SO FAR SOME GOOD

THE first great shock of a world-wide war in which the whole British Empire is engaged is over; and that is a lot. The British peoples in every quarter of the world have stood the shock without a quiver, and find themselves solidified and confident as never before.

We do not seek to suggest that other and greater shocks may not be at hand. But up to date there are some outstanding things that will still further hearten and strengthen and further unify the courage of all who live under the flag.

The war has been under way for over two weeks, and the German army has been on the march for all that time; their fleet also began to manoeuvre more than a fortnight ago.

The first outstanding fact in that two weeks and up to the present moment is that the great and vaunted German fleet has refused to come out and tackle the British fleet! It is under cover. The British are at sea! Next in importance is the associated fact that Great Britain has succeeded in driving the remaining German warships largely off the ocean; has freed commerce from any German menace; our trade ships are moving freely in almost

Next in importance: two immense German armies that started Next in importance: two immense German armies that started to move on France a fortnight ago have both been checked in a surprising way; and that while two great battles may be impending, so far Germany can claim little credit for anything that has happened. They have lost their general in command of the operations at Liege, whether by accident of war or by suicide no one here yet knows. And the German army in Lorraine has certainly here sheeked in its attempt to much to Pavig from that quarter been checked in its attempt to rush to Paris from that quarter.

We also know that a great allied army, British and French, is in some place in Belgium or France, moving or entrenching, or both, to meet the invasion.

The Germans, we imagine, are sadly disappointed at results so far; on the contrary, little Belgium, the French nation, the British nation and their men in the field are certainly in the best of spirits and ready to do their duty whatever it may be. They have

Nor can it be said that the Austrians have proved a great source of strength to the kaiser up to the present.

Anything the Russians have done so far-and they have been moving largely behind a veil—would seem to be in the direction of Austria and Germany in a way that must cause a great deal of worry to the kaiser's chief-of-staff, who has charge not only of the invasion of France, but the defence of the German Empire.

Furthermore, it would appear that Japan is already moving to side with England, and that Italy may be at war against Austria within twenty-four hours.

Surely these and other things, the they do not settle the war, at least brighten the prospects of ultimate success of the allied armies and navies who are fighting against feudalism and military despotism. We are going to win in the end! We might win earlier in the day than some expect.

THE SECOND WEEK OF WAR REVIEWED

thrued to gather along the five hun- masses. dred miles of frontier that demarcate Germany, France and Belgium. Here and there smart engagements happened, reported to have mostly resulted favorably for the allies. These, however, are without significance except that they raise and fortify the morale of the fighting lines. This week of preparation has been of infinite service to the allies and we may be assured the opportunity has not been lost. That it was gained by the heroic stand of the Belgians in the forts surrounding Liege and in the open will hereafter be cherished as making one of the brightest and most enduring pages in their long history. Altho an eminently peaceful nation, the Belglans have shown that they still possees the virtues of their race, and their splendid rally to protect their liberty and independence is an inspiration to the world. They felt instinctively that no reliance could be placed on the promises of a government that without scruple was in the act of violating its

What have the allies been doing during this week of preparation? It is possible to indicate with some certainty the general work in which they have been engaged. They certainly intend to act in the first place on the defensive, and we may be sure the pickwhere, barbed wire entanglements, the location of heavy guns, have all been under special care. The fighting lines connected with the subordinate contress by the field telephones, which, now that battles are no longer fought inder the eye of the general, serve to keep him in touch with the occurrences in the long battle line. All these things accomplished, the allies can (Continued on Page 6, Column 6.)

that illust but them as hopeless.

The Lion, the Eagles and the Bear

Nothing has appealed to the people been a terrible disappointment to the of Ontario like The World's suggestion that the province give a battleship to the British fleet. There are two or of the enemy when he found how three in British shippards now almost hopeless the task he was engaged hopeless the task he was engaged upon. In any case the incident emphasizes the break-up of the German plan of campaign. While victory need not be asserted for the Belgians, the delay of nearly two weeks in the schedule for the German advance means such a disruption of the general last and such an unquestionable decompleted for foreign powers and the ernment will requisition these. But one of them, and the people of the banner province of the Dominion will feel that they have their share in the mighty struggle going on, in the North Sea. Ontario is fortunately situated and lies far away from the scenes of strife, but she benefits in all the ways that go to make up her prosperity the reductio ad absurdum of despot-from the protection of the fleet of ism. The recesses of the pit may well nothing directly nor indirectly so far, but now the need is great and pressing. We may sit back and remain Britain. She has contributed to it ing. We may sit back and remain satisfied to let others do the work, and we may reap the sordid and inglorious benefit in days to come, but this is not the old spirit of the race whose fathers prayed Britannia to rule the waves.

hollow of his hand. If he did it was a hollow peace. He has been given credit for all the fine qualities the derrick, receiving bruises to his body and a slight injury to his hip. He was taken to the residence of his son, if Munro Park avenue.

Men were working with the derrick when it collapsed, one of the arms fall-time musical and literary talents.

Ontario can help her to rule. A new spirit has arisen in society and among business men in the last generation. It used to be regarded, and is still regarded, in Germany and some other countries and the feeling still lingers in England, especially among the aristocracy and nobility, that business was naturally ignoble and fundamentally disgraceful. No business man could be a gentleman, was the old idea, and unfortunately there were enough business men of a kind to give color to the belief. It was inought that to be a gentleman one must be born to fortune and position, and that to be born otherwise made one necessarily a boor. All this underlies the kaiser's idea of nobility and kingship, and the power of the war-lord. Whatever he does is the act of a gentleman, merely because he does it, whether the act be intrinsically low and base or high and noble. And so all his military nobles are tainted with the same evil blight on their character. They do things in peace and in war which are not the acts of the old war which are not the acts of the old chivalry. They fall far below the Bushido of Japan. Sir Philip Sidney would blush for them. And they are fond of reviving the old taunt that England is a nation of shopkeepers. Well, England has kept faith. She did not tear up her treaty with little Belgium. Keeping faith is the big thing about a gentleman. And people are beginning to find out that keeping faith is the big thing, the very big thing about a business man. If big thing about a business man. If he sells you a dozen fresh eggs, the gentleman will see that you get fresh eggs. There is just the same nobility in that as there is in keeping a treaty with Relgium. And this new discovery with Belgium. And this new discovery has been spreading thru the business world until a large proportion of busi-ness men have begun to realize that ness men have begun to realize that they can be gentlemen, too, not mock gentlemen, who break faith, like the katser, and tear up treaties, but real gentlemen, like Sir Edward Grey, who keep their word, even tho at great cost and loss. A great war is an occasion when the extent to which this new spirit is abroad may be observed, and the prevalence of its influence upon the dealings of men with each on the dealings of men with each other. It has been necessary to do unusual things in the world of finance and commerce in the last two weeks, and to make unusual arrangements.

re are many other things which cannot in the nature of things be reached by such arrangements, and in these cases it will be for the true gentleman, whether behind the counter, or in the counting-house, or in the inner sanctums of business, to show what sort of stuff he is made of, and whether all his pretence to be a gentleman is only outside veneer, or ther he has the heart of the knight in him. It can be summed up in a word, and the way the word strikes you will enable you to determine your own attitude on the matter, and whether you mean to be a gentleman or just a com-mon every day pirate. The word is this. It will be a shame for any man of business to come out of this war richer than he went in. This may the matter. The gentlemen are making sacrifices today. The other fellows

They are both enthusiastic golfers, and Mrs. McCall is a good performer on the links.

Three good ball games have been pulled off in the last ten days. Parry Sound brought a team over, and, ewing to the kindness and generosity of Doc. Morrow, who essayed to play third base for us, they walloped us to the tune of 14-13. The boys from Terrall School, Dallas, Texas, played us two games. In the first we were victorious, 8-1, principally owing to the air-tight pitching of Jack McCormack, Ottawa, who was well backed up by his team mates.

A pleasant feature of this week was a tennis tournament, open to all players at the upper end of Lake Rosseau. It has not as yet been concluded. The men's doubles, however, and the mixed doubles have been decided. Beautiful prizes were donated by Monteith Brothers. The winners of the men's doubles were Massrs. Weak, Scrawny Folks

An Easy Way to Gain 10 to 30 lbs. o Solid, Healthy, Permanent Flesh. Thin, nervous, undeveloped men and women everywhere are heard to say, "I can't understand why I do not get fat. I eat plenty of good, nourishing food." The reason is just this: You cannot get fat, no matter how much you eat, unless your digestive organs assimilate the fat-making elements of your food instead of passing them out thru the body as waste.

What is needed is a means of gently urging the assimilative functions of the

What is needed is a means of gently urging the assimilative functions of the stomach and intestines to absorb the oils and fats and hand them over to the blood, where they may reach the starved, shrunken, run-down tissues and build them up. The thin person's body is like a dry sponge—eager and hungry for the fatty materials of which it is being deprived by the failure of the alimentary canal to take them from the food. The best way to overcome this sinful waste of flesh building elements and to stop the leakage of fats is to use fargol, the recently discovered regenerative force that is recommended so highly by physicians here and abroad. Take a little sargol tablet with every meal and notice how quickly your cheeks fill out and rolls of firm, healthy flesh are deposited over your body, covering each bony over your body, covering each bony angle and projecting point. Your druggist has Sargol, or can get it from his wholesaler, and will refund your money if you are not satisfied with the gain in weight it produces as stated on the guarantee in each package, it is inexpensive, easy to take and highly efficient. Caution:—White Sargol has produced remarkable results in overcoming nervous ous dyspepaia and general stomach troubles, it should not be taken unless you are willing to gain ten pounds or more, for it is a wonderful flesh-builder.

ENGLAND SUCCESSFULLY OILS FINANCIAL MA

OTTAWA MAY GET A HUNDRED MILLIONS OF NEW YORK GOLD

May Give Exchange Facilities Against Deposit of Gold in Capitals of Various Dominions-Relief Measures Unprecedented and Have Insured Resumption of Financial Business and Trade.

(Special Cable to The Sunday World.) LONDON, Aug. 15 .- The quite unof treasury notes for £1 and 10 shilments of circulating medium at home

The public is already completely reassured, and on Thursday came a still holder measure for breaking the deadlock of credit. The government's guarantee of the Bank of England against loss on bills which it may discount had the purpose of enabling the banks at once and freely, to finance Bills Carried Over. What this expedient means is that the Bank of England can now be exfrom joint stock banks and discount houses. Not only so, but good bills, not met at maturity because of pres ent abnormal conditions, may be carried at the Bank of England at two per cent, above the present official minimum rate of five per cent.

Even foreign bills may be thus rediscounted, for the government has wisely recognized the supreme importance of a properly working financial system as a weapon of defence in the great internal struggle. It is, in short, determined to insure that the minimum amount of financial dislocation in our markets shall continue. The result may be millions advanced temporarily by the bank to the market, and great ease in money is not improbable. The action also tends to free the foreign exchanges from their paralyzed condition, the internal business must necessary continue to be hampered by the numerous continental moratorium

Will Give Exchange Facilities. This is the reason for the further proposal that the Bank of England give exchange facilities against detralia and Ottawa. As regards the lastlia and Ottawa. As regards the lastnamed deposit centre, The Times' New York correspondent cables that £20,-000,000 gold might be involved if your market were to cover its London liabilities by sending gold to Canada in trust for the Bank of England. This may reflect New York ideas, but the estimate is entirely deprecated in the business financial quarters here.

Any such amount would be both unnatural and unnecessary, but it is hoped that no impediment will be placed on your markets gradually sending such amounts as may be required to provide for the legitimate necessities of exchange. Lombard street firmly believes that not only would our mutual trade be facilitated thereby, but also that New York would get all the gold back again later in the Present indications favor extension of moratorium here on its expiration next month and deferment of the reopening of the stock exchange. But voluntary settlements will steadily increase and will pave the way for restoration of wholly normal conditions

U. S. EXPRESS CO'S HARD HIT BY WAR AND PARCEL POST

Likely, it Is Said, to Be Forced Into Consolidation or Out of Business Under Double Blow.

(Special to The Sunday World). WASHINGTON. Aug. 15. - The American express companies, laboring under the competition of the parcel ost, are likely, it is said, to be forced altogether by the European war. Unless it terminates much sooner than is expected the companies stand to lose much business thru the diminution of the volume of foreign goods, of which they haul immense quantities from wholesale to retail

The express companies are in no condition to stand the war drain condition to stand the war drain. Figures sent to the government bureau dealing with such matters show that for last April their net income was but a little more than 11 per cent. of what it was for April of 1913—348,747, as against $437,826. And, as the express rates found to be "reasonable" by the Interstate Commerce Commission did not go into effect until Feb. 1, last, the loss is attributed to the inroads of the parcel post service, which began operations on Jan. 1, 1913.

When Postmaster-General Burlson

When Postmaster-General Burleson asked the commission to put into effect the present rates, the commissioners granted permission without a hearing, on the assumption that the law does not contemplate that they shall consider their "reasonableness" as regards the railroads which carry the mail, or the express companies which are in competition with the department in the parcel business. If they had the power to consider what would be reasonable parcel post rates they would have had to con-sider the necessities of the railroads and the express companies. In making rates for freight they always take routes of competing lines and every-thing of that kind. Recently they have forbidden rairoads to make on board the S. S. Philadelphia rates on imported articles which come rates on the imported and the domestic articles. A Fearful Drop.

During the ten months of the fiscal largest American companies, two of which operate in Canada as well as the United States, nad an aggregate net income, from operations, amounting to only $629,437, while during the ten months of the preceding fiscal year their medines aggregated $4,231,-465. The loss--more than 85 per cent -was exceeded in percentage during April, when it ran to more than 89 per cent. How much of the loss is due to slackness of business not connected with parcel post rates or orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission it is impossible to more than estimate, but even the highest estimate could not attribute half the less to whatever hesitancy there may have been in business. So the parcel post competition is directly responsible for probably $2,000,000 reduction in the income of the express com-

The Interstate Commission would not approve such low rates as Postmaster-General Burleson has decreed because its figures all tend to show IS ACQUITTED that passenger trains, on which express business is carried, are operated, if not at a loss, then at such a to board a train for Flushing, thru low figure of profit that, were it not for the freight business of the average railroad, it would have to discontinue more than half its passenger trains. In its recent 5 per cent rate advance decision the commission pointed out the necessity of the railroads assembling figures so that state legislatures and state regulating bodies may be justified in allowing higher passenger fares. The railroads at train for Flushing, thru Holland, on which were 500 American and British passengers. The journey destination on Sunday at 4 p.m.

