I should like to direct one matter to the attention of the minister and the committee. It suggests that at times the men of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are called upon to undertake tasks which are much less heroic, shall I say, than some of the glamorous things they are called upon to do in the north country or the finding of a member of parliament out in the Rocky mountains. It seems to me that this particular task which seems to have fallen to the lot of a division of the mounted police is one which this force really ought not to be called upon to perform if it could be avoided. This document was sent to me in the mail; I confess that it was sent anonymously, but it appears to be quite official.

Mr. GRAYDON: If it is an official document you had better table it.

Mr. KNOWLES: I shall be quite prepared to do so if the leader of the opposition would like it and can find support from the other side of the chamber. It reads:

Canada
Sale by Tender

Tenders addressed to the undersigned will be received at his office at . . .

Then the address is given and a final date. I quote further:

. . . for the following property forfeited under the Excise Act, viz:—Two pairs ladies' rayon stockings, sizes nine and ten. Tenders must be submitted in sealed envelope marked "Tender". Terms, ten per cent deposit in cash, money order or certified cheque with tender. The highest or any tender not necessarily accepted. Cash on acceptance of tender.

It was posted over the name of the officer commanding a certain division of the force. I am sorry I was not equal to the task of reading this without revealing my sense of amusement, but it did strike me as a sample of the kind of task which is sometimes assigned to mounted police, and which does seem to be a waste of time. Certainly it is very expensive to go through all this rigmarole to sell two pairs of ladies' stockings. Can the minister tell us whether this kind of thing is done very often, or whether this is an exception?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has had more experience with the force than I have, and he tells me he has never known of his force dealing in ladies' stockings.

Mr. KNOWLES: But there is the document.

Item agreed to.

Construction, $108,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Why is there this substantial increase?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: This estimate is an extension of the policy which has been instituted, and is for the purpose of dealing with the acute shortage of housing throughout the country. I find that $90,000 is provided here for duplex buildings for married officers. It is estimated that this will be required during the year to take care of the housing of these married officers in various parts of Canada.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Can the minister say where these houses are?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: No; no definite location can at this time be given as to where it might be necessary to erect these residential buildings. The policy is to lease wherever possible to secure a house. During the dinner hour I approved a recommendation from the commissioner for a house which will be available next August, and which it has been possible to obtain at a rental of $65 a month. On Friday of last week there was a recommendation, in connection with another city, where a house was to become vacant in a few months, and where a lease would be available for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Wherever it is possible to secure quarters on lease, no construction will be done, because we also have to get priorities from those who control supplies, and we have to be able to convince them that it is absolutely necessary, and that we cannot get along without it.

Item agreed to.

Security service, $249,975.

Mr. KNOWLES: I notice that in paragraph (b) at the bottom of the sheet we have been given we find an explanation for the unexpended balance of last year. The reason given is as follows:

> The anticipated general organization of security service being found not necessary.

Perhaps the minister would explain why, in view of that statement, a vote more than twice as large as the amount expended last year should now be asked.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: A large project of security service had been recommended by United Kingdom security officers. Provision had been made for the organization of that service here. I must say that from the outset the commissioner was not very sympathetic to the idea of organizing a new service, and seemed to prefer to have as much of that security work done by his regular staff as might be possible. The man-power situation made it difficult to organize any large special service, and the amount expended in the last fiscal year was expended principally in the ports on the Atlantic coast.

The reason for estimating a possible expenditure of something more than twice the size of the amount expended last year is that there is always the possibility of having to duplicate on the Pacific coast the security services that have been in operation during the last year on the Atlantic coast.

As the hon. member will notice, these provisions are made in such a way that there will not be any undue delay as to such things as may have to be done in the course of the year. But the hon. member may be assured that none of this money which does not have to be spent will be spent under the direction of the commissioner. It is because of the possibility during the present fiscal year of having to duplicate on the Pacific coast the much smaller security body that has been set up on the Atlantic coast—much smaller than had been first recommended—that this amount is provided.

Mr. KNOWLES: I have one further question growing out of the fact that last year there was an unexpended balance in this item. Hon. members will notice there were similar unexpended balances in respect of other items on this sheet. At the bottom of the page we find this note:

> Minus sign under unexpended balance column represents overdrafts in allotments which are to be covered by transfers from balances available in other allotments.

If I understand the procedure correctly, the transferring of a credit from one allotment in order to cover a deficit in another would not be permitted as far as civil estimates are concerned. It must be permissible here, or I am sure the Minister of Justice would not allow it to be done. If that is the case, I just emphasize the fact that what we are dealing with in this committee is not a schedule of specific items but a total amount of money. In dealing with it in that way, we are called upon to give the departments of government considerable latitude for adjusting the different portions of that amount after parliament has passed the bill.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The schedule I have placed before hon. members will not make it possible for the Department of Justice or the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to make these expenditures without obtaining specific allocations from the treasury board. There has to be a requisition to treasury board and an allocation by treasury board out of the war appropriation which, as the hon. member has said, is voted as a total amount.

Mr. KNOWLES: Do I understand that the treasury board would not grant to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police a total amount for the year greater than $6,557,871?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I do not know whether or not that would be done, but up to the present it has not been necessary to make application to the treasury board for even as much as was included in the itemized statement to the house.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Crerar the house adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

INTERNMENTS

CAMILLIEN HOUDE—REFERENCE TO REMARKS OF MR. ST. LAURENT IN DEBATE ON MAY 15

Mr. LIGUORI LACOMBE (Laval - Two Mountains): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I quote from the House of Commons debates of May 15, 1944, at page 2915, the following statement made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. St. Laurent):

> Under date of January 10 Mr. Houde wrote the deputy minister of justice that he did not want any further hearing, and a copy of that letter was tabled in this house. Subsequently an hon. member of this house came to see me and said that Mr. Houde, as was stated in this letter of which a copy was tabled, had expressed the view that he had been interned by order in council and that he was going to come out through the big door and there would have to be an order in council passed to let him out. I explained to the hon. member that he was quite mistaken; that Mr. Houde had been treated like any other Canadian or resident of Canada under the defence of Canada regulations; that an order had been made by the Minister of Justice, and if he wanted that order reconsidered—it had been reconsidered once—it could be reconsidered again.

The statement made by the Minister of Justice is right but incomplete. The minister will admit that when I discussed with him the detention of Mr. Houde I submitted to his consideration a document to the effect that Mr. Houde would sign an undertaking. Concluding this question of privilege, I would ask the Minister of Justice to treat Mr. Houde as Tim Buck and other internees have been treated—

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no question of privilege.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE COUNCIL—PERSONNEL OF INITIAL COUNCIL OF SIXTEEN

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement regarding the national joint council of the public service of Canada. The house will recall that on February 24 I announced that the treasury board had decided to establish such a council in order to provide machinery for regular and systematic consultation and discussion between the employer and employee sides of the public service in regard to grievances and conditions of employment, and thereby to promote increased efficiency and better morale in the public service.

It has been found that it takes longer to get such organizations established than originally contemplated. However, it is only natural that in an organization as large and complicated as the government service there should be many differences of opinion as to the composition of such a council and the representation to be given to various groups or organizations in the civil service.

We originally intended to provide for a council of twelve, equally representative of the official or employer side and the staff or employee side of the public service, and therefore announced that the Civil Service Federation, the Civil Service Association, the Amalgamated Civil Servants, the Professional Institute and the Dominion Customs and Excise Officers' Association would each be asked to name one representative, and that the three organizations amongst the postal employees would be asked to name one to represent all postal employees. Following my announcement of February 24, we received representations from the three organizations in the postal service protesting that no single person chosen from one of them could fairly represent the three organizations, and insisting on each organization being allowed to name its own representative. While this would mean a council somewhat unwieldy in size, nevertheless the treasury board decided that as the main purpose was to promote good will and better understanding, it should accede to the request. The board was immediately criticized for this decision, primarily on the general ground that it would give too much weight to what were strictly departmental organizations within the Post Office Department. At the same time we received requests for representation from several other civil service organizations, some recently formed, which, if they were all accepted, would lead to the establishment of a council of no less than twenty-four members.

The board has therefore come to the conclusion that these differences and difficulties as to representation can only be adjusted amicably as a result of full and frank discussion of the whole matter between representatives of the various organizations and the official side of the civil service. In this connection I would emphasize that the first main task of the council will be to consider carefully the tentative or preliminary constitution which is being laid down by the order in council and to recommend a permanent constitution to govern the activities of the council.

It will also have to consider the advisability of setting up departmental joint councils and it is believed that when members of the council have had a chance of threshing out the part which departmental councils should play and what their relation should be to the national joint council, it will be far easier to reach agreement as to the organizations which should be represented on the national council and the weight of their representation.

The treasury board is hopeful that in this way a plan can be worked out which will assure a workable constitution with fair and appropriate representation to all existing organizations, and to all elements of the public service in the national council and the departmental councils that may be recommended.

At the conclusion of my remarks I shall table the order in council which has been passed. It will provide initially for a council of sixteen members. The eight members from the staff or employee side who have been nominated by their respective organizations or associations are the following:

Mr. V. C. Phelan, Civil Service Federation.

Mr. F. Knowles, Amalgamated Civil Servants of Canada.

Mr. N. T. Allan, The Professional Institute of the Civil Service of Canada.

Mr. T. R. Montgomery, Civil Service Association of Ottawa.

Mr. John J. Reaves, Federated Association of Letter Carriers.

Mr. Fred Whitehouse, Association of Canadian Postal Employees.

Mr. W. Dennehy, Railway Mail Clerks Federation.

Mr. J. H. Wood, Customs and Excise Officers' Association.

The representatives of the official side will be:

Dr. W. A. Mackintosh, Department of Finance, who will act as chairman, with the assistance of a vice-chairman elected by the representatives of the staff side.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

Mr. W. C. Ronson, Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance.

Mr. C. H. Bland, Chairman of the Civil Service Commission.

Dr. C. A. Camsell, Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources.

Mr. Edmond Cloutier, King's Printer.

Mr. J. E. St. Laurent, National Harbours Board.

Mr. P. T. Coolican, Assistant Deputy Postmaster General.

Mr. A. H. Brown, Department of Labour.

PRIME MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

PROPOSED VISIT TO CANADA OF PRIME MINISTERS JOHN CURTIN OF AUSTRALIA AND PETER FRASER OF NEW ZEALAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister, prior to his departure for the meeting of the commonwealth prime ministers, intimated to the house that an invitation had been extended to Prime Minister John Curtin of Australia and Prime Minister Peter Fraser of New Zealand to visit Canada at the termination of the London meeting. It is apparent that our Prime Minister will be returning soon to Canada. I would appreciate it if the Acting Prime Minister will inform the house whether or not the Prime Ministers of Australia and New Zealand will be accompanying our Prime Minister on his return.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Acting Prime Minister): The Prime Minister did extend an invitation to Prime Minister Curtin of Australia and Prime Minister Fraser of New Zealand, and I am very glad indeed to be able to tell the house that I understand the invitation has been accepted in both cases. At the moment I am unable to say whether the Prime Ministers of Australia and New Zealand will be accompanying the Prime Minister of this country on his return. I am also not in a position to say on what date they may be here.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

POSSIBILITY OF EXPEDITING THE INTRODUCTION OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the government if they will expedite as much as possible the bringing down of the remainder of the legislation which has been mentioned from time to time during the session and in the speech from the throne. I bring this to the attention of the government in order that we may be able to make the best use of the time at our disposal in dealing with the activities of the session.

I find that apart altogether from the resolutions and second readings of certain bills that appear on the order paper, the following legislation is still to be brought down. When I read the list it will give hon. members some idea of what is ahead of us and how we must utilize our time if we are to make the most of it. The list is as follows: Civil service superannuation bill, amendment to Naval Services Act, Quebec Savings bank bill, export credit bill, national housing bill, the family allowances bill, floor prices for agriculture bill, war surplus assets bill, amendment to the Dominion Elections Act, Veterans' Gratuities bill, amendment to Veterans' Land Act, amendments to the criminal code, amendment to the Chinese Immigration Act, contributory old age pensions bill, health insurance bill; and in addition to these any legislation that may be based on reports of committees. Then there are the budget resolutions and whatever legislation may follow from them. In so far as the war appropriation bill is concerned the large departments of Agriculture, External Affairs, Finance, Pensions and National Health and Trade and Commerce have yet to be disposed of, plus thirteen separate items in other departments. If we continue to sit in future as we have done up to now, we have forty-three sitting days to August 1. We have had fifty-nine sitting days so far. I bring this to the attention of the house and of the government to request the government to expedite the bringing down of the legislation I have mentioned and thereby save time.

I should like to mention the cancellation of the Wednesday sittings. I do not want to bring up this matter ad nauseam, but I do feel keenly about it. I felt that the change should never have been made. But at this late date the government might give some consideration to the use of not only the Wednesday afternoons but Wednesday evenings, if they can possibly do it. This matter has been discussed and our party is substantially in agreement upon it. I may say to the government that as a party we are prepared to cooperate in these matters, and we hope that the government will do what it can—we shall do what we can—to bring the session into such order that the least possible time will be consumed in the transaction of the country's business. I realize it is not possible to cut off sessions at a certain time. This house owes a duty and an obligation to the country to see that legislation is dealt with properly. Subject to that reservation we as a party are anxious to see the session concluded as speedily as possible. I make this suggestion in the hope that the tempo of the session may be increased and that the business of the country shall be carried on with perhaps even more dispatch than has been the case up to now.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Acting Prime Minister): I am obliged to my hon. friend for having brought up this matter. I have been sitting here during the last two or three weeks as the discussions have proceeded on the war appropriation resolution. I have once or twice made suggestions to the effect that I thought we might get on faster with better organization of the house. I felt that the remarks which I had made had fallen on barren ground and I thought I was putting the government in the position of endeavouring to force people to go faster than they wanted to go. I feel, however, that perhaps the course the government has pursued in just allowing the discussions to take their course has had some results. I take my hon. friend's words at their face value, that he is desirous of expediting the business of the house, as I am sure all hon. members are; but I think the example we have seen, in the length of time that has been taken on the war appropriation measure, is perhaps the best way to bring us to a realization that this house is a long way from having completed its business, and that some measures must be taken which, to use my hon. friend's expression, will speed up the tempo of the house.

I am not criticizing anyone, but it seems to me that is exactly what is needed here. As a matter of fact to-morrow, which is Wednesday, the day to which my hon. friend referred, I was going to ask the leader of the opposition and the leaders of the other two groups to a conference to see if it would not be possible to organize the discussion of these war appropriation items so that we might give some definite time to them and then call it a day when that time has expired. I know how difficult it is to do this. Hon. members want to ask questions which may occur to them at the moment when they happen to be in the house, and if they are away they want to be able to ask those questions after they come back, but that is not the way to get on with our business. So that I am going to ask my hon. friends to consider between now and to-morrow, if they will, the possibility of deciding on a certain number of hours, or a day if necessary, to deal with a certain subject and let us get it over and done with. It seems to me that is the only way we can speed up the tempo of the house.

With regard to the matter of legislation, it has seemed hardly worth while to place on the order paper a great deal of legislation which may not be reached for one, two or three months in view of the speed we are making at the present time. The government has that matter fully in mind and legislation will be brought down from time to time; but with the situation as we have it, that is to say with the war appropriation measure still to be passed, a measure which I hope and believe we all regard as the most important of the session; with the farm improvement measure, which my hon. friend said he would like very much to have go to the banking and commerce committee in order that it might be considered along with the Bank Act; with some other legislation that has to come in and with the budget, which will be taken up in the reasonably near future, it seemed to me we had a pretty full order paper before us as it is. However, that legislation is in course of preparation; as a matter of fact most of it is prepared and can be brought down very shortly.

With regard to the matter of Wednesday, that has been discussed and I am not going to add anything to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) said in regard to it. I wish to close, however, by expressing appreciation of my hon. friend's having brought up the matter in a very graphic way, perhaps better than I could have done myself, because it comes from those who really have it in their own hands to decide how much time shall be taken on these matters. I thank him for having put on record again the programme we have ahead of us before this session would conclude in the normal course.

Mr. GRAYDON: The minister said the entire matter was in our hands, but that is not quite true. I made a check in that regard and found that to be not accurate; it is not entirely in our hands, in regard to the time that is consumed in this chamber.

Mr. RALSTON: Shall I say it is not in the hands of the government?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If I may make one or two observations with respect to the minister's statement, I think we ought to get the war appropriation bill through. Then I believe the government ought to bring down its legislation, even though it may not be dealt with immediately, in order that we may be given an opportunity to study it. I find it very difficult to read these bills and discuss them on second reading without having adequate time for study.

[Mr. Ralston.]

CLAIRE WALLACE

DECISION OF NATIONAL WAR LABOUR BOARD ON QUESTION OF SALARY

On the orders of the day :

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, the finest gentleman to have occupied the high office of leader of the opposition since I have been in politics—I refer to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon)—paid very high tribute the other day to the member for Temiscouata when he said, at page 2854 of Hansard:

I very seldom find my hon. friend offering anything inaccurate. . . .

I thank him for that, and he went on to say that the salary of Claire Wallace had not been increased from $170 to $200 per week by Judge McTague. I agree with him; but on the other hand Judge McTague decided not to keep her salary at a lower figure than $200 per week.

Mr. GRAYDON: He did not touch it at all; that is the answer.

FISHERIES

TIE-UP OF HALIBUT FISHING FLEETS ON PACIFIC COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): In view of the still serious condition on the Pacific coast, resulting from the fact that the halibut fleet has been tied up for at least a month, and not because of any trouble on the Canadian side or with the Canadian authorities or canners, I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries if he has anything to add to the answer given on Thursday last by the Acting Minister of Fisheries, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Michaud).

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Minister of Fisheries): The halibut fishermen operate under regulations established by international treaty. Our fishermen are not fishing, out of sympathy with the United States fishermen who are not satisfied with the prices established by the office of price administration. We are making recommendations to the Department of External Affairs, to be passed on to the United States authorities. We cannot divulge the nature of those recommendations before they are made known to the authorities of the United States, but in the meantime we hope that a settlement may be arrived at within a few days and that all fishermen will return to their trade.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, may I make a comment on the question asked by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid), and the reply thereto, in connection with the halibut fleet. I hold in my hand the Vancouver Province of four days ago, which contains this headline, "Halibut Fleet Tie-up Ends", and says, in part:

A plan to end a six-weeks tie-up . . . has been agreed upon.

Is the minister not aware of that statement?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): I did not catch the last sentence; what was it?

Mr. NEILL: I hold in my hand the Vancouver Daily Province of May 12, which was four days ago, and which states:

Halibut fleet tie-up ends. A plan to end a six-weeks tie-up of 600 Pacific coast halibut fishing vessels has been agreed upon—

Then it goes on to say who are concerned in the agreement.

Mr. RALSTON: What was the question?

Mr. NEILL: It was settled four days ago.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): I do not know if a plan has been arrived at. All I know is that we have not received any word about it. Our own fishermen were simply waiting for the United States fishermen to be satisfied to fish. If they are not fishing to-day I suppose they have not yet arrived at a plan. We have made recommendations to the United States authorities.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

PENNFIELD AIRPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I desire to direct a question to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of National Defence for Air. He will recall that some weeks ago, during a discussion on the labour estimates or the national selective service estimates, I referred to the question of the future of Pennfield airport. I have not verified it, but my recollection is that he undertook that an adequate statement would be made shortly. I do not recall that this statement has been made.

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of National Defence for Air): I made a statement in the house.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That may have been when I was not present. Could the minister give me the date?

Mr. POWER: A full statement was made in the house in regard to Pennfield Ridge.

INQUIRY AS TO DISAPPEARANCE OF THREE TRAINING PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. H. BENCE (Saskatoon City): I understand that three R.C.A.F. planes have been missing since Sunday, when they took off on a flight from Charlottetown. Has the minister any information with respect to those planes, and what is being done in order to endeavour to locate them?

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of National Defence for Air): I have not very much information other than that which has appeared already in the press. It is true that three training planes out of twenty-four which were on a training flight have been missing since Sunday last. Intensive searches are being made all over the gulf of St. Lawrence and the neighbouring waters, so far without success. I am in constant touch with the situation, getting reports from eastern air command, which is in charge of the search. The inspector general of accidents, Group Captain Wilkins, is on the scene together with members of his staff, aiding in the search and making full inquiry into all the circumstances.

FRESH FRUIT

PRICE CEILING ON BRITISH COLUMBIA STRAWBERRIES AND RASPBERRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. I sent a copy to the Minister of Agriculture thinking that it came under his branch. I consider this to be a matter of urgent importance to some 2,000 berry growers in the Fraser Valley and the lower mainland. On the 24th of this month we begin shipping strawberries, and it is of urgent importance that we know what the price is to be. I want to make it clear that we are not quarrelling with what the price may be at the moment, but we do want to know at what it will be set because, among other things, we have to hire pickers, and we must prepare ahead of time. Until such time as we know what the price will be we are in an impossible position. I took the matter up with the war-time prices and trade board, but could get nothing definite. Therefore I am asking the minister to say what the price will be on fresh strawberries, raspberries and other small fruits in British Columbia.

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): Is the hon. member referring to the ceiling price?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Yes.

Mr. ILSLEY: I have not the information, but I will bring the matter to the attention of the board. I will also bring to their attention the hon. member's urgent representations.

ALASKA HIGHWAY

OPENING BY UNITED STATES MILITARY AUTHORITIES OF OFFICE IN VANCOUVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I directed on Friday last three questions to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell). In his absence the Secretary of State (Mr. McLarty) was kind enough to say that if the questions were allowed to stand until Monday as a notice he would see that they were answered. Yesterday the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Labour gave what he said were answers to those questions.

It is usual when questions are answered to have a copy of the answers sent to the member who asked the questions. No copy was sent to me. I wrote a note to the parliamentary assistant asking for a copy, and he said he would send it, but none was forthcoming. So that until the answers appeared in Hansard I had no way of analysing them, as to whether they were answers to my questions. I find that the questions I asked were not answered, that the answers given were evasive, and in fact were not in reply to the three questions I asked. In order that my authority for asking those questions may not be in doubt may I say that I was quoting from a statement made by William McKinstry, regional superintendent of national selective service at Vancouver, as reported in the Vancouver Sun of May 10, in which he said that American authorities were endeavouring to hire in Vancouver through selective service twelve hundred men for maintenance gangs on the Alaska highway; and that they had an order for labour from the northland on file at the national selective office in Vancouver for 300 men to work on the Canol pipeline. In reply to that the parliamentary assistant said, making no reference to the 300 men required for the pipeline:

> The Standard Oil Company placed an order for 75 men for the Canol Oil Refinery Project, which was later reduced to eight men.

That is not an answer to the question at all, and I have to ask that the question be answered.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I have been sitting here, wondering whether or not a former Speaker of the house was entitled to less or to more latitude than ordinary members of the house. I have rather come to the conclusion that he is entitled to less latitude than perhaps those of us who may not know the rules as well. I think my hon. friend knows he is quite out of order in rising as he does and making comment on an answer to questions he has asked.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): He can rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. RALSTON: This is not privilege. He is entitled to raise the question, and make any comment he may desire—but at the proper time, and not when the orders of the day are called.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): But he can raise a question of privilege.

Mr. RALSTON: It is not a question of privilege.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I do not appreciate being lectured by the leader of the house, but I must say the questions were not answered by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. RALSTON: I have taken a point of order.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): Had I had a copy of the answers—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I am speaking to the question of privilege.

Mr. RALSTON: I believe I am responsible to some extent for observance of the rules of order, and I do submit that on a point of order my hon. friend is not entitled at this time to comment upon the insufficiency of answers that have been made. If they are insufficient he may say so at the proper time. The test as to whether they are sufficient or not is another matter. If my hon. friend wishes to ask other questions, he may ask them; but he is not entitled, when the orders of the day are called, to comment upon answers which have already been given.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): He can do it on a question of privilege.

Mr. RALSTON: But it is not a question of privilege.

Mr. PAUL MARTIN (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member asked me to send him a copy of the answers I sent one, and I cannot understand why he did not receive it. I wish to assure him that there was no attempt to be evasive, and I shall give it to the hon. member immediately. If the questions are not answered in the manner he would wish, every endeavour to satisfy the hon. member will be made.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): The questions were not answered.

Mr. POULIOT: Speaking to the point of order—

An hon. MEMBER: There is no point of order.

Mr. POULIOT: According to the standing order, when questions are called they shall not be commented upon by either party. They shall be answered, or allowed to stand. Then they remain on the order paper. This is a Tuesday, when questions are not called, and if there is a time when members may air their grievances about delay in answering questions, it is right now. I stand wholeheartedly with the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Black), who knows the rules better than any member—except you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not think there is any necessity for my deciding in the matter. The hon. member has made his complaint with regard to the inadequacy of the reply he received. I understand the parliamentary assistant has taken that as a notice, and that he will reply.

WINNIPEG HYDRO-ELECTRIC

QUESTION OF PERMIT FOR EXTENSION OF SLAVE FALLS PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. H. KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Munitions and Supply, notice of which I sent him earlier to-day. In view of the information contained in sessional paper No. 302, tabled yesterday by the Minister of Munitions and Supply, to the effect that there is a certain amount of unemployment among carpenters and steel workers in Manitoba, and in view of the other information contained in the application of the Winnipeg hydro-electric system for a permit to commence preliminary work on the extension of its Slave Falls plant, will the minister make a statement as to the possibility of granting this permit?

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Munitions and Supply): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I received no such notice—although I dare say it was sent to my office. I have not been to the office. I simply tabled the correspondence I received. There was no statement of mine to the effect that carpenters were idle in the Winnipeg area. I can assure my hon. friend my information is that the most acute labour situation in Canada—or at least one of the most acute—is in the Winnipeg area. We are very short of workers, especially in our very important war plants in that area. Whether the application he refers to can be granted or not is now being considered by construction control. I shall be glad to answer the question when a decision has been reached.

CANADIAN FORCES

VERNON, BRITISH COLUMBIA, MILITARY CAMP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, before the order is called, I have an observation to make with reference to a resolution passed Friday night by the city council of Quebec about the way in which men have been dealt with at the military camp at Vernon, British Columbia. What I desire to speak about is a most important matter.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the hon. member rising to a question of privilege?

Mr. POULIOT: No, Mr. Speaker, I am rising to speak before the motion is put. I am going to speak about a grievance that affects many people.

Mr. SPEAKER: The orders of the day have not yet been called.

Mr. POULIOT: The motion was just being called.

Mr. SPEAKER: The orders of the day have not yet been called.

WAR APPROPRIATION BILL

PROVISION FOR GRANTING TO HIS MAJESTY AID FOR NATIONAL DEFENCE AND SECURITY

The house resumed from Monday, May 15, consideration in committee of a resolution to grant to His Majesty certain sums of money for the carrying out of measures consequent upon the existence of a state of war—Mr. Ilsley—Mr. Bradette in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Chief architect's branch—repairs, alterations, operation and maintenance of buildings occupied for war purposes, $2,300,000.

Mr. COLDWELL: Before the first item is put to the committee, I am going to exercise a right which I believe I have. I hesitated to bring the matter up on a question of privilege because it has to do with a matter referred to in this debate, although it does not come under the Department of Public Works. On Friday, May 12—page 2865 of Hansard—the hon. member for New Westminster made the following statement with reference to the C.C.F.:

> They went to the newspapers in the Fraser Valley and told them that in their party they had so many subscribers to these different papers, and they said, "If you do not give us an extremely good break we will withdraw all these subscriptions of our adherents."
> Mr. Graydon: That is pretty nearly blackmail.
> Mr. Reid: It was serious enough. In Vancouver, the Sun, the Province and the News-Herald were informed that if they were not kindly—not kindly from my point of view but entirely from their point of view—these subscriptions would be withdrawn from those papers.

To-day I received from Vancouver a copy of an article which appeared in the Province of May 13, which states:

> In the House of Commons last night Tom Reid, member for New Westminster, named the Vancouver Daily Province as a newspaper that had been subject to intimidation by the C.C.F.
> The experience of this newspaper provides no ground whatever for Mr. Reid's statements, reported in another column. It can be said definitely and positively that there is no ground whatever for his allegations. Neither directly nor indirectly has the C.C.F. approached the Vancouver Daily Province with threat or suggestion that it would be penalized if it failed to give "kindly" treatment to C.C.F. party interests.
> Mr. Reid says he knows of his own knowledge that the statements he made in the house are correct. In all fairness to the interests he has maligned, he should produce the proofs.

That is signed by the Vancouver Daily Province. I should like to say that the only suggestion that there should be any interference with the press was made by the hon. member's former leader, Mr. Pattullo. In reply to that suggestion, Mr. Winch, the leader of the opposition, said that he opposed such a bill, which was seconded by Mr. Uphill. He said:

> I oppose licence, but I uphold the freedom of the press.

The C.C.F. whip in the legislature is reported to have said that he was prepared to "take it on the chin" as well as "dish it out." You find that even the most scurrilous editorials simply react to the interest of those who are maligned. I though that in view of what was said on Friday I should place this on the record.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. REID: Mr. Chairman, I must have a chance to reply, and I ask the indulgence of the committee. I am not going to let the leader of the C.C.F. or the leader of any other party make any comment about me without an opportunity of replying.

The CHAIRMAN: I think under the circumstances the hon. member for New Westminster should be able to answer. Perhaps I was remiss in my duty in allowing the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar to make the statement he did, but I feel that the hon. member should be permitted to make an answer.

Mr. REID: The article just read by the leader of the C.C.F. shows what is going on in this country with regard to the recording of the proceedings of this house. I remember distinctly what was said, and I think every hon. member who was present on that occasion will also remember. My memory is fairly accurate on the matter. I remember the interjection made by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar when I made the accusation against the C.C.F. in connection with newspapers of the Fraser valley. When I mentioned the Province, the Sun and the News-Herald, the hon. member interjected and asked me if I had any proof. I cannot turn up the record just at the moment. I said that I had no direct proof about those three papers, but that I did have some proof about the Fraser valley. That is the record and the hon. member knows it. He endeavoured by reading the record to leave the inference that I had deliberately lied in the House of Commons. He just cannot get away with that. He has got away with a lot, but he is not going to get away with anything of that kind as long as I have breath in my body. I will have more to say later about the tactics of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. REID: You just sit down; you will have a chance later. You are not speaking to a stranger now; you are speaking to someone who knows he has a right to speak. The record stands exactly as I stated it. I can well understand a large newspaper saying that no one had come to see them, but we know what took place in 1935 throughout the Fraser Valley. We had it on fairly good authority that the three large newspapers in Vancouver were written to and told by the leaders of the provincial C.C.F. party that if they did not give them a good break, or were not kindly disposed to the C.C.F., the members belonging to that party would withdraw their subscriptions. I have nothing to take back. I ask the hon. member to read the record as it stands.

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I just say this?

Mr. REID: I do not care what you say.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I just say this?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. COLDWELL: I quoted the record.

Mr. REID: I demand that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar read the record to the house right now. Read Hansard.

Mr. COLDWELL: I will read it again.

The CHAIRMAN: I am going to give my ruling. The incident is closed. We are not here in committee to discuss matters of policy as between the different parties in the house. Both sides have had their say and the incident is closed.

Mr. COLDWELL: We are discussing a resolution, Mr. Chairman, and the statements to which I have referred were a part of the debate—

The CHAIRMAN. Order. I have given my ruling and the hon. member must abide by it unless he wishes to appeal from it.

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not want to appeal from your ruling, Mr. Chairman, but I submit that your ruling is not in accordance with the rules of the house.

The CHAIRMAN: I will make another appeal to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar to abide by my ruling. He has always been very cooperative and has always abided by the decisions of the chair.

Mr. REID: I am sorry that the rules of the house do not permit us to discuss the matter further.

Mr. COLDWELL: I want to abide by your ruling, Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. COLDWELL: Hon. members cannot shout me down. I was going to say on a point of order, Mr. Chairman, that we are not discussing a bill or schedule, but a resolution. The resolution involves all matters connected with the war appropriation and with peace, order and good government, and I submit that I am in order in discussing any matter which comes under the war appropriation measure. But if you rule otherwise I shall abide by your ruling.

Mr. GRAYDON: I think we have had enough of this anyway, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: I have already given my ruling. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar used the word "technicality" yesterday. While technically we may have a right to discuss certain matters, there is an understanding that the members of the committee shall confine themselves to the item before the chair.

Item agreed to.

Rentals of premises occupied for war purposes, $1,900,000.

Mr. PERLEY: A number of changes have taken place in the operation and rental of buildings in the west, particularly in Regina. Buildings are being taken over, buildings are being rented, remodelled and so on. How much was spent in Saskatchewan last year in rentals, repairs and alterations of buildings for war purposes?

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): I presume that my hon. friend is referring also to the first item?

Mr. PERLEY: Yes.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): With respect to the first item the amount is to be expended as follows: Salaries and wages, $840,000; cost-of-living bonus, $145,000; alterations to buildings, $850,000. These are estimates for 1944-45, as we do not know at the present date just what repairs and alterations will be required. The other items are: Light and power, $175,000; water and water rates, $35,000; fuel, $200,000; supplies for char service, $45,000; sundries, $10,000. That makes up the total of $2,300,000.

Mr. PERLEY: What portion of that will be spent in Saskatchewan?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We are asking for a lump sum to make alterations to buildings as required. I cannot give a definite figure as to what will be required in Saskatchewan or any other province, but as recommendations come in from the district architects the expenditures are made.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: We should have a statement from the minister setting out by provinces the rentals to be paid during the current year, and also what is the policy of the government with respect to buying or renting premises.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The buildings coming under this item are all for the use of war departments or for war uses. For the Department of National Defence, for the use of the army, we pay in rentals, at Ottawa, $65,906.90, and outside Ottawa, $141,365.28, a total of $207,272.18; for the navy, at Ottawa, $24,259.06, and outside Ottawa, $42,093.12, a total of $66,352.28; for the air force, at Ottawa, $8,424, and outside Ottawa, $98,342.50, a total of $106,766.50; wartime prices and trade board, at Ottawa, $67,580.83, and outside Ottawa, $541,339.44, a total of $608,920.27; for the Department of Munitions and Supply, outside Ottawa, $150,339.78; for government departments, boards and commissions, at Ottawa, $155,855.43, and outside Ottawa, $459,918.49, or a total of $615,773.92; contingencies, at Ottawa, $17,973.78, and outside Ottawa, $126,601.29, a total of $144,575.07. That makes up a total of $1,900,000.

Mr. PERLEY: What rentals were paid in Regina, to whom paid and for what buildings?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We have three different buildings for the army in Regina, at a total rental of $25,520.

Mr. PERLEY: To whom is it paid?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I have not the names here but I could probably get them for my hon. friend some time to-day or to-morrow. The information before me shows the rentals for the army, the navy and air force and other departments. For the navy, at Halifax—

Mr. PERLEY: What are the buildings rented at Regina?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): In Regina we have no rented buildings for the navy or for the air force. For wartime prices and trade board we pay rentals amounting to $8,100; munitions and supply, $3,000; agriculture, $10,000; civil service commission, $480; labour, $7,630.08; pensions and national health, $480; soldier settlement board, $1,740; war labour board, $1,152. Those are the amounts paid in Regina in rentals.

Mr. GRAYDON: In the Department of Public Works, I am informed, there are about 110 seasonal firemen who are appointed through the minister's office from time to time. They were told by an official of the chief architect's branch that during the Christmas season they would get an addition by way of war supplement to the wages which they were then receiving. I understand that at that time these firemen were receiving $95 a month. After that season had passed and February 4 had arrived, an order in council or some regulation was passed which took care of some of the engineers, and some of the full-time firemen. I believe fifty engineers and sixteen full-time firemen were included and given war supplements. I wanted to bring this matter to the attention of the minister because there are some bitter complaints about it. There are, I believe, fifteen engineers who are not included in the order in council which was passed. These fifteen have a total of 250 years' service in the public works department, or at any rate in the civil service. I am told that these firemen and engineers work under a 26-shift month and their pay is $3.65 per shift. They have not received salary increases since 1921. I am not sure whether this applies to all of them, but it does to many of them. The question is this. Why was it that when the war supplements were paid all were not included? It is only fair that this question should be asked, and the minister should give us the reason for what seems to be an injustice to those firemen and engineers who were not included in the order in council which granted the war supplement, after they had been told that they would be given what I believe was referred to as a Christmas gift in the form of an increase in their salary or wages.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I understand that in February there was a revision of salaries paid to seasonal firemen. If I remember rightly, before the question was settled they were receiving from $95 to $105 a month. After the first year they received $100 and after the second year $105. My understanding was that if anyone was left out of the supplement it would be the newcomers who had just entered the service. However, I will inquire into the matter and, if there is any injustice, see that it is remedied as soon as possible.

Mr. GRAYDON: I do not wish to do more than call the matter to the attention of the minister so that an investigation may be made. Will the minister indicate, as soon as he is able to answer the question, exactly what the position is?—because this is a matter that should be attended to. We cannot afford to have men engaged in such work unjustly treated.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I will have that done.

Mr. COLDWELL: I thought we had pretty well completed the programme of erecting temporary buildings in this city or repairing and extending buildings, but I notice a very large extension of a temporary building is being made at the corner of Carling avenue—

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is item No. 4.

Mr. COLDWELL: In that case I will raise the matter on the fourth item, or someone else will.

Mr. GRAYDON: I do not care whether the minister replies now to the remarks I am about to make, but I should like to have an answer from him at some time. I should like to know why the heating equipment in the east block was changed, the oil burners having been taken out and new stokers put in for the purpose of preventing the black smoke nuisance, when as a matter of fact, as I am informed, the nuisance is greater now than it ever was. When does the minister intend to go back to the original system of heating?

May I conclude all I have to say on public works by making this statement. I did not want to raise a complaint on the orders of the day because I thought that perhaps the matter was not important enough, but many members on this side of the house, and I have no doubt I speak for others as well, have found that their health is endangered by the draught in this chamber. I know that this remark is open to the facetious comment that it is hot air that is responsible. Coming from the other side such a comment might be so misunderstood. Seriously however, there is a great draught from the galleries or through the gallery doors. It flows down on some members and I have heard many complaints from various sections of the house. We cannot sit in this chamber day in and day out unless we are reasonably comfortable. Personally I do not suffer much from these draughts, but some members feel them keenly and have caught colds in consequence. Will the minister look into the matter?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Last year we did have the ventilation system examined and we thought we had brought about some amelioration. I shall ask the officials of the department to look into it. With regard to the east block, that was an order from the oil controller. We were asked to make a change over from oil because of the shortage of fuel oil.

Mr. PINARD: Before this item is passed I wish to say a few words. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition acts as though he were the representative of the city of Ottawa. It is true the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Boucher) is sitting next to him at the moment. He may act as though he were the representative of the city of Ottawa, but may I tell him that he will never occupy that position, nor will he have a representative from his party in that position.

Mr. GRAYDON: I do not think there is anything wrong in trying to do something for the city of Ottawa.

Mr. BOUCHER: Does the hon. member object to his interest in the city of Ottawa?

Mr. PINARD: No. My hon. friend speaks of an increase paid to seasonal firemen. That applies not only to the city of Ottawa; it applies to other places like Montreal and Toronto, but, of course, not to the village he represents. All those municipalities have firemen and they are all entitled to the same increase. May I say to my hon. friend that the Ottawa people and their representatives are as much awake as he is, but we do not want to disturb the peace of this committee.

Mr. GRAYDON: "Methinks the lady doth protest too much".

Mr. PINARD: It all depends. The hon. member says "lady", I do not know whether that is so or not—

Mr. BOUCHER: We will take your word for it.

