BRAVE BOY'S FORTUME.

We left Job Seagrain in state-room No. 42, on board of the ocean steamer about to sail for Europe, the venerable oysterman supposed, for so Mr. Cornelius had stated. Though it was true that the Vanderwent was pursued by his "shadow," who followed him on board of the ship and to the shore again, nothing whatever was known at the store in regard to the old man. The detective was paid to secretain what money the sen of his father. ascertain what money the son of his father disbursed, and whether the young man had any bad habits which were more expensive than his salary would justify. It was not his business to meddle with the old man or the young man in the state room, though he

He was in a very happy frame of mind, for all doubt and suspicion in regard to his boy was removed. The partner before him had kindly assured him that Corny was

"But how came it in his pocket? That's the p'int," demanded Job.

"Why, Mr. Cornelius put it there of course. He has owned up that he did it."

"I knowed it!"

"It is plain enough now; but he is the son of the senior partner of the house, you know, and we had to hush it all up."

"Yes," added the old man, winking rapidly, as though he was not a stock-holder in this view of the case.

"No hurry," added the merchant, who continued to talk faster than ever about the boy The old man began to be nervous, for there was a possibility that the tug or the pilot might leave the ship without him.
"I guess I'll go on deck and see where the tug is, Mr. Leftingwell," said he, rising from Job moved towards the door, and put his and on the knob to open it.

"Sit down, I say!" continued Mr. Lefting-well, in a sharper tone than the oysterman thought was polite.

"I don't want to run no risk of getting left, for I don't want to run no risk of getting left, for I don't want to go to Europe jest yet."

The old man was on the point of opening the door, when his companion seized his arm, and wrenched his hand from its hold on the knob. Job thought this was rather rough, and the violence tended to confirm a rather vague suspicion of something wrong, that was lurking in his mind.

Leffingwell pushed him back again into his seat. By this time the old man was thoroughly alaimed, and satisfied that his companion meant mischief.

"Keep quiet, old fellow," said Leffingwell, producing a revolver. "You and I are booked for a long voyage in this steamer."

"What do you mean by that?" asked Job, beginning to realize that he must fight his way out of the difficulty.

"Your passage is all paid to Brazil in this steamer, and you may as well make the best of it."

"Who paid it?"
"Cornelius Vanderwent, Jr. He said you didn't behave well, and that you ought to leave your country for your country's good.
"I don't reckon I shall," said Job, rising once more, his wrath fully kindled when he first vessel bound in."

The old man was kindly received on boar of the pilot boat, where he made himself ussful; but on Sunday and Monday a dense fog prevailed, and vessels bound into New York kept off. On Monday afternoon, how-ever, he boarded a steamer from the Bermudas, with the pilot, and reached the city in season to take the train for Oalip, which also carried the letter from Corny, to the effect that nothing had been heard from Job. Betsy Ann was delighted to see him at all; and Ann was delighted to see him at all; and more delighed to see him soher. She actually embraced and kiesed him. There was no odor of liquor upon him.

"Where have you been, Job?" she cried.
"I couldn't help it, Betsy Ann."
"You hain't been on a time, then?"
"No; I hain't teched a drop of nothin'; but I had a consarred mean trick played on an all resident to the odd man are he took from me, replied the old man, as he took from his pocket the revolver, which he had cap-tured from Leftingwell. "You ain't a goin' to shoot nobody, you?" asked Betsy Ann, alarmed at the sight of the pistol.

Job assured her he did not intend to any use of the dangerous weapon, and pro-ceded to narrate his experience in state-room 42. His wife listened, with her mouth e open, and eyes distended like full ons. When he had finished, she wondered he had not been killed, and then she wondered how she had ever dared "tackle" a man who had pluck enough to fight another with a haded pistol in his hand.

"And Tim Twitterton did it?" gasped she.

"Yes, he did; and I'll clean him out afore

"But he's Mr. Vanderwent's son, now "No, he ain't, nuther," replied Job, con-"He ain't? "No, no more'n nothin'; but I know who

Well, I sold 'em to Tim Twitterton,' added Job, with a hang-dog expression on his face. "It was mean, but I'll tell you how it happened. Tim was boardin' up to Squire Peter's, when he had his vacation, and he overheard the squire and the coustable talkin' about attachin' my creek property. The squire wanted to git it for nothin', for he knowed about the brick company, and meant to make sunthin' out on't. Tim told me about it and I felt very thankful to him for't. Then he wanted them old things, but I wouldn't let him have 'em for a long; but I did at last, and he give me twenty dollars for em. I let you have that money as soon as Vanderwent," replied Job. "When Tim went back on Corny, and he wanted to git rid on him because Miss Fanny liked Corny better'n she did him, I told him I'd go to Mr. Vanderwent and let on, if he didn't own up. Instid of that, he cheated me, and got a villain to take me to South Ameriky, where he could git me out of the way, if the yaller fever didn't do it for him."

"The lobster of iniquity!"

"I'll fix him to-morrow."

"The catfish of crime!"

"Never mind, Betsy Ann; we'll lix 'em."

