Barristers Believe Substitution of Life Term Would Increase Crime.

WARNING TO OTHERS

Sir Adam Beck Points to the Number of Murders in Michigan.

While London cle gymen are vir-tually as one in advocating the aboli-tion of capital punishment, local barristers, for the most part, believe the substitution of life imprisonment for the death penalty would increas crime.

Some ministers stated they had not as yet come to a definite opinion not as yet come to a definite opinion regarding the meritse, or demerits of the system, but those who had studied the question in all its aspects were emphatically against it.

Rev. W. R. McIntosh of the King Street Presbyterian Church believes murderers should be "given another". street Pressyterian Church believes murderers should be "given another chance. "There is no indication that life imprisonment for murderers tends to increase homicide, he said. radually force must be supplanted

Instead of hanging a man, I think it would be much more effective if the state attempted to build up his character and make a useful citizen of him. The taking of life is not the fault of the murderer so much as it is the fault of society. Crime de-pends on heredity and environment. Our social state is responsible to: pends on heredity and environment. MAKE THE FORESTS SUPPORT THE SCHOOLS.

Utilizing the wast land throughout the country by planting forests, is the suggestion of Dean Franklin Moon of the New York State College of Forestry, who sees in the community forests a means of support for the rural schools. European countries, after years of trial, have found the town forest a profitable investment, and in some cases the revenue from the forests is sufficient to do away with taxes. Virtually every province has acres of land going to waste, and as acres of land going to waste, and it is estimated that a tract of 120 acres planted in white pine trees would in a few years support a school that requires $1,200 a year to main-

You pay for a Frost Fence whether you have it or not?

YOU pay for a Frost Fence whether you have it on your farm or not. In fact you pay more for it if you don't have it than if you do.

If you don't have it you pay for it in wasted land, in lost time used in repairing broken-down fences-you pay for it in damaged crops by stock breaking through tumbledown makeshifts; you pay for it in weed-breeding corners that foul your land; you pay for it in the appearance and actual value of your farm.

When you replace your old rail or stump fence with a Frost Fence, you will probably save the cost of the Frost Fence in fuel alone.

Prost Fences cost no more than ordinary fences, but they are better than any fence you can buy-the Tight Lock; the No. 9 thoroughlygalvanized, tempered and annealed wire; the wave spring in the wire that keeps it always stretched and straight; the rigid uprights supporting the strands; the strength, durability, long life and fine appearance of Frost Fences-all these points have decided thousands of farmers in favor of Frost Fences. If you investigate and figure out the facts, you too, will decide to fence your farm with Frost Fence.

Many Novelties With Comedy and Music Are Prom-

Much in the way of novelty with generous share of comedy and instrumental music promises to develor during the action of Joe Hurtig's "Hollywood Follies," next Monday's attraction at the Grand Opera House. Marty Collins and Jack Pillard are the stars of the show, and they will again offer their most unique and entertaining oddities which last season proved the decided hit of "Let's Go." These two funny fellows work not only on the stage but from the audience and even to the front door of the theatre. Collins is the comedian who plays a dumb-bell character, while Pillard is the straight man, who also enlivens his work of feeder for Collins with some very graceful and nimble dancing. Collins is said to be able to play every musical instrument that was ever invented, and he is known on the stage as "the

Which of His Three Divorced Wives Shall He Re-marry?-Shall She Break Her Engagement With a Man Who Is Quarrelsome and Moody-How Can a Pretty Girl Prevent Unwelcome Attentions in an Office?

You are certainly the world's greatest optimist, C. W. M., if you are willing to tackle matrimony the fifth time after having made a failure of it upon four previous occasions. As for the ladies, what does it matter which one you take, since marriage is merely a passing episode with you, instead of a binding contract? I doubt if any one woman will ever permanently satisfy you. What you need is a harem, where you can drive your wives all abreast after the Oriental mode instead of tandem, in the American style.

Of the three candidates you suggest, I would think that wife No. 2 ould be the best for your soul and pocketbook, and supply a backbone which you seem to need sadly. Wife No. 3, who asks nothing but to burn incense at your feet, would come nearest to holding you, but wife No. 4 hat one in every 1,200 people in incense at your feet, would come nearest to holding you, but will be most likely to stick by you, for it takes a sporting spirit to stand a will be most likely to stick by you, for it takes a sporting spirit to stand a man who is always wandering off the straight and narrow path.

we do nothing but quarrel. He says he can't help it; that it is the fault of the moods he gets now and then. While he is in one of these moods he is terrible to me, and twice he has almost broken our engagement, and then, blaming it on the moods, he begs me to take him back. What shall I do?

TRYING TO SMILE.

Answer:
My dear girl, there is no other fault that a man can possibly have that will make his wife so miserable as for him to be moody. Whether moodiness is the result of a bad liver, or a bum stomach, or nervousness, or is a species of insanity, or is just pure cussedness, I don't know. But I do know that a moody man or woman can kill every bit of joy and cheerfulness in a home, and make it a regular hell on earth.

If you marry a moody man you will go in terror all the balance your life, fearing to do or say something that will bring on one of his spells. For on the least provocation, or no provocation at all, he will lapse into a gloomy silence that sends the domestic temperature down to zero, and that indicts everybody in the household for having committed some unknown crime.

You will have to bear with patience insults and abuse that will make Rev. M. L. > Whatever you do, don't marry a moody man. Save yourself while the saving is good. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Dorothy Dix-How should a young, inexperienced, good-looking girl behave in a business office when she is complimented by strangers who come to see her manager about business, but who never overlook the opportunity of a short conversation with the girl? What attitude should the girl take toward the young men who are employed where she is? Should ie accept their invitations?

The proper way for a girl to conduct herself in an office, or out of it, is like a lady. If she is reserved, quiet, dignified and keeps her eyes straight before her instead of roving all over the landscape in search of whom she may vamp she can go around the world alone or work in an office without being molested.

Virtually every man who meets a pretty girl tries her out to see how far she will go, and if he finds that she is dead straight he respects her for it and becomes her protector. Good girls have little to fear from men. It is the ones who are out looking for temptation who find it.

Dress modestly, my dear, in sen sible business clothes. Don't look up from your work and ogle everybody who comes to see your employer, and few men will speak to you. Let your answers be brief and to the point when they try to open up conversation with you, and you will soon cease to be approved by the philanderers who wish to make dates with you. Don't let the young men who are your fellow employees hang over your desk during working hours. That is not what you are being paid for.

Save your flirtations for after office hours. What you do after 5 o'clock is your own affair, but it is never wise to mix lovemaking and business.

Canadian Press Despatch. Ottawa, April 11.—By a vote o 92 to 29, a majority of 63, the House of Commons at midnight defeated a bill providing for the abolition of capital punishment, sponsored by William Irvine, Labor member for Calgary East.

The bill was in the form of an amendment to the criminal code. Referring to the hanging of two murderers at London, Ontario, yesterday, he read a statement saying that Topping had the mentality and the morality of a four-year-old.

Logan for the abolition of capital punishment was "the surrounds hanging today. When a person was sentenced to death there was a tendency on the part of the public to regard him as a hero or as one who was being persecuted.

"A gunman doesn't fear the rope," said Mr. Logan, referring to the recent hold-up in Montreal. "When he shoots a person down, he does it with an utter disregard of the consequences."

That were the case why should they condemn someone else to carry a function which they would not person themselves? The criminal alone was not the only person who suffered from the death penalty; his wife and family suffered with him.

retribution was the basis of law.

The argument which was constantly presented in support of capital punishment was that it acted as a deter-rent, said Mr. Irvine. He believed that there were better ways of reachit in petty cases. The time was surely coming when society, not so much in the interest of the criminal as in its own interest, would abolish capi-tal punishment. "It is degrading, demoralizing, an outrage to our finer sensibilities and a failure inasmuch as it does not act as a deterrent, declared Mr. Irvine.

He quoted from a leading penologist the statement that from 50 to 75 per cent of the number of crimes committed were due to pre-natal causes, and the remainder to education and deleterious environment. He cited further a statement concerning the two murderers hanged yesterday in London that Topping had the men-tality of a four-year-old and Murrell the morals of a four-year-old. In-stead of punishing criminals, they should be treated by physicians and

Hon. Charles Marcil (Liberal, Bon-aventure) asked Mr. Irvine if any attorney-general ever favored the abolition of capital punishment. He also asked if Mr. Irvine had the figures regarding murders committed by native or foreign born persons.

Mr. Irvine replied that he had not consulted with former attorney-generals of Canada in the matter of capital punishment, and that it made no difference to his case whether the murderer was native or foreign born. He challenged the minister of justice or any one who might care to oppose the proposed bill to bring proof that capital punishment had hindered the committing of any single crime.

In conclusion Mr. Irvine said: "By

It must be remembered that when a murderer was imprisoned for life he sometimes obtained his liberty after the passage of a number of years. In the complete absence of recommendation.

Asked by Mr. Irvine to adduce one single fact to prove that the death penalty was really a deterrent in murder, Mr. Lapointe answered that he had given statistics and his private opinion.

Moint the complete absence of recommenda-tion that capital punishment be abolished from the best legal minds, Mr. Marcil said he could not sup-

They are pulling up cause they can no longer find a decent living here." And so on he goes until he nears the end and drives for his mark: "But the most irresponsible spendthrift comes at last to the turn of the road, and that is where the government at Ottawa finds itself today."

Then, what must the government do? "The federal government must down to the sources of the country's troubles, face the facts and cut expenditures in all departments."

It would be interesting to know if the writer of all that calamity really understands the situation at Ottawa. Take as a starting point $434,452,340 the total expenditure for 1922-23. Take out expenditures growing out of the war, which cannot be a charge against the King government. They

William Wrigley did not like the taste of existing chewing gum, and he made up a new one, calling it Juicy Fruit. He lost every nickel he had in the world trying to market it. Fortunately Wrigley had some friends who admired radicals and they gave him a new financial lease on life. Wrigley was by no means cured. He put another unheard-of flavor on the market—Spearmint. Wrigley has been a radical in almost everything ne has done. Even his advertising is radical.

As we thumb the pages of history we note that all of the great characters who stand out on the horizon of the past were radicals in thought and action. George Washington was radical, original thinker. Benjamin Franklin. It was this that made his writings clear, stimulating, mentally invigorating, like breaths o fresh air.

In the average case it is not laziness that holds a man back from trying a new idea. It is fear. He is afraid to be radical. He is afraid hat the idea may not be sound and it will carry him down to defeat. Many men are original in thei way of thinking, but let their ideas die in their minds. An idea is worth nothing. An idea without the motive without fire and fuel..

Dr. Frank Crane Lenine and Nicholas

THE death of Lenine some time ago focussed attention upon the great human experiment now taking place in Russia. One's mind recurs to the death of the czar that preceded him. The Bolshevik regime contains all those lurid factors of tyranny, ferocity and fanaticism which appeal to the imagination; it provides as favorable a setting for tragedy as any that might have been furnished by Richelieu, the Medici or the Borgias. Passions as flaming, ambitions as vaulting, mobs as mad and magnificence as splendid as anything offered by the French revolution are here.

What a yarn Dumas could have made of it! Robespierre was not so striking a figure as Trotsky. The fall of the House of Bourbon was nothing to compare in cataclysmic horror to the like absolutism hurtling down in one day into grim and bloody extinction! Here is shattering fact outdazzling fiction; the Jovian ruler of millions, one day on his throne, the next day kicked, cuffed and disembowelled by sweaty peasants, his bones thrown like a dog's into a pit, or, even more pathetic, he and his royal household caged somewhere like squeaking mice to shiver through the long Siberian nights, while a little, unknown Jew commands his legions and musters the myriads of Russia to front the world!

RUSSIA is a land of unfathomable mysteries, the house of innumerable tragedies; but no mystery so challenges the imagination as this story of the dark fate of the fallen monarch, no tragedy of the mimic stage was ever more boldly conceived than this tragedy of real life, this strange and nightmare tale, the hosts of pacificism, brotherhood, idealism and liberty, marching forward with all the ferocity of Janizaries, hands dripping murder and lips proclaiming love and peace; the rebels against the cruelty and injustice of autocracy sealing their triumph with the bloody murder of a weakling ruler and his family of innocent girls, or carrying them away to die in unknown graves. It is a mad world. Or is it mad? Do we not hear in the fierceness of these dramatic climaxes the rumblings of Destiny, echoing the far-off thunders of the ancient prophet of God?

"Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievousness which they have prescribed: To turn aside the needy, and to take away the right from the poor of my people, that widows may be their prey, and that they may rob the fatherless!

"Behold, the Lord, the Lord of hosts, shall lop the bough with terror; and the high ones of stature shall be hewn down, and the haughty shall be humbled."

It is hard sometimes to make our children see that we are not in a position to dress them any better for school hours, and it is a fact that girls of that age going to school are rather sensitive about being as well dressed as the others with whom

Foreigner With 18-Year Criminal Record, Enters House, Kills Man, Is Sentenced to Death For Murder Under Jury System - Appeal Court Reduces Charge to Manslaughter, and Gives Man Five Years' Imprisonment-Alberta Aroused.

By J. DIXON CRAIG

HERE transpired in Edmonton, the capital city of Alberta, an event the other day that will have a far-reaching effect in all the provinces of the dominion. It is a milestone in criminal jurisprudence in Canada.

For the first time in the history of the dominion, one court has overridden the decision of a jury in a lower court, has reduced a murder verdict to one of manslaughter, and has altered the sentence of death to five years in a peni-

This is the story of a foreigner who has spent nineteen out of the past twenty-five years of his life in a Danish prison and who, after being refused admission to other countries, got a passport to Canada, and who, within a few weeks of his arrival, walked into the home of an Alberta farmer at midnight, and when the owner of the house leaped from his bed to grapple with him, this Danish ex-convict killed the Canadian with a knife. Captured soon afterward, he was tried in a court far removed from the scene of his erime, was found guilty by a jury of six men, and was sentenced to be hanged.

It is also the story of how this Danish convict, with no knowledge of English, with counsel assigned to him by the province of Alberta, es- but throughout the whole province. caped the gallows by an appeal launched under recent amendments to the criminal code, passed at the last session of the dominion house.

Under the law as it was before these amendments, an appeal court dealing with a criminal case had the power to quash the conviction on points of law, to confirm the sentence, or to order a new trial where it was shown that new evidence had been unearthed or something done at the previous trial which worked an injustice

The Midnight Killing

N the first minutes of November 20. last year, similar cases.

William Edgar Faulkner, in his home in the Further, the little village of Sylvan Lake, near Red Deer, was awakened from sleep by the sound of screams from his wife and small son. The next darkness. And within another moment or two he was lying on the floor in a pool of blood, dead.

Within twelve hours from the time the crime was committed, a constable of the Alberta provincial police saw a man walking along the railway track near Eckville, some eleven miles west of Sylvan Lake. The constable overtook him, saw that his face, clothes and gloves were blood-stained, and without waiting for any further words, "clapped the handcuffs on him," to use his own words.

A few hours later, after an interpreter had been secured, this man gave his name as Vilhelm Einar Hansen, recently from Denmark.

When the charge was read to him, he exclaimed: "Is the man dead" And later, he said he had not intended to kill the man, that he did it in self-defense.

This Hansen case has aroused the people of Alberta. Naturally, feeling is strongest in the Red Deer area, where the dead man was wellknown and a highly respected farmer. First there was horror over the deed. Then satisfaction at the swift capture, which was deepened last February when a jury found him guilty and the judge sentenced him to death. And now, amazement and resentment at the latest turn of events, whereby Hansen escapes with five years in Prince Albert penitentiary.

The circumstances of the crime, moreover, have an intimate concern with all those who live remote from neighbors and may be called upon at any time to defend their homes from in-

Jury System Threatened

T HE Red Deer News gives expression to local sentiment and at the same time presents a singularly clear general argument against the order of things which has been brought into effect by the recent amendment to the criminal code. It says:

"Trial by jury has its defects. Sentiment Lake. He carried a .22 calibre rifle and a small sometimes plays an undue part in the verdicts grip. A brand new hunting knife, sheathed, of juries. Sometimes the evidence may not be weighed with all the skill which experienced inaw and a cloth cap, a sweater and a pair of lawyers might give to it. Yet, generally speakrough pants. ing, juries in this country arrive at approximately a just result on the facts.

"In any event, trial by jury is one of the main principles of our society. If it is to be taken away, it is right that the fact should be brought fairly and squarely to the notice of the people. Trial by juries in the manner now introduced, it is to be feared, means an increase of legal technicalities, of quibbling defences, of formal barriers to essential justice.

Facing the Intruder

UST about this time the party was breaking over at Dingwall's. It was just a step to her home, so at twenty minutes after midnight, Mrs. Faulkner slipped across the street, opened the storm door and found the inner door standing open. Thinking her husband had found the house too hot, she paid no attention to the matter, but, shutting the door behind her, she went into the bedroom where her two boys were sleeping. She spoke to her husband and he answered sleepily, hardly aroused by her arrival.

She walked through into the dining room, turned the lamp up a little, saw a suede, furlined glove lying on the floor, thought it must have been dropped by her sister, Dingwall's wife, and tossed it on the dining room table. The younger boy wanted to sleep upstairs with his mother, so Mrs. Faulkner picked him up, and in the other hand the lamp, and went out to the kitchen.

Then she heard her husband jump from his bed. Both boys were screaming now, and, picking up the younger, she took him into the bedroom, put him in with his brother, told them to be quiet, called to her husband she would go for help, adding: "Don't kill him, Edgar."

She heard no sound of struggle, she told the court afterwards. Then, as she got to the door, and opened it, she heard a murmur from her husband: "I am done for."

Then she was out on the verandah, screaming. Dingwall, just across the street, heard her The rifle and grip were stowed away in a passage and dashed right over. As he arrived, a form slipped by the woman. She made a grab at him. He stooped down, might have been trying Dingwall grappled with him, threw him the length of the verandah. The form flung itself over the verandah rail, over a wire fence, into the bush, and was lost.

Stabbed to Death

Aroused by the outcries, other neighbors arrived. Mrs. Faulkner and her sons were taken over to her sister's and looked after. The village doctor was called, the police at Red Deer notified, and the chase was on.

The next morning Hansen was taken, without a struggle, near Eckville, eleven miles away, his clothes all blood-stained. The mate to designated C. C. McCaul, K.C., to conduct Hansen's defense--- "one of the ablest and most experienced counsel in the province," to quote ustice Ives, who presided at the trial. Hugh Macdonald, K.C., also of Edmonton, was appointed special crown prosecutor.

When court opened in Red Deer before Jusice Tweedie, Mr. McCaul argued that it would be impossible to select an unbiased jury in that district. The prisoner's criminal record in Denalmost make a jury vote for hanging," commented counsel. So a change of venue was Hansen next appeared before Justice Ives at assisted by W. J. Logie, K.C., of Wetaskiwin, in the defense, while the local crown prosecutor, G. C. S. Crosby was associated with Mr. Macdonald in the case for the crown.

The story of that fatal night's events and those of subsequent days were told by the widow of the slain man, two doctors, the provincial analyst, James Dingwall, a Danish interpreter Constable Shantz of the provincial police, who made the arrest, and Detective John Holmes, also of the provincial police, who gathered the

Death Sentence Pronunced

R. McCAUL drew another picture. He sug-M gested that Hansen had seen the light burning in this house, that he thought it was a lodging place, had gone in to get a bed. Alarmed by someone moving around downstanrs, he tried to get away undetected. That when Faulkner grabbed him, he was being crushed to the ground. That the absence of evidence of a struggle in the room was due to the fact the men had been wrestling about in one spot on the floor. That the 200-pound Faulkner was on top of the slight, 145-pound Dane. That Hansen feared he was going to be killed, and that he drew his knife in self-defense. That all the little stabs on Faulkner's arms showed he was merely trying to make the big man let go of

The crown visualized the fight in a different guise. That when Faulkner seized Hansen, he at once started to stab with his knife. That if his right arm was held close to his body by Faulkner, Hansen found it hard to cut. That when he finally lunged out, he meant to lay Faulkner out.

If Hansen was just looking for a bed in which to sleep, why the stocking feet? Why did he leave his rifle and grip hidden away somewhere outside? Mr. McCaul called no evidence for the defense at the trial. Mr. Justice Ives pointed out to the jury that the verdict must be murder, manslaughter, or acquittal. He stressed the fact that the law does not allow a man to kill an intruder in his home. All he is allowed to do is to eject the burglar or arrest him. And if he wishes to arrest him, he must use no more force than is reasonable to restrain him.

The jury found Hansen guilty of murder. Justice Ives, before he sentenced him, commented on the fact that he had had the fairest of trials. He pronounced the death sentence and Saskatchewan, where, on that date last year, Picarello and Florence Lassandra were hung. But Mr. McCaul was not through fighting for the life of this man yet. The recent criminal code amendments allowed the appeal court to practically retry such a case. He applied for leave to appeal, and was granted it.

Mr. McCaul asked the appeal court to allow him to bring Hansen up from Fort Saskatchewan jail and let him tell his own story to the five judges. On a Monday in March the appeal court decided to hear Mr. McCaul argue this point. The whole day was spent at it.

The Appeal Argued

B UT no decision was reached. The appeal proper was set for the Thursday of that week. This question was argued further. In fact, the whole morning was spent at it.

Hansen himself was present on this occasion to hear his appeal argued.

"If," said Mr. Macdonald, "your lordships decide to hear the prisoner now, after he refused to tell his story before the jury, you are practically abolishing trial by jury, for anyone so accused could reserve his defense for the appeal

On the other hand, Mr. McCaul argued that the court had such wide discretionary powers in the matter that they would no be establishing any precedent. They could try each case on its

Mr. Justice Stuart remarked that if the appeal court merely reduced the charge to man-slaughter no decision on this question would be course. Justice Stuart also thought the court should be slow to order a new trial with all the expense to the country that would involve

Justice Hyndman disagreed sharply, saying expense could not be considered when the life of a man was at stake. Justice Beck agreed with this, and aded that he thought the charge to jury by Justice Ives was insufficient, and that quoting long sections from the criminal code, as did, would but confuse the jury.

Finally the judges told Mr. McCaul to explain on what points in the evidence and on judge's charge to the jury he could argue that the jury's verdict should be reduced to manslaughter or acquittal, and th of the evidence he proposed to give through the prisoner and other witnesses. This he did.

At two o'clock in the afternoon counsel took their places in court ready to present their argument on the appeal. The five judges took their Wetaskiwin on February 11. C. C. McCaul was, places on the bench. There was a pause. Mr. Macdonald fingered the papers on his desk, cleared his throat-

Lawyers Astonished

T HEN the chief justice spoke. "We have decided to reduce the charge to manslaughter," said he.

Mr. Macdonald looked at Mr. McCaul, his eyes wide open in astonishment. Mr. McCaul loked at Mr. Macdonald, and he was just as much surprised.

Mr. Macdonald recovered enough to inform the court that the crown could not acquiese in

The court asked Mr. McCaul to present argument as to leniency in sentence.

Counsel for the defense, with the prisoner and an interpreter beside him, then told the court that Hansen, notwithstanding a long criminal record in Denmark, had come to Canada intending to turn over a new leaf. He had landed in Canada in August, had reached Winnipeg where the Salvation Army helped him. He had worked in Saskatchewan for two months, then had started for the lumber camps at Phoenix in the foothills of the Rockies west of Red Deer Mr. McCaul produced the prisoner's grip containing an entire outfit of new winter clothes, the hunting knife, the rifle, a flashlight without a battery, a Bible and other articles. He contended that Mrs. Faulkner's call to her husband, "Don't kill him Edgar," showed that Hansen's life was in danger and that he had only defended himself.

"Hansen, in Saskatchewan, noticed lights were left burning in isolated stopping places, so that late travelers might come in and fend for themselves," said Mr. McCaul. Hansen so construed the light in the Faulkner home, said

"The man could not speak a word of English," said Mr. McCaul. "There is often a tragic turn in such simple things—the scream, the light going out, a man grappling with him in

He stressed the point that Hansen had made no attempt to wash the bloodstains from his face, his hands or his clothes. "He told the police he had not thought the man was seriously hurt," said Mr. McCaul.

There was a murmur on the bench. Some discussion of the federal authorities deporting the prisoner. Then a sentence of five years in Prince Albert penitentiary."

The interpreter leaned over to Hansen. The whispered words were reflected in the light that broke over the man's face.

The court gave no reasons for their reduc tion of the verdict, unless a remark of Mr. Justice Stuart, made during the morning argument, covers all the reasons. He said: "I think we are at liberty to reduce the verdict to manslaughter on very general grounds, without going into all the evidence.'

