changed with having concealed their assets, clandestinely disposed of their ships, or fraudulently conveyed their houses. We have now to report that persons who have had their property taken away from them, and who have been left in a state of destitution, are now in a position to be able to do so.

When men fall in business, and have no more advertising to do, do not place a newspaper on a par with the Sun and Herald of New York, as the general-superior and independence of the press are not to be compared with the bankruptcies of swindlers and rascals, even though it excepts one member of one firm from its condemnation.

The Daily Tribune.
