Evidence on charge of keeping disorderly house. Evidence was taken in the police court today against Minnie Crews, who was arrested last night on a charge of keeping a disorderly house in Dukes Street, May Jones, Arthur Kelso and Roy Peters were also in the dock charged with being in the house when the party was broken up. Isaac D. Sparks and John Pring were summoned as witnesses and gave testimony that they were present when the party entered or coming from the house under the influence of liquor, and also of suspicious actions of Mrs. Crews. John Pring said he lived upstairs and had frequently heard loud arguing. He had on one occasion heard obscene language. He had also seen Mrs. Crews, who is a married woman, and mother of three children kiss a man in the hall and told of a conversation which took place between the two. The Reichstag leaders will have to listen to speeches stronger than ever on the eve of the Reichstag meeting. Therefore it is worth while to consider carefully whether the leaders of all our great parties should not be called together to form a coalition ministry."

LET US REASON TOGETHER

Individual political fortunes may rise and fall, and political parties may come and go; but there are certain basic principles of public life and public administration which must be preserved or the nation suffers. It may matter little whether a Flemming rise or a Flemming fall, but it matters much if the public conscience of a constituency or a province becomes so seared that graft not only goes unrebuked, but those responsible for it are hailed as fit and proper representatives of the people.

Let us reason together. There has been, and there has been, a public duty which has been neglected. It is not a matter of party politics, but a matter of public duty. It is not a matter of party politics, but a matter of public duty. It is not a matter of party politics, but a matter of public duty.

CAPT. FAIRWEATHER

The citizens were shocked this morning to learn of the death in action of Capt. Frank R. Fairweather of the 26th Battalion. But they were thrilled by the news that he had died a hero's death, at the head of his men, repulsing a German counter-attack on the Canadian lines. Capt. Fairweather was one of those who sacrificed important business interests to answer the call of duty, and he manifested the same high courage in the face of the foe. Death has claimed him in the hour of victory, in a hard fought battle in which the Canadians won fresh laurels, and once more proved themselves superior to the seasoned troops of the enemy.

FILL UP THE 234th

Lieut.-Col. Guthrie's battalion should be at full strength within a very short period. The province-wide campaign which will begin on Monday should at once bring men in large numbers from every county to the point of mobilization. Under the command of officers who have all seen active service, this battalion should appeal very strongly to the young men of New Brunswick.

Let us not deceive ourselves about the length of the war and the need of men. In England the London Times calls for anything in the consideration of this subject, except that it approves of Flemming and puts in practice his peculiar theories of public service and public honor. The real issue is the Flemming conception of what is right and wrong.

Moncton Transcript, Happy will it be for the people of New Brunswick when the day dawns that the administration and the control of our roads are taken out of politics. It is doubtful if the province can ever have good roads under any government so long as the politicians are unwilling to strip themselves of every vestige of patronage in connection with the construction and maintenance of roads.

Presence of Mind. "Oh, John!" shrieked Mrs. Dorkins. "The baby has swallowed a silver piece." Mr. Dorkins took a handful of change out of his pocket and looked it over. "Calm yourself, Maria," he said. "It was that counterfeit quarter I've been trying to get rid of."

THE BLESSING OF A HEALTHY BODY

Has Not Had An Hour's Sickness Since Taking "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

MR. MARRIOTT

78 Lees Ave., Ottawa, Ont., August 9th, 1916.

"I think it my duty to tell you what 'Fruit-a-tives' has done for me. Three years ago, I began to feel rundown and tired, and suffered very much from Liver and Kidney Trouble. Having read of 'Fruit-a-tives' I thought I would try them. The result was surprising. During the 3 1/2 years past, I have taken them regularly and would not change for anything. I have not had an hour's sickness since I commenced using 'Fruit-a-tives,' and I know now what I haven't known for a good many years—that is, the blessing of a healthy body and clear thinking brain."

Turning Away Wrath. A gentleman who discovered that he was standing on a lady's train had the presence of mind to remark: "Though I may not have the power to draw an angel from the skies, I have pinned one to the earth."

Fund Depleted. "What, broke? Why, I thought you had a tidy sum laid away for a rainy day."

"Yes, I did, but Great Scott! look at all the rainy days we've had lately!"

Very. Mrs. Flatt-Kate cannot seem to master that song. She's been trying all the afternoon.

Mrs. Nequire—Indeed she has been! Gen. William A. Mann, commanding the second brigade, was talking in Laredo about the Mexican situation.

"Reassuring," he said. "Well, that bulletin is just about as reassuring as the barber's remark."

"Here, you be careful!" a patient growled at the barber. "That's the second time you've cut me!"

"Yes, yes," said the barber, in soothing tones, "so it is, but there I always deduct a nickel for every cut. Why, sir, it's nothing but a quarter to a man to leave here a quarter to the good."

WHAT THIEPVAL MEANS IN BRITISH WAR GAME

(By the military expert of the New York Times, Wednesday.)

Hardly a report reaches us from London that does not contain some reference to the position at Thiepval and the difficulty of the British in taking it. We have read almost day after day of the capture of a line of trenches here and there about this small village of but 200 inhabitants. In fact, so many trenches have been taken or reported as taken that it seems that long since the entire section must have changed hands.

So that the situation about Thiepval and its importance to the British advance may be seen and in order to justify the efforts the British have made to take it, it might be well to consider the elements of this now famous position.

First, it may be noted that from the plain of the valley of the Somme farther to the south, the ground rises steadily as we proceed northward, reaching the main ridge, elevation just north of the Thiepval-Pozières road, are in themselves higher than any other points between the Somme and this road. Hill 193 is almost directly before the Mousquet Farm, and, therefore, guarded it from the south. The presence of these two positions, which were strongly held by the Germans, showed up the British advance for a long time and made it seem that the British army was either not equal to the task set for it or was not fighting.

Just east of Thiepval is Mousquet Farm, which the Germans had turned into a most strongly fortified position with a mass of trenches, pits and dugouts. The high ground north of Pozières, which was reached by the British soon after the town of Pozières was taken, was an important but not an essential element in the defense of the Mousquet Farm position. Hill 192, which is a part of the summit between the high Pozières position and Hill 193, still stood in the way and forced the British still to fight the way uphill. The great British effort of last week, however, enabled them, after taking Courcellette, flank the defenses on Hill 192, and once it was in their hands the fall of Mousquet Farm was a necessary consequence. This was a blow to the defensive scheme of Thiepval, but was by no means sufficient to cause the evacuation of that village.

The real keys to the position even from an attack coming from the south still remained in German hands. These are Hills 192 and 194. These are the two positions which stand between the German lines. It makes no difference from what point the attack may come, these two points are equally essential for the defense. They bear much the same relation to Thiepval as the high Pozières position to the defense of Verdun. They are close enough to the present British line to reach it in most respects, and, with key fire, and still so situated that they can reach the line along the Ancre with an equal fire.