The Cross Channel Shipping Company had suspended their sailings. No persuasion could move them. At last a Washington lawyer thought of the lucky expedient of wiring to the Lon-French military authorities and the continue more than half its passenger prefect of police, Celestin Hennion, are trains. In its recent 5 per cent, rate long time in the city will be allowed higher passenger fares. The railroads claim that the mail pay does not to remain with their families, instead cover the proper proportion of the of being sequestered in Western and cost of operating the non-payment passenger service, so that the parcel post business is carried for the government at the cost of those who pay freight rates.

Two or Three Might Live. Consolidation, it is believed, will en-Consolidation, it is believed, will enable two or three express companies to live. In nearly every large city there are at least three complete express organizations, and in a good many of them there are more. It was proposed and seconded that the secretary write the provincial members, requesting their assistance in parliament in combating the high cost of food and other necessities of life. A suggestion that members boyout the stores which are raising the prices of food unduly was also considered, but the matter was left over until it was seen what action will be taken by parliament.

Poor Quality of German Projectiles Demonstrated at Pont-a-Mousson

Special Cable to The World
'ARIS aug. 13.—An official report concerning the fighting between the French and Germans in the vicinity of Pont-a-Mousson, north of Nancy, says:

"The poor quality of the projectiles used by the German heavy artillery was convincingly demonstrated curing the bombardment of Pont-a-Mousson. More than 190 shells containing enormous charges of explosives weighing altogether 220 pounds each, were fired from a battery of 21-centimetre mortars at distances of about six and a quarter miles.

"The total result of the avalanche of iron explosives was four killed and 12 wounded in the town."

(Special to The Sunday World.)
OTTAWA, Aug. 15.—Ottawa, always slad to see parliament assemble and loathe to see parliament depart, expects the coming assion to last for a month at least. Those dibse to the government, however, say the sension should not last more than ten days, and deciare that no time will be wasted in party politics or desultory discussion. They believe that nothing need be done at present except to sanction the program of the government and vote the money needed for carrying it into execution. They admit, however, that more legislation will be needed in the near future, and it is rumored that Hon. Mr. Crothers is preparing an amendment to the Anti-Combines Act conferring drastice powers upon the government to regulate the prices of flood products. Such legislation, if efficient, would be far reaching in its consequences, and affect the farmer and producer no less than the mean-facturer, the distributor and the retail merchant. The World is in a position to say that such legislation is now under consideration.

War Taxes for Canada Likely.

Another subject being studied by the government, and which may be brought before parliament at the coming session relates to the ways and means to be provided for raising the additional revenue required by the government. During the first four months of the present fiscal year the custom receipts fell off ten million dollars, as compared with the corresponding period last year. It is a fair surmise that the decrease will be even more marked for some time to come. Our imports from the United States may show some increase, but our imports from Europe will greatly decline. How, then, is the finance minister to meet the largely increased expenditures which the war will entail? He may, of course, greatly reduce the expenditures which the war will entail? He may, and, indeed he will have to borrowing at this time he will have to borrowing at this time he will have to borrowing at this time he will have to so arrange his budget as to provide ample revenue for al government will be increased. It is said in some quarters that stamp du ties may be imposed upon bank checks notes and bills, desds, mortgages and chattel mortgages, proprietary medicines, matches, etc. Possibly inland revenue might be made to yield more abundantly by slightly increasing the excise duties upon liquors and tobacco. Or, there might be tariff increases upon certain staples, such as tea, coffee and sugar. So far all this is surmise as Finance Minister White positively declines to discuss the subject. One can see, however, that if ject. One can see, however, that if anything like a budget were to be presented, at the coming session, that the session might be prolonged even beyond the thirty days now generally assigned as the utmost limit of its

Ottawa Cannot Cheer. The City of Ottawa presents a strik-ing contrast to the City of Toronto, We find here little of the enthusiasm which marks the Queen City. The peowhich marks the Queen City. The people may be as loyal and their levalty is unquestioned, but it does not find vent in a true British cheer. Indeed, Ottawa has never learned how to cheer. The enlistment has gone on fairly well, but not with the spring which characterized Toronto. Calgary probably comes next to Toronto in the matter of military and patriotic enthusiasm. She is sending more than one-half of the five hundred men from the west, who will help make up the Princess Patricia Battallion to be mobilized here next week. The presence of Sir Donald Mann and Z. Sir Donald is advising the militia department rethe transportation of the troops, which are to mobilize on the Canadian Northern line north of Quebec. Mr. Lash, it is said, is counseling the minister of finance, and it may be that some financial legislation in addition to budget changes will soon be brought before parliament. And speaking of railways and railway companies, it is reported that the Canadian Pacific desires to make another stock issue of the par value of seventy-five million dollars. So it may easily happen that the coming session will last longer than many anticipate. At any rate Mr. Speaker Sproule has ordered all sessional clerks and employee no matter how far away Sproule has ordered all sessional clerks and employes, no matter how far away, to report for duty on Tuesday next.

PROGRAM OF A HIGH ORDER AT GARDEN THEATRE.

The coming week should prove a notable one at this popular College street photoplay house, owing to the quality of that which is offered for entertainment. For Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, "The President's Special," one of the Edison Company's famous railroad dramas, tops the bill. This is an entirely new and elaborated version of one of the really great successes of Edisons' earlier days. Another George Ade comedy is billed in the shape of "The Fable of the Busy Business Boy." These comedies by Ade are different from all others, and serve the purpose for which they are intended—to create laughter. "Pathe's Gazette" and two other selected subjects complete the bill.

Thursday, Friday and Saturday brings to the screen "The British Navy in Times of Peace or War." The many scenes, events and incidents were photographed by the world-famous Urban, and was imported by the D. Cooper Film Exchange, by request of the Garden Theatre management. In addition to the above timely feature, chapter nine of "The Million Dollar Mystery," and two selected comedies will be shown. Daily matiness at 2. Open evenings, 7—10.30 o'clock.

So MUCH could be said by way of surmise in regard to the finnancial condition of this country, and yet so little has been taking place of a concrete nature, other than the all important war which has caused the present lull, that to attempt a review, or even to forecast events taking the happenings of the past as a foundation, seems idle.

There is not a day but some new phase presents itself. One is heard to say that if so-and-so takes place, such-and-such will be the result. And yet, in the very next moment the very foundations upon which he was basing his forecast are sunk in oblivion.

A LL ATTENTION today is focused and to consider the question from a purely local point of view, there is nothing confronting us that should alarm. This does not refer to individual cases. For instance, there are just as many people riding on our street cars today as there were two months ago. The trouble comes when large amounts are wanted for expansion purposes. Industries dependent upon large credits will no doubt be affected, but the manufacturer catering to local consumption will have almost as many people dependent upon his wares. It would therefore appear as the there will be plenty to do in Canada, while in distant lands the roar of cannon is heard.

A LL ATTENTION today is focused upon the seat of war. As the various contingencies arise some thing new comes up to be grappled with in order to preserve at least some beliance in financial things. It reminds one of a game of chess. Each player is watching with nerves strained, to see what move is to be made.

The present state of the board looks like a "check-mate," still the game goes on. When it looks as the the last move had been made and that it would be considerable time before another one would take place, the scene suddenly changes, an opening is found. The fact that large orders for clothing have come is the first instance of this.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15.—Active steps to relieve conditions due to the European war affecting the commerce and credit of the United States were being taken today as the result of pro-posals made at the conference here between prominent business men, Pre-sident Wilson, Secretary of the Trea-

The conference was unanimously of the opinion that the pressing questions to be solved were; Restoration of the market for forelgn exchange bills; immediate provision of means for transporting American grain, cotton and other merchandise abroad and war risk insurance. Far otherwise were the bulletins of a battle received in Paris during the fateful August and September in 1870, when the Prussians were shooting holes in French history, annexing provinces and toppling a French emperor into the dustheap of oblivion. Intoxicated by False News.

There were no French victories to be reported in those awful days, but the French newspapers and government saw to it that the street mobs of Paris were kept drunk with bulletins doctored to suit their taste. On the day of Sedan, Sept. 2, 1870, when the French Emperor placed his sword in the hands of his "good brother," william of Frussia, and all was up with the French army, the streets of Paris were still resonant with the cry, "On to Berlin!" Two days later a reporter of the Gaulois (newspaper) arrived with a Brussels newspaper in his pocket containing the real news of the battle and the overthrow of Napoleon's army in the "Sink of Gavonne."

The Gaulois dared not be the first newspaper to print the news lest its premises should be torn down by an

The Gaulois dared not be the first newspaper to print the news lest its premises should be torn down by an enfuriated mob. So it went to press with the usual "news" of French victories and expected victories.

But the editor took the Belgian paper around to the authorities and learned, not very much, it may be, to his surprise, that his intelligence had preceded him. The government knew the game was up but had chosen to publish the news in its own way.

How it did so is not quite clear, but the next morning all Paris knew that the emperor and the empire had been beaten and wiped from the may of Europe.

Europe.

It was a lovely Sunday morning and the smiling skies were reflected in the countenances of the people. They appeared satisfied and content, as if glad to be rid at length of so unlucky an emperor.

They appeared satisfied and content, as if glad to be rid at length of so unlucky an emperor.

A few months previously 7,000,000 frenchmen had voted confidence in Napoleon III.; today he had not a single friend in Paris, unless we except the lone deputy, a quiet elderly man, who stood up in the chamber to declare that, having taken an oath to support the emperor, he did not consider himself absolved by his misfortunes. These obtestations were drowned in a chorus of cat-calls.

On the day following the battle of Gravelotte, by which Bazaine's army of 170,000 men was bottles up in Mets, the news was known to the authorities in Paris. It is known also that the news was known to the authorities in Paris. It is known also that the deed, a notoriously anti-Bonapartist general was appointed military governor or of the capital on the strength of this intelligence.

Perhaps even the people had some understanding of the actual conditions and naturally were somewhat irritated. But Palikas, the minister of national defence, continued to announce, and the newspapers of Paris, to publish, bulletins of the most gratifying French "victories."

The most fantastic of these efficial takes was a circumstantial account of the overthrow of three German army corps at the quarries of Jaumont. This Paris acclaimed and delighted in. And well it might—but for the trifling circumstances that no German army corps had been in the neighborhood of the quarries of Jaumont, and hence could not have been overthrown there, and finally that there were no quarries in or around Jaumont.

as to appeal to French emotionalism, as it used to be understood, and set alight all the accumulated desires for "revanche."

Yet we read that as these bulletins reached the boulevard they were received with the utmost calm; with satisfaction, doubtless, but without other demonstration than a decorous singing of the "Marseillaise," formal processions and entirely moderate speeches by frock-coated statesmen at the corners. Not so much as an echo of the historic and hysteric "A Berlin!"

The Most Remains Death Pact of

Group of French Aviators Have Sworn a Remarkable Oath to Combat the Formidable Zeppelin Dirigible by Committing Deliberate Suicide in One Single Swoop From the Clouds-

"To Do and Die" is

Their Watchword.

SINCE the beginning of the war Germany has lost three of its mighty Zeppelin dirigibles. One of these was shot to the ground the gune of the Belgian forts, which it sought to destroy, the others were annihilated by Frenchmen in a way that has led the world to wonder at the reckless carelessness of the perpetrators. It wonders whether Roland Garros, the French aviator, deliberately sacrificed his life to destroy the huge, monarch of the air that dropped to the ground after his little monoplane had plowed Its way into its silk covering. While Frenchmen are rejoicing at the calamities that have befallen these German; siants, and are worshipping the heroes that are obtaining revenge for past wrongs, the rest of the world is wondering whether it shall believe or discredit reports that these aviators are members of one of the most remarkable death pacts in history.

This organization, a veritable suiside club, is one of the strangest groups of men ever bound together by oath. It is made up of French army officers, Who, realizing the terrible peril to their nation, that the ever more perfect Ceppelin is becoming, have decided to adopt the only way they see to avert this menace to their country. These mighty Zeppelins, capable of dropping from an enormous height bombs large enough to destroy a whole city, or com-Del the surrender of forts or sink warships, must be destroyed, and these men have made a covenant to give their own lives whenever that might become necessary in order to bring

Roland Garros, the first member to abide by the covenant, was flying at Belmont Park, New York, three or four years ago, and even at that time let words slip by his almost morose lips that hinted at the existence of the eviators' death pact. Capt. Horace B. Wild, an American army aviator, who was quite intimate with the late French martyr, relates some of his experiences with Garros as follows:

fit was during the international aviation meet at Belmont Park, in 1910, that I first became intimately marked mournfully, that had he followed his wife's pleas and remained out of above the dirigible is always conceal-the flying game, he might now be a ed from the crew, as the great belly well man. Others commented upon of the ship floating above cuts off-

He was so serious mind its cost—millions of francs that the German government has spent in building the craft, the expenses of cach individual connected with it, the time it will take to duplicate it, and the cost. In juxtaposition to this consider one of us. An individual man, just one soul, with the aid of one sider one of us. An individual man, just one soul, with the aid of one gest that he might be worrying about some bodily ailment or threatened personal calamity. Often he stood apart from the rest of us as if wrapped out of existence utterly. Is it not out of existence utterly. Is it not worth the sacrifice of a single life?

out of some grave situation. In the light of what I afterwards learned I can now readily account for those moods in the man who, even then, practically had offered himself up as a sacrifice on the altar of his country.

"It was one night when a group of us sat chatting on the hotel verandah that Garros first dropped a remark which directly hinted at the existence of the group of patriots to which I of the group of patriots to which I using silencers on their engines, and of being al.) to remain stationary in the air. Neither of which is at present paralyzed from the hips down, and reone avenue of approach, that from directly above. This expanse of sky fifteen thousand feet, drop down on the unsuspecting monsters beneath them who are themselves waiting to deal death in turn to others beneath them. It will be a certain death to the brave pilot of the tiny monoplane but they have figured the sides and they are an equation.

Who said that the spectacular in war had vanished? One of these giant Zeppelin is floating silently, unconscious of danger, thousands of feet in the air, and away above it after having ascended to an altitude several thousand feet higher than the dirigible, is the little monoplane manoeuvring to get a place directly above its victim. Once securing this position, which shuts him off from position, which shuts him off from position, which shuts him off from the observation of those in the dirig-ible the pilot cuts off his ignition, points the nose of the machine directly points the nose of the machine directly at the backbone of the great and valuable engine of war below him and in a spectacular shot from the skies plunges down and rends to atoms the huge craft in his path.

Germany has thirty-three of these dirigibles. France has 3000 aeroplanes with almost as many brave aeronauts. It is easy to see that if the objects of this death pact are attained the balance of power in the end will rest with the country upon whose altar brave armies have already sacrificed their lives.

from an account describing "The Mobilization of the British Army," shown by the Famous Players' Film Service of Canada and exhibited at Loew's Winter Garden Roof last week.)

N TWO SECONDS any target up to a rang: of over six thousand yards can be sprayed with 4284 bullets from a single brigade of Royal Horse Artillery. There are six guns in a battery and three batteries in a brigade.