And so ended the Hansen case. It is probable, however, that the last has not yet been Pupils Are Eskimo and Indian Boys and Girls From All Over Mackenzie River Dis-Miles From Home—Canon Great Slave Lake.

ITHIN shouting distance of the Arctic circle there is a boarding school which is probably the most northerly school Indian and Eskimo boys and girls. And the ed. headmaster is Rev. Canon Alfred James Vale has been as low as 65 degrees. But he mainwho is at present on a furlough in Ontario.

This unique school is situated at Hay river on the southwest corner of the Great Slave Lake. in the Mackenzie river territory. To reach the Hay river settlement where Canon Vale preaches one must go 300 miles north and west by rail from Edmonton to Waterways and then another 600 miles by water. At Fort Fitzgerald on the way up there is a sixteen mile portage which staples of the Hay river mission's diet. The may now be covered by automobile, a new method of transportation since the recent oil boom at

The Great Slave Lake is the fourth largest body of fresh water in Canada, larger than Lake Ontario. It is 292 miles long and 60 miles wide. Parts of the shore are sandy; other parts are heavily wooded with spruce. The northern there is great mineral wealth there yet to be

In the winter time the Great Slave Lake is locked up under a sheet of ice that averages six feet in thickness. On the Hay river which runs into it from British Columbia there are two falls, the first of 105 feet and a second fall of 47 feet, which are considered capable of developing 50,000 horse power.

It is at the Hay river settlement that the thick. Anglican church mission and school, of which Canon Vale is in charge, is situated. He is not only missionary and schoolmaster, but postmaster as well. He also takes the meteorological observations and is in charge of the channel lights, the first and only ones in the territory, which have been placed for the last few years to aid navigation. So much for a brief Baedeker glimpse of this faraway outpost of Canadian

1,000 Miles to Visit Parishioners

T present in the Hay river school there are seven Eskimo boys and girls and fifty Indian boys and girls. These come from homes all over the Mackenzie river territory, some from as far south as Chipewyan on the Athabasca and from as far north as Cape Bathurst and Herschel Island on the north. Some of these youngsters ranging in age from six to sixteen are 1,500 miles from home.

They come the long trip chaperoned by missionaries or traders from their faraway homes. frequently not knowing more than a few words English. At first when the school was founded the children and their parents had a natural fear of this separation into the unknown but now that is gone and there is great competition to have a child chosen. For the boys and girls return after graduation knowing not merely English and able to read and write, but skilled in the crafts of the far north. They are able to earn a living easily at the posts and are a great asset to the police and the administrators.

Semetimes a whole graduating class sets off for home together. In 1922, Mrs. Vale conducted a graduating class of sixteen 1,150 miles right to the Mackenzie delta and brought back a similar number of juveniles to take their places.

This unique school was founded by Rev. T. J. Marsh in 1893. The founder was succeeded by Canon Vale in 1907 who has carried on ever since, ministering to a primitive parish the visiting of whose scattered outposts involves a trip of 1,000 miles. In fact, Canon Vale has traveled as many as 1,200 miles in a season. Sometimes he has gone as far as Fort Simpson and back, Mackenzie river region.

a round trip of 500 miles, to hold a communion service and baptize a group of babies.

Often he has spent ten days and ten nights on the winter trail sleeping out when it has been as low as fifty-two below zero. Not such a hardship at that, according to Canon Vale. You simply scrape off the surface snow with your snow shoes until you come to the packed snow trict—Some Are 1.500 snow snoes until you come to the packed snow and ice beneath when you knock off all lumps and make the place smooth. Light a fire at your feet, spread a mattress of balsam boughs, wrap up in a caribou skin lined with a four Vale's Unique Work on point Hudson's Bay blanket and you will sleep comfortably and well.

Fishing in Slave Lake

MANY of Canon Vale's trips are made light with five dogs to a train and one Indian. The latter's task is to go ahead breaking trail, running three hours at a time ahead of the dogs. Then a stop for a cup of tea to fight the cold which begins stealing in spite of the exerkind in the world. The pupils are little tion and speed of travel and so on again refresh-Canon Vale has been on the trail when it tains that this is no hardship. Once, though, on an open lake, with a head wind and 56 below, one of the half breeds dropped. They built a fire and rubbed him with powdered ginger; then laid him on a light sleigh and rushed him to a house ten miles away. Next day he rested and the following day he was quite recovered.

In the life of the Great Slave Lake dweller fish play a big part. Fish and potatoes are mission has netted and used as many as 25,000 fish in a year for table purposes and for the dogs. The mission has raised as many as 1,000 bushels of potatoes. Fish and fishing are indeed big factors in the life of the northwest so in the mission school fishing is part of the curriculum, not one of potatoes was 783 bushels to the acre. Very of the fads and frills taught the scholars but one of the fundamental things. Every boy is shore is practically all rock. In the northern taught the best way to fish with the same pains section there are "ten thousand" islands, a that he is taught to speak English. Charlie rival to the Georgian Bay. It is believed that Norn, a half breed Indian, takes the boys out in regular classes, both winter and summer, and instructs them in the best way to set nets. It seems as if this kind of a school would not be unpopular with boys in older parts of Canada.

> Fancy having lessons in how to catch suckers! Fishing with nets on the Great Slave Lake is a complicated trade that needs learning. In the winter as many as 32 nets, each 50 fathoms long, will be set five miles out in the lake under the ice which is frequently more than six feet

> This winter fishing is no child's play. It is necessary to drive out across the open lake with dogs in temperatures forty or fifty below, two or three times a week, and spend the day on the ice. A tent is carried which is erected by the simple expedient of making little holes in the ice, placing the stakes in and pouring water over them. In five or ten minutes they are frozen solid. A fire is built in a box stove which is earried. This warms the tent and cooks the

Forty-Five Pound Trout

AKED hands must be used in hauling in the nets and taking out the fish. An expert fisherman has wonderful hands and can stay out all day in the severe temperatures handling fish. Charlie Norn always declares that his hands are cold with the first two nets handled. After that they warm up. "If my hands get cold," he will "I put them in the water and warm them

How cold it is may be judged from the fact that at every visit the holes have to be reopened with the ice chisel, as much as two feet of ice having formed during their absence.

Charlie and the boys will come back in the venings, their sleds carrying a load of from one hundred to three hundred fish, averaging four pounds apiece in weight. For in the Great Slave lake fish are fish. Canon Vale has known of a lake trout brought in weighing 45 pounds, 4 feet 2 inches long, and 29 inches in girth. In fact, the fish eaters of the region do not care for a lake trout weighing less than 20 pounds. Such fish are heavy with fat, so fat that they can be fried in their own grease. A valuable white oil is procured from the dory of the lake, the wall-

Then there is a fish called the inconnu (the unknown), peculiar to the district, which is as large as the trout. It is rather like the salmonbut its flesh is perfectly white when it is caught in the spring, smoked and salted. The native name for the inconnu is the coney. It is found only in northern waters, seldom south of Fort Simpson. Canon Vale relates that the late Emerson Hough, author of "The Covered Wagon" and other stories of the American pioneer west. asked specially to see a coney on his visit to the

The Great Slave lake and contiguous waters are a fisherman's paradise. In the spring and in the fall fish are so thick, according to Canon Vale, that one can almost walk across solid shoals of them. Especially suckers. These shoal in amazing numbers. The coney in the fall swarms in such thousands that the nets have frequently to be visited more than once the same day to prevent them being smashed by their weight. None of this wealth of fish finds its way to civilization. It would cost too much to transport to the outer world. So common are fish that it was planned to use trout for ballast in the planes which came into the region in connection with the oil boom farther north, only that they did not pass through on their way out.

Gardening Under Midnight Sun

NOTHER important feature on the school A NOTHER important reactive control and curriculum for the boys is gardening and agriculture. No less than twenty-one varieties of vegetables are grown in this northern out-Peas, cabbage and cauliflower do very well; so do tomatoes and cucumber. Canon Vale has grown a cauliflower 12 inches across and weighing five pounds. Celery reaches 36 inches. There is no darkness in the region in June and You may read at midnight. The afterglow is not gone when the dawn comes. In such light the celery grows so rapidly that it requires constant banking up.

Potatoes are a most successful crop. In one patch from choice seed Canon Vale grew potatoes which weighed as much as two pounds apiece. He sent some of them in 1921 to Ottawa to show the agricultural possibilities of Canada's northern hinterland. How great a yield these potatoes gave may be judged from the fact that Dr. Miller and Mr. Henderson, two dominion government officials sent in on observatory work, measured out the plot and calculated that the yield nearly a world's record, which is exactly 800 bushels. Not bad for a country contiguous to the Arctic circle.

The boys also help in cutting the hav and stacking it as well as in hauling it home. The last is done in the fall by dogs over the light ice before it is strong enough to bear the weight of the oxen belonging to the Anglican mission.

The boys are also taught the use of tools. This practical training that they are given is very useful to them when they return to their homes. They are expert fishermen; they have been taught to trap and trade; they have a knowledge of agriculture and they can build houses for their own people. The gradual infiltration of these boys and girls, not made useless by being made merely civilized, but made more useful as Indians and Eskimos-by being taught crafts useful to them as natives-is a big factor in the northwest. They act as instructors among their own people when they return home.

The boys learn the use of tools very quickly. They are very imitative. One boy, when he returned to Fort McPherson, made a violin which he presented to the missionary. After the com ing of the first aeroplane to Hay river, the lads made several little models. Many of them make models of the river steamers. One lad used the clockwork of a mechanical toy for the engine. an empty tin can for the furnace, a pipe for the smokestack and actually built a toy paddle-wheel steamer which would shoot across the water in

Eskimos and Mathematics

) boys ever made more use of the instructions about how to make this and that contained in the Boys' Own Paper than these Indian and Eskimo schoolboys in the distant these instructions were written to appeal to English boys so very far away living under such different conditions.

"The mathematical ability of these boys, though, is very limited," declares Canon Vale. "They are deficient in reasoning power. We get better results with the Eskimo than with the Indians. The Eskimo character is more stable. The Eskimo is slow but steady and thorough. The Indian is much more liable to be impulsive. Besides, the Eskimo is much more provident.

So far as the girl boarders are concerned they are taught all kinds of household work of a if he does the youngest child will die. For this nature that will be useful to them at home, knit- reason wolves enjoy a comparative immunity ting and the making of moccasins, etc. If the girls do well they are given a little reward in

At the third attempt the Indian struck the wolf, stunning it.

The boys indulge in trapping. They have caught as many as ten foxes in a season. They, too, are encouraged by being allowed to keep the furs they take. Incidentally this teaches them how to trade, an important knowledge when they return home. The breeding of sled dogs is another interest ing work of the Anglican mission at Hay river, of importance to the northwest. Canon Vale found that it was difficult to get good sled dogs. The Indians had not taken care of their dogs and the breed had degenerated into a small, poor type. So ten years ago Canon Vale began on carefully selective lines to produce a good strain. Then in 1919, after careful weeding out, he secured a good type of husky from Coronation gulf, which he crossed with his own. The result is now a fine type of sled dog which is in demand all over the territory by police and traders, pups of the mission selling for $100 apiece when they are about a year old and broken to harness. By careful cultivation he has been able to double the working life of the sled dog. All his dogs are tractable, easy to handle, and not ferocious; they can be turned loose and handled by children. If a dog is given to biting it is sold or shot.

Besides hauling in the hay, Canon Vale uses his dogs with success for ploughing. They have to be watched carefully for the reason that in the summer they heat quickly. When they do they are simply unhitched from the plough and allowed to run to the river to cool off, when they are recalled to the work of breaking the

Training Dogs to Plow

REAKING these dogs is easy," declares Canon Vale. "Leave your whip in the house and use patience. We start training them when they are eight months old by harnessing them up with the older dogs. The first day the newcomer has probably to be dragged along, but in two days he has got the idea in his head. Of course training a leader takes longer. Sometimes a year is necessary.'

After all, the sled dog's vocabulary is limited. "Marche" are all that he needs to know. these four words in his head he may be driven for hundreds of miles.

These dogs have really wonderful capacity north. Which is strange when you think that and staying power. Each can drag a weight of from 80 to 100 pounds for eight or nine hours a day, day after day, averaging thirty miles of travel. Canon Vale with his dogs has traveled from Fort Resolution to Hay river, 80 miles, in a day and' a half. He holds the record from Fort Simpson to Hay river, a distance of 250 miles. With five dogs, traveling light, he had made the journey in five "nights"-nights being the measurement of travel in the northwest.