In other words, while Thiepval is truly in a pocket, one end of the pocket is one of these hills, and the other end at the other. From these hills the ground slopes down to the north. Once they come into the hands of the British the Germans may as well give up all claims to the village of Thiepval and retreat to the positions which remain. The reference in the reports to Thiepval refer not to the village itself, but to the area in which these points are included. The pocket about the village may enable the British to snuff it out.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME AT THE STAR

The third instalment of "The Girl and the Game" was shown at the Star Theatre last night to capacity houses.

As the crowds are increasing very greatly each week, there must be a large number of patrons who did not see the first two chapters, therefore a brief synopsis follows:

All her life Helen Holmes, daughter of General Holmes, president of the C. I. & R. railway, has been admired because of her unusual beauty and her impetuous fearlessness. Helen's first great love, a man named Spike, who was father from a railroad wreck, which she accomplished by a thrilling leap on horseback from a high railroad bridge into a swirling river. Crossing the stream she had acted in time to sidetrack a runaway freight train.

Thieves steal a valuable map from General Holmes and when he attacks them, they deal him a cruel blow. Helen, in a locomotive cab with George Storm, pursues the robbers, who have seized an engine to make good their escape. Going at a terrific rate of speed, Helen jumps from her engine into the cab of the fleeing robbers. She is seized, but Storm leaps to her aid and lays low her assailant with a well-directed blow. Spike, one of the crooks, jumps from the flying locomotive. Helen and Storm pursue and capture him, but not until he has hidden the map, which he had stolen at Sagres' bidding. Spike is brought back and manages to tell Sagres the hiding place of the valuable survey. General Holmes dies from the robber's blow and Helen is left an orphan, alone among a group of unscrupulous enemies of her murdered father.

This is the story to date.

The third chapter will be shown for the last time tonight the first show starting at a quarter to seven.

GUARD BABY'S HEALTH IN THE SUMMER

The summer months are the most dangerous to children. The complaints of that season, which are cholera infantum, colic, diarrhoea and dysentery, come on so quickly that often a little one is beyond aid before the mother realises he is ill. The mother must be on her guard to prevent these troubles, or if they do come on suddenly to cure them. No other medicine is of such aid to mothers during hot weather as is Baby's Own Tablets. They regulate the stomach and bowels and are absolutely safe. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"You must take an interest in outdoor sports," said the physician.

"I do," replied the indolent citizen.

"They provide my main reading every day."

HE'S GOING TO CULTIVATE CORN-ON-THE-COB TREES

Jules Gravelotte, of Paris, is Letting No Thing Get By Him, Especially When It Comes to a Selfish Musical Instrument of the Indians.

(New York Herald.)

Boston, Sept. 21.—A gentleman wearing a top hat, afternoon mufti and tan spats was tripping through the South Station here today when two porters carrying his heavy luggage called a table attention to the fact that a suit case which he had insisted upon carrying himself, was but loosely fastened. Before he could lift the bag to adjust the catches the cover fell down, and about thirty cobs of corn, which the coked porter had been thoroughly removed fell to the platform.

Passerby stopped in amazement, when the corn fell, and their interest increased when the carefully attired and rather stout traveler stepped and, carefully placing all of the corn back in the case, closed it and locked it carefully. It is probable that the assembled throng would have died of sheer curiosity but for the arrival of a traveler who knew some one in the throng and knew all about the man with the corn. As the corn cobs disappeared the newly arrived traveler explained.

"That man is Jules Gravelotte, of Paris, and he is on his way to visit friends in Boston," he said. "I know about the corn, and so does every one else who had luncheon on this train."

Mr. Gravelotte arrived in New York yesterday on board the Lafayette, of the French line, and when he sought a table in the dining car of our train he sat across from a man who was either a natural humorist or some vandyke clown. With the assistance of Mr. Gravelotte, who has a very loud voice, he had every one of the diners in merriment of laughter.

"Mr. Gravelotte apparently had never before seen corn on the cob. He saw a home and have corn trees of his own, man eating it and asked his newly made acquaintance what it was all about. The man told him that it was an Indian musical instrument that no one but the player could hear. Mr. Gravelotte listened every time saw any one eating corn and loudly proclaimed that it was the most selfish instrument he had ever heard of."

"Finally corn was served at Mr. Gravelotte's table and he tried it and continued to eat it from about New Haven to New York. He declared it the most marvelous vegetable he had ever encountered, and finally took the cobs along, despite the protests of the waiter. He insists that he is going to plant them when he gets home and have corn trees of his own. The man who sat with him told him how to do it."

LONG JOURNEY FOR LITTLE ONE

Spokane, Wash., Sept. 23.—Little Nanette Harvey, the five-year-old niece of Mrs. Gerald J. Delaney of Spokane, has arrived safely in this city after a journey of nearly 7,000 miles by sea and land from her native city, Belfast, Ireland. Her father, who served in the British navy, was killed on board his ship more than a year ago and more recently her mother died, leaving Nanette and her sisters orphans. Mrs. Delaney decided to make a home for her little niece.

Nanette crossed to New York on the Cunard steamer Tuscania. On arrival at New York she was met by Walter W. Hook of Spokane, who placed her on board a west-bound train, in charge of the train officials, all of whom paid every care and attention to her needs and comforts.

The Man In The Street

This is just a reminder that the straw hat season was supposed to close more than a week ago.

For the benefit of the citizen who, when reminded of this, declared with some heat that he would wear his straw hat until Christmas if he wanted to, we hope that the weather will continue fine and warm.

Railway men and western Canadian lines are demanding an eight-hour day; probably want to be prepared to enjoy the daylight saving if the plan is made Dominion-wide next year.

Since the announcement that a French-Canadian and an Acadian battalion will be stationed here this winter it is said that the stationers have been stockpiling up with such educational works as "French Self-Taught" and "How to learn French in easy lessons."

St. John should have a Parisian atmosphere this winter.

A city that can spare two millions for the war loan should be able to afford clean streets.

First thing you know, some of the rest of us will be tempted to put a war loan of our own on the market.

The election? Oh, yes, there was an election in Carleton, was there not? Nice weather these days, if it were not for the showers. Going to rain today?

To get back to the subject, the worst feature of the Carleton affair may be that the government programs may be deduced from thinking that their side won because of instead of in spite of the kind of campaign they ran up.

But it was a grand vindication for the man who believes in "moral" politics.

What it looked like.

The acrobat who was putting on a vaudeville turn in a local theatre appeared on the stage in the customary pink tights and advanced to the foot lights to make an impressive bow to the audience; but the dignity of his entrance was somewhat marred when a small girl at the rear of the house piped up: "Oh, mamma, that man has forgot to put his clothes on."

Precarious Unnecessary.

The police are issuing a warning to local jewelers that jewel thieves are operating in this part of the country and that dealers should look out for the safety of their goods for real jewels. Some of the fraternity who operated here this summer will smile if they read the warning. They did not find it necessary to waste even paste jewels in this city. They simply walked into a King street store, lifted a whole tray of valuable rings and walked out again. As they neglected to leave their address the police have not caught up with them yet.

Zeppelin Experiences.