Only a few months ago, in an artillery practice camp, a single thirteen-pounder located and completely destroyed a moving cavalry target at a range of over two miles.

A 9.2 gun is practically the heaviest howitzer used by the Royal Garrison Artillery. It hurls a 282-pound shell with the utmost accuracy and rapidity of fire, dropping shrapnel bullets or high explosives down on an enemy.

The Royal Flying Corps has developed the science of mid-air scouting and dropping of bombs at a height from both aeroplanes and dirigibles. Both of these have yet to be tried in actual warfare.

In attacking a fortified position, the Royal Engineers can tunnel under the parapet of a fort, even the it be solid rock. While the men work. protected by rifle or maxim fire above them, a man equipped like a diver stands ready to enter the mine and bring out any worker who may be overcome inside the shaft.

To check the advance of an enemy, the Sappers construct an impenetrable hedge of barbed wire many feet thick, thru which no human being could hope to cut his way with wire nippers, or by using explosives.

To hinder an enemy anxious to get to close quarters in a big hurry, the Sappers construct "fougrasses," or small mines, loaded with stones, bricks, or small live shells. They are improvised mortars, which explode on the approach of a hostile force, and scatter destruction in every direction.

In something less than five hours, the Royal Engineers can demolish an ordinary house and utilize the timber, joists, etc., thereby obtained to bridge a stream, the time varying with the conditons. Bridges of this kind can be built to sustain a weight of five tons, ing calculations.

Trenches Are Not Straight.

In digging trenches, the Engineers adopt the method of zig-zagging and twisting the direction of a trench, instead of making it straight. This is to stop enfilading fire taking effect, and makes the trench look as if it had no front or sides

To bombard such a trench effectively, a gunner officer would have to arrange for frontal fire, enflade fire and oblique fire all at once.

Invisibility being the underlying idea of intrenchment, rifle loop-holes are cunningly arranged so that they cannot be seen a few feet away. At the same time, an overhead shelter is provided for the gunners.

Modern military practice has made obsolete the phrase "dying in the last ditch." The defenders of a trench think nothing of leaving cover and delivering a vigorous counter-charge, the moment an attack wavers in the least.

Regimental colors have been left out of wars for so long that even the average civilian is well aware of the fact that battalions no longer march into action with flags flying.

War is Drab-Colored Now.

Not only colors, but facings, time-honored regimental numbers, territorial traditions, and many distinctions of a like character have been eliminated in order to maintain uniformity in ac-

The service machine gun is the .303 maxim, which will fire a continuous leaden stream of bullets at the rate of 600 a minute, or 10 bullets every second, at ranges of from 900 to 1200 yards,

The maxim weighs 60 pounds, and its lightness enables it to be carried anywhere the freeps can go, It can be taken along roads on wheels, across country on pack animals, or, if needs be, shouldered by a single soldier right up into the

The force behind a modern bullet gives it a muzzle velocity of nearly two thousand five hundred feet per second, and a penetration which enables a bullet to knock a hole clean thru a brick wall, a yard of soft wood, a couple of feet of oak, or four or five feet of clay.

Killing Only an Incidental.

In theory, there is no particular need to kill anybody in war; it is only necessary to stop a foeman from reaching a certain point, but he must be stopped: and ever since war began killing has been incidental to the stopping.

The latest type of bullet is constructed on principle which gives it a pronounced tendency to turn immediately after impact, thus plowing its way sideways thru its living target and inflicting a terrible wound.

The rifle of today is capable of delivering 28 rounds of aimed fire in a minute. Years ago, an infantryman had to aim at a point twice the height of a man above his body. Now the trajectory of a magazine rifle is so flat that, with the latest type of bullet up to 600 yards' range, there is not enough curve to render any alteration in the back sight necessary.

The modern builet is a compound, consisting of a core and two parts—the front portion being an alloy of aluminum 90 per cent., zinc 10 per cent., and the rear portion being an alloy of 90 per cent. lead and 10 per cent. antimony.

The bullet is enclosed in an envelope of $0 per cent, copper and 20 per cent, nickel. As many 6000 bullets of this type can be fired from a service rifle without wearing the weapon out.

Bayonet Not Obsolete. It is a great mistake to imagine that the bayonct is obsolete, or that the days of hand-to-hand fighting are over. When an advance begins, it must go on. To stop is bad, to retreat fatal. The bayonet is relied on to push the charge right home, when the desired spot is reached. Whatever may have happened to the sword and the lance, the bayonet is as important today as it ever was. The mere sight of it in the hands of a British soldier is often enough to frighten an

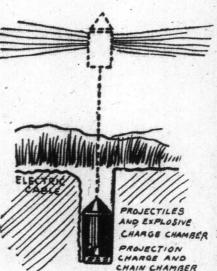

In marching, the length of the ordinary step is 30 inches, 75 to the minute. In "stepping out," the pace is lengthened by 3 inches. Quick march is now 120 paces to the minute, instead of 108, as it was in 1883.

In "double-time" the step has increased from 36 to 40 inches, and the rate from 150 to 180 steps per minute, so that the modern soldier covers 200 yards, while his predecessor of years

In South Africa, the 19th Brigade, within a period of 30 days, fought 21 times and marched 327 miles. The casualties were between 400 and 500, the defeats nil.

How Germans Met New And a Terrible Death

The mine-grenade whose working is illustrated is the invention of Mr. N. W. Aasen. a Norwegian engineer. Each grenade is buried in a place unsuspected by the advancing enemy: weighs about 9 pounds, including its accessories: contains 400 projectiles and about 12 ounces of an extremely powerful explosive; and is fired by an electric current supplied to it thru a flexible cable, which is also buried. To quote Dr. Alfred Gradenwitz in the "Scientific American:" "The grenade consists of an iron cylinder with a conical point, which contains in its interior the projectiles and explosive charge as well as the mechanism causing the grenade to rise from the ground and eventually to explode. . . . At the bottom of the cylinder there is a small powder-charge, which is ignited by the electric current and projects the shell-body vertically thru

The following incident happened in Ireland, in the Kerry wilds. A crowd of us were returning from a picnic, cyclists in front, side-cars behind. At the top of a steep hill beyond which was a long straight road, we saw before us a drove of Kerry cattle leisurely proceeding towards the neighboring town for the next day's market.

It was my first long bicycle ride, and I was a little nervous at the idea of steering thru the herd, for in those remote districts, where the animals have never seen a machine, they are apt to treat a bicycle in a way fraught with some little inconvenience to themselves, and no little discomfort to the cyclist. However, my friends took the lead to open up a track, I bringing up the rear, and close behind me the first of the jaunting cars. Things might have gone smoothly but for the behavior of one young cow. She jerked to the side of the ditch—there is always a ditch along an Irish road, worse luck!—and stood whisking her tail as the bicycles passed in a way that boded no good to the procession. Some one on the car behind spoke to me at this critical moment, and as I half-turned my head to answer the cow made a dash at my blcycle. half-turned my head to answer the cow made a dash at my bicycle. Just now we are prepared to swallow almost anything in the shape of war news. Having looked the whole situation over quietly and thoroly we are repared to state that there appears to us to be one grand industrial opening for a factory wherein can be manufactured a good generally serviceable line of plausible war news.

The British contingent was a strong one, numbering some 700, while Germany sent 500 delegates, Spain 250, and Austria-Hungary nearly 300. The French members of the congress numbered over 1200.

As at previous congresses, the whole of the proceedings was conducted in Esperanto. The company of pretty girls have been picked from among the prettiest of Broadway's among the prettiest of Broadway's among the prettiest of Broadway's show girls and "Ponies." All credit should be given to Mr. Laning for the success of this show, because he not only wrote the lyrics and composed the music for his show, but he also staged it and plays one of the prominent parts.

The scene of the first burlesque is laid in a railroad station, and it has for its title "Fun in a Railroad Station." Jack Swift (Mr. Laning) and Izzy Goldstein (Jim Bennett) find themselves stranded. They start in to devise ways and means of getting money enough to reach their home town, and before they get thru they have used every known means and a few which they devised themselves of raising money from innocent strangers. It is one laugh from start to finish, and when the curtain drops you are forced to agree that the noted Mr. Walling-ford was a "piker" compared to Mr. Swift and Mr. Goldstein. There are three elaborate scenes in the last burlesque which is called "A Night at Monte Carlo." Goldsten, now Night at Monte Carlo. Grossen, now a retired cloak manufacturer, accompanied by Mr. Dooley, a wealthy politician, start for Monte Carlo to break the bank. They are introduced to Jack Trimen (Mr. Laning), and Lottie Get-the-Coin (Dolly Webb). Mr. Trimen advises Mr. Goldstein and Mr. Dooley to keep away from Monte Carlo. Trimen induces the two to go with them to the Cafe de Bunkem, where they meet a Count Doemgood. The count tells them that he lost all his money at Monte Carlo, and then promoney at Monte Carlo, and then pro-ceeds to show them how he won it back with the "magic egg trick." This act is furiously funny.

Bre Brett Page.

NEW YORK, Aug 15.—In the midst of the sadness of the world war that has gripped even thoughtless theatrical Broadway by the throat, there crop up every now and then stray smiles. One of them I located in Central Park last week, where the Bergh Orchestra is playing on the Mall. To, the assembled throng a small boy was distributing programs of the evening's concert; I accepted one and turned it idly in my fingers. Then my eye fell upon a line in big type. It naively announced, "An Evening of German-Slavonic Composers."

Indirectly the theatrical managers are feeling the effects of the war. Those who feel it most heavily are men like Frohman, who is heavily interested in London and Paris, and managers like Morris Gest, who are having great difficulty in securing definite information about productions they are importing from abroad. Gest's, "The Story of the Rosary," which made a hit in England last season, and the scenery of which as well as book and actors, he is importing entire, is being held up by the lack of trans-Atlantic ships. Then there are a host of American vaudeville acts that are practically stranded in the warring countries.

Max Lowe, the New York representative of the H. B. Marinellil International Vaudeville Agency, told me last night that about one hundred and the same production and the scenery vaudeville aperiormers. Modern Road Construction

The growing use of the motor truck for transportation of farm produce, as well as manufactured articles, is rapidly bringing about a revolution in road construction. It presents an entirely new problem to the highway engineer, the problem of providing a surface which will stand up under the constant passage of loads, some of them as great as ten tons, often moving at a speed of from ten to eighteen miles an hour, and all compressed and concentrated momentarily upon a very few inches of road surface.

The surprising deterioration of the old-style roads under such impacts, and the growing cost of maintenance, has caused a lot of grey hairs in highway departments during the last few years, and experiments have been tried with almost every method of construction and every kind of material, both in this country and the United States.

People are demanding good roads; the motor truck and the automobile require good roads for their operations; a poor road over which our ancestors would have contentedly, or at least uncomplainingly rattled and bounced for years, will not be tolerated nowadays; comparatively high speed and modern transportation methods impress its condition a little too forcibly the taxpayer. Good roads we must have and it is up to transportation methods impress its condition a little too forcibly on the taxpayer. Good roads we must have, and it is up to the highway engineers to provide them. Our entire system of modern life is built up on a basis of quick transportation, both of materials and men, and anything which interferes is resented.

So the highway engineer, realizing that there is nothing new under the sun, has gone back into the mists of antiquity and resurrected, to meet our twentieth-century requirements, the road material of the ancient Carthaginians and the prehistoric lncas of Peru—concrete. It has been found to be the practical solution of the problem.

Almost every state in the Union has built at least an experimental strip of concrete highway, and, as a result, such states as New York, Michigan, Ohio and Pennsylvania have become so impressed with the manifest advantages of this type of construction that it promises to become the standard.

that it promises to become the standard.

that it promises to become the standard.

The good points of the concrete road, as expressed by Edward N. Hines, chairman of the Board of County Road Commissioners of Wayne County, Michigan, who has been called the father of the concrete road, are expressed as follows: "Low ultimate cost, sanitation and freedom from dust, good traction for all types of vehicles, smoothness and ease of construction."

That seems to cover about every desirable quality a road could possess, and Mr. Hines knows whereof he speaks, for he has constructed in the last four years something over sixty-five miles of concrete road at a cost of from $1.04 to $1.75 per square yard, right in and around Detroit, the automobile centre of the world, where the percentage of automobiles and motor trucks can reasonably be declared to be unusually high.

The Woodward avenue road, a good example of the concrete highway construction in Wayne County, was laid in 1910, and since that time has been traversed at a conservative estimate by over 1,300,000 vehicles, a large proportion heavily loaded. This over 1,300,000 vehicles, a large proportion heavily loaded. This is more traffic than would go over the ordinary country road in is more traffic than would go over the ordinary country road in twenty years. Practically nothing has been spent on repairs or maintenance, and any truck driver in Detroit can tell you that there is not a rut, hole or bump in the entire section. When this condition is compared with the $800 to $1500 a mile a year cost of keeping up a macadam road under the same traffic, it can readily be seen why concrete has become the standard of construction in Wayne County, where eight years ago its use was opposed by the farmers. From all over Canada, as well as the United States, delegations have visited this county to inspect these roads, and gone away impressed with their obvious superiority and economy.

The reasons the concrete road stands under the stress of automobile traffic, both pleasure and commercial, are seemingly simple. The properly-constructed concrete road is so dense, its particles are so immovable, that the enormous pressure and thrust of the swiftly-moving wheels is distributed evenly over the entire sub-base of the road; particles do not dislodge from the surface to be blown away by the wind, or converted into mud by the next rain. Also it seems that that the impervious nature of the material causes water to run quickly from its surface, which makes the construction. tion of a high crown unnecessary for the disposal of surface water. The surface of the concrete road is laid practically flat—only one-quarter of an inch slope to the foot—consequently there is less disposition for traffic to follow the middle of the road, the whole top surface is used, and the ruts avoided.

This level surface is also much easier on horses, allowing their hoofs to strike the surface squarely, instead of at an angle, while the entire absence of small, loose stones on the concrete road makes injury or strain from this source impossible. Even in wet weather, the gritty surface of the concrete provides a perfect traction surface for both the rubber tires of automobiles and the steel shoes of horses.

That concrete for country roads is not already in more universal use is due largely to the old fallacy that low initial cost means economy, this will rapidly disappear in communities where sections of sample road are laid. The Lincoln Highway Association has placed in four of the middle western states this summer $40,000 worth of cement for the construction of "seedling miles" of Lincoln Highway, built of concrete, with the idea that once the people of these sections have an opportunity to observe these miles the connecting miles of the great route will be built of this enduring material at the choice and expense of the people themselves, and that connecting roads built to the same specifications will follow in every

G. M. A. Championships at Winnipes.
The Canadian motorcycle championship races were held under C. M. A sanction at Winnipes, on Satunday and Monday last. The first day's racing included some championship events and despite the bad condition of the track the Toronto contingent, which included Joe Baribeau, Ernle McIntosh, professionals; and Geo. Hedley and Fred Miles, amateurs; made a splendid shewins. The Indian had somowhat the better of the argument especially in the Canadian championships.

