MEMOIRS OF SHERLOCK HOLMES BY A. CONAN DOYLE

THE ADVENTURE OF THE BERYL CORONET

"Holmes," said I, as I stood one morning in our bow-window, looking down the street, "there is a madman coming along. It seems rather sad that his relatives should allow him to come out alone. My friend rose hastily from his armchair and stood with his hands in the pockets of his dressing-gown, looking over my shoulder. It was a bright, crisp February morning, and the snow of the day before lay deep upon the ground, shimmering brightly in the wintry sun. Down the centre of Baker street it had been ploughed into a brown, crusty mass, the traffic, but at either side and on the heaped-up edges of the footpaths it still lay as white as when it fell. The great pavement had been cleaned and scraped, but was still dangerously slippery, so that there were fewer passengers than usual. Indeed, from the direction of the Metropolitan Station no one was coming save the single gentleman whose eccentric conduct had drawn my attention.

"I should be happy to advance it without further parley from my own purse," said I, "were it not that the strain would be rather more than it could bear. If, on the other hand, I am to do it in the name of the firm, then, in justice to my partners, I must insist that, even in your case, every business-like precaution should be taken."

Suppression of the Monasteries. A.D. 1536.

About this time Henry VIII fell out with the Pope. The first disagreement arose from Henry taking the matter of the divorce of Catherine into his own hands. From that time matters became more complicated, until, acting under the advice of Thomas Cromwell, he denied the supremacy of the Pope, and made himself head of the English Church. He then cast his eye on the numerous rich monasteries; within three years they were all suppressed, and the King was enriched by their yearly income of £160,000.

MR. MITCHELL'S PROGRAMME

The recent statement made by President John Mitchell, of the United Mine Workers of America, has aroused much discussion in the United States and Canada. Mr. Mitchell said: "So far as I am concerned, there can be no lasting peace in the anthracite region until the miners get an eight-hour day and the union is recognized by the operators."

It is announced from Wilkesbarre, Pa., that representatives of the anthracite miners will meet in November to formulate their demands, which it is said "will include recognition of the union, an eight-hour day, the weighing of coal and paying by weight for a ton of coal and paying instead of the 2,500 pounds which is called a ton in some of the collieries, a new conciliation board of three members, and some features of the present agreement."

President Mitchell says these demands will be presented to the coal operators, and if they refuse to grant them a strike and a fight to a finish will result.

But, further, the men want a nine-hour wage for an eight-hour day, and the denial of work to every man who does not join the union.

The two demands are in no sense related to each other. To determine whether a day's pay shall be given for eight hours work, the employer has only to consider whether his business will stand the relative increase in the cost of production. But when he approaches the second demand, he must make up his mind whether he or his employees shall choose to choose among the union men, he would be debarred from selecting any others, and would have to subscribe to the doctrine that only a man who joins a union has any right to earn a living.

This is what Mr. Mitchell practically says. Though an avowed labor leader, he would not concern himself at all about the rights of a laborer who did not belong to the union. And yet such men have rights. The Roosevelt commission appointed during the great coal strike in 1902, in its report said: "Our language is the language of a free people, and fails to furnish any form of speech by which the right of a citizen to work when he pleases should be successfully denied."

The same commission declared that the constitution of the United Mine Workers was not such as to encourage operators to enter into contracts with the union, and recommended amendments, which have not been adopted.

But non-union men and the operators will not be the only sufferers if a second great coal strike occurs. Everybody remembers the strike of 1902, when coal prices went to an almost prohibitive price, and immense suffering was entailed. Upon men and their families all over the country suffered equally with non-union men, and those who had no share in the strike and no responsibility for it were made to bear the burden.

The attempt to establish a monopoly of labor, by depriving non-union men of the right to earn a living, will alienate public sympathy from the mine workers in their effort to gain the eight-hour day. The coal operators will resist the demands made and apparently carry his point. A New York commercial paper makes this observation:—

"The only thing at all that has happened in the past week to the detriment of the business outlook is the threat of the coal miners' president of another great strike next spring in the anthracite region, unless the demands for an eight-hour day and recognition of the union are granted. If anything is to be said on a matter so distant, it is that to be forewarned is to be forearmed. The coal operators have abundant time to prepare for the struggle if one is to come; and it is on this account a contingency much less to be dreaded."

