing. At the same time, it is only fair to put the facts straight, to let people know what the government has done and what it intends to do, instead of trying to make some drastic change which would not be to the advantage of the people the hon. member represents.

Since 1967 a number of important changes have been made to the two territorial acts. I will now provide, as a reminder for the benefit of my colleagues, a brief description of what those amendments did to further the constitutional evolution of the two territories.

In June, 1970, amendments to the Yukon Act and Northwest Territories Act were passed by parliament which were in keeping with the recommendations of the Advisory Commission on the Development of Government in the Northwest Territories—the Carrothers Commission—and were designed to increase the local responsibility of the territorial governments and the councils, and to further the federal government's policy of constitutional development in the north.

Speaking on second reading of Bill C-212, an act to amend the Yukon Act, the Northwest Territories Act and the Territorial Lands Act, on May 13, 1970, the previous minister of Indian affairs and northern development, now President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), described the purpose of the bill in the following way:

> ... it is aimed at promoting the constitutional development of both territories, in the sense that it will enable their residents to assume more responsibility in the day-to-day administration of their respective governments.

Essentially, because the amendments to both acts were passed, the life of each territorial council was increased from three to four years from the date of the return of the writs for a general election, subject to dissolution by the governor in council at an earlier date in consultation with the respective councils; the commissioners in council were authorized to prescribe the qualifications of persons who may vote or be elected in territorial council elections; the commissioners in council were empowered to legislate on matters concerning the administration of justice in the two territories; the requirements for the commissioners to seek the approval of the governor in council to lend or invest money from the territorial consolidated revenue fund were removed; the period of disallowance of territorial ordinances was reduced from two years to one year; and the commissioners in council were empowered to set the indemnities and allowances of the members of the two councils and the members of council committees.

● (1750)

Additional amendments to the Northwest Territories Act altered the size of the council from 12 to 14 members by increasing the elected membership from seven to ten and reducing the appointed councillors by one, from five to four. There was also a provision authorizing the commissioner in council to further reduce the number of appointed councillors, subject to the approval of the governor in council.

In the same speech on May 13, 1970, the minister further announced a major step to be taken in the constitutional development of the Yukon Territory, although it did not appear in the bill: the establishment of an executive committee. In June, 1970, he instructed Commissioner Smith to establish an executive committee comprising the commissioner, his two assistant commissioners, and two members of the council nominated by the council. The details were discussed by the council at a special session held in June and July. During debate the concept of the executive committee was endorsed by councillors who recognized its significance as an important step towards the development of an executive along provincial lines.

In 1972 the minister confirmed the government's policy when he announced before the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development that the federal government had adopted seven major objectives for northern Canada. One of those national objectives is "to further the evolution of government in the northern Territories". Although those objectives were stated in general terms, they were "comprehensive in scope and closely related to Canada's national goals and interests," to use the minister's words. Then one year later, in March 1973, the minister again addressed the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development and reported that:

> Political development in the Northwest Territories has been one of our greatest concerns since the Carrothers Commission report in 1966 and, as I mentioned in my statement to this committee on March 28, 1972, one of our national objectives in northern development over the next ten years is to "further the evolution of government in both northern Territories". Of course, in this area much has already been achieved, both Territorial Councils are very aggressive in carrying out their responsibilities. Most of the provincial-type government services, with the exception of resource development, are now under the control of the Territorial governments and as in the past, my estimates provide for increased financial assistance to both the Yukon and Northwest Territories Governments.

Mr. Speaker, in light of what I have said before, and with all due respect to my colleague, the hon. member for the Yukon, I do not think the population of the northern territories has been considered as a second-class population, nor can I share the view that the population of the two territories has had to suffer in the past by reason of the so-called colonial status of the Territories. I would think that the hard times and the difficulties of life in the north are the result of climatic, geographic, economic and social circumstances rather than the political or constitutional arrangements. As a matter of fact, I would submit that the presence of the federal government has been a benefit rather than a handicap to the northern population. And although the government is working toward a situation of greater autonomy for the two territorial governments, it would be foolish to think that this can happen in one day. The present government's policy has been to try to balance the two notions of prudence and change; the outcome of this balance is called progressive evolution.

It is with this requirement in mind, Mr. Speaker, that in 1974 the minister introduced Bill C-9, a bill to amend the Yukon and the Northwest Territories Acts. The bill was enacted by parliament in April of the same year. I will deal first with the changes that affected the Yukon Act.

The size of the fully-elected council was increased from seven to 12. This measure was designed to reflect the increased population of the Yukon, its geographical diversity, and to allow for the formation of parties in the council. This change was given effect at the Yukon territorial general election on November 18, 1974, when Yukon voters elected a new council of 12 members to serve for the next four years.

Bill C-9 also provided for the council to increase or decrease its size in line with future changes in the Yukon's population. This will provide more flexibility especially in view of the significant population fluctuations which may occur as a result of changes in the largely resource based territorial economy. However, the number of members cannot be fewer than 12 nor greater than 200.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Yes.

Mr. Nielsen: My question is more in the nature of clarification. I do not think the hon. member would want that last statement to stand. He was not on the committee, but there was a discussion between the minister, the representatives of the Yukon council, and myself during the committee proceedings on that bill, at which time an undertaking by myself and the elected representatives of the council was given the minister that the size of the council would not be increased beyond 12 until after the 1978 election. That is where we stand on the fixed undertaking, that the size of the council will not be altered. That has a bearing on the aspect of the bill to which the hon. member refers.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I do not know whether the hon. member for Yukon heard me properly, Mr. Speaker. He can read what I said in Hansard, or I can repeat it. I said that Bill C-9 also provided for the council to increase or decrease its size in line with future changes in the Yukon's population. This will provide more flexibility, especially in view of the significant population fluctuations which may occur as a result of changes in the largely resource based territorial economy. However, the number of members cannot be fewer than 12 nor greater than 20. That is what I said about Bill C-9 a moment ago.

Mr. Nielsen: But my only point is that we are frozen until 1978 by our own undertaking.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Will the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) accept a question?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): No, Mr. Speaker, I would rather finish what I want to say.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for St. Boniface has the floor.

Mr. Nielsen: Let's take the vote, Joe.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I should like to conclude by saying—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m. later this day.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURES RESPECTING PUNISHMENT FOR MURDER AND OTHER SERIOUS OFFENCES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand that Bill C-84, to amend the Criminal Code in relation to the punishment for murder and other serious offences, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock when I was part way through my speech on Bill C-84 I had been talking about the essential cultural formula that exists in all societies where we in essence have sets of established behaviour that are either rewarded or punished. We have to view the whole concept of behaviour, reward, and punishment as a package, and in fact it is folly to think we can focus on any one aspect of this formula and create a situation in which we have a society that is well behaved or one within which we would have what you could call established societal norms.

Perhaps it is in order again to point out one of the questions which ought to have been considered prior to the discussion of Bill C-84, and that is the method of execution, should the bill happen to fail. This makes a tremendous impact on the views of many people. I think there is no doubt about it, after all the historical references that led to the very concept of execution, the practice of hanging was developed in a period of time when the sole intent of the practice was to be punitive and torturous. Its purpose originally was not simply to execute a person, taking him out of society for some ill-founded behaviour, but in fact to make him suffer as painful a death as possible. Prior to adopting the practice of execution by hanging it was the practice to draw and quarter, to burn at the stake, or to do whatever else might be deemed to effect a very miserable death.

In view of the perspective as to how society should view the practice of capital punishment in more modern times, we need to consider not only whether we do or do not retain the practice, but also what method of execution there will be if capital punishment is retained.

I did mention before, and I want to put it on the record at this time, that the statistical data in respect of this question are, by and large, irrelevant. I say that because there has not yet been established in this House an empirical relationship, in the cause and effect sense, which correlates capital punishment to an improved cultural system of human behaviour.

We are talking then about shaping and changing behaviour, which in fact what must happen. We are considering what we must do in respect of the influences and stimuli that shape and mould the behaviour of human beings. To take this position one necessarily has to believe there are only three factors that influence human beings' behaviour; one of these has to be generic heritage, another has to be the state of health at the present time, and the third has to be the sociological and physiological environment in which human beings live. It is in that latter area that we can point to the fact that governments at all levels have been terribly negligent. I have quoted my sources in that regard.

I suggest the government has not attempted at all to create the kind of environment which removes psychological stresses that have become so apparent in what is considered to be a modern, advanced technology, but a society which in many ways has cast human beings into an environment far foreign to their original heritage. I think it is because of this that we have to begin focusing our attention on reshaping the environment, and perhaps I should list these ways once again. We have to do something very significant about violence on television. These days about 50 per cent of prime time viewing involves acts of violence. We also have violence in sports. We must do something about our child abuse laws. I should like to stop at that point and put on record a quotation from the April, 1973, edition of Psychology Today. This is a conclusion of these two gentlemen based on research. It states:

● (2010)

· We believe that the real frustration and violence that abound in our adult society are the major sources of children's aggression. If parents are violent, then we can expect the children to be violent. Studies of the families of aggressive children consistently show that the parents of these children are inclined to be violent themselves, particularly when they punish the children.

It continues, and reaches a further conclusion:

We must begin to modify our adult society, the real adult society in which our children are being raised, if we are to reduce aggression.

I think that makes sense. Any farm kid knows that if he has a litter of puppies and if he feeds one, gives it milk and kicks the other one, it is rather obvious which one will bite him when it is one year old. In this country, though it is largely a question of provincial legislation, we have to face the question of child abuse. Particular emphasis should be given to this.

We probably have some very archaic regulations in this country in respect to child abuse. In my home province child abuse is considered to be when a child has a broken bone, lacerations to the skin, or severe bruising. Obviously a child can be severely psychologically abused. He certainly can be abused without having broken bones. I think there is a failure in this regard on behalf of governments. So, to be talking about capital punishment with the myth that somehow that will, of itself change the violent behaviour of society, is an example of irresponsibility on the part of the government because it is not looking at the whole package of the stimuli which lead to the conditioning of a society.

To focus on punishment alone when the whole system is being ignored, I think is folly. There is another thing we might say when we talk about violence or abuse. There is an interesting observation that can be made about the people depicted as being killed on television. The first is that, generally speaking, people shown as being killed on television fall into one of two categories. First there is the person who is totally unknown or scarcely introduced to the play. The ambulance comes around the corner and finds the person dead. The stories start from there. That is when the police investigation begins. So, because the person has never been introduced as a character for which there is some empathy, obviously the very act of killing becomes something that is not offensive to the viewer.

[Mr. Malone.]

The other characteristic in what happens on television is that the people who are killed are the bad guys. Of coursse the natural conclusion children can draw from that is that because he is the bad guy he deserves to be killed. The member opposite may chuckle, but I think an observation regarding television and how it treats the whole concept of human beings killing one another is something to which surely we must address ourselves.

If we take a look at the play Hamlet as it would have been treated in Shakespeare's day, the deaths in that play and in other Shakespearian plays were tragedies in the truest sense because they were of characters with whom one generally became well associated and involved. They were in the real sense tragedies.

I think there is another aspect of law and order upon which we need to focus if we are to talk about a society that increases its rate of violent behaviour, and then subsequently we might come to the position that the government has earned the right to bring in an abolitionist approach. This has to do with how we treat people who disobey the law.

One of the practices we have in our society is that, over and over again, judges in courts will let people off on their first offence on the grounds that they have only committed their first offence. The folly in that kind of thinking has to be that, in the conditioning process or learning behaviour, when people discover they can get away with something it is simply an enticement in respect of what they continue to do. In any other practice or training this is just the opposite of how one would use the concept of reward and punishment.

We would not allow a dog to steal eggs from the chicken coop, let him do it for three months, and then decide to train him otherwise. We would not let a child shoot a hockey puck through a picture windows several times, and then decide to train him otherwise. But we do this in respect of people who commit first offences, second offences, and third offences. I have done some research on this, Mr. Speaker, and I note the tremendous frequency with which people are committing very serious crimes and getting off a whole succession of times, until finally the judge realizes that that particular person has a bit of a record behind him and hands down long harsh sentences because he thinks he must protect society.

If we look at it from the opposite view, in the way one would train any other organism, the approach ought to be—and this can be documented by behavioural studies and behavioural psychology—that if you use the punishment system the punishment must come very close to the act itself, it must be short, and it should be harsh. That has been well demonstrated in the military situation. A person may be caught committing some offence. His sentence may be only 48 hours in length but it was not very comfortable. He may have had to scrub the whole gymnasium floor only to see the whole platoon walk through it with their muddy boots, and have to do it over again and then wax it. At the end of the 48 hours he sure recognizes that he does not want to be in there anymore. I would recommend that with first offences that is the approach we should take. The sentence should be short, it should be harsh but not inhumane, and the punishment should follow very quickly upon the criminal act committed.

If we carry on any kind of analysis or study of what is happening in respect of Canadian law and order today we see that a farce is being made of a system which should in some way be trying to shape human behaviour. Our system excuses and lets off people over and over again. Therefore people have the idea that with that kind of behaviour one can flout the law. Then what happens? Finally the judge recognizes that in order to protect society he should impose sentences of five or six years when there has been no behavioural training with regard to the person involved in the criminal act. I believe that is a most serious kind of approach, and we must readjust our whole concept.

I do not think the government of this country knows whether we have jails in order to be punitive, whether we have them for the purpose of protecting the public, or whether we have them for rehabilitation purposes. I think that if we travelled from one penal institution to another across this country we would find that the members of the prison staffs would not be able to tell us why they are there in terms of those three objectives. Until we have that clarified and crystallized, and begin to recognize that we must shape a court system that is aimed at trying to make the public behave in a certain manner, and then address all of our activities toward achieving that goal, I do not think we will ever have an adequate degree of success in terms of decreasing the violent crime rate in this country.

I wish to make some comment to those who have spoken of the inhumaneness of execution and life sentences. I would bring to the attention of those who take such a position that in West Germany where there is an extended sentence to life, but not the practice of execution, almost 50 per cent of those who were sentenced for what we would consider in this country to be capital murder committed suicide prior to the end of their term in jail. Of course that obviously leads to their terminating their jail sentence. The fact of the matter is that points out that there is a tremendous depression which takes place in respect of those who have long jail sentences. Is that more humane?

Further we know that psychologists have told us that once a person spends ten years within prison walls he really acquires the kind of psychic mind that cannot adjust to the full practice of a normal life as it was known before. I think that has to be borne in mind, and one should ask the question again: are we being any more humane in sentencing someone to 25 years in prison or in jail and assuming that somehow that is treating that person in an advanced and mature way?

● (2020)

Finally I should like to mention again that I challenge those who take the abolitionist stand on the pretext that this is the higher ethic. Wherein does the higher ethic lie if we as a group of legislators legislate to do away with something that almost the whole of the nation wants? Where is the higher ethic in abolishing capital punishment when the citizenry want to retain it? Far better be it for us that we focus our attention on all these things—and we can list them from 50 to 100 different kinds of concepts that I was trying to enumerate before five o'clock today—which would decrease the violent crime rate in the country. What the government ought to do is to bear the burden of decreasing violent crime so that the public would give due consideration to the notion that it could get along without capital punishment. It is not a question of whether or not we are abolitionists, but a question of priority.

This bill is called the bill on peace and security, I wish it meant that. If it did, it would have the courage to focus on the stimuli that affect human behaviour. The focus is on the punishment or reward system without including the whole cultural context of behaviour development. It must be treated as a package if it is to be effective. If this bill passes, it will not make a bit of difference in the crime rate of this country because that is not what is affecting violent crime. It is a myth to call it peace and security because nothing will happen to the crime rate unless we do something to the rapid growth of cities, the bad design of apartments, the noise levels in urban centres, child abuse, television, nutritional aspects as they affect this country, our economics, boring jobs, the lack of employment for many people in various parts of the country, stronger regulations in dealing with alcohol and drugs, children, sports and violence in sports, and the creativity of play.

I could go on and on dealing with the various aspects but I will simply conclude by saying that it is not enough to focus just on punishment. If we are going to address ourselves to peace and security we must focus on those stimuli that affect human behaviour. That should have been the first priority of the government. Had it earned that right, then perhaps in due course somewhere down the road, with a more satisfied populace, it would have earned the privilege to talk about abolition. At this time in history it has no right to bring that position before the country, and I think peace and security cannot fall from this bill. I only hope that the bill will fall.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-84 one is very much aware of taking part in a debate that has been going on for a long time.

The first bill concerning abolition of the death penalty to be introduced in the Parliament of Canada was presented in 1914, during the Borden government, by an opposition member. The bill did not pass. Forty-two years later, that is, in 1956, a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons reported that it was in favour of retention of the death penalty for murder, piracy and treason; it did not recommend any change in the definition of murder and, in particular, advised against introduction of various degrees of murder. The committee, however, recommended that appeal procedures be improved.

Until September, 1961, all persons convicted of murder were sentenced to death and executed unless the Governor General, on the advice of ministers, commuted the sentence to life imprisonment.

From September 1, 1961, to December 28, 1967, the crime of murder was divided into "capital" and "non-capital" murder. The Governor General continued to review each case and to decide whether or not the sentence should be carried out. Section 202A of the Criminal Code defined capital murder as "planned or deliberate" murder during certain crimes of violence, or the murder of a police or corrections officer who was on duty.

On March 21, 1966, the then government House leader, Hon. George McIlraith, moved debate on the abolition of the death penalty based on a resolution put before the House of Commons by four members—two Liberals, one Progressive Conservative, and one NDP. It was agreed that the resolution, moved in a non-partisan way, would be decided on a free vote. The resolution read as follows:

> Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Criminal Code for the purposes of
>
> (a) Abolishing the death penalty in respect of all offences under that act
>
> (b) Substituting a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment in those cases where the death penalty is now mandatory
>
> (c) Providing that no person upon whom a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment is imposed shall be released from imprisonment without prior approval of the governor in council.

An amendment to the motion whereby the death penalty would be abolished on a five-year basis only was rejected on April 5 by a vote of 138 to 113 and, at the end of the debate, the main motion was rejected by a vote of 143 to 112.

In 1967 the government of Prime Minister Lester Pearson introduced, and parliament enacted, Bill C-168 to abolish the death penalty for a five-year trial period, except in cases of capital murder which, as defined under Bill C-168, related to murder of policemen and custodial staff. Bill C-168 did not amend the sections of the Criminal Code relating to treason and piracy, so that these two offences continued to be punishable by death.

Bill C-168 differed from the resolution of 1966 in that it allowed for the retention of the death penalty for capital murder, and that the period of partial abolition would be limited to a trial span of five years. Debate on second reading concluded November 30, 1967, and the bill was referred to committee by a vote of 105 to 70. Among the amendments introduced during consideration in committee of the whole was one to abolish capital punishment completely and replace it by mandatory life imprisonment; this was defeated by a vote of 106 to 37. Bill C-168 received Royal Assent in December, 1967, thus abolishing the death penalty for five years except for treason, piracy, and murders of police and custodial staff.

With expiration of the partial moratorium on capital punishment in 1972 parliament was faced with the options of extending the partial moratorium or returning to the death penalty.

On January 26, 1973, the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) introduced Bill C-2 providing for a further five year extension of the trial period for the abolition of the death penalty, except for cases of capital murder. This debate was again conducted on a non-partisan basis.

On May 29, 1973, Bill C-2 was given second reading and was sent to the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee. The vote was 138 to 114. A proposed amendment to eliminate the death penalty entirely was ruled out of order in the committee on June 21, 1973. Parliament gave the bill final approval in October of 1973 by a vote of 111 to 106. This legislation abolished the death penalty in all cases except those dealing with capital murder—murder of police and prison guards—for a trial period until 1977. The bill did not amend the sections of the Criminal Code dealing with piracy and treason, two crimes which still carry a maximum sentence of death.

[Miss Nicholson.]

● (2030)

Since December of 1962 there have been no executions in Canada. It is difficult to understand the position of those who have criticized the five commutations of the death penalty which have taken place since 1968 as "breaking the law" or "flouting the will of parliament". The authority to commute sentences, including sentences of death, has existed since Confederation in two ways: first, the ancient right of the Crown to grant mercy, a right which was transferred to the Governor General by letters patent in 1947; and second, the statutory power of the Government of Canada.

The statutes of Canada in 1869 contained provisions for statutory commutation of sentences. Section 129 of the statute of 1869 reads, and I quote:

> Nothing in this Act shall or doth in any manner limit or affect Her Majesty's royal prerogative of mercy.

Section 684 of our present Criminal Code deals with statutory commutation and section 686 with royal prerogative. Section 684(1) reads as follows:

> The Governor in Council may commute a sentence of death to imprisonment in the penitentiary for life, or for any term of years not less than two years, or to imprisonment in a prison other than a penitentiary for a period of less than two years.

Section 686 reads as follows:

> Nothing in this Act in any manner limits or affects Her Majesty's royal prerogative of mercy.

For a description of the royal prerogative of mercy I am indebted to the report published in 1956 of a committee which was appointed under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Fauteux to inquire into the principles and procedures followed in the remission service of the Department of Justice of Canada, part of which reads as follows:

> The prerogative powers consist of all the special dignities, liberties, privileges, powers and royalties allowed by the common law to the Crown, which have not been taken away by statute. One of the important prerogatives that remains vested in Her Majesty in right of Canada is the royal prerogative of mercy. Under it a pardon may be granted to any person convicted of a criminal offence or the punishment imposed by the court in respect of the offence may be commuted or remitted.
>
> In Canada the power is exercised by the Governor General on behalf of the Queen. The Letters Patent that constitute the office of Governor General of Canada direct, in effect, that the Governor General shall not exercise the royal prerogative of mercy without first receiving the advice of the Privy Council for Canada in capital cases . . .
>
> In addition to this all-embracing prerogative power, there are several Acts of Parliament that authorize the granting of similar relief to offenders . . .
>
> . . . this combination of prerogative and statutory powers provides a useful flexibility which assures that relief can be granted in all deserving cases. Such a combination of sources of relief existing under the British system of government is also to be found in other countries.

Senator Neiman pointed out in her speech on May 20, 1975, that:

> The government's rights to commute a sentence of death, as well as the ancient prerogative of mercy, have been part of the statute law of Canada at least since we became a nation. They reflect the will of parliament as much as any other federal statute or enactment, including those which empower the government to direct that a person shall be sentenced to death for certain offences.

As one looks at the history of capital punishment in our country, one is impressed with the procedural safeguards which exist all through the process of charging an individual with murder, the hearings and appeal system, before the final sentence is passed. The meticulous carefulness of the procedures, together with the use of commutation, make it clear that from the time of Confederation on, Canadians have regarded the taking of life—even the life of a criminal—as a serious and awesome responsibility, and certainly not as a sentence or sanction to be applied routinely.

Professor Black, professor of jurisprudence at Yale, in his book "Capital Punishment: the Inevitability of Caprice and Mistake" states:

> The Law of Moses is full of the death penalty. But as time went on the Court in ancient Jerusalem, without of course touching one syllable of this law, devised procedural safeguards so refined, so difficult of satisfying, that the penalty of death could only very rarely be exacted.

Professor Black also states that the English judges of about 1800, administering capital punishment for some 250 crimes, became "terribly fussy about the exact wording of indictments." Professor Black interprets this pattern of surrounding the death punishment with procedural safeguards as saying, in effect, and I quote:

> Though the justice of God may indeed ordain that some should die, the justice of man is altogether and always insufficient for saying who these may be.

This sentiment has been expressed in different words by many of the constituents who wrote me individual letters or who, as a group, signed letters with other members of churches in my constituency. In addition, in their letters many people raised the point that a sentence of death is the only final and irreversible sentence for which there can be no redress if an error is made.

In conversations with constituents who initially represented themselves as being in favour of retention of the death penalty, I have found that many of them also had some misgivings about the taking of life. Their position was less one of wanting retribution than one of wanting protection for society from dangerous, callous murderers, and on reflection they were often satisfied that the sentences proposed under Bill C-84, together with the measures proposed under Bill C-83 and the measures enacted under Bill C-71, will provide that protection.

Capital punishment was considered as a last resort in the defence of society before we had statistical evidence to show that it is not a deterrent.

Most murders in Canada are family murders, or murders between people who have some kind of emotional attachment to each other. Statistics Canada figures show that of a total of 4,658 murders over the 14 years from 1961 to 1974, 1,842, or 39.5 per cent, were domestic murders, a further 247, or 5.3 per cent, were described as "love triangles or lovers quarrels," and a further 364, or 8.6 per cent were "close friends." Many of these murders occur in association with misuse of alcohol or drugs or in cases of mental illness. They are sudden and unplanned, and it seems highly unlikely that people who kill in those situations take into account the existence or otherwise of capital punishment.

Family murders are tragic for the people concerned, and it is urgent that society address itself to the problem. However, those who consider seriously the retention of capital punishment do not advocate it for family murders but for contract murders or murders committed in the course of a criminal act; in other words, the calculated, deliberate act which threatens society in general rather than a family.

Does capital punishment serve as a deterrent to hired killers or those who carry out planned and deliberate murder? The evidence so far is that it does not, that these are people whose life style includes acceptance of the risk of being killed by police if they resist arrest during commission of a crime or being killed by their criminal associates during disputes.

● (2040)

A 1968 United Nations document assessing international data on capital punishment reads:

> With respect to the influence of the abolition of capital punishment upon the incidence of murder, all the available data suggests that where the murder rate is increasing, abolition does not appear to hasten the increase; where the murder rate is decreasing, abolition does not appear to interrupt that decrease; where the rate is stable, the presence or absence of capital punishment does not appear to affect it.

I am convinced that, in the short term, the most practical and effective deterrent is the certainty of detection and conviction.

Sir Robert Mark, Commissioner, Metropolitan Police, London, has reasoned as follows:

> 1. To prevent the "awful possibility" of putting an innocent man to death, procedural rules of interrogation and trial require an exceptionally high standard of proof of guilt and it naturally makes the task of prosecution difficult;
>
> 2. One cannot have two systems of investigation and trial, one for the handful of capital murders, and another for the other two million offences recorded in England and Wales each year, and
>
> 3. Accordingly, the practical effect is inevitably to lessen extensively the effectiveness of the criminal law as a deterrent to crime or as a means of catching and, most important of all, of convicting criminals.

The commissioner also provided the following quote from Lord Devlin:

> If the success of a criminal prosecution is to be measured by the proportion of criminals whom it convicts and punishes, the English system must be regarded as a failure. Far too many people who have in fact committed crimes escape punishment. When a criminal goes free it is as much a failure of abstract justice as when an innocent man is convicted.

It is my considered view that, since there is no evidence that capital punishment is a deterrent, and some evidence that, in fact, its existence creates difficulties in convicting criminals, not only in cases of homicide but in other criminal acts, there is no logical reason to retain it.

Sir Robert Mark also said:

> I am opposed to the death penalty and so are most of my senior and most experienced colleagues simply because its continuance prevents the reforms necessary to increase the effectiveness of criminal justice.
>
> The establishment of the truth rather than the determination of technical guilt ought, in my view, to be required of everyone involved in a criminal inquiry once irrevocable punishment has been removed from the statute book. If, as our lawyers in Britain, maintain, the objectives of justice are now the protection of society, the deterrence of crime, the rehabilitation of the offender and the compensation of the victim—with punishment or retribution playing only a secondary part—it seems not unreasonable to suggest that the credibility of the suspected or accused person should be related at least to some extent to his spontaneity rather than to that period of reflection and consultation between interrogation, arrest and trial which continually produces some of the most ingenious, plausible and highly paid forensic fiction of our time.

Finally, I would like to associate myself with the members of all parties who, in response to the question, "Will you vote according to your conscience or the views of your constituents?" have pointed out that a member of parliament owes his or her constituents both industry and judgment, as well as attentiveness. The views of constituents are important and deserve careful consideration, along with all other information one can examine and assess.

The final responsibility of the parliamentarian is to legislate effective measures to protect the public and this responsibility is taken seriously by parliamentarians. To suggest that we vote on a basis of "conscience", "instinct" or "gut feeling" only, rather than on a basis of painstakingly acquired knowledge, carefully assessed and rationally applied to the best of our ability, is to ascribe to us a degree of moral and intellectual laziness which is not typical of members of the House. Hon. members may examine the same data and reach different conclusions, but that is a very different situation from one of failing to examine data and having the kind of arrogance in ignorance that lets one cast an uninformed vote. I repeat that I know of no member of this House who operates in such an irresponsible fashion.

Because the question of capital punishment is literally a question of life and death, it is generally seen by the media as a vote of conscience, but every vote we cast in this House or in committee, every policy we advocate in caucus affects people's lives and is a matter of conscience as well as judgment. And one important function of a conscientious member of parliament is to be well informed, to appraise information, and to try honestly to take positions that are in the national interest.

I think the provisions of Bill C-84 offer an improved measure of security and protection to the Canadian people and, therefore, I intend to vote in favour of the bill.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I should say I am delighted to have the opportunity of taking part in this most important debate or whether I should say that I feel it necessary that I take part in this very important debate.

I listened to the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone) and was extremely impressed with his sentiments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I hear the government whip saying "hear, hear", Mr. Speaker. I would think that all hon. members could agree that it was a speech of some significance.

The part I appreciated was when the hon. member indicated that governments should earn the right to an abolitionist state. They have not earned that right. The hon. member went on to speak of environmental malaise and what it would mean to both urban and rural dwellers. He said the government had not paid attention to this and was concentrating on punishment alone because it had not earned the right to abolition. My hon. friend, for whom I have a great deal of respect, indicated that he will not vote for the bill. Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, I will tell you what my position is on this subject.

[Miss Nicholson.]

I have listened to other hon. members speak and have been extremely impressed with their remarks. I have been fortunate enough to have taken part in many debates in this House, but this is a debate without rancour, a debate that is sensitive and allows members to give concrete reasons for their views, whether they be abolitionist or retentionist. I appreciate that.

How easy things would be for us at this time if easy bail were not a thing of the past as is early parole. If I have received one letter on those subjects I have received hundreds. These two matters account for a considerable amount of fear and frustration felt by the Canadian people. They are concerned about easy bail and early parole, but now we have taken steps to counter this so perhaps their fears will be allayed somewhat. How much easier would our task have been if we had moved in those two directions earlier.

● (2050)

Let me not hesitate in bringing into focus my position on this bill. In doing so I would like to read the preamble of a notice in the Ottawa Citizen of April 27, 1976. I suppose it was part of blanket newspaper coverage throughout this land. This is a statement by the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. That is an organization of some significance composed of men and women from all professions, of the cloth, law, people who are concerned about justice and civil liberties. I want to read it because I accept this statement. It is part and parcel of my argument. It says, and I quote:

> Capital punishment is an exercise in senseless violence.
>
> The killing of even the worst killers will gain nothing for society that could not be gained by less violent means, for example, by imprisonment. Scores of studies in many countries over long periods of time fail to show that capital punishment reduces the number of murders.
>
> This is also true of the killing of policemen. A 25-year comparison of more than 80 similar American cities showed that the death penalty made little difference to the rate of policemen killed. In fact, in places using the death penalty, the rate of police homicides was slightly higher.
>
> We share the grief of those whose dear ones have been murdered. We share the anxiety about the innocent victims of brutal crimes. But understandable distress must not divert us from facing facts.
>
> The death penalty cannot help yesterday's victims and it is unlikely to save tomorrow's targets. What it is certain to accomplish, however, is the legitimation of useless killing. That is a result we must strive to avoid.

I am an abolitionist, Mr. Speaker, and will vote for the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I say this not in an arrogant and self-centered way, but with every concern, respect, and sympathy for the opposite view, particularly as expressed by many of my constituents who have asked that I vote against this bill.

As members of parliament we are placed in a very peculiar position. Why? Because there is some question as to what is a representative. I believe with all my soul and heart that I was elected in 1968, 1972, and 1974 to discharge my duties and responsibilities as best I can under the circumstances.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: If my leadership is wanting, if my attitudes are inconsistent with those of my constituents, then surely I must face the penalty. What is the penalty, Mr. Speaker? The penalty is the possibility of defeat at the next election.

If my constituents on an over-all assessment of my contribution to this House, not only with respect to capital punishment but with respect to my role as opposition critic—I am not bragging about that, I happen to be fortunate—with respect to unemployment insurance, Manpower, welfare, urban affairs, labour, the many questions I have asked, the many concerns I have registered—

An hon. Member: The many you have created.

Mr. Alexander: I am not in as much trouble as you are, sitting as a government member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. Will the hon. member please address the Chair.

Mr. Alexander: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for admonishing that member who spoke out of turn.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: After that over-all assessment of my role as a representative, I will face that penalty. However, there is one thing that I have found out about my constituents. Many of them dislike my position on this bill, but they respect the intestinal fortitude that I have portrayed.

I am the one who has to face myself in the morning. I am the one who has to live with this decision. I am the one who, after many years of studied concern, had to reach this conclusion. I did not reach it overnight. I do not think any member reached this conclusion overnight. This has been a burning issue for all of us. However, every now and again a person must stand up for what he believes, regardless of what the penalty may be, as long as it is in a legitimate way.

My constituents know that I am an abolitionist. They knew that in 1968, 1972, and 1974. I mentioned it over television. I mentioned it by way of a newsletter. I have stated it in speeches. However, they re-elected me, and for that I am very grateful. And I will go to them again whenever that gang over there has the guts to pull the plug.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: I had better not get partisan. That is usually not my role. I will withdraw that remark if it will allow members to listen to me and accept the proposition which I place before them.

Capital punishment is foreign to my makeup in that I feel it is dangerous, ineffective, and barbaric. To elaborate further on that statement, I wish to make the following comments.

First, I am concerned about and question the morale related to capital punishment. Second, I believe that a mistake is possible through capital punishment, and thus an innocent person can be put to death. Third, I have concluded after much soul-searching and study that capital punishment can be justified only if it has a real deterrent value. However, I am unconvinced that capital punishment does deter murder.

Fourth, although I have concluded that capital punishment does not deter murder, I feel that the doubt created in many, including the experts by their findings, as to whether there is a deterrent value to capital punishment must be resolved because of the doubt in favour of the right to and the sanctity of life. Fifth, I believe that capital punishment dismisses too easily the cause of violence and the need to bring into focus and effect possible cures. This is where the emphasis should be.

We are living in a sick, violent society. We note the disrespect for the home, the family, the church, the schools, law and order, and our basic institutions. I do not believe that capital punishment will reduce or eradicate the disrespect which is the cornerstone of violence which concerns all of us. It is incumbent upon all of us to find out why there is this disrespect and increased violence. We must ascertain the causes and find the cure.

● (2100)

I shall spend some time on the next subject for discussion as it is extremely important and gives me some reason to hope. The United States authorities directed their attention to this matter back in 1968. A commission was appointed; it made certain recommendations which are still valid, and which still show how we are to attack the present malaise of society and what we must do to cure it. It suggested how we could reduce the increase in violence. Many of the recommendations the commission made apply to present day Canada and Canadians.

The President of the United States in June, 1968, ordered the establishment of a National Commission on the Causes and Prevention of Violence. I subscribe to the findings of the commission. They are still valid and apply to this debate. The commission was authorized to investigate and make recommendations with respect to (a) the causes and prevention of lawless acts of violence in our society, including assassination, murder and assault; (b) the causes and prevention of disrespect for law and order, of disrespect for public officials, and violent disruption of public order by individuals and groups.

The commission was composed of a cross section of many groups of citizens, black and white, male and female, young and old, of Republicans, Democrats, persons from the fields of education, law, religion, politics, psychology, history, labour and philosophy. The commission laboured for a year and a half and published its report on December 13, 1969. To me it was a work of monumental significance. Its impact was significant. I recommend its reading to hon. members and to the public at large. The final report of the U.S. National Commission on the Causes and Prevention of Violence is available as a thick book. The conclusions are excellent.

The commission emphasized that two thirds of the American people lived in urban areas where violence thrives. Individual and group specialization have intensified our dependence on one another. Men are no longer capable of solitary living and individual self-defence. Men must live together and depend on one another to observe the laws and keep the peace. I suggest that those words apply equally to this country and should be noted in this debate.

Expressing a view which applies currently to Canada, the commission said that violence must be brought under control to safeguard life and property, and to make possible the creation of the understanding and co-operation needed to remedy underlying causes. No society can remain free, much less deal effectively with fundamental problems, if its people live in fear of their fellow citizens. It is ancient wisdom that a House divided against itself cannot stand. I subscribe to these views, Mr. Speaker. I support measures which would eliminate violence in our free society. In my view, the better control of illegitimate violence, such as violent crime in our society is an urgent imperative. It is within our means to achieve this end.

Many studies have identified the basic causes of violent crime. Those basic causes apply to people in this country as well as to those in the United States. How are we to cure violent crime? It is suggested that warring on poverty, unemployment and inadequate housing, is warring on crime. Civil rights laws are laws against crime. Money for schools is money used against crime. Medical, psychiatric and family counselling services are services which fight crime. Most important of all, every effort to improve life in Canada's cities and ghettos is an effort in the war against crime.

We have not taken seriously the impact of such measures on our war against crime. For this reason I wish to place on record several findings of the commission to which I referred. These findings are most important and should be taken seriously if we are to attack root causes of violent crime and the unacceptable increase in the incidence of crime. The commission reported:

... we have identified certain themes of challenge for the leader and people of America. Among these are the following:

First: As we have noted, not all violence in our society is illegitimate. Indeed, a major function of society is the organization and legitimation of violence in the interest of maintaining society itself. Unfortunately, however, the existence of legitimate violence—from a shooting in lawful self-defense through international violence in the form of warfare—sometimes provides rationalization for those who would achieve ends or express grievances through illegitimate violence.

Second: Violence by some individuals may result in part from a deranged mind or abnormal biological make-up. Experts agree, however, that most persons who commit violence—criminal or noncriminal—are basically no different from others, and their behavior is the result of the complex interaction of their biology and life experience. Scholars observe that man has no instinct or trait born within that directs aggression in a specific way. He does have, from birth, the potential for violence. He also has the capacity for creative, constructive activity and for the rejection of violence. Insofar as life experience teaches individuals violence, the incidence of violence is subject to modification, control, and prevention through conscious changes in man's environment.

Third: Historically, when groups or individuals have been unable to attain the quality of life to which they believe they are entitled, the resulting discontent and anger have often culminated in violence. Violent protest today—from middle-class students to the inhabitants of the black ghettos and the white ghettos—has occurred in part because the protesters believe that they cannot make their demands felt effectively through normal, approved channels and that "the system," for whatever reasons, has become unresponsive to them.

Fourth: Progress in meeting the demands of those seeking social change does not always reduce the level of violence. It may cause those who feel threatened by change to engage in counter-violence against those seeking to shift the balance. And the pace of change may be slower and more uneven than the challenging group is willing to tolerate. We see these social forces at work in our country today. After several decades of rapid social change, we have better housing, education, medical care and career opportunities for most groups in our society than at any time in the past. Nonetheless, these advances have been uneven, and what we have so far achieved falls short of the needs or expectations of many. Impatience is felt on all sides, and our social order is subject to escalated demand both from those who desire greater stability and from those who desire greater social change.

Fifth: The key to much of the violence in our society seems to lie with the young.

Remember, this report was made in 1969. It is still valid today. I continue quoting:

Our youth account for an ever-increasing percentage of crime, greater than their increasing percentage of the population. The thrust of much of the group protest and collective violence—on the campus, in the ghettos, in the streets—is provided by our young people. It may be here, with tomorrow's generation, that much of the emphasis of our studies and the national response should lie.

Sixth: The existence of a large number of firearms in private hands and a deep-seated tradition of private firearms ownership are complicating factors in the task of social control of violence.

● (2110)

Does that sound familiar, Mr. Speaker?

Seventh: Additional complications arise from the high visibility of both violence and social inequalities, resulting from the widespread impact of mass communications media. The power impact of the media may aggravate the problems of controlling violence; on the other hand, the media may be one of our most useful social agents for explaining all elements of our society to another and achieving a consensus as to the need for social change that may help to reduce levels of violence.

The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has continually tried to impress upon the government that it should move in the direction of controlling violence on TV. This has also been referred to by my hon. friend from Battle River and others.

Eighth: Social control of violence through law depends in large measure on the perceived legitimacy of the law and the society it supports. Persons tend to obey the law when the groups with which they identify disapprove those who violate it. Group attitudes about lawful behavior depend, in turn, on the group's views of the justice provided by the legal order and of the society which created it. The justice and decency of the social order thus are not simply desirable embellishments. On the contrary, a widespread conviction of the essential justice and decency of the social order is an indispensable condition of civil peace in a free society.

Ninth: Our system of criminal justice suffers from an under-investment of resources at every level—police, courts and corrections. Partly because of this accumulated deficit, the criminal justice system is neither as strong nor as fair as it should be—and consequently it has failed to control illegitimate violence as well as it should.

Does that sound familiar, Mr. Speaker? I repeat that these words were written in 1969.

Tenth: The social control of violence does not depend merely on the conduct of those who attack or defend the social order. It depends also on the attitudes, co-operation, and commitments of the community—of our political, religious, educational, and other social institutions and of citizens in every walk of life. Violence in our society affects us all. Its more effective control requires the active engagement and commitment of every citizen.

I want to emphasize "every citizen". Let the government not simply say to members of parliament, "Pass this bill on capital punishment or defeat it", and that is an end to it. There will have to be a commitment from every citizen to accept the themes of challenge that I have just put before the House. But if those challenges are accepted, Mr. Speaker, do we not then have hope for and faith in the future? It seems to me those challenges should be accepted. They should be pursued as closely as possible. Not until they are found impossible to accept should this nation subscribe to capital punishment.

If all of us gave a total commitment in this regard, Mr. Speaker, if all of us gave a total commitment toward solutions that those ten themes beg, then would we be faced with this bill on capital punishment? Would members of parliament be concerned about whether or not we will be returned if we vote either for or against the bill? We would not have had to bother with such a measure as this.

We have received letters which can be counted by the hundreds from our constituents, Mr. Speaker. Statistics and other material do not mean a thing in deciding this issue. All we know is that there has been an increase in violence, the blame for which lies in the home, the school, the church, our political system, television—I could go on and on. Yet I am asked to vote against this bill.

Let me quote a letter written by a man whom I do not know, but I will put his name on record. All of my colleagues have received letters both pro and con. These letters allow us the opportunity of forming an opinion. Putting aside rhetoric, passion, and questionable motives, we look for letters that are responsible and sincere in order to assist us either up to make up our minds or to maintain the position we took some time ago. I wish to refer to a letter from Thomas David Birmingham, from R.R. 3, Courtenay, B.C. He writes:

> Proponents of the death penalty accuse abolitionists of undue sympathy for the murderer, and have spent long happy hours thinking up such terms of "bleeding hearts", "sob sisters", and even "monkey-faced religionists" to describe all who disagree with them. The truth is that many of us seek nothing but a better Canadian society; and concern for the murderer, while real and genuine, is far down on our list of priorities. But we have become convinced, after long and careful consideration of all factors, that executions, far from preventing murder, are actually a contributing cause both of murder and violence . . .
>
> A point often overlooked is that, because capital punishment is irrevocable—the prisoner cannot be freed if further evidence turns up that proves him innocent—many jurors will not convict while even a shadow of doubt remains. The result is that dangerous men are turned loose who would otherwise be in jail.

Did we not hear the Solicitor General make a similar statement? I do not want to give the Solicitor General all the credit; he, together with other members of the government, has helped frustrate this whole issue. But let me stop there, Mr. Speaker, since I said I would not become partisan. This debate should be beyond partisanship. Let me quote another important statement in this letter:

> All studies based on fact have proved time and again that hanging is not an effective deterrent to murder. Why, then, the demand for a return to capital punishment? My first reaction, and that of many Canadians, on learning of some senseless murder is a desire to hurt the killer as he has hurt society. Our sense of outrage demands that they hang someone to make us feel better! This, then, is a revenge reaction to which the light of sober second thought has never been applied. The vital question here is: are we mature enough to base our decisions on fact and reason, or will they spring from motives of hate and revenge? Are we, in short, capable of building a civilized society?
>
> There are problems and dangers in today's world that can only be overcome by a society that is no longer ruled by emotions of hate or fear. So it is that I hope we abolish the death penalty; for what would indicate at least a future, and even the possibility that we have the character and intelligence to make that future bright.

I want to thank Your Honour for your indulgence, and I want to thank all hon. members for giving me so much of their time. I hope I have raised some question in their minds and cast some little doubt. If I have, Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that that doubt should be cast in favour of respect for life and the sanctity of life.

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I enter this debate in opposition to Bill C-84. My position is that capital punishment must remain in the Criminal Code so that society, and society's agents, have the basis on which to move against killers who plan and carry out ruthless murder.

We as a parliament must make it clear to Canadians what our priorities in justice are. We must make it clear that we care about our law-abiding citizens above all else. Victims and their families—families often permanently injured emotionally, economically and spiritually by the brutalization of the murder of a loved one—must be assured that the state will put their right to life above that of their killers. The survivors of murder in a family have a right to expect, not only protection, but knowledge that the punishment of the killer was equal to the crime. We must decide quickly whose priorities to safety and life in this nation must be first.

● (2120)

I have fought for the lives and paroles of killers, have been deeply involved with many of them during the death watch, and in commutation or execution. Despite this, or perhaps because of it, I still put the rights of these people second to that of society and to their victims' families.

The public mood should also dictate to all of us—on both sides of this House—our duty. It may be that the anger, the fear, even a seeming disillusionment with parliament is over the public impression that members of parliament seem to disregard their wishes. Some quote Edmund Burke, an arch-Tory who lived 200 years ago, before teletype, television, Xerox, space and jet travel, who could not get to his constituency because it was too far, 100 miles away, and who was elected by only a few upper class males. We live in a different age—one of universal suffrage, universal education; a quickly informed nation. Yet we use Burke's principle to pretend that we have the right to superimpose our consciences over those of the Canadian people. It is sheer folly, snobbery, elitism—and the public, our constituents, rightly resent this. Certainly we must make decisions. We cannot have them here to help us make decisions, but when their view has been so clear on this issue certainly we must not treat that view with contempt.

Confidence in parliament is already being sorely tried. It does not matter who leads it, what party is in power, there is a deliberate campaign abroad to assure contempt for all established authority. It began among students and academics in the late 1960's. It was against authority—parents, police and everybody over 30. Now it is parliament itself. We should not aggravate the situation by pretending somehow that we 262 people here, common people elected by common people, have superior wisdom, superior judgment, and the right to act against the expressed wishes of the public.

The fabric of our entire community, of the relationship between those who govern and those who are governed, can be in jeopardy if we ignore the 80 per cent who demand the restoration of capital punishment. They possibly are more humane and/or knowledgeable than those who accept the 25-year prison-without-hope as an alternative for capital punishment.

It may well be that if the public is not permitted a catharsis in its present anger and fear, perhaps even revenge—which so many of us do not like to discuss, but which I dare to express, if the public is not allowed the opportunity to express its disapproval at indiscriminate killing and maiming, we could seriously rupture the basic order of society and make violence an acceptable way of life, with the law-abiding citizen its tormented pawn.

The impression is that the lawbreakers, wrongly, of course, seem to be receiving the state's protection and succor, while those who live within the law and want to be safe and decent are left to fend for themselves; that the underworld is taking the controls from those assigned to set and administer the law. This is a reality. Just recently an undercover worker, a stool pigeon for the police in Vancouver, said he could no longer help them in drug cases. He said to the police they had only seven year sentences for murder, but—out there—on the street—they have capital punishment. He was killed within two hours after telling them what was happening on the street.

Julien Critchley, member of parliament for Aldershot in the British House of Commons, an abolitionist throughout his ten years in parliament, reversed his position because he said, and I quote:

We may rupture the link between people and parliament, bonds that have already loosened.

There is no doubt that the Critchley statement is applicable here today. Those who can rely on Edmund Burke of the 1770's, here in the 1970's, will no doubt meet the same fate at the polls as he did. The voters of Burke's time, in the 1770's, and those who have elected us, have the right to be represented and not to have a member of parliament's conscience superimposed on the majority.

Fortunately I have long been of the same opinion as my constituents of Vancouver-Kingsway in the matter of capital punishment. I know them to be good, just, fair, and humane people. They are people of a wide range of eduction, knowledge, and experience. They are professionals, tradesmen and tradeswomen, and labourers. They are stable people who, in the main, own their own homes, and many were born in the homes in which they still live. These people have seen what every Canadian can soon expect to see, unfortunately, and that is their quiet, peaceful neighbourhood turned into one of the most violent areas in Canada.

My constituents may be losing their cool over the issue before us now, and I understand how the unwarranted, unnecessary statements by one man could have caused so much anger. A total of 79.3 per cent of these people indicated they want capital punishment restored. Since then, and that was a year ago, they have let me know that they feel even more strongly about this matter in hundreds of letters, phone calls, visits to my office, and petitions, and in cold anger at the fact that a member of the cabinet has threatened to resign if he did not win his bid for abolition. They are angry, not in a partisan way, but at all of us who sit in this House and act as though their wishes are irrelevant.

[Mrs. Holt.]

I consider my constituency an all-people riding, variegated with many economic, social, and cultural factors; a microcosm of Canada. The day I cannot act for them I will leave this place. I can assure all of you here that if you do not act for the majority Canadian constituency, all of us as well as the job we do here will be irrelevant.

I oppose every aspect of Bill C-84, both within my own conscience and on behalf of my constituents. First, I oppose the abolition of capital punishment in cases of premeditated, deliberate murder, not only for the killers of policemen and prison guards, but also for those who cause death in the commission of such ruthless crimes as kidnapping, rape, highjacking, armed robbery, and assault.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: I would also like to add the worst and cruelest murderers of all to the list who should face the possibility of death for his or her horrendous crime; those who commit mass murders, maiming and inflicting extreme, if not excruciating pain—the drug trafficker, the non-using drug trafficker, who has not one single decent motive or shred of kindness and whose only objective is a huge income out of the sale of torture and death.

Besides drug deaths, these people are responsible for ordering or contracting murder by others of anyone daring to compete for even the smallest share in a vast market. They also murder anyone who might be a problem, even for crying out too loudly with the cramps and excruciating pain that comes when deprivation of the drug begins. Capital punishment could certainly be a deterrant in these business crimes, and this would certainly stop many who merchandise narcotics. I challenge anyone who says it would not be a deterrent in that area.

Secondly, I am opposed to this bill because the alternative, what is seen as a trade-off for abolition, is even more cruel than anything the hangman can do. This is day-by-day torture, human waste, and anyone who has spent any time watching a man in prison knows what I mean. This is torture for 25 years or 9,125 days without hope. Approach your own life in this way. Think of that time in relation to your own life, or your child's life. It is also a licence to kill others trapped in the same prison; the inmates and guards.

The sentence of 25 years to someone 20 or even 25 really means living life out in a prison. To the 20-year old, age 30 seems like senility. Remember, to them, everyone over 30 seems old and nearly dead. He sees himself in prison until he is 45. The 25-year old sees 30 as old, 40 or 45 as near death, even the end of life. He will be there until he is 50 years of age. His years of love, marriage, family, and productivity will be lost. There is no reason to live. He can see it.

● (2130)

I should like to refer to a man I know and for whom I have been fighting for years. He went in at age 21. He is still there in the penitentiary at 42. He went to prison for shooting a man who called his wife a whore in a nightclub. He said, "They will not hang me and will not let me hang myself." He tried repeatedly. He had no reason to live and now they have extended the time of parole eligibility for two years more—as if two more years of his life were nothing. The younger men will be more dangerous, but whether 20 or 30 they are well aware that they have nothing to lose.

"Nothing to lose" is the phrase we hear over and over again from the lifers. Andy Bruce is the example that comes to mind because it is the most current of many over the years. Andy Bruce was about 20 when he deliberately went on his job to kill a young go-go dancer. He did it coolly, without any compassion, in front of the woman's nine-year daughter. He was involved in the hostage taking in the B. C. penitentiary where Mary Steinhauser was killed. He was recently in a second hostage-taking incident. He has constantly said that if he is killed he has nothing to lose. In fact he has invited people to kill him in every way possible because he does not want to live.

Third, I am also opposed to the bill which maps alternatives to buy the abolition vote here and in the community, because people will be sent to prison for long terms who should not be imprisoned. Those who commit second degree murder also will receive excessive sentences of 10, 15 or 20 years. Some of these people will be scooped up in this because of one second of anger or passion, a moment of wildness, perhaps trapped in a love triangle or because of being involved in a drunken party. They will go to prison for 15 years and their children will be destroyed by this imprisonment when probation would serve them and society better. They are people who never before, or after, commit a crime. They could stay out and be productive citizens, paying taxes and sustaining their families instead of having their families forced to go on the welfare rolls, often with the result that their children are damaged or placed on the road to crime or madness.

Society is not served at all. These people usually need neither excessive punishment nor rehabilitation. Certainly no prison rehabilitates. Long sentences, and even sentences of four or five years without parole can only make a person worse than when he entered prison.

Perhaps I should make it clear that in seeking to keep capital punishment on the books I do so because this means that only few will face the charge. It could be only one in 500 or one in every 200. The courts are meticulous in these cases. Some people here seem to think that it is wrong if some go free. I think it is an advantage that the courts take such care. I have attended many murder trials and have seen the care with which juries hear evidence. I have observed the care with which the judges instruct on the evidence. Not only are the many alternatives in the defence listed and the evidence reiterated by the judge even after it is given under oath, but the jury is exhorted to consider the alternatives to capital murder such as second degree, manslaughter, assault causing bodily harm, assault, and acquittal. They are also instructed in great detail about reasonable doubt—the doubt always goes to the accused.

As for the expressed fear of the abolitionists that innocent men might die, there is only one known such case, the Evans case in Britain. On the contrary, I have had personal experience in respect of a man who had 59 crimes on his record, and I have reason to believe a good number of murders that were not shown. He was acquitted of the murder of a ten-year old paper boy, Donald Ottley, in Vernon. He has two jury trials on the Ottley murder. The first jury convicted him and the court of appeal of British Columbia ordered a new trial. During the second trial he was again convicted. This time the court of appeal released him on the Hodges Rule, the rule that states that the evidece is consistent with the fact that somebody else could have committed the offence.

Nothing proved to me more the accuracy of the jury system than what happened afterward in this case. Three months after his release he confessed to me that he had killed the paper boy, that he had strangled him. Even as the boy was dying, the killer admitted he released his hold on the boy's throat long enough to hear the last gasped plea for his life. This killer confessed to me that it gave him his orgasm. He told me that he finished it off and threw the boy, in his words, "like an old rag over the fence."

He told this to me privately on Good Friday night, 1962, and the next day before a witness, Jack Brooks, the editor of the Vancouver Sun. He told me, "Every time I drink I go on the prowl to kill and I enjoy killing". He confessed to me that he was interrupted in two murder attempts, one on a 16-year-old boy, the other on a homosexual in a Vancouver hotel room. He knew in both cases that I could not trace the victim.

After his confession he fled to the World Fair in Seattle. There he was picked up and confessed again to the Seattle police, this time referring to a young female. The Seattle police were convinced this was a case of another killing, but the killer was too sly to give them the lead to prove another case against him. The point of all this is that they could not charge him under the law of double jeopardy, so they picked him up under the Mental Hospitals Act, and one year after he was put in Riverview Mental Hospital he was released on a loose probation.

Shortly afterward he turned up in Winnipeg. He picked up a nine-year old girl and molested her. If he followed his modus operandi he was minutes away from killing her. The difference between this case and the one in Vernon was that the paper boy was not expected home. The family of this child missed her and a search began quickly. He got ten years, and was out in about six. He again picked up a tiny girl, again molested her, and could have committed another murder if he had not been interrupted. Who's right to life is more important? Those children who might have died and the one who did die, or this man?

There are other cases. There is the case of Léopold Dion in Quebec who killed four small children. He was executed by the prisoners in St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, but four innocent children were forced, first to pray, and then to die violently before jungle justice was done, because we were too afraid to administer our laws. Whose life is more precious?

Regarding the fear of the abolitionists that innocent people could be executed by the state, again may I say I believe society can, and must, trust its courts. From what I have experienced I am confident that they will convict in cases in which there is absolute certainty. The use of science provides a type of positive corroboration in most cases, and the demand for corroborating witnesses in all cases of circumstantial evidence is part of the certainty that justice is done.

Certainly, after all, if there is doubt, cabinet would commute and would begin the search for proof of innocence or guilt. Many times I have gone out to prison at the request of inmates who claimed that they were innocent, that they were in on a "bum-beef", that is, wrongfully in prison. Every time I checked out these complaints it ended with these people admitting that they had committed the offence, but that they should have got off on some technicality or that their lawyer did a rotten job, he was a bum.

My experience has been that more guilty men go free than innocent men convicted. That is not all bad, unless they are dangerous. I have known a good number of the former, and not the latter. Had I found one innocent man I would have fought for his release. I was involved in a case in Seattle involving a Vancouver man. We did get the evidence and he was acquitted of the charge.

Back to the issue of public opinion. We have an informed public. There are those who, as abolitionists, like to pretend they are somehow more tolerant, wiser, and better people than those of the public who want retention. Some even crudely, childishly, resort to labelling those who seek to restore capital punishment as rednecks. I suggest that if that were true, and I reject it, 80 per cent of Canadians, 17,600,000 Canadians, are rednecks. If it were necessary to engage in this childish name calling, I would suggest the antonym for rednecks would be yellow bellies, and I reject that too. But I throw it in as a reminder of the ridiculousness of labelling people with valid opinions based on knowledge, experience, and involvement in the reality of their own neighbourhood and their own friends and families who have been participants in these horrendous incidents.

● (2140)

In many cases they are forced to see and live reality rather than the illusion, as those whose greatest influence and knowledge of crime is from Kojak or Harry O, or imagined ideas of what crime is about, illusions of utopia which they have because of isolation from the harshness of the violence people know in cities such as Vancouver and Montreal.

Perhaps the difference between those influenced by illusion, protected within a peaceful community, and those by reality are contained in two communications which I received from student groups in two different parts of Canada—one from Ottawa which is hardly touched by crime, comparatively speaking, where people walk the streets without being threatened by muggers or assaulted or raped, and Vancouver, a school in my constituency where children live the reality; they are surrounded by violence and crime, Killarney Secondary school.

Three hundred students in nice, safe, comfortable Ottawa, Lisgar Collegiate, signed a petition favouring abolition with a simplistic list of reasons, using almost the cliches of every abolotionist. They said that "innocent people have been executed; cruel and inhuman punishment; violence brutalizes society; it is a morally regressive step; and it has not proven to be a deterrent to murder."

The communication from Vancouver sent by John B. Tyrrell of Killarney Secondary school, a questionnaire given to three of his social studies classes, touched on several areas of concern in British Columbia. But in the segment on capital punishment these were responses to carefully prepared questions. Do you support the government proposal to replace capital punishment with a mandatory 25 year term in prison? None were in favour of it; 41 were opposed; 12 undecided.

The next question was: If you support capital punishment, do you believe the present method of hanging should be replaced by another? Thirteen said yes; 15 no; 24 undecided. Are you in favour of capital punishment (a) for all persons convicted of murder? Nine said yes; 28 no; 16 undecided; (b) are you in favour of capital punishment only when mercy is not recommended? Thirty-five said yes; 12 no; 16 undecided; (c) for the murder of police officers and prison guards? Forty-seven said yes; one no; and five undecided; (d) do you favour it under any circumstances? Only one said yes; 48 no; and four undecided. Regarding impirsonment, are you satisfied with the present system of parole for convicted murders, rapists and child molesters? None of them said yes; none were undecided; all said no. Do you feel that there are some convictions for which there should be no parole? Forty-five said yes; none said no; eight were undecided.

Regarding deterrents: there is a mistaken belief that murder is inevitably an irrational act. That maybe so in some cases, but there are indications that 50 per cent or more are not irrational acts, but are deliberate, calculated, even businesslike. It is used as the law of the underworld which retains capital punishment as one of its main controls; it is used often and in some cases, inappropriately, for slight provocation; it is used by young people who place no value whatsoever on another person's life; it is used for kicks, and I have been involved in cases where a motorcycle gang member did it partly to show off and partly—in his words—to find out "what it would feel like to take a life"—"what powers I would feel in killing a man". He got ten years in 1968. He has been out for about four.

Our system of punishment is based not on deterrence alone, but on what is called justice—a person who has committed a crime must be punished in proportion to the seriousness of the crime. Since the crime that takes a life is irrevocable, so must the punishment. Ernest Van Den Haag, author of "Punishing Criminals", psychoanalyst, and adjunct professor of New York University, adds that, "Since the crime that takes a life is irrevocable, so must be the punishment".

Only those in the grip of passion could not be deterred. Certainly some are deterred. If only a few lives were saved by fear of execution, it is worth while to keep capital punishment on the books. Obviously though, if there is a deterrent, and nobody was killed or there was no attempt to kill, we have nothing on which to compile a statistic. So it is ridiculous to say it is not a deterrent. When nothing happens they cannot have a statistic.

Perhaps the abolitionists are right; there are no statistics to prove it was a deterrent. There could be no statistics if the person was deterred and nothing happened.

Those who are not in the grip of passion, who were out merely for gain or to engage in a planned murder, or murder for kicks of for vengeance of their own, would be deterred.

I can cite numerous cases that prove it is a deterrent. A friend, John Waslynchuk, my "consultant" on crime—an aristocrat among western bank robbers and safecrackers—told me when the modified law on capital punishment for killers of police officers and guards came into force, that if he were still in business he would now shoot to kill because he would not hang for murder. In the past, when holding up a bank, he never carried bullets in his gun. But with the end to the old law on murder, he and his associates would shoot a pursuer in the hope of escape, and at the same time eliminate one who could identify him in court. Even if caught and convicted, he would get exactly the same sentence for the robbery as he would for murder. "It would be a good gamble to shoot and kill", he said. "Don't you think so?".

I was advised by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) of another case of a girl who survived because of capital punishment. Léopold Dion and his brother raped a girl on the railway tracks in Quebec, in 1940. Leopold began strangling their victim to death. His brother shouted, "If you kill her, Leo, you will hang". He released her. They were, of course, captured, imprisoned, sentenced to life on November 21, 1940. When he was released on parole in 1962 he again assaulted innocent people, four small boys whom he strangled. Then murder was committed against him. He was killed in prison, because his sentence was commuted. I presume he killed the boys because this time he wanted to be sure there would be nobody to testify against him.

I can assure you that street violence today is more brutalizing than the brutality that people suggest will occur as a result of capital punishment. I was around when they hanged people and I never saw society brutalized—it was a one day news story. The people who are brutalized are the victims, their families and their relatives who, to this day, have never got over it. Street violence is growing virtually out of control and we are so desensitized that when an 11 year old shoots a four year old, the story is nothing more than a newspaper filler. We will soon have a situation similar to that in Washington, D.C. where murder, rape, and robbery are listed in six point type—the print size used for classified ads.

Will a man in prison for 25 years have any reason not to kill again? In fact he has a licence to murder. He can become a hero if he rids the prison of an unpopular guard or unpopular inmate. He can get attention—which most of these people crave. He pays for the first murder; the second, third, etc. are free.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) claims that long prison terms are a greater deterrent than capital punishment. The logic of that eludes me. The person is alive, with a licence that says he already has life in prison. Another murder or two will not make any difference. Guards need not put their lives on the line to protect us when prisoners try to escape. Why should they risk their lives?

● (2150)

I hold life sacred, that is, the lives of law abiding citizens and those trapped in prison with a killer with nothing to lose.

I have seen the victims of crimes and families broken up after a loved one was murdered. The argument for abolition is made around one case in which I was deeply involved, the case of James Carey. He is the man who was sentenced to hang in 1956. I do not think it is an appropriate case for arguing abolition because at that time everyone who committed homicide was sentenced to hang, or faced the death penalty. Today Jimmy Carey is raising a family of adopted children and heads an orphanage in New Brunswick. A book is being written by Paul King about his case as an argument for abolition.

James Carey was charged at a time when all homicide was capital murder. He was sentenced to hang as an accessory in the pre-Christmas slaying of a police officer named Gordon Sinclair in 1955. Carey did not fire a shot. He was a petty criminal working as a stool pigeon for the RCMP during the drug wars in Vancouver. He was collecting guns for ballistic tests, and during the course of this, one of the people who had been—unknowingly—helping him with this, Joe Gordon, shot and killed a policeman. Carey was with him. Carey had a young friend, a lawyer without experience or talent, who defended him. The life-saving evidence he could have given in court, and that which the police were willing to give, was never entered.

I visited Mr. Carey frequently on death row. I helped raise finances for appeals. But more important, I learned his whole story. I wrote to the then justice minister, Stuart Garson, and I fought for his life right into the Parliament of Canada. A two week stay of execution was given to both Jimmy Carey and Gordon while the director of remissions, A. J. MacLeod, Q.C., came to B.C. to study this new evidence.

Carey's sentence was commuted eleven hours before his scheduled meeting with the hangman. However, I am certain the reasons Carey succeeded were that he was a good human being, a mere petty criminal and that many people were involved in getting his parole early enough, before he was destroyed by prison. He had a woman who loved him. She was a straight woman, and she married him. He suceeded because she shared his dream of helping unwanted children. They have done wonderful work together. They adopted children, and this is the case abolitionists are using. Yes, I say Carey's life was well worth saving. I knew it then, and I know it now. Carey was not and never would have been a killer, despite any of the big talk he indulged in as a young man.

However, the policeman, Gordon Sinclair, had an even greater right to life. Police Officer Sinclair was a good man, probably a better and stronger man than Carey. He would have done good things for his family, then three orphaned teenagers, and his wife. He would have done good things for many others because he was already doing good things up to his death. But no one to this day, with the exception of a few friends and policemen, seem to care as much about the Sinclairs as they do about Carey and Gordon. It would be hard to prove to the family, because I fought so hard to save Carey, but I care very much about what happened to Gordon Sinclair. He was my friend when I was a police reporter. He helped me, and I despised the crime which caused his death.

Sergeant Ron McKay, 46 of Delta, B.C. was threatened with death by a man named Ellery Stephen Long. Long's gun was seized because he was so dangerous, but under the law it was returned to him by a judge, even though it was known he was determined to kill. On November 2, 1975, he carried out his threat. Staff Sergeant McKay, with three other officers, answered a complaint at Long's house.

McKay was the first to the door. Long used a pump action sawed off shotgun and killed McKay. McKay's parents, in their late seventies, are magnificent people who enjoyed their retirement. They were on a trip in California with their motor home when this happened. They were finally found—after the funeral. They tell me that they sold their trailer because they know that if they get sick or into trouble somewhere in their travels, Ron will not be around, as he once was when his father fell ill. At that time he brought them home. They now sit in their rooms, these beautiful gentle people, saddened, their life over and their pleasure over because their son is gone.

Mrs. McKay, the man's mother, a gentle, elegant, grey haired lady, said to me:

I favour capital punishment. My son died needlessly. I would have no hesitation, if someone challenged me, to pull the lever that dropped the trap on my son's killer. Yes, it is revenge. But there is Long in prison, living off society for the rest of his life, mean vicious man who hates authority, who hates policemen. No doubt he will learn to hate guards more. Is he saying: 'I have nothing to lose'?

Constable Roger Pierlet, 23, stationed in Surrey, B.C., was expecting his parents to arrive from Quebec on March 29, 1974, to share the celebration of his engagement. When they arrived, they were told their son had been murdered. Even as they were flying west, John Miller, 29, of Langley and Vincent Cockriell, 19, of Powell River, had set out to kill a policeman. They pulled Pierlet into a chase. Cockriell described the rest. The policeman pulled them over, walked up to the car, and, bang, the young policeman was dead.

Miller, Cockriell, and Long are under sentence of death and no doubt among those waiting for the decision of this House on capital murder. Perhaps they, more than any others, are responsible for the public outcry for the restoration of capital punishment.

Some will say I should not cite cases as proof because they are just one or two instances. However, what greater proof can there be than the innocent dying at the hands of relentless killers who do not fear prison but who might fear execution?

I can list many, many more. On March 2, Ian Wood, then 23, who had bought a Swiss FN automatic by mail, went into a Jericho hostel, occupied by young travellers from all across Canada, sprayed gunfire all over the place hitting four people, and a fifth was injured jumping out of the window.

Richard Smith, 22, of North Bay, Ontario was shot in the face and required intensive care for two months and massive plastic surgery to repair his jaw and face. He was also shot in the left side of his chest and left shoulder, and his right index finger was knocked off. This was not murder, only because the medical care was intensive and excellent. However, he is maimed for life. Christopher Dilly, 22, of Toronto was shot in the right thigh and right femur. He required extensive hospital care and is still using crutches. Arthur Skolnik, 22, of Sillery, Quebec, was injured in the left thigh and shoulder and has still not fully recovered. Paul Alexander Visosky, 20, of Toronto was shot in the right chest and had a collapsed lung. Finally, Yves Pierre Dion, of Moncton, jumped out of the window and was injured. At 3.45 p.m. on June 24, 1975, Mrs. Frieda Buxbaum, 42, parked her car in Eaton's parking lot, in the centre of downtown Vancouver. She was planning to shop for her daughter's wedding the following week. A sex offender on day parole grabbed her before she got out of her car, bound her hands behind her back with a nylon stocking and strangled her. Her body was found there 12 hours later. This was the fourth assault on women in parking lots in that area. Her killer, when captured, complained that she should not have made so much noise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it is ten o'clock.

Mrs. Holt: May I finish tomorrow?

An hon. Member: Just call it ten o'clock.

Mrs. Holt: May I call it ten o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—DATE OF REPORT OF TASK FORCE REVIEW OF SEARCH AND RESCUE OPERATIONS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, on March 22 I brought to the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) the fact that this matter came to my attention as a result of an answer I received to a question I placed on the order paper. It appears that the lifeboats for air and sea rescue which are provided at certain bases in the Atlantic region, those 44 foot rescue boats which are supposed to provide a patrol and rescue capability, can only operate in a few inches of ice.

● (2200)

I pointed out in the House previously, Mr. Speaker, as a result of an announcement by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand), who was then minister of transport, that a news release he had issued proclaiming the provision of four new lifeboat bases left and obvious void. This included, for some reason that defies understanding, the whole west coast of Newfoundland, stretching some 400 miles between two bases CG114 in Burgeo on the southwest coast and CG109 on the northwest coast.

A map of the area would show this place two of the lifeboat bases on the east coast and the other two on the south and southwest coasts. There are six lifeboat bases in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia which hopefully provide adequate support and protection for Canadian fishermen.

It is impossible to reconcile how supposed marine experts can determine the future needs and announce that four new lifeboat bases will be established. A Transport Canada news release No. 3875 stated that these four bases would be established in New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and two in Nova Scotia to provide greater safety to all mariners within the radius of each boat, which means within 50 miles.

The release stated that the new three man lifeboats to join the Canadian coastguard would incorporate the latest technology and electronic aids to navigation and had been fitted with a complete range of life saving and rescue equipment.

When two fishermen are lost in the immediate vicinity of one of the bases, however, I must ask—and I put a question on the order paper—what action did the base in the locality take when that incident occurred? I am told that the lifeboat could not react because it could not operate except under conditions when the ice was less than a couple of inches thick. This is absolutely ridiculous, Mr. Speaker. What in the name of heaven is the purpose in having the bases and/or the lifeboats if they cannot react other than when conditions are perfect—when they are not needed.

How was the decision made to add new locations to an already concentrated area when some 300 to 400 miles of coastline in western Newfoundland were completely ignored? To my mind this shows complete inefficiency or lack of knowledge on the part of those who are supposed to know the situation.

Today I proposed a motion to focus attention on the fact that within the space of one week three fishermen were lost on the west coast of Newfoundland, two of them were lost just yesterday. Months ago I pointed out that this area would not be covered by the establishment of the four new bases. The only answer I ever received to my representations was that this would be taken into consideration in the review of national search and rescue policy and that the necessary documents for implementation are being prepared in consultation with the Department of Transport and the Department of National Defence and would be submitted to the cabinet with the policy.

In the meantime, however, we continue to lose fishermen. The latest figures indicate that the average rescue is one out of seven. No one seems to care or pay any attention to the fact that realistic representations are being made by members from Newfoundland who have sensible solutions to the problem.

The activity of the fishing season dictates that, unfortunately, more losses will occur, but it seems impossible to convince the government of the need for immediate action. The deployment of lifeboat bases must be reconsidered and action taken to cover areas not presently provided for. There must be a review of the location of new bases and a review of the capability of the present lifeboats to ensure that they can perform their mission, and that further losses can be avoided. I hope that whoever is going to answer will give me obvious, fundamental, and reasonable answers.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the recommendations resulting from an MOT task force report on marine search and rescue are now being finalized. The matter has been given high priority and I hope that it will be possible for the minister to make a detailed announcement shortly.

With regard to the lifeboat bases in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, 11 44-foot self-righting lifeboats have been in service with the Canadian coast guard since 1967, of which three are based in Newfoundland with one each in Burgeo, Twillingate, and St. Anthony. These self-righting craft were designed in the United States and adapted for use in Canada, and are now widely in use by the Royal National Lifeboat Institute in the United Kingdom.

These craft are tasked to operate as a shore based rescue craft to save life at sea and render aid to craft in distress in inshore coastal waters. They are kept either afloat, in a sheltered haven, or under cover on a slip. Their operation involves launching the boat, proceeding to the scene of an incident, probably not more than at a range of 30 to 40 miles, rescuing survivors from the sea or from another craft, some of whom may be injured, going alongside a broken down or stranded vessel, giving shelter and elementary care to injured people on board, taking in two and towing small craft, returning to base, and being hauled out. These close inshore operations can take place under most adverse weather conditions of wind and sea to be found on our coasts and in shallow water conditions of very heavy surf.

They have no secondary function and incorporate no features to interfere with the effective conduct of their primary mission for which they are eminently successful and suitable, and I would like to emphasize that the major characteristic which makes this craft so suitable operationally is the exceptional seaworthiness expected of a lifeboat. With a speed of 16 knots and an endurance of 20 hours, these craft are able to maintain way and perform their mission in extreme weather conditions, which is of overriding importance.

Manned by a crew of three men and capable of sheltering at least ten survivors, these craft are also fitted with fire-fighting equipment and towing bitts to meet emergencies at sea.

An examination of marine search and rescue incidents reported through the rescue co-ordination centres in Canada for 1974 may be of interest. Out of a total of 2,588 incidents across Canada, 122 were mercy and medical evacuation matters, 517 were in answer to distress calls, and 1,949 for other purposes such as towing.

Of the above figures, the number of incidents on the east coast in 1974 were 500, of which 28 were mercy and medical evacuation matters, 67 were in answer to distress calls, and 405 for other purposes. The number of incidents on the Newfoundland coast form part of the above, with two mercy and medical evaculation matters, 18 in response to distress calls, and 22 for other purposes.

We believe that these vessels are both successful and suitable for the task for which they are intended, that is, to aid fishermen during the fishing season.

However, Mr. Speaker, as has been mentioned before, we are not satisfied with our over-all marine search and rescue capacity in Canada, and we are hopeful that the task force recommendations will lead us quickly to a more satisfactory situation.

Adjournment Debate

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—POSSIBILITY RATIFICATION OF NON-PROLIFERATION TREATY BEING REQUIREMENT PRIOR TO SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTORS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last I raised with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) questions with respect to the sale of nuclear materials and technology to four of the major recipient countries that are presently prospective customers or former customers of ours.

I raised the whole issue of whether our government would require as a basic requirement with respect to a further or future sale of nuclear materials and technology ratification of the non-proliferation treaty. I do not think the Prime Minister fully understood the implications of the question because in his first response to me he seemed to suggest in one instance at least one had already taken place. I trust that the parliamentary secretary has since confirmed that there has been no ratification by any of the four recipient countries.

Miss Bégin: I have news for you.

● (2210)

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I shall be delighted to hear the news from the parliamentary secretary. The last word we had with respect to the four countries, India, Pakistan, South Korea, and Argentina, was that not one ratification had taken place. There appeared to be some preliminary signing by the government of South Korea, but I do not think this has constituted ratification. With respect to the Americans, something approaching 50 per cent of their customers have ratified the non-proliferation treaty. Certainly in this specific instance they are in much better shape than we are.

I am very much concerned, in addition, about the situation with respect to the so-called London Agreement, because of the fact that the London Agreement has never been made public, certainly not by our government. We are getting dribs and drabs of communication with respect to the situation concerning the agreement which has been reached by the seven supplier nations. I think it is terribly important that we get some idea as to the possible action which might be taken with respect to those seven supplier nations; we must know about future policies and what kind of public censure might arise. I say this particularly in view of recent reports in last week's New York Times with respect to the growing resentment on the part of the Common Market countries which make up Euratom with regard to the London Agreement.

As I say, we do not know the exact details of that agreement but we are concerned about changes in domestic nuclear policy in the United Kingdom. For some 20 years the government of the United Kingdom has depended for the supply of some basic nuclear materials on the United States. It has depended on that country particularly for the supply of one material, that of tritium, which is a component of H-bombs which is, in turn, derived from many ores although often associated with aluminum.

The speculation in the New York Times last week was that there may be some agreement between the government of the United Kingdom and the government of France with respect to the possibility of the development of some new nuclear weapons capability. Certainly the apparent action of the London club in blocking any direct information going to fellow Common Market countries has upset the remaining six. Apparently only late last week were the remaining six European countries informed of the agreement which was reached late last year by the so-called London club.

[Mr. Francis.]

The essence, I think, of the reason for raising this question has to do with the way in which there will be effective imposition of sanctions. There is no doubt that, as a result of the London meetings, new and stiffer anti-proliferation provisions are to be applied to most nuclear sales agreements around the world. Apparently safeguards are now extended to cover the entire useful life of any nuclear fuel by-product. I believe, however, that tougher standards are still possible, since the London club agreement fell short, I believe, of including the entire nuclear program of recipient nations.

The point which I have made in previous speeches, and will make again tonight, is that the whole question of safeguards does not in any way mean that sanctions will in fact function. Or, as I said in a previous speech outside this House, detection is not prevention. I believe that although safeguard agreements may make reference to the possibility that sanctions may be applied if a nation is caught circumventing agreement provisions, there is no indication from our government as to what sanctions might be enforced, by whom they will be enforced, what the sanctions themselves would be, and what verification procedures beyond those which presently exist would be operable.

We are well aware, I think, that the International Atomic Energy Agency in no way possesses sufficient resources of manpower and operating procedures to achieve the kind of verification which seems to be implied in the London Agreement. If ever there was an instance in which the justification of secrecy was unwarranted, this has to be the clearest example of it. When we think of the immediate and long term implications of the expansion of nuclear information and technology, the great jeopardy occasioned by the growth of nuclear weapons systems, and even the peaceful expansion of nuclear capability, we think there is a definite right for the public to know. I think that both present and future generations of citizens in this world will require that these seven nations, of which Canada is one, must assume a direct and immediate responsibility to make the details of these agreements public.

I have not yet been convinced by any argument so far put forward by the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) that there is sufficient justification to maintain the kind of secrecy which has existed with respect to the so-called London Agreement. In fact I think secrecy only weakens the capability of our government and other governments to enforce any useful or responsible sanctions. I look forward to hearing from the parliamentary secretary with respect to the questions that I put to the Prime Minister last week.

[Translation]

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the questions put to the right hon. Prime Minister by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) last Tuesday, May 4, all the more so because I noted three major errors in his questions and in his presentation this evening.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, Canada is not in the process of supplying nuclear reactors to Pakistan and India. The matter of pursuing nuclear co-operation further in ways other than through the sale of reactors, study launched way before a non-proliferation treaty was signed with those countries, is now still under consideration.

Here is the second error: the Republic of Korea ratified the non-proliferation treaty on April 23, 1975. Argentina, for its part, did not sign or ratify the treaty, but is aware of our views and wishes in the matter.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): What date?

Miss Bégin: I have just said Korea ratified the treaty on April 23—

[English]

I will repeat it in English if that suits my colleague opposite the better. On April 23, 1975, Korea ratified the treaty.

[Translation]

Signing the NPT is not a prerequisite for nuclear co-operation on a strictly commercial basis with other countries. Still, the implementation of international guarantees under the aegis of the International Atomic Energy Agency, which conform with Canada's own very strict criteria, is a prerequisite for such transactions. Argentine and the Republic of Korea accepted these safeguards. I would add, and I think it is very important that my colleague takes a note of this, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs tabled the text of the agreements with both countries in this House of January 30, 1976.

Endorsing the NPT is a prerequirement for help for bilateral nuclear development; there is a difference here, and I have already said so on the late show: from now on Canada will offer bilateral help only to those countries which adhere to the treaty. Furthermore, ratification of the treaty will be an important consideration in the financing of Canadian nuclear exports.

Before concluding my remarks, I would add, Mr. Speaker, that, contrary to what my colleague has just said, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has clearly outlined in this House, on March 23, the seven substantial points of the safeguards required on the initiative of Canada by the main supplier countries as far as nuclear co-operation and transaction are concerned; they are called London Club.

I would also add that we are deeply interested in the possibility that other suppliers could join the countries which already have held, as a result of the action taken by this country, many diplomatic talks. Those points are stated in the French official report of our proceedings, page 12064, March 23. I also think, Speaker, that it is important to note the House was regularly informed of the statements regulating our sales and our nuclear assistance and that the department is always ready to distribute additional copies. I also was pleased to discuss with several groups, among which some representatives of churches and others who came to meet the experts of the department.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.21 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 11, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PENSIONS

SUGGESTION WIDOWS OF PUBLIC SERVANTS, ARMED FORCES AND RCMP PERSONNEL BE ENTITLED TO PENSIONS REGARDLESS OF DATE OF MARRIAGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to present a motion which is of serious urgency to those who are adversely affected by the legislation as it now stands. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this House urges the President of the Treasury Board to introduce the necessary amendments so that widows of public servants, of Canadian Armed Forces and RCMP personnel and of others in corresponding categories, will be entitled to the pensions their husbands paid for regardless of the date of marriage, thus ending an instance of discrimination that is most unfair.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

BROADCASTING

ALLEGED LACK OF OBJECTIVITY OF INFORMATION CONCERNING CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion of pressing and urgent necessity.