The Sensational speeding of George Hedley of Toronto, was the big feature of the amateur events. He won everything he entered and he was entered in every event of his class. He was never even hard pushed in an event. He took the turns as tho he had been born and raised on the track. He finished 30 feet to the good in the one-mile event but Miles and Albutt were seen that Miles and Albutt were seen that Miles and albutt were seen the work this head bandaged was worth white The crowd would have liked to have seen him try against Perry once or twice more, but he was in no condition to do more than hold up his end in the Saturday:

Speaking of the good nature of motorcyclists generally, is it any wonder they are a solemn lot? Recently I heard of an enthusiastic sidecarist's experiences in trying to mend a puncture caused by a big nail. Being methodical, he first removed his coat, turned up his cuffs, put down a rug on the road to kneel upon, and then set to work. He had the cover off and the tube out in about 30 sec-Then he carefully selected a patch, which he proceeded to anoint with solution, and put it on the top of the lamp till the solution should have "set." While waiting, he cleaned the tube with gasoline and gave the sore place its share of the "sticky." He then lit a cigaret, waited awhile, and looked for the patch, which had and looked for the patch, which had fallen in the dust ("butter" side down, naturally). It looked rather like a small section of a pasture field when he retrieved it, so he threw it away and prepared ahother patch, which he placed on the saddle for state and then found that four small safety, and then found that four small flies had been caught by the sticky place on the tube. He removed the pests, went thru the process of cleaning and preparing again, and sat down on the saddle to wait till the solution was properly tacky.

Economy

Motoring is two things---a pleasure and a business. might say it was used sixty per cent. for entertainment and forty per cent. for commercial purposes. Yet no matter whether you use your car to get orders or ozone, your greatest economy will be the reduced cost of mishaps.

No accidents ever befell an automobile but what the tires were forced to play a part in it. And no accident ever was averted but what the tires had a say in that, too.

If you will drive fast. If you will make those sudden stops. If the City will water asphalt. If rain will make muddy roads.

Why then-the possibility of skidding will always be with you unless you figure on those elements of danger when you buy your tires.

What's really a better slogan than Safety First is Sagacity First--because that seems to apply more to yourself than to the other fellow. If each motorist thinks of himself there will be no other fellow to look after, because there will be no skidding.

"MOST ENVIED TIRE IN ALL AMERICA"

The World Window

Embargo on News

Looking from The World Window towards Europe was to regard an almost impenetrable mist. Out of the fog and the gloom came rumors and reports of battles by sea and land, more or less apocryphal. But of the massing of the immense armies on the frontiers and their movements, not a line, not even an indication on which to base a trustworthy inference. This is a novel experience for the news-loving people of the North American-continent, who, like the Athenians of old, are ever intent of hearing and telling some new thing. But Germany cannot communicate, even if she would, except indirectly, and the rigorous censorship established in England and France prevents all information which might assist the enemy from being forwarded. The British censors-Mr. F. E. Smith and Sir Edward Carson, both learned limbs of the law and shining lights of the Unionist party—evidently take their duties seriously, as, indeed, is proper. Nevertheless, complaints have been made not so much regarding their discretion as their dilatoriness. "Tay-Pay" has backed the sufferers up and made the practical suggestion that some experienced newspaper man or men would cover the way more rapidly and quite as satisfactorily.

At a stirring time like this the public appetite for news is insatiable. People of this advanced age have been accustomed to get it piping hot every morning, afternoon or evening with the regularity displayed by the sun, that punctual maid of all work. Matters were very different in the great days of Queen Elizabeth, or even of Napoleon. No steamers, no telegraphs, no wireless, nothing but the mounted courier on land and the sailing ship, at the mercy of wind and wave. Rothschild, we know, made a fortune by obtaining the first news of the battle of Waterloo, and kept the secret locked in his bosom while he gobbled up stocks and securities at depressed prices, much as the high financiers of our own time delight to do. For, whatever changes there have been in means of communication, human nature has changed very little. Men from the moment they first found themselves have been preying upon each other, and will be found pursuing the same pleasing and profitable avocation centuries distant. But, all .the same, public opinion is increasingly condemning the practice of improving the opportunity offered by a great war, with its dislocation of values. What the government finds it difficult to do may be accomplished or restricted by popular condemnation.

> Moratorium Britain

Among the few immediate advantages of a war-perhaps the only legitimate oneis the fact that it enlarges the vocabulary and geographical knowledge of the public. Take, for example, the word "moratorium," which figured considerably in the press despatches from Europe during the opening days of the war. In its proper sense it means holding in suspense of all maturing bills of exchange or drafts during its enactment, but it may also be made to extend to other commercial paper, or even ordinary debts. No statutory moratorium had been adopted in the United Kingdom within the memory of anyone now living until the act recently passed by the British government authorizing its establishment should circumstances require that step to be taken. Its use, however, has been more common in the continent of Europe. One was established in Sicily at the time of the Messina earthquake and a similar measure was adopted by the Balkan States after the late wars. The subject of a moratorium was discussed at the Hague conferences of 1910 and 1913, but it was found impracticable to make a general recommendation, on account of the material differences between the systems of English-speaking countries with regard to bills of exchange and those of continental Europe.

Parliament will meet on Wednesday of this week under the gravest circumstances that have yet attended its assembly in the Dominion. With the example of the imperial parliament before it, Canadians will expect their representatives to exhibit the same high qualities that have marked the attitude of their British brethren. The hour calls for action, wise, prudent, forceful, and thoroly efficient. Over in London party animosities were dropped as a garment, clamor, recrimination, vituperation ceased. Within the shadow of war, and, still more since it has enveloped the land, peer and peasant, employer and workman, master and servant have set themselves resolutely to the work in hand, and are doing it with all their might. Heavy is the responsibility resting on the shoulders of the government, but it and their labors are lightened by the loyal co-operation of their political foes. Let that spirit, that high courage and unselfish patriotism dominate the Dominion parliament.

> The War After

If all goes well, and the cause of freedom triumphs, this may be the last pan-European war. For, while the characters of individual men cannot be changed instantaneously, and the conflict will leave behind it scars that will rankle for a time, many years must elapse before the nations engaged will again meet in battle array. Exhausted in men and money, with the dropped threads of trade, commerce and manufacture to be picked up and laborlously mended, it will be no easy matter to return to the pleasanter paths of peace. Terrible as war is, it brings after it some benefits. It is a fire that cleanses and purifies even while it destroys, and its great diapason will be replaced by the holy melodies of

THE KAISER'S COLORS

The War and Its Issues

Before this tremendous war, with its epochmaking issues, all other happenings are as nothing. So suddenly did the storm break that it had all the stunning effect of an electric shock. Here in Canada it is difficult to realize has called out part of the Landsturm, the last even yet that the continent of Europe, save in a few of the outlying and smaller states, is lit with the flame of war. Already the kaiser German reserve line, and the harvest, of vital importance, is left to be garnered by women, children and the aged men, who can no longer endure the hardships of a campaign, so terrible is war under the system of universal ser-

Never in the history of the world has so overwhelming a spectacle been placed upon its stage. And the tragedy of it is that it has come from the ambition of a man born into a position which gave him power which left him uncontrolled. Kaiser Wilhelm has often professed openly his belief that his rule is of Divine right. He has convinced himself that he is the hand of God ordained to raise the German people to the point where they will dominate the earth, place every other nation under tribute and reduce the masses, who are not born into the purple, to the position of hewers of wood and drawers of water for the privileged few. For this is the real meaning of this war, which may be the last and decisive conflict between freedom and tyranny, democracy and autocracy.

Can the weapon so carefully forged by the Hohenzollerns stand the strain? While this is being written, all along three hundred miles of Germany's western frontier two millions of armed men are locked in a death grapple. That it has come in the manner it has, and with approximately equal forces engaged, is the great work Belgium has performed. When that brave little nation flung itself into the breach, and by its heroic resistance at Liege stemmed the advance of the German legions, it accomplished a work of supreme value, that may well be the determining factor in the course of the war. It secured invaluable time, enabled France and Britain to pour in their troops, and compelled a reconstruction of the German plan of campaign. Whatever the end, while we believe the forces that make for freedom will at last prevail, the Belgians have won imperishable fame.

Rallying to the Flag

Very satisfactory, indeed, to Britons everywhere has been the efficiency displayed by the imperial war office. long the synonym for all that efficiency does not mean. Its rescue from the coils of red tape and its reconstruction on better lines, was not the least of the services rendered by Lord Haldane, to whom is also due the reformed military system that has stood the strain of mobilization without difficulty or confusion. The only real complaint ever brought against his scheme was the failure to keep the territorial regiments at the required strength.

That this was due to other causes than a decline in the warlike temper of the nation is clear from the remarkable response made in Britain to the call for volunteers in the hour of the empire's need. Rich and poor have alike rallied to the colors. One-third of the house of lords and one-sixth of the house of commons have abandoned the legislature for the tented field. No less full of patriotic ardor are the overseas dominions. They, with the great Indian dependency, stand together for the protection of the empire and the honor of the flag that for one and all is the symbol of liberty

First War Correspondent. The first war correspondent, cording to a theory propounded Sutherland Edwards, appears to have been Homer, who was sent by editor of an Argos paper called The Chronos, to describe the siege of Chronos. to describe the siege of Troy. ADVENTURES OF THE TWINS AND GOOD, KIND, DEAR DOG MUTT. JOHN CLIMBS A FLAGPOLE AND WHAT HAPPENS.

Now, to the club young John and Pa Went out one day, you see. And, FOR A WHILE, young John, I say, Was good as good could be.
But, being good, alas! with John
Could never last, you know.
John went with mischief hand in hand.

'Twas sad, but it was so.

Well, just at noon young John came out, And saw the flagpole high. He said: "I think I'll climb that thing, While no one else is nigh!" So, ALMOST TO THE TOP HE GOES! But, dear! What happens now? He LOOKS BELOW AND DIZZY GROWS. He really can't tell how.

Poor John howls out: "Oh, save me-Do! The next time that I come, I'll never climb this pole again. For then I'll stay at home!"

Poor Pa looks up with stony stare; He grabs his ears and cries:

For when Mutt sees John's awful plight He grabs THE FLAG, you see, Then pulls it up to where John hapgs As quickly as can be.

John grasps THE FLAG with might and main,
Mut lowers down the boy,
And the Mutt howis and yelps and barks,
His cries are all for Joy.
Look at the SMILE on John's face. He knows very well he need not be afraid with a flag like the UNION JACK to hold on to.

"Wow! Climb that pole and save my child. He'll drop before our exes!

Well, Mutt, good dog, was there, of course; And great was his distress! He showed more brains than Pa, or all.

I really must confess. For, when he saw John's fearful plight, He grabbed THE FLAG, you see; Then pulled it up to where John hung,

As quickly as could be. John grabbed THE FLAG with might and main.

Mutt lowered down the boy.

And, tho Mutt howled and yelped and barked, His cries were all for joy.

P. S.: As I said: John SMILED when he was hanging to the flag, for he knew very well he need not be afraid, with a flag like the UNION JACK to hold on to. C. A. Macphie.

HERE THEY COME

Smile awnie And while You smile Another sm And soon There's miles And miles Of smiles; And life's Worth while Because you smile.

That is our motto: No matter what happens, just SMILE. Who is ever any better for crying? NOBODY; so why should we cry? If mother or father asks you to do a thing, why pout? You only feel badly afterward. Do it with a SMILING face; then everyone is happy. If you smile, why! mother SMILES, father SMILES, baby SMILES; and soon, if you look hard enough at Puss, you will see that she is SMIL-

Frederic W. Utton, 341 Concord avenue, (Age 9 3-4 years) ...

It was a rainy day when we started, about the middle of July. We got on the train at the Union Station and after traveling for several hours we got off at a little village, and there we got into a motor boat and tying our cance to the back, we started up the Severa River towards a village called Bagit Rapids, but when we had got a little way up the river the canoe began to sink and we had to make for shore to dump the water out of it. After we had done this, we discovered that a lot of logs were coming down the river, so we had to go back to the village and take the next train to Bagit Rapids It was ten o'clock when we got there, but we went right to bed, we had many exciting times at but it would take too

Yes, my dear, the Princess' heart was really and truly gone THIS time. Yes, GONE; heart, heart box, flannel and all.

I suppose you wonder, and are ready with the QUESTION: "Where was her heart gone to?" And I am quite ready with the answer: NOBODY knew.

Yes, my dear; that was the worst of it-NOBODY knew. Some said they were sure the fireman had it; some said they were positive the burglar had it; and quite a few said they were absolutely convinced (excuse the long words, but that was just what they said) that they were absolutely convinced that-NO-BODY had it. The real great trouble was, the, that NOBODY

He had lit a fire in the grate to keep himself warm, but his tears had reached up to the top bar, so how could a fire burn in such a river as that?

"Ah, Bel" sobbed he. "Where? Oh, where is her lid-dle, liddle heard?" and he answered himself by saying: "DO-BODY knowds! DOBODY

The Boy and the Squirrel

As I was going to school one morning, a squirrel ran into its hole in the path before me. Now here was a chance for fun, as there was a stream just at hand. I determined to pour water into the hole till it should be full, and so force the squirrel up in order that I might kill him. I got a bucket from beside a supar-maple, and began to pour water into the hole. In a short time I heard the squirrel trying to get up, and said, "Ah, my fellow, I shall soon have you out now." Just then I heard a voice behind me, "Well, my boy, what have you got in there?"

I turned and saw one of my heighbors, a good old man with long, white locks who had seen sixty winters.

"Why," said I, "I have a ground squirrel in here, and am going to drown him out."

"John," said he, "When I was a boy more than fifty years ago, I was engaged one day just as you are, drowning a ground squirrel, and an old man, like I am, came along, and said to me, You are a little boy, now, if you were down in a narrow hole like that, and I should come along and pour water on you to drown you, would not you think I was cruel? God made that little squirrel and life is as sweet to him as it is to you; and why will you torture to death a little innocent creature that God has made? he said. I have never forgotten that and never shall. I have never killed any harmless creature for fun since. Now, my dear boy, I want you to bear this in mind while you live, and when tempted to kill any poor little animal or bird remember that God does not allow us to kill His creatures for fun."

The Toronto Business Women's Club held their first meeting in their new quarters, 114½ Yonge street on Tuesday evening, when Mrs. L. A. Gurnett, on behalf of the Local Council gave an interesting address on the plans of the Toronto Housing Company, in connection with the houses for business women. The note emphasized was that these are in no wise a charity proposition, but in no wise a charity proposition, but the result of an effort to provide comfortable, up-to-date homes for those who will live in them. It was those who will live in them. It was decided that subsequent to August 15, members of the house committee would be on hand at the new clubrooms to meet members who might drop in. It is especially desired that out-of-town members feel that they are welcome at any time when they are in the city.