In a letter received by a friend in St. John who was on a week-end visit to London during the German air-raids on August 4, he writes that the Zeppelin was brought down, a rather amusing story is told of a local officer's demonstration strategy to get inside forbidden ground. Several St. John officers from one of the home battalions and some who crossed unattended with drafts were staying at one of the central hotels and, being awakened by the general alarm, engaged a taxi and motored to the scene of the wreck. One their arrival the damaged machine was in a large field, and policemen and military guards were keeping out the sighters. The four who had motored to the place were disappointed, and felt like turning home, but one said "wait, I'll follow me." Going boldly up to one of the big police sergeants, who sprang immediately to attention, he said in his best commanding voice: "Sergeant, you're surely not letting people through here without passes, are you?" "No, sir," the sergeant replied, quite surprised. "That's right—don't let anyone through this gate who can't produce a properly signed pass."

"Very good, sir," answered the sergeant. "Come on boys, follow me." One of the sergeants who had given the bluff, to the others, and in they filed, getting first glimpse of the machine in the flicker of the electric torchlights in the early dawn.

Another St. John officer motored out to the wreck with some friends in the afternoon of the same day. He secured several souvenirs from the demolished Zepp, especially quite an abundance of pieces of the wooden part of the framework—a very fibrous texture. He returned to camp with the wooden souvenirs in his pockets. Next day, during his absence, his batman thought it cool enough for a fire in the fireplace of his hut. He looked about for kindling, but all he could see were the pieces of wood lying on the table. He had no idea that they were prized so highly of that they had taken much ingenuity to secure them—

"I merely represented some chips to light a fire for his officer. He knew nothing of their being souvenirs of one of the most eventful moments of the war—so when the officer came back a little later he was pleased at the cheerful glow of warmth from the grate, but when he missed his souvenirs and found that they had been used for kindling—well, you can more easily imagine his feelings than we can express them."

MAJ. MCKENZIE NOW COMMANDS GALLANT 26TH

Lt. Col. McAvity Relinquishes Command Because of Illness

HE CABLES CONGRATULATIONS

Message to Both New O. C. and Regiment — He Himself Ready to Give Services Wherever Needed

"Owing to illness," says a London despatch, Major McKenzie has relinquished command of the 26th Battalion and is succeeded by Major A. E. G. McKenzie.

Major McKenzie, succeeding a worthy officer who had led his battalion, finds himself now the commanding officer of a unit whose name will pass down in history as being one of the finest bodies of fighting men that has taken up arms against Teutonic barbarism, a battalion that has won for itself the name of the "Fighting 26th."

Lieut.-Colonel McAvity, in speaking of the appointment of Major McKenzie, said that he was pleased that the regiment has been given such a competent commanding officer. He had wired his congratulations to "Lieut.-Colonel McKenzie" and to the regiment.

The new commanding officer, prior to going overseas, was engaged in the law business in Campbellton and is a graduate of the University of New Brunswick and of the U. N. B. and of King's College Law School. While studying law here he was the principal of the Albert school, West St. John, and during his stay in the city had made many friends, and he will be pleased to hear of his promotion.

Lieut.-Colonel McAvity, although medically unfit to proceed overseas for a while yet, as he is still under-going treatment, said this morning that he was willing to go anywhere that his services were required. ### THEY'RE STILL ENJOYING SWIMMING AT BAY SHORE

Sons and Daughters of Neptune Disregard Oncoming of Winter and Enjoy Daily Plunge

It probably will cause a bit of a shiver to some to know that sons—and daughters—of Neptune are still enjoying their strategy in the bay, deep at Bay Shore, though the raft has been driven up above high water mark and over the bathing houses no longer floats the sea. They tell you that "the water's fine; come on boys, follow me." They are not for the fact. They are not many, these fall swimmers, but they make up for that in enthusiastic enjoyment, counting the daily "swim" as much an essential as one of their meals.

If the tide does not "answer" while the sun sends out his rays with invigorating warmth that makes the water enthusiasts will have their plunge and dip after dark in the early hours of the morning when most of mankind peacefully slumbers, is quite in order for these hardy ones.

There's something to their philosophy, too, when you see their tanned skin, and observe their springing suit—their chests well out, the carriage buoyant and youthful. "The salt of the sea for me," bear testimony to the soundness of this doctrine.

PLAN RECEPTION FOR COMING BATTALIONS

A reception committee, of which T. H. Estabrooks is convener, has been appointed by Mayor Hayes to assist him in giving a fitting reception to the men of the two French battalions who are expected to be quartered here within the next few days. This committee is asked to meet at the board of trade rooms on Tuesday afternoon next at 3:15 o'clock. It is intended, if it can be arranged, that the mayor and council with the committee, will meet the soldiers at the railway station and that they will be escorted to the barracks. Merchants and householders will be asked to put out their flags and decorate their premises. The ladies associations who assisted at previous receptions, will also play an important part in the approaching function.

DO YOU NEED A MATTRESS?

If so, don't buy until you have seen the "Dixie No Tuft," the mattress which has revolutionized the bedding business. The absence of tufts does away with the hard spots which tufting inevitably produces, and with the depressions at every tuft which are gathering places for dust, dirt and germs.

Our space is too limited to describe in detail why the Dixie has twenty-five per cent. more elasticity than the tufted type; why it presents a better appearance at first, and why it keeps that appearance after other mattresses have spread and shaped.

But if you will write or phone us for a circular which fully describes all these points, or, better still, call and let us show you samples, we feel sure that you will agree with us that it is the BEST ON EARTH.

SEE DAWN OF FINAL VICTORY

Seems to Break Over the Town of Comblès

A LONG ROAD TO IT

Two Years to Get Six Miles, and What a Struggle—No Such Clinch of Death in History of Warfare

(Boston Transcript.)
As the first British armies landed in France after their passage of the Channel, the men sang a popular song which had pleased their fancy, of which the refrain was, "It's a long road to Tipperary." The song became their war chant. There was something prophetic about it. The men who sang did not know what "long roads" had to do with this war. Their great leader, Kitchener, did know, and he must have smiled grimly when he heard the soldiers sing of the weary way to Tipperary. For how long and hard the road was to be, before they were even to look upon the dawn of their final victory on the continent, he, Kitchener, fully understood.

Just now, all may see that dawn. It seems to break over a certain little town which nestles in a valley near the river Somme in France—the town of Comblès. There is nothing about little Comblès to give it the character of a stronghold—nothing to forebode a fighting fame for it. But it chanced that near this village the nippers of the French army and the British army came together, and it is a fact that the British and the French have been marching to Comblès, or creeping to Comblès, or gnawing their way to Comblès, over a road which is about six miles from the spot to which they swiftly marched about this date two years ago, on their recoil from the Marne.

Here, two miles out of the city of Albert, on the road which meanders up the valley of the Somme, the British dug themselves in two years ago. The British line at that time was farther north, but was afterward extended to this neighborhood. And along this road the British and the French have now long stood shoulder to shoulder. From the high ground, they could see little Comblès, nestling in the bend of the river. But no dawn of victory could they see breaking over it. That had to come with the tedious traversing of the road.