In view of the fact that the main television stations, particularly the CBC French network, when reporting on Bill C-84 which provides for the abolition of capital punishment depict a noose in the background instead of the scale of justice or any other neutral symbol, thereby indicating a bias in favour of the criminal who is represented as a victim of the law, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette):

That the House immediately proceed to the consideration of this problem so that all information provided on the study of legislation on capital punishment be no longer biased, and misrepresentation and lack of objectivity in reporting be brought to an end.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion by the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There being not unanimous consent, the motion may not be put.

* * *

[English]

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT CLOSING OF DURHAM MEMORIAL HOSPITAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity and I would ask hon. members opposite to give my motion the serious consideration it deserves. It arises from the decision of a divisional court in Toronto yesterday that the Ontario government had acted illegally in its attempt to close four hospitals in Ontario, including Durham Memorial Hospital in Durham. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges):

That this House instructs the Minister of National Health and Welfare to use the moral and legal powers at his disposal to prevent the closing of Durham Memorial Hospital in Durham, Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Notwithstanding the rather generous interpretation that we have been able to put upon Standing Order 43 motions because of the time limit on them and the somewhat self-policing feature in that regard, I believe that Standing Order 43 does not permit us to bring within federal jurisdiction that which lies solely within provincial jurisdiction.

* * *

MANPOWER

SUGGESTED PROVISION OF FUNDS TO MUNICIPALITIES AND FARMERS TO AID IN THE CREATION OF JOBS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that unemployment in this country is up again this month to 7.4 per cent, the highest level since 1961, in view of the fact that this unemployment is likely to climb even higher in the coming months as students finish their school terms and are unable to find employment, in view of the fact that the government has already made this situation worse through the cancellation of the OFY program and in view of the fact that there are a large number of potential labour intensive activities during the summer both on farms and in many municipalities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan):

That this House instruct the government to establish immediately a program which would provide funds to municipalities and farmers in Canada, to enable them to offer employment, at at least the level of the federal minimum wage, to people who would otherwise be unemployed.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1410)

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROPOSED REMOVAL OF INCORPORATION AS PREREQUISITE TO STARTING BAND FARM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent of the House to present a motion arising from an urgent and pressing matter. Economic development funds for Indian Bands in Saskatchewan to start Band farms are being held back because the department requires that the Bands incorporate themselves. Incorporation could endanger the Bands' treaty rights and places their land in jeopardy. Because planting season is already well advanced, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this House directs the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to develop alternatives to incorporation so that these Bands can proceed with their farms this season without endangering their treaty rights.

Mr. Speaker: This motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ESTIMATED LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT AND OF REAL GROWTH—EFFECT OF LOWER CORPORATE TAX RATE AND FAST WRITE-OFFS ON JOB CREATION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, with today's alarming and tragic news for those involved that some three-quarters of a million Canadians are now out of work, and as the conference board and other research agencies have predicted that we would not reach a 7.4 per cent rate of unemployment until at least the fourth quarter of this year, yet we have now reached the 7.4 per cent unemployment rate in the second rather than the fourth quarter, does the Minister of Finance believe that unemployment will continue to increase so that we might even have 8 per cent unemployment by the year end?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would not like to make an estimate at this time.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed again to the Minister of Finance. As the conference board forecast of a 7.4 per cent unemployment rate by the fourth quarter is predicated on a 4.8 to 5 per cent increase in real growth in this country, and, as the minister himself has indicated, he hoped for a 5 per cent real growth, and with the unemployment rate at 7.4 per cent, does the minister believe that this is a valid indication that the real growth will be well below 5 per cent this year and, if so, what would he predict to be the real growth in the current year?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that a more sensitive analysis of the economic situation, both as to the unemployment rate and inflation, should be reserved for the budget statement in two weeks' time.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, as one of the most dramatic facts in today's sad unemployment figures is the large decrease in employment itself as opposed to the usual increase in the labour force, and in view of the fact that employment in the manufacturing industries has fallen off so badly there are only about 20,000 more jobs in that sector than there were on average in 1972, will the minister consider reconstituting the corporate tax measures review committee to ascertain whether the lower tax rate and faster write-off tax provisions of the minister's predecessor have had any permanent effect in creating jobs?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it again seems to me that reflections on the fiscal system are not appropriate at this time.

EFFECT OF ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM ON PROSPECTS FOR RECOVERY—EFFECT OF POOR BUSINESS PERFORMANCE ON JOB CREATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to go another round with the minister who seems to be at a loss for words regarding this very serious matter. I would advise the minister that corporate profits for the first quarter of the year appear to have dropped off sharply compared to last year. Is the minister in a position to say whether the anti-inflation program has dampened the prospects for an economic recovery? I ask him this question particularly when I understand he is going to tighten them up.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly true that corporate profits have been controlled by the anti-inflation program as, indeed, other areas of the community have been. I would think, however, that given the favourable response to restraints by leaders in the corporate sector this has not had the effect to which the hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, at least the minister is attempting to be honest at this particular time. Considering that the profitability of corporations is one of the main incentives for business to provide jobs, can the minister tell the House whether he anticipates the decline in corporate profits will continue and what effect continued poor business performance will have upon job creation this year?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could remind the hon. gentleman that corporate profits, just like individual earnings of workers, are of course restrained under the anti-inflation program.

Mr. Alexander: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to let the minister know that the United States rate of productivity and growth is excellent compared to ours which certainly is disastrous. Since the declining profit performance of our corporations is in sharp contrast to the healthy situation in the United States, would the minister explain the reasoning behind this very serious situation, bearing in mind that without a healthy profit situation our recovery is in jeopardy.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the healthy situation in the United States to which the hon. member refers is a 7.5 per cent rate of unemployment.

POSSIBILITY OF PROVISION FOR FULL EMPLOYMENT IN BUDGET

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance as well. It is in regard to the unemployment figures released today. They are the highest since 1961. I should like to ask the minister if he can indicate to the House whether it is his intention in the budget—without asking for the details of the budget because I realize we are a few weeks from budget time but I believe this is terribly important in light of the shocking unemployment figures—to introduce a full employment budget?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would intend to introduce a budget which would attempt to strike a balance between our rate of inflation and the rate of unemployment in Canada.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, since the minister has analyzed the economic situation in Canada as a cost-push situation, and under the circumstances the only justification if there is a justification for wage and price controls is that there is a cost-push situation, it seems to me the minister is now in a position to stimulate the economy very effectively by bringing in a full employment measure without worrying about inflation which he says is under control by the Anti-Inflation Board. I should like to ask the minister, in light of his own analysis, whether he is prepared to bring in a full employment budget?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I think I would emphasize the fact that, while the anti-inflation program has had some response to this point, it is and has been our intention that the impact should be gradual and that we should support and use appropriate fiscal and monetary policies. The government's views on what would be an appropriate fiscal policy will be indicated at budget time in two weeks.

* * *

MANPOWER

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO FIND EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of the figures released today showing a 7.4 per cent unemployment rate and in view of the fact that in the next month not only university students but also high school students will be finishing their school year and will be looking for jobs, several hundred thousand of them, I should like to ask the minister whether his department is working on any plans to find employment for more than the 12,000 students who will be given jobs under the plans announced by the minister up until now.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there are very elaborate efforts underway, and have been for some time in working with the private sector to stimulate the placement of students and young workers. There are no additional budgetary commitments decided upon in terms of programs like the Opportunities for Youth program at this time.

* * *

[Translation]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN SUGAR PRICES—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Can the minister tell the House whether an inquiry was conducted lately to determine if the sugar price increase announced a while ago by the refineries is justified, if not does he intend to order such an inquiry and, if necessary, not only sue but condemn the refineries concerned, which are getting as greedy as the oil companies?

● (1420)

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, investigations are conducted by a quasi judicial board, and it is not the practice for a minister to reveal what investigations are taking place unless it is made public knowledge by some third party.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PERSON RESPONSIBLE FOR INDUCING LABOUR TO RETURN TO LABOUR RELATIONS AND ECONOMIC COUNCILS—DATE OF RETURN

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that it has been some weeks now since the CLC withdrew from the Canada Labour Relations Council and the Economic Council of Canada, can the minister tell the House who in the cabinet is charged with the responsibility of seeking ways and means to bring labour representation back to these two important organizations?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, certainly it is part of my responsibilities and of those of some other ministers to try to deal with labour in as constructive a way as possible to make it easier for them, when they think the time is right, to re-enter these bodies where they have a real role to play in terms of their own success and in terms of the benefit to the labour movement in general.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, on May 4 the Minister of Labour said that labour's withdrawal from the Canada Labour Relations Council is, he hopes, only temporary. Labour withdrew in opposition to controls, and they will not end for another two and one half years. In view of this, has the minister any real grounds for advising that labour's withdrawal is only temporary or are we in fact looking to labour's refusal to participate until the control program is ended? What is the real truth of the matter?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to try to analyse what is going through the thought processes of each individual labour leader in the country with respect to what the hon. member has asked. All I can say is that I think it should be underlined that labour has withdrawn from these bodies; they have not resigned nor have they quit. It should be pointed out that their withdrawal paves the way for their participation later when they think the time might be appropriate. As to when is the appropriate time, I am afraid that is a question they will decide themselves, and certainly the CLC convention coming up next week will have a part to play in that.

MEETINGS WITH LABOUR OR PROPOSALS FOR RETURN TO PARTICIPATION IN GOVERNMENT BODIES

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Can the minister tell the House whether he or other members of the cabinet have actually met with CLC, and especially whether the government has put any proposals to the CLC as a basis for their return to participation, or is there an absolute deadlock at the moment? Let us find out what the situation really is.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I have talked to some of the leaders of the CLC. In terms of my other colleagues' responsibilities as they involve the labour movement, I believe they have been discussing those questions with the CLC. Certainly at the CLC's last presentation to the cabinet, as the hon. member may recall, they indicated they would welcome discussions on other subject matters having to do with policies which may evolve once the control period is over. They indicated a willingness to meet with the Prime Minister and others at that time. I believe discussions are going on now with respect to having meetings over a wide range of subject matters being undertaken fairly shortly.

[Mr. Fraser.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN RESPONSE TO UNITED STATES PROPOSAL TO MINE NICKEL FROM SEABED—DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and at the same time I welcome him back to the House from his many travels. On Friday, April 30, I addressed a question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister about the Canadian attitude to United States proposals for mining the deep seabed, and the Prime Minister replied that he would inquire. Since then, the Law of the Sea Conference has issued a revised single negotiating text which includes a production control formula for nickel found on the international seabed. This formula will permit production of seabed nickel to increase by a minimum of 6 per cent per year. Since Canada is a major land-based producer of nickel, this formula is obviously of very great concern to us, and I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External affairs what the Canadian response was to this particular proposal.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we opposed this particular proposal which was suggested for the text of the Law of the Sea convention. We made our concerns known to the United States delegation to the Law of the Sea Conference at New York. During my visit to Nairobi I had an opportunity to make representations directly to Dr. Kissinger with respect to this proposal and its possible effects on Canadian land-based production. We agreed that further consultations should take place between the two countries with respect to this proposal.

Mr. Crouse: In his speech to the Law of the Sea Conference on April 8 Dr. Kissinger said that if the deep seabeds are not subject to international agreement, the United States can and will proceed to explore and mine on its own, but he added that the U.S. would prefer partial international control through a council which should reflect the interests of producer and consuming states most concerned with deep sea mining. Canada is clearly one of these, and I therefore ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether Canada has been having bilateral discussions with the U.S. on the subject of the use of the international seabed, and if so, what has been the substance of these discussions?

Mr. MacEachen: This particular proposal emerged quite late in the day in New York, and to my recollection Canada was not involved in any discussions with respect to this formula until it surfaced within the text itself. At that point we registered our opposition to the particular formulation, and we will continue to register our opposition and hopefully make proposals which will serve Canada's interests better. I do not believe it is the intention of the United States to overcome its problems by creating problems for Canada.

URBAN AFFAIRS

EFFECT ON HABITAT CONFERENCE OF THREATENED STRIKE BY TELEVISION EMPLOYEES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the crippling effect the threatened walk-out of NABET employees could have on both the on-site exhibits and the worldwide transmission of the proceedings of Habitat, could the minister inform the House what prior indication he had that such a walkout would take place, and what contingency plans have been made to deal with such an eventuality?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is not as catastrophic a situation as indicated. So far as the internal official arrangements for the conference are concerned, they are well in hand. It would be a sad affair if the television transmission of this very important conference were lost in Canada and in all the world, and it would not be in the best interests of Canadians or the people of the world, who would benefit from this conference. There are contingency plans. I presume if an agreement is not reached before the conference, the position of the host broadcaster would be jeopardized, which would, in my view, be a tragedy.

* * *

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

EFFECT OF DISPUTE WITH EMPLOYEES ON TELEVISING HABITAT CONFERENCE AND OLYMPIC GAMES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my supplementary question to the Secretary of State. Can the minister tell the House how a dispute between NABET and the CBC involving a 2 per cent wage rollback by the Anti-Inflation Board was allowed to mushroom into a situation which places in jeopardy—regardless of what the Minister of State for Urban Affairs says—Canada's reputation as a host for major international events, particularly in the light of statements made by NABET employees and leaders implying that the proposed Habitat walkout may be followed by one prior to the Olympics and other major events?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would have to get a report on that from the corporation. Perhaps the Minister of Labour has something he might like to add.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON NATIVE RIGHTS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question regarding the government's recognition in principle of native rights and aboriginal title for native people in Canada. I should like to ask if the Prime Minister is prepared today to advise the House whether the government is in any way responding to the many submissions made since 1973 to the cabinet by the Metis and non-status Indians in regard to their very special rights in our society?

● (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there have been several meetings with various native leaders and the cabinet which has given consideration to their requests.

Mr. Oberle: A supplementary question. May I ask the Prime Minister if he would identify the very special situation that the forgotten people of Metis and non-status Indians are facing, particularly is there any discussion or dialogue with these people in areas where we are now researching and considering native claims, namely the territories of our country?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that is one aspect of their requests and the federal government has agreed to give it consideration. The hon. member realizes, of course, that the federal government's first preoccupation was with the status Indians, those who do come under the administrative authority of the federal government. The others, the Metis, are provincial citizens. Like every other provincial citizen we hope the provincial governments will not consider them to be forgotten citizens, to use the expression of the hon. member.

* * *

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON REVIEW OF CLAUSE BOYCOTTING TRADE WITH ISRAEL

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. On May 8, 1975, speaking about the Arab boycott the Prime Minister said in the House, as reported at page 5583 of Hansard:

> ... that this type of practice is alien to everything the government stands for and, indeed, to what in general Canadian ethics stand for, ...

However, the then minister of industry, trade and commerce told the House on June 2, 1975, as reported at page 6326 of Hansard:

> ... the government as a whole will be considering this matter in the very near future. The view of the government will be communicated, of course, to all departments and to the Crown corporation.

A year has gone by since the Prime Minister's words, but no government decision on this matter has as yet been announced. I am asking if the Prime Minister can inform the House what he can do to ensure that his words of May 8, 1975 will be confirmed by cabinet as the current official government policy and will therefore be firmly applied and followed by all government departments and agencies without further delay?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's concern on this very important matter.

Mr. Alexander: He wants action.

Mr. Trudeau: I will inquire to ascertain the status of any progress in that particular case.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MINING NICKEL FROM THE SEABED—INVOLVEMENT OF WORKERS IN DEVELOPING STRATEGY FOR NEGOTIATIONS—POSITION TAKEN BY INCO

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the grave concern felt among residents of predominently nickel producing areas such as the Sudbury basin concerning the possible effects of the development of undersea nickel, can the minister inform the House and assure the people of these areas that the workers' representatives will be involved in the development of any strategy or negotiations between Canada, the United States and other nickel producing countries?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to point out that this proposal, which surfaced at the Law of the Sea Conference, has not even been discussed in the committee responsible for the international seabed authority, let alone negotiated. As I stated earlier, Canada finds this proposal quite unacceptable. The Law of the Sea delegation has authority to involve industry and union representatives in discussions, particularly with respect to the fisheries and I am sure this particular approach could be followed in consideration of mineral production.

Mr. Rodriguez: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I certainly hope that the minister will invite representatives of the miners to participate. In view of the fact that the International Nickel Company is Canada's major producer of nickel, in view of the importance of nickel to Canada's economy and in view of the reports that International Nickel Company is involved in the consortium which will be taking the nickel from the floor of the ocean, has the minister been able to determine whether INCO, and particularly its Canadian subsidiary, has been supporting the United States proposal? Can he inform the House whether INCO will support this government's position rather than what is in the best interests of International Nickel?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm either point of the hon. member's question but I shall make inquiries.

* * *

GEOGRAPHICAL SITES

POSSIBILITY NAME OF MOUNT EISENHOWER WILL BE CHANGED TO ORIGINAL NAME OF CASTLE MOUNTAIN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on a matter of national importance with particular relationship to our friendship with the United States. In 1946 the Right Honourable Mackenzie King designated Castle Mountain in British Columbia as Mount Eisenhower in appreciation of the tremendous services rendered by General Dwight Eisenhower during the days of the war as Supreme Commander. In the last couple of weeks it has been stated in the press that the name is to be changed, that name Eisenhower is to be removed and Castle take its place again. May I ask the minister what the position is in this regard because I feel that this change of name cannot but have a detrimental effect on the feelings of our veterans in Canada who honoured Eisenhower as he honoured them and Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe the name of Mount Eisenhower has the support of the vast majority of the Canadian people. Many Canadians served with great distinction and many members of this House served with great distinction under the leadership of the Supreme Allied Commander. I have been made aware that from time to time residents close to the scene have requested that the mountain revert to its former name. I, for one, think it would be a great pity if General Eisenhower's name were dissociated from that particular mountain. I can assure the right hon. member that no decision has been taken to re-name the mountain Castle Mountain.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the answer given by a very distinguished soldier of the last war who served under General Eisenhower. I bring to his attention, however, that the board in charge of naming geographic sites in Canada has announced that the change has been made and will be effective in a very short time with the approval of the government of Canada. May I have the minister's assurance that no matter what that board recommends, this name will not be changed because that could only result in bitter feelings among those who served, as he did, as well as to Americans in general on the occasion of their bicentennial?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the right hon. gentleman that the matter has not come to cabinet and has not received the approval of the government of Canada.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSION BETWEEN GENERAL DARE, COLONEL BOURNE AND PRIME MINISTER CONCERNING INVESTIGATION OF LEAKED LETTER

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I should like to ask whether he had any discussion with General Dare or Colonel Bourne last Wednesday or Thursday or both of them during which the matter of the Dare-Bourne leaked letter was discussed? If so, did either General Dare or Colonel Bourne or any RCMP officer or official inform the Prime Minister of any action intended to be taken to determine the explanation of how the letter was leaked?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I had no such meeting with any or either or both of those gentlemen. The headline to the effect that I was summoning General Dare were completely erroneous, in fact without any foundation. I have not spoken to General Dare in, I would say, months.

POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSION BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND GENERAL DARE CONCERNING PARTI QUÉBÉCOIS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would then ask the Prime Minister, in view of the appearance of this sentence in the leaked letter from General Dare:

When I discussed the criteria used to investigate the Parti Québécois and its members with the Prime Minister, he stated that the security service of the RCMP does not have a mandate . . .

In view of the fact that the Prime Minister is endeavouring to leave the impression that General Dare is mistaken with respect to a cabinet decision, can the Prime Minister say whether he had such a discussion with General Dare and whether he stated that the RCMP had no mandate to do the thing the general said in his letter the Prime Minister said?

● (1440)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I read the answer which the Solicitor General gave to this, and it was substantially correct, in that the discussion to which, presumably, General Dare is alluding is a discussion in a cabinet committee which resulted in the cabinet decision. It is that decision, I imagine, to which General Dare is referring to when he talks of a guideline to directions. I repeat, it is an honest error on his part. It is certainly one of the incorrect statements in that letter.

CONSIDERATION OF FITNESS OF GENERAL DARE TO REMAIN IN OFFICE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since General Dare appears to be quite specific in referring to a discussion which he, General Dare, had with the Prime Minister, and, indeed, goes on in that sentence to tell Colonel Bourne what the Prime Minister said, in view of the high position which General Dare holds as head of the security services of this country, he, obviously, being a very meticulous policeman, has the Prime Minister, or cabinet, given any consideration to his fitness to remain in office, in view of the statement he has made concerning the Prime Minister?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, certainly, the cabinet has given no such consideration, nor have I, myself. Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is making a serious suggestion, I will consider the matter. I have given my reaction in this House. I think General Dare is a very distinguished officer. I worked with him when he was in DND, and since he has been in the security services. I have always found him extremely competent. I can only explain this as an honest mistake. It is certainly not a deliberate attempt to mislead Mr. Bourne.

An hon. Member: Was it not an attempt to discredit?

Mr. Trudeau: The mistake probably arises from the fact that as a member of that cabinet committee, I did of course participate. I do not mind admitting I was one of those who would argue that a democratic political party should not be under systematic surveillance by the RCMP.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: My opinion on that, which was expressed in cabinet, is certainly protected by the usages concerning cabinet secrecy, but I do not mind repeating it here. It is my view and the view of the government that if the party is legal, it should not be under surveillance systematically by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or any other police. I hope that is the view of the other side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: What was incorrect, Mr. Speaker, was the inference drawn by General Dare from that decision in the paragraph which begins, "Consequently we believe," or whatever else the paragraph said. This inference, that because the party is not under surveillance the government does not want to have security clearances on everyone who occupies a sensitive position in the federal government, is wrong. It is erroneous. It is one of the mistakes I pointed out in the letter. I attenuate that, and see the attenuation of that mistake in the fact that General Dare himself in that very phraseology indicated that this whole matter should be referred to a cabinet committee for further elucidation, which indicates to my mind that he had some doubts about the conclusions he was drawing. As I explained to the House and to the press, if this unfortunate leak had not taken place, the matter would have been straightened in the normal manner and General Dare would have drawn the right conclusions.

* * *

FINANCE

ALLEGATION FEDERAL GOVERNMENT WOULD OVERLOOK RATE INCREASES OF B.C. INSURANCE CORPORATION IN RETURN FOR AGREEMENT ON ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In a recent column in the Vancouver Sun, Alan Fotheringham stated as a fact that the province of British Columbia and the federal government had entered into a verbal deal whereby the federal government would overlook the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia's rate increases if the provincial government would enter the anti-inflation program. Since this agreement supposedly was entered into in the Minister of Finance's office on December 23, 1975 with the collusion of B.C. labour minister Alan Williams and B.C. finance minister Evan Wolfe, would the minister confirm or deny that any such verbal agreement was made and can he give the House any details of this meeting?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would say that the report by Mr. Fotheringham is erroneous. There was no such agreement, in those terms. On the occasion of that particular meeting, which was very shortly after the Bennett government had taken responsibility in British Columbia, I met with the B.C. ministers and described to them the tenor of discussions which had taken place in the federal-provincial meetings and, particularly, the insistence of provincial governments that their price setting responsibilities and taxation measures should not be subject to the jurisdiction of the Anti-Inflation Board. This was the position of the provinces generally. I made it clear that this was the basis on which negotiations had been carried on with several provinces. I think it was clearly understood on both sides that the meeting was for information purposes only. There were no agreements arrived at that day. Indeed, only recently has there been full acceptance by British Columbia of the program.

* * *

URBAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED REPORT INDICATING EXCESSIVE COST OF CARLSBAD SPRINGS SITE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Is the minister aware of reports to the effect that there exists an engineering study undertaken by J. L. Richards and Associates of Ottawa which indicates that the development of the satellite city at Carlsbad Springs in the national capital area would cost as much as $300 million more than a normal site? Has the minister seen this report?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with that particular report. I have seen several engineering reports submitted by distinguished and experienced experts in the field indicating that there is some additional cost for servicing that land. Considering the initial cost of the land, its strategic value and value for development, these costs are quite acceptable and the net cost of developing that land is less than it otherwise would be.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the minister to examine the report. If that report is correct, does he feel that an extra $300 million is acceptable to the government for the development of housing programs intended for that property? Will he undertake to use his best efforts to secure a copy of that report and consult with provincial authorities, particularly in view of reports saying that the Carlsbad Springs development is such that in terms of pollution in the national capital area and beyond it poses a greater prospect of difficulty than the development in the south Rideau site?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I have examined, as have my officials, any evidence which would indicate any change or anything different from what was known previously. I have had no indication that what the hon. member suggests is the case. Naturally, as the hon. gentlemen had drawn the matter to my attention, I shall look into it.

* * *

[Translation]

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF ADEQUATE SUPPLY OF SWINE FLU VACCINE

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

During the important statements made some time ago about the Canadian government's intentions regarding the threat of a swine flu epidemic this fall or next winter, the minister indicated that he was awaiting an early answer from American authorities as to the quantity of vaccines the United States will be able to provide Canada and the time necessary to get them. Can the minister now tell the House whether he received that answer and at the same time whether there are any new developments either about these talks with the United States or about the current progression of the disease?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am still waiting patiently for an answer from the American government. Still I can tell the hon. member that we managed to get confirmation about sizeable orders of vaccines from countries other than the United States, especially Australia and Great Britain, and the exact quantity of vaccines will be made public today or tomorrow. But we also continue our consultations with the United States and other countries.

* * *

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

POSSIBILITY OF EARLY END TO PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of Premier Schreyer's assertion during the weekend that, in his opinion, the anti-inflation program will probably be lifted next year owing to the non-acceptance of controls by the public, did the Prime Minister in his recent meeting with provincial premiers discuss the possibility of lifting the controls program; and, if so, in those discussions was a date considered?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no. On the contrary, I indicated that the anti-inflation program was a matter of law; the law was for three years and that was still our intention.

* * *

● (1450)

FINANCE

ALLEGED LOSS OF GOLD RESERVES—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It arises out of recent news that Canada lost over $20 million worth of gold reserves in the latest reported period. Was this as a result of a change in government policy? Will the minister advise why this reduction occurred and where the reserves went?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will have to make inquiries and report to the hon. member.

AGRICULTURE

PROPOSAL THAT EGG MARKETING AGENCY BE SOLE IMPORTER—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In light of reports that the National Food Products Marketing Council has recommended that CEMA be appointed first receiver of imported eggs, does this mean that agency will replace those in the private sector as the sole importer of eggs? Can the minister advise whether he supports that recommendation of the Council? If so, has he urged its acceptance upon his cabinet colleagues?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have already made my feelings public. I am sure the hon. member is aware of them. I do support it and I have recommended to my cabinet colleagues that they study it. They are doing this at the present time. No decision has yet been made.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL THAT EGG MARKETING AGENCY BE SOLE IMPORTER—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has the minister had an opportunity to review the recommendation of the National Food Products Marketing Council? Is he now in accord with the recommendation that CEMA be designated first receiver and thus become the sole importer of eggs into Canada?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have never been in favour of CEMA being first receiver of eggs into Canada, thus creating a monopoly situation of which I do not approve. Nothing in the Council's argument has changed my opinion.

* * *

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED STATEMENTS OF MR. SEARLE CONCERNING SOCIAL SECURITY AND JUSTICE BERGER—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In light of remarks by Mr. David Searle last week to the effect that federal social security programs should be cut in the north, will the minister tell the House whether this prominent Liberal spokesman was speaking on behalf of the government?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know, Mr. Searle is the Speaker and a member of the Northwest Territories Council. He was speaking in his own right as an elected representative, not for the federal government.

Mr. Neil: Does the minister approve of the statements of David Searle concerning the ethics of Mr. Justice Berger, a federal government appointee?

Mr. Buchanan: No, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to receiving the report of Mr. Justice Berger.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST GOVERNMENT URGE POLAND TO ALLOW REUNIFICATION OF FAMILIES IN CANADA

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that Canada strongly supported the agreement on the reunification of families signed in Helsinki last year or the year before, will he now avail himself of the opportunity during the forthcoming visit of the Minister of External Affairs from Poland to urge that country to liberalize or relax its regulations and restrictions with regard to the reunification of Polish citizens and their families in Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I certainly intend to take advantage of the presence of the Polish foreign minister in Ottawa later this week to discuss the question of family reunification, as I did on the occasion of my visit to Poland some months ago. I should say to my hon. friend that since that discussion, there has been some improvement and some action on a number of such cases. I hope the discussion this week will serve as a further impetus to additional solutions.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

SUGGESTION CANADA AID THE RESETTLEMENT OF EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS IN ITALY

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Have instructions gone out to immigration officials in Milan to facilitate the handling of cases with regard to family reunification and other cases on humanitarian and compassionate grounds concerning the victims of the earthquake in Italy?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have been in telephone conversation with our representative in Milan. He reports that at the moment there is no significant increase in the number of applications. In any event, we have asked him to go from Milan to visit the stricken area and give us a further report. In the meantime, our instructions are that all applications by residents of Northern Italy will be processed with very high priority. We are identifying whether such applicants have a sponsor or relatives in Canada who can sponsor or nominate them. That information will be communicated to the relevant immigration office in Canada so that we can look up the relatives and interview them in order that we can expedite the applicant's submission.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

BASIS ON WHICH WARRANT ISSUED TO SEARCH OFFICES OF TORONTO "SUN"

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. It is the same question I put to the Minister of Justice yesterday. However, he was not able to answer at that time. It relates to the case of the RCMP search of the Toronto Sun offices. Can the minister now advise whether the warrant was issued on the basis of information under section 11(1) of the Official Secrets Act or on subsection (2) on the order of an officer of the RCMP who considered that a grave emergency existed and in the interest of safety that the state take immediate action?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the warrant was not issued under section 11(2) which deals with emergencies. It was issued under section 11(1) by Justice of the Peace Gabor Papy in Toronto.

Mr. Brewin: As the information would have to be based upon a sworn statement with regard to the matter, can the minister either table or give us now the information as to what was sworn, and who made the oath?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the warrant was issued to Corporal Colter of the Criminal Investigation Branch of the RCMP on the basis of alleged illegal acts under section 4(1)(A) of the Official Secrets Act which makes it an offence for anyone to communicate in any way the contents of a classified document to an unauthorized person.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT OF INQUIRY INTO BEEF INDUSTRY—POSSIBLE RECOMMENDATION OF MORE GOVERNMENT REGULATION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. It is a follow up on my request yesterday, under Standing Order 43, to ask the government if the report of the special beef inquiry which the Prime Minister called for some time ago, and which I believe was given to him on April 27, would be tabled in the House so that we may all see it. Is the Prime Minister now in a position to table the report so that the Canadian public, in particular the producers in Canada, can see specifically what the beef inquiry report has to say?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did receive this report a couple of weeks ago. I will discuss with the Minister of Agriculture our future plans in this regard.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary to the Minister of Agriculture who surely must have had time to read the report and talk to his officials, who also would have read the report. Does the report give any indication as to greater government involvement of regulation in the beef industry in Canada?

[Mr. Andras.]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will have to be patient. I hope next week to study the report and discuss it with my assistant deputy minister who is in charge of it. He is now attending a preliminary meeting in Rome with the World Council on Food.

* * *

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF TEN CENT TAX ON GASOLINE—EFFECT OF TAX ON INFLATION

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the 10 cents per gallon gasoline tax is a mean tax and the recent first ministers' conference as well as the statement of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce have brought to a head the fact that there will be an increase in the well head price of oil, resulting in a substantial rise in the price of gasoline, will the minister consider now removing or reducing that tax?

● (1500)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. gentleman that this tax is used to fund the subsidy that is paid in those parts of Canada which are not using oil from Canadian sources.

Mr. Towers: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Minister of Finance consider the 10 cents a gallon gasoline tax has a multiplying detrimental effect on the Canadian economy and adds to inflation, and that as the price rises on the Canadian market the subsidy will become less?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the proceeds from the tax are used to keep down the price of oil in significant parts of Canada, I would not regard it as detrimental.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

TABLING OF REPORTS OF ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES COMMISSIONS

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to sections 19 and 21 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, chapter E-2, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, to lay upon the table of the House certified copies of the reports of the Electoral Boundaries Commissions received this day from the Representation Commissioner as follows: Alberta and amendments thereto, British Columbia and amendments thereto, Northwest Territories and amendments thereto,

Nova Scotia, without amendment, and Quebec and amendments thereto.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to rise on a point of order because, as Your Honour knows, I have never raised a point of order before in respect to a decision made by Your Honour. However, in this instance I believe it is appropriate. I should like to seek clarification of the decision Your Honour made earlier with respect to the motion that I attempted to move under Standing Order 43, and to bring to Your Honour's attention some of my concerns about the implications of such a decision. I recognize that it would be inappropriate for me to challenge the decision that you made; I am merely seeking clarification of it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether I might be permitted to hear the point of order that is being raised by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo.

Mr. Beatty: In your ruling, Your Honour indicated that the federal government did not have jurisdiction with respect to the issue of hospital closings in Ontario. The effect of your decision prevented one of the members of the House, myself, from attempting to get the government to take effective action through the powers it has both legally and morally to try to prevent the closure of hospitals in Ontario.

The reason I raised the motion was necessitated by the decision given yesterday by a court in Ontario which held that the decision of the provincial government to close a number of hospitals, including one in my constituency, was illegal. At this point the Ontario government has indicated that it is reconsidering the decision that it made and an announcement will be made by the minister or acting minister, probably tomorrow. What I was attempting to do in my motion was to have the House require the government to take action, through whatever powers it possesses, to mitigate against the closure of the hospital.

As Your Honour may or may not know, the federal government pays about one-half the cost of hospital services in Ontario. About two weeks ago Your Honour allowed me to move a motion under Standing Order 43—the terms of which were very similar—with respect to a legal agreement to which both the federal and provincial governments were party. I refer to the memorandum of agreement that was signed in 1957 and which constitutes a contract between the federal and provincial authorities. That agreement outlines the terms under which federal assistance is given to the province for the provision of medical services and it specifically mentions provision of services by the hospital in Durham, Ontario.

One of the provisions in that memorandum of agreement was that neither party could change the terms of the agreement without the agreement of the second party. In other words, the provincial government could not discontinue provision of services that it had agreed to provide in the agreement without the consent of the federal authority, specifically the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The point that I was trying to make in my motion, Mr. Speaker, was that there is a direct federal involvement here, both financially and legally. My motion was designed to get the government to act directly on the legal powers it has to prevent the closure of that hospital. By making the ruling you did, Your Honour prevented the House from instructing the government to take whatever action it could to keep the hospital open. It would allow the federal minister to claim that he has no responsibility in this matter when clearly, if the federal government refuses to use what moral and legal authority it has to keep the hospital open, it is complicit in the decision that has been made to close the hospital. This is a matter of extreme urgency since the health and lives of the residents of the area will be placed in jeopardy as a consequence.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member raises a point of great interest and importance. Nevertheless, it has been repeated here several times over the past few weeks, in various question periods and in other ways when attempts have been made to raise this subject, that the question of the decision to close hospitals in the province of Ontario is solely within the authoritative jurisdiction of the province.

The hon. member has raised a point of disagreement. The Chair has to take the view that, regardless of the liberties enjoyed under Standing Order 43, that order is certainly not wide enough to permit us to put before the House, even with unanimous consent, the suggestion that the House can debate a matter that is beyond its jurisdiction.

I have taken the view that the decision to close a hospital in the province of Ontario is perhaps similar to questions of education, one of the very few which seems to be clearly within the jurisdiction of the provinces. If there is some aspect of it that the hon. member feels brings it within the jurisdiction of this House, I would be delighted to see him phrase a motion that might spell that out. But certainly his motion today fell far short of that.

* * *

[Translation]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Fifteenth report of Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, in both official languages (Mr. Comtois).

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TRANSIT PIPELINES—TABLING OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table, in both official languages, the ad referendum text of an agreement between the government of Canada and the government of the United States of America concerning transit pipelines.

Order Paper Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3,517, 3,801 to 3,803, 3,836, 3,842, 3,855 and 5,026.

[Text]

PERSONNEL DEALING WITH ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

Question No. 3,517—Mr. Cossitt:

Since July 8, 1974, what additions or subtractions have been made to the list of persons in the Office of the President of the Privy Council who have in any way been dealing with the answers to questions on the Order Paper (a) what is the reason in each case for any additions (b) what are their qualifications (c) what is their employment history with the Public Service?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Since the President of the Privy Council has responsibility for co-ordinating the responses of the Government to questions on the Order Paper it is not possible to say that any person in his Office has not in some way dealt with answers to such questions. The principal co-ordination activity for the Government is not undertaken in the Office of the President of the Privy Council, but is performed by the Office of the Co-ordinator of Parliamentary Returns.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—LANGUAGE TRAINING SCHOOL

Question No. 3,801—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to page 74 of the report of the Auditor General for the year ended March 31, 1975 which stated that $36,000 was paid under contract guarantee to a language training school for which no services were received as the attendance of Statistics Canada personnel was below the guaranteed minimum (a) what is the name and address of the language school (b) what are the names and job designations of all persons connected with Statistics Canada who are responsible for such low attendance (c) have steps been taken to see that this situation will not occur in another year and, if so, what are such steps?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The Auditor General's report has been referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts where questions related to the report can be raised.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—CBC

Question No. 3,802—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to page 63 of the report of the Auditor General for the year ended March 31, 1975 stating that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation did not record an amount of $14,053,000 interest on loans from the government in its 1975 financial statement (a) what are the names and job designations of all CBC officials responsible for the failure to report (b) what are the reasons given by such persons for not reporting such interest (c) what steps have been taken to deal with those responsible for this matter and to prevent any recurrence in the future?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): See reply to Question No. 3,801 answered this day.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—POST OFFICE

Question No. 3,803—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to page 70 of the report of the Auditor General for the year ended March 31, 1975 which stated that losses amounting to $40,000 and $48,000 occurred on December 7 and December 10, 1974 to the Post Office Department as a result of two forged certified cheques in payment for postage stamps (a) at what specific post offices did such loss occur (b) was the authenticity of the cheques established as required by post office procedures and, if not, what is the name of the person and job designation who neglected to follow such procedure (c) what are the reasons that such procedure was not followed?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): See reply to Question No. 3,801 answered this day.

PEI—FISHING SECTOR

Question No. 3,836—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. With reference to the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan, have measures been taken since the Plan's inception to improve opportunities for off-season employment for fishermen and, if so, what are they?

2. What are the (a) specific objectives the measures have been designed to achieve (b) criteria used in evaluating their effectiveness?

3. Since the Plan's inception, what have been the percentage increases for each year over the previous year in the (a) number of fishermen in PEI (b) number of fishermen engaged in off-season employment (c) average income received by individual fishermen from off-season employment based on constant dollars?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and of the Environment as follows: 1. Yes. The measures include education and training of fishermen and the broadening and strengthening of other sectors.

2. (a) The education and training programs aim to make the person qualified for a broader range of jobs. The provision of jobs and the creation of conditions in which the people of Prince Edward Island can develop viable economic enterprises for themselves are the objectives of the second measure. (b) The criteria used in evaluating their effectiveness are: retention rates, flexibility of the education system, the quality of education, levels of individual achievement, participation in the development activities arising from the Plan, the number of jobs, per capita income and gross provincial product.

3. (a) See following table. (b) Information not available. (c) Information not available.

Number of Fishermen, P.E.I. 1965-1975
Percentage of Change Over the Previous Year

Year	Number of Fishermen	Percentage Change
1965	3566
1966	3220	- 9.70
1967	3369	4.62
1968	3301	- 2.01
1969	2965	-10.17
1970	2801	- 5.53
1971	2677	- 4.42
1972	3210	19.91
1973	2636	-17.88
1974	2610	- 0.98

PEI—COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Question No. 3,842—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. With reference to the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan, what measures have been implemented which are designed to keep fish (a) fresher (b) in better condition prior to delivery to regular refrigeration facilities?

2. For each year since 1965, what is the estimated percentage of the total market value of the PEI fish catch which is lost due to spoilage prior to its delivery to regular refrigeration facilities?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and of the Environment as follows: 1. (a) Measures to keep fish fresher include the provision of ice and better handling facilities. (b) Measures to keep fish in better condition prior to delivery to regular refrigeration facilities include the provision of ice, water supply, port infrastructure, better handling facilities, education and extension work.

2. Statistics on spoilage are not collected.

PEI—COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Question No. 3,855—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. With reference to the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan, is there a general policy of encouraging consolidation in processing of the major fish catches while developing localized processing capabilities for specialized fish products and, if not, for what reason?

2. Would significant economies of scale be achieved through consolidation of the processing of major fish stocks and, if so, what (a) is the optimum number of plants that should be in operation for major fish stock processing (b) type of saving would such economies of scale represent (c) would be the cost of such consolidation in jobs and incomes?

3. How many small scale plants for the processing of specialty fish products (a) are now in operation (b) would be economically viable in PEI based on (i) catch statistics for recent years (ii) estimated catch statistics following a vigorous programme of aquaculture and increasing the take of existing stocks up to maximum sustainable level?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Department of the Environment as follows: 1. No. The general policy is to encourage efficiency in fish processing.

2. The Fisheries and Marine Service has not undertaken any investigations relating to economics of scale in fish processing on Prince Edward Island.

3. Information on the number of small plants producing specialty fish products is not collected.

PRIVATE PENSION PLANS

Question No. 5,026—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. How many persons are receiving pensions from private pension plans, such pensions being based on employment in Canada and what is the average pension per month received by such persons?

2. Of those indicated in the answer to Part (1), (a) how many are having their pensions escalated annually at a rate equal to the rise in the Consumer Price Index (b) how many are having their pensions escalated annually at a lesser rate (c) how many receive no annual escalation of their pensions?

3. How many persons are contributing to or are enrolled in private pension plans based on their employment in Canada?

4. Of those indicated in the answer to Part (3), (a) how many are in plans which provide, after retirement, for an annual escalation of their pensions at a rate equal to the rise in the Consumer Price Index (b) how many are in plans which provide, after retirement, for an annual escalation at a lesser rate (c) how many are in plans which provide for no escalation, after retirement, of their pensions?

5. How many persons in Canada are receiving retirement benefits from annuities, insurance plans, retirement savings plans or other schemes apart from employment-related pension plans and what is the average amount per month received by such persons from such plans?

6. Of those indicated in the answer to Part (5), (a) how many are having such benefits escalated annually at a rate equal to the rise in the Consumer Price Index (b) how many are having their benefits escalated annually at a lesser rate (c) how many receive no annual escalation of their benefits?

7. How many persons in Canada are enrolled in retirement plans of all types other than employment-related pension plans?

8. Of those indicated in the answer to Part (7), (a) how many are enrolled in plans which will provide, after the payment of benefits commences, for an annual escalation equal to the rise in the Consumer Price Index (b) how many are enrolled in plans which will provide, after the payment of benefits commences, for an annual escalation at a lesser rate (c) how many are enrolled in plans which will provide, after the payment of benefits commences, for no escalation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Statistics Canada and the Department of National Revenue as follows: 1. There are no precise data available on the number of persons in Canada who are in receipt of benefits from private pension plans. At best some proxy data are available from income tax statistics but these data have some limitations. They do not include the entire universe of pensioners because many have incomes too low to file a tax return. However, special tabulations of income tax records show that 605,700 persons received benefits from private pension plans. It was estimated that about 15 per cent to 20 per cent of these were in receipt of supplementary benefits such as widows' or orphans' pensions or disability benefits, but around 80 per cent were pensioners. The average annual income was $2,105.

2, 5, 6, 7 and 8. There are no departmental programs to capture this information either by analysis of documentation filed for registration purposes or through filing of special information returns.

3. At the beginning of 1974 there were 3,424,245 persons covered by private plans based on employment in Canada.

4. (a) Some 502,500 persons were in plans that have escalation tied directly to the Consumer Price Index. (b) 105,400 were in plans providing for escalation at a rate less than the increase in the Consumer Price Index. (c) 2,816,350 persons were in pension plans that provided for no automatic escalation of pensions after retirement. However, a number of plans periodically review their benefit structure and make upward adjustments to pensions being paid to their retired employees on an ad hoc basis.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURN

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 3,240 and 3,785 could be made orders for return, those returns would be tabled immediately.

[Text]

TRIPS BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND FAMILY ON GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Question No. 3,240—Mr. Cossitt:

1. (a) On how many occasions has the Minister of Agriculture taken his wife or any members of his family with him on government aircraft (b) what are the dates (c) to what destinations (d) for what purpose?

2. What is the estimated cost of repairing the government aircraft which skidded off a runway while carrying the Minister, his wife and three children recently as private passengers (a) what was the full itinerary and period of time of this trip (b) what was the total cost of the trip including cost per hour of keeping the aircraft in the air and cost per hour of waiting time on the ground (c) how much fuel was used and what was the cost?

3. What was the nature of the government business that the Minister transacted on the trip during which this accident occurred?

4. Will the Minister be remunerating the government for the cost of transporting his family on government aircraft and what are the reasons that he could not have travelled by commercial aircraft?

Return tabled.

DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENT—CONSULTANTS

Question No. 3,785—Mr. Crouse:

1. How many consultants were hired by the Department of the Environment in the past two years in the (a) Policy Planning and Evaluation Directorate (b) Liaison and Coordination Directorate (c) Computing and Applied Statistics Directorate (d) Finance and Facilities Directorate (e) Personnel Directorate (f) Information Services Directorate (g) International Fisheries and Marine Directorate (h) Operations Directorate (i) Research and Development Directorate (j) Air Pollution Control Directorate (k) Water Pollution Control Directorate (l) Environmental Conservation Directorate (m) Policy and Program Development Directorate (n) Inland Waters Directorate (o) Lands Directorate (p) Canadian Forestry Directorate (q) Canadian Wildlife Directorate?

2. What were their names and salaries?

3. What was their length of employment?

4. Were public tenders called before they were hired?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURES RESPECTING PUNISHMENT FOR MURDER AND OTHER SERIOUS OFFENCES

The House resumed, from Monday, May 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand that Bill C-84, to amend the Criminal Code in relation to the punishment for murder and certain other serious offences, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

[Mr. Blais.]

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I hope I can have a few minutes to conclude my remarks. Last night I argued that the priorities of justice must be directed to law-abiding citizens. I gave case stories of victims and their families damaged for life by murder. Today the hon. member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) greeted me with, "I heard that they had to mop up the House after your speech". If that is true—and I have no reason to doubt the judgment of the hon. member—my time was not wasted because, at last, a few people have started to shed tears for the victims of murder. Up to now it seems that total concern and pity has been for wanton killers, and disregard for victims.

● (1510)

If I may, I should like to now go on with the last part of my statement. It comes back to the perennial argument of abolitionists that capital punishment has a brutalizing effect on society. I have reason to believe that the converse is true. The failure to impose our laws has created a brutalized, angry society. Violence on the street and the laws of the underworld are more feared than the laws of parliament. Thus, the diminished confidence of the public in the nation's law and of parliament itself has been the licence for the most brutal forces in our society to take over.

The underworld has no trials, no courts, no justice, but the quickest, most barbaric methods. Perhaps if we were a nation that showed strong laws and were not intimidated by the 1966-70 syndrome, that every single civil right of the crooks' and hoodlums' superseding the rights of the majority, we would not be moving toward the law of the jungle on our streets. It is obvious that when the rights of the minority, especially the outlaw minority, supersede the rights of the majority, the majority will be enslaved.

Every abolitionist I have ever known is willing to lock people up in prison for a long time. This, in itself, is unconscionable brutalization both for the offender and those who must live with him inside the prison. This brings me to my final point, the issue that takes precedence over the end-of-the-road matter of capital punishment, and that is prevention of crime. Prevention of human destruction must begin at day one in the life of every child. It requires support for parents alone, parents who are ill or unable to care for their children fully without help. It requires the best service possible and super-parent substitute in love and protection for unwanted and abandoned children—and the number is now growing in our society. We must find some way to ensure a basic right for children to grow up without anger, frustration and violence spawned in poverty.

There are those who say one should not discuss money in relation to life or death in the whole issue of capital punishment. I feel it is valid, along with the argument that prisons will not serve any purpose for the killer other than to allow him licence to kill again and, if not that, to totally break him as a human being, unable to function upon release late in his life. This, in itself, is brutalization without measure.

Having said that, I will go into the cost per life in prison of the killer sentenced under the alternative of Bill C-84. It is estimated the cost today is about $14,000 a year, or $350,000 for a life sentence of 25 years. That money could be invested in support of homes that would otherwise fall apart and the children damaged. No doubt as many as 5,000 or more children might be saved with the cost per life to keep a single, ruthless killer in jail for 25 years.

There is no doubt that a child is like a delicate crystal goblet. Step on it, crush it and it can never be repaired. Throw it off in rejection and it will shatter into broken bits. Crack or chip it through indifferent handling and its beauty can never be completely restored. But care for it and give it attention and love and it will give off its own small spectrums of colour and light in the glow of life. In other words, a child can crack and a child can be broken, and there is no way to repair the damage.

Over and over, people in prison have said, "We cannot be rehabilitated unless we are habilitated." No matter how much we care, no matter how much we worry about how these people became violent, it is a fact that they are here among us right now, a danger and a threat to the community and its fabric. As much as we hate to admit it, some are incurable even as children because they have been so terribly damaged in their formative years. Thus, we should move strongly into prevention, but we must face the realities that among us are dangerous creatures who are, and look like people. We must deal with them as they are now, not as we wish or dream they might be.

There is so much I could say both from personal experience and from the extensive research I have been able to do in the past 30 years, not only on how crime begins but also as a result of my great good fortune in life to have the unique view of crime and correction from many sides: from the offender's viewpoint, the victim's, the families of both offenders and of victims, the courts, death row itself, from condemned killers in prisons and from those who live in prisons and run prisons, from judges and lawyers, both defence and prosecution. Time does not permit me to use all of it. However, it is on the basis of this knowledge, this work and this experience that I stand here opposed to Bill C-84.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I most certainly do not have to justify my participation in the present debate. My personal convictions, a mandate from the vast majority of my constituents, and above all the experience I have acquired in the field of justice as Crown attorney, solicitor general for the province of Quebec, judge on two occasions, minister of justice and attorney general for Quebec, urge me to express clearly what I think of the bill before us.

Why is it that the government is asking Parliament to go back on the 1967 and 1973 decisions? Is it because of the public pressure for abolition of the death penalty? Far from it. Every poll held and correspondence received by each member in this House indicate that most Canadians are opposed to the bill before us.

Was there any decrease in the murder rate in Canada since the legislation of 1967 and 1973? As reported on page 13088 of Hansard, the Solicitor General admits that from 1962 to 1974 the murder rate per 100,000 population climbed from 1.2 to 2.4. Now, it was a period during which, except for two or three cases, the death penalty was not enforced. Taking in consideration the demographic growth during those past years, that is from 1971 to 1974 inclusive, the number of murders in Canada went up from 425 to 545, which represents a raise of almost 28 per cent. I am convinced that a considerable percentage of those murders is included in the group of premeditated murders and can be mostly ascribed to the worst group of murderers, that is hired assassins.

Under those circumstances, we are surprised to note that in introducing his bill the minister stated without flinching, and I quote from Hansard on page 13089:

> It is my contention that if no irrefutable evidence can be brought forward that capital punishment is a more effective deterrent to the commission of murder than is a lengthy sentence, then we must conclude that a lengthy sentence is preferable, and that the burden of proof to conclude otherwise rests with those favouring the death penalty.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the Solicitor General is turning the tables. Moreover, the government having commuted all death sentences since 1968, thus depriving the country of an essential element in this debate, it is its duty on the contrary to prove beyond any doubt that abolition of capital punishment and the proposed alternative measures will protect Canadian society more efficiently and will help put an end to premeditated murders and specially those perpetrated by hired assassins.

During this debate, I hope we will be spared the sophisms we have heard so often that deliberately confuse expiation and vengeance and make of the supreme punishment a perversion of state powers. I dare believe that we will no longer hear that by applying the death penalty to the author of a qualified murder, the state lowers itself to the level of the murderer. However final the execution of a murderer, it is to wrong justice odiously to compare this gesture to a crime.

To justify this bill, the government upholds that the death penalty is not an efficient preventive or dissuasive measure against murder. It suggests that figures show that murder rates change very little between times and countries where capital punishment has been applied and those where it has not. I must say I am not impressed at all by this so-called argument, because how can one count crimes that have not been perpetrated, and how can one prove that they have not been perpetrated for a reason other than any other? I know from experience that in many cases the fear of hanging has deterred criminals about to kill their victim. Their testimony should not be dismissed lightly, even though in certain circles some people pretend to question their sincerity. Fortunately, with very few exceptions, the principle is accepted that for serious reasons the state has the right to impose capital punishment. Since it is derived from the experience of many generations, the time-honoured wisdom, whose value must not be despised, has always recognized the right of the political authority to resort to capital punishment against those convicted of particularly odious crimes and especially of deliberate murder, so as to prevent their repetition.

I am well aware, Mr. Speaker, that this does not mean that the state has not in the past abused this power and been unduly severe in the case of minor offences. That is no longer the case fortunately in most countries of the world. The progress of psychology and criminology, less cruel detention conditions and improved rehabilitation methods have fortunately made it possible to save human lives and often allowed to rehabilitate those who has taken the road to crime. In this regard, and because it affects me more personally, the latest release of the Canadian Catholic Conference, that is the assembly of all the Canadian Catholic bishops, is absolutely clear. While recommending for compassionate reasons the abolition of capital punishment, the document stated and I quote:

● (1520)

In taking such a position, the bishops do not deny to the State the right to enforce capital punishment when circumstances require it; nor do they intend to bind every Christian in his personal opinion on the issue.

In fact, the bishops were only reiterating what Pope Pius XII, whose generosity cannot be questioned, said in 1952, and I quote:

It is the sole responsibility of the political powers to deprive a condemned man of the blessing of life in expiation of his offence, after he has renounced his right to life when committing his crime.

These words, Mr. Speaker, should reassure those among us who are still torn between their desire to efficiently protect society against murderers and that of saving a human life, even if it is the life of the worst criminal. It is my deep conviction that under present conditions and especially due to the existence of organized crime, capital punishment remains necessary to prevent if possible and—it must be said—to punish premeditated murder. Indeed, no matter how you rely on the preventive or curative effects of prolonged confinement of murderers, there will always remain a minority for whom crime, including murder, will be a usual activity. In the end only capital punishment can be an ultimate protection against that minority. Those who ignore the warnings of the law and do not hesitate to kill for despicable motives—profit for instance—should not expect the state to save them from the supreme punishment, particularly in these days when organized crime has become a way of life.

Besides, is it not surprising that ever since this debate started, the abolitionists have not yet been able to come up with the final argument which would put an end to all hesitations. Who will contend that an enlightened public would have rejected such a reform for so long if the realism and the prudence of men had not helped moderate the excessive optimism of these protagonists. And what is most ironic, Mr. Speaker, is that there has been die-hard abolitionists who finally stood up against the total abolition of capital punishment. And I am especially thinking of Jean Imbert whose work entitled "La peine de mort" is quite authoritative as far as the evolution of the penal code is concerned. In the conclusion of his book, this famous abolitionist writes, and I quote:

It would be very tempting to ask for the abolition of capital punishment, everywhere and for ever. To my mind, such an ambition is an utopie. On the one hand, certain people must keep, as long as they have not reached a certain degree of civilization, the threat of the most severe retribution, which can have a stronger deterrent effect than other forms of punishment. On the other hand, even in very highly civilized countries, to say that no one, not even the State, can deprive an individual of the right to live is just an abstract statement when presented with certain definite situations; in fact, any organized society claims it has the right and the duty to lead its members to death, first in times of war, then in case of subversive activities from within.

[Mr. Wagner.]

And, Mr. Speaker, at this very moment while I am talking to you, is there a more subversive form of activities than organized crime? Have a look at today's newspaper headlines and you will find the obvious answer. Is there a more dangerous threat than the hired killer, the professional killer? Is there anything more dangerous than their actions first against the lives of ordinary citizens and also against the very principles of social order and fabric established by society for the protection and the better-being of its members?

One argument which is very often put forward against capital punishment is the possibility of some miscarriage of justice. But the reform of the criminal code and of the legal proceedings has nearly eliminated any possibility of error as to the facts. No one is now condemned to death on simple circumstantial evidence; it is necessary to file an appeal up to the Supreme Court and this appeal enables the superior courts to review the files and to detect the slightest defect in the evidence submitted by the Crown. There still remains the exhaustive examination of the case by the Solicitor General and, finally, by the cabinet; the latter can always exercise its right to commute the death penalty. It goes without saying, Mr. Speaker, that at each one of thoses stages, the slightest doubt must, of necessity, serve the accused.

Even now, those who killed under the influence of passion, jealousy or anger do not incur the death penalty. Compassion is often shown those in special cases: I am thinking of the person who, in his excitement, fatally wounds the policeman who is trying to arrest him.

I am quite willing to accept his being shown some forebearance, though he did put himself deliberately in a situation inviting murder. But there remains, in particular, the extreme cases, the hired assassin, the professional killer, the expert in holdups, the expert killer of embarrassing witnesses. If I had time, Mr. Speaker, I could recount all that happened some years ago when embarrassing witnesses were massacred, one by one, by hired killers who could not have cared less about the threat of the death penalty, knowing full well that no matter what they did they would never get to the hangman's noose.

Do those professional killers deserve to live? Is it advisable to let them live? I am convinced it is not. As the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) wrote on page 123 of his memoirs entitled One Canada—

● (1530)

[English]

This excerpt comes from that great book written by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). It reads:

Society must be protected from those who kill for profit or who regard murder as an occupational hazard in the commission of robberies or kidnappings.

[Translation]

This is proven, as is evidenced by a number of bloody evasions. Life imprisonment, even if those 25 years really meant 25 years, no longer provides adequate protection. There is always the danger and the possibility, indeed the probability of evasion with killings, on the part of those crime professionals.

How are we to believe that, when there is no threat of capital punishment, a member of the underworld with connections to get firearms will hesitate even a second to kill to regain his freedom? If he is caught, all he may get is some extra years in prison. And should there be a fresh opportunity, certainly he will not balk at committing another murder to escape from prison. And what about the holdup professional: What is going to prevent him from killing his victim or innocent bystanders, because the only possible punishment is some extra prison time.

What adequate protection could the state give to someone who is willing to help fight the big shots of organized crime, to someone who is ready to testify for the Crown to help convict those individuals? How is the state going to efficiently protect him, if his potential murderer is to remain alive? Who will prevent premeditated murder by the unsyndicated individual if the murderer knows before hand he will not pay with his life?

As I said, the only adequate deterrent still remaining, especially against professional killers, is the death penalty. Unfortunately, there is no other. In an interview given October 16, 1975 to the Ottawa Citizen, Mr. Meryle Cameron, president of the Ottawa Police Association and the Ontario Police Association, flatly stated, and I quote:

[English]

During the last three or four years, the criminal element has come to understand that they will not be executed for killing a policeman. So, the more they come to realize it—and they will be certain of it if capital punishment is abolished—the more prone they will be to kill policemen.

[Translation]

After talking to criminals, Mr. Cameron came to the conclusion that the only thing still feared by organized crime is death on the scaffold. I quote further:

[English]

It is the threat he understands: the fact that it is there and is likely to be applied. After all, the criminal element itself deals with its people in this tough way. They must understand tough retribution, if it is part of their philosophy.

● (1540)

[Translation]

Far be it from me to suggest that a member of the underworld cannot be rehabilitated. Mr. Speaker, if after his record is reviewed, specialists are inclined to believe that he may become an honest citizen again, society must obviously give him a chance to prove it. However, the fact remains that a number of professional criminals cannot be rehabilitated because they do not want to. I refer here to the testimony of a policeman, an ex-abolitionist, superintendent Tom Flanagan, of the Ottawa police force.

In the Ottawa Citizen of October 17, 1975, Mr. Flanagan no longer hesitates to say, and I quote:

[English]

We have now gotten in a state where we have no choice but to execute some people because they don't want to be rehabilitated... There are people who have made up their minds that their business is going to be crime. You know, crime is not a sickness... Crime is a business. The sooner people think of it that way, the better.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, for those who are still in doubt and who wonder if, in certain cases, the death penalty might actually be an effective deterrent against professional criminals, Mr. Flanagan says this:

[English]

I am in favour of it—

Referring to capital punishment.

—because it is necessary, because it would prevent rational and deliberate murder... We must make clear to the potential murderer that he would risk a good chance of being executed for the crime... Many would think twice if confronted with the strong possibility of execution... Some of them may take a chance and I am not saying that this would not happen. But some won't take the gamble and it is for these people that capital punishment is an effective and necessary deterrent.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, people have been complaining in the last few years, and rightly so, about the increase in violence and the great number of murders in Canada, especially premeditated murders. To quote only an example, that of the island of Montreal, the number of murders has increased from 73 in 1974 to 112 in 1975, a 53.4 per cent increase in a year. I think it is fair to say that half of these killings were premeditated and were either a settling of accounts among the underworld or the elimination of embarrassing witnesses for the big shots of organized crime.

One may wonder at length about the causes of crime and violence. In this respect, one may point at the weakening of moral values in too many individuals, the break-up of families, the exaltation of violence in every form and its excessive exploitation in films and on television, the feeling of frustration and even despair resulting from unfair economic conditions which are often unbearable, even though crime is not the prerogative of the underprivileged. We can also blame a deficient and inefficient penitentiary system which, too often, generates crime instead of preventing relapses. This is why a social and a penitentiary reform has become an immediate necessity.

But is the state blameless? Through its weakness and a misguided humanitarian spirit did it not contribute—even involuntarily, I agree—to giving murderers and especially professional killers a real feeling of security? According to the evidence given by policemen, lawmen, magistrates, many criminals admits it bluntly.

To justify the commutation of each death penalty since 1968, the Prime Minister and the Solicitor General have alleged that each record was studied according to its own merit and that each sentence commutation was made only in case of palliating circumstances. We would be more convinced if, on several occasions, the government had not acted without any clemency recommendation from judges or juries. We would be more convinced had the Solicitor General publicly exposed the reason for the ministerial decision in every case.

For now, and the present bill stands as irrefutable evidence, we have to conclude that those sentence commutations were declared only because Cabinet members refused to implement the law. But, whether the government believes it or not, the extension of the mandatory prison sentence or the restriction of release conditions for murderers will have no deterrent effect on professional killers and crime desperados. Half measures, extended prison sentences will never be enough to avoid the threat that those reckless criminals represent for their fellow citizens and especially policemen. It has been demonstrated that jail no longer prevents murderers from killing, it no longer prevents crimes and bloody escapes. For many inveterate criminals, it only prompts them to be still more violent and kill those who stand in their way to freedom.

Hon. members who would be tempted to believe that those fears are exaggerated should read the view expressed by some organizations or newspapers that could not be called prejudiced since they favour abolition of capital punishment. Alleging that the new peace and security legislation, and I quote:

... does nothing more than replace quick death by slow death in a cell ...

... the Human Rights Association declared through its general director, Mr. Normand Caron, and I quote La Presse of February 26, 1976:

The only effect of those new amendments will be to create even more desperate prisoners who will be faced with a hopeless future and will not hesitate to attempt to escape.

For its part, the Association of Social Workers in a press release published the same day by the same newspaper gave the government the following warning:

We are aware of the fact that the public is entitled to better protection against criminals, but we do not believe that longer prison terms are the answer to the problem. In fact, we have every reason to believe that extended sentences will only worsen the situation.

The Montreal Star, an acknowledged abolitionist, on February 25, wrote the following editorial from which I qoute:

[English]

Filling the prisons with men doing endless time is the guaranteed way to turn them into time bombs and put the prison staff at terrible risk.

[Translation]

This is certainly a comment over which the Solicitor General should ponder in his spare time. And the newspaper Le Devoir which is also quite well known and which is openly abolitionist, wrote on the 27 of the same month, and I quote:

Instead of coming back to kill a grocery clerk we see a convict dragging hostages with him inside his cage. The blood of innocent people will be flowing like it did at the British Columbia penitentiary.

This is another extremely meaningful comment by an editor who, as far as I know, is not looking for "sensationalism", at least not always. Mr. Speaker, therefore, in the very eyes of those who are calling for this reform, abolishing the death penalty and sentencing convicts to lengthy prison terms will never do away with the risks of peace keeping officers being killed, especially by desperate criminals who have made murder their profession.

It is precisely because of this sort of people, who have decided to earn their living by being involved in criminal activities that it remains absolutely essential that the death penalty be maintained and applied in the hope that executions will make others think twice before they decide to kill somebody. This is the sole and ultimate protection that is left to us against those who have no respect either for the life of others or for their own. Mr. Speaker, if this bill does pass and the rash of premeditated murder increases in momentum—and I have no hesitation in predicting that it will—a terrible responsibility will rest on the shoulders of those who will have allowed such a thing to happen.

[Mr. Wagner.]

As far as I am concerned, my conscience does not allow me to run such a risk. This is why I intend to vote against this bill and continue to request the death penalty in all cases of premeditated or cold-blooded murder committed during an escape or an armed robbery. And I should like to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that I am well aware that this is a matter for our conscience and also that my past experience and my responsibilities towards my constituents are significant factors in this decision.

● (1550)

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, once again, in 1976, following the introduction of twin bills C-83 and C-84, we are called upon to discuss a most delicate problem, the administration of justice in times troubled by such various events as the unnerving increase in thefts and crimes that are causing great concern among the people who would appreciate the possibility of living in security in a society that could be better organized.

During the debate on Bill C-83 in March 1976, I said that a number of politicians prefer to blame the rising crime wave on the availability of weapons rather than to seek solutions to economic and financial problems which are in most cases the root causes of the problems afflicting our society.

I also stressed the importance of reorganizing penal institutions in such a way as to provide guardians and those who assume responsibilities the means to develop better rehabilitation instead of keeping prisoners in an atmosphere that is becoming especially for the younger ones a school to learn all the inveterate criminals' tricks. No doubt that following its study in committee some amendments could be made to Bill C-83 with a view to making it applicable and preventing the many disadvantages resulting from ever too complicated legislation and regulations.

A few years ago, on the occasion of earlier debates about the methods used on the matter of sentences imposed on convicted criminals, the members of the House of Commons had the opportunity to vote freely on this issue fraught with consequences and full of general interest. That attitude represented some improvement in the light of the usual concept related to procedures within the political parties in our so-called democratic system.

I was under the impression that under the circumstances this procedure would have contributed to ensure in a practical way the respect for free speech within our parliamentary institutions. We would have at least contributed to create a climate whereby everyone would have freely assumed his responsibilities. Besides, this is what the citizens in this country want: that their representatives act in Parliament according to the country's general interest rather than according to their party's interest, in order to bring about a real improvement of the situation in every respect.

Unfortunately, this freedom of opinion among members seems much more restrictive in 1976. These restrictions are probably due to the fact that the majority government wants to use these means of action to facilitate the passing of this bill.

On various occasions, several persons familiar with the situation in Canada demanded the holding of a referendum to provide the people of Canada with an opportunity to give their opinion on the question of retention or abolition of capital punishment. It is unfortunate that those who have been in power for the last five years did not organize such a referendum on the subject. Considering the present situation, I think that the majority of the people I represent share my position, if I consider the many answers I received to the questionnaire I sent. A very small percentage seemed to be in favour of abolition while the majority pronounced themselves in favour of retention of capital punishment.

● (1600)

I have had various suggestions as to the methods of execution to be used and most people would be prepared to recommend the use of the gas chamber. I might add that I favor this opinion. I also want to indicate that I cannot find any explanation for the attitude held by those who claim that capital punishment may be maintained for some categories of people. I do not see how one may assess different values to the lives of a father or a mother, of a policeman or a warden, of an industrialist or a businessman, of a poor man or a rich man. Everybody has a right to live. This moratorium which allows for a mitigated justice comes to an end in 1976, and this is why this bill has been brought back before this House. I have here an article which was published in the March 24, 1976, issue of La Presse, signed by a Mr. Gaston Gagnier from LaSalle. I think it would be in order at this stage to quote from this article. It reads as follows:

> We consider that the law will continue to be inadequate as long as all armed bandits caught in the act will not be liable to the death penalty. Criminals who rob banks or hijack Brinks-type armoured cars are real live arsenals. A machine-gun is not exactly a charm attached to the chain of one's watch. These people are therefore potential killers. Such madmen will not hesitate to mow down everybody if they fear being captured. Their crimes are therefore premeditated, and any accomplice, whether or not he is where the action takes place, bears the same responsibility. If a criminal knew that he is risking capital punishment, he would give second thought to what he intends to do before getting involved in a criminal operation.

And further on, in the same article:

> Certain eager abolitionist ministers have already stated publicly that they would resign rather than enact such a radical legislation. This is sheer political blackmail. Well, they will just have to go. Canada and justice will only be better off.

In many areas, we have not been careful enough. It is as if all the methods of publicity are being used to bring society to adapt itself to a system which is all wrong. After having contributed, unconcernedly, to such a laissez faire situation as regards the publication and sale of newspapers and magazines and the showing on television of films in which criminals sometimes are made to look like heroes, thus giving to the developing mind the most striking examples of crimes, thefts and various other disorders that are rampant in this world, after having through carelessness allowed into this country certain categories of undesirable immigrants, we panic at seeing the consequences of our stupidity. In various occasions, our courts of justice become the scenes of all kinds of provocations.

Even in this House, we often hear discussions in which the scandalmongering of some of our colleagues is not likely to instill any sense of respect towards the established authority in the minds of our fellow-citizens. Can we now say that all has been done to make life as pleasant as possible, for all the citizens of this country on which God has bestowed unlimited riches? The members of Parliament should settle down to this specific task with the firm determination to succeed, instead of wasting their time in trying to determine whether we should abolish or maintain the death penalty. For the time being, it would be much wiser to give the people of Canada, a new hope for a better life by passing legislation which would be less materialistic and more human.

If we had a system which would make it possible for everybody to find a job or, at least, a healthy congenial occupation which would enable each individual to make an honest living, I have good reasons to believe that the crime rate would lessen. Obviously capital punishment cannot commend itself for its beauty; as soon as one pictures in one's mind a human being hanging, one is overwhelmed by a feeling a repulsion. If one does not react against this feeling, it promptly grows into a negative passion.

The danger is the same if we think about the parents of the murderer's victim, except that passion works the other way around. It then becomes impossible to discuss reasonably and consciously, or even to perceive the issue at stake. It is along this regrettable route that the controversy has been carried following the announcement that abolition legislation would be brought forth before the House. In all logic, one cannot call for abolition of a time honoured measure without invoking a first class rationale. I do not mean that the very longevity of this practice makes it necessarily venerable. But it has been challenged for over a century. Obviously the legislators that followed one another did not retain it by sadism.

We must then consider the arguments put forward up to now by the abolitionists. For some, it is only a remainder from barbarity. Others think in terms of niceties. They contrast hanging with the dignity of human life, the rigours of moral evolution, the humanitarian rehabilitation of murderers and others such nice concepts.

Medical efforts in recent years show beyond doubt a stronger respect for human life as well as increased concern for its protection and promotion: fight against cancer, heart transplants, gynecological research, blood banks. But there is another aspect of reality that daily life reveals as brutally: wars, pollution of environment, irrational and savage exploitation of the planet's resources, abortion, etc. In one hospital in Montreal, a medical team persists in trying to anticipate the viability threshold of the child to be born whereas in another department, abortion is performed. In the present confused system, the value of life is often brutally denied by changing behaviours, when necessary.

Thus, after talking at length of holy wars and just wars, we have come today to recognize the immorality of war—of any war. There is no future in wars for humankind. Unfortunately, we continued nevertheless to fight.

It is obvious that the numerous problems of criminality in our modern societies are not easy to solve. We know that imprisonment costs much money to citizens and that we must also account for the cost of police services which, in Quebec, according to reports published in a Montreal newspaper on April 30, 1976, went from $150 million to $320 million between 1970 and 1975.

Figures from the Quebec Police Commission originate from budgets, that is from estimates and do not include police expenditures other than municipal and provincial ones, such as those of the RCMP.

In total, 13,596 policemen were on duty in 1975 in the province of Quebec, including 4,108 for the Quebec Police Force. This personnel was assisted by 2,619 civilians and 375 part-time policemen and 3,090 motor vehicles of which more than half were not identified.

The Montreal Urban Community, which covers 30 municipalities, takes the lion's share with $136 million followed by the Quebec Police Force with $104 million.

If we add to those already huge amounts the expenditures anticipated for supervision during the Olympic Games, we find ourselves in the ridiculous situation where in some areas of the country one half of Canadians will watch the other half at a cost of millions of dollars when our politicians of every stripe urge each citizen to save during an inflation period which they have contributed to create. During that disturbed period, we must just the same assume our responsibilities and honestly try to enforce a rehabilitative justice.

It might be possible, with the modern means of transportation and supervision at our disposal through the armed forces, to have inmates achieve profitable works in northern areas or to develop camps on islands from where it is almost impossible to escape. We might use the services of inmates in human working conditions while ensuring the advantages required in their situation to those who have an aptitude for rehabilitation; this would not only contribute to relieve overcrowded penitentiaries, but it would provide a large number with a useful occupation rather than leaving them idle with experienced mates preparing new plans. We are far from having experimented all means of rehabilitation and yet, we know that nothing must be neglected in this regard.

When one considers the behaviours of a percentage of inmates, in particular the young ones, one often finds that a large number of them have endured living conditions which contributed to develop in them a hostile attitude towards society, have been neglected by too many parents who failed to assume their social responsibilities, and often went through endless unemployment periods with all the painful experiences associated with it: inadequate incomes, hardships and despair.

Our administrators must now accept to pay after the crime what they too often refused to pay before and which, in many cases, would have avoided these periods of forced idleness and hardships of all kinds that are the results of a corrupt and corrupting financial system. We must now pay the high cost of rehabilitating criminals; it is urgent to bring about social changes in many areas to make life more human for many people.

Inflation, taxes and debts are not remedies to the great illness from which society is suffering. Those who are in charge of this society will have to get used to seeing wealth in things—real wealth, real value—rather than in sings. This is the root of the problem, the real illness of the century, which has terrible effects that might be called the fear of tomorrow, which often makes your hair turn white at an early age and which probably contributes to send a large number of citizens to their graves before their time. Let us consider for some time the devastating effects this famous system has had on our planet. Many people are ready to tread on their conscience to earn their living. How many businessmen have cheated their competitors just because if they had not they would have gone under? How many professionals have sought to live in comfort and according to their rank at the expense of their science and their art? How many public men have sold out their country to gain economic security for themselves? The word "money" comes more often to our mind than the verb "love" to our heart. This is how our money system is holding man in slavery. The human being worships the golden calf. Money is at the centre of his concerns. This means that the money system has departed from its primary object. Money must continue to perform its mission, and be a tool of exchange instead of domination.

[Mr. Dionne (Kamouraska).]

Our system is vitiated and condemned by the greatest doctrinal authority in the world. Here is what one can read in the Quadragesimo Anno encyclical:

> Those who control money and credit have so firmly economic life in their grasp that no one can breathe against their will.

And in the same text one also finds:

> The economical and social structure will be soundly constituted and achieve its end only when it will provide all its members with all the goods that the resources of nature and industry as well as a truly social organization of economic life are in a position to secure for them. Such goods must be sufficiently abundant to satisfy the needs for a decent living.

The decision-markers at the top of society should draw theis inspiration more often from encyclicals and direct the economic organization so as to allow the people to live decently, particularly in a country endowed with an abundance of natural resources and inhabited by well-meaning people.

I have every reason to believe that through such means, as I said earlier, the number of crimes would be reduced.

● (1610)

[English]

Mr. Gilbert Parent (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, many of my colleagues have quoted facts and figures to prove either that capital punishment is a deterrent to murder or, conversely, that it is not a deterrent to murder. I suggest that statistics can be interpreted to virtually any advantage. I wish to address myself to another facet of the argument; that is, that our laws with regard to capital punishment as interpreted and administered seemingly are inadequate to deal with our current social problems, and our prisons are not equipped to truly rehabilitate condemned murderers.

Society must believe that it is being protected. I am sorry to say that today this credibility does not exist. Perhaps it is the fault of the media, which day in and day out bombards us with atrocities which men visit upon one another. Perhaps it is because for years we have been conditioned to accepting violence as a legitimate response to wrongdoing. Whatever the cause, the public feels vulnerable and under attack.

It is all well and good to quote statistics that show capital punishment is not a deterrent, but what do you say to the wife and children of a husband who was shot down, murdered in cold blood with malice aforethought by a killer who was trying to procure ill-gotten gains of whatever description? I do not wish to cast slurs on those who firmly believe in abolition, but in fairness they should not pepper their arguments with innuendoes that the retentionists are less humane than they.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Parent: Which is more humane, to put a man to death or have him spend 25 hopeless years locked away in prison? What would he do when he was released? Toffler, in "Future Shock", stated that in 1900 we had a new generation every 20 years. By 1945 we had a new generation every 15 years. During the sixties we had a new and different generation every 12 years. Now, in 1975, we have virtually a new generation every ten years. If this trend continues and if a man or woman were sentenced in 1975 to 25 years in prison, by the year 2000 three generations or three generate changes of mores, customs or attitudes will have taken place. That person would be like a Rip Van Winkle thrust into a space age. When he returned to society how could he possibly be prepared to cope with all the problems with which he would be faced?

Prior to the 1974 election I had not made up my mind whether I was a retentionist or an abolitionist. During the campaign I was asked many times about my position on this particular issue. At that time I promised I would speak with my constituents and conduct a survey on how they felt about this issue. I did take the survey; I sent out 40,000 questionnaires. Virtually every adult in my constituency had an opportunity to let me know how they felt. Of the 40,000, only 2,755 responded. The response was overwhelmingly in favour of retention of capital punishment.

I asked these straightforward questions of my constituents: first, "Do you favour the abolition of the death penalty?". Twenty per cent replied "Yes" and 80 per cent said "No". Second, "Do you favour the retention of the death penalty for convicted murderers?". Eighty-one per cent said "Yes" and 19 per cent said "No". Third, "The present law calls for the death penalty only in the case of convicted killers of policemen and prison guards. Do you agree with this?". Sixteen per cent said "Yes" and 84 per cent said "No". Fourth, "Do you favour life imprisonment—that is, the remainder of the offender's days as a punishment, instead of the death penalty?". Twenty per cent said "Yes" and 80 per cent said "No". The fifth question was, "Are you in favour of the death penalty for all criminals who have been convicted of murder and other crimes which are now subject to the death sentence?." Eighty-two per cent responded "Yes" and 18 per cent said "No."

● (1620)

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to be sure that the people of St. Catharines truly gave me a correct picture of their feelings on capital punishment, not only for the killing of policemen and prison guards, so I asked the sixth question in this way, "Are you in favour of the death sentence only for criminals who kill police and prison guards?" Only 8 per cent responded "Yes", while 92 per cent responded "No." So you can see, Mr. Speaker, that the results were virtually overwhelming. Some people have suggested that perhaps we should not make decisions on the basis of surveys. I agree that perhaps decisions should not be made on the basis of surveys. I agree that perhaps decisions should not be made on the basis of surveys alone; but when we go to the people and ask their opinion, we should be receptive to their advice.

Some years ago, when in university studying apologetics, we were discussing wrongdoing and what constituted wrongdoing. There are three ingredients that go into it. The first is that a person must know that what he is doing is wrong; there must be knowledge. The second is that you must want to do it; therefore, there is a decision, a will. Thirdly, you must do whatever the action is; it must be done. For my purposes here I have defined what is a murderer. First of all, I believe he must know what he is doing. He must be sane. He must have all his faculties. He must be able to exercise knowledge. Second, he must plan the crime very carefully. Therefore, the crime would be premediated murder. Third, he must want to do it. He therefore makes a conscious decision to go ahead. Fourth, he carries out this action. So for me, at least, the definition is quite clear, and with this definition in mind I have gone on to make a decision for myself and for the people I represent.

It has been said that if every person convicted of capital crime were killed, there would be two killings instead of one. That is a very simple deduction but it is not entirely accurate, for by no means is every convicted murderer executed. There has been no execution in Canada since 1962, which reveals that even if returned, capital punishment would be imposed only in the case of a notably small percentage of murderers. I am aware that since 1968 virtually all the men condemned to hand have received a recommendation of mercy or leniency from the jury; only one has not received a recommendation of mercy.

To those who say that the state has no more right to take a God-given life than an individual, the cart is put before the horse. By using capital punishment, the state employs the only effective deterrent so far as the vast majority of persons is concerned. Because of the severity of the punishment, the potential murderer will do more thinking, I suggest, before perpetrating a premediated murder. The all-important threat of adequate retribution for so horrendous a crime is there, though society will probably not carry out an execution except in the more deserving cases and where hardened criminals are involved.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the murder comes first, the death penalty comes second. In order greatly to reduce the incidence of one person slaying another, and in the overall, I believe that fewer persons would lose their lives. Further, Mr. Speaker, I believe society does have the right to take life. We sanction war under extreme circumstances and send the flower of our youth into battle to kill so we can protect those principles by which we live. Our abortion laws as presently constituted permit the taking of the life of a child where the life of the mother is in danger. Murder is a great deal more dehumanizing and is made extremely more so by those who, by their permissiveness and laxity in dealing with convicted murderers, place such a totally incomprehensibly low value on human life.

To those who say that we do not sexually assault a rapist, that we do not burn an arsonist, but that we want to kill a murderer, my reply is that to say society is not justified in taking the life of certain types of hardened, convicted killers because it would, in turn, then be taking a life, is identical to saying that society would never imprison a convicted kidnapper because by so doing society would be using the same tactics as those employed by a kidnapper, namely, holding a person imprisoned.

I believe that society, rightfully, should impose the death penalty in the case of a murderer, because it is the severest form of retribution for the severest form of offence, namely, murder. This, in itself, proves that the state does not do so in order to emulate the very deed of the murderer; accordingly, society does not act toward the rapist or arsonist in the manner suggested.

Many people have quoted the Bible. The Bible could be quoted by both sides. But when Christ said, "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone", He wanted to remind us all that we should examine ourselves and not regard ourselves as the sinless and righteous ones. It does not mean that the country should not have laws, law enforcement and courts to dispense justice when crimes have been committed. Christ's words that we should not take an eye for an eye or a tooth for a tooth pertain to our individual, everyday dealings with our fellow men, not to the necessary laws of a country which are designed to maintain order and discipline. A very strong and real influence exists, though doubtless not intended, that society should even overlook murder on the grounds of Christ's pronouncement.