CARELESSNESS IN LETTER WRITING.

THERE are few personal letters that women write which are ever dated, and the habit often leads to the same carelessness in the business letter, a thing that always gives annoyance and may be serious. Other loose habits follow serious. Other loose habits follow this same line, one of which is the failure to put the full address on a letter. It is not essential, perhaps, that your correspondent should know whether you are married or not, but it is a morification to him. whether you are married or not, but it is a mortification to him or her, especially if you are a person about whom all are supposed to know; so it will be a much more satisfactory way if "Miss" or "Mrs." were placed in parenthesis before the signature. Perhaps few women realize that they have this careless way of handling their correspondence, and no one wants to own that the traft is applied to feminine rather than the masculine gender, but watch for dates, addresses and signatures on all the left 3 coming to you from women, and I you, too, belong to the army of careless ones brace up and help set the others an brace up and help set the others an

ONLY QUALIFIED NURSES WILL BE GIVEN A CHANCE

Emergency Training for War Duty Will Not Be Sufficient, Says Government.

A NOTE of warning sounded by Col. Fotheringham at the meeting of women, held in the Y. M. C. A. Hall on Tuesday evening, is worthy of note by those contemplating the automatical states. contemplating entering the nursing field in response to the call of country and humanity.

An idea has gone abroad, to a certain extent at least, that certain emergency training will be sufficient credential to enable women and girls credential to enable women and girls to "go to the front" if needed in the military hospitals. We have heard of instances in which girls contemplate giving up positions, under the erroneous idea that their services will be accepted after short training, and that they will be conveyed under government imprimature to the scene of war activities.

Col. Fotheringham explained that Col. Fotheringham explained that none but those recognized by the National organization of Graduate Nurses would be considered in this connection. Others who were receiving training, in what may be termed an incidental way, will not be accorded government recognition. Only those who have gone then the usual three years' course of the graduate nurse may expect to have their application examined in any way. Those trained in ambulance work "first aid" and along kin Ired lines might receive appointments during a war and along kin ired lines might receive appointments during a war of defence, but not therwise.

All this is most reasonable when one considers the collect when one considers the collect and the land yourneys that may follow. Besides, nursing under the trying conditions that exist in a war camp is some

And then Billy's leters be-gan to arrive. How I gloried in her adding to difficulties to permit any but those who have been tested along many lines to enter the fearsome dscriptions of her studio, and the chums she was making. After a while, she began to write a good deal about "temperaments," and "personalities," and "Bohemian life." Oh, how I longed to be in it all. It all seemed so wonderful to me. She never wrote much about her work; her letters were nearly all filled with details of studio teas, and suppers shared with young people of both sexes—"such temperaments, my dear, and so artistic." Of course, there wasn't very much time for such trifles as work or studying.

I don't to this day know how one of those letters fell into my father's hands. I suppose I accidentally dropped it. But get one he did, and my artistic temperament received a joit from which it took a long time to receiver. Mother casually asked me how Billy was succeeding in her studies. Before I had time to reply, father fairly thundered: "Studies, did you say? I suppose you think me a tyrant because I won't allow our daughter to go abroad to study." The sarcasm he placed on that word "study" has to be heard to be appreciated. "Here is how she studies," and he tossed a leter on the table. I recognized it as one I had received from Billy a few days ago. It was filled with references regarding midnight suppers and Billy's conceptions of the Bohemian life and a good time in general. "Once for all, I want you to put all nonsence about going abroad out of your heads; not another allusion to it do I want to hear." When uttered in that tone T WAS a mothers' meeting in every sense of the word—the group of women who were congregated at our house. Of course, they were there for the express purpose of sewing, but I am afraid that the heedle was more often suspended in midair, while each and every mother present regaled the group with the wonders of her progeny. As I sat listening to these women it seemed to me that the world was filled with infant prodigies. "My Helen will make her mark in music," Mrs. White was saying impressively. "The professors'—all music teachers are invariably referred to as "professors" by doting parents—"says that her touch is wonderful." A few stitches, and Mrs. Black says: "If Grace keeps on the way she is doing now, she will be a great writer, as sure as I am here now! What do you think she asked me yesterday? Did I know of a word to rhyme with "month' or with 'orange'? If I had an impediment in my speech, she told me—yes, those were the very words she used—impediment in-my-speech"—and Mrs. Black looked at the little group as if defying them to doubt her veracity—"I suppose she meant that if she lisped, then she could use the word 'once' pronounced 'oneth,' but she shad not as yet found a word to go with 'orange.' That should surely indicate which way the wind was blowing," Mrs. Black concluded with an air of finality. After carefully pressing a seam on her knee. Mrs. Brown said: "I don't know whether I will live to see the day or not, because it takes so long for genius to be recognized and to be accorded its proper place, but some day people will stand in awe and admire some wonderful painting; and that painting will be signed with my Mabel's name. John and I are going to do all in our power to nourish this little spark of genius in Mabel, and we have already started a little saving fund for that purpose. Of course, she will have to go to Europe later on. I tell you, folks, her drawings are marvelous!" Pride fairly radiated from Mrs, Brown as she beamed on her companions.

I NVOLUNTARILY, my eyes sought those of my mother. Mother must have seen the suppressed mirth in me, for she hastily arose and asked me to go along and see about tea. Once out of range I was nearly convulsed with merriment. "Hush," mother warned; "they may hear you" "Oh, I simply can't help it, mother. They are too funny for anything. Are all mothers the same? Wait until they all get disilluagain.

Time had gradually healed my own wounded feelings, and I could laugh at my bygone aspirations. For I, too, as a school girl had a talent for drawing. The drawing period was the one period of the day that I looked forward to with any degree of pleasure. I loved to draw, and naturally excelled in that one branch. My maps were more accurate than HAT night I decided, I couldn't seht the world on fire as a great painter. I would do the next best thing, and draw sketches for advertisers, illustrations for stories, etc. I determined to strive to be original. To put a little something into my sketches that would make them different from others. I found the field vast, and replete with opportunities. The work is fascinating in the extreme. To take a commonplace article and create for it a picture that will catch and hold the attention of the public surely that is sufficient for any one with artistic tendencies. Of course some of the sketches are just ascurate copies of originals, but then I am learning to draw more perfectly by that, and I never realized how decicient I was in that respect. Later on I took up decorative work, such as drawing sketches for headlines, borders, or edgings for the sides of little booklets. All these lines pay good prices, and in the comparatively short time that I have devoted to my new line of work. I have saved enough to take the coveted trip to Europe. But I have lost the desire. HOT WEATHER MENU.

MY suggestions, then, for the proper hot weather menu as an aid to beauty, include good food in moderate quantities. Fish and fowl, greens and fruit, buttermilk or fruit juice drinks, tee cream, frozen fruits. One or two glasses of cold water before breakfast. Crisp toast and hot coffee is generally liked for breakfast, and for lunch, light eatables which may include eggs or fish; for dinner a small piece of meat, if deemed necessary, vegetables, a salad, fruit or loes. These meals, eaten without worry or hurry, well masticated, will sustain and build up bright eyes, rosy cheeks, a round form, good spirits; and all of these it goes without saying are included in the catalog of what is called beauty.

Of such beauty, Austin Dobson could not have sung;

You are just a porcelain trifle, prophesied for years, and it has not yet come true." But we are not speaking of the end of the world—but the End of the Age. So, many people are gradu-ally awakening to, and becoming in-terested in, the warnings, sounded from all sides of this most important and significant event, that a few words from time to time in a column purporting to comment on current events and topics should not

We never read the headlines in the morning paper without being made aware that "the Time is at Hand." Its precursors are overrunning the world, shouting its advent in the very affairs of that world—the troublous times, the fall of monarchies, the traceles of fall of monarchies, the tragedies of royal houses, and the gradual and slow decay or thinning of royal lines. Anyone who may claim he has not time to study the scripture, many who write asking where confirmation is to be found, etc.. may with ease find all they want in The Bible Students', Monthly—a little leaflet published in New York for the extraordinarily small sum twelve cents a year. Not the word of mere man; not his subtractions or multiplications or other interference with biblical chronology may hasten or deter the inevitable fulfilment of the prophecies—for The Time is at Hand.

The Little Flock.

SALVATION at the present time is only for the 'little flock,' who thru much tribulation shall enter the kingdom." It is the way of the world—the predicted way—to smile at sayings like this. But any student of worldly affairs or of any student of worldly affairs or of scriptural teachings may see that this kingdom class now being developed is the seed of Abraham. The Jew, from being despised of all men, is fast coming to the front and into the kingdom which the Lord has given to him. It is the Gentile in these hours of the end of his power who should look to himself. The years in which the Gentiles bear rule over Israel and all the earth; the period in which God would have no representative nation in the world representative nation in the world—that is the Gentile period. Let us quote a moment: Some may enquire: Were not the Israelites restored from the Babylonian captivity? Yes; but they did not receive back the kingdom; they were thereafter subject to the great dominant kingdoms of the world. First, they were subject to the Medo-Pargian empire; part to the Great Persian empire; next, to the Greeks, in the time of our Lord, to the

The last vestige of this authority pessed away with the destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman army in A. D. 70, and the Jews have never en able to re-establish themselves in their own land up to the present time. Now, in harmony with the scriptures which foretell Israel's restoration to. Palestine, the Zionist movement is coming forth with sound hopes of soon erecting a Jewsh sub-kingdom. Yet will the text

"Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

The Mystic Seven. HILE the actual Gentile period is not definitely stated, or is stated in a more or less obscure form, students of the scriptures agree that in the mystic number seven may be found the solution. What the scriptures term "seven times" must not be taken literally to mean our little years of twelve months each—but as seven symbolic years. Now, Israel's captivity to Babylon occurred in B. C. 606. Taking each day of a symbolic year as one of our years—to put it more plainly a "time" or "year" in symbol represents 360 literal years—the "secont time" or "grainly a "time" or "year" in symbol represents 360 literal years the "seven times" of scripture would represent 7 times 360, or 2520 years. Based strictly on biblical chrono-time of the Gentiles), beginning in 606 B. C., will end in October, 1914, You will ask, "How do you make out that a 'time' or 'year' has been scripturally used to represent 360?"

logy, therefore, this 2520 years (the

It is quickly demonstrated: In Revelation a period of time is mentioned in three different ways; namely, 1260 days, 42 months and 3½ times. The 3½ times of Revelation are exactly one-half of the "seven times" of the Gentiles. The 1260 years of Revelation are exactly one-half of the 2520 years of the times of the Gentiles. And these 2520 years we believe will expire with October, 1914; at that time we be-lieve that the Gentile lease of power will end, and that the God of Heaven will set up His kingdom in Israel. Our belief is that the warfare between capital and labor, emperors and peoples, will be short, sharp, decisive, and bring untold calamity upon all concerned. If people could only discern it they would avoid it but "their eyes are holden."

The "short, sharp, decisive times of great trouble are predicted for of great trouble are predicted for 1915—after which humanity will regain its sanity and praise the God of Heaven. Look about you, friend, note the trend of affairs among the nations—the struggles of labor, the armaments of the different countries, the unrest, the terrible strug-gles that are threatening between brethren, the marvelous advance of the Jews—only the other day even Russia gave them certain concessions for the first time in history—note the shaking of the thrones, the tragedies, the disasters, and above all, the Awakening of Woman, and remember that what seems to us of this world weary years, is but to God "as a watch in the night." But we must pass to lighter things.

Our Mr. Klem.

MONG THE more odd of A city's many odd occupations is that which consists of watching a hole in the ground, the hole being a cellar excavation in which it is intended later to lay the foundations of some big building like an hospital or a hotel.

Of course, the employment of such a watchman is to prevent accidents but why only our particular watchman should be a being of mystery is more than we may tell. He comes on duty after the diggers have put up a protection of barrels and boards around the point of danger, and we have christened him Mr. Klem. You remember Mr. Klem of London-the friend of Boz in his nightly perambulations thrubut that city of wonder and of mystery? Our Mr. Klem resembles him. When he comes on duty he surveys the hole silently, then lights his pipe and his red lanterns and sets them settle down for his night's work. If he has got a shanty on the ground, he sits in the door of that and smokes; if no shanty, he perches on a barrel, or moves slowly about.

And there you'll find him, come along at whatever hour of the night you will. Taking the air late-very late-these hot nights, we have come upon him in the dark, or emerging out of a shadow, and always he is silent and dour. You never hear his voice and he never seems to hear you asking the eternal "Watchman, what of the night?" Dark and silent the deep excavation may be, but equally silent and mysterious is our Mr. Klem as he appears to us in the dim light or disappears in the shadow. All night he watches his hole in the ground, until, when morning comes and the diggers arrive, chattering and chattering, he removes his string of lamps and silently moves away.

We would like to follow him. Perhaps there is a Mrs. Klem and "a bed in a bundle" somewhere, and a "flat pint of beer," such as the original Mr. Klem, of London, a mouldy old man with a mouldy old wife, used to regale himself on be times. What becomes of our Mr. Klem all day? No one but Mrs. Klem, if she exists, may know with certainty, but as soon as the nightjar "jars" and the crickets tune up, Mr. Klem appears—a lonely, silent, pacing figure, watching a hole in the ground.

. . . Crimes Passionel.

E NEVER have such fun in our dignified courfs our dignified courts as the French people enjoy when a great trial is being held. We in Canada are very like our forbears in the matter of taking life seriously. In the States they are a little more Frenchy; witness the Carman affair, the Thaw joke and the Becker flasco. The wretched gunmen footed that bill—it was no comedy for them, nor may it be for Becker in the end The French, however—that vivid race—are almost artistic in their handling of the crime passionel. There was the seductive Madame Steinhel, prettier and younger than Madame Caillaux, who in the face of apparently overwhelming evidence got off, not only scot free, but with eclat. I think if I wanted to kill a man I would lure him to Paris and shoot him witha a toy pistol on the Boulevard des Capucines. With the help of a Maitre Labori and a 'maquillage" box, one might hope to evade justice. All criminal ladies defend themselves with the maquillage box. Even in the United States, lovely woman cries for her creams and powders. The other day a woman indicted for manslaughter sent from the prison for her maid and her "make-up," refusing to see even her counsel until she was made "presentable." The funny part was that she got these requirements of beauty, got them on the spot,

THE MISCHIEF MAKER :: By Michelson

HEN everything is all arranged for peace and quiet when SHE and all the surroundings that blend and beautify and somehow manage to match the art and charm of herself are just tranquilly right-THEN is the dangerous time for the entrance of a mischlovous one. For she MAY get to thinking that something is missing. It is just when everything is smooth and happy that restless thoughts creep in.