Mr. PINARD: This question has been up many times. The salaries paid to these men are not sufficient. This is not the only case. The government pays less for ordinary labour than does the city of Ottawa. I have not objected to all these questions because I did not want to take up too much of the time of the committee. I think the time of the committee is too precious to be used for this kind of thing—picayune politics; that is what it is. I am sorry that my hon. friend ever thought that he represented the city of Ottawa. We are capable of doing that.

Mr. GRAYDON: There is some doubt about that.

Mr. PINARD: That is about all the hon. member can say. May I say further that the Department of Public Works has at all times done the best it could for the general service rendered by these people. We have all classes of labourers working for the Department of Public Works—snow cleaners, window washers, and so on; and they are not being paid a sufficiently high wage. We have tried to do what we could for them, but we have not succeeded at all times. This question is raised to-day because an increase of $5 or $10 a month was granted a year ago to these men. I should like to know who are the men that were raised to $10 a month. I am sure the hon. member for Carleton knows all about it. I ask him to give the answer at once.

Mr. BOUCHER: Ask your minister.

Mr. PINARD: The hon. member is making snowballs for his leader; he should throw them himself.

Mr. MARSHALL: I should like to make a suggestion to the acting leader of the government. Would it be possible for the Minister of Public Works to sit in a more central part of the chamber? It is very difficult for many members who are interested in the estimates to hear what is going on.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Has the wartime prices and trade board any offices in the Birks building in Ottawa?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): They still have two floors in the Birks building.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Have any other departments offices there?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I do not believe there is any other department there.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Where did the wartime prices and trade board go when they were put out of that building?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We had just completed a building on Sussex street to which we transferred seven or eight hundred people.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): That is where they went?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): They went down on Sussex street.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): I suggest to the minister that it does not look very well, when you go through the glass doors of the Birks building, to find on one panel the sign "Wartime Prices and Trade Board", and on the other panel "Liberal Association". It leaves a rather funny taste in your mouth when you go through those doors and see that.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I may tell the hon. member that I have not been down there. I do not know what is on the door.

Mr. PERLEY: The minister in his breakdown gave some of the rents paid in the city of Regina, and they were as follows: Department of Agriculture, $10,000; Department of Labour, $7,000. Could he give us the names of the owners of the property concerned and where it is situated?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I undertake to give my hon. friend the names of the buildings and the lessors of those buildings leased to the government. I shall have a list made up of all the buildings in Regina and I shall give it to my hon. friend.

Mr. PERLEY: When the estimates are carried?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I may get that to-morrow. I shall send it to my hon. friend.

Mr. PERLEY: These estimates may be through in an hour and a half.

Mr. RALSTON: Sooner than that.

Mr. PERLEY: I hope so, if we can get that information. We are trying to get it, and if we do, it will facilitate the minister's estimates.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I will undertake to have a list prepared and shall send it as soon as possible, maybe to-night, to my hon. friend.

Mr. ADAMSON: Does this item include the rental of the Toronto exhibition buildings for military purposes?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No. This item covers only office accommodation in Ottawa and outside of Ottawa. It does not comprise works.

Item agreed to.

Furniture, etc., for war employees, $500,000.

Mr. BOUCHER: Would the minister give us the details of this item?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Two years ago this item was $900,000. Requests come in from all parts of the country, from offices used for war purposes, for desks or filing cabinets or office equipment. Last year the item was $700,000 and almost the whole amount was expended. We believe that $500,000 will be sufficient this year. I cannot give the exact number of desks which will be needed by the departments. We are just the procurement agency for all these war departments.

Mr. BOUCHER: It seems to me that $500,000 is a large amount at this late stage of the war when the expansion has been cut down very materially. Could the minister break it up into departments or into cities and give us some detail rather than have it put through as a bulk sum?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am a little embarrassed because if we do not receive requisitions for this equipment from departments the amount will not be expended. It is voted as an estimate to meet future requirements. If no requisitions come in we will not spend the money. I do not know what the needs of the army, the navy, the air force, or the wartime prices and trade board or that of all the other departments for which we act, will be.

Mr. BOUCHER: If there were not a fair idea of the requisitions that would come, surely the sum of $500,000 would not have been provided. It occurred to me that the appropriations of the various departments as submitted to the minister could be given to the committee now.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We base this estimate on requirements that have come into the department during the last month of the last fiscal year. Those requests multiplied by twelve amount to about $500,000. That may be a little over or a little under the amount actually required, but I would not like to get a smaller amount and then have to return to treasury board and ask for further money; I would rather have this amount approved.

Mr. BOUCHER: The minister has no further break-down which he can give to the committee?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No, not on an estimate of this kind.

Mr. MARSHALL: I should think the minister could give us a break-down of the amount actually spent on furniture under the war appropriation measures since September, 1939. I should like the amount spent in offices outside Ottawa and the amount spent in offices in Ottawa. I should like also the amount the department pays in rentals for furniture and office equipment. I believe a considerable amount of money is spent from year to year by the government in rentals alone. I would ask the minister to give me those figures.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): My officials inform me that we do not rent furniture for government offices; we purchase it. I can give the hon. gentleman the amount spent on furniture since the beginning of the war.

Mr. MARSHALL: Is this just in the city of Ottawa?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No, for the whole country, Ottawa and outside. The figures for the fiscal years are as follows:

1940-41	598,924
1941-42	784,291
1942-43	850,734

I have not the exact figures for 1943-44, but to January 31 of this year the amount expended was $433,578. Probably that is the basis of this year's estimate of $500,000.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Would part of that $500,000 be used to furnish the new temporary buildings?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes; every temporary building put up for war purposes.

Mr. BOUCHER: I do not quite understand the minister saying he arrived at the amount of $500,000 with no data at all, unless it was done by virtue of past experience. It does seem to me that each department would submit an estimate which the minister could give us.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am told that the estimate is based upon monthly expenditures for furniture during the previous year. That is about the best directive we can follow. We are not buying this furniture for public works; we receive requisitions from various departments. We try to keep down expenses as much as we can, but we have to fill the requisitions when they are approved by treasury board, and this $500,000 seems to be the amount that will be required this year.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Shortly after the minister came into the department he achieved a good deal of notoriety in connection with rugs and chairs that were purchased. Could he bring the committee up to date on the situation in regard to rugs?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): There has been a lull in questions asked in the house in regard to rugs. During the first six months I was in the department, when questions were asked in the house, I think we had purchased six rugs for the whole country. Since then I believe we have purchased a few more, but I have not the exact number. I recall signing two or three requisitions, and I am informed that two were for the senate.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Does the minister purchase all the rugs and supplies of that kind for the various war departments?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Oh, no. This item goes to provide for furniture purchased by the Department of Public Works for offices only, at Ottawa and outside Ottawa, for all war departments, boards and commissions, but does not cover requirements of active field units such as air stations, ordnance depots, naval stations and military hospitals, which are purchased through the Department of Munitions and Supply and charged to each separate war department.

Mr. BOUCHER: Is it not a fact that many departments purchase their own rugs, chairs and furniture without asking the Department of Public Works to procure them, for war purposes only

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I would not know. If they do, it is not to my knowledge and I would not discuss it, because I do not know the facts.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Why is it that purchases of rugs and that sort of thing are made by the Department of Munitions and Supply instead of through the Department of Public Works?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I do not even know if they do purchase them.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: A return brought down last year showed the purchases of rugs for the navy, army, and air force. It would not be necessary to refer to this but for the fact that the minister said with considerable pride that since he had been minister only a few rugs had been purchased.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): You do not doubt that statement, I hope?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Oh ,no; but the departments that purchase the rugs for the use of the navy, army, and air force are entirely apart from the Department of Public Works. As a matter of fact purchases made for the year ending March 31, 1943, the latest figures available, were as follows: For the air force, $11,300; for the navy, $14,800, and for the army, $19,500. These are in addition to any purchases that may come through the Department of Public Works. Has the minister any figures before him to show the expenditures on furniture for war departments in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba during the past year?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I have not a break-down of those figures. To deal with the first point mentioned by my hon. friend, that rugs are purchased by departments other than the Department of Public Works, I am quite willing to accept statements made in the return, but personally, as minister of the department, I do not know. All I can say is that they may purchase rugs in their units, air stations, ordnance depots, naval stations and military hospitals, which do not come under public works in connection with these purchases. As to the break-down by provinces, I am afraid I do not have it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: A short time ago the hon. member for Qu'Appelle asked a question, and the answer was, "Well, we have not the records available." We are asked to pass very large sums of money, and surely we are entitled to these break-downs when we ask for them.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I believe the hon. gentleman is right in asking the question, and probably I should have the break-down. I will instruct my officials to prepare it, but I cannot give it at the moment. Some time later I can place on record a break-down of this item by provinces.

Mr. PERLEY: I see at page U-16 of the auditor general's report an item of $400,000 for rugs and desks. The minister said a few moments ago that he had not purchased any since he took office. This item in last year's accounts shows that a considerable quantity was purchased.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): What financial year is that?

Mr. PERLEY: Last year.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is 1942-43. I was sworn in on October 7, 1942, and served for only a few months of that fiscal year. The hon. member may be sure that what I had said about rugs is true. I am not trying to hide any purchases of rugs we have made.

Mr. PERLEY: I was just taking what appears in the auditor general's report, where I find an amount of $399,000.

Mr. BOUCHER: Would the minister give us further details as to the policy of purchasing? I see that some departments do purchase rugs without going through the Department of Public Works. What is the line of demarcation as between his department and other departments for the purchase of supplies and furniture? How is it decided which department should do the purchasing?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The Department of Public Works purchases furniture for office accommodation throughout the country. But what I have said about the army, the air force and the Department of Pensions and National Health is true. We receive no requisition, and have no authority. Then, as to our method of purchasing, we proceed by calling for tenders for every bit of furniture we buy.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa, addition to temporary building No. 8, Carling avenue, $300,000.

Mr. KNOWLES: At this point will the minister answer the question asked a few moments ago by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes. Under this item we are asking for $300,000 for the extension to No. 8 building on Carling avenue. That building has 200,000 square feet, and we have been requested by different departments for an additional 80,000 square feet. This space is for national registration under the Department of Labour, and for the censorship division of the Department of National War Services. In the last year those two departments have expanded to the extent that they need nearly all this new space. After tender the contract was awarded to H. A. Wickett & Company for $332,557. In the last fiscal year $50,000 was spent; this year we are asking for the balance of $300,000.

This is one of the largest temporary buildings in Ottawa. The location seemed suitable for these two departments, because they have other branches located there. I believe, too, that the records division of the Department of National Defence is in the same building. I think this is the last temporary building we have undertaken, because we have tried to limit their number. I am receiving requests nearly every month from different departments for more space, but I have tried to keep down the number of temporary buildings and the amount of rented space. This is the last one, and the contract was given on September 23, 1943.

Mr. KNOWLES: When will this building be completed?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The work was delayed because of the difficulty of obtaining lumber. It is expected however that the building will be occupied in the fall.

Mr. EDWARDS: It is my understanding that the Department of Public Works, in awarding contracts for temporary or other buildings to a general contractor, imposes no condition that the contractor shall name the subcontractors to be used or employed by him. On the other hand I understand that in respect of contracts let by the Department of Munitions and Supply that department requires the general contractor, if he is to use subcontractors, to name them. I understand that there are complaints by subcontractors in various parts of the country who in good faith have tendered to general contractors for work involved in connection with certain undertakings—be they plumbing, heating, painting, stone work or the like. It appears that it is the practice of some general contractors—I do not believe it is general—to go round and try to get better prices—or, to use the common expression, to chisel on the subcontractors. I should like to ascertain from the minister—and I am not suggesting that this practice has developed recently—how long it has prevailed in the Department of Public Works, and whether or not any consideration has been given to adopting what to my mind is a fairer practice—that of requiring the general contractor to name his subcontractors, and following through and seeing that the general contractor does in fact award his subcontracts to the persons named in his tender.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The policy in the Department of Public Works is to ask for tenders after having the plans and specifications prepared. General contractors make their bids, and the lowest bid is accepted. We do not inquire into subcontracts, or those from whom the general contractor has asked tenders with respect to subcontracts. There may be something in my hon. friend's suggestion to the effect that, after being awarded a contract, a general contractor may go round and peddle subcontracts. As I am not an expert in the matter I have no personal knowledge. However I shall ask the officials of the department to study the system outlined by the hon. member, and followed as he says by the Department of Munitions and Supply.

Mr. EDWARDS: I believe what I have said is accurate.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Perhaps we will change our policy, if the suggested one is found to be better.

Mr. GILLIS: May I support the hon. member for Calgary West, and perhaps go somewhat further. He is completely justified in what he has said—so far as he has gone. In my view the procedure of letting subcontracts should be completely eliminated. I think it is the government's responsibility to know that a contractor bidding for a contract has machinery adequate to carry out such contract. The contractor makes a bid at a certain price, and gets the contract on that basis, in many instances because he is the lowest tenderer. Immediately he gets the contract he starts to subcontract, and then the subcontractor has to chisel on his employees. The employees are the ones who suffer at the hands of the subcontractor. The subcontractor must try to make some money out of his subcontract, and the only way he can do that in many cases is to chisel on the men who actually do the work. If you examine into the construction of your airports and other national defence projects since the outbreak of the war you will find that many labour disputes occurred because subcontractors endeavoured to make some money by chiselling on their employees.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member is referring to Munitions and Supply now.

Mr. GILLIS: The principle is the same in any department.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Not according to what the hon. member said a moment ago.

Mr. GILLIS: If a company undertakes a contract for the Department of Public Works to construct a building they figure their labour and material costs. They should then be obliged to go ahead with the work. But after getting a contract on that basis they farm it out to others who did not figure in the main contract. The result is that they have to squeeze somebody, and the only ones they can squeeze are the men who actually work on the job.

Mr. EDWARDS: I am sure my hon. friend is misinterpreting what I said, or is not familiar with the practice followed by general contractors.

Mr. GILLIS: I am familiar with it. I have had many headaches during the last four years because of that very point.

Mr. EDWARDS: If, as my hon. friend has suggested, a general contractor had to do all the work in connection with the construction of a building it would mean the elimination of seventy-five per cent of the general contractors in this country. Very few of them have the facilities, for example, to do heating and plumbing work, tinsmithing, roofing, electrical wiring, and so on. I know of only one general contractor who has representatives of all the building trades in his employ. When a general contractor is bidding on a contract he goes to the metal worker to get a price on the metal work; he goes to the hardware man for a price on the hardware; he goes to the painter for a price on the painting, and so on down the line. He takes those prices and makes his bid on that basis. But the difficulty arises from the fact that when a general contractor is awarded a contract he is under no obligation to give subcontracts to any of the men who in good faith have submitted bids. After the contract is let he knows what his price is, and some of these men are likely to go, for example, to the electrical man and say, "We have your price of $10,000 for the electrical work; if you can cut that by $1,500 we will give you the contract; failing that we will probably give it to somebody else." The result is that subcontractors are bidding against each other.

I can quite understand a subcontractor being tempted, in an effort to keep his men employed, to do what my hon. friend suggests is done. He might go to his workmen and say, "Here is a six months' job that will provide work for everybody; if you are willing to cut your wage rates for steady employment, I will take you on." I can see quite well that that nefarious practice might be adopted by a subcontractor. The practice, as I appreciate it, now followed by the Department of Munitions and Supply, is to require the general contractor to name the subcontractor. Then perforce the general contractor would have to use those subcontractors and you would avoid the possibility of the general contractor chiselling on his subcontractors. It may be necessary and desirable that some protection be provided. I understand that according to the regulations the subcontractor must comply with the fair wage provisions which are embodied in every federal government contract.

[Mr. Gillis.]

Mr. ISNOR: The point raised by the hon. member for Calgary West is well taken. It is just a matter of procedure. I differ with him to this extent: if his suggestion were followed it would make it almost impossible for the small local contractor to get any of this work. I do not wish to go over the procedure, but the fact is that when a large contract is to be let, the bidding is done by contractors in the larger centres. In the east we have to contend with contractors from Montreal and Toronto who bid on every large project. I do not think the solution to this problem will be found by naming the subcontractor. I should like to offer a suggestion which I admit may not be feasible. I suggest that the amount of the subcontracts be indicated. It would then be possible for the main contractor to go to the local subcontractors and say: Work is being done in this section of the country and we have put in a tender of $15,000 for plumbing, $7,000 for electrical work and so on; those figures are included in our main tender; we know you can do this work satisfactorily, because you are a reliable firm, so that if you are prepared to do it we are prepared to enter into a subcontract with you.

I know the minister and his officials are very efficient, and I make that suggestion to them. I support the principle of fair wage provisions. In every contract I have seen, and I have read over a number in the last fifteen or twenty years, there have been fair wage clauses. The main contractor is responsible for the maintaining of the fair wage schedule, in connection not only with the main contract but with all subcontracts. I think serious consideration should be given to adopting a procedure under which protection would be given to the small contractor so that there would not be—I am not going to use the word "chiselling"—any of the shopping around that is so prevalent when the larger contractors are bidding on projects.

Mr. GILLIS: In my opinion the procedure described by the hon. member for Calgary West is not subcontracting; it is simply a main contractor getting a contract under false pretences. Let us assume that Public Works is undertaking the construction of a building in Ottawa and a construction company puts in a bid. The bidding is on the total construction of that building, on every phase of it. When a company puts in a tender and receives a contract it is assumed that it has figured on every item of cost, and it is the main contractor who has the obligation of seeing to it that the work is carried out according to specifications. It is not his job, after he receives a contract to go shopping around, trying to get someone to do it for nothing. But that is the case under present conditions. I do not believe that the main contractor should name any subcontractors or firms who are to assist him in completing the contract, because the whole obligation rests upon the main contractor himself, and the government is responsible for seeing to it that he lives up to his contract. But here is what sometimes happens, and I know this particular case. The main contractor got a contract for erecting a barracks in a certain section in my part of the country. Then he goes to an undertaking firm and gives the undertaker a subcontract for the construction of those buildings. That is neither efficient nor in the best interests of the country. When a contractor accepts a contract with the federal government for any project it is up to him to see that it is done, and he must figure on every item of cost.

Mr. ISNOR: The main contractor is still responsible even if he has a subcontractor.

Mr. GILLIS: There have been some pretty miserable jobs done, and I would not want to start mentioning them here at this stage, but when the war situation is not so tense and we get some of our problems off our hands, we shall be able to tell the Canadian people about some jobs which have been done on that basis since the outbreak of the war.

An hon. MEMBER: What about the undertaker?

Mr. GILLIS: I could name the firm and go into details of the transaction, but I do not want to do so now. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Calgary West that the main contractor should be permitted to farm out his contract to get the work done as cheaply as possible. That should not be permitted.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The procedure followed in the department is not exactly as it has been described. The lowest tenderer gets the contract. He is a general contractor, we will say. The next step is that he brings into the department a list of his subcontractors and the amounts they are charging for every part of the work they are doing. We approve or disapprove the subcontractors. The work proceeds and we see to it that the contract is executed according to the terms of the contract. We know who are the subcontractors. We have a fair wage clause in the contract and that is followed throughout the contract. We require a security deposit which we hold until the building has been finally accepted.

I do not see how they can start playing with wages, because we have our inspectors going around and the labour department also has a fair wage officer whose duty it is to see that the fair wage clause is observed. I should like to enlighten myself, but I have not seen the light yet after the two speeches to which I have just listened.

Mr. BOUCHER: Does the minister say that the department goes into the various costs submitted by the subcontractors and checks them up?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes.

Mr. BOUCHER: I can see that difficulty might be avoided by that policy. I suppose the only difficulty, when there are two or three subcontractors, would be with their getting the necessary materials and labour.

Item agreed to.

Post-war construction programme—preparation of plans, specifications, et cetera, $95,000.

Mr. LACOMBE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I have just one word to say in this connection. Before contemplating any building programme for the post-war period, the government would do well to pay their old debts, especially those incurred in the fall of 1939. I have already pointed out to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier) that his predecessor, the hon. member for Richelieu-Verchères (Mr. Cardin), promised to compensate the reverend trappist monks of Oka, for advances made by them and in connection with work done on a public stream. I am again making representations to the Minister of Public Works with a view to obtaining for the reverend trappist monks a refund of the expenditures they have made for work done on this stream during the fall of 1939. I had quite a correspondence with the hon. member about that matter. Agriculture is essential to our armed forces and our civilian population; I have already said and I repeat now that it is our first defence line. The minister claimed in his correspondence that such work now comes under the jurisdiction of provincial governments, but the pledge given to the reverend trappist monks goes back to the fall of 1939 and it should be fulfilled. It is just a matter of refunding $184, which is a paltry sum for the government but a most important item for the reverend trappist monks.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull) (Translation): As far as I can recollect, that protection work was carried out under an appropriation for the fiscal year—

Mr. LACOMBE (Translation): May I remind the minister that it was not protection but drainage work carried out on the Rousse stream.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull) (Translation): Such work would have been carried out under an appropriation voted for the year 1939-40, to the best of my memory. As the work was not completed during the fiscal year the appropriation lapsed and the next year the house did not vote any further amount for work of that kind. That work was begun during the fiscal year 1939-40—I do not recollect all the details on file—and in 1944 I answered that the house had not put any funds at my disposal for that kind of work. In spite of my goodwill, I was not in a position to make that payment, as I had no authority to do so and the required funds were unavailable.

As regards that part of my hon. friend's remarks where he mentioned the development of agriculture, he knows quite well that we are all in favour of that, but I do not think that such an argument could solve the problem and induce parliament to vote in time of war money for work of a civilian character. Since 1939, the government's policy has been directed towards avoiding all such expenditures and attempting to direct all our efforts to the winning of the war. Such was the policy of the former minister and such it still is to-day. I am sorry, but my estimates do not provide any funds for expenditures of this kind.

Mr. LACOMBE (Translation): The minister will allow me to point out that this expenditure was incurred following a direct promise of reimbursement made to the reverend Trappist Fathers. I fail to see why the minister has not included in his estimates this small amount of $184 which is justly claimed by this religious order.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull) (Translation): This claim is not the only one of its kind by any means. During the war, I cannot undertake to reimburse expenditures on works carried on in the course of a fiscal year for which no estimates have been provided to that end. I do not know whether the hon. member has followed me. The amount had been voted for, say, the fiscal year 1939-40. If my memory serves me right, the work had not been completed by the end of the year, indeed there are several similar cases. This work was continued during the next fiscal year. The hon. member says that a formal promise was made. There can be a formal promise only when work is carried out during the fiscal year for which estimates were voted; you may then receive payment. But if the work is carried out the following year when no appropriations have been submitted to the house in connection with such work, I cannot see how you may be reimbursed.

Mr. LACOMBE (Laval-Two Mountains) (Translation): As we are now discussing a post-war programme, would the minister tell me whether the reverend Trappist fathers may be paid after the war?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull) (Translation): I may say that I shall submit the case to the government for further consideration, but I cannot commit myself to a formal promise.

(Text)

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Will the minister explain what is meant by this programme in connection with the preparation of plans and specifications? Does it relate to any of the plans that may have been before the reconstruction committee? Will he be good enough to tell us exactly what plans and specifications are covered?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The amount required in this estimate would be for the cost of additional temporary architectural and clerical assistants necessary to carry out the preparation of plans and specifications for departmental projects for the post-war period. I understand that our architects are making a survey of public buildings in every district and are reporting to us on future works that may be carried out in all these places.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Right across Canada?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes. We find that we shall need more architects and we are even looking for architects. They are very difficult to find nowadays because they are all employed in war construction and other undertakings, but we intend to employ more architects and acquire more clerical help to look into the condition of buildings, the necessity for new buildings, and so on, throughout the country. We are preparing standard plans for certain post offices, according to the size of the town or city, so that we may be ready, if it is the wish of parliament, to undertake work in this connection when the war is over.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): This covers ordinary public buildings such as post offices and the other buildings that are used now?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): It does not cover any specific programme?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No.

Mr. ISNOR: I had thought this amount would be very much larger. It takes in a big programme of post-war construction, expenses in connection with the preparation of plans and specifications, et cetera, $95,000.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): May I interrupt to say that the amount is $250,000 for what they have in mind, though for this fiscal year they are asking for $95,000.

Mr. ISNOR: I am pleased to know that the amount is nearer a quarter of a million. Will this cover assistance to projects that will be undertaken in connection with a post-war planning scheme by the municipalities?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No.

Mr. ISNOR: I have in mind particularly a request I received from the town of Dartmouth on the eastern side of Halifax harbour. No doubt the minister is familiar with the situation there. We were promised years ago, by former prime ministers, that there would be a Halifax-Dartmouth bridge and we are still waiting for it. Perhaps the minister will take note of that and include it in his post-war programme for construction at the proper time.

That, however, is not what I have in mind. I am thinking of ferry facilities. There is a ferry which is operated by the municipality of Dartmouth. It carries on a twenty-four-hour service between Halifax and the town of Dartmouth. As the minister no doubt knows, the eastern air command have a very fine airport and base on the eastern side, and this ferry is the only means of communication. The traffic has increased some 300 per cent, with the result that they have not been able to look after their docking facilities in the same way as they have done in ordinary peace times. Quite recently, with the idea of post-war planning, they placed before the Department of Public Works a request that they be assisted in making plans to take care of a larger and more up-to-date system of dock facilities. My question is this: Does this item cover such post-war plans as I have mentioned, and, if so, will the minister be good enough to indicate whether the department is willing to assist the town of Dartmouth, in connection with the Dartmouth ferry, in procuring the necessary advice and plans to bring into effect their proposed development?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This item would not apply to any municipal project or to any ferry projects. It concerns public buildings, such as post offices, customs buildings, and other public buildings in cities and towns throughout the country. As to the request for assistance to the people of Dartmouth, the department is always ready to help communities, but to what extent I cannot say. I shall have to look into this project and see whether the federal authority has jurisdiction or could employ its people, or spend any money, on the undertaking. However, I will bring the matter to the attention of the officials of the department to see what they can do.

Mr. ISNOR: I thank the minister. I may say that the people of Dartmouth are not asking the department to undertake the expense of building these facilities. They are simply asking for assistance, to provide them with the architects, because architects are not available at the present time in that section of the country. The people are hoping that the minister will see his way clear to place at their disposal one or two of the men in the district of Halifax to assist them in making plans.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I should not like to commit the department during war when we ourselves lack architects and engineers. I could not undertake to do what the hon. member requests. His request can be gone into after the war. At the present time we are looking for architects and engineers for the work we have to do.

Mr. ISNOR: The minister will give the matter consideration?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Certainly.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: There are two items in connection with post-war construction that I presume could be dealt with at the same time. There is the item of $95,000 under the chief architect's branch, which has to do with expenditures in connection with preparation of plans, specifications, et cetera, and there is an item of $146,000 in connection with surveys, preparation of plans and specifications, et cetera, under the chief engineer's branch. This is the first concrete example of the government's plans to take up the slack of unemployment after the war. That will be done, apparently, by a public works construction programme. We have heard a great deal of plans for the post-war period. One hon. member of this committee has given much consideration to the necessity of public works being used in that connection. I refer to the hon. member for Davenport. This item indicates that the government now has a definite plan or blue-print that is to be followed. I should like the minister to explain fully the nature of that plan. I realize that there cannot be complete unanimity in the cabinet in that regard; for last fall I remember reading that one minister, the Minister of Pensions and National Health, in making a speech to a service club referred to the necessity of public works and a programme being made available now for post-war. On the same day the Minister of Munitions and Supply said that public works was not a solution of post-war unemployment.

This is a considerable expenditure, particularly when one remembers that it is concerned only with the matter of plans. I should like the minister to tell us to what extent he is following out the policy of the government in this item and to what extent it is anticipated that during the first or second year after the war the development of a public works project will ensure employment. In Canada to-day, as in the United States and elsewhere, groups of business and professional men and service clubs are endeavouring to visualize the conditions that will exist when the war ends. They are endeavouring to arrive at plans for post-war employment. For the first time to my knowledge parliament is now asked, and properly so, to pass a vote in order to enable the Department of Public Works to prepare plans for the post-war period. As I see the picture, it is to survey the need for public buildings in all parts of the country. That survey has now been proceeded with. If my information is correct, the minister has in his possession a general indication of the possible expenditure that the government, if it is in power at that time, intends to make after the war, and also the number of people, men discharged from the armed forces, and those who will be out of work as a result of the discontinuance of war industry, who will be assured of employment. No one expects that public works of itself will ensure employment. But it is one method whereby during the interim period in the passage from a war-time to a peace-time economy the slack of unemployment may be taken up temporarily.

I believe that a survey has been made by the Ottawa branch of the unemployment commission to indicate the degree and percentage of unemployment there will be when the various war industries are closed down. I referred to it the other day. For instance, if a class A industry is closed down within thirty days, thirty-five or forty per cent of the employees will require work elsewhere. I presume that this vote is to cover a situation such as that, in order that in that great changing period those who otherwise would be out of work, or would find themselves in receipt of payment under the Unemployment Insurance Act, instead of following that course and that delay, will be assured of employment through the medium of public works.

I commend the minister for taking the first step; but in asking us to vote this amount I think we ought to be assured that the government has a definite plan in mind; that it has a survey reasonably completed to-day, and that the members of this committee and the country will be made cognizant of what is being done.

Mr. BENCE: This is one of the very important items of the minister's department. Like the hon. member for Lake Centre I should like to obtain some information on what plans the government has in mind with respect to the allocation of this work across Canada. I believe that the minister's department should be concentrating as much as possible on matters such as these in an endeavour to obtain some cohesion across the country so that we shall know what we are stepping into when the war is over and what type of public buildings will be erected and where.

I was considerably surprised by the minister's statement that he had difficulty in finding architects, because information that I received as late as last fall indicated that architects were available. It may be that engineers are not available, but I believe that if the minister would canvass the situation carefully and advertise extensively he would find that architects are available, provided that they are paid adequately and reasonably for the services which they render.

May I suggest to the minister that when he considers this problem across the country he should remember that many municipalities, towns and cities have plans either ready or in mind, and that he should in some way or another endeavour to work out some kind of proposition so that all these plans and suggestions will be gathered together and correlated. In that connection may I say it has been brought to my attention that some of the smaller municipalities and towns find themselves in a position where they are unable to give complete details to the minister's department or to the administration with respect to proposed public works because they have not the necessary money with which to prepare the blueprints. I have in mind a communication which I received from the town of Sutherland, in my own constituency. They say that although they have certain plans which they should like to pass on to the administration, they cannot afford to spend several thousand dollars in the preparation of blueprints, not knowing whether or not in the final analysis the plans will be accepted.

I suggest to the minister and to the administration that some kind of plan should be worked out whereby those municipalities, particularly in what are called the unorganized areas, may be in a position to present complete and adequate plans to the administration. The same difficulty does not arise in the larger cities, because they have the necessary staff and finances to carry out this work, but the smaller places find themselves in a position where they cannot do this work.

May I suggest to the administration that when it comes to the erection of these public works consideration be given to an endeavour to solve the problem which has arisen as a result of the war, namely, the congestion in certain parts of the country. The minister and his advisers should consider the commencement of these works, particularly in areas such as in Saskatchewan, which, because of the necessities of war, have been denuded of their population, which has been brought down to this part of the country and other congested areas. It seems to me that the administration would be very well advised to keep this in mind, so that these works will be among the first to be undertaken in order that we may complete the decentralization which will have to be brought about if we are to have a proper and adequate economy in this dominion.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This item was studied by the department with one object. In the last year before the war the department spent something like $27,000,000 on public works. This year the ordinary estimates are down to something like $13,600,000. This means that we have not maintained our public buildings, wharves, breakwaters and so on, in the state of repair in which they would have been maintained had more money been placed at our disposal. We shall have our architects and engineers go over these works that belong to the federal government and make a report on their condition, in order to see what expenditures will be necessary to put them in a good state of repair. In addition, every day we receive requests for public buildings throughout the country, and we are convinced that many of them are needed. I would not want the committee to think that this item was brought in here by the department as the reconstruction programme of the government. This provides for the reconstruction of our own works immediately after the war; it will form a part, but not a very large part, of that post-war programme. Supposing we should fall back into a period of depression and unemployment; we have tried public works in the past, and they are not a cure or even a palliative for unemployment. They can help, as they have helped in the past, but I believe—and I am speaking personally—that a reconstruction programme should include much more than just public works, because public works coming under federal jurisdiction are limited to certain kinds of buildings and other projects, which we are quite ready to undertake.

I make this statement so that hon. members will not think it has been decided by the government that this amount represents the reconstruction programme envisaged by the setting up of a reconstruction department to coordinate the efforts of all departments of government. This money will be expended on our own works, in an attempt to put them in a good state of repair and develop them where necessary for the good of the public service.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Is this not part of the government's post-war scheme to take up the slack in employment?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Not in the sense my hon. friend has in mind. This is a departmental post-war plan to take care of property coming under our control.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That being the case, is there any government plan under which the Department of Public Works will consider some segment of the greater problem of post-war employment?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I believe that is a matter of policy which will be dealt with in due course. I do not think under this item I have authority to deal with the policy of the government as a whole in connection with reconstruction projects.

Mr. KNOWLES: I believe it is the thought of the Prime Minister that one memorial to those who give their lives in this conflict might be the general reconstruction of the city of Ottawa, and I am wondering whether such plans are included in this item.

There is another matter I should like to suggest to the minister along the line of memorials which might be constructed in local communities when the war is over. The suggestion I am going to offer appeals to me very much. It was made to me in a letter I received not long ago from a member of the armed forces serving overseas. His thought was that when the war is over and local communities are thinking in terms of the most suitable kind of memorial to erect to the memory of those who gave their lives in service, it might be desirable to construct something really useful in the community. Several times this afternoon the minister has referred to public buildings and has made it clear that in using those words he is thinking primarily of buildings for government departments, for office purposes and so on. There are other kinds of public buildings that we might take into consideration, such as adequate community halls, particularly in rural communities, which would be useful not only for office purposes but for a large number of Canadian citizens. That, indeed, is the suggestion which my correspondent has made to me, and because it appeals to me I offer it to the minister now. As he may know, the community halls we have in some parts of the country to-day do not fill the bill. In many cases they are firetraps and lack such things as accommodation for a district nurse, committee room space for men's and women's organizations, agricultural societies, boys' and girls' clubs and organizations of that kind. There is also the matter of toilet accommodation and washroom facilities necessary in local communities, particularly when one thinks of days when the whole countryside visits the town for some particular occasion. One thinks also of attractive dance halls, and facilities for drama and other seasonal activities which might be provided in such community halls, together with basement facilities for games and other activities.

This is the sort of thing that might well be realized if some lead were given in the matter. The suggestion in the letter to which I have referred is that the federal government thinking in terms of post-war construction, might offer to put up dollar for dollar with local communities to enable them to erect adequate fireproof community halls containing the facilities I have already suggested. No doubt in some communities an idea of this kind will take root and be acted upon. There can be no doubt of the need for it, particularly in rural communities. Although I do not represent a rural constituency I know something about life in the country, particularly in western Canada. Bearing in mind the need for this kind of thing, I believe it would be a worth-while gesture if the government were to give consideration to the idea.

As I said a moment ago, when the minister speaks about public buildings he appears to think only of buildings which provide office space for government departments. We recognize the need for those buildings, not only in Ottawa but throughout the country. I suggest, however, that there is also this other kind of public building which could be of real service to a community.

Mr. STIRLING: And use the taxpayers' money for it?

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. KNOWLES: I suggest, too, that the money the people of this country will want to spend on some kind of suitable memorials for those who are serving and giving their lives in this conflict would perhaps be spent more wisely and more usefully if a lead of this kind were given. I am wondering whether anything of this nature is included in the item for postwar construction. If not, would the minister take it into consideration?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No; under the item for post-war reconstruction we do not contemplate erecting any buildings or works which are not for the use of government services. War memorials are not comprised in this item.

Mr. GILLIS: I should like to ask a question connected with this matter of post-war reconstruction.

The CHAIRMAN: I believe the minister has stated that he can answer no question of policy with respect to the post-war programme. We are dealing with public works actually in existence.

Mr. GILLIS: I am going to ask about public works. The minister will remember that in December and January I had some correspondence with him, and interviewed an officer in the Department of Public Works in respect of the breakwater at Port Morien, Nova Scotia. In the minister's last letter dated January 13 he mentioned that an item in connection with the post-war reconstruction programme would be placed in the main estimates to take care of that situation. I have gone through those estimates, and I find no such item.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That would not be a war appropriation.

Mr. GILLIS: It is not in the main estimates, either.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): But there will be supplementary estimates.

Mr. GILLIS: I merely wanted to know if the minister still had the matter in mind, because it is closely connected with the livelihood of the entire village.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I wrote a letter stating that we would have an estimate, and there will be an estimate.

Mr. GILLIS: I hope there will be.

Mr. TUSTIN: In connection with the item of $95,000 for the preparation of plans and specifications has the minister any definite proposals in mind, or is he talking only in generalities?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Mostly generalities because, as I said, these men are going to look over the buildings, see what has to be done to them, report to the department, and then prepare plans in the department either for repair and maintenance, for the putting up of new buildings, or for the extension of those in existence. The same applies to the item under the chief engineer's branch, and having to do with wharves, breakwaters and the like. I cannot give a specific instance. We are putting these people to work to make the necessary reports. Then we will prepare the plans according to the reports.

Mr. MARSHALL: Are these new departments to be set up, separate and entirely different from the other departments?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No. They come under the chief architect's branch and the chief engineer's branch. There is no change in the set-up.

Item agreed to.

Post-war construction programme, surveys, preparation of plans and specifications, etc., $146,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: Why are any of these items in the war appropriation measure? So far as I can see, they all pertain to the post-war period.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We have thought in the department that during the war we should have an item in which we would prepare for the post-war period. This amount of $146,000 in the chief engineer's branch is for surveys of which I have spoken. They are to be made all through the country, and on both coasts, to see in what state our works are, and what will have to be done after the war to make repairs and extensions, and to provide new works.

Mr. MacNICOL: I would understand that to be ordinary, routine, departmental business. I should think the engineers and architects, in the ordinary course of their activities, would consider what repairs or additions should be made to buildings, either now or after the war. I cannot understand why we are discussing this programme under a war appropriation measure. I can understand that the minister's department has little or nothing to do with post-war reconstruction because, according to the announcement by the Prime Minister, a new department to be known as the reconstruction department is to be set up. It will be the business of that new department to provide employment in a large reconstruction scheme. I should think the activities of the minister's department would be confined to regular public buildings, and his department would do as it has been doing for years. Why are these two items in the war estimates?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Perhaps I did not make myself clear. Every year since the beginning of the war the budget of this department has been decreasing. We have not done the work on our own buildings and works that we do in ordinary, normal times. The cut has been made because of the war. The reason given me as to why the amount appears here, instead of in the civil estimates, is that we say the work is brought about by war conditions, and because we have not had the amount required to do the necessary work during the war. Year in and year out, since the war began, we have cut our civil estimates, and they have now reached a point where they are about half of what they were before the war.

Mr. MacNICOL: In reality these two post-war items have nothing to do with the war appropriation measure, or the conduct of the war.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): They may be applied to works which will be useful to the war.

Mr. ISNOR: Would this item take care of projects such as the strait of Canso causeway, and the tunnel between the mainland of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I understand that those matters would come under the Department of Transport, rather than the Department of Public Works.

Mr. ISNOR: That is what I wanted to know. The transport items have not been dealt with.

Mr. GRAYDON: I fancy that there are a number of hon. members who would like to know about that. They are waiting for transport.