Granted, Mr. Speaker, if everyone always did the right thing, no country would need laws. But we know that that day has not yet arrived. In fact, it is possible that the world, unfortunately, is fast moving in the opposite direction; and who would deny that it is due, in part, to increasing lack of discipline? Provision must be made for those people in society who obey neither the laws of God nor the laws of man.

It is recognized that it is necessary for society to impose its laws, just as it is necessary to retain capital punishment, at least on the statute books, to be employed in extreme cases for persons who commit so terrible a crime as murder. Although the trend to permissiveness and to lack of adequate discipline in the case of children has accelerated in years gone by, society is now acknowledging the great fallacy of that not so long ago age, and once discarded disciplinary measures as well as self-discipline will again return to the scene.

The true spirit of Easter, to be sure, Mr. Speaker, cannot be interpreted as favouring further laxness in a society where the criminal is molly-coddled, while the victim himself, by comparison, is almost totally rejected and forgotten. Nor can it be defined as meaning or even remotely inferring that society should eliminate its courts of justice set up to maintain law and order, peace and security.

I have been asked why I favour the use of the death penalty. For certain types of crimes I believe it is indispensable. For example, a federal prison in the United States has had custody of a man sentenced to life imprisonment who, since he has been in prison, has committed three more murders on three separate occasions, both of prison guards and inmates. There is no further punishment he can receive. In effect, he has a licence to murder.

• (1630)

Let us take another case. When a man is threatened with life imprisonment for a crime he has already committed, what reason has he not to kill the arresting officer in an attempt to escape? His punishment would be the same anyhow. In short, there are many cases where the death penalty is the only penalty available that could possibly deter.

I will go a step further. I hold life to be very sacred, and because I hold it sacred I feel that anyone who takes someone else's life in a premeditated, cold-blooded fashion should know that thereby he forsakes his own and should not just suffer the inconvenience of being put in prison for a short time. Could the same effect be achieved by putting the criminal in prison for life? At the present time, life imprisonment means anything from a few months to a few years. Even if it were real life imprisonment—and I dealt with this in the survey—its deterrent effect will never be as great as that of the death penalty. The death penalty is the only irrevocable penalty and because of that it is the one that people fear the most; and because it is feared the most, it is the one that is most likely to deter.

Authorities seem to differ on whether the death sentence really does deter crime. Usually the statistics quoted were compiled more than ten years ago and seem to indicate that the absence or presence of the death penalty makes no difference in the murder rate. However, in the last ten years there have been additional investigations. The results indicate, according to Isaac Ehrlich's recent article in the American Economic Review, that over the period 1933 to 1969 an additional execution per year may have resulted, on the average, in seven or eight fewer murders.

In New York, in the last six years, the murder rate went up by 60 per cent. Prior to the abolition of the death penalty in that state, about 80 per cent of all murders committeed there were so-called crimes of passion, defined as crimes in which the victim and the murderer were in some way involved with each other. Right now, only 50 per cent of all murders in New York are crimes of passion. As long as the death penalty existed, largely only people in the grip of passion could not be deterred by threat of the death penalty. Now that there is no death penalty, people who previously were deterred, who are not in the grip of passion, are no longer deterred from committing murder for the sake of gain. Murder is no longer an irrational act, least of all for juveniles for whom it means, at most, a few months of inconvenience.

Even if you assume the evidence for the deterrent effect of the death penalty is not clear, you have two risks. If you impose the death penalty and it does not have an additional deterrent effect, you have possibly lost the life of a convicted murderer without adding to deterrence, and thereby sparing future victims. If you fail to execute the convicted murderer and execution would have had an additional deterrent effect, you have failed to spare the lives of a number of future victims. Between the two risks I would much rather execute the convicted murderer, a man who premeditated, planned the killing and went ahead and did it, than risk the lives of innocent people who could have been saved.

The death penalty is irrevocable once it is imposed. This makes it a different penalty. This is why it should be used when the crime is different—so heinous and socially dangerous as to call for this extreme measure. When you kill a man with premeditation, you do something very different from stealing from him, and I think the punishment should be appropriate. I favour the death penalty as a matter of justice and human dignity, even apart from deterrence. The penalty must be appropriate to the seriousness of the crime.

Our system of punishment is based not just on deterrence but also on what is called justice, namely, that we feel a man who has committed a crime must be punished in proportion to the seriousness of the crime. Since the crime that takes a life is irrevocable, so must be the punishment.

All religions that I am aware of feel that human life is sacred and that its sacredness must be enforced by depriving of life anyone who deprives another person of life. Once we make it clear to a person that if he deprives someone else of life he will suffer only minor inconvenience, we cheapen human life. I suggest we are at that point today.

Many people argue that the death penalty is legalized murder because it inflicts on the criminal the same situation that he inflicted on his victim, yet most punishments inflict on a criminal what he inflicted on the victim. The difference between the punishment and the crime is that one is a legal sanction, or measure of society, and the other is not. As for brutalizing, I think that people are more brutalized by their daily TV fare. At any rate, people are not so much brutalized by punishment as they are brutalized by our failure seriously to punish brutal acts.

Many times my colleagues here in the House of Commons have quoted Edmund Burke. I, too, believe in his words, that each member of parliament must make up his own mind. I have made up my own mind and I do not shirk this responsibility. I embrace it wholeheartedly. I am responsible, and history will record and judge my decision. I do not apologize for my decision, nor do I hide behind a survey of any sort. I stand before you, my colleagues, before the citizens of my constituency of St. Catharines—yes, before the people of Canada and before my God—and declare here that I will vote for the retention of capital punishment.

Mrs. Holt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. First of all, I should like to welcome back the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I want to point out—

Mr. Paproski: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring to your attention the fact that there have been committee meetings this afternoon—

Some hon. Members: Order.

An hon. Member: One at a time.

Mr. Paproski: This is the kind of nonsense we don't need from the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). There have been committee meetings this afternoon—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We should take one point of order at a time.

Mrs. Holt: You don't know what I am going to say.

Mr. Paproski: We do know what you are going to say.

Mrs. Holt: I know there were committee meetings, but I was at the committee meetings when this House was closed down by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I should like to point out, for the record, that he was the only member sitting there during this serious debate and there was a period when not one of those hon. members was there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will agree with me that such interventions are not helping the debate and not helping the progress of this House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) has no right to say that she welcomes me back. I have been in my place all afternoon, except for a few minutes when I think I had the right to leave the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peter P. Masniuk (Portage): Mr. Speaker in the past I have indicated my pleasure in taking part in the debates of this House. However, this is a debate quite unlike any of the others. Nothing else we will ever debate here could be as grave or as serious as that which now concerns us, namely, the issue of capital punishment. The things which I intend to say today will, for me, be among the most difficult things I shall ever say at any time; but I feel they must be said. Unlike some previous occasions, however, it will not be particularly pleasurable to stand here today and argue against the government's Bill C-84 and in favour of capital punishment. I, very deeply and sincerely, believe that capital punishment should be part of any just system of law, and today I will try to explain some of the reasons I am a retentionist and why I believe as I do.

I know it is intellectually unfashionable to be a retentionist. The feeling that sometimes capital punishment—execution—is the only right and just way to deal with certain criminals bothers intellectuals. This feeling does not fit neatly into their computers and it is not compatible with their flow charts, diagrams and neat tables of statistics. The irrational actions of a murderer who goes on a rampage and slaughters innocent people greatly upsets the ordered and logical world of these intellectuals. Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly have never claimed to be an intellectual, but maybe someone like myself is closer to the thinking and feeling of many ordinary Canadians than are all the intellectuals.

● (1640)

The argument of those who are against capital punishment is that it does not prevent murder. I do not think this can be either proved or disproved. The abolitionists claim that a comparison of states with capital punishment to those without shows no difference in the murder rate. The trouble with these comparisons, Mr. Speaker, is that they really are not comparisons at all, because they all involve countries of the western world. The fact is that no country in the western world today actually practices capital punishment. Some have abolished it in law, and some have not; but in practice, all countries of the western world—with the possible exception of some states in Africa—are abolitionist. Surely we are not so naive that we do not think murderers are aware of this fact. James O. Wilson, a professor of government at Harvard University, writing in the New York Times Magazine on October 28, 1973, stated:

> There is no way of knowing what the effect of capital punishment would have been in the last decade or two if more convicted murderers had in fact paid the death penalty.

I am suspicious of statistics because I do not think they necessarily prove anything one way or another. However, having said that, and exercising appropriate caution, a look at the murder rate and the attempted murder rate in Canada during the last 20 years or so is very revealing. Statistics Canada figures indicate that in 1955 the murder rate in Canada, per 100,000 population, was .9. That is slightly less than one person per every 100,000. Six years later, in 1961, it had risen to 1.2 per 100,000. By 1967 it had risen to 1.8 per 100,000. The increase in the six-year period from 1961 to 1967 was exactly double that of the increase in the previous six-year period from 1955 to 1961.

This rate of increase was maintained, and increased slightly during the next seven-year period. In 1974, according to Statistics Canada, the murder rate per 100,000 population was 2.6. The actual number of murders committed in Canada in each of these years was: in 1955, 118; in 1961, 185; in 1967, 282; in 1974, 539. In other words, during about a 20-year period the number of murders committed in Canada showed almost a fivefold increase.

The figures for attempted murders in Canada are even more startling. For instance, in 1961 there were 74 attempted murders in Canada, a ratio of .5 per 100,000 population. In 1967 there were 139 attempted murders, a ratio of .9 per 100,000 population. In 1974 there were 524 attempted murders, a ratio of 2.3. So in a 13-year period from 1961 to 1974, the actual number of attempted murders in Canada increased almost eight times. It is interesting, I think, that this increase should take place almost exactly during the period following the point when capital punishment in Canada was abolished—in fact, if not in law, the year 1962, the last year anyone was executed in Canada.

I am not trying to suggest, by these figures, Mr. Speaker, that if we had had capital punishment during the last 15 years the murder rate and the attempted murder rate would have been any lower. It may have been; I do not know. No one can prove that it would have been, one way or another. But is it not just possible that it is more than merely coincidence that the number of murders and attempted murders in Canada showed such an increase during that period when capital punishment was not in effect, which has been characterized, as well, by increasingly more relaxed moral values and more and more permissive attitudes toward human behaviour?

Is there really any difference between the attitude of those criminologists and penologists who believe that massive expenditures of money and resources can reform the most incorrigible murderer, and the attitude of those progressive educationalists who believe that children should be allowed to "do their own thing" in our schools and that any sort of order or discipline might stunt their creative growth? Who can deny that violent and bloody crimes among our adult population, vandalism in our schools and delinquency among our children has increased tremendously in the last 15 years? Are we so naïve that we believe adult criminal and juvenile delinquents are not aware of the permissiveness of our society and the soft way it handles wrongdoers?

A Canadian Press story out of Toronto this past winter, which was carried by the Winnipeg Free Press on March 18, told of a metropolitan Toronto policeman, staff sergeant Jack Foster, who resigned just two years short of the 30 which he needed for a pension because of the anger and frustration which he felt after watching what was happening in the courts every day. He felt that he just could not remain a policeman and continue to observe it any longer. To quote Sergeant Foster:

> As far as I am concerned, what is happening in the courts is a joke, just like a circus sideshow. The young people coming before the courts are treating the whole thing as a joke. They leave there laughing.

Mr. Speaker, maybe I am old-fashioned, but I do believe that there are moral absolutes, that there are things which are right and things which are wrong. There are still behaviours which a moral and just society must find unacceptable, and those who wrongfully and wilfully commit these actions are criminals and must be treated as such. Of course, this is today a very unfashionable attitude. The concept of evil as an absolute has gone out of fashion, the same as has the concept of absolute virtue. There are no saints today, and there are no sinners either. We must be the first society in history not to recognize or want to recognize that there can be bad and evil in men. Criminals today are not bad at all: they are just misunderstood, misguided, underprivileged and unloved! Well, Mr. Speaker, I may be old-fashioned, as I said, but I think some criminals are not any of these things at all. I think they are greedy, selfish, unscrupulous, evil and incredibly dangerous to a peaceful society.

A popular movie a few years ago involved a hunt for a criminal whose particular practice was kidnapping and then killing his hostage. This had happened on three or four separate occasions and the police had not been able to apprehend him. The hero of the picture voiced the opinion that the killer would likely do the same thing again within the next 24 hours, that there would be another kidnapping and possibly another murder by the killer. The chief of police asked the hero why he thought so, to which the hero replied, "Because he likes it."

Mr. Speaker, the crime of kidnapping and then threatening or killing the hostage has become very familiar to us in Canada during the last few years. So have other hideous and violent crimes. Canadians have become sickened by crimes involving the multiple slaying of young children, crimes involving rape, mutilation and torture killing of the victims, and crimes in which the victims have been killed just for sport, having been robbed. What is an acceptable way of dealing with these criminals, this type of cancer in our society? Can it be treated any more than much of the cancer of the human body can be treated? Surely we must recognize and accept that at some point the only acceptable way of dealing with some criminals is by cutting them out of society in the way cancer is cut out of the body—by eliminating them, by execution. To me, the issue of capital punishment is essentially one of justice.

First, what is justice and how do we define it? We begin by making a distinction between what is right and what is wrong. A determination of what is right and what is wrong begins with a concept of what is fair. We set up a system of laws in an attempt to provide a reasonable degree of fairness to all members of society. When we set up laws, we must also attach to them a system of penalties for breaking them. This is the only way that the law can be made to work. If there is no penalty for breaking the law, then it is not enforced and it is not a law at all but merely a suggestion or good advice. The law must be enforced if justice is to prevail. Penalties for breaking the law are an affirmation of our belief in the rule of law and of our desire to see that justice is done.

● (1650)

The rule of law, then, requires, to be effective, that when a law is broken and a crime is committed, a penalty must be imposed. A retentionist believes that the penalty for murder must be execution. The abolitionists are troubled by the fact that capital punishment as a penalty for a crime involves killing, and therefore seems contrary to the supreme commandment against killings, and itself contradictory. But, surely, this view is a distortion of both justice and the true meaning of the commandments. Murder is a crime, but so is stealing or kidnapping in our society. How do we deal with them? We imprison kidnappers and impose fines for certain offences involving theft. Does anyone question that this is a fair and just way of dealing with these crimes? We do not classify these penalties as kidnapping and robbery by the state. They are the necessary penalties if the rule of law is to be maintained and justice is to be done. So it is with capital punishment.

One of the things which distinguishes a civilized society from anarchy is that it operates according to the rule of law. The basic tenet of this rule of law in any civilized society is that the most important and precious thing which an individual can possess is his life and that society will act to protect his right to life. The ultimate transgression of this law is for one member of society to deprive another member of his life, to commit murder. It is the murderer who makes the choice. By his act of murder he has chosen to remove himself from that society of which he was a part, to remove himself from its civilization and its humanity. His act of murder has forfeited his membership in that society. It then becomes the necessary duty of society to pronounce upon the ultimate transgression of its own laws by one of its members, if the society has any meaning at all and membership in it has any value. The killer brutalizes by his actions. He indicates that he has become less than that which society demands of him. The convicted killer has, by his actions, proven himself unworthy to be part of a society which believes, above all else, in the sanctity of human life.

Some abolitionists are opposed to capital punishment because to them it seems like nothing more than a vengeful and barbaric "eye for an eye and tooth for a tooth" type of justice. It is nothing of the sort. It is merely an attempt to make the punishment the equivalent of the crime. The penalty must be equal to the offence or else it fails to be fair an just. The symbolic representation of justice is that of a blindfolded woman holding a sword in one hand and scales in the other. The blindfold represents the impartiality of justice, and the scales indicate that justice must be even-handed, with the award or penalty equal to the offence.

What is the right and the just way to treat some of the murderous criminals who confront us today? What is justice for a mass slayer of children, an airplane saboteur whose actions are directly responsible for the hideous death of perhaps hundreds of people, a sadist who tortures to death his victims, a robber who purposelessly kills his victims? Is imprisonment really justice for these criminals? Their victims cry out for justice, and we fail them. We reject the justice of the ancients as primitive and brutal. We want to be modern and sophisticated in our approach to crime, but in so doing we fail terribly in respect of justice. The result is that our society today is more brutal and primitive than anything imagined by the ancients.

Among ordinary people there is, today, a mood of anxiety and quiet desperation as they observe and are aware of a justice system which cares more for the welfare of the criminal than it does for that of the victims. Thousands of dollars are spent to maintain and keep the criminals, and nothing is done for their widows and victims. Do we not think that the ordinary person, is aware of this? He feels betrayed and acts to try to defend and avenge himself.

In our big cities, taxi drivers are held up and robbed with increasing regularity. In United States cities, taxi drivers carry guns under the front seat. I do not know if any in Canada do yet, but how long will it be before they start doing so? Storekeepers install elaborate burglary systems in their stores. The attendants at all-night gasoline stations sit in bullet-proof glass booths and do not carry any change after regular hours. I understand that in the city of Detroit the attendants even wear revolvers in an attempt to prevent hold-ups. Bus drivers are forbidden to sell tickets so that they will not have to carry any money and thereby invite robbery. Women take courses in self-defence because they despair of receiving justice before the courts of law if they survive an attack. Yet we have criminology experts like Dr. Fattah of Simon Fraser University who have the gall and effrontery to lecture Canadians and tell us that we do not have the right attitudes towards criminals.

The abolitionists argue that capital punishment is cruel and unmerciful. They do not feel that any murderer should be executed. But mercy cannot be considered in isolation from truth and justice. To commute the death sentence for one murderer may be extending deserved mercy, but to extend this type of mercy to all thugs and murderers is to throw pearls before swine. We are moral beings accountable for our actions. If we dispense forgiveness and mercy in wholesale lots to those who have not earned it by repentance, then we cheapen both mercy and justice. We offend God's law, rather than act in accordance with it. The Bible teaches us that God is a merciful God, but it teaches us that he is first of all a just God. The Bible has a lot to say about life, mercy and forgiveness, but it never questions the essential justice of execution for murder. Again and again it reiterates what the consequences of murder are: "He that smiteth a man, so that he die, shall be surely put to death". Also, "and they that take the sword, shall perish with the sword"; "whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed". In Acts 25:11, the Apostle Paul said:

If then I am a criminal, and have committed anything for which I deserve to die, I do not beg off and seek to escape death.

What the ancient societies knew and accepted, today we doubt and deny, and in so doing we have abdicated justice. Capital punishment is horrible, of course it is, and who can deny it. But is not the nature of all punishment horrible? No penalty can be both sophisticated and effective at the same time, but that does not make it any less necessary or just. To abolish it is to sacrifice the element of justice inherent in it, to be weak when we should be strong, to lack the courage that is required by our convictions of what is just and right.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member, it being five o'clock.

Mr. Masniuk: Mr. Speaker, may I continue for another minute and a half and complete my speech?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House allow the hon. member to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Masniuk: I thank hon. members for their courtesy. I have only a few more comments to make. We live in a society which operates on the rule of law, as I have stated, and one of the basic tenets of both God's law and man's law is that human life is precious and important, the most precious of all human possessions. What is just penalty for the murderer who kills another, who deprives another being of his life, if not the forfeiture of his own? To require any less is to say that we do not really believe in justice, nor do we really believe that life is all that precious. Capital punishment for murder affirms our belief in justice and declares, in unequivocal terms, how important we regard life when we require that one who deprives another person of his life should thereby forfeit his own right to live.

● (1700)

We either live in a society where justice prevails, or we live in a society which without justice is not worth living in at all, because if there is no justice then life has no meaning. We either believe in the value of human life and are willing to affirm that belief by executing murderers, or we indicate, by failing to affirm this belief by not executing murderers, that life is both valueless and meaningless. I choose to live in a society in which justice does prevail and in which life does have meaning. I desire a society which has the courage to affirm its belief in justice and the importance of human life, and therefore I am unable to support this abolitionist, government bill.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek)—Sports—Reason for alleged double standard in dealing with South Africa; the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard)—Health—Measures to protect visitors to Olympic Games against polio—possible use of Sabin oral vaccine; the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez)—External Affairs—Mining nickel from seabed—Involvement of workers in developing strategy for negotiations—Position taken by INCO.

It being five o'clock, pursuant to order made on Friday, February 27, 1976, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills and notices of motion.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It has been agreed through the usual channels that subject to a subsequent challenge today we are to deal with order No. 44 on page 32 of last Monday's order paper, that is, Bill C-244 standing in the name of the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Paproski: That is so agreed, with the usual challenge.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, yesterday when I rose at this time on a point of order you indicated that you would take the matter under advisement. I gave notice at that time that I would rise today to amplify and complete my argument to attempt to illustrate that we are not following the intent of the Standing Orders of this House or that, at best, those Standing Orders are being misinterpreted. Let me say at the outset that my point of order is in no way intended to reflect on the subject matter of today's private members' hour or, for that matter, on the subject matter selected for any previous private members' hour. The point of order refers to the treatment or disposal of the bills or orders which precede on the order paper the item which is called for debate.

With reference to the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Blais) yesterday, the suggestion was that this was the first complaint and that prior to making my comments I should have advised him. For his benefit, may I say that I have risen several times during this session on the same subject. Earlier in the session he will read on the order paper that an item of private members' business was, by unanimous consent, allowed to stand and retain its position. Resulting from my interventions at that time, the wording on the order paper has been changed. In addition, a sheet is distributed to hon. members indicating the business which is likely to be called in private members' hours. The sheet generally arrives late in the week after one or two private members' hours have passed. The sheet is not available to the public, which might be taking an interest in House business.

For this point of order today I can use almost any recent private members' hour, but for emphasis I will use the particular day which best illustrates the ridiculous position into which we are putting ourselves, the thirteenth day of last month. On that day the item called was No. 112 on the list of public bills. It is interesting to note that this particular bill was preceded by public bills sponsored by 28 different hon. members of this House. Several of those hon. members has more than one bill on the list.

The hon. member who is moving the bill listed for debate today has a total of ten bills listed prior to the one which was called for debate. The hon. member who moved his public bill that day himself had four other bills listed before the one which was called. All these bills, including those of the hon. member who spoke that day, retained their position on the order paper. Yesterday the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), an acknowledged expert on House procedures, said:

> Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that I do not believe the government should have the right to dictate what takes place in private members' hours. That is the right of the private member. If private members choose not to have their business come forward, that is their right. I do not believe the government should impose on the House of Commons what is to be taken up in private members' hours—

If I may—as everyone else does—I will quote an extract from Beauchesne's. I am quoting from citation No. 87 which reads as follows:

> When an order of the day has been read, it must thereupon be proceeded with, appointed for a future day, or discharged.

Mr. Speaker, on April 25 of last year, if I may quote Your Honour, you said the following:

> The hon. member has the right to raise this point of order again. I should like to refer him to standing Order 18(1) which reads:
>
> "All items standing on the orders of the day, except government orders, shall be taken up according to the precedence assigned to each on the order paper."
>
> By the rule books this means that the House should call item by item those that appear on the order paper. The only problem is that if they are not proceeded with they go down to the end of the list, and the hon. member directly concerned loses his turn.
>
> If the hon. member does not give unanimous consent I will call each of the bills on the order paper, one by one.

I suggest that if we had followed that procedure on April 25, 1975, we would have run out of time before the debate had started on the particular bill in question. I have one further quotation which was a ruling by Mr. Speaker on May 2, 1975:

> The first—
>
> Referring to two comments.
>
> —is that the government, as such, really has no particular control over the conduct of private member's business. An indication of consent or otherwise from the government as to the ability of a bill or any other measure to stand and retain its priority is no different from the indication of any other member of the House.

The point I am trying to make—and I find it somewhat difficult; I have to rise many times—is that we must have some prior knowledge of the business which is to be conducted in this House. Under the present procedures, this is an impossibility. It is not only difficult for hon. members, but it is an impossibility for the public, and I think the public is certainly entitled to know what is to be going on in this House in the way of business. The business should be listed on the order paper. We should know what is coming up. That is the precedent which was established in the past.

In view of these additional arguments, Your Honour may wish to take this whole matter under advisement and give a ruling later. Should the Chair rule that I do not have a point of order and if this procedure is to continue, I should then want to point out some of the opportunities which are open to hon. members to make somewhat of a farce of the procedures in private members' hour. I would request the opportunity to present that argument at that time, depending on the ruling and whether the Chair intends to rule on whether this is a point of order at this time.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I do not intend to be very long. I made some remarks yesterday, and I appreciate the intervention of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). His point of view is a very valid one. That is perhaps one of the reasons why the whole matter of private member's business has been referred to a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, so that the matter may be deliberated upon and recommendations made to the House. We are looking forward to some rather draconian changes in procedure.

● (1710)

I take exception to the impression the hon. member for Vaudreuil leaves, however, that the whole matter of private members' business is being influenced by government action. Mr. Speaker, there is no government intervention. The reason I, as parliamentary secretary to the government House leader, may be responsible in some way for the orderliness of private members' business is that we have the administrative facilities. One of the reasons we have such a number of bills that are before those we deal with, in most instances—matters that are allowed to stand—is that effectively we want to provide to all hon. members the opportunity to debate their particular motions. As I pointed out yesterday, there are a number of instances when members cannot be here to debate their bills, and they insist on having the bill remain on the order paper so that it can be deliberated in the future.

As the hon. member for Vaudreuil knows, under the present rules there is a provision where only a certain limited number of bills standing in the order of precedence can be disposed of in any given session. At the beginning of each session a lot is drawn; a number of bills are drawn out. So when we dispose of 30 items of private members' business in a session, we do very well. Individual members who have had the luck of the draw want to preserve their priority. It was in order to accommodate them that we adopted the procedure we are now following.

Under Standing Order 19 there is provision whereby any order that is called, and with which the hon. member is not ready to proceed for one reason or another, can be stood at the request of the government. That is stipulated by the Standing Order. That was brought into being because of the hon. member for Vaudreuil bringing to the attention of the House basically the point he is making now. Evidently, all members opposite do not share his views. There was an indication by hon. members generally, however, that the procedure which was accepted by the House—namely, that the government express this wish through the parliamentary secretary to have all matters stood—was acceptable to individual members. That is the extent of government intervention: it lends its name to private members who do not wish to have matters debated at the time they are called, but by the same token do not wish to lose their priority. Effectively, we accommodate private members by proceeding in this way.

The hon. member for Vaudreuil has drawn our attention to a situation in which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was involved when we dealt with Bill C-311 although there were a number of bills preceding it. I agree that in that one instance in the session we abandoned the usual course, which is to review all items in their order of priority, by asking all individuals in that priority whether they wanted their business proceeded with.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had Bills C-250, C-256, C-260 and C-288 on the list ahead of Bill C-311. He did not wish to proceed with those matters, and we approached him to give him the time that was available because he had precedence. He inquired whether we could deal with Bill C-311. The matter was discussed and I used my discretion—and perhaps I am being attacked now for having done so—in according to a very honourable member of the House the privilege of dealing with an item which, in effect, was not in accordance with the usual procedures that we follow. The matter was disposed of in due course. Was I wrong in exercision that discretion? If I was, I stand to be judged.

All I want to indicate, Mr. Speaker, is that we attempt to provide to hon. members as soon as practicable those items which will be dealt with in the next session, first contacting the individual members who have priority in order to determine whether they will be available and whether they wish to proceed with a particular item of business. Having ensured that a member will be here to debate the item of business, we communicate with the interested parties, including the government. Then we set the matter down and advise all hon. members of the matter that is going to be debated on a given day.

There is a limitation on the amount of time available in which to advise members and the public generally, because of the allocation of government supply days. As you know, Mr. Speaker, a certain number of days are designated for the opposition but they are not determined so far in advance that we know exactly when they will come. Private members' bills, of course, cannot be dealt with on those days. It becomes very difficult for us to advise members what business will be dealt with in private members' hour unless we know when opposition days will be set. Effectively, that puts certain restraints upon us. So we have two very serious limitations as far as giving prior notice. One is ascertaining that private members are ready to proceed, and the other is ascertaining when there is going to be a private members' hour.

Those are my submissions, Mr. Speaker. I think the whole matter can be resolved by the proper application of Standing Order 19(1) which reads as follows:

> Questions put by members and notices of motions, not taken up when called may (upon the request of the government) be allowed to stand and retain their precedence; otherwise they will disappear from the order paper. They may, however, be renewed.

What the government has been doing is giving its consent in accordance with Standing Order 19(1).

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is just one facet of this matter on which I should like to say a word or two, and I had intended to do that before I was dragged into this debate by the references from across the floor. May I simply say, with respect to that bill of mine far down the list that was allowed on April 13, that the information communicated to me at that time was that nobody with a bill ahead of mine was prepared to go, and I was. I also point out that on two occasions when I was allowed time for that bill, I surrendered it. On one occasion it was so that we could deal with the prisoner of war legislation, and on another occasion it was so that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) could make his statement with respect to the patriation of the British North America Act.

The one point about which I should like to say a word is that raised by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) and also by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) the other day; that is, the use of the phrase which appears in the order paper repeatedly, "allowed to stand at the request of the government". The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Blais) has pointed out quite clearly that this is just a device. Actually, what happens is that the member requests that his bill stand, but since the rule book says it has to be done at the request of the government, he asks the government to do it. The government makes the request, and the matter stands.

I join with the parliamentary secretary in welcoming the fact that this whole matter is in the hands of a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. I hope this aspect of it will be sorted out so that we do not use this phrase which means something other than what we really mean. What happens is that a member requests that his bill stands, but it appears in the record as though the government requested it, and that enables the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River to say that somehow the government is interfering with private members' business.

If I may recall those ancient days when I first came here, the rule was a little different. In those days a matter could stand once, but the second time it was called—and I think the hon. member for Vaudreuil might like this proposal—it was dropped unless there was unanimous consent for it to stay on the order paper. The change from that practice, that is, to having the government request it, was to get around the fact that sometimes some mean persons would not give their consent. I want to express the hope that a way can be found so that in reasonable cases bills can be allowed to stand; but it should be made clear that this has been done at the request of the member himself, so that it does not seem as if the government has the entire say about the matter.

● (1720)

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, the last two interventions require some comment. If I may answer the comments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre concerning the members who preceded him on the particular day in question, I point out—this is not in any way meant to be personal—that I had three bills which preceded the particular bill called, and considered each of them important enough to bring before the House if given the opportunity. I mention this only as I assume that several of the other 28 members may be in the same position.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But I was told nobody else was ready.

Mr. Herbert: That is correct. The subject raised that day was the same subject being discussed on the floor of the House under government orders. In other words, I assume it would have been possible for the hon. member to raise his matter in the form of an amendment to the government bill actually under discussion that day, a bill to do with the Citizenship Act. The point is that many of us were most interested in the subject and would have welcomed, if we had known about it, the opportunity to participate in the private member's debate that day.

May I deal with the comments of the parliamentary secretary who referred to Standing Order 19(1). That part of the Standing Order which he quoted says, "Questions put by members and notices of motions . . ." He did not read the words "public bills." That point was referred to by the Acting Speaker on April 14, as reported in Hansard. As I have already pointed out, after the intervention of April 14 by the Acting Speaker, and that of April 25 by Mr. Deputy Speaker—yourself, sir—Mr. Speaker himself made a ruling on May 2. In the circumstances, I do not think we should heed the argument of the parliamentary secretary with regard to Standing Order 19.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Seriously, should the hon. member not consider the provisions of Standing Order 19(2) which reads in part:

> Orders not proceeded with when called, upon the like request, may be allowed to stand . . .

The difficulty, it seems to me, is that Standing Order 19(2) puts bills in the same category as questions and notices of motions.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary read, and I quoted, part of Standing Order 19(1). I refer hon. members to the proceedings of April 14 during which there was reference to the whole of Standing Order 19. Despite what was said, Mr. Speaker ruled as he did on May 2.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I thank hon. members for their contributions. I am not sure what kind of conclusion will flow from the matter I am about to bring to the attention of the House at this time.

The point the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) raised seems to be based on his contention that the House is not following the intent of the Standing Order, or is incorrectly interpreting Standing Orders 18 and 19 to which he referred. To prove his point, the hon. member referred particularly to what happened on April 13 last when the House considered item 112 under public bills. He brought to the attention of the House the fact that the hon. member who had moved, as sponsor, the public bill that day himself had three or four other bills listed on the order paper which preceded the one called and were stood at the request of the government.

He also, in my opinion, referred to an occasion on which the House proceeded by unanimous consent. I am not sure if he meant that day, April 13, or another day. In any case, I remember one occasion when the hon. member raised the question but did not thereby really further his argument. He complained about the procedure being followed but gave the Chair the impression that he was ready to let the House proceed without forcing the Chair to make a decision.

Today the hon. member referred to citation 87, page 81, of Beauchesne's fourth edition. The last sentence of citation 87(1) reads:

> When an order of the day has been read, it must thereupon be proceeded with, appointed for a future day, or discharged.

To support his argument, the hon. member contends that hon. members ought to know in advance the order of business and that even the public should have prior knowledge of the business of the House of Commons, if I may use his own words. I say to the hon. member that the Chair can only interpret the existing Standing Order even though the Chair may approve the principle he is putting forward. The Chair must first look at the standing order and then decide if the practices of the past conform with the Standing Order. I think Standing Order 18(1) and all of Standing Order 19 ought to be read into the record so that they can readily be referred to if a decision must be made later.

Standing Order 18(1) reads:

> All items standing on the orders of the day, except government orders, shall be taken up according to the precedence assigned to each on the order paper.

Standing Order 19(1) reads:

> Questions put by members and notices of motions, not taken up when called may (upon the request of the government) be allowed to stand and retain their precedence; otherwise they will disappear from the order paper. They may, however, be renewed.

Standing Order 19(2) reads:

> Orders not proceeded with when called, upon the like request, may be allowed to stand retaining their precedence; otherwise they shall be dropped and be placed on the order paper for the next sitting after those of the same class at a similar stage.

The hon. member at this time asks the Chair to determine if the government is entitled, without consulting all hon. members of the House, to interfere as it wishes with the order of House business during private members' hour. In my opinion, the difficulty stems from the words "All items . . . taken up according to . . ." The hon. member suggests that all items except government orders, should be considered according to precedence, or as they are listed on the order paper. On this, I suppose, all hon. members agree. But the main question is whether the government has power to request, without consulting hon. members, that an order shall be stood. Having read Standing Order 19(2), I conclude that the only person—or the only institution, if you like—which has the right to request that an order shall stand is the government.

● (1730)

In my opinion the Standing Order, it must have been put there for the same reason put forward by the parliamentary secretary. He suggested that it is the responsibility of the House leader to try to plan the work of the House for days in advance. He must give notice to other hon. members as to what day there will be a private members' hour or what order of the day will be taken.

The hon. member is asking the Chair to solve a problem that exists between the hon. member or other hon. members and the government or members of the House of Commons.

The Standing Order allows an order of the House to be stood at the request of the government. Only the government can make that request, but it is for the House to decide. Therefore the question is in what way the House should decide. This is the difficulty I have to resolve. Possibly this point should be taken under advisement.

If I decided to apply Standing Order 19(2) strictly and forget about any agreement that might exist between the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Blais) or any other member of the government and other hon. members or parties as to the order of business for private members' hour, and forgot about the distribution of lists of private members' business which have been initiated in recent months, and in which the Chair is not involved, I should at this time call every order, one by one. If hon. members do not accept the request of the government to stand each of the orders, the Chair must decide whether that supersedes the right of the government. I would have to decide whether to put the question with regard to whether the order should be stood every time. This would involve valuable time being lost to private members' hour.

The suggestion was made by the parliamentary secretary, and even more strongly by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), that the whole matter be considered by the sub-committee on procedure and organization which has been formed to look into private members' business. That is a valid suggestion. I feel this is better than asking the Chair to make a decision on a Standing Order which is not clear as to the procedure of disposing of that difficulty, thus, how should the House refuse to stand any private member's item of business.

Without minimizing the right of the hon. member to express his point of view on the organization of private members' business and his right, and that of other members, to have more input into the order of business during private members' hour, I feel we should leave it at that. I am still prepared to take the matter under advisement. However, I would prefer the sub-committee on procedure and organization to study the matter and possibly design a Standing Order that is more precise and satisfies hon. members of the House.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Herbert: Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Am I to conclude that the hon. member is agreeing that the matter should be examined by the sub-committee on procedure and organization and at the same time he is consenting to the standing of all orders before No. 44, and that we can proceed at the request of the government to stand these orders?

Mr. Herbert: That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

INTEREST ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING REDEMPTION OF MORTGAGES

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Toronto-Lakeshore) moved that Bill C-244, to amend the Interest Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I trust that there is enough time remaining in private members' hour for me to put on record some of the notes I have on this matter. I will not speak too long in order that my bill will have a chance of being sent to committee.

The purpose of Bill C-244, as spelled out in the explanatory note, is to enable a mortgagor to redeem a mortgage by paying the amount of principal and interest then due, plus three months further interest. In this way unscrupulous mortgagees will be deterred from introducing excessively severe penalty clauses in small print. This is the specific and narrow purpose of my bill, which in short would stop pre-payment penalties that range from three months interest and upward.

However, the broader and more important reason for going ahead with Bill C-244 this afternoon is to provide members with at least an hour—of course on this occasion we will not have that much time—or hopefully more time if hon. members should decide the bill or subject matter should be sent to committee, to discuss from the borrower's side some of the smaller aspects of mortgages which are often overlooked when discussing the fundamental problem of interest rates.

I am viewing this from the borrower's point of view, for which I make no apologies, Mr. Speaker. The large lenders—the banks, trust companies and insurance companies—have always had the resources and expertise to argue their case more than adequately. Indeed within the wide parameter of the law they have, to a large degree, been able to write many of the rules. These institutions have a large and powerful voice when arguing for changes which would be to their benefit, or against those to their detriment. Granted, financial institutions are in business to make profit, but the nature of the business, considering the security they demand, leaves them the minimum of risk, virtually in a "no loss position". If chartered banks and other lending institutions were experiencing financial difficulties, one could be more sympathetic. However, this is not the case. On the contrary, their profits are almost embarrassingly high.

The borrower, for his part, is just one individual who has really little or no say about the conditions of the mortgage. Oh yes, he may shop around, but this assumes that there are some real differences between mortgages offered, which may or may not be the case; also, he must possess a good knowledge of mortgages, which most do not have, only about 15 to 20 per cent of the population do so, and he must have the financial resources to pick and choose. For many people they must accept any mortgage they can get.

If we look at the borrower as a consumer, which he is, he may very well be the least knowledgeable, have the most limited choice of options, be the poorest organized and, in short, have the weakest bargaining position of any consumer in the country, and all this in relation to a product which normally will be the largest and most important investment in an individual's lifetime.

● (1740)

The mortgage market field cannot be considered a free market system like others. Not only is the commodity just too important and basic, but the relative strength between the buyers and sellers is simply too one-sided in favour of the lenders. For this reason government must be more than just a neutral, non-biased umpire. It must play an active role in strengthening the hand of the borrower or, conversely, limiting the power of the lender. I feel the excessively high pre-payment penalties are one such area in which it should act.

In my mind the whole concept of penalties for pre-payment of mortgages is questionable, but I can see some justification in the case where mortgage rates have dropped significantly and the lender may have difficulty finding another mortgagor. There may be some justification in that sort of situation, but that is virtually the direct opposite of the prevalent mortgage market today.

Take a situation where John Doe obtained a five year term mortgage in 1973 for, let us say, a 9 per cent interest rate, and today his rich Aunt Sadie leaves him $50,000, or he wins some lottery or whatever. Anyway, he has enough money to pay off the principal and interest due on the mortgage, which he does. Now this is really going to break up the lender. Oh yes, Mr. Speakers, for tomorrow in all likelihood he will lend that money out again to someone else, not at 9 per cent but probably something closer to 12 per cent. And John Doe, for the dastardly deed he has done to the poor lender, must pay a penalty of "x" months interest. This is totally ridiculous. The lender should be the one who pays John Doe a bonus for this kind of pre-payment.

I want to make it clear that although my bill suggests a pre-payment penalty of three months interest, it is just that, a suggestion for a maximum penalty allowed. Indeed I would want to change the bill. Proposed section 10.1 provides:

> Notwithstanding anything contained in this or any other Act, a mortgagor may, during the term of the mortgage, redeem the mortgage for the amount of principal and interest then due, plus three months further interest.

I wish to insert after the word "plus", the words "a maximum of".

I would like to see some flexibility built into this part of the act so that the penalties reflect as much as possible the current mortgage market conditions, including provisions for the payment of bonuses to borrowers when pre-payment is advantageous to the lender. The government must watch carefully to make sure that financial institutions do not use this kind of proposed toughening of the existing regulations and other as an excuse to divert funds from the mortgage field or to opt for shorter term mortgages.

Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to touch on one other area which is related to the discussion this afternoon, and that is hidden closing costs. Today many lawyers and real estate brokers will advise clients to set aside at least $1,000 to cover these extra fees and pre-paid charges. Anyone who has ever bought a house knows that a broad range of items can show up at the last minute, including such obscure things as loan origination fee, loan discount points, appraisal fee, mortgage insurance application fee, pre-paid interest, pre-paid mortgage insurance premium, closing fee, and so on and so on.

Due to a law which came into effect last year in the United States, American home buyers are no longer surprised—perhaps shocked would be a more appropriate word—by such hidden closing costs. The U.S. Real Estate Settlement Costs Act requires that the buyer be told to the penny how much it will cost to close on a house, exactly what each payment is for, and even what the previous buyer paid for the house if he or she owned it for less than two years. In addition, buyers must be given at least 12 days before they sign the final papers to look over the disclosure forms. If they do not like what they see, they can cancel the deal.

In Canada no such similar legislation exists to help home buyers. While much of what is contained in the U.S. act falls under provincial jurisdiction, I believe the federal government has a certain obligation to try to encourage similar legislation in this country, especially since the real estate and the lending industries do not appear willing to make full disclosure on a voluntary basis.

I hope hon. members may find that these minor problems, minor only in the light of the enormous over-all problems of housing and mortgage rates, are worth a more detailed examination, and as such decide the bill or its subject matter be referred to the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee of the House of Commons.

I understand from the parliamentary secretary that it is suggested that the bill should not now be read the second time but that the order be discharged, the bill withdrawn, and the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I want to say that I agree with this disposition of my bill and that the subject matter be referred to the committee. It is far better that the subject matter be referred to the committee than that the bill be talked out.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-244 is a step in the right direction but it really does not amount to very much. It is like a raindrop in a downpour. I should like through you, Mr. Speaker, to remind the hon. member that it was his government that set afoot the high increases in interest rates. In fact Canada has the highest interest rates in the world, the highest housing costs in the world, and highest land costs. This is the reputation that his government has earned over the years.

I recall that when we amended the Bank Act in 1967 we opened the floodgates in regard to high interest rates. At that time under the Bank Act there was a ceiling of 6 per cent, but we found that lending institutions, and more especially the banks, would not participate in the mortgage field. What they forced from the government was the taking off of that 6 per cent ceiling on interest rates, and from that time forward we have had ascending interest rates for loans, and more especially mortgage loans, across the country. This is the credit that can be attributed to the Liberal government.

I had just come here in 1965 and I recall how some of the younger members of the party opposite attempted to stop this removal of the ceiling. The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) was one of those who joined Walter Gordon in trying to prevent the taking off of this ceiling, and many other young Liberals also made the same attempt. But the then minister of finance, the present House leader, persuaded them that if they took off the ceiling there would be competition in the business world and that the rates would stabilize, or even go down. That did not happen, and it was the first mistake that the Liberal government made in regard to interest rates.

The second step was when Paul Hellyer in 1969 persuaded the government that mortgages should not be written for 25 year terms but rather five year terms, so as to make adjustments of interest rates in accordance with current trends. This was the price that he had to pay to the financial institution in order to persuade them to put money into mortgages. The result has been that, at the end of every five years of a mortgage term, people experience an increase in their interest rates. Under the old mortgage system the term was 20 or 25 years and the mortgagor had the security of knowing that the interest rate applied for that time.

When the interest rate ceiling was taken off in 1967 there was attached to CMHC mortgages, which were also at a rate of 6 per cent, a formula setting the rate at one per cent or 1½ per cent above the yield on bonds. That gave some control. But Mr. Hellyer was not satisfied with that; he also took off that control. He took off controls with regard to CMHC mortgages, so the combined effect of taking off control on mortgage interest rates and reducing the term from 25 years to five years is, as I say, that we have a reputation in Canada of having the highest interest rates in the world, with the highest land costs, and the highest housing cost. That is why I say that what the hon. member is attempting to do amounts to very little in the big scene regarding interest rates.

● (1750)

I am going to put on record just what interest rates do in respect of housing. I have a few figures here that I carry around in my wallet, because when I speak on housing from time to time it is nice to have a few figures to quote. This is what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) also does with regard to pensions. He has always got information on pensions right in his pocket so he will have ready reference to it. I do the same thing with regard to housing interest rates.

Let me give some figures regarding a mortgage for $25,000 for a term of 25 years at 11 per cent. The monthly payments will be $240.64, and over that 25-year period the borrower will pay $72,192. If that mortgage were at 6 per cent the borrower would pay $159.97 a month and the total amount would be $47,991, a difference of $25,000.

In today's market one knows that a $25,000 mortgage really will not finance a home, and that you have to get up to at least a $40,000 mortgage. On a $40,000 mortgage at 11 per cent a person pays $385.02 per month over a 25-year period, and the total amount that would be paid is $115,506. On a $40,000 mortgage at 6 per cent for 25 years the person pays $255.94 a month for a total of $76,782. In other words the difference between a $40,000 mortgage at 11 per cent and a $40,000 mortgage at 6 per cent over a 25-year term amounts to $39,000. That $39,000 is what the borrower has to pay in difference if he gets a mortgage at 11 per cent as compared to 6 per cent.

In biblical times they used to talk about usury. That is a word that was replete in the Old Testament. We should bring it back today. The word usury should be used many times just to underline to borrowers what is taking place.

Mr. Brewin: Maybe we should make it a capital offence.

Mr. Gilbert: The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) suggests that usury should be a capital offence, and I am inclined to agree with him.

This is the problem with which we are faced. The step the hon. member suggests is a step in the right direction, but it is a very small step toward solving the problem of high interest rates. I know the hon. member is one who is concerned about people. I have known him for a few years. He is a fellow lawyer and I think he is concerned about people. If we are concerned about people we have to be concerned about their housing problems. We have to build affordable houses, as the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) suggests. If we are to build affordable houses we must look at interest rates. We must have interest rates which give the borrower a fair chance to pay off his mortgage. The only way this can be done is by having low interest rates. It is up to the government to control interest rates with regard to housing so that people can afford them.

It is up to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to bring forth legislation which controls financial institutions, banks, mortgage companies, trust companies, and insurance companies so they do not charge unconscionable and usurious interest rates.

In order that the bill is not talked out let me conclude by saying I am in favour of it but, my gracious, it is a very short step with respect to a big problem.

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) for bringing this question of mortgage payments to the attention of the House.

In view of the fact that the government, through the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Mack-asey), intends to introduce legislation before the end of this session to deal with mortgage rates as one aspect of revised federal consumer credit legislation, the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore has kindly consented to have this bill not given second reading at this time, but to have the subject matter referred to the appropriate standing committee for consideration when the committee receives the minister's consumer credit legislation. I am advising the House that my minister concurs in this procedure of referring the subject matter of this bill to the appropriate standing committee at that time.

Among other things, the appropriate committee could examine the possibility that Bill C-244 may have the effect of driving mortgage funds from the market. I am sure all hon. members will agree that we need improved consumer credit legislation, and that is the intention of my minister.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan):

That the motion be amended by deleting therefrom all the words after the word "That" and substituting therefor the following:

Bill C-244, An Act to amend the Interest Act, be not now read a second time but that the order be discharged, the bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURES RESPECTING PUNISHMENT FOR MURDER AND OTHER SERIOUS OFFENCES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand that Bill C-84, to amend the Criminal Code in relation to the punishment for murder and certain other serious offences, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, no one will deny that the question of whether or not to abolish capital punishment is the most difficult problem likely to be faced by members of this thirtieth parliament. Few, if any, other issues have attracted as much public attention and concern. Debate in the media has centred not only on whether the use of the death penalty should be ended, but also on how members of parliament should reach their decisions. My mail has also reflected the divergence of opinion which exists on this point, that is, whether a member of parliament should vote according to his conscience or according to the views of the majority of his constituents.

During my election campaign I made it very clear that I am against all forms of killing, whether it be abortion, euthanasia, capital punishment, or war. My opposition to these methods of ending life varies by degree in relation to each of them. For example, I am completely opposed to abortion and would never vote in favour of a freer abortion law, even to the extent that I would put my seat in this House on the line. At the other end of the scale, I would make no such commitment against wars. Although ideally I would like to see an end to war, I do not feel that man has progressed to the point where war is obsolete.

My views on capital punishment fall in between those two extremes. Even though my personal feelings are for abolition, I cannot give a satisfactory answer to the question of the hired killer. In this case capital punishment is not a deterrent. There is no hope for rehabilitation of the criminal, yet society must be protected. I will be able, therefore, to live with a decision either way that is, to retain or abolish the use of capital punishment.

Realizing that I had the responsibility to take a stand on the issue, I was faced with the problem of what that stand should be. I decided to ask my constituents. In support of taking that action, I would like to refer hon. members on both sides of the House to a resolution passed at the National Convention of the Liberal Party of Canada in November, 1975. It was resolved that:

Members of Parliament be encouraged to canvass their constituents' opinions on specific and general policies.

This being a free vote, I feel that we have been given an ideal opportunity to democratize the decision making process in this instance. Certainly it is not practical or proper to survey popular opinion on every question with which we must deal, but on a moral issue of this nature I feel such action is justified and, indeed, essential. The alienation of the electorate from the government is becoming increasingly evident.

Here we have a chance to let the people know that they are being listened to. I campaigned on this theme in 1974, and I still feel that as the representative of my constituents I am here primarily to help enact the legislation that they want. For that reason I circulated a questionnaire to all households in my riding in March of this year. Of the 30,000 delivered, I received 6,008 completed returns, an over 20 per cent response. Any member who has surveyed his constituents will realize that that represents a very satisfactory return, one of the largest known. It also represents a suitable percentage for making a statistically accurate analysis.

In the questionnaire I asked four questions. Taking into account the proposed peace and security measures of Bill C-83, the first question asked whether the respondent favoured the abolition of capital punishment. For the record, Mr. Speaker, I would like to show that the response to this question, as for the others, remained essentially the same no matter what the questionnaire return level was.

With 3.98 per cent of the questionnaires returned, 73.3 per cent of respondents were opposed to abolition of capital punishment. At the 7.9 per cent level, 72.1 per cent were opposed; at 12.52 per cent, 71.0 per cent were opposed; at 16.93 per cent, 70.5 per cent were opposed; at 18.2 per cent, 70.5 per cent remained opposed, and at the 20.03 per cent level, the final tally, 70.7 per cent of respondents were opposed to abolition. That result shows a clear and overwhelming support for the use of the death penalty.

● (2010)

Question No. 2 asked the 70.7 per cent who answered the first question in favour of capital punishment whether they wanted the death penalty reserved only for murders of police and prison guards. In this instance 86 per cent replied that no, those involved in enforcing the law should not be singled out for special consideration.

My third question asked the same people, those who favour retaining capital punishment, whether the death penalty should be available for use against those persons convicted of first degree murder as it is defined in Bill C-83. Ninety-five per cent replied in favour of capital punishment for that group of murderers.

Finally, I asked if I, as a member of parliament, should vote according to my own conscience on this issue. Sixty-six per cent replied that no, I should not. Therefore while approximately one third of my constituents feel that I should vote according to my conscience, two-thirds, representing a significant majority, feel that I should not, but instead should represent the majority feeling of my riding. I will, therefore, respect the wishes of that majority and not vote according to conscience, but instead will vote against Bill C-84.

As I explained earlier, the capital punishment issue provided an excellent opportunity for the government to seek public support for changing the existing law. Moral issues such as the one we are presently debating arise infrequently. Also there will be a free vote. With this situation, and the fact that two thirds of my constituents feel that I should vote according to the majority opinion, I feel that the government is wrong in not seeking the views of the majority of Canadians, and acting accordingly. Sixty per cent of those people responding to my questionnaire added their comments on the issue, and one comment that was made time and time again was that my constituents were very grateful for the opportunity to have their opinions heard and considered.

Although the deterrent effect of capital punishment has been widely debated, the fact that so many people believe that it is a deterrent should be seriously considered. In the same way as the rule of law will be ineffective unless everyone in society has respect for the law, if most Canadians feel that capital punishment does serve as a deterrent, it would be reasonable to assume that the general acceptance of that principle would lead to its having an effect on the general population. I feel in this instance that the government missed a great opportunity to redress the feeling of alienation now felt by many citizens of this country. The government should listen to the people on questions related to deeply held moral beliefs.

[Mr. Maine.]

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for LaSalle.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Not for LaSalle, Mr. Speaker, for Joliette.

Mr. Speaker, when you asked me to speak as the member for LaSalle, I thought you meant that the riding of Joliette belongs to LaSalle.

Mr. Speaker, I am aware that we are discussing a basic issue for the future of society. I realize also that this legislation is one of the most serious we ever discussed in the House.

I want to be quite clear and specific in my comments, and I want to say also to those who do not share my opinion, that I deeply respect their views.

I remember having the opportunity to discuss this matter since I arrived in this House in 1968, and I also remember that the debates were very interesting. I wish to say that my decision is final and that I will vote against the bill before us.

The public at large and those who advocate the abolition of capital punishment are often tempted to blame society. In their opinion, society is responsible for everything. I suggest that we have our own responsibilities within society. But the public is concerned and all the attempts made by this government since 1968 have not brought about the security which they are entitled to expect.

I had the opportunity to listen to a few speeches on Bill C-84. I wish to draw the attention of the House on the speech made this afternoon by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner). Of course, others have also made excellent points for or against capital punishment, but I believe that all members of this House would benefit from reading again and again the remarks made by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe. Given his experience, of course, for which I have much respect, he was dealing with a matter which he knows very well. He was able to discuss this matter much better and in a much more enlightened way than I. His comments deserve all my congratulations and I think he destroyed one after the other the arguments put forward by the Solicitor General in introducing this legislation.

When dealing with capital punishment, some people say it is a barbaric method. One must think, nevertheless, of these businessmen, these restaurant owners, these pharmacists or these people who work in banks and who have been unhappily shot down by people who had decided to overlook the respect for somebody else's life to achieve their purposes. I would be inclined, Mr. Speaker, to blame the government for not abiding in the first place, by the legislation now before us.

● (2020)

Like all my colleagues, I know that when we last discussed this matter, we agreed to enforce the death penalty for the murder of prison guards and policemen. Such has not been the case, and I remember, Mr. Speaker. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), when he introduced and supported that legislation, made no secret of the fact that he would never enforce the death penalty while he was Prime Minister. Recently, the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) made no bones about the possibility of his resignation if his bill was defeated.

Mr. Speaker, when we have a government whose leader says he will not enforce a legislation he tries to sell us, I find that indecent and dishonest. We had democratically voted in this House on a legislation which has not been applied. Of course, some will say that the act gives the cabinet the authority to commute death sentences. But the act also says that capital punishment will apply when a prison guard or a police officer is killed with premeditation, and that has not been done.

Mr. Speaker, I will be very outspoken, this is not a matter of deterrence. Of course, members on all sides have tried to determine whether the implementation of capital punishment had a deterrent effect. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of justice. Whenever I am reminded of this ever actual commandment "Thou shalt not kill", I would like to point out to the murderers that this commandment should first apply to them and that they should know that whenever they choose, in order to achieve their ends, to get rid of anybody who happens to be in their way they should expect this kind of punishment.

I do not feel I am any worse than anyone else, Mr. Speaker. As far as I am concerned, I think that this is a matter of justice, and in this world of ours, I think we can consider it this way. Of course, there are not only members in the House of Commons but there are people in this world who are most scrupulous when the death penalty is being discussed. Mr. Speaker, should the House decide in favour of the death penalty, those who, in order to achieve their ends, intend to get rid of someone, will think twice before doing so. When one is squeamish about capital punishment, that is soon forgotten in wartime. That question was raised by one of my colleagues here in this House. Nobody hesitates Mr. Speaker, when one's country is at war, to fight and slaughter countless innocents.

Neither the Solicitor General nor anybody else has ever raised the matter of the indirect participation of Canada in the Vietnam war. Very little mention was made of it, Mr. Speaker, yet, I think we might have asked ourselves that question. To what extent have we not participated indirectly in the slaughter of thousands of Vietnamese? But it was interesting for certain industries, Mr. Speaker. Those scruples we have about the bill before us, we did not have them at the time, and I cannot remember the Solicitor General having deplored the indirect participation of Canada in that war. When a severe penalty must, of course, be imposed on that inveterate criminal, on that habitual murderer, on the one who, in order to achieve his purpose, plans to take the life of someone else, then we have scrupules.

Today, Mr. Speaker, with criminologists and psychologists—because I imagine there are a number of them in the office of the Solicitor General—one is tempted to make us believe that there are possibilities of rehabilitation. One is tempted also to say in particular that that always depends on society.

I am one of those who believe that we must improve the social climate and that considering the economic difficulties we are experiencing, this is not likely to reduce the number of robberies. But, Mr. Speaker, that is a long way from making a business out of it and a source of income to live in this earthly world.

Of course we all wish to improve that social climate by different steps. And why would we accept to forgive so easily a minority of people who allow themselves anything while the great majority endures that social climate which is so difficult, tolerates, waits out and still hopes that the situation might improve so as to be able to live decently and thus get an adequate income to allow them to live decently.

There was talk about a free vote. There is no doubt that on this side of the House all my colleagues will vote quite freely and according to their conscience. I have difficulty, Mr. Speaker, accepting that the Prime Minister should have gone as far as saying at one point that he might consider tendering his resignation if Parliament voted in favour of capital punishment. I have just as much difficulty accepting that the Solicitor General responsible for this bill should infer that he could not accept that his bill should not be passed. And how far will hon. government members try to cooperate and support not necessarily the bill but the minister in charge or the Prime Minister? When reference is made to a free vote I must say I have doubts.

Earlier a colleague talked about a certain survey. The survey made by the Metro Toronto Police Association is significant and quite clear. There was a question: Should capital punishment be retained for murders of policemen or guards? If you limit yourself to those categories, the answers are for the most part negative. But when we are asking people whether the death penalty should be retained for any crime, any premeditated crime, 87 per cent of them answer yes.

A few years ago, when the last vote was taken on capital punishment, I conducted like other members, an inquiry in my riding and 88 per cent of my constituents said they were in favour of capital punishment. I did not ask for another poll recently, but, like many other members, I have received my fair share of submissions and comments. It is quite clear that Canadians are in favour of capital punishment for inveterate criminals and those who commit premeditated crimes. That is quite clear. There are some reservations in respect of some forms of crime. When a convicted criminal is involved, the public recommends the application of the death penalty. I also know, as a result of investigations, that the public would be in favour of a referendum on this matter. Not only the Solicitor General but also the government know full well that a referendum on the matter would be decisively in favour of the death penalty in the cases I mentioned a while ago.

We are offered an alternative: 25 years in jail. Mention is made of 15 years in prison, with the possibility of a parole. But it is hard at this point to trust the government proposing such legislation: difficult because of the experiences made with regard to paroles and other practices which the people, generally, did not look upon kindly. Those experiences did not bring, not by a long shot, what the governmnent has hoped. By refusing to apply the act it asked us to pass a few years ago it also prevents us from trusting it as it hoped. The arguments invoked this afternoon by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), who is well versed in the matter, demolished one by one the arguments presented by the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). If he wants to prove his sincerity, even ever so slightly, I believe he could make comments tomorrow that would be quite contrary to those he made on introducing the bill.

And so, with all the chances of evasion we know, in the case of this 25-year imprisonment penalty, we know very well that the criminal condemned to that term in prison will not hesitate to commit another crime to escape from it. What does 25 years more or less mean when he has been sentenced to 25 years? I do not think that such a proposal is acceptable. A miscarriage of justice has also been mentioned. Of course, I am not a lawyer. I am an average man but I have my views on the matter. And the Solicitor General pointed out more particularly that the poor had an handicap because they could not afford costly defence lawyers as the rich do and were discriminated against from the start.

This is perhaps the best solution. This Parliament could provide the poor with as good a defence as that obtained by the rich. I think it is important to provide the accused with a complete defence which without being perfect would be equal to the defence given to those who can afford the best lawyers. I think Parliament should be responsible for ensuring that any individual benefits from an adequate defence when he is accused of murder.

The member for Saint-Hyacinthe said this afternoon and I have every reason to believe him owing to his experience as a judge, and other lawyers in the House have also stated that the mechanisms of justice were altered, that we had reason to believe that a miscarriage of justice could no longer happen. But to the extent that there is the shadow of a doubt, the enforcement of the death penalty could not be recommend. I think that those comments are commendable. I therefore consider only the well prepared premeditated murder by the criminal who will do anything to achieve his ends, as I said, to remove all those who stand in his way. The same goes for criminals who do not hesitate to get rid of an embarrassing witness in a future trial. I think that we are under the obligation perhaps to be stern but also to be fair. Mr. Speaker, we are also told that hanging is a somewhat savage process. We could come forward with measures or suggestions for some changes in this regard. We could also do away with someone who constitutes a danger for society by administering a pill or giving an injection; let us adopt another method if the rope seems repulsive to some people. It is important to maintain and to resume implementation of the death penalty.

● (2030)

My friend from Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) in winding up his speech last night insisted that we should all let our minds dwell on life, not on death. I would like my mind to dwell on the life of the innocents victims who were killed by criminals, Mr. Speaker. And like him, I let my mind dwell on life, on the life of those innocent people who, at a certain point in time, because of our parole system or as the result of convicts escaping, have met with the fate we know because we did not apply what I think is needed, and what I consider a measure of justice for the unscrupulous killer.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I could quote statements and statistics for or against it. When we refer to the possibility that an innocent person may have been hanged, we refuse to add up the number of innocent people who have been killed by those who deserved the death penalty and managed to get away with it by all sorts of means, resumed their criminal activities and killed a number of innocent people. It might be difficult to find out exactly how many such innocent people there have been, but we know very well that if we did add them up, the number would greatly exceed the number of judicial mistakes. Once again, thanks to more modern procedures, judicial mistakes have become virtually impossible, and where the flimsiest shadow of a doubt does exist, we do not recommend the death penalty. And if this government or this Parliament were to give the underprivileged the same defence opportunities as are available to the rich people, I believe that we would eradicate all doubts concerning charges made against anyone.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up too much time, but I would like to say that, in view of the wishes of the majority, this bill is unacceptable if we look at the present situation and the increase in the crime rate throughout Canada. As I live close to metropolitan Montreal, I am aware of what is going on there, and I believe that the situation is serious, with certain reservations concerning these crimes. Several other members have dealt with facts and submitted evidence.

I do not want to repeat all these facts and statistics tonight because others have done so before me, but again, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we would benefit from going over the speach delivered here by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe (M. Wagner). He spoke objectively, realistically and from experience, and therefore, I believe that we would benefit from reading this speech so as to truly understand the need and the necessity to apply the death penalty without feeling any less compassion for certain types of criminals and without favoring any less the improvement of our social climate, which could, in itself, reduce the crime rate, and without remaining any less open towards the assistance that we can give these unfortunate people.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I wishing that true justice may finally be implemented in Canada.

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Once again, Mr. Speaker, the House has to study a question which has raised a lot of controversies all over the country, and this for many years. Of course, it is not very interesting to discuss whether we should take the lives of some of our fellow human beings. But a fact remains: each man and each woman has the right to live and when someone dares to threaten deliberately the life of another human being I sincerely think that we do not have to protect his or her life as he or she has not protected that of the other.

Our goal today is to attempt to study this thorny question so that we can make decisions worthy of our civilization. Besides, to my mind, I think that the search for answers, as far as the taking of the lives of some of our fellow human beings is concerned, should be done very carefully and prudently before considering total abolition of the death penalty, especially at a time when so many horrible crimes are committed.

Mr. Speaker, to abolish the death penalty, as Bill C-84 proposes, is like abandoning the innocent between the hands of the guilty and telling them just this: Listen, murderers, go ahead, do as you please. The law prescribes that nobody can touch you; furthermore, it aims at protecting your lives at the expense of the lives of your victims.

Unfortunately, the bill we are now studying would abolish the death penalty for people convicted of murder and replace the death penalty with life imprisonment. We can also notice that the new arrangements for the application of the death penalty will vary depending whether they concern first degree or second degree murder. First degree murder covers, if I refer to the bill, planned and deliberate murders and contracted murders, that is to say hired killers; the murder of a police officer or that of a prison guard in the course of their duties; murder committed during the hijacking of an aircraft, a kidnapping or certain sexual offences, including rape and attempted rape. As for other murders, for example murders due to jealousy, they are considered second degree murders. Relating to the sentence, individuals of first degree murder will serve a 25 years prison term before being qualified, for the first time, to apply for parole. Whereas individuals convicted of second degree murder will not be qualified to apply for parole before they have served ten years of their sentence. However, in this latter case, the judge will be allowed to extend the minimum period to be served before the inmate can qualify for parole; in this respect, a maximum sentence of 25 years has been provided for in this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, on March 4, 1974, the following appeared in the newspaper Le Droit, and I quote:

● (2040)

Is the death penalty better than a life sentence. In this connection, Pat Devlin, a prisoner at the Joyceville penitentiary in Ontario stated: "It is better to impose the death penalty than to imprison an individual for life. The life of a prisoner is a brutalizing experience which cannot be understand by those who have not lived it. Criminals will not be rehabilitated by shutting them up in donjons."

Needless to say, free societies have an unalterable principle that the effect of the law is the same for everyone. From my early childhood, my parents have instilled that law into me. Today, the Solicitor General of Canada in presenting that bill seems to forget that principle since he wants us to accept two categories of murders, as I mentioned a while ago: first, the murder of policemen and guards which could entail a 25-year sentence without parole and, second, the murder of the so-called average citizens which would entail a 10-year sentence without parole. Big deal!

Mr. Speaker, we know that it was this House which decided that capital punishment would be retained in our Criminal Code for premeditated murder of a policeman or a prison guard, and we know that since 1962 there has not been a single hanging in Canada. Then why do we find those provisions in the Criminal Code if not to use them? For my part, I do not see any difference between the well planned murder of a policeman or a bank manager, for instance, or of an ordinary citizen, because the life of any citizen is worth that of a policeman or a prison guard, and we cannot have a law for the rich and another for the poor.

If we retain capital punishment, we must realize that life has no age and that it is valuable to everyone whatever his social rank. I agree with the reasoning of legislators that the policeman—and I know what I am talking about because I have been a policeman myself for several years—has an important part to play in the protection of society and that his role justifies particular attention and protection, but we must not forget that in principle we are all equal under the law.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is not difficult to point out that the Solicitor General made another mistake in proposing Bill C-84 because how can he distinguish between the murder of a policeman and that of an ordinary citizen? Who would dare say that the murderer of a bank manager should have serve only a 15 year sentence? Once again, this bill makes a law for the rich and another for the poor and that seems to me very unfair.

So I believe that most not all members of the House, except, of course, the Solicitor General who dared propose such a bill to the Canadian people, will agree that the murder of a policeman is not different from the murder of any other citizen or a bank manager as I just mentioned.

● (2050)

Will capital punishment be retained or abolished in Canada? That is the question dividing opinions at this time. Some want to retain it to give greater security to society, others want to abolish it because it contradicts somes passages taken from the Bible. I conducted an inquiry recently in my riding, not only among the people I have known for a number of years, but more precisely among the heads of family. As a matter of fact, those who are in favour of reinstating capital punishment represented almost 85 per cent of the whole population. I received more than 1,240 letters and out of that number, over 1,000 were in favour of capital punishment.

Therefore, as we can see, this poll shows how important the question is to the people in the light of the number of murders committed these last few years in the province of Quebec and everywhere else in our country.

As I was saying, some claim that the Bible is against capital punishment, but to them I say this: the authority we personify comes from God. Now, the fact remains that if we base ourselves on the principle that capital punishment is barbaric and unworthy of a civilized era, we automatically deny that divine mandate.

On the other hand, I want to say that I agree that, for the unbeliever, the death penalty is unworthy of man and barbaric because, according to him death leads to naught, but, for me, a believer, my opinion should be entirely different, death being to my mind the passage from one life to another.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the God from whom we hold our authority did say:

Thou shalt not kill.

But it would also be fair to add that that same God provided the death penalty for he who would violate the precept. For in Genesis, chapter 9, verse 6, one reads this:

Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made he man.

All that they lead into captivity will be lead into captivity; all that they take the sword will perish with the sword.

And I could continue indefinitely, but I simply quote from the texts to make you understand that the Bible is not opposed to capital punishment. Surely, I understand very well that respect for life is not the prerogative of Christians: this principle is good for everyone. In any case, you will agree with me that the Christian principles are not the whim of one religion in particular. But for all these reasons, I consider that the federal government must reinstate capital punishment and that, when the proof is made that the murderer acted deliberately and knowingly, capital punishment must be applied. But I agree that it is sometimes difficult to prove the deliberate character of an act, as it depends on numerous factors, but when crimes are committed with premeditation, capital punishment must be applied.

Since capital punishment is not applied any more, murders are increasing. The criminals know very well that they risk much less. As a matter of fact, it is usually easy to see that lawyers often try to turn a charge of first degree murder into a charge of second degree murder or those who are guilty enjoy the leniency of the Cabinet.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely think that anyone killing deliberately must pay with his life for a crime so serious that nobody on this earth has a right to make an attempt on the life of his neighbour; and he who does so should be prepared to risk his own life.

If this government manages to have capital punishment abolished once and for all in this country, as they hope, one only has to believe then that the right lies within the power of the individual, that justice favours the strong and that finally strength prevails over law. Before concluding, I would like to point out that we probably are directly responsible for the fact that murderers have become wild beasts. As a matter of fact, several became so after serving long jail sentences and specially after having remained locked up too long because of our egoism.

So these men were compelled to rebel and take the only means available to force society to take care of them. Man lives in a society where there is no perfection because of its institutions, its structure and inequalities which, in time and with the means used, finally make him different from what he was naturally or ideologically meant to be. The sick society in which we live dictates to him a mode of living in a community, it imposes its laws which are derived from general behaviour and at the same time forces on him its ideas which will eventually become means of action that he will avail himself of to voice his protests against society. Then when this man has become aware that he is a robot in this society, a creature as imperfect as society itself, a being quite different from what he intended to be, he cannot do anything concrete to change his situation without being liable to a sanction which will compel him to pay for his wrongdoings, to repair the damage he has done to society.

True, it is important to ask oneself what attitude should be adopted towards murderers. However before we come to this issue, should we not wonder why there are killers, assassins and thieves since it is obvious that one does not turn into a murderer overnight. No, Mr. Speaker, this is caused by our society which advocates permissiveness, and laisser faire. In this respect I would like to quote a few passages from a recent article in La Presse signed Suzanne and François Desmarais. I quote:

The deep cause of the rising crime rate, particularly among young people, is the rejection of all moral values.

This generates violence, family break up, free love, the so called sexual "liberation" alcohol and drug addiction. All this has been fostered by the media and magazine industry and by the legislation itself.

And further, Mr. Speaker, it says:

And when they talk of government responsibility, we would say this is the area where it should assert itself primarily. True, we must protect ourselves against an immediate threat but we must also go to the root of the problem and try to bring about the reforms which are required. We let evil go unbridled and now we want to check it with arbitrary laws.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, with the bill that the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) presented to us, it is exactly what the government is trying to do. For, after having served their sentence, what will the murderers do? Prisons are full now and what does the federal government do in the way of practical rehabilitation?

What happens to inmates after their release from prison? What chance do they have to go back to the society in which we live, considering their court records follow them for the rest of their life? I know by experience as a former policeman, and I mentioned it at the beginning of my speech, that almost nothing is done in penitentiaries and prisons to give the inmates a new lease on life. On the contrary, very often a prisoner spends many months without talking to a social worker and if on top of that he is deserted by his wife, his children or, if you like, by his family, how do you expect, Mr. Speaker, this prisoner to fit easily into this society which, as I said, is very sick? I sincerely regret that such things may exist but after further reflection I understand very well the view of Pat Devlin, the inmate of Joyceville penitentiary in Ontario whom I mentioned a few minutes ago.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I wish to quote a letter from a Mr. S. C. B. Robinson from Gananoque, in Ontario, who summarizes quite well the reasons for which I am favourable to the retention of capital punishment. I quote:

The value of life is a basic lesson of character, of reason and good sense that should be taught at home, at church, at school and through a whole series of social contacts. And, as a last resort, the state should teach it to those who did not understand and commit premeditated murders. At that stage, we should underline in an understandable manner the value of life and express it in a comparison with the own life of the murderer. In other words, the value of the victim's life should be equal to that of the murderer.

Capital punishment is a repulsive idea but society becomes absurd when it allows a murderer to kill a civil servant, beat a child to death or to shoot innocent by standers knowing very well that he will not pay with his own life.

A good number of our politicians claim that capital punishment is so repulsive that they cannot be party to its implementation but they declare that it is not repulsive enough to have a deterrent effect on a potential murderer. This reasoning seems perfectly illogical. The threat of capital punishment for the potential killer should allow the society to regulate a situation where the victim is unable to defend himself. Any other solution is favourable to the criminal and consequently, our citizens are less protected than they should be.

Capital punishment should not be applied to those who are convicted on circumstancial evidence and hanging should not necessarily be the only means to implement it but our nation should stop the present inflation in the value of the murderer's life at the expense of that of the victim—we should be all equal before the law and before the murderer.

So, Mr. Speaker, for all those reasons, I think that the retention of capital punishment in Canada is the only means to ensure real justice to persons convicted of capital murder. So I wish that every member in this House before making a decision having serious effects on our society will prevail himself of the stronger arguments and forget once and for all the sentimentality as the future of our children, of our wives and of our fellow citizens depends on it.

● (2100)

[English]

Mr. J. Larry Condon (Middlesex-London-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, on most occasions in this House members stand up and say how glad they are to speak on certain issues, but I think this is not a very happy occasion.

I should like to commence my remarks with a quote from W. Gunther Plaut, a rabbi from the Holy Blossom Temple in Toronto:

> At this late stage what new light can anyone shed on the controversy over capital punishment? After all the arguments on both sides have been made with passion and the full force of reasoned argument—one must come to the conclusion that even if the debate continues from now until doomsday no one will get any wiser. For truth be told: wisdom is not at all involved in the decision.

With these opening remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the House and the people of Canada the archaic way we govern ourselves in this House at the present time, and the great need for reform. I am quite convinced, as I am sure are the people of Canada, that most members—by most I mean all but 2 to 3 per cent of the members sitting in this House—have decided which way they are going to vote, be it through emotion, through their hearts, or through the direction of their constituents.

This has been an emotional issue in this whole scenario in the House ever since 1962. We have stood up here as supposedly the champions of the people of Canada. We have emotionally involved not only ourselves but the people of Canada in a conflict, a conflict that Canadians cannot at this time really comprehend, and certainly one they cannot afford to have in these times of confusion, of suspicion of government. Individual Canadians do not know what the people next door are going to do or what we are going to do. I think it is our fault that this is an emotional issue, not just the fault of members sitting in the Chamber now but those who have sat here over the last 10, 12, 15 years.

Individual members have talked to the public on this capital punishment proposal and asked them what they want. I assume, Mr. Speaker, as does every member of this House, that the people of Canada have elected us. But what have we done, and why is there suspicion of government in this great country of ours? There is suspicion of government not just federally but provincially too, and as an ex-municipal politician I say even municipally. I see a period of frustration in Canada because the people have lost faith in their politicians. Why have they lost faith, Mr. Speaker? I would think the reason is because of our outlook on life and on Canada. We told the people—this government is at fault, there is no question of that—back in 1967, 1968 or 1969 that capital punishment was still in effect but that the cabinet and government supporters in the back benches were not going to accept it. We have taken the trust of the people of Canada and completely ignored it.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I am not a long-winded politician, but I should like to comment on a few areas. I like to get at the facts and to hit the people right between the eyes. I would question some of the comments made by the abolitionists. It is not that their views are not legitimate; they feel in their hearts that there should not be capital punishment. But I am sure that many members who agree with the retentionist view, as I do, are getting a little sick and tired of hearing from their colleagues on both sides of the House "You are a hanger"; or, "You believe in capital punishment, you just want to get rid of the problem". That is not the way I feel, and it is not the way my constituents feel in Middlesex-London-Lambton.

An hon. Member: They say it is also barbaric.

Mr. Condon: Also barbaric, as my colleague from Davenport says.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Davenport was not the one who made that interjection.

● (2110)

Mr. Condon: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I think perhaps it was the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Andres). My concern with that outlook of people who feel that the retentionist attitude is that which I mentioned previously, that is, that we are some sort of monsters who would take somebody who has committed a very heinous crime and demolish them, is that it is not a true outlook. The people who believe in capital punishment are the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker, the MP, and also the people of Canada who have elected all of us.

We have reached the position now where we say this is not an emotional viewpoint. Some areas have been referred to as emotionalism. I should like to quote from the Dalhousie Review, which I understand is the bible of many lawyers in this House. It states:

> Sentimentality in the matter of crime and criminals, in which little or no account is taken of any distinction between the new offender and the confirmed outlaw, is perhaps an indication of an overwhelming moral upheaval. Unfortunately, there is no evidence that this genial spirit of "live and let live" and of co-existence with known criminals has resulted in any greater measure of public safety. Quite the contrary. The insecurity of our cities increases year by year as the crime rate in virtually all categories surges relentlessly upward.

What this particular gentleman is saying is that because of our permissiveness, and because of our foregoing of our knowledge of the past, we are ignoring what is happening in Canada today. I agree with him when he suggests to us that we should look into our own hearts first before we prejudge. This is something we have not been doing. We have gone along with snowballing permissiveness, and the attitude of "let them get away with it". Each individual has done the same thing in his own business or his own area of endeavour. We have taken this attitude and winked at it. This is where that attitude leads us to.

Let me comment very briefly on the presentations the police have made to all members of parliament. My great concern is not in respect of the calibre of police we have today, and not in respect of justice that is presented to us by them under very difficult circumstances. It is very difficult for a policeman to take somebody into court at 8.30 in the morning and see them walk out on the street at 10.30. Policemen exist in their jobs to protect you and me, and all citizens of Canada. They have an obligation to society which perhaps parliamentarians, politicians, and the people have not recognized. They are the people who protect us.

My concern is not in respect of the degree of protection we have received or the diligence with which policemen have performed their duties. My concern rather is in respect of what have we done to them. We have told them there will be no capital punishment for murderers of policemen and prison guards.

Let us assume that this legislation is passed and we do not have capital punishment. Under those circumstances if a criminal comes out of a bank with a gun, will the policeman with the knowledge that no matter what happens to him or what has happened to the poor teller in the bank not be inclined to shoot first to kill? Will he hesitate because of the risk of being down graded? I suggest absolutely not because he is going to be applauded. This is a sad situation. My great concern really is that the police know the background and say. "To hell with it. We cannot depend on the Government of Canada and we cannot depend on the provincial or municipal governments. We will shoot first and ask questions afterwards." I suggest, Mr. Speaker, and members of this august body, that this type of mentality is not that far away.

I have spoken to policemen who have said to me "Larry, will you get some sense into them because we are ready to give up the whole thing." We are getting into a police state where the policemen shoot first. We are losing all sense of justice and fair play, no matter what the circumstances. This concerns me because policemen are the people who are supposed to protect us.

We have heard many statistics on both sides of the question. I will not go into gory details of murder, rape, and such things, and I will not go into detail regarding the contempt we have for murderers or the concern we have for our children. I would like to say this to you in an unemotional way. This is a decision to be made by every member of parliament after serious consideration for some period of time. Many of us have known since 1974 that we were going to have this debate and would have to make this decision. I am sure there is not a member here who will make the decision on any other basis than on the basis of his own feelings and the direction he has received from his constituents. Let us not forget the wishes of our constituents, as they are the ones who have put us here.

In closing I should like to paraphrase Rabbi Plaut, It so happens that my makeup and experience place me and the majority of my constituents, over 75 per cent, on the side of retention. But, having said that, I cannot possibly claim that this makes me right.

[Mr. Condon.]

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this bill because I doubt whether any other single issue has so plagued and tormented the consciences of Canadians than the case for capital punishment.

There have been some very interesting addresses made on this particular legislation, and I refer here to the speech made tonight by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), the speech we just listened to by the hon. member for Middlesex-London-Lambton (Mr. Condon), the one made last evening by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt), and the speech of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). Those speakers arrived at different conclusions, but I submit that their thoughts given to this House could not help but make all of us think about the issue.

The doctrine of the sanctity of human life was developed a long time ago and not, it should be noted, by the present Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). Although compassion for human life is a basic tenet of western civilization, at the beginning of the 19th century in England more than 100 offences were punishable by death. Since then, numerous clergymen, lawyers, sociologists and others have agitated for a humanization of the penal administration. Their efforts succeeded in making our legal system more humane and more just, but in recent years we have, I believe, gone too far. Punishment and retribution have come to be considered unenlightened, and persons advocating them are often condemned as barbarians.

Present thinking, at least that of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the present government, appears to have been influenced by social scientists and criminologists who emphasize social engineering and social justice in order to achieve reform and rehabilitation. I say to you, Sir, that a battered, distraught, dismayed, and concerned society has discovered that these abstract theories linking crime to environmental causes do not translate into concrete programs to protect citizens against violent crime.

To consider specifically capital punishment, I submit that two distinct questions present themselves for examination. First, is the death penalty an effective deterrent to crime? Second, can the taking of a life by the state be justified on moral grounds?

● (2120)

Let us examine the question of deterrence. This matter has been studied at great length, and the Solicitor General's department has engaged various experts who claim to have proven that capital punishment is no more effective a deterrent than a lengthy jail sentence. Before accepting such conclusions I must point out that their whole approach misses the point.