Canon Vale is inclined to believe wolves dangerous on occasion. The natives of the Mackenzie river region are afraid of them at least. An Indian in the territory with children will not kill a wolf because of the widespread belief that there and are found in big numbers.

One morning after arrival at Fort Simpson some Indians who had been following his trail and arrived somewhat later asked excitedly, "Is the minister here?" Told that Canon Vale had come, they asked to see him, when they informed him that he had been followed for miles by five wolves. He had not been aware of their presence. They had not attacked. But the Indians had feared for his safety.

A story which Canon Vale vouched for was that of an Indian woman at Fon du Lac who was attacked by wolves and fought with a knife until she was killed. She was found later with a dead wolf beside her.

Once, coming from Fort Simpson across the lake with an Indian, Canon Vale sighted a big grey wolf in a trap which had been set in a cleft of the ice. The dogs were halted without sighting or scenting the animal. "Better take the gun and kill the wolf," Canon Vale ordered the Indian. "Otherwise we will never get the

Mrs. Vale as Surgeon

DUT the gun had been left behind, as they were traveling light. So the Indian approached the trapped wolf with his axe. The wolf ran as far as the chain of the trap would allow. The Indian threw the axe, and missed It went beyond the wolf's reach. He circled and threw again. Again he missed. But on the third attempt he struck the wolf on the head, stunning it. With a bound he threw himself on the wolf and quickly killed it. Canon Vale and he buried the wolf and continued their journey. So unusual was this feat of the Indian's that the natives at Hay river would not believe that the wolf had been killed with an axe until they were brought and shown the body.

When Canon Vale, who after graduating from Wycliffe spent a year in Lindsay, Ont., first went to Hay river mission, the nearest doctor was at Edmonton, 900 miles away. Fortunately his wife, formerly Miss M. E. Nash, of East Zorra, who married and joined him in 1909, was a graduate nurse. In the years since she has done an immense amount of medical and surgical work in the territory.

In 1912 she set her husband's broken ankle It was well set. He has traveled a good many hundred miles on it since. She has sewn many axe cuts, including a terrible cut as the result of a man burying his axe in his thigh severing the sinews, which she drew together and stitched.

Another man practically destroyed his hand with an old muzzle-loader. He came to her with the fingers hanging by mere threads. Mrs Vale feared at first she would have to amputate them. But she sewed them up and bound each finger separately. And they actually grew. For a long time the man's hand was stiff and useless but eventually he was able to use a paddle. Once later he brought her a goose as a thank offering saying quaintly, "I guess it's your fault I got my

A treaty doctor to whom the hand was show afterwards whistled with surprise. "If I had been here I would certainly have taken the hand off," he exclaimed. In the "flu" epidemic of 1919, owing to Mrs Vale's devotion and her practical, rigid system of reporting, there was not a death in the settle ment except the first person stricken, who developed pneumonia and did not come to her notice in time. She made the rounds of the pa tients three times a day.

Now the Indian agent at Fort Resolution, 85 miles away, is a doctor. So that at Hay river they are not so isolated from a medical point of view as they were formerly.

Sea-Going Stag Puts a Bad Snarl in Maritime and International Law

Kind French Skipper Rescues Animal Chased Into Water by British Huntsmen and Involves Himself in Several Hundred Miles of Red Tape-Police, Port Authorities, Game Law, and Health Authorities of France and England Involved-Stag Doesn't Know Whether He Will Be Victim of Foot-and-Mouth Disease Scare or Fortune's Favorite, Gold Collar, Roses Bed

APTAIN JOSEPH CALOIN, master of a fishing smack blessed with the unromantic name of 678B, unwittingly started a legal controversy recently when, out of pure humanity, he picked up a derelict stag swimming off the Kentish coast. Having only a hazy notion about stags in general or what was their function in England, he was a bit surprised to see the animal. But he hoisted it aboard and continued on his leasurely way toward France, landing with his prize at Etaples.

Whereupon things began to happen. The customs authorities spotted the stag, which had become seasick and wan in appearance. The police also took a hand. The port authorities wanted to know by what authority M. Caloin had picked up the animal; the customs authorities declared that, inasmuch as the hunting season was closed. Captain Caloin had broken the law by introducing venison into France, and the police were indignant over the same phase of the affair, adding that it was not really a stag, but a hind. And that, for some obscure reason, made matters worse.

Of course, the worthy captain neither knew nor cared whether his prize was a seasick stag or a seasick hind. He didn't understand why it should have been swimming around. Nobody ever told him stags were amphibious, and he believed that in the interests of common humanity he should have done what he did. So he informed the customs and police and port authorities that the stag, or hind, was flotsam and jetsam, and under the rules of international law he had a right to pick it up, even in territorial

Not only that, but the shrewd captain of the 678B had conformed with French law in every particular. He had entered his find in the ship's log as "Found, One Stag," and had drawn up a complete report, which he proceeded to turn over to the port authorities.

This floored the port and customs and police authorities. It baffled them utterly. rushed to the telegraph office at Etaples to wire for instructions. They wired to the marine authorities at Dunkirk and the marine authorities at Dunkirk wired to the under-secretary of state for the mercantile marine at Paris. The matter at present rests there, the under-secretary apparently needing some days to determine just what is the correct thing to do in such a complicated case.

Meanwhile the stag, or, rather, hind, is still sick and still miserable. It won't eat or drink, apparently having drunk its fill of salt Channel water. The veterinary authorities were called in. They knew exactly what to do. The animal was dying, they declared; it must be slaughtered immediately.

But before the widely heralded slaughter occurred, Brigadier-General T. N. S. Pitt, master of the Mid-Kent staghounds, told British newspaper men that he would exert heaven and earth to get the poor animal back home on its native heath. It had been a fine run the animal had given the Mid-Kent staghounds, he said, and it seemed the only fair thing to do was to get it back and put it carefully in a paddock, not hunt ing it again for a year. It deserved that rest,

Then the stag upset all predictions by recovering completely. The order for putting the animal out of its misery was revoked. The the authorities, asking that the stag be despatched in all haste to Kent, where a royal reception was being arranged. The stag would henceforth wear a gold collar and sleep upon a bed of roses, the general declared, or words to that effect. He would be treated as never a stag had been treated before. Whereupon the British authorities, believing apparently that their brethren in France were getting altogether too much publicity out of the affair, decided to conjure up a few complications themselves. They wired Etaples that the hoof and mouth disease was raging throughout Kent, and on no account could his Majesty's government consent to give the stag a passport back into his native land, even though gold collars and beds of roses were awaiting him. They wired Etaples, and they wired the brigadier-general. The former wired the latter that the stag must henceforth remain on French soil. The latter gave up in despair. Meanwhile, the stag is contentedly frisking about a comfortable paddock in Etaples, oblivious of the meaning of venison or hoof and mouth disease or maritime law. Or even gold collars and roses.-New York Tribune.

WITCHES IN BLACK CATS ROAM OVER HOUSE TOPS

MANY are the superstitions connected with the sleek domestic cat. Even cat-haters will not turn the purring black Tom from their doors, for they know the good luck he brings; brigadier-general took heart and wired again to nor will they dare to ill-treat him because of the bad luck that will inevitably follow.

Should he saunter across her path as she leaves the church on her wedding day, rubbing his head against her satin gown, the bride, however much she may dislike him, and however grimy he may be, will welcome his attentions. and rejoice at the happy omen of good luck in store for her. Another cat superstition is that he must not approach a sleeping babe's cot, or there will be trouble, and another, that if a cat sneezes some one in the house will be ill.

To dream of a cat means that one's friends are false. Treachery is afoot. But if the animal is yet a young and playful kitten the meaning is reversed and powerful friends are watch ing over the dreamer.

Those who believe the superstition that the spirits of witches dwell in black cats should be very careful to resist the temptation just now of throwing water over the night warblers on the roofs; for it is said that in the spring months witches in the shape of black cats roam over the house tops. It is truly dangerous to offend e witch-seven years' bad luck!

Conspiracy of the Realtors To Sell Whole City of Toronto

City's Champion Booster Pick-Feast to Go to Big Conven-Washington.

By F. G. GRIFFIN

EORGE F. BABBITT would have enjoyed being there. They were all Good Fellows. They were chuckful of pep and inspirations and slogans. He would have been calling them by their Christian names in the first five Sinclair Lewis should certainly have been there. He would have enjoyed it, too.

The occasion was a talk-feast held a few days ago of the Toronto Real Estate Board. They ate: excellent stuff, turkey and trimmings, cranberry sauce and all. Then they orated. A contest, no less, to decide who among them was the best booster. Yes, George F, should certainly have been there. He would have had a real idea to bring home to Zenith city. Being a real estate man himself and all that, he would certainly have enjoyed it. One can imagine him back in his best lil' old burg telling the boys about the rip-snortin' time he had in Toronto. Boosters, old man, boosters everyone of them. Good fellows, too. Say, that young Lyons sure was a spell-binder. And there was a chap called Shannon, a sort of an Irish lad-now there was a salesman if ever old George F. saw one. Yes, siree, he sure had the blarney.

About forty members of the board sat down to dinner at the Prince George Hotel. Afterwards eight of them took part in the contest, the prize being a free trip to Washington, pullman included, to the annual meeting in June of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, where a big contest will be held to decide who is the best booster of the old home town on the North American continent. Here S. E. Lyons, Toronto's entrant, will pit his silver tongue against the honeyed eloquence, the forensic skill, the persuasive pleading of the best boosters from ail the best cities between Waskash, Me., and

Floods of Golden Eloquence

You get the idea? In the old days dying gladiators fought with meat axes, jousters used lances, duellists chose pistols at daybreak or rapiers, with coffee afterwards for one; fair rivals looked daggers-but the real estate men scorned all the outward tools of mortal combat and selected the weapon with which they are most familiar in everyday business, the tongue. In a beauty contest a face is a fortune. In a booster contest a tongue may mean a North American championship. So tongues it was. Not in a Tower of Babel way or in a clattering argu-

If you have ever met the tongue of a real esed at Rip-Snortin' Talk- tate salesman when he is trying to sell you merely an attractive suburban lot or a six-roomed tion of Real Estate Men in the heights to which he will soar when trying to sell the whole of Toronto. For that is of course exactly what these boosters were trying to do-

So after the dinner the names of the eight contestants were put in a hat and taken out in turn, when each man made a five-minute speech in praise of Toronto. Rev. J. B. Paulin and Prof. W. E. Findley, of St. Andrew's College, sat back to listen in judgment. Major E. W. Coke was master of ceremonies. And there was a timekeeper with a stop watch. Time was to be taken off for applause, so that each contestant should get his full five minutes. No time had to be taken off. But this was no reflection on the eloquence. Rather was it a boost for these boosters. One does not interrupt the golden eloquence of a Demosthenes with applause or the heavyweight logic of a Gladstone.

Every man was trained to a hair. He had been reading Burke's speeches; he had been looking up clippings about Lloyd George. He had studied harbor commission reports, financial statements, banking facts, street cleaning figures, sewer statistics. He had been out looking at Ashbridge's Bay and imbibing poetry. He had been cultivating a resonant voice and appropriate

Picked Boosters Compete

E had dictated his speech at last in fine, flowing sentences which made his stenographer gasp with awe and stuck in the odd joke which made her giggle. Not that he was allowed to use this typewritten speech, for the rules of combat called for cleared decks and no notes, much to the chagrin of one or two of the contestants who had poor memories.

To appreciate to the full the quality of the speeches it must be remembered that the dull winter of real estate is just about ending. Spring is here. For months of inaction these men have had to keep their selling speeches bottled up in their bosoms. So that the real estate man is all keyed up ready to soar. Imagine the opportunity for eight picked boosters on the eve of the busy season.

It was announced that the scratches were Messrs. Goodwin Gibson, who was "off steeplechasing"; Hoidge and LePage. At which there was much regret. There were no post entries, in spite of eloquent invitation by Major Coke.

So the contest started. At the ordinary luncheon clubs a proper enthusiasm is engendered by song. But these real estate men scorned any such adventitious aids to oratory. They started their tongues from scratch.

The first name out of the hat was that of W. E. Barker, who faced the audience and started amidst encouraging applause. Mr. Barker adopted a fine pulpit manner measured and emphatic. This proved his un ping. He had not the time to get the whole speech out of his system. The gong sounded in the middle of one of his most impressive periods.