Two years to get six miles! A long road, indeed, but what a road to travel! Here were stretched the most complicated, the deepest, the thorniest, the most amazing intrenchments that the art of war has ever produced. Crossing this line of entrenchments turned out to be a good deal like shooting Niagara, upward. Here was an army comfortably underground, out of the reach of shells. Not far away was the "Wonder Work" of German defensive art, which makes of Vauban's strongest fortifications a child's play place. In order to march over these six miles of road to Comblès, the British must bring into being guns which they had never used before, and which were capable of grinding, with their fire, these entrenchments to bits. That was the way they were negotiating the road to Comblès—by putting all their shops and mills, and even the women they had left behind them, to the manufacturers of these weapons of uttermost destruction.

The road had to be marched not merely above and upon the ground, but through the very earth. The British succeeded. Their new and powerful guns, their terrible accumulation of shells, at last drove the Germans out of their trenches by virtually leveling the trenches out of the earth. And when the Germans sought to make new trenches, they found the first too terrible and ceaseless to permit them to make the elaborate dug-outs necessary. Today we have a picture of the resistance which the Germans made. Lacking the deep trenches that the British guns would not let them build, they placed the cannon side by side, 150 to the mile, and resisted the advance with a shell fire unexampled in its volume of projectiles.

Even at that, the British are getting over the road. No such clinch of death has been recorded in the history of warfare. Never such a pouring out of blood and treasure, with empires at stake. That the expenditure must bring victory at last to the assailants is plain from this fact, that the resistance is absolutely the utmost that the German power can bring to bear, and yet it is not all. If not another ounce of power remains to the Germans, what must be the result of their stilling back? The test has gone against them; that is all.

And thus it is that, although the Germans at this writing remain in the little town—their backs to the river, both flanks menaced—the road behind them narrowing hourly—the British, piled up on the road, eastward looking see the sun of victory dawning over Comblès.

building free of all debt and with a membership of 225 boys. At the outbreak of the war I threw my club open to the Belgians and soon had more than one hundred refugees, who remained there several months. Later, when the relief work was better in hand I was able to restrict the occupants of the club-house to boy refugees, and I endeavored to keep as many boys as possible over fifteen years of age in this building. The Manual Training School of The Hague is located opposite and there they are studying to perfect themselves in some trade.

"Our idea is to make the Holland-America Home a permanent home for these and the other Belgian orphans in our land. We do not wish to make it an institution where children will be training in classes. Instead, it is our plan to have cottages with a mother, whose family will be increased by four or five, at the head of each, where the children will receive individual attention and know the joys of a home. There will be, perhaps, the dining hall for the colony, as well as a school and church, and we will endeavor to make all of them self-supporting. The difference of religion of the two countries will not in any way enter into the home and any one will be free to leave whenever he wishes to. We need $100,000 for our project, for which we hope to make arrangements as soon as possible.

Dutch Project Backed by Roosevelt and Others

Solicit Funds in United States—Daughter of Count, Chaplain of the Netherlands Tells of Her Work Among the Homeless

Under the auspices of a committee, consisting of Theodore Roosevelt, August Belmont, Horace White, E. E. O'Leary, Mrs. George B. S. White, Mrs. Astor H. Lee, and a number of other prominent Americans, Miss Hindrika A. C. van der Pijer of the Hague is raising funds for a home for Belgian children, to be known as the Holland-America Home.

Belgian children whose fathers were killed in the war are to be trained and educated there, and it is proposed to found the home in Antwerp after the war. In the meantime the children are to be cared for in the different institutions and private families where they have been for the last two years.

Miss van der Pijer, who is the daughter of the court chaplain, who confided, crowned, and married the Queen of Holland, has for many years been engaged in improving the condition of the poor in her country. Since the beginning of the war she has given her entire time to relieving the sufferings of the thousands who were suddenly thrown within the nation's gates, and is now in the United States to obtain funds for carrying on the work of educating and making these unfortunate people self-supporting. She is at the McAlpin Hotel, New York, where she is the guest of the committee consisting of Monsieur le Baron Fallon, Belgian Minister at The Hague; Dr. Frans van Cauwelaer, a member of the Belgian Parliament, and herself.

"When the war began more than 1,500,000 terror-stricken Belgians swamped our country," said Miss van der Pijer. "These desperate people had fled from their homes without a moment's notice and had carried with them all sorts of strange things and what was needed—food and clothing—and we were, therefore, confronted with the colossal problem of providing for this human flood which had fairly inundated our quiet little towns. It was horrible to see the fleeing mob, pressing forward so closely together in all the roads which led to safety that many a Belgian mother found her baby crushed to death in her arms. I lag behind for a moment was to be hopelessly lost from the rest of the family.

Streets Filled with Refugees.
"The streets were filled with the refugees, some towns being tripled and quadrupled and even more in size. One town of 20,000 found 100,000 Belgians in its streets clamoring for protection and food, and many had taken refuge in the woods. One village of 8,000 swelled to 25,000 in a single night and sheltered 4,000 in the cathedral. We established temporary quarters in churches, public halls, and even in private houses where shelter could be obtained. One mother

Rivals Her Daughter in Youthful Beauty

A well-known society matron whose youthful beauty is so well preserved that she is regarded as her daughter's rival in this respect—though she does not pose as such—attributes her girlish complexion chiefly to two things. She says: "I am convinced that many complexions, by overloading the skin and pores, tend to age the complexion. My secret is to keep the complexion clear, to breathe, and remove dead particles of cuticle which are constantly depositing and which give the complexion that aged look. Whenever my skin begins to get the least bit off-color, muddied or faded, I go to my drugstore for a ounce of mercurochrome. I apply this nightly, like cold cream, for a week or so, washing it off morning. This is what keeps my complexion so fresh, white and velvet. The absence of wrinkles and freckles. I owe to the use of a simple face bath prepared by dissolving in a quart of warm water a small quantity of soap. This keeps the skin tight and firm." Social Register.

MORE ABOUT THE BRITISH "TANKS"

The Great New War Machine Used on Somme Front

SIXTY FEET LONG

Four Times as Heavy as Locomotive; Gave Germans as Big and Unpleasant Surprise as Gas Gave Our Men at Ypres

A gentleman recently returned from England gives The Toronto Star some information respecting what was current gossip about the new British armored motor cars, which were referred to for the first time in the official British account of last Friday's victory on the Somme. If this gossip is to be relied upon, the new invention is the most remarkable war has produced and may, by reason of its mobility and strength, have an incomparably greater effect on the progress of hostilities than were the famous big siege guns which were the Germans' surprise at the beginning of the war. Here are some points in the reported description:

The cars are said to weigh more than 400 tons. One statement said 480 tons. That is to say, they are four times as heavy as our largest locomotives.

They are driven underneath on endless chains.

They carry large and small guns.

They are heavily armored like a battleship and are immune from ordinary shell fire and everything excepting arm-piercing shells.

They are non-combustible.

Their length, said to be sixty feet or more, is such that they can be driven right across trenches or ordinary small excavations.

They move slowly but inexorably. Five miles an hour is given as their speed.