Repayment and retribution, including capital punishment, are important threads in the social fabric, not only because they deter or reform the offender but because they reassure and satisfy society. This is not the satisfaction of some dark animal need. Citizens live in society on the understanding that their lives, their dignity, and their right to enjoy their possessions will be protected. When adequate retribution follows injury, citizens can be reassured and satisfied that society really does place some value on their persons. This, I submit, Mr. Speaker, was, and is, a central need for any society.

From 1961 to 1968, 28 individuals serving death-commuted sentences were paroled after spending an average of, was it 30 years—no, Mr. Speaker; was it 20 years—no, Mr. Speaker. It was after an average of only 12 years in prison prior to release, according to the Department of the Solicitor General in the document entitled "The prevention and control of violent crime in Canada" of March 1975, page 9. From 1968 to 1974 this figure rose to an average of 13.3 years for the 42 persons paroled from death-commuted sentences. In the light of these figures—and these are all the figures I intend to place on the record—it can be seen that the difference between the penalty for armed robbery, and murder, might be only a year or two—and under these circumstances a "death" sentence is hardly a deterrent.

One does not require a Ph.D. in sociology to know that a person who murders in the heat of the moment will not be deterred by the threat of capital punishment. The Criminal Code already allows society to distinguish between capital and non-capital murder. But how can the Solicitor General maintain that total abolition of capital punishment would not make criminals more disposed to killing policemen? This is the point that was just raised by the hon. member for Middlesex-London-Lambton (Mr. Condon). Anyone who thinks criminals do not weigh the possibilities of getting caught, and do not understand they could be executed, is living in a dream world.

A society in which crime goes without real punishment, and in which victims receive no satisfaction for their injury, is one that may turn to vigilante justice. Cynicism and callous indifference to good and evil will result from our having less concern for the needs of those who observe the rules than for those who break them. Regardless of whether punishment deters or rehabilitates, it is necessary for justice. Justice is as much a part of the human condition as is mercy. Without either, society will degenerate into a dispassionate paradise, where there would be neither love nor hate, justice nor mercy, only preventive regulations.

Let us look, for example, at the question of morality. Sooner or later the opponents of capital punishment fall back upon the thesis that the state is altogether without the moral right to assume a prerogative that is God's alone. Admittedly, the deliberate and ceremonial taking of the life of a human being is offensive to most persons and this is why executions, when they do take place, are no longer performed in public.

It is generally agreed that it is wrong for the state to inflict torture, or any hideous punishment, no matter how callous the offence. No less reprehensible is the infliction of death for such offences as theft, embezzlement, smuggling, bribery, counterfeiting, or seditious utterances. Yet in protest against such inhumanity, should we unthinkingly jump to the opposite extreme and claim that no crime, however, dastardly, is deserving of the death penalty? These are the questions we must ask ourselves.

The right of an individual to take the life of another in defence of his person is hardly contested. Why is it proper on occasion for a private citizen to take the life of another, while the state may not do so under any circumstances whatsoever? Again, if it is allowable to deprive a would-be murderer of his life in order to forestall a crime, why does it become morally reprehensible to do so after the crime has been committed?

It will be argued, no doubt, that an act of murder, once having been committed, is irreversible. And since nothing can be done to restore the victim to life, hanging the murderer becomes no more than a wanton act of vengeance. But it should be noted that the renunciation of vengeance is a virtue far more easily exercised by the dispassionate onlooker at a crime than by the sorrowing relatives who are directly afflicted.

It is also frequently argued that a man who has been hanged for murder might, on later verification, be proven guiltless. It is a historical fact that in every country, and in every age, innocent persons have been harried to their doom through the machinations of private enemies as well as by hatreds begotten of religion and politics. Such scandals cannot be entirely ruled out for the future; but they can be counteracted to some extent by modern criminal procedures now in force which provide almost iron-clad guarantees to an accused person. He is safeguarded by stringent laws of evidence, and he is seldom lacking in experienced counsel. Invariably a verdict of murder is subject to minute scrutiny through a series of appeals and reviews.

It is true that a vast number of prosecutions do leave behind them a strong element of doubt. Indeed, a trial is meant, by its very nature, to distinguish between that which is certain and that which remains unconvincing. In a great number of acquittals, the accused is discharged, not after being certified innocent and harmless, but only because the charge against him has not been proved beyond all reasonable doubt. In cases where any doubt remains, it is always the accused who is entitled to benefit. But it must also be acknowledged that not all court proceedings necessarily leave a residue of doubt. Often the charge against the accused is easily substantiated, the testimony of the prosecution's witnesses fully corroborated, and all contradictory evidence conspicuous by its total absence.

There is not a single human enterprise or field of activity not marred by some regrettable episodes. Yet we do not prohibit the construction of tall buildings or bridges, or tunnels because it is possible some two or three persons might lose their lives in the course of such an operation. Acts of justice, designed as effectively as possible to protect the innocent, will unquestionably be accompanied now and again by tragic blunders. But unless such miscarriages become blatant, and of alarming extent, there is nothing to be done except to minimize them as far as is humanly possible. In any event, such errors, tragic though they must be, could at their worst be insignificant, as compared with opposite blunders in which further loss of innocent lives could be the direct consequence of thoughtless clemency extended to dangerous and unrepentant assassins. I can therefore come to only one conclusion.

● (2130)

Capital punishment can be defended on both moral and practical grounds. However, for the death penalty to play any significant role in the war against crime it must be enforced not only at rare intervals but in all cases of fully proven capital murder. What matters almost as much as the severity of punishment is its certainty. Since 1967, 33 policemen and two prison guards have been slain, but the cabinet has continually overruled the findings of the judges, juries, and even the law itself, most recently in the case of Gary John McNamara who murdered a prison guard in 1972. On May 9, 1974, the cabinet commuted the sentence but no reason was given.

In 1973 René Vaillancourt murdered a Toronto policeman while fleeing the scene of a bank hold-up. In 1974 James Hutchinson and Richard Ambrose killed two officers in Moncton. Less than four months ago a policeman and a taxi driver were killed in Dartmouth. It is quite clear from statements made by the Solicitor General that the cabinet has no intention of allowing capital punishment in any of these cases. If that is to be the case, at least parliament should consider amending the Criminal Code so that murderers of policemen and prison guards have to spend the rest of their lives in jail, and are not out walking the streets again in 12 years or less.

Many Canadians suspect that the actual time served already for violent crimes may be too light. A combination of factors account for some relatively short prison terms now: at the court room level many murder charges get reduced to manslaughter because it is claimed some unpleasant remark made by the victim provoked the murderer. Provocation reduces murder to manslaughter, and this defence is helped by the convenience of not having the victim around to testify. Manslaughter sentences may put offenders back on the streets fairly fast. In 1973 almost 83 per cent of the sentences given for murder-reduced-to-manslaughter were under ten years. Over half of those were under five years, which could mean parole in 18 months, or day parole much earlier.

Of 27 murderers discharged from prison in 1973—actually 37 were discharged but statistics are available on only 27—five served less than four years and 21 served between five and nine years. Of manslaughter discharges, 67 per cent had served less than three years. Of attempted murder discharges, 77 per cent had served less than four years. In rape convictions—an offence for which only the most brutal attackers generally get to court—94 per cent of those released had served less than three years. Given these statistics, Canadians may well be excused for thinking that the length of incarceration is more often than not grotesquely out of proportion to all the havoc, pain, torment, and misery created by the criminal.

One of the most thought provoking editorials on this thorny problem appeared on February 28 in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, and I want to put it on the record in the time allowed me this evening because I think it sums up the views of the majority of Nova Scotians. It is entitled, "The Death Penalty", and it read as follows:

There is little doubt but that the majority of Canadian people wish to retain the death penalty, at least for some types of murder.

Government, in most of its programs, cites the pressure of public opinion and the necessity to respond to that opinion as justification.

In the instance of the death penalty, government is careful not to cite public opinion which is adverse to the chosen course.

Of recent years there has grown up a theory, on which much policy has been based, that the rights of the criminal are more important than the rights of society.

[Mr. Crouse.]

In turn that has brought about a backlash in the public which is increasingly concerned with the protection of persons and property, the administration of justice has frequently appeared to concentrate largely upon issues of conceding to the demands and requirements of the criminal element with little thought of fundamental rights of law-abiding citizens.

For practical purposes the death sentence in Canada, while technically in effect, has been suspended. The result of that suspension has not been a decline in violent crime.

I am going to repeat that paragraph:

For practical purposes the death sentence in Canada, while technically in effect, has been suspended. The result of that suspension has not been a decline in violent crime.

The criminal who deliberately plans and executes a murder has no concern with the life of the victim. Yet that same criminal immediately demands and receives the full protection of society when apprehended. And that same criminal along with those who advocate his cause, will present a long list of reasons why his life ought not be forfeited.

The dispassionate killer will not reform. And the program now proposed by government will be of no help.

What is planned is to put people who are proven menaces to society away for a stipulated 25 years. For practical purposes that is life and the form and nature of the sentence is a guarantee of increasing the dangers to custodial staff and the complexities of control.

In proposing its alternative to the death sentence the government is suggesting that the Canadian people get the worst of both worlds. They will pay higher costs with no assurance of improved safety for society.

The death penalty represents the final right of organized society to rid itself of those who will not conform in any respect to civilized life. Such people are a minority, and are not to be confused with others who may take life in passion.

Removal of the final right of society, in effect, tells the criminal that however vicious and evil the crime his own life will not be threatened, but rather will be protected by the society for which he has himself shown no mercy . . .

Parliament is intended to reflect the wishes of the people of Canada.

I am going to read that slowly because I want as many hon. members as are in the Chamber to hear these words.

Parliament is intended to reflect the wishes of the people of Canada.

Surely that is why we are here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: The article goes on to read:

The institution has been down-graded of recent years, not always with the most constructive of consequences.

The use of power, simply because power is held, to thwart the public will is an assurance of a further erosion among the populace of confidence in not only the government, but parliament itself.

In recent years it has often appeared that the majority has no rights. And that appearance is part and parcel of the loss of confidence in a political process that, in the instance of criminal matters, appears to have as its first concern the protection of the rights of the law-breaker even though society as a whole faces greater dangers in the result.

The plan now before parliament is one that will impress many as a cynical political move that, in practice, increases the personal hazard for those who must enforce and uphold the law, while at the same time allowing those pledged to impose the law as it stands to evade that responsibility.

Those are very forceful words, very thought provoking words, but they sum up the feelings not only of many Nova Scotians but of many Canadians.

Since we last debated the issue in January of 1973 I submit that the cabinet and the government have, by their actions, undermined our legal processes. They have undermined the power of parliament. The practice that has been followed has in effect removed any deterrent associated with the death penalty. This government in more ways than one has made a sham of our whole judicial process.

How can we expect society to have any respect for the law when those who are supposed to uphold it make a mockery of its own rules and regulations? These actions can no longer be tolerated. I believe we must set an example for the entire country if parliament is to remain supreme. In my opinion, anyone who accidentally kills another during a fight or in the heat of an argument should not be hanged but should be given life imprisonment. However, I believe that capital punishment should be retained for all those convicted of planned, premeditated murder. Clemency, which is the prerogative of the Crown, should be granted only when mercy has been recommended by the jury at the trial, or in the case of an established error in conviction.

I agree that the rights of a murderer as an individual must be protected, but I ask you, Sir, is it not way past the time when we should be considering the rights of the victim?

● (2140)

I had an opportunity to speak on this subject when it was last before the House, and when it was before the House prior to that, but tonight I want to quote just one paragraph from my own words as put on the record on January 31, 1973, when I said the following:

> No matter how we vote in this House on this issue, it is my firm conviction that we shall never again see a man hanged in Canada or put to death by any other means. I say this in light of the facts, for the federal cabinet has exercised its so-called executive prerogative of mercy more than 60 times during the past ten years by commuting all death sentences meted out by the courts.

Of course these figures are updated by what I have put on the record tonight.

In conclusion, I must say to this House that until a suitable alternative to capital punishment is proposed as a protection for society, I feel that the government has left me no choice but to vote against this bill.

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise to enter this debate because it is the most sensitive issue I have to face as a new member of parliament representing my constituency. Other more senior members in this Chamber have dealt with this issue before, and I have found them to be of considerable help and guidance to me, whether they be for or against. Before stating my proposition with respect to this matter, there is one issue I wish to deal with, namely, the free vote.

A free vote to me means just that—a vote based on one's own conscience, but it also means one which should at least take into account the representations of my constituents. In other words, I do not think that I have the right on such a sensitive issue as capital punishment to be blind to the feelings of my constituents. The cynicism I have heard from some hon. members in the media regarding the decision by the government to allow a free vote shocks me, to say the least. As a backbencher on this side of the House I want to put on the record that the whips have not been placed on me to vote the way the cabinet intends to vote. I respect their collective decision, and I know that they respect others who have opposite views.

I would now like to deal with the substance of the issue. The government has introduced a bill to abolish the death penalty for murder and to replace capital punishment with life sentences. First degree murderers would not normally be eligible for parole until they have served a minimum of 25 years.

My personal feelings on the issue of the death penalty, I believe, are not the important question in deciding how I vote. What is most important is the need to provide society and the law abiding individual with a sense of protection from those who commit the ultimate act of violence against the person. Society does have a right to protect itself from those who prey upon its citizens. I believe the death penalty can act as a deterrent to premeditated murder, and I intend to vote for the retention of capital punishment for premeditated murder regardless of who the victim is.

For non-premeditated murders, I believe that the minimum sentence without parole, such as the 10 year non-parolable period proposed for second degree murder in the government's bill, is a sufficient deterrent.

I have made a distinction between premeditated and unpremeditated murder. Such a distinction is not one solely based on the legal definition of planned and deliberate murder, but premeditation must be considered to be a question of fact and personal judgment. I have faith in our trial and jury system that such a distinction can be made in each case. After hearing all the evidence, a jury under the guidance of a trial judge can distinguish between, to use the extremes, the contract killing and the murder which results from a domestic quarrel, or to put it another way, murder which results from a fit of passion.

This to me is the beauty and justice of our legal system: the inherent right of every accused to be tried as an individual, taking into account the facts of the case as determined by a jury, under the guidance of a trial judge as to the questions of law.

With respect to the matter of deterrence, I at one time thought that capital punishment was not a deterrent, but I am convinced now that it is. I have read most of the technical reports, including Fattah's, regarding this particular matter. They leave me with the conclusion that capital punishment may not be a deterrent. I stress the word "may". That word to me expresses a probability. Accordingly, if there is even the remotest chance that capital punishment may prevent a murder, how can I deny that victim, whoever it will be, that possibility of prevention? It is the matter of prevention of death that I am concerned with, not revenge. Society does have the right to protect itself from its most despicable crime against its citizens.

I would now like to deal with the matter of long sentences as proposed by Bill C-84. As I understand it, Bill C-84 intends to break murder into two degrees, first and second degree, both of which will carry life imprisonment but with different minimum periods that must be served in a penitentiary before the convicted person will be eligible for parole consideration. The penalty for second degree murder will basically stay the same, but with respect to first degree murder the new legislation provides for a penalty of life imprisonment with an absolute term of imprisonment of 25 years with no parole. I fully realize and appreciate that there is a provision for judicial review of either penalties by a panel of three superior court justices.

Solely as it relates to the proposed offence of first degree murder, I seriously question the incarceration of an individual for such a great length of time, notwithstanding the review provisions. Are we not doing that individual more harm than good? I do not know the definitive answer to that question, and none of the technical reports that I have read have given me the answer. In fact, the Solicitor General's own department in a publication entitled, "Questions and Answers Relating to the Capital Punishment Issue" states as follows:

QUESTION: If long sentences replace capital punishment, what implications does this have for increasing the incidence of suicide, mental illness and hostility among persons convicted of murder?

RESPONSE: Behavioural scientists have noted neurotic and psychotic reactions associated with long term institutionalization. However, this is based upon clinical experience from which it is sometimes difficult to establish if it is actually the institutionalization which is the cause. Also, there is little scientific documentation available as to whether or not suicide and hostility among persons serving long term sentences is associated with long term incarceration. Since there are many interrelated factors, it is impossible to predict what effects the proposed legislation will have upon suicide, mental illness, and hostility within Canadian institutions.

The answer acknowledges that experts do not know the effect of incarceration of an individual for a long term. The recent examples at the B.C. Penitentiary in my province may be extremes, to say the least, but they may well indicate the results of either deplorable conditions, or long term incarceration, or a combination of both. If one were to lock one up in the penthouse of a luxury hotel for a minimum of 25 years, I am sure that such incarceration would have some psychological effect on the individual. The point is, Mr. Speaker, that a prison is a prison whether it be the British Columbia penitentiary or, as I have exaggerated, the penthouse of a luxury hotel. Certainly I agree with the reforms that we have made in penal institutions and I earnestly hope that we will continue to do so, but whatever we do, we must remember that a prison is still a prison.

● (2150)

But, more important, with respect to long term incarceration, B.C. Police Commission Chairman, Dr. John Hogarth, has called the sentencing provisions "overly rigid" and said it would be dangerous to deprive prisoners of any hope of eventual release. In essence, I think he is saying, and I agree, that what Bill C-84 does is symbolically kill an individual by subjecting him to sometimes very cruel circumstances for 25 years. I want to know, and I know my constituents want to know, whether long term incarceration increases the potential for attack on prison guards and policemen. From my discussions with some of the officials of correctional institutions in the Pacific region where the B.C. Penitentiary is located, I know that the staff—guards for example—are extremely uneasy about the prospects of long term incarceration.

Notwithstanding the fact that Section 674 of the proposed legislation would deal with the abhorrent situation of a murderer under parole, including day pass or temporary pass, committing another murder, I find that Section 674 enshrines the inescapable conclusions that this legislation is symbolic killing. At present, as I understand it, a person whose sentence is commuted must serve a minimum of ten years before he becomes eligible for parole; and this period could be extended but for no more than 20 years. Section 674 as proposed states:

(1) Unless the Parliament of Canada otherwise provides by an enactment making express reference to this section, no person who has been sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole for a specified number of years pursuant to this act shall be considered for parole or released pursuant to the terms of a grant of parole under the Parole Act or any other act of the Parliament of Canada until the expiration or termination of his specified number of years of imprisonment without eligibility for parole.

(2) Notwithstanding the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act, in the case of any person sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole for a specified number of years pursuant to this act, no absence without escort may be authorized under the Penitentiary Act and no day parole may be granted under the Parole Act until the expiration of all but three years of his number of years of imprisonment without eligibility for parole.

In other words, a person convicted of first degree murder would have to serve 22 years of his sentence before being eligible for day parole or a temporary pass.

Again I reiterate and submit that this legislation is nothing more than symbolic killing. I earnestly hope that the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) will answer some of the questions I have raised on the issue of long term incarceration.

Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that I am in full agreement with those who state that capital punishment will not prove to be a cure-all to all our criminal problems. The issue of crime in a pluristic and democratic society is much too complex and intricate for anybody to be so simplistic as to suggest the answer lies in, "Hang them all", to use the current expression. We must attack some of the more fundamental roots of crime, for example, poverty.

Other measures that the government has introduced, such as Bill C-71, particularly as it relates to the tightening of our bail law, and at present Bill C-83, particularly as it relates to gun control legislation, dangerous offenders, and wiretap provisions, are steps in the right direction. The criminal law, like any other law, is and should be a process of constant review and amendment by this and future parliaments. Having said that, I still maintain that society must have the right to protect itself from those who prey upon it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in view of the advanced hour I shall give a short preamble to the speech I intend to make in this debate.

The question which should concern us during this debate, and which has not been examined by any of my colleagues so far, is not whether we should retain or abolish capital punishment, but rather whether or not we should reintroduce some form of capital punishment.

My reasoning, Mr. Speaker, is very simple. The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) has repeatedly stated that he will not sign an execution order as long as he is in office. In response to my colleague from the Yukon on the night of the opening of this debate, he shouted across the emotionally charged expanse of this Chamber, "If you want to hang someone, get yourself another boy." Since our constituents, who expect to have their majority view represented in parliament, only change their "boys" during elections, the question of the abolition or retention of capital punishment is irrelevant until about 1978.

As a matter of fact, the "if or not" has not been an issue since 1963, even though the question has been debated in the House four times since then. The question which will be put to the members at the end of this debate will only decide, therefore, whether capital punishment will be abolished with the consent of parliament and the Canadian people, or by the continued abuse of the royal or executive prerogative.

If I may call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I should like to continue my speech later.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

SPORTS—REASON FOR ALLEGED DOUBLE STANDARD IN DEALING WITH SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, the reason I am taking part in the adjournment debate once again is because there seems to be a concern which relates to the fact that the government is once again exemplifying inconsistencies in regard to its policies, this time by taking a hypocritically double standard position relating to its involvement with South Africa.

I am specifically referring to the obviously abrupt attitude the Department of National Health and Welfare has taken in respect of the 1976 Olympiad for the Physically Disabled, scheduled to be held in Etobicoke later this summer. These very prestigious and worth-while games for disabled athletes from around the world are traditionally held every four years in the country hosting the regular Olympic games, while in subsequent years they are held at Stokes Manderville, England.

Canadian organizers and department officials must have known for years that these games would be held in Canada in 1976 in conjunction with the regular Olympic games, which will be held in Montreal this summer as well. These same officials must have known for just as many years that included in the games would be a team representing South Africa. These two facts are common knowledge—common knowledge, as precedence alone would show, to those who are in touch with reality as it relates to sport. Certainly the minister and his department should be in touch with what goes on in the sports world as such matters fall under his jurisdiction.

My point is, that the government had promised a $500,000 grant to the organizers of the Olympiad in Etobicoke, with the knowledge that a team from South Africa would be represented. I say this since in several previous Olympiads for the disabled a South African team did take part, with Canadian teams competing as well in some games.

● (2200)

After preparations were well under way the department suddenly decided to withhold aid, the aid having been promised on the condition that South Africans would not attend, or withdraw.

The irony of the double standard is twofold. First, on at least two previous occasions, once in 1972, for the Munich Games and again last year in England, this government, under the auspices of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) funded Canadian teams for the purpose of participating with South African teams. Incidentally, South Africa at that time had not taken steps to eliminate racial discrimination. The government now is withholding promised funds on grounds of racial discrimination, even though on two previous occasions the government had provided funds. Since then the South African team has officially joined the International Sports Organization for the Disabled and, at the same time, officially amended its constitution to prohibit racial or political discrimination. This is proven by the fact that a team of 22 athletes scheduled to compete in Etobicoke this summer includes 9 non-whites and blacks.

That is not all, Mr. Speaker. When questioned, the Minister of National Health and Welfare stated that the government's policy has been very clearly established for many years regarding the apartheid policy in South Africa, and the government's position has been to withhold its financial aid to sporting events involving South Africa because of its apartheid policy. The question one must ask oneself, indeed I am asking it, is this: if this in fact is the policy of the federal government, why did it fund the Canadian teams previously when that policy was in force? Second and more important, if indeed this is the policy of the federal government, why has the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce opened at least two offices in South Africa, with the intention of opening more locations for the purpose of expanding trade between our two states?

I have nothing against the government using South Africa as a trading partner and thereby recognizing that state, but why the double standard? Why take it out on sports? Why involve politics with sports? More specifically, why take it out on disabled kids? That, to me, is petty.

The government tells Canadian athletes and organizations it will not fund them if they invite South Africans; at the same time it allowed Canadian businessmen to import approximately $180 million worth of South African goods last year, mainly wines, sugar, and other products. In addition the government exerted no pressure to stop the massive campaign advertising South African wine for sale in Canada. Nobody has complained about this. But it shows that there is a double standard. This inconsistency concerns me and many others who are involved in these worthwhile games. By picking on the disabled the government is being small, petty, and hypocritical, to say the least. Once again thanks goes to this two-faced government for jeopardizing the dreams and hopes of nearly 2,000 wheelchair, blind, and amputee athletes from around the world.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have only three minutes to answer the small, petty, and hypocritical statement made by the hon. member opposite. I remind him that despite the apparent change of policy referred to in a specific case, apartheid is no less rigorously enforced in athletic competition than in any other sphere of South African life.

It is worth noting that in 1970 the International Olympic Committee suspended South Africa completely from participating in the Olympic movement. This position was given unqualified support by the United Nations, and it is supported fully by the government. We fully support the Olympiad in Etobicoke and have given our enthusiastic and full support right from the beginning; but the organizers of that competition knew in the early stages of the organization of this competition the position of the Canadian government vis-à-vis participation by South African athletes in any such competition.

The Canadian government policy denies funding to any Canadian athlete or group of athletes who intend to travel to South Africa to participate in an athletic competition. While we fully recognize that the decision to participate or not rests with the individual and/or sports body concerned, we have pointed out that competition in South African under conditions of racial discrimination, which are universally condemned, is a matter of considerable concern. Although the government does not financially support such visits, neither is it prepared to limit the freedom of Canadians to travel abroad where they wish.

More recently, events have been awarded to Canada in which athletes from South Africa have been invited to participate. I wish to confirm the position taken by the government in July of 1975 of not providing either moral or financial support to any event in Canada to which South African athletes have been invited. This policy is being implemented in concert with many other nations, in the hope that concern over increasing isolation will encourage the South African government to take real and substantive steps to abandon the policy and practice of apartheid.

Recently representations have been made to the government concerning the staging in Canada of the Olympiad for the Physically Disabled, requesting that the government policy be modified for the Olympiad. It was the view of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and myself that such a modification was not justified. The government has reviewed on a continuing basis reports from our mission in South Africa on apartheid in sports. We do not believe that circumstances in this country have changed materially, even though the South African government may allow modification in a particular case. This view has been confirmed in recent days by the reaffirmation by the Supreme Council of Sport in Africa of its continued opposition to all sports contacts with the regime in South Africa. I can only feel sorry that some people resort to using handicapped people in this particular situation.

[Mr. Jelinek.]

HEALTH—MEASURES TO PROTECT VISITORS TO OLYMPIC GAMES AGAINST POLIO—POSSIBLE USE OF SABIN ORAL VACCINE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) in the Chamber this evening. It is very considerate of him to be here to give us the benefit of his advice.

According to reports the minister stated, "Don't push the panic button on polio viruses." Certainly the carrying out of corrective measures should not be carried out in panic. However, perhaps the polio viruses found in the sewage draining into the Ottawa River has awakened the department's concern out of its Ferdinand slumbers.

It is interesting that I, a member of this House, was denied any information from the department without going through the Director of Public Relation for the department. He could not be reached. I am sure the minister will have an answer for us and say that he had nothing to do with this. The minister knows that I have never misused information given to me by any department. I only wanted this information to correlate my address tonight.

There appears to be a considerable number of people in the province of Ontario who are not immune or who have no antibody immunity to poliomyelitis. This may also be the case in other provinces. I am concerned because through two polio epidemics I was the Medical Officer of Health for the province in the days before polio vaccine. Anyone who has been through such an epidemic, and who has seen those cases and the number who died or were left crippled, would be concerned with the present attitude. I recall pregnant young mothers, young men, and children who died. In particular I remember two young ladies who went swimming together, contracted the disease and died. I will not elaborate on this, but I wonder how many of the present generation have forgotten the days before Salk vaccine.

I am concerned that every step be taken to ensure that those who have not been immunized will be before attending the Olympic Games. In the schools this program will have to be initiated right away before the school term ends to get the school-agers vaccinated and to set up clinics if found necessary.

I am interested and concerned because of a survey done in 1969 by medical officers of health of 15 areas, one of which was the city of Barrie in the riding of Simcoe North. Blood samples were collected in the schools by teams from the Connaught Laboratories. In each area samples were taken from 175 people in four age groups: pre-school children age four to six years; from parents, in most cases the mothers who accompanied the children, ages 23 to 45 years; children in grades seven to eight, ages 11-13; and young people in the age group 15 to 17 years. Immunization cards for each school age child were obtained from health unit records. Blood samples from .3 to .5 millilitres were obtained by finger puncture and collected in blood collecting tubes. This was tested in cultures of monkey kidney cells for antibodies of each of the three types of polio virus.

● (2210)

For children 11 to 13 and 15 to 17, there was a high percentage of resistance to the disease. In the age group 4-6 years, the percentage was less. It was found that only 65 per cent of the children four to six years had antibodies to all three types of polio virus—antibodies being due almost entirely to the Salk vaccine. In the children who had received six or more doses, 74 per cent had antibodies to the three types. In ages 11 to 13 and 15 to 17, there was a high percentage with antibodies to polio virus. This was accounted for by the fact that these children had not only the Salk vaccine but were given the Sabin vaccine in the mass campaign of 1962. Also, some may have shown immunity through having had a previous low grade infection.

It is interesting to note that of those who had not been immunized, three out of six aged 11 to 13 years, and five out of seven in ages 15 to 17, had antibodies to all three types of polio.

From all I can learn it would appear that one dose of Sabin vaccine following immunization with Salk vaccine seems to give full protection against polio virus. It is also true that over the years there has been some increase in the Salk vaccine particularly in type 3 antigen which stimulates the production of antibodies. The type 2 antigen was decreased early in 1974.

The Salk vaccine will stop the neuromuscular effects of polio in practically all cases but does not always stop the gastroenteritis or pharyngitis which may follow particularly the wild viruses.

The disturbing question and one which must be answered is whether immunization has been sufficient to ensure safe immunity to polio. When you look at the age group four to six and see that only 65 per cent had immunity, it would indicate that this is not adequate protection. Again the question is raised that those in the 11 to 13 and 15 to 17 age group had higher immunity due to the fact that they may have had a previous sub-clinical infection and that they also had Sabin vaccine along with the Salk vaccine. Antibodies in those four to six were almost entirely due to immunization with Salk vaccine.

It would appear that there must be a drive put on to encourage immunization. I would suggest that the minister, in his capacity as senior minister of health in Canada, urge that a full immunization program be started without delay. Then, and only then, can we be assured that we have done what we should do with the knowledge we have of the viruses of polio, which it appears at the moment require further study, and regarding which a further report will be out next week. I also want to draw to the minister's attention that, as far as I know, all provinces, with the exception of Ontario and Nova Scotia, use the Sabin vaccine.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will be very short. I refer my colleague to my comments on this particular subject on May 7 of last week, as reported at page 13276, of Hansard, in answer to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas).

I should also like to express my thanks to the hon. member for drawing the attention of the House and the Canadian public to this particular situation and to the importance to getting immunization. As the hon. member well knows, we have had for years a universal program of immunization in this country which is available and which is free. I must also advise that we have an ample supply of vaccine to meet the demands of anyone who wants vaccination.

I am also glad that the hon. member gives me the opportunity to stress that these vaccinations are not good for life; after a span of about five years one should get another vaccination. Unfortunately, a lot of people have forgotten this.

Two years ago I sent a reminder with family allowance cheques, and another one last summer. I intend to put in another reminder as an insert to one of the forthcoming issues of family allowance cheques. I hope in the cheques for June there will be a special mention drawing this fact at least to the mothers' attention. Unfortunately, or fortunately, in this country we cannot send the police to bring people in for immunization. This has to be done by the individuals. They have to realize their own responsibilities in this respect. I only want to thank the hon. member for giving me the opportunity of stressing this point again, and for drawing it to the attention of the public.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—MINING NICKEL FROM SEABED—INVOLVEMENT OF WORKERS IN DEVELOPING STRATEGY FOR NEGOTIATIONS POSITION TAKEN BY INCO

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the nickel industry in Canada may very shortly be facing a serious crisis which can only spell disaster for those communities and workers who are very dependent on this particular mineral.

At the recent Law of the Sea Conference the United States, our major trading partner, presented plans which if carried out will, over a period of ten to 25 years, mean the extinction of nickel mining in Canada. The plan presented by the United States calls for the mining of nickel resources from the seabed beyond the 200-mile limit, thus effectively placing the industry beyond the jurisdiction of nations or of trade unions. They want the amount of this seabed mining to increase by a minimum of 6 per cent a year, in spite of the fact that demand will not increase that quickly.

Present increases in nickel output are shared among the world's nickel producing countries. Canada, in fact, used to supply over 50 per cent of the world's nickel requirements, but its share of the market has been dropping to the point where Canada supplies slightly over 30 per cent of the world's nickel needs.

According to Charles Elliot, a director and former president of the Mining Association of Canada, an increase in production of undersea nickel of the magnitude the United States envisages would constitute a disaster for the Canadian nickel mining industry.

When we speak of a disaster to the Canadian nickel mining industry we are not just talking about a drop in profits on shares held by shareholders of the companies. We are talking about the lives of whole communities which are completely dependent on the nickel mining industry. We are talking about the death of such communities as Thompson, Manitoba, and Fort Saskatchewan. We are talking about completely destroying the economic base of the Sudbury Basin, my own riding and yours, Mr. Speaker. In that area alone 13,000 people are employed by INCO and another 4,000 are employed by Falconbridge. Counting the workers' families and all the persons who are involved in the service sector of the Basin's economy we can get the full impact any such cutback would entail.

Just today Statistics Canada revealed that the unemployment rate in this country is 7.4 per cent. If the nickel industry in Canada is wiped out, we can imagine the implication both in human and economic terms for Canada. As developed nations like the United States strive to become self-sufficient in resources, having learned their bitter lesson after the OPEC situation, our pigeons are coming home to roost.

Past actions by provincial and federal governments to allow Canada to develop as a resource economy have left us basically hewers of wood and drawers of water. Lacking the industrial base we need to process our own minerals to finished products, we are now finding ourselves at the mercy of these sorts of changes as proposed by the United States at the Law of the Sea Conference.

While it is very clear that Canadian workers, in fact all Canadians, will be hurt by this kind of action, we can bet our bottom dollars that the nickel mining companies are flexible enough to benefit from the switch from surface mining to undersea mining. As a matter of fact international Nickel Company, Canada's major nickel mining company, is part of the consortium that will be mining the seabed for nickel. Indeed, Mr. Elliot of the Mining Association of Canada made this crystal clear when he said:

> The Canadian mining companies and their shareholders might benefit considerably, however, by getting involved in sea bed operations.

So much for the patriotism of big business. Who has the gall to suggest to me the equality of the corporation and the union?

The International Nickel Company Limited, has just changed its name to the International Nickel Company Limited, a move that has some justification considering its probable role in this problem. It is making profits from Canadian workers and Canadian resources now. But if this situation goes the other way and it is decided to mine from the sea, it will make a profit there too. The company has a foot in both camps and you can be sure it will put pressure on all governments concerned to take the steps which will be most profitable to the company. If it turns out to be more profitable to go after the under sea nickel, and this is quite likely considering that the U.S. government is obviously prepared to subsidize these operations with large sums of money, then it will phase out its surface operations.

● (2220)

The Canadian government appears to have been caught with its pants down in the latest revelation by the United States at the Law of the Sea Conference. It is quite obvious that the Americans have already lobbied the other nickel producing countries and promised them a share in any increased production in nickel as a result of seabed mining. This, of course, leaves Canada on the outside looking in. With friends like that, who needs enemies?

At this moment the Canadian government should be sitting down with those directly affected by this proposal, the workers, the communities, and the mining companies, to determine strategy and plan proposals which would be much fairer to all concerned.

Moreover, the federal government should elicit from International Nickel Company and all other nickel mining companies which may have feet in both camps their full support for the government's position. The government ought to be prepared to nationalize immediately any of those companies which do not support the position which the government puts forward.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in the name of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), I would first express the concern of this government over the nickel proposal tabled at the very end of the last session of the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, which ended on Friday, May 7. That proposal, most likely originating from the United States, is aimed at controlling the production of minerals in the international zone of the sea bed, by restricting it to the annual increase in the world nickel market, arbitrarily estimated at 6 per cent. If adopted, that formula might have serious repercussions on the production of nickel in Canada and other countries, in cases for instance where the actual yearly expansion of the nickel market were below 6 per cent. Canada feels such a formula is unacceptable.

When the Secretary of State for External Affairs met the American Secretary of State, Mr. Kissinger, in Nairobi, he took the opportunity to explain the effect on Canada of such a provision. It was agreed our two countries will hold consultations at the official level to find a solution. Similarly, the American representatives to the Conference on the Law of the Sea implied they had no intention of solving at the expense of Canada the problems faced by the United States in respect of mineral resource supplies.

I should add that, paradoxically, such a controversial formula was never discussed at the Conference on the Law of the Sea. It is however expected it will have high priority on the agenda of the next meeting slated for August. Canada for her part is urging a solution that would protect land producers of nickel, copper, cobalt and manganese, while allowing mining of these minerals from the international sea bed to the benefit of the international community. Our delegation at the conference already expressed these views to other countries that might be affected by the American formula. For the most part, they share our concerns.

We do not yet know INCO's reaction, or that of other mining companies. It would however be quite normal, and even desirable, if representatives of miners' unions, the mining industry and the provinces affected expressed their views to the government before the next meeting to be held in August 1976.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, May 12, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF TRIBUNAL TO AID IN SETTLEMENT OF STRIKES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on an important and urgent matter.

Considering that for several years now, as a result of labour's legitimate claims Canadians have suffered the aftereffects of a number of strikes in the public and quasi-public sectors; that mechanisms did not appear adequate to solve trade disputes in these sectors; that representations made to the government have too often resulted in government intervention through legislation to force workers to return to work, and that such a situation generates conflicts to the detriment of the Canadian public and the economy, conflicts that could be avoided, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

That a permanent tribunal of arbitration in conflicts of public interest be established to provide the assistance needed to parties involved to avoid strikes that are far too prejudicial to the Canadian economy. The terms of reference of this tribunal would be to meet the parties, promote better understanding between them, suggest solutions and, if need be, make its recommendations public.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion by the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There being not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

* * *

AIR CANADA

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY ON THE USE OF FRENCH BY EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion of pressing and urgent necessity.

In view of the difficulties which French-speaking Air Canada employees meet when they use French in their communications, in view of the obvious discrimination against French Canadians within pilots and air controllers associations, and in view of the fact that Air Canada, a Crown corporation, does not try to get a fair proportion of pilots from Quebec, who constitute only 7 per cent of the company staff, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette):

That the Minister of Transport order an inquiry into this matter and do his best to improve this situation in the near future.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion may not be put.

* * *

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROPOSED COMMENDATION OF OFFICIAL OPPOSITION FOR THEIR LACK OF CONFIDENCE IN ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That in the light of the fact that the members of the Official Opposition have persistently supported the government's anti-inflation program, which has produced the economic chaos cited in the motion on today's Order Paper, this House commends the members of the Official Opposition for presenting this day their motion of non-confidence in the government and in the program they have previously supported.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems that this is surely a matter that can be covered during the course of the debate.

* * *

HARBOURS

SUGGESTION RESIGNATION OF MANAGER OF PORT OF CHURCHILL NOT BE ACCEPTED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

National Defence

The Port of Churchill is approaching its biggest grain shipping season in the history of its 44 years of operation. The port cannot be operated by remote control from a location in eastern Canada. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton):

That the minister instruct the National Harbours Board chairman not to accept the forced resignation of the present Churchill Port manager, and that the port continue to operate with an on-site port manager.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1410)

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF FISHERMEN IN RESPECT OF PRICES AND DISCLOSURE OF COSTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that Part III, Section 23, Subsection (2) of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act provides that prices paid by the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation to the fishermen shall be agreed upon by the corporation and the fishermen, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith):

That this House direct the Minister of State (Fisheries) to use his powers to protect the rights of the fisherman in respect of fish prices and further that the minister order a complete disclosure by the FFMC of all costs by species relating to fish processing and marketing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENTS CONCERNING LISTENING DEVICES ON SEABED OFF WEST COAST—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise under the same provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion concerns the placing of listening devices off the west coast. In view of the contradiction between the statement of Vice Admiral Boyle on May 6 that there were listening devices on the west coast continental shelf and the statement of the Minister of National Defence on the same day that there were not listening devices of any foreign power on that shelf and in view of the statement of Lieutenant-Commander Ridgewell that it was his job to seek out non-United States devices placed on the shelf, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

[Mr. Smith (Churchill).]

That this House advise the Minister of National Defence that the United States, while friendly, is still a foreign power and further that this House request the minister to make a statement on motions today clarifying these contradictions and that he explain by what agreement or authority those devices have been placed on Canada's continental shelf and our territorial seas.

Mr. Speaker: The provisions of Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF PROPOSED NEW NORTHERN OIL AND GAS REGULATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the revelation by CBC news that the government is about to issue new oil and natural gas regulations for the far north which will provide the most generous provisions in history to Canada's foreign-owned oil industry and lessen even further public equity and control over our vital energy resources, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth):

That this House instruct the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to refer the proposed regulations to the appropriate standing committee for full parliamentary and public discussion before the cabinet makes any final decision on new northern oil and gas regulations.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for such a motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROPOSED APPLICATION OF SOCIAL CREDIT PRINCIPLES TO IMPROVE STANDARD OF LIVING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43. As a result, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss an urgent matter calling for immediate attention.

In view of the fact that the government has failed to check the havoc of inflation and that the government's anti-inflation programs have caused a substantial increase in unemployment—in Canada, as is demonstrated by statistics which show that in April 1976 7.4 per cent of Canadians were jobless, or 769,000 people, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That this House enjoin the government to study immediately the economic solutions put forward by the Social Credit Party of Canada to check inflation and provide all Canadians with a guaranteed income sufficient to ensure a comfortable living.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion may not be put.

* * *

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER OF THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF HUNGARY, HIS EXCELLENCY DR. GYULA SZEKER

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you and other hon. members would wish me to call attention to the presence in our gallery today of a most distinguished visitor, His Excellency Dr. Gyula Szeker, the Deputy Prime Minister of the People's Republic of Hungary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MINISTER OF PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS OF PAPUA, NEW GUINEA, MR. OSCAR TAMUR

Mr. Speaker: Members will have noticed as well the presence in the gallery of Mr. Oscar Tamur, the Minister of Provincial Affairs of Papua, New Guinea, the first such visitor since the independence of that country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROMOTE GROWTH AND PROVIDE FULL EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. It is related to the very sorry state being faced by heads of families, young people and students and the government's apparent cavalier and callous attitude to their plight. Given the fact that the Prime Minister last month stated that Canada was interested in promoting growth, which includes the quality of our lives, which creates new wealth for us to share among ourselves and with the less fortunate people of the world, will the Prime Minister tell us how he intends to promote that growth which will improve the quality of life for one third of a million unemployed young persons in this country? How do they fit into this new society, particularly with respect to jobs?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We will be dealing with that in the budget.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: I was certainly right when I said that the Prime Minister has taken a very cavalier, callous and unacceptable attitude with regard to the plight of these hundreds of thousands.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Alexander: I suggest to the Prime Minister that he has his priorities confused when he is attempting to bring back the constitution rather than find jobs for our young people—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate at any time to interrupt the lead questioner in the question period; however, the subject matter that is before the House is an opposition motion with a non-confidence vote and it is with respect to the very matter which the hon. member is raising. If it is information he seeks which may affect the progress of the debate on the particular subject matter, I will not interfere with it.

Mr. Alexander: With all due respect, Sir, I have in mind the statistics—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: —but I will accept your ruling on this matter which is of extreme concern to me. I ask the Prime Minister, will he advise the House as to what action he intends to take, in the breathing space before the next round of constitutional talks, to encourage—and I say this very seriously—all levels of government and the private sector to direct themselves to the goal of full employment? Certainly, this must be high on the Prime Minister's priority list.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying when the opposition drowned me out, this is a subject to which we are addressing ourselves in the budget and in the debate which will take place later this afternoon. What surprises me on the part of the hon. member is that he does not seem to think that several things can go ahead at the same time. I would point out to him that his own leader, and the previous leader of the opposition, have enjoined the government to do what they could to bring the constitution back. I do not know why this hon. member is suggesting that we forget about that subject.

PERCENTAGE LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT GOVERNMENT CONSIDERS AS FULL EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I think that at this particular time the vast majority of Canadians are not interested in bringing back the constitution as a priority.

In light of the fact that the U.S. is now looking at 3 per cent unemployment as being full employment, can the Prime Minister take us into his confidence and advise us as to what this government is thinking about in terms of full employment? Does he agree with the Economic Council of Canada's goal of 5.8 per cent and, if not, what is his goal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has mentioned goals, but he should be interested in realities, too. He should know that Canada has a lower unemployment rate than the United States. He does not even realize that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

MANPOWER

MEASURES TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that, as the minister indicated, the 17 summer programs in place for students will create 12,000 summer jobs for young people, and this is an insignificant amount when we take into account that the student employment population will number one million and there will be paying jobs for only 1.2 per cent of those seeking employment, would the minister indicate if he thinks this is an adequate effort? What plans does he have in the immediate future to provide employment to students?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Obviously, the hon. member chose to refer only to programs of direct job creation by the federal government. I indicated in a response to a similar question the other day that it is only one of the many efforts we embarked upon. The main effort, and the one offering the greatest degree of success quantitatively, is the increased co-operation with the private sector in placing students this summer. There are great efforts under way, and during the spring of this year they have been augmented by some of my own personal conversations with such organizations as chambers of commerce and others, to entice them to step up their hiring of students, and I have every reason to believe that that will be successful.

● (1420)

Mr. Marshall: In view of the fact that the minister has indicated that the strategy will be to discuss with provincial governments the means of overcoming the employment situation for students, I wonder if the minister would be willing to make a statement on motions almost immediately to declare what programs he has in mind, because of the vital necessity and the priority which will have to be given this matter when the students get out of school. Would he also indicate what plans there are to increase student loans and other programs which will help students to further their education?

Mr. Andras: I have communicated to all hon. members of this House an outline of the various programs which have been embarked upon by the federal government, of which my ministry is the lead ministry, but they also involve many other departments. That information has been available to hon. members for several weeks now. If the hon. member wishes further elaboration on motions at some future date, I will entertain that proposal, but the information is in his hands.

With regard to student loans, that matter is not in my jurisdiction; however, I will be glad to take it up with provincial governments and my colleagues in cabinet.

* * *

ENERGY

ALLEGED ABANDONMENT OF PROVISION TO RETAIN HALF OF LAND ON WHICH OIL AND GAS FOUND IN NORTH IN PUBLIC HANDS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for either the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I should like to ask if the cabinet has approved regulations covering the development of oil and gas in frontier and offshore areas in Canada, and more specifically, I should like to ask if one of these regulations, alleged to have been approved, will involve abandoning the previous practice of retaining one half of the land in which oil and gas has been found in public hands in favour of a policy which would relinquish all such land on a lease basis to private developers.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my colleague and I will be making a joint announcement next week dealing with the new set of principles which will underline an oil and gas act for Canada and the principles of the oil and gas land regulations.

Mr. Broadbent: I appreciate what the minister has said. He said that he will make an announcement next week, but will he tell the House if the decision has already been reached on this crucially important matter to the people of Canada, and will he answer the specific question I just put to the other minister about one change which it is alleged has been made?

Mr. Gillespie: I think the best way to proceed would be for the full announcement to be made next week. Let me assure the hon. member that it will be a very comprehensive announcement. There is a very large number of new proposals, many of which are interconnected and interlinked, and therefore, to single out one at this time and deal with it would very likely create a completely false impression of the whole thrust of the government's new oil and gas land regulations.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE DEVELOPMENT OF OIL AND GAS IN THE NORTH WILL BE PUBLIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I hope I am not investigated by the RCMP because of this, but I have a document which is labelled confidential, which has been asserted to have been approved by the cabinet and which in fact contains the points I just made, and I want to get confirmation from the minister. However, in view of the fact that even a Liberal cabinet might make a sensible decision—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —will the minister confirm for the House, before he makes his announcement next week, that one of the decisions which it is my understanding has been reached would relegate Petro-Can to the ashcan in terms of public development in the north—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We can see where the gentlemen on the right stand.

An hon. Member: Can you see where the fellows on the left stand?

Mr. Broadbent: Would the minister assure the House that the government will not permit the development of our frontier and offshore resources to remain under the control of the private multinationals which so fouled up development in the southern part of Canada and ensured that Canadians did not get the benefit they should from those resources? Would he give an undertaking to the House now that the development of gas and oil in the north will be a public development?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reassure hon. members opposite, of both parties, that the Liberal government has staked out a responsible, reasonable, constructive middle ground.

Mr. Fraser: Is there any gas in it?

* * *

[Translation]

OLYMPIC GAMES

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF EQUITABLE PARTICIPATION BY QUEBEC ATHLETES

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Since the Quebec government has developed special programs, including one entitled "Mission Québec 1976", in order that the ratio of Quebec athletes taking part in the Olympic Games can reach 30 per cent of the national delegation, and since Canadian delegations for all Olympic sports seem to systematically disregard Quebec athletes, whose ratio would now reach hardly 15 to 20 per cent of the delegation, could the minister tell the House whether he intends to have an inquiry into this so as to ensure a fair proportion of Quebec athletes taking part in the Montreal Olympic Games?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have been very happy to notice, in the last few years, the growing interest shown by the Quebec government in amateur sport and its promotion. Clearly, the Quebec government has allotted considerably larger amounts of money to that field in the last few years than in the past.

Still, it is clear that the selection of athletes who will take part in the Olympic Games is not based upon geographic, linguistic or religious ratios. The choice is made through national competitions sponsored by national sports organizations, and I really believe it would be wrong to intervene politically with a view to having proportionate representation by area.

Now, if there should be cases of discrimination, I should like to be advised of all the details, but every case brought to my attention to date and looked into seriously failed to prove that there had been any discrimination whatsoever.

Should there be such cases, be they British Columbia, Newfoundland or Quebec athletes or athletes from any province, I want to assure the hon. member that we would look into this very carefully, but we will nevertheless continue to rely on national sports federations to select the athletes.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL SECURITY

OFFENCE WHICH TORONTO "SUN" WAS SUSPECTED OF COMMITTING—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF COPY OF SEARCH WARRANT

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that a search warrant is normally obtained in order to search the premises, property, or person of an individual suspected of having committed a criminal offence, will the Solicitor General inform the House of the nature of the criminal offence the Toronto Sun was suspected of committing, particularly when this is the first time in Canadian history when the premises of a daily newspaper have been subjected to a police search? Will the minister also please table a copy of the search warrant?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's statement of the law is not correct. Very often search warrants are issued to get evidence in the hands of individuals—

Mr. Woolliams: Nonsense.

Mr. Allmand: —not because they are suspected but because they have evidence which could be used in pressing a criminal case. In this case there was an alleged offence, not against the Toronto Sun necessarily but an offence had been committed in that a confidential document had been given to an unauthorized person. In pursuit of the investigation as to who was responsible for that offence the RCMP had the search warrant issued in accordance with the law and are now pursuing that investigation.

Oral Questions

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CONSENT OF MINISTER TO PROSECUTE IN CASE OF LEAKED LETTER FROM GENERAL DARE TO COLONEL BOURNE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman did not answer my question as to whether he would table a copy of the search warrant. I would have thought that the Toronto Sun would have been asked to produce the document or whatever it was before the police were sent in.

My question to the Minister of Justice is to inquire whether his consent has been sought pursuant to section 12 of the Official Secrets Act to institute any prosecution in connection with a leaked letter from General Dare to Colonel Bourne or in connection with the police search of the premises of the Toronto Sun? If not, is the minister contemplating the laying of any charge?

● (1430)

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the preliminary part of the question is, no. My permission has not been sought. I presume thereby that the RCMP is conducting whatever investigation is under way. If the RCMP feel that a charge is warranted under section 12, they will refer the matter to me.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO CIRCUMSTANCES OF LEAKING OF LETTER FROM GENERAL DARE TO COLONEL BOURNE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the minister did not say if charges were being contemplated, which was the last part of the question.

May I ask the Prime Minister, in view of the serious implications of the whole matter, particularly with regard to the maintenance of the freedom of the press, if the government will establish a special inquiry into all circumstances surrounding the leak of the Dare-Bourne letter and the events arising following the disclosure of its contents?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the answer, here, is the same as the answer I have given in other cases: that the police are conducting an investigation and that we are relying on the police to do their duty and do it well. I have answered many other questions of this type by saying that I see no need for an investigation. I believe that the police will or will not lay a charge, or ask one to be laid, according to their own sense of duty. I must say that I do not see any greater gravity in this case than in all the others.

The hon. member is concerned about the freedom of the press, and rightly so; but the freedom of the individual is also very important. I have not seen the opposition incensed because there were search warrants issued against individuals. Why are they suddenly excited because the police are interested in the press? They were egging on the police in recent months to get going after individuals. To me, the freedom of the individual is just as important as the freedom of the press.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Allmand.]

POSSIBILITY DISCLOSURE OF GENERAL DARE'S LETTER BREACH OF OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. The Prime Minister yesterday having said that parts of the contents of General Dare's letter are erroneous, and as I believe in the importance of the freedom of the press, a freedom next in importance after freedom of speech, will the minister say if he or his legal officers considered that General Dare's letter contains any information which, if disclosed, would breach the Official Secrets Act, and, if so, will charges be laid?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as I told the hon. member for Yukon a moment ago, the RCMP, as the Solicitor General indicated, are carrying out an investigation. When they have completed that investigation, if they feel that charges are warranted against anyone, that matter must, under the law, be referred to the Attorney General of Canada and the law officers of the Crown.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. A search warrant having been issued to allow the RCMP to search for a document in a newspaper office, may I ask the Minister of Justice, the chief legal officer of Canada, what great secret was contained in that letter which, if disclosed, would breach the Official Secrets Act? What was there? What was so important as to warrant infringement of the freedom of the press?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the search warrant, as was made clear, was issued under section 11(1) of the Official Secrets Act. Whether the particular document searched for, or other documents, constitute a breach of section 4 of the act is a matter to be determined on the conclusion of the investigation.

NATURE OF OFFENCE COMMITTED BY LEAKING OF LETTER FROM GENERAL DARE TO COLONEL BOURNE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister mentioned certain sections of the act. Surely, whoever issued the search warrant must have had reasonable and probable grounds for believing that an offence has been committed or was about to be committed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: The Prime Minister called hon. members hyenas. I can see why he calls you all hyenas.

May I ask the Minister of Justice what offence the person who issued the search warrant, or the police, believes was committed in the newspaper offices in Toronto?

Mr. Nielsen: Table the search warrant.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that, really, is a rather ridiculous question. No charges have been laid, and the hon. member is asking me to say what charges are involved.

Mr. Woolliams: That is exactly what I am asking.

Mr. Basford: A search warrant has been issued—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, obviously, the gentlemen of the opposition are expert at being hyenas.

The situation is that a search warrant was issued under section 11 of the Official Secrets Act on the information and belief of a Corporal Colter of the RCMP. That, clearly, does not indicate that a charge has been laid or may be laid.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

APPEAL OF UNITED STATES CONGRESSMEN FOR MORE FREQUENT MEETINGS WITH CANADIAN AUTHORITIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker,—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I thank you and, through you, all members of the House. My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the recent appeal by 15 Republican members of the United States Congress in favour of more frequent meetings between the American and Canadian authorities, including regular meetings between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada, has the Secretary of State for External Affairs taken any initiatives in order to respond to that appeal?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have taken a number of initiatives to increase contacts between Canadian and U.S. authorities. Just last week in Nairobi I had a consultation with Dr. Kissinger. I shall have a further consultation with him next week in Oslo—

An hon. Member: Try Washington.

Mr. MacEachen: —and arrangements have been made to hold subsequent consultation in Montreal.

Mr. Wagner: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs propose to hold further meetings in order to set up an agenda for a series of meetings between the authorities of both countries for the purpose of reducing the tensions deplored by that group of United States Congressmen?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have already expressed my view of the evaluation conducted by the United States Congressmen. I had a consultation with Dr. Kissinger last week in Nairobi. We both discussed this question and both agreed that whatever tensions existed fictionally, they were not present in the relationship between Canada and the United States.

COMMUNICATIONS

CABLEVISION—PROPOSED ISSUANCE OF GUIDELINES FOR RATE SCHEDULES, METHODS OF PAYMENT, ETC.

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Will the minister consider asking the CRTC to prepare guidelines covering such things as notification dates for new rate schedules, acceptable methods of payment, disposition of unused portions of annual contracts, etc., with which cable TV companies would comply when they are implementing new authorized rates to the subscribers?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the companies do advise customers of changes in rates and changes in contracts. However, I will make the representation of the hon. member known to the CRTC.

* * *

MANPOWER

NUMBER OF JOBS TO BE CREATED FOR STUDENTS—SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF FUND TO ENABLE MUNICIPALITIES AND FARMERS TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and concerns the fact that we have seen a seasonally adjusted unemployment rate among workers between the ages of 14 and 24 of more than 10 per cent since October, 1974. The elimination of the Opportunities for Youth Program will eliminate another 30,000 summer jobs which would have been available to people in this age group. In view of the fact that as yet we have seen no sign of jobs in significant numbers resulting from what the minister has called elaborate efforts in working with the private sector to stimulate replacement of students and young workers, can the minister tell the House how many jobs he can assure us will be created as a result of these elaborate efforts and some indication of what they consist of?

● (1440)

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I already indicated that that information was conveyed to hon. members by a communication several weeks ago. Second, I point out that the quantitative results of that effort are mainly in the private sector. Even at the height of job opportunity funding by the federal and provincial governments over the last three or four years, it has been quite consistent that 85 per cent of the jobs have been found in the private sector. We are exploiting, through our efforts in working with the private sector, organizations for an improvement in that ratio. Indeed, that is where the greatest possible results would lie.

Mr. Rodriguez: In view of all the pious platitudes which the minister has just enunciated, and in view of the fact that we have not yet seen any of these jobs, is the minister now prepared to establish an emergency fund from which municipalities and the agricultural community may draw to create employment opportunities with decent wages and conditions for our unemployed youth?

Mr. Andras: No, Mr. Speaker. We are not prepared to establish such an emergency fund, as interesting an idea as it may be. However, over the last two or three years we have taken definite measures to expose young Canadians to agricultural work through the creation of farm labour pools. I certainly invite students this summer to take a second look at work in agricultural activities. It offers them the possibility or work, although indeed it is hard work.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED NEED OF PASSPORTS BY UNITED STATES TOURISTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who I am sure is aware of the great importance of the tourist industry in Canada and the worry and concern of tourist operators. Will the minister assure this House that the need for passports, birth certificates or similar documentation on the part of Americans crossing the Canadian border this summer has been sufficiently publicized by his department so that the tourist industry, upon which so many areas of Canada are dependant, is not adversely affected by any delay in the issuance of documentation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this matter was brought to my attention last night through a report by one of the northern Ontario tourist organization operators. I can say quite frankly that I am not aware of the issuance of any instructions which will require passports or any such documents from Americans coming to Canada although there will be greater scrutiny of border crossings this summer for obvious reasons.

Mr. Darling: Will the minister advise the House if any representations have been made to the United States government to expedite the issuance of passports to American tourists without jeopardizing security provisions in either country because the tourist operators are under the impression that when their American clients cross the border, they will be stopped unless they have either a birth certificate or passport.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I believe that impression is erroneous. I alluded to it a minute ago. I want to find out the source because that is not the intention.

* * *

HIGHWAY SAFETY

REQUEST THAT FINDINGS WITH REGARD TO DEFECTS IN FORD MOTOR VEHICLES BE MADE PUBLIC

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In so far as officials of his department in the division of the Motor Vehicle Safety Branch have now completed their investigation into steering defects in Ford motorcars and defects in control arms which could cause a collapse of the wheel, and have now stated that these defects are a serious hazard to Canadian drivers, will the minister assure the House that these findings will be made public immediately? In view of the fact that this branch has much information in this regard not yet released, will the minister also assure the House that a list of vehicle safety matters under investigation will be made available to Canadian consumers, as was done by the highway traffic safety administration office in Washington to United States consumers?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that the safety branch will take the appropriate steps as soon as the information is complete and make it available to the public in the proper fashion. I know the hon. member appreciates the standard of work which has been accomplished in that branch and in the department in that regard. In this particular case, there are some real concerns. However, it is also known that there is a basic warning in the operation of the vehicle to the person with a car with a defect. That will also be a matter taken into consideration. However, I can assure the hon. member that as fast as steps can be taken, they will be taken, as always.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF DEFECTS IN FORD MOTOR VEHICLES

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that officials now know there are steering defects, other defects and other matters being investigated with regard to Ford cars, will the minister, acting on behalf of Canadian consumers, ensure that these findings are made public today or tomorrow, or does he feel that the legal rights of the Ford Motor Company are more important than the safety of Canadian consumers? Does he feel—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not get up right away because I thought the hon. member was about to launch into a speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: Not being a lawyer, I cannot quite grasp the significance of combining Ford rights versus safety information to be supplied to consumers. I presume that Ford of Canada have legal rights. Maybe the hon. member does not agree with me on this. With regard to the information, I will make certain that everyone is fully informed, as will the Minister of Transport. I am sure that Ford of Canada will have to make this information available to the Canadian consumers, particularly those owning Ford automobiles, in so far as the safety question is concerned.

With regard to the other matter, which the hon. member alluded to the other day, I repeat that Ford's legal rights are such that they must be considered innocent until proven guilty by the proper officials at which time I will not hesitate to act against the Ford Motor Company of Canada.

* * *

HUMAN RIGHTS

DATE OF RATIFICATION OF UNITED NATIONS COVENANT—REASON FOR DELAY

Hon. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. One month ago today in the absence of the minister, his parliamentary secretary told the hon. member for Fundy-Royal she was hopeful that at any moment the Canadian government would be ratifying the United Nations Covenant on Human Rights. Can the minister either report that this covenant has been ratified or indicate what is standing in the way of ratification of this document which dates back ten years?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I cannot advise the hon. member that this convention has been ratified. I am still awaiting final word from one province, to the representative of which I addressed a telegram I believe yesterday, in the expectation that early action would be taken and a unanimous decision therefore possible.

* * *

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT LAY-OFFS BY PROHIBITING IMPORTS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce concerning the situation of textiles in Canada.

Given the increase to 8.3 per cent of the unemployment rate in Quebec, is the minister aware that his present policy on imports in the textile industry, at a time when this industry goes through a serious and long period of slowdown and lay-offs, makes this industry absolutely unable to compete with the massive imports of artificial and synthetic fibers? Is then the minister in a position to tell the House what steps he intends to take to protect the jobs of Canadians who work in that industry?

● (1450)

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is not only a question of the steps to be taken but of the ones that have been taken. Within recent weeks we have applied quotas and constraints on at least four separate categories, in consultation with the industry and on the basis of reports from the textiles and clothing board. We are expecting an additional report from the textiles and clothing board on polyester yarn within a matter of days. I have indicated in the House and elsewhere that there is a committee made up of industrial representatives and officials which is now meeting to determine what changes in the policy are necessary. As soon as we get the most recent report that I mentioned with regard to polyester yarn we will announce as quickly as possible what is our decision in that regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question.

Does the minister know that at the present time, particularly in Quebec, where this industry predominates, many workers with more than 25 years of service are laid off or paid the minimum wage because of the increase in the imports of synthetic fibers, and does he intend—and that is the purpose of my question—to protect the jobs of these people, or create a program to relocate them on the labour market?

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated a number of the steps we have taken. I repeat that on polyester yarn there is a study underway at the moment as to how it is going to be done. I do not think that anybody needs to be reassured more than the hon. member, and my colleagues from Quebec on this side of the House have kept me very conscious of this matter over the past several months.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

CONSULTATIONS WITH AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS IN SETTING UP INQUIRY INTO SAFETY OF BILINGUAL OPERATIONS—PUBLICATION OF REPORT

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Transport following his news conference at the noon hour concerning the setting up of an independent inquiry into the question of bilingualism and traffic safety. The conciliation board report specifically stated that there should be consultation with the air traffic controllers in the choosing of the commissioner and in setting out the terms of reference. Did the minister consult with them on these two points before he set out the terms of reference and chose the commissioner?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): We did have consultation, Mr. Speaker. For instance, we did give a number of names to the employees and we indicated that we were interested in getting their reply. On the other hand, when we did not have a positive reply with regard to the names we went ahead and selected a name that we were confident would have their full confidence and support in view of this gentleman's past record and history. We did not, however, want to delay the setting up of the commission because it is important that we assure everybody, including the controllers, that we are very determined to establish procedures for ensuring safety, and this ought not to be the basis of any problem for those who travel by air in this country.

Oral Questions

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the minister failed to answer the second part of my question which was whether he consulted them on the terms of reference. As a supplementary question, following what he said in his news release to the effect that the report will subsequently be presented to parliament, in order to maintain the credibility of the assurance of safety all across the country would the minister table the report immediately in parliament once it is brought down by the commissioner inside the 90 days?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I indicated that we had communications with the organization. That is all we can do on our part. In terms of whether or not there was a sufficiently positive reply to qualify as what the hon. member calls consultation, I do not know.

As the second part of the question, it is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that our intention is to make available the report to all as soon as possible. I had thought that by saying that it would be presented to parliament I was doing that, but I can assure the hon. member that it will be made available immediately.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

STATEMENT OF EGG MARKETING AGENCY ABOUT SUPPLIES FOR PROCESSORS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is the minister aware of a telegram that was sent to all egg processors by CEMA to the effect that "Due to present confusion of government policies we feel we are unable to supply eggs in excess of Canadian surplus to table markets"? The telegram goes on to advise the processors that if they are not satisfied they are to contact the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Does the minister intend to ask the Farm Products Marketing Council to ask CEMA, which operates under federal government licence, to explain this what amounts to intimidation of the Canadian egg processing trade?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question is a valid one. The role of CEMA is two-fold. I think that CEMA's role, which it is carrying out very well, is to stabilize the price of eggs in such a way that it is as fair to the producer as it is to the consumer. Its second responsibility is to supply a sufficient quota of eggs both to the individual consumer and the breaker trade. If CEMA is unable to do so I think that private industry would be gald to do so, and it should reflect a two and a half cents reduction in the price of eggs to Canadians, which is the amount the consumer must pay to help finance CEMA and assist it to fulfil its function as outlined by the law.

[Mr. Lang.]

TRADE

MEASURES TO ASSURE SUPPLY OF EGGS FOR PROCESSORS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce; the minister has been made aware of this telegram. What steps is he taking to ensure that the legitimate processors of eggs in Canada will be assured of an adequate supply, notwithstanding any veto powers CEMA may have over import quotas? Because obviously this will have an effect on the price of confectionery and bakery products in this country.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for sending me a copy of the wire. The first I saw of it was when I came into the House. Prior to its receipt—and I will take the hon. member's word that this is the wire—I had already written to my colleagues in agriculture and consumer affairs and asked them to arrange for a meeting of officials to clarify the situation and to determine what the best course of action would be. As I read the telegram, if it suggests that these people ought to put pressure on in terms of getting a decision that is favourable to them or to any particular group which is not a rational decision in the over-all, then I think they can save the cost of the wires because they are not going to have that kind of effect.

* * *

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF COPY OF WARRANT USED TO SEARCH OFFICES OF TORONTO "SUN"

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Solicitor General. In questions raised yesterday and earlier today in the question period a request was made for a copy of the warrant in the RCMP investigation, and perhaps through omission the Solicitor General did not answer that part of the question. Would the minister be prepared to table the warrant referred to in the course of questioning so that we can look at it?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will look into that. I might also say, since I was questioned about this, that the offence that was committed was an offence under section 4(1)(a) of the Official Secrets Act, which makes it an offence for anyone to communicate in any way the contents of a classified document to an unauthorized person. The reason for the warrant was not because we wanted to find out the contents of the letter—obviously we had copies of it—but to get the exact copy that was sent to the Toronto Sun so that we could get evidence as to where it was produced, how it was produced and who might have sent it. That is the important fact.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the course of his investigation into this matter has the Solicitor General inquired of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police whether or not, prior to carrying out the search, they had requested the Toronto Sun or one of its publishers to produce the letter? Would he answer that question?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, when the RCMP went to the offices of the Sun they asked the officer in charge for the letter, but he refused to give it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): But before that.

Mr. Allmand: I raised that point. They thought it might have been counter productive, that the letter might have been destroyed and so they proceeded in this way. There is lot of information that can be had from a copy of the letter; for example, what type of machine did the photostating, whether there were any fingerprints on the letter and so on. This can be very helpful in gathering evidence.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

PORTION OF LEAKED LETTER FROM GENERAL DARE CONSIDERED DANGEROUS TO SECURITY—REASON LETTER CLASSIFIED

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Presumably the Official Secrets Act is designed to prevent falling into unauthorized hands information that would be dangerous to the security of this country. In any event, now this information has been published would the minister be good enough to explain to the country just what information in the letter would be dangerous to the security interests of this country?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is not properly quoting the law. If he reads it he will see that section 4(1)(a) of the Officials Secrets Act does not say what he has just said. Furthermore, there is a principle involved here, which is in the law, concerning individuals who without any sanction leak documents which the RCMP themselves believe to be confidential and secret.

● (1500)

Mr. Lawrence: I suppose it boils down to this: Why was—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: Why was that letter even classified in the first place? Would the minister tell us that?

Mr. Allmand: General Dare or some of his staff decided that this was appropriate.

Order Paper Questions

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ONE-HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE OF CANADA

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate being recognized at this time to make a brief but important announcement. The Royal Military College of Canada is celebrating its one-hundredth anniversary this year and as part of the centennial celebrations the college is being presented with a new Queen's colour. The presentation ceremony is to take place on Parliament Hill at 12 noon tomorrow, when His Excellency the Governor General will present the new colour to RMC.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richardson: I should add that the ceremony will last approximately one hour. There will be seats held in reservation for members of parliament who arrive before 11.45 a.m. For those who are unable to attend for the entire event it will, of course, be possible to watch parts of the ceremony at any time from 12 noon till one o'clock from any part of the Hill. I hope members from both sides of the House will want to attend at least some part of this ceremony which is of great significance in the life of the Royal Military College of Canada as it celebrates 100 years of service to our country.

* * *

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John Campbell (LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul) moved that the fifteenth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented to the House on Monday, May 10, 1976, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 4,363, 4,365, 4,366, 4,370, 4,371, 4,375, 4,377, 4,379, 4,420, 4,422, 4,565, 4,883, 4,885, 4,886, 4,891, 4,896, 5,186 to 5,188 inclusive, and 5,204.

Order Paper Questions

[Text]

PSYCHOLOGISTS—STE-ANNE-DES-PLAINES

Question No. 4,363—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychologists at Ste-Anne-des-Plaines and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada (iii) individual salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

● (0000)

PSYCHOLOGISTS—FRONTENAC INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,365—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychologists at Frontenac Institution and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada (iii) individual salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

PSYCHOLOGISTS—ROCKWOOD INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,366—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychologists at Rockwood Institution and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada (iii) individual salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

PSYCHOLOGISTS—BEAVER CREEK CORRECTIONAL CAMP

Question No. 4,370—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychologists at Beaver Creek Correctional Camp and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada (iii) individual salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

PSYCHOLOGISTS—PITTSBURGH INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,371—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychologists at Pittsburgh Institution and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada (iii) individual salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

PSYCHOLOGISTS—BATH INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,375—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychologists at Bath Institution and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada (iii) individual salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

[Mr. Blais.]

● (0000)

PSYCHOLOGISTS—LANDRY CROSSING CORRECTIONAL CAMP

Question No. 4,377—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychologists at Landry Crossing Correctional Camp and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada (iii) individual salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

PSYCHOLOGISTS—ONTARIO PRE-RELEASE HOSTEL

Question No. 4,379—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychologists at Ontario Pre-release Hostel and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada (iii) individual salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

LIVING UNIT-OFFICERS—MILLHAVEN INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,420—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of living unit-officers at Millhaven Institution?

2. Was their education (a) less than grade 10 (b) grade 10 to grade 12 (c) some college (d) beyond a first university degree?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

LIVING UNIT-OFFICERS—SASKATCHEWAN PENITENTIARY

Question No. 4,422—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of living unit-officers at Saskatchewan Penitentiary?

2. Was their education (a) less than grade 10 (b) grade 10 to grade 12 (c) some college (d) beyond a first university degree?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

LIVING UNIT-OFFICERS—DORCHESTER PENITENTIARY

Question No. 4,565—Mr. MacKay:

1. For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of living unit-officers at Dorchester Penitentiary?

2. Was their education (a) less than grade 10 (b) grade 10 to grade 12 (c) some college (d) beyond a first university degree?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

● (0000)

PSYCHIATRISTS—FERNDALE

Question No. 4,883—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Ferndale and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

PSYCHIATRISTS—MOUNTAIN INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,885—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Mountain Institution and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

PSYCHIATRISTS—AGASSIZ CORRECTIONAL CAMP

Question No. 4,886—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Agassiz Correctional Camp and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

PSYCHIATRISTS—PANDORA CENTRE

Question No. 4,891—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Pandora Centre and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

PSYCHIATRISTS—BURRARD CENTRE

Question No. 4,896—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Burrard Centre and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

JOB OPENINGS REPORTED TO LOCAL CANADA MANPOWER CENTRES

Question No. 5,186—Mr. Coates:

1. Since March 1, 1973, how many new job openings were reported to the local Manpower Centre by (a) Victoriaville Hockey Sticks, Ltd., Victoriaville, Quebec (b) the Bonaventure Quebec Branch of Quebec Branch of Gélinite Inc., Sillery, Quebec (d) the Malartic Quebec Branch of M.D. Chartre, Val d'Or, Quebec (e) Sportsman Campers and Trailers Manufacturing Ltd., Saskatoon, Saskatchewan (f) Native Auto Salvage Co., Regina, Saskatchewan (g) SED Systems, Ltd., Saskatoon, Saskatchewan (h) Produits Chimiques Côté, Chateauguay Centre, Quebec (i) the St. Hubert Branch of Les Breuvages Leymoyne Ltée, Longueuil, Quebec (j) Olympic Pant & Sportswear Co. Ltd., Winnipeg, Manitoba (k) the Selkirk Manitoba Branch of Electro-Knit Fabrics (Canada) Ltd., Montreal, Quebec (l) Sunburst Ceramics Ltd., Lethbridge, Alberta (m) the Cornwall Branch of Atlas Hoist and Body Inc., Montreal, Quebec (n) the Ville St. Laurent Branch of Edith Serei Co. Ltd., Montreal, Quebec (o) Andersen Forest Products Ltd., New Denmark, New Brunswick (p) the Spring Manufacturing Plant for Carnell's Carriage Factory, Ltd., St. John's, Newfoundland (q) Columbia River Shake and Shingle Ltd., Nakusp, British Columbia (r) Dycks Containers and Forest Products Ltd., Winnipeg, Manitoba (s) the Arnprior Ontario Branch of Playtex Ltd., Malton, Ontario (t) Harden's Seed Service, Plum Couler, Manitoba?

2. In each case, how many of the positions reported were actually filled by persons referred to the firm by the local Manpower Centre?

3. In each case, what has been the approximate turnover rate for the positions recorded with Manpower?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1 and 2.

	Reported Job Openings	CMC Placements
(a)	80	60
(b)	118	105
(c)	2	2
(d)	15	11
(e)	49	30
(f)	Nil	Nil
(g)	12	6
(h)	36	26
(i)	7	5
(j)	76	37
(k)	481	442
(l)	60	43
(m)	140	114
(n)	3	Nil
(o)	5	2
(p)	10	9
(q)	2	1
(r)	8	8
(s)	282	105
(t)	3	1

3. This information is not available in CMC's.

JOB OPENINGS REPORTED TO LOCAL CMC'S

Question No. 5,187—Mr. Coates:

1. Since March 1, 1974, how many new job openings were reported to the local Manpower Centre by (a) the St. John New Brunswick Branch of Universal Sectors, Ltd., Markham, Ontario (b) the St. Anthony Branch of Fishery Products Ltd., St. John's, Newfoundland (c) the St. John New Brunswick Branch of Petrona Atlantic Ltd., Mississauga, Ontario (d) the Port au Choix Branch of Fishery Products Ltd., St. John's, Newfoundland (e) Produits Belle Baie Ltée, Caraquet, New Brunswick (f) the Sawmill, Bernetz Township Quebec of Abieux Inc., Val d'Or, Quebec (g) Le Meuble Ltée, St. Charles de Bellechasse, Quebec (h) Crèmerie St. Grégoire Inc., St. Grégoire de Nicolet, Quebec (i) the Rutherglen Branch of Goodman-Stanforth Division of UOP Manufacturing Ltd., North Bay, Ontario (j) Elk-Lake Planing Mill, Ltd., Elk Lake, Ontario (k) the Arnprior Branch of Noranda Metal Industries Ltd., Montreal, Quebec (l) Natural Recovery Systems Inc., Moncton, New Brunwick (m) Jos. A. Likely Ltd., St. John, New Brunswick (n) the Point Edward Plant of Thomas K. Fiander Ltd., Sydney, Nova Scotia (o) the Sawmill of Berion Inc. of Notre-Dame-du-Lac, Quebec (p) St. Lawrence Paper Bag Ltd. of Quebec (q) Les Entreprises J.H. Grenon Inc. of Ste-Anne-des-Plaines, Quebec (r) the St. Laurent Branch of Trans World Record Corporation, Montreal, Quebec (s) Les Emballages de Spécialitées Ltée, Montreal, Quebec (t) Boulangerie Samson Inc., Lauzon, Quebec?

2. In each case, how many of the positions reported were actually filled by persons referred to the firm by the local Manpower Centre?

3. In each case, what has been the approximate turnover rate for the positions recorded with Manpower?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1 and 2.

	Reported Job Openings	CMC Placements
(a)	Nil	Nil
(b)	200	191
(c)	6	2
(d)	1	1
(e)	11	11
(f)	116	97
(g)	5	4
(h)	8	5
(i)	215	186
(j)	13	5
(k)	56	28
(l)	30	25
(m)	45	22
(n)	7	7
(o)	2	1
(p)	14	9
(q)	3	1
(r)	73	31
(s)	Nil	Nil
(t)	12	9

3. This information is not available in CMC'S.

JOB OPENINGS REPORTED TO LOCAL CMC'S

Question No. 5,188—Mr. Coates:

1. Since March 1, 1975, how many new job openings were reported to the local Manpower Centre by (a) Chemcrest Corporation Ltd., Division of Willman Windows Industries, Winnipeg, Manitoba (b) True Foam Insul-Products Ltd., Halifax, Nova Scotia (c) Confection Johanne Inc., Louisville, Quebec (d) the Compton Branch of Les Produits Forestiers Procompt Ltée, Montreal, Quebec (e) Autoline Products Ltd., Winnipeg, Manitoba (f) West Pac Sportswear Mfg. Ltd., Saskatoon, Saskatchewan (g) Boeing of Canada Ltd., Winnipeg, Manitoba (h) Terra Nova Shoes Ltd., Harbour Grace, Newfoundland (i) Meubles Amqui Furniture Inc., Amqui, Quebec (j) Antica Inc., Ste-Anne-de-la-Pérade, Quebec (k) Spinto Ltd., Granby, Quebec (l) Vadnais et Vadnais Inc., St. Florence, Matapedia, Quebec (m) the Plessisville Branch of Nazaire Frontier Inc., Quebec City, Quebec (n) the Dunham (Missisquoi) Quebec Iron Foundry of Daigle Aqua Inc., Longueuil, Quebec (o) H.L. Boisvert Inc., Coaticook, Quebec (p) the Pembroke-Stafford Township (Ontario) Branch of Boire and Verch Construction Ltd. (q) Progress Plastics Ltd., Winnipeg, Manitoba (r) the Nelson B.C. Branch of Nelson Ready Mix Contrete Ltd., Vancouver, British Columbia (s) the Bakery of Raven Enterprises Ltd., Winnipeg, Manitoba (t) Saskatoon Fresh Pack Potatoes Ltd., Saskatoon, Saskatchewan?

2. In each case, how many of the positions reported were actually filled by persons referred to the firm by the local Manpower Centre?

3. In each case, what has been the approximate turnover rate for the positions recorded with Manpower?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1 and 2.

	Reported Job Openings	CMC Placement
(a)	19	14
(b)	3	3
(c)	34	21
(d)	24	17
(e)	7	7
(f)	9	5
(g)	1	Nil
(h)	43	43
(i)	14	13
(j)	8	5
(k)	10	10
(l)	54	47
(m)	33	31
(n)	7	5
(o)	Nil	Nil
(p)	Nil	Nil
(q)	7	5
(r)	Nil	Nil
(s)	Nil	Nil
(t)	1	1

3. This information is not available in CMC's.

ST. LAWRENCE ISLANDS NATIONAL PARK—ACQUISITION OF LAND 1976-77 FISCAL YEAR

Question No. 5,204—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the Estimates for 1976-77, which show a sum of $1,100,000 budgeted for "acquisition of land" in the St. Lawrence Islands National Park during the current fiscal year, what is the land that has been acquired or is in the process of being acquired or which is intended to be acquired and what is the legal property description in each case?

2. Of this amount, how much is estimated will be spent on (a) Island (b) mainland acquisition?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. No properties have yet been acquired. The following properties are in the process of being acquired or are intended to be acquired subject to conclusion of satisfactory negotiations: A and B as described under the answer to Question No. 5,202. C. It is considered that the release of any further information may prejudice current negotiations and cause undue pressure on the persons with whom the Department is dealing.

2. (a) Only islands are being acquired at this time. No estimates are available at this time of total costs to be applied against the current fiscal year. (b) Nil.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered.

* * *

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 3,967 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately. I ask that question No. 5,092 be made an order for return. I also ask the consent of the House at this time to furnish a partial reply and to table the balance of the information at a future time.

[Text]

MULTICULTURALISM PROGRAMME

Question No. 3,967—Mr. Matte:

1. Since the inception of the Multiculturalism Programme, has the Minister responsible for Multiculturalism granted subsidies and, if so, in what amounts?

2. For each such subsidy, what was (a) its purpose (b) the name of the association (c) the province (d) the year?

Return tabled.

METRIC CONVERSION PROGRAMME

Question No. 5,092—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. Since the implementation of the Metric Conversion Programme at the national level, how much was spent each year by departments to (a) educate the public (b) apply the new system to material essential to the proper functioning of the department?