The next morning, Mrs. Seagrain wanted to go to the city with her husband. She wanted to "sea the fun," as she expressed it and Job consented. It was late in the fore noon when they reached the store of Vander-went & Lynmore. They entered the retail department, and the old man asked his wife to remain there, while he went into the counting room. The first person he saw was the son of his tather, standing at his desk. Mr. Cornelius turned pale when he discoveron the way to the tropical regions of Brazil, where the climate would kill him in a few menths. Job marched squarely up to the Vanderwent. "Certainly, his son." Mr. Cornelius had not yet recovered his breath sufficiently to speak, and was edging towards the door. Everything seemed to go wrong with him thatday. Judging from his ction, he meditated an ignominious retreat.

"Don't let him go," said Job.

"I think we had better not" added Mr. subtille, the detective, as he placed himself etween the Vanderwent and the door. "I we some business with this young man."
"But he is Mr. Vanderwent's son," intersed Mr. Lynmore, who was not willing

"He will be here presently," replied the financial partner, as he conducted the old man to the office.

In order to prepare Job for what was to come, Mr. Lynmore told him what had occurred in the counting-room during the forence. Before he had finished the story, Corny, attended by Grawler, entered the room. He looked very sad and despondent, and was evidently deeply grieved by the fact that he had been arrested; but when he saw Job he smiled, and rushed towards him with both hands extended. "I saved this old man's life once," said Mr.

Cornelius, bitterly, "and I am the author of his fortune. You see how he rewards me—with a slander and treachery."

"I never went back on you, Tim Twitteron, till you showed out that you was a raskil; and I didn't then till you went back on my boy, and tried to ruin him," added Job. "I can stick to a friend as long as any other man, but I ain't a-goin' to kiver up his raskilly deed, no how, no more'n nothin'. I want to see Mr. Vanderwent now; and I'll put a nicker'n lightoin'."

THE BALLOT AT LAST. The first trial of the ballot took on Thursday last when Mr. Childers and Lord Pollington stood for Pontefract; and were proposed and seconded, according to the regulations of the new Act.— The quietness of the proceedings is a promise of the success of the measure.— There was no disturbances whatever in the town; and many persons were heard to say that it was not like election day at all. Mr. Childers was returned by a majority of only eighty, he having 658 votes, and Lord Pollington 578. Some curious incidents in Lord Pollington's drown us both 2" "Well, we may at any moment drown us both 2" "Well results for the standard programment and standard programment a political career were brought to light during the election, which did much to influence the opinion of the voters So the ballot has had its first trialin eminently successful and hopeful one. It is not in this case, however, that its real influence is fully shown. We shall sec what the ballot is worth, when its operation shall affect a candidate of the working class! If only 1,236 of the 1,946 registered electors of Pontefract took the trouble to record their votes (a fact which has furnished an argument to the opposers of the new Act), it must be borne in mind that between 150 and 200 electors are scafaring men, and in summer are at sea; that the local militia regiment, containing about fifty conservative electors refused to vote, disapproving of Lord Pollington's nomination. But for these circumstances, Mr. Childers would have had a much larger majority. We cannot but be glad to see the ballot established under any circumstanutmost to support a system so manifest-ly just by participation in it—English

FULL REPORT OF THE PRIZES AWARDED.

The Annual Exhibition of the North Lanark Agricultural Society, held on the grounds, in Almonto, on Tuesday and Wednesday, the 7th and 8th instant, was an unprecedented success: In regard to the number of entries, the quality of the articles on exhibition, the people visiting the grounds and the arrangements made by the Directors with respect to its management, this exhibition has totally eclipsed all preceding shows in Almonte, while competent judges inform us that in several departments it equalled, while in one or two it wholly surpassed, the late Provincial Exhibition at London.

Heretofore the accommodation for cattle, pigs, sheep, &c., has been iu-sufficient, and of a miserable description. During the summer, however, the Society has erected two long sheds, extending across the grounds on the north and west sides, which affords ample stall room for all kinds of stock. Trees and stumps have been cleared away, an excellent horse ring provided, and in fact every effort seems to have been made by the Directors for improving the ground to render the show a success.

Unlike past years, when entries were made up to 12 o'clock on the second day, occasioning great delay and confusion, all entries were made on the first day and all articles for exhibition in classes 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 12 were judged and prizes awarded on the first day, thus giving visitors ample time to see every-

Several vases of ornamental grass arranged by the same lady, shewed taste in their selection

Mr. John Flett made a large display f curiosities, gathered during his trip to Europe. For entire horses there were three competitors brood marcs for draught, six; carriage horses, five, and a team of mules; single carriage horses, ten; brood mares for general use, thirteen; saddle horses five; draught horses, four span, to gether with a very large number of three and two year old colts.

But in the long run withink this class is the most prosperous. We have known farmers to cultivate a pricular kind of crop, and not to vary the quantity more than an acre or two in twenty years, and then proved to be in Massachusetts which is summer as in the latter. As it is this inorganic matter which is so much needed on our old soils, farmers can in no more economical way renovate their lands than by feeding bran heavily to their stock. We know some farmers in Massachusetts who feed to their cows both summer and winter the control of the control of