They climb inclines. At one test, said to have been made before the king, one was run into a shell crater and climbed its way out at an angle of something approaching 45 degrees.

Barbed wire entanglements are child's play. The machine, run along an entanglement, flattens it to the ground.

In one test it was said a machine was run against a tree of considerable magnitude and the tree was flattened to the earth.

A despatch says they are referred to as tanks. It is reported they look like huge water tanks, and on being shipped to France actually had the words water tanks painted on them. The soldiers are said to have nicknamed them "Willies."

As Big a Surprise as Gas.

A cable from the British front in France says:

"The work of the new armored cars, in co-operation with the British infantry in their charges in Friday's successful attack, is the one theme of the talk throughout the army. The idea was so good when it was offered, said a staff officer, that we had some built, and the way they have gone over the German trenches and have entailed them with machine gun fire is some return for the surprise the Germans got with their gas attacks in the first battle of Ypres."

Evidently the British were able to keep the building of these cars entirely secret, and the first that the Germans knew of their existence was when, in the misty dawn they came trundling across shell craters and over tree stumps, cutting down many small trees on their way, toward the German trenches on the second line and even to the third line. The return to earth of Ichthyosaurs or Dinosaurs, spouting bullets from their nostrils, could not have been more amusing.

"Tanks" is the slang word that the army staff has applied to these strange creations of machinery, but they look less like tanks than anything else in the world. It is hard to say what they look like. They have been compared both to armadillos and measuring worms and to many other weird creeping or crawling objects of natural history. A man-of-war's turret crossing fields in and out of gulleys, and through fences, would present a spectacle resembling their progress.

They Do Their Work.

"During the days preceding the attack, as they moved up to the front and the soldiers gazed at them, the risibilities of all ranks were kindled.

"All sorts of questions were propounded. 'Would the thing stand when it was hitched? and what was it fed? Which was its head and which its tail? At all events it was a steel-jointed incarnation of military secrecy.

"Wounded men back from the line forgot their pain and what part their battalion played during the battle in telling what the 'tanks' did. Notes were compared between the action of 'our' and 'your' tank. Co-operating with the infantry, according to prearrangement, the grotesque creatures played the part set for them under the control of their invisible crews, which were their brain centres.

"British army reports never had a stranger passage than one saying that 100 Germans had surrendered to a 'tank'. A staff officer spoke of one having stopped to 'browse' at the edge of the wood before continuing to advance.

"These armored cars have brought a new element into the grim, monotonous business of war, trenches, shells, and bombs. It was the 'tank's' day and the 'tank' made good.

Better Than Ball Playing. (Springfield Republican.) Billy Sunday, if it is said, gave the $4,000 thank offering received for his recent ten-day meeting at Ocean Grove to Rev. Elijah P. Brown, after converting the money into a residence. Mr. Brown is Billy's biographer and former evangelist coach. The most interesting part of this item is its mention of Billy's average receipts of $600 a day—apparently net receipts. It leaves ball playing nowhere.

Jess Willard says: Take Nuxated Iron

If you want plenty of 'stay there' Strength and Endurance and Health and muscles like mine."

JESS WILLARD AT HOME

Among all the prominent figures of the prize ring, probably none is so devoted to family life as Jess Willard. After each engagement the champion hurries to his wife and children and remains all their side until public demand forces him to leave for new encounters. Everything is done to bring up the "little Willards" with strong healthy bodies. Mr. Willard accounts for his own success by saying:—"I consider that plenty of iron in my blood is the secret of my great strength, power and endurance."

A hitherto untold secret of his Great Victories over Jack Johnson and Frank Moran.

Ordinary Nuxated Iron will often increase the strength and endurance of the delicate nervous folks 200 per cent. in two weeks' time.

SPECIAL NOTE—Dr. E. Sauer, a well-known physician who has studied widely in both this country and Europe, has been specially employed to make a thorough investigation into the real secret of the great strength, power and endurance of Jess Willard, and the marvellous value of nuxated iron as a strength builder.

NEW YORK—Upon being interviewed at his apartment in the Colonial Hotel, Mr. Willard said: "Yes, I have a chemist with me to study the value of different foods and products as to their power to produce great strength and endurance, both of which are so necessary in the prize ring. On his recommendation I have often taken nuxated iron and I have particularly advocated the free use of iron by all those who wish to obtain great physical and mental power. Without it I am sure that I should never have been able to whip Jack Johnson so completely and easily as I did and while training for my fight with Frank Moran, regularly took nuxated iron, and I am certain that it was a most important factor in my winning the fight so easily."

Continuing, Dr. Sauer said: "Mr. Willard's case is only one of hundreds which I could cite from my own personal experience which proves conclusively the astonishing power of nuxated iron to restore strength and vitality even in most complicated chronic conditions."

Not long ago a man came to me who was nearly half a century old, and asked me to give him a preliminary examination for life insurance. I was astonished to find him with the blood pressure of a boy of 20 and as full of vigor, vim and vitality as a young man—in fact, a young man he really was, notwithstanding his age. The secret he said was taking iron—nuxated iron had filled him with renewed life. At 30 he was in bad health; at 46 careworn and nearly all in. Now at 80 a miracle of vitality and his face beaming with the buoyancy of youth. As I have said a hundred times over iron is the greatest of all strength builders. If people would only throw away patent medicines and nauseous concoctions and take simple nuxated iron, I am convinced that the lives of thousands of persons might be saved who now die every year from pneumonia, grippe, consumption, kidney, liver and heart trouble, etc. The real and true cause which started their diseases was nothing more or less than a weakened condition brought on by lack of iron in the blood. Iron is absolutely necessary to enable your blood to change food into living tissue. Without it, no matter how much or what you eat, your food merely passes through you without doing you any good. You don't get the strength out of it, and as a consequence you become weak, pale and sickly looking, just like a plant trying to grow in soil deficient in iron. If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work, or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary nuxated iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see for yourself how much you have gained. I have seen dozens of nervous, run-down people who were niling all the while, double their strength and endurance and entirely get rid of all symptoms of dyspepsia, liver and other troubles in from ten to fourteen days' time simply by taking iron in the proper form. And this after they had in some cases been doctoring for months without obtaining any benefit. But don't take the old form of reduced iron, iron acetate or tincture of iron simply to save a few cents. You must take iron in a strength 200 per cent. or over in four weeks' time, provided they have no serious organic trouble. They also offer to refund your money if it does not at least double your strength and endurance in ten days' time. It is dispensed in this way simply because he knew the city by Watson's Drug Store, and all the secret of great strength and endurance other drugs.