Mr. ISNOR: It has been suggested by an hon. member that I should appeal to the Minister of Public Works to make representations on behalf of the people in the eastern section of our country to the Minister of Transport to have this done at as early a date as possible.

Mr. GRAYDON: Is he so hard to approach as all that?

Mr. ISNOR: He is fairly reasonable and willing to undertake anything that is presented to him, but sometimes he cannot see things just the way we would like him to. We will continue to make the representations we have made in the past.

Mr. GRAYDON: You might call in the Minister of National Defence for Naval Services as well.

Mr. ISNOR: He is always willing to help that section of Canada.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kingston City): "Ready, aye ready," is my motto.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I think this item requires further explanation by the minister. Possibly the best way to get this explanation is to ask him if during peace time it was customary to retain the services of architects and engineers apart from those employed by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I understand that temporary employees were engaged to meet the requirements of the department. Because of war conditions and lack of funds a number of buildings have deteriorated, and it was thought that we should survey every property and prepare plans so that we would be ready after the war as soon as parliament voted the necessary amounts, to do these repairs or extensions.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Then I understand that the architects and engineers employed by the Department of Public Works do not have the work to do now that they had before the war?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Do not change what I have said. There are three different types of work carried on by my department. First, there are the ordinary works. We did not get the vote we were accustomed to getting for this work. Then we have war work, and then we do work for other departments, such as pensions and national health and munitions and supply. Those three types of work come under the chief architect's branch and the chief engineer's branch.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Does the department employ outside engineers as well? Some time ago the minister was in Toronto and he tried to give us some idea of what was to take place after the war. I do not think he told us very much about what the post-war planning was. As I understand it, this item is to take the place of estimates which were not granted during the war. It is simply a civil estimate and it should not be here at all.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): When I was in Toronto I did not speak so much of post-war planning; I was asking the people of Toronto to tell me about their post-war plans so that the department would know what was planned for Toronto, or for any other section of the country.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): As a result of the trip the minister made to Toronto, perhaps he can tell us something about the suggestions which were made by various members from that city and by people of Toronto. Is it intended to do anything constructive as far as our city is concerned?

The CHAIRMAN: I do not think a report by the minister about Toronto has anything to do with the item.

Mr. COLDWELL: Does this item include repairs that have been deferred as well as plans for post-war projects other than repairs or extensions of existing buildings, as has been suggested by the senior member for Halifax?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Not under this item.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is that being done under any other item?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): There are people working in the department all the year round on plans and specifications for different works. We do not have a special item for that, but we are receiving reports from our district engineers all over the country and the work on those reports is carried on at the head office in Ottawa. This item is to cover the preparation of plans for repairs or extensions or the construction of new buildings which are needed and which were not carried on because of the war. We have not received from parliament the money necessary to keep these buildings in the state of repair in which we thought they should be kept, and we thought that now was the time to make a general survey and prepare plans so that we could go ahead as soon after the war as parliament might grant us the money.

Mr. COLDWELL: Should this item not be in the civil estimates? It has to do with ordinary repairs and extensions of buildings, work which has been normally deferred. It seems to me it is entirely misleading to the committee to have this item in these estimates. When I saw it I was pleased because I thought the government was prepared to do something concrete, even though it was in a small way. I have been looking for something of this sort for a long time and I thought this was at least something that was being done to prepare a programme of work for the post-war period.

Mr. GRAYDON: You are too innocent.

Mr. COLDWELL: I usually am quite innocent. We now find that this is an ordinary civil estimate and it does not give the right impression to the committee. The minister cannot be particularly busy with his ordinary civil public works just now and I had hoped that he would be devoting some time to preparing a real programme for post-war development. The Canso causeway was mentioned.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That would not come under public works.

Mr. COLDWELL: There is to be a provincial election in Saskatchewan and a bridge has been promised across the Saskatchewan river in my constituency. I used to raise the question of this bridge with the former government member, Mr. Bothwell, prior to the war, and the predecessors of the minister always promised that it would be considered.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It could be considered under this item.

Mr. COLDWELL: It is being considered under this item?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It could be.

Mr. COLDWELL: My hope was that projects of that description would be considered under this item.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Every hon. member wants some project considered under this vote.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am not asking for any special consideration; I am simply saying that projects of this description ought to be considered now. Projects that are deserving, not just because a particular member sits for a particular constituency, should be considered in time of war for completion in the post-war period in order to give employment, assist industry and all the rest of it. I am disappointed that the minister is not doing what I thought he was doing. I wish to express my regret. I think we should see to it that this item is transferred from where it is now to the civil estimates.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member was absent from the committee when I tried to explain to the best of my ability why this item had been put in the war estimates.

Mr. COLDWELL: No one understood it; that is why I ask the question.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The other hon. members stopped talking after I explained and my hon. friend is the only one who has raised it again.

Mr. GRAYDON: For a different reason.

Mr. COLDWELL: I came in with reinforcements.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The work we shall be doing under this item has not been done hitherto because of the war. Any project that is under federal jurisdiction could be studied, of course, but I would not want to promise that we will study projects for dance halls and things of that kind all over the country.

Mr. COLDWELL: Nobody suggested dance halls, surely?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That was suggested while the hon. member was out of the house.

Mr. COLDWELL: Community halls.

Mr. TUSTIN: This item reads "post-war construction programme". I listened attentively to the minister's explanation, and I gathered that what is to be done under this item is to make a survey of present buildings that may need to be renovated after the war. The minister has explained to us several times that his estimates have been cut almost in half within the last three or four years and that he has not been able to keep up the public buildings. To be quite clear about the matter I would ask the minister to state whether this is a post-war construction programme or just a survey of the buildings that may need to be renovated after the war. If I understood the minister aright, the details given on this page are entirely wrong. If the details are correct. I cannot understand the minister's explanation.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If the hon. member would read the item as post-war construction programme with respect to our own property or public works, that is all that it means. The hon. member for Lake Centre asked if this was part of a large reconstruction programme after the war and I said, no; that it was a programme applying only to our own public buildings.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Does it include harbours and things like that?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes.

Mr. MARSHALL: I find that the civil estimates of the chief engineer's branch have been steadily increasing since the beginning of the war. For instance, in 1942-43 they were $659,000, and in 1943-44—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. We are dealing with the war appropriation, not with civil estimates. There will be an opportunity to discuss them when civil estimates are before the committee.

Mr. MARSHALL: I am quite aware of that, Mr. Chairman. But the impression was being left with the committee that the majority of this vote has nothing to do with the chief engineer's branch.

Item agreed to.

Sundry services, $2,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: Following the item just passed, the next item reads, "Seymour Narrows, B.C.—removal Ripple Rocks".

The CHAIRMAN: There is a summary of the items before the committee.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Last year we had a vote of $200,000 for the removal of Ripple Rocks. This year we have no item for that purpose but are considering the matter.

Item agreed to.

Telegraph branch—
Ottawa—telephone service, $390,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: What does this cover?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It covers service to 6,221 telephones which have been installed for the war departments since the war.

Mr. MacNICOL: And long distance charges?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No. It covers a charge of $1.33 a month for each telephone, plus a mileage rate for telephone lines, and certain fixed charges which have been approved by the board of transport commissioners, all new equipment required to operate government phones, as well as the salaries of the additional operators required.

Item agreed to.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Departmental administration, $26,960.

Mr. GRAYDON: I take this opportunity, at the opening of the minister's estimates under the war appropriation resolution, to enlarge upon a matter I brought up at a similar stage of the session last year. I rise to say a word about the employees of our railway transportation systems, and I do so because, during this war time, the strain, the stress and the pressure which have been placed upon the two major railway systems have been most extraordinary. I think the committee ought to take these facts into consideration. Take the question of passenger traffic alone. If the minister will recall, last year I put on the record the figures of passenger traffic, showing that in 1939, the year the war broke out, the railways of Canada carried 17,000,000 passengers, which figure had risen in 1942, the year prior to my speaking on the matter in this house, to 42,000,000. In 1943 that figure had risen still farther to 52,000,000 persons carried on the railways in Canada. I am not sure, but I believe there was at the same time a substantial decrease in the number of employees of both systems. Previously they had carried 17,000,000 persons and that number had been trebled in the last year. That alone would indicate how the railways, and particularly their employees, have measured up to the challenge which the war has presented to the transportation industry of Canada.

Added to the passenger position, I had the figures checked with regard to freight, and while figures are not always interesting, these particular figures should be borne in mind by the committee. In the year the war broke out the railways carried 69,000,000 tons of freight. By 1942 the freight haulage had risen to 107,000,000 tons and last year it had increased still farther to 133,000,000. In other words, the quantity had doubled from 1939.

Those of us who have had the privilege of travelling to any great extent on the passenger trains of Canada will realize how little, if at all—and I emphasize that qualification—the convenience of travellers, and their comfort, have been interfered with during this strenuous war-time period. That is due largely if not entirely to the type of employees, who, as I have said, have measured up so well to the challenge thrown out to them by the war.

May I say a word also with regard to the enlistments from among the employees of the railways. I also put certain figures on the record last year in this connection. There have been substantial increases since. The latest figures show an enlistment percentage which is extremely high. They show that from eighteen to twenty per cent of the employees of both roads have enlisted for active service in Canada's armed forces. The enlistments to date from the Canadian National Railways total 18,434, and from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, 18,726, so that well over 37,000 of our railway employees are in the services.

Mr. SLAGHT: And the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario will compare favourably as well.

Mr. GRAYDON: I am not quite as well versed with respect to the T. and N.O., but my information would bear out what the hon. gentleman has said in that regard. That road will compare favourably indeed with any others in Canada. I say, therefore, that these matters, in the general discussion which will take place on these estimates, must not be lost sight of because they show that the railway employees of Canada have played a magnificent part in this war and have made a splendid contribution. It is a contribution which Canadians would expect from the men and women engaged in our transportation service.

In concluding my remarks, I take a little pride in the fact that the first job I ever had was with one of our railway systems in western Canada, and I think I can say something about railway employees with perhaps a little more emphasis and somewhat more from the heart than others may be able to do. They have played a part in the welfare of the country which perhaps Canadians do not generally recognize. We do not always express our appreciation of and gratitude for the splendid service which these employees have rendered, and therefore I take this opportunity, at this stage of the debate, to make this reference to a section of the community who, in my opinion, are entitled to the thanks of this committee, of the House of Commons and of the country.

Mr. COLDWELL: I, too, would say something about the contribution which the railways have made during this time of war. I suppose we from western Canada use these lines more than most other people in the country, and I may say that I have relied on railways all my life for very much that I have had to do. For some years, when I was a boy, I took the train early in the morning to go to school forty miles away and I came back the same way at night. The attitude of some people and of this house toward the railway systems of Canada is altogether different from what it was a few years ago. We used to hear a great deal of criticism of the Canadian National Railways. We were told that we had too many lines of railways, that the National railway was running the country, that they were too extensive, and so on. To-day, we can ask ourselves the question, where would we have been during this war had we not had these transcontinental systems? I am sure the Canadian Pacific Railway company would have given a great deal in 1941 and 1942 to have the rails which were pulled up in northern Ontario during the depression years, because they would have assisted in the carriage of the very heavy traffic across the country.

We should not lose sight of the fact that, after all, Canada as a nation could not exist without those bands of steel which unite the country from one end to the other. Before the war the railways were in danger of losing a great deal of profitable revenue by the competition of trucks and other forms of transportation. I have always believed that our transportation system ought to be considered as one public service and integrated as an entity. Instead of trucks competing with the railways for the profitable freight and express, the better traffic, they ought to be complementary or supplementary to the railway systems. There is plenty of room for trucks and buses to serve areas in this country where there is no railway transportation or where the transportation on the railways is inadequate.

I think the committee will do well at this time to express the gratitude we all feel to the railway systems, and particularly to the men who have done this remarkable job. I have met railway men during this war who have travelled thousands of miles every month and who from time to time thought they were going to get a good night's rest but who have been called to take out another train of supplies that were needed for the war effort. Those of us who have been in other countries since the war broke out and have seen the manner in which the people of those countries have to travel in war time realize that we in this dominion do indeed travel in luxury on our main lines of railway. Even in the great country to the south of us, the United States, I have found that the dining-car service there does not compare with ours. The service in our country far excels any dining-car service that I have seen even on the very best lines in the United States, lines such as the one running between New York and Washington. I think the tribute which was paid by the leader of the opposition a few moments ago to the manner in which the railways have been operated and the manner in which the men have given service to the communities at this time should be endorsed by everyone. We have men of all types, races and colours on our railways, and from the porters on the sleeping-cars to the men on the front of the train operating the engine I think we can say that they have done a truly remarkable job, a most wonderful contribution to the effort of this country during this period of war.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I should like to endorse the remarks made by the two previous speakers as to the splendid job that has been done by our railway systems during the past four years.

I wish to ask the minister a question concerning the purchase of certain property by his department. I refer to property bought in 1942 for the Gimli airport, approximately sixty miles north of Winnipeg. The original purchase price paid by the settlers for that entire block of land was $11,515. The total 1942 municipal assessment value of land was $3,815, and the assessment of buildings, $3,420, making a total assessment of $7,235. In 1942, the government, through the transport department, paid $52,150 for the 724 acres, or an average of $72 an acre for the land and whatever buildings were thereon. This airport land cost the vendors originally an average of $15.99 an acre. One vendor bought his property in 1905, 120 acres, for $2,800, or $23 and some cents an acre. The year next furthest back was 1909 when 160 acres were purchased for $1,300, or $8.50 an acre. The next is 1910 when some 160 acres were bought for $1,000, or $6.25 an acre. I think, all told, there were some thirteen parcels in this purchase. The first one was purchased from one Frazier, fifteen acres, the land being assessed for $80 and buildings for $70; the value at that time was $700. The government paid $1,500. Number 3 was the Schnerch property, forty-seven acres of land assessed at $250. There were no buildings on the land. The land was purchased on November 18, 1921, for $850, and the government paid $2,450. Number 2 was purchased from Julius and Mary Solomon, eighteen acres of land assessed at $100 and buildings assessed at $90. They purchased it on December 1, 1921, for $700, and the government paid $2,000.

Number 4 was purchased from Marks Steblinski, eighty acres of land assessed for $400 and buildings for $160. The registered deed was issued on February 3, 1937. He paid $2,000 for this parcel, and the government paid $6,000 for it. The cottage which was on the land was moved off the property into the village of Gimli and is now occupied by the original owners. Parcels Nos. 5 and 6 were purchased from Michael and William Hykanay, eighty acres of land assessed for $400 and the buildings assessed for $800. This land was purchased on July 26, 1926, for $1,400. The government paid $7,500. Parcels Nos. 7 and 8 were bought from Michael and George Wawrykow, 160 acres of land assessed for $800 and the buildings assessed for $800. This land was purchased in 1918 for $1,800 in United States funds, and the government paid $11,200 for this parcel.

Parcel No. 9 was bought from Mike Yurekchuck, 159 acres assessed for $800 and the buildings assessed for $800. This was acquired by deed on March 31, 1910, for $1,000. The government paid $10,800. Parcels Nos. 10 and 11 consisted of a community hall and 1⅛ acres of land. They do not appear in this statement.

Parcel No. 12 was bought from Wasyl Ewanchuk, 80 acres and 160 acres assessed for $830 and the buildings for $600. One hundred and sixty acres were purchased by the vendor in 1909 for $1,200. The government paid $7,100 for eighty acres of this land. Parcel No. 13 was bought from Gudjou Narfason, 120 acres of land assessed for $650 —there were no buildings on it. This land was purchased for $1,865, and the government bought eighty acres of it and paid $3,900.

During the same year there was much better agricultural land with considerably better types of buildings on it purchased in southwestern Manitoba at a much lower price. This land was much closer to the main line of railway and assessed several times higher in value. This land was taken over by the government for an airport at much less than one-half of the price per acre of the Gimli airport, and the owners of the property did not wish to part with it at that time.

Then we have the case of the Netley airport, twenty miles from Gimli. That land was acquired, including buildings and compensation, for an average of $30.75 an acre, land which, to say the least, was comparable with the Gimli land.

There was some controversy during the fall of 1942 over this Gimli property when a lengthy statement was made by the then representative of the riding, an hon. member who was in the cabinet, the Hon. Mr. Thorson. He hinted that this deal must have been all right because it had been valued by one J. J. Swanson, who had been a candidate of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation for a seat in parliament at one time; also that one of the properties purchased was owned by the family of an individual who is now a C.C.F. member of the legislative assembly of Manitoba. I do not know why the then minister should have made that statement; I do not see that it had any bearing at all. I think it is distinctly the responsibility of the government. About this time or during the controversy the present Minister of Transport was reported in the press to have stated that everything was perfectly in order in this deal because the original owners had paid $40 an acre for the land. I have already cited to you, Mr. Chairman, and it can be borne out by the land titles office in Manitoba, the cost of this land. The original cost to the vendors was, on the average, $15.99 an acre. Surely the government have some system of checking on these property deals. This one happens to be in my province. I remember an hon. member raising a question in the house some time ago as to the purchase of property in the province of Quebec, at, I think, Granby. He pointed out that a property there had been offered to the government gratis for the establishment of an industry; that a man had purchased the land for $100 an acre and later had sold part of the poorer land for $400 an acre to the Department of Munitions and Supply. I am just giving this as another example, for I am rather concerned, as are many people in my part of the country, over the wide variations in the amounts that have been paid by the government for land of the same type during these war years. I trust the minister can tell us what system they follow in making these purchases or in agreeing upon values which will be at least in the interests of the taxpayers.

Hon. J. E. MICHAUD (Minister of Transport): I do not know why the hon. member should bring up the question of the Gimli airport now—

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I can tell the minister.

Mr. MICHAUD: —because it was gone into quite fully about two years ago. Possibly the hon. member is under the impression that the work was done by employees of the Department of Transport, and that this item for administration includes part of the salaries of these people, as a result of which he feels at liberty to discuss this matter now. For his information I may state that I have nothing before me in regard to the purchase of that land, because nothing in the item under consideration has any connection with the payment of any of the employees who did that work. That land was purchased for the Department of Munitions and Supply, which had to do the work and whose responsibility it was to buy land and equip airports for the Department of National Defence for Air. The services of the land valuators of the Canadian National Railways were employed in connection with the purchase of all property required for war purposes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): For war purposes?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes, and in peace time as well, but we are now speaking of war expenditures.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Was that true of the Winter club in Montreal? Did they value that property?

Mr. MICHAUD: No; that was the air force. The question of the Gimli airport was aired at that time. My only connection with it arose from the fact that for the time being I happened to be acting for my colleague, who was out of the country for a few weeks. That was the only connection the Department of Transport had, as such, with the purchase or valuation of land in connection with the Gimli airport. If I remember correctly, the services of two land valuators, located in Winnipeg, of the western division of the Canadian National Railways were employed; and because there was some little criticism of the work done by these people some so-called independent valuators—I think the name of the company was Swanson—were asked to revise and check up on the work of the valuators of the railway company. There is nothing in this item that has any connection with the salaries of the officers of the department who had any connection with the purchase of that land.

Mr. HOWE: Since I am the minister who was responsible for the purchase of the land for the Gimli airport I should like to make a few comments. It is strange, I think, that my hon. friend should have waited until this occasion to bring up an item which has been before the house several times. I have been prepared to discuss the Gimli airport on a number of occasions; it has been threatened as a subject of discussion here for years. The purchase was discussed in a Winnipeg newspaper, I think at least two years ago; the curbstone opinions of a number of Winnipeg people were published in the newspaper at that time, though I do not believe any of them had ever examined the property. Tonight we are told what the purchase price of the property was in 1910. May I ask my hon. friend if the purchase price in 1910 would be any guide as to the selling price in 1942?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No; but in law it is one criterion.

Mr. HOWE: That is, raw land at that time is the same as cultivated land thirty years later?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HOWE: Oh, sit down.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): You asked me a question, and I am going to answer it.

The CHAIRMAN: The minister has the floor. The hon. gentleman will have a chance to answer the question later, if he wishes to do so.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Both ministers have belittled me for bringing up this matter at this stage of the proceedings. I wish to make it quite clear that one of the last items discussed in this house last session was in connection with the war expenditures committee. At that time I attempted to discuss this matter and was ruled out of order by Mr. Speaker, who did not quote any particular rule or reason for doing so. I had no other opportunity to discuss the situation. This is not such an ancient matter as the minister would have the people believe. This airport was opened only last year, and I have had no other opportunity to discuss the matter without being ruled out of order again. The property was purchased by the Department of Transport, and I am sure I am perfectly in order in discussing it under this item. If I had not done so it would have been buried again.

Mr. HOWE: We discussed the airport estimates of the Department of Munitions and Supply some three weeks ago, and we also discussed similar estimates a year ago.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): When was this property purchased?

Mr. HOWE: It was purchased in 1941, I think.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): By the transport department?

Mr. HOWE: It was purchased by the Department of Munitions and Supply.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): It was purchased in 1942; the order was issued on June 10 of that year, and it was purchased by the Department of Transport.

Mr. HOWE: The position in regard to the Gimli airport is simply this. The Department of Munitions and Supply received a requisition from the Royal Canadian Air Force for a bombing and gunnery school, which included an airport and a bombing and gunnery range. The dimensions of the bombing and gunnery range, as I remember them, were fifteen miles by eight miles. In order to acquire a range of that kind reasonably, it is necessary to use a body of water. There are two other bombing and gunnery schools in that area, which had used the two available lakes of the size required for a bombing and gunnery range. The only lake with an area large enough and suitable for the purpose was lake Gimli. Therefore it was necessary to establish the airport near lake Gimli. A thorough survey of the area was made, and it was decided that the cultivated land, adjacent to the village of Gimli, which was ultimately purchased, was by far the most suitable land for the purpose. It was estimated that the cost of clearing raw land for this purpose would be $100 an acre more than the cost of using cultivated land. Options were taken in the area, and the department was astonished at the price. Our surveyors were asked to go back and try again. Once more they returned and said that this area was infinitely more suitable for the purpose than any other in the vicinity of lake Gimli.

I may add that the purchase was in charge of the lands division of the Canadian National Railways, which has handled all land transactions for the Department of Munitions and Supply since the department was formed. Colonel Clarke, head of that division, was in general charge, while the western representatives of the railway in the land department were in immediate charge. Colonel Clarke was asked to get an independent valuation, and he chose the Swanson firm. Colonel Swanson was at that time, or had been very shortly before, president of the Winnipeg real estate board, and, in the opinion of Colonel Clarke, who made the choice, it was a thoroughly reputable firm. It was solely his choice. Colonel Swanson made a detailed valuation. He and his staff spent some time at the site, and submitted a report on values which was considerably in excess of the options that had been taken by Colonel Clarke. A thorough discussion was had. Officers of my department were consulted, and it has been explained to me that the site chosen is made up of highly productive land. It is in a dairying section, and it was pointed out that there was not a mortgage on any piece of land; that all lands were owned debt-free. The farmers were prosperous and doing well, and some of them were extremely reluctant to sell at any price. The owners took the view they were getting on very well, and they wished the Department of Munitions and Supply would go elsewhere for their airport.

Having all these reports before me, and all the information I could obtain, I decided it was better business for the government to pay the price asked than it would be to expropriate, and to leave the fixing of values to the exchequer court. These were small farmers, small holders, men who were being deprived of their source of livelihood and who had to settle elsewhere. It was thought it would be unfair to these small holders to put them to the expense of exchequer court proceedings, and cause delay in payment for the land, payment upon which they must depend to reestablish themselves in other locations.

On the other side it was felt by my officers—an opinion in which I concurred—that after ten per cent was added for forcible taking the chances were that the government would pay more for the land, as a result of an exchequer court finding, than it would pay by accepting the options which had been obtained by Colonel Clark. I may say that it has been our experience that wherever we have submitted the purchase of land to the exchequer court we have paid more for it than the price for which we could have purchased it through direct negotiation. I can give chapter and verse for that, in respect of a considerable number of airport sites which have been acquired by expropriation.

The airport was built. I may say that it was the cheapest airport among the bombing and gunnery schools. Results amply bore out the information given to me that this was very suitable land for an airport. As I have said, I have been prepared on other—and appropriate—occasions, to supply all the information bearing on this airport. I could have given my hon. friend chapter and verse for every parcel of land included in the area.

I do say this: I take full responsibility for the purchase of the Gimli airport. I am willing to appear before any tribunal and justify the purchase. I believe I can bring evidence of responsible people who have had years of training in the purchase of real estate, and who actually went on the site and explored the situation upon which their report was made, sufficient to justify the transaction.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Mr. Chairman, before we start on the detailed examination of the estimates submitted to us by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Michaud), I wish to make a very special appeal to him on behalf of a class of citizens about whom we seldom hear in this house, namely, our college students. I wish to call the minister's attention to them, following some steps that were taken in December last so that they might continue to enjoy the privilege of reduced fares which the railways used to grant them when they went home for the Christmas or summer holidays. Having been advised by many of them at the beginning of December last that such a privilege would no longer be granted, I communicated, in the first place, with Mr. G. A. Brass, chairman of the Canadian Passenger Association, from whom I received the following letter:

December 8, 1943

Dear Sir:

Referring to your telegram of date regarding students' Christmas vacation fares.

As you know, it has heretofore been the practice of the railways to authorize reduced fares during public holiday periods, such as Christmas, New Year, Easter, et cetera, and, as a part of the general public holiday arrangement, to also accord to students and teachers a longer period of sale and return limit to coincide with the period of school closing.

However, under the provisions of orders in council P.C. 2557 and P.C. 6372, the railways are prohibited from authorizing any reduced fares for public holidays. . . . Consequently, the customary holiday fares for the general public, including students, during the Christmas and New Year holidays will not be authorized this year.

I regret that, under these circumstances, we shall be unable to make any exception in the case of the students referred to.

Yours truly,

J. A. Brass,
Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the Minister of Transport should, before the end of the present school term, see to it that these orders in council are amended to enable these college students to benefit from the reductions which they enjoyed in the past. And in support of this appeal, I feel that I cannot do better than to read excerpts from three letters which I received last December and which give a true picture of the plight of our college students. I quote the following from one dated December 4, 1943, which I received from Mr. Paul Emile Tremblay, of the Seminary of Chicoutimi:

We, of Charlevoix-Saguenay, have learned with considerable dismay of this extraordinary announcement. Indeed most of us belong to large families who are forced to make sacrifices in order to enable one of their members to complete his education.

We cannot afford to pay twenty-five, thirty-five or even fifty dollars (in the case of those who live on the north shore) for two weeks' holidays. If we were earning money, the situation might be different, but we must face facts. This is why, to-day, more than seventy-five young men from Charlevoix-Saguenay request your help.

I have received another, bearing the date of December 4, 1943, and signed by Mr. Saül Otis, of the Seminary of Chicoutimi. It says in part:

Consider my case. I live at Baie-Saint-Paul, which is quite a distance. This trip would call for an expenditure of about $20 for fare alone, and as I have a brother with me, a total of $40 would be required. Do you think it is fair to have us spend $40 just for a very short stay in our family?

And, finally, I shall read the following excerpt from a letter of December 5, 1943, signed by Mr. Alphée Lessard:

However, unless I can get a reduction, I shall be compelled to spend the holiday season within the four walls of my seminary.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister of Transport should listen to the appeals of these young people and take the measures necessary to have them enjoy, as I said before, the rate reductions to which they have been accustomed. When all is told, we should not forget that most of these students are members of large and poor families and I feel that the Minister of Transport would deserve commendation if he had this order in council amended.

Mr. GOLDING: The last time this question of the Gimli airport was raised by the hon. member for Souris, namely the occasion when the war expenditures committee was under discussion, he promised he would prove to the house that this land cost the department $72 an acre. At that time I said that that was not true.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Land and buildings.

Mr. GOLDING: The hon. member did not say land and buildings.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Read the record tomorrow and see.

Mr. GOLDING: If that is true, I have no more to say.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That may be a good idea.

Mr. GOLDING: The hon. member for York-Sunbury knows something about taking land, and I am sure he will appreciate that the report of the department states that the value of the land was $45.60 an acre; the buildings were valued at an average of $20 an acre, and forced vacating was valued at ten per cent, or $6.40, which made a total of $72. The Winnipeg Tribune compared the purchase of this land at Gimli with the purchase of land at Carberry, but the fact is that at Carberry no buildings were involved and the average price paid per acre was $43. I refer the hon. member to the independent valuator's report on the land at Gimli. There was an alfalfa crop valued at $15 an acre, and other grain crops which were valued at so much an acre, the total valuation, all included, being an average of $72 an acre. But it certainly did not cost $72 an acre for the land alone.

If my hon. friend says that he did not say that, I am not going to raise any further point with him. But it has been said repeatedly that the land at Gimli cost $72, while the land at Carberry cost $43, but there is no comparison between the two. There were thirteen properties and nine homesteads involved at Gimli, but in the other case it was all clear field. I think everybody in the house will appreciate the difference.

The CHAIRMAN: I believe hon. members will agree that this discussion should be terminated now, since it has nothing to do with the item before the committee.

Mr. SENN: It should have been terminated long ago.

The CHAIRMAN: It should have been ruled out of order when the hon. member for Souris first made his statement.

[Mr. Dorion.]

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): On the point of order, if we cannot discuss anything relating to this department under the item dealing with administration, we might as well fold up.

Mr. HOWE: It is not in this department.

The CHAIRMAN: It comes under the Department of Munitions and Supply and we are now discussing the Department of Transport.

Mr. RALSTON: I think the hon. member completely misunderstands the purpose of this item. It has nothing to do with the Gimli airport. As the minister has explained already, the officials concerned with this item of administration had no part in the purchase of the Gimli airport. That was purchased by the Department of Munitions and Supply.

May I just say this to the committee. I have sat here for half an hour and have listened to a discussion about the Gimli airport. I did not say anything because I did not want to appear to be stopping debate all the time. This afternoon the leader of the opposition hoped that we could increase the tempo of the business of the house. I submit to hon. members, and to the hon. member for Souris particularly who seems anxious to rise in his place again, that there is a time and place to discuss this item and he will have full opportunity to do so when that time arrives. But this is not the time to discuss it, and I submit that it is not fair for him to press this discussion further in view of the many items that we have to take up under this war appropriation bill. I am taking the point of order that this discussion is entirely out of order and I submit that it should cease.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): On the point of order, with all due deference to the minister who is leading the government may I say that this property was not purchased, as he says, by the Department of Munitions and Supply. I have all the detailed documents in the return and they show that the papers were signed by officials of the Department of Transport. If the minister can show me where I would be more in order to discuss this matter than under this present item, I should like to know.

Mr. RALSTON: I would suggest to my hon. friend the public accounts committee which is sitting. He has full opportunity to go before that committee any time he likes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): What department purchased the land?

Mr. RALSTON: The minister has said already that the officials of the Department of Transport had nothing to do with that matter. That was done by the Department of Munitions and Supply.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The return shows otherwise.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Still on the point of order, I have followed this matter for some time and the Minister of Transport and Minister of Munitions and Supply took me to task for waiting until this late date. I pointed out last year that this airport had only been opened during the past year. The purchase was made in 1942, and I waited purposely for the setting up of the war expenditures committee in order to discuss this matter. That was one of the last items of business in the dying days of 1943 and everybody was—

Mr. RALSTON: "Fed up" is the word.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I was ruled out of order and I had no opportunity of rising at that time. I have been careful to wait until I would be in order, until I would not be ruled out of order. I certainly think I am in order now. I have the documents that were brought down by the Department of Transport and I do not think the minister can deny that this property was purchased through his department. I maintain that I am strictly in order. In answer to the hon. member for Huron-Perth (Mr. Golding), I would say that I have an article signed by an official of the department, Mr. J. H. Murphy, wherein he points out that prices obtaining here were somewhat higher than those paid for other sites in Manitoba. I did not refer to Carberry; I referred to a field in my own constituency which was purchased.

This was some of the best agricultural land in Manitoba. The owner did not want to sell at any price, but pressure was put on by the government and they took over the land at less than half the figure which was paid at Gimli. This was much better agricultural land than could be found in the interlake district of Manitoba. I want to find out from the minister if they do not have some system of fixing values in connection with these purchases. I am willing to take any agricultural expert in Canada and show him the land they purchased in my constituency, and I know he will say it is more valuable than the land at Gimli.

Mr. HOWE: Just to clear up the point that has been raised about responsibility, it is the responsibility of the Department of Munitions and Supply to carry out all defence construction as well as to do the purchasing for the armed forces. When I left the Department of Transport to take over the Department of Munitions and Supply in April, 1940, I arranged with the then minister and with the Prime Minister that I would have the use of the experts on airport construction of the Department of Transport in carrying out my new responsibilities. As a practical way of making the arrangement, I took over under my responsibility the air service branch of the Department of Transport, together with a small part of the time of the deputy minister of transport, who had formerly had jurisdiction over that branch. I am the minister responsible in this case, and this expenditure was an expenditure of the Department of Munitions and Supply. I should like to make it clear that I take full responsibility for the transaction.

Mr. ROY (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I wish to join the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Dorion) to support the request he directed a few moments ago to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Michaud) on behalf of our students who have been deprived of the reduced fare privilege which they used to enjoy as regards railway travel. I shall not repeat the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay. Like him, I had, at the request of a number of people from my district, taken the matter up with Mr. Brass, and I received from him a letter quite similar to the one the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay has read a few moments ago.

However, I should like to point out another feature of that matter. If the government has taken that step it is certainly not for the mere satisfaction of depriving the people of a privilege they had long enjoyed, and whose purpose was to help our young people to obtain some education. I think the motive behind the order in council which cancelled the reduced fares granted to students in the past was to relieve traffic congestion on the railways, especially during the Christmas, New Year and Easter holidays.

However, last winter, at least in regard to the Gaspé Seminary where I made enquiries, this measure proved itself unavailing. Indeed, every pupil who had planned, as in the past, to spend the holiday season with his family, went home as usual. Therefore, the object of the order, which was to relieve traffic at that particular season of the year, by curtailing travelling on the part of students of seminaries, colleges or universities, seems to have failed utterly.

This is the point to which I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Transport. If the minister will take the trouble of making enquiries from various educational institutions, and especially from those which are patronized by pupils who come from distant points and who must, of necessity, travel by train, he will find, as I have said a moment ago, that students travel as usual and that this order has failed to attain its purpose. If he finds that such is the case, he will undoubtedly agree to have, as in the past, a reduced rate granted students.

Mr. MICHAUD (Translation): No one was more aggrieved than I at the treatment meted out to university and college students during the last holiday season. The hon. members who have just made requests on behalf of students, seem to believe that the minister enjoys the privilege of granting fare reductions on the railways. If they entertain such a delusion, let me tell them that the minister does not enjoy among his prerogatives that of granting reduced fares or any transportation privileges on the railways, whether the Canadian National or any other. The conditions under which railway transportation in Canada is regulated are determined by the Canadian Railway Act. Ever since 1918, pupils, students, teachers, have never enjoyed reduced fares as such on the railways. These special privileges have been abolished since the winter of 1918, when the Railway Act was amended. Since 1931, the railway association had granted them the privilege of reduced fares enjoyed by other travellers in connection with excursions or on week-ends. In other words, students, professors and teachers were assimilated to other citizens of the country who could avail themselves of reduced transportation fares on week-ends and on certain holidays: Christmas, Easter and All Saints' Day.

Last winter, the transport controller, pursuant to the powers vested in him, decided to abolish all reduced railway fares and, by the same fact, the students, pupils and teachers were deprived of the rights they had been enjoying as citizens of Canada. Under the Railway Act as it now stands, it is impossible to grant special fares to students and teachers as such. Therefore, we have not been able to acquiesce to the urgent requests of parents, college presidents, university rectors, religious institution superiors of the province of Quebec and other parts of the country, who asked that reduced fares be granted them this year for the Christmas, New Year's and Easter holidays.

You may be convinced that we have endeavoured, by every possible means, to discover some loop hole in the act which would allow us to take appropriate steps short of amending the Railway Act. The legal advisers of both the Department of Transport and the Canadian railways have clearly indicated that it was impossible to make an exception in favour of students. As long as the Railway Act remains unamended for the purpose of granting special privileges to students and as long as the order cancelling all permits or reduced transportation fares for week-ends applies to the general public, we shall have to deplore the impossibility of granting the numerous requests received from students, teachers, both male and female, as well as parents.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Was the lake Utopia training field purchased by the minister's department or by which department?

Mr. MICHAUD: I do not know.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I understand that it is not settled for yet. Did the minister's department or did the Minister of Munitions and Supply, acting in his dual capacity as he often does, purchase the Pennfield airport, or how was that purchased?

Mr. MICHAUD: By Munitions and Supply.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Through the hon. member for Port Arthur as minister?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Then Tracadie. Who purchased the artillery field? I should like to say this. The minister said that in every case the private treaties arranged by the department—

Mr. HOWE: Tracadie was bought by the Department of National Defence.

Mr. RALSTON: So was Utopia.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is quite all right with me. The prices paid at Tracadie were exceedingly low, but the prices paid at Tracadie were ratified by the exchequer court. Certain persons whose land was taken away from them refused to accept the government's offer, and my understanding is that in every case the exchequer court based its decision on the offer made by the crown. The offers were exceedingly low, and I think I know the reason; the land was inferior. But it is not quite fair for the minister to say that the government in all cases made purchases at prices lower than the exchequer court award. Perhaps that is not just what the minister said. He may have said that he or his officials made purchases in all cases lower than the exchequer court award. The exchequer court awards in the Tracadie artillery cases were exactly on the basis of the government's offers.

While I am speaking, may I say that so far as lands purchased in New Brunswick by officials of the Canadian National Railways are concerned, I think they did a good job and saved the country a lot of money. For the benefit of the Minister of National Defence I suggest that when they come to settle for the blueberry lands in the lake Utopia training area he let the matter go to the exchequer court and allow them to fight it out there, because the differences between the department's ideas on the one hand and the ideas of the proprietor of the blueberry plains, on the other, are so far apart that I do not think a compromise would be possible. But perhaps the minister has nothing to do with lake Utopia.

Item agreed to.

Director of merchant seamen, $1,308,240.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): What is this item?

Mr. MICHAUD: This is to cover cost of equipping, maintaining, and operating manning pools, merchant seamen's training centres, welfare institutions, facilities for merchant seamen and the extension of existing nautical schools in our principal seaports.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Where are those schools?

Mr. MICHAUD: There are two training schools, one at Prescott, Ontario, and one at St. Margaret Bay, Nova Scotia. Then there are manning pools at Halifax, Montreal, Vancouver and Saint John.

Mr. KNOWLES: There is one matter about which I should like to ask the minister a question, and I trust it will not be out of order if I indicate how it has come to my attention. As hon. members may know, I raised in the house some time ago the case of a man discharged from one of the services at his own request and being left without any means of getting home to his place of residence when that is far removed from the point of discharge. The Minister of National Defence was the first to announce that a change had been made with regard to men discharged from the army at their own request, and as I pressed the matter further, an announcement was eventually made by the Minister of National Defence for Naval Services to the effect that men discharged from the navy at their own request would have their travelling expenses paid either to the place of enlistment or to their home. As I indicated at the time, I raised the matter because it was drawn to my attention by a prominent gentleman who is working with the Navy League of Canada at Victoria, British Columbia. He and others have been most appreciative of the new provisions laid down by the government with respect to men in the services, and he has drawn to my attention the fact that there are men in the merchant navy who find themselves in the same situation.