At this juncture the cleverest of all misci iefmakers gets busy. As subtly as the fragrant wind, as deviously as the hum of a flying insect, as adroitly as the trickle of a brook in the mossy hollows, he lets a thought DANGLE into her mind. Then she really begins to THINK about something of which there really is no sign near at hand. THIS is the way lots of romances begin. And you never can tell now they will come out. Neither can HE.

Opportunity Knocks Every Day &

HERE IS a certain verse that a certain man wrote concerning opportunity, which has ornamented thousands of postcards and mottoes and which used to send a kind of hopeless shiver up and down my back every time I read it," remarked a woman friend of mine, who has been phenomenally successful in business, to me. "I cannot remember it well enough to repeat it word for word, but it is something about opportunity knocking at the door or the gate (I don't recall which), but once, I used to believe in it, too, and went so far as te buy a motto, on which it appeared in nice gilt letters, and to hang it on my bedroom wall at one side of the dresser, for a year or two. I took it down, finally, because it was a false sentiment.

"I always rather liked it," I said in a lofty tone of disagreeing sweetness that one woman so frequently uses to another when someone or something dear to her is criticised. "It is so true. Once in a lifetime opportunity knocks for admittance, and if we do not open the door then," I grew very impressive, "it never knocks again."

ON'Y YOU believe that for one minute," retorted my friend, with a positive wag of her head to emphasize her words. That is what I used to think. But, not now. Opportunity isn't a once-in-a-life-time guest. It is a frequent visitor in the business office, but because too often our eyes are not sharp enough to pierce the cloak of invisibility in which it is usually wrapped, we don't recognize it, and let it pass by in silence." If orgot that my beloved "opportunity" motto had been branded as false sentiment and asked pertinently what she meant.

"I mean," she returned with con-vincing earnestness, "that business opportunities aren't half so rare as opportunities aren't hair so rare as are the persons who are really looking for them. Almost every girl has her own pet ambition when she enters the realm of business. If she is a stenographer, she turns wistful eyes toward a private secretaryship. If she is a salesgirl, perhaps she dreams of the day when she shall become buyer of her department; or if she is a bookkeeper she may have designs on an expert accountant's position. And following close at the heels of this ambition comes the desire for an opportunity to prove her worth to her employer.

will seize the first possible chance to advance herself, but before she has been in the office or the store a month, she grows coummy with another girl in her department who tells her she is foolish to work herself to death, and that she will never get an increase in salary if she stays there for a century

"And so she listens to her friend and takes things easy, and her mental eyes become so dull she fails to see the disappointed annoyed look in her employer's eyes at her growing lack of interest in his work, as she also failed to see the approval with which he regarded her earlier efforts to please him.

"And at the end of the year, the quiet little girl who works beside her and who has been with the firm not quite three months is the one chosen to replace the head woman of the department who is leaving the business world to marry. Of course, the girl who listened to her friend is heartbroken at being passed by for a comparative stranger. If she had been given the least possible showing she would have "made good." She can't understand how Mr. W— could be so blind. She does hate to see favoritism shown. If only she had had the opportunity! And then she babbles on of rank injustice and partiality, without realizing that her mental eyesight is at fault and that there are none so blind as those who won't see.

T IS BAD enough to allow opportunity to skip past one without making at least a feeble effort to grasp its fleeing coat tails, but it is worse when one doesn't see it at all."

"But how is one to recognize op-portunity if it goes about swathed in invisibility?" I asked a trifle sar-

"Be on the lookout for it, at all times," advised the business woman. "Then sooner or later you can't fail to recognize its outlines, and if you are determined that nothing shall keep you down, you won't be slow to reach out for it even the you aren't sure that you're clutching at a the real thing. You may meet with cases of mistaken identity, at first, and what seems like opportunity will prove to be just some little variation of the day's work, but your very fallures in this respect will teach you to be always on the watch for the thing itself, and sooner or later you will have your chance, and after that many chances, if you keep your eyes continually open. Opportunity is not like our aged and venerated 'early bird,' which one must get up in the morning to go find. One is likely to run across it at any moment of the day."

. . . Cause for Tears.

T a golden wedding in County Meath the other day an en-tertainment was given to the tenantry of the old couple. At the end of the proceedings the elderly host rose and made a fine and eloquent speech.

"Look at that, Pat," whispered a country woman, nudging her hus-band's elbow, "did ye see th' culd gintleman wid the tears in his eyes?"
"And why wouldn't he be cryin," answered Pat, "an' he married to the same woman for fifty years?"

But if I were to tell ever so little of the story I could not convey to you that spiritual fragrance which, after readying the book clings to you and lingers in your thoughts. YOUR GARDEN AND MINE PLANTS FOR THE SHADY PLACES

ARTICLE XXI.

HAVE had so many requests for lists of shady place plants and shrubs that I decided to devote an article to this important subject. Most gardens have some shady spot about the house, beside a fence or under trees. First of all, be it remembered that "shady" means partial shade. Only ferns will grow in dense shade.

dense shade. What is meant by partial shade what is meant by partial shade and what is the minimum amount of sunshine required? Two hours is the least and more is better. Then, too, only experience will teach what will best grow in some places.

There are some plants in the shady place list I am giving that can stand a greater amount of shade than others; there are some that love the shade of porch, wall or fence, yet will not grow under trees. A few do better under trees than elsewhere, and these above all must have good soil incorporated into the earth al-ready sustaining great tree roots and must have the lower branches of the trees sufficiently high to ad-mit several hours of sunlight.

Under Trees.
This is the most difficult of places, since the roots exhaust the soil minerals and are such greedy drinkers of moisture.

My own garden is filled with enormous trees which make the gardening problems very difficult. There is not one border or bed that has full sunshine all day long. So that I am continually battling with nature for bloom and color. There is never enough room for all the "sun-shine" plants I want and I often wonder whether the shady spots will ever be completely filled. Trees and shade cannot be sacrificed, nor dancing leaf shadows and cool retreats from the heat. But I pay a price! Sometimes I am tempted to cut into the sweep of the lawn—yet I cannot.

And so, you see, I have had to study well this question of shade and I find that many of the shady plants are not very attractive.
Shady soil gets sour and full of moss. Every spring spread lime over it to sweeten it, using 500 pounds to each acre. Bonemeal is an excellent

I find it impossible to raise from seed. It is planted under trees to protect it from early fall frosts, yet the branches must admit some sunlight. Anemones, too. need this protection of bushes or trees and yet want half a day's sun to do well. They are difficult to start, but most exquisite of flower and free of bloom once they are established. These white and pink wind-flowers dance in the breezes of early fall as charmin the breezes of early fall as charmingly as do the columbines of spring.

dog-woods, spireas, azaleas and the Indian currant and snowberry do very well indeed in partial shade. spading or forking—that is, not too close to the roots.

I was in a charming garden this spring, the owner of which is enthusiastically superintending the making of a new rose-garden. He has so many wonderful roses, sending to Ireland for choice varieties, that he keeps a catalogue system to index them. I sigh with envy whenever I think of that garden! There was one very shady side of his house and here, after many trials and failures, he had achieved success with the snowberry and Indian currant bushes.

THE HARDY native asters of Michaelmas daisies, grow in shade or sun. I have some blooming under trees, which I dug from a nearby field, where they were having full sunlight. They are tall and very beautiful with their masses of white, blue and lavender daisy-like flowers. I mean to hunt up some pink ones.

Then there is flax (linum), both blue and scarlet, blooming in June, blue gentian, the lovely trilliums or wood lilies, which cost $1.00 per dozen and should be planted early in September. There is bantonio, another aster-like flower, Clarkia (an annual), vincas musk and all the primrose and cowstip family. Plenty, to be sure, when one comes to write out a shady list.

Wild Geranium.

Wild Geranium.

Of course you all know that pansies, violas, violets, forget-menots and perennial popples prefer a partially shaded location and cool soil? But do you know the wild geranium family? It is very unlike its civilized cousin the bedding geranium, can be raised from seed or purchased in plants, and is really worth while. I have some under trees and it has very pretty delicate pink flowers in May. I mean to plant some of the deeper rose geranium sanguinium, because it blooms from June to September. It is a trailing kind, while the first I mentioned (masculatum), is erect. Wild Geranium. mentioned (masculatum), is erect. There is also a white variety.

The Soil.
Remember that the soil about the porch, the fence, the house walls, is apt to be the clayey subsoil turned up in the building of the house, and up in the building of the house, and do not forget to enrich it. Then you can grow lots of attractive things about the house and porch, "tying the house to the grounds."

If one really attends to the soil, sweetening it with lime, enriching with humus, bone meal or other fertilizers for most plants, and adding sand or ashes for those that really prefer it poor, the "shady" place isn't such a problem after all. Perhaps by next year, "your gar-Perhaps by next year, "your gar-den and mine" will have the shady spots as attractive as 'the ones. I am trying; are you?

SUNDAY MORNING

Many have followed the example of the practical and tored away the earlier Spring and Sum-

Often the canning season is much dreaded by housewives because they do not understand and realize the importsee of wholly sterilizing the fruit and etables they are putting up. There is in truth no reason why canning ilymaking and preserving season hould be held in such dread.

The whole secret of a successful, easy eason lies in the application of the efore-mentioned principle and in planning and managing. Working at ranalways occasions disadvantages. One of the best methods of management is to make a list of fruits, vegetables and preserves needed to carry the family through the Winter, exactly as if it were to be ordered from the

The matter of equipment is very simthat fits the bottom will be sufficient in the line of utensils to accomplish the lete sterilization of whatever is to he stored away.

The woman who has a great deal of canning to attend to will find a zinc tank much better than the wash boiler. This tank should measure two feet in length, one foot in width and one foot in height, to hold eighteen quart or pint fars. Any tinner will make one for a all sum of money. A wooden rack of laths nailed together in crosswise strips must be provided for the bottom of the tank to prevent the breaking of the glasses.

THE greatest convenience of all, however, is a patented canner and sterilizer, which ranges in cost from three to twelve dollars, depending on the style, size and quality of the ma-

The lower part of the canner consists of a copper tank for the purpose of holding water. Openings in the top of the tank allow the steam generated by the water to escape into inverted copper cylinders. By sterilization beans, corn, lima beans, asparagus, tomatoes and all kinds of fruit can be canned simply by the addition of boiling water.

The Department of Agriculture in Washington has issued a pamphlet warning housekeepers against the use of preservatives and powders containing salicylic and boric acids. Many recipes call for these preservatives, but their use may be attended with very serious effects upon the health and may lead to a disturbance of the digestion

Some Hints About Rubbers. BEFORE beginning see that all jar caps, rubbers and jars are heated roughly if the canner is not used. If the rubbers are old they should be dipped into melted paraffine. This insures an airtight far. Always soak the rubbers in warm water before using.

When purchasing rubbers take care to see that they are of moderate thickness and not too hard. An adjustable jar holder prevents burned fingers, when hot jars are to be filled. Leather-lined holders, with den handles that can be adjusted to fit any size jar, are very convenient indeed. They can also be used for sealing and removing lids and cost but a quarter.

Additional Equipment. In addition to the canner and jar lifter, every housewife needs at this of the year a measuring cup, several large wooden spoons, a funnel, a pair of scales and a dipper. If there are many jellies and fruit juices to put up, a fruit press is practically a necessity. There are several good ones on the market.

Many women would otherwise make home-made jelly but for the dislike of straining it or because it stains the hands. However, there is a little wire jelly bag support on the market, which will fit any container and costs just thirty-five cents. It contains a circular, seamless gauze bag, through which the liquid fruit juice can be easily strained thout being touched by the hands. Another wire strainer fitted with two pan supports and a handle, will be found superior to the colander and oldtime jelly bag. A round rubber masher accompanies it. These strainers are of service not alone in jelly making time, but during the whole year. They can be used for straining soups, beef tea,

If there is no material on hand to label the side of the glasses, a strip of paper containing the name of the variety may be placed in the paraffine before it has had time to harden.

JELLY-MAKING TIME

N no department of preserving is there so great an element of chance and danger as in the proof jelly-making. One can never be sure of perfect results unless great care

Perfectly sound and unripe fruits always give better results than ripe fruit. Pectose, a carbohydrate, is a substance found in all unripe fruit; in ripe fruit it changes to pectin. Its properties are very similar to those of starch, and

Pear jelly is not a common delicacy. In fact, because it is so hard to secure good results many housewives raise their eyebrows at the mere mention of the name; others firmly believe that it cannot be made. The next time a windfall knocks the fruit from your pear tree don't feel that you have sustained a dead loss, but try making pear jelly. The recipe is the same as the recipe for apple jelly. Equal parts of sugar and

If the fire is hot the crock should be placed in warm water. Twenty-four hours is the required time to let it stand before eezing it through the jelly bag.

If one cooks with gas the peaches may be placed in a vessel of boiling water which has been set over the simmering burner during the time required. The juice is then free and thick. apple jelly is the old standby of nearly every household. It is, of course, necessary to pare the fruit; in many housewives make jelly from apple skins. Only sufficient water to cover the fruit need be poured over it and the juice should be cooked down and well skimmed before the sugar is added. After it has been allowed to simmer un til the sugar has dissolved it will quire about twenty minutes to id be tested in a saucer, though, at the end of fifteen minutes. Overcooked juice will not jell well. Lemon and or fuice, rose geranium leaves and mint leaves or preserved orange blossoms may be used as flavoring. Crab apples make a tart jelly. Maidens blush apples may be measured half and half with crab apples or huckleberry, raspberry, cherry or pine apple juice may be used. An old-fast loned method of adding two sticks of cinnamon, an ounce of ginger to every pint of juice produces a delicious jelly. Green grapes require the full measure of sugar, but the ripe grape is often so sweet that less sugar is required. Apples and grapes, green grapes alone ripe grapes alone or a combination of the ripe and unripe fruit, or grapes and elderberries, are delicious in combination jellies. Elderberries may be used alone spiced or flavored with lemon

However, it should be remembered that spices have a tendency to darken the fruit. When used they should be tied in a cheesecloth bag. When jelly will not jell housekeepe add a pinch of alum. Mother Nature has gifted the citron melon with a large amount of pectin. When jelly will not jell the introduction of the fruit measured half and half with the fruit juice will hasten the process. Jelly should never be made on a damp or rainy day. A dry, sunny day should chosen if possible. Like candy, jelly is very much dependent on the weather for successful production. After a little experimenting the housewife will learn all the whys and wherefores of jellymaking, thus being enabled to eliminate

In the warm days it is hard to keep the butter attractive. There is a simple compact little cutter on the market that serves well for cutting butter into neat, clean individual serving pieces. It can be quickly operated for with two strikes in two seconds of time a standard one-pound brick of butter can be divided into from twenty-four to twenty eight pieces, leaving no waste at all.