S. E. Lyons, who won a free trip to Washington by proving himself the champion "booster" of the Toronto Real Estate Board.

Mr. Barker effectively mixed up poetry, geography and statistics. Toronto, he said, had 538,000 population, and 100,000 contributory population. A moment later he was murmuring after the manner of Walt Whitman, that it was "cooled by the wave-washed winds off Ontario's breast." He almost had these real estate salesmen weeping. But tears don't make sales as he was to find when the result was announced. Mr. Barker then started on a little voyage along the waterfront. He had just passed the beautiful Don and struck the beaches whentink, tinkle. Major Coke was striking his coffee cup with his spoon. Mr. Barker had reached his

Slews of Facts and Poetry

S a matter of fact it is a pity he was stopped A sa matter of fact it is a part at the Beach, for the rest of his speech had a lot of awfully nice poetry in it. For example, when he worked around to northern Ontario-not that this is part of Toronto, of course, but remember these speeches were presumably being made in Washington-he said that "the gold comes seething from the cyanide." Oh, yes, and speaking of Toronto's cheap power and the burning of white coal. he declared that there were not "belching smokestacks that prick the sky like irritating needles, pouring out their black pollution into a pure and bracing air."

These are some of the things Mr. Barker would have said with flowers of speech, if he had had time. Unfortunately he was interrupted before he had really got his selling second wind. But some of these days he can work off some of that poetry he didn't use in the contest on some of his clients. They won't know the difference anyway.

Frank McLaughlin, tall and genial, with the the manner nor the method of the rah-rah whoop-but on this occasion just a humble contestant, took the floor next. He wasted no time. First ally made his utterance. He went right back crack, "Fairest city in Canada." A little later, 'Home of beautiful women." Then a slew of facts about population, industries, trade and cheap electric light. A nice mixture of sentiment and hard stuff, related in a convincing, after-dinner way.

English city with the best characteristics of and not very many bootleggers." Thus he mixed the bitter with the sweet, hiding nothing as the best real estate men don't in these modern, honest days. "Toronto," he claimed had everything "that leads to a sane, healthy and happy existence."

He had been only four minutes and into every minute he had packed a pleasant punch. He drew applause.

James Patrick Shannon was next. A low spoken whirlwind. A travelogue at express rate. If Mr. Shannon had been boxing instead of talking he would have had the audience shouting "Attaboy." He certainly gave them action. A punch in every period was his motto. Every sentence told a story. Into his speech he crammed about a million facts about Toronto, all interesting. He must have digested a whole reference library and this was the result. If the award had been for mass of knowledge instead of conformation as well Mr. Shannon would certainly not have been far from first. As it was he was bracketed second. And deserved it. But he sacrificed style to speed. He mentally blackjacked his audience almost into insensibility with his staccato succession

Whew! Help! Did Mr. Shannon miss anything? Not a thing. And he did it with exactly ten seconds to spare. Snug fitting. If he had had ten more facts he could have got them in. A fact a second was his sped. He left out ten facts for leeway. Boy! Oh, boy! One wouldn't like to be at his mercy buying a home.

S. E. Lyons, ultimate winner, was next. Champion booster. But there was nothing blatant about him to s ggest it. He had neither most persuasive grin in the world on his hand- her-upper. Young, perhaps the youngest of the ome Irish face, chairman of the board really conversational gladiators, black-haired, scholarly Toronto. From that he came up to the modern city of homes, "where 67 per cent. own their own homes. Happy homes, too, gentlemen, because cheap electric power has taken the work out of house work." Toronto to him was "a commun-"A combination of an American and an ity of diversified interests, uniquely situated both," was his summing up of Toronto. "A the north, gateway to the greatest natural recity of quiet Sundays, no cabarets, no night life, creational ground in America . . . . a city of homes and hospitality."

Bond-Brokers' Paradise

DERCY JOLIFFE followed in a calm, judicial manner with impressive pauses. At least they would have been impressive if one had not had the feeling that they were due more to the fact that he was not sure just what was coming next, like the small boy who has not learnt his lesson too well. Mr. Joliffe was also historical. It is to be feared that some of the speakers went to the same reference books. Mr. Joliffe was truthful. It was true, he murmured regretfully, that they had to raise the tax bills every year but at any rate Toronto paid its debts. "A city of homes," murmured Mr. Joliffe dreamily as if he saw a vision of firesides and curly-headed boys and sweet girls. Famous for such well-known doctors as Dr. Banting and so on. Bang! Time up.

The trouble for a lot of the later entrants was that most of their thunder had been stolen by the preceding pleaders. But W. H. Bosley managed to inject a note of freshness when he claimed that "Toronto is a hustling, bustling, thriving industrial city with fifty realtors doing a land office business." At which statement some forty realtors present uttered loud and despairing cries of "No, No." Toronto, he went on, had been sold by the red man, before real estate appraisals were available, for $2 cash, three bottles of whiskey, a gun and no second mortgage. A real estate outline of history.

He called Toronto the bond-brokers' paradise. He declared its death rate the lowest in the world except one. In fact the undertakers were advertising for business. A city where the strap hangers had an even chance to get a seat. city where jazz was known as the absence of better music. Where the old died young and the young not at all. And so on for four min-utes and ten seconds when he ran out of boosts.

The tall J. H. Walker next announced himself "no speaker but a silent salesman." After a string of facts like 242 miles of asphalt something or other, 720 miles of concrete pavements "not including what they laid to-day," and an attendance last year of 1,372,302 at the Canadian National Exhibition, Mr. Walker floored the audience by announcing that Toronto had 497 churches of various denominations—and one He should have had time off for applause. R. WALKER was not strong on style but he got in the occasional smashing crack. He would be wandering along casually when bang! H. L. Royce in a portentous manner con cluded the boosting. He too was truthful. H enumerated a list of Toronto's names and it cluded "hogtown." Perhaps that cost him the championship. Scarcely boosting the old town what! Mr. Royce in his statesmanlike addres was great on homes. He came back to then again and again. Homes and happiness. He go off a nice little bit about happiness being God' greatest gift and the impossibility of having during the evening the tender hearted real es tate men were almost moved to tears. An tender stuff like this about homes and happy ness is bound to move them. A touch of their own spring medicine.

"Lay a pipe line from Twin Falls to Puge Sound," was the reply, "and if you can suck a well as you can blow you'll soon have a wate:

Mr. Paulin did not point the moral any mor than that. He announced that he and Mr. Fine ley had bracketed Frank McLaughlin and S. E Lyons for first place; but that if they had to make a choice between them they would give the decision to Mr. Lyons by a tongue. For second place they bracketed James Shannon an H. L. Rogers. Mr. Findley concurred in the de cision, announcing that he was Scotch and hal a house to sell and that this seemed a fine opportunity to get rid of it.

There were no takers.
So the evening ended, Mr. Lyons bearing the honors with the becoming, blushing modesty d

Fifty Dollars In Cash Prizes For the First Correct Solutions To The "Who's Who" Contest, Received At This Office.

This newspaper will distribute the following cash prizes to the first three persons solving correctly or coming closest to solving correctly the "Who's Who" Contest:

FIRST PRIZE TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS IN CASH SECOND PRIZE FIFTEEN DOLLARS IN CASH THIRD PRIZE TEN DOLLARS IN CASH

By solving the contest, we mean to identify the various local businessmen through their cartoons printed in this edition. You will immediately recognize many of the cartoons. Write their names plainly on space near the cartoons. Then turn to the advertisements and they will help you identify the others. For every cartoon in the paper there is an advertisement to match it, making the problem of identification an easier one.

BE SURE AND GIVE THE NAME OF THE BUSINESSMAN, HIS FIRM NAME AND HIS LINE OF BUSINESS.

When you have identified all the cartoon figures or as many as possible, mail your results immediately to the "WHO'S WHO" EDITOR of this newspaper. Mailing the entire section with the names and other details beside the cartoons is perhaps the samplest way of answering the contest.

being my confidence to finish skilfully, accurately and satisfactorily all work which I undertook to perform.

That meant that every job must give satisfaction at a fair price and that all my dealings must be honest and my statements facts, to the best of my knowledge.

The volume of my present business and the extensive repair premises I now occupy are the best evidence of the success of my policy.

Motorists of London and Western Ontario, I want to publicly say thanks. When I embarked in business, I little dreamed the volume that would flow my way. By your liberal patronage you encourage me to continue in my policy with confidence that "a good job well done will find reward."

A "Terry job" cannot be excelled. If we accept it, that's our guarantee to do it right. Bring your problem here and it will be solved, or we will frankly tell you it is beyond our skill.

Ask any patron about our service, then try it once.

Not for her own, but for her family's sake---

Imagine Premier MacDonald's mother shirking any work, no matter how disagreeable, had it meant greater comfort for her family. Or imagine her more time to the education of her son. And so with today's mother - If she believed she could aid her family by doing her own washing, she would not hesitate to do

But because she knows that she can serve them best in other ways, she welcomes the help of the modern laundry. For laundry service gives her time and strength. It gives her eisure hours for beautifying and refining the home that its influence may be sweeter and stronger in the lives of her family. It gives her new energy, new spirit, new youth that keep her ever fresh and attractive to her loved ones.

And these benefits of laundry service are now within the means of every mother. For the Forest City Laundry offers a washday help for every household budget. Our wet wash, 5c lb. Returned the following day, damp ready to iron or starch, smallest charge, 50c,

Canadian Political Scandals Which Have Wrecked Careers and Upset Governments

Though the Present Ontario · Mess Is Bad Enough, It Does not Compare in Un-Savoriness With Some Past Episodes in Our History-Pacific Scandal, Gamey Charges, Manitoba Boodling, and Other Sensations of First Magnitude

By ARTHUR HAWKES

THEY are scandaleering about the Ontario treasury, and, at this writing, everybody is asking, "What next, and who?" It is sometimes useful to look over old scandal-fields. Now, it is said, is the acceptable time, lest the flurries in Toronto and in our neighbor Newfoundland be confused, as to magnitude, with what is going on at Washington, and with what has gone on at home in years well past.

Let two things first be said. The first is that, delving into unsavory episodes of Canadian publie life, you are struck by the improvement in tone which distinguishes this century. Our politicians have been too perverse in office and too puritan out of power. Saintliness does not yet surround the franchise. But, compared with what we were, we are scarcely recognizable. Comparisons are not as odious to our contemporaries as they are to our predecessors.

Secondly, nothing in the Canadian situation need make us mourn any inferiority to our British relatives. In some respects public life is on a higher plane over there. But there is quite as much, if not more, to lament in the way British campaign funds are managed as there is in the financing of parties in this dominion. In Britain the Fountain of Honor, the monarch, has been drawn on to meet electioneering obligations. In Canada, poor in cash but more expansive in unexploited natural resources, charters and contracts have been manipulated. There hasn't been as much pharisaism about it as there has been and is over the bestowal of honors that have been bought and paid for. Every device of tight little island. Even the game of creating capital by the stroke of the pen, as a means of insuring profits that would otherwise look unjust, in comparison with the amount of capital actually invested in an enterprise, was practised by the Hudson Bay Company in the seventeenth century. It is only in our own time that commissions in the army were bought like cattle, and men achieved command over the lives of their fellow citizens because they paid for majorities and colonelcies.

Three generations have properly lauded Joseph Howe of Nova Scotla as a great patriot. Editor of the Nova Scotian, he became famous through a scandal which, perhaps more than any other, constructively served Canada. Halifax governor, without an atom of responsibility to the citizens. In 1835 Howe attacked the bench as negligent and corrupt. They had by one stratagem and another improperly taken from the people over £30,000. One active magistrate had for years filched from one establishment dedicated to the poor and destitute at least £300 per annum. From the poor and distressed another magistrate whose services the country could well spare had taken a thousand pounds.

A Sort of Family Compact

S UCH boldness in the press was unknown. The magistrates were in a sort of family compact. The revenue from imports levied by imperial authority, and from sale of crown lands, was spent by the governor at his own sweet will. Howe was instantly prosecuted for criminal libel, a charge which did not permit of the accusations being proved in court-the greater the truth the worse the libel.

Several lawyers advised Howe to make his peace and take his medicine in fine and imprisonment. He borrowed their books, read everything on criminal libel, decided, against their derision, to defend himself, though he had never made a public speech. He addressed the jury for six hours, and though the judge told the jury to convict him of libel, he was acquitted. An extract from his speech, attacking the magistrates for not suing him in the civil court:

There is a certain part of a ship through himself to the derision of the deck, because i is taken as an admission of cowardice and in crawled in here, through this legal lubberhole of indictment, I would have sent them out of court in a worse condition than Falstaff's ragged regiment—they would not have dared to march even through Coventry in a

It was the scandal of the Halifax jobbing magistrates that furnished Nova Scotia with her champion of responsible government, and helped to preserve the British Empire when it was menaced by those who would retain to the petty governors of colonies more power than the king wielded in the imperial capital.