Another journal charges Mr. Mitchell with intolerance and tyranny, and calls him the persecutor of anthracite consumers, and the advocate of coercion. Still another, referring to the demand for recognition of the union, says:—

"Though the workers may not see it now, such recognition would mean the creation of a system of caste, utterly antagonistic to the principle of equality. The best hope in connection with it is that it might lead to the practical application of the principle of co-operation. Some observers are of the opinion that such will be the final result of the labor struggle, which would be a happy ending to what is now nothing less than industrial civil war."

The same journal further observes:—"While it is possible that the mine workers may succeed in establishing a monopoly of labor in connection with a monopoly in a special line of production, it is difficult to see how the monopoly principle could become established in free industry."

JAPAN'S TRADE

The June monthly return of the foreign trade of Japan is interesting at this time, as it gives the figures of the country's trade for six months, compared with the like period in 1904. There is shown a great increase in imports and a slight gain in exports. Summarizing the statement a Washington letter says:—

As compared with the six months' figures for the previous year, the imports show the remarkable increase of 26.9 per cent., from $95,822,000 to $122,650,000. Exports for the same period show a relatively insignificant growth of less than 4 per cent., from $68,458,000 to $71,000,000.

Of interest to note that, while the largest increase in imports are credited to the United States, the United Kingdom and British India, the largest increases in exports occur under the head of China, United States and Korea. Thus imports from the United States for the first six months of the year 1905 were $31,221,000 as against $13,238,000 during the same period of 1904; imports from British India were $34,034,000 as against $21,022,000; while imports from Germany are stated as $10,704,000 for the first six months of this year as against $6,885,000 for the same period of the year 1904. As regards imports from other countries, they have increased at a much lower rate, or are slow decrease.

The exports during the same period were largest for China, which is credited with $20,923,000, compared with $14,033,000 during the first six months of 1904. The United States ranks next among the countries to which Japanese products are destined, the figures for the first six months of 1905 being $20,394,000 as against $19,000,000 of the previous year. In the third place now stands Korea, with $3,832,000 as against $3,840,000 for the same period of 1904. The exports to the other countries are relatively small, and, moreover, show decrease. Thus, exports to France, one of Japan's large customers of silk, have fallen from $7,117,000 during the first six months of 1904 to $5,401,000 during the first six months of 1905. The exports to the United Kingdom have likewise decreased from $4,343,000 to $3,335,000, while exports to Germany have fallen from $1,098,000 in 1904 to $1,045,000 in 1905.

The leading position of the United States in Japanese foreign commerce is seen from the fact that this country furnished 22.4 per cent. of the total imports during the first six months of 1905 as compared with 14.7 per cent. of the total imports during the same period of 1904, and is credited with 29.8 per cent. of the total domestic exports during the first half year in 1905 as compared with 22.1 per cent. of the total domestic exports of Japan for the first six months in 1904.

The gains in imports affect not only such articles increased consumption of which was to be expected of the war, such as flour, beans and peas, woolens and worsteds, cotton manufacturers, blankets, sole leather, etc., but other articles as well, increased importations of which are the best sign of industrial growth and expansion. Among the latter the most notable increases are shown by raw cotton, the imports of which have almost doubled in value, by manufactures of iron and steel, machinery, etc.

The only articles of importance the imports of which show decrease during the first six months of 1905, as compared with the same period in 1904, are sugar and kerosene oil. The decrease in the importation of sugar is most striking, and is probably due chiefly to the higher import duties on sugar imposed last year, the results of which are seen in extraordinarily heavy importations during the year 1904.

The largest two items of importation appear to be raw cotton, about one-third of which is credited to the United States, and rice, importations of which assumed large proportions for the first time in 1905, and continue to lead all other items, with the exception of raw cotton. About 38 per cent. of the total imports of $142,650,000 during the first half of the present year is represented by the imports of the two items just named.

In an interview in the Telegraph this morning, Mr. Eben Perkins expresses the firm belief that the lower provinces can capture a goodly share of the trade of the new west in manufactured goods. We have skilled labor, cheaper coal and raw materials, and other advantages to counterbalance the difference in freights.

Mr. Perkins believes these provinces can do in Canada what New England does in the United States. It is a cheering fact that a local manufacturer should re-turn from the great west with renewed confidence in the possibilities of the east. More of this spirit is needed to offset the westward trend of our people.

The treaty of peace between Japan and Russia now only awaits the signatures of the Czar and the Mikado, which will be appended as a matter of course. Each country is now free to proceed with the great work of readjustment to the new conditions created by the war. The news from the Caucasus indicates that Russia has very serious work in hand, and that she is not yet done with the shedding of blood.

Following the determination to run politics on federal lines, the governor of Saskatchewan has summoned Mr. Walter Scott to form a government. It will now be shown whether Mr. Haultain will make his fight on non-partisan lines or head a straight conservative ticket. The choice is with the people.