The base of this cutter is white enamel. The cutting is performed by the best silvered steel plano wires. There is nothing to rust, tarnish or break, while the whole thing is guaranteed to last. A unique little butter curler can be purchased for a small sum. The curl can be quickly dropped into ice water where it will be delightful hardened and fresh looking when served on the fashioned butter pats of wood that are small enough to make individual servings. Balls or dainty and attractive little molds can be made with these. There is a butter pan on the market that enables one to make butter without churning. This pan consists of an absorbent cloth a separating pad and a butter pan. The separating pad and the absorbent cloth must be in close contact to each other and held securely in place by the clips upon the sides of the pan. One quart of heavy cream is poured in the assembled pan. It must remain there not more than twelve hours nor less than twelve. Cream from the separator must stand ten hours before being placed in the pan, The product must then be rolled from the separating pad into a wooden bowl, worked dry or until the buttermilk is dislodged, then when the buttermilk has all been washed out it is washed and salted if desired.

Forty per cent, fat cream will make six ounces of butter. If there is a greater per cent, of fat in the cream the butter return will be greater.

Glass Dining Services The glass dining service is a fad that gradually is gaining ground among new housekeepers who cannot afford solid silver and who will not afford the plated sort. Where candles are used for lighting the route of the fork between plate and mouth, pairs of candles or a single candelabra in heavy preglass, with crystal-fringed shades are employed. The light from these candle standards falls softly upon holders for condiments—what some foreigners naively term "little American helps" for flavoring food-upon celery, olive, posed of plates or saucers and dishes) for cold courses and finally upon finger bowls and plates all in clearest pressed glass for after dinner coffee, and small forks for picking up confections. Of course crystal is more easily cleaned than silver and some housekeepers consider it more sanitary. On the other hand, glass is easily broken even by the most careful of dishwashers.

Here, Alan had teared, was the crucial point of danger: if the influence of the Trey of Hearts was to bring disaster upon them it would be here, in the hush and darkness of this deserted waterfront. And he bore himself most warrly as he helped the girl from the car and to the gangplank of the Seaventure. But nothing happened; while Mr. Barcus was as good as his word. Alan had barely set foot on deck, foilowing the girl, when the gangplank came aboard with a clatter, and the Seaventure swung away from the wharf.

Until the distance was too great for even a flying leap, Alan lingered watchfully on deck.

"Judith!" he cried in a voice of stupefaction. "But good Lord!—how did you get aboard? Where's ose?"

Without a word, Judith stepped to the rail and as carcus luffed, swung herself overside into the dory. Immediately Alan cast off, and as the little boat heered off, Barcus, with a sigh of relief, brought the leaventure once more back upon her course. For some few minutes there was silence between the two men, while the tender dropped swiftly asters, the woman plying a brisk pair of oars. "Rose!" he cried stupidly. "Rose! What's the mat-woman plying a brisk pair of oars.

Then suddenly elevating his nose, Barous snifed audibly. "Here," he said sharply, 'relieve me for a minute, will you? I want to go forward and have a look at the motor."

In the time that he remained invisible betweendecks, the fisherman luffed, picked up the dory and its occupant, and came round again in open chase of the Seaventure.

When Barcus reappeared it was with a grave face. "The devil and the deep She," he observed obscurely, coming aft, "from all their works, good Lord deliver us!"

"Then it would save us some trouble—yourself in-ded—if you'll be good enough to step into the dory hout a struggle."

"What's the trouble now?"

"Nothing much—only your playful little friend has been up to another of her light-hearted tricks.

breaking a long silence. "Very interesting, indeed, I've seldom listened to a more entertaining life-history, my poor young friend. But I tell you candidly, as man to man, I don't believe one word of it. It's all damn' foolishness!"

His voice took on a plaintive accent. "Particularly: this!" he expostulated, and waved an indignant hand, compassing their plight.

"The rest of your adventures are reasonable enough," he said; "they won my credulity—and I'm a native son of Missouri. But this last chapter is impossible. And that's flat. It couldn't happen—and has. And there in a manner of speaking, we are!"

Against the western horizon a long, low-lying strip of sand dunes rested like a bar of purple cloud between the crimson afterglow of sunset in the sky and the ensanguined sea that mirrored it.

The windo had gone down with the sun, leaving the Seaventure becalmed—her motor long since inert for want of fuel—in shoal water a mile or so off the desolate and barren coast that Barcus, out of his abounding knowledge of those waters, named Nauset Beach.

Still another mile farther off-shore, the so-called

Still another mile farther off-shore, the so-called Gloucester fisherman rode, without motion, waters as still and glassy. A little later a faint humming noise drifted across the "Power tender," the owner of the Seaventure in-terpreted. "Coming to calle I presume. Sociable lot. What I can't make out is why they seem to think it necessary to tow our dory back. Uneasy conscience, maybe—what?"

Stationing himself at the seaward rail, where his figure would show in sharp silhouette against the glowing sunset sky, he brandished the shotsun at arm's length above his head, and bellowed stentor-ously thru the megaphone:

"Keep off! Keep off! This means you! Come within gunshot and I'll blow your fool heads off!"

Putting aside the megaphone, he sat down again. "Not that I'd dare fire this blunderbuss," he confided, "with this reek of gasolene; but just for moral effect. Phew-w! I'd give a dollar for a breath of clean air. I've inhaled so much gas in the last few hours, I'm dry-cleaned down to my silly old toes!"

last few hours, I'm dry-cleaned down to my silly old toes!"

Gaining no response from Alan, he observed critically: "Chatty little customer you are;" and resumed the binoculars.

For thirty minutes nothing happened, other than that the sound of the fisherman's launch was stilled. It rested moveless in the waters, two figures mysteriously busy in its cockpit, the Seaventure's dory trailing behind it on a long painter.

Gradually these details became blurred, and were blotted out by the closing shadows. The afterglow in the west grew cool and faint. The crimson waters darkened, to mauve, to violet, to a translucent green, to blackness. Far up the coast two white eyes, peering over the horizon, stared steadfastly thru the dark. "Chatham lights," Barcus said they were.

Abruptly he dropped the glasses and jumped up. "Hear that!" he cried.

Now the humming of the motor was again audible and growing louder with every instant; and Alan, getting to his feet in turn, infected with the excitement of Barcus, could just make out at some distance a dark shadow beneath a dim, spluttering glimmer of light, that moved swiftly and steadily toward the Seaventure.

"What the devil!" he demanded, puzzled. and a simultaneous cry from over the stern roused Alan from his consternation to fresh appreciation of the emergency. With scant consideration he hustled all in a breath-then sprang to the taffrail, just in time to lend a helping hand sorely wanted by Mr.

"What the devil!" he demanded, puzzled.

"You uttered a mouthful when you said 'devil'!"
Barcus commented, grasping his arm and hurrying him to the landward side of the vessel. "Quick—kick off your shoes—get set for a mile-long swim! Devil's work, all right!" he panted, hastly divesting himself of shoes and outer garments. "I couldn't make out what they were up to till I saw them lash the wheel, light the fuse, start the motor, and take to the dory. They've made one grand litle torpedo-boat out of that tender—"
He sprang upon the rail, steadying himself with a stay. "Ready?" he asked. "Look sharp!"
By way of answer, Alan joined him; the two had dived as one, entering the water with a single splash, and coming to the surface a good ten yards from the Seaventure. For the next several seconds they were swimming frantically, and not until three hundred feet or more separated them from the schooner did etiher dare pause for breath or a backward glance.

schooner did etiher dare pause for breath of a backward glance.

Then the impact of the launch against the Seaventure's side rang out across the waters, and with a husky roar the launch blew up, spewing skywards a widespread fan of fiame. Over the Seaventure, as this flamed and died, pale fire seemed to hover like a tremendous pall of phosphorescence, a weird and ghastly glare that suddenly descended to the decks. There followed a crackling noise, a sound as of labored breathing of a giant; and bright flames, orange, crimson, violet and gold, licked out all over the schooner, from stem to stern, from deck to topmasts.

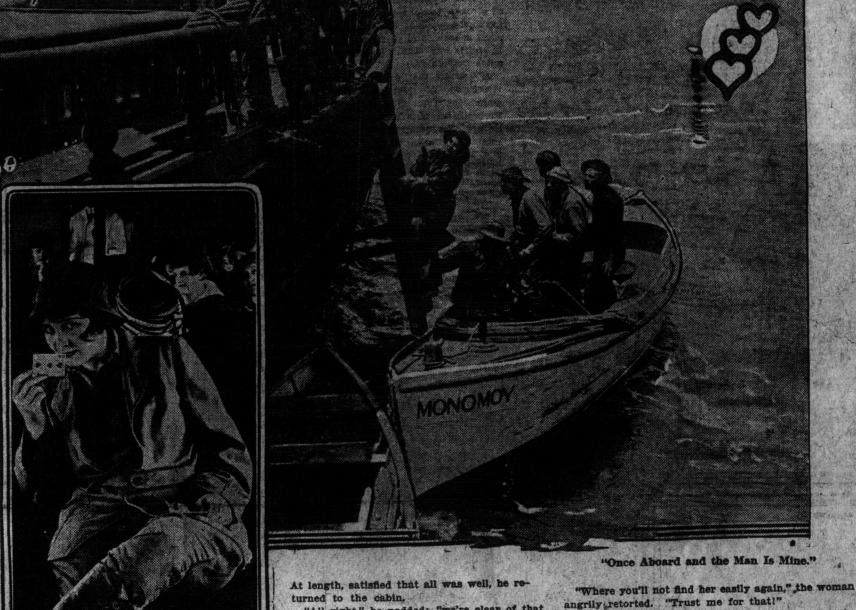

It seemed several minutes that she burned in its wise—it was probably not so long—before her ecks blew up and the flames swept roaring to the sky.

By the time that Alan and Barcus, swimming steadily, had gained a shoal which permitted them footing in waist-deep waters, the Seaventure had burned to the water's edge.

By midnight the Seaventure was spinning swiftly south-southeast, close reefed to a snoring sou-west wind—the fixed white eye of Portland head light fast falling astern.

IV.-DOWN THE CAPE

T FOUR o'clock, or shortly after, Alan was awakened by boot-heels pounding imperatively overhead, and went on deck again, to stand dog-watches—saw the sun lift up smiling over a world of tumbled blue water, crossed the wake of a Cunard liner inbound for Boston, raised and overhauled a graceful, but business-like fisherman (from Gloucester, Barcus opined when called to stand his trick at eight) and saw it a mile or two astern when -still aching with fatigue—he was free to return to his berth for another four-hour rest.

He took Alan's place, watching him with a sardonic eye as he drew the tender in under the leeward quarter, made it fast and reopened the companionway. This year the number under Miss Ockley and her assist-ants has increased to forty-three, and every student would like to come back next year. 10 HELP THEIR PUPILS

BY IRENE B. WRENSHALL

THE summer resorts may be full to overflowing with tired city dwellers, every train may carry away numbers of seekers after cool breezes, and restful shore, but in the heart of the city there is still a spot where, out of choice, holidays are spent in practical workwhere the gas stove and the kitchen equipment have more of an attraction than the canoe and river, and also where the whole of each day is spent in the strenuous work of Swedish gymnastics, folk dances and fencing, interspersed by dips into the swimming baths, and a practice at the useful art of swimming.

There must be something in teaching that makes one more of an adept at learning, for certainly it would be hard to find a more enthusiastic lot of students than the 120 or so Ontario women teashers that are congregated in the Lilian Massey Building just now, taking the special summer courses which the department of education has provided in connection with the University of Toronto, forty-three taking the special domestic science course, and about eighty in all studying the physical training,-the former coming principally from the fural schools and the latter from both towns and cities in Ontario, and both classes working their utmost, with the intention of passing on the knowledge gained to the pupils under them, for their minds are bent-in this holiday time-on the future training of their stu-

If you are passing by the big Lilian Massey Building, on the corner of Bloor street, any of these mornings about 8 o'clock you will notice groups of bright-faced girls entering the wide doors, and if you are going the same way at about six o'clock in the evening you will still meet groups laughing and chatting over their work, which is only just over for the day. If you have curiosity to see what attracts these girls away from the summer resorts, from the river and the shore and go inside the big building you will hear a murmur of voices from the end of the long corridor and following the sound you will come upon a number of uniformed girls-uniformed, that is, in the garb of the gymnasium, and with the alert, quick walk of muscles which are being rapidly trained. It is the class of the more advanced students . who have just come down from the tenoing lesson, and are on their way to the dressing rooms for the dip in the swimming bath to the left, "One, two, measure to the right," from the big gymnasium on the right, where, guided by an instructress, about forty girls are swinging clubs with military precision.

It is a pretty sight and for a minute you'll forget all the practical significance, of these gymnastic classes, of their effect upon the children growing up in the schools in the abandon with which the girls throw themselves into the swinging of clubs and dumbells.

"Clubs away," calls out the instructress after a little while, "and we'll have a game of 'volley ball,' " and in a minute every club is in its place in the racks on the wall-a net is being pulled into place and a dozen girls are flying in all directions for the ball, to help with the net, and to swing the traveling rings up by the pulleys to the ceiling-out of the way, all with as much energy as if there were not such things in the world as heat and getting tired.

They all seem to be so thoroughly at play that it is hard to realize that it is serious study, that the they are enpoying every minute of it there is an object ahead, and examinations to be passed so that these teachers may add to their proficiency the ability to teach physical training when they are granted their elementary, supervisors' or specialists' certificates, as their first or second year's work entitles them. They will teach all the various kinds of gymnastics, will superintend energetic indoor games, and will be the incentive to their pupils to healthy exercise and wholesome recreation.

How Day Is Divided.

The day, which begins for them at nine o'clock and ends at half past five, is divided up quite systematic ally. From 9 to 10, Swedish gymnastles for both classes, From 10 to 11, military marching, wands and dumbells for the first year students, and folk dancing for the second year's, while from 11 to 12, is folk dancing for the first year's and military exercises for the second, Fencing and heavy apparatus for the senier students is from 2;30 to 3;30, and then to clubs for half an hour before the games, Lectures have also, up to the past week, been given by Dr. Barton, the superintendent, for two hours each afternoon, one hour to each class, with marching tactics at the same time for the other students, Miss Coventry has as her assistant Miss Courtice, who teaches the heavy apparatus the herse, travels ling rings, etc., while she instructs in all the military work, games and fencing. Miss Cote and Miss Herron are in charge of the Swedish gymnastics, while Miss Doran teaches the aesthetic dancing.

There are teachers from all parts and all schools included among the classes, a number of high school teachers, several kindergarten supervisors and directors, and one teacher from the Indian reserve at Raua, quite a few are working for the Strathcona certificate, offered by the militia department, which carries with it a bonus of $15. In view of the fact that physical training is now being made compulsory in the schools it is interesting to note how enthusiastically the course is being taken up by the teachers.

The Cooking Classes.