Coming as I do from Winnipeg, which is far from either coast, I have not a great deal of contact with this kind of thing, but knowing the gentleman who has written to me about the matter, I feel that it should be looked into. He has suggested that there are men of the merchant navy who find themselves in the same position as men in the Royal Canadian Navy. For reasons back home it becomes necessary for them to leave the merchant service. The withdrawal is at their own request; but it is owing to conditions beyond their control, and when it comes to finding their way home, it may be a good many thousand miles, they are stranded. May I ask the minister whether something can be done for these men, comparable with what has been done for men in the navy.

Mr. MICHAUD: My hon. friend will understand that merchant seamen, unlike the men in the other services, are not employees of the crown. They are employed by private companies that operate ships and hire them for pay. When, for some reason or another, they abandon their occupation and desire to go home, since they are not the employees of the government, they must pay their fare. All we have to do with merchant seamen is to recruit them. It is a service we have organized during the war to ensure that there are complements of the crews that are needed for the ships that take cargoes overseas from Canada and the moment the seaman signs articles of agreement with an operator of a ship, he ceases to be under our care and he returns home or voluntarily reenters a manning pool.

Mr. KNOWLES: I understood that this would be the situation; but, as the minister points out, the government does spend money recruiting men in order to make them available. Some of these items relate to manning pools and other services so as to make sure that these men are available, and it seems unfair to the men to absolve the government of all responsibility when the men find themselves in a situation similar to that of men in the armed services.

Every time the question of merchant seamen has come up I have listened with interest to the discussion, and it has seemed to me that these men deserve every possible consideration that can be given them in view of the hazardous as well as the valuable nature of their service. They deserve a consideration comparable in all points with that given men in the other services.

Mr. MICHAUD: I fully subscribe to that. We recognize the valuable services these men are rendering, but our duty is to recruit men to ensure a properly trained crew for any ship that wishes to leave any of our ports. We give them as many benefits as possible while they are in the manning pools waiting for their ships or waiting to be assigned or to be engaged for some voyage overseas on the high seas. But once they sign on a ship they are no longer members of the pool, and until they are through with their contract and come back voluntarily into the pool in order to hire again they are not at all under our control.

Mr. GILLIS: I have spoken several times on the merchant marine. I think they are more or less forgotten, although they are serving in just as important a capacity as the army, the navy or the air force. I believe the minister recognizes that. I hold in my hand a press clipping dated April 3, 1943, which contains a statement of the minister. In that statement he recognizes the importance of the merchant marine, because he said that without the service performed by the merchant marine the rest of our war effort would be totally unavailing. It is a realistic statement, but when it comes to doing something for these people the shoe is on the other foot.

While I was listening to the minster a few moments ago, answering the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I could not help thinking the war effort of the army, navy and air force is a protected one. The only section of the war effort that has received practically none of the benefits that the government are making available to the sections of the service over which they have control is that which is still prosecuted under the system of private enterprise. I refer to the merchant marine. That applies to wages, allowances, rehabilitation benefits and everything that goes to compensate them in a monetary way. But the situation is different with those who are fighting the war in the recognized military services.

One point brought out by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is worthy of consideration. Many of those boys from the prairies and some from Vancouver, after serving on the water for a considerable length of time, are landed in Halifax, or persons from Halifax are landed in Vancouver, and they have to make their way across the country without any assistance in the way of transportation.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): To get to their homes?

Mr. GILLIS: Yes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is there not a distressed seamens' fund to take care of that? There has always been provision for that.

Mr. GILLIS: That is charity.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No; I would not say that.

Mr. GILLIS: Absolutely.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): There is a distinction between charity and that. I do not think it is quite charity.

Mr. GILLIS: In my opinion it is. Those men suffer from many disabilities. The dependents of those men who serve in the merchant marine are in an awkward position. If a young man goes into the merchant service and is lost at sea, or if he is on a ship of foreign registry, it takes months for his parents to unravel exactly what happened. You have to check with the Norwegian consul, or the Greek consul, or someone else. If the boy is a Canadian citizen and he volunteers in one of the most essential branches of the service and goes on board a ship of foreign registry, he loses his Canadian citizenship; and the responsibility for checking or compensating the parents for the loss of the son is passed along to another government. That is something which should be corrected.

Mr. MICHAUD: I think my hon. friend has been misinformed if he labours under the impression that because a seaman takes articles on a foreign ship he loses his citizenship. He does not. A seaman who is sick abroad gets twelve weeks' pay, and if he is injured on a boat of Canadian registry he gets compensation.

Mr. GILLIS: In theory.

Mr. MICHAUD: No; in practice.

Mr. GILLIS: Perhaps I have had as much experience in this as any other hon. member of the committee, and I am still tracking down cases that I have had on my hands since 1941. While the minister has a paper organization that sets up the mechanics which he describes, unfortunately when you try to put them into practice and administer the regulations you are up against a different proposition. If you can prove that the boy was lost at sea by enemy action, you are referred by a department of government to the government that has the ship under its registry. You deal for a short time with the British board of trade, and after months and months of correspondence perhaps you get somewhere. While the minister is quite right in theory in saying that the boy does not lose his Canadian citizenship, yet in fact he does. He certainly has not the benefits that the Canadian service personnel receive through the medium of their own government and through the Department of Transport and the Department of National Defence for Naval Services. None of these departments of government in Canada is able to do anything for him until you finally check and prove your case through other governments. What I am arguing about at the present time is the delay and all the unnecessary machinery that applies to Canada nationals serving on ships of foreign registry. I want the minister to answer these questions because I have another question to ask.

There is the matter of insurance. The service personnel in the merchant marine have very little protection. When a Canadian national goes aboard a ship of foreign registry in Canada, or on one of our own Canadian steamship lines, is he protected by insurance of any kind by the company which owns the ship on which he is serving? That is a question which comes up from time to time.

An hon. MEMBER: Yes.

Mr. GILLIS: I have never been able to prove that. I have a dozen cases.

An hon. MEMBER: He is protected on lake steamers.

Mr. GILLIS: That may be so on lake steamers, but I am talking about ocean-going ships.

Mr. MICHAUD: Under the provincial laws of all the provinces there is compensation on inland waters and on coastal waters.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): But not on the high seas.

Mr. MICHAUD: Not on the high seas. There is no compensation under any law as yet; but for the benefit of my hon. friend I may say that at the present time some officials of several departments of government are working together preparing a plan of compensation for Canadian seamen who meet with accidents on the high seas.

Mr. GILLIS: I am very glad to hear that, but there is discrimination again. There is a private enterprise set-up to employ merchant seamen and there is the government set-up which is responsible for the other service personnel. The man who is in the services is protected; his dependents are protected if anything happens to him, but not so with the merchant marine. In my opinion it is rank discrimination to enlist the services of a man or a boy in that particular occupation, because I think it is the most hazardous of all, sailing on those old boats with very little protection and under war conditions at all times. There is no way of fighting back. If the seaman is lost at sea I think the least that the companies which employ him can do is to insure him for a certain amount in order to protect his dependents. I realize that such seamen are included in the Canadian pension regulations now, but if they are killed by enemy action you have to prove the claim, and it is a rather difficult thing to do. It takes a long roundabout course, as the Minister of Pensions and National Health will admit, because he is tracing a lot of them now.

Another point I should like the minister to comment on is medical facilities. What are the medical facilities at Canadian ports for Canadian merchant seamen who happen to land at Halifax, Montreal or Vancouver, or any of our Canadian ports? What are the facilities to take care of them if they are sick and require medical attention or hospitalization? Have they the right to enter a military or naval establishment in those ports? I have received letters stating that men have left their ships in Halifax, for example, requiring hospitalization, and met with a great deal of difficulty in securing it. Finally they got into hospitals, but during the period of their stay they receive none of the benefits that are given the service personnel in the way of pay, allowances, a little something for comforts and so forth. It seems to me that they have a great deal of difficulty in getting any kind of medical attention if they leave their ships under the circumstances I have just mentioned. These are sore points with the men serving in the merchant navy, and I think they require some attention.

Mr. MICHAUD: By arrangement with the Department of Pensions and National Health the services of that department in all Canadian ports are available to merchant seamen who are in need of medical attention. In addition, we have just drawn up a new regulation under which sick seamen are entitled to an amount not to exceed twelve weeks' wages, excluding war risk bonus and war service bonus, in addition to the medical care and attention they receive through the Department of Pensions and National Health.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is this the distinction, that men in the merchant marine are not enlisted men of the crown, while those in the armed services are, and therefore the men in the merchant marine have never been given the same benefits? I think that is the principle upon which the department has been acting. Some time ago men of the merchant navy who suffered by reason of enemy action on the high seas—Canadian nationals, we will say, serving in ships of Canadian registry—were brought within the provisions of the Pension Act, were they not?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Now they are entitled to pensions, provided they prove their case, to the same extent as men in the armed services. I point out to the minister, then, that we have admitted the principle; and if these men to whom the hon. member for Cape Breton South is referring are doing war service comparable with that of the men in the armed services who are not actually fighting abroad, then why should we not, at all events during the period of the war, go a greater distance than we have gone? I think the hon. member for Cape Breton South has made out a case for further assistance to the men of the merchant marine.

Take the case of the damage to the Lady Nelson, about which I happen to know quite a lot because the captain was a great personal friend of mine. She was torpedoed in St. Lucia harbour; her whole stern was blown off, and I suppose there was some loss of life, though I do not recall that. She was repaired on the spot at least to the extent that she could be towed to Mobile, Alabama, where she was, in fact, rebuilt and converted into a hospital ship. The season of the year was such that getting her there was a terrific task. She was a tow at four miles an hour over thousands of miles of water, down through the Florida ship canal and up through the gulf of Mexico to Mobile, Alabama, and then the superintendence of the conversion had to take place. As a result, more than one person, including the master, lost his health. After some trouble—I do not say there was a battle or anything of the sort—upon the submission of evidence as to his health before this voyage, the pension commission agreed that his condition, which they had previously held was pre-enlistment—I believe it was a heart condition—had been aggravated by the services he had performed.

I mention this case to show that by virtue of the amendment to the pension legislation we have recognized the very principle for which the hon. member for Cape Breton South is contending. As I understand it, he is saying that while in theory and in certain directions we have perhaps admitted the principle, in other directions it does not function without a great deal of trouble. If that be so, it is a pity. The minister and the officials of his department ought to make it easier for a man in the merchant navy to show that he is suffering as a result of his service at sea, because that man is really not in a position to fight for himself. The minister should give the committee some assurance that the extension of the principle of liability for injury or suffering or incapacitation will be sympathetically considered, because undoubtedly these men are doing a great national service. I offer this to the minister as a constructive suggestion.

Mr. MICHAUD: These are very good suggestions. The committee will realize that when war broke out we had to build up a body of merchant seamen as quickly as possible, but practically every week we are able to grant further benefits to these men or do something that will improve the conditions under which they work or the conditions under which they wait between voyages, and also improve their remuneration. We now pay them up to twelve weeks while they are sick. We expect to have full compensation even for both sickness and accident on the high seas. We give them an additional war service bonus after they have served in the merchant navy for a year. At the end of one year's service we give them twenty-four days' leave with pay, and a one-third of single first-class or coach fare, with the remainder of the fare paid by the Department of Transport, round trip. These are benefits we have been able to work out gradually for the merchant seamen. In addition, we make an allowance to the dependents in case of death, and we are working out rules which will make it as easy and simple as possible for the sick or disabled man or his dependents to establish a claim to benefits from the Department of Transport, which in turn we transfer to the Department of Pensions and National Health, who administer these matters.

Mr. MacNICOL: I should like a little more information as to just what is done for dependents of merchant seamen who lose their lives as a result of ships being torpedoed. I was following the last war, and still am, now an honorary officer of the Navy League of Canada. The Navy League of Canada was appointed one of the agencies following the last war to dispense reparations. I have forgotten all the particulars, but I know they applied to merchant seamen, or rather to the families of merchant seamen who had lost their lives through ships having been torpedoed.

I have long believed—I could not believe anything else—that the family of a merchant seaman who loses his life while engaged in war work, possibly that of convoying the goods of war, or goods required to maintain the people of the old country, are just as much entitled to full compensation as the man who does the fighting—perhaps I should not say just as much as the man who does the fighting, because perhaps he is entitled to more than anybody else—but at all events are entitled to full compensation.

I am not sure just what the position is to-day, but if the wives and families of men who have been lost in convoy work are not receiving the same benefits, then certainly they should be. If that is not the case, then I hope the minister will see that it is.

Mr. MICHAUD: To-day the dependents of merchant seamen get exactly the same benefits as those of the navy.

Mr. MacNICOL: And just as quickly, and without trouble?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes, it is administered by the same department, namely the Department of Pensions and National Health.

Item agreed to.

Joint U.S.A. and Canada defence—purchase, leasing or otherwise acquiring properties, $110,000.

Mr. COLDWELL: Will the minister give us an idea of the properties involved?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes. This is just a tentative estimate of what we will need to purchase or to take over property acquired or leased by United States representatives in Canada. The title has to be vested in the crown, or in His Majesty the King in right of Canada. Some real estate is required. There are many leases, both large and small, especially in the west, standing in the name of officials, but held for the United States government, and the title to which is to be transferred to His Majesty the King. This is done partly through the Department of Transport and partly through the Department of Mines and Resources.

Mr. COLDWELL: I notice the amount is considerably less than last year.

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: And is it "acquired" or "required"?

Mr. MICHAUD: "Acquired"—and it may be "required", I do not know.

Mr. COLDWELL: Either by lease or purchase. The property required by the United States government is mainly leased.

Mr. MICHAUD: Mainly leased.

Mr. COLDWELL: And I suppose chiefly around Edmonton?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes, around Edmonton.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: There are two or three matters connected with manning pools to which I would direct the minister's attention. I am not sure whether they should have come under the last item or this one. I have before me a copy of an agreement which the men entering these manning pools are required to sign. I was pleased to hear the minister report on the degree of responsibility his department was accepting for the men employed in the merchant marine. I think it is not only the nature and importance of that work in our war effort that makes the department responsible. The department takes men into the manning pools, invites them to enter into a contract, and once they have entered these manning pools they are to all intents and purposes under government direction, almost as if they had gone into the armed forces. They sign a contract by which they undertake to go to sea in whatever capacity they can go, and on any ship which may be assigned to them by the regional director of the pool. I believe the very nature of that contract involves the government in a good deal of responsibility regarding those men.

I was sorry to hear the minister disclaim any responsibility for their transportation from the point of disembarkation to their homes. In my opinion the government should assume the responsibility for transportation of not only those released from the service on compassionate grounds, but also those discharged from the service, and those who return to their homes between voyages for periodic holidays. It seems to me that these men are entitled to a reduced fare for their return from the point of disembarkation, just as is the man in the armed forces. They have no choice as to the port from which they shall sail, nor have they any choice as to the port at which they shall land when they return. They are completely at the disposition of the director of the regional pool, so far as being sent aboard any ship is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN: May I point out that we are dealing with item 4. Item 3 is passed.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: Item 4 deals with manning pools, does it not?

The CHAIRMAN: No; it deals with joint United States and Canada defence.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: I am sorry if I missed the item. However, I was on my feet two or three times before it was declared passed.

In these agreements one of the qualifications is that a man shall be hired at the rating last held. My information is that this procedure is not followed at all the manning pools. Reports from officers say they have been stepped down from senior to junior officers upon entering the pool.

Paragraph 4-C of the contract states that these men are to receive wages, board and lodging while in the pool. The practice is that when a man comes to the pool, and it is found that his services are not likely to be required for some time, he is advised to go home. While he does receive his pay, he receives no maintenance allowance, although he must remain on call at all hours of the day and at all times, until the pool calls him. I am informed that when men go from the pool to a Park ship they receive regular annual increases, whereas men going from the pool to other ships, even though they are operated by the same companies that operate pool ships, receive no increases. If they go from one of those ships to a Park ship they get no credit for the time they have served on the other ship. I am informed also that in 1943 all the officers on Park ships received annual increments except one class, the wireless operators. That seems to be a case of discrimination.

I received another complaint about the manning pool in Toronto.

Mr. MICHAUD: There is no merchant seamen manning pool at Toronto.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: I am informed that there is no one to whom the men can refer grievances, that they are advised to communicate with the director at Ottawa. It has been suggested that the director or some of his assistants should visit these pools on occasion and receive such complaints as the men have to register. It is hard for them to obtain any degree of satisfaction by means of correspondence.

The CHAIRMAN: This item has been carried. I am in the hands of the committee if hon. members want to revert to it.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): I have just one word to say about correspondence with Mr. Randles, director of merchant seamen. I understand that any one who has ever written to him has always received a most courteous reply.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. MICHAUD: I should like to give a word of explanation about transportation costs. If a man leaves home to enlist at a pool located some distance away, he is not entitled to any transportation costs because he is not under agreement. If he leaves his work voluntarily he does not receive transportation home, but if for some reason or another he is sent home, he receives two-thirds of the cost of his transportation. This is a recent regulation and possibly the informant of the hon. member was not aware of the change in the regulations.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: Under what conditions would he receive two-thirds of the cost of transportation from the port of disembarkation?

Mr. MICHAUD: On annual leave. These men take employment for two years. I am told that merchant seamen receive pay and lodging as long as they remain in the pool, but if they prefer to live outside the pool they receive pay only.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: If they live at home they get nothing?

Mr. MICHAUD: They get no living allowance, but they are free to remain at the pool if they want to. There is no manning pool at Toronto, but I shall look into the complaint about the men in Toronto.

Mr. COLDWELL: In connection with properties acquired or leased on behalf of the United States, do I understand that we are reimbursed for these, or is that part of our contribution under the joint defence scheme? Do we assume the obligation, or are we reimbursed in any way?

Mr. MICHAUD: We simply take title, and the United States services continue to occupy the property as long as they have need for it.

Mr. COLDWELL: But we get no revenue in the meantime?

Mr. MICHAUD: No.

Mr. COLDWELL: It is a contribution on our part?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Railway and steamship service, $3,030,000.

Mr. STIRLING: What ships are degaussed?

Mr. MICHAUD: Merchant ships that are built in Canadian yards and all others assigned to ocean travel.

Mr. STIRLING: I can understand where it would be done in the case of new ships, but I am surprised to hear that there are still ocean-going ships that have not been degaussed.

Mr. MICHAUD: This item applies only to the new ships, repairs and renewals.

Mr. MacNICOL: Mr. Chairman, are you calling the details of the item or simply the item as a whole? I had a question I wanted to ask about one of the details of item 6.

Mr. COLDWELL: We did not hear item 6 called.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. McCann): We are now dealing with item 7.

Mr. MacNICOL: What about item 6?

Mr. COLDWELL: I did not hear it carried.

Mr. MacNICOL: I wanted to ask a question on item 6.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. McCann): Item 6 has been called and passed. Does the hon. member wish to revert to it?

Mr. MacNICOL: I wanted to ask a question about aids to navigation. During 1943 a great amount of traffic went down the Mackenzie river and also on the Athabaska.

Mr. MICHAUD: That would come under the main estimates.

Mr. MacNICOL: This item covers aids to navigation for war purposes. I wanted to know if any aids to navigation had been provided on the Athabaska river, lake Athabaska, the Rocher river, the Slave river, Great Slave lake and the Mackenzie river. I was informed a short time ago by a member of one of the transportation companies that a large amount of traffic had passed over these waters and that there had been some damage. If the minister is not familiar with navigation matters in that part of the country, there is no use in my continuing.

Mr. MICHAUD: Since 1933 the department has maintained some aids to navigation in the waters mentioned.

Mr. MacNICOL: They are insignificant. So far as I can see they amount to little. Barges are constantly running on to the butts of trees which are piled into the river every spring by the thousands. I speak of what I know. Pilots going down those rivers—I have been down them—frequently have very great difficulty. Our United States friends had much difficulty last year in taking their supplies down to their works at Fort Norman. It was for that reason they began to build the roadway from Peace River to Fort Providence. But if the department does not bother about providing better aids to navigation on the Mackenzie river route, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. MICHAUD: I understand that in those waters we have over thirty aids to navigation —flash lights, gas lights, buoys and so on.

Mr. MacNICOL: I had reference to keeping the channel open and removing sand bars and stumps of trees.

Mr. MICHAUD: I will call the matter to the attention of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. MacNICOL: The Saskatchewan department of public works would not have a solitary thing to do with the Mackenzie river, which is outside Saskatchewan. Nor has it anything to do with the Athabaska river.

Mr. MICHAUD: I mean the federal department of public works.

Mr. MacNICOL: Since the traffic is for war purposes, I would think the Department of Transport would have something to do with it.

Mr. MICHAUD: There are thirty-eight aids to navigation in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. MacNICOL: I shall not proceed further. I can see plainly that not very much is known about the navigation end of the river.

Mr. COLDWELL: On what basis is compensation paid to masters and crews of Canadian vessels for loss of personal effects? Is it on a pro rata basis, and, if so, what is the limit? How is the valuation made.

Mr. MICHAUD: The authorized rates of compensation range from $70 to $350 for men and officers and $600 for masters.

Mr. COLDWELL: How do they apply for compensation? Do they give a list of the clothing and valuables they have lost? Do they get compensation for a watch, instruments and so on?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes; instruments, clothing, and so forth.

Mr. COLDWELL: And $70 is the minimum compensation?

Mr. MICHAUD: For men and officers $70 is the minimum, and it ranges up to $300; $300 for certificated officers and $250 for uncertificated officers—that is the maximum. Ratings and waiters, $150; bedroom steward and others, $70.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is $70 the maximum compensation that can be paid to a bedroom steward and others?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: If a man loses all his clothing in a shipwreck, surely he cannot replace the kind of clothing he would need on the Atlantic for $70. That sum seems to me very little.

Mr. MICHAUD: I have had no complaint.

Mr. COLDWELL: How does it compare with rates paid on ships of United States registry?

Mr. MICHAUD: I do not know; I have not those figures.

Mr. COLDWELL: Whether the minister has had any complaints or not, $70 seems to me very little with which to replace the clothing that is required on the north Atlantic.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: Is there included under these items for marine service the upkeep of government steamers which take care of lighthouses and buoys?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: What improvements have been made in recent months in the working conditions, the hours, wages and living conditions, of the men who live on board such boats as C.G.S. Dollard? I visited that boat at Saint John last fall, and I found the men complaining of working as much as twenty hours a day, as much as nine hours at a stretch between meals, and some deck-hands figure that they received on some days about eleven cents an hour, considering the number of hours they worked. I want to say this. I have in my lifetime lived aboard fishing vessels that go from Newfoundland to Labrador, and I have lived in mining, railway and lumber camps, but I have never at any time in my life seen human beings required to live under conditions such as I found existing aboard the Dollard at the time I visited her last fall. The boat was simply crawling with vermin and the officers and men told me that it had not been fumigated for years.

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes; but the men have to feather their own beds. They are responsible for the quarters in which they live practically all the year round. When the conditions were brought to the attention of the department we pointed out to the men who were responsible for and submitted to those conditions that they should change the bedding and clean and fumigate the boat, and I understand that they did.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: Is it not the policy of the government to have these boats fumigated annually?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes, indeed, and we give instructions to the men who live on the boats to clean up their own quarters. That is their responsibility. We do not send in outside help to clean the boats, only to make repairs which the crew cannot make themselves. The crew look after their own quarters and take care of themselves. If they want to have ideal living quarters it is up to themselves to make them so. I know the conditions of which the hon. member speaks. In some instances we have compelled the men to clean the quarters so as to improve conditions.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: Who is responsible for the conditions? When the minister says that instructions are given to fumigate the boat, who receives the instructions?

Mr. MICHAUD: We send the instructions to the captain, but a dozen or twenty men cannot live on a boat and allow vermin to accumulate. If they do, it is their own fault.

Mr. COLDWELL: Does the captain of the ship hire the crew? Is he responsible for the personnel or for any changes made?

Mr. MICHAUD: The crews are hired through the local marine agent at the port.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is there a large turnover on the boats?

Mr. MacNICOL: Of vermin?

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not mean turnover in the sense that some hon. members have in mind. I mean the labour turnover. Are the sanitary conditions good on these ships and can the men bath and wash? What kind of boats are they?

Mr. MICHAUD: Some are quite modern and clean and others are not, until we compel the men to clean them.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: The only way in which the men could wash on that boat was by taking a pail of water to where they slept or in a small cubby-hole between the place where they slept and where they ate. There was no convenience. In fact, the conveniences on the boat, I would say, were out of date when Noah built the ark.

Item agreed to.

Additional harbour facilities at Halifax, N.S., $275,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Halifax): Will the minister explain the harbour facilities at Halifax?

Mr. MICHAUD: On April 30, 1941, an order in council was passed appropriating $4,000,000 for lighterage facilities at Halifax. Since then, every year the work has been done. This year the requirements amount to $275,000. We have expended $3,238,769.40.

Item agreed to.

Assistance to Canadian National Railway Company for development of Steep Rock mines (revote $260,000), $2,360,000.

Mr. STIRLING: Will the minister describe this large item.

Mr. MICHAUD: In September, 1942, the Canadian National Railways made an agreement with Steep Rock Mines Limited whereby they undertook to guarantee the movement of ore from a point near Atikokan, Ontario, 150 miles west of Port Arthur, to the docks at the latter place. The government agreed to advance to the Canadian National Railways the capital required for building the spur line from the mine to the line to Port Arthur and also for building a loading dock there.

Mr. MacNICOL: Does the minister not mean, for building the spur line from the mine to Atikokan?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes; to the main line of railway.

Mr. MacNICOL: And building the shipping facilities at Port Arthur for loading iron into the ships?

Mr. MICHAUD: I did not mean to say that the Canadian National was to build 150 miles of railway to accommodate the mine. It is a spur of three miles to join the mine with the main line of railway, and then there are the dock facilities at Port Arthur.

Mr. STIRLING: Under what terms would repayment be made?

Mr. MICHAUD: The railway gets a subsidy of twenty cents a ton for the first five million tons of ore to enable it to give a reduced freight rate, and there is six cents a ton set aside, on every ton handled over the dock, to cover the cost of construction of the spur and the ore dock.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: My information is that the company was guaranteed that the dock would be ready by August 1 and that in the event of its not being ready the government would undertake to pay the difference in freight charges for shipment by rail instead of by water. Is that information correct?

Mr. MICHAUD: I have no knowledge of that.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: Is there in the original contract any date by which the dock was to be ready for use?

Mr. MICHAUD: No. That is probably the agreement between the railway and the company, but it is not in the agreement between the railway and the dominion. All we have guaranteed is to advance the money to the railway.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: My information is that that was the contract between the railway and the company. I am informed that the first contract for piling was let by the railway to be completed by June 1. I understand that has not yet been completed and is not likely to be completed by that date. Another contract for the superstructure on the piling was advertised in some newspapers some time ago, and I am told that the contract for the superstructure calls for completion on October 1, months after the dock is supposed to be completed. My information is that the superstructure cannot possibly be completed by October 1, and if there is a delay of many months and the ore is to be shipped for many months by rail, the difference between rail shipment and water shipment may very well run into the total cost of building that dock. What firm has the first contract for the building of that dock?

Mr. MICHAUD: These contracts were let by the railway.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: And are sent to the minister's department?

Mr. MICHAUD: No; except that they report to the department once a year.

Mr. MacNICOL: Does the hon. member know whether the Steep Rock company has commenced to ship iron from Atikokan to Port Arthur?

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: I am told they will be ready to ship by August 1, but the dock cannot possibly be ready until October or November.

Mr. ADAMSON: They have an agreement to ship five million tons the first of the year. I think they are bound by that agreement.

Mr. MICHAUD: I cannot say; I have not the contract. But according to the agreement between the railway and the department they are to get twenty cents a ton on the first five million tons.

Mr. ADAMSON: It will be paid for then in the first two years?

Mr. MICHAUD: I think I have the information here. I see by a letter that is attached to the deputy minister's book that J. W. Pitts of Winnipeg has the contract for the spur line to the iron mine. The date of completion of this contract is June 30, 1944; that is for the spur line.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: Has the minister the name of the company that is driving the piles for the dock?

Mr. MICHAUD: No; there is nothing in this letter to indicate that.

Item agreed to.

Loan to the Canadian National Railways for the development of the Vermilion, Alberta, oil field, $313,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: May I ask the minister whether the Vermilion oil field supplies oil to the operations of the Canadian National locomotives in that part of the country? Is that what the field is operated for?

Mr. MICHAUD: That was the reason why this venture was gone into, but I am told that they have not been producing enough for the requirements of the locomotives of the Canadian National Railways in that territory.

Mr. MacNICOL: Are any of the locomotives in that section of the country oil-burning?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes; my information is that in the mountain section the Canadian National Railways have oil-burning locomotives.

Mr. FAIR: Is it the intention of the government to continue the operation of the wells at Vermilion?

Mr. MICHAUD: This is not a government operation; it is a Canadian National operation. They have agreed to test or prove fifty wells, and when they have completed their contract I am under the impression that they are to abandon the work, although I am not certain of that.

Mr. ADAMSON: How many wells are producing?

Mr. MICHAUD: I have the list here.

Mr. ADAMSON: What do they call the wells?

Mr. MICHAUD: The last report made by the Canadian National Railways to the department was dated April 21 within the last three weeks. The report is to the effect that the chairman of the company, the Canadian National Railways, felt the result was very disappointing and the vice-president in charge of research and development has been asked to review the whole position to determine whether formal steps should not be taken to discontinue drilling under the terms of the agreement with the Western Drilling Company Limited. Since then we have had no report. It was agreed that if ten of the wells should produce an average of less than twenty-five barrels a day for the first thirty producing days, the leased area could be returned to the Western Drilling company. So far, twenty-nine wells have been drilled. Seventeen are in production, but the production is very low, an average of eighteen barrels per pumping day per well. In the month of January 8,654 barrels were produced, and in February, 6,836 barrels.

[Mr. Michaud.]

Mr. ADAMSON: How far does that go to meet the requirements of the railway?

Mr. MICHAUD: I do not know about that. I am told that the Canadian National Railways need about eight hundred thousand barrels a year—this is about ten per cent.

Item agreed to.

Mr. MICHAUD: There is an item on page 397 of Hansard of February 11, which has to be passed. It appears under the heading "National Harbours Board."

National harbours board—
Halifax harbour—operation and maintenance of fire boats and other fire protection, $178,800.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Why the increase?

Mr. MICHAUD: We had to have another boat. We were operating only one fire tug last year and this year we have to operate two.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: But the item is about three times as large.

Mr. MICHAUD: No. In that amount is included the cost of building the fire tug as well as the operation of it. We had to remodel an old tug and turn it into a fire tug. The cost of remodelling the old tug is included.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Did they put new pumps into the old tug?

Mr. MICHAUD: No; this is another tug. We are operating two tugs.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Did they put new pumping equipment in the one that is being added this year?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes; new pumping equipment, and a lot more, I understand.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What is the cost of fixing up the new boat?

Mr. MICHAUD: The operation of the old fire boat, called the Rouille, is estimated at $66,600 a year. We have other special fire protection, the cost of operating the James Battle. That is the new fire tug. We have charter hire, $17,520, and the gross operation will cost $71,370 this year. Equipment and maintenance amount to $7,430, and, in addition, we have a special fire patrol which cost $32,200.

Mr. MARSHALL: What do you expect to do with the $700?

Mr. MICHAUD: That is the balance of the cost of altering and assembling a heavy lifting crane in the harbour of Saint John. The whole cost was $151,000, which was paid out of last year's appropriation, and outstanding accounts remain, totalling $700. This appropriation is to clean up all those accounts.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

Assistance in the construction of vessels of the packer-seiner type, $250,000.

Mr. STIRLING: Why should this be a war appropriation expenditure?

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Minister of Fisheries): The construction of these vessels resulted from the fact that about seventy vessels were requisitioned by the army and navy, especially after Japan came into the war. This only affects the packer-seiners of the west coast. We had to replace some of those, because we did not know how long they would be in the service. Eleven have been built and ten are partly completed. We have subsidized them to the extent of $165 per gross ton, but more recently abolished this subsidy, because we believe that some of the boats requisitioned have been replaced by the army and we do not think we need the subsidy any more. Altogether we have paid $121,500.

Mr. STIRLING: If I understand the situation aright, these boats were taken over by the government for army purposes?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Not those on which we are paying subsidies; these boats were built by different corporations to replace boats that were requisitioned by the army early in the war. We had to do that in order to have the production necessary to carry on the fisheries. This applies only to packer-seiners seventy-two feet or more in length and of from ninety to one hundred and ten gross tons.

Mr. BENCE: How much was spent during the fiscal year 1943-44, and how much is it anticipated will be spent in the current fiscal year?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): In 1942-43 we spent $61,511.55; in 1943-44, for seven vessels, we spent $118,225.80. We have abolished the subsidy, so that we are not going to pay any more money except in connection with those now under construction, for which permits had been granted at the time we passed the last order in council.

Mr. BENCE: I thought the minister said that the total amount expended was $121,000. Now he tells us that $61,000 in round figures was spent in 1942-43 and $118,000 in 1943-44. What is the reason for the disparity in the figures?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): The amount of $121,536 is the expenditure up to date. The amount of $118,000 was the expenditure up to a month ago, but since that time another subsidy of something over $3,000 has been paid. These subsidies are paid during the course of construction, and we have paid another $3,000 since this figure of $118,000 was given.

Mr. BENCE: Then the total amount that has been spent is $179,000 in round figures?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): About $179,000, plus $3,000 which will appear in the estimates for the present fiscal year.

Mr. BENCE: Then how much will be spent during the current year?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): We do not know exactly, because we do not know the tonnage of all the boats that are under construction. These boats are measured after they are completed, and we pay $165 per gross ton, but we think the expenditure will run to about $250,000. We are asking for that appropriation; it may not be all spent.

Mr. BENCE: I am not at all clear on this matter yet. If during the first two years this scheme was in operation $179,000 was spent and now the whole scheme is being ended, I should like some indication as to how much money is still to be spent.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): The amount already expended was paid on the boats that were finished. I stated that eleven boats were completed and ten more were in course of construction. Of course, until they are completed we cannot tell exactly what it is going to cost, because we cannot measure the tonnage of the boats. We are asking for an appropriation of $250,000 for the fiscal year 1944-45.

Mr. BENCE: It seems to me that this is a good deal more money than you need.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): It depends upon the size of the boats. This represents the best judgment of the experienced officials of the department.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: Do we understand that these boats are being built to replace boats which were requisitioned for war purposes?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Over seventy boats were requisitioned by the army and navy on the west coast; and when the army and navy requisition boats, they take the best.

They took most of the best boats, and we did not know how long they would remain in the possession of the army and navy, so that an order in council was passed granting a subsidy of $165 per gross ton, which would amount to approximately 33⅓ per cent of the cost of construction of new boats. More recently this order in council has been withdrawn, because boats are now coming back from the army and navy. The navy particularly has been building its own boats, which are better fitted for naval service than the fishing boats that were requisitioned at the time, so that we do not think we should grant the subsidy any longer.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Is part of this a revote from last year?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): It has that character, in the sense that we did not spend all that was asked for last year.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): You are asking for $250,000, plus a revote of $71,000.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): No; the $71,000 is included in the $250,000, which we expect to reach this year.

Item agreed to.

Assistance in the construction of vessels of the dragger type and the conversion of fishing schooners to draggers, $250,000.

Mr. BENCE: What is the explanation?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): The wooden dragger is a boat used on the east coast. It is something like the otter trawler, but much smaller, running from seventy-two feet, up, and it drags the bottom of the ocean. We felt that the fisheries on the Atlantic coast needed to be subsidized and that some of the boats were antiquated. We felt we should have the fishermen build another kind of boat that has been very successful in other waters, especially in the United States. The boat has been subsidized at $165 per gross ton, with a depreciation of twenty per cent a year for five years, to be taken in one year if the proprietor wishes. That order in council has not been utilized by the fishermen to the extent we thought it would be.

There was one boat completed, and there are two applications which have been approved, but the boats are not yet built. In the same order in council we also subsidized the conversion of schooners into draggers. Only one has been converted. The order in council is about the same as the one for packer-seiners, except that it is for the east coast, where the packer-seiner type would not be the proper boat on account of the different kind of fisheries we have on the Atlantic coast.

[Mr. E. Bertrand.]

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: Does the $250,000 cover the boats to which the minister referred?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): No; this is in anticipation of this year's programme. Only one boat has been built, and two applications have been made. One schooner has been converted. We have paid only $22,088.

Mr. STIRLING: Is this subsidy to be cancelled?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): No, we have not cancelled it, because we think there is a great need for this kind of boat on the east coast. We are short of vessels and short of men.

Mr. GILLIS: Possibly the reason why the order in council was not taken advantage of to a great extent is that it is not generally known. It was not advertised. It is safe to say that a large percentage of fishermen on the east coast would tell you, if this were brought to their attention, that they had not heard of it before. Then there is the other angle that a large percentage of fishermen on the east coast are not financially able to take advantage of it. A certain portion of the necessary capital has to be put up by themselves.

I hope the minister will not withdraw the order in council, because it is an important step in the rehabilitation of the industry. We should see to it that it is fully utilized, and in my opinion it should be more widely advertised.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: What is the minimum cost of a boat to which this order in council is applicable?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): A dragger may cost between $75,000 and $100,000.

To answer the hon. member for Cape Breton South, I believe the order in council is known in the maritime provinces. Perhaps it is not known as well as it should be, but there has been considerable discussion about it. We do not intend to withdraw it—quite to the contrary. The hon. member was right when he said that it is not applicable to lone fishermen, because it costs too much. It is our intention to do something, either by reducing the tonnage or the length of the boat, or by doing something for the fishermen so that two or three may get together and be in a position to have one of these boats.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: How many firms on the east coast operate boats of this type?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Only one has been completed. It is being operated by Sea Nymph Fisheries Limited. Two applications have been made by Lunenburg Sea Products Company, Limited. The converted schooner is the property of the Norway Dragging Company of New Brunswick.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: In other words, this concession made by order in council can be made available to only a comparatively few firms operating on the coast.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): It could be available to any firm, or individuals, or co-operatives that wish to put the amount of money into it. We feel it has not been taken advantage of to the extent it should have been. A study has been made of the matter, and we are preparing an order in council which will be more appropriate for the use of individual fishermen.

Mr. GILLIS: What is the number of that order in council?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Which one?

Mr. GILLIS: The one in force to-day, to which we have been referring.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): It is P.C. 7580, of August 26, 1942, amended by P.C. 2397 of April 22, 1943.

Item agreed to.

Sundry services, $190,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: What are the sundry services?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): They include $3,000 for the wartime fisheries advisory committee. It is only to pay the travelling expenses of that body which sat only once in 1943, and spent $37.80. This year, on account of the increased difficulty of distributing fish, they might have to sit more than once. There are seven members on the committee. Nothing is paid to them with the exception of their travelling expenses, when they are called to sit and advise the government in respect of wartime fisheries. Then, some of the sundry services could be listed as follows:

To provide for payment of compensation for diminution of value caused by war damage to fishing boats and fishing gear, $50,000.

Construction of experimental long line fishing vessel on Atlantic coast and operating expenses, $60,000.

Expenses in connection with the supply of frozen fish to the British ministry of food, $30,000.

Payment of war bonus to crews of fisheries protection vessels and fisheries patrol vessels operating in war zones within dangerous waters, $15,000.

Salt fish export regulations—administration, $32,000.

