NO. 5.

JULY 1899.

“Yeoman” or “Farmer.”

THERE is a tendency amongst conveyancers to discontinue the use of the good old English term “Yeoman,” substituting for it the word “Farmer,” in deeds relating to land. It is evident that such persons are not aware that the former is a degree higher in the social scale than the latter. It is the pride of Canada that her rural population is composed of yeomen, that is, persons who live upon and cultivate their own land, and not mere farmers who live upon and cultivate the lands of others to whom they must return a rent in money or in kind. From the ranks of well-to-do “yeomen” we may expect to produce, as has already been done, valuable citizens, professional men, soldiers, and statesmen, but we could look for nothing of the kind, unless as rare exceptions, from the less independent “farmers.”

* * * *

It is interesting to note the change of ideas and prejudices. A very curious book of a long bygone date is before us, which describing the occupations and pursuits of “gentlemen” (as such) in different countries, and referring to agriculture, says: “Much after that manner the English gentleman that liveth privately doth dispose his life: as one that accounteth it no honour to exercise marchandize: neither did they (in times past) repute the practise of lawe or physicke so commendable as now they doe. For their ancient endeavour was agriculture and feeding of cattell."

In the same book is laid down the order of precedence of persons following various occupations, as follows: "The first are husbandmen, whose endeavour is employed about the fruits of the earth. Secondly, artificers occupied in arts either necessary, honest or pleasing. Thirdly, victualers, retailers of wares, and chapmen." To which are added six more degrees in the descending social scale.

We may be permitted to express a regret that these opinions are so little prevalent in Canada, where no man seems disposed to engage in the honourable occupation of agriculture, if he can obtain any other employment.

Much the same as the social classification just mentioned is that which prevailed until quite recently in Japan, where many social customs were strikingly similar to those of medieval England. There, next to the nobility, were the Samurai or soldier class, and then manufacturers, husbandmen, artisans, merchants, in the order named. Commerce with other nations has had the effect of destroying the notion which regarded buying and selling as an occupation to be despised, and enables the prosperous merchant to find a place in a higher social grade.

Munro, CADETS OF RHIVES.

The Munro family is one of great antiquity in the north of Scotland. The Chief is Munro of Fowlis, Co. Ross, where there has been continued succession in the male line for eight hundred years, occupying the same mansion for several centuries. They are said to have descended from Donald Munro, who d. 1053, whose son

Whitney,

OF THE COUNTIES OF STORMONT AND DUNDAS.

AMONG those who followed William the Conqueror into England was Thurstin the Fleming (Thurstinus Flandrensis), son of Rolf, who held lands in several counties, including Hereford. His son Sir Eustace, Lord of Whitney, in Co. Hereford, living in 1086, was the progenitor of the family of DeWhitney, which continued there for many generations.* Of this family at least two branches were early settlers in America. The ancestor of one of these was Henry Whitney (b. probably