It is remarkable that three premiers in British North America have been driven from office by the truthful tongue of scandal, three within the last dozen years-Flemming of New Brunswick, Roblin of Manitoba, and Squires of Newfoundland. Flemming was a storekeeper whose wife was said to have done much for his education. He was an attractive personality, and became premier when Mr. Hazen was called to Ottawa by Mr. Borden in 1911. He fell because it was proved that he received money from timber limit operators which no man in his position should ever have allowed himself to touch. It was not specifically proved that the cash went into the party campaign fund; but that was the inference

New Brunswick has had its share of strange political moralities, and after Flemming's disgrace it was actually proposed by his party to send him to Ottawa, but the scheme miscarried our corrupt electioneerers was imported from the As to that, Ontario need not feel exalted, for the present M.P. for Carleton is the same Garland whom Sir Robert Borden drove from the House because he dabbled in a war contract, using his clerk as a Snyder.

Quebec's First-Class Scandal

O UEBEC, as it happens, furnished simultaneously two first-class scandals, one Liberal and provincial, the other Conservative, and federal. In 1891 Premier Mercier was dismissed by the lieutenant-governor. Thomas McGreevy was expelled from the Commons and jailed and the minister of public works, Sir Hector Langevin perforce resigned. That dark year proved that the exposures of the Canadian Pacific scandal which had destroyed Macdonald's first Dominion government had not wrought the correction of corruption which reformers desired and of which experienced patriots despaired Indeed, from many points of view the scandals of 1891 were far worse than the great campaign of bribery of ministers of the crown which gave Sir Hugh Allan a bad eminence in Canadian

Sir Hugh Allan was the richest Canadian with an income of over $500,000 a year. He wanted to build the transcontinental railway which was essential to the emergence of Canada as a North American power, and was, indeed, part of the pact under which British Columbia had come a Canadian province. A vast fortune awaited whoever could make the dream run on rails. It was only half a generation since a railway had been built from Montreal to Toronto, the age was one of prodigal adventuring into railway enterprises. Members of parliament thought it quite respectable to head railway companies that got subsidies from parliamentthere was no more compunction about that with most of them than there was among Puritans who bought public offices.

Allan wanted his charter. Like wealthy men eager for social glory in Britain, he was willing to pay the politicians who would give it him. "Don't write; send," is a wise maxim of the machine politician across the line. Ottawa, in 1872, was much too candid for any such precaution. Sir George Etienne Cartier, the Quebec chief of the government party wrote to Sir Hugh Allan on the day before the fifth birthday of confederation:

pect to be assisted with funds in the pending elections, and any amount which you or your company shall advance for that purpose shall be recouped to you. A memorandum of immediate requirements is below." On August 7th Allan wrote, "I have already paid away about $250,000, and will have to pay at least $50,000 before the end of the month. I don't know as even that will finish it, but

The first payments were Macdonald $35,000, Cartier $50,000, and Langevin $115,000. Allan spent on railroads account $350,000

Forced Government's Resignation

HE government won the election, but next session the truth was exposed, an investigation begun. It didn't seem to be getting anywhere, when the fatal letters and telegrams were disclosed. The government resigned. The Mackenzie government won the 1874 election and held office till 1878, when Sir John came back -and the old orthodoxies of maintaining power with him.

A Conservative member was J. Israel Tarte. who changed his views, and in May, 1891, charged, in the House that Thomas McGreevy, railroad promoter, contractor, member of the Quebec harbor commission, chairman of the House of Commons railway committee, and a close assoclate of Sir Hector Langevin, (they lived together in Ottawa) had systematically accepted bribes. Here are the main counts in Tarte's Larkin, Connolly and Company, dredging contractors, to get Thomas McGreevy's influence gave his brother a thirty per cent. interest in their firm. McGreevy used undue influence to get them a Quebec harbor contract, for which he received $25,000. He was paid $22,000 for getting them a graving dock contract at Levis, and $27,000 for securing another dredging contract at much above the lowest tender. He demanded the money from that firm in Langevin's name. He was paid $200,000 by the Larkin firm, in eight years, as their agent on the harbor commission, in parliament, and with Langevin.

Sir Richard Cartwright, in his reminiscences, says that while McGreevy was in jail a quorum for a cabinet meeting could often be gathered in the corridor. This scandal, which gave Canada a very bad name abroad, produced a delightful example of Satan rebuking sin. The New York Times published an interview with one Murphy, an excise commissioner of New York, who admitted fleeing to Canada in 1877 because he was $50,000 short in his accounts. He became a contractor in association with McGreevy's brother, and in 1891 returned to New York to make restitution. Murphy said the Langevin crowd was worse than the Tweed gang ever were. "We bribed them all, and generally acquired nearly everything in sight. Public officials in Canada, so far as my experience goes, do not have that suspicious hesitancy in accepting money that characterizes some officials in this country."

It doesn't seem the Senate's business to probe a provincial financial affair. But a third of a century ago partisanship was a fiercer dog than it is now; and while the Liberals were after McGreevy and Langevin, the Tories went after the extraordinarily popular and brilliant Mercier. The Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company, to end disputes about control, sought an entirely dominion charter. Their case was dealt with by a Senate committee, which unearthed these facts: The railway was bonused by the province. Armstrong, its first contractor, lost money, and turned the job to another, who also failed, and 80 miles of the road were uncompleted. Premier Mercier became M.P.P. for Bonaventure and promised to finish the line. A reorganized company was given a subsidy for $280,000 to finish the line and pay outstanding Armstrong put in a claim for the whole $298,000, though $75,000 would satisfy him. He reduced the claim to $175,000, which was paid by Mercier's minister of public works. But he gave $100,000 of it to Ernest Pacaud, editor of L'Electeur, nominally for services rendered in obtaining the settlement. Pacaud applied the noney to meeting promissory notes given by Liberal supporters of Mercier for electioneering purposes. The Senate committee found that the province was illegally deprived of this $175,000. Lieutenant-governor Angers, an appointee of the Conservative government at Ottawa, went after Mercier for paying so large a sum without an order-in-council. Mercier protested that nothing was wrong. He didn't say so, but he meant that that was the way election expenses were often met, which nobody could deny. He was dismissed, and died broken-hearted a few years later. During his heyday one of his daughters married a young lawyer of humble origin, Lomer Gouin, who was premier of Quebec fifteen years.

The latest Quebec scandal was the exposure a few months before the war of the chairman of the private bills committee in the legislature and two members of the upper House, one of them a legal partner of the premier, for taking money to put through a wide-open charter for a fairs association, the whole cost of which, $50,000, was put up by Lorne McGibbon, then owner of the Montreal Herald. Only about $9,500 was to go to the legislators-half of which was paid. The remainder chiefly went to the Burns detective Agency for running the decoy office in Montreal. equipped with a detectaphone, which turned out some remarkable conversations with the chairman of private bills on the corruptibility of his

The Big Gamey Sensation

T is twenty-one years since the Ontario parliament buildings echoed so much scandal as has marked the first Fergusonian session. In 1903 the Gamey charges set the province alight, and assured the Liberal debacle which, in 1905, ended a Liberal regime of thirty-two years. As Joseph Chamberlain told Premier Ross in Lonhang on to office for so long; but the Liberal office-holders had not learned wisdom from political decay. In 1902 a general election gave Ross a majority of three-and a very shaky majority in view of skin-of-the-teeth victories and election protests. Liberal stalwarts do not point with pride to their party methods of that epoch. Just before the House met, R. Gamey, Conservative member for Manitoulin, in a Globe interview on January 30, said he would support the government. Manitoulin was his politics and he believed New Ontario would get fair treatment.

On March 13 Gamey told an astonished House this story: In August, Captain Sullivan, of malodorous electioneering reputation, informed him at Allandale that the government had plenty of evidence to invalidate his election At Toronto Sullivan's son Frank, employed in the public works department, told him that as the government must have more support, he could make $5,000 by a change of allegiance. In a few days young Sullivan and a Liberal lawyer named Grant told him of a stock company proposition in which he could make $3,000 in six weeks and $2,000 at the end of the legislative session. D. A. Jones, a Liberal worker of Beeton, pressed him to turn over.

Gamey then told J. R. McGregor, secretary of the Manitoulin Conservative Association, of this, having decided to lure the Liberals on, and then expose the plot. In September, both Sullivans discussed his getting $3,000 down and $2,000 after the session. They took him to Provincial Secretary Stratton, with whom the bargain was made, with the addition that he was to have the patronage of his riding, and any help possible in conciliating his Conservative supporters.

He was given a letter to sign, pledging his support to the government and declaring that he had received no consideration for so doing. That day Stratton instructed Mr. A. B. Aylesworth to withdraw the election protest. Next day he went with Frank Sullivan to see Stratton, and gave him the letter. He and Stratton retired to the smoking room, where a large envelope was brought in and laid on the table. He found in it $3,000 in Bank of Ontario bills. half of which he gave to Sullivan. He kept Mc-Gregor advised of all this. Before giving out the interview to the Globe, various appointments were made in his riding on his recommendation. On October 30 a similar letter to the one presented to him by Stratton was mailed by him to the premier, according to promise to Stratton. On January 29, after leaving Stratton's office, where the Globe interview had been written, another $1,000 was given him by Sullivan.

Two nights before making this statement, Gamey called Sullivan to the Crossin piano works, in which Gamey had a financial interest, and discussed all these proceedings with him, having concealed shorthand writers in the room, one of whom was a young fellow named William H. Price, of the Gore Bay Conservative, and now provincial treasured conducting a before-thepiano probe into the peculiarities of his predecessor. Having told this story Gamey walked across the House, gave the documents in the case to the Conservative leader, J. P. Whitney; and scandal was shouting on the housetons.

Savage Partisan Ferocity

HERE were debates before investigation and after. The government was savagely attacked by Whitney for appointing Chancellor Boyd and Chief Justice Falconbridge as royal commissioners. Reading of these debates gives one the impression of a partisan ferocity of recklessness which seems happily since to have been assuaged if not yet exorcised. Nothing is more remarkable in our public life than the style in which lawyers will assail judges who conduct investigations without their robes.

The two eminent judges finally found that Gamey was unreliable and that there was no proof that Stratton had bought him in the way alleged. There was no doubt about his having received money, but where it not for them to discover. In the end the premier said of the finding: "We were on trial before the ablest jury and before the high court of the people of this country. We have passed through that unscathed; no blot on our reputation, no stain upon our escutcheon, no reproach cast upon the manner in which we have administered the affairs of the country." He also gave Stratton a glowing certificate of character. As to all of which, one who was very far removed from the passions of that time, can only say that he is very much amazed, at such claims in such a setting as the closing years of a government which old supporters like Sam Blake, N. W. Rowell, and W. E. Raney, refused to support. Premier Ross' final comment on the scandal was to drop Stratton before the next election. Gamey was made a Conservative hero, for whom a cabinet place was fully predicted. Mr. Whitney's final comment was not to call Gamey to the

Manitoba, wherein twice, since Confederation. the attempt has been made to run republics under the British crown, has had dirty troubles of its own. It has the sad distinction among the provinces of seeing one of its premiers and about half his cabinet in the criminal dock, in the midst of a war in which Manitobans were dying to preserve their pure and democratic institutions. Like the Gamey episode, that ending of several public careers was the culmination of years of devotion to the disreputable old orthodoxies of partisan warfare. An Ottawan, who in 1912 regarded Bob Rogers as seventy-five per cent. of the brains on Parliament Hill, said that the Manitoba machine had Cox's in Pittsburg, and the Chicago outfit beaten to a

Sir Rodmond Roblin had been premier of Manitoba fifteen years, when the session of 1915 opened, following a general election of the preceding summer, which much reduced his majority. In 1913 a contract had been given Kelly and Sons for new parliament buildings. In the public accounts committee the Opposition became very curious about changes in the plans from piles in the foundation, with reinforced steel work above to caissons driven down to the rock and concrete substituted for the reinforced

The effect of the attack was that about eight hundred thousand dollars had been improperly spent, on the authority of the provincial architect, whose judgment had overridden that of Mr. Simon, the eminent English architect, on whose plans the great structure was being reared. It was difficult to get papers and evidence before the committee. On the last day of March the committee decided to report that everything was all right, and voted down an amendment by the Hon. A. B. Hudson, alleging improprieties. At 1.20 in the morning the legislature adjourned, to meet at ten, to clean the slate and be prorogued. At ten o'clock the premier asked for an adovernight memorialized the governor for a royal commission of investigation, and he could not ignore so solemnly made a demand. There would be a royal commission.