Simonds Writes of War in West

Writing previously to the brilliant and extensive gain by British forces on Friday, Frank H. Simonds says in the New York Tribune: The latest and in a sense the most complete of the recent French successes at the Somme is a splendid example of the fashion in which the French have learned to co-ordinate their movements of troops to their artillery preparation. For the second time in a relatively brief period they have made an advance of over a mile on a considerable front, and this advance has enabled them to take possession of one of the most important highways on their present front. Neither the Germans nor the British have been able to achieve this same co-ordination. No such advances marked the later phases of Verdun, although the Germans frankly borrowed at Verdun the methods which were first applied by Foch in his operations, little known to the world, in Artois in May and June of 1915. Had the British been able at that time to support Foch, the campaign in France in the disastrous summer of last year would have been very different. But the British were not able, they made a gallant attempt at Festubert, suffered colossal losses, and had to give it up until the fall venture at Loos, which was equally unsuccessful. In the Artois fighting in 1915 Foch slowly and surely drove a net around one after another of the villages near famous hill of Notre Dame de Lorette. As he is now "pocketing" Comblès and Peronne, he "pocketed" Carency, Ablain, and Couches. But that time he lacked the heavy artillery which only now beginning to appear in the necessary quantity; lacking the artillery, his operation was expensive in lives, and had, timely, to be given up, but not before it had demonstrated the efficacy of his method, and at that time General Foch told a correspondent that with artillery and ammunition he could gain quite as much as he is now gaining. French Gained First Going back eleven weeks to the moment when the first attack was made in the Somme sector, we see that it was the French who made the original gain. Within a few days they had pushed a point nearly six miles east and reached the hills facing Peronne across the Somme. This wedge was the foundation on which the whole Somme operation was created. In this period the British were unable to make any large initial gain. They followed the French operations, but this does not wholly explain the disproportionate gains of the two armies. Having made their first great gain, the French were compelled to wait for the British, who were occupied in the next weeks with the capture of a whole series of villages, of which Mametz was the first and Flixes and Longueval the last. When the British had got on and were at last at Longueval, High Wood

Milk Foods for Baby that are Scientifically Modified.

The 'Allenburgs' Milk Foods have in thousands of cases proved a safe, successful alternative for mother's milk, when this is scanty or altogether lacking. In their preparation fresh pure cow's milk is "humanized" by increasing the proportion of cream and milk sugar and removing the excess of acid-forming material. This is done in splendidly equipped laboratories, with scientific accuracy—Felix Foods Nos. 1 and 2 (add hot boiled water only) provide a complete dietary for the first 6 months of infant life. That is why even the most delicate babies digest and thrive on Allenburgs Milk Foods. The Allen & Hanbury Co., Limited, Toronto.

German Trenches Fall Meantime on the south the French have similarly drawn a semi-circle about Chaulnes and cut the Chaulnes-Roye railroad, also a vital detail in German communications. They have widened their original wedge, thrust out toward Peronne, by taking a number of villages to the south. Thus the whole French forward move, which on the map resembled a long narrow spearhead, weeks ago, is now a solid block, from which two points, one north and one south of Peronne, extend into German lines. The rapid success of the French in later days suggests that the new trench and redoubts that the Germans have erected since they lost their first and permanent works are not standing up against bombardment very well. The German counter-attacks, which are usually without effect against the French so far, although they have taken a number of villages, are being made from the British. In every case the British have ultimately regained the lost ground, not only by the use of their quick, clean, decisive operation which has been almost invariable in the French hands. This joint operation of the British and French, rather than the usual obvious lesson for Americans, Foch's army is made up, from the commanding general down, of officers and non-commissioned officers who have been trained in peace for war. Foch, to be sure, is the greatest battle general, and on the offensive, at least, that the French have produced in the war. But as a general of peace, and as a commander of a well disciplined body of conscript soldiers operating under the command of soldiers trained for the sort of task that war is.

OWNERS OFTEN TO BLAME FOR HIGH MOTORING COST

Many Ways of Effecting Savings in Gasoline, Tires, and General Wear and Tear

The average motorist who complains about the high cost of operating his car, probably does not stop to consider that he is largely responsible for the conditions...

or half-mile trips to execute little household errands or deliver messages, must recognize that such driving can produce nothing but waste and high average cost of depreciation, says this motor expert.

"A maximum of twenty-five miles an hour, when such a speed is permissible, is judicious driving. Perfect control of every adverse circumstance, without injury to the passengers, tires, or mechanism, can be maintained if this speed is never exceeded. It has very wisely been said that an old car can go fast, but it takes a good one to run slowly."

motorists are careless in oiling parts and in filling the crank case. Oil, and oil in abundance, should be used on a car, especially when long trips are contemplated, but there are good and bad ways of oiling a car.

BRITISH NOT IN BATTLE OF MARNE Our Pride in That Victory Said To Be Delusion Was Won By The French

There is going to be glory enough in this war to go round, and since the British are now beginning to exert their full strength, there ought to be no objection to facing the fact that at the Battle of the Marne, so far as one can judge from competent critics, they were out-generaled and deceived.

Not Too Proud, But Unready As far as the Battle of the Marne, the greatest battle in the history of the world, is concerned, the facts which Belloe indicates are these: Manoury and Gallieni went to Gen. French at Meun on September 4 and asked him to change the position of his army and attack the two corps of von Kluck facing him the next day, while Manoury would attack the German general in the rear and flank along the Ourcq. Had this been done, according to Belloe, Kluck would have been destroyed. The defenders of Gen. French say that his army was in no condition to strike so quickly, that it would take some time for the force which had just been in the memorable rear-guard action from Mons to prepare for such a move. In any event the army, in the opinion of Sir John French, was not ready. It did not strike, and Kluck withdrew his two corps from the British front, and was able to use them against Manoury, with the result that they almost succeeded in winning the day.

French Defence It was months after this decisive action before Gen. French was recalled, given a peerage, and replaced by Haig. If he had made a success of his task, would he have been recalled? War-time is probably no time to ask these questions, and officially nothing has been said of Baron French. No doubt he has a defence to the questions that have been asked him by historians anxious to do him justice. His army had just gone through a terrific grilling. One might blunder through excessive caution. French avoided the former danger. Did he avoid the latter? Some of his defenders say that the French struck too soon; others say that had they not struck then they would have been deprived of the power of striking. It may be that we shall not get at the truth of the matter until the war is over, but in view of Mr. Belloe's latest book we shall not greatly err in believing that the British were not at the Battle of the Marne, and in clinging to the conviction that the French, if they do not strike another blow in this war, have already "done their bit."

Both the Red Sox and Brooklyn Dodgers won their games yesterday and continue to lead their respective leagues by good margins, considering that the season is rapidly drawing to a close. The Red Sox have ten more games to play, Chicago seven and the Tigers six. This means that if the Chicago and Detroit teams won all their remaining games the Red Sox could drop three and beat out the White Sox, lose four and still lead the Tigers. In the National League the Dodgers have thirteen and the Phillies fourteen games to play. As the former are leading by only two games and a half there is still a good chance that the Dodgers are conceded the edge by prominent critics.

Bamboo for Wood Pulp Experiments Have Proved Successful Says Man Who Predicts Change in Twenty Years Bamboo will be used for making wood pulp paper twenty years from now, in the opinion of F. A. Quayle, of Powell River, B. C., formerly a resident of Minneapolis, says the Minneapolis Tribune. Diminishing supplies of spruce and hemlock, from which the best wood pulp paper is made today, are causing manufacturers to hunt for substitutes, he said. Bamboo experiments "is a success and grows rapidly, he stated. How did you come out?" asked his friend. "Well, he have you?" "Her answer," replied the diplomat, "is partially satisfactory. Enough so to continue negotiations. She says if she ever does marry it will be a man of good looks, courage and ability."