In connection with the construction of an experimental fishing vessel, I may say that on the Pacific coast they have a boat which is called a long liner and used to fish for halibut. This boat carries a line with hooks of a length of 300 fathoms, or 1,800 feet, which is used in the fishing operations. It was thought that this method of fishing would be appropriate for the eastern coast and we had a boat built as an experiment. This boat is now on the ocean fishing and it carries a crew of six. It has been successful for the three trips it has made up to this time, and it has been out fishing for four or five days now, but we have not received the results of the last trip. In a nutshell I might say that the amount of fish caught per man per day has been about 5,000 pounds, which is considered to be quite good.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister made reference to the vote to provide for the repair of fishing vessels. I suppose that would be to take care of vessels that were injured.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): That was to provide for the payment of compensation for diminution of values caused by war damage to fishing boats and fishing gear.

Mr. MacNICOL: It is quite right that they should be compensated if they are injured as a result of the war, but would the minister elaborate a little on that? I suppose these ships are operating in the gulf of St. Lawrence or on the grand banks. Have any of these ships been torpedoed or damaged by gunfire?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): "Canadian salt water fisherman" means persons of Canadian nationality employed upon a fishing vessel or boat engaged in the fishing industry of Canada in tidal waters. "War damage" means loss, including destruction, and damage caused by, or in repelling, enemy action, or by measures taken to avoid the consequences of damage caused by or in repelling enemy action. There is a schedule of compensation for war damage to personal effects through war perils at sea. In the case of a master of a fishing vessel of sixty registered tons and over, this amounts to $200 for personal effects. For a mate or engineer it is $100, and for all other members of the crew, $70. In the case of other vessels, it is $125 for the master and $70 for other members of the crew. If a boat or gear is damaged, the damage is valued and the amount is paid. "Diminution of value" means the amount by which the value of any fishing boat or fishing gear in the state in which it was immediately after the occurrence of the war damage is less than its value in the state in which it was immediately before the occurrence of the war damage.

The minister may pay compensation to any person in an amount not exceeding $2,000 for each diminution of value caused by war damage in any fishing boat of which that person is the owner. It is provided that if any person is a joint owner his compensation shall be limited to his proportionate share of the said $2,000. There are also benefits for sickness or injury, and pensions are paid. In the case of a master of a fishing boat of sixty registered tons or over, this would be equal to that paid to a lieutenant. In the case of a master of other fishing boats, it would be equal to that paid to a sub-lieutenant. In the case of other members of the crew, it would be equal to that paid to a naval seaman. The scale of pensions paid to widows or dependent parents amounts to $800 for a lieutenant and $720 for sub-lieutenant and all other ranks and ratings. Additional pensions for children or dependent brothers or sisters are $180 for one child, $324 for two children, and $120 for each subsequent child.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister referred to ships being damaged in avoiding enemy action. What would that cover?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): In repelling enemy action or because of measures taken to avoid the consequences of damages caused by or in repelling enemy action.

Mr. MacNICOL: Running into another ship or something like that?

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): How much of this vote was used last year?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): There are two or three applications under consideration but the damage has not yet been arrived at, so that nothing has been paid.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): That is of the total of $15,000?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Yes.

Item agreed to.

SECRETARY OF STATE

Department generally, $8,000.

Mr. KNOWLES: What is involved by way of war expenditures under this item?

Hon. N. A. McLARTY (Secretary of State): This is made up of two items. As the committee is aware, in 1941 a special appropriation was made for the lieutenant governor of Nova Scotia in the sum of $4,000 to cover additional expenses to which he was put by reason of entertainment and other duties he had to perform in war time, supplementary to those performed in peace time. As the committee is also aware, this year a vote of $4,000 was made to the lieutenant governor of Quebec. Before his appointment the lieutenant governor was entitled to a pension of $6,300, and some doubt arose as to whether he was still entitled to that pension. He has not been drawing it, and if the decision is that that pension is recoverable, then the $4,000 will be returned.

Mr. BENCE: Under what section of the estimates of the Secretary of State would questions relating to the custodian of enemy property come?

Mr. McLARTY: That would be the civil estimates, departmental administration.

Mr. GRAYDON: It should not be.

Mr. McLARTY: It is.

Mr. BENCE: There is the question of the return of properties which were taken over as a result of the ban placed on certain groups in this country. Does the investigation of this matter come under another item?

Mr. McLARTY: I do not wish to be technical, but it could not come under this item, and it does not come under any item in the war appropriation. It would come under the general estimates of the Secretary of State.

Mr. BENCE: If it does not come under "department generally", will the minister explain just how the McPhee commission was paid, under what appropriation?

Mr. McLARTY: The McPhee commission was paid out of the custodian's administration fund. Judge McPhee would receive no remuneration, only expenses, and the other members of the commission would be paid out of the custodian's fund.

Item agreed to.

Commission re revocation of naturalization certificates, $3,000.

Mr. STIRLING: The other evening the question of the possibility of revoking the naturalization of persons who were interned came up, and I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether there is not power now to revoke the naturalization of interned persons?

Mr. McLARTY: I shall have to give a careful answer to that question, because I have never had occasion to go into the question of the inherent right to revoke the naturalization of an interned person. The procedure that is followed in the event of a person interned expressing a desire to lose his Canadian citizenship is that notice is sent to him in the regular way advising him that unless he wishes to appeal against the decision his naturalization will be revoked. But the practice has not been to revoke his naturalization because of the mere fact of his internment.

Mr. STIRLING: In the case of a convicted person, at least consideration is given to the revocation of naturalization and the deportation of the individual, is it not?

Mr. McLARTY: It is only to the matter of deportation, not to the revocation of naturalization, although the revocation would presumably follow.

Mr. GRAYDON: Does the custodian of enemy property come under the jurisdiction of the minister?

Mr. McLARTY: Yes.

Mr. GRAYDON: I have been checking over the estimates, and it looks to me as though the minister will have to get along without a vote for the custodian of enemy property because there is not an item for him in the war appropriation estimates or in the civil estimates.

Mr. McLARTY: The reason is that the custodian requires no vote. The custodian is self-supporting.

Mr. GRAYDON: Does that mean that we shall have no oportunity to discuss the position? It is important that an opportunity be afforded. If there is no vote for the custodian of enemy property, then I think the departmental estimates generally, as the hon. member for Saskatoon city suggested, would be the proper item for the discussion. I think the minister was wrong in suggesting that it would not be proper to discuss it on his estimates.

Mr. McLARTY: There would certainly be no objection to giving to the committee all the information required in connection with the custodian of enemy property, but I suggest that rather than delay the committee now we should take it up under the civil estimates of the department's general vote. The items now before us are two particular items which have nothing whatever to do with the custodian. I do not wish my hon. friend to get the impression that there is any holding back of information, because there is no information that the custodian wishes to be held back.

Mr. GRAYDON: If I may say so, I think the minister's suggestion is a good one, that the discussion take place on the civil estimates. In the meantime there will be no delay in passing his war appropriation estimates. But I hope the minister will make sure to remind us that the discussion comes under the first item of his civil estimates.

Mr. McLARTY: I am afraid that my hon. friend will have to charge his own memory with that responsibility.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned until Thursday at 3 o'clock p.m., pursuant to special order made Monday, February 21, 1944.

Thursday, May 18, 1944

The house met at three o'clock.

THE PRIME MINISTER

ADDRESS DELIVERED ON MAY 11, TO BOTH HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT AT WESTMINSTER

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Acting Prime Minister): In accordance with a statement I made on Thursday last, I now lay on the table three copies in English and French of the addresses on the occasion of the address of the Prime Minister of Canada to the members of both houses of parliament at Westminster on May 11. As I then indicated, I think it would be the wish of the house that these addresses be printed with the Votes and Proceedings of this house.

FISHERIES

ARRANGEMENT WITH NEWFOUNDLAND TO PERMIT CANADIAN FISHERMEN TO LAND PORTION OF CATCH AND SALT

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Minister of Fisheries): I wish to make a short statement regarding a privilege that has been granted to Canadian fishermen. Negotiations have been going on for some time between the Department of External Affairs and the government of Newfoundland with reference to the desirability of permitting Canadian fishing vessels operating on the Grand Banks to land a portion of their catches and salt at Newfoundland ports, following which they would return to the banks for further fishing. They would then pick up their fish and salt before returning to Canada. As the fish gradually pack in the vessel, transferring a portion of the fish catches to shore enables a fuller load to be eventually brought home. The government of Newfoundland has seen fit to grant the request for this year only. The condition attached to their action was that announcement would be made by Newfoundland and Canada simultaneously. It was agreed that the announcement be made at three o'clock to-day.

As a result of negotiations with the government of Newfoundland, it has complied, for this year only, with a request made to it by the Canadian government. The following conditions are to apply:

1. The privilege is limited to the calendar year 1944, and is restricted to Newfoundland customs ports of entry.

2. The master of each vessel is to report to the collector of customs furnishing that officer with information as to the quantity of salt and fish to be landed together with the location of the premises to be used for storage.

3. The period of storage is not to exceed six weeks or such period as will allow the vessel to finish its baiting and then return to pick up the landed portion of its cargo for conveyance to a Canadian port.

4. The owner, or operator, of the vessel makes application to the Newfoundland fisheries board for a licence to import salt, in which will be stated the quantity to be stored and the purpose for which it is to be used.

TIE-UP OF HALIBUT FISHING FLEETS ON PACIFIC COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, as conflicting reports are reaching Ottawa regarding the settlement of the difficulty which tied up the Pacific halibut fleet, may I ask the Minister of Fisheries if he has any official information to give the house respecting the settlement of this matter?

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Minister of Fisheries): A telegram was sent to my deputy minister by the president of the fishemen's union, dated May 17, and reading as follows:

Vancouver and Seattle halibut fleets voted to begin fishing to-night. Minor details with regard to delivery yet to be worked out by Seattle. Vancouver fishermen anticipate leaving for grounds May 20.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROL

RELAXATION OF RESTRICTIONS ON TRAVEL TO THE UNITED STATES

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): I should like to make a statement in connection with the restrictions on pleasure travel under the foreign exchange control regulations.

[Mr. E. Bertrand.]

The traditional freedom of movement between Canada and the United States has contributed very greatly to the neighbourly feeling and understanding between the two countries, and any interference with this freedom could not be lightly undertaken. It was, therefore, with the greatest reluctance that the government accepted the necessity of imposing the travel restrictions in July, 1940, as a means of conserving Canada's United States dollar resources for essential purposes. It is not possible to make an exact estimate of the amount of United States exchange which has been made available for essential war purchases as a result of the restrictions. The amount has, however, been very substantial and there is no doubt that the restrictions played a vital part in seeing us through a period of critical scarcity of United States funds. Those who have had to forego customary visits to the United States may have the satisfaction of knowing that they thereby played no small part in ensuring that exchange considerations have at no time limited our war effort. I should like to pay a tribute here to the good grace with which the travel restrictions have been accepted by the Canadian people and to the intelligent understanding of their necessity shown by all sections of the American public.

Hon. members will recall that on several occasions since the travel restrictions were imposed, both the Prime Minister and I have stated that they would be relaxed as soon as conditions made such a step feasible. It is not yet possible to remove the restrictions entirely, but I am glad to be able to announce that the government now feels that the foreign exchange position is such as to justify some relaxation. Notwithstanding the difficulties with respect to transportation, the government attaches such importance to the resumption of normal friendly contacts betwen Canadians and Americans that it has now decided that moderate amounts of United States funds should be made available to residents of Canada for travel for any purpose. It should be clearly understood that the government can give no undertaking that transportation will necessarily be available for all who may wish to take advantage of the exchange relaxation.

Residents desiring to travel to the United States will still be required to obtain foreign exchange control board permits. Such permits will in future be granted, however, in the following circumstances:

(a) Banks will be given authority to sell up to $75 U.S. and approve a travel permit for travel to the United States for any purpose where the applicant has not obtained a travel permit (except for business or in transit travel) within the preceding six months. In order to meet the case of persons who may wish to make only one trip to the United States during the course of a year, the board will approve applications for up to $150 U.S. for a single trip during a twelve-month period.

(b) Short Form H, which is the common permit used in border communities and which has hitherto authorized the export of $5 Canadian, on condition that the funds may not be spent in the United States except for urban transportation, will be revised to authorize the export of $10, of which not more than $5 may be United States cash acquired as change on previous trips to the United States and the funds exported may be used for any expenditures in the United States connected with the visit there.

The board will, of course, continue to make United States funds available in appropriate amounts where such funds are necessary for travel for business, health or educational reasons.

These relaxations in the foreign exchange control travel restrictions will go into effect as soon as the necessary instructions can be issued by the foreign exchange control board to banks and customs officers. I expect that this will be within the next few days.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): Is consideration being given to allowing people from the United States, who wish to come to Nova Scotia for their summer holiday, a greater amount of gasoline? Under the present regulations they are not given enough to permit them to bring their cars to Nova Scotia and return home, with the result that they are not able to make summer visits to that province.

Mr. ILSLEY: The matter of the control of gasoline comes under the jurisdiction of my colleague the Minister of Munitions and Supply.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Would the United States portion of the train fare have to come out of the $75 which you are allowing people who wish to go to the United States?

Mr. ILSLEY: I think, and I am fairly sure I am correct in this, that transportation by train can be purchased in Canadian funds, so that that would not take any part of the $75 or $150 as the case may be.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): In the past if a bank issued $50 in United States currency, or if a person had a cheque for $50 in United States funds, the United States portion of the transportation, amounting to perhaps $24 or $30, would have to come out of those United States funds.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know what the practice was in the past, but I made inquiry as to the very point on which the hon. gentleman based his question, and was informed that transportation costs could be met in Canadian funds, which would be over and above the $75 or $150 as the case may be.

Mr. McCANN: Are there to be any changes in the premium or discount rates?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is a matter of government policy to be announced in due course. None is being announced to-day.

UNITED NATIONS

RELIEF AND REHABILITATION ADMINISTRATION—POSTPONEMENT OF PROPOSED MONTREAL MEETING

Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): An announcement was published yesterday concerning the postponement of the UNRRA council meeting, as follows:

> The director general, Herbert H. Lehman, to-day announced that the central committee had decided to postpone the session of the council of UNRRA which had been scheduled to be held in Montreal on June 23. The postponement was made necessary by the emergency restrictions on travel and telegraphic communications from the United Kingdom which would have impeded effective preparation for the scheduled June meeting by European governments.
> The central committee of UNRRA decided to meet at regular intervals to consider when circumstances make it possible to set a definite date for the session. It was agreed that forty-five days notice of any date set would be given to the member governments. When a new date is established, it is contemplated that the meeting will be held in Canada.

We hope, of course, that a meeting of the council of UNRRA may be held in Montreal. September has been mentioned as a possible time, but no definite date can be set as yet because no one knows for what period the restrictions referred to in Mr. Lehman's announcement may have to be enforced.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

ORDERS IN COUNCIL

Mr. DORION:

1. How many orders in council were passed since September 3, 1939?
2. How many orders in council were amended since September 3, 1939?
3. How many orders in council were repealed since September 3, 1939?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. From September 3, 1939, up to and including May 12, 1944, 44,321 orders in council were passed. During the same period approval was also given to 374 treasury boards which contained 24,597 minutes.

2. and 3. Records are kept in the privy council office of all references to, and amendments and revocations of previously passed orders in council by endorsement upon original orders in council affected. Thus, although it can readily be determined whether a particular order in council has been modified, it is not possible to prepare a general statement as to the numbers of orders in council amended or revoked without an exhaustive and protracted survey. It should perhaps be pointed out that the figures given in reply to question No. 1 include a large number of orders in council which amend or revoke previous orders.

WAR CONTRACTS DEPRECIATION BOARD

Mr. COLDWELL:

What is the total of amounts granted by way of special depreciation pursuant to the recommendation of, or under the authority of, the war contracts depreciation board from the creation of the said board until December 31, 1942?

Mr. GIBSON: Awarded 1939 to 31st December, 1942, $73,409,045.70; written off to 31st December, 1942, $60,479,138.26; to be written off 1943 to 1949, $12,929,907.44.

WARTIME PRICES AND TRADE BOARD—BUILDING BY-LAWS

Mr. CHURCH:

Has the attention of the government been called to a decision of His Honour Judge Klein, of Toronto, that order 200 of the wartime prices and trade board superseded municipal building by-laws in Toronto, and will any action be taken to remove this control, to aid housing?

Mr. ABBOTT: Order 200 of the wartime prices and trade board was designed to ensure the maximum use of existing housing in critically congested areas. It permits householders to let or sublet such portions of their homes as they do not require for their own needs, notwithstanding any prohibitory provision in leases, deeds or municipal by-laws. It does not, however, permit structural alterations that would offend municipal by-laws.

His Honour Judge Klein held that order 200 had the legal force to achieve the purpose for which it is designed. No immediate action is contemplated to remove this control as the order has proved to be a definite aid in making available accommodation that otherwise could not have been offered for rental. Moreover, the order has no apparent effect on new construction.

SCRAP RUBBER

Mr. WINKLER:

1. Has the government purchasing agency (Fairmont) ceased to buy scrap rubber? If so, when, and why?
2. How much scrap rubber is in the possession of the government, and at what price is it for sale?
3. By years, in the past four years, how much has been accumulated, and how much sold?
4. For purposes required, how long will accumulated stock piles of scrap rubber last?

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. (a) and (b). Fairmont ceased to purchase scrap rubber on February 15th, 1944, with the exception of certain tire parts resulting from the splitting of tires purchased by the company from the rubber reserve and resold to reliner makers in Canada. This will be concluded as soon as the present contract expires.

(c) The stock of scrap rubber is adequate for present needs.

2. (a) Inventory as at April 30, 1944—20,440 short tons. Unsold inventory as of April 30, 1944—10,868 short tons.

(b) Prices depend on the grade of scrap rubber concerned and are based on prices for equivalent grades in the U.S.A.

3. Scrap rubber accumulated: April 1, 1942 to March 31, 1943—23,862 short tons. April 1, 1943 to March 31, 1944—21,712 short tons.

Sales of scrap rubber: April 1, 1942 to March 31, 1943—14,298 short tons. April 1, 1943 to March 3, 1944—10,044 short tons.

4. The stock of scrap rubber held by Fairmont Company including stocks in the hands of Canadian reclaimers is considered to be sufficient for 18 months' to two years' supply.

COST OF VICTORY LOAN CAMPAIGNS

Mr. CASTLEDEN:

1. What was the total cost of the 4th and 5th victory loan campaigns?
2. How much of this was expended for, (a) commissions; (b) advertising; (c) radio programmes; (d) salaries; (e) living and travelling allowances; (f) rentals; (g) public functions?
3. What was the total amount raised in the 5th victory loan?

Mr. ABBOTT:

1. Total cost	$12,059,209 34	$ 11,817,210 47
2. (a) Commissions to salesmen	2,369,625 42	2,687,315 46

(g) The records of the national war finance committee are not maintained on such a basis as to disclose the amounts expended on "public functions". Such expenditures are included in "organization expenses" amounting to $37,202.28 in the 4th Victory Loan and $61,021.27 in the 5th Victory Loan and in "advertising and publicity".
3. Conversions	.....	188,036,300 00

[Mr. Abbott.]

DOMINION ARSENALS, LINDSAY—OIL FURNACES

Mr. CASTLEDEN:

1. Have the oil furnaces installed at dominion arsenals at Lindsay, Ontario, since 1939, been used since their installation? If so, for what period of time?

2. What was the total cost of installing and equipping this arsenal with oil furnaces?

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. (a) Yes.

(b) All oil furnaces installed since 1939 have been used with the exception of one in the brass mill representing 1·1 per cent of the total investment. These have been in continuous use since installation. Those in the shell plant have not been used continuously, their use being dependent upon available orders for forged shell. Their use however has covered the major portion of the time since their installation.

2. $278,996.04.

MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY—ARMY ENGINEERING DESIGN BRANCH

Mr. KNOWLES:

1. How many persons are employed in the army engineering design branch of the Department of Munitions and Supply?

2. What percentage of Canadian war production, during the past year, has been tested by this branch?

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. 194 as of April 30, 1944.

2. Army engineering design branch is not primarily a testing branch, and it is not possible, except on broad lines, to relate its testing work to Canadian war production of the past year. Check testing of production vehicles is the function of the inspection board of the United Kingdom and Canada as part of their inspection for acceptance. The function of A.E.D. Branch is the design and development of army vehicles, both armoured and unarmoured, and the coordination and relation of these designs to production facilities. The testing of these vehicles and components thereof which is carried out by army engineering design branch is an integral part of design and development work. On new designs it precedes production.

The army vehicles referred to above are for the account of the various united nations, the British ministry of supply being the department's principal customer. In dollar value these vehicles represented between 20 and 25 per cent of Canadian war production during the past year.

DOMINION FUNDS IN CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. BLACKMORE:

What was the greatest amount of money owned by the dominion government held in each of the chartered banks in 1939, 1940, 1941, 1942 and in 1943?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is assumed that the question refers to the dominion government's balances with the chartered banks. In the years 1940, 1941, 1942 and 1943, the largest balances are held following dominion loan issues, the proceeds of which are deposited in the banks upon which are drawn the cheques issued by loan subscribers in payment for their subscriptions to the loans. The figures for New York balances in 1939 and 1943 are also abnormally large, due to the inclusion of loan proceeds being held to meet maturing or called issues. New York balances are held in the main to meet interest payments and fluctuate according to the interest payment dates.

The following table gives the maximum balances of the dominon government with each individual bank during the years requested:

Bank of Montreal	$55,916,766 12	$79,525,508 67	$165,137,516 65	$200,502,997 57	$264,243,325 46

INVENTIONS AND DISCOVERIES

Mr. NOSEWORTHY:

1. Is it a fact that the technical employees of crown companies have been required as a condition of employment to sign away all rights to inventions and discoveries?

2. What changes have been made in agreements between His Majesty's government and private operating companies of crown plants that now allow an inventor to retain certain rights to his invention or discovery?

3. Is it a fact that changes regarding inventions were written into the agreement signed by the Welland Chemical Works, Ltd., a crown company, and the American Cyanamid Company and the North American Cyanamid Ltd. on February 24, 1944; said agreement to take effect April 1, 1944?

4. What action has been taken with regard to the management of the Welland Chemical Works Ltd. having withheld from their technical employees the fact that they now retain part ownership in patents that they have developed on crown property?

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. No.

2. The general principle applicable is set forth in order in council P.C. 2128 of March 27, 1944 (published in Canadian War Orders and Regulations 1944, volume I, p. 695). This was not a change but rather the establishment of a uniform principle.

3. Welland Chemical Works Limited is not a crown company. As appears from order in council P.C. 2128, referred to in 2, the provisions thereof would apply, notwithstanding the provisions to the contrary in any agreement.

4. This question cannot be answered in its present form because it is based on an assumption which may or may not be a fact. In any event, the general principle is laid down in P.C. 2128, and as such, the provisions relating to inventions by employees of crown companies are public knowledge.

NAVAL SERVICE—"MICMAC" AND "NOOTKA"

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury):

1. Is the Tribal class destroyer Micmac, launched in Halifax last October, yet ready for sea?

2. If not, why not?

3. Were the machinery and electrical equipment for the Nootka, recently launched, on hand for installation when the ship was launched.

4. If not, why not?

5. Were changes made in regard to furnishings for the Nootka, after polished, hand finished wooden furnishings had been installed?

6. If so, what changes, why were they suggested and on whose orders?

Mr. MACDONALD (Kingston City):

1. No.

2. It normally takes approximately twelve months from date of launching to complete a destroyer of this type, but a longer period will be required for this ship largely due to delays in completing main propelling machinery which is of a type never before manufactured in Canada. This delay is partly due to the many difficulties which have had to be overcome in the manufacture of such new equipment, and also to shortage of skilled labour available for the work.

3. Auxiliary machinery was on hand and necessary electrical equipment for progressing of ship as required, but not main propelling machinery.

4. Main propelling machinery was not available for reasons given in answer 2.

5. No.

6. Original specifications for ships of this class did call for wood furniture, but because of fire hazard Admiralty, U.S.N. and Canadian naval policy has been changed to eliminate all possible wood work in naval ships and steel furniture is being fitted wherever possible. Some wood was cut for furniture for this ship and a few pieces assembled, but none was polished or installed.

Has the process for the manufacture of syrup from wheat reported at said conference to have been developed at the United States government's northern research laboratory at Peori, Ill., been investigated by any agency of the Canadian government with a view to promoting its use, if found feasible, in beet sugar plants or elsewhere in Canada?

SIXTH VICTORY LOAN

AMOUNT SUBSCRIBED AND NUMBER OF APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Leader of the Opposition): It would appear from statements in the press that Canada's sixth victory loan campaign has been concluded with results which constitute a record and reflect great credit upon the Canadian people. I should be glad if the Minister of Finance would inform the house as to the amount subscribed in excess of the objective, together with such other details as may be of public interest at this time.

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): It is impossible to give figures even approximating accuracy until at least a week after the loan closes. However the figures to date are as follows: The number of subscriptions of which we have information amounted up to yesterday to 2,761,000, as against 2,607,000 applications at a comparable period after the last loan. According to our records as of yesterday the amount subscribed in the present loan was $1,356,000,000 as against $1,338,000,000 in the last loan at this date. As I have said, these figures are still incomplete. I expect within a few days to be able to give a much better indication of the final results. However the leader of the opposition is correct about this being a record amount and record distribution, and, as he has said, the people of Canada are entitled to great credit for the way in which they have supported the loan.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not know this matter was coming up to-day, but since it has been mentioned I should like to say that very shortly after the loan closed I received a telegram from the Prime Minister dealing with a number of matters, and closing with a reference to the victory loan. Now that an announcement has been made to the house respecting the loan I think it would be acceptable and appropriate if I were to read this last paragraph from the Prime Minister's telegram. He says:

I should like to add my most sincere congratulations on the magnificent response of the Canadian people to the victory loan.

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

ALASKA HIGHWAY

OPENING BY UNITED STATES MILITARY AUTHORITIES OF OFFICE IN VANCOUVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PAUL MARTIN (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to supplement my reply to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Black) given on Monday last regarding questions submitted by him to the acting Minister of Labour on May 12, concerning the recruitment of labour for the Alaska highway. Since replying to the hon. gentleman, he has turned over to me a press clipping from the Vancouver Sun, dated May 10, from which I gather he has based his questions, at least in part.

Officials of the department in Ottawa have again communicated with Vancouver national selective service officials, in particular with Mr. McKinstry, the regional director of national selective service of British Columbia, who was referred to in the newspaper article in question. There is nothing further that I can add in addition to the information which I gave to the hon. gentleman on Monday last. His first question was:

Is it a fact that United States military authorities in charge of the Alaska highway have opened an office in Vancouver, British Columbia, to interview workers to be sent to them by national selective service at Vancouver for work on the Alaska highway?

The answer is no. The second question is:

Is it a fact that the Americans are trying to hire at Vancouver 1,200 men for maintenance work on said highway and 300 men for maintenance work on the oil pipeline from Norman Wells to Whitehorse, Yukon?

The answer, in so far as national selective service is concerned is no. The third question is:

Is it a fact that on February 22 of this year, national selective service at Vancouver had 7,300 jobs awaiting men and that on May 1, they had 12,300 jobs awaiting men—all apart from the American attempt to hire 1,500?

The answer is no. The figures quoted by the hon. gentleman as being applicable to Vancouver in fact refer to the Pacific region as a whole rather than to the city of Vancouver.

While the Vancouver Sun article is a mixture of fact and conjecture, it is correct in pointing out that an acute labour supply shortage is developing in the Pacific region—as in most areas in Canada to-day—and that the problem of supplying labour for work projects of all kinds in the northern areas in the west will aggravate the supply situation. This matter is receiving active consideration by national selective service, and I can assure the hon. member full consideration will be given to the merits of competing requests for labour supply before instructions are given to supply men for work on the northern projects.

CANADIAN FORCES

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS—FORT OSBORNE BARRACKS, MILITARY DISTRICT NO. 10

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence. Has a report been made by Major General McKenzie respecting an investigation of alleged mistreatment of conscientious objectors held in Fort Osborne barracks? If so, or if not, will the minister lay on the table or report to the house the findings of Major General McKenzie?

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): I have received a reply from Major General McKenzie. Accompanying the reply were the proceedings of the court of inquiry, which as yet I have not had the opportunity to examine. The report of Major General McKenzie fully corroborates the preliminary report I read to the house the other day. I do not mind at all if my hon. friend would like to see the report made by the court of inquiry; but as a matter of precedent and principle I do not think it is advisable to lay upon the table of the house proceedings of courts of inquiry.

WAR APPROPRIATION BILL

PROVISION FOR GRANTING TO HIS MAJESTY AID FOR NATIONAL DEFENCE AND SECURITY

The house resumed from Tuesday, May 16, consideration in committee of a resolution to grant to His Majesty certain sums of money for the carrying out of measures consequent upon the existence of a state of war—Mr. Ilsley—Mr. Bradette in the chair.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Canadian postal corps, $385,360.

The CHAIRMAN: At the last sitting of the committee the post office item was passed. However, the minister has agreed to answer any questions that may be asked.

Mr. COLDWELL: Would the minister make a statement about a report which appeared in the newspapers last Monday to the effect that overseas parcels dispatched from this region on Saturday and over the week-end were destroyed by fire? I know they were not destroyed, because I had sent a large parcel, and made inquiries. I think the public should be informed.

Hon. W. P. MULOCK (Postmaster General): Mr. Chairman, the report which appeared in the press referred to one of the mail cars on the run between Montreal and Saint John. The mail in that case was principally for transfer at McAdam, New Brunswick. The upper part of the car was totally destroyed. The contents were mostly news and newspapers. There were no registered letters, and, so far as we have been able to ascertain, no parcels for overseas. The car next to the damaged car was filled with overseas mail, but it was saved and escaped injury. The damaged car is a total loss. Inspectors from the Post Office Department and the railway company have investigated the matter, but it is a total loss, and it is very doubtful if we will be able to ascertain the actual cause of the fire.

Mr. TUSTIN: Before the house adjourned on Tuesday night I rose to ask the Postmaster General a question but, to my surprise, I saw him in full flight—almost on the double—heading out of the house. I must admit that the great burst of speed demonstrated by the Postmaster General actually took my breath away, and I was not able to ask the question at that time. I notice this item this year is $385,000 as compared with $183,000 last year. I take it that this covers the Canadian postal corps which handles overseas mail?

Mr. MULOCK: Yes.

Mr. TUSTIN: I have had a number of complaints in the past from men on active service who say they have received several parcels at a time. I have also had letters from men overseas who say they have received as many as fifteen or twenty letters at one time. Since the item has been increased I assume there is more staff employed. First, will the minister break down the item of $385,000, and, second, will he give us a report as to whether any progress is being made in speeding up delivery services to boys on the active fronts?

Mr. MULOCK: There is a decrease of $19,497. The amount of the vote last year was $404,857; this year it is $385,360, made up as follows:

Salaries—temporary assistance....	$ 6,660
Cost of living bonus.....	1,080
Departmental contributions to unemployment insurance fund.....	120
Travelling expenses	2,000
Telegrams and telephones.....	400
Sundries	100
Printing and stationery.....	200,000
Equipment and maintenance.....	25,000
Mail bags for overseas mail.....	150,000

With regard to the second part of the hon. gentleman's question, I think I can give him some information which will be of interest. Since March 1 the surface mail time for mail to the United Kingdom has been reduced from an average of thirty days to an average of fifteen days. The time for air letters has been reduced from an average of ten days to eight days. There has been no change in the average time of delivery of parcels. In connection with surface mail to the Mediterranean area, there has been a reduction from an average of fifty-nine days to an average of twenty days. The time for air letters has been reduced from an average of twenty-four days to an average of sixteen days. Airgraph letters take about four days longer because of the processing. The time for parcels has been reduced from an average of ninety days to an average of forty days. The arrangements which I mentioned in my statement of February 28 have now come into effect.

One reason for the reduction in the average time for surface mail is that a great part of this mail, paid for at surface rates, is now carried by air without any additional charge. We have been able to effect a reduction in the cost of processing airgraph messages, and this reduction will be passed on to the members of the armed forces and the public. The committee will remember that in 1942 airgraph letters were reduced from ten cents to six cents to members of the armed forces, and this rate will now be reduced from six cents to five cents. Civilian airgraph messages will be reduced from fifteen cents to ten cents.

Mr. TUSTIN: I am glad to get this information from the minister. However, what I really want to know is whether the mail is actually getting to the men on the active service fronts, or is accumulating as it has in the past. I do not know what caused the accumulation which would result in a man getting as many as fifteen or twenty letters at a time. Can the minister assure us that mail is going to the men on the active fronts without delay?

Mr. MULOCK: My officials and the officials of the postal corps advise that there is no backlog, that all accumulations were cleared up some time ago. Delays may occur for reasons beyond our control. The hon. member will realize that in the case of men going into reinforcement depots and men who are casualties in hospital, some delay occurs, but this matter is under intense study by members of the postal corps, both overseas and in Ottawa. I want to assure him that everything humanly possible is being done to speed it up. The postal corps overseas cannot deliver mail until they find where a man is, and it may happen that a man in a reinforcement depot would receive a lot of mail and parcels at one time when the authorities finally located him.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): I should like to ask the Postmaster General what are the rates for air mail service and regular mail service to Bermuda as compared with rates to Great Britain. I have had complaints that the weight allowed to Bermuda is much less than that applicable to Great Britain, the rates being double or more than double. Bermuda is part of the British empire and her relations with Canada are most intimate. I should like to know the justification for this discrimination in connection with mail service to Bermuda, and what steps, if any, are being taken to reduce these excessive rates and increase the weight allowance.

Mr. MULOCK: I would advise the hon. member for Cumberland that the mail to Bermuda is carried by United States planes and the rates are set by the pan-American postal union. What he says is quite true; the rates are higher.

DEPARTMENT OF PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

Pensions branch—treatment and pension examinations—members and ex-members of the armed forces (present war), $9,000,000.

Mr. WHITE: I should like to make a few remarks during the general discussion period in connection with a number of matters which come under the pensions department. I hope when the minister replies he will answer the various points that I bring up.

The first point has been raised before in the house. I refer to the insurance principle as applied in the Pension Act. All members are aware that what is known as the insurance principle was inserted in the Pension Act shortly after the last war and remained in effect until some time in May, 1940. At the beginning of the present war the government announced that all benefits of the Pension Act would apply to all soldiers in this war, but, for some reason which to my knowledge has never been disclosed, a change was made by which the insurance principle would not apply to soldiers serving in Canada. It is quite true that some short time ago, after a committee of this house had investigated certain pension matters, an amendment was passed known as subsection 3 of section 11, whereby the pension board could grant pensions on compassionate grounds. I submit that that is not good enough. The type of case that comes under section 11 is the hardship case, and this type of case is dealt with solely at the discretion of the pension commission. I submit to the minister that a young Canadian who enlists in the army, is qualified and ready to proceed overseas and fight, and is regarded by the general public as a soldier likely to proceed overseas, is entitled to the full benefit of the Pension Act, including the insurance principle. As I say these hardship or compassionate cases are only of a temporary nature. They are in the discretion of the pension board and the provision may be cancelled at any time. It seems to me only reasonable that the minister when he makes his reply should give some explanation as to why this change was made in the Pension Act.

I would like to call to the minister's attention a small booklet. There is no date on it, but it was issued, I believe, some time in 1940 or 1941 under the authority of the Canadian pension commission. On page 1 of this booklet there is this significant statement:

> The keystone of the pension legislation known as the insurance principle, is contained in sections 11 and 12 of the Pension Act, which in part reads as follows:—

Then it proceeds to quote the sections. On page 3 there is a little insert which reads as follows:

> Please insert the following after section 11 (1) on page 3 "Notes on War Pensions."
> Note:
> In respect of service in Canada after the 21st May, 1940, pension may be awarded only if disability or death is the direct result of the performance of military duties.

I submit that the procedure is hardly consistent with this statement prepared and issued by the board of pension commissioners, that the "keystone of the pension legislation" is "known as the insurance principle." Those are very significant words. It seems to me that our whole pension legislation is built around this one principle.

I understand that a soldier who serves in England or anywhere beyond Canada is covered by all the provisions of the Pension Act, including the insurance principle. But a soldier who enlists for overseas service has nothing to say as to the part of the world in which he is going to serve. He is obliged to go where he is sent, and if his superior officers decide that he is to remain in Canada for service, the soldier can do nothing about it.

While I do not like to cite individual cases, I will refer to one case to show what happened to a soldier who was injured in Canada and who is not covered by the Pension Act. A young lieutenant went into camp at Connaught Ranges in July, 1943. On the 29th of July, at about seven o'clock in the evening, while he was within the lines of his own regiment, he stepped on a football—he was not playing football—and as a result suffered an injury to his foot and knee. This officer was in the Ottawa Rideau hospital and the Canadian military hospital at Kingston from July 29, 1943, until October 28, 1943. He was unable to return to work until November 8, 1943. He will have a permanent disability, despite all the efforts of the army medical men to assure him that the disability must be from some old injury. During the entire period from July 29, when he suffered the injury, until he returned to work on November 8, 1943, he did not receive any pay or allowances of any kind, nor did he receive any payment of any kind from the army, unless some such payment has been made since May 1, 1944, as to which I have no knowledge. Neither will this officer receive any pension. He is married, and during the fifteen or sixteen weeks he was in military hospital and unable to work, his family had to manage to get along as best they could.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Was he discharged at that time?

Mr. WHITE: He was in the reserve army and was at camp Connaught Ranges for two weeks. In a case such as this there is no sense of fairness or justice, and the same circumstances can be applied to many other cases in the active army. I think I am correct when I say that other hon. members must have had many of these unfortunate cases brought to their attention.

A soldier on active service in Canada who has the misfortune to suffer some injury while he is not on duty or is on leave is entitled, in my opinion, to come under the insurance principle. A soldier when he is on leave and while he is not on duty is still in the armed forces. He is paid by the army; he wears his uniform; he is subject to military law and military discipline, and can be recalled from leave at any time. More important still, if this soldier had never been in the army he would not have been on leave and would not have been at that particular place when the accident happened. I have always felt that the army or the pension authorities should assume some responsibility for whatever happens to a soldier while he is serving.

Once a soldier leaves Canada, the department recognizes liability if he is injured while on duty, while he is on leave, and while he is not on duty. In this connection I wish to quote from another little booklet issued by the board of pension commissioners, called "The Duty of a War Pension." This booklet was prepared by John L. Todd, who is described as "lately a member of the Board of Pension Commissioners for Canada." On page 6 of this booklet I read this:

> Because it is often impossible to decide whether the disability is due to the risks of a soldier's war service or to the accustomed risks of existence which continue during his service, pensions are usually paid for all disabilities incurred during service.
> The difficulty of doing otherwise makes it justifiable to accept all detriments affecting a soldier during his service as being due to war risks and to pay pension in compensation for them.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): What is the date of that booklet?

Mr. WHITE: There is no date on either of the booklets from which I have quoted, but I think it must have been issued after May 21, 1940. They both came to me at the same time from the pension commission. Would not the minister think so?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I may be wrong, but I think the last booklet from which my hon. friend quoted was issued in 1919.

Mr. WHITE: I got them both at the same time. The one entitled "Notes on War Pensions" states that it was issued by the authority of the Canadian pension commission. The booklets are bound in identically the same manner, have the same style of printing, and I received them both at the same time. I trust that when the minister speaks he will explain why this change was made in 1940 and why at the present time the insurance principle cannot be applied.

I would ask the minister also to explain just what happens to a soldier who is wounded and who later receives a pension, is discharged from the army and comes under the control of the minister's department. Naturally, when the soldier is discharged from the army his pay and allowances cease. During the period this soldier is in hospital receiving treatment, and before his case is decided, what is the amount of pay or allowance, or whatever you wish to call it, received by the officer, non-commissioned officer or private? Is this payment less than his former pay and allowances, and if it is, will the minister explain why? Further in the same connection, during the time that a soldier is taking treatment in hospital, is there a deduction of $10 a week or some other sum to cover hospital allowances or treatment? If there is any such deduction, will the minister explain the matter?