Roblin Threw Up Sponge

CIR Douglas Cameron, the lieutenant governor, had taken the advice of Chief Justice Howell, telling him that he had lost confidence in his Attorney-general Howden. If Roblin had not agreed to the royal commission he would have been dismissed, as Mercier was. The evidence before the commission soon began to justify the government's assailants. Roblin thought the whole matter could be ended by the government's resignation and the quiet accession of Norris the Liberal leader. The basis of this hope seems to have been a statement by Kelly that he had given $12,000 to the Liberal campaign fund the previous summer, in sure and certain hope that, if the Liberals won they would say nothing about his arrangements with the Roblin government. That idea fell down, and the investigation was carried to its logical conclusion, which landed Kelly in jail and Roblin and several of his colleagues in the dock, whence they were delivered by a disagreement of the jury, and the abatement of the sort of partisanship which not so many years before would have pursued them to the uttermost. The commission consisted of Chief Justice Mathers of the King's bench and his brother Macdonald of the King's bench, and Sir Hugh John Macdonald, son of Sir John A., and himself a former premier of Manitoba. It found that the charges in the Hudson amendment were

That there had been gross and culpable negligence by the government in letting contracts, and changing construction.

That there had been systematic violation of contracts, connived at by the government.

That the province had been defrauded of sums exceeding $800,000, ($892,098 exactly.) That, as an example, one item of 10,397 yards of material charged for was never supplied by the contractors, and in this connection alone the province was defrauded of $243,809.65.

During the inquiry a foreman named Salt, who was in difficulties with the records on his books, fled to the United States. Brought back, he testified that $250,000 had been fraudulently paid for foundational work. The architect Horwood swore that from the beginning it was intended to alter the foundation methods. Several members of the government gave him to understand that he was to allow the contractors undue profits on the caissons, out of which they were to give $100,000 to the Conservative campaign fund for the general elections in July, 1914. Dr. Montague had instructed him to destroy all letters and papers likely to reveal the truth. Coldwell advised the fixing and altering of Salt's books. Simon, the English architect, testified that he complained of the changes in plan and was told by Horwood, "Well, you know the government have to make a campaign fund out of the extras." He had written to Sir James Aikins, his lawyer, in December, 1914, that he was sick of the whole business and wanted to clear out. No wonder

Saskatchewan, Alberta and B.C.

SASKATCHEWAN and Alberta, the youngsters of the provinces, have had flurries of alleged impropriety, for, even on the virgin plains, it seems that what Sir Wilfrid Laurier used to call human means may be used to win elections. In Saskatchewan there have been inquiries about contracts for school books, and payments for road work. Over the latter a high official of the local government board lost his job. ing was ever brought home cu

In Alberta there has been an investigation about financing the railway into the Peace River country, and there are authenticated stories of way-a worker given so much to get out the vote in a given district, and all he could save for himself, provided the vote was cast, would be nobody's business but his own

In British Columbia the McBride government was supported by what was called a machine as efficient as the one in Manitoba, The overbuilding of railways such as the Pacific Great Eastern, the white elephant between Vancouver and Fort George, has been connected with electioneering funds in ways which differ not materially from the time-dishonored practises of farther east in former times. Premier Macthirty-two. His government for years was under fire, even though in British Columbia there was quite the average of talk about the pot calling the kettle black. Of investigations perhaps the most interesting—and it can only be very briefly mentioned here—was that of 1906 into a scandal ventilated by the Vancouver World, and known as the Pendray case

The minister of lands and works was the Hon. R. F. Green, who afterwards became Dominion M.P. for West Kootenay and is now a senator. The firm of W. J. Pendray and Sons of Victoria wished to buy a small strip of government land for a factory. It was alleged that there was juggling with tenders-that Green or somebody in his department very close to him had wrongfully revealed the amount of a tender which came in first, and the disclosure of which enabled government kissing to go by favor, as it often had gone before. The story was not edifying, and the introduction of a woman's name into it gave gossips some excuse to wag their heads, and purists occasion to thank God that they were not as politicians are.

The government did a remarkable thing-it appointed Fred Peters, K.C., a Liberal, to conduct an investigation. He exonerated Mr. Green saying, "I can see nothing wrong with it. Nothing has been done in the slightest degree worthy of censure. Under the circumstances the World

HEROIC WIFE IN OVERALLS IS BLIND HUSBAND'S EYES

Congressman and Helpmeet Conquer Together-Were in Trenches and on Torpedoed Boat

N her way she is just as celebrated as the Lady with the Lamp-the Lady in Overalls. She is the inspiration of Washington.

The story of Margaret Schall is the story of a woman's heroism, and, incidentally, of her husband's as well.

In the office building of the House of Representatives at Washington, you can find this extraordinary pair. On the door is the inscription: "Thomas D. Schall, Minnesota."

Inside, you meet Thomas Schall, the blind congressman, and Margaret, his wife, his eyes, his secretary, in very truth his helpmeet, and she is wearing blue overalls.

People look at her twice, not because of the overalls, but because of herself; short of stature, with tiny hands and feet, blue twinking eyes, and a mass of wavy blond hair and blue overalls.

"I began to wear them in wartime," she told the author of the Boudoir Mirrors of Washington, "when we didn't have much money for dresses, and they are so comfortable and convenient I always wear them for the office. When it comes to filing books and papers, Mrs. Schall finds that overalls help a great deal in climbing up and down ladders to reach the proper book-

It was at college that they met. Tom had struggled up from obscurity. He had been a chore boy, bootblack, newsboy and janitor to his own law office in Minneapolis.

Then they were married. Four happy years passed, and success was just in the offing. Then -tragedy hurled its fateful bolt.

Tom Schall was never to see his wife's face again. He leaned down to light his cigar at the electric cigar lighter. There was a short circuit, and Thomas Schall was blind. "What shall I do?" he asked,

"I will be your eyes and you shall still practice law," said Margaret Schall.

Blindness did not conquer Tom Schall and his little wife. She went through law to be able to help draft her husband's bills. When he ran for Congress, she drove his car, choosing the right place so that the wind would blow his voice towards the crowd. When they went abroad in 1918 permission was granted to her to accompany her husband into the front line trenches, where she described for his sightless eyes the pages of history that were being written Homeward bound, the greatest test of her courage unexpectedly came. But it was unexpected to her, used to foreseeing things. She had arisen early the morning the torpedo hit their ship. Hurying below, she assisted her husband to the deck. Then she tied him to her waist with a rope. As they were both good swimmers, she counted on guiding him at sea as she had guided him on land.

The captain thrilled when he saw the sight. No hysterics. No weeping. Simply "Goodmorning, Captain," in a cheery voice.

The captain cited Margaret Schall for bravery. After the war, she was presented with a decoration, which she is saving for her twoyear-old daughter Peggy when she grows up.

Thomas Schall is recognized as one of the ablest men in Congress. You can think what you like about Margaret Schall. "You don't find her at the women's clubs, at the bridge luncheons, at receptions, or jazzing till dawn," says the anonymous chronicler. "Her life is too full of work, or sacrifice, and, most wonderful of all, of a great joy for what she has achieved."

GUELPH'S BLIND PIANIST INSPECTS HIS NEW HOUSE

GOOD story is told of Mr. Albert Kaiser, Guelph's well known blind pianist. Some few years ago Mr. Kaiser was having a house built. One Saturday afternoon a friend of his was passing the new home which at the time was practically only a skeleton of a house. Two or three children playing thereabouts remarked that a blind man had gone in there, pointing to the house. The gentleman immediately became alarmed about Mr. Kaiser, as there were no floors or stairs as yet erected in the place. He found Mr. Kaiser up on the second floor feeling his way with his cane. He remarked to him, "What are you doing here." The reply came back. "Oh, I just came up to see how the men are getting along with the

Superstitious See Curse Of Hope Diamond for McLean

Stone Taken From Idol's Breast Leaves Trail of Misfortune Wherever It Has Been-Brings Fatalities to Owners - Possibility of Bad Luck Foreseen By McLean in Clause of the Agreement of Purchase.

Y AS nothing been heard of the notorious Hope diamond for a few years? "Just wait," say the superstitious.

Then comes the Tea Pot Dome oil scandal. If the Hope diamond isn't mixed up in that everything seems to be mixed up in itsomething will be wrong with Fate as a mystery writer.

Then the papers ring with the name Edward Beale McLean, who has sent $100,000 in checks to Albert B. Fall, secretary of the interior, before that gentleman was driven from the garden of Washington. The Hope dia-

Mrs. McLean wears it sometimes around her neck. Philip Laszlo, the eminent Hungarian portrait painter, shows it in his famous canvas of Mrs. McLean. The "bad luck" gem hangs from the shorter of the two chains about her neck. It is of a wonderful blue and weighs slightly more than a quarter of an ounce.

Thirteen years ago, when he bought the Hope diamond, Edward B. McLean was not as superstitious as he probably is now.

Even without the Hope diamond his story was as queer a romance as modern chronicles can produce. All his life Ned McLean has had someone looking after him. His millionaire father saw to that. When the young man of 33 tried to break his father's will he found that it was iron-clad. By the terms of a compromise, the son might have a voice in the management of all his father's properties, including the Washington Post and the Cincinnati Enquirer, but his income was restricted to the $1,000,000 interest; he could make no business actions without the approval of bankers and lawyers his father had named. But there were the $50,000,000 in his wife's fortune, the millions of Thomas F. Walsh, the Colorado mining magnate who from a humble Irish origin had risen to become the partner and close personal friend of King Leopold of Belgium.

The memorandum of sale seems to prove that McLean had a few doubts about the st tragedy. "Should any fatality occur in the family of Edward B. McLean within six months, the said Hope diamond is agreed to be exchanged for jewelry of equal value at the selection of Wilton J. Lambert," read an ominous clause.

It was eight years later before tragedy came. This was the celebrated case of the "hundred milwheeled around in a specialy constructed steel go-cart, rocked to sleep in a gold cradle, and guarded night and day from threatened kidnaping by more armed detectives than in the suite of the president of the United States. But one day in 1919, while playing outside the beautiful Washington estate of his parents called Friendship, he suddenly eluded his guards, and, dashing through the gates to the roadway, was killed by a passing Ford car.

It was from Cartier of Paris that McLean had of its tragic history, stretching back, according

Negro Pullman Porter Precedes Railway Presidents as College Lecturer

THE creed of John Baptist Ford of New York, negro Pullman porter and college lecturer—shown here with his family—may be summed up in two words: "Education" and "service". At 17, Ford, a South Carolina cotton picker, could neither read nor write. This week he lectured before the students of the Tuck School of Administration and Finance at Dartmouth University, having been requested to do so by Prof. Malcolm Keir, who was impressed with his intelligence and efficiency while traveling on Ford's car. 'A man is happy when he is giving service to other people," said Ford, and, "Every one of my children is going through college." His 14-year-old daughter, Ruth, won a gold medal for scholarship in public school last year. Ford's lecture preceded other lectures on railroading delivered by railroad presidents and bankers. He told the students that porters respected the man who tipped and the man who didn't tip. but declared that tips were necessary if the porter were to live on a salary of $65 to $85 a month with decent living quarters, costing $70 a month or more in New York. Asked as to the proper sum for a tip, he answered: "Let your conscience be your guide."

it was stolen from the breast of a Burmese idol for Tavernier, the great French traveler. For his diamond and his discoveries, he was ennobled by Louis XIV. of France, tradition says. But Tavernier was torn to pieces by wild dogs at the gates of Moscow. Madame de Montespan, the favorite of Louis XIV., who wore the gem, immediately lost her place in the grand monarch's heart. In 1792 the Princess de Lamballe wore the diamond at the bidding of Marie Antoinette. It was not long before her head was being carried through the streets of Paris on a pole by the revolutionaries and Marie Antoinette was guillotined. It is even hinted that Marat had possession of it before he was assassinated by Charlotte Corday. The notorious gem then went to Antwerp. The son of William Fals, the lapidary, stole it from his father's shop. The parent committed suicide. Fals, the younger, sold it to a man named Beaulieu who died from dissipation in London in 1820. Daniel Eliason, a London jewel merchant, bought the great diamond from Beaulieu, and sold it for $90,000 to Henry Hope, a rich Englishman and grandfather to Lord Francis Hope, who inherited it.