HOME POLITICS QUIETER NOW IN GREAT BRITAIN

News From Ireland Becoming More Favorable

No More Home Rule Discussion Yet; Carson and Churchill Formidable as Critics of the Asquith Government

Special Cable to The Toronto Star Weekly by T. P. O'Connor.

LONDON, Sept. 16.—The cannon roar louder and more incessantly than ever, making the silent lull that has come over the political world at home, seem more eloquent by comparison.

The intensity of interest and the anxiety concerning the many battle fronts, in fact, overwhelm every other topic, although occasional attention is given to such subjects as the relationship between the British and the Irish in the war, and the progress of the gigantic battle.

Public opinion remains extraordinarily optimistic. Even the Roumanian reverse was discounted as a mere side-show, which will be obliterated when the Russian masses have joined the Roumanians in overwhelming force against the Germans and Bulgarians.

A sign of relief also has gone up at the break of the long stalemate at Saloniki, although as yet accurate information from that quarter is scarce, and there is much uncertainty as to what can be done by the allied forces under such topographical conditions.

Ireland has come more to the front this week than any week since the opening of the war. Two Irishmen are among the new recipients of the Victoria Cross. The extraordinary dash and valor of the Irish regiments in the battle for Gluechy, have thrown the bravery of the Irish soldiers into the forefront of even the gigantic battle panoramas.

Irish News Better.

It is a sign of the changed spirit of the times and of the substitution of Lloyd George for Kitchener at the War Office. The events above described, are now recorded in full and even enthusiastically in all the English newspapers.

The news from Ireland itself, shows that the reaction in favor of Redmond and the Irish party, which began as the horror over the executions diminished, has made great progress within the past few weeks, but there must be a lull yet awhile. The Irish leaders are remaining silent, though all recognize the enormous improvements in the temper of the people.

At the moment, there is a curious paradox, in that the eagerness for a settlement of the Home Rule problem is perhaps even keener among Englishmen than among Irishmen. But times, however, are not yet ripe for the re-opening of the question.

I have described how the formless and leaderless Opposition in the House of Commons in time became coherent and formidable by the successive breaking off in the ranks of the cabinet. The first to go was Mr. H. H. Asquith, a good administrator and a fair speaker, but he had not attained a sufficiently strong position in the cabinet to be a leader of a formidable opposition. The first real stroke of luck for the new opposition was the resignation of Sir Edward Carson. Sir Edward Carson's career as a minister was somewhat curious. He never has cared for office, and it is believed that he would not have gone into the cabinet if it had not been for the strong pressure put upon him by Mr. Bonar Law, who has always had very high regard for both his intelligence and his energy. His appointment to the cabinet was, and now most people know, a great mistake. It was one of the scores of causes which helped the Sinn Feiners to obtain recruits and to precipitate a rebellion.

Carson and Churchill.

Sir Edward, however, was not long within the Cabinet until he found himself entirely out of harmony with his colleagues. He is a man of considerable firmness and a great deal of energy; hates vacillation and inaction; is lacking in patience of such temperaments and found in a composite coalition government with many conflicting tendencies, and many very different personalities, a machine which struck him as incapable of making war vigorously. There was no fiercer assailant, accordingly, of any lack of energy in any department, and he was especially severe on the short-comings of the War Office as it was then constituted. The coming of his revolt was indicated in a curious way. One day while the cabinet was sitting, he was seen at a table in one of the smoking-rooms of the House of Commons in conversation with his old group of friends, of whom the chief are Mr. Ronald McNeill and Colonel Craig. Everybody instinctively knew what was up, and there was no surprise that in a day or two his resignation was definitely announced. It is one of the many curiosities of the top-sy-turvy time that the colleague in the cabinet he was leaving for whom Sir Edward Carson had the greatest admiration was Mr. Lloyd George. There was a certain similarity of temper between the two men which brought them together in a strenuous time.

For some time Sir Edward Carson was more or less alone, but then came the resignation of Mr. Churchill, followed by his return to his old position in the House of Commons. For some time it looked as if Mr. Churchill's stay on the front opposition bench would be short. When the death of Lord Kitchener led to the promotion of Lloyd George to the War Office there was a strong movement in favor of Mr. Churchill's return to the cabinet as minister of munitions. His dynamic energy, his extraordinary powers of work and his resolute character, were supposed to fit him especially for a ministry in which such qualities are very necessary.

Churchill More Mellow.

There were, I believe, also some of his former colleagues who actively supported his candidature. But it was otherwise decided by those in authority, and Mr. Churchill remains in Opposition. It is not the kind of life that suits him; he is essentially a bird of storm. If things were as formerly and a fierce parliamentary combat were still going on, undoubtedly he would find himself thoroughly at home as one of the leaders of a bellicose opposition. But in times like this, very such attitude would be futile and unpoplar. He is now more than given indications that he must be content with and has been an active and vigorous critic, if not of the government, at least of some members of it. Experience and some adversity have had their effect in mellowing his character and giving it great self-control and moderation in his speeches. He is now more reserved; he states his objections clearly, but without anything, at least in appearance, of personal animosity. Even this, however, has not entirely saved him from attack himself. He is one of those potent and vehement personalities that have the power of creating strong personal animosities. Probably, also, in his regime at the admiralty he trod on the toes of many members of the great naval service who are only too glad to have an opportunity of retorting in kind. He cannot rise to make a speech of any importance without being immediately followed by Admiral Lambton Menzies. Admiral Menzies is not an orator, but he is one of the favorites of the house of commons because of the blunt and rather original way in which he expresses his views, and Mr. Churchill is now hidden under the mantle of the peer, but he also had his own apparently special reasons for disliking and disturbing the brilliant young politician, and rarely missed a chance of assailing him so long as he was in the House of Commons.

Parliamentary Antipathies.

The House of Commons is, as a rule, very self-restrained, and it is against all the canons of parliamentary tradition and all the motives of either personal dislike or personal disappointment in the conduct of a man that he should attack him. It is a little like the vendetta, which, for some reason or other, the Morning Post has always carried on against him. Lord Carson's benefactor is now hidden under the mantle of the peer, but he also had his own apparently special reasons for disliking and disturbing the brilliant young politician, and rarely missed a chance of assailing him so long as he was in the House of Commons.

HOW CANADIANS WON TRENCHES

26th Believed to be Unit Specially Mentioned

The Advance on Sept. 15 Wave After Wave of Dominion's Troops Swept Through Enemy's Lines and Held New Positions

The recent important operations participated in by the Canadians, including the capture of Courcellette and adjacent positions, are described in a despatch from the Canadian general representative at the front.

From the grouping of the battalions and the positions in which they are known to be fighting, it is believed that the Canadian Light Infantry Battalion which is mentioned for gallant work in the Fighting 26th of this province.