Another point which has been discussed every time the subject of pensions is before the house is the old question of the onus of proof when a soldier applies for a pension. I cannot understand how the pension board or any branch of the minister's department can evade their liability when a soldier enters the army in an "A" category and is later discharged in a lower category after having service overseas and is held not eligible for a pension. I think the minister will be the first to agree that when a man goes into the armed forces he receives a most rigid and complete examination, together with X-rays and a careful and scientific examination of eye, ear, nose, throat and other parts of the body. If the army is content to accept that man in "A" category, how in the world can the onus of proof be shifted over to the soldier when he is later discharged in a lower category and the pension board rules he is not eligible for pension? When the poor private soldier appears before the pension board he is faced with an array of probably some of the best medical brains in Canada. Why should he have to pit himself against the entire pension board? I know the minister will probably answer, as he did a short time ago in this house, that the soldier is given the benefit of the doubt. I do not think that is satisfactory. The pension board should adopt a very lenient attitude in all such cases, instead of putting the man off by making a decision to the effect that the injury was in the pre-enlistment period, that it was wilfully concealed on enlistment, or that it was not aggravated by military service.

Up to date there have been a very large number of men discharged from the army—I believe somewhere around 110,000 or 120,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): 135,000.

Mr. WHITE: Yet according to a return made last session, the actual number receiving pensions is very small. This is especially true of mental and nervous cases. I for one feel that the pension board has not adopted or maintained a very sympathetic attitude in such cases. It is not fair and just that the soldier who has suffered a head injury overseas should be brushed aside by the board, treated as a "lead-swinger," told that his injury is more or less imaginary, and that the best thing he can do is to forget about it and go back to work.

I should like to outline briefly to the minister one of these very distressing cases. A private soldier of the 48th Highlanders became a dispatch rider while in England. During an air raid his motorcycle crashed and he suffered an injury to his head and one knee. He was kept in hospital for a long period; later he was returned to Canada and discharged in "E" category without a pension. This man was unable to work, because he had dizzy and fainting spells. He was advised to take a vocational course at the collegiate institute in the city of Belleville. He started the course, but after he had had a fainting spell he was advised by the director that it would not be safe for him to continue. This soldier was in "A" category when he enlisted; now, after a long period of service overseas, he is discharged in "E" category without a pension. He had certain qualifications as a stationary engineer, and I would have thought that if he was able to work there would have been a place for him in the army, but the army medical authorities decided that he was not fit to carry on in the army. When he came before the medical authorities of the pension board they were unable to find any disability; in their opinion he was quite able to go to work; he was told to do so, and so far he has received no pension.

I am sure that other hon. members have knowledge of some of these distressing mental cases where soldiers have suffered head injuries. I do not think it is good enough for the pension board to dismiss lightly this type of claim, nor do I believe that that is the kind of treatment which the people of Canada expect discharged veterans to receive. I suggest to the minister that he should have a review made of nervous and mental cases with a view to providing adjustments where no pension has been awarded. It appears to me that in all too many cases the allowances and the pensions awarded by the pension board are not granted to soldiers as a matter of right, as they should be, but are handed out in a very grudging manner; that any concessions which are made by the pensions branch, as announced by the minister from time to time, are made only after long delay, after there have been many debates in this chamber, after the press has taken up the matter, after much pressure from the legion and other organizations interested in the soldier's welfare.

An example of this may be seen in the announcement made by the minister on Monday or Tuesday of this week. These benefits which have been conferred at this late date are at least four years overdue, and they have been pressed for by members of this party and by the legion ever since the war started.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): More than four, I am afraid.

Mr. WHITE: Perhaps I should have said twenty-four years.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That is right—thirteen or fourteen.

Mr. WHITE: Last year when the minister's estimates under the war appropriation bill were before the house there was a debate on Christie street hospital. Everyone can remember what took place, and the various announcements which were read in the press after the house closed, as to what the future status of Christie street hospital would be. Everyone remembers the many excuses and explanations made by the minister and his department as to why this old boiler-factory of a hospital on Christie street would have to remain as a hospital for our soldiers. The minister insisted time after time that an extension would be built. I remember one excuse which was given was that because of priorities the necessary material could not be obtained for a new hospital. But finally, at a very late date, the minister had to bow as gracefully as he could to the public clamour of disapproval, and announced that a new hospital would be built north of Toronto, known as Sunnybrook hospital. I hope the minister will give the committee full particulars of what has been done further in the past year. But at the same time I would say to him that he and his department, and those who preceded him, cannot be excused for the long delay in providing fit and proper hospital accommodation for Canadian soldiers. It is quite true that since the debate last year some few changes have been made at Christie street hospital, but no amount of money or changes or improvements will ever make Christie street hospital a fit place for soldiers. It is a disgrace to Canada, and no credit to any government that is satisfied to keep in such a place wounded soldiers from overseas.

As an example, only last week-end I was talking to a graduate nurse who had trained and practised in various hospitals in New York city, many of them in the poorer sections. This nurse had just made a visit to Christie street hospital to see a relative who was seriously ill there.

Mr. SLAGHT: Name.

Mr. WHITE: Name of whom?

Mr. SLAGHT: The nurse. It may be a fairy tale.

Mr. WHITE: If the hon. member thinks it is a fairy tale I will say I have seen this with my own eyes; I do not have to depend on anybody else.

Mr. SLAGHT: That is a good deal better.

Mr. WHITE: I saw it with my own eyes. I do not need to call on anybody to tell me these things, because I have seen them. I will tell the hon. member for Parry Sound about a few things that I saw with my own eyes; nobody told me about them at all.

Mr. SLAGHT: Stick to those.

Mr. WHITE: You just keep quiet and you can tell your fairy tale later, if you want to. I will tell the hon. member, who lives in the city of Toronto, a few things about the Christie Street hospital, in case he has never been there.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I have been there several times.

Mr. WHITE: I was referring to the hon. member for Parry Sound. It is his misfortune that he lives in Toronto. In this hospital—

Mr. MacNICOL: His living there is an honour to the city of Toronto.

Mr. SLAGHT: The hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. White) will not please seven hundred thousand people with that remark.

Mr. WHITE: This hospital was an old factory; it was taken over by the government twenty-five years ago and patched up from time to time. There is accommodation for 1,370 patients. The building is far from fireproof, and if anybody has ever ridden up and down the elevators, just let him think what would happen in case of fire. Look about and you will see the many articles that would burn in that building. The wards are bigger than any hospital ward I have ever seen. One ward must have at least seventy-five patients in it, with a row of beds around the four walls and rows up and down the centre. The location is simply ideal for a hospital, because it is right beside the railway tracks, and street cars run close to it. There is also a choice collection of factories surrounding it, many of them working night and day. If any hon. member will visit this hospital during warm weather when the windows are open he will find a cloud of soot and smoke floating through the wards, and he will be able to write his name on many articles of furniture. There is an eternal clatter of street cars and factories and other noises. There are no trees or grounds surrounding the hospital about which the soldiers could walk. There are no recreation rooms, no places where soldiers may meet their friends. As I mentioned last year when speaking on this matter, the toilets and washrooms are something that nobody should be asked to tolerate.

Mr. SLAGHT: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. WHITE: When I finish the hon. member may ask any questions he wishes.

An hon. MEMBER: You are worried.

Mr. WHITE: I do not think I am worried about many questions from the hon. member for Parry Sound or from the hon. member from Prince Edward Island, whose chief asset in this house is to thump his desk and make a few remarks.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WHITE: What for?

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I should like the hon. member to keep to the item, if possible.

Mr. GRANT: Was it not the Tories who started that hospital?

Mr. WHITE: In addition there is a great lack of staff at this hospital. Any hon. member who has visited this hospital many times must have noticed the lack of orderlies. The return brought down by the minister a few days ago shows that nearly one-quarter of the accommodation of this hospital is used for soldiers who are receiving treatment for injuries suffered in the first great war. The number shown in the return is 304 out of a total bed capacity of 1,370.

When this matter was before the house last year I asked the minister a question with regard to the number of patients who were allowed to have a private nurse at Christie Street hospital. I suggested at that time that patients did not have private nurses, and the minister assured me that that was not correct; that there were many cases where soldiers had the service of a private nurse. I should like the minister to place on Hansard a statement showing the number of individual soldiers at Christie street hospital who have had the services of a private nurse—and by "private nurse" I mean a graduate nurse, not a male orderly or another soldier patient. I know of cases at this hospital where soldiers have undergone a serious operation, and after the operation they had no nurse but were placed in a ward of from four to six beds—rightly called the "snake" ward; and if the snake ward is full they are placed in a ward of perhaps fifteen or twenty beds. There is no accommodation or provision for placing a soldier in a private room after a serious operation, where he will have the quiet he requires so that his nerves will have an opportunity to relax and quiet down.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. WHITE: That is all right, if it is all that hon. members from the other side can offer. If any hon. member over there wants to get up and rectify the conditions at Christie street hospital he will have the opportunity to do so as soon as I sit down.

The last time I was at this hospital visiting a certain soldier the thought occurred to me: what must be the reaction of a mother who sees her son at Christie street hospital for the first time after his return from overseas? I wonder if that mother goes away with the feeling that Christie street hospital is the best that can be provided for her son.

There are many other objectionable features to this boiler-factory hospital, and I hope that when the minister speaks he will tell us what is being done about the new hospital and how long it will be before Christie Street hospital will be only a horrible memory.

In the matter of the rehabilitation grant, which at the present time is one month's pay and allowances, this amount seems very inadequate. I know—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That is not under my department; it comes under the Department of National Defence.

Mr. WHITE: Is there not a rehabilitation benefit?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes. The benefits are under the Department of Pensions and National Health, but not the grant.

Mr. WHITE: Perhaps the minister would allow me to say just a word on that point. At the present time the rehabilitation grant amounts to one month's pay and allowances. A large number of men have been discharged from the army, and I hope there will be legislation this session under which the amount of the grant will be increased. The point is that if these men and women are to rehabilitate themselves when they are discharged, that is the time they should receive their grant. In conclusion—

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. WHITE: Isn't that just lovely? That is the hon. member's war contribution. At the last session of the Ontario legislature a measure was passed similar to what is known in the United States as the Sparkman act, which has been mentioned in this house many times. Briefly it provides protection for soldiers and their dependents in such matters as eviction, foreclosure on mortgage, seizure of property for taxes and debt, judgments or other legal proceedings for debts incurred prior to enlistment, and so on. While this may not come under the minister's department, I think it is an important matter. This protection now exists in Ontario, but the principle is a splendid one and should be made to apply in all the provinces. I offer that suggestion to the minister for his consideration.

I believe the hon. member for Parry Sound wanted to ask a question.

Mr. SLAGHT: Is my hon. friend aware under what administration the site he has so graphically condemned was chosen originally and the activities carried on until 1930? Perhaps I should not put too much to him, but what activity did he show from 1930 to 1935, when Right Hon. R. B. Bennett was the leader of his party, in endeavouring to right the wrong which he has described so vividly to-day?

Mr. WHITE: I was not in the house from 1930 to 1935, and at that time there was no war. This boiler factory, if it can be classed even as that, was purchased some time between 1917 and 1920, I am not sure in what year, by the union government.

Mr. SLAGHT: You were a good Tory, though.

Mr. WHITE: The hon. member asked me a question, and I will give him an answer. It was purchased in one of those years by the union government. I am not sure what type of building it was then, but I imagine it is in very much the same condition now as it was at that time. It has been carried on by all governments to the present time. So far as I am concerned it does not make one particle of difference whether it was purchased by a Liberal, a Conservative or a union government; I have nothing to withdraw, and I say the thing is a disgrace to Canada.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to draw two or three matters to the attention of the minister, but before doing so I want to say that I concur fully in at least some of the points made by the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough. The first is in regard to the insurance principle being applied to soldiers serving in Canada. I do not know why it was dropped, and I certainly hope the minister will give us some explanation in that regard to-day. I believe it should be put back in the act, because no doubt injustices are being created in the administration of the Pension Act in Canada as a result of the dropping of this insurance principle.

The second point is in regard to the discharge of men who were admitted to the army in category A-1. Only last week I had the privilege of going through the depot in Toronto and seeing the thorough way in which these men were examined on entering the army. Certainly they are given a good going over; they are examined by specialists of all kinds, and when they are admitted as A-1 there is no doubt that they are A-1. I do not understand how these men can be discharged within six months or a year in category E, while our pension department assumes no responsibility for the deterioration which has occurred in their condition. It seems to me that after a man is given a through examination, X-rayed and all the rest of it, and is accepted as A-1, the responsibility for any deterioration in his health rests with the army, because that is where it occurred. The phrase we see on so many discharge papers, "disability aggravated by service but not attributable to service" should be dropped from our vocabulary. When the health of a man has deteriorated to this extent he should be recompensed in some way. I also had an opportunity to note the thorough way in which the men are examined on discharge from the army, and I must say that is something upon which the department must be congratulated. These men are given a most complete examination, which was not the case after the last war, and the department has something to go on with respect to any claims which may be made later on.

Some time ago I drew to the attention of the government the desirability of establishing convalescent homes for returned men, and I believe some action is being taken in that regard. I have in my hand an article appearing in the Halifax Herald which states that the government is establishing a health centre on the Rideau river near Ottawa to rehabilitate men suffering from nervous and other disabilities. It is stated also that four other centres are likely to be erected, one in Toronto, one in Montreal, one in London and one in Vancouver. I do not know whether these are all the minister has in mind, but I would point out that of the five mentioned, three are in Ontario, one is in Quebec and the other in British Columbia. Apparently western Canada has been forgotten. I suggest that these convalescent homes be established all over the dominion so that the men receiving treatment in them may be at least reasonably close to their relatives and friends, from whom they may receive visits. I am sure that would help in their treatment, and make their surroundings more pleasant. It is all very well to say that the climate in Vancouver is much more agreeable than that of the western provinces, but I do not think that is the only thing to be taken into consideration in the establishment of convalescent homes.

I should like to mention also the matter of hospitalization. I believe in Canada to-day, not only among civilians but also under the Department of Pensions and National Health, we are very short of hospital beds and hospital accommodation. I know the minister is endeavouring to overcome this difficulty. I believe plans have been made to build in Toronto a new hospital to take care of large numbers who will require hospitalization. In the building of these hospitals there should be a certain amount of decentralization. Plans I have seen would seem to indicate that all the hospital accommodation to be built is to be centred in certain large communities. I believe an additional wing is to be added to the hospital at Regina, and to the one at Saskatoon. The Deer Lodge hospital in Manitoba will be added to, and there is to be a large hospital in Toronto. But if a hospital is built in Toronto to take care of the needs of our soldiers, it will be found that men from northern Ontario, including points such as Port Arthur and Fort William, who require hospitalization, will have to travel a long distance to Toronto to receive the necessary care.

It is proposed in the new medical health bill now before the social security committee that the provinces, upon accepting the bill, will establish medical health clinics at different points. I suggest to the minister that when that is done his department should be prepared to arrange for a certain number of beds for soldiers in those clinics. Surely it would be much better for those men to receive attention nearer their homes than to be sent to the larger centres. In some cases, of course, special treatment that is required, may be available only in the larger cities.

Large numbers of our men who will return will require hospitalization for a number of years. If the accommodation is centralized it will mean that relatives and friends who might wish to visit these patients would have to go to the expense of travelling long distances. The department would do well to give consideration to establishing a certain number of beds in each of the medical health centres which may be set up under the provisions of the legislation now before the special committee.

In this connection I received only recently a communication from a town in northern Saskatchewan. Its geographical location is such that great difficulty is entailed in transferring patients from the area to either Regina or Saskatoon. There is no direct train service, and often it takes pensioners in the area forty-eight hours or longer to reach either Saskatoon or Regina. This town and community of Nipawin propose the building of a forty-bed hospital. It is a new area which was established after the last war. To a large extent it consists of people who returned from that war, many of them pensioners who now require hospital treatment from time to time. The letter states further that in this war there have been over 2,000 enlistments from that community. They propose to build their hospital on one of the finest possible sites, one very similar to that occupied by the sanatorium at Prince Albert. It is to be built in a sixty-five acre park, right on the high banks of the Saskatchewan river. They are asking the department to build an additional twenty-bed wing to take care of the soldiers who will return from this war, and the veterans of the last one. The Department of Pensions and National Health would do well to consider decentralization of hospital facilities, particularly in view of the fact that we shall have to take care of a great many returned men.

Another matter that has been brought to my attention in letters I have received is the question of pre-natal care for soldiers' wives. I have been told that a considerable number of deaths have been caused through lack of proper pre-natal care. It would seem that pensions are not sufficient for this purpose. Of course I know the soldier's wife may apply to the dependents' allowance advisory committee to get additional help in case of necessity. Quite often however in outlying areas these committees are not easily reached. The Department of Pensions and National Health would be well advised to make some regular allowance to soldiers' wives requiring special care at such times.

There are other matters I shall bring to the minister's attention when other items are called.

Mr. ROEBUCK: Mr. Chairman, as I listened to the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough it struck me that he was threshing old straw, and that he was just about twenty years late in the criticism he directed against the hospital.

An hon. MEMBER: That is not long.

Mr. ROEBUCK: Well, in my career it seems to be quite a while.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Some people live in the past.

Mr. TUSTIN: At least he has been consistent.

Mr. ROEBUCK: I do not think he has. That speech should have been made in 1940 when the hon member reached the house—not in 1944. The reason it is old straw—and much too old, at that—is that the government has decided to build another hospital, one which I trust will be much more adequate to the needs of the soldiers than the present one. It should have been built sooner. Probably it should have been built in the first instance, rather than the one that is there.

I would point out that the usefulness or adequacy of the hospital has not been decreasing. If anything it has been getting better rather than worse. I say that because from my own experience—and I know something about the hospital, because it is in my own constituency—I feel justified in saying a word of commendation for the management. Under Doctor McMane, district superintendent, it has been well managed in recent years. While the staff and management have been working under disabilities because of the building itself, its location, and perhaps lack of some equipment—although there is considerable equipment in the hospital—it is my belief that they have done the best they could under the circumstances.

There are two or three points to which I would direct the attention of the committee. In the first instance I believe the time that has been spent on, and the interest shown by members in, the welfare of our fighting forces and the soldiers who will return home, is to the credit of the house. We owe to them a duty, and I am under the impression that in a general way we are discharging that duty to the best of our ability.

About two weeks ago I presented to the house a petition signed by 1,500 or 2,000 persons in my own constituency, asking that the clothing allowance be increased from $65 to $125. That is a petition with which I thoroughly agree. True, it was directed to the Prime Minister rather than to the house and, since it asked for an increase in a money appropriation, technically it could not be received by the house. But in fact it was received and I have no doubt registered in the minds of the government and of hon. members. Although this amount of $65 represents a recent increase, it is still utterly inadequate to cover the cost of clothing required by a soldier on discharge. I have a letter from the Minister of National Defence (Army) to whose attention I brought this matter, which concludes with the following words:

I can assure you that it is having the most careful and sympathetic attention along with many other matters with respect to the rehabilitation problems now under study.

I take it that the matter is being studied by the cabinet, and I hope they will agree with me that this amount should be increased. It is not possible to consider the affairs of the soldiers in detail without considering the picture in the main. For instance, I am not disregarding the announcement recently made in the form of an order in council that, among many other things, there will be an increase from $44.20 per month to $60 per month in the allowance paid under the post-war discharge re-establishment order to single men who wish to continue their education or take a course in vocational training. The allowance to married men is to be increased from $62.40 to $80 per month.

An hon. MEMBER: What are you reading from?

Mr. ROEBUCK: From a newspaper report of the order in council. It is not an editorial.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): And tabled in the house.

Mr. ROEBUCK: My hon. friend evidently does not like the particular paper from which I am reading. Were I reading from the editorial columns of that paper I would apologize to the committee. As I say, one must consider increases of this nature when discussing other increases which are desired. They hang together; they must be considered as a whole rather than in detail. The increase in the allowance granted to a man in order to complete his education on discharge would in some measure relieve the tension caused by the small amount given him as a clothing allowance. I hope that the assurance I have received from the Minister of National Defence that the matter is under discussion will result in a larger clothing allowance to our soldiers on discharge.

It has also been borne in upon me from time to time that a good deal of the objection to the conditions which we have established for the discharge of our fighting men is due to a lack of knowledge as to what actually is being done. I know from my own study of the acts and the various regulations how difficult it must be for the ordinary man in the armed forces or his friends to grasp the details. The literature that has been published is of considerable importance. I have a pamphlet entitled "D Day." The sub-title is, "When the Canadian Fighting Man again becomes a Working Man." I wish to commend the people who have produced that pamphlet and who I believe are circulating it in large numbers.

More striking than that is a book recently published by a member of the staff of the Department of Pensions and National Health, Mr. C. N. Senior, an executive assistant in the department. The book, just off the press, is entitled, "When the Boys Come Home." He kindly gave me a copy which I read with great interest. The subtitle is, "Their Post-War Opportunities in Canada." This book should be read by every hon. member. It is easy, open reading. I started and finished it in one evening. I found it more interesting than a novel or a story.

It is in story form. I see that one of my hon. friends has a copy in his hand. I hope all hon. members will read it, because it shows a grasp of what the situation really is, to a greater degree than any other document I have read. The author of this book has a philosophy of life and a knowledge of affairs. He went through the last war and has been closely in touch with veterans' affairs for many years. An hon. member calls my attention to the fact that his son is at present overseas. He has a very personal relationship to the armed forces. He has done his work well, and I understand he did it in his own time, not in the time of the department or of the people of Canada by whom he is paid. I have also been informed that he receives nothing in the way of royalties on the publication, that what accrues in that regard is being given to one of the veterans' organizations or to some fund.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The disablement fund.

Mr. ROEBUCK: That is a fine thing for him to do. I brought this up for two reasons. First, I think the writing should be acknowledged and its excellence noted. But above all I think the department should take advantage of what has been done and make this book available in large numbers to the returned soldiers and their families. In the introductory chapter he states:

> A great deal more has been done in the way of planning for the aftercare of the boys and girls in the forces than most of us realize. What follows is an effort to set down in orderly fashion an account of the measures already adopted, and how they are likely to affect the welfare of your boy and mine.

That is the very thing we have been asking for in order that we ourselves may learn in a careful and orderly way of what has been done and be in position to pass on that information to others. I suggest to the minister that an appropriation should be made to cover the publication of large numbers of this book in order to make them available to all members of the forces, their friends and others who wish to read it.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Chairman, I should like to offer a few observations on these estimates for pensions. The previous speaker, the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Roebuck), accused my colleague of threshing old straw. Since coming here in 1940 I have found that it is necessary to rehash one's argument, or, as the hon. member terms it, thresh old straw. This is my fifth session, and I have found that a member does not get much for the people he represents if he does not get up and fight for it. My colleague the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough has consistently at all times pleaded for the welfare of all members of the armed forces and their dependents; it is to his credit that he has never missed an opportunity at any time. I should like to congratulate him upon the splendid speech he made this afternoon on their behalf, and I think he is also to be heartily congratulated upon the constructive suggestions he has offered to the minister and his department for the betterment of members of the armed services.

I should like first to make some reference to the insurance principle in pension legislation. The person who volunteers for service in the armed forces must obey orders and serve wherever he is instructed to go. The insurance principle in pensions, I think we all realize, originated during the last war. It was found necessary to establish that principle in order to prevent certain injustices which prevailed at that time. In 1919, when the Pension Act was enacted, the insurance principle was included in its provisions after due deliberation by this parliament. A few years after the last war, as a result I believe of the urgings of ex-service men's organizations throughout the country, a commission was set up headed by the then Colonel Ralston, now the Minister of National Defence, and acting Prime Minister. That commission sat for a couple of years, and after a great deal of well worth-while work recommended that the insurance principle should be restored and applied to all those who had served. The Pension Act was amended accordingly. At the outbreak of the present war the government pledged itself to apply all the benefits of the existing Pension Act, including the insurance principle, to those enlisting for active service. A special order in council was passed under the War Measures Act giving effect to this pledge. However, on May 21, 1940, the government changed its policy, repudiated its pledge, and definitely excluded from the benefits of the insurance principle all those whose service was in Canada only.

I have already pointed out that all those who volunteer for active service must go wherever they are directed; they have little choice once they have enlisted. True enough, provision has been made whereby a pension may be granted on compassionate grounds for serious disability or death arising from service in Canada, where those concerned are in necessitous circumstances. I do not think that that should be the law applying to those who have offered their services. But the fact remains that the benefits of the insurance principle have ever since May 21, 1940, been denied to those whose service in the present war has been on active service in Canada only. In my opinion the pledge given by this government at the start of this war should be lived up to. I think most people believe in that principle, and I trust that the minister will still be able to prevail upon his colleagues to have this provision reinstated.

As to pre-enlistment conditions, I know that the minister has said that the benefit of the doubt should be given the claimant. But in my opinion the physical condition of a man or a woman should for all future purposes be considered as that obtaining at the time of acceptance into the armed forces. That unfortunately is not the law of the land at the present time. In spite of their best efforts, ex-service men and their associations have not been able to secure remedial action in connection with a situation which I have always considered one of the worst blots on pension administration in Canada. Full and generous pension treatment should be the responsibility of the dominion.

In Great Britain the situation is perfectly clear-cut. In the British House of Commons Sir John Anderson recently said:

> We establish the presumption that a man's condition as recorded on his admission to the service was in fact his condition at that time, and that any subsequent deterioration in his condition was due to his service.
> We provide that there shall be no proof of onus on the claimant, and that the benefit of the doubt shall be given to the claimant.

This is simple justice, and should prevail in Canadian pension administration.

Much has been said on hospitalization. I have pointed out in past debates on pension estimates that all military hospitals should be located in quiet areas throughout the country to avoid undue disturbance of our nerve-shattered ex-service men, and should be surrounded by proper grounds. Too often that is not the case to-day. I am happy to say that in my native province of Manitoba we have a splendid military hospital, admirably located and surrounded by appropriate grounds. Unfortunately that is not true of many other parts of Canada. I am informed that generally speaking the surroundings are very unsatisfactory. My colleague the member for Hastings-Peterborough and others this afternoon have mentioned Christie street hospital in Toronto. I understand that originally it was a factory, which was taken over during the last war as temporary hospital quarters. It is certainly most unsuitable for the purpose for which it is used. On one side are the railway tracks, and the other side, street cars. It is in the midst of a manufacturing centre where there is tremendous noise at almost all times. The surroundings are anything but conducive to the welfare of the patients.

The widow of a soldier who had a pension disability of less than fifty per cent has had something done for her, but I think she is entitled to be granted a pension after the death of her husband, and she should also be entitled to hospitalization and medical care on the same basis as the veteran receiving a war veterans' allowance. We ought to do at least that much for the widows of our ex-service men.

I would ask the minister a question with respect to hospital treatment. The private soldier and other ranks including lieutenant, receive, I understand, the same allowance while they are being given hospital treatment; then the allowance ranges upward for a captain and higher ranks. On what basis is that arrived at?

The clothing allowance has recently been increased to $65, but I maintain when a man who has been in the service for some years and has served overseas is discharged he cannot properly reclothe himself for less than double the amount of $65. The allowance should be further increased.

There are various features of the Sparkman Act in the United States which I hope the minister will consider. It makes provision for certain legal protection for members of the armed services to which I think they are rightly entitled under federal authority.

I realize that some of the improvements which we have advocated in past discussions of the pension estimates have been put into effect; for instance, with respect to the dependents' allowance and the rehabilitation of discharged men. These improvements have been effected following discussions in the house in which members of all groups have repeatedly advocated them. The minister, being an ex-service man himself, I realize is sympathetic in the administration of his department—very sympathetic. I know that he is eager to see still more improvements made in the treatment of our soldiers and their dependents, and I trust he will be able to persuade his colleagues and be able to bring down measures to alleviate some of the conditions which are not satisfactory at the present time.

I do not wish to take further time at the moment but I shall have questions to ask as the estimates are proceeded with.

Mr. QUELCH: Mr. Chairman, several improvements have been made in the treatment of our soldiers and their dependents since the beginning of this parliament. The fight to get justice for them has been going on steadily for the past twenty-five years, and generally speaking quite a bit of progress has been made. On the other hand we did slip and slip badly in the spring of 1940 when we took the insurance principle out of the Pension Act. That was done first of all by order in council, and later the provisions of the order in council where embodied in an amendment to the Pension Act. The minister will remember that there was strong opposition to that proposal in the special committee of this house dealing with pensions; finally, some kind of compromise was reached under which the pension would still be paid, provided the dependent soldier was in necessitous circumstances. I remember that at that time we were promised definitely that a wide interpretation would be given to "necessitous circumstances". I am beginning to believe that that wide interpretation is not being given, or that it is not as wide as it should be. I believe that most hon. members have on their files cases of soldiers' dependents who have been deprived of pensions as a result of the insurance principle being taken out of the act. I will place on Hansard some figures showing what the result of that action has been in so far as soldiers in this war are concerned. I am dealing now, of course, only with soldiers serving in Canada.

In sessional paper No. 170C, which was tabled in reply to some questions asked by myself, we find this. Referring only to deaths among men and women of the armed services who served in Canada, in 458 cases a decision was given refusing pension. In approximately 398 of these cases it was held that the injury or disease or aggravation thereof resulting in death was incurred during but did not arise out of nor was directly connected with military service. Then, under section 11, subsection 3 of the Pension Act, 325 were allowed pensions; that is, under the necessitous clause. We find, referring to disability only, that in 28,824 cases decisions were given refusing pension. In approximately 5,843 of those cases it was held that the injury or disease or aggravation thereof resulting in disability was incurred during but did not arise out of nor was directly connected with military service. Again, we find that under section 11, subsection 3 of the Pension Act, 871 were allowed pensions on account of necessitous circumstances. I should like the minister, when he comes to reply, to tell the committee exactly what that term, "necessitous circumstances", means.

With regard to soldiers' entitlement to free hospitalization, any soldier who is "indigent" can receive free hospitalization, and "indigent" is defined as, "any soldier whose income is less than $1,000 a year." Surely, if an indigent soldier is a man with an income of less than $1,000 a year, then a dependent in necessitous circumstances should be defined as a person whose income is less than $1,000 a year. But apparently that is not the case, because I had my attention drawn to cases where the income of the dependent was considerably less than $1,000 a year and yet a pension was denied to her.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Does the hon. member remember what was the percentage of disability in that case?

Mr. QUELCH: I should not like to say from memory.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Was it over fifty per cent?

Mr. QUELCH: It was a case of death. The soldier had been killed. The income of the dependent was, I believe, around $600 a year. Although the woman was getting only $50 a month, a pension was denied her. I feel that she should be classed as an indigent so long as her income is less than $1,000 a year; that is, she should be treated in the same way as the soldier in that respect.

There is one other point to which I want to refer, namely the refusal of pension because the disability is of pre-enlistment origin. I can quite appreciate that where disability becomes evident one or two months after enlistment there may be some justification for that stand. But in view of the fact that these men are given a thorough examination —I think the rejections go to prove that— when a man has been in the service for two or three years, undergoing severe training— for example, commando training, which has broken down the health of a lot of men— the government are being very unfair indeed to the soldier to try to prove that that disability was due to some condition of pre-enlistment origin. I do not think it is altogether creditable to the pensions administration that they adopt the means they do to try to prove it. Apparently a conversation is entered into with the soldier, maybe at the time of the enlistment, maybe at some time before discharge, with a view to getting him to admit that, four or five years or even longer before his enlistment, he had some disability. There is a case on my files of a man who, while working on the railway, had a crowbar dropped on his foot and for three or four months he was disabled; after that he was all right and was able to continue his work on the railway. To-day that man is refused a pension on the ground that the foot disability was due to this accident which happened several years before the war, although he had been working steadily on the railway, prior to enlistment, without any sign of a limp, and several months passed after his enlistment before he had foot trouble, which, he claimed, was due to the commando type of training.

On several occasions the minister has made comparisons between the pensions administration of Canada and of other countries. But if I understand it aright, in England the treatment accorded is quite different. In an issue of the Canadian Veteran dated April 30, 1944, I find this statement:

> In Great Britain, for instance, the situation is perfectly clear-cut. One has only to take a declaration made in the House of Commons in London recently by Sir John Anderson. He said: "We established the presumption that a man's condition as recorded on his admission to the service was in fact his condition at the time; and that any subsequent deterioration in his condition was due to his service. We provide that there shall be no proof of onus on the claimant and that the benefit of the doubt shall be given to the claimant."

That is not the law in this country, and that seems to be one main ground of complaint in the army. The two complaints I hear chiefly to-day are: the failure of the government to maintain the insurance principle, and this question of pre-enlistment origin. These are very sore points with the men in the army and the various soldier organizations, and I suggest to the minister that a change in both respects be given serious consideration. If a change is not possible to put the insurance principle back in the act, if the government is not prepared to go that far, the very least it can do is to give a generous interpretation to the clause relating to necessitous circumstances.

Since no doubt we shall have the chance of a thorough discussion of soldiers' affairs when the new department is set up, I shall defer the rest of my remarks until that time.

Mr. McIVOR: I am not going to make a speech, but I have something to say. Any man who represents a constituency which has a voluntary enlistment record second to none in Canada will have a well-beaten trail to the Department of Pensions and National Health. I should like to take this opportunity of paying my tribute to a prince of men, the late chairman of the pension commission, Major General Macdonald. I found him courteous. I found him thorough. He would obey the law as best he could, but sometimes he had to go beyond. I remember once when I was most urgent in trying to get relief of some kind for a soldier's wife. This particular man had died suddenly. He was a victim of shell shock, and when Major General Macdonald could not find anything in the act to cover this case he secured from some place $25 for me to help the widowed mother and her four boys. Her house had been burned over her head. Three of those boys are now serving in the forces and one is too young. Therefore I pay my tribute to Major General Macdonald, the former chairman of the pension board. I would also pay my tribute to Major General Melville. I had two urgent cases and I did not see any hope for them unless the Pension Act was amended. These two cases have now been handled in such a way that the two boys and their parents are well satisfied.

I do not know whether the Minister of Pensions and National Health is a believer in predestination—I know his forefathers were—but I know from his conduct that he does not want this country to save taxes at the expense of young men who are risking their lives for the welfare of their country, and who have come back less physically fit than they were before they went away. I should like to know whether it is true that the minister is to act on the theory that we should save taxes at the expense of the returned soldiers. When I think of these young men that I have mentioned, without naming them, I am reminded that they were badly discouraged because one of them had not been in the forces very long. He was more disappointed than anything else because he was not physically fit, owing to a disease that he contracted. He was not able to get overseas and it was the disappointment of his life. I am happy to know that the pension board will compensate him for his risk. I pay tribute to the Minister of Pensions and National Health. I say that it is the duty of every hon. member of this committee to make sure that every returned man from any theatre of war has his case presented to the Minister of Pensions and National Health. If that is done, judging from my own experience, I am sure that they will be treated in a way which will make us all feel like saying, "Cheerio".

Mr. GREEN: There can be no doubt that the first concern of this nation is to wage war until Germany and Japan have been utterly crushed. Sometimes, however, I think we are prone to forget that the waging of war is carried on by young men who sacrifice their lives in many cases or their health in other cases and whose dependents in most cases suffer in one way or another; they make sacrifices, some of which are very great. Therefore, complementary to waging war must be care for the men of the forces and their dependents, both while the men are fighting and afterwards.

The statement made by the King's Prime Ministers, published in this morning's papers, contained one significant paragraph with regard to the fighting men. It read as follows:

> To all our armed forces who in many lands are preserving our liberty with their lives . . . we express our admiration and gratitude.

That is a noble and proper sentiment at this time, and I hope that the Canadian House of Commons and the Canadian people will always bear in mind those words "admiration" and "gratitude" when they consider the men who have been doing the fighting for them. I think the attitude of the Canadian people at the present time is much like the attitude shown in that statement. People are seeing the wounded come back from Italy; almost every week a train pulls in in some part of Canada with wounded from the front. We are seeing sick Canadians come back in large numbers. It is really amazing how many men have been discharged from our forces as medically unfit. The minister will correct me if I am wrong, but there must be nearly one hundred thousand young Canadians who have been discharged from the forces because they are medically unfit.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Up to March 31 of this year 129,000, I think.

Mr. GREEN: Some of those were not medically unfit.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): No; 94,000 medically unfit.

Mr. GREEN: It is going to take a great deal of patience on the part of those of us who have had to remain at home if these young men are to be properly reestablished in civilian life, and a great deal of determination and resolution on our part to see that they do get reestablished. Perhaps it will take a good deal of sacrifice in the way of payment of taxes and in many other ways; but surely the Canadian people will see to it that these young men get a proper start and that those who are disabled are adequately cared for throughout the rest of their lives, and that their dependents are adequately cared for also.

Then there is the attitude of the men themselves to be considered. It seems to me that it is of great importance to have these young men feel that they are being dealt with fairly. If they feel that they are getting a fair chance, that the country is really trying to help them out, I am sure that they will make a great contribution to the life of the nation. But at the present time they are not getting a fair chance in many respects. Take this question of the clothing allowance which has been raised by several hon. members this afternoon and on many other occasions in this house by hon. members of all parties. I do not think it can be questioned that $65 is insufficient to enable men to get a civilian outfit. The result is that when a soldier is given $65 he walks back into civil life feeling that he has had a raw deal, a shabby deal. He starts his civilian life with that impression, and I think that is very serious. It has a very bad effect on the men who have to go back into civilian life. The same is true of the rehabilitation allowance. I would urge the minister to bring down their gratuity legislation without further delay and provide for a proper rehabilitation allowance for the men who are being discharged. Every day that is lost in bringing down this measure means that perhaps a hundred more men are being discharged feeeling they are not getting a fair rehabilitation grant. That is very bad for the country.

It does seem to me that the government has been very slow in getting rehabilitation plans under way and that there is a tendency to go just far enough to save face, and only to go that far after there has been considerable prodding and coaxing. Now is the time to remedy that whole situation. Now is the time to lay a proper foundation for the care of the men and their dependents.

I was very much impressed by the debate which took place in the British House of Commons last July on the question of pensions for the men who have been disabled in this war. That debate was quite lengthy, and hon. members who are interested will find it in volume 391 of the British Hansard, commencing on page 715. The principal speech was made by Sir John Anderson, the lord president of the council, who was discussing a memorandum that had been brought down dealing with changes in war pensions. It is called a white paper and is described as command paper No. 6459, dated July, 1943. The British have made changes in their provision for entitlement to pension. A few days ago, in referring to the speech made by my seatmate, the hon. member for Greenwood, the minister said that the Canadian pension provisions were far ahead of the British provisions, but in at least one respect I think we are behind and should lose no time in catching up. Sir John Anderson explained some of the new features of the British pension law at page 718 of this volume of British Hansard, in these words:

> In the redraft we include certain novel features, entirely in the interests of the claimants. In the first place, we establish two presumptions. The first presumption—I am putting this in non-technical language—is that a man's condition as recorded on his admission to the service was in fact his condition at that time. The second is that any subsequent deterioration in his condition was due to his service.