2. How many persons are directly responsible for the implementation of the programme?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I ask that all other notices of motions be allowed to stand.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED GOVERNMENT FAILURE TO SOLVE ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe) moved:

That this House, believing that the continuing tendency of this administration to reckless and at times contradictory intervention in the economy has created an atmosphere of uncertainty and lack of confidence with the public, and seeing that this uncertainty has resulted in rising unemployment, falling productivity, and unacceptable levels of real growth and inflation, expresses its lack of confidence in the government.

He said: Mr. Speaker, 769,000 persons are unemployed in this country. That is a national disgrace and a tragedy for those involved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: With the unemployment level at 7.4 per cent nationally, and as high as 14 per cent in the province of Newfoundland, there can be no greater evidence of the failure of this government in its economic policies or lack thereof.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Thousands of students coming into the labour market this summer now face the bleak prospect of little summer employment. This is inexcusable. Worse still, it may have lasting repercussions in that many of these students may not be able to complete their scholastic program without the revenue they had hoped to earn in the coming summer months.

Today, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) simply said, in answer to questions on this important subject, that the government was addressing itself to the problem. That is shameful. What has the government been doing in the past 10 or 11 years that would give the Prime Minister the nerve to stand in this House and say they are still addressing themselves to the problem?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: The present administration leaves the impression that it is not concerned with unemployment because, after all, those who are out of work are cushioned with their unemployment insurance benefits. How short-sighted an attitude, when we bear in mind that some $4 billion is being expended on unemployment insurance benefits, compared to $758 million in the year before 1971 when the Unemployment Insurance Commission program was revised! We are now placing, and continue to place, an intolerable burden on those who are employed in this country, on the businessmen of the nation and on the taxpayers themselves who have to pick up the residual of benefit payments. This is an intolerable burden that need not have occurred had the administration been more prudent in handling our economy. That is the important thing to remember, and that is the thing this administration forgets.

It is not enough to say that those who are out of work are somehow not too badly off as long as their unemployment insurance benefits continue. The fact is that everybody loses when we have needless unemployment and the wealth of the nation falls. The important thing to which this government has not reacted to date is the review of the Economic Council of Canada entitled "People and Jobs". In that review it is pointed out that unemployment insurance revisions have now placed us in the position of being the most generous—if you like, the most liberal—industrialized nation in the world, having regard to our insurance benefit system.

● (1510)

The review points out that the eight-week minimum period after which one is entitled to draw unemployment insurance is by far the lowest minimum period of any nation with which we have to compete internationally. It estimates that .7 of 1 per cent of the unemployed—roughly 70,000 people in this country—are out of work, so far as the records are concerned, because they rely on an overly lax unemployment insurance system. The government knows this. It has hinted it may bring in legislation to tighten up the situation. I call upon the government to produce the legislation that has been talked about to tighten up the laxness in the unemployment insurance system that was so properly outlined in the Economic Council's report to which I referred.

We could perhaps not only save up to $350 million of that $4 billion of unemployment insurance benefits to which I have referred but, more important, it would ensure another 70,000 people who would be working and gainfully employed, which in turn would ensure that even more people would be employed.

That is the type of inconsistency to which we refer in our motion today in which we are asking members of the House to vote non-confidence in this government. Let us take a look at the last two years under this administration. I refer to 1974 and 1975. In those two years, in terms of real growth we have lost $330 for every man, woman and child in this country. That is the cost of the fall of real growth during those years. This nation, with our resources, with our trained people and with our agricultural lands, should be able to achieve a minimum of 5 per cent real growth per year. We have not been reaching that level since 1973. We did reach a 5 per cent minimum growth level on average per annum in the previous 20 years, but in 1974 we fell short by 2.2 per cent, and in 1975 we fell short by 4.8 per cent. Maybe that is the reason the former minister of finance was fired. That 7 point drop to which I referred in 1974 and 1975 represents $7.7 billion in our gross national product which has been lost and which I suggest must be regained for the sake of the Canadian people. This shortfall of $7.7 billion, $330 for every man, woman and child in the country, goes hand in hand with today's unemployment.

This is the challenge facing the administration today: Get our people back to work. Get our real growth to a trend level of at least 5 per cent per year. Let us remember that the $330 per annum that is being denied the average Canadian today through the mismanagement of our economy by the administration is almost $1,000 per Canadian family. They should not be called upon to make that sacrifice for the mismanagement of this administration. That is the loss to Canadians as a result of the ineptitude of the administration which I should like to outline in some respects today. In getting our people back to work, we consider the private sector should be the primary supplier of jobs.

We would hope that in the forthcoming budget the administration will orient itself to magnify the influence of the taxpayers' money by providing more jobs in the private sector. For instance, we should allocate research and development funds to the industries that will dominate the future. One example would be solar energy, in respect of which a small investment—small, certainly, in relation to the way this administration likes to spend money—in research and development money can result in a very rapid increase in the number of jobs, literally tens of thousands of jobs for Canadians which could be created in that field alone. Such research and development should be encouraged by private industry in the regions of Canada where our unemployment is the highest.

At the present time, why should private industry in the United States and Canada be opening research and development offices in the Irish Republic, taking advantage of their tax incentives, when such activity could just as easily be taking place in our Atlantic area? Knowing the way this administration acts, I have no doubt that Air Canada is flying such people to create new jobs in Ireland right over our Atlantic provinces. This administration must recognize that it is not further government participation or intervention, nor is it further massive government make-work programs, that are needed. It must recognize that what is needed is restoration of confidence in our future.

It is imperative that the administration should stabilize its position. It should encourage the setting of suitable goals and policies, and then let the private sector get on with the job of reaching the goals to which I have referred. It is the administration's task to set the atmosphere within which the economy can flourish. It is the private sector which should be called upon to produce the results.

[Mr. Stevens.]

In speaking about the incompetence of the government, let me first touch on our debt management. On page 94 of the Economic Review that was recently tabled, the following is pointed out:

> Direct and guaranteed government-sector borrowing, which had more than tripled in 1974, increased by a further 35 per cent to $11 billion in 1975.

In short, we have had in the last two years a phenomenal growth in our debt so far as the federal and provincial governments are concerned. I suggest that growth in public debt has placed a needless pressure on the private sector and on the capital markets and has resulted in interest rates going up, to the disadvantage of all Canadians. I suggest, also, that indirectly it has created the unemployment we deplore so much. This load is perhaps more accurately reflected if we look at page 88 of the Economic Review. There, lo and behold, the government boasts about its Canada savings bond campaign. It states:

> The 1975 Canada savings bond campaign in the last quarter of 1975 was highly successful. It raised $3,182 million net new cash.

It is further stated:

> At the end of 1975 they represented 42 per cent of total government of Canada debt outstanding, compared with 40 per cent in 1974—

That Canada savings bond issue has done two things. It has tended to sop up the mortgage funds in this country which otherwise would go to private institutions for use in housing construction and the refinancing of present homes. The Canada savings bond issue is a contributing factor to the relatively high mortgage rates in this country, almost three percentage points more than we find, for example, in the United States. The second thing that I would point out about the government's handling of Canada savings bonds type of debt financing is that now they have, as is stated in the review, 42 per cent of the debt in this nation on a demand basis. That is not prudent.

● (1520)

Last evening, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), when questioned on this point, agreed that in the current year he hoped that this tendency to such a heavy orientation to Canada savings bonds type of financing would be moderated. I am glad they have come to their senses, but I ask: Why did they not come to their senses in the earlier years when this problem was building up? Again, dealing with this question of credit, I would like to refer to page 99 of the Economic Review which points out that our banks are perhaps in the tightest liquid position they have ever been in their history. The review points out that the preliquid assets ratio showed an even greater relative decline in 1975, falling from 10.1 per cent in January to 8.1 per cent in December. In short, we have basically been running a credit-oriented economy, with the government leading the way in debt expansion, to the disadvantage of all Canadians and indirectly it has created and contributed to the unemployment that we deplore.

Speaking about the handling of the government debt, I think that we, as members of this parliament, would not be responsible if we do not recognize what has happened, for example, to the huge pension funds that are being administered by the government of Canada, and the provincial governments. The fact is that these pension funds have been used, over the past few years, 100 per cent to finance government operations. We now know, through actuarially sound studies, that within three years the outgoings from these pension funds will be greater than the income. The net result will be that unless contributions to the pension funds are increased, there must be some type of a tax subsidy to honour the pensions that will be drawn from these funds in succeeding years. I think it is important, when we are analysing the economic situation in the country, that we not cloud these issues.

Let us look at what the government of Canada has done with respect to the pension fund in relation to our civil service. It is common knowledge that they borrow from the pension fund of civil servants. In private industry it is illegal to do that. No company in Canada is allowed to set up an employee pension fund and then turn around and borrow from the fund in order to operate and, in the case of the federal government, to help cover a deficit that they need not have run up in the first place. This is the type of inconsistency that we feel warrants the members of the House stating they have had enough, that they have lost confidence in this government and that they will support the motion we are suggesting today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Another broad question is the general one of the government's interference with the business community, the over-regulation of business. I may, perhaps, bring this aspect of government activity into focus by referring to a recent article reporting a confrontation between Mrs. Ostry and Mr. Barkway. Mrs. Ostry is quoted by the Canadian Press in an article which reads in part as follows:

> Canadian businessmen continue to wrongly regard government competition regulations as illegitimate interference in their affairs, Sylvia Ostry, Deputy Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, said Friday.
>
> "Businessmen in Canada refuse to accept that competition policy is an ally of business... its central role is to strengthen private enterprise.

Then Michael Barkway, in effect, put her in her place. On the same platform he stated:

> It seems to me there is great semantic confusion about the word competition. Your department believes in market forces—

He was speaking to Mrs. Ostry.

> —until the point where it doesn't like them, and doesn't consider them to be in the public interest.

The article continues:

> Mr. Barkway said business could not accept the government's position that firms should not be allowed to extend their market position or power.
>
> "How else can competitive forces operate?" he asked.
>
> He went on to point out the irony of having a government that feels it ought to regulate competition in the private sector while its own bureaucracies find themselves competing for both power and the taxpayers' dollar.

We urge the government to cease the habit of over-regulating the private sector and then expecting that sector to produce results, including the jobs that we need in this country. I suggest that the administration hesitates to tell the Canadian public what they foresee in our future. Last evening, the Minister of Finance stated that unemployment would not go below 7 per cent this year. He hoped inflation would go down to 8 per cent. He stated that our real growth would be from 4.5 per cent to 5 per cent. The minister would not even hazard a guess as to what might happen in 1977.

By contrast, the administration in the United States is now required, by law, to bring in a budget, not just for 10 months or 11 months as we will have on May 25 this year: in the U.S. they are required to bring in a budget for the following two years. They also, by habit, give an indication of the future five years as far as the American economy and the budgetary position are concerned. There is absolutely no reason why this administration should hide their activity, as they have been doing, with a shroud of secrecy. They must have their own analysts; this information must be available to them. Surely they are not operating completely in a vacuum. Why will they not reveal to the members of the House and to the public of Canada what they foresee our future will be? In this connection, the Institute of Policy Analysis of the University of Toronto states:

> Unemployment this year will be 7.4 per cent by the fourth quarter and 7.7 per cent by the fourth quarter of 1977.

That is most alarming. They anticipate that our real growth over the next three years will not even start to catch up on our seven-point lag to which I referred earlier. They see growth in 1974 and 1975 at only 4.8 per cent and 4.4 per cent, respectively. Let me put it another way. If the institute is correct, we are now, in May of 1976, in the middle of a five-year period in which each year we will have a real growth below our capacity. By 1978, if the trend continues and if the figures that the institute estimates to be realistic are achieved, we will be 10 per cent below capacity, which will represent 300,000 Canadian jobs that will not be available and that would be available if this administration were handling the economy properly—300,000 Canadians out of work through the shear incompetence of the present administration!

This failure in achieving our desirable goal of a minimum 5 per cent a year will be felt most severely by our younger people who should have every reason to believe that jobs will be available when they require them. With more prudent economic management we could achieve fuller employment and less inflation than is now contemplated by the government.

● (1530)

Let us look at some of the further inconsistent policies this administration has followed in recent years. It is these policies which are creating our problems today. They have put us out of phase with the economy of the United States. Let us think of the repercussions of that. In deciding not to counter inflation in this country until a year and a half after the Americans had moved to counter their inflation, we now find, for example, that our exports have fallen but our imports have remained relatively high. As a consequence, the trade deficit, with which we are all familiar, has heightened. Mr. G. V. Jump, of the Institute of Policy Analysis at the University of Toronto, has said that export growth will be the chief stimulus to increase output and employment over the coming quarters. But what is the position in which the administration has put our exporters? I suggest that they have been saddled with an unrealistically high dollar in relation to the American dollar.

The administration has failed to facilitate sales effectively throughout the world, and in fact has jeopardized many of our Canadian industries through poor negotiations in GATT. As the administration makes our exporters less competitive, and even harms our existing industries, it deprives the people of future job opportunities which they would otherwise take. These trade problems resulted in a trade deficit of something like $5 million last year, and a further $5 billion this year. Speaking of last year, the trade deficit was more like $8 billion. This is how the administration had to cover that type of deficit: it first sold almost $3 billion of non-renewable resources which we will never have again. That is how the administration covered $3 billion of the $8 billion deficit it had with the rest of the world.

Second, the administration encouraged the borrowing from foreigners of $4.7 billion, which in turn will aggravate further balance of payments problems because we will have to pay interest of approximately $400 million year by year on that staggering amount. Third, it allowed our foreign exchange reserves to run down by approximately $400 million. That is the present administration in action. How can this House have any confidence in it?

Let us again look at the tourist imbalance. That is perhaps another example of what has happened as a result of our economy being out of phase with the American economy. Last year, our deficit on the tourist account alone was some $700 million. And what do we find? The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, in reference to tourism, proposed to spend $1 million less this year than it did the year before, in spite of the fact that our tourist deficit had jumped $400 million. How inconsistent can you get in governmental action?

Again we have the odd situation that, faced with an imbalance of over $700 million with regard to tourism, we now find, to use the words of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) in the question period today, that for obvious reasons the government is going to see there will be greater scrutiny of those coming into the country. Frankly, the reasons are not obvious to me. It is not obvious to me why there should be greater scrutiny of over 30 million people who come to this country year by year.

An hon. Member: Thirty-eight.

Mr. Stevens: Thirty-eight million. It is certainly not obvious to me why there should be that type of discouragement of those who would ordinarily want to come to this country as tourists and who, if they did come, would perhaps lower the deficit to which I have referred. In this time of inconsistency, which I feel is very great, I am a little surprised that even hon. members on the administration side do not realize that it is time they put the nation a little ahead of political expediency and did not support this government any longer.

Let me touch on the question of the government's handling of our money supply. In the Economic Review, at page 91, there is an interesting chart which shows the money supply trend and growth since 1972. I recommend that hon. members take a look at it, because if they want to see the clearest indication of why we went through, and are in, the inflationary period we are, they do not have to go past that chart. The inflation we had in Canada was substantially political inflation inspired by a federal government which could not control its own spending, and as a result allowed the money supply in this country to grow at too fast a rate.

Last evening the Minister of Finance agreed that the money supply growth in the period from 1970 to 1972 aggravated inflation in this country. I suggest the money supply growth, on a 15 per cent growth line since 1972, as this chart shows, heightened that inflationary pressure to which he referred. That is one reason hon. members of this House should support my motion today.

Speaking about inconsistencies, here we have a government which is deploring rising wage levels in Canada, in that the government says they are getting out of line with the United States. That may be so; but who is really responsible? What else does the administration expect, when it has chosen to give our senior bureaucrats $66,500 per year, compared with the highest paid government worker in Washington who earns $44,000. That is more than 50 per cent more for senior bureaucrats in Canada than for their counterparts in the United States. However, let us look at the other end of the scale.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member. If he wishes to continue, he will need the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Two minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there consent, or not?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stevens: I thank hon. members for their indulgence.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): "And I will be brief"!

Mr. Stevens: And I will be brief. I just indicated that at the senior level of our bureaucracy, our bureaucrats are earning 50 per cent more than their counterparts in the United States.

An hon. Member: And worth half as much.

Mr. Stevens: However, let us look at the other end of the scale. This administration has taken the lead in raising our minimum wage so that today it is 40 per cent higher than the average minimum wage in the United States. Our federal minimum wage is $2.90 for those over 18 years of age, compared with the minimum wage in, for example, New York State, which is $2.15. When we have a minimum wage 40 per cent higher than in the United States, and our highest-paid bureaucrats are paid 50 per cent more than their counterparts in the United States, does the administration not accept responsibility for what it now claims is a problem, namely, that our wage levels are getting out of line with our main trading partner, the United States? The truth is that it is the lead of this government which has triggered this situation. How can hon. members have confidence in this government when its past record is full of this type of inconsistent action?

● (1540)

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, what could be more inconsistent than having an administration which fought an election on the single plank of being opposed to wage and price controls, then within a year they flip-flopped over and imposed on the entire nation, not a limited wage and price control program as far as time is concerned, but one that is to run for 39 months and could run even longer. Mr. Speaker, the country has lost confidence in this administration. It is time this House reflected that lack of confidence by voting for our motion today.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, it is almost impossible not to support this motion, in view of the inconsistent behaviour of the government in regard to its policies. I wish it were possible to oppose the motion, after listening to the hon. member who preceded me and the paeans of praise that he put forward for the United States as a model for us to emulate. I should hate to see us do that, as bad as our economic performance is, because I do not think the United States have done much better. If anything, they are starting to move in the direction of more public service employment because they have less room in the private sector to create jobs. There are a number of bills before Congress now calling for the government to provide jobs where the private sector does not provide them. Having got that out of the way, Mr. Speaker, you will understand that my support is for the motion in the broadest sense—for the government's inconsistent policies, rather than for some of the arguments put forward on behalf of the motion.

The government has pursued the kind of policies that would make a great television comedy. You will have seen some of those comedies in the past, where a man goes to turn on his hot-water tap in the bathroom and gets symphonic music, or he turns on a gas range and water spurts in his face. This is the sort of thing that has been happening. Let us look at the government's approach to employment, starting with the budget of June, 1975, when the then minister of finance, Mr. Turner, admitted that the world recession was turning out to be more prolonged than expected and that Canadian unemployment had reached 7.1 per cent. It is now 7.4 per cent. He introduced so-called "direct" employment measures. In December, $91 million was taken out in spending cuts designed to reduce unemployment. Just before coming into the House today I noticed, with some interest and some degree of approval, a column by Don McGillivray in today's Ottawa Citizen in which he referred to that budget. He wrote:

> Take last year's budget, introduced at a time when the Canadian economy was in the trough of a recession. Instead of doing anything to stimulate growth and create jobs, it raised taxes, energy costs and unemployment insurance premiums.
>
> In September the Bank of Canada began pushing interest rates up, another proven means of slowing economic growth and thus producing more unemployment. In March of this year the bank gave another push upward on interest rates.
>
> In October, the government introduced its wage and price control package, One of the effects was to restrain incomes and so hold down demand at a time when the economy was running well below its capacity because of sluggish demand.

Economic Conditions

In April, 1976, the Economic Review reported:

> —there is no doubt that the strength and timeliness of the income support given to Canadians . . . between November, 1974, and June, 1975, were among the most important factors (in the milder recession experienced in Canada vis-à-vis the U.S.)

I hope the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) listened to that. The only thing that saved us from a depression like that of the thirties was the fact that the economy had built-in stabilizers such as unemployment insurance and the old age pension. Payments were going out to the economy, and that prevented us from the depth of recession felt by the United States which did not have those built-in protectors.

Given that analysis to the Economic Review, the government then cut the indexing of the family allowance for 1976, a measure that would have helped increase family income and would have supported consumer spending. They did not understand the implications of their own support programs. If they had been serious about combating unemployment, obviously they should have maintained purchasing power in the economy, rather than cut these programs. But they went beyond that: they said to all provincial governments that it was time for them to follow federal government policies; that they should cut their support programs and their expenditures for people on the street and let them collect unemployment insurance. In effect, "Let the unemployment figures go up."

They did that with medicare, saying they could not get provincial co-operation and were going to set the ceilings on their own. The provinces started to get the message, and the province of Ontario, for instance, closed some hospitals and threw nurses and hospital personnel out on the street. Somebody will have to pay for that: it will have to come out of unemployment insurance. Meanwhile, the jobless figures go up. If there is a time to prune hospital expenditures—and nobody argues that some pruning does not have to be done from time to time—it should not be done in the midst of the period of highest unemployment since 1951. That certainly does not show any consistency on the part of the government toward its objective of reducing unemployment.

Until the introduction of the Anti-Inflation Board and the government's so-called wage and price controls, they had taken the position that inflation was essential—a demand-pull kind of situation. They fought an election on that position. When they were not saying that, they were saying inflation was caused by international events over which they had no control. There was some merit to their statements at that time; international oil prices had risen by about 400 per cent and food prices, because of world demand, had risen by 200 per cent and in some cases higher. It was quite obvious that the price of raw materials and many of the production factors that we had taken for granted were increasing enormously.

Suddenly there is a road to Damascus, however, and the government moves from Keynes to Galbraith. The analyses change. Inflation apparently is no longer caused by demand-pull; it is caused by cost-push. The justification for the whole AIB program is to deal with cost-push inflation. They were wrong and contradictory in both cases. Mr. Speaker.

This government seems to want to take extreme economic views. In the original analysis of inflation being caused entirely by international events, they overlooked many elements of inflation that arose in our country and which we could have dealt with. The same is true now when they say that inflation is essentially a cost-push situation. There are still international factors which make inflation an ongoing problem in this country. They cannot deal with it just through the anti-inflation measures they introduced. It is quite obvious they were looking at the consumer price index, and it is clear that the prices that are declining are those which stimulated the inflation of a year or two ago. The price of food has come down, and that is putting a good face on the consumer price index.

In the ten budgets that the government has presented since 1965, only three have come close to achieving its objective. The 1965 and 1966 budgets were supposed to be mildly restrictive in effect, but turned out to be restrictive. The 1967 and 1968 budgets turned out to be restrictive in effect, which was unfortunate. In those years when unemployment began to climb, we needed expansionary, rather than restrictive, budgets. Only once, when the government had been dead wrong in its original analysis, did the government predict accurately. According to Economic Council of Canada figures—and this is not my observation—only three out of ten budgets came anywhere close to achieving the objectives the government had set.

● (1550)

If we look at the government's present analysis, what does it say? The government position is that to deal with present-day inflation and the problems of Canada which are the result of cost-push factors, we need to implement an incomes policy in this country. It is difficult to support a government which begins by saying that it must do something but does not follow through. We can say, I think, that a policy of selective incomes controls can be useful. But an incomes policy, by its nature, is unfair. Without doubt, the government's present incomes policy is grossly unfair to this country's wage and salary earners, as they directly, more than any other segment of society, are asked to pay the cost. You can tolerate unfairness if the result is worth while. I am sure that workers of this country would agree to limit their incomes if it could be shown that by so doing the economy generally would benefit or the entire population would be treated more fairly.

The government can assure fairness only if it does two things, and judging from the way the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) replied to my question during the question period yesterday, he does not intend to do these things when he brings down the forthcoming budget. First, the government must ensure a fairer distribution of income in Canada. At present, income is distributed unfairly. In the last 20 or 30 years there has been virtually no change in the way our income is distributed. Actually, the people at the lower end of the incomes scale have been hit harder by so-called tax changes than those at the upper end. This must be corrected and the government must bring in measures which will lift some of the burden from the shoulders of the lower and middle income groups, to compensate for the injustices created by the anti-inflation program.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

The government must do something else and has no excuse for not doing it. It must move immediately to stimulate the economy and to create full employment. I heard the hon. member for York-Simcoe talking about the lead-swingers who collect unemployment insurance. I do not say that all people receiving unemployment insurance are entitled to it, but I ask the hon. member for York-Simcoe to say how he can sort out the people who are entitled to unemployment insurance from those who are not, from those who do not want to work, when there are no jobs. How can he do it when there is a short-fall of almost 800,000 jobs and only between 40,000 and 60,000 job vacancies?

How do you know if a person wants to work or does not want to work? Also, by what right does anyone accuse labouring people of this country of lead-swinging, of not being willing to take a job, when there are no jobs for them? Jobs must be made available. True, abuses have crept into the unemployment insurance system. If there were no unemployment, it would soon be evident who was not willing to work. A man not willing to take a job should not be entitled to collect unemployment insurance. Nobody would defend him. But considering the enormous amount of unemployment in this country, it is unfair to accuse the working man of not wanting to work. When the hon. member accuses the government of inconsistency, I suggest he ought to look in the mirror.

In my view, and in the view of my colleagues, the government's top priority when bringing down the budget should be the implementation of policies to create full demand in the economy. A tax cut for the lower income levels and a demogrant for those who have no income to report is one of the most effective ways of creating demand and getting people back to work immediately.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: Many hon. members agree, I think, that our economy must be stimulated. Hon. friends to my right think that you should not do it by cutting personal income taxes or giving demogrants to the poor, which will enhance purchasing power; they think you should do it by giving benefits to industry. We have travelled that road. No government has been more generous to industry than this one in the last two or three years. But their generosity has been wasted, since unemployment has not been higher for 15 years. Industry does not need to be stimulated to produce. Industry will produce if there are customers willing and able to buy what it produces. There is a great deal of unused industrial capacity in Canada, so there is an obvious case to be made for increasing demand.

At present we are using only 79 per cent of our industrial capacity. Obviously, we do not need more machinery, more industrial stimulation, more depreciation allowances, lower corporate taxes and so on; that is not the way to solve the difficulty. We need more purchasing power in this country, purchasing power we lack.

In the past, the government could argue this way, "We dare not stimulate the economy and create full employment because we have demand-pull inflation and by stimulating the economy we shall greatly increase the rate of inflation; therefore we must trade off a high level of unemployment against lower inflation in order to maintain price stability." Of course, that policy did not work. We argued against it, and events proved us right. The government has no excuse these days. Inflation, according to the government's own definition, is created by a cost-push situation. The government introduced restrictive wage controls to prevent cost-push inflation taking place. The only justification for those controls, if there is any justification, is that they can now be used to stimulate the economy. The government cannot make the hoary excuse that we dare not create full employment because of the effect on prices. But that, apparently, is one of the great inconsistencies to which the government still clings.

My time has almost ended. I wish I had more time to go through the long catalogue of the government's failures. In the past, the government's analysis of the economy has all too often been wrong. Furthermore, analysis has not been translated into policy. All too often the government has predicted wrongly what would happen in the economy. No government can plan perfectly. One cannot expect any government to plan perfectly and implement the right policies all the time. But we insist on there being some logic in the way the government behaves. We say to the government that on the basis of its own analysis of the economy, logic dictates that the budget which is to be brought in later this month should be a full-employment budget, a budget which will enhance the purchasing power of those most in need, people in the lower income groups, in order to get the economy going again.

● (1600)

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, this motion retains all its value in the present context of the Canadian economy. I congratulate the official opposition for introducing a motion which is quite relevant and which fits very well the existing conditions in Canada. I quote the motion:

> That this House, believing that the continuing tendency of the administration to reckless and at times contradictory intervention in the economy has created an atmosphere of uncertainty and lack of confidence with the public, and seeing that this uncertainty has resulted in rising unemployment, falling productivity, and unacceptable levels of real growth and inflation, expresses its lack of confidence in the government.

Mr. Speaker, this motion tells the truth. On the whole, economists admit that the present economic conditions in Canada are really appalling and the Government does not know where to turn to find solutions.

In fact, according to the latest figures disclosed yesterday, the number of unemployed in Canada is increasing, whereas the governments are contemplating higher taxes and proposing budgets which will require costly loans to repay past debts or merely the interests accrued from those debts.

That is the situation we are witnessing, Mr. Speaker, for even though the goverment suggests it is fighting against inflation we do have rampant inflation, and the Canadian worker, the working classes, the low wage earners are faced with a quite inadmissible situation in a rich country like Canada.

Yesterday, in the paper Le Soleil, we could read this leading paragraph:

Economic Conditions

> Ottawa to borrow more this year. Assessing at between $5 and $5.5 billion the federal government treasury needs for the 1976-77 financial year, Greenshields Inc. stated yesterday that this year Ottawa will have to borrow 37 to 54 per cent more than last year.

That is nice increase. And even if the gouvernment says that the inflation rate did not rise as much this year as last year, we will see in a few months to what extent inflation rates will have gone up at the expense of the people of Canada in general.

Mr. Speaker, only a few months ago we heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) say that we would live in a new society, that in that new society we would see things unknown to us, new things we never dreamed of.

We already have entered this new society where private entreprise, private property is threatened from all sides, where free enterprise is also threatened from all sides by government controls. The only place where employment is up today is the public service, the administration of the federal government. There the number of new jobs is frightening, while private companies or free entreprise must slow down production because, as the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) said a moment ago, consumers do not order goods because they do not have the money to do so. Prices increase continuously; we have just been informed of an increase in the price of gas, of oil for July 1; it is reported that gas may even cost $1.25 a gallon.

Mr. Speaker, the government is the first to ignore the legislation they produced or the Anti-Inflation Board they built from scratch a few months ago. Yesterday, we were advised of a terrible jump in the price of coffee because there was a drought in Brazil; it may even cost $5 a pound. If there is a drought in Brazil, there is perhaps no drought in Jamaica or in other coffee producing countries. The price of sugar also threatens to go up. Is there a lack of sugar canes? Of course not. There are also reports about higher prices for wood products. This morning, I ordered four by four cedar posts and they cost 67c. a linear foot which means that ten feet cost $6.70, and this is fairly small.

Mr. Speaker, the same thing happens everywhere. What does the Incomes and Prices Board or the Anti-Inflation Board have to do with that? It is all very well to appoint civil servants and hire people and new bureaucrats to look over or study the results obtained by the old bureaucrats, or other bureaucrats hired before them, but what results do we get? It is the same thing in every sphere.

When one sector is poorly managed, right away Ottawa is asked to help. For instance, the Olympic Games in Montreal. Ottawa was practically forced to set up a permanent national lottery to make up the deficit that should not exist at this point because, several years ago, I had the visit in my office of the Mayor of Montreal and His Excellency Mr. Rousseau who came to give me the plans for the Olympic Games and prove, figures in hand, that the Olympic Games would finance themselves through the olympic lottery. We all accepted that but today we find that it is not so, far from it.

I said a year and a half or two years ago that the Olympic Games deficit would reach $1 billion. I was told I was crazy, that I could not count.

Economic Conditions

Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Quebec budget proved clearly that the deficit is now $1 billion, and the games have yet to be held. When they take place, we will reach the billion and a half, because they are a bottomless pit. That is inflation! The Olympic Games will cost at least four or five times the amount we were told they would. That is a problem. As for James Bay, we are embarrassed to talk about that one. I said that this development would reach $20 billion. But people said no way, Caouette can't add.

● (1610)

Mr. Speaker, by now we have reached $15 billion in expenditures at James Bay, while that project was to cost $6 billion at best. Outlays are expected to total $15 billion and the end is nowhere near. When the work is finished over there, we will have a debt of about $20 to $25 billion. Then, suppose for instance that the James Bay project will cost $20 or $25 billion, say with a 10 per cent interest rate over a 25-year period. Do they know that in 25 years we will have paid $50 billion in interest alone, and we will still owe $25 billion. This will mean a total of $75 billion. Will our great-grand-children have finished to pay by the end of their lives? No.

Billion of dollars are spent here and there without considering a terrible system forcing Quebec, municipalities, school boards and the federal government to borrow fabulous sums at astronomically high interest rates. The Montreal Olympic Games will probably cost $2 billion at 10 per cent interest over a 20-year period. We shall still be paying $4½ or 5 billion in interests only. And we will still be owing all the money that was put into the Olympic venture.

Mr. Speaker, it is about time the federal government should find other alternatives. We have been suggesting a variety of them in this House for 40 years; some thirty years ago, in 1946, I suggested to the House those very same solutions. In those days, our opponents, the Liberals and Progressive Conservatives, were laughing at me. Given the present system, if we replace the Liberals with the Progressive Conservatives, what would be the result? Would the interest rate be reduced? No. Both are supported by the same financial "gimmick". The federal government will have to borrow, this year, 37 to 54 p. cent more funds than last year.

But why borrow when the federal government has the authority to take action? Parliament can decide, because of its supremacy, to call upon the Bank of Canada and cash in on the physical facilities we have in Canada to develop our natural resources and create a financial and economic system which would guarantee each human being a decent life. That would put an end to labor conflicts such as the ones we now have. Day in and day out, all we hear about is a strike here and a strike there, federal strikes, provincial strikes, strikes everywhere. Nobody is satisfied. And the federal government says: we are going to satisfy everybody; we are going to organize bingos, lotteries, provincial lotteries, federal and municipal lotteries; church bingos. Then, we become a nation of "racketeers" as they say in English. This is opium to the poor: You see a fellow without a penny in his pocket or he may have a dirty old five dollar bill left and his wife is off to a bingo where she expects to win $6.50. Then, as usual she does not win anything; she has no money left to buy bread or butter for her children but she does find an old five dollar bill in her purse to go and play bingo.

Mr. Speaker, we are living in bingo territory. See what goes on in Montreal. Mr. Bourrassa himself will be allowed to play bingo in the province of Quebec. In Montreal, it is the same thing: Loto-Canada is not too readily accepted across Canada, by the other provinces. They say: "Wait a minute! You were supposed to finance this thing! Now, see to it! Then, we are going to ask the people in Vancouver—I understand that anyone is free to try his chance at the lottery, to buy a ticket or not, but we provoke people with our publicity on television, in newspapers: "the next millionnaire". There are people who are too poor to have their three meals a day, but they find the money needed to buy a ticket that will turn them into millionnaires. Everybody is so happy the day of the draw because millions of people think they will be the new millionnaires. Six or seven million people will have paid in to make one, two or three millionnaires.

Mr. Speaker, when we have come to the point of adopting such a system, do you not think that it is rather frightening? What can happen? Anything. If we look at what is now happening in the world, in Beirut, in the Far-East, in the Middle East, in Italy, in Spain, in Portugal, we realize that things are getting out of hand. People are no longer responsible. They do not care to be. Are our union leaders responsible people? They ask for salary increases which bring about price increases. Our workers gained nothing. They went on strike. If they did not have their present jobs, the strikers would beg for them. Once they get them, they strike again.

This goes to show how bright they are! This is the labour situation in the province of Quebec. They want jobs, and as soon as they get them, they let themselves lured into striking action. It is said to be bright, but I call it criminal. In Canada, in Montreal, or anywhere else, the strikes now prevailing are the direct consequence of the economic system but those people are not even interested in changing the economic system.

When election time comes, they say: Liberals are better than Progressive-Conservatives, then they vote for the Liberals. After, they get mad and go on strike. At the next election, they may vote Progressive-Conservative.

The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) said earlier that under the Progressive Conservative government, we had a million unemployed in 1961, and that this happened in spite of the fact that we had the strongest government Canada has known since Confederation. This is why the Diefenbaker government was defeated, because of the unemployment rate in 1961. And the very same people today are saying that they would do better than this government. Come on! The same causes have the same effects. We must change the causes and not the parties. What do we get when parties change? If we are all caught by the neck and choking to death, nothing is changed.

Mr. Speaker, we must change the economic system, and this is why we have been making the following suggestion to the government for such a long time. Instead of borrowing from the United States or other foreign countries, and asking their permission to benefit from the development of our own natural resources, why do we not use the services of the Bank of Canada, which is authorized to create money legally and intelligently according to our needs? Then we could say that our natural resources belong to us and not to the Americans. These resources belong to Canadians!

Mr. Speaker, people do not understand this. They think that Social Credit is something odd and they refer to the strange kind of money that Social Creditors advocate. What kind of stupid money do we now have? We do not have any, and we are always begging from the Americans the right to develop our own natural resources. It is quite a farce to see Mr. Bourassa paying his weekly visit to New York to borrow money to finance the James Bay project! Do the Americans lend money to Mr. Bourassa because he is Mr. Bourassa? The provincial government, and the federal government, say: The province's credit is good. Canada's credit is good. Canada's credit is so good that we may well sink the country all the deeper in debt. Its credit is good.

When Mr. Bourassa calls on the Americans, they do not say to him: "Mr. Bourassa, your smile is so inviting, your hair is so nicely combed, you were so well made up before you went on television." No. The Americans ask: "What is your collateral for borrowing $150 million? What about the natural resources of James Bay?" The Americans are no fools. They look at those ressources and say: "This is good, this is profitable, this will become extremely good. Therefore, we shall lend $150 million, not on the basis—

An hon. Member: A good collateral!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes.

● (1620)

They do not lend money on their own property, they lend $150 million against a note signed by the provincial government which puts up all the natural resources of James Bay as collateral. Why should we go to the United States to do so, instead of going to the manager or the governor of the Bank of Canada and say: Listen, take the same resources, James Bay, the same thing; come up with a figure according to our needs to develop James Bay. Would that not be legal? Instead of paying an interest of 10, 11 or 12 per cent, we might have this credit from the Bank of Canada at cost, which would mean approximately 1 per cent, ½ of 1 per cent, ¾ of 1 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, why does the government not act in this direction? When the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance are telling me that our credit is good, the Liberals clap their hands. They do not understand a thing about it but they still clap their hands. Let us keep on voting for the Liberals and continue selling—not selling, but giving away our natural resources to the Americans. And then we are amazed and shocked to see that the number of unemployed is increasing in this country.

That is another matter. Reference was made earlier to the unemployed. I look forward to the establishment in Canada of work insurance to develop our potential. We have roads, hospitals, public buildings to build. We have houses to build, homes rather than hostels for the aged, rehabilitation centres for our young delinquents, centres where they could be educated, taught a sense of duty and responsibility. When asked for government help, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) answers: There is no money. So things worsen, the young go to prison. This is costing enormous sums of money to the Canadian taxpayers. The government has no other solution but to encourage that kind of system, to maintain and finance it.

Mr. Speaker, it is time we stopped to think. Inflation comes from somewhere. It is not caused by too many products, but by not having the purchasing power to acquire them. Private enterprise is in jeopardy. The private sector, private business, free enterprise, everything is being sent down the drain. The young are not interested any more in using their abilities, because they are tired of working for the government's sake and paying taxes. Mr. Speaker, down with the tax system, down with the debt financing system created by Grit and Tory governments in Canada since Confederation. Let us have freedom, let the day come when credit and resources are controlled by us in Canada, not by the Americans.

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me, I would like at the outset to read the motion again to be sure that my eyes have not deceived me. I quote:

> That this House, believing that the continuing tendency of this administration to reckless and at times contradictory intervention in the economy has created an atmosphere of uncertainty . . .

—and I underline "uncertainty", with your permission—

> . . . and lack of confidence with the public, and seeing that this uncertainty has resulted in rising unemployment, falling productivity, and unacceptable levels of real growth and inflation, expresses its lack of confidence in the government.

After careful consideration, Mr. Speaker, I take the liberty of reminding you that on March 24, the hon. member for York Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) moved a motion almost identical to this one. But at that time, he spoke of rashness and uncertainty.

I would also like to emphasize the fact that he has not invented anything, since, as late as last night, the same hon. member asked questions to the minister when the finance committee was considering the economic review of Canada and he then had the opportunity to question the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald). He used about the same terms he has been using ever since he first came to this House. Therefore, I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that the uncertainty, the rashness and everything else he is talking about did not stem from the positive action of this government but rather from what the hon. member has attempted to spread in the world of business and labour and at the other levels of government.

I remember quite well that for many months the Leader of the Opposition, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), kept urging either the Prime Minister or the then Minister of Finance to act. Now that steps have been taken, they ask: Why did you do that? You have done the wrong thing, you have created a climate of uncertainty. Perhaps those people should decide exactly what they want.

Having faced the situation, I feel the government has taken clear positions. Members are certainly aware of the Anti-Inflation Act brought in this House and discussed at length. I think there has been concerns expressed by several members. Some were asking that certain points be clarified and the legislation has even been amended. It is not easy for a government to respond to a situation, particularly in the business field, and I readily admit it. But having examined the complexity of the Canadian economy, the government has realized that there were some sharings which were not fair.

I think it was the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) who said a moment ago that the distribution of wealth between the members of society was not fair. This was a valid point, I suggest, and it is precisely because the government took measures in various fields that there is now a more equitable distribution of wealth in Canadian society. Perfection is not of this world, but we can certainly aim at it and I try to improve that situation through the different projects put forward by the government.

As regards business, many labour organizations have said that business was not affected, that it did not know what was going on and that the manufacturing industry could do as they liked. Therefore, I think I must point out that the facts are quite to the contrary. When the Anti-Inflation Act was first implemented, it was perhaps true to say that the regulations affected some workers more than some industries.

It was necessary to require a report to test such a system. The reports having been submitted, we certainly noted the reaction of the business community which promised to go along, to submit reports, since the government had established guidelines not for salaries but also for the industries. The names of some industries not affected by the legislation were even suggested to the government. They now come under the act.

Members opposite were so kind as to fail to mention the improved economic conditions in Canada. In the report of the Economic Council—and I shall wait until later to quote from it—we see that compared to the situation in other countries, namely the United States and our main competitors: Japan and Germany, the economic climate in Canada is different and better than in most of our closest competitors. I must readily admit, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, that there is surely room for improvement. It is not easy. It must at least be recognized that in 1974-75 we faced a world-wide crisis which proved far more serious in the countries I have mentioned than it was in Canada. The government, having initiated those measures, must assume the responsibility for them. and I believe that every member should at least try to give the policies now under discussion and the legislation which was passed a chance to work out.

● (1630)

Last night, as I said earlier in the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the opposition certainly did ask some questions but without breaking new ground, without suggesting anything new since the introduction of a motion by the same member last March. What they did was only to interpret some statistics, and I should like to stress at this point that it is not the statistics that are false, because they appear in the report, they are available, they were made public and everybody studied them, but it is their interpretation that is false.

The motion itself deals with productivity. I think that chart No. 9 in the Economic Review deals with productivity. There was certainly an improvement, as shown in the chart. Several conclusions can be drawn, but it should at least be admitted that there is a great deal of improvement, and members opposite should admit it. I referred to the world situation; it must be kept in mind that the Canadian economy, Mr. Speaker, is certainly affected by the world situation.

Our exports, 50 per cent of our manufactured goods, end up on the international market. If the situation I mentioned earlier resulted in 1974-1975 in a strong tightening in most of our trading partners, its impact was certainly felt in Canada.

Since then, the situation has changed. Now, they will not admit it, they talk about tragedies and what not. But let me very briefly point out a sudden turn which happened in the U.S. car industry. Particularly since 1965-66, Canada and the United States have entered into an auto pact which was worth while and needs to be readjusted—our officials are busy at it at present—but it should be said also that in the last few months, car sales in the United States have increased by more than 50 per cent.

The same thing happened in Canada. This has certainly resulted in a fairly large increase in car sales not only in the United States, but in Canada as well, since our industry supplies many parts to various factories and various companies which trade in Canada and in the States under this agreement.

Reference was made earlier to imports and I wish to deal with this subject as well. It is normal and healthy that people affected by imports should react. But if imports were to increase, Mr. Speaker, our domestic economy had to be such as to allow the import of some goods. In certain cases, they were not manufactured goods, but in others, the need was real.

A number of semi-manufactured goods which are not available in Canada have to be imported. For most countries I mentioned earlier, we had no choice and had to restrict our imports and in several cases cut them altogether. In so doing, we had to consider the well-being of their people has not reached the same standard as in Canada. Within our domestic economy, the inflationary trend I indicated continued, during the world crisis and is still being felt today.

Canada, and especially the government, is not satisfied with the results, though they are better than elsewhere; by all means, it wants further improvements. If we refer to the reports of the Economic Council of Canada, to those of Statistics Canada, in spite of the bitter criticism we heard from the other side of the House this afternoon, we see that the curve indicates a decrease in food prices despite the increase in wages. I will talk about that later if I have enough time.

I will deal briefly with employment because you know that the time allocated is rather limited. There are now more people working than never before in Canada. Statistics, which I could give you, although I believe that is not the purpose of the debate, show that millions of people changed jobs. Almost six million individuals changed jobs, in some cases volontarily, but others changed because industries have evolved and had to adapt to new products.

I think that by taking the necessary decisions, the government helped many of these people improve their situation. If you refer to the same report of the Economic Review, you will see that with the hourly increases, wages went up rather substantially—alarmingly in some cases. The increase was much higher. I do not say that they did not deserved it, but it was much higher than that of our closest competitor where go about 70 per cent of our exports. This is only one factor which prompted the government to clamp controls on wages and prices.

Productivity was also mentioned. I dealt with that a while ago. I even told you in which diagram you could find it. This productivity is obvious. Now, it may be considered that statistics are not always accurate. There were also—and I think this is one of the factors that must be mentioned—negotiations at that time. Either because of unions which were not asking everywhere for wages unrelated to productivity, or of employers or manufacturers who were charging prices that bore no relation whatsoever to the real market value of some items, the government had to step in. That is what it did, because all the economic factors were considered and then a decision was made. As soon as the decision was made, the Official Opposition started to clamour. This afternoon, I took the liberty of reading it out so that everybody will realize that the words used do not quite reflect the facts.

Having said that, I think that the decision made was a fair one. Companies realized—they were affected as well—conscientious employers did the same, followed by unions which, in most cases, I think, are adequately meeting their members' demands, that they had to face the actual situation, the economic position. They realized they had to negotiate not only an agreement from the viewpoint of the strongest economic element, but a real agreement designed to enchance the well-being of all Canadians, and in my opinion, the success and strength of Canada lie in three-party negotiations.

As regards inflation, I will only mention a few facts. If you look at statistics, you will find a real decrease in the inflation rate. Such facts are glossed over perhaps. Then, our friends opposite mentioned a few, but as the rate decreased, people outside the fields I referred to earlier, who do not take part in negotiations, namely retired people, low-wage earners who were among those most strongly urging the government to act, and that is one of the factors we considered when making our decision.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to read an excerpt from the Economic Review, on page 5 which deals with the fiscal and monetary policy. It is a paragraph that was overlooked by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and which surely describes in a very clever and accurate manner the real facts, and I quote:

> Fiscal and monetary policies were adjusted in 1975 to the changing cyclical and inflationary situation. The November 18, 1974 federal budget provided substantial fiscal stimulus to the economy, mainly to take effect in 1975.
>
> Provincial budgets . . .

● (1640)

This is a point which was missed earlier when we were talking about governments. I carry on with the quotation:

Economic Conditions

> Provincial budgets in early 1975 added significantly to this expansionary thrust. Following the unsuccessful efforts in early 1975 to obtain a consensus of price and income restraints to cope with inflation, the June 23 federal budget began the process of government expenditure restraint intended by itself, and as an example, to offer Canadian spenders an opportunity to contribute to slowing down inflation. On a national accounts basis, expenditures on goods and services and capital formation by all levels of government increased 5.2 per cent in real terms in 1975, compared with 7.9 per cent in 1974; government expenditures increased at a slower annual rate of 3.1 per cent during the second half of 1975, compared with 5.8 per cent during the first half.

I could carry on as there are in this page many indications yet of the thrust given not only by the central government but by various levels of government with the results that are mentioned here. Now, I am concerned about some points in the remarks made by various members of the Opposition and I would like to come back to them. Mention was made earlier of the various government programmes and one in particular. Then it was quickly mentioned that the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) in particular in the figures he quoted, had omitted to say that the central government had made provision for a redemption, commitment and a redistribution to maintain the price of oil and then the price of heating oil at a much lower level than the world price. But that was not mentioned.

However, this favourable situation is appreciated by the consumer. But some of our colleagues do forget what has happened. The honorable member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) spoke about family allowances.

It is true that they were not escalated but he did not mention that in his expenditures the government had previously tripled the amount of family allowances. Rather than being selective, I think I must recognize this quality in the hon. member for York-Simcoe but I did not know the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge had it. Instead of being too narrow-minded, we should bring true facts to this House and discuss them further, and I would be the first to listen but in those areas, figures should be chosen carefully. We can quote figures all day long but without ever coming to the facts. This is what I wanted to emphasize, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stevens: That is nit picking.

Mr. Trudel: I would say that the hon. member who just made that comment, the hon. member for York-Simcoe, has a really unique way of attacking; as he just did, by mentioning "nit picking", Mr. Speaker. When family allowances for the needy are tripled, and this is only one example, I will perhaps be told that I am being selective. I do not think that is "nitpicking" when relief is provided to people who really need it, a welfare benefit which was required and which the government has tried to restore.

An hon. Member: That's it.

Mr. Trudel: If we referred to a certain speech delivered on that side of the House, we would see what the term "nitpicking" really means. I think that I cannot be accused of doing that. I will now return to some points which he stated and I will be more specific, if I am allowed to do so. When he spoke a while ago, he used the word "shameful." I find it in French also. But I think it is "shameful", if I may say so, it is not quite a French expression but we have a word that says the same thing in French.

Mr. Goyer: The word is "honteux".

Mr. Trudel: Yes, even if I think it is not the expression used in the motion, "shameful" expresses the point very well. If we go back to 1961, it is quite a long time ago, but at that time there was a Conservative administration—I did not say so, but the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) did—and a million persons were unemployed.

I would invite the hon. member to see exactly what those people had at their disposal. When you are unemployed, most of the time it is not because you asked for it. This was mentioned earlier. People wake up one day without work and without revenue. I have often seen that either employers in some cases or unions in other cases are not quite willing to meet the demands of the unemployed.

But the unemployment insurance program was established by this government. It was said earlier it is abused. One needs only to add the figures. But that money was redirected into the economy, which forced large budgets upon the federal government. If there are abuses, as is often indicated, instead of sounding off loud statements, some effort should be attempted to find a way to direct the money within the budget to those who really need it because their plant was shut down, and maybe because their union would not negotiate because its emphasis is on some segments only in society, or because the employer himself wanted skilled labour. The federal government, through the manpower department or the unemployment insurance program, saw to it that employees or employers be confronted with reality. How are those moneys spent? This is what was to be determined when reference was made to huge sums of money. It is a fact. Maybe we should think it was for the well-being of society, and not because the government wanted to intervene in some area just for the fun of dealing with astronomical budgets.

It was indicated earlier that the Unemployment Insurance Act should be amended in depth. It should be remembered that there was an outcry by the majority of the people, especially in this House, when we discussed the legislation and amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. We heard other suggestions then. It may be allright to level criticism on a motion like this one, but when comes the time to vote on some legislation it is a different story altogether. Reality and speeches are two different things.

Reference was made earlier—and the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) also mentioned several funds—to pension funds. It is true that the government and governments, Mr. Speaker, use funds to finance certain projects both within the federal government and provincial governments, and that money is redistributed. The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), who has left, suggested using the Bank of Canada. That is a means of financing government projects, not only at the federal level but also at the provincial level. Only one province escapes that rule, the province of Quebec. The hon. member, I think, is smart enough to understand that if at some point your commitments exceed your revenues, a different program must be considered—an increase, different deductions. One must also think that those pensions give people a safeguard that did not exist until the government decided to provide it. Some of our colleagues made speeches—you certainly heard them—and said they wanted 40 per cent of the salary earned. The government plan gives about 25 per cent. I ask the hon. member to tell me if it is too much to ensure an employee who, in most cases, has no other income, 25 per cent of his salary. If that is the point he wants to make in this House, I think that is a shameful response. It is certainly not the attitude of this government.

Reference was made to creating jobs through the private sector. I agree with that idea—it was mainly the hon. member for Simcoe who raised the subject—and he has no difficulty convincing me. On the other hand, let us go back a bit and see what the government has provided in a budget to encourage private enterprise to create the jobs it seems quite anxious to create.

I heard him and some of his colleagues cry out: That is impossible, you are making concessions to private enterprise. Make up your mind once and for all.

Mr. Stevens: You did not hear me say it!

Mr. Trudel: I said, Mr. Speaker, and I repeat it, that he and members of his party said that, and I recognize that he did not say it. I accept and admit it, but he also ought to remember that there is not one law for the rich and another for the poor. Perhaps the interpretation—although I do not want to blame them—was not accurate the first time, but I do not think I changed my mind time after time. We were discussing last night in the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs the borrowings and the bonds issued by the government. If the hon. member does not agree with the financing of the borrowings and bonds of the government, he might show us, because he will have the opportunity to do so, and I am sure the Minister of Finance will deal with this, how it could be done.

The brokers, everybody said it was a success. In some cases, perhaps not with regard to the last loan, but in the past, we had to stop the sales we were making because no one wanted to make them, and rightly so, for the private enterprise. I think the hon. member has rather special ties in that field, because he proved it in his speech, and the other levels of government have to go to the money market. I took note that he said the government had done nothing with regard to loans abroad.

If we go back a year or two, we note that the government asked other administrations to think about it twice before borrowing money on foreign markets. Since then, some did go to them in spite of the recommendations made by the Minister of Finance in this House, and made when the various ministers of finance met. Those who did not follow those recommendations found themselves with much higher rates of interest and depreciations which affected the debt financing they had to face.

There is, Mr. Speaker, another point I should like to discuss. The hon. member seemed to make much of what may be called "guestimates". In the United-States, not only there but also in France, it is the same thing: budgetary estimates are brought down, you have two years for the short-term budget and five years for long-term economic projections. I had the opportunity to attend with the same member, a meeting with economists in the United States. As a matter of fact, the budget and the American policy were being discussed. It is quite true that there is a long-term projection. It might be pointed out also the the long-term projection is not—

● (1650)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. parliamentary secretary, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Does the parliamentary secretary have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank my hon. colleagues and I shall not be very long because I am sure that other hon. members want to take part in this debate. I could go on for a long time but I have a few points to add. I would like to say that the government is aware of reality. We have meetings with the various countries. Before concluding my remarks, I take the liberty of going back to another point I dealt with concerning the estimates.

I saw the estimates of one of the countries, namely the United States. The estimate was obvious but a deficit ranging from $42 to $115 billion was mentioned. I think that having an estimate does not settle anything, even in the long term. What we should do perhaps is to keep within the budget which was indicated by the President of Treasury Board and which will certainly be indicated by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech, so as to stick to the data and live the Canadian reality, live it in the face of the facts.

As concerns expenditures, there have been reduced receipts in past budgets. There must be some discipline, but everyone knows the rules, and I believe that the uncertainty which is evident in today's motion is far removed from reality. There are two other points that I should like to make. The first concerns job shortages forecast for 1980. I believe that the facts are quite different and that in certain areas, there will be a shortage of manpower rather than hundreds of thousands of unemployed. Maybe we should consider the fact that manpower departments exist to recycle people who did not have the opportunity to go to school so as to be able to face the realities of the labour market.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to close by saying this: We are faced with a concrete situation, the Canadian economy is improving, government programs have shown this, as have figures quoted in the Economic Review, in the report of the Bank of Canada, members of the European Council and other visitors have come here to congratulate the government and the Canadian people for having shown some discipline, and everything that has been done is now having these results, and I am certain that with the co-operation of all members of the House, we shall continue to control inflation and ensure that Canadians will find employment in their chosen fields.

Economic Conditions

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the previous speaker, my hon. friend from Montreal-Bourassa (Mr. Trudel), who made a good speech on behalf of the Minister of Finance.

It was a difficult speech to make. The minister's absence clearly shows the lack of interest of the government in our economic problems, but I want to ensure the House that the problems mentioned in the resolution of my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), are quite serious. It is difficult to understand the attitude of the Liberal government. Now, Mr. Speaker, I prefer to continue in my mother tongue.

[English]

In the motion before us today attention is drawn to the words "reckless . . . intervention in the economy." I suppose we could consider it another example of reckless lack of intervention when the minister ignores the debate which is going on here today.

There seems to be little disagreement that inflation is a serious problem in Canada. However, I am not sure that the government realizes it, that there is only one cause and that the federal government is the only body which can cause and create inflation. All inflation comes from expanding the money supply. Credit is not inflationary, because credit is created by someone producing wealth and being willing to defer the consumption of that wealth. For example, when an individual borrows money, he can borrow it because someone else has produced wealth and is willing to forgo the spending of it at that particular moment.

The same is true when business borrows, when civic governments borrow or when provincial governments borrow. In every case the borrowing is created by someone having produced wealth, saved that money and not spend it. Therefore, there can be no inflationary pressure. One is simply trading one type of spending for another type of spending. But when the federal government borrows, it simply creates more money by paper entries in the accounts, and that is where the inflation comes from. Inflation is a little bit like pregnancy, because although there are many facets to the problem of inflation, just as there are to the problem of pregnancy, in each case there is only one cause. On that there is not much disagreement in Canada.

I refer the House to the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in Hamilton last December. This was before his famous speech. He said:

> Yes, we could bring down inflation to proper levels in 18 months. But if we did it would mean tightening the screws so much and so fast, that we'd then be causing a slowdown in the economy and massive unemployment even more serious than we have now. So, it's possible to bring inflation down very quickly by tightening up very drastically the money supply, by having a very conservative fiscal policy and so on, joined to the guidelines.

In other words, the Prime Minister was saying that he knows what the cause is, but he was also saying at the same time that he was unwilling to accept the consequences of taking action to solve a problem of which he knows the cause. It might cause us to wonder why it took until now to recognize the cause of inflation. We have been operating under this administration for 13 years, eight of those under the present Prime Minister. The Prime Minister was supported in his views by Professor Lawrence B. Smith of the University of Toronto, who made a statement which the Globe and Mail considered important enough to carry in an editorial. Referring to inflation, Professor Smith said:

● (1700)

There is really only one explanation for our present inflation . . . namely that there has been too fast an increase in the rate of growth of the money supply.

If we all agree on the causes of inflation, then we should be able to agree on the solutions. I should like to refer to some of the other results of our anti-inflation policy in this country. First of all, many demands are caused by inflation, although people usually state it the other way around. The wage earner is forced to seek higher wage settlements so that he can keep up with inflation; merchants are forced to seek higher prices in order to protect themselves. The Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants together urged the government to make tax changes which would involve more than just indexing of exemptions. That would be some help, of course, but they feel that further steps are necessary in order to make permanent solutions available to taxpayers.

One thing they suggest, for example, is expansion of the limit of contributions made to registered retirement savings plans. Limits for those contributions were set in 1971 and have not been changed. They suggest that we need relief from taxation of illusory gains on property. If those things were done, the revenues of the government would fall. But this government wants to spend more money, so it is not hard to understand why it is reluctant to do these things. In Canada, savers pay taxes on their investment income, which is at times less than the rate of inflation. A prime example is Canada savings bonds. The government borrows money from taxpayers, taxes the income which is usually interest at about the same rate as inflation, and they pay capital back later in deflated dollars.

I have referred to reckless, and at times contradictory interventions. I should like to give a few examples of interventions which are hurting the people of this country. There was an article in the Financial Post of May 1 concerning the annual meeting of Bell Canada. It says it is a pity that the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board was not at the meeting. If he had been, the article says—

He would have heard that big audience—1,225 of them, all ordinary, mostly elderly folk—stirred to applause by only one statement.

The article says that Bell's chairman described the Anti-Inflation Board's refusal to approve Bell's eitht-cent quarterly dividend increase as a "mistake". This decision directly affected 210,000 shareholders, most of them, as I have said, small investors and pensioners who rely on the dividends. It is interesting to note that Bell Canada is 98 per cent Canadian-owned. Most of them, as I have said, are little people and about 140,000 own fewer than 100 shares, for an investment of approximately $4,500. The company wanted to increase the dividend by 9.3 per cent, which is less than the rate of inflation last year. They were denied the increase. The minister has said that the Anti-Inflation Board would allow increases in dividends when justified, and one of those times would be if a company needed to raise additional capital for expansion. That was the ground on which Bell Canada made its application to raise additional capital, but even so it was refused.

Another article in the same issue of the Financial Post referred to the new rules of the CRTC concerning FM programming and the restriction of the number of commercial minutes to be sold by those stations. I do not want to get into a debate on that rule at this time becasue it does not apply here. It is interesting, however, that the CBC itself was exempt from the new rule, while independent operators lost advertising revenue at a time when costs of new programming were increasing. The anti-inflation guidelines prevent stations from raising their rates to compensate for loss of revenue.

Mr. Speaker, I have already referred to government intervention. The remarks of the Deputy Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, made last week to the Financial Executives' Institute in Ottawa, is a case in point. Dr. Ostry said:

Businessmen in Canada refuse to accept that competition policy is an ally of business . . . its central role is to strengthen private enterprise.

Mrs. Ostry said that the pending revision of the Combines Investigation Act is not intended to be a detailed intervention in the economy but, rather, is to assist consumers and business in their respective activities in the marketplace and is "an alternative to more direct government intervention".

Mr. Speaker, the government holds that more intervention is an alternative, but they persist in taking the view that it is possible to help both sides at once. Anyone who has been involved in an adversary relationship knows that cannot be done. I think the Prime Minister indicated that he did not entirely disagree when he said in his famous December speech:

It's a massive intervention into the decision-making power of the economic groups and it's telling Canadians we haven't been able to make it work, the free market system.

That is the famous "free market" statement which I think gave him a lot of problems. I do not see how businessmen or individuals in Canada can think otherwise, given the government's intervention in the marketing of foodstuffs, for example. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) tells us that the purpose of marketing boards and controls is to avoid "highs" and "lows". We know that, because now all we have is "highs" and no low prices at all.

The millions of taxpayers' dollars that the government invests in unnecessary Crown corporations is a type of intervention. Take Canadian National Railways being in the hotel business, for example. That may have been necessary 40 years ago, but today we have plenty of good hoteliers who can make money and we do not need the government's intervention.

Radio is another example. These days there is no need for taxpayers to subsidize radio to the tune of $200 million a year. Many radio operators in Canada are prepared to build and provide the service. We have only to look at the telephone industry to realize that a simple licensing system would enable the government to ensure the service is provided without being in the business itself. There is also Petro-Canada which competes with the oil companies.

There are many examples. Another example is public works which come under a government department and not a Crown corporation. The department claims to be able to provide office space to the government at low cost through facilities it has which are not available to the public sector. The work of the Auditor General made it quite evident, I think, that the success of the Department of Public Works is questionable, at best, and that there should be an alternative method of providing space. I believe that private enterprise could do it quite well without tying up millions of taxpayers' dollars. I do not know how Canadians can react any differently in face of the government's attitude to situations such as this.

● (1710)

That brings me to the second part of the motion, which refers to uncertainty and lack of confidence with the public, which has led to "rising unemployment, falling productivity and unacceptable levels of real growth and inflation . . . " The uncertainty must apply particularly to young males under 25 years, among whom unemployment is far greater than among those in the over 25-year old category. Of course, there are reasons for that. But do we hear suggested that the government's follies are at the root of these reasons? For example, this government offers the most generous unemployment insurance benefits in the world. There is absolutely no encouragement to work more than eight weeks. People are encouraged not to work. Therefore, a whole generation is growing up with no incentive to work.

In Vancouver, where we have the Habitat forum—it is to be an adjunct of the Habitat conference—there is an able man by the name of Al Clapp who has men nearing the age of 30 working for him, for low wages admittedly; but these are men who in most cases have never before had a job. I have a son at the University of British Columbia and hear all these stories about jobs university students cannot get. My son has a job. When he told his employer that he wanted to quit his job in August so that he could take a few weeks off before going back to university, the employer begged him to stay because he could not fill the job. We have heard of tens of thousands of jobs being available. I can only point my finger at this government and say it must change the circumstances which cause these jobs to remain unfilled.

The Economic Council of Canada has recommended that government jobs should be created and that benefits be cut off if they are not accepted. The Economic Council discovered that in 40 per cent of cases, unemployed people called on for a job interview did not show up. They were not interested. If one is offered a suitable job and does not accept it, one should not be entitled to benefits. In a case like that, benefits should be cut off. These kinds of abuses have been referred to previously. In 1975, unemployment rates, on average, were 15 per cent for males under 25 years and 10 per cent for females in the same age bracket. These young people represent one half of our unemployment statistics but only one quarter of the labour force.

It has been observed that in Canada the working poor make up a large percentage of all the poor. The poor work, and the young lie around and work only long enough to collect their benefits. That is the fault of the attitude this administration had instilled. I remember the postal strike of 1974, or was it 1975? I am not sure which year it was: we have a strike almost every year. I know that thousands of unemployment insurance cheques were left unclaimed in Toronto because their intended recipients were not able to travel downtown to pick them up.

The Economic Council of Canada study entitled "People and Jobs" says on page 5:

> —the minimum annual rate of unemployment rose from 3.6 per cent in the 1960s to over 5 per cent in the 1970s and, in periods of slack demand such as experienced recently, the unemployment rate exceeded 7 per cent—
>
> But, during the early 1970s, job vacancies climbed significantly without much moderation in the unemployment rate.

On page 6, the study says:

> Despite the recent slackening in output, Canada's rate of real growth averaged 5 per cent annually over the last ten years. However, most of this was due to employment growth rather than productivity increases.

If we cannot get people to work, there will not be any productivity increases. It continues:

> Since 1963 Canada's growth in output per man-hour has been consistently lower than that of all other OECD countries, except the United States.

I now turn to page 21, which deals with attitudes. The study found that Canadians are strongly motivated to work and said:

> The vast majority of Canadians would prefer suitable work to unemployment insurance, but about one out of three would accept unemployment insurance rather than work at the minimum wage—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, whose allotted time has expired. He may continue if he has unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the motion proposed by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens)—

Mr. Paproski: Caccia said no.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has the floor. If hon. members want to continue their crossfire, perhaps they should go behind the curtains.

Mr. Caccia: The hon. member's motion is drafted in his usual bombastic style and it is difficult to take it seriously. The motion speaks of "an atmosphere of uncertainty and lack of confidence with the public." There is evidence to show that the hon. member's contention that there is "lack of confidence with the public" is not supported by the people of Canada. For instance, when the government floats Canada saving bonds, they are sold in a shorter time than expected, and sometimes oversold. I ask the hon. member for York-Simcoe if this is an indication of uncertainty and lack of confidence on the part of the public.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): He is not here.

An hon. Member: He was here most of the afternoon.

Mr. Caccia: There is evidence showing that foreign investors wish to invest in this country. FIRA, the foreign investment agency, has been screening applications for some time and their number has remained constant. This means that foreigners look at Canada as a place in which they want to invest. I ask the hon. member, who is not in his seat, if he interprets that as uncertainty and lack of confidence. Every year, hundreds of thousands of would-be immigrants from all over the world try to come to Canada. Is this evidence of lack of confidence and uncertainty on the part of people throughout the world who look upon Canada as the place to which they want to go? Obviously, the answer is no. These three examples show how superficial is the motion, and the hurry with which the hon. member for York-Simcoe probably drafted it. If there is any lack of confidence, I suggest it is between the two ears of the hon. member himself.

Let us consider another part of the hon. member's motion. The hon. member spent some time talking about unemployment figures. I ask if he has ever taken time to look at employment figures. For instance, has he considered the increase in employment in Canada? For instance, in the period 1971-72, 236,000 new jobs were created in this country; in 1972-73 we had 394,000 new jobs; in 1973-74, 393,000 new jobs; and in the time from 1974 to the third quarter of 1975, we saw well over half a million, precisely 552,000 new jobs created in this country. Was the hon. member looking at that kind of evidence when he drafted his motion?

For instance, did he look at comparable figures applying to OECD countries? We learn, that our great neighbour to the south, whose population is ten times greater than ours, in the period 1974-75 created only 214,000 new jobs, or less than half the number of new jobs created in Canada. In the eyes of the hon. member for York-Simcoe, is that performance poor? Did he, for instance, look at the number of new jobs created in Australia, where the number of people employed in 1974-75 actually went down? In Canada, the number went by over half a million. In France in the same year, zero new jobs were created because employment went down. The same applies to Germany and Switzerland. In the eyes of the OECD, a neutral agency that looks at things above and beyond the political scene, Canada's performance was excellent, as reported by these employment figures.

● (1720)

What did the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) look at in order to arrive at his motion that speaks of uncertainty and lack of confidence? He speaks of rising unemployment. Did he also look at the phenomenal figures for rising employment? The same applies to levels of real growth which have been described by the OECD as among the best in the western world. They have been better than that of the United States. Over the years it has been among the best in industrialized countries. Where did the hon. member for York-Simcoe get his notion, information, facts or statistics on which to base his motion? It is difficult to say.

The motion also speaks of reckless intervention. Does the hon. member for York-Simcoe think that the Anti-Inflation Board is a reckless intervention in the economy? If so, why? Perhaps that is the reason he and his party opposed the amendments to the Anti-Inflation Board Act to provide an appeal procedure for labour: they were passed last week. If it was a reckless intervention, why did the hon. member for Lanark, on third reading, support the Liberals and vote with the government? He must have reached the conclusion that it was a measure worth supporting and not a reckless intervention on the part of the government.

What about tax reform? Does the hon. member for York-Simcoe consider that to be a form of reckless intervention? What about the solid system of unemployment insurance in this country which protects those in the poorer areas in Canada, areas where unemployment is not available on a year-round basis? Does he consider that a reckless intervention? Is that the platform of his party? Is that what he is going to tell the people of New Brunswick, Saskatchewan and Ontario at the time of the next election?

Does the hon. member for York-Simcoe think that direct job creation on the part of the federal government is reckless itervention? Does he think that subsidies to the aircraft industry to maintain its Canadian nature and provide employment for 8,000 to 10,000 aircraft workers is a reckless intervention? If so, why does he not say it? Does the hon. member believe that legislation with regard to foreign publications, like that which removed tax concessions for Time magazine and others, was a reckless intervention? That measure benefited Canadian publications as well as radio and television stations.

Is the hon. member for York-Simcoe against this kind of intervention on the part of Ottawa? If so, what intervention does he think the federal government, on behalf of the Canadian community, should introduce to stimulate the economy, protect the weaker elements in society and maintain Canada's position in the world? If you travel throughout the world, you are told by people of other countries that Canada is one of the finest countries in the world because it has been able to retain a good standard of living and a fine economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: This kind of motion tries to erode confidence in the government and create uncertainty. It is the kind of defeatism that members of the opposition would be the first to condem if it were allowed to happen. If that is the role that the hon. member for York-Simcoe thinks the opposition should perform, he is not doing a service to this nation.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) for letting me have a few minutes before he exercises his right on behalf of the official opposition to close the debate. My colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), has already indicated that when the vote is called we shall be voting for the motion that has been placed before the House this afternoon. However, as my colleague also pointed out, it is the motion we are voting for rather than some of the ideas contained in the speech of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens).

An hon. Member: You can't have it both ways.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is one of the most popular clichés, that you cannot have it both ways, but it happens many times. At any rate, when 5.45 comes it will be the motion for which we are voting, not the speech of the mover. The hon. member for York-Simcoe said something in his speech that I did not like. This is the reason I asked for about four or five minutes. He got on to the subject of pensions, and even though he was speaking to a motion that talks about uncertainty and lack of confidence, he said the sort of things that might increase those very conditions.

What I took exception to in particular was his complaint that the federal government is too free with pensions, that it escalates the pensions of public servants, RCMP and armed forces personnel, and so on. As the hon. member for York-Simcoe would have it, things are going to get out of whack. The fact is that the fund for the payment of escalation additions to pensions is still in the black. It could get a little below the line if it were not already part of the law that, starting January 1, 1977, the contributions to that fund will be 1 per cent rather than one-half of 1 per cent. Therefore, I see no danger of any trouble in that regard.

The hon. member was simply mouthing the kinds of complaints that we see in the Globe and Mail, a newspaper which frequently says nice things about me on its editorial page. However, in this area I beg to disagree. The complaint is that public servants, and others who come under federal jurisdiction get an escalation in their pensions due to the rise in the cost of living, which is something which others do not get and, therefore, is unfair.

● (1730)

By sheer coincidence, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) yesterday placed on Hansard an answer to a series of questions of mine bearing the number 5,026. These were questions having to do with private pension plans. Although I have known from previous research that the situation was pretty bad, I was really shocked to discover that so far as the government is able to capture—that is the government's word—the statistics, 82 per cent of the individuals in Canada today who are working and are in pension plans are in plans that provide for no escalation after retirement. The other 18 per cent are provided with a certain amount of escalation, in some cases equal to the rise in the cost of living, and in other cases less than that figure.

I should like to say to my hon. friends who write for the editorial pages of the Globe and Mail, to those who deal with pension matters in the financial publications of this country, and to those who represent big business when they attend the Canadian pension conference, that what is wrong with the pension situation is not the fact that public servants and a few others have their pensions escalated so as to keep up with the cost of living; what is wrong is that all of the rest do not get the same escalation.

I insist that the time has come when it should be the rule that a pension is not a pension unless after retirement arrangements are made for the pension to be indexed or escalated, so when people retire they can at least keep up with the rising cost of living. I think they should be able to do better; I think they should be able to keep up with the rising standard of living. Indeed, I should also like to see the industrial composite applied to the escalation of pensions rather than just the rise in the cost of living.

I promised my friend for Prince George-Peace River that I would not trespass on his time, but there was this one point I wanted to make. Although I am going to vote with my colleagues for the motion of the hon. member for York-Simcoe, I did not like the attack that he made today on public pensions. I think they provide the lead to this country and that it is time pensions in the private field matched those in the government field. Or if that is not possible, it is time that consideration was given to enlarging the Canada Pension Plan so that eventually all our people will be covered under government pensions that are secure, rather than under private plans which in so many cases are insecure and which, to the extent of 82 per cent, according to the figures placed on Hansard yesterday at page 13395, do not have any escalation.

That is my point, Mr. Speaker. It is not a mistake that some get escalation; the mistake is that so many do not get it. I hope that we can soon correct this unfair situation.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Would the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) permit a question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend on this side will allow me the extra minute or two.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I should like to ask the hon. member this question. If he is sincere and convinced of what he has just told us, namely, that he does not agree with the suggestion made by the opposition today in regard to pensions—and if he is, I agree with him wholeheartedly—how can he vote in favour of the opposition motion and go home with his conscience clear?

Mr. Mazankowski: Because he wants a new government, that's why. He wants to get rid of the Grits.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when we vote, we vote on the motion before us. My conscience would not be clear if I voted against the motion, because I think the terms of it are correct.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, before I address myself to the motion that is before the House, if Your Honour would allow me I should like to say this in response to what was said by my colleague from Winnipeg who spoke ahead of me. If we ever did realize his dream, which incidentally I share, and all Canadians in our society are assured of a comfortable life after making their contribution to this country and they retire from the active labour force, then we must ensure we also have a healthy business climate. In the context of modern-day pension guarantees, we must also ensure that this country has a healthy corporate business climate.

What my colleagues to my left often overlook is that all pension plans invest in corporations and business, including the pension plans that the great unions of this country maintain on behalf of their membership. In order to guarantee a comfortable income through pensions we must continue to create the kind of climate in which corporations and business can flourish within a society such as ours.

It is incredible to witness a government that is so far removed from the reality of today, Mr. Speaker—a government that has not recognized just what is going on in the economic world outside. The government has completely overlooked the fact that our major trading partners, including those who share the North American continent with us, have brought their inflation under control. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) overlooks the fact that the international con game of inflation is over. The government fails to realize that we are only cheating ourselves at this time when we think our trading partners will continue to accept our watered-down dollars, because they are losing their value. They are being passed on to those on fixed incomes and who receive sustenance payments from the federal government, such as senior citizens' allowances, unemployment insurance, family allowance and that sort of thing. As I say, Mr. Speaker, the international con game is over. We no longer have access to the global community. The European Economic Community has the problem under control, and so has the United States. We are fooling no one but ourselves.

One of my concerns at the present time is the lumber and wood fibre industry in this country. In terms of the deficits with other countries that it has been chalking up in recent years, there was a deficit last year of $5 billion, and it will be even worse next year. Most of the trade in wood fibre products is with the United States, and they are gaining a $5 billion trade advantage every year with this country. The United States enjoys a positive trade balance, particularly with iron curtain countries, as a result of its trade in agricultural products. Our lumber and wood fibre industry will be facing very stiff competition in the United States in very short order because that country will have to correct its trade imbalance with Russia by exporting lumber and pulp products to that country.

It is no secret that our productivity has declined and that the price of our lumber products has increased to the point where it is very difficult today even to compete with producers in the United States, never mind those who import from across the ocean. It is hard to believe lumber grows on trees any more, in view of the price of it these days. This is why we are all so concerned, particularly when you consider that the lumber and wood fibre industry is second only to our great agricultural industry. I fear for my country when the time comes that we will have to face the inevitable and use our wood products within the country only because we have priced ourselves out of international markets.

● (1740)

The problem of inflation, in my humble opinion, is not the number one problem, even though it is the cause of even greater problems which we are facing today. I refer particularly to the industrial warfare being waged in our country. One must remember that this country, with its potential, its great natural resources and the great heritage we enjoy, has achieved the dubious distinction of having the worst record in industrial relations. This is due to this government's incompetence and to the people who elected this government instead instead of a group of people who offered a solution to the problems of inflation and the situation in which we find ourselves today.

[Mr. Oberle.]

This government waited too long to bring in prices and incomes controls, and when it did bring them in it was the wrong program entirely. The government has lost the trust and confidence, not only of the individuals in our country but, more particularly, of those groups which have the power to exert undue pressure on our economic system. I am talking particularly about the unions which have opted out or dropped this government as a lost cause and are setting out on their own causes, protecting their own interests.

Industrial warfare is being waged in this country to an extent that frightens me. It frightens me because I think of the record of those major industries which are performing essential public services. I refer to the railway which operates throughout the province of British Columbia, the work force of which is represented by eight different unions, each one capable of shutting down the operations of the railway. I ponder the question of what happens to the other seven unions which are not on strike. The members are, of course, on unemployment insurance while the strike is on.

It is for this reason I suggest the system has reached the point where it is consuming itself. This is no longer spiralling inflation but a crumbling of the foundation of the system which built this country and at one time made it great. We are in a situation today over which we have no control. The only solution to the problems which are even greater than inflation now, namely, those problems associated with industrial warfare and strikes which are destroying the welfare of this state, is a change of government.

This government has lost the confidence of every Canadian. It has removed itself from the will of the people and from the realities of modern times, to the extent that it should no longer have the right to bring any programs before us which are not in tune with the needs of our times. This government has removed itself from the principles of international markets and has totally ignored the programs which initiated the turn-around the people in the United States are experiencing. You do not have to go very far to see this: just walk across the border and order a meal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being 5.45 o'clock, it is my duty to interrupt the debate and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the proceedings now before the House, in accordance with section (9)(a) of Standing Order 58.

The motion is as follows: moved by Mr. Stevens, seconded by Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton)—

Some hon. Members: Dispense.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Shall I dispense?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No. Read it so we will know what we are voting for.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It has been moved by Mr. Stevens, seconded by Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton):

That this House, believing that the continuing tendency of this administration to reckless and at times contradictory intervention in the economy has created an atmosphere of uncertainty and lack of confidence with the public, and seeing that this uncertainty has resulted in rising unemployment, falling productivity, and unacceptable levels of real growth and inflation, expresses its lack of confidence in the government.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 136)

● (1750)

YEAS

Messrs.

Alexander
Alkenbrack
Andre (Calgary Centre)
Baker (Grenville-Carleton)
Baldwin
Balfour
Bawden
Beatty
Benjamin
Blackburn
Brewin
Brisco
Broadbent
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cossitt
Crouse
Darling
Dick
Dionne (Kamouraska)
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Ellis
Epp
Firth
Fraser
Gilbert
Gillies
Graffrey
Halliday
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hogan
Holmes
Horner
Huntington
Hurlburt
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Jones
Kempling
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Korchinski
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Laprise
La Salle
Lawrence
Leggatt
MacDonald (Egmont)
MacDonald (Miss) (Kingston and the Islands)
MacKay
MacLean
Macquarrie
Malone
Masniuk
Mazankowski
McCain
McCleave
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinley
McKinnon
Mitges
Muir
Murta
Neil
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Orlikow
O'Sullivan
Paproski
Patterson
Peters
Reynolds
Ritchie
Roche
Rodriguez
Rynard
Saltsman
Schellenberger
Schumacher
Scott
Skoreyko
Smith (Churchill)
Stevens
Stewart (Marquette)
Symes
Towers
Wagner
Wenman
Whiteway
Whittaker
Wise
Woolliams—97

NAYS

Messrs.

Abbott
Allmand
Andras (Port Arthur)
Andres (Lincoln)
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Basford
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Blouin
Breau
Buchanan
Bussières
Caccia
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss) (South Western Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul)
Caron
Clermont
Collenette
Comtois
Condon
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté
Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Daudlin
De Bané
Demers
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Douglas (Bruce-Grey)
Drury
Duclos
Dupont
Duquet
Ethier
Fleming
Flynn
Fox
Francis
Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goyer
Gray
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guay (Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Harquail
Herbert
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Isabelle
Jamieson
Joyal
Kaplan
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lang
Langlois
Laniel
Lapointe
Lee
Lefebvre
Lessard
Loiselle (Chambly)
Loiselle (Saint-Henri)
Lumley
MacDonald (Cardigan)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Mackasey
Maine
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Martin
McRae
Milne
O'Connell
Olivier
Parent
Pearsall
Pelletier
Penner
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Poulin
Prud'homme
Railton
Raines
Reid
Richardson
Roberts
Rompkey
Rooney
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Sharp
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stewart (Cochrane)
Tessier
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner
Watson
Yanakis
Young—116

● (1810)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Benjamin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) on a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to your attention that the hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore (Mr. Blaker) came in not only after Your Honour had risen but when the count had started. I am sure the hon. member would not want to have his vote counted in this division.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I heard calls for points of order during the taking of the vote, but I must confess I missed the incident. The hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore (Mr. Blaker).

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) is quite correct. I was not certain, when I entered the chamber, whether I was still within the time. With the agreement of the House, perhaps my vote might be stricken from the proceedings.

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring to your attention the fact that the hon.

member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) could have done the same thing, but did not.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. As a member of parliament from the province of Ontario, could I be advised whether the Electoral Boundaries Commission filed the appropriate report today, the last day for the province of Ontario, as it is supposed to do according to law?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being after six o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 6.15 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, May 13, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

TABLING OF REPORT OF ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES COMMISSION FOR ONTARIO

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to sections 19 and 21 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, chapter E-2, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, to lay upon the table of the House certified copies of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission received this day from the Representation Commissioner for the province of Ontario and amendments thereto.