But fascinating as the physical exercises are they do not altogether engross the teachers of Ontario who are on vacation here in Toronto. Forty-three of them are busily engaged on the third floor of the building, spending the five weeks' course in learning cooking, the management of a home, and sewing, in order that household science may be introduced! into the rural schools, for that is where the majority of them teach. A few outsiders, who are allowed to come in on a payment of $10, are also included in the first-year class, which is very large this year, besides a great many taking up their second year's course of five weeks to gain special certificates. The several food laborar reles with their perfection of system with a special desk equipment for each sindent, more like a small kitchen call inet than anything else, but with the addition of a small gas steve and a tiny sink, are busy places from eight o'clock in the merning, when the classes open, until one o'clock, when the work is over for the day, Frem 8 to 9 a lecture is given on foeds, from 9 to 11 is practical work for the first-year students, taking up the eacking of simple feeds, and for the second year learning to prepare simple meals from staple feeds ed, for everything had to be left in perfect order in both the kitchen and the scullery off it, before the a word was spoken, each girl in turn arose and opened up her kitchen cabinet, taking from it the utensils and the food necessary to the making of her "dish." For one it was to be sago, to another cocoa, to still another tomato soup, for no two recipes were alike. two recipes were alike.

Silently each white-aproned girl eighed and measured, turned on the gas, cooked and stirred. Military precision was necessary, for with the individual proportion, the measurement must be exactly right and no "guessing" One of the girls was cooking vegetables and just before placing on the lid of the shin-ing "steamer" she carefully pulled on its cotton cover. Each small portion being at last cooked, seasoned, tested and lifted off by the little holders which hung at each waist, while the teacher took notes of how it was done, the next class should go on to their house-hold management lesson. There was no useless accumulation of dishes either, for when the losson must be passed on where the only equipment possible just at passent in the passed on where the only equipment possible just at present in the rural schools is a tin cover and a plated spoon borrowed from home, the utensils for the demonstration must necessarily be few and simple.

Learn to Make Luncheons for Pupils.

It is already beginning to solve the problem of nour shing food for lunch for the children living a distance from school, the teachers will tell you, for it is great fun for the children, and good practice too, as well as providing a hot and nourishing drink; to teach them to make cocoa, for instance, which can be accomplished on the paorest and most out of date box steve—aside from anything better.

On regular days, outside of the cooking test morning, each recipe is put on the board and thoroly explained, before the teacher proceeds to demonstrate how it is made. Only the very simplest and most elemental the very simplest and most elemental dishes are attempted—for the time is very short, only five weeks each summer for two years, making up the course and it is the foundation which must be laid in that time. In the second five weeks which completes the course the second

The work of the Toronto Hunt polo team this year has been exceptionally good, when it is taken into consideration that the team has taken into consideration that the team has practically had to secure a complete new set of ponies after last season's disastrous Montreal trip. Much time and pain taken to train the new ponies, combined with steady practice, has made the Toronto team a formidable four. The picture shows Major Bickford making a back stroke in the

New Open Golf Champion

Karl Keffer, the Canadian open golf champion for 1914, is the professional at the Royal Ottawa Golf Club, and he captured the title for the second time Friday. Thirty-two years ago Karl was born in the vihage of Tottenham, Ont., but his family removed to Toronto before he was five years of age, to a house adjacent to the old Toronto golf course, and it was on these links he first learned the game. In 1907, after having duly served his initiation series as a caddy and gradually mastering the rudiments and masonic conditions surrounding the game, he entered the shop of George Cumming to learn the art of club making eye. For two years he practised and then he entered his first open tournament in 1909. His debut was a great success, as he captured the title on his first appearance. The following year he went to the Albany Golf Club. He won the open tournament at the Mississauga Golf Club

Ottawa Club. In 1911 and 1913 he won the open tourney at Caledonia Springs and since then he has been threatening the leaders on nearly every occasion. Every winter Keffer goes down to Jekyll Island in the Gulf of Georgia, where he teaches and plays, returning to Ottawa in the spring. For years Karl was a great athlete. Hockey and baseball were his favorite sports and he was no mean artist at either one, as some of the old Norway and Balmy Beach boys can testify. Last year he was married, and now he has something big in view, as he left Saturday for Chicago, where he will play in the National open golf championship.

AUSTRALIA STAGES A BOUT FOR MIDDLEWEIGHTHONORS WEEKLY

In the meeting of the men previous to last week's match Johnson knocked learnette out plant with a nunch in By James J. Corbett.

(Former Heavyweight Champion of the World.)

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—(Special to the Sunday World).—We have always considered ourselves rather speedy and insto-date in sporting as well as other In the meeting of the men previous to last week's match Johnson knocked just to last week's match Johnson knocked just just a purch in the pit of the stomach. However, as fare-you-well. Here we haven't recognized a middleweight boxer as champion since the demise of Stanley Ketchel. In Australia it is quite different. There the title changes hands with every scrap the middleweights indulge in. Several months ago Eddie McGoorty copped the prize by beating Dave Smith, Australia's representative. Then he clinched the honors by getting a decision over Jeff Smith, of New Jersey. Along comes Jimmy Clabby who loses to Jeff but gets on top again by winning from McGoorty via the foul route. Now Jimmy has just "made it good" by defeating Dave Smith in less than a round.

If the sports of any other country can Deat that stuff, or even tie it, I am willing to put it with them. It is certainly going some. Every fight a championship match, and a title to the looking game to least week's match Johnson knocked Jeannette out clean with a punch in the pit of the stomach. If the sports of any other country can beat that stuff, or even tie it, I am willing to put it with them. It is certainly going some. Every fight a championship match, and a title to the winker guaranteed. Not only have they given Clabby the middleweight title, but they also regard him as heavyweight champion, according to recent cables. In the latter connection where do they figure big Sam McVey, who has been making his headquartiers in Australia for several years past, and who has beaten all the heavies who have faced him barring Sam Langford?

But besides their rapidity in shifting the ownership of championship titles. Australia can do other things well in the sport line. Take for example the splendid achievement of "Bhowy" Baker, the leading boxing promoter, who has succeeded in persuading the educational authorities of Australia to establish boxing as a course in the public schools through the country. Mr. Baker will personally interest himself in the inauguration of the classes of instruction by taking charge of the pupils of the Melbourne High School.

From all accounts sporting men of Australia are the real cort. Leading men in all lines go in for sports of every description, and boxing is one of the most popular of all—as it should be everywhere, and will be when its great benefits to humanity are recognized. My plans for next spring call for a trip to the Antipodes, and I certainly the close to here the next private of the most popular of all—as it should be everywhere, and will be when its great benefits to humanity are recognized. My plans for next spring call for a trip to the Antipodes, and I certainly the color of the proposed for the proposed fo benefits to humanity are recognized.

My plans for next spring cail for a trip to the Antipodes, and I certainly will be glad to have the privilege of visiting a country where boxing is not looked upon as a degrading spectacle, and its exponents as a parcel of thugs and highbinders.

When Ritchie was lightweight champion of the world he didn't pick easy marks. Every man he has met since winning the title is a first-class performer, namely Rivers, Cross, Wolgast, White and Welsh. Not a "sucker" in that bunch. Will Freddy Welsh follow in the footsteps of his predecessor? Evidently Manager Harry Pollock has other plans in view for the champion, or rather had until the war and the didn't pick is still there.

Gibbons has the skill and the punch that makes champions. But there is considerable doubt about his courage.

Joe Jeannette and Battling Jim Johnson had another ten-round session at a local club last week. On this occasion they didn't put the ginger into their efforts that characterized previous battles. This is the third or fourth time the men have met in the last few months, and it may be that acquaintance with one another's methods is responsible for the poor showing of the fighters. When one boxer knows his opponent's style, particularly while war is no joke as General in the union to legalize twenty-gined they would make, but instead how are they going to get back home to the land of the free, etc.

Georges Carpentier has already joined the French army, so we are advised. Georges, without doubting his patriotism and all that, probably had no choice in the matter. That's a little way those European countries have—of not leaving such matters to the discretion of their citizens.

It is an ill wind that blows no good, and, while war is no joke as General boxer knows his opponent's style, par-ticularly if he is more scientific and brainler, and has a wholesome respect for the other fellow's punches, he can evade most of the dangerous wallops, and, naturally, in that way confines himself principally to defence.

I say that might have been the cause of the dull and uninteresting contest, but the probability is that the men didn't try very hard. Jeannette and Johnson find it almost impossible to secure matches. The boxing com-mission will not allow whites and blacks to meet, so conditions force fellows like Jeannette to save an op-ponent as much as possible for future use. They have to live just the same it must be admitted that the rule in vogue here in New York State is kind of hard on the colored fighters. For several years the only match Jeannette could get in this neighborhood was with Langford. They put up several corking battles, but their last effort as the white boxers, and while not condoning the offence, if there be one, it must be admitted that the rule in

Read this cablegram from Danny McKettrick, now in England, to Danny Morgan in New York: "Don't send 'Knock Out' Brown here. Other American fighters can't get away."

The scheme was to have "Knock Out" Brown go to England, advertise him as one of America's leading lightweights, and then have him box Welsh for the title (?) and the big mazuma.

British Heavyweight Finds Ancient Game Valuable in His Training.

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—Bombardier Wells, the British heavyweight boxer, like "Willie" Ritchie, of America, has taken up the royal and ancient game of golf and says he finds it invaluable in his training. By W. A. Colline. NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—Where will the sixth olympiad be staged in case Germany hasn't recovered from the present scrap by the summer of 1916? American athletes have been asking this question ever since Kaiser Wilhelm, always a great admirer of the cinderpath sport, affixed his John Hancock to a set of articles calling for combat.

Several A. A. U. officials agree in saying that the next big international meeting would have to be transferred to some other country. They contend that if the fight on the continent lasts a couple of months—some declare it will last a year—they can't figure how the German Olympic committee can shape things up in six months or less—begin where they left off in the forming of a good track team and prepare to receive athletes from various parts of the world.

"Talk that the Berlin meet may be transferred to the United States is tomfoolery. Nothing in it. Why, in the first place, where could we put them on in this country? There are lots of nice places, but there isn't a stadium like those on the other side, that could accommodate the people, and at the same time provide a track the equal of that in Stockholm, Sweden, or the great one just erected at Berlin. If we had a stadium it might be different."

the German Olympic committee can shape things up in six months or less—begin where they left off in the forming of a good track team and prepare to receive athletes from various parts of the world.

"Berlin won't be able to hold the games," said one of these men. "The international committee may nave to transfer the sixth revival of the famous Greek games to either Greece or Switzerland. The first named place, as you know, owns a beautiful stadium, and as that country is thru with warfare for the time being, I presume Commissioner James E. Sullivan was deeply engrossed in the war bulletins.

"Looks bad for our little trip to Germany two years hence," he began, "but I still believe the Berlin olympics will be staged as scheduled, reports to the contrary notwithstandium,"

"I realize that many athletes of German and some other European countries may be on the firing line right now, but they will have plenty of talent by 1916 to give Uncle Sam a good fight for the big honors."

NATIONAL, AMERICAN LEAGUES COLLECT FUND TO WAR WITH FEDS.

Said That Each of Fifteen Clubs Is Handing Over Five Per Cent. of Gross Receipts to Wage Battle.

By W. A. Colline.

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—I learn from an authoritative source that the National and American leagues are quietly collecting a huge war fund which will be at the disposal of the National Commission, already clothed with absolute authority to handle the fifth with the Federal League in its own way. Each of the sixteen major league clubs is handing over five per cent. of the gross receipts of each game. The plans went into effect on April 14, the date of the opening of the championship season, and the plan was secretly adopted at the suggestion of the commission early in March. Each club is scheduled to play seventy-seven games at home, which means a total tide of the commission early in March. Each club is scheduled to play seventy-seven games at home, which means a total tide of the commission early in March. Each subjected to the five per cent. tax when the schedules end on Oct. 7. At rough estimate places the total amount of the new war fund at $850,000, of which the Glants, Red Sox, White Sox, Pitsburg, Detroits and Cincinnati Red are expected to pay the lion's share. The Yankees will also contribute generously inasmuch as they have drawn larger crowds this year than ever. The Athletics, as an example, were paid for 39,850 admissions on May 29 and 30 and 1 the Pola (Rounds 1). BAY STREET STORE Conveniently situated at 95 Bay street, "just below the National Club." He expressed the hope that international billiards would be standardized and made more be well equipped for the future, in spite of the general belief that the Federals have already run their race. It is not known how the commission will spend this money, but it is surmised that some of it will be used to defray legal expenses to be incurred by pressing injunctions and damage suits against the Federals.

Since 1905 the commission has been accumulating another big fund in the shape of 10 per cent. of the world's series receipts. In this way $189,000 has been collected, out of which the expenses of the commission have been paid, leaving a balance of about $100,000, which will be added to the new war fund. It can be readily seen, therefore, that organized baseball intends to be well equipped for the future, in spite of the general belief that the

He was on the green within three yards of the hole with a drive and an iron shot, and at the second, which is 386 yards, he placed his second, an iron shot, within five yards of the hole, and had very hard luck in not holing for a 3. It was at the third hole that he found himself at a great disadvantage, as he had to play a forcing shot over some railings, and in his ing shot over some railings, and in his effort to get the ball up with one hand he cut it away into the sand hills, leaving himself an awkward pitch on to the green which he failed to reach.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Young Ahearn is the sensation of Europe. He has been unable to find a Frenchman that will meet him. Here in England he is idolized, and called by a united press England's hope.

When Young Ahearn is the door of Klaus could hand out.

Naturally one asks the question:

he is idelized, and called by a united press England's hope.

When Young Ahearn stopped Private Braddock, at the National Sporting Club, and then knocked out Sid Burgs in two rounds, the English public came to a full realization that the remarkable record this youngster has made in France was not a fluke one. Pat O'Keefe, holder of the Lord one. Pat O'Keefe, holder of the Lord Lonsdale belt agreed to meet Ahearn, but has now demanded the six months time wihch is allowed under the championship rules. They will meet in October, provided Ahearn can do the middleweight limit then, which is doubtful, as he is daily growing into a white hope.

That Ahearn is held in high esteem is evidenced from the following extracts from the press: Sportsman—In Ahearn we certainly Selling Seaton and Dolan possess a middleweight in the world's championship class. He is as fine a combination of the clever boxer and the fighter as Carpentier himself. sibility. By Sirius—Oh, what a surprise! Private Braddock actually knocked out! Personally, I had an idea that Braddock down and out. Ahearn is about the hottest all-around boxer least ten games in seventy.

Now it is a burning question as to English boxer capable of even extending Carpentier. One need not go into rhapsodies over Ahearn's showing, because sentiment also warps one's judgment, but to me the concrete fact remains that Ahearn is just the type of boxer to defeat Surely, if Billy Papke and Frank FOR U.S. TOURNEY