They also established a benefit of the doubt provision, so that there were the two changes made in entitlement under the British pension law. Of course Canada has had a benefit of the doubt section for many years, and I am going to read it to hon. members. It is section 62 of the Pension Act:

> Notwithstanding anything in this act, on any application for pension the applicant shall be entitled to the benefit of the doubt, which shall mean that it shall not be necessary for him to adduce conclusive proof of his right to the pension applied for, but the body adjudicating on the claim shall be entitled to draw and shall draw from all the circumstances of the case, the evidence adduced and medical opinions, all reasonable inferences in favour of the applicant.

In effect, that means there is no onus of proof on the claimant, and as far as it goes it is very good. The provision which the British now have in their pension law reads:

> In no case shall there be an onus on any claimant under this our warrant to prove the fulfilment of the conditions set out in paragraph (1) and the benefit of any reasonable doubt shall be given to the claimant.

So that these two provisions are practically identical. But we have no provision in the Canadian pension law for presumptions, such as the British introduced last summer. The wording of the royal warrant with regard to presumptions is as follows:

> Where an injury or disease which has led to a member's discharge or death during war service was not noted in a medical report made on that member on the commencement of his war service, a certificate under paragraph (1)—

That means a certificate of entitlement.

> —shall be given unless the evidence shows that the conditions set out in that paragraph are not fulfilled.

In other words, as Sir John Anderson said, they have now established the two presumptions. They are not absolute presumptions; they can be rebutted by the ministry of pensions, but they have established the two presumptions, that at the time of acceptance the man was fit for the kind of service demanded of a man in that medical category, and second, in the event of his being subsequently discharged on medical grounds, that any deterioration in his health which has taken place is due to his service. I suggest to the committee that our pension law should be changed to include these presumptions. In this war the men enlisting have had far more thorough examinations than was the case in the last, and there have been many more discharges for medical reasons, particularly for illness, as a result of the health of the men breaking down. Presumptions of this type would be particularly helpful in the case of disease. At the present time it is almost impossible for a man who has been discharged through sickness to prove that his disability arose out of or was directly connected with his service. That is the way our pension law reads in the case of service in Canada, that the applicant must prove that the disability arose out of or was directly connected with his service. So that I advocate, and I ask hon. members to consider seriously, the amendment of the Pension Act at this session in order to insert these two presumptions.

The British have made a change also in regard to pensioning men injured as a result of accidents. They have gone quite far, I think much farther than we have gone in Canada. Hon. members will find that dealt with also in this white paper, and I am going to read the provision with respect to accidents:

> At present most accidents sustained by members of the forces are regarded as attributable to war service but there are four main categories not so regarded. They are:
> (a) Accidents sustained whilst "walking out" in spare time;—

I presume that would mean a man walking out from his military camp.

> (b) Accidents sustained whilst travelling to and from home on short pass, i.e., leave of not more than forty-eight hours duration (unless the leave is of a compassionate nature);
> (c) Accidents sustained whilst travelling to or from duty when the member has been allowed to live in accommodation privately arranged;
> (d) Accidents sustained whilst actually on leave.

Then the white paper goes on to say:

> His Majesty's government has decided that under war conditions accidents in categories (a), (b) and (c) can reasonably be regarded as attributable to service. The position of accidents in category (d)—

That is, while a man is on leave.

> —is different. In these cases the compulsions of service play no part and an accident sustained in such circumstances cannot properly be regarded as attributable to service.

Sir John Anderson also dealt with the change in the provisions in the case of accidents. Hon. members will find his explanation at page 722 of the British Hansard, where he said:

> We are giving the fullest possible application of the doctrine that a service man places himself wholly and unreservedly at the disposal of the state during his service and we are covering everything with one exception. The one exception not covered is the case of the man who goes on leave, who is for the time being entirely released from his obligation to the state and is just as free as anyone else to do what he likes. If in those circumstances a man in his home falls off a pair of steps while hanging a picture on the wall, and injures himself, he is treated just like a civilian in respect of that injury and not like a soldier.

During the course of the debate one reason given for not covering a man who might fall off a stepladder while hanging a picture was that he would be covered by the social legislation in Britain; of course in Canada that would not be the case; here the poor chap would be just out of luck. However, the British have made this provision for accidents, and I think the time has come when section 11, subsection 2, of the Pension Act should be changed to wipe out any reference to military service in Canada. I realize that it would still be the proper provision for men in the peace-time forces.

At the present time it covers two groups, men in the war who serve in Canada, and men in the forces in peace time. I think the time has come when there should be a change, and when the provision in section 11 (2), restricting men who are serving in Canada, should be deleted. I do not wish to repeat the arguments offered this afternoon by other hon. members, but I am firmly convinced that the insurance principle should be reestablished for the men in Canada. I advocated that throughout the meetings of the special committee on pensions which sat in 1941 but, unfortunately, at that time I did not receive very much support. The committee found against me. However now there can be no doubt the time has come to make the change. That is the second change which I suggest should be made in the Pension Act at this session.

Just the day before yesterday the minister announced changes in the pension law, changes which we have been urging on the government ever since I came to the house in 1936. We have urged them at every session, but have never been able to get very far. However, I suppose a late repentance is better than none at all, and I am glad these changes have now been made. I shall not go over them in detail, but briefly they remove the restrictions upon a widow getting a pension, if she was married after January 1, 1930; they enable the payment of an allowance for a wife who was married after May 1, 1933, and for a child, where such child was born after that date.

But the difficulty is this: These changes—and there are others, as well—have been made by order in council, under the War Measures Act. I do not understand why that was done. It seems to me that it should have been done through an amendment to the Pension Act, so that the changes would be permanent. As conditions are at the present time, when the war is over, the War Measures Act will no longer be in operation, and these beneficial changes will expire, unless some special provision is made. I do urge upon the minister that he have the Pension Act amended to provide the presumptions, to restore the insurance principle for men who serve in Canada, and to include the changes which have just been made by order in council.

Then there are two or three other matters which should be dealt with by the government. Take the questions of clothing allowance and rehabilitation allowance. I urge that if these allowances are increased, any increases should be made retroactive. It would not be fair to make the change, say, at the 1st of June, and not have the increased allowance given to the man who was discharged on January 1.

Then when a man is disabled, wounded or becomes ill he is sent to hospital, and the army gets rid of him just as quickly as possible by turning him over to the Department of Pensions and National Health. I do not think a line should be drawn there. Surely a man should not be discharged from the army, the navy or the air force until his medical rehabilitation is complete, and he is in such condition that he can return to civilian life on pension, if he has not been cured, or can go back to carry on his normal work. The minister may say that that involves difficulties in administration, but I suggest that the approach is wrong. The soldier should be treated as a soldier until he returns to civilian life. Let the army, the air force, the navy and the Department of Pensions and National Health work out among themselves the necessary administrative arrangements. Do not discharge a man from the army to the Department of Pensions and National Health. It would be much fairer if he continued as a soldier, at his regular pay and allowances until returned to civilian life

Then, one final matter I would bring to the attention of the minister has to do with men in the veterans guard. These men are getting old. I do not know what the average age among them would be, but many of them must have reached fifty-five or sixty years. If they have disabilities upon discharge from the veterans guard they would, of course, be entitled to pension. But let us suppose that they are discharged as physically fit—as most of them probably would be. Under those circumstances it will be very difficult for those men to become reestablished at that age, especially if they have been in the veterans guard for two or three years. It would be almost impossible for them to get anything to do when they leave the army. I do not think it would be fair to force them to accept war veterans' allowances, and it certainly would not be fair to force them to accept relief. I believe that some provision will have to be made for a service pension high enough to permit them to carry on under decent living conditions. This is a question which I think has never before been mentioned in the house, but it is one which must be faced. I do not think members of the veterans guard will be adequately covered by the present provisions for men discharged from the forces.

These are some of the suggestions I place before the minister and the government. I do urge the minister—and perhaps he does not need it as much as some other members of the ministry—that these men of ours must be treated not only fairly but generously. I do not believe that we can possibly repay them and their dependents for the sacrifices which are being made. In my opinion that is the feeling of the Canadian people at large. I repeat, therefore, that they must be treated not only fairly, but also generously.

Mr. GILLIS: I agree with those who advocate reinstatement of the insurance principle, and I shall not repeat any of the arguments which have been offered. The minister will recall that on the pensions committee in 1940 I was one of those most vigorously opposed to the removal of the insurance principle.

In our rush to bring in orders in council covering every matter raised in the house, and to try to anticipate the criticisms we may receive in the country, there is the danger of repeating the performance of the twenty odd years between the two wars, when the Department of Pensions and National Health of the federal government was made a very convenient spot at which to dump problems affecting indigents. The result was that in the period between the two wars we paid very little attention to social security matters that are and must be separate and apart from war pensions.

I have listened to the discussion we have had and I have read over the many proposals that have been made by the Department of Pensions and National Health in connection with the whole problem of reconstruction and rehabilitation. I am afraid we are still thinking in those terms. It is my considered opinion that the rehabilitation of the ex-service personnel of this war is closely related to the whole reconstruction problem. I am convinced also that if the national income of Canada is not maintained, if there is not full employment in the country in the aftermath of the war, many of these things enacted by orders in council will not be fulfilled. We must keep our minds geared to the main problem of total reconstruction if results are going to be realistic.

In considering jobs for service personnel when the war is over we must also remember that in this country we have a million and a half workers engaged in war industry. They will also be coming back looking for jobs in peace-time industry. They are definitely a responsibility of ours in the matter of reconstruction. In considering the training and rehabilitation of service personnel following the cessation of hostilities, we shall have to consider this group in the matter of training and so forth. In considering the whole field of social security problems we shall have to be careful to relate to the Department of Pensions and National Health only those matters that belong to it. I am concerned, as is the hon. member for Vancouver East.

An hon. MEMBER: Vancouver South.

Mr. GREEN: Do not get us mixed up.

Mr. GILLIS: Yes, Vancouver South; the hon. member for Vancouver East is on his way to Australia.

Very important matters are introduced by way of order in council. Immediately after the war is over, these orders in council will become null and void. Unless the act is amended many of these measures will have no meaning. I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver South when he says that before the session adjourns the pensions committee should be called together to deal with matters coming within the scope of the Pension Act in order that legislation may be passed to place these within the machinery of pensions and national health so that there may be no doubt about many of the important things now covered by orders in council.

I should like to say something about the administration of the whole programme. It looks nice on paper and I think it was honestly evolved, but legislation of this kind will be of no value to the country unless the necessary machinery to implement it is placed at the disposal of those who have to do with providing benefits for the service personnel.

I am going to stress something with which I think the minister has had a lot to do but which he may have forgotten at this time. Provision has been made for vocational training of service personnel and the providing of certain rights. When we consider the economy of Canada as a whole, these regulations may be quite fair, but there are sections of the country where they will be of absolutely no value. I wish to refer for a moment to Nova Scotia, a one-industry province and that industry a heavy one. The minister will remember that during the period between the two wars when we tried to give effect to the legislation that then existed we had a certain problem to contend with in the field of employment, vocational training, assessment of pensions and other matters related thereto. A man may return to Ontario and Quebec partly disabled. The medical authorities determine that he has a ten per cent disability and he is pensioned accordingly. He may be able to go out and find employment and thus augment his pension. But take a man returning to Nova Scotia. His disability is diagnosed by the medical authorities as a ten per cent, fifteen per cent or twenty per cent disability. In effect, in that province he has a 100 per cent disability because he would not be able to take employment in a steel plant or a coal mine. The same thing is happening in this war as happened in the last war.

I appeared before pensions tribunals on many occasions when they came to Nova Scotia to try outstanding cases. They agreed with me and I think they recommended that some administrative latitude should be given the commission with respect to that particular province. In Nova Scotia a man cannot pick up a job as a doorman, an elevator operator or in a beer parlour, because we have nothing of that sort. It is exclusively a heavy industry province. I have had twenty years' experience in trying to make the old pension machinery work in that particular field of employment.

We are up against the same thing in the matter of vocational training. There have been no additions to vocational training facilities in that province since the outbreak of the war with the exception of a small industrial school which was established in New Glasgow and which I believe was supported to some extent by the Clark Ruse aircraft people. Recently this school was closed when the aircraft plant at Dartmouth was closed. Service personnel returning to that province find that they cannot get vocational training in their own province.

There is another handicap which is faced by the service personnel of that part of the country, and which may also be faced by service personnel from other parts. Any man who wants to take vocational training must have passed the eighth grade, and many applications are being rejected on that basis. Vocational training will have to be augmented by providing elementary education to those who are in that position. Otherwise a large percentage of the personnel returning from this war will not be able to take advantage of vocational training. As I say, while this is true of Nova Scotia I assume that it also applies generally across the country. While the regulations may look all right and sound all right from the point of view of the general economy of the country, they are nevertheless very restrictive in that particular area.

Two new departments are being set up. A press release was issued by the wartime information board which led me to believe that the Department of Pensions and National Health was to be abolished completely when the new departments were set up, its functions being taken over by the new departments. The release is headed "Post-war Planning Information", and on page 6 I find this:

> A change in the administration of rehabilitation is also to be made. On April 17, 1944, the Prime Minister introduced in the House of Commons a bill to establish a Department of Veterans' Affairs. The new department will take over all the rehabilitation functions of the Department of Pensions and National Health, and will also take over from the Department of Mines and Resources the administration of the Veterans' Land Act. The other functions of the Department of Pensions and National Health will be taken over by a new Department of Social Welfare.

The statement that the other functions of the Department of Pensions and National Health would be taken over by the new Department of Social Welfare led me to believe that it was the intention to fold up the Department of Pensions and National Health as it now stands, and to pass over to the new Department of Social Welfare all problems of service personnel with respect to pensions, hospitalization and so forth.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): All affairs pertaining to ex-service men will be under the Department of Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. GILLIS: I am very glad to hear that because I got the impression from this release that the whole load of social security legislation was going to be absorbed by the department, which would mean that we would have a repetition of the condition of affairs that we had between the two wars. The release is misleading.

With respect to the two new departments that are to be created, I have in my hand a memorandum from the Amalgamated Civil Servants of Canada protesting against the manner in which appointments are to be made. I have no doubt the minister has seen it and I do not want to take up time by reading it. The organization points out, and I think properly so, that we have established in this country the merit system, whereby through the machinery of the civil service commission important positions of the kind to be created in these new departments are to be filled on the merit system. But bill No. 83, to establish a Department of Veterans' Affairs, definitely sets out that the new department may be staffed "notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act".

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It is word for word as it is in the present act and has been since 1928.

Mr. GILLIS: Maybe that is why the Civil Service Act is not working so well. I agree with this protest. I believe myself in filling important positions of this kind by examination, and without any regard to patronage, favouritism or anything of that sort. The right man for the job is the man who is qualified for the job, and in setting up the new department the minister should have due regard to that principle.

I am a little bit fearful of this attitude that is developing in Canada that when the war is over everything belongs exclusively to the ex-service men. I think that is the wrong attitude to cultivate because the problems of the ex-service men are definitely wrapped up with the whole future of this dominion. We should have a programme for their complete rehabilitation, with every one of them having the right to work and make his maximum contribution to the welfare of the country. It is wrong to build up in the minds of the men the idea that when they come back they are to be adopted and given everything in the country, without making any contribution themselves. I think that in setting up the new departments the terms of the Civil Service Act should be adhered to rigidly, including that provision in the act which gives certain preferences to returned service personnel, other things being equal.

I wish to support what the hon. member for Melfort has said with respect to the five new health centres that are to be established in Canada, three of them in Ontario. Of course, there are a lot of votes in Ontario. Another health centre is to be established in Quebec. But the maritime provinces are left completely out of the picture, as are the two central western provinces. I wrote the minister some two months ago that I had seen the announcement of the establishment of these health centres and that none was provided for the maritimes, and the minister wrote me that he would check up on the announcement since it definitely looked like discrimination. Our people in that part of the country are much concerned over it. These health centres are to be, I understand, something in the nature of convalescent homes. Well, Mr. Chairman, as you know, we have a large number from the maritimes in this war too; some of them are now fighting in Italy, and some are likely to get hurt and will require hospitalization when they get back. I think it would be a nice thing if we had somewhere in the centre of the maritime provinces one of these convalescent or vocational homes where our people could go and visit those who were obliged to recuperate in these homes during their period of incapacity. I should like the minister to comment on that suggestion when he makes his reply because it does look definitely like discrimination. I can recommend a very nice spot in Nova Scotia for that kind of health centre. It is not in my riding, but it is close to where the hon. member for Colchester-Hants comes from. Some time when the minister gets down to establishing a health centre in the maritimes he might consult the hon. member for Colchester-Hants and myself.

As to the assessment for pensions, I agree with what other hon. members have said. The present system is anything but fair and just. It may be that the machinery is not adequate or complete. I know the Department of Pensions and National Health is understaffed to handle the problems coming before it to-day, and I appealed to the Minister of National Defence when his estimates were up to allow some of the medical boards that are now around the district depots to help the Department of Pensions and National Health.

I should like to mention, without giving the name or number, one outstanding case. This man served eighteen months overseas. He was invalided home as medically unfit. He had a medical board, which diagnosed his trouble as duodenal ulcer, and the decision of the commission was, "Pre-enlistment condition. Wilfully concealed on enlistment. Aggravated three-fifths in a theatre of actual war overseas. Pensioned accordingly." I cannot understand how the board could arrive at that decision. If this man had that stomach condition when he enlisted, how could he conceal it, and why should he wish to conceal it? If he had that condition on enlistment, how could he serve with it for eighteen months overseas? The training is hard and tough and the food requires a fairly good stomach to digest it. But after serving for eighteen months overseas this man was invalided back to Canada and the medical board decided that he had concealed the ulcer on enlistment.

That kind of administration of the act in times like these leaves much to be desired. There are a good many decisions of that sort. This definition of disability not attributable to military service is causing a lot of difficulty. A man comes back from overseas, as this man did, with a disability which, it is decided, is not attributable to service; and it seems to me that some men take the attitude that unless a German has sneaked up on you, stuck a bayonet in you and you have a big hole to show for it, your disability is not incurred on service. I hope that as the machinery is developed and the administration becomes more experienced and more men come back from overseas who have actually seen service, there will be a fairer administration of the whole thing.

There is another matter which I bring to the minister's attention because I think it important, although I am not going to labour it. I picked up an article in the Magazine Digest of March, 1944, written by Paul Winterton, Moscow correspondent of the London News Chronicle, setting out the facts concerning a new serum developed by Soviet scientists which, according to the article—perhaps the minister has seen it—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes.

Mr. GILLIS: —is a guaranteed cure for neuritis, arthritis and similar conditions. These disabilities are very prevalent among ex-service and service personnel. In the wet climate of the old country, and particularly as a result of standing in trenches, there is quite a lot of it. I took the trouble to get in touch with the Soviet embassy at Ottawa and to write to their representative in New York, and I have information to the effect that this serum may possibly be made available in Canada. Go to your pensions and national health hospitals across Canada and see what a large number of veterans of the last war are suffering from, and many of them tangled up and crippled by, this disability. I bring the matter to the minister's attention, although he is aware of it, in the hope that there may be some contact between the Canadian and the Soviet government with the result of making this serum available in Canada in the interests of service personnel returning from this war and veterans of the last war who have suffered and are suffering from this condition.

As to the unemployment insurance contribution which is made by the government, we were led to believe that the government paid the total contribution and that when a service man came out of the army, navy or air force, and took employment in an insured industry, he was protected from the day his employment began. The minister will remember that at the last session I brought to his attention several cases which arose in Waterford, Nova Scotia. A number of service men were released to go into the coal mines, but because of a disaster there a number of them were immediately unemployed, and when they applied for unemployment insurance they found they were not eligible because it was required that they should be employed for ninety days in an insurable industry and have made a contribution themselves, or they did not come under the scope of the act. The minister was astonished at these circumstances, as was also the Minister of Labour; they did not know the regulation operated in that way, and both of them stated at that time that they were going to check up on the matter and perhaps have some changes made. I think a change should be made. That was, perhaps, an isolated and outstanding case which might not happen again; nevertheless numbers of men are leaving the army to-day and taking employment. They may work in an aircraft plant, and after a short time there is a lay-off for re-tooling of the industry, with the result that they are out for a month or six weeks looking for a job, and they do not come under the scope of the act. Men are also handicapped by other regulations. They start looking for out-of-work benefits, and we immediately see a runaround which takes months to straighten out. I believe the quickest and fairest way of curing this situation is to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act so that these cases will be within its scope, because if the government is to make a contribution at all it should be 100 per cent. To place men in the position I have referred to is absolutely unfair, and the effects will be even worse when the war is over, because a lot of industry will be on the change and shift. Representation should be made by the pensions department to the authorities responsible for administering unemployment insurance to have this regulation changed so as to protect, from this time on, those coming out of the army.

Mr. HATFIELD: The minister has stated that hearing aids will be available to men returning from the present war. I should like to know if the same aids are available to returned men of the last war, and under what conditions.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Under the same conditions, I understand.

Mr. HATFIELD: To whom should application be made?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): To the nearest branch of the Department of Pensions and National Health.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I agree with all that other hon. members have said about the insurance principle in connection with pensions. I do not think I need to say any more on that. But I do wish to say something about another feature of this matter. It is disheartening when a young man comes back from overseas incapacitated and after examination is told that he had a pre-enlistment disability which was wilfully concealed. It is hard on these young fellows. We know that probably some of them did their best to conceal some disabilities when they first went overseas. They thought it was their duty and those little disabilities were nothing and would not amount to anything. After all, they had a medical examination and it was up to the medical doctors who examined them at that time to find out what was wrong. I agree with hon. members who have said that when a man enlisted his condition should be assumed to be what was shown on his papers, and not something else. That is the basis on which a pension should be granted. We must remember that there are others in different circumstances. I know two or three cases of what we might call congenital disabilities. I know one man who was examined by a reputable doctor. They tried to show that he did not have this, but he did have it, that is all. They finally found out that he had a congenital disability. He did his job for the country, and that is all there is to it. He certainly is entitled to his pension. I mention that just in passing.

For years we have been trying to better the position of the war widows. The hon. minister knows on many occasions we tried to get justice for those people, and I am glad to see that at last they are to have a little justice.

Another thing that I want to take up is the question of rehabilitation, particularly of the men who come back from the war and go into Christie street hospital. One of those lads asked to see the head of the rehabilitation, Mr. Kidd. There were not so many of the fellows around there that he could not see this young lad, but he sent someone else. That is not the way in which these young lads should be treated. They should be treated in a more diplomatic way; and from what I gathered when I was at Christie street hospital the other day, things are not right in connection with the situation there. Everything should be done to satisfy these men. Everything should be done to see that they get back into their jobs. One thing that did not please them was the allowance of $42.20. That has now been raised to $65 for a single man. That is a help. The $62.40 has now been raised to $80. That will help a good deal as well. But take the case of the young lad who gave up high school to go into the army. He has been in the army for four and a half years, and is now back in the city and he wants to know what he is to do. The officials do not go about this matter in the right way. Everything possible should be done to treat these men like human beings. They should not be ordered around like a lot of kids, or something of that kind. Certainly the way in which it is being done there at the present time is not right.

The men who are in the hospital waiting for discharge and rehabilitation had the feeling of "Oh, well, what is the use?" Something has to be done about the matter. Some more care has to be taken in connection with it. I do not want to go into it ad nauseam, but one of those fellows told me if he had not been wearing the uniform he would not have taken what was handed out to him by a man who was supposed to have the interests of the boys at heart. That is the situation. More care must be taken in the selection of men who are to be on this rehabilitation committee. Things are not right despite all the publicity given to the rehabilitation committee. All this talk about what they are doing is just bunk. It has to be changed.

Another matter is the question of men going back into employment. The law says that they are to go back to a position which is no worse than the one they would have had if they had not gone to war. What is the result? They are not getting justice. I do not know whether this matter comes under the minister's department or some other department, but I am bringing it up now to see that something is done about it.

[Mr. Douglas G. Ross.]

The next thing I should like to mention is the Christie street hospital. It was said here by the hon. member for Trinity and the hon. member for Parry Sound that nothing had been done about it in all these years. When the building was first purchased it was the best thing that could be done at that time. I certainly think that is all there was to it. Casualties were coming in and something had to be done. But there is no excuse for having kept the hospital all those years and not doing something about it. We were not in a war at that time and I suppose it was thought that some other change would be made. Anyway, the hospital is not suitable for the purpose for which it is used. I do not know what arrangements the government have made for the casualties which will be coming back. On November 11 last we were invited to go out to Sunnybrook farm. We thought that at last that something was going to be done. We were very much heartened. We had a big gathering out there. Everybody had invitations. We had bands, and so forth. There we were out at Sunnybrook farm, a great gathering and very cheery. I remember quite well—

An hon. MEMBER: Any liquor?

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Oh, there is that desk-thumper again. I remember quite well how everybody was heartened when the minister was handed a lovely silver spade with his name engraved on it. I thought, by golly, how I should like to be right in his position, starting in to dig that foundation. Really, what we should have had instead of the minister up there digging—he did the best he could with his ability and with his little spade —was some darned good steam shovels. That is what we should have had. What the people of Toronto and of this country want is action. It is all very well to have those ceremonies and speeches from the throne and all the window-dressing all the way down the line, references to the millions and millions of things to be done, but action is what is wanted. We want to know what is to be done and how these young fellows are to be taken care of. The hospitals in Toronto are crowded to-day. The General hospital has a waiting list of something like four hundred. The Western hospital has a waiting list of something like 250. All the other hospitals are in the same position. You cannot get into one unless you are nearly dying. Something must be done. We do not want just promises; we want action.

Christie street hospital is not the place to take care of these men. I know a lot of work has been done on it, and it has been improved to a certain extent, but there is not going to be room there even for these fellows, and the condition under which these boys have to be treated is just too bad. Something must be done about it.

Then I should like to say a word about soldiers who are on leave. It has been said that when a soldier is on leave he is on his own, but we must remember that if that soldier gets run over or hurt in any way he has no way of taking care of himself. We have no social security in this country for him; he is not able to take out accident insurance, because the companies will not issue such policies to men in the forces and that is all there is to it. A soldier is just as much in the forces when he is away on leave as when he is in camp. It is part of his job to go away on leave, to get rested up again and rehabilitate himself. Therefore it seems to me that he is under military discipline all the time he is in the army and that it is up to the country to take care of him.

I cannot usefully add anything at the present time, but later on I may have something else to say. I do, however, want that hospital started. We do not want to go up there again next November and have the minister take out another piece of sod. It will take a good many million years to build the hospital if we are to have i done a spadeful a year; and we do not want promises.

Mr. POULIOT: First may I say that the minister of this department is one of the most likeable of the hon. gentlemen who adorn the treasury benches; I hope he will not put me under the painful necessity of withdrawing that remark. This is said to be the pensions branch of the Department of Pensions and National Health. It should not be so; it should be called "veterans' affairs." We have before us now a bill to divide this department in two, to make twins of it, and this item should be under the pompous name of the new department. In the new order there will be no pensions; there will be veterans' affairs, and these estimates should be designated accordingly.

This item is for an amount of $9,000,000, as compared with $4,225,000 last year. It does not take into consideration pensions paid to veterans of the last war, which should be under this item. There is no possible reason for putting pensions paid to veterans of the first world war among the civilian estimates, while these pensions come under the war appropriation. All military pensions should be considered in the same way; the only difference between the last war and this one is that the veterans of the last war got pensions while the veterans of this war are getting none. They are getting allowances. I denounce most bitterly and with the greatest vigour the actions of the pensions board who always deny the claims of returned men for pensions. The minister said to me, "We will change the law, if under the law as it stands it is impossible to grant a pension to a man." I say that is not necessary, that we need only apply the law according to its letter and spirit in order that the men may receive the pensions to which they are entitled. During the last war many promises were made by the union government. Men who enlisted were told that they would receive, in the form of pensions, compensation for disabilities suffered during or resulting from their service. The life of a man in the army, the air force or the navy is most exacting. Very often a man is classified, on discharge, as absolutely fit, when actually he is not, when he may have a predisposition to a certain illness or disability resulting from the fact that he has lived a most strenuous life during the years of war. That should be taken into consideration. Many men think they are fit when they leave the army when in fact they are not; it is not until five or ten years after their discharge that they suffer a disabiltiy which perhaps they never would have suffered at all, or would not have suffered until much later, if they had not served in the army. That has to be taken into consideration. It has been my experience that many men who were qualified for pensions never received them because they were told they had applied too late. That is not a good reason.

There is another matter I should like to bring to the kind attention of the minister. Take the case of a young man in the army. He is exposed to cold weather; he contracts a cold which is not properly looked after; it degenerates into bronchitis; his lungs are affected, and he puts in a claim for a pension. The first answer he receives is, "Your illness is not attributable to your military service." Then he is told that he has the right to appeal from this decision, and that he may get in touch with a certain gentleman, a lawyer appointed to look after the interests of the soldiers. He does so, but still he is not successful. There was an orgy of pensions after the last war, and I wonder why the boards should be so stingy now in allowing pensions to men who deserve them. And, worse than that, it is within my knowledge that men have been told, "Resign from the army, and you will go home." Take the young man who is at camp, under doctors who are not under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Pensions and National Health. Some of them are only blacksmiths; some are men who are the scum of the learned faculty, men who would have no clients if they were in civil life. These men look after the soldiers, and most improperly so. And they tell the soldiers, "Resign from the army; abandon your right to a pension, and you will go home." Naturally the boys are anxious to go home, and some of them sign. But is it fair?

The idea of the doctors who make such suggestions is that they are saving money for the country—saving money for the country at the expense of the poor soldiers who have a right to pensions, and who are deprived of them either because these men are too incompetent to look after the soldiers, or because they want to make a pedestal for themselves with the amounts of money which are not paid to those who have a right to it. This is a shame, Mr. Chairman; no officer, whether of the Department of National Defence or of the Department of Pensions and National Health—and I speak mostly now of the Department of National Defence—is qualified to hold a commission when he speaks like that to anyone in the rank and file, any non-commissioned officer or any officer. That is my point of view, and I am sure that it is also the point of view of the members of the committee.

Here is an amount of $9,000,000, a big sum—although it does not seem so considerable now, because we are spending billions of dollars. But it is a sum of money which must be paid to help men who suffer from disabilities incurred in the services, or resulting from their service whether in Canada or overseas.

The minister will support me when I say that if these men do not always receive pensions they are awarded allowances. I will tell him that in many cases I have looked into he has seen to it that some men who had been dealt with unfairly by the board of pension commissioners, and even by the appeal board, were given allowances. He understands those problems, and he is entitled to full credit for what he has done. But there is a difference between an allowance and a pension. A pension is something which is supposed to last much longer than a temporary allowance. Then, too, it is given on different grounds. It is not an act of charity toward a soldier, but is rather an indication of a debt by the state to a man. On the other hand, an allowance is supposed to be a gratuity. It is given in good spirit, and helps along, but it is not the same as a pension. A man has no legal claim to an allowance. It is something granted according to pleasure.

I give credit to the minister for what he has done. I give credit, too, to Major Ferland of Quebec city, who is doing good work. Just to show what is happening in some instances I shall mention a case of a non-commissioned officer who holds a most coveted decoration, the Victoria Cross, and who is now in Christie street hospital, in Toronto. I am not sure of the facts, but I mention them in order that the minister may have an opportunity to ascertain what the real facts are. This man is sick, and receives an allowance of $40 a month. Out of that he is supposed to pay to the hospital for his board $30 a month, leaving him $10 for pocket money. He receives a gratuity in connection with his Victoria Cross, of £10, or $40 or $50. But that amount is supposedly subtracted from the $10 he receives each month, or $120 a year. Is this reasonable? If these facts are true, then it is shameful to find that a man who has exposed his life and who has been decorated by the King himself, does not receive in full the amount of £10 sterling which goes with this decoration.

I do not state these facts positively, but I want the minister to get full information. I shall not mention the name of the gentleman, but I am ready to give the name to the minister in private at any time he wishes. It will be easy for him to find out if these are the facts. If they are, then it is pitiful. There should be a complete reorganization of the staff of the Department of Pensions and National Health, from the deputy minister down.

As it is now, it is impossible for men in the army to get any satisfaction from the board of pension commissioners, the first board before which they appear, or from the appeal board. If we had one-half or even one-quarter of that staff, and if the money paid in salaries to nonentities were given to the men who suffer because they are not given what they are entitled to by the state, or who are not given what is owed to them by the state, there would be much more satisfaction among the veterans.

They are a cheerful lot; they are not complaining. They have been exposed to all the dangers; they have been exposed to death. Even if a man asks for nothing he is entitled to the gratitude of his fellow citizens; and that recognition must come from the state. It is not a question of playing politics, it is a question of this being the time to look after the welfare of the underdog, of those who are not permitted to lodge complaint with their members of parliament.

It is a shame that members of the armed forces, whether wounded or disabled, are denied the opportunity of other electors to get in touch with their members of parliament to lodge any grievances or complaints they may have. May I remind you, sir, that the right to petition belongs not only to civilians but to men in the army as well. If they have the right to petition parliament, they should have a right to get in touch with their members who are the link between themselves and the government and whose duty it is to do all in their power to have wrongs redressed and grievances ironed out.

To conclude, may I say in the most friendly spirit that the minister should think of the men who have suffered injustices from those in his department who sit in comfortable chairs. He should arm himself with a broom and clear out of his department all the bureaucrats who have shown that they are far from friendly to the returned men and those who have suffered disabilities while in service.

Mr. BRUCE: Mr. Chairman, I make no apology for speaking at this time upon a matter which is causing such devastation, not only in our armed forces but in the civilian population. I refer to venereal diseases. A few weeks ago two young naval ratings under nineteen years of age complained to me in Toronto that when they were returning to their quarters at the exhibition grounds at night they were accosted by women hanging around the Prince's gate. Only to-day a young airman who had recently spent a couple of days in my home town told me that only three-quarters of an hour after he had reached his hotel room he was called up three times by women whom he did not know to see whether they could come up to his room. This situation is sufficiently serious to justify some consideration at this time. There is a lack of proper control, especially in the larger hotels, over the activities of professionals and, even worse, of amateurs. This has become nothing less than a scandal.

May I refer to an article which appeared in Maclean's magazine of February 15, 1944, written by Mr. Blair Fraser. In it he speaks of venereal disease as saboteur No. 1. Hon. members will remember the illustration that appeared at the top of his article. Among other things, he says:

> Lieutenant-Colonel Donald H. Williams, who for the past year has been chief venereal disease control officer for Canada, estimates that possibly 300,000 Canadians have syphilis and that 10 per cent, or 30,000 of these will die of it.
> In the services, of course, the statistics are precise, although the 35,000 total quoted is a computed figure. In spite of numerous requests no recent figures on VD incidence had been published when this article was written.

The figures he gave for the air force show 2·1 new cases per 1,000 per month. In the army there were 4 new cases per 1,000 per month and in the navy 5·29 new cases. Multiplying those monthly rates by twelve we get an incidence per 1,000 of 25·2 in the air force, 48 in the army and 63·4 in the navy. I am glad to be able to say that the army established a department of venereal disease control a little over a year ago and appointed Colonel D. H. Williams as director. He has associated with him liaison officers for the air and navy. His work now extends across Canada. It is interesting to note that Colonel Williams has recently been appointed adviser for the British government on venereal disease control for the Anglo-American Caribbean commission, which will take him to Jamaica and other islands in the Caribbean sea.

The control which the army and air force have now put into effect has resulted in a great reduction in the incidence of venereal disease. Our aim now should be the mobilization of the civilian population in a venereal disease control programme. There should be blood tests made in industry as well as before marriage. In order to give something of a comprehensive and brief account of the situation with regard to this disease, I am first going to the western coast, to British Columbia, where the first and best work on the control of venereal diseases has been done. I am sure the minister will be interested to know this, although he probably knows it already.

In the Pacific command where a good civilian programme of venereal disease control has been in force over a period of years, the venereal disease rate in the Canadian army forces stationed in that area has since the beginning of the war been consistently in the neighbourhood of one-half of that for the rest of Canada, and one-quarter of what it is in certain sections of the country. In a review of the whole situation certain factors emerge which indicate why British Columbia has led the field in venereal disease control, factors which may serve as a pattern for control in other parts of Canada. Briefly they are as follows:

1. British Columbia has provided modern facilities for the diagnosis and treatment of venereal disease. The clinics have been made attractive in order to encourage attendance, and courteous service is rendered at all times. A social service department is maintained, not only to trace contacts but to assist patients in making satisfactory adjustments. A comprehensive record system is another feature, without which a venereal disease control clinic cannot trace its contacts and cannot measure the success of its efforts.

2. There is in British Columbia a relatively high standard of living reinforced by progressive social service measures. I wish strongly to emphasize the fact that the fight against venereal disease is a fight against squalor, slums, overcrowding, bad housing, hunger, neglect and insecurity.

Mr. DUPUIS: Caused by low wages.

Mr. BRUCE: Yes, I have no doubt that is quite true, and I hope it will not exist after the war.

Mr. DUPUIS: And some of it comes from Toronto.

Mr. BRUCE: 3. It is quite clear that the public health authorities in British Columbia recognized that the education of the public was vitally necessary if the programme were to be successful. A separate department was established for the purpose; the hush-hush attitude toward venereal disease was dispelled and the facts were made known.

4. With an enlightened public there was community support of the different methods employed to control venereal disease, particularly in regard to law enforcement. It must be remembered, however, that while venereal disease is a problem of national concern the conditions which facilitate its spread are essentially local, and in the main local action is necessary to meet these conditions. I am informed that the Greater Vancouver Health League, the Vancouver Junior Board of Trade and the Vancouver Council of Social Agencies were and are continuing to be of great assistance to venereal disease control authorities in British Columbia. Might I urge that similar voluntary groups throughout Canada be encouraged to participate in a national programme.

5. One cannot examine the British Columbia programme without realizing the importance of effective law enforcement in controlling venereal disease. In this regard the salient features were as follows. British Columbia did not make the mistake of directing action solely against the prostitutes when tackling the problem of prostitution. It was realized that the girls are simply the employees of unscrupulous third-party interests who are the "facilitators"—those who derive profit from the business but are seldom brought into court. Among these are the "madames", the racketeers and the owners and agents of the bawdy houses. If prostitution in Canada is to be brought to a minimum, with a subsequent reduction in venereal disease, the police authorities must concentrate their efforts on bringing these various facilitators to justice.

I next wish to call attention to the necessity of enlightened attitude of magistrates. The futility of imposing small fines for prostitution offences was also realized in British Columbia. Such a practice is no deterrent to a repetition of the offence, and a civic administration simply places itself in the invidious position of deriving revenue from immoral behaviour. The realistic attitude is to impose gaol sentences for prostitution offences, so that it may be demonstrated that the community will not tolerate the activities of those individuals who are spreading venereal infection.

To amplify this further I would say that a vicious habit has been growing in Canada in cases where prostitutes are brought before the courts, of magistrates giving them a fine, instead of giving a gaol sentence for the third party. The result of this is to force girls back on the street to earn enough to pay the fine, while nothing is done to punish the people who live on them.

In British Columbia it was shown that certain hotels and rooming houses were making their premises available for sexual exposure resulting in venereal infection. It was also demonstrated that infected pick-ups made a practice of congregating at certain beer parlours, restaurants and dance halls. Other similar establishments had no such record against them, so that it was obviously a question of management. Many businesses responded to the appeal of health authorities to clean up, but for those that failed to cooperate more vigorous measures were necessary.

In British Columbia it was necessary to recommend that the licences of certain business establishments be suspended or cancelled, since they failed to cooperate with the venereal disease control programme.

I should just like to say here that the credit for all this work in British Columbia is due to Colonel Williams, who is now in charge of the national control of venereal disease.