Of interest to Canadians is this part of the story. Although bankrupt, Lord Francis Hope, in spite of the offer of a million dollars to give her up, married May Yohe, the beautiful favorite of the London music halls. Years ago, she sang during a tour in the Canadian theatres. Her song, "Honey Ma Honey," and her laughing carefree face won all hearts.

But troubles started for May Yohe when she began to wear the Hope Diamond. To it she attributed all her marital troubles. Lord Francis divorced her. In 1910 she was even reduced to running a third rate boarding house at Seattle. Only a year or two ago, did she win her way back to the vaudeville stage.

Meanwhile, the Hope Diamond went on its way to E. B. McLean. Simon Frankel, of New York, bought it for $168,000. He had financial misfortunes. Jacques Colot, its next owner, went mad and committed suicide. A Russian prince lent it to an actress and that night as she wore it on the stage he shot her dead. A Greek merchant sold it to Sultan Abdul Hamid, of Turkey, and was killed in an accident, while the sultan, after being deposed, died insane. Mr. McLean secured the notorious stone from Pierre Cartier, a French jeweler, who acted as the agent of the Young Turks. The superstitious, pointing to the strange clause in the purchase agreement, show how even at the time of the sale, McLean in the back of his mind had hidden fears about the result.

Smith to Appear.

Davey Smith is going to be able o appear after all, according to his ttending physician, and this is one of the bouts in which some real rivalry will come to the surface, as Fred Burke of Stratford, Davey's week in the Classic City. Davey has no quarrel with Stratford as a Classic City, but he apparently thinks that the decision should be listed among the classic literature dealing with the exploits of the James Boys.

Herbie Cabot of the Elgin Regi-ment, and Bumps Wright of the United Vets, are going to transfer their nome town feud over to this metropolis for settlement. Wright won the decision the last time, and Cabot still thinks the judges were the victims of a case of mistaken identity.

Heavy Go Uncertain.

King Byrne of London and Brown of St. Thomas also have an argument to warm all over, and there's a sus-picion abroad that the concoction will be steaming hot by the time these heir work. Byrne won the last battle, but it was close.

Today it will be definitely known whether Cy Pook will do a turn with Evan Shute, the Varsity boxer. The card will stand out all alone without this bout, but this will be a frothy top layer to the bill if shute can be induced to make the trip up here.

stocks. Declines were in the majority, but the active issues were firmer. Abitibi was the strongest stock of the pulp and paper group, while Spanish River gave way 3 points to 97½ in a narrow market. As was the case yesterday, offerings of Abitibi were well taken. The stock started at 55½, and moved up to 57, closing at 56%, after starting at 50. The closing price represents a net gain of % points.

Steel of Canada common gave way to 74, and closed at 74½. Toronto Raiis were inactive and ½ point easier at 84½. Canada Car issues sold off considerably. The preferred, which has been inactive for some time, was traded in at 88, and the common was 2 points lower at 45½.

Dominion Canners lost ground to 27¼. Maple Leaf issues went lower in a narrow market. The common was ¼ point off at 65, and the preferred dropped 2 points at 89½. A further drive against Dome Shares on the New York market caused recessions on the local board. An extreme low point of at $16.80, a decline of 30c.

The balance of the mining section of the market was firmer. Tough Oakes moved up 2½ points to 70 in fairly active trading during the afternoon. Keeley sold throughout the day at $2.30, and an odd lot was taken at $2.32. Holly sold firmer at $12.25. Imperial Oil recovered part of its recent drop in a single small transaction yesterday at 108.

Montreal—The bad condition of country roads had a retarding effect on business generally. Wholesalers look forward to improvement after opening of navigation and improved weather conditions. Hardware business fairly brisk. Drygoods trade quiet. A very slight improvement is noted in boots and shoes. In some lines there has been a little improvement in collections, especially in groceries.

Toronto—Wholesale houses report some improvement in volume of orders. Mild weather recently has had a good effect on purchase of spring goods. Feeling is generally optimistic in the wholesale trade. Retail trade also notes some improvement, aided by attractive bargain prices. Not much change is reported in either wholesale or retail lines. Trade generally is somewhat quiet; collections the same.

TWO RESOLUTIONS

Association of Congregational Churches Favor Church Union and O. T. A.

Special to The Advertiser Sherkston, April 11. - Important esolutions on the church union bill and the O. T. A. were unanimously adopted by the members of the Western Ontario Association of Congregational Churches at their session here Wednesday afternoon. Both resolutions will be forwarded to Premier Ferguson, and the church union resolution will also go to Premier union. The Presbyterian denomina tion has again and again voted in favor of church union. We ask that the will of the majority, as in all such matters, rule.

The church union resolution which was moved by Rev. J. L. Alexander, Hamilton, chairman of the Congrega-tion Union of Canada, reads:

"3. Further, we would deplore the interference of the state with the church, which, in our opinion, destroys the principle of religious freedom and liberty, which is a priceless heritage of our English speaking The resolution concerning the O

T. A., moved by J. C. Bale, Hamilton,

"The Western Association of Congregational Churches, in session at Sherkston, Ont., desires to affirm its conviction that the Ontario temperance act is the best temperance legislation ever enacted in our province. "That its benefits so far are visible everywhere, and will increase with further application.

"That is has not yet been long enough in force to demonstrate its full value, and that a referendum at this time is not necessary. "But, being a law of this province, this association believes that its enforcement should be more vigorous

WOMAN SUFFERED

Weak and Nervous. Made Well by Lydia E.Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Webbwood, Ont. - "I was in a very weak and run-down pervous condition. always tired from the time I got up until I went to bed. Sleap did not rest me at all. My sister recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to me and others told me about it, but it was from my sister's advice that I took it. It did not take long until I felt stronger, headaches left me and my appetite came back to me. I am a farmer's wife and have many things to do outside the house, such as milking, looking after the poultry, and other chores. I heartily recommend the Vegetable Compound to all who have the same trouble I had, for it is a fine medicine for women."— Mrs. Louis F. Elsasser, Hillcrest Farm, Webbwood, Ont.

Another Nervous Woman Finds Rehef Port Huron, Mich.—"I suffered for two years with pains in my side, and if I worked very much I was nervous and just as tired in the morning as when I went to bed. I was sleepy all the day and didn't feel like doing any-thing, and was so nervous I would bite my finger nails. One of my friends told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it helped me so much that I soon felt fine." Mrs. CHARLES BEELER, 501-14th St., Port Huron, Mich.

Women who suffer from any femi-nine ailment should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Tomorrow the Hamilton Road Church is celebrating its twelfth anchurch is cereorating its twenth an-niversary. Its inception was in the form of a mission, opened in 1908, in the house now occupied by Alexan-der Stein, 608 Hamilton road. At that time, it was conducted by Rev. ohn Smith. In a little over three years the congregation of the mission had gathered sufficient strength and umbers to contemplate building hurch of their own, and with the lans once under way it was not ong before the new building was long before the new building was completed on a site secured at the intersection of Hamilton road and Trafalgar street. This edifice was formally opened in 1912 and commenced a career of quite indispensable service in this part of the city. Together with the other new churches of the city, the romance of the Hamilton Road Church lies in the Hamilton Road Church lies in the future which faces it. Situated in the heart of a district of workingmen's homes, its prosperity will be a key to that of the city. If London passes the 75,000 mark and reaches out to make her population one of

MAH JONG Foster Talks About Drawing

and Discarding.

By R. F. FOSTER, Author of "Foster on Mah Jong," about. "Laws of Mah Jong," Etc.

One of the peculiarities of Mah Jong is that you cannot draw and keep the tiles you want without discarding in their place some of the tiles that other players want, and the longer you keep what another player is likely to want, the more probable

You may gradually get your hand the fit. into such shape that there are a number of different tiles, which would improve your chances to woo, or to score heavily if you fail to woo, if advantage in keeping something that you drew those tiles from the wail you have eight chances to fill, in or got them from the discards. But preference to something that offers just as soon as you get something you only four chances. Then your object want, you have to discard something in careful discarding should be to you don't want, and as there may be several such tiles in your hand you he can use in four ways only, inwill usually be called upon to give a stead of in eight. You can do better certain amount of consideration to than that, as we shall see if we conthe election, because one of the chief sider what he might have elements of success at this game is good discarding. By good discarding characters, say the 5. If he has is meant to avoid giving your oppon-

All the play is a succession of these different elements of sets that he might hold which the 5 of characters would fill. The same is true of the ing those combinations of tiles which are most likely to improve your own to 5 and 6, 6 and 8, and 8 and 9. hand, and to discard the individual prove the hands of your opponents.

Watch Player on Right.

If the rules governing pungs and the rules governing pungs and chows are clearly understood, it must be evident that the one most to be feared is the player on your right, as he cannot only pung but chow. It does not matter how carefully you which of these four tiles you discard, when you have a choice, you discard, if any player at the table has a pair of those tiles already in his hand, he can take your discard; but none but the player on your right can take it for a sequence, and you can make it less likely for him to be can make it less likely for him to be able to use your discard if you are familiar with the nature of sequences that the familiar with the nature of sequences the familiar with the nature of sequences.

Starting with your own hand, there are four different combinations of tiles which form what are called the elements of sets; that is sets in the A common discard elements of sets; that is sets in the making. Three of these are sequences, and the fourth is a pair.

Leaving aside for the present the parallelection that a pair is always. Leaving aside for the present the consideration that a pair is always useful for the "eyes' to complete the hand for a woo, we shall regard all pairs as potential triplets or kongs.

As already pointed out, if you discard any of the characters or bamboos, any player at the table that has a pair can take it for a pung, and will still be ready to take it later, if you do not give it to him now. But only the player on your right can use longer you keep what another player is likely to want, the more probable it is that he will have got ready to

If you will follow the reasoning that precedes your selection in this case, you will have the key to almost every sit## uation in the game. Can't Spoil the Pair.

To discard one of the pair is out of the question; because if you later pung a third the set will be worth 4 points. If you draw it, the set will be worth 8. Turning to the dots, we find what is called an "open-end" sequence, as the two at one end or the five at the other would complete the set. As there are eight of these tiles, and any one of them would suit your purpose equally well, you may be said to have eight chances to fill that set.

On the other hand, there is only one the that will fill your character sequence, which is what we call an "interior sequence." This is the six, and there are only four of that denomination, so that you have only four chances, as against the eight you have for filling the dot sequence.

Turning to the bamboos, we find what is called a "one-end sequence," because it can be filled only by a seven. This chance is the same as that for the characters.

Your choice of a discard is therefore governed first by the consideration of what is best for your own hand, and most likely to improve if you keep it. The decision is easily in favor of the pair and the dot sequence. As between the others it might not seem to make any difference. So far as your chance of im-provement goes, it does not, but when you come to consider the chances of improving the hands of your oppon-of Hon. Mr. Robb was subjected to general analysis by Frank White, M.P. Mr. Haney, too, made some caustic references to it. Neither, however, appeared very familiar with ts import, and contented themselves employing such phrases as "naional ruination" and "acute depression," apparently intending to convey the impression that the budget sals were not to their liking.

Opportunity in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Keefer, however, administered a knockout blow to memers of the blue-ruin Jorgade which receded him. After Mr. Haney had shed telling the young men a dole-tale of industrial depression in ntario and the lack of opportunity r the youth of Canada, Mr. Keefer pudiated all the Sarnia member's guments. Greater opportunity ex-ted in Ontario than any other sec-on of the world, he claimed.

Another ironical touch was given ne affair when Professor R. E. Free-tan of the University of Western rio in the most effective and teresting speech of the lot, pleaded the the students for "unbiased nking," and "freedom from political worth of an article can be measured. And that is why the meaning of the words "high priced" is so often misconstrued.

This store never was and never will be a so-called "high priced place to buy." It sells goods at a modest advance over the actual cost. It sells tried and tested quality. What it does not sell is its good name for giving the customer full value received for every dollar

Quality for quality and price for price, the selling figures here stand for the uplift of public confidence and maintenance of permanent trade.

We would rather lose a customer than lose our self respect through "cheap" prices for "cheap" goods. And please remember, goods purchased at this store are returnable for cash refund.