* * *

OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT

SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF MORE APPROPRIATE MEASURE TO DEAL WITH UNOFFICIAL DISCLOSURE OF GOVERNMENT DOCUMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to make under this Standing Order. The urgent and pressing necessity and circumstances are quite apparent from the facts. Whereas an historical analysis of the Official Secrets Act makes it quite clear this legislation was originally passed to deal with espionage and was never intended as a means of punishment to be used by those in authority who might have suffered bruised egoes, embarrassment or red faces through the publication of classified papers in connection with domestic matters, this House requests the government to forthwith review the Official Secrets Act, and in particular Section 4, and propose to Parliament more appropriate measures to deal with unofficial disclosure of such government documents taking into account the principle enunciated at the Nuremburg trials, as well as the overriding need for more open government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion can be pressed only with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONDEMNATION OF USE OF PRIVATE INVESTIGATORS BY POLITICAL PARTIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of recent disclosures that both major Canadian political parties, the ruling Liberals and the official opposition Tories, have engaged an international intelligence agency for the purpose of monitoring the activities of members of other political parties and in view of the fact that the intelligence agency in question, Intertel, Inc., has numerous ties to the United States intelligence community, many of their operators and directors being former employees of the CIA, the FBI or the national security agency, and in view of the fact that it is clear any information gathered through this agency would be available to the United States Government intelligence community thus making a complete mockery of any idea of Canadian sovereignty, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this House condemn the use by any political party of private investigative firms for the purpose of monitoring political opponents or any government activities and that it especially condemn the use of a foreign intelligence agency which is clearly a free enterprise wing of the secret service agencies of a foreign country.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can be presented to the House only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AIR CANADA

SUGGESTION AUDITOR GENERAL INVESTIGATE BILLING PROCEDURES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In light of continuing labour unrest in the Air Canada finance branch in Winnipeg and recent information from the Canadian airlines employees association stating that there has been no auditing of commercial ticketing and there has been no control system over Air Canada commercial ticketing plan, resulting in over 200 subscribers records showing unreported sales dating back to 1972; and in view of the fact that employees are being instructed to write off ticket billings which could indicate an uncollected receivable to Air Canada of over $2 million, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

House of Commons

● (1410)

That the House direct the Minister of Transport to instruct the Auditor General of Canada to launch an immediate investigation into Air Canada billing procedures.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent pursuant to Standing Order 43?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

CRIMINAL CODE

REQUEST FOR PROHIBITION OF PROPAGANDA IN FAVOUR OF HOMOSEXUALITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion concerning an urgent matter.

Considering that, since the adoption of the omnibus bill in 1969, homosexuals, not satisfied with being able to do what they want in privacy, between consenting adults, demand the right to attack children, as evidenced by their manifesto demanding the abolition of all legislation on the age of content, considering also that these repulsive demands clearly show that the liberalization of legislation concerning homosexuality was a mistake, because of the lack of respect shown by homosexuals for the great majority of Canadians, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That the House direct the government to amend the Criminal Code to include a provision making it an indictable offence for an individual to expose publicly his or her homosexuality and to advertise in favour of homosexuality.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

* * *

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

USE OF PRIVATE INVESTIGATORS BY GOVERNMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, in view of the reports which indicate that the government House leader is concerned about the use of legitimate private investigatory agencies for the purpose of confirming the accuracy of information, I move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

[Mr. Whiteway.]

That the government indicate, either on motions or otherwise, on how many occasions they had used detective agencies for their own administrative functions, including Intertel.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

SEARCH AND RESCUE

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF LIFEBOAT STATIONS IN WESTERN NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Repeated and continuing losses of fishermen off Newfoundland's coast, and particularly the most recent three incidents off western Newfoundland in a space of a week, prompts immediate attention again to the lack of lifeboat bases along four miles of coastline. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House orders that the plans to establish four new lifeboat bases be reconsidered to include locations in western Newfoundland and that those responsible for location planning be ordered to justify the serious oversight which exists.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CANADIAN PACIFIC

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF FREIGHT SERVICE IN VIEW OF WITHDRAWAL OF TRUCK SERVICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of CP Transport's program to discontinue freight service to certain rural communities in Saskatchewan, and in view of the serious effect this will have on the economic survival of the affected communities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton):

That the government take immediate steps to ensure that satisfactory freight service will be maintained.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF THE SPEAKER OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF NEW ZEALAND, SIR ROY JACK

Mr. Speaker: Before beginning the oral question period, I know hon. members would want to join me in calling attention to the presence in our gallery of a very distinguished visitor in the person of the Speaker of the House of Representatives of New Zealand, Sir Roy Jack.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF MINISTER'S STATEMENTS CONCERNING LABOUR'S PARTICIPATION IN GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the minister has stressed the importance of a tripartite approach to the solution of industrial strife in Canada through the Canada Labour Relations Council and, keeping in mind that the latest International Labour Organization figures for 1974 show Canada leading all other countries in man-days lost in strikes—that figure of 9.25 million man-days was exceeded last year, and is now 10.5 million—will the minister today clarify the confusion he has created by his statement on May 4 that labour's withdrawal from the tripartite discussions is hopefully temporary and by the equally confusing replies on Tuesday, May 11, when he said that labour's withdrawal paves the way for its participation later?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not see anything contradictory about it at all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The fact of the matter is that it is my hope, and I assume the hope of the hon. member, that labour's withdrawal temporary, and the fact that it is a withdrawal rather than a resignation would pave the way for its re-entry later.

MEASURES TO SECURE CO-OPERATION OF LABOUR AND REPLACE TRIPARTITE APPROACH

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): It is obvious that the minister does not see any contradiction in his words. In the anti-inflation white paper of October it is stated, and I quote:

> There are several structural problems which need to be addressed in a comprehensive anti-inflation program. The third relates to the need to improve labour management relations.
>
> . . . in co-operation with the two groups directly involved—labour and management—the government will seek practical solutions. The government has established the tripartite Canada Labour Relations Council to assist in this effort.

This was government policy in October. The Canada Labour Relations Council, for all practical purposes, is now defunct.

I ask the minister, what new policy does he have to replace the now unworkable tripartite approach, and what exactly is the minister going to do to get labour co-operation between now and at the end of controls in December, 1978?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): As I have repeated to the hon. member on several occasions, much has been accomplished under the tripartite arrangement. Some initiatives can now be proceeded with, since we were successful in arriving at a consensus and getting agreement from all sides. So the government can now proceed with several of the initiatives in that agreement, and I would be pleased to elaborate on those to the hon. member if he wishes.

Our relationship as a government with labour was never entirely dependent on the tripartite council to which the hon. member referred. The Prime Minister and other members of the cabinet have had many discussions, and other ministers in the cabinet are dealing with labour on an ongoing basis with respect to programs in their departments. I myself am dealing with the leadership of the labour movement in bilateral discussions constantly, and these meetings will carry on.

Mr. Fraser: The minister apparently is saying that officially there is a breakdown, but unofficially there are talks. Does this mean that the minister is actually saying that there is a real possibility that no solutions will be found for better industrial relations for the remainder of the controls program, which would be a loss of nearly three years in this vital area of concern? If this is the minister's dilemma, I invite him to be frank with the House and say so.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Of course it is not. I think a great deal has been accomplished already with respect to initiatives and broader-based bargaining with the desirability in the agreement to have a common data gathering agency which can make findings which will not be suspected of bias by either side. These are some of the things which have been accomplished. I am hopeful that other things will be accomplished with respect to having government involvement with labour, and in addition, labour's input with respect to policies in the post controls period. However, they may not be accomplished under the aegis of the tripartite council, but under some other format in terms of discussions. That is all.

EFFECT OF WITHDRAWAL OF LABOUR FROM LABOUR RELATIONS COUNCIL ON DISCUSSIONS CONCERNING POST-CONTROL PERIOD

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. The government has said that the CLC agreed to have discussions with the cabinet with regard to the economy in the post-controls period, reportedly decided at a meeting between the Prime Minister and high union officials in March. Has the withdrawal of the the CLC from the Canada Labour Relations Council negated the CLC commitment to such talks on the post-controls period as an official body?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe so at all. I think the position of the CLC, as the House well knows was that, although the government disagrees and I disagree, it feels that the present selective wage and price control programs is a negation of collective bargaining. Since the tripartite council terms of reference deal almost exclusively with improvements in collective bargaining they did not think they could sit on that body. They have always indicated their desire to meet with the government to discuss policies that would be in their best interests and the interests of the Canadian people in a post-control period. That is why they are willing to participate in these discussions.

● (1420)

MEETINGS WITH LABOUR CONCERNING POST-CONTROL PERIOD

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): A supplementary question. I gather from the minister that there is no official contact with the CLC regarding this post-control period. Could the minister confirm whether similar talks are scheduled with other labour bodies on the post-control problem and, if so, when will they be held, in view of the special committee on post-control policy established by cabinet which wants to promote tripartite business, labour and government talks on economic efficiency and productivity.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member's original premise is not correct. I think that an agreement has been pretty well reached, subject to confirmation as to the particular day. There will be meetings between the CLC and the government with reference to post control and the general economic attitude of the government some time in June probably. As I said, however, the precise date has yet to be confirmed.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR CONCERNING DEFENCE SPENDING BY CANADA— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he has read the statement reported to have been made by the United States ambassador to Canada in which he said that a major irritant between our two countries was the lack of adequate defence spending by Canada? Does the minister propose to respond to the ambassador's remarks?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I noticed that report in the Globe and Mail this morning. My hon. friend may be interested in knowing that the United States ambassador believes he has been grossly misquoted. Instead of saying defence was a major irritant, he had said it was a promising avenue of co-operation.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

Mr. Fraser: Maybe he was misrecorded.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. No doubt the ambassador has every right to express his own views. Will the minister convey to the ambassador the view held by many Canadians that the trouble is not underspending in Canada on defence but gross overspending by the United States on defence such as, for example, the Trident submarine base which is going to provide the means to destroy the whole world many times over at vast expense—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, some of my friends do not like this fact of life but that is not going to stop me from propounding it. Will the minister suggest to the ambassador that this is part of what the former United States Secretary of Defence, Robert McNamara called the mad momentum of the nuclear arms race?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, while Ambassador Enders is arranging for a retraction from the Globe and Mail for the misreporting of his remarks, at the same time I will be clarifying the hon. member's question in my own mind so that I might be in a position to answer at a later date.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSING

INQUIRY IF FEDERAL FUNDS AVAILABLE FOR SENIOR CITIZENS' APARTMENTS IN QUEBEC

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Is the minister in a position to inform the House whether, recently or a few months ago, any sums of money coming out of the equalization fund or from other sources have been transferred to the Quebec government, and in particular to the Quebec Housing Corporation, for the purpose of building low cost housing for senior citizens? If so, can he say roughly the date and the amount?

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can give exact dates and times but at the time of setting of the budget of CMHC and of negotiations with the provinces, Quebec's budget was also arranged. Funds were made available for those programs. I would be happy to discuss that with the hon. member. I do not carry the precise figures for each program for each province in my head. Funds are available for senior citizen housing programs in Quebec.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Is the minister aware that officials of the Quebec Housing Corporation reply to citizens asking for funds to build low cost housing for senior citizens that they have not received any money and have not had any discussion with the federal government and that, consequently, any application from municipalities or nonprofit private companies gets the same answer that there is no money available? Is the minister aware of that and could he make a statement to clarify the federal government's participation, and where does the matter stand now?

[English]

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I shall be happy to look into the precise amounts. The funds are not transferred until projects are approved. There are also direct programs for senior citizens, which are implemented in Quebec. I visited some of those projects in the last couple of weeks, I might say. The budget for Quebec Housing Corporation is in place and those funds should be available. I will be happy to look into the precise amounts and figures for the hon. member.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

COMMENTS OF UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR ON CANADA'S DEFENCE SPENDING—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the House will grant me indulgence for a moment and allow me to extend compliments to General W. W. Turner, his staff and, most of all, the gentlemen cadets of Royal Military College for their excellent drill and deportment during the presentation of the new colours this morning on the lawn in front of the Parliament Buildings. Watching these fine young men doing their jobs so well tends to restore one's faith in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: Now I come to the less satisfactory part of my intervention. My question, directed to the Minister of National Defence, is allied to the question asked by the hon. member for Greenwood; only I direct it to the Minister of National Defence as he has greater responsibility, I believe, for the inadequacies of our defences.

In a speech to a Canadian-American relations seminar in Winnipeg, U.S. Ambassador Enders said a satisfactory level of Canadian military spending is critical to the defence of North America because the U.S. is close to the margin point when it comes to maintaining an effective defence over Europe and North America. He also said that one of the major irritants in Canada-U.S. relations has developed because many Americans believe Canada gives too low a priority to defence spending. Would the minister care to comment on Ambassador Enders' assessment of the contribution which Canada has been making to the defence of the Alliance and also say something about what our future commitments should be?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Victoria for his complimentary remarks about Royal Military College. When we bring defence exercises to Parliament Hill, the defence critic has a chance to see some of the good work taking place in the department.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It was very refreshing.

Mr. Richardson: The second part of the question was answered in the response to an earlier question. I understand, as my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs said a few moments ago, that Ambassador Enders said in his statement that the defence relationship between Canada and the United States was a promising area of co-operation.

An hon. Member: We have heard lots of promises.

REASON FOR PROPOSAL TO CLOSE BASES

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question had to do with what the future commitments should be for Canada. I agree that the minister has, in another area, discussed our capital spending increases. They are impressing. Although we have been promised everything, new tanks, fighters and ships, we still have nothing in hand. The promises are not far-fetched, but implementation is certainly far distant.

My question is this: As the government has suddenly seen the error of its ways and now given priority to revitalizing and re-equipping our forces, why is the Department of National Defence proposing to close as many as nine bases, nearly one third of our total?

Mr. Woolliams: But not Calgary.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the department is not planning to close nine bases.

Mr. Paproski: How many is it planning to close; eight, five, ten—how many?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the figure the hon. member used I believe comes from a statement made by the deputy minister before the parliamentary committee, in which he indicated the difference between the number of bases that were required and the total we have at present. He also made it clear that there was no recommendation coming forward from the department or from me to the government to close nine bases.

● (1430)

Mr. McKinnon: I would like to correct the minister. He has, unwittingly I am sure, misled the House as to what the official said at the defence committee last Thursday. He said that for an effective infrastructure, the department needed only 23 bases whereas they now have 32. Therefore, I assumed that in the infrastructure rationalization paper they must have proposed closing nine bases. If this is not correct, that 32 less 23 equals nine, I would appreciate the minister correcting me and telling me what bases he proposes to close.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has just requoted what I said a moment ago. The deputy minister did give those figures. However, he also very clearly said that there were no recommendations before cabinet at this time to close nine bases and that is a fact.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AMOUNT OF AID TO ITALIAN EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Caccia: In view of the unanimous resolution passed by this House on Monday about the earthquake in Italy, is the Prime Minister in a position to inform this House as to whether a decision has been made regarding direct financial assistance by the government of Canada, in addition to the help already given?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the comments from the opposition indicate they know they have to do with a responsive government and they are right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The motion moved by the hon. member for Davenport and seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Michel was considered by the government, particularly in view of, as the hon. member said, the evident contribution by Canadians of Italian origin to the growth and development of Canada. Apart from the military aid and the aid by way of immigration, which was mentioned by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, the government has decided to appropriate $1 million to help in this plight. The Secretary of State for External Affairs will be issuing a press release on it later today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

IMMIGRATION

USE OF PRIVATE INVESTIGATORS BY DEPARTMENT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the apparent concern with which the government House leader views the use of legitimate private detective agencies as an information gathering device, can the minister advise the House if his department uses private investigators other than on the incident in October 1972, when they retained the services of Intertel?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. I will check on it. However, I am sure that is not the case.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, I want to be clear. Is the minister denying they hired Intertel at that time? If he is, I can give him the letter he sent to me wherein he states that they did. Will he now tell me whether they hired them?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I gave the answer. I will not change it. I will check on it, but it is not my understanding that is the case.

[Mr. Richardson.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTION PRIME MINISTER ADDRESS UNITED STATES CONGRESS ONCE A YEAR

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister considering the suggestion made by the committee of congress, that he should go to the United States once a year and address a joint session of the Senate and House of Representatives on matters of mutual concern as a means of improving United States-Canadian relations? If he considers that a constructive suggestion, is he willing to get in touch with the President of the United States and suggest that this be done a reciprocal basis whereby the Prime Minister will address the United States congress and the President of the United States will come to Canada once a year and address a joint session of the Senate and the House of Commons on matters of mutual concern as a means of improving Canada-United States relations?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL INTERVENTION TO EXEMPT TRUCKING OPERATION FROM PROVISIONS OF RAILWAY ACT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have some questions I should like to direct to the Minister of Transport with regard to Canadian Pacific and one of its operations, CP Trucks. In Moose Jaw in November, 1970, Commissioner McGee of the Canadian Transport Commission gave an opinion, and I believe a decision, that Canadian Pacific could carry and deliver by modes other than rail to points along its railway lines but that it had an obligation under Section 262 of the Railway Act to provide that service. Does the Minister intend to intervene at the railway's request to exempt Canadian Pacific from the licensing regulation of the province of Saskatchewan?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have received messages from both the government of Saskatchewan and the Canadian Pacific on this subject. I have indicated to both of them that before I take a final position, I will want to be very clear on some of the matters of complicated fact involved. I suggested a meeting in the first instance between ourselves and officials of the government of Saskatchewan to clear up these points.

SUGGESTION COMPANY BE FORCED TO HONOUR OBLIGATIONS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): In view of the fact Canadian Pacific was allowed to drop this rail service on the condition that it provide adequate alternate service on some 20 routes to nearly 200 communities in Saskatchewan, will the minister require Canadian Pacific to carry out the obligation they have under the legislation in effect in this country or is he going to allow them to get out from another commitment?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have checked into the background enough to know that the hon. member is completely misstating the exact terms and conditions at the time in question. The current obligations may be one thing and what we can impose may be another. I certainly will not associate myself with the grave misstatement of fact contained in the hon. member's question.

Mr. Benjamin: For a change, I would like the minister to quit hesitating and procrastinating, join the people of Saskatchewan, and tell CP to live up to its obligations or they can haul their goods through North Dakota and Montana. Will he do one or the other? Why is the minister hesitating?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quick to defend and attack, but somehow seems to have a soft spot for the way the government of Saskatchewan handled the matter in trying to use the big stick of interprovincial trade to deal with a little, specific matter. I would ask him to examine carefully the legitimacy of that, however much he might dislike CP. On the other hand, he might indicate if he thinks I am procastinating by taking a few days to find out the facts as to why the government of Saskatchewan did not do anything from September until the end of April to find out about the situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

ENERGY

ALLEGED PROPOSAL COMPANIES OPERATING IN NORTH AND OFFSHORE BE GIVEN LARGE WRITE-OFF BEFORE IMPOSITION OF TAX ON PROFITS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In his absence, I will direct it to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can the minister confirm the reports in this morning's press that the government intends to allow oil companies operating in northern and offshore acreage a write-off of 175 per cent of investment before facing a profits tax, a proposal that owes its origin to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain? It is very similar to the proposal the British are using in the North Sea. Is that the proposal the Canadian government is putting forward?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I made quite clear yesterday in answer to a question from the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby that we would be making a full statement, I think sometime toward the middle of next week.

● (1440)

Mr. Gillies: Is the minister denying the correctness of the report which appeared in the press this morning? If the government is making this proposal for the northern lands, is there any thought of extending this type of situation to other areas so that we can conserve capital and use it more aggressively in exploration for oil?

Mr. Gillespie: I am not commenting until we make a full announcement. I indicated yesterday that many of the proposals are interlinked and have to be seen as a total package.

* * *

URBAN AFFAIRS

HABITAT CONFERENCE—POSSIBILITY NO TELEVISION COVERAGE—PROPOSAL FOR DEBATE IN HOUSE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for Urban Affairs. Since NABET intends to go ahead with its irresponsible withdrawal of radio and television broadcasting services from Habitat, can the minister tell us what contingency plans are in place to provide coverage for Canadians as well as for other countries taking part in the largest United Nations conference ever held?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am hoping that NABET and the CBC will be able to work out their differences so that there will be television coverage. The conference has a large audio-visual component and this will go ahead as planned. As far as external viewing is concerned, there would be a problem, and, as I indicated the other day to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, it would be a very sad thing if coverage were not possible; not only would it be detrimental to the image of Canada but it would represent a loss to people throughout the world who would be watching this conference, one which will affect their lives on a day to day basis.

Mr. Roche: My supplementary is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his capacity as co-chairman of Habitat. Since there has been no debate in parliament in connection with the government's stand at the UN conference on trade and development, presently going on in Nairobi, a situation which has led the media as well as the public to underestimate the importance of United Nations conferences on critical global problems, would the hon. gentleman introduce a debate in the House to consider the proposals Canada will be making at Habitat in order that members may comment and thus help the media and the public understand the importance of this conference on human settlements to millions of people in the developing world?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am in agreement with the hon. member as to the necessity for encouraging wider debate in the House and elsewhere, not only on the UN conference on trade and development but also on the important Habitat conference which is forthcoming in Vancouver. However, as a former leader of the House I realise that a decision following my agreement in principle really rests upon my colleague, the government House leader who, I am sure, will take into account the representations which have been made.

Oral Questions

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF FOREIGN MINISTER OF POLAND, MR. OLSZOWSKI

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity to draw the attention of hon. members to the presence in the gallery of the distinguished Foreign Minister of Poland, Mr. Olszowski.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REASON FOR CANADA'S NEGATIVE VOTE ON RACISM RESOLUTION AT UNITED NATIONS

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the minister explain why two days ago at the United Nations Canada cast the only negative vote on a resolution dealing with racism?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have the opportunity of explaining to the House of Commons why Canada was, as the hon. member stated, the only member of ECOSC which voted against two particular resolutions. As hon. members will recall, last November the Government of Canada vigorously opposed a resolution passed by the General Assembly which linked racism and Zionism. We vigorously opposed and voted against that resolution and subsequently the House of Commons unanimously supported the action of the government on that occasion. The two resolutions dealt with at ECOSC two days ago maintained that link, a link which we regarded as unacceptable and without foundation. It is for that reason we cast a negative ballot.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

USE OF RECORDINGS FOR TELEPHONE ADVERTISING— MEASURES TO PROTECT SUBSCRIBERS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Communications. It concerns a subject about which I have already spoken to the hon. lady's parliamentary secretary. Has the minister's attention been drawn to an advertisement by Telephone Communicators of Canada Limited which appeared in a recent edition of the Financial Post announcing and promoting the use of that company's services which include the ability to call half a million household and business telephones in Canada and subject the person who answers the call to a pre-recorded sales pitch of up to two minutes in duration? Does the minister not agree that this practice constitutes an invasion of privacy and can she tell the House what action, if any, she is prepared to take to protect Canadians from being plagued by these pre-recorded commercials?

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): I suspect that any measure which would deal with that kind of thing would constitute an even greater invasion of privacy since I suppose it would mean allowing telephone companies to listen to conversations on the lines.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

* * *

INFORMATION

ALLEGED STATEMENT OF PRESIDENT OF PRIVY COUNCIL ON FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Privy Council? It arises from a report in the Montreal Gazette this morning as follows:

Sharp also defended the freedom of information act whereby all government actions would be subject to public scrutiny.

The following appears in quotes: "I don't know what good that would do". I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether the government is now opposed to a freedom of information act or whether he still stands by the view expressed on February 12 by this House when, without a dissenting voice, we approved the principle of a freedom of information bill.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Fortunately I have a record of the conversation I had with the reporter of the Gazette when I said I strongly favoured a freedom of information act. But what I did say was that this would not have much effect upon leaks.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EFFECT OF INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT ON EXPENDITURES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that the most recent figures indicate there are now about 48,000 people unemployed in Canada, would the minister indicate in dollar terms the effect of this increase upon unemployment insurance expenditure?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I am sorry, but I did not catch the first part of the question.

Mr. Malone: In view of the fact that the most recent figures on the labour force show an increase of 48,000 in the number of unemployed, can the minister indicate in dollars what this will mean in terms of expenditure on unemployment insurance benefits?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I think simple arithmetic will indicate what the answer to that question would be. As of now, expenditures in connection with unemployment insurance are lower than we had anticipated they would be at this time.

[Translation]

OLYMPIC GAMES

FEDERAL AID IN FINANCING IF LOTO-CANADA FAILS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board.

Following the announcement about the establishment of Loto Canada and the tabling of the Quebec budget indicating that the contribution of Loto Canada to the financing of the Olympic Games deficit has been considered as provincial revenue, I would like to know whether the Quebec government has asked for some safeguard since evidently Loto Canada is somewhat problematical because we do not know what will be the results of that lottery and perhaps the anticipated results of Loto Canada will not be similar to those of the Olympic Lottery. I would like to ask the minister whether in his discussions with the Quebec government there has been a reference to some kind of safeguard for a financial contribution provided by the federal government should Loto Canada not be as successful as anticipated?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

● (1450)

[English]

COMMUNICATIONS

CABLEVISION—ALLEGED REMOVAL OF FM SIGNALS FROM LICENCE PROVISIONS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Communications aware of the present policy of the CRTC which results in effective media censorship through deleting FM signals from applications for renewal of cable licensing and, if so, what does she intend to do about it?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the situation to which the hon. gentleman is referring, but I will be glad to send the hon. member's inquiry to the President of the CRTC and perhaps let him have the answer later.

Mr. Nowlan: At the same time, Mr. Speaker, would the minister check with the CRTC to find out if there was any evidence of broadcaster injury at the special hearing last Friday in Edmonton and, regardless of whether there was, whether this policy in respect of FM signals is to be applied consistently across Canada regarding all applications?

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is begging me to comment on hearings that are presently taking place before the CRTC. As the hon. member knows, I do not want to, and should not, comment on these hearings.

AIR CANADA

ALLEGATION OF POOR BILLING PROCEDURES IN FINANCE BRANCH, WINNIPEG—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Is he aware that the ongoing concern over the labour and billing problems during the last three years in Air Canada's finance branch in Winnipeg, which has been so ill-handled, is so great that the Canadian Airlines Employees Association has stated that Air Canada, Winnipeg, has asked Air Canada, Montreal, to contact former employee, Yves Ménard, currently an official of Warnock Hersey Limited regarding approximately 400 airline tickets that are currently outstanding and unreported?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, of course, the hon. member is stating his own opinion about mishandling of negotiations and I disagree with him completely. I would say there have been some very difficult issues, including what amounts to inter-union disputes, which are at the basis of the real problem here in negotiations. I would also say to the hon. member that while he may be particularly partisan, I do not think his comments in this House are very helpful.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, my feelings were also registered in the Estey Report on the problems at the Air Canada finance branch. In view of the fact that the Canadian Airlines Employees Association says that an audit of commercial ticketing has not been done since 1973, and in light of the allegations already stated, would the minister consider dispatching the Auditor General's officials to the Winnipeg finance branch to implement an audit immediately?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will say again that I really do not think this kind of comment back and forth in the House on what is really a dispute involving complicated labour relations and relationships in respect of union affiliation is helpful, and I will not engage in it.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT FRENCH BE USED AS WORKING LANGUAGE IN QUEBEC

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

Considering that each year for five years the Commissioner of Official Languages has continuously singled out in his reports the slowness and the nearly insurmountable difficulties French language users have at all levels of the operations of Air Canada, can the Minister of Transport inform the House whether he proposes to ask Air Canada to review the regulations of the company as regards the use of the French language as working language and as a criterium for employment in Quebec, and to ask the heads of Air Canada to take immediate steps so that French becomes the working language at all levels of the administrative or technical operations in Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can say to the hon. member that, while certainly there have been time lags in developing a full move toward bilingual performance in the operations of Air Canada, as indeed there have been even inside the government because of difficulties arising in this regard, the policy of Air Canada is very definitely and clearly to move toward the implementation of the Official Languages Act for Air Canada, and to assure complete service in the French language to the public wherever that is desirable under the terms of that policy, and to ensure the rights of employees to use their own language in their communications with one another, and progressively to designate positions as bilingual where that is required by the implementation of that policy. That is the policy and I can assure the hon. member, and hon. members, that the current management of Air Canada shares that policy and desires very much to move as rapidly as possible toward its implementation.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSING

CONSULTATIONS WITH QUEBEC ON RESTORATION PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of State for Urban Affairs a question of which I gave him notice.

Following the question I—asked his parliamentary secretary on May 3, whether he had received a telegram from the Quebec Minister of Municipal Affairs concerning the agreement reached at the three government levels meeting of March 1975, the parliamentary secretary answered negatively, and I understand. I am referring to page 13064 of Hansard.

Since Mr. Goldbloom told me he had sent the minister a telegram, which seems to be false, can the minister tell the House whether he will wait for Mr. Goldbloom, who appears to be playing cat and mouse, or whether he himself is prepared to accelerate the final agreement procedure with his counterpart in Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of the question, I believe on Monday, which is so long ago I almost forget the answer.

An hon. Member: You didn't know in the first place.

Mr. Danson: I realize it took him some time to be recognized and I appreciate that. The holdup has been eased. There has been agreement between Quebec and CMHC in relation to administration agreements on rehabilitation programs. The administration will be done by the municipalities with separate applications to provincial and federal governments. The holdup has been in the designation of all the urban communities in Quebec to which this will apply, in addition to Montreal. It has been the desire of Quebec to announce them all at the one time. That is the proposal at this time and I think there will be an announcement very shortly.

[Mr. Joyal.]

PENSIONS

DENIAL OF PENSION INCREASES TO RETIRED MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES AND RCMP UNTIL AGE 60—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RECTIFY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that when we were considering Bill C-52 last December the government seemed to get very close to agreeing to change the formula under which Canadian Armed Forces and RCMP personnel are denied pension increases until they reach age 60, will the minister say whether this matter is now being considered and whether we might expect an announcement in the near future?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there will be an announcement in the near future.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the President of the Treasury Board whether the government will consider introducing the necessary legislation in the fall so it can be effective at escalation time, namely, in January?

Mr. Chrétien: I do not think so, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

ALLEGED STATEMENT OF COMMISSIONER NADON THERE WAS NO DIFFERENCE OF OPINION BETWEEN GENERAL DARE AND PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister based not on the contents of the Toronto Sun, a newspaper which does not seem to have too much regard for him, but rather on an article in today's Ottawa Journal describing a statement by Commissioner Nadon of the RCMP outside the rooms of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs yesterday, wherein Commissioner Nadon is reported as having said there was no difference of opinion between General Dare and the Prime Minister, who is named in the article. In light of the fact the Prime Minister has described General Dare's assertions in the letter as being an honest mistake resulting in the difference of opinion, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he stands by that, having regard to what the Commissioner of the RCMP has said, particularly since the Commissioner said he was present at the cabinet security committee meeting?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was at the same time trying to listen to the question and read the clipping which is before me, and I may not be dealing with it exactly. But what I see here is that Commissioner Nadon told reporters that the views of General Dare and the Prime Minister were compatible. Indeed, they are compatible on the matter of not investigating democratically and legally established parties. We can leave that to the gumshoes hired by the Tories. The same opposition which was shocked the other day because a former deputy minister was engaged in the private sector I am surprised is not shocked about former intelligence officers of the United States and apparently of Canada—they are so little shocked that they hired this agency to snoop into members of the other political parties. It would be interesting to know if they are also looking at the private lives of members, and if so I would like to know who they are because it is a matter of privilege to every member of this House.

● (1500)

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you would like me to get back to the question. I am not sure if it would be worthwhile, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member opposite is reported as having told the press that he did not believe the answers I gave him yesterday or the day before. If he was misquoted he should have the decency to do what the right hon. member for Prince Albert did and force the Sun to backtrack from what they quoted him as saying. If he was not misquoted, I do not know why he is asking me questions if he does not believe my answers. Therefore, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Quite a long answer.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes. The answer may be of interest to other members of the House and I will address it to them. I repeat that there is no disagreement on this point about surveying other political parties. There is a disagreement on the conclusion drawn in the letter, in the paragraph which begins "consequently", where General Dare drew that conclusion. I repeat it was a conclusion he should not have drawn and which was not drawn from anything that the cabinet said. It was a conclusion—I am saying this for the third or fourth time to the House but the opposition and the media still manage to get it wrong—everybody but General Dare and myself—the conclusion that he drew was erroneous and he himself was referring to a cabinet committee or committee of officials to verify whether he was drawing the right conclusion. In the same article it says that I first denied issuing any such guidelines but admitted Tuesday stating there were committee meetings. This is wrong, too, Mr. Speaker. But as I said before if I spent my time correcting the errors spread about the government on the other side and repeated in the media we would—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REASON GENERAL DARE SENT LETTER TO COLONEL BOURNE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have just one brief supplementary. Before I put it, may I say that if the Prime Minister would send to me the quotations to which he has taken offence I will look at them. If a withdrawal should be forthcoming in keeping with the rules and customs of this place he shall have it, but I would expect the same courtesy of him in respect of the reference by him to my being paranoid. That might also be considered in the same light. May I ask him this supplementary.

Since he, General Dare and Colonel Bourne were all at the same cabinet security meeting, if he did not have a personal discussion with General Dare—and I accept his statement in that regard—can he explain why it was considered necessary by General Dare to send a letter to Colonel Bourne which described discussions which took place during that cabinet security meeting.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, surely there are two very simple answers to that. The first is that the letter, as I just said, went beyond what the committee decided and General Dare was using the letter to draw a conclusion and suggesting that it be discussed by officials to see if his conclusion was right. So he was putting that in writing because he wanted to go beyond the cabinet decision and know if he was making a proper inference. In other words, it does happen that cabinet decisions are recorded and they are sent back for supplementary explanations.

The second reason is that in our system of cabinet all cabinet decisions are recorded. We record them for the purpose of the secretariat. I suppose it is acceptable practice that in departments they also put this on record in order to have action further from the record of decision. It seems to me it does not demand very great insight to ask oneself why this was put into a letter. There are two good reasons for that.

Mr. Hees: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I asked the Prime Minister a serious question, which he did not answer. I was advised it was simply because he did not know it was directed to him; but he said, very kindly, he would be glad to answer it if I were allowed to put the question again. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if I may put the question again because it is a serious and important question.

Mr. Speaker: Such a procedure could take place only with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Trudeau: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am not asking that the question be put, but I do want to say to the hon. member that I did not notice that he was addressing the question to me, and I am sorry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order to raise in connection with a matter which in recent years has not been raised too often in this House but which was raised a good many times in prior years. It concerns the privileges of all members of the House in connection with the making of alterations in Hansard. As I understand it, sir, the only alterations any member or cabinet minister is permitted to make to Hansard have to do with punctuation, grammatical errors or spelling errors, and the like, but in no instances are members or cabinet ministers permitted to make alterations to Hansard which change the sense of what was said and recorded by the Hansard reporter in this House. Yesterday, in reply to a question by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), and I am quoting from photostat copies of the blues, had this to say:

MR. ALLMAND: I raised the point, which they thought might have been counter productive, that the letter—

Here is the alteration. The Hansard reporter recorded it as "might have been destroyed so they proceeded in this way." The blues were altered so that the words "might have" were struck out by the Solicitor General, or his executive assistant or whoever looks after these matters, and the word "had" was substituted for the two words "might have". The record for yesterday, at page 13441 of Hansard, indicates that the words "might have" were restored to the official record, but in the meantime the press gallery had the altered "greens", and indeed in at least one newspaper report this morning the quote of the Solicitor General came out as "I raised the point, which they thought might have been counter productive, that the letter had been destroyed". So now we know that members of the press gallery do get the altered "blues" in the form of "greens" and that that quote went out over the news media last night in the altered form. Yet today we are confronted with the original form as recorded by the Hansard reporter, and indeed which I heard, in reply to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

● (1510)

Of course, the use of the past tense "had" would completely negate any need for issuing a search warrant to find the missing letter that had been destroyed, so the logic of changing it back to the original future tense becomes very apparent. But even then it does not explain the actions of the Solicitor General. The point is that the complete sense of the Solicitor General's reply to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton had been altered and then realtered back again so that the form of the record appears accurate, but throughout the country the press used the altered form.

There is another alteration on page L-9 of the "blues", in the third line from the bottom in the Solicitor General's answer, again to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, where he said, and I go back to the fourth line from the bottom:

—but to get the exact copy that was sent to the Toronto Sun so that we could get evidence as to whether it was produced, how it was produced and who might have sent it.

The word "whether", as recorded by the Hansard reporter, was altered by the Solicitor General to "where", thus completely altering the sense of his answer. It is not a spelling error, a punctuation or grammatical error. That kind of alternation is not an alteration permitted under the rules of the House, because it is a substantive change. Perhaps an alteration might be made by executive assistants, acting on behalf of cabinet ministers, who alter the "blues" to the extent of substituting the past tense for the future tense in the words "might have" with the word "had", and perhaps that might be in order because it certainly gives the wrong indication to the media, which has the power and, in fact, did disseminate this wrong information in its report of events in this place yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) read from Hansard rough copies and brought into question the editing of Hansard and the calibre of work done by the editor in respect of accepting what his reporters transmitted to him from this place. The hon. member brings it into play. I will have to look at it. I certainly think that in the past the calibre and the performance of all people who have reported and edited Hansard have been without question.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Presumably, the Solicitor General, when he is here in the House, will have something to say about what intervention he made.

An hon. Member: You missed the point.

Mr. Speaker: I regret it; that may be so. The Solicitor General is not here. I will have to hear his version of it and I will have to consult the Hansard editor to see whether he has accepted any admonition or intervention by any member of the House which would materially alter the words reported by the Hansard reporter here, because that has been part and parcel of what has been put forward.

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I should have stated that I regret very much raising this matter in the absence of the Solicitor General, but the rules call for it to be raised at the first opportunity, which I did. The substance of my question of privilege is that nowhere, in my submission to the Chair, did I question the integrity, efficiency and ability of the Hansard staff and its editor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: And I do not do so now. I have the utmost faith in their ability, and that is evidenced by the fact that I personally never correct any "blues". I follow that practice assiduously. But my complaint is that either the minister or his executive assistant altered the "blues" and changed the whole sense of what was said and recorded by the Hansard reporter, and I choose the Hansard version over the corrected version.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, although I am not involved in this, I am a member who is concerned about Hansard and I am concerned lest some of the statements that have been made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) lead to a false impression. There could be reports in the press today saying "Allmand is accused of altering Hansard".

There are two things that I want to say. If, as the hon. member for Yukon says, changes were made that appear in the "blues", or "greens" that go to the press gallery, may I say that in my experience those are editorial corrections that the Hansard reporters make when they check back on their notes. When we make any corrections on the white sheets, that does not get photocopied.

I suggest that to accuse the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) of having made any change which appears on the sheets that go to the press gallery is to make an accusation without proof to back it up. The very fact that in the printed version of Hansard it is put back to what was taken down in the first place suggests, to my way of thinking, that there was no alteration on the part of the Solicitor General. He has not asked me to defend him, but one should not be accused unless there is some evidence.

As for the other change, I was listening very closely yesterday because I have been concerned about this matter. I have a photostatic copy of General Dare's letter which, incidentally, was not signed by him, and I wonder why there is so much fuss about it. My hearing was that the Solicitor General did say that we could get evidence as to where it was produced. The reason I was following that closely was that I showed the Solicitor General, a few days ago, a photocopy that I have taken from the Toronto Sun of that letter. I drew his attention to the fact that it was not signed by General Dare, and he noted that the photocopy provided some evidence as to where the leak might have occurred. I believe that he did say "where" rather than "whether" in one case, and in the other case I think that if a change was made at all, it was made by the Hansard reporter editing his notes, trying to make it correct, but that obviously the editor later decided that what was said in the first place was correct.

I am speaking off the cuff, just as was the hon. member. When changes in Hansard are made, I am prepared to get into a fight about it, but it seems to me that accusations of this sort should not be made unless there is evidence to support them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the two questions which form the substance of the matter are on the questions that I directed in the House yesterday and on the answers to those questions. When the "blues" were delivered to me some considerable time later—and I am not concerned about who did it at this point, although the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is, and I think it is a reasonable suggestion for him to make on a matter which he is bound to bring to the attention of the Chair immediately when it becomes apparent to him, or at the earliest opportunity, and this was the earliest opportunity—they had the alterations which were mentioned.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But the minister did not make them.

● (1520)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) will contain himself, making sure that the House has a complete record is for some other person to ascertain, certainly not the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

The "blues" came down. I listened carefully to the answers to the questions because the answers were to my questions. The changes were made when the "blues" were here on my desk. I think the House should know this. I passed them to the hon. member for Yukon because I wanted him to take a look at them because it did seem strange, particularly the last one, which was out of context completely. There are photostats available, so I understand.

Mr. Nielsen: Hansard has them now.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Hansard has them now, with the notes of the hon. member for Yukon, and I think this is a matter which can be looked into, as Your Honour says. If what the hon. member for Yukon said with respect to Hansard needs any reinforcing, I want to make it amply clear that the position which I understand he took had nothing to do with the competence of the Hansard staff. It had to do with the question as to whether there had been an alteration made by the Solicitor General or someone on his staff. That is the simple question; I just want to make that amply clear.

When I handed those "blues"—or "greens"—back to the hon. member for Yukon, I handed them back to him on the basis that the answer was not as I heard it and I wanted him to look at it.

Mr. Blais: Did he change them?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It was certainly out of context. I do not know what happened. If it was a Hansard change, that is one thing, but if it was a change by the Solicitor General, that is quite another matter and, if I may say so, I think it is an important matter because of the records of this House. I rose so that the House could know the full import of what happened on the floor of the House as we proceeded after the question period into these matters and where the particular "blues" are now located.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I heard the hon. member for Yukon on the point of order. I heard him again on a question of privilege. I do not think the matter needs to be expanded any further. I have indicated that surely the Solicitor General will have some input to make into this matter, and I will wait until he has an opportunity to make his side of the story known; and, indeed, we will check with the editorial staff of Hansard to see what in fact took place.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have a further question of privilege based on an interjection by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) which may have been caught by Hansard. When the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton was describing how he passed his "blues"—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon on a question of privilege.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. When the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton was describing the manner in which he passed me the "blues", the hon. member for Nipissing interjected: "Did he change them?" I heard it, so I must assume the Hansard reporter heard it. That inference is most unworthy, in light of what I have said here. I can assure him and other hon. members that I did not make any alteration or addition to the "blues" which were passed to me, and the photostatic copies which were made are now in the possession of Hansard and provide the evidence for which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is looking. They will, no doubt, come back to me when Hansard is through with them after recording today's proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: That, of course, does not in any way constitute a question of privilege.

Order Paper Questions

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a further point of order. Your Honour will be delighted to know that this point of order is a question to the government House leader as to the business as we proceed down through the calendar.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, on government days in the foreseeable future, until the date of the budget at least, the priority will be second reading of Bill C-84 which, as I said last week, the government wishes to have dealt with before other matters before the House with the exception of the budget. On Thursday last I gave a tentative list of allotted days from now to the end of June. I have had some discussion with the House leaders and indicated that it would be desirable to make one change in that tentative list because of the arrangements for the debate on the budget.

Therefore, I wish now to designate the following allotted days: May 17, 20 and 21; June 1, 11, 15, 16, 21 and 22. There is one change. Instead of June 8, it is now June 1. That is the same day of the week and does not alter the mix of short and long days.

In accordance with Standing Order 60, I request you, Mr. Speaker, to designate the required order of the day to permit the Minister of Finance to make his budget presentation at 8 p.m. on May 25.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Sharp: I also wish to appoint the following days for the budget debate: May 27; June 2, 3, 7, 8 and 9.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ENERGY

TABLING OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND SPAIN RESPECTING ATOMIC ENERGY

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table, in both official languages, the text of the agreement between the government of Canada and the government of Spain for co-operation in the development and application of atomic energy for peaceful purposes.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 4,087 (revised), 5,174, 5,212 and 5,279.

[Text]

HEALTH AND WELFARE—DEPARTMENTAL CONTRIBUTION TO UNITED NATIONS DRUG ABUSE FUND

Question No. 4,087—Mr. Matte: (Revised)

1. Has the Department of National Health and Welfare contributed for the past three years to the United Nations Drug Abuse Fund and, if so, does this contribution amount to $1,000,000?

2. Does the Department plan to continue contributing to a similar programme and, if so, in what amount?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. For each of the fiscal years 1973-74, 1974-75 and 1975-76, the Department of National Health and Welfare granted* $200,000 (for a total of $600,000) to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control. However, the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control was established on April 1, 1971. Since that time Canada has made the following contributions to the Fund: FY 1971-72, $150,000; FY 1972-73, $250,000; FY 1973-74, $200,000; FY 1974-75, $200,000; FY 1975-76, $200,000. Total: $1,000,000.

2. Officials in the Department are presently evaluating the performance of the Fund. A decision regarding future contributions will be taken after consideration of their report.

---

*NOTE: Please note the distinction between amounts "contributed" and amounts "granted" by reference to the Treasury Board's Authorities Manual, Chapter 30, 0.3.11.3.

PARTICIPATION OF GOVERNMENT IN FRENCH AND ENGLISH TEACHING PROGRAMMES IN SCHOOL

Question No. 5,174—Mr. Matte:

In 1975-76, did the government participate in (a) French teaching programmes in Ottawa schools (b) English teaching programmes in Province of Quebec schools and, if so, what was, in each case (i) the name of the school and School Board concerned (ii) the amount granted?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Insofar as the Department of the Secretary of State is concerned: (a) Yes, through formula payments for the teaching of French as a second language and aid given to the pilot project for the increased teaching of French as a second language in the National Capital Region. In both cases, payments are made to the provinces and not to the school boards or schools. In 1975-76, Ontario received approximately $1,300,000 in formula payments for the teaching of French as a second language in schools of the four school boards of the Ottawa region and $875,000 for the National Capital Region pilot project. (b) Yes, the government of Quebec received $9,351,866 in 1975-76 as formula payments for the teaching of English as a second language.

GOVERNMENT PROGRAMME FOR BILINGUALISM IN EDUCATION

Question No. 5,212—Mr. Horner:

1. Did the Secretary of State announce on September 9, 1970 that a government programme would provide $300 million to the provinces for bilingualism education in the schools by 1973 and, if so, how much was spent?

2. To which provinces was the money given for the teaching of which language?

3. How many students received additional education under this programme?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): In so far as the Department of the Secretary of State is concerned: 1. Yes. More than 85 per cent.

2. To all the provinces. English in Quebec and French in the other provinces.

3. It is impossible to determine how many students took additional courses under this programme.

GRAIN STABILIZATION PROGRAMME

Question No. 5,279—Mr. Murta:

1. What percentage of the total number of farmers are participating in the Grain Stabilization Programme?

2. What was the cost of setting up the Programme?

3. What is the number of employees administering the Programme?

4. What is the cost to keep the Programme in operation?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Approximately 92½ per cent.

2. $100,000.

3. Fifteen.

4. $421,000, estimated, 1976-77.

* * *

[English]

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 5,099 and 5,158 could be made orders for return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

I ask that questions Nos. 4,446, 4,955 and 5,172 be made orders for return with reference to the information which has already been made available, and obtain the consent of the House so that the balance of the information would be tabled when that is produced to me.

[Text]

DEPARTMENTAL PUBLICATIONS

Question No. 4,446—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What departments, agencies and Crown corporations publish magazines, newspapers and newsletters on a regular basis for distribution to their staff or the general public?

2. How many copies are printed by each department, agency and Crown corporation and how are they distributed?

3. What is the cost to each department, agency and Crown corporation of its publication for printing and distribution?

Return tabled.

COURRIER SERVICES

Question No. 4,955—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. For the past twelve months, by department and agency, what amount was spent on the use of (a) private mail (b) courrier services and, in each case, what was the name of the company?

2. Was any of the work done on contract?

3. What types of mail are handled by private service and, in each case, for what reason is regular mail service not used?

Return tabled.

SUFFERANCE WAREHOUSES

Question No. 5,099—Mr. Dick:

1. What are the names of all sufferance warehouses used by trucks in Canada and, in each case (a) where is it located (b) what year was it licenced?

2. How many highway sufferance warehouses were there in Canada in each year (a) 1945 (b) 1950 (c) 1960 (d) 1970 (e) 1971 (f) 1972 (g) 1973 (h) 1974 (i) 1975?

3. What are the names of the highway sufferance warehouses and, in each case, how many entries were made of goods coming in and going out for a 12-month period in (a) 1973-74 (or 1973) (b) 1974-75 (or 1974) (c) 1975-76 (or 1975)?

Return tabled.

CONSUMER ASSISTANCE GRANTS PROGRAMME

Question No. 5,158—Mr. McGrath:

1. Since the inception of the Consumer Assistance Grants Programme, for each year to date and by province, how many consumer groups have been awarded grants?

2. In the case of each such grant, what was the (a) amount (b) name of the recipient group (c) date it was awarded (d) its purpose?

Return tabled.

BILINGUALISM PROGRAMME

Question No. 5,172—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. From 1970 to date, have any departments or government bodies negotiated contracts with Berlitz for the teaching of a second language to public servants and, if so, in each case (a) what was the contract (b) how many (c) for what amount?

2. For each year, what percentage of the money granted to the school was directed to salaries of (a) teachers (b) administrators?

3. Are the requirements for (a) formation (b) experience of the teachers only under the school and, if not, is there a link between such requirements and those that prevail when hiring teachers of a second language for the Public Service?

4. For each year, how many (a) French speaking (b) English speaking public servants have followed courses offered by the school?

Return tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Is the House prepared to adopt the suggestion of the parliamentary secretary?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Are the remaining questions allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO DEVELOP STRONG SCIENCE POLICY

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth) moved:

That this House recognizes the necessity of Canada enhancing its scientific and technology efforts for its long-term benefit, and condemns the government for its failure to develop a strong science policy and for not adopting measures that will increase research and development in both the industrial and academic communities.

● (1530)

He said: Mr. Speaker, our motion today expresses not only our view of the state of science and technology in Canada, but I believe it expresses, as well, the view of a large majority of people in Canada in business and in the scientific and academic communities. I believe we could go so far as to say that most people in the department would probably agree with the temper of the motion. About a year ago, the subject of science and technology was debated on an opposition day; to be precise, on June 9, 1975. A review of that debate shows there was general agreement in parliament that increases were necessary for research and development in the sciences and in technology. One only needs to look at the trade figures for 1975. We had an $8.2 billion deficit in high technology trade. That, alone, should cause the government to review its objectives and goals in this area.

A short review of the attitudes of key departments of government shows a lack of purpose and direction. The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Drury) is a part-time minister. I do not say that in a derogatory way; I realize he carries two portfolios and that is an onerous task. He spends three or four hours a week, I understand, on the affairs of the department. He may wish to correct that figure, but that is the information I have. As I read his current view, Mr. Speaker, it is that we have a branch plant economy and perhaps we should purchase our technology offshore. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) echoes the view of the Economic Council of Canada that the future of Canadian industry lies in the development of knowledge-intensive, high-technology industries. These two views seem to be opposed.

Then we have the "on again, off again" special capital cost allowances—short-term in the main—of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), and the Anti-Inflation Board regulations that classify research and development in the same grouping as donations to charity, sales promotion and advertising. The amount spent on research and development by a company is tied to a formula based on previous expenditures. If a businessman wants to increase his research and development expenditures, he must decrease in some proportion his donations to charity or expenditures on sales promotion and advertising. An analysis of those three positions will show the state which science and technology are in from the point of view of the department, from the point of view of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and from the point of view of the Minister of Finance.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The Anti-Inflation Board regulation will hold back our advancement in industrial technology for years. This policy has resulted in a further withdrawal from industrial research in Canada. Several companies were involved in rather extensive research and development, but they have either moved offshore or to a better financial and unrestricted climate to carry out their work.

We have a welfare state in Canada financed by a resource-based economy. Due to the attitudes and the performance of the Minister of Science and Technology, we will never move out of this trench. In spite of the advice from the Economic Council of Canada and the views put forth by the academic community and the National Research Council, in spite of the views of parliament, and industry, we appear still to fumble and stumble along with the cosmetic policies and platitudes in the minister's speeches about the advances we have made in our short history. We have little time for those who like to state and restate our past achievements about how we set up a department of science and technology. I will always give credit to those dedicated people whose persistence and foresight kept our scientists together over the years.

The problems facing us today are too urgent to allow us to bask in the sunshine of history. There is too much time spent rearranging, not necessarily in chronological order, a series of developments and laying beside it a so-called science policy and then saying our achievements are a result of that science policy. That is a clever psychological trick. How many people involved in administering the research and development programs put forward by the government have worked in the field of science and industrial research. It seems to me they spend more time producing press releases and multicoloured annual reports than looking to the advancement of our scientific knowledge and the translation of that knowledge into technology so that human and economic gains may accrue to the people of Canada and the world at large.

This party believes that scientific research should be financed by government. We believe that the crises we are facing in resources, energy, trade deficits and human well-being can only be dealt with by increasing funding for scientific research. We believe the present policies of the government will relegate Canada to the position of a third-class or fourth-class developed nation. We believe the present policies of the government will keep us in the backwater of developed nations and will widen the gap between the rich and the poor in this country. If we continue on our present course, our standard of living will gradually decline and the status of science, education, health and technology will descend to such a level that no amount of money will reverse the trend.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, let me now examine how scientific advancement is accomplished. Money alone is not the answer. The minister has stated this, and I agree with him. It is part of the solution, however, for researchers must be paid, equipment must be purchased and accommodation must be provided. A prime concern must be the environment in which the scientific community works. Scientific excellence cannot be achieved in an environment threatened each year by budget cutbacks and uncontrolled inflation. Scientific budgets have been vastly affected by inflation. Everybody knows this, but there does not seem to be any response to it from the department. The rising cost of equipment has meant a decrease in the number of researchers in a given field. Many post-doctoral researchers are living on a pittance because the project head must try to balance people, budgets and inflation and the purchase of expensive equipment required for his particular field of research.

Scientific achievement is the result of hard work, a gradual building of knowledge in a field of science until, through the efforts of dedicated people, the result being sought becomes evident. That result must be translated into technology, and finally into the gross national product or into the enhancement of the health, well-being and standard of living of the people of Canada and the world. We often read of scientific breakthroughs. That is a journalistic term, Mr. Speaker. I do not really believe there are any scientific breakthroughs. Whatever we achieve in the advancement of scientific knowledge is the result of damned hard work. Our responsibility, as legislators, is to attain an environment stated in firm policy and backed by financial resources to allow the scientific community to pursue their research and to move Canada into the forefront of developed nations.

Great speeches are made by members of the government who say we must help the third world countries, that we must transfer technology to the developing nations, that we must help them advance and improve the quality of life of their citizens. What technology are we going to transfer? What technology will we transfer in the future? Are we going to transfer the branch plant technology the Minister of Science and Technology talks about? Are we going to transfer the knowledge-intensive, high technology the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce talks about? Surely anyone with an ounce of logic must realize that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is really jawboning, as are other people who speak for CIDA when they advance this platitude.

● (1540)

If we do not move on an emergency basis to fund scientific research and research and development in industry, we shall have no technology to transfer to third world nations as we go down the road in the future. If we continue to let our trade deteriorate and our high technology trade balance deficit to increase, we shall place the people of Canada in a precarious position from which they may never recover. If we do not listen to the advice of the Science Council of Canada, the National Research Council, the Medical Research Council, the Economic Council of Canada and the voice of industry, and translate that advice into policy programs which are adequately funded, what future is in store for us? We shall become a second or third-rate scientific community unless we change the attitude of the government.

We must admit what most of us recognize, that a communications gap has opened between legislators and the scientific community. This was ably alluded to by the Science Council of Canada. Organizations such as Scie-Tech and the special committee on science policy in the other place, chaired by Senator Lamontagne, have been helpful and useful in bridging this gap. But the recommendations of the Special Committee on Science Policy have been basically ignored by the government. Instead, we hear about a balanced policy of scientific research and industrial development as proposed by the Minister.

The people of Canada have the right to know the government's position on the future of this ministry. Will the government continue to downgrade the department, a downgrading made evident by lack of direction and funding? Are we to have a part-time minister in future? Or are we now seeing the demise of the ministry? We went from a full-time minister in 1971 to a half-time minister in 1974. Now we have the part-time minister of today. It would appear that the present minister has been given the task of overseeing the demise of the ministry of science and technology. That is the opinion of many to whom I have spoken in the last few weeks. When the minister was first appointed to this portfolio, people speculated that now we had some muscle in the cabinet. After all, the former president of the treasury board is responsible for overseeing science and technology. That is what people thought.

What is the reality of the situation? I submit that our science policy is heading for disaster. Years of excellent research are being undone, and the advice of the special committee on science policy is ignored. Many research teams are now being disbanded. I have, personnally, seen letters sent to some of our most expert researchers, inviting them to leave Canada and undertake projects in other jurisdictions. Is it not sad that I must report this to the House? If we had half the purchase price of one Orion aircraft, which each cost $60 million, devoted to the advancement of scientific research and the development of industrial technology, we would be in a position to reverse the dangerous course we presently pursue.

In an era of restraint, talk of increasing expenditures brings the usual response from the treasury bench, "They accuse us of talking about restraint but continue to recommend expenditures." When ministers talk in this vein, they are hunting for headlines. They try to discredit any positive recommendation with the use of such tactics. I recall, at the time of the last debate one year ago, going up in the elevator with the minister. He conveyed that very thought to me, saying, "You are talking out of both sides of your mouth. You cannot have it both ways." I say that the government's priorities are wrong. They are out of phase.

The restraint program the government has implemented is, in my view, a dishonest effort at best. There is little or no co-ordination between the ministry of science and technology, the ministry of trade and commerce, and the ministry of finance. One wonders what they talk about if, indeed, they talk. We pour out millions of dollars in low-interest loans or no-interest loans to developing nations. Perhaps we should divert some of that money to science and technology so that in future aid will be available. By doing that we shall make sure that our economy is sufficiently buoyant to aid developing nations and any technology we shall transfer to them in future will be of such a calibre that it will enable developing nations more readily to take their place in the world community.

At a time when there is great speculation about the resources of the world, when gloomy predictions are made about limitations on growth, and when there is talk of more cartels in commodities and resources, the government of Canada appears to be in full retreat. We have in Canada great expertise in earth sciences. There have been major developments in earth sciences in the last decade. We should use that expertise to understand better our resources and utilize better our technology.

I recall that a couple of years ago the members of the House were most interested in the people in western, northern and eastern Canada who were drilling for oil. We debated the subject and asked many questions in the House. Members on both sides spoke in glowing terms of the approximately 100,000 people engaged in drilling for oil and gas, people who rank among the world's most knowledgeable and expert in the field. What has happened to them? You will now find these people all over the world, the reason being our ill-conceived policies on energy and poorly thought-out policies on taxation. Now the government is beating its breast about increased exploration and drilling activities and creating more tax revenue, all in the name of energy self-sufficiency. If the government had possessed the foresight to meld the scientific expertise developed in earth sciences with the expertise of experienced seismic and drilling crews, perhaps we should not be in our present energy difficulties.

Let me turn for a moment to the subject of nationalism. Any time we talk about the academic community, the subject of nationalism seems to raise its head. It is true to say, I think, that in the late 1950s and early 1960s there was a wave of confidence in science. There was a feeling that we could translate much of the research being done into technology and lessen our dependence on foreign technology. With the growth of inflation and a series of cutbacks in research funding in the early 1970s, the hope of developing high technology for a strong, secondary industrial base faded.

We have seen lately an attack on the national origins of some of the leading researchers in Canada. This came about, I submit, because our universities geared themselves to the funding of the federal government and responded to the expansion of universities brought about by the provinces to meet the post-war baby boom. There developed in some fields of research, not necessarily scientific research, a surplus of researchers. It became the vogue to point to the national origin of a particular department head, and if he was not Canadian he was open to criticism. Let me say this: If we ever reach the point at which we assign a nationality to knowledge, expertise, vision and dedication, we shall deal a death blow to scientific research, a blow far greater than such research was dealt by cutbacks in research funding. Not only must we retain our best researchers in Canada but we must, with increased funding, continue to seek out the best minds in the world. I am afraid we shall lose many of our best researchers unless we can pry loose initial funds.

I think the government began its romance with science in the 1960s. In 1971 it appointed the first minister of science and technology. It was felt that the portfolio ought to be a low-profile one. After the initial splash of publicity was over, the first minister in the portfolio adopted a low profile. In fact, I do not think he is very high-profile at any time, in any portfolio. However, that is getting personal and perhaps I should not say that.

[Mr. Kempling.]

• (1550)

The second minister did not really have time to settle into the department before there was another shuffle that produced the present minister. Just in case some members think I am being unduly harsh on the present minister, let me say that I have the greatest respect for that gentleman. He has served Canada in many capacities and in many fields. I say that he has served Canada well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kempling: I have a high personal regard for him. Having said that, I have to question very seriously whether this should be a low-profile ministry. When I see the confusion in the departments of energy, industry and finance, I think that science and technology should not be a low-profile portfolio. I recognize that it is difficult to place achievements in science beside dollars allocated for funding, but that is the nature of science. It is a series of building blocks that are put in place, with the assistance of funding, until a structure is built that produces the result sought when the project was begun. One of the side benefits of scientific research is the spin-off effect from one project into another. It is something that cannot be predicted; it just happens.

Many people have said to me that if Best and Banting were to apply today for funding for insulin research, they would probably be turned down because the criteria have been changed. They would be turned down because of the criteria put forth by this government. There are many other aspects and benefits from the spin-off that are not apparent to us and may not be apparent at the start of a research project.

We are faced today with declining productivity in our industry. I do not know how many people realize it, but last year we lost 11 million man-years due to strikes. We lost more than 11 million man-years in industry last year due to alcoholism and drug use. Surely we must address ourselves to this problem if we are to increase our productivity. We can have the most productive and highly developed technology available, but if it will not overcome the more than 22 million man-hours lost because of strikes, alcoholism and drugs, it is not going to be of much use. I believe we have many serious problems facing us at present, in the future, and as far ahead as we can see. We in this party believe we should have in the House of Commons a standing committee on science and technology.

Mr. Maine: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kempling: I see the hon. member opposite applauding. I believe that his position is the same. We believe it should be, and can be, non-political in its make-up if its terms of reference are properly stated. We believe this could be a means of bridging the gap between the academic and industrial community and legislators. We believe this committee should have input from provincial governments, that it should meet with industrial and scientific groups and should co-operate fully with the committee in the other place. In fact, it may be that we should have a joint committee. Be that as it may, being a House of Commons man, I would rather see a committee here that would co-operate with a committee there, and we could work together on projects.

We believe we should fund scientific research through various departments, on a priority basis. The funding should be projected for a minimum of five years but should be structured on a continuous ten-year cycle. While some scientific researchers do not like direction in their research projects, they must of necessity work toward broad national objectives. Surely, the fields of medical research, energy, ocean sciences, transportation, communications, housing, agriculture and pollution are of national concern. We must harness the scientific expertise we have in these fields and fund them on a priority basis over the next decade.

I cannot accept the philosophy that perhaps we should purchase our industrial technology offshore. That would place us in second or third place forever. While there is much technology we can use that has been developed elsewhere and may be a stopgap solution in the short-term, our long-term objective must be to translate the results of our scientific research into technology that we can use domestically and sell or transfer to others. In other words we must translate it into gross national product. We have to be hardnosed about where we are going. We can only do this if we plan on a continuous ten-year cycle and state the level of our funding on a five-year budget. If we could reach this objective, those involved in the field of research would be able to see where they were going. They would know what funds would be available to them and could time their projects accordingly.

When the minister spoke on June 9, 1975, he said, among other things, and I quote from page 6562 of Hansard:

> Put simply, we want to achieve a balanced development of knowledge and research capability in all fields of science and technology. For this reason we propose introducing a more unified and co-ordinated granting structure. The change will not detract from the influence or prestige of either the NRC or the Canada Council. We look to the former to have a major influence in the development of our industrial technological base as well as research into problems which, because of the scale of facilities required or because of time frames, are inappropriate for non-governmental bodies.

Where is the more unified and co-ordinated granting structure? All we have seen is a drastic cutback in all research and a restriction in industrial research and development through regulation of the Anti-Inflation Board. Further in his remarks, the minister stated, again at page 6562, and I quote:

> There is no decline in Canada's scientific and technological effort. The emphasis is shifting, I hope, toward growth in the application of science rather than the acquisition of knowledge, but in total I feel that our science and technology are healthy and ready to aid us in meeting the future. If we have a problem in relation to science it is in deciding where to put our money.

Well, they obviously decided not to put the money into science and technology. Because of the cutbacks, they decided not to adjust the budget of science and technology to account for inflation. When we view the cutbacks in this ministry and the cancellation of several research and development projects in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, we have to question the sincerity of the minister when he made these remarks last year.

I have gone on at some length. I know there are other members who wish to contribute to this debate. I will close by saying that we in this party are very concerned about the future of science and technology in Canada. Unless we reverse the present trend, we shall lose valuable researchers. I have read letters which many of them received from universities in other jurisdictions, inviting them to continue research outside Canada and quoting the size of the funds available for their work. It is a shame that the body of expertise we have built up in this field should be allowed to dribble away. Once these people have left, it will be very difficult to get them back for the benefit of Canada.

● (1600)

What are our plans for industrial development? I have followed the great debate which has raged in connection with foreign-owned corporations and branch plant economies. Unless we continually fund technological development—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kempling: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I, before concluding, refer to the regulation of the Anti-Inflation Board which, in effect, restricts research and development work. I am sure hon. members will agree that businessmen do not put funds into research and development when they are operating at a loss, or merely breaking even; they do so when their enterprises are operating at a high level of profitability. That is the point at which they are interested in developing new products, confident that they have a market for them. To place any restriction on research and development is counterproductive. I hope the Minister of Finance will take this into consideration as he prepares the forthcoming budget, because if anything should be changed, that particular regulation under section 12 should be changed.

I thank the House for allowing me to conclude the remarks I wished to make. I know there are many others who wish to speak.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, Canada has one of the fastest growing labour forces in the western industrialized world. We have tried to meet the needs of this country, according to a special commission of the OECD, by tremendous expansion of educational facilities from kindergarten to post-graduate level. This country is turning out more highly educated, highly skilled people than ever in its history.

The minister of colleges and universities in Ontario was quoted a week ago as saying that in Ontario alone more than 1,000 people were working to get degrees as doctors of philosophy. Extrapolating this figure across the country, and including those working on masters degrees, I would imagine the total number would be in the neighbourhood of 10,000. Many of these people have been looking forward to the time when they would conclude their difficult and extensive work toward their doctorates—looking forward to finding work which was rewarding both financially and in terms of achievement in Canada whether in our universities, in our research institutions, in industry or government.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious to me that those expectations are not founded on reality. There is unanimous agreement in the scientific community, in the universities, in government and in private industry that there are not, and will not be, positions available to the people who are graduating, and that in fact we have no science policy. Members opposite will, I am sure, maintain that I am saying these things because I take a very partisan view. I admit to being partisan. Let me, therefore, put on record the views of the Royal Society of Canada as expressed in a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in April, 1976, copies of which were sent to all members of parliament. Allow me to quote a few paragraphs from that statement.

Budget freezes and cutbacks along with inflation have so impoverished research and development in all three sectors—government laboratories, universities and industry—that we are facing the break-up of competent research groups . . . the downgrading of the quality and scope of research, and loss of morale among researchers.

The brief goes on to say:

By 1975, government support for industrial research and development (considered as a fraction of gross national product) had declined to 87 per cent of the fraction of GNP it had in 1969.

In government laboratories, the 1975-76 level of financing was only 83.3 per cent of the level in 1969. "This has not arisen because of the transfer of significant amounts of research and development to industries or to universities. This transfer has not occurred. Instead, the decrease has come about as a result of inadequate budgets."

What did the society say about universities?

The situation in Canadian universities is even worse. In 1975, financing had dropped to 67 per cent of the 1969 level.

The letter goes on to point out:

The government has frozen the 1976-77 budgets of the National Research Council and the Medical Research Council, the two granting agencies which provide most of the funds for scientific research in Canadian universities. This freeze will cause a further decline this year to about 60 per cent of the 1969 level.

Senior civil servants are saying the same thing. The president of the National Research Council was quoted in the Financial Post of January 24, 1976, as follows:

Canada will not be able to hold its own in the international market for new and improved manufactured products in a few years time because of these research cuts . . . We in Canada have been losing ground since 1969 in the research and development effort so vital to ensure that Canadian products compete favourably in the overseas technological market.

He goes on to point out that the freezing of the budget has meant cutbacks in all the support services which researchers in government institutes need. The government has cut back, or is in the process of winding up, a whole series of programs which we were told just a few years ago, in 1970, were the most promising method of building up our secondary industries to their full competitive potential. I refer, for example, to programs under the Industrial Research and Incentives Development Act and programs designed to ensure greater industrial productivity. Many other agencies created in this field by various government departments are being phased out as rapidly as possible.

● (1610)

Why is it, with government policies developed in answer to criticisms contained in the report by the Senate committee on science policy headed by Senator Lamontagne, criticisms to the effect that government policy was not meeting the needs of Canadian people, we now see a winding-down completely or a cutback of these programs? It is not just the academics or the theoretical scientists whom I have already quoted who are saying we are in real trouble. Dr. Keith Downey, director of the oilseed program at the Canadian Agriculture Research Station at Saskatoon, who was awarded half the Royal Bank award of $50,000 which is awarded in science, annually, by the bank, for his work in developing Canada's rapeseed crop, one of the major new agricultural crops we are selling in this country, had this to say:

Canadian investment in scientific research and development is falling far short of the level that other developed nations consider essential to their survival . . . Canada's investment of 1.3 to 1.4 per cent of annual gross national product in research and development is only about half the total spent by Western European nations and Japan.

Furthermore, Canada's research outlays equal just 4 per cent of U.S. efforts and are lower than the targets set in 1972 by Ottawa's special Senate Committee on Science Policy.

This country is in a unique position because of its proximity to the United States and because the people, in the main, speak the same language. It is easy for Canadian scientists to pack up and leave Canada, particularly when the government says, as it is every day and has been saying for the last four or five years, that it does not want them, does not need them and does not have the money to finance the work they are doing. It is easy for them to pack, leave and go to the United States.

Efficient and productive research teams built up over the years in Canada are being destroyed and gutted. When the government and the people of Canada wake up, as they will in a year or two, they will realize that we must begin to give support to scientific research and development, which we have not been giving if this country is to survive, grow and utilize the major portion, if not all, of its potential. We will have to begin to recreate these research teams in government institutions, universities and private industry, those same teams which this government would permit, indeed encourage, to be disrupted at the present time.

It is not as though we did not have the researchers who are capable and want to work. Three months ago I put on the order paper a notice for the production of papers asking for the tabling of correspondence between Canadian researchers, scientists in physics, chemistry, agriculture and medical science and the Prime Minister, the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Drury), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). This correspondence had reference to the government's policy of freezing or cutting back on funds for scientific research. The government has not yet agreed to table this correspondence and I have not yet seen it, although I have received dozens of letters from people in these fields—and I make no secret of it—or copies of letters sent to the Prime Minister and various ministers. I do not have the time to deal with many of them, but let me quote from one which went to the Minister of State for Science and Technology from a professor of the department of chemistry at the University of Toronto, dated January 16, 1976. He says, in part:

One has only to examine the budgetary treatment of the National Research Council over the past six years to realize that support of basic science in this country has occupied a very low position in terms of federal government priorities. This council, which plays a crucial role for all Canadian university scientists engaged in fundamental research, has received budgetary increases over the period 1970-75 which have fallen far short of increased costs due to inflation. In a period when the consumer price index increased by well over 50 per cent, the NRC budget received cumulative increases totalling only 5.5 per cent. In the forthcoming budget year (1976-77), when the CPI will probably again increase by more than 10 per cent, the NRC budget will be frozen at the already inadequate 1975-76 level.

I do not have time to read the whole letter, but let me put one additional sentence on the record as it indicates that we have people here who are capable and more than qualified to do the kind of work required. This is what Professor Yates says in part of his letter, talking about the calibre of Canadian scientists:

To name just a few from my own university: Geoffrey Ozin was awarded the Meldola Medal (from the U.K.) given annually to the leading inorganic chemist under 35; similarly John Polanyi was awarded the Marlow Medal (also from the U.K.), a corresponding award to the leading physical chemist; Adrian Brook recently won the Kipping Award of the American Chemical Society, given annually to the leading organosilicon chemist—

I am sure that kind of record can be duplicated by many universities in Canada. This is the situation, as I suggested earlier, the government is cutting back on in its winding up of programs and incentives to private fields. Let me just give two illustrations of the failure of these programs, a failure that we on this side predicted at the time. This government has given millions of dollars in grants and loans to RCA for research work in its laboratories in Montreal. RCA Canada had the largest private research laboratories in Canada. That company has made the decision to decentralize its research facilities. That is its decision, and the Canadian operations will ostensibly report to the United States operating division. In fact, I am told that the Canadian research facilities will virtually disappear. The highly educated, highly trained and highly qualified people who are employed there will be either laid off or transferred to the United States. That is an illustration of one result we have had in this country of this government's programs.

Then we have Northern Telecom which, together with Bell Telephone, set up a subsidiary called Microsystems. Microsystems received $34 million in past years to build microprocessors. These are computers of a silicon base which will be used increasingly in telephones, telecommunications, computers and in television sets—you name it, but they will be using microprocessors.

● (1620)

Northern Telecommunications has decided it can sell a lot more of its production in the United States than in Canada. Therefore, it has been proceeding to buy up companies in the United States which do this kind of work. It has been establishing new companies in the United States and is moving its operation to the United States. It will close down its Canadian operation, an operation in which, as I say, in the last few years we have spent $134 million.

Anything that has been learned as a result of the expenditure of that money which was received from the Canadian government will be used to make profits in the United States and to employ people in the United States. The policy of the government in respect of support for private industry and for research and development has been, as the Minister of State for Science and Technology admitted, a failure. I would put it more strongly and say it has been a complete failure. It has been a failure because the government, as I said at the beginning, has no science policy and has not thought through what it hopes to do with regard to support for scientific research and development.

The government does not know what products it should try to develop. Therefore, it does not know what sort of research and development it should be funding and what kind of companies have a chance to market the products which might be developed. The government, therefore, does not know what skills it should try to establish and what skills should be taught at the manpower training centres. It does not know what kind of people it should be helping and supporting in their undergraduate studies at Canadian universities. The reason is very basic. The government has no industrial strategy. It has no strategy which will allow it to set research and development priorities over the next number of years. The government should try to sort out how it should fund its hit-and-miss research process which is funded now on an ad hoc basis. Such a strategy is difficult to construct, but this country will be in a great deal of economic and social trouble in the next few decades if we do not really think through what is needed in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am sure there are other members who wish to speak. Therefore, I thank hon. members for having permitted me to continue and assure them that I shall not abuse the privilege I have been given.

If the United States can successfully mine minerals on the ocean floor, as they have been discussing at the recent Law of the Sea conference, then much of the production and sale for export of minerals which have made this country so successful in recent years will be in not only a difficult but a crisis situation, because this will destroy to a large extent our present economic structure which is based on the export of raw and semi-processed materials mainly to the United States but to other countries such as Japan. If this should take place, we will have to pay for the importation of even more manufactured goods than we do at the present time. Where will we get the money required to pay for these things? In this country we need to develop a rational policy, a policy which covers the needs of our growing population, rather than the kind of hit-and-miss policy we have had.

We must have a policy which looks at the resources, the raw materials and the manpower we have. We must develop a program in which scientific research is an integral part, and we must use it to the best advantage. If we are to do that, we must start thinking about rationalizing our whole approach to production of goods, industry and scientific research. Without that, the debate we will have in 1977 will be even more dismal and will involve even more protest from the people in the scientific community, in the private sector, in government and in universities than what we have at the present time.

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the tone that the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) injected at the beginning of his comments. Sometime in a motion of this nature we end up arguing and someone trips both of us. However, the member does show a sincere interest in the topic, and honestly seems prepared to make recommendations in which all of us might be interested. I hope, for my part, that I might be able to do the same.

The hon. member for Halton-Wentworth referred to the minister as being very low-profile. I think the minister would agree that probably the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth and myself have more weight, either separately or together. Perhaps that is not a profile. I also notice the hon. member mentioned something about there being something dishonest, basically, in the thought of dealing with industry, trade or finance as though the departments might not really be working with each other but moving in different directions. It seems to me that the minister has had pretty close consultation with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

We have heard talk of the possibility of there being a super-corporation probably to deal with the air-frame companies in Canada. If this were done, obviously one would presume there would be some research moves in the direction of inventory and manufacturing capabilities in this country today. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce probably has some close contact with science and technology in this regard.

At the finance end, I would presume the finance department has probably had more contact than anyone else, because although there was a reference to a cutback, I notice in the budget that, rather than being a cutback, there was a 13.6 per cent increase, and in respect of the average department we are dealing with a 13.5 per cent increase. So it appears that science and technology has been dealing with finance.

One of the great problems is the discussion of pure research versus the very practical technology industrial type of research. I must be fair about this. My main interest, being English, is that I speak somewhat as a layman. I leave the really serious scientific side to members who are highly qualified in this field, such as the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Maine) and some members on the other side who I know have strong and good views on this subject. As I say, my main interest is English and I have received the odd gold medal for public speaking, but I would say that the best medal I have received, or the most important, would be the copper medal I received from a football team for common sense.

● (1630)

Perhaps there should be some common sense here, and maybe some ordinary souls should speak out. With a minister as interested and as diligent as the one we have, a minister with as broad a range of interests in science as he has, a minister with a profound interest in art, music and the writings of Khalil Gibran and others, and also a strong interest in science and technology as evidenced by his own capabilities and applauded by the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth, I think I can speak to him in a common sense way, and perhaps as a person I might say to him that I make a plea for pure research rather than continually developing the industrial and practical side. It may be that Franklin's wife said, "Hey, Ben, go fly a kite" and we got all these lights. Maybe it was not planned, and maybe he did not have the lab going at that time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacFarlane: I think we have to take note of the fact that we do not know if in some areas of research people are doing a study into the coefficient of the speed of skating in relation to the size of the blade and the size of the rink. This sounds like interesting research, but I assume that when the blades get big enough, they back up against the boards and you stop. I do not know why you should have to reearch that. When the blades get bigger, they slow you down. Other people might do research into basketball rebounding. It is very interesting to stand and throw a ball up and see in which direction it goes—but if you are not in the direction it went, there is not much point in throwing it up in the first place.

I must say that in my opinion the layman has something to say here, and since I have spent some time at universities and I have some friends whom I meet across the country, since I have met people in la belle province at the Université de Montréal, since I graduated from McGill myself and have spent some time in the maritimes at Mount Allison and, of course, my close connections at McMaster and with the west through UBC and Alberta, this brings me in touch with many people who are concerned at this time.

I consider the motion before us today a very serious one. It deals with a specific area of government activity, but in a broader sense it reflects our total country today. I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak because it affords me the opportunity to respond to the remarks of the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth. I have mentioned his name several times because I really believe he has set a tone which I hope will be maintained through the entire day when we will be putting forward some of our own ideas which we think are of benefit to all concerned.

I have met many great teachers, professors and researchers through these years and I have come to admire their dedication and skill. During the past several months I have met with many, both here in Ottawa, in other parts of the country and at McMaster in Hamilton. In our discussions I have been most impressed with their commitment to Canadian research and their concern for our research capabilities in the future.

At this time, the entire nation and every aspect of it is battling the war against inflation. The inflation rate in Canada has caused hardship on all sections of our society. Research is not exempted. Our dollar does not get us today what it did in the past. Our research dollar does not provide the same benefit today as it did yesterday. This situation has unique effects on continuing research in Canada. Those who work in research may feel forced to leave Canadian centres to seek a better environment in which to work and live. Programs which have developed over the past years may suffer and never be completed because of lack of continued funding. We may lose for years the one cure that we have worked for and to which we are so close.

I have another great fear. At our universities research plays a dual role. It provides for society today, and trains our scientists for tomorrow. A university teacher engaging in original research is able to bring to his teaching of undergraduate and graduate courses a first-hand excitement and freshness in presenting the latest in new scientific knowledge.

There are reasons why we are all concerned about the status of Canadian research. We are one of a few nations with a wealth of resources and a low population density. This will permit the creation of a future society, implementing western ideals and avoiding past errors. We can mould our future on the basis of national analysis and creative imagination. This potential, in itself, is a valued resource. This resource may suffer also. Mr. Speaker, the value of research is not only the good news it brings us, but also its ability to warn us of danger and prepare for these dangers. It is a cost we bear today for tomorrow. There are the concerns that have been presented to me by the research community in Canada. They are concerns for Canada today and for our future.

Mr. Speaker, I have spoken of the ill-effects of our restraint program on research in Canada. I have said this without embarrassment, for I know it was a difficult decision the government took—a decision they would rather have not taken. However, the seriousness of our present economic situation called for strong, firm leadership. The cutbacks demonstrated to all the government's ability to show leadership in difficult times. The word "cutback", do not forget, is not to be confused with the government actually going in and cutting back. The fact is that in these inflationary times the amount available, even with increases, means that those in charge within the research areas would have to make these decisions themselves. They have taken this responsibility and they have made the decisions, but still they indicate to us—and in some ways I hope they will win the battle—that more priority should be given to them and that, as we move toward the end of the control period, some day we should be planning now to give more priority to research than we have in the past so that we do not contribute to what might be called intellectual colonialism where we depend on research coming from elsewhere and holding us in its grasp. We may utilize those fine researchers who come and work in our communities and help develop our young students, but we must also utilize our own young students, doctors and researchers so that we do not become victims of intellectual colonialism.

The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Drury) is well aware of what I have said. In October, 1975, the minister wrote a paper for Science Forum which indicated not only the government's commitment to the science policy in Canada but also a firm understanding of how the scientific community functioned, its problem and its need. I know the minister would welcome all hon. members' views and thoughts on this topic. I have every confidence that all recommendations would be considered with a fairness and freedom which we have come to expect from the minister.