The men of the naval contingent appear to have been somewhat shabbily treated by the exhibition management in Toronto. This is the less excusable when it is remembered that a real prince was present at the opening of the fair. And Toronto prides herself on her loyalty. How Hamilton will jeer.

Though Mr. Herzkiah Butterworth, whose death is announced, has not been much before the public for some years, there was a time when his writings on the relations between the United States and Canada excited no little interest.

Principal Gordon of Queen's University states that manual training is of great value where it can be taken up without interfering with the general training of the student. In practice, it does not so interfere.

The discussion of the boy problem by the W. C. T. U. convention will be all the more opportune in view of current proceedings in the St. John police court.

All is not well with the work of extending the waterworks system. The weather has become a disturbing factor.

PLEASANT FUNCTION

Rev. Fr. Coughlan Receives a Purse of Gold From the F. M. A.

In St. Malachi's Hall last evening some seventy members of the Father Mathew Society were present to bid farewell to their esteemed moderator, Rev. Richard J. Coughlan.

For the past two years the reverend father has been the society's chaplain, during which time he has been from decay and planted the seed of prosperity, which readily took root and brought forth fruit under his fatherly care. In recognition of the grand work done for the society by Father Coughlan, the members last evening had read to him the following address, which was accompanied by a purse of $100 in gold.

St. Malachi's Hall, St. John, N. B., Sept. 5, 1905.

The Father Mathew Association, to their Chaplain, Rev. Richard J. Coughlan: Reverend Father:

Most pleasing indeed was the news received that His Lordship Bishop Coney had chosen you for the future pastor of this important charge of Johnville. How delighted we were at the knowledge of your promotion, pleasure gave way to sadness when we realized that by your going away we would lose the services of the most valuable moderator we have had for years.

The object of the Father Mathew Association—that of promoting the cause of total abstinence—needs a chaplain a man of weight, a man of advanced years, a fatherly man and a strenuous man. These qualities, rev. father, you have proven to us you possess, for no doubt the great advancement made by this association during the past few years is largely due to your indefatigable efforts and zeal for the welfare of the members.

Reverend father, to many of us you will be remembered as a brother member, to others as a zealous officer, but by all of us as a most laborious priest, a consistent and very active friend of the temperance cause and a man who always had the interest of the Catholic youth at heart.

Rather, on going to your new field you have especially endeared yourself. As a slight token of our affection for you we send, we ask you to accept this purse. May your pastorage be long and happy. Signed on behalf of the Father Mathew Association.

WILLIAM P. HIGGINS, WILLIAM H. TOOMEY, J. JOSEPH MITCHELL.

Father Coughlan was visibly affected, and at the conclusion of the reading of the address by the president of the society, Mr. Higgins, he spoke in an admirable manner for about twenty minutes. In the course of his remarks he said he would leave the city for two reasons, viz. First, by his departure he would cease to be a member of the society, and secondly, he will no longer be the chaplain of the Father Mathew Society, and he would like to be in the hands of the Holy Spirit.

Reverend father, the Father Mathew Society in St. John for it brought happiness to every home, where a member of it lived. In concluding Father Coughlan exhorted the members to work diligently for the society's further advancement, and stated that on leaving he was most anxious to see the society flourish and prosper. He would remember the Father Mathew Society in St. John.

Men who have been members for the past twenty years or over were then called upon. Miss E. Agnes reviewed briefly the history of the society, and during the course of his remarks stated that it was the only society of which he was a member, and the only one that he would suggest anyone to join. T. O'Brien, editor of the Monitor, and J. Morrissey spoke briefly.

During the evening the following programme was carried: Piano solo, M. Kelly; solo, W. A. Fishery; solo, John A. Barry; solo, M. Morrissey; recitation, J. H. McLaughlin; piano solo, A. Godson; M. Kelly was the accompanist for the occasion.

During the evening the chair announced that during the coming winter a musical director would be engaged for the formation of a glee club; a debating club would be organized as would also a physical culture class under the direction of James McCarthy, S. M.

Clergyman Talks Entertainingly of Conditions Since the War—Business Is Not Brisk.

Rev. Francis A. Ross, from Cape Town, South Africa, who preached in St. Andrew's church on Sunday last, thinks that many people have wrong impressions of the Dutch people, and feels that in some respects, at least, they have been misjudged.

He believes that the Dutch and Presbyterian bodies will in time be largely in the majority and deprecates the fact that church members (Anglicans) have gained a foothold there.