In the course of the recent fighting the total losses sustained are placed at 4,000, the dead numbering about 900. The story of the fight is as follows:

The morning of Sept. 15 dawned bright and clear; there was frosty nip to the air. Suddenly our massed artillery burst into a frenzy of activity. Shots of every calibre were hurled over the heads of the waiting infantry.

Shortly after 6 o'clock our battalions began their attack. Before them the artillery barrage advanced stage by stage with a remarkable precision and a great intensity of fire. In successive waves our infantry moved forward, climbing over the shell-torn ground, leaping the battered trenches. Among them burst the enemy shells. The noise was terrific. Machine gun and rifle fire poured into them. Steadily they moved the last ridge, saw Darrington on their right and looked over the ruins and white chalk mounds of the Sugar Refinery, and the trenches to the right and left which were to be their objective.

No sooner were the first lines of General Haig's army in position, than assaulting waves passed onwards. In their midst, moving ponderously but steadily came several of the new armored cars. His majesty's land ship, "Crene De Mentis," led the way. It was the effect upon our men was electric. In vain the Germans raised a stream of bullets against the invulnerable cars, but their powerlessness to stop the advance.

Although our infantry were the first to reach the Sugar Refinery, they assisted materially in silencing the German machine guns and in capturing the enemy trenches, together with the protected dugouts of the Sugar Refinery.

Ten officers, including a battalion commander, were made prisoners. At the same time the trenches on either flank, known to us as the "Canals," were captured. The trench from the "Canals" trench, were stormed and captured.

In this attack men from Toronto, London, Ottawa and Kingston fought side by side with men from Winnipeg, Regina and Vancouver, and with men of the Mounted Rifles from eastern Canada.

Acroplines, hovering overhead, established contact with the infantry and reported to headquarters that the work of our objective had been secured and that patrols were being pushed forward towards Courcellette and the gun pit road to the southeast.

Better Than Expected.

So successful was this attack that the reports which were received decided to strike another and immediate blow at the enemy. He ordered that the village of Courcellette, together with a line of German trenches between Moutquet Farm and the northwestern edge of the village, should be attacked. The manner in which these orders were carried out reflects the greatest credit upon all concerned.

By 6 o'clock in the evening all preparations were completed and the new attack was launched. The objective was a difficult one, including a large and strongly fortified village, together with a famous French-Canadian battalion, having as its objective the largest part of Courcellette, between the greatest shell and gun battery. They stormed against the tangle of the streets and trenches, and, after suffering heavy losses on the enemy, and finally established themselves east of the village. They showed much individual enterprise in overcoming the resistance of isolated posts, and in bombing the German fortified cellars and dugouts.

On the left a Halifax battalion captured the village of Courcellette, the rest of the village.

A CANADIAN LIGHT INFANTRY BATTALION WHICH HAS ALREADY SEEN LONG SERVICE TOGETHER WITH A MONTREAL BATTALION, AT THE SAME TIME CAPTURED THE LINE OF TRENCHES TO THE WEST AND ESTABLISHED A STRONG POSITION.

The Canadian Light Infantry Battalion, which has already seen long service, captured the village of Courcellette and twelve hours the Canadians had captured the whole of the German defensive positions on a wide front to a depth of from 1,000 to 2,000 yards. This was accomplished in the face of a desperate and determined resistance in which the Germans fought with the courage of despair. It is a authentic fact that bodies of machine gunners were found chained and padlocked to their guns.

150th and 165th To Winter Here

Now Definitely Settled; No Prospect of Separate District; Col. McAvity Anxious to Return to Front

It has been definitely settled by military authorities in Ottawa that the 150th and 165th battalions of the Canadian Light Infantry will winter in St. John.

For several weeks there has been a movement on foot for the creation of a separate military district in New Brunswick. An effort was made last year to have a separate district, but Major-General Gwatkin, chief of general staff, was opposed to the idea of having two districts in the maritime provinces. The military authorities here hold small hopes of New Brunswick becoming a separate district.

On Thursday, Lieut-Colonel J. L. McAvity, O. C. 26th battalion, went before a medical board, and expects to return to the trenches in a very short time.

The rally day arrival of Exmouth street Sunday school tomorrow will be of a patriotic and memorial character. The pictures of Corporal F. W. Withers and J. W. McIntyre will be unveiled, and addresses will be given by Chief Justice McKeown and Lieut-Colonel J. L. McAvity.

LUMBER MILL SCENE IN KING ST. WINDOW

T. McAvity & Sons, Ltd., Have Ingenious Display of Logging and Sawing Operations

A point of interest to the thousands who thronged King street last night was the ingenious display in the large show window of T. McAvity & Sons, Ltd. The exhibit is a novel one and serves the double purpose of setting off certain views of the interior of the mill, as well as illustrating just how a saw mill looks in operation.

The setting for the work was truly striking. The dense woods surrounding the miniature mill and the true-to-life mill pond all gave the necessary things to make the scene an ideal one. The miniature water wheel turned with the regularity of its larger brother. By means of electric lights one could obtain a view of the interior of the mill, its appointments and such as are to be found in the real industry. The log was already in position and the saw had cut well into its heart. In the foreground other logs ready to be drawn up as needed and on the runway the holding chain had already drawn up its load ready to be placed before the saw. It was a typical scene of industry, no essential being lacking to make the impression a most realistic one.

The entire large window was set in keeping with the spirit of the illustration. Dark green was used in the decorations and the shaded lights just gave sufficient illumination to set out in bold relief the main features of the plan. The beautifully clear mill pond, its miniature logs and the industrial operations of the water wheel as it provided the power for the work was a pleasing combination.

Asquith's Adroitness Wonderfully

Sir Edward Carson apparently had brought things to a climax when he put upon the notice paper a motion for an enquiry into both the Mesopotamia and Dardanelles failures, and it was quite clear that any such motion as that, if put to discussion and division, would mean a major disaster to the House of Commons or at least a minority formidable enough to make the position of the cabinet untenable. People began to recall the famous precedent in the Crimean war, when the appointment of such a committee of enquiry led to the downfall of the ministry of Lord Aberdeen and substituted the more vigorous policy of Lord Palmerston as prime minister, and the least people expected was that Mr. Asquith would create a prime minister and there would be another reconstruction of the ministry.

On the very day when everybody was expecting that Sir Edward Carson was going to lead a tremendous assault on his position, Mr. Asquith got up and in the blindest way himself gave what the leader of the opposition was going apparently to extort from him. In a very brief and simple address, and in perfect sang froid, Mr. Asquith announced the appointment of commissions on Mesopotamia and the Dardanelles. So what could Sir Edward Carson do? His guns were spiked, his position taken, and all he could do was to put in his pocket the passionate address he was doubtless going to make and accept the proposition made by Mr. Asquith, and in less than half an hour a position which had been so menacing, full of thunder-clouds and potential earthquakes, became as smooth as a summer sea; and Sir Edward Carson, who had been so over all obstacles and all opponents. It was all done so simply, so quietly, apparently with such spontaneity, that people had not time to wonder till it was all over.