Canadian research has produced good things for Canada and the world. Our medical research has reduced suffering and death. Chemical and industrial research advances have put Canada in an enviable position. Our nuclear research and development is highly acclaimed throughout the world. On a more personal level and a more important one, our children do not die from diphtheria, our contemporaries can live satisfying lives with diabetes. There are many ways in which we benefit from past medical research. Does not our generation have an obligation to leave to our grandchildren the benefits of our contribution to the control of other as yet uncontrolled diseases?

Mr. Speaker, I have spoken of the present hardships facing research in Canada today. I have spoken of the success we, as a nation, have seen in this important area. We should be equally disturbed and proud at this time. I have said that the minister would receive recommendations in good faith and with fairness. I believe that research can only thrive in a climate of continuity. We risk too much if funding is "stop and go". The scientific community seeks to moderate the size of the downswings in funding, and this preoccupies them to advocate forcefully a solution of continuity. We should structure our research activity in such a way that both politician and scientist can work with the economic resources available. We should consider the advantage of more effective and direct communication between scientist and government. Only in this way will the research community and government be able to better serve Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, we in Canada have much to be concerned about. The government has shown leadership in its fight against inflation. We know the program is working. It is important, during this period, that we concern ourselves with the days ahead. I see a strong light at the end of the tunnel, and it gets brighter all the time. While they are hard time, they may also be the best times. The people I have spoken with on the matter of funding for research share this view. It is willingness to work together and to labour in Canada for the good of all Canadians. There is an appreciation of the current situation in our economy. There is a belief in the future, and a conviction that it will be better. We can, indeed, spend and study today to plan for tomorrow.

● (1640)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Pensions—Denial of pensions to retired members of armed forces and RCMP until age 60—Government action to rectify; the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Manpower—Measures to provide employment for students; the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—Multiculturalism—Proposed appointment of minister.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO DEVELOP STRONG SCIENCE POLICY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Kempling:

That this House recognizes the necessity of Canada enhancing its scientific and technological efforts for its long-term benefit, and condemns the government for its failure to develop a strong science policy and for not adopting measures that will increase research and development in both the industrial and academic communities.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, before I begin my remarks I might just comment on a couple of the items raised by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane). In his assessment of Canada's research, development, scientific and technological efforts, he sees a light at the end of the tunnel. I suggest to the hon. member that if he is going to be accurate in his assessment of our situation in Canada today, that is a headlight of a train coming the other way.

The hon. member made another interesting statement. He indicated that spending on research, development, science and technology by the government would be frozen until the end of the controls period. I hope that was an error in semantics, or an error in language, and not an error in fact with regard to an indication of the intent of the government, because the situation is far from being rosy and far from being a situation which is getting better daily, as might be indicated by the metaphor "the light at the end of the tunnel."

My friend and colleague, the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling), who introduced this motion today, indicated that it was just about one year ago, on June 9, 1975, that I had the honour of introducing a motion on an allotted day dealing with the subject of the Liberal administration's science policy for Canada. That motion not only had the support of all opposition parties, but was also supported to a greater or lesser degree by a number of speakers from the other side of the House.

That day marked the first time in the history of this House of Commons that a full day was allotted to debating science and technology, and by and large the debate was erudite and of a high level. Several hon. members, albeit mainly from the opposition, spoke with supporting facts and figures about Canada's comparatively poor performance in this vital area. Hon. members from all parties, including the minister, acknowledged the importance of science and technology to Canada's and to the world's future. Yet comparing this administration's commitment to support science and technology for last year and this year, there is a deterioration: apparently this administration, when confronted with the issue of science and technology, is prepared to genuflect, but beyond that to do nothing whatsoever to demonstrate a sincerity of belief in the importance of science and technology to Canada's future.

In this technological age it is fair to say that there are few, if any, aspects of our society which are not affected by science and technology. However, in the context of the issues facing Canada today there are a few areas which are affected more than others by science and technology, toward which a meaningful science policy must be specifically directed. One of the scars remaining on the Canadian economy as a result of the policies of the Trudeau administration is the seriously weakened secondary or manufacturing sector of the economy. To a large degree, industries within this sector can be termed high technology industries. This deterioration has certainly had a bad effect on our trade, but another effect has been to lower the rate of employment in these industries. The current unemployment rate is at a record level, 7.4 per cent, and is directly related to the lack of health and vitality in this very important, high technology sector of our economy—and this the Trudeau government refuses to acknowledge in any substantial way.

In addition to its effect on highly technological industries, science policy is absolutely essential to any positive program of Canadianizing our economy and reducing our dependency on foreign investment, because foreign investment and foreign technology go hand in hand. The issue may have dropped from the front pages, but there are still millions of Canadians who want to see this government take positive steps toward the goal of increasing the proportion of our economy which is owned by Canadians.

To a very large extent the quality and quantity of life of Canadians will depend upon how we utilize science and technology. To even the most myopic observer our scientific potential is nowhere near being matched by our performance. With positive programs and strong initiatives we can effect dramatic improvements in such areas as housing, education health care, food, production, and urban transportation. It is difficult to imagine any aspect of our Canadian economy which is not affected by science and technology, but the problems associated with the above four areas in particular, namely, secondary industries foreign investment, quality of life and the environment, can be cured through the implementation of a meaningful science policy. The present ad hoc approaches of this government are simply unsatisfactory.

The other day, when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) introduced his follow-up or second green paper on energy and analysis of Canada's potential energy policies, he introduced a new term self-reliance, as opposed to self-sufficiency. It was introduced in a context which is desirable for Canada for self-sufficiency in energy. I would go so far as to say it is extremely desirable and necessary that as a national we be self-reliant and that we not rely on other nations for our welfare. It is only through self-reliance that we can have freedom of action to pursue goals which are meaningful to Canadians so that we can have the security which is so necessary for a good life. That is the only way in which we can pursue independent policies which will provide Canadians with the better life they deserve and can have.

However, in talking about self-reliance I think it is necessary to acknowledge that it would be foolhardy to seek self-reliance and self-sufficiency in all things. Quite clearly, we will never be self-reliant in bananas or pineapples, but one can identify three very key elements of our society in which it is imperative that we be self-reliant if we are going to have true self-reliance as a nation. The first of those areas is, of course, energy. In the last three or four years we have had ample demonstrations of how precarious a nation's future is if it is not self-reliant in energy, and we in Canada have that potential. The second area is food. A country which consumes more food than it produces is in a very precarious position, and one in which we as a country need not be in. Indeed, we are not—and I trust and hope that the government recognizes this. The third leg of this stool which forms the foundation upon which a self-reliant nation can be built is the area of technology. The government apparently does not even recognize the necessity for self-reliance in technology, because if we must continue as we have in the past and as we are today increasingly relying on foreign technology, we will never be able to have the freedom of action to pursue Canadian policies and Canadian goals which we want and deserve.

Self-reliance is not synonymous with isolation or with putting up barriers. A nation can be self-reliant and maintain active trade with the rest of the world, as indeed Canada does; but in order to trade I think it has to be recognized just what commodities a country has to trade. I think this can be broken down into four basic commodities. A country can obviously trade in renewable produce, agricultural goods, wood and wood products or hydroelectricity if it is generated in that form. These products we have in relative abundance, and through them we achieve a favourable trade balance. These items are products from non-renewable resources such as iron, steel, oil, gas nickel and other minerals. Canada produces and exports these in great abundance. It is very much like a farmer who maintains a standard of living by selling off a piece of the farm every year. Eventually the farm is sold off and there is no capital left, so the farmer has no means of making a livelihood. We cannot continue, in perpetuity, to rely on the sale of non-renewable resources to finance our standard of living. We can sell a third commodity, as any nation can—the sweat of the brow of its people. The Canadian people would never tolerate the long working hours and low pay necessary to make us competitive with some third world nations whose main component in the manufacture of commodities is brawn.

● (1650)

This leaves only one alternative, and that is to sell the skill, talent and technology of Canadians. This comes in two parts, the buying and selling of talent and, more important, the sale of technology in the form of value added in the manufacture of high technology products. In this area our performance as a nation is nothing short of disastrous. I have before me the trade figures for the last 25 years, broken down by groups, from Statistics Canada. Until 1970 our trade imbalance in high technology was $2½ billion. That was not good, but we produced more than enough primary products to pay for our negative balance in high technologies.

Since 1970, two years after the present government assumed office, there has been a steady, straight-line deterioration in our trade performance in high technology. In 1975 our negative balance in high technology trade was $8,192 million, an astromonic and disastrous figure. If this straight line continues, the nation will soon be bankrupt. We will have to resort to the draconian measures that Great Britain resorted used. There is precious little evidence that the government recognizes the severity of these figures. They certainly do not show that they recognize it by offering tangible programs and policies.

How is all this related to research and development? Coincidentally—possibly coincidentally, although I do not think so—we examine the figures which relate to gross expenditure on research and development as a percentage of the gross national product, and we see that the peak was in 1969. For years prior to this our research and development efforts were increasing as a percentage of the gross national product. In 1969 they represented 1.33 per cent of the gross national product. That is half of what the United States spends on research and development, Mr. Speaker, and it was the second lowest figure amongst industrialized nations in the western world. Since then there has been a steady deterioration closely paralleling the deterioration in our trade balance in high technology goods. In the latest figures I have, for 1974, .84 per cent of the gross national product was spent on research and development—one-third of what is spent by the United States, and that compares badly with industrialized western nations.

It is absurd for hon. members opposite to claim that we have a great minister who knows how important this is and who is working hard on behalf of science and technology in Canada. We have not seen that demonstrated. The minister may have had a fine record in the past, but his recent record is abysmal. This disastrous trend has to be reversed, Mr. Speaker, but the options are limited. We can resort to such draconian measures as Great Britain took, and devalue our dollar, impose high tariffs, put on exchange controls and all those things that are predicted by the pessimists. Already capital is leaving the country in anticipation of such measures because people see that evidently the government has no other programs to offer.

Mr. Caccia: Could you name them?

Mr. Andre: I could, but I will not. If the hon. member does not know about them, that is the typical myopia of members on the other side. They should read the newspapers. Our second alternative is to buy the technology needed in order to compete in the world. But that is self-defeating. A high percentage of our economy is already foreign-owned. Foreign technology does not come without foreign ownership; they go hand in hand. Xerox, Kodak and Polaroid have technology—but no amount of money could buy it. They can all set up branch plants in this country, but of course that does not cure our trade problems. The third and only reasonable alternative is to develop our own technology. Unfortunately, this government has not demonstrated any appreciation of this option.

In my opening remarks I noted that this is the second time that science and technology has been debated in this House—both times, I might note for the record, at the initiative of this party, and that says something about the priority given the matter by the government. In another sense, it has to be recognized that the House of Commons is not the only forum for such a discussion. The question of science policy has been discussed widely outside this House. For example, the Senate Committee on Science Policy, the Lamontagne committee, has been studying Canada's science policy since 1965. It has produced three reports containing a multiplicity of excellent recommendations which have not been implemented. The committee is now hearing witnesses and trying to draw to the attention of the government the disastrous path that has been followed.

● (1700)

The Science Council of Canada, funded by the federal government for the purpose of examining science policy, has been in operation a number of years and has produced excellent reports and materials. The minister, who I guess devotes three or four hours a week to the department, has no time to read the reports. Evidently he has not been briefed by anybody who reads them. There is not one iota of evidence to show that the government has paid the slightest attention to what that scientific group has been saying. Scie-Tech, the Canadian Association of University Teachers, and a multiplicity of technical organizations across the country, have all commented extensively and contributed valuable studies and data on the subject. But judging from how the government has responded—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member, whose allotted time has expired. The hon. member may not carry on without the unanimous consent of the House. Does the House give its unanimous consent for the hon. member to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I will not prevail on the House much longer. I was of the opinion that our speeches were to be limited to half an hour, not 20 minutes. I will summarize by saying that the Science Council recently submitted a brief to the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy indicating the six areas in which in the 1960s our scientific and technological posture was seriously weak. Evidence accompanied the material; it is available to the minister and anybody else interested. It shows that in each of these areas the situation remains precarious and difficult.

In summary, let me spell out quickly the things the government ought to do. Regulation 12 of the Anti-Inflation Board should, as the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth suggested, be changed. That would cost the taxpayer nothing and could stimulate research and development.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I agree.

Mr. Andre: The government could institute positive research and development incentives, because the amount of industrial research and development undertaken in this country is steadily decreasing. There must be more direct government spending in this area. As the previous speaker, the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth indicated, in the present period of restraints the government, unfortunately, can do nothing. But it has decreased spending on research and development since 1970. In periods when government spending rose 28 per cent, 32 per cent and 29 per cent respectively, spending on research and development went down. Therefore, no person opposite can claim that research spending decreased this year owing to constraints of the restraint program. That, Mr. Speaker, has been this government's posture virtually since it took office. I am convinced that not until this government is turfed out will there be any change in this policy.

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I have some bad news, some good news, and some more bad news. First, I thank the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) for bringing this issue to the fore in the House today. It is an important issue and deserves more attention. I support the hon. member's suggestion regarding the creation of a standing committee of the House of Commons on science and technology.

Now I come to the bad news. I feel that Treasury Board must be condemned for its policy of freezing university and government research budgets, and I include the budgets of the National Research Council, the Medical Research Council and the Social Science Research Council. This policy has done much damage and is doing much damage. It will be hard to tell how much damage this policy will ultimately do. The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) said he thought the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane) had said that this was to be an ongoing freeze. With respect, that is not how I understood the comments of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain. I understand it is to be a one-year freeze. At any rate, that is what I understood the hon. member to say. Even so, a one-year freeze is not satisfactory.

Mr. Speaker, our present standard of living is the direct result of the harnessing of science, engineering and technology. This will be true to an even greater extent in future. It is very shortsighted indeed to tinker with our standard of living, which is exactly what the freeze is doing. So far as I can see, this dastardly policy has brought only one benefit. It has aroused the scientific community as it has never before been aroused—and it is about time, too. It is about time the scientific community realized that it, like others in the economy, must explain and justify how they spend the taxpayers' dollars. I urge people in the scientific community to organize, to join organizations like SCITEC where they can make their case known. Let them advise their members of parliament so that we can, within this political process, be informed of the problems of the scientific community. In this way we can also inform them of the realities of politics.

Mr. Paproski: Great stuff.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Well said.

Mr. Maine: I feel that Treasury Board has made a mistake. But then, any government, or any person cannot avoid, if action is to be taken, the making of mistakes. Only if you do nothing can you guarantee that no mistakes will be made. The great thing is to minimize your mistakes and to learn from the mistakes you make.

I say that the government is to be commended for establishing the Ministry of State for Science and Technology. In 1971 the government considered a new concept, a difficult concept which had never been put into practice. The ministry was set up, action was taken and mistakes were made. But the government learned from those mistakes. Last summer, three years after being established, the new minister, having been installed in office in 1974 and having learned about the department's problems, action was taken and the department was reorganized. What has emerged is a completely new organization—and new faces with it. You will now see new faces in the entire top structure of the Ministry of State for Science and Technology. In the last nine months the ministry has accomplished more than most departments accomplish in decades.

Initially, MOSST made the mistake of adopting too high a profile. This created difficulties and made it difficult for the department to accomplish what it deemed was necessary. The department was ineffective. That, primarily, is why the reorganized department has adopted a low profile. It wants to be effective, and it is now doing its work without making a lot of noise about it. People who do not understand the department have criticized it for adopting a low profile. But people in the scientific community and those closely associated with the department know why this must be so and give the department full credit for what it is doing.

In this connection, may I quote from issue No. 8 of the proceedings of the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy, commonly known as the Lamontagne committee. On Wednesday, March 31, 1976, Mr. John Shepherd, executive director of the Science Council, that advisory body to the government, said, as reported on page 8:15 of the Minutes of Proceedings of that committee:

> At a very practical level MOSST is performing exceedingly well now as compared to the way it performed two or three years ago. It is struggling manfully to make the contracting out policy work, for example; it has established very effective relations with many mission departments; it is being extremely co-operative in science policy problems such as the transfer of technology from government laboratories to industry; and there is every indication that at that level of practical, low profile co-operation, MOSST is indeed performing very much better than it has hitherto.

The brief of the Science Council is printed as an appendix to that same issue of the committee proceedings. Paragraph 55 of the brief states:

> As an agency of the federal government, MOSST needs to respond to immediate problems and thus is oriented to short and medium-term issues. In addressing these problems, its role is to exercise influence rather than to wield power. In the vernacular, MOSST must have a low but distinctive profile.

● (1710)

Because it is a low profile department does not mean that action has not been taken. The people responsible for this action have been very effective. What has been this reorganization? We have a new secretary who was a deputy minister in the Department of National Health and Welfare. He brings with him the knowledge of the organization of government. Being a deputy minister, he knows how it works. Under the deputy minister we have three assistant secretaries covering government, industry and university. The man heading the government branch is a government man with 20 years experience dealing with different departments of government. He is very smooth, diplomatic and effective. In nine months he has accomplished a tremendous amount in getting that department working smoothly and co-operating with other departments of government with which it has to deal. The university branch has as its head an ex-vice-president of the University of Quebec at Three Rivers. She is a very efficient, effective woman, who is extremely well qualified and knows the university sector. I only hope the civil service does not grind down the efficiency which she has displayed to date.

The other sector—the most important one in so far as our economy is concerned—is the industry branch. The industry branch has been doing exactly the things in the last six to nine months that I have been advocating, and that is the primary reason I am in this House today—my concern with science in industry. It is almost an extension of Treasury Board, and as such has been extremely influential in the science policy that has been implemented in so far as the funding of science as every budget has to go through Treasury Board.

In the industry branch there are three primary areas it has been working on that are of extreme importance to this country. Make or buy, a policy whereby we are trying to transfer more technology to Canadian industry had been working very successfully with the assistant secretary of the industry branch when he was in the Department of Supply and Services, the most effective and effecient branch of government I have heard of. They were able, within two or three months from receipt of an application, to have a signed contract out to the applicant. With most departments of government I cannot even get a reply to a letter within two or three months, let alone a signed contract from initial contact. That policy has been in effect for a short period of time, since the first minister introduced it. It is now being re-evaluated to see if it can be improved in any way. It has been successful; they are trying to make it more successful.

The second, very important area has been government-incentive programs. Some have worked, some have passed their usefulness and others need a revamping because they have not accomplished all the objectives. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce contracted with Mr. Gordon Sharwood to look at this and make recommendations. He worked in consultation with Dr. Peter Mayboom of MOSST. They made their report at the end of January, and it was submitted to cabinet. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) reported to the Lamontagne committee yesterday that he had been briefed by Mr. Sharwood and that recommendations would be forthcoming within the next month or so. Hopefully, the whole document will be published and released to the public. This is an extremely important area, how to tackle the increased research and development needed in industry.

The third area the industry branch worked on, which is also extremely important in the Canadian environment, is the Grasley report on innovation, "The Availability of Risk Capital for Technological Innovation and Invention in Canada." Robert Grasley is a consultant who has been hired by MOSST for this report. The report has been submitted and is currently being evaluated as to how to implement its recommendations.

An extremely important factor for science in Canada in industry is how to encourage the entrepreneur. How do we harness his talents to benefit the Canadian economy? The government is beginning to understand the importance of research and development and how it solves our problems. I quote the recent announcement by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) about increasing funds for research and development. In a period of restraint, when moneys are not available, $9.7 million has recently been added.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Maine: All members should support that increase. This brings us to the point of what are the justifiable cases which will help solve the problems of Canadians. Where can we see the results of how money spent will benefit Canadians. Increased moneys can be obtained. This is a message to the science community, as well as the government, on how to increase the funding for science and technology in this country.

There is one area of importance that has not been tackled. Science and technology not only have to be harnessed, but controlled. It is this area of control that the government has not tackled. That is a shame. I urge them to get involved in this area post haste. The problem of the multinationals is very severe. I would like to go into detail on a current problem, one that occurred last month with regard to the RCA labs in Montreal. Radio Corporation of America decided to reorganize its company. They rationalized the North American market, that is, Canada and the United States, and made regions within that area responsible to New York. Canada is just another region of the United States in so far as RCA is concerned. As such, they do not need research labs in Montreal: they have centralized all research labs in the New York area.

I say to the minister and the government that that is not acceptable. In so far as the Canadian people are concerned, it is irresponsible. It shows a lack of sensitivity for those who work there. It involves Canadian priorities, Canadian jobs and Canadian contributions. This complete lack of responsibility by RCA should not go unchallenged. The government has to stand up, take notice and do something about this. We cannot carry on this way even though it is a branch plant of the United States. As the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) would say, we will be milking in a rear position on the cow's udder.

There is one other area which is totally unacceptable. The hon. member for Halton-Wentworth said, and the hon. member for Calgary Centre added, the Anti-Inflation Board's recent guidelines classified research and development expenditures with charity and donations. Research and development is not a charity; it is a necessary part of Canadian life. Our standard of living today is a direct result of harnessing our science and technology. It will be more so in the future.

If you enjoy your standard of living and you want to enjoy it more, you had better not cut off our funding. To treat it as a charity, or an area where we should not increase our spending, is absolutely ridiculous. I appreciate the necessity of the Anti-Inflation Board guidelines to get across the message of restraint in this country. We have to beat inflation. However, you do not cut off your right hand in doing it when it will provide our future. Research and development, science, engineering and technology—that is our future. You do not cut down on the donations to increase science and technology. You do not cut down on science and technology to increase your donations.

I would like to finish off with one positive note. I have hope. What I have seen in the past nine months in MOSST gives me hope. Something can be done and is being done. I only hope the importance of these other areas is recognized by the government, and I hope, also, that the same energy will be used in dealing with them as was used in turning around the Ministry of State for Science and Technology and making it an effective department.

• (1720)

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter this debate. May I say at the outset that I certainly agree with the first part of the observations made by the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Maine). However, I take exception to his description of the Ministry of Science and Technology, and I plan to develop this theme later.

Members who have followed the debate and who have listened to the speeches by the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling), the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), and my hon. friend from Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), will recognize that there is a great deal of diversity of scientific endeavour which touches on the lives of all Canadians. I want to focus on two important points. I want to reassess the Ministry of Science and Technology, to take, as it were, an overview. Then I wish to turn to an area which I believe holds out a great challenge, one to which the government has not addressed itself: it is the development of institutions capable of handling the explosion of knowledge we have witnessed in recent years.

Before going further, I wish to compliment the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth for introducing this motion, one which clearly reflects the government's disregard for the importance of science and its inability to establish a science policy for Canada. After four years of existence, the Ministry of State for Science and Technology is on the verge of collapse and its operations during that period can best be described as ineffectual and powerless. When the ministry was first established it was formulated, one might say, with sex appeal and presented as the government's response to the need for providing better scientific and technical advice to various government departments. This exercise was doomed to failure for three reasons. First, with its limited budget it was obvious the ministry would be unable to generate the expertise necessary if it were to develop a forceful voice for science in government circles. Second, in keeping with Parkinson's law, it was inconceivable that a fledgling ministry could have any significant impact on well-entrenched departments with extensive in-house research expertise available to them. Third, the ministry's mandate was doomed to failure from the outset because it lacked authority for action.

In response to the inevitable failure of the program, the government introduced its new science policy for Canada during the Speech from the Throne in 1974. A kit was circulated providing background information which was interpreted by many as the forerunner of the establishment of a super-ministry. In commenting on the National Research Council, the Medical Research Council and the Canada Council, the document stated:

> Generally the councils have been successful in achieving their major objectives. However, the disciplinary approach to financial assistance has not produced sufficient balance among the various research disciplines. Further, the increasing importance of interdisciplinary research demand financial assistance to this field of endeavour.
>
> There is still a need for financial assistance programs on a disciplinary basis. At the same time there is a growing and increasingly urgent need for a stronger co-ordination of the granting councils to assure support of a balanced development of knowledge and research capability.

The science policy enunciated in the Speech from the Throne and accompanying documents envisaged substantial changes which would have far-reaching effects on public policy. The scope and authority of the ministry were to be broadened and strengthened to such an extent as to give it the potential for affecting virtually every scientific endeavour carried out in Canada. The changes proposed were to involve not only government structures but future policy orientation and development. Thousands of the most able and highly qualified people in the country, together with teaching and research institutions across Canada, would be directly affected. With hundreds of millions of dollars at the department's disposal every year, the total spectrum of research and development would be directly related to government priority and national goals. What happened to these grandiose ideas? The minister disappeared. The promises contained in the Speech from the Throne vanished, and the responsibilities of the important portfolio concerned have been relegated to the Minister of Public Works.

The final chapter in the demise of the ministry was written when the present minister announced, in September of last year, that the existing policy would be scrapped and replaced by three branches with responsibility for science policy in the government, university and industrial sectors respectively. As if this were not a sufficient indication of the low priority attached by the government to the development of a science policy, he also stated that a corporate services branch would take over responsibility for the administration of the ministry.

We have now come full circle. Having begun with the expectation that the government would show genuine concern about developing a science policy, we have reached the present position in which we find a minister without authority, without a policy and—what is even worse—without any apparent interest in shaping future government policy in this field.

My own views of the importance of research and development are well known. Work in this field has been a major source of economic growth; it has been responsible particularly for the creation of new industries in the areas of electronics, chemicals and computer technology. The search for improvements in productivity has made it possible to expand output while lowering costs.

It is not my intention this afternoon to attempt to cover the broad spectrum of science programs, neither do I wish to go into detail respecting the low priority the government has attached to science in Canada. To place the subject in perspective, a brief comment on the Medical Research Council will serve to illustrate what has been the experience in other areas of scientific endeavour. In the relatively short span of eight years, the prestigious Medical Research Council has seen its confidence in the future replaced by financial crisis. Funds for medical research have not kept pace with the demands of society or with the expectations of the research community. In terms of constant dollar value, funding has declined. Increased difficulties have arisen in deciding on which discipline or project money should be spent. Increased difficulties have been encountered in attracting and retaining highly qualified people. There is a growing feeling that the quality of research staff and the significance of their work is not recognized by policy-makers responsible for funding research.

The resulting atmosphere of stagnation has created new phenomena, alien to many in the academic and research community, which will inevitably have an adverse effect on the quality of health care. I find it incomprehensible that the federal government should budget such an infinitesimal sum of money for research into health and welfare, such an important cornerstone of our national health system. For reasons which have never been explained, or perhaps even comprehended, those responsible on the benches opposite have refused to accept the principle that medical research, medical education and the quality of health care are inseparably linked.

● (1730)

In the few remaining minutes I have I wish to comment briefly on the urgent need and, indeed, the challenge confronting the federal government to develop the political capacity and understanding to respond in a very positive way to developments in the scientific community.

Perhaps the most important challenge of our generation has been the immensity of the technological revolution and our inability to develop political institutions and the intellectual capacity to deal effectively with these changes.

We have to recognize there are many thoughtful people, including those in various scientific disciplines, as well as consumers, who are asking the basic question if this technological revolution is producing dehumanization. I do not pretend to have the complete answer to that question, but I believe in part it is related to the difficulties we are experiencing in defining humanism in terms that are universally acceptable and, secondly, the infinitely difficult task of defining the technological revolution in terms that Canadians understand and in a context that will eliminate fear and assure the security and peace of mind Canadians are seeking.

The technological revolution has been characterized by an explosion of knowledge that is advancing at a pace faster than politicians understand, or at least admit that they understand, and what is readily apparent is that the pace of this advance is accelerating year by year. I have no doubt that by the end of this century man will learn more about himself and his environment than he has learned in all the history of recorded time, and yet despite this obvious fact the government has ignored this particular challenge and has remained mute.

Scientific progress and knowledge have produced and will continue to produce a total change in man's economic, social, and moral environment, yet the government has developed Minamata vision and fails to act in response to this challenge.

The danger of this change is not the burden or responsibility of the scientific community, but rather the danger is that we have not seen a corresponding change in our political institutions to deal with this knowledge which may be decisive as to whether the course of change will be for good or for evil. For example, the development of the atomic bomb has created a fundamental change in all our thinking regarding relationships with other nations.

We see a growing concern in the world community regarding the risks of nuclear warfare, yet despite our fears there has been a proliferation in the number of nuclear weapons and a failure of our political institutions to reverse this trend, and an absence of universal moral persuasion to force our politicians to eliminate there weapons. Canada as an intermediary power with the technological know-how should be a leading moral voice in attempting to resolve this issue. Our record, which has been debated very many times in this House of Commons, gives evidence to the contrary.

The disparity between the developed and non-developed nations is a well recognized problem, yet despite malnutrition and starvation of over one billion people our efforts to eliminate these social injustices have been primarily limited to phrases like "the new economic order", etc., which I can assure you do not fill empty stomachs.

Computer technology has unquestionably added to the affluence of our society. However, its infringement on the privacy of individuals has not evoked an adequate response from the political institutions and we have not developed the intellectual perception to measure its future impact.

Medicine has not escaped the technological revolution. In many respects the technological explosion in health services has been far greater than that experienced in other disciplines and, not unexpectedly, has been accompanied by political and moral questions that remain unanswered.

We have seen substantial development of scientific methods capable of shaping the political values of individuals, or what is sometimes commonly referred to as brainwashing. These measures, both physical and psychological, will undoubtedly be developed and refined in future years.

More profound is the likely development of the science of adapting the human personality by chemical and surgical means. It is presently an established fact that certain personality defects can be eliminated by such methods. The consequences of these developments are profound, yet I see little thought given to such matters by governments or, indeed, by those governed. The rapid evolution of the science of genetics poses serious political and moral issues which remain unanswered.

If these examples seem somewhat futuristic, let me assure you they are not. I think all I need do today is mention such topics as organ transplants, artificial insemination, lifesaving systems, euthanasia or abortion, and I am sure I could elicit an immediate response and obviously an immediate debate.

[Mr. Holmes.]

We must recognize that advance in knowledge cannot be suppressed, and yet this is precisely the impression the government is conveying to the scientific community and the public by failing to respond to the aspirations of the scientists on the one hand, and failing to develop the institutions to deal with this knowledge on the other hand. I want to remind all hon. members in this House that in the past when suppressive tactics have been utilized or attempted to be employed, such action has invariably failed.

Demand for knowledge is as much a part of man's nature as is this spirit for adventure. What is needed is derection and purpose, and these will only emanate when we exert an equally profound effort to advance our knowledge and develop our political institutions in concert with scientific advancement. This is the government's challenge if we are to develop a meaningful science policy for Canada. In my opinion the government has failed in that challenge.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the question in the motion before us deals with two primary points, industrial research and development, and academic research. Members who preceded me have talked of both of these areas and I think those who will follow will do the same, dealing I hope more specifically with the academic side, which I do not propose to deal with in a substantial way in my speech.

The first point I should like to make is a more general one in connection with the problem governments have with priorities; that is, where they are going to spend their money.

Quite obviously it seems to me, from my experience here in the House of Commons since 1968, the opposition—in fact I think all politicians at every level—spend very much of their time paying lip service to the need for governments to spend less money. They do this on every occasion, yet when you look at this in hard cold terms here in the House of Commons it is quite evident that the same people, in practically every area, are trying constantly to get the government to spend more and more money. I do not think they can have it both ways.

It is unfortunate the public do not really see us as we really are. They hear the statements we make on television blasting the government for high expenditures. They hear such statements directly in their communities, but they do not see the reality here in the House of Commons where those same people are talking out of a different side of their mouths compared with what they say to the public. It is very important that the public begin to realize that they cannot have it both ways either.

In terms of research and development there is no question but that it is very important. However, so is every other area of government activity. I do not think there is any doubt that we ought to look after our senior citizens, that we ought to look after those who are sick and in hospitals, that we have to look after our veterans, as well as problems in respect of industrial and academic research. We have to do all these things. It is not very fair or very constructive to turn around and zero in on one narrow area in one particular debate, pointing out that we should be spending more money, without at the same time telling us where we should be spending less in order to get additional funds to put into that particular area of activity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1740)

Mr. Cafik: The next point I wish to discuss is in line with industrial research and development, an area in which I have taken a great interest since being elected to parliament. In my riding I have conducted a series of seminars at which I bring representatives of the government from Industry, Trade and Commerce, Statistics Canada, and other branches dealing with the business community, to meet the people of my riding in order to acquaint them with what I call the other side of the coin. People often say that the government has a negative influence on our lives. They know that the government takes tax money out of their pockets but few, especially small businessmen realize that the government has a very positive effect on their lives and has something to offer and contribute in respect of the advancement of their development in their particular areas of activity. When one looks at what has been done, for instance in the area of research and development, by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce—Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may have a little order. There seems to be a battle going on here and I would appreciate having the opportunity to speak.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, may I say that although I do not happen to agree with what the hon. member has been saying I have attempted to listen to his speech and give it the credit it deserves because of the work I know he has done on it. I apologize to him for what has occurred. We have attempted to listen to his speech, and I hope he will be permitted to carry on.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). I must admit I have always found him to be a very attentive member of this House, particularly when I am speaking. I do not know whether it is because he wishes to attack me later on or whether he agrees with what I say. However, I have no complaint and I appreciate the comments he makes.

I was talking about the work done by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in connection with research and development. There is no doubt that no other department, in a government of whatever political party, deserves more credit than the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is one of the best departments in government in attempting to deal effectively with the business community. When I say this I do not mean to imply that I agree with everything done by this department, but by and large its programs are well conceived, well implemented, and have accomplished great things, I think, for the advancement of industry and industrial development in this country.

I might mention the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act and the program which flows from that act in which the government becomes involved in expanding scientific research and development which might be of significant benefit to Canada, if successful. This particular program involves itself with the private sector in a very significant way. In the past five years over $150 million has been expended by the Government of Canada directly in respect of the private sector in order to assist it in this area of activity so that it might expand its industrial research and development to create job opportunities, advancements in our economy, and thus help the private sector as well. I think that program has been quite successful.

The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has the PAIT program, the program for the advancement of industrial technology. This is designed to assist Canadian industry develop new or improved products, processes or services, which incorporate an advancement in technology and offer good prospects for commercial exploitation. This program is being used very widely by the industrial sector in Canada. Over $135 million has been expended in this area in the last five years. These are both good programs.

I think one of the unfortunate things in respect of both these programs and other programs the department has is that very often the small business community does not have the expertise to go after these programs, to make out the applications, and pursue them sometimes at considerable cost. Too much of these benefits is left with the large industrial organizations. That is a problem which I believe the government recognizes. I certainly do. It is an area of activity in which we as individual members of parliament can become quite involved in order to bring these programs to the attention of small businessmen so that they can take advantage of them. I know that as a result of initiative taken in my area, in co-operation with the federal government, we have managed to bring that lesson down to the small business sector. This has been quite effective with people who normally would not have used these programs.

There is also the program called the Defence Industry Productivity Program which is designed to assist Canadian industry in developing and sustaining its technological capability to supply defence requirements on a competitive basis under the Canada-U.S. defence products sharing program. This program too has been very widely used. In that area we have contributed to the private sector in excess of $240 million in the past five years. These programs under Industry, Trade and Commerce, and many others which I do not need to outline today, are an indication of the importance the government attaches to industrial research and development.

My rough estimate would indicate that the amount of money we have spent in the private sector, or which we are proposing to spend in the private sector, in the 1975-76 fiscal year in this area alone is nearly $300 million. We also spend, in terms of research and development work, about $950 million on in-house laboratory work related to scientific activity through the National Research Council, the Department of National Health and Welfare, and others. This is a large amount of money to be spent on research and development. I am pleased that we are spending that amount.

I will say, however, I am a little disappointed that we have not moved more quickly in the area of transferring amounts of money from in-house research and development into the private sector directly. The policy has been laid down by the former minister of industry, trade and commerce that this is the general approach and direction of the government in the future. I know that the wheels of government move slowly, but I would hope the new Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) would follow the example established by his predecessor and move quickly to move this kind of research back to the private sector, where I think it can be done more effectively and efficiently. There might be more benefit in the private sector than we would perhaps generate by doing it in-house.

In addition to this, there is a fair amount of money, I think about $200 million, spent on university grants and scholarships in the non-profit sector for research and development. All in all the contribution of the government on an annual basis of about $1½ billion toward research and development is a large amount of money in anyone's language. I think it could be argued that the amount should be greater, but I think there are just as many arguments that it should be less in a time of restraint. These are value judgments all of us have to make as individual members of parliament concerning where the priority should be.

I am relatively satisfied that the priority given to research and development has been reasonable in a time of restraint. If we spend a lot more money there might be significant benefits from it. But like all research, of course no one knows what the pay-off is until after the money is spent. That is the very nature of research work. There is never any certainty even whether there will be a pay-off. To put more than $1.5 billion into that area at this time with the risks that are involved seems to me perhaps to be going too far.

● (1750)

In addition to the money that is spent by the government itself, in the neighbourhood of $1.5 billion, there is a large amount of money spent by the private sector. It is estimated that in 1975 in excess of $700 million was spent on research in the private sector by the industrial community. You might wonder why I would bring this up when we are really debating the amounts of money contributed by the government itself. I do so because there are special arrangements under the Income Tax Act for fast write-offs in connection with money spent on research and development, which amount to about a 40 per cent contribution, which means that of that $706 million spent in the private sector alone the government is contributing in excess of $300 million in special tax write-offs in order to allow it to do that kind of work.

There is a lot of money being spent on research and development, but there is obviously room for spending a lot more. I think that when our economy is in a condition where we can allow an increase in government expenditures, some consideration should be given to accelerating the expenditures in this area of activity, but at present I am totally satisfied that the amount we are spending, particularly in the industrial sector, which I have talked about most in my few remarks today, is a reasonable amount.

Perhaps in some way we could get more benefit without spending more money, but I would simply make one point to the government for consideration. A large section of our research funds is provided by way of grants, some of which range up to 90 per cent of the cost of a research project, and some go down as low as 25 per cent. I think there would be some merit if the government were to consider giving less in grants in certain specialized areas, where it ends up giving low interest loans to many corporations which wish to get involved in research and development and which are quite confident they will have an economic pay-off in the immediate future, and cease to put money out with no expectation of return. I hope that the government, particularly the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, will give some consideration to adopting such an approach.

I have spoken to many large and small businessmen who praise these programs quite highly, but at the same time many of them say that what they are really looking for is access to funds. They say they cannot get funds at a reasonable cost in order to make high risk investments in research and development.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is borrowed money.

Mr. Cafik: Yes, borrowed money. Although they like these programs—and I cannot see any reason why they would not if they can get a pile of money for development and not have to pay it back—many of them would rather have access to more money and have to pay it all back than get less money under the present circumstances and not have to pay it back. I think that we might be able to get a bigger benefit from our dollar in terms of research and development in the industrial area if we were to consider financing these projects on a repayable basis, at low interest rates. Clearly I am not trying to wipe out all the forgivable loan features in our programs. Some of them are in high risk areas, are highly desirable, and produce tremendous results. But I think we should take another look at all these programs to see if there is not a way in which we can assist our industries in a more significant way without having to allocate more resources in the process.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, since it is nearly six o'clock, may I call it six o'clock now and begin my remarks after the supper recess?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 5.55 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this motion introduced by the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling), for one area of government failure has been in its allocation of funds for fisheries research.

When the Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc) appeared before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry on March 30 he stated that the estimated cost of carrying out the fisheries and marine program of the government amounted to slightly over $261 million of which some $155 million would be used for operating expenditures, while just over $113 million would be devoted to fisheries management and research and while some $42 million would be allocated to support activities related to ocean and aquatic sciences. On the surface this would appear to be an aggressive program. To someone looking at it for the first time it looks quite large. It is not unlike looking at an iceberg which looms large at first glance, until it is realized that nine tenths of its size are beneath the surface. The amount made available by the government for the fishing industry is readily comparable to an iceberg, for the basic needs of nine tenths of this important industry are, unfortunately, being ignored by this government.

I say this because the fishing industry is one of Canada's most important assets. It is vital to the livelihood not only of the residents of Atlantic Canada, not only of the residents of central and western Canada, but also to the livelihood of many people residing up and down the entire length of the Pacific coast.

The commercial landed value of the 1974 fisheries harvest, for example, was estimated to be close to $500 million and, of course, the resale value of this resource was much greater than that figure. Canada needs a viable, vibrant, strong and healthy fishing industry because it is the fisheries which provide employment opportunities in many areas of Canada where there are no alternative employment opportunities. In order to bring this about, constant, and I realize, expensive ongoing research is not only necessary, but I say mandatory. Unfortunately this government has not seen fit to maintain and staff an adequate research department, and this is reflected in the decline of our fisheries and those employed by the industry in all areas of Canada.

When I look at the Blue Book of estimates for this year, I cannot help but question the spending priorities of this government. I cannot help but ask how it is more important to be entertained than it is to be fed and to be employed. The minister mentioned, for example, that of $261 million for the government's fishing and marine program, $42 million was to go toward ocean and aquatic sciences. This is little more than half the amount made available to the CBC this year, which spends all it takes in from any particular area and which still requires a handout from the public purse in the amount of $416 million. This is some $63 million more than it required just a year ago. Yet the quality of CBC productions and, I might add, the record of service of its employees, seem to deteriorate in direct relation to its increased budget.

● (2010)

When I state my views concerning the lack of research funds for the fishing industry I am not alone in this stand. The Fisheries Research Bureau complained in its report of February, 1976, that the research planning, programming, and funding procedures with respect of Canada's fisheries resources are in a state of chaos. In fact out of a total budget of $261 million the Fisheries Department has allocated only pennies to its research program.

Salvation for the fishing industry could well come in the form of a 200 mile limit. The government has stated that such a limit is mandatory for the good health of our fisheries, yet this self-same government has delayed and is continuing to delay putting this 200 mile limit into effect. Canada needs this limit, and needs it now. We need the research to manage intelligently the harvest of fish within the limit as well as to extract the possible oil, gas and minerals which may exist on the continental shelf.

Canada once had a national research institution, the Fisheries Research Board, with a network of laboratories, and granting functions. This has recently been taken apart, however, and the pieces have not yet been put together in an alternative, viable structure.

A number of senior scientists have retired, and a university grant program has been transformed into a process in which university scientists are expected to serve as junior assistants to younger scientists in the federal field. As a result, at a time when Canada needs effective scientific studies on fisheries resources, the industry finds itself without an appropriate institutional structure to stimulate, guide, and achieve scientific success.

As well as the problems raised by insufficient research there are certain problems with the research that does exist. I believe that too much of our fisheries research effort is being diverted to manipulate coarse data into simple models with little objective reliability. For many stocks, herring, for example, maps of various stages of their life history are totally inadequate. Monitoring is in a difficult state in that the accuracy of statistics and landings for all countries is suspect; data on area of capture may well be falsified; technical samplings for sizes and ages both landed and caught are inadequate, and sizes and kinds of fish being discarded are unreported.

I have a letter dated March 11, 1976, from Professor K. H. Mann, chairman of the Department of Biology at Dalhousie University, regarding Canada's research effort. He states:

> I wish to draw your attention to the steady erosion of support for research in the universities through the National Research Council. During 1969-75 NRC funds increased, on average, less than 2 per cent per annum, and our present research grants are now worth, in real buying power, 41 per cent less than in 1969. Since most basic research is done in universities, this means a serious cutback in fundamental studies of problems of importance to Canada. We cannot argue that Canada can apply to its own problems the basic research done elsewhere. My own research is an example. We are studying the fundamental problems of the ecology of lobsters. This work is not being done anywhere else in the world. Lobsters do not occur on the Pacific coast, nor in waters south of New York. Hence there are very few first class laboratories with facilities to study the problems of the lobster fishery. We are told that provision has been made for the government to award contracts through the Department of the Environment, but in 1974-75 there were no contracts in biology which were on topics suggested by the university professors. This was in a year when the government spent $110 millions on intradepartmental research on biological and medical topics, and $6 million on research contracts.
>
> I find this position most alarming, and trust that you will share my concern and take appropriate action.

We certainly share his concern, for lobsters are among the largest dollar earners in Atlantic Canada. From the efforts of the Minister of State (Fisheries) to curtail the catch, we know there is considerable concern over the decline in stocks.

Certainly we know quite a bit about the lobster and its growth. One of the difficulties about raising it in captivity is its cannablistic tendencies. Come scientists have discovered, however, that by putting each lobster in a separate compartment and feeding it, it is possible to raise it from the larvae stage to a saleable age of four or five years. I hope the minister will seriously reconsider the amount of funds available for the development and improvement of our lobster stocks which provide so much of the income for inshore fishermen in Atlantic Canada.

The time for action on these problems was yesterday—not some foggy time in the future which may well be too late. In the recently released publication entitled "Policy for Canada's Commercial Fisheries" the need for more and better research is briefly mentioned twice. It states that Canada needs a co-ordinated research and administrative capability to control fishery resource use on an ecological basis and in accordance with the best interests, economic and social, of Canadian society. It also states that there is a need to provide the research and the institutional innovation necessary to foster the development of viable aquacultural enterprise. Although it could be construed that these two vague ramblings denote that fisheries officials recognize the problem, there is still no evidence that the present government plans to meet and challenge it.

I brought up this problem about the lack of research in the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry on April 27, 1976. Witnesses from the department continually wanted to stress that their research on east coast redfish is unequalled. They were not as willing to talk about research on the other fish stocks, however. In light of the fact that there are some 60 different stocks on the east coast, that leaves some 59 stocks without adequate research.

We might ask what the economic result is of this inadequate research, Mr. Speaker. A regulation was passed on February 26, 1976—without consultation with any of the provincial governments—which I submit may well be a contravention of the British North America Act. There was no consultation with any provincial premier on this matter which could well put some of the major fishing ports in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia out of business. Why are we not managing all the other species that are in serious trouble, and in some areas are almost wiped out?

Statistics indicate landings of 23,946 metric tons of all ground fish species in the first two months of this year, of which 12,096 metric tons was ocean perch. Perch has been the backbone of the TRAWLER fleet and is the species required to give the volumes necessary to keep the all year round ports open. Existing government assistance programs will not overcome the increased costs due to the effect on overhead of decreased volumes.

To the Atlantic redfish regulations, codfish caught in the Gulf have now been added. The redfish regulations make second class Canadians of Newfoundlanders and Nova Scotians. I say this because of some of the rules and regulations laid down. In light of the time limitation I shall not read all of them, but I should like to place one on the record which was Gazetted on February 26, one day before government officials called representatives of the industry together to get their views on what should be done. Mr. Speaker, this is hypocrisy in high places.

[Mr. Crouse.]

One of the rules states:

> No person shall use any vessel that is more than 100 feet in length over-all to fish for redfish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence if the port from which that vessel operated prior to February 1, 1976 is situated outside the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

The owner of a ship of 100 feet in length based in the Gulf of St. Lawrence may continue fishing, but a Newfoundland captain or a Nova Scotian captain is unable to continue fishing in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. I say this regulation makes second class citizens of Newfoundlanders and Nova Scotians. Either we are all Canadians, with equal rights in this country, or we in Atlantic Canada are being discriminated against in legislation. I submit this regulation is unfair. It is unjust. I personally hope that changes will be made in future regulations of this type.

● (2020)

One may ask on what were these regulations based? I say that they were based on the inadequate assessment of L. S. Parsons and D. G. Parsons of Environment Canada. I do not wish to place the entire assessment on record. The first paragraph states that this was "a directed fishery". The quality and quantity of redfish stocks in the 1948-50 era was such that they were capable of sustaining a very heavy fishery. The report suggested that the people in Atlantic Canada should build fleets sufficiently large to take advantage of these stocks. This was done. Many large operators decided to expand their fleets in size and number, to take advantage of these stocks. They did this on the basis of the report submitted by L. S. Parsons and D. G. Parsons of Environment Canada, fisheries and marine service, Newfoundland Biological Station, at St. John's, Newfoundland.

The first sentence of the last paragraph on page 1 of the report reads in part:

> ... intensification of fishing pressure on redfish in the Gulf created concern about overfishing.

Later in the paragraph one sees the words "based on limited data." On the basis of limited data it was concluded that the red fishery conducted in recent years should be concluded. Because of limited data some companies may well be put out of business.

When Canada declares a 200-limit she will then be responsible for managing and allotting quotas within that area. Fisheries has stated that it plans to give Canadian fishermen as much quota as they need. Foreign fishermen would take the rest. However, is Canada presently in a position to determine what the quota levels should be? The Fisheries Council of Canada does not think so. Nor does ICNAF, which has stated that Canada does not have the necessary boats or manpower to collect adequately the needed data on the numbers and breeding patterns of the fish stocks within the 200-mile limit. Mr. K. C. Lucas of the Ministry of Fisheries said in committee that more funds for research were needed. He stated:

> You do not mount a research program overnight. You also do not get the results overnight. The results are probably five to ten years in coming. It is certainly something that we ... will be asking government, and bringing to their attention the fact that we will need, in particular, after extension of jurisdiction, substantial new resources both in operating funds and in terms of vessels and equipment to do a decent job of stock assessment so that we can, in fact, make better predictions and make better regulations for the harvesting of the stocks.

On the other hand I would say that these additional funds are needed now, not later. What Canadian fishermen gain by having a 200-mile limit could be lost by the government's inability to know and to preserve what we have out there.

Finally, our lack of research is costing us dearly in yet another field, in the lack of technology in developing a capability for mining the resources, mineral, oil and gas, on our continental shelf.

On Tuesday, May 11, as reported at page 11386 of Hansard, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) about the U.S. proposal to mine some 6 per cent of its nickel requirements from the nodules on the seabed, and what our response was to this proposal. The minister replied that we opposed it. Mr. Speaker, we cannot continue to bury our head in the sand, and cannot continue to ignore new technological developments merely because we in Canada choose to be penny wise and pound foolish.

It is predicted that the mineral resources of the sea will provide great wealth in future, once technological processes to extract them are developed. One example is the five million tons of gold said to exist in the ocean. At present large amounts of petroleum and natural gas are being extracted from the oceans. Approximately 18.5 per cent of world oil production now comes from off-shore wells. This proportion is expected to increase by another 14 per cent within the next ten years. An estimated 2,500 billion barrels of liquid fuels are potentially recoverable from off-shore areas of the world, and some of this potential is believed to exist on our own continental shelf.

Phosphate deposits, which may eventually refurbish the supply of fertilizer phosphates, have been found off the coasts of the U.S.A., the west coasts of south and Central America, and off Argentina, Japan, and South Africa. Of course we do not know if there are any deposits off the coasts of Canada because we have not the research funds with which to find them.

I submit that manganese deposits hold the most immediate promise of reward for exploration. Plans are well advanced for the building of a plant in the Gulf of Mexico area which is to handle one million tons of nodules a year, from a 4,000 square mile mine site discovered between the continental U.S.A. and Hawaii. This operation is planned to yield 260,000 tons of manganese, 12,600 tons of nickel, 10,000 tons of copper, and 2,400 tons of cobalt per year.

As with other resources of the sea, the conflict in positions is between those with the capacity to exploit resources and those without such capacities. I submit that unless we make more funds available for research and development we may not only lose more of our fisheries resources but stand to lose our potential oil, gas, and mineral reserves, owing to our lack of technology for finding them and making them available not only to Canadians but to all mankind.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I join with others who have spoken today in commending the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) for putting down the motion which is the subject of debate and which covers all areas of research. I suppose one could contend that just about everything that needs to be said has been put on record, but I welcome this opportunity to speak for a few minutes as I wish to emphasize an area of research which I feel deserves a better break than the government has been giving it. I refer to the entire field of medical research.

Sir, Canada's contribution to medical research over the years has been tremendous. In recent years, in large measure owing to government funding, there have been assembled in our universities in particular, and in our medical institutions, teams of research workers who have enthusiastically been doing research on some diseases which are yet to be conquered and on ways and means to improve our environment, our diet, and all the things which make for healthy living for Canadians and, indeed, for human beings all over the world.

I think I can say that most of us in this House are disheartened because the so-called restraint program under which we are asked to live is being unfairly applied to medical research. In some cases amounts available are being frozen, in others they are being dropped, with the result that many teams working on medical research projects will very likely be dismantled or cease doing the valuable work they have in hand.

We are aware of some of the killers still with us, cancer and heart disease; we are aware of cripplers which still need to be mastered, such as arthritis and multiple sclerosis. We are aware that many diseases we thought hit only older people hit younger persons, even children. Surely, Sir, in this field in which Canada has done so much in the past, we should carry on in that tradition. I regard it as disastrous that the fine young men and women in our universities and medical schools who have shown such devotion to medical research are being discouraged by the present policies of the government.

I am interested in the various areas of research which have been discussed today during the course of this debate. They are all important. Next to medical research, I regard as extremely important research into things that relate to the environment, to the provisions of food of such dietary quality that it makes for good health and, indeed, all that goes to raising the standard of health of our people. When we talk about medical research and the health of Canadians, and the health of human beings generally, we talk about things that are extremely important.

● (2030)

I rise for these few minutes in this debate to join in the plea that was made earlier today by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), and to emphasize the plea that we have made repeatedly, that the government desist from applying its restraint program to medical research.

Mr. MacKay: Cease and desist.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend with his legal background wants me to use the phrase "cease and desist". In plain language, I want the government to stop it.

I know the government has a restraint program. When you see how money is spent in some cases, you are not sure that the government is aware that it has a restraint program. But in any kind of program there should be common sense. Just because the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) is selling the idea that everything should be cut down is no reason why particular programs should not be looked at and the realization admitted that those programs should not be cut back or should even be expanded. You can cut back on some things and save a few dollars and, when the restraint period is over and the money supply goes up, there has been no great harm. However, if you cut back or abandon research programs, and our top scientists and medical students go to other countries, the loss down the road can be incalculable. We will never be able to measure it. We will never know what discoveries, in terms of conquering disease or promoting good health, were lost because of this disastrous, ridiculous restraint program that is being applied in this area.

When you put my name on the list, Mr. Speaker, you asked me whether I would take my full time. I said no, I just wanted a few minutes. I have said what I wanted to say. I want the government to have some common sense, to remove the restraint program from medical research, and to give medical research and those engaged in it the opportunity to carry on the good work they have pursued over the years.

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I hope in the next few minutes I might attempt, by describing certain activities within the Department of Communications, to outline very much a thrust by the Government of Canada in its science policy, more particularly by the Department of Communications, to do just the contrary of what today's motion accuses the government of doing. In fact I hope in the next few minutes, by developing on a particular theme, Canada's new communications technology satellite, I might prove that in fact the Canadian government is adopting measures that will increase research and development in both the industrial and academic communities of Canada.

I would like first to outline some basic details of the communications technology satellite. It is an experimental satellite which was placed in space early this year from the Kennedy Space Centre in Florida. CTS, as it is called, is seen as the advanced technology forerunner of a new breed of high-powered orbitting transmitters expected to provide a wide range of expanded communications services in the 1980's. It is the product of more than five years of work by Canadian government officials and Canadian industry space scientists and engineers. The work of those people over five years was a forerunner in the world.

The primary objectives of the CTS program are to demonstrate high powered television and other transmission to small and other low cost earth stations. That is one of the primary purposes and in itself will be a revolution, not only for Canada but for earth stations and radio station technology around the world. Further, one of the intentions of the CTS program is to flight-test major advanced technology subsystems of the spacecraft itself. The program is to develop further and demonstrate the abilities of the Canadian industry in the design and fabrication of subsystems and components for the space/communications systems of tomorrow.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

With a design life of two years, the $60 million satellite is being used for a series of social, technological and technical communications experiments by various groups on both sides of the Canada-U.S. border.

The CTS is being orbitted under a continuing program of Canada-United States collaboration in the peaceful uses of outer space that began with the 1962 launch of Alouette-1. Some hon. members may recall that the functioning of Alouette-1, the first satellite put into space by any nation other than the two superpowers, brought great credit and esteem to Canada and Canada's space scientists from countries around the world.

Canada designed and built the CTS spacecraft. The United States, after providing its high powered transmitting tube and free-launch test support, carried out the launch. The European Space Agency also participated through a bilateral agreement with Canada. I should point out that the satellite itself is more than 90 per cent Canadian produced and made up of Canadian components. As I began by saying, this is the most powerful communications satellite in space.

Canadian experimenter groups, whose interests encompass the fields of broadcasting technology, telemedicine, tele-education, community interaction, data transmission, and government operations in remote areas, will carry out experiments during the two year lifespan of CTS. Experimenters include several major universities in central Canada and the maritimes, the Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba governments, the CBC, Bell Canada, Telesat Canada, the Alberta Native Communications Society and the Rural Health Society of Victoria, B.C. When the charge is made by the opposition that the government is not adopting measures that will increase research and development in both the industrial and academic communities, they are overlooking this program. As I just read out, the people, companies, associations, academic community and political interests that will be involved, it is indeed broadly adjusting and interesting all the various scientific sectors in its program.

CTS is the first to operate in the new 12 and 14 Gigahertz satellite frequency bands allocated by the International Telecommunications Union. It incorporates three major advanced technology subsystems which are in themselves important experiments. If I may, I will just mention those systems.

The first is a pair of lighweight, flexible solar power arrays or "sails", to provide an initial power output of about 1,200 watts. It is those sails and, through the performance of them expanding in space, moving outward and revealing to the sun the solar cells, that in fact makes this satellite the most powerful communications satellite in space. I might say it is a totally Canadian owned company that was encouraged to carry out that technology as the result of the planning done on the CTS. The company in particular is Spar Aerospace of Toronto.

Another major advanced technology subsystem is a travelling wave tube amplifier of approximately 50 per cent efficiency with an output power of about 200 watts and a three-axis stabilization system designed to maintain high antenna pointing accuracy in spite of the flexing of the solar arrays.

● (2040)

While people around the world may well think of the United States and Russia as landing people on the moon and going into the far distances of outer space, Canada is right up there with the major powers of the world in modern communications and space technology, and the reason for that is the long run planning of the Government of Canada through its Ministry of Science and Technology, and especially because of the efforts of the Department of Communications and the ministers who have been in charge of that department.

Mr. Speaker, there are 26 major projects which will be carried out with the help of the communications technology satellite, and to show that the government is acting to increase research and development in both the industrial and academic communities I should like to cite several of the experiments which will take place. One is called radio broadcasting applications. The objectives are to demonstrate the technical feasibility of the satellite CTS for radio broadcasting, its relevance for the extension of radio services between small communities, and its possibilities for providing special interest programming direct to individual broadcasting stations. It is, of course, in the interest of our remote northern communities to receive this specialized programming which takes into consideration the needs of our ethnic peoples and the variety of their backgrounds. This kind of technology will also be of great importance and use for our native people.

A further test on the CTS will consist of television special demonstrations. By transmitting coverage of the 1976 Olympic equestrian competitions from Bromont, Quebec, to Montreal during the period July 17—August 1, it is hoped to determine the suitability of a CTS type spacecraft for remote broadcast and control and transmission reception from large, populated areas, while evaluating the flexibility and handling efficiency of portable ground stations under operational pressures.

One of the experiments is something called "Staff Training By Satellite". This is something of great significance and when we talk about restraint and the need to increase efficiency and reduce government costs. Staff training by satellite is a program where characteristics of satellite operation which might lead to the development of cost-effective, high-speed learning environments for training federal employees in their home offices will be studied. Improved professional development methods will be sought through exploration of new directions for educational TV via satellite.

There will also be telemedicine experiments with CTS. The satellite will be used to provide continuing medical education for doctors and allied health professionals practicing in remote areas by one-way video, with two-way audio. Community health education programs and transmissions of medical data such as electro-cardiograms and X-rays from remote areas will also be assessed. What this means is that in time somebody critically ill with a serious and complicated disease in a remote part of Canada could be quickly analyzed via a satellite in one of our major cities where a leading expert in that area of medicine could, from that vast distance, do his very best to treat a patient who otherwise would not get adequate treatment.

To mention another project, there is what is called the omnibus network. To ensure the widest possible access to higher education in the province, the University of Quebec is decentralized, operating out of regional centres with a telephone network utilized for teaching, management, and document exchange. The experiment using the communications technology satellite of the Government of Canada will test the ability of the satellite to improve this process, stimulating educational satellite applications considered likely to be operational in the 1980's.

Radio telephony with remote camps is another program. One-metre terminals will be used to establish high quality telephone links with remote sites in the James Bay area. The transportability of the terminal, and any change in productivity due to better communications between the head office of the James Bay Development Corporation and survey parties will be assessed.

To get into some of the more technical kind of programs along the scientific rather than the educational and social field, I might mention one or two which CTS will carry out. There are telephony, data transmission and synchronisation studies. The flexibility and reliability of the CTS system to aid in the precise control of remote power stations in Northern Quebec will be determined. At present, high frequency radio links connect such generator sites with a regional despatching centre in Quebec City. During the experimental period clock synchronization as well as voice fascimile and transmission of slow rate data by satellite will be studied.

The Manitoba government computer centre will be involved in a program called the "Government Teleprocessing Network Experiment." Further, a satellite link radio interferometry experiment will be watched by scientists who are keenly interested in the location, distribution, and structure of a number of intense sources of electromagnetic radiation deep in space. The purpose of this experiment is to permit the real time comparison or correlation of signals from such sources as received by different radio telescopes hundreds of miles apart. Much information can be determined or inferred from such comparisons, helping to unravel mysteries surrounding extragalactic radio sources. That is one of the 26 experiments which is to the forefront of the advances being made in space and satellite technology. It is carried out by means of a satellite which has made Canada a world leader, the most powerful communications satellite in space. It is almost entirely Canadian developed and built. It has been built through the work and effort of the Department of Communications, but also by encouraging the private sector. It has made several Canadian companies leaders in particular areas of space research.

In this context I might mention Spar Aerospace of which I spoke earlier, the company which developed the expandable wings which carried the solar cells which supplied power to the satellite and, because of that technology, made it the most powerful in space. In turn, the encouragement of such a company means that in the future when the U.S. government finally puts in place its space shuttle, which is the coming way of placing in orbit satellites, that space shuttle will include as a major part of its equipment an arm developed by Spar Aerospace of Canada, and it will mean that Canada will play a major role in the success of that major space ship, the space shuttle, which is due for launch and eventually for regular use late this decade or early in the 1980's.

There is much more of course that is being carried out by the Department of Communications in relation to the overall science policy for Canada. I might mention particularly the Anik B, the fourth of the Anik series of satellites, which is planned to be launched in about two years in a program undertaken through co-operation between TELESAT Canada and the federal Department of Communications. That particular satellite will not only be carrying on its responsibility of providing domestic satellite communications, but it will include as well a 12 and 14 Gigahertz section as well as the traditional 4 and 6 Gigahertz bands in order to continue the CTS program of experimentation so that Canada may continue to be a leader in space Technology.

I might add that at the Shirley's Bay Space Research Centre of the Department of Communications important work is being done to find ways of reducing costs and improving telephone services in rural communities because of the serious problems we face there. As well, through the co-operation and assistance of the Government of Canada and because of the structure in Canada the subsidiary of Bell Canada, Bell Northern, now re-named Northern Telecommunications, has a reputation around the world as a front runner in telephone science and technology.

The motion laid down by the Official Opposition charges that the government has failed to develop a strong science policy or implement measures to increase research and development in the industrial and academic communities. One must always be concerned that every effort be directed toward research in Canada, and research has many various aspects but it seems to me the opposition is forgetting the very real world leadership position Canada has because of the planning of the government in space research and technology.

Mr. McKenzie: May I at this time direct a question to the Minister of Science and Technology (Mr. Drury) with regard to statements made by the hon. member from York West (Mr. Fleming)? It will only be a brief question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The minister may accept a question with the unanimous consent of hon. members. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKenzie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In his speech the hon. member for York West set out a description of all the work being done by the Ministry of Science and Technology. I would like to ask the minister this question in his capacity as Minister of Public Works. This is a point which was brought up during a meeting of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works yesterday where it was pointed out by myself that $875,000 is going to be spent on installing new elevators in the Confederation building. I should like to ask the minister whether he considers it is a priority at this time to instal private elevators in the Confederation Building at a cost of $875,000 when we are curtailing expenditures in respect of medical research? We were told at this meeting by the Deputy Minister of Public Works that there are supposed to be savings—

● (2050)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I believe the hon. member asked a question. He is now entering debate.

Mr. McKenzie: I want to know if there is any assurance—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member requested permission to ask a question, not to enter into the debate.

Mr. McKenzie: I will conclude very briefly, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I recognize the hon. Minister of Science and Technology.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that I was not at the meeting of the committee yesterday, nor am I familiar with the circumstances of the particular building. I think it was pointed out to the committee, however, that what we have been doing as part of an energy conservation program is a total energy survey in respect of each building under our control. As a consequence of that survey and integration of a total energy program we are making investments designed to conserve energy, and I suspect these new elevators are part of that.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I regard it as an honour to take part in this debate. It is a high level debate that deals with high level and important issues. For a long period of time the science community of Canada have wondered whether the House of Commons would ever turn its attention to the practical problems which beset that community. I suspect they thought their issues carried very little political sex appeal. I suspect also they were pessimistic in that their problems were being ignored by us.

In the last year there have been at last three debates of consequence on the problems of the scientific community. The first debate was launched on June 9 of last year by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). There was a debate prior to passage of an appropriations bill during which several members expressed a concern in respect of medical research. Now there is the present motion before us today by the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) which gives us another chance to consider something that is especially important.

In looking back at my correspondence from those who wanted to direct my attention to the problems of the scientific community I find they had very little to say to me and I, therefore, to them over most of my parliamentary career. The file I have tonight I find has grown up and developed mostly since the year 1974. I should like to share some of the views, the fears and hopes that are set forth in the letters that comprise this file.

Perhaps it is an obvious point, but one that should be made, that these are thoughtful Canadians capable of forming public opinion, and who do form public opinion, who have written us about their problems. These are bread and butter issues being presented in large terms with long vision, rather than in short terms with immediate vision of self-help for one's own pocket.

I know the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) has talked about scientific research on the late show on a number of occasions, and others in the House have raised these problems from time to time. When something becomes such an issue that it is raised on at least three occasions during special debates in parliament within a year, this surely means there is something wrong.

I listened with great pleasure to the speech of the hon. member who preceded me, the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming). After making a clarion call of self-satisfaction and patting the government on the back for what it has done, I still maintain the fact is that more and more people feel the government is not doing enough in this very large field of scientific research and development and technology.

I support the motion of the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth. I am glad he has proposed it, and I suspect many similar motions will be put forward and that members will find it more and more attractive to debate a subject such as science policy than has been the case before last year.

The file I have contains letters from all aspects of research; from experts in biochemistry and in pharmacology, as well as from the University of New Brunswick with its famous forestry school. A copy of one letter addressed to the minister who is the custodian of science and research in Canada, and who is also the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury), was forwarded to me.

Let me now move to some specific points of view. I want to present the histories or points of view from particular aspects of research. Since I am a member for part of the Halifax area one might suspect that many of these views would come from the university community there. That is precisely the case. They come from Dalhousie University, the medical college of which stands a few blocks away from my home. When you read letters such as this you realize some of the attributes and qualities that go into the making of a first-class research person, some of whom are also able to put the language into pretty glittering terms.

The first quotation I have contains one of the finest pieces of writing that has ever crossed my desk as a member of parliament. It comes from three members of the Department of Biology of Dalhousie University, Professors K. H. Mann, E. C. Pielou, and L. C. Vining. These gentlemen, involved collectively in biological research, state in part:

> We are alarmed at the steady decline in government support for basic scientific research. As evidence we point to the fact that since 1970 the funds allocated to the National Research Council to support research in universities (where most basic studies are done) have increased only 5 per cent while in the same period the Gross National Product has increased 49 per cent and the Consumer Price Index by 29 per cent. Moreover we are falling behind in comparison with other developed nations: in the period in which our expenditure on basic research rose by 5 per cent, that of Britain, France and the U.S. increased by about 50 per cent.
>
> The argument that belt-tightening is unavoidable in the present economic state of the world and that basic research ought to be sacrificed to short-term problem solving ("mission-oriented" or applied research, as it is called) is most shortsighted.

Brace yourself now, because here is the line that so took my fancy:

> It would be as sensible to advocate cutting off the roots of apple trees since, as any fool knows, apples grow on the branches, not the roots.

● (2100)

My friends continue:

> The problem solving functions of science that are now so urgent (because of the energy crisis, the population crisis, the world food shortage, the environmental crisis, and all the other crises that beset us) will falter unless there is a steady advance in basic science to nourish them. Everyone in this country daily uses products derived from the basic research of the past.
>
> Anyone who uses a telephone, a radio, or a TV, is using a device that could never have been invented without the basic knowledge of electromagnetism gained beforehand. Anyone who benefits from modern medicine, who flies in a modern plane, or who merely eats a modern load of bread, is profiting from basic research carried out some time previously. The dependence of our civilization on scientific knowledge is so taken for granted that it is forgotten.

That is the letter from the three professors of the Department of Biology at Dalhousie University. I think they make the point as effectively and as tellingly as it can be made. One of the students, Gynheung An, also entered another piece of correspondence. He pointed out the following in his letter:

> Our basic budget has now been frozen at $12.4 million for 1976/77 while the Biological Council of Canada recommended a basic budget of $18.5 million—

By very quick arithmetic that is approximately 50 per cent more.

> —and the Science Council recommended $19.9 million for the same period.

That, by a quick calculation, is more than 50 per cent. The student continues:

> As things stand now, over 60 per cent of the funds allocated through NRC are spent on graduate student support and technicians' salaries. A freeze at the present inadequate level of support is thus unjustified.

Professor Vining, writing for himself and not in association with his two other colleagues, wrote me the following about two months ago:

> We in the universities are seeing a rapid erosion of the value of our research grants as the cost of equipment and services skyrockets. To quote an example, a roll of dialysis tubing purchased in 1974 for $14.18 last week cost me $45.76 on re-order. Much of my NRC research grant is spent on salaries for technicians, summer student assistants or post-graduate associates. A freeze on research funds means that I can increase salaries for some to cope with inflation only at the cost of dismissing others. Highly trained people forced into unemployment in the present job market must seek other occupations and soon lose their skills.
>
> All of this makes worse an already difficult position for university research in the biological sciences. In 1974/76 NRC handled 1546 grant requests in biology and was unable to fund 22.5 per cent of them (the rejection rate was 0 per cent in nuclear physics and only 12 per cent in physics as a whole). A high proportion of university professors in biology departments are unable to undertake research and the university teaching environment has suffered accordingly.

Finally, because I know there are other speakers and I would hope that everyone who wishes to participate will have that opportunity, this point is made by Professor S. D. Wainwright, President of the Canadian Society for Cell Biology at Dalhousie University, and a member of the Department of Biochemistry:

> In my own case for example, of a total of $56,000 awarded by the NRC for the fiscal year 1975-76 approximately $36,700 will go toward salaries, etc., for four employees. The balance is used for purchase of equipment and other supplies which are purchased from local dealers and agents as far as is possible. Actual proportions of grants spent on salaries and on supplies will vary for different grantees, and will on the average probably be less for faculty receiving the smaller average grants from NRC. Nevertheless, the over-all situation for all grants combined here, as in other parts of Canada, will correspond roughly with that for my own grants.

Time will not permit me to read all of the letter, but later he states:

The more severely the graduate programmes at Dalhousie are crippled by reductions in effective support for scientific research, the greater will be the future dependence of this region upon research scientists trained elsewhere (i.e. the U.S.A.). Indeed, it seems possible that in many areas Dalhousie would be unable to offer any graduate programme at all.

What a pity that would be because the history of that great university has been built in new directions and now is threatened with loss of some of the programs which have been won through an immense amount of effort and money. Those are examples, Mr. Speaker.

I can see at least three evils if correction is not undertaken. First, there is the very obvious one that what is lost will take years to recover. If an important scientific establishment is dismantled or crippled, the effects can be devastating not only in the short run but in the long run as well. The second thing is that the United States, with all its economic and other difficulties, which are as major as the economic difficulties of Canada, is doing a much better job of showing respect for scientific research. The inevitable result is that many scientists will be working in the United States who will have stamped on their personalities the expression "Made in Canada". Finally, we will lose thereby some of our industrial and scientific strength.

I think this all indicates that it behooves us not only to debate this question today but to take a good long hard look at it, and try perhaps as a parliament to do a selling job in some areas. We must go about the business of raising money by taxes and spending it, and I happen to think this is one of the areas in which this should be done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Drury).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the particularly warm applause I heard from the other side of the House. I know it is heartfelt.

I must say it was a privilege to have been in the House during virtually all of today to listen to the contributions made during this debate. Like some other members I am grateful that the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) brought down this motion, the general topic of which I approve, or at least the first sentence or so in it. In the second part the hon. member appears perhaps somewhat to have lost his sense of balance and has engaged in what is meaningless, partisan rhetoric.

● (2110)

I do think it is useful from time to time for as distinguished a body as this to turn its attention to some of the problems facing science, the scientific community, the development and application of technology in this country. Everyone is agreed, it is quite clear, that both science and technology are immensely significant, immensely important in the development not only of our prosperity as it is generally understood but also, and perhaps equally, in the preservation and enhancement of the environment and the quality of our life. Understanding this, the government has introduced a number of policies and programs, some of which have been described to the House, mostly, I must confess, by supporters on this side. The details given indicate quite clearly that the regrets expressed by the hon. member who moved the motion are really without any adequate foundation.

I would point out that we in the government look at science and technology or research under three headings. One is the support of science or the support of research essential in the pursuit of science, in its broader sense meaning knowledge. In this respect the government does make a significant contribution to advancing the frontiers of knowledge in this country, principally through the instrumentality of universities, and both to create this effort and to sustain it there are three councils: the National Research Council, the Medical Research Council, and the Canada Council, all three of which dispense annually substantial sums of money in support of research almost entirely in the universities.

The purpose of this research is two-fold. First, it is recognized that higher education in order to be fresh and good must provide a field for its teachers to advance continually their own state of knowledge in order better to be able to pass it on to their students, and second, the general advancement of knowledge, of research outside the straight teaching function. Here is a field in which the three guiding councils I have mentioned have interested themselves. They have sums, voted by parliament, made available to them annually, and these are distributed among the classical disciplines according to the judgments made as to appropriateness in size and destination by peer groups, that is, members of the scientific community who themselves are knowledgeable in the particular field.

This year, as a consequence of the general policies of restraint which have been visited on and by the government, the increases over last year of funds available to these three councils have been very modest indeed. They have been less than the increase in inflation this year over last. As a consequence, there has to be a restraining of effort and ambitions, as indeed is the case in most other sectors of the economy, and perhaps research to devise ways of accomplishing more for less in the way of resources.

I think that most of us would agree that periodically such an exercise is both intellectually and economically a healthy one. I suggest, however, that it cannot be maintained indefinitely or it will have the result of running down what up to the present has been a first class product, a first class effort in Canada, which is internationally acknowledged.

This then is the year of restraint and, as I think a good number of hon. members are aware, this has caused a great deal of heart searching, and indeed in many cases considerable difficulty in the academic community. We are aware of this and we sympathize, but it is difficult to achieve a universal policy of restraint visited with fairness on all the citizenry of Canada without anyone having in any way to suffer.

It would be my hope that the kind of severe restrictions under which we are labouring this year will not be continued indefinitely. Indeed I am sure it would be harmful if they were. However, there is one thing I should like to say. I have said that the purpose of this research is to enhance the teaching in institutions of higher learning. We are not too sure how many of what particular kinds of training will be needed in the future in Canada.

It will be an endeavour of the government during the course of the current year to establish a study looking into the future to try to see if we can find out with more certainty what will be the kinds of university training, what will be the kinds of university produced skills which are most likely to be in demand in Canada in the next ten to 15 years. If we can do this, then we will be able to arrive at a rather more intelligent guidance for our young people either entering university or contemplating, following a general arts or science course, specializing in post-graduate work, to provide them with a little more in the way of guidance than we have been able to do in the past. This would avoid the situation which we seem to run into periodically of facing shortages of engineers, of doctors in particular lines, or of physicists, and then rushing to find them abroad or to take half-trained people to do the jobs, whereas if we had looked ahead more intelligently the shortages could have been anticipated, planned for, and met. Equally, we hope we will not be in the position of having surpluses of perhaps narrowly trained men or women coming out of universities into what would be an over-crowded avocation or profession.

● (2120)

Unfortunately, however, I do not expect that we can be very successful in much less than a year in producing such a forecast for the future. I have invited a number of people in the academic world to participate in this, and hopefully the results will not only be useful but indeed important in getting the kind of resources put into, through these granting councils, the universities, to match the resources needed for the particular job of training, which we can contemplate with a little more certainty than we have been able to do in the past.

In addition to those policies and programs in support of research we have a number of policies and programs for the application of research, science, and technology to the solution of non scientific problems or general problems. Rather than constituting an end or aim in itself, science and technology are tools which, if they are useful and productive, can and should be used.

I see it as one of the tasks of the ministry, about which there has been some complaint, to ensure that in attacking the problems which the various departments of the federal government face that scientific tools are available for use by them if they can be effectively and efficiently utilized in the solution of these problems. In some cases this is so; in other cases it is not. However, as one hon. member pointed out, there has been much discovered and much new knowledge acquired at an ever accelerating pace. One of the tasks of the ministry is to see that this new knowledge is available to other departments of the Government of Canada in the solution of their problems.

Equally, it would be the choice of the particular department, which has problems to solve and missions to accomplish, to decide the extent to which science and technology are and can be useful, and can and should be used. I do not think it would serve any useful purpose were the super ministry, of which there has been some mention, to direct other departments of government, such as the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, to lay down a prescription for it or to point out that it is not employing such science, that it is not making enough use of technology, and that more of its resources, for the sake of some principle, should be going into science and technology. More should be going into science and technology if it is useful in accomplishing its main mission. If science and technology are not or cannot be of assistance, there is no sense providing scientists and technologists merely to satisfy some formula or number.

Increasingly it will be the role of the Ministry of Science and Technology to see that newly acquired knowledge is available, that these departments of government have access to this new knowledge in the search for the accomplishment of the most effective way of achieving their particular departmental missions.

In addition to helping out in the application of science and technology for the solution of problems, particularly social problems, in the federal government, I think perhaps the government, particularly my ministry, has a duty and a responsibility to endeavour to see that the same kind of assistance is given to the manufacturing industry.

If I might just be permitted a minute, in Canada we have a rather unique situation with respect to industry in that we have greater, easier, and cheaper access to the largest and most prolific source of science and technology in the world. It is greater than any other country in either the northern or southern hemisphere. The source is the United States, and its neighbour, Canada, enjoys a favourable relationship which no other country enjoys. In some ways we have been fortunate—in many ways in economic terms—in having been granted this ready, easy, and cheap access to technology. It has meant that Canada, unlike a number of other countries in the world, has not had to develop its own science and technology. We have been able to get it easily and cheaply, and consequently we have not engaged in the harder, longer, and more expensive process of developing it for ourselves.

While this has meant that in order to progress economically the cost to us may well have been less, we are vulnerable to the possibility that for one reason or another this source might dry up, and we would then be unprotected and lacking in scientific and technology generating self-sufficiency. Perhaps I should say that this, however, has meant that the investment by Canadian industry in research and development has, for economic reasons, been lower and less than in most other comparably industrialized countries. As I say, this has been cheaper, but it has made us more vulnerable. Recognizing this, the government has instituted a number of programs, mostly in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, designed to reduce this vulnerability and to get a greater level of inherent, indigenous research and development capacity in Canadian industry itself.

With respect to some firms these programs have been very successful indeed, but so far the average has been very low. As a consequence of failure to increase our own capability and to reduce our vulnerability, we as a government are now currently in the process of reviewing the various incentive programs designed to enhance our industrial research and development capability. I hope that during the course of this year a number of these studies will come to fruition, and perhaps we will be able to devise more attractive and more successful incentive programs than those which we have now. These programs and policies have been working to some degree, but not really to the degree that would achieve the kind of progress that seems to be desirable if indeed we want a reasonable measure of invulnerability.

● (2130)

In order to enhance our industrial capability in research and development we have been placing emphasis on what is known as the "make or buy" policy, under which all new research and development projects will be contracted out to the manufacturing industry in Canada in preference to being performed in government laboratories. The test is whether it can be performed outside. It is only in the event it cannot be done in the Canadian manufacturing industry that it becomes a project in a government laboratory, if such capability exists. This means that during this period the laboratory capabilities of the federal government will not be growing at the rate and in the rather spectacular way they did during the early and mid sixties. We are trying to turn new research and development in Canada from the government to the manufacturing industries. If industry does not have the capability or cannot create it, the universities are a second choice. It is only as a laboratory or a locus of last resort that a particular program is carried out within government laboratory apparatus.

Even though it is fairly recent, the "make or buy" policy has been achieving a modest but continuous growth. So far it has been limited to new research projects and new research money. In the last couple of years there have not been large sums of new money for research and development so the developments have not been very significant. It is a step in the right direction, however. Hopefully, when the time comes that useful projects can be found and rather large quantities of money can be made available, then more significant emphasis can be given to the "make or buy" program and significant results quickly achieved. By and large the capacity seems to exist in the Canadian manufacturing industry; what is required is an incentive to get it into operation.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that this debate has been set afoot by the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth. I think he will agree that considerable efforts are being made by the government in the two areas I have mentioned, even in a year of restraint. Perhaps there is not as much progress as he would like nor is there as much as you and I would like, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that it is a year of restraint, however, we have to limit our efforts to shifting resources rather than finding new ones. We will continue the endeavours to find better and more effective ways of deploying our available resources in science and technology, but perhaps we will have to wait for a period of more rapid growth in order to take full advantage of what I hope will be new and rather more attractive incentives.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. minister permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. This requires acceptance by the minister.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am sure he will accept one.

Mr. Drury: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is prompted by something the minister said in the early part of his speech. Does he know when the government will table a document entitled "Post Doctorals in Canada in the Mid-Seventies"? The report is said to have been commissioned by the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) and brings out how many Ph.D.s there are in Canada, how many do not have jobs, what they are doing, and so on. Can the minister tell the House when that report will be tabled?

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Speaker. I think I know the report to which the hon. gentleman refers. If tabling merely meant taking what we have and putting it on the Table that would be one thing; this is in a sense an historical document—Ph.D.s 1970—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): "In the Mid-Seventies."

Mr. Drury: The only one I know is dated 1973 and gives the state of affairs in 1973. We thought of tabling this and indeed publishing it, but it calls for translation, which is an expensive business as the hon. gentleman knows. If he wishes to peruse this particular document I would be delighted to let him see it. I am not sure it would be worth the money to table it in the House, however.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are not just sitting on it?

Mr. Drury: No.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in closing this debate on the motion criticizing the government for its lack of drive in the field of science and technology I think my remarks will dovetail very closely with those just completed by the minister.

This is not a new subject for me. I recall some 18 years ago the same questions coming to the minds of the government led by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). I recall that the issue was basically the same as it is now, that our lack of "go ahead" in the field of science and technology comes down to one word—finance.

When you study what various industrial nations have spent in the field of basic scientific research you will find that Canada ranks as high as any other industrial nation in the world, if you just measure the contribution of government. The minister implied that tonight in his remarks. When you move on and examine the contribution of the private sector in the field of science and technology, and particularly the application of it, you will find that Canada is lagging seriously. The reason for this lag is obvious; we are a branch plant economy and it is easier to borrow or earn this technology from the parent companies of the branch plants in Canada. Having said all this and heard the minister, I say there is no excuse for this situation to continue indefinitely.

● (2140)

Let me repeat in a general way what has happened under the last two or three governments. In the Diefenbaker government we felt we should encourage private enterprise to move more vigorously into the field of applied technology based on university and government research. We thought we could do it with a system of tax incentives, whereby business could write off 150 per cent of money spent on research. I have looked at the figures and noted what has happened since those days. Our measures had some effect, although small. As the minister said, as companies in Canada could obtain cheaply research information from head offices, branches of multinational corporations operating in Canada did not have much incentive to put money into research in Canada.

I recall this question being debated several times in the early years of the Pearson government. they thought the answer was the establishment of a new department. They took the political science approach and put civil servants in charge of science and technology. They thought that putting a minister at the head of the department would lead us to the promised land and result in greater scientific and technological development. Tonight we heard the minister in charge of that department confess things have moved pretty slowly.

We are examining what is happening in universities and will study how we can improve the relationship between the demand factor for certain disciplines and the supply factor. This is good. Nobody quarrels with this. As well, we could consider what is happening in applied research in Canada. There is no question about this being necessary. I do not think anybody will quarrel with me when I say that Canadian scientists, whether at the university level or working at the government level in Canada, are as good as those of any nation. Our track record with regard to basic science is as good as that of any industrial nation. Our weakness, as the minister suggested, is that we have failed to apply basic science to our problems, the excuse being that we live in a branch plant economy.

This evening I shall not address my remarks to the minister, whom I hold innocent in this matter. I shall talk about the basic problem confronting us, and I return once more to the matter of financing. Every time there is a cry of alarm in this country, every time the nitwits in the Department of Finance say we are moving too quickly, that we need restraint and restriction, the first item on which we cut spending is research. This happens every time. Why? First scientists have no strong political voice to speak for them. Second, they are most vulnerable.

When I became a minister in 1957, I found that the maximum salary for scientists, some of whom had Ph.D.s and had served the government for 20 years, was in the region of $8,700. At the same time the administrative people, who are always coming to Treasury Board and asking for more, were earning salaries up to the $20,000 level. Mr. Speaker, I sat on that Treasury Board and resisted every effort to increase the salaries of civil servants in Ottawa until the salaries of scientists had been raised. That effort on my part met with some success; at least scientists in the government service today are better paid.

When I was a minister—I suspect it is the same today—I recall seeing all this scientific information for which we had spent a great deal of money piling up and being stored in our libraries. We stored more knowledge than we needed for the next 50 years, knowledge which could apply to almost every field. But there was no awareness of the existence of that knowledge, and it was not put into the hands of the people who needed it. I suppose the classic example is knowledge concerning agriculture, which was stored in the Neatby building. That knowledge was not put into the hands of the public. The reason, again, was the myth that education was a matter for the provinces, and that therefore we must not do anything to give this knowledge, made available to government by the government service and universities, to the people who needed it. That is still going on today.

There is still no federal government service to disseminate or carry abroad knowledge gathered by the National Research Council, the Medical Council, by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, formerly known as mines and technical surveys, by researchers working in the Department of Agriculture, and so on.

Let me also mention forestry. For 20 years our forestry scientists have been advocating the use of knowledge they had gathered for the last 100 years, yet I do not know of a single provincial government using it. Knowledge concerning one of our greatest renewable resources is not being utilized due to the myth that because certain of these services are considered as educational services, the federal government should not touch them. I have spoken on this subject several times in the House in the last ten or 12 years but have seen no change in attitude.

I now come to the present Trudeau administration. I am aware of the government's tax changes, and of write-offs allowed for research. The government allows 150 per cent; yet, I suspect that, as in the days of the Diefenbaker government, that measure has not had much effect. I am thinking of what can be done. I do not say I have all the answers. I suspect that as our capital needs in the next 25 years could amount to several hundreds of millions of dollars, we shall need to invest tremendously in technology and science, so that we may take advantage of technological advances. Technology will be the key. Therefore we are not thinking merely in terms of educating farmers or men in the forestry field.

In future we shall spend huge sums of capital in Canada. Our very survival will be at stake unless we have reasonable access to adequate supplies of energy. We must do all we can to use our basic knowledge and reduce development costs.

Several members of the House have spoken of the farce being played out in areas such as the development of our tar sands. Here we have the government of Ontario, the government of Alberta, and the federal government joining with business in a $2 billion venture to build one Syncrude plant. We are to use our resources to produce oil from the oil sands which will cost us $11 a barrel and up. I suggest that we know that there are two or three other techniques available. One has been available for 20 years, but not mentioned. In this connection I suggest that we must provide incentives. I think we must attack on two fronts. First, we must let the people of Canada know why no government has ever mentioned the other techniques available for the development of the oil sands. I know what they are, and I know why governments are afraid of the technique I have in mind. The reason, of course, has to do with the myth to which I previously referred. That myth must be exposed for the sham it is.

The second approach must be in the field of finance. As the House knows, I put my ideas forward in 1974 to the then minister of finance, and to some other ministers in 1975. And I am pleased to note what is happening.

The headline to an article appearing in the Globe and Mail of May 13, 1976, reads, "175% Recovery Share in Oilfields Proposed Before Big Tax Take." I am interested in the coming announcement. According to the newspaper story, the government next week will make an announcement concerning northern and off-shore oil and gas fields. The government is to give the companies in that field a tax break. It will pledge that, to compensate for risk, the returns from operations will not be milked until the companies have got all their capital back. The government will allow 100 per cent of their capital return, plus 75 per cent to pay for the interest and other costs which they have. After that, the government is really going to hit them.

● (2150)

I am pleased that the government is going to make that announcement because it gets at the basic problem of these capital intensive enterprises. Nearly all these new developments demanding this new science and technology are capital intensive. This gets at the basic cost. Seventy-five per cent of the cost of a modern capital intensive industry goes to the payment of interest. We can no longer avoid that if we continue with out of date techniques of financing.

In the proposals I have made in the past two or three years, one of them, the second choice actually, was this type of proposal. I praised the British government, socialist as it is, for having pioneered this technique in financing.

An hon. Member: Which government?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): The government of the United Kingdom. It pioneered this type of approach and it looks like our Canadian government is going to apply it. I suggest that in the field of science and technology, if you are going to get small or large Canadian companies to take up the slack which exists in technology, it will have to be by this same type of approach. The government will have to consider that the 150 per cent write-off is not enough. Even the accelerated write-off is not enough.

We will have to go into joint enterprise with these companies whereby we take a part of the risk for them, 10 or 15 per cent, and see that the knowledge that we have from our government and university circles is put into practical application. The reward that they get will be market return and interest return before we apply any tax to them. However, we, the people, will own shares in those companies and will share in the profits that they make.

I make that point because in my work I have quite a bit to do with newly developing countries around the world. I know the desperate hunger there is for new technology. I know that we in Canada have quite a bit of it, and how saleable it is. However, in many cases our companies are indoctrinated with the concept that you must only move very cautiously and safely, and that if they take the plunge in selling this technology to a foreign country they will be left exposed in case it comes up a bummer.

I suggest that the joint enterprise concept should be extended into foreign countries, particularly the newly developing countries where you take a risk. I can give examples of what I am talking about.

I hope the House will not laugh at this, but recently there was a discovery made by a group of farmers. You take biomass in the form of animal waste and, with a simple physical and chemical action, change it into pure food suitable for recycling through animals. If I talk in dollars and cents, what I am talking about becomes more apparent.

If you take a ton of animal waste and use it for fertilizing the land, it is probably worth $2.50 or $3 a ton. If you take that animal waste, remove the methane, that animal waste is probably worth about $30 a ton. If you take that animal waste and put it into pure food suitable for recycling through animals, it is worth $140 a ton. There is the technology discovered by accident by a group of farmers. However, when you go to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and suggest that they join with a Canadian company, put that technology to work here, and then take it around the world, they say that under their program they are not allowed to do that. They can only support technology that starts and ends in Canada.

The minister should be supported in his statements that we have to take a new look at the programs and new incentives that we have. Thereby, with regard to this motion we are debating today, for nearly two decades we have talked about the necessity of improving our work on science and technology that we are doing on behalf of the Canadian people. Always it is talk. It is time that we took the method into our hands, and went forward and did something in the applied field.

There is no need talking to the House about this being a year of restraint, because the minute you stop scientific development you are carrying out an inflationary policy. The only way you can keep inflation down is to get at your productivity, and 80 to 90 percent of productivity comes from technology. If you are going to keep inflation down, you do not do that by stopping the development of technology in Canada.

I wish the minister would carry this message to his colleagues in cabinet, particularly to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien). Cut out this nonsense by these ministers who simply say to reduce everything 20 per cent, without any awareness of the fact that by reducing the money spent on science and technology they are adding an inflationary force to the country's economy. That is the basic point I wanted to make.

It is not the minister who should be attacked. It should be Treasury Board which works on a pure percentage basis. If the order comes through from the nitwits in Finance that you need to have restraint, the first target they aim at is research into all forms of science and technology. These people have borne the brunt of cuts and slashes every time in the past 15 years.

This motion is well put and timely. It brings to the attention of the Canadian people this phony effort to introduce a program to fight inflation called the Anti-Inflation Board, which does not even begin to get at the basic causes of inflation. It pretends that it does, and uses that excuse to cut down on research into basic science and technology. That type of attitude on the part of Treasury Board and the government is not serving the country in fighting inflation. In fact it adds to it. I strongly support this motion that the government should really take a hard look at itself, and not use science and technology as the guinea pig in carrying out any form of pretending that they are cutting expenses.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being ten o'clock it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 58, proceedings on the motion of the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PENSIONS—DENIAL OF PENSION INCREASES TO RETIRED MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES AND RCMP UNTIL AGE 60—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RECTIFY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, just before three o'clock this afternoon, during the question period, I put a question to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) regarding one aspect of the operations that take place under the Supplementary Retirements Benefits Act.

Usually, as private members, when we put down a question for the late show, we like to have the minister here. I hope I am not expressing anything that the minister will take as a slight when I say I am just as happy to have the parliamentary secretary tonight because, in all honesty, I think he has been connected with this question for a very much longer period. His representation in this House from time to time, in and out, in and out, has been on behalf of a constituency in which a great many public servants reside. He has therefore been obliged to pay some attention to the pensions of public servants.

● (2200)

The question I asked this afternoon had to do with the fact that the escalation of pensions which are paid by the government does not normally begin until the age of 60. I say "normally", because that is not an absolute rule; there are cases of public servants and others whose pensions are escalated prior to age 60, particularly if they are 55 and have put in 30 years of service, or met certain other conditions. But there is the particular case of retired RCMP personnel and retired Canadian armed forces personnel; there are other cases but these are the two main bodies in connection with which this question arises.

Because of their work, the personnel I have mentioned are permitted to retire early. In fact although I say they are permitted, they are, in many cases, forced to retire early. So their pensions begin at an early age. There are some instances of pensions actually beginning in the late forties, though I suppose the more common time for them to begin is in the fifties. Yet despite the fact that most persons who receive government pensions get the escalation once a year in accordance with the rise in the consumer price index, the individuals about whom I am speaking are obliged to wait until they are 60 years of age.

When this measure was first brought in the escalation amounted to only 2 per cent a year and did not mean very much to the persons affected. It was true, also, that at first no civil servants could get the escalation under the age of 60 and it therefore seemed reasonable to deny it to anyone else under 60. But now, when some persons are getting it under the age of 60 and when indexing is in the order of 8, 10 or 11 per cent, the question is of greater importance.

The parliamentary secretary will agree that we had a good discussion on this subject, that we were closest to coming to grips with it during the time when the Special Joint Committee on Employee-Employer Relations in the Public Service dealt with Bill C-52. That was last December. We had before us such persons as Mr. D. N. Nadon, President of the Canadian Forces Long Service Pensioners Association, and Mr. Fred Whitehouse, National Secretary of the Federal Superannuates National Association. Both these men and those associated with them pressed us on this point, and the hon. gentleman knows that somehow or other the notion got around that the government was going to yield, that there was going to be some change in the formula generally known as the 85 rule—that is not a good name for it, incidentally, because not every combination which adds up to 85 does the trick. However, when the crunch came we did not get it, and the people these organizations represent were disappointed.

That was the reason for my question this afternoon to the President of Treasury Board. I reminded him of what happened in December and I dared to hope that maybe by now the matter was being reconsidered. But the answer was no. When I suggested that it be made effective in January, at the time the escalation takes place, at least I had to give him credit for a straightforward answer. He said "no". I found this extremely disappointing, especially after the recognition I thought we had at the committee last December that there was a real case.

I am sure my friend, the parliamentary secretary personally supports the case, but since his minister this afternoon said no he cannot stand up tonight and say yes. However, I hope he will tell me, as one who is close to the throne that he will go to bat and try to persuade his minister that this issue we thought we had resolved last December does need to be considered again, and that action should be taken on it just as soon as possible.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member who has just spoken for his complimentary remarks in my regard. I must tell him that I do not think his compliments are going to change in any way what I have to say.

As the hon. member knows, pension increases are currently payable to retired forces members when they reach age 60 if they have fewer than 26 years pensionable service. I think 60 and 25 was the origin of the 85 rule.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Fifty-five and 30.

Mr. Francis: Various combination will arrive at it. They start age 59 if they have 26 years service, at age 58 with 27 years service, and so on to age 55 for a member with 30 or more years service.

This formula was determined after consultation with representatives of the Canadian forces and the RCMP, bearing in mind the amendments made in 1971 to the Public Service Superannuation Act which permitted public servants to retire on full accrued pensions at age 55 if they had over 30 years service. Such pensions were subject to yearly increases under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. In order to correct this anomaly between Public Service employees and members of other groups, the formula mentioned above was established with retroactive effect to January 1, 1973. However, it was felt that any further lowering of the age at which retired members of the Canadian forces or the RCMP could receive pension increases would have created a different anomaly in comparison with pensions under the Public Service Superannuation Act.

Under the forces pension plan, and others, individuals can retire at a much earlier age than public servants and receive their full pension. Therefore it was considered equitable to begin payment of pension increases to retired forces members at the same age at which long service public servants can receive both their full pension and the escalation.

Further, in looking at what the needs of retired members of the forces, public service and others may be, it seemed reasonable to expect that those who retire at younger ages are more likely to be able to find alternative employment. In such instances, the need for earlier escalation of pensions did not seem so acute as for those who have reached age 60, or over age 55 with long service, and who are more likely to have retired from active working life.

As my hon. friend mentioned, during the consideration of the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act by the Standing Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, the suggestion was made for a change in the escalation formula for members of the armed forces and the RCMP and these were considered. However, the government could not see its way clear at that time or indeed, at present, to introduce such an amendment.

I can assure the hon. member that, in the on-going review of pension legislation, consideration will continue to be given to this matter although at present the government has no plans to introduce such an amendment for January of next year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. parliamentary secretary's time has expired.

MANPOWER—MEASURES TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I debate the issue tonight of student unemployment because of the precarious position with which we will be faced in Canada this summer as students graduate or return from universities to face a summer of almost record unemployment in Canadian history.

In my question to the minister yesterday I indicated that the total thrust of the summer student employment program would produce only some 12,000 jobs from 17 programs, and this will be only about 1.2 per cent of those seeking work. With a student population of some one million this will only be an insignificant dent in the need.

I recognize that, as the minister said in reply, I chose to refer only to programs of direct job creation. Indeed that is what we are looking for, direct job creation. He also said that the main effort of the government, and the one offering the greatest degree of success, is the increased co-operation of the private sector in placing students this summer. However, I fail to understand what this will achieve when we have an unemployment rate of 7.4 per cent.

● (2210)

As much as I want to be fair, I fail to see how the government will create 109,000 unpaid activities for students and summer jobs for an anticipated 200,000 students as a result of the national "Hire a Student" campaign. All I can say is that the government can come out with fancy names for programs which are varied and many, but cannot produce jobs.

The minister also in his reply evaded my request that he make a statement on motions to declare the programs which would realistically combat youth unemployment. He answered to the effect that all members were aware of the many and varied programs which were available. Well, I am aware of each and every program that was announced. I will list some of them. They include the Summer '76 program, the Information and Evaluation Program, the Summer Puppet Program, health activities, student community services, cadet training, community assistance, reserve training, parks awareness, Parks Canada, native employment, and many other programs to stimulate employment as the minister indicated.

I know about these programs, Mr. Speaker. I must know about them because of the embarrassing rate of unemployment in my district of Newfoundland. I also know that I will be getting hundreds of letters from students and parents of students wondering why there are no jobs available. The parents will be asking how their sons are to go back to university, or indeed enter university, and the students will be asking the same thing. I will be receiving letters from high school graduates who will want a job so that they can earn enough money to enter university because some politician told him or her on their graduation about the wonderful world of opportunity we have in Canada.

I will also be receiving letters from university graduates who were told the value of a university degree. They will not be able to find that golden horizon they have been told about. I also know what the facts are. The facts are that for the 14 to 24 age group the unemployment rate for March, 1976, was 14.8 per cent for males, 11.5 per cent for females, an average of some 13 per cent. As of this date 348,000 in this age group are unemployed. This constitutes 45.8 per cent of the entire unemployed population of Canada and yet this age group only accounts for 26.4 per cent of the population.

Based on Statistics Canada figures, student unemployment peaks in June and gradually dwindles by August. In 1975 the labour force figures were 839,000 in June, 1,000,043 in July, and 984,000 in August. So, even if the minister's figures by any stretch of the imagination are correct, this will prove to be a critical summer for student employment. Yet the government has cancelled the OFY program, and the LIP program has been cut back. While LIP does not sponsor students directly it has been a source of student employment in the past.

I know that I will get the answer that OFY was cancelled because of restraints, but this is hypocritical because students will have to make excessive demands on student loan programs or there will be an additional burden on the over-burdened Unemployment Insurance Commission fund, increased social welfare payments, let alone the social spill-over.

We need only refer to the report of the committee on youth which, when referring to the high level of youth unemployment, said this:

> The present tragedy is more than personal; it is societal in scope. Canadian society cannot cease to generate a broad range of options for its youth in the employment field.

I hope that the government realizes what a burdensome problem youth unemployment will be this summer, but it will not be overcome by expensive and meaningless ads that shout slogans such as "Have a Young Summer", or asking business and industry to "Hire a Student," when each day, almost repeatedly, there are more and more lay-offs in business and industry.

The government must initiate a massive youth employment program immediately. I do not see how it can avoid doing so. I hope that the reply I receive tonight will offer some hope of plans by the government to alleviate serious student unemployment which threatens our youth in Canada.

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in the summer of 1976 an estimated 85 per cent of an anticipated student labour force of 1.3 million will find work in the private sector. Therefore to communicate the student hiring philosophy to employers across Canada, the Department of Manpower and Immigration is presently engaged in an intensive hire-a-student advertising campaign. They have been joined in this effort by the five major banks in Canada which will display their promotional material in some 6,000 branch offices across Canada. The message urges employers to hire students either for the entire summer or on a casual basis. This program is increased in size over previous years, but with no increase in costs. This has been accomplished by repeating last year's program, thus allowing savings to be channeled into a media campaign that will permit a wider distribution of publicity material.

In addition, the minister has personally written to all his provincial counterparts to request that every effort be made, despite present fiscal restraints, to create as many summer employment opportunities as possible. It is expected that provincial governments across Canada will spend approximately $48 million and create 60,000 jobs.

The federal effort will be in two areas. The first is the student summer employment and activities program in which eight federal departments operate 17 individual programs and create opportunities for an additional 109,000 to participate in unpaid activities, and includes some 300 Canada Manpower Centres for students which will operate across Canada in 1976, and it is anticipated that some 200,000 students will be placed in employment through these centres. The second is direct departmental hiring in which federal departments hire large numbers of students to supplement regular staff on holidays or increase regular departmental activities during the summer period. However, as these funds are within regular resources available to departments, it is difficult to calculate the total expenditures. Estimates provided by departments in September, 1975, for 1976 indicated that some 10,000 jobs would be created, costing individual departments approximately $17 million.

MULTICULTURALISM—PROPOSED APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question tonight in the adjournment debate with respect to a matter which I raised some time ago in the question period with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) relating to the re-appointment of a minister responsible for multiculturalism. The fact of the matter is that the Prime Minister at that time indicated to me in a rather extended reply that he and the government had no interest in the appointment of a minister for this portfolio.

We all know that prior to the last election this portfolio was occupied by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz). He was in fact given a great deal of profile with respect to the interest of the government regarding the third force in this country. I think it is interesting to remind ourselves in the House that fully one third of our population in Canada is neither of French nor English extraction. I suggest it represents a very important force in our country, one that requires reasonable representation within cabinet. I am sorry to say that the condideration that this group has so far received has been a consistent and continuing downgrading of multicultural concerns in our country.

● (2220)

In the brief time I have at my disposal I should like to refer to what I think is a very appropriate and telling editoral from the Toronto Globe and Mail. I think this editorial really puts the finger on the matter of the multicultural program—or the lack of it—of the government. This editorial appeared on December 1, 1975, and in part it stated:

> The multicultural program which Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau draped noisily upon his government's shoulders in 1971, was—to pick the best words for it—intended solely to persuade those Canadians of other than French and English mother tongues that they would not be neglected while Ottawa pushed ahead with official biculturalism and bilingualism. In short, a bribe—to buy off opponents of bi-and-bi—and a bribe of rather cynical dimensions.
>
> The game plan was to pick a Polish-Canadian from the Liberal caucus, Dr. Stanley Haidasz, give him a cabinet title of Minister of State for Multiculturalism and let him have millions of dollars to hand out for ethnic poetry readings and choir singing and costumed dances and similar forms of ancestral consciousness-raising and—in particular—government advertising in the ethnic press.
>
> All that, however, is the past. There is a new game plan (multiculturalism lost its Minister of State some time ago and shrank into a branch office of the Minister of Labour). We hear now from Labour Minister John Munro that the "folkloric aspects" of multiculturalism are going to be de-emphasized and instead there is going to be something called "group understanding" and "combatting discrimination"—all, mind you, at no extra cost.
>
> Meaning?
>
> We frankly have no idea and we doubt if anyone in the country does. Mr. Munro gives no specifics, no details, not even hints—except to coyly reveal that it will include government measures that are, or should be, already in place, such as Justice Department action against discrimination. So does National Health and Welfare next announce that it is changing its policies to support motherhood?
>
> The government cannot be honest enough to say that what it is trying to do is pare its spending. (And, indeed, multiculturalism's budget has shrunk to about half of what it had in the halycon Haidasz days.) But we have our doubts about whether the government will do anything to save money and we suspect that the sum product of Mr. Munro's new policy will be to insult ethnic minorities with its emptiness.

As I pointed out, about one third of our population is of neither French nor English extraction, but if we compare the amount of money which is expended with respect to that portion we will see that there is in excess of $350 million for the biculturalism and bilingualism program as opposed to something like $7 million for the multiculturalism program.

Quite frankly, one is not surprised at the lack of representation of people from other than French and English extraction on the government side. There is very small representation from the third force of this country, and I suggest that the reason is that the government has no interest, except at election time, in giving anything but lip service to multiculturalism. It is an insult to that third of our population. The fact of the matter is that people in our society, such as my colleagues, the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski), the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), and other people in our party, are members of this third portion of our country. We all try to speak out and to encourage the government to do something tangible to encourage the ethnic traditions we and our forefathers have brought to this country, but I am afraid it all falls on deaf ears.

It was a specious argument the Prime Minister gave to me when he answered my question and tried to relate multiculturalism to the fact that he did not want to create other portfolios and expand the cabinet to unreasonable proportions. The fact is, that we had a portfolio of multiculturalism. The government is only playing a political game. I can assure the parliamentary secretary who is here to answer on behalf of the minister that the one third of the population which falls in this category will not be fooled in the next election. They will look back at the record of the government, and I can assure the hon. parliamentary secretary that the government may expect that one third of Canada's population will make their feelings known.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) for his recent appointment by his new leader. I am convinced that this is an acknowledgment of his constant and excellent work.

The question raised tonight has already been answered several times before. In particular, on November 26, 1975, as show on page 9457 of the French Hansard, the Prime Minister indicated his difficulties in organizing his cabinet so as not to exceed the number required to serve the Canadian people well. He mentioned that there were many areas where the appointment of a minister would be useful. Moreover, he said the following:

> ... the government does not intend to lend any less emphasis to its strong belief in the policy on multiculturalism.

In fact, the last budget shows this since no cuts were made in this program. To administer the program, the minister responsible has a vast experience within the cabinet, of which he has been a member since 1968, after having been parliamentary secretary, and, like myself, all Canadians recognize his devotion and his great involvement in multiculturalism.

Like the President of the Treasury Board, I am convinced that the opposition should make up its mind either to accept willingly budgetary increases or to stop to continually urge the government to increase all its budgetary items.

I would also like to mention that the Minister of Labour has not announced any fundamental change in the multiculturalism program. In fact, he announced his intention to evaluate the result of this program, which is only five years old, and perhaps to reallocate funds so as to insist on certain aspects which seem to have been neglected.

However, Mr. Speaker, you can be assured that I would be proud and happy to accept the position recommended by my hon. friend if the Prime Minister judged it appropriate and if the budget allowed it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 14, 1976

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

SUGGESTION INSTALLATION OF AUTOMATIC ELEVATORS IN CONFEDERATION BUILDING BE DELAYED PENDING REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. During a time when the government is preaching restraint and austerity, it has come to my attention that the Department of Public Works proposes to spend $875,000 for new automatic elevators in the Confederation building on Parliament Hill.

In light of current economic conditions and the need to spend in more relevant areas, such as medical research, coupled with the fact that the fate of the elevator operators is uncertain, I would like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That this House instructs the Speaker of the House of Commons, the Minister of Public Works and the President of the Treasury Board to put a halt to any installation of automatic elevators in the Confederation building until they prepare a report for this House determining the following, whether such an expenditure is necessary at this time, what savings will result, and what duties will be assigned to present elevator operators; furthermore, that no commitment be made to have operators on the automatic elevators.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can only be presented for debate with the unanimous consent of the House? Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED CANADIAN ROLE IN INTRODUCTION OF FOOD STABILIZATION SCHEME ADMINISTERED BY INTERNATIONAL AUTHORITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. There is increasing scientific evidence and much recent disclosure of fear of another shortfall of wheat supplies developing in the year ahead, so that many who can hardly be called alarmists warn us that it is much later than we think and that we are operating on a knife edge on the world's food frontier. Many are now convinced that the shortages which led to such devasting rises in food prices in the early 1970's were not the result of insufficient production capacity but came about because the leading export countries, the United States, Canada and Australia—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 43 requires a brief description simply of the urgency of the matter. I wonder if the hon. member would stick to that.

Mr. Hogan: My point on the urgency of the matter is that the United States, Canada and Australia were leaning over backwards to avoid high levels of inventories, seeing the existence of surpluses as being an enemy to their own interests. Since there is a danger of repetition of this type of thinking and acting, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin):

That Canada take an even more important role in the introduction of a food stabilization scheme administered by an international authority.

Mr. Speaker: The motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTION COMPENSATION PAYMENTS FOR ANIMALS SLAUGHTERED NOT BE SUBJECT TO TAX IN YEAR IN WHICH THEY ARE MADE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a question of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the recent eradication program in response to the presence of blue tongue, in view of the fact that compensation paid for the eradication of herds cannot, in many instances, be utilized within the year to re-establish a herd, therefore making the compensation subject to taxation, and in view of the statement of the Minister of Agriculture during miscellaneous estimates on March 24, 1974 that the principle involved in paying compensation is for the purpose of keeping a farmer in business, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco):

● (1110)

That the government take immediate action to correct this inequity.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION OF INQUIRY INTO BILINGUAL AIR-TO-GROUND COMMUNICATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity.

In view of the decision by the Minister of Transport to launch a public investigation into the modality and the impact of implementing bilingualism in air-ground communications; considering also that the minister stated he does not intend to reconsider the extension of bilingualism, and that all necessary precautions in the field of safety and technology were taken, and that the selected referee, Mr. Keenan is the very person who has prompted the pilot union to adopt its strategy to fight bilingualism, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette):

That the Department of Transport cancel this investigation and order flying personnel associations involved to comply with the laws and regulations or face the alternative of dismissal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion may not be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LOTO-CANADA

METHOD BY WHICH PARLIAMENT WILL RATIFY PROPOSAL—DURATION OF SCHEME

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of the Privy Council both in that capacity and in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister. I should like to ask him a question with respect to the announced intention of the government to establish a national lottery scheme. Could the minister confirm for me that it is in fact the intention of the government to seek parliamentary ratification for this major undertaking through nothing more than a routine supplementary estimate, an estimate which will not even be debated in this House and which, like all this government's spending, will fall under the so-called guillotine for automatic approval before the end of June?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the House leaders and I had some discussion of this matter the other day. It will be recalled that when the President of the Privy Council announced the intention of the government, there was some discussion as to whether it would be possible to dispose of a bill within a reasonable time. It was quite clear from the comments which were made at the time that there was a difference of view amongst the parties as to the wisdom of proceeding in this way. The Leader of the Opposition supported the idea in principle; the NDP opposed it. Therefore, it seemed to me that it would be impossible to get agreement on the kind of procedures which would be necessary to get this bill through within two or three days, which was mentioned during that exchange of views.

I also sounded out the parties on the possibility of getting an agreement amongst the parties on a time limitation under Standing Order 75A, which obviously was not agreed to. I therefore put before the House leaders the possibility of dealing with this matter through a supplementary estimate. Of course, this supplementary estimate would be referred to a standing committee where it could be discussed in detail. Members of the opposition could, if they wished, bring that supplementary estimate before the committee of the whole on an opposition day and cross examine the minister in whatever way they wanted. For example, we are prepared to have a day when the appropriation bill is before the House to have a full debate, so I do not think in any way the procedure which seems to be preferable would interfere with an adequate discussion in the House.

An hon. Member: Malarkey.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, my colleague is right. It is absolute malarkey and nonsense—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —to suggest that the only way government business will be done in this House is on opposition days. What I want to know from the minister, after cutting through all his verbiage, is whether it is then the position of this government that we in this parliament have no right to debate the proposals and details of this matter in the whole House, and that all that is required in the view of the government is an arbitrary, unilateral action by the government of the kind that most of us thought had gone out with old King John.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the government has no objection to as long a discussion as the opposition would like to have. There are, I think, ten opposition days of which the Official Opposition could use any number—

An hon. Member: It is your privilege.

Mr. Sharp: —for the purpose of discussing the supplementary estimates that could be brought back into the House with the minister here in front of the whole House to answer all the questions that are necessary. I do hope, however, that it is not the intention of the Leader of the Opposition to renege on his undertaking to support—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: We will stack our record against yours any day.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, if it is the position of the minister that we should take responsibility for introducing government legislation we are prepared to do that, and the people of Canada are prepared to have that done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I say to the government: why do you not have the courage to bring in a bill on this major matter? Putting aside for the moment the question of the legality or illegality of the procedural course that is being proposed by the government—the procedural course of denying the whole House the right to debate this matter—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I would ask the minister whether he would assure us now that Loto-Canada will operate only until it has raised sufficient funds to meet the federal share of the Olympic deficit and that this government will not use the Olympics as an excuse for yet another unilateral raid on a revenue field which is the original priority and original property of the provinces?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I comment first on the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition that we are expecting the opposition to take the lead in introducing legislation. If he had listened to what the President of the Treasury Board said, and if he had listened to what I said, we are prepared to bring before this House the proposal, to have it debated in the House, to have a vote on it and I continue to expect that the Leader of the Opposition would support that measure.

An hon. Member: Bring it in.

Mr. Sharp: As to the other question, the federal government does not have any share of the Olympics' deficit that we are prepared to pay. All that we are proposing is that there should be a continuation of the lottery so that during the three years that has been spoken about, the proceeds of that lottery should be distributed in the proportions put forward by the President of the Treasury Board. All this other talk seems to me to indicate that the Leader of the Opposition wants to have it both ways.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Nonsense.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I would gather from the Acting Prime Minister that now the government is prepared to bring in a bill, is that correct? Is that what he said? Is that so? We are prepared to welcome a bill. That is what should be done. What we want to know, and what he is trying to evade now, is what happens to Loto-Canada after the federal share of that deficit has been met and will there be a guarantee—

An hon. Member: What are you talking about?

Mr. Clark: —and will there be—all right. After the federal contribution for the retirement of that deficit has been made, will the Acting Prime Minister give us a guarantee now that Loto-Canada will, by legislation, be terminated as soon as the federal government has met a portion of that deficit and that it will not continue indefinitely as another raid upon the revenue sources which should properly belong to the provinces?

• (1120)

Some hon. Members: That is the question.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the proposition which the House will be asked to consider, as put forward by the government, will be the continuation of this lottery for a stated time. We are not asking for any further extension beyond that time. It may be that the Leader of the Opposition, if he is still here at that time—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I will be over there, on your side.

Mr. Paproski: And you, Mitch, will be in the court of St. James.

Mr. Fairweather: Or ambassador to Luxemburg.

Mr. Sharp: When we come to the time after 1979, which is the termination of the proposal that we are putting forward, in case this House decides that it wants to have another kind of national lottery, I do not think we should do anything now which would prevent the House from taking that action. It is not our proposal. Our proposal is to extend this particular lottery mainly for the purpose of helping the province of Quebec meet part of the deficit. That is our whole proposition. I hope the hon. gentleman continues to support it.

POSSIBILITY PROVINCIAL APPROVAL NECESSARY FOR OPERATION OF LOTTERY IN EACH PROVINCE—PRIOR CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Can the Acting Prime Minister advise the House if Loto Canada is intended to be operated according to the same principles as the current Olympic lottery, namely, that each province must give its approval before the lottery can operate in that given province?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no. The proposal which the President of the Treasury Board will put forward is for a national lottery which is, of course, provided for in the Criminal Code. We do not need any approval for that. That approval has been given by this House of Commons. All we are asking support for is the establishment of a Crown corporation which would run the lottery, and for start-up funds. That is the purpose, and it seems to me a perfectly reasonable proposition. There will be plenty of opportunities to debate it and reach a conclusion, and I am sure that it must be in the interest of everyone in this country to remove the uncertainty which now exists.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a further supplementary question. Since some provinces have already indicated they will not participate in Loto Canada, can the minister advise this House what consultations, if any, the President of the Treasury Board held with the provinces, and will he be prepared to table that information in the House?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry; I was engaged in conversation. Could the question be repeated?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the minister was so engaged with his colleagues in trying to fabricate the answer to the next question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: I am asking the Acting Prime Minister this question: As some provinces have already indicated their intention to opt out of Loto Canada, in other words, not to participate in the program, can the minister advise the House what consultations if any took place with the provinces prior to the announcement of the President of the Treasury Board on Monday with regard to the establishment of Loto Canada?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think there must be some misunderstanding. This will be a federal lottery.

Mr. Paproski: What! Is there to be no consultation?

Mr. Sharp: This is a proposal put forward by the federal government. The provinces do not have to take any decision about the matter.

Mr. Clark: You do not consult the provinces and do not consult this parliament.

Mr. Sharp: They may or may not agree with the proposal, but it will be for a federal lottery.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRIES OF UNITED STATES OFFICIALS CONCERNING DEATH OF ANNA AQUASH—REQUEST FOR REPORT—COMPENSATION FOR DEPENDANTS

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Over the past several weeks a number of organizations and individuals have approached the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning the death of a Canadian citizen, Anna Mae Pictou Aquash, and the subsequent mutilation of her body by U.S. federal authorities. It has been reported in the media that the minister made inquiries about this matter of officials in the United States. I wish to ask him what form these inquiries took and what reply, if any, he received?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with this particular case. Our consulate in Minneapolis has had a number of discussions with authorities in the area. I have instructed our embassy in Washington to ask the United States authorities for an urgent investigation into the circumstances of this case which, as the hon. member is aware, raises many questions of very great concern.

Mr. Firth: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As this person is survived by two children in Nova Scotia, may I ask what efforts would be made to have those people compensated?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with the case because the persons referred to are in my home constituency. I assure my hon. friend that everything possible will be done to assist.

* * *

[Translation]

AIR TRANSPORT

BILINGUAL AIR-TO-GROUND COMMUNICATIONS—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF IMPARTIALITY OF INQUIRY OFFICER

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the decision by the Minister of Transport to order a public investigation into the modality and the impact of implementing bilingualism in air-ground communications, and given the fact that Mr. Keenan has been appointed to hold this inquiry and that the same Mr. Keenan is the very person who prompted the pilot union to adopt its strategy to fight bilingualism, would the Prime Minister tell us what guarantee he has about the impartiality of Mr. Keenan?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, according to my information—I say that because I do not know this lawyer personally—Mr. Keenan was indeed a lawyer who acted with the pilots but I do not admit at all, as suggested by the hon. member, that he was the promoter of that strategy against the official languages legislation.

According to my information, Mr. Keenan is an able and unbiased lawyer. That he may have the sympathy of the pilots in this case is not a bad thing as long as he can show his impartiality and in that we trust.

Mr. Matte: I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

To enlighten further the Prime Minister, I have here an excerpt from a newspaper report according to which it was Mr. Keenan indeed who advised and guided the association last summer when they decided to strike to protest against the terrible dangers which the use of French would represent for the safety of airline passengers.

An hon. Member: You are not plucky enough!

An hon. Member: You do not mention the name of the newspaper.

Mr. Matte: I would like to know if every precaution has been taken to ensure the impartiality of Mr. Keenan and what steps were taken before his appointment.

An hon. Member: You are not plucky enough!

Mr. Trudeau: I am not in a position to check the hon. member's allegations quoting a newspaper article unless he mentions the newspaper involved. I know the hon. member will provide me with this information and then, on the strength of it, I will look into the matter.

I do not think there is any reason to be overly concerned here. As I understand it, when a counsel works for a party, he advises that party. I do not know whether, in this case, this information has been verified or not. What is important is for the lawyers—

Mr. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): What about Michel Côté?

Mr. Trudeau: There is another counsel. The hon. member opposite is talking about Michel Côté. I know a certain Mr. Holden of Montreal who has not shown the impartiality that the hon. member seems to want him to display.

Mr. Speaker, when one deals with a profession as honourable as the Bar, I do not think one counsel should be misjudged merely because some of its elements are less worthy.

* * *

[English]

EDUCATION

ALLEGED ERROR IN ESTIMATING AMOUNT DUE PROVINCES FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RECTIFY

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State. It has to do with his admission of a $111 million mistake in estimating the payments due to the provinces for the financing of post-secondary education under the Fiscal Arrangements Act. What justification does the minister have for reneging on the agreement with the provinces to pay the full amount calculated under Section 6 of this act in respect of post-secondary education?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): First of all, Mr. Speaker, the notion of an admission of a mistake is the contribution of the CBC, not mine.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Faulkner: I have never admitted to a mistake. It was not a mistake. It was one of the realities of a restraint program.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1130)

Mr. Faulkner: The second part of the question was: are we reneging? The answer is, no. We shall be paying 50 per cent of the operating cost of post-secondary institutions. What is at issue here is the rate at which we shall be paying over the next three years.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTER TO PROVINCIAL MINISTERS OF EDUCATION—TIME NECESSARY TO MAKE UP SHORTFALL IN PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): In the light of that rather weak answer, may I ask the minister whether he will table the letter he has written to the provincial ministers of education on this subject? Will he tell us exactly how and within what time frame the shortfall will be made up to the provinces?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I find no difficulty about tabling a letter. I suspect the hon. lady has the letter right there.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Clark: Check the Toronto Sun.

Mr. Faulkner: I am trying to help the hon. lady in her role as critic. She needs help. As to the time frame, that is a matter I shall be discussing with the provinces.

Miss MacDonald: Can the minister tell us whether the government intends to compensate the provinces for any additional expenditure incurred by them, for example, interest charges on the interim financing they will have to arrange because of the federal government's error?

Mr. Faulkner: The hon. lady seems to be perpetuating the myth which the CBC initiated. It is not a question of error. We are talking here about estimated costs. The estimate offered by the provinces may in fact be higher than the real costs. We have a certain estimate—it happens to be a bit lower than the provincial one—but neither has been confirmed.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGATION OF PRESSURE TO CANCEL DEMONSTRATION BY PRISONERS RELEASE ORGANIZATION IN FRONT OF RUSSIAN EMBASSY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Revenue. In recent days, many Canadians have been concerned about the pressure Revenue Canada has placed on Christian Prisoners Release International as a result of which a planned, orderly demonstration in front of the embassy of the USSR scheduled for May 8, 1976 was cancelled. May I ask whether pressure was brought to bear upon his department by the Department of External Affairs to threaten Christian Prisoners Release International with the cancellation of its charitable status should the march take place?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Epp: A supplementary question. I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the pressure his department place on Revenue Canada—pressure which has been confirmed by Revenue Canada officials—developed as a result of instructions from the U.S.S.R. or its ambassador to Canada in an effort to get CPRI to cancel the planned demonstration.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I know nothing about this matter. I will make inquiries.

REASON FOR TRIP TO HANOI BY PRESIDENT OF PETRO-CANADA

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I will direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister explain the reason for the trip made by Mr. Strong, President of Petro-Canada, to Hanoi recently? Can he confirm that Petro-Canada is negotiating for acreage off the coast of Viet Nam for exploration purposes?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am aware of the trip Mr. Strong made some time ago; it was made with the knowledge of the Department of External Affairs and it had to do with discussions as to how there might be future co-operation between Petro-Canada and Viet Nam. I would have to search for details before I could give them to the hon. member.

Mr. Gillies: Is it the policy of the government of Canada to see taxpayers' dollars invested in a very risky enterprise in a communist country which has just undergone a revolution?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, that is not even in the cards.

Mr. Gillies: The minister says it is not even in the cards. How can he reconcile that statement with his answer to my first question, that Mr. Strong went there to negotiate this kind of proposition?

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member's second question contained a whole series of tendentious comments which are not applicable to the situation at all.

* * *

[Translation]

STATISTICS CANADA

INQUIRY WHETHER CENSUS QUESTIONNAIRE WILL INCLUDE QUESTION TO IDENTIFY MOTHER TONGUE

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

It is about the next quinquennial census to be made by Statistics Canada. Since on the one hand the data related to the mother tongue of Canadians do not accurately reflect the dynamics of the country's linguistic reality and since, on the other hand, it is essential that this reality be defined as precisely as possible before proceeding to establish bilingual districts, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether the government has asked Statistics Canada to review its decision not to include a question about the language commonly used by Canadians in the questionnaire to be used for the quinquennial census which will begin on June 1?

[Mr. Epp.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and some of his colleagues have written to me about this not too long ago, and I have asked that this request be transmitted to Statistics Canada. I must, however, admit to the hon. member that I have not yet received an answer and I cannot tell whether the letter has been forwarded. Still I do know that the question has been cut out of the quinquennial census questionnaire on grounds of economy rather than for basic reasons. Of course, the question remains in the decennial census questionnaires, but I will check into their attitude. I believe it is possible to reintegrate the question about expenses, but I will readily accept the supplementary question.

* * *

[English]

INDUSTRY

TRANSFER BY FIRESTONE OF PRODUCTION OF DUNLOP TIRES TO UNITED STATES—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is in connection with a question I put to the minister last week regarding the transfer of production of Dunlop tires from the Firestone plant at Whitby to the United States and the importation of those tires from the United States with a resulting loss of employment. The minister said he would look into the situation and report back to the House. Is he in a position to give a report today?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The situation as I have been advised of it by the company concerned and by my officials is that there is no change in the anticipated level of activity at the company concerned. The actions to which he has alluded relate to the necessity to switch from a particular trademark, which I believe was Firestone, to the Dunlop trademark. It is strictly a matter of a change of that type rather than any basic change in the operation or procedures or plans of the company concerned.

Mr. Saltsman: Would the minister inquire further into this matter because there is a great deal more involved in it than he has indicated. Dunlop is a well known trademark; those tires were being made in Canada and sold on the Canadian market and now they are to be made in the United States and sold on the Canadian market. Firestone is going to make an unbranded tire which means that consumer acceptance will be somewhat lower than if Dunlop tires were being offered; it means there is an extra competitor in the Canadian market with a consequent loss of employment. Will the minister check into this situation again, particularly with respect to the likely loss of employment in Canada resulting from the use of the Dunlop trade name in the United States and those tires being shipped into Canada?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, I will look into that aspect in more detail. I did make some inquiries along the lines the hon. member has indicated and I was assured the company did not anticipate any loss of employment. But I will look at the question again and refer it to my officials as well as to the company and get an answer for the hon. member.

* * *

● (1140)

FINANCE

SOURCE OF STATISTICS CONCERNING INFLATION ON WHICH MINISTER WILL RELY IN PREPARING BUDGET

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Right on the heels of Statistics Canada's monthly announcement yesterday that our annual inflation rate was 8.9 per cent, Mrs. Plumptre of Anti-Inflation Board fame has said that her board's figures were more up to date and indicated that food prices were up, not down, as Statistics Canada reported, thus resulting in higher, not lower, inflation levels. Would the minister indicate whose figures he intends to follow when he refers to inflation levels in his budget and on future dates, those of Statistics Canada or those of the Anti-Inflation Board?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think probably it would be the policy generally to rely on Statistics Canada for those and other figures, but I would, of course, be interested in talking to Mrs. Plumptre about her views on the question.

LEVEL OF OIL PRICES ON WHICH INFLATION TARGETS BASED

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is again for the Minister of Finance. Since it is the clear intent of the present administration to raise domestic oil prices substantially in the near future, can the minister tell the House whether his inflation targets of 8 per cent this year and 6 per cent next year were prepared on the assumption of higher oil prices this year and next, and, if so, would he indicate to the House the basis for his assumption of oil price increases this year and next?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The assumption was that there would be price changes. I cannot recall offhand the analysis used, but a figure, of course, had to be chosen for this purpose.

* * *

TRANSPORT

INCREASE IN CONTAINER FREIGHT RATES—REQUEST FOR REVIEW BY TRANSPORT COMMISSION OR GOVERNMENT INTERVENTION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Acting Minister of Transport or the parliamentary secretary. It arises out of the clear direction by the government that the railways will be required to follow guidelines with respect to restraint in this period, as set forth from time to time by the government. Can the acting minister or the parliamentary secretary give some indication, in light of the 18.7 per cent increase in container freight rates out of the ports of Halifax and Saint John into Montreal, whether the government intends to ensure that the CTC review the matter? If I may also put a supplementary, if it is not thinking about it, would the government undertake to file an intervention respecting this freight rate increase that will take place on July 1, which will amount to about an 18.7 per cent increase since January 1?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not personally aware of the precise answer to the hon. member's first question, and the second part of the question depends upon the first. I will undertake to get a specific response to the matter for him and I will report back, hopefully at the beginning of next week.

* * *

URBAN AFFAIRS

REASON FOR INCREASE IN COST OF TORONTO HARBOURFRONT PARK AND DELAY IN COMPLETION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the fact that a few months ago, in regard to the Toronto harbourfront park, the President of the Privy Council said, to quote him, "We are looking at economies in all directions", and the minister himself, although he could not assure us that the cost of the park would not increase, said that he had gratifying information in that the costs have not accelerated as much as they might have been expected to, would the minister now explain how, particularly in these days of restraint, the cost of the harbourfront park in Toronto was allowed to skyrocket to $55 million from the original estimate of $36 million, with indications of further increases yet to come?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): First of all, Mr. Speaker, there are no indications of further increases to come. Those increases took place between 1972 and the period when the restraint took place. It was a natural inflationary period at that time, and that is one of the reasons the restraint program is underway, as is the park.

Mr. Jelinek: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that this white elephant was born on the eve of the federal election in 1972 as a Liberal election goodie, and as of now is not scheduled to be completed until 1981, according to the minister's department, would the minister inform this House why this painstaking operation must drag on for nearly a decade at continuingly increasing, exorbitant cost to the taxpayer? Surely, there must be other higher spending priorities at this time.

Mr. Danson: Surely, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, being from the Toronto region, will realize that this is one of the most valuable "white elephants" that has ever been acquired.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danson: The interesting timing of the acquisition, of course, related to secrecy of the negotiations in acquiring the site, and had nothing to do with an election pending at that time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danson: The hon. member's question really provides the answer. The long period of implementation—the period has not specifically been decided; it is a continuing operation—is because of the continuing cost. I have never said, indeed I have said the contrary, that it is my wish to see an instant park created. This site has to develop over a period of years in an economical and feasible manner. It was so even before the present restraint period was begun, and it is perfectly consistent with the feelings of the people of Toronto, as has been indicated in the various surveys that have been done.

* * *

EDUCATION

PROPOSED FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING TO DELINEATE GOALS OF POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Following the question of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, I wonder whether the minister would propose the idea that has been propounded by the AUCC, that before the Fiscal Arrangements Act is amended and we have another fixed period of tax point changes for post-secondary education, it might be an idea to have a federal-provincial meeting to try to delineate the goals of post-secondary education, or for that matter education in general? How has the minister responded to that idea?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have responded sympathetically to that idea. I think it is a sensible and constructive idea. I have not at this point had any response to the idea from the provinces.

Mr. Fairweather: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is this to be part of the negotiations in mid-June when the Fiscal Arrangements Act is being discussed by the first ministers?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will have to wait until mid-June.

ALLEGED INADEQUACY OF PAYMENTS TO WESTERN PROVINCES FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. While he is pondering the $100 million miscalculation, rather than error, would he also look at the inequity that exists in the 1972 Fiscal Arrangements Act regarding post-secondary schools in the western provinces that are facing large growth? The 15 per cent increments are not adequate to meet the needs of those universities and their colleges in their growth period.

[Mr. Danson.]

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, that is a subject on which I have received some representation, and of course it is being considered.

* * *

[Translation]

LOTO-CANADA

DURATION OF LOTTERY

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Considering that a moment ago my leader asked questions about Loto-Canada and considering also that he already knows that I and my colleagues are very much in favour of the objective sought by the government, that is supplementary assistance to the Olympic Games Organization Committee to make up the deficit, can the Prime Minister assure the House that when this matter will be discussed, the term of the corporation will be determined so as to dissolve it when the objective of helping the people of Quebec support the cost of the Olympics is achieved?

● (1150)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I understand the leader of the House correctly, the question was put rather in another form; naturally, I did not hear it, no more than I did the answer for that matter. The government currently plans to set up a national lottery for an indefinite length of time. If the official opposition demands that that lottery come to an end in 1979—the hon. member knows full well that the bill is also intended to help the Commonwealth Games to be held in Edmonton—but if the support of the official opposition depends on that condition, the government is willing to consider the possibility of including a provision in the bill enabling the House to put an end to the lottery in 1979. The government is quite willing to negotiate those details with the opposition. Our intention was explained very clearly by the President of the Treasury Board: we intend to set up a national lottery to serve various ends, but for an unlimited time, as indicated by the President of the Treasury Board.

The President of the Privy Council tells me that he indicated in his answer a degree of flexibility on the part of the government, which is certainly open to negotiation with opposition parties.

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary.

I do appreciate the Prime Minister's answer, but considering that the provinces are generally responsive to that objective of wiping out the deficit the province of Quebec will have to bear, and considering that the provinces are very interested in certain provincial lotteries, could the Prime Minister assure the House that the provinces will be consulted if the national lottery is to be permanent and before a final decision is made?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know there already was an exchange of views and I know for instance that the Minister of National Health and Welfare had the opportunity to talk with western provincial ministers indicating that a national lottery could serve certain national purposes. These are views we are prepared to entertain from the opposition. I repeat, we are flexible. The important thing is, and I think it is a matter of fact, that we have the support of the Conservative party that the lottery will last at least until 1979. If the opposition insists that there be a clause to put an end to the lottery, then we are prepared to discuss the matter with the different parties.

* * *

[English]

HEALTH

ALLEGEDLY CONFLICTING STATEMENTS CONCERNING PURCHASE OF EQUIPMENT TO PRODUCE SWINE FLU VACCINE—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Recently the minister was reported as having stated that Connaught Laboratories was unable to buy equipment from the United States to produce swine flu vaccine because that country had prohibited the exportation of that equipment in order to keep it for its own needs. Apparently the opposition health critic, the hon. member for Athabasca, alleged that equipment was available except for federal government indecision and Mr. John Curran of Connaught also contradicted the minister's statement. Mr. Speaker, which is the true story?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Here is Corporal Lalonde.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Clark: When did you last have dinner with Bryce?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I can tell you that I have dinner with my colleague more often than the hon. member is in the House.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I bet you don't enjoy it as much.

Mr. Clark: We will see the results of that.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the statement that was made by the hon. member for Athabasca was unfounded and this fact has been confirmed by the Connaught representative. I stated in committee when the question was asked that Connaught Laboratories had negotiated with an American company and had reached verbal agreement to purchase the equipment when the American firm advised that they could no longer offer that equipment for sale. This point was confirmed in subsequent discussions with the management of Connaught Laboratories. Connaught Laboratories have indicated that even if the proposed acquisition of equipment had transpired there would have been difficulty in manufacturing significant quantities of the influenza vaccine in time for fall immunization programs. The decision on the part of Connaught Laboratories to seek offshore sources of a swine containing influenza vaccines was predicated largely on the need to have insured supplies available in time for the early fall.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to direct a question to the Secretary of State but he seems to have disappeared.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RECORDING OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATIONS—INQUIRY AS TO PRACTICE OF PRESIDENT OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council. It relates to an answer he gave my colleague from Peace River yesterday in which he said he had a record of the conversation with the two Gazette people who interviewed him on the evening before via telephone. I wonder whether the minister would advise the House if it is common practice for his office to record conversations on the telephone with reporters?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, when the reporter from the Gazette phoned me he said he was recording the conversations so I said "I am doing the same thing".

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the President of the Privy Council. That is not the report I received from the reporter. Can the minister tell me if he can advise this House whether it is common practice for his office to record telephone conversations without telling the people at the other end.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That was precisely the question directed to the President of the Privy Council which was answered.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LAY-OFF NOTICES TO EMPLOYEES AT CFB SYDNEY—REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence but he has just escaped. He had to go on other business. Because of the urgency of the question, I shall direct it to the acting minister or whoever looks after Lockheed or whatever it is. In any event, I want to raise the question of lay-off notices being received by workers at CFB Sydney, some of whom have as many as 12 years service. Would the minister look into it and cancel these lay-off notices immediately in view of the economic situation in Cape Breton and the abnormally high unemployment rate.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to bring it to the attention of the minister. This is the first I have heard of lay-off notices at CFB Sydney, but I will be glad to bring it to the attention of the minister and report back to the hon. member.

Mr. Muir: Mr. Speaker, because of the importance and the urgency of the situation, may I ask the hon. member just how soon we may have an answer?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I will try to contact the hon. member personally before the day is over and, if not today, on Monday at the latest.

* * *

CUSTOMS

ALLEGED SUSPENSION OF CLEARANCE SERVICES AT REGINA AND SASKATOON AIRPORTS—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Is it correct that the Department of National Revenue has recently suspended customs clearance services at the Saskatoon and Regina airports and if so, will he explain the basis for this decision?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): That is a subject with which I am not familiar, Mr. Speaker. I will have to check it out and get back to the hon. member.

* * *

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

REASON FOR PURCHASE OF AUTOMATIC ELEVATORS FOR CONFEDERATION BUILDING

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Last night I questioned him on the purchase of $875,000 worth of automatic elevators for the Confederation Building and the minister stated this was part of an energy conservation program. Would the minister give us a little more detailed explanation and tell us how long it will take to recover the $875,000 as a result of saving on the cost of energy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, is the minister going to answer my question?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry; I was not paying attention.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

[Mr. Muir.]

Mr. McKenzie: I will repeat my question, Mr. Speaker. Last night I raised this issue of the spending of $875,000 to purchase automatic elevators for the Confederation Building on Parliament Hill and the answer was that this is part of an energy conservation program, that energy is being conserved by the spending of $875,000 to provide automatic elevators. Would the minister give us a little more detailed information and inform the House how long it will take to recover the $875,000 as a result of the conservation of energy.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, when I have the precise information I will be glad to report to the hon. member.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, has the minister consulted with Mr. Speaker as to whether there will be operators on the automatic elevators after installation is complete?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I have not consulted personally with the Speaker on this question.

* * *

FINANCE

TAXATION OF COMPENSATION PAYMENTS FOR ANIMALS SLAUGHTERED—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN PROVISION

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that many ranchers or cattlemen in Canada find themselves subject to income tax on compensation paid by the Department of Agriculture when ordered by the Health of Animals Branch to slaughter their herds, is the minister planning to correct this inequity in his budget of May 25?

● (1200)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, of course I could not respond directly to that now but I will undertake to consider that in the budget preparation.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Although it concerns the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I hesitate to raise the matter with him. The reason for my hesitancy is the seriousness and the horror we all must feel about the death of Anna Mae Pictou Aquash. I put this question on the order paper on April 28 specifically because I did not wish to use the question period time, and also I thought the department was entitled to a fairly careful notice of the question. Unhappily, because of other pressures, presumably, the department has responded publicly and not bothered in any way to get in touch with the member of parliament who raised the issue 2½ weeks ago. This puts members into a dilemma if we wish to raise questions.

Presumably I could have given some notice, but I thought that the death and mutilation, in the most horrible circumstances, of an Indian woman needed the sensitive attention of the department, and I think it is getting it—but surely the sensitivity should also extend to the member of parliament who raised the question. Before the department makes a public statement, they might at least have the courtesy to get in touch with the person who raised the matter.

I know the question was raised today by the hon. member for Northwest Territories. I wanted to put this on record because of the dilemma in which it places members when we use the order paper in the way for which I suspect it was designed, and then nobody bothers to respond.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I take the point that has been made by the hon. member. I think it is a good point, and I regret that events have developed in such a way that he was not the first recipient of the information, as he ought to have been.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which relates to the answer that the President of the Privy Council just gave me. When he answered the question yesterday I was quite shocked to hear him say there was a recording, because I did not think in this country we would be recording conversations, especially in ministers' offices. I took the time to phone the Montreal Gazette. I spoke to one of the two reporters who interviewed the President of the Privy Council, a gentleman by the name of Kendal Windeyer, who told me that when he phoned the President of the Privy Council he told him that he wanted to record the conversation to make sure that everything was accurate.

I asked him whether the President of the Privy Council told him that he was recording the conversation, and he said no, he did not. Today we have heard the minister say that he did record the conversation, but that he told the other party he was recording it. I am surprised that the minister would have the recorder so close to the telephone that he could put it on immediately when the gentleman telephoned him for the interview.

In view of the differences of opinion and the fact that the minister has a recording of the conversation in his office, and the reporters have a recording, I would like that tape, Mr. Speaker, if you think I have a question of privilege, to be sent to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, to see whether the minister's account is accurate.

Mr. Speaker: In fairness I must point out that the President of the Privy Council is entitled to be heard on this, and without hearing him I must say that there is no semblance of a question of privilege in the point raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta. However, I will hear the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, so there is no misunderstanding on this question, let me say that the reporter concerned who has been mentioned by the hon. member got in touch with my office some days ago and said he wanted to have an interview with me about a number of questions, including the employment of detective agencies. He sent me in advance a list of the questions he was going to ask, and he asked me whether there would be any objection to recording the conversation. I said "No." I decided, therefore, that since he was going to have a record of the conversation, I should have one too, so I asked somebody in my office to attach a machine to the telephone.

Mr. Reynolds: You have to tell him that.

Mr. Sharp: It was agreed, and it was recorded. I regret it if I gave the impression that I said that. I assumed that when he said the conversation would be recorded, there would be no objection if I recorded it too.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Later:]

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you might decide in your wisdom that my colleague does not have a question of privilege, but the response of the minister and the events that have just come to light prompt me to rise. In my judgment, this matter affects the privilege of all members of this chamber. That privilege, of course, is the right to enjoy privacy in telephone communications with members of the government, members of this chamber and, indeed, I hope with members of the public service of Canada. If there is a suggestion that telephone conversations are being recorded without prior indication to the caller, then I seriously think that the privileges of members of the House with respect to private communications are affected.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will certainly give the matter careful consideration, but it seems to me that there is a law in existence which governs what can and what cannot be done in respect of telephone conversations. As I have said, I will give this matter careful consideration.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Champlain.

Mr. Matte: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

When questions were put to the Prime Minister earlier, several government members, as it often happens, showed that they know practically nothing about air-ground communications and seemed to be too heavy to take off.

But to remove any doubt about the facts that I mentioned concerning the lawyer, Mr. Keenan, I want to point out that my information came from the column Bloc-notes entitled "Les risques d'une enquête", by Michel Roy, in today's Le Devoir, May 14, 1976.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier in the question period a question was put to the Minister of National Health and Welfare which he was attempting to answer with the help of a file, and I presume the answer was important to him. The length and scope of the answer perhaps transcended the rules with respect to answers in the question period. I just want to make it clear that there is some anxiety for us to hear that answer as well. If the minister is available, perhaps he might want to make a statement on motions with respect to it, and we would be delighted to hear it.

I say that, sir, because it is extremely important to the conduct of the question period, first, that questions be answered, and second that the answers given to questions conform with the rules and the practice of the House. I wanted to assure the Minister of National Health and Welfare that there is an anxiety on our part to hear the answer, but there is also anxiety to preserve the question period. While there can be some danger in preambles to answers being too long and detailed, thus endangering the rights of members of parliament in terms of the use of the question period and the number of members who can be recognized in the question period, there is also some danger to the quality of the question period. I want to indicate to you, Mr. Speaker, that if the minister is available and wants to return to the House, we would be prepared to give consent for him to make a statement.

● (1210)

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I am pleased that the opposition House leader raised that point. It seems that he objects to the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare read his reply and that it contained information he obtained from his files, as was pointed out. I simply wish to indicate that if the hon. member objects to that, perhaps I should draw attention to the fact that most hon. members on the front benches opposite, when asking questions, read their preambles and read all the questions which are asked of ministers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. These are interesting comments on what has taken place in the question period. However, I think in bringing the minister to a stop in the form of the answer he attempted to give today was an indication that it was too long an answer in the question period. Hopefully, there will be some other way to try to put forward the information.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3,288, 3,835, 3,864, 5,008, 5,009, 5,029, 5,107, 5,152, 5,228, 5,263, 5,377 to 5,380, inclusive, and 5,382 and 5,383.

[Text]

GUARANTEED AND ESTIMATED COSTS—PROPOSED AND ESTIMATED COSTS

Question No. 3,288—Mr. Brisco:

What are the proposed and estimated costs for the implementation of a guaranteed income policy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): It is not possible to answer this question because estimated costs will vary widely depending on the program configuration selected for a guaranteed income policy. The program configuration is now under discussion with provincial governments and a further Federal-Provincial Conference is planned for June, 1976.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Question No. 3,835—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan, has a comprehensive resource inventory been made of each major fish species found in the environs of PEI?

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Fisheries)): No.

PEI—FISHING SECTOR

Question No. 3,864—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. With reference to the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan, is the original objective of increasing individual fishermen's incomes still in effect and, if so, does the primary instrument for achieving this objective remain the reduction of the number of fishermen?

2. How many persons in PEI made fishing their primary source of income in each year since 1969?

3. How many persons making fishing their primary source of income does the sectoral objective aim to have in each year from 1975 to 1983?

4. Have measures been taken since the Plan's inception to reduce the number of fishermen and, if so, what has been the (a) cost (b) effect of each measure?

5. Since the Plan's inception (a) how many persons have taken up fishing as their primary source of income (b) what were their previous occupations, including percentage of total for each occupation (c) how many persons have stopped fishing as their primary source of income (d) what new occupations did they go to, including percentage of total for each occupation?

6. What new measures are (a) under consideration (b) planned to encourage fishermen to seek alternate employment?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and Environment Canada as follows: 1. The original objective of increasing fishermen's income is still in effect. The primary instrument for achieving this is not a reduction of the number of fishermen.

2. See table below.

3. There is no fixed objective respecting the number of persons making fishing their primary source of income in each year from 1975 to 1983. However, it is anticipated that there will be some changes in the number of fishermen over that period resulting from a variety of factors including management policies adopted by the Fisheries and Marine Service of Environment Canada.

4. No.

5. (a) See table below. (b) Information not available. (c) Information not available. (d) Information not available.

6. (a) None. (b) None.

Number of fishermen, P.E.I. 1965-75

Year	Full-Time	Part-Time	Occasional	Total
1965	42	2,027	1,497	3,566
1966	38	1,483	1,699	3,220
1967	—	1,627	1,742	2,369
1968	12	1,669	1,620	3,301
1969	10	1,666	1,289	2,965
1970	13	1,716	1,072	2,801
1971	—	1,844	833	2,677
1972	86	1,732	1,392	3,210
1973	32	1,784	320	2,636
1974	30	1,766	814	2,610
1975	—	—	—	—

TAX COLLECTED ON OLD AGE PENSIONS

Question No. 5,008—Mr. Matte:

1. What was the amount of federal tax collected from private incomes (a) in Canada (b) in the Province of Quebec during the taxation years (i) 1974 (ii) 1975?

2. What was the amount of tax collected on old age pensions (a) in Canada (b) in the Province of Quebec during the taxation years (i) 1974 (ii) 1975?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): There are, as yet, no data available on federal tax assessments for the 1975 taxation year. The information for the 1974 taxation year is as follows: 1. The amount of federal tax collected under the Personal Income Tax was: (a) $10,559 million (all Canada). (b) $1,928 million (Province of Quebec).

2. Since under the Canadian tax system, tax is levied on the total income from all sources, it is difficult to provide accurate estimates of the amount of tax paid in respect of any particular income item.

PASSES FOR AIR CANADA AND CNR EMPLOYEES

Question No. 5,009—Mr. O'Sullivan:

1. Do employees of Air Canada receive passes which entitle them to reduced fares when travelling aboard Canadian National Railways and, if so (a) under what conditions (b) how many are currently in issue?

2. Do employees of Canadian National Railways receive passes which entitle them to reduced fares when travelling aboard Air Canada and, if not, is the Department of Transport giving consideration to a review of the policy of employee passes for Air Canada and CNR, or urging the companies to review existing policy?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. Yes, (a) one trip pass per year after one year's service with Air Canada; 50 per cent reduction on commuter fares after two months' service with Air Canada. (b) During the first quarter of 1976, 411 trip passes and 301 commuter reduced-rate orders were issued.

2. The Management of Air Canada advises as follows: Air Canada provides limited free and reduced-rate transportation for certain Canadian National Railways staff, such as members of the Medical, Law Linguistic Services and Express Departments, who have a close working relationship with the company and whose duties involve them with the airline on a day-to-day basis. During the first quarter of 1976, a total of 518 of these passes were issued. However, any agreement on the unlimited exchange of free and reduced-rate transportation privileges between the airline and the railway requires that an opportunity must exist for reciprocity and for a close balance in the number of passes to be exchanged. Because there is a great discrepancy in the numbers of people employed by the two companies and because the passenger services available are of a different nature, there is little or no possibility of reciprocity and balance. It has therefore been agreed between Air Canada and Canadian National Railways that proposals for the exchange of free and reduced-rate transportation privileges cannot be implemented.

SANITARY INSPECTIONS OF FIFTH FLOOR CAFETERIA—CENTRE BLOCK

Question No. 5,029—Mr. Cossitt:

Do health inspectors of the Department of National Health and Welfare make periodic inspections of sanitary conditions and food freshness in the 5th Floor Cafeteria of the Centre Block, Parliament Buildings, and (a) if so (i) how often (ii) on what date was the last such inspection (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes. (a)(i) The 5th Floor Cafeteria of the Centre Block, Parliament Buildings, comes under the jurisdiction of the Speaker of the House of Commons. For this reason, health officers of the Department of National Health and Welfare inspect the cafeteria at the request of the Sergeant-at-arms of the House of Commons. (ii) March 17, 1976.

QUAYS 53 AND 54—BEAUPORT FLATS, QUEBEC

Question No. 5,107—Mr. Forrestall:

1. On what date was construction of Quays 53 and 54 in the Beauport Flats area of the Port of Quebec completed?

2. What was the total cost for both berths and related back-up land?

3. Did (a) NHB (b) DREE (c) any other department or agency help in financing the two berths and, if so, in what amount?

4. For what purpose were the berths built?

5. Have the berths been used at all since completion and, if so (a) for what purpose (b) how many tons of cargo have been shipped over them?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the National Harbours Board and the Departments of Public Works and Regional Economic Expansion as follows: 1. January, 1971.

2. $4,635,000.

3. (a) National Harbours Board financing only, in the amount of $4,635,000. (b) No. (c) No.

4. Multi-purpose wharves—dry bulk, liquid bulk, automobiles, containers, wood, metal, etc.

5. Yes. (a) Dry bulk, liquid bulk, automobiles, containers, wood, metal, etc., (b) 3,380,106 tons.

BAY OF FUNDY TIDAL POWER

Question No. 5,152—Mr. Coates:

1. Was the Bay of Fundy Tidal Power Review Board the only body associated with the selection of specific consulting firms for the undertaking of certain obligations associated with the work of the Board as a result of the federal-provincial agreement between Ottawa and the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and, if not, what other body or bodies were involved?

2. What is the make-up of (a) the Canadian Atlantic Power Group (b) Tidal Power Consultants Ltd. and, in each case, what are the names of the chief officers of all of the companies involved?

3. (a) Who is Mr. R. L. Walker (b) what is the location of R. L. Walker and Partners (c) what is the full membership of the board of the firm

(d) for what reason were they selected to be involved in the coordination of this project?

4. Was any consideration given to Maritime Resource Management Service of Amherst, Nova Scotia or Atlantic Industrial Research Institute of Halifax, Nova Scotia and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: 1. Selection was made by the Management Committee of the Bay of Fundy Tidal Power Review Board with the Board's approval, both of which have been established by the federal-provincial agreement re the current Bay Fundy Tidal study.

2. (a) Canadian Atlantic Power Group is a joint venture of Acres Consulting Services Ltd. (H. C. Rynard, President); Foundation of Canada Engineering Corporation Ltd. (A. Chmielenski, Chairman of the Board; W. Weinstein, President and Director); and Surveyer, Nenniger and Chenevert (C. A. Dagenais, President and Chief Executive; J. P. Goudreau, Vice-President and General Manager).

2. (b) Tidal Power Consultants Ltd.,—Directors are: G. V. Eckenfelder, Vice-President, Montreal Engineering Co.: Colin G. Smallridge, Vice-President, Shawinigan Engineering Co.; Murdo Murchison, Vice-President, Montreal Engineering Co.; John Godsland, Vice-President, Shawinigan Engineering Co.; R. E. Coxon, Managing Director, Electric Power Development Consultants (U.K.) and E. M. Fucik, President, Harza Engineering Co. (U.S.A.).

3. (a) Partner of R. L. Walker and Partners, 65 Bank Street, Ottawa. (b) Given in (a). (c) Other partners are J. H. Diddens, Economist; J. B. Kirch, P. Eng. (d) R. L. Walker was selected because of his qualifications and experience for this type of assignment, and need to initiate activities quickly and comprehensively.

4. Maritime Resource Management Service of Amherst were invited to submit a proposal for the work and failed to respond. Atlantic Industrial Research Institute of Halifax was not considered because that organization had not indicated capabilities in disciplines related to hydroelectric power generation which was considered a prime requirement for such studies.

TROIS-RIVIÈRES AIRPORT

Question No. 5,228—Mr. Matte:

1. Has the Department of Transport made any investments at the Trois-Rivières Airport since 1971 and, if so, in what amounts?

2. Can the Airport be used as an emergency airport?

3. How many people have used the Airport since 1971?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes, $20,000.

2. Yes.

3. With the suspension of Air Canada's scheduled services in 1971, passenger data is sparse. Aircraft movement statistics have therefore been used as an indication of the amount of traffic at Trois Rivières. Aircraft Movement Data (Local & Itinerant) 1971, 34,059; 1972, 32,790; 1973, 52,951; 1974, 14,609; 1975, 4,385. (represents itinerant movements only. Local movement statistics not available).

[Mr. Coates.]

OFFICE SPACE—BESSBOROUGH HOTEL

Question No. 5,263—Mr. Dick:

1. What is the extent of the office space rented by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in the Bessborough Hotel in Saskatoon, i.e., how many rooms or offices?

2. How many employees of the Department work in such space?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. The Department of Public Works rents the space that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion occupies in the Bessborough Hotel in Saskatoon. It comprises 86 offices or areas laid out as office accommodation.

2. As of April 15, 1976, 97 employees work in this space.

PREPARATION OF ANSWER TO QUESTION 3,267 ON "ORDER PAPER"

Question No. 5,377—Mr. Cossitt:

On what date was Question No. 3,267 on the Order Paper since October 23, 1975 and concerning a cross Canada trip by the Prime Minister forwarded by the Privy Council Office to the Prime Minister's Office for preparation of an answer (a) what persons forwarded it (b) who received it in the Prime Minister's Office (c) who was assigned in the Prime Minister's Office to prepare the answer and on what date (d) is the answer ready and (i) if so, for how long and for what reason has it not been forthcoming (ii) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The Government takes responsibility for the answers it provides to questions and for the process involved in replying to such questions. It is not appropriate therefore to provide information about internal administrative arrangements.

PREPARATION OF ANSWER TO QUESTION 3,520 ON "ORDER PAPER"

Question No. 5,378—Mr. Cossitt:

On what date was Question No. 3,520 on the Order Paper since November 7, 1975 and concerning refusal of the Prime Minister's Office to permit CTV to photograph furnishings in Cabinet Minister's offices forwarded by the Privy Council Office to the Prime Minister's Office for preparation of an answer (a) what persons forwarded it (b) who received it in the Prime Minister's Office (c) who was assigned in the Prime Minister's Office to prepare the answer and on what date (d) is the answer ready and (i) if so, for how long and for what reason has it not been forthcoming (ii) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The Government takes responsibility for the answers it provides to questions and for the process involved in replying to such questions. It is not appropriate therefore to provide information about internal administrative arrangements.

PREPARATION OF ANSWER TO QUESTION 2,708 ON "ORDER PAPER"

Question No. 5,379—Mr. Cossitt:

On what date was Question No. 2,708 on the Order Paper since June 11, 1975 and concerning details of a trip by the Prime Minister commencing June 5, 1975 in South Eastern Ontario forwarded by the Privy Council Office to the Prime Minister's Office for preparation of an answer (a) what persons forwarded it (b) who received it in the Prime Minister's Office (c) who was assigned in the Prime Minister's Office to prepare the answer and on what date (d) is the answer ready and (i) if so, for how long and for what reason has it not been forthcoming (ii) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The Government takes responsibility for the answers it provides to questions and for the process involved in replying to such questions. It is not appropriate therefore to provide information about internal administrative arrangements.

PREPARATION OF ANSWER TO QUESTION 3,120 ON "ORDER PAPER"

Question No. 5,380—Mr. Cossitt:

On what date was Question No. 3,120 on the Order Paper since October 14, 1975 and concerning a holiday trip by the Prime Minister to the Northwest Territories during the 1975 summer recess forwarded by the Privy Council Office to the Prime Minister's Office for preparation of an answer (a) what persons forwarded it (b) who received it in the Prime Minister's Office (c) who was assigned in the Prime Minister's Office to prepare the answer and on what date (d) is the answer ready and (i) if so, for how long and for what reason has it not been forthcoming (ii) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The Government takes responsibility for the answers it provides to questions and for the process involved in replying to such questions. It is not appropriate therefore to provide information about internal administrative arrangements.

PREPARATION OF ANSWER TO QUESTION 3,069 ON "ORDER PAPER"

Question No. 5,382—Mr. Cossitt:

On what date was Question No. 3,069 on the Order Paper since July 24, 1975 and concerning a trip commencing April 25, 1974 to places in Ontario by the Prime Minister forwarded by the Privy Council Office to the Prime Minister's Office for preparation of an answer (a) what persons forwarded it (b) who received it in the Prime Minister's Office (c) who was assigned in the Prime Minister's Office to prepare the answer and on what date (d) is the answer ready and (i) if so, for how long and for what reason has it not been forthcoming (ii) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The government takes responsibility for the answers it provides to questions and for the process involved in replying to such questions. It is not appropriate therefore to provide information about internal administrative arrangements.

HABITAT CONFERENCE

Question No. 5,383—Mr. Horner:

How much has the government spent to date on Habitat and what is the estimated total expenditure, including security?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): To date, the government has spent approximately twelve million dollars on the Habitat Conference, out of an estimated total expenditure of 15.3 million dollars. This figure includes provision for security.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered.

* * *

[Translation]

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 5,313?

[Text]

*COMPLAINTS AGAINST CANNED PEACHES AND PEARS DUMPING IN CANADA

Question No. 5,313—Mr. Huntington:

Did the Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise, receive complaints in writing during the years 1973, 1974, 1975 or 1976 by or on behalf of producers in Canada of canned peaches and pears respecting the dumping of canned peaches and pears in Canada originating in (a) Australia (b) the United States and, if so (i) what countries were accused of dumping (ii) what are the dates of the complaints (iii) were investigations initiated (iv) on what dates did notice of investigation appear in the Canada Gazette (v) on what dates were investigations started and completed (vi) did the investigations reveal evidence of dumping and material injury or material retardation (vii) was a preliminary determination made by the Deputy Minister of National Revenue for Customs and Excise (viii) was it decided not to initiate investigations?

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lajoie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, here is the answer: (a) In 1973, the Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise, received written complaints on behalf of Canadian peach and pear canners alleging detrimental dumping of similar goods coming from Australia. (b) There was no complaint regarding canned peaches and pears coming from the United States; more particularly: (i) it was contended that Australia was dumping; (ii) the first complaint was made on January, 5, 1973 and was supported by another on January 9, 1973; (iii) no inquiry was initiated and, consequently, questions (iv) and (vii) are not applicable; (iv) as for question (viii), no official inquiry was initiated pursuant to the provisions of subsection 13(1) of the Anti-dumping Act because, during the assessment of the complaint, it was established that at that time, the Australian exporters were not selling under priced canned peaches and pears in Canada. The department and complainants kept in touch about this matter and Australian export prices are checked regularly.

Mr. Speaker: Are the remaining questions allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURES RESPECTING PUNISHMENT FOR MURDER AND OTHER SERIOUS OFFENCES

The House resumed, from Tuesday, May 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand that Bill C-84, to amend the Criminal Code in relation to the punishment for murder and certain other serious offences, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, before the hour of adjournment interrupted my remarks a few days ago I advanced to the House the proposition that I did not consider the question before us at this time as a question of whether we should or should not abolish capital punishment but, rather, a question of whether we should or should not reintroduce some form of capital punishment in our country.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) has said on many occasions outside this chamber and inside that he will not sign an execution order. In fact, in response to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), who spoke on the opening night of this debate and who expressed his views about the necessity to retain some form of capital punishment in our country, the Solicitor General screamed across the chamber: "If you want to hang someone, get yourself another boy". In opening my remarks I advanced the proposition that the people of Canada do not have an opportunity to get themselves another "boy" until the government dissolves this parliament, calls another election and carries on a dialogue with the people about that. For that reason, the question of whether we should retain capital punishment is irrelevant until the year 1978, 1979 or whenever the government decides to dissolve parliament and consult the people as to its performance.

Now that I have put the question in the proper perspective, I should like to deal with the main points used by the Solicitor General to demonstrate to the so-called "misguided" 80 per cent to 90 per cent majority of Canadians why they are wrong and the government knows better. First, he articulated a strong case on the element of error involved in the judicial process. During the debate on Bill C-83 the same minister demonstrated the reasons for stricter gun laws by rolling out statistics on criminal acts in which people fell victim to gun-toting murderers. Five people daily are butchered with guns, and while not all victims are law-abiding citizens, they are nevertheless murdered. These figures increase drastically if one takes into account other forms of capital crime which do not include guns but which are murder in the first degree and also punishable by death.

Since the abolition of the death penalty for capital crimes in 1963—because that is when it was abolished; no one has been executed since—only 18 persons have been convicted of murder punishable by death. Of these, 11 are still on death-row waiting for the angels of mercy and the defenders of human dignity to come to their rescue. If one considers that the courts dealt with 829 persons charged with murder punishable by death since 1961, and that only 568 were convicted, 82 received the death sentence and 18 were condemned of which only two were hanged—before the period 1971 to 1973—the margin of error referred to by the minister is extremely slim, if indeed there is a margin at all.

The minister also quoted statistics to support his argument that juries are reluctant to consider guilty verdicts for fear that their action will result in the death sentence. Juries are made up of responsible Canadians from all walks of life, and I assume that this will always be reflected in their judgment. Of course, there is evidence to that effect. After all, we are only dealing with the premeditated, contract killer who has had access to all the avenues of the judicial process and has not received a recommendation for mercy or leniency from any source. The minister argues that a much greater percentage of convictions is achieved against criminals charged with lesser offences. The reason for that could be, of course, that our courts and our jury system provide for a degree of discretion, charity and compassion, and recommendations are often made to apply a lesser charge.