I wrote to a number of the provincial ministers of health and I should like to quote two or three paragraphs from the replies I received from them. First I will read a portion of the reply from Mr. Cross, Minister of Health of Alberta. I wrote him to see what the situation was in his province, as I did to provincial ministers of health in the other provinces. Mr. Cross says:

> The grant made last year by the federal government has been of real value to us. It has enabled us to engage additional epidemiological personnel and our staff last year located and brought under control 73 per cent of all alleged sources of infection in this province. This is the top figure for Canada and I believe is unexcelled on the American continent.
> It is possible to control the venereal diseases, but it requires money to pay for the necessary personnel and it requires provincial, local and municipal police forces which can and will eliminate prostitution.
> The figures for syphilis in the gaols in Alberta are interesting. An examination for venereal disease, which includes the blood Wassermann test, has been made on every admission to our gaols since January, 1920. For the year 1920 the syphilis rate for the gaols was 16 per cent. There has been a steady reduction over the years to a present low of less than 3 per cent. We believe that there has been a corresponding reduction in the population as a whole. The syphilis rate in the gaols is very high because many infected prostitutes are sent there.

From Winnipeg the minister of health of Manitoba writes in part:

Under the present arrangements in Manitoba any individual who cannot afford to pay can receive free treatment for both syphilis and gonorrhoea. In the case of persons residing in the Greater Winnipeg area, such treatment is supplied through a clinic at the St. Boniface General hospital which is subsidized by the department. In the case of persons residing outside of the Greater Winnipeg area we pay the family doctor for treatment given and this under the supervision of our venereal disease control officer.

We believe that all syphilis cases are reported. In Manitoba, all laboratory examinations are done at our own laboratory, and in this way, we have a complete record of positive Wassermanns.

Then he gives details which I do not think I will take time to read.

I have had a reply from Doctor R. P. Vivian, Minister of Health of Ontario, and I wish to read just a few facts which I think are striking:

There have been reported to the department, since the onset of war, more than fifty thousand cases of venereal disease.

In the past seven years, 1937 to 1943 inclusive, a total of almost seventy thousand venereal infections have been reported. More than half of these have been the more serious disease, syphilis, which, if neglected, will continue, in the coming years, to fill hospital beds, mental institutions, and early graves. More important than even this total number of infections is the fact that with every year of the war there has been an increase in the number of cases reported. There were over one thousand more venereal infections reported in Ontario during 1943 than in 1942, making the enormous total of more than 13 thousand in 1943 alone. Some 7 thousand of these were cases of syphilis, and more than half of these were new cases, freshly acquired since the outbreak of war. The most serious fact is that among these 7 thousand people were almost 5 hundred who showed evidence of serious damage to the brain and nervous system.

The importance of this will be recognized when I tell you that, for the past fifteen years, one out of every eighteen persons admitted to our mental hospitals has been a patient with a scarred and riddled brain due to syphilitic infection. But it is not merely adults who have suffered. These figures include a number of tragic cases of little children, born with syphilis, acquired from their infected mothers.

These official figures tell only a small part of the story of this gigantic health problem. From a study of the departmental records, there is ample reason to believe that for every reported case of syphilitic infection there are at least two more people in the Ontario population who have syphilis, which has not been reported, many of whom do not even know that they are infected. For every reported case of gonorrhoeal infection, it is believed that as many as four or five other people have this disease. These cases have not been reported, probably have not been diagnosed, and the treatment has been neglected.

Hon. members will see at once how very serious it is to have people with that disease going about among the population.

The excessive amount of venereal disease in Ontario can perhaps be more clearly visualized when I tell you that in Sweden, in 1938, the percentage of syphilis was fourteen persons in every 100,000 population. In Norway, between the years 1933 and 1939, there were twenty-four people afflicted out of every 100,000. In Ontario, in 1943, there was the staggering total of 175 persons with syphilis per 100,000 population.

That is 12·5 times as many as Sweden and seven times as many as Norway. A new Ontario venereal disease control is being planned with seven important objectives, which I will not take time to give. I should like just to refer to an item published in the Montreal Gazette of February 23 last, which reports as follows:

Blood tests performed on women found in local rooming houses during last week-end's wholesale raids by provincial police resulted in no less than 33 per cent being declared diseased, it was revealed in police court yesterday.

Of the eighty-four cases for trial, twenty-six were found suffering from venereal diseases, while twelve of the forty were returned to gaol pending complete cure. Thirty-three per cent showed the blood test for syphilis. That indicates how serious it is to allow these women to be at large. May I express the hope that the provincial police of Ontario as well as the city police of Toronto will follow this splendid example in Quebec and do something about the closing of bawdy houses and dealing more actively with this great menace.

I think I have said enough to indicate the gravity of this disease, so that I will pass on to something else for a moment. The hon. member for Melfort to-day made reference to the necessity of having convalescent homes throughout Canada, and I want to support his opinion and to say that I think a large number of these convalescent homes should be built. They need not be large, and a number of them could be located in small communities, where the veteran might be near his home. We have an example in Toronto of a charming convalescent home, given by a citizen, Colonel Flanagan, called the Divadale Convalescent home, which was donated to the air force, and where Squadron Leader Doctor Harvey Doney has made a great success of the care of convalescents in the air force.

I do not think it is necessary for me to add anything to what has already been said about Christie street hospital. I am afraid that the minister has become allergic to the name. At any rate I suggest that some time later he should give a statement telling the committee and the country what progress is being made with the new institution at Sunnybrook Park. I understand that the plans are well forward. We shall all be interested to hear whether contracts have yet been let, and, if not, when they will be let, and when, it is hoped, the structure will be completed.

I should like to pay a tribute to Miss Judith Robinson, who, in addition to the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough and the hon. member for St. Paul's, has done such admirable work in calling attention, in her paper News, to the serious situation at Christie street hospital.

Mr. GAUTHIER (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I have listened carefully to the remarks of the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Bruce) in regard to venereal diseases. The statistics which he has quoted are more or less encouraging for the people and for those who look after their social and moral welfare. This should convince those who believe that the medical profession may still help our people that physicians, whether they be members of the board of the pensions commission or members of the Department of Health, should use utmost care in the examination of men returning to civilian life, whether they were overseas or whether they were simply called up for home defence, if there are still some of the latter. Indeed, soldiers returning to their positions in civilian life should undergo a most thorough examination. There should be no exceptions. Not a single man so unfortunate as to contract what is called for short V.D. should be allowed to return to civilian life before he has been cured and before his cure has been definitely ascertained by frequent and thorough examination.

However, if I rise to-night it is not especially to stress this point. I realize that the alarm has reached the whole population through the repeated warnings of the hon. member for Parkdale, who, being a physician, knows what he is talking about in the field of medical science. I wish to deal more particularly with a case which recurs and must doubtless do so every time men come back from overseas after having witnessed bombings such as the city of London has undergone in the first years of the war. This man arrives from overseas suffering from a trouble classified as "shellshock". A man enlists voluntarily or is compelled to enlist voluntarily, as you prefer, it all depends on the circumstances. He is sent overseas and becomes a victim of "shell-shock"; he was in class "A" or even "B", before leaving the country. He comes back suffering from severe nervous shock which practically makes a physical wreck of him. He returns walking with two canes and he may allow himself to be influenced by arguments such as were referred to by the hon. member for Temiscouata, a while ago. Certain medical officers or other army officials will advise him to sign his discharge papers immediately, so as to return more rapidly to his civilian occupation. If he accepts, he is then classified as a case of "preexistent neurosis." Two years ago, when I was in the army, I had a conversation with a prominent army medical man who told me that a ruling had been made whereby shellshock cases would, in this war, be classified as "preexistent". The expression "preexistent neurosis" is a high-sounding one which means that those who return to this country with that complaint will have no chance to obtain a pension.

Some cases have been brought to my attention; for instance, a soldier, father of seven children, who had volunteered in the very first year of the war and had spent twelve months in England under the worst bombings. He was serving with an ambulance and each night he had to leave his camp in the ambulance with the medical officers to attend the wounded under a rain of bombs. On his return here twelve months later he was a physical wreck. It was suggested to him, as the hon. member said a few moments ago, that he would stand a better chance of obtaining a pension if he signed at once, and that his case would be looked after more expeditiously. That is just one case, and I know that there are many. There are some which date from the last war and in this war such cases will of course be more numerous. That man had been put in category "A" and his neuropathic history cannot suggest to any army medical officer that his neurotic condition existed prior to his enlistment. I have personal knowledge of that case.

That man who, on his return, could only walk with two canes, spent three months in hospital, applied for examinations, claimed a pension, and was referred to various officials. When I interceded on his behalf, I was told that it was a case of "preexistent neurosis". If that man had a neurotic condition prior to his enlistment how is it that the medical officers who examined him, who no doubt asked him questions and put him through a careful examination, put him in category "A". How could he be classed in that category if he was suffering from neurosis? His medical history does not indicate that he ever had any nervous complaint. He had, however, suffered from infection due to the poor condition of his teeth, which had made him nervous for a few weeks but it was not essential neurosis and it could not be pre-existent. After that man had withstood bombings during twelve months he was tagged as suffering from preexistent neurosis. If that condition existed prior to his enlistment, how is it that he was put in category "A" and sent overseas? No conscientious physician with a sufficient knowledge of medicine could have put that man in category "A" if he had suffered from neurosis and sent him to withstand bombings. I am not indulging in any bitter criticism, I am simply putting some facts before this house in order that the minister may take action, if a ruling has been made, without his knowledge, by army medical officers to the effect that a man who returns to this country suffering from a severe nervous breakdown must inevitably be considered as having a preexistent neurotic condition. It is preferable to have at each examination on demobilization a flock of specialists in nervous diseases in order carefully to look into his past life and into his family history, and to ascertain whether the mere burst of a shell may have reawakened a neuropathic condition which could not be detected by three physicians at the time of his enlistment.

Therefore, I ask the department of health, and the minister in particular, to see to it that soldiers placed in category "A", whose medical history does not reveal any serious nervous trouble, but who afterwards become shell shock cases, receive the undivided attention of the medical examiners, and the solicitude of the Department of Pensions and National Health and of the Department of National Defence, and especially the latter, so that these ex-service men, who have done their duty, who have endured their share of sacrifices to defend our liberty, and who have deemed it their duty to volunteer for overseas service, may not find upon their return that the words uttered the other day in England by our Prime Minister were nothing else but words.

The Prime Minister stated, in his speech delivered in England only a few days ago:

> We owe it to all who bear the heat of the strife; we owe it to those who are crippled and maimed. . . .

Neurosis is a crippling affection, for even though nervous symptoms are not ever present, the man who suffers from a severe nervous shock, in spite of apparent momentary temporary recovery, is always dangerous. If he works in a factory where accidents are numerous, he becomes a menace to his fellow workers for, on the impact of a sudden emotion or shock he may relapse into this severe neurotic state and provoke accidents among his companions.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): It is incurable?

Mr. GAUTHIER (Translation): I would not say it is. I know that some cases are incurable, but they are not all incurable.

> . . . we owe it to those who are crippled and maimed; we owe it to the many homes that are bereaved; we owe it to the memory of those who give their lives; to do all in our power to ensure that their service and their sacrifice shall not have been in vain.

This man who has enlisted after having been placed in category "A"; who has undergone bombings; who has been exposed to torpedoing in his trips across the ocean; who returns to this country with a promise on the part of the government that his rehabilitation will be taken care of, so he may himself look after his family, knows perfectly well that he will not be in a position to care for his dependents in the same way as before. Although he does not wish for riches, he expects a certain share of the necessities of life. If he suffers from a severe nervous breakdown, with ups and downs, he will not be able to procure the same standards of living for his family. He will be sorely disappointed and cruelly deceived, especially when he is refused a pension.

> In the past, the sacrifice of human life in war has been commemorated in monuments of stone or bronze. After this war we must create a more fitting memorial. That, I believe, will be found only in securing for others the opportunities of a more abundant life.

The returned soldier does not even expect that much; all he wants is to be looked after and decently treated. If, in the past, he has never had any nervous complaints, let us not, after he has been subjected to repeated bombings, tag him as suffering from a neurosis existing before he was placed in category "A" by the army medical officers.

Mr. ADAMSON: During the last few days a book has been published entitled, "When the Boys Come Home", written by Mr. C. N. Senior, one of the senior departmental officials of the ministry. The first paragraph of the chapter on hospitals and medical care contains the information that when the present war broke out no fewer than 2,300 members of the armed forces of the last war were receiving medical care in departmental hospitals. Many of these, of course, were temporary cases, but a number had been receiving hospital treatment continuously during the intervening years. The salient point about it is that at that time, twenty odd years after the end of hostilities in the last war, no fewer than 2,300 ex-service men were undergoing hospitalization.

That gives us a guide to what we may expect in future, and points to the seriousness of the situation we are facing. At the beginning of the war the department had 2,595 beds available; at the end of December, 1943, some 4,108 had been added, making a total of 6,703. I mention these figures because I consider the accommodation totally inadequate to meet the casualty lists we must expect, unfortunately, in attacking the fortress of Europe. If the raid on Dieppe is any indication at all, the hospitalization already provided by the department is totally inadequate. Please God that Dieppe may not be an indication, but it has happened and we must be prepared for eventualities.

I am not going into the question of Christie street hospital, but anyone familiar with the conditions that have existed for the last twenty years in connection with the care of permanently incapacitated men cannot feel very proud of his Canadian citizenship. On November 11 last I, together with many others, saw the minister turn the first sod at Sunnybrook with his silver shovel. Months later I saw a picture of the area with the rest of the sod still unturned, with the comment that progress at least had been reported because the divot had not been replaced. We in Toronto have a new name for Sunnybrook; we call it "Frozen Brook" now, because we do not know how long it will be until a real start is made on this vitally important hospital. The minister may and no doubt will say that he is being held up because of priorities. Last year I had the good fortune to visit one of the United States bases in the West Indies taken over under lease-lend; to be exact, Bermuda. There they have built not one but two hospitals. The one I saw had completely equipped operating theatres and the very latest medical and therapeutic instruments; a hospital, to judge by its size, with over a thousand beds. In addition, they built for the naval personnel a hospital of something under a thousand beds. So that I say to the minister there is nothing the Americans, at any rate, consider of greater importance than hospitalization, and I submit that there is nothing we in Canada should consider ahead of the hospitalization of those who are risking their lives for us. In the last week or two I had a further opportunity of seeing a large United States service hospital. I think it is invidious that we in Canada should lag, as we do, behind the United States and other parts of the empire in the care and hospitalization of our wounded.

After the war is over we may expect to have a large number of men who will probably require years of hospitalization, and a few of whom will require permanent treatment. I suggest to the minister that he establish at once hospitals outside the major cities, away from the turmoil of the great industrial centres, to look after these cases. We have in Canada a large number of health resorts. I have in mind in this connection resorts such as Banff, where tremendous and expensive hotels have been built to care for the tired business man in the summer months. These resort hotels have been well patronized, and I understand the value to those who frequent them is great.

I suggest to the minister that some consideration should be given to the creation of convalescent homes and hospitals in places such as Banff, Radium Hot Springs, Harrison Hot Springs, and all these places are in the Rocky mountains, but there are others elsewhere. At the present time Harrison Hot Springs has been taken over by the Department of National Defence. I suggest that these centres should be used for purposes of convalescence and lengthy hospitalization. We must see to it that the man who comes back from this show is adequately hospitalized.

I can remember when, at the time of the last war, Christie street hospital was opened. Men coming home were placed in old Knox college, a depressing building. They were even put in the cellar of that building—one of the most sinister situations, as anyone who was unfortunate enough to go through that institution will tell.

I shall not take the time of the committee to discuss clothing grants, or other matters at this time. I shall wait until other items of his estimates are before us.

I must say, however, that so far, up to the end of 1943, we have increased our hospitalization by only 4,000 beds—and we are now engaged in the greatest military, naval and air struggle of all time. If we have the casualties on the scale we have been warned to expect, this accommodation will be hopelessly inadequate. I know there are future plans; but with the progress—or lack of progress—at "Frozen Brook", let me say that it is very little encouragement to the men in the armed forces to see that merely 4,000 beds have so far been provided. And remember this, that at the beginning of this war we had about 2,500 beds, of which 2,300 were occupied.

That is the situation we face in Canada to-day. Nothing could be more serious, and nothing requires more immediate attention than the hospitalization of those who will suffer through actual combat. I say to the minister in all humility: for heaven's sake get on with the completion of, or at least start, Sunnybrook, so that we will know there is to be a real hospital on that site.

Mr. McCANN: When the hon. member for Parkdale took part in the debate he gave some interesting and, I am sure, accurate statistics with respect to venereal disease in Canada, more particularly how it affected the army, and how the disease would be reflected in its effect upon veterans, and the pensions which might be paid to them on account of disabilities arising from such disease.

The hon. member appeared to convey the impression that nothing was being done throughout Canada, and that efforts in that direction were confined entirely to British Columbia. In order to have the record straight let me say that the division of venereal disease control of the Department of Pensions and National Health has already launched a vigorous educational programme for the eradication of these diseases.

The medical profession are glad that Colonel Williams, who is recognized as one of the leading men in the profession in this specialized study, is now chief of the division of venereal disease control. He is quoted as having said that this easily preventable human tragedy of syphilis and gonorrhoea is largely a heritage of neglect, prudery and failure to face the facts. But it was not until last December, when a national venereal disease control conference was held here in Ottawa, that this problem was really attacked as it should be, and some direction along the lines of an educational and treatment programme was outlined. Up to that time too much attention had been paid in Canada to curing the infection only. The conference which was held was aimed at the sources and causes of the dreaded social diseases, and the deliberations of more than one hundred physicians and visitors from other countries resulted in resolutions which, if carried out, should see venereal disease under control in Canada within the present year.

Perhaps of first importance was the recommendation for a publicity programme to educate the public through the newspapers and by lectures, motion pictures, posters and pamphlets. The venereal disease control division was reorganized last year for an organized attack on venereal diseases, and a consultant in public educational work, Mr. H. C. Rhoades, was appointed to prepare and carry on that programme. At the conference held last December a sort of charter to destroy syphilis and gonorrhoea in Canada was discussed and approved. Social workers and welfare agencies, police and legal machinery, were called upon to aid the physician with his weapons of modern science, while churches and homes lead the fight for better moral fibre in a general dominion wide effort to eradicate venereal disease or at least make it extremely rare. The conference drew up an interesting programme. Included in the approved programme were the following points on which the delegates agreed.

First, that they should give the facts. The facts concerning venereal disease will end the conspiracy of silence, banish outworn fallacies and remove false fears. The second point concerned treatment. It was decided that every Canadian who requires examination and treatment should have the best that medical science can provide. Free blood tests, free drugs, free clinics are being provided by the various health departments on the theory that it is cheaper to cure and prevent than to pay taxes to care for the ravages of neglected infection.

Another point in the programme had to do with the abolition of quackery. Laws exist to protect citizens from the quack and the charlatan. Only qualified physicians are permitted by law to care for those suffering from venereal disease. The public must be protected from the incompetent and the rogue. The fourth point in the programme had to do with contacts and the investigation of contacts. Careful search must be made for all who have been contacts. Only by seeking those and by bringing them under treatment and medical supervision can the curse of venereal disease be destroyed.

It is well known that there are different methods of prevention, but the conference stressed two methods. The first was prenatal blood tests. Every expectant mother must have a blood test before the fifth month. They should demand it and insist upon it, because it is the only protection that many unborn children have. In addition to that, the conference suggested and advocated that there should be premarital blood tests and health examinations as safeguards against the sinister encroachment of syphilis upon the home and family.

Because the entire nation is mobilized for war, and because so many thousands are under close supervision in the armed services, Canada was never in a better position to combat the spread of social disease. I again quote Colonel Williams, who said:

> To-day as never before, events and conditions are favourable for the final eradication of venereal disease in Canada. There is a full tide of wholesome public interest, concern, and support for measures directed against these master saboteurs of our war effort. Never before has there been such an imposing show of force arrayed against the threat of syphilis and gonorrhoea.

I simply wanted to put on the record what the hon. member for Parkdale could have put on had he wanted to give credit to the department for taking energetic and forthright steps with reference to this particular disease. I look forward with the greatest confidence to the time when that programme is put into effect, because I know that then the social evils will receive a set-back which they have never received before.

Mr. BRUCE: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The hon. member for Renfrew South could not have been present when I spoke in the committee, because I am sure I did not create any such impression, or I certainly did not wish to, that the only place where venereal disease was under control was British Columbia. I thought I made that quite clear. I said that British Columbia was the first province in Canada to undertake extensive venereal disease control.

Mr. McCANN: There is no point of order. If the hon. gentleman wants to make another speech let him wait until I am finished.

Mr. BRUCE: I am glad the hon. member has supplemented what I said, but I had no intention to leave that impression and I do not think I did.

Mr. McCANN: I do not wish to impute to the hon. member for Parkdale anything which should not be imputed, but I did not hear that particular part of his remarks which would convey the impression that the Department of Pensions and National Health had instituted a programme such as they have. In order that the record might be straight and in order that it might be on the record at the right time, I thought I should say what I have just said with reference to it.

While I am speaking on the war appropriation for the Department of Pensions and National Health I should like to make a few observations with reference to hospitalization and the treatment of pensionable war veterans. The present situation with regard to the treatment of pensionable war veterans is that the department maintains hospitals of its own throughout the country or uses facilities of other hospitals in the larger centres. A man who is pensionable and wants treatment must go to these hospitals to be treated by attendants who are employees of the Department of Pensions and National Health. I have heard many complaints about this, from both pensionable veterans and members of the medical profession. Pensionable veterans do not want to leave their own communities where there are proper hospital facilities and adequate medical care to go to centres far distant from their homes. I am sure that this condition could be remedied.

As witness of this I would cite to the minister what obtains with reference to the treatment of patients who come under workmen's compensation. I suggest that there are as many workmen compensation cases in Ontario in a year as there are veterans who are receiving pensions who require treatment. Workmen's compensation cases are treated in the hospitals in their own communities by physicians of their own choice. I am sure veterans would be more contented at home and would be able to have some freedom of action in choosing a hospital and the doctor who would attend them. When the war is over, regimentation with reference to veterans should cease. They should not continue to be pushed around as they are when they are told that they must go to a certain hospital.

For instance, take the situation in the Ottawa valley. Any man who is a pensioner and needs treatment is supposed to come to one of the hospitals in Ottawa. Splendid facilities are available in Brockville, Smiths Falls, Perth, Almonte, Renfrew and Pembroke, all within sixty or eighty miles of Ottawa. There are men in those districts equally competent to give treatment to veterans, and I think it is generally recognized that they have as good equipment in those institutions as they have in Ottawa. Furthermore, in almost every one of those communities there are medical men who are veterans of the last war. They feel it keenly that their services are overlooked and that they are not being used for the treatment of their fellow soldiers.

Another matter on which I should like to speak briefly has to do with the remuneration and the salaries of medical men in the Department of Pensions and National Health and in the service, and the salaries of both medical and dental men who are in the hospital service in the large state-owned institutions. I think they are being grossly underpaid. Men on salary of over $3,000 a year have not received any cost-of-living bonus, and I think it is high time that they received some extra compensation for their services during the war period when they are particularly busy. When we take into consideration the cost of medical education, the long years of preparation, and the comparable salaries which are being paid to men in other professions, the medical doctors in the department of health and the doctors and dentists in our state-owned hospitals who are treating veterans are grossly underpaid. I hope that the minister will give this matter his consideration and see that these men are given better remuneration.

Having brought up on several previous occasions the matter of the use of hospitals in smaller communities and having got nowhere with my recommendations, once again I recommend to the minister that this matter be given his serious consideration.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: There are a number of suggestions that I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. I am sure that those who have followed the course of the speeches made to-day have been impressed by the non-partisan attitude displayed by all members to this important problem. As I look back over a period of four years I think of the many suggestions made on the part of His Majesty's opposition with relation to the treatment to be accorded to returned soldiers and other service personnel, and of the number that have been implemented. Year by year we look forward to the discussion of the estimates of the Department of Pensions and National Health, knowing that if our suggestions are able to command sufficient support in public opinion throughout the country they will be finally implemented into legislation.

To-night there are a number of references that I intend to make in as short a time as possible. The first has to do with the establishment of the insurance principle in pensions. True enough, in 1941 by legislation the members of this house accepted in principle the order in council that had been passed by the executive in May of 1940. The insurance principle, so far as service personnel serving in Canada only are concerned, was denied by that legislation, and ever since there has been on the part of all soldier organizations and also on the part of members of this house, irrespective of the side on which they sat, a demand that the insurance principle be applied so far as service personnel serving in Canada only are concerned. There is no opportunity to-day for private members to introduce private bills or resolutions, and I make the appeal to the minister that, without regard to other considerations, he give the members of the house an opportunity at this session to decide whether or not they wish to repeal that section which was enacted in 1941. I think that if that opportunity were given to members of this house they would, without exception, follow the suggestion that has been so often made by the hon. member for Souris, the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough, the hon. member for Vancouver South and the hon. member for York West, that the insurance principle should be applied in so far as those who serve in Canada alone are concerned, to put them on an equality with those who serve elsewhere.

The point I rose to deal with particularly this evening—and I wish to pay my tribute to the courtesy shown by the minister in allowing me to have a glance at his file in this connection—has to do with reestablishment loans for soldiers and other service personnel returning from overseas in order to enable them to enter into business and to operate their own private enterprises. To date that opportunity has not been given. There is a suggestion in "Post-war Planning Information", issued by the wartime information board, that one of the subcommittees of the advisory committee on demobilization and reestablishment is considering a proposal that capital advances be made available to ex-service men who wish to set themselves up in their own business. This is a very important matter. We are sure, so far as we can be under the legislation that now exists, that discharged members of His Majesty's forces and certain other designated classes of persons will be reinstated in their civil employment under the Reinstatement in Civil Employment Act of 1942. Before I pass from that, let me suggest to the minister that that act which we passed in 1942 has so many loopholes in it which only became apparent after the legislation had been passed, that I submit it should be referred to a committee in order to enable the committee to fill in those holes and assure those who serve that when they do come back they will be able to secure their old positions, the ones they left when they entered the armed forces of the country.

So far as the man who desires to go into agriculture is concerned, provision has been made to a greater or less extent; loans are provided for; land can be secured. But for the man who was formerly engaged in business, who had some little business of his own which he gave up in order to enlist in the armed forces of this country, no provision that I know of has yet been made. I speak subject to correction and I hope the minister will correct me if I am wrong.

As I see the position everywhere across this dominion, there are men who gave up their business, small enterprises, larger enterprises in some cases, in order to enlist. I suggest that we are faced with this problem and that we must meet it. After the last war, as of the 21st of November, 1919, provision was made for vocational loans in amounts not exceeding $500 in any individual case to enable service men to purchase tools and equipment for their reestablishment if they were retrained disabled men, and to pursue their training or education where disability made such training necessary, in cases where they were not entitled to or had not taken training under the Department of Soldier Civil Reestablishment. The record which the minister was kind enough to place before me shows that, of $624,424.48 which was advanced, there was paid in cash up to March 31, 1942, $500,313. In other words, practically all of the advances which were made to enable these men to carry on and to purchase tools and equipment or to pursue training and education were repaid. I suggest that the time has come when provision should be made for loans by the government to men who sold their businesses in order to enlist, as well as to those who have the necessary ability to start small businesses for themselves.

I remember well, a little over a year ago, bringing up in the house a case which received considerable publicity across this country, the case of a man who had been engaged prior to the war in operating a hardware business. He left his stock on hand; he closed his business. He was invalided home, and he was unable to get permission from the wartime prices and trade board to enable him to carry on. As the law stands, under order No. 284 no person desiring to establish a business, unless it was operated within a period of one year preceding November 2, 1942, is permitted to do so. In other words, the men who enlisted in 1939, 1940, or 1941 up until November, who were in business, upon returning from overseas are not permitted under that order to open up the business which they formerly operated, or to start a similar business, without a permit. I believe that certain changes have recently been made in that regard, and those are steps in the right direction. Those changes came about through the fact that matters such as this were brought before parliament. After all, one reason why parliament exists is to enable those to whom injustice is being done to bring the matter before the house and the country so that redress may be given. Changes have been made in this regard, and I believe there has been a relaxation of this order, which I will ask the minister to explain, because there is still some doubt as to whether men returning from overseas may go into business.

When that difficulty is removed there will still remain another matter, concerning the large body of service people who, having no available funds, and there being no provision for loans to them, cannot open up the business for which they are peculiarly fitted. I do not believe there are facilities of this kind in Great Britain, but in New Zealand there is a provision for loans of a maximum of $1,800 to enable a veteran to purchase stock in trade or plant or to assist him with working capital. Interest is payable at the rate of four and one-eighth per cent, reducible to two per cent for the first year, or for the first three years, as the case may be. A similar scheme is in operation in Australia, where advances may be made by way of loan up to $900 for purchase of plant if the applicant is not eligible under a land settlement scheme. I believe that only in this way, through a government loan or advance to the men who serve, will those desirous of entering into business be enabled to carry on through the difficult days of rehabilitation. I suggest, therefore, that serious consideration be given to the establishment in Canada of a loan scheme such as I have described. We have legislation, introduced at the present session, to enable advances to be made and loans for development work, but as I understand that legislation it will not include within its ambit service men in the position to which I have referred.

Another matter to which I wish to refer is the decentralization of hospitalization so far as out-patient treatment is concerned. In Saskatchewan provision has been made for additional hospital facilities in Saskatoon and Regina, and I wish to draw the minister's attention to the merits of a lake about one hundred miles east of Saskatoon, Manitou lake, near Watrous, Saskatchewan. That lake is known all over western Canada for the medicinal values of its mineral water, the benefits which follow from receiving treatment for those suffering from rheumatism, arthritis and kindred ills. I believe the matter has already been brought to the notice of the minister, and I suggest that consideration be given to the establishment there for out-patients not requiring hospitalization in the ordinary meaning of the term, of a hospital for treatment of diseases such as I have mentioned. This lake has been known for 150 years for the medicinal values of its water.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Which place is that?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Manitou lake, near Watrous. The minister knows very well the reputation which the place has. There are readily available facilities. It has the medicinal values, the railway facilities, and an established reputation for treatment; and I suggest that, as far as returning Saskatchewan soldiers are concerned who suffer from the diseases which I have mentioned and related ailments, in order that they may be enabled to receive treatment near home, the necessary hospital facilities might be established there.

One other item to which I would refer is in connection with war veterans' allowances. Throughout this country are a considerable number of imperial veterans who served in South Africa and afterwards came out to this country, who are not in receipt of a pension, having no pensionable disabilities, but who find themselves, with the approach of middle age, the age to which so many of those old soldiers of the last war are approaching, the late sixties, in a position where they cannot carry on. The legislation as it stands to-day denies to them the opportunity to secure the assistance of the war veterans' allowance, because they were not domiciled in Canada at the time of their enlistment, which, as I understand it, is a condition precedent to that allowance being granted. The existence in various parts of this country of old soldiers who have given their best to their country and to this empire, unable to carry on, receiving no allowance, does act in part as a detriment to good morale in the areas in which they live.

The various soldiers' organizations have dealt with this matter from time to time, but as the law now stands these men are denied any such allowance. I suggest that some provision should be made whereby allowances, even on a compassionate basis, should be made available to those old comrades in arms who have served in a common cause with us and within the empire. I think, too, some reciprocal arrangement could be effected between Canada and the United Kingdom or that part of the empire from which those old soldiers came to the end that some allowances may be paid to them. I know of cases in my own province of men who served in South Africa. They are now sixty-five, sixty-eight or seventy years of age. They are unable to work, unable to secure old age pensions, being below the age limit, unable to carry on because no allowances are available. They are dependent on personal support from individuals in their district. I suggest to the minister that an alteration is needed in the regulations as they stand to-day regarding war veterans' allowances, so that those men, in proper cases, may be allowed the benefits of those allowances. That alteration would meet with the support of the members of this committee on all sides.

I think the suggestions that have been made to-day will be most helpful, not only to the minister but to the members of the committee. I know they have been most intensely interesting to myself. In view of the fact that I do not expect to be here to-morrow there is one other suggestion I should make with regard to the question of education of those returning from overseas. Provision has been made in part. I understand the regulations are ready in the United States. I have made considerable study of those regulations. An opportunity is to be given by the government to all veterans desirous of doing so to take college or professional training for one year after their discharge, with the right, if they have the necessary scholarship and ability, which is to be confirmed or demonstrated by their examination results, to carry on for a second, third, or possibly a fourth year.

The hon. member for Vancouver South said to-day that if there was one thing that should characterize the treatment of the men and women who have served it must be that of generosity. We are all in agreement with that. Under the United States plan provision is made to allow all servicemen taking advantage of it $50 a month for single persons and $75 a month for married persons. So general is the desire on the part of the servicemen and women to take advantage of university or professional education that under the present registration one-twelfth of those who are serving in the United States forces have given notice of their intention to take advantage of this further education.

In so far as Canada is concerned, provision is being increased from time to time for those who serve. Naturally there are still gaps to be filled. My reason for rising this evening was to place before the minister the claims of imperial veterans who did not see service with the Canadian army and were not domiciled in Canada at the time of their enlistment; the matter of decentralization of hospitalization as far as out-patients are concerned, so that they may receive such treatment as near to their homes as possible; and the matter of assuring to those who return and desire to enter into business that they may have an opportunity to do so, which is denied them to-day, because they will not be able to use the ordinary credit facilities which are available. These suggestions would not mean the expenditure of any great amount of money. The war veterans of the last war, by the repayment of about ninety-seven per cent of the amount that they had borrowed in order to receive training or for trade purposes, showed that loans made to them would be repaid.

I should like to hear the minister's view on these matters when he comes to make his report to the committee.

Mr. KNOWLES: There are one or two additional matters about which I should like to say a few words, but before doing so I wish to comment briefly upon some of the matters which have already been discussed during the course of the debate to-day. It is true that there have been a few sharp exchanges across the floor during this debate, but I am confident that the minister will agree that political fighting has been put on the shelf, at least for to-day. Indeed, I have felt since coming to this House of Commons that there is no discussion into which all members enter more earnestly than the debate relating to matters affecting the welfare of veterans, both of the last war and of the present conflict.

As the hon. member who has just taken his seat has said, we rejoice in the fact that from time to time we witness improvements made by order in council in the treatment accorded veterans, and that makes it seem worth while for us to fight for still further betterments. If I take a few moments to add my voice with regard to some of the points that have been urged over and over again to-day, it is because with other hon. members on this side of the house I feel that it is worth while to do so. We are glad to recognize that some forward steps are being taken, and we hope that by our continuing to keep these matters to the fore, still further improvements will result. Therefore in just a few words I should like to add my support to three or four arguments that have been advanced quite frequently.

First, I refer to the matter of reinstating the insurance principle as far as men in Canada are concerned. I refer also to the desirability of getting rid, if we possibly can, of the words "pre-enlistment origin" with respect to the physical condition of men who were taken into the forces as A-1. Another point that has been made quite frequently, not only in this but in other debates, is the desirability of the benefit of the doubt, to use the phraseology used by the minister on April 28, really being given to the applicant for pension rights. I know the minister, when he spoke on this matter on April 28, tried to make the point that the law is quite clear that the benefit of the doubt is on the side of the veteran; yet the experience of so many of us in this house is that a great many veterans do not seem to find it that way. It is true that a great many cases we as members of parliament take up with the minister are satisfactorily dealt with, and there is no denying the fact that it gives us a great deal of satisfaction, after taking up a case with the minister, to be able to write back to the veteran who wrote us in the first place and report success as a result of our efforts. But every time we do that we are conscious of the fact that there are many others who perchance have not thought about writing to members of parliament, and still others who have simply accepted the unfavourable decisions that have been given without feeling that anything could be done about the matter. Our attitude is that the situation ought not to be such that cases can be dealt with unfavourably, when upon receiving special consideration through being brought to the attention of the minister by a member of parliament it can be found that they should have been dealt with favourably in the first instance. I realize that it is difficult to take care of this matter by legislation or even by order in council, but I am satisfied that it can be taken care of, shall I say, by the minister passing the word down through the entire administration of his department that the statement of principle and policy which he enunciated on April 28, and undoubtedly will enunciate again during the course of this debate, is to be carried out not just in theory but in actual practice. I hope we may see a further acceptance of the idea that the onus of proof rests upon the government, and that the benefit of the doubt is really on the side of the veteran.

Another matter that has been mentioned previously to-day is that of more favourable consideration being given to cases of psychological disturbance. We have been quite alarmed by the number of cases of men who are not given favourable consideration because of the nature of the incapacity with which they come back from overseas. I refer particularly to men who have served in the air force. We learn of cases of men whose condition is such that they are no longer of use to the air force, who are discharged after having served for two or three years; yet because the ailment is not strictly a physical one, frequently no pension is available to them. This is a new development brought about by the nature of warfare in which we are engaged during this conflict, and it seems to me that we should find more lenient ways of dealing with cases of this kind.

In thinking about this debate I thought we might not be permitted to discuss such matters as the War Veterans' Allowance Act and the treatment of widows of veterans of the last war, so that it is my intention to have something more to say about those matters when we come to the specific items in the civil estimates. And yet I thought you were quite right, Mr. Chairman, in permitting a discussion at least of a general character on those items during this general debate. Just in passing I should like to say that when we do come to the item having to do with the administration of the War Veterans' Allowance Act many of us will have something to say, because not only are we thinking of the veterans of this war, but we are still conscious of the needs of the veterans of the last war and we want to see them receive the very best that is possible.

When we come to the item in the civil estimates that has to do with the granting of allowances to widows of veterans of the last war who, when they died, were on fifty per cent pension or less, again we in this group, and hon. members of all groups, will have something to say. We are grateful for the improvements that have been made in these allowances by order in council during the past several months, but there are still some definite improvements that need to be made and, I hope, will be made even before we get to that discussion. I should like to mention particularly the matter of hospitalization for these widows. Further, in connection with hospitalization, I hope one policy which has been in effect will be changed, if it has not been changed already. I refer to the fact that when widows on these allowances are hospitalized a portion of their allowance is paid to the hospital, and another portion is paid to the widow, but a small portion is withheld and not paid to anyone, on the theory that the widow, being in hospital, is getting something extra because of the services provided there. I have argued this point privately with the chairman of the war veterans' allowance board and the minister. It is my feeling that there is no valid reason for that procedure. When a widow on a small allowance goes into hospital, she still has a room or other living accommodation which she must maintain, and it is exceedingly difficult for her to keep things together if there is any reduction in her small allowance.

Another matter with respect to these widows comes to my mind because of an order in council which was tabled this week. As I recall it, the order in council provided that the widow of a veteran who was on pension and who, because of the amount of the veteran's pension, would be entitled to a pension herself, now can obtain that pension even though she did not marry the veteran until some time this year. That is a change from the former date, which I believe was 1930. I am hoping that the same change may be made without delay with respect to widows of veterans who died while receiving fifty per cent pension or less. I can see no reason why the same policy should not apply in both cases. If it is just that the minister has not given his attention to it I hope that he will do so, and that an order in council may be brought down in a few days.

There is one other matter. I do not suppose I can hope for this overnight, but I can certainly hope that it will be taken care of before long. I refer to widows of veterans of the last war, in cases where those veterans were on fifty per cent pension or less, and did not get into what was then known as an actual theatre of war. I refer in particular to many men who were in England. Those men were quite prepared to go to the front but, for reasons beyond their control, did not get there. Why these widows should be discriminated against because of that fact I find it exceedingly difficult to understand.

Perhaps I have taken longer than I should have on this subject, having admitted that it might be out of order; but since other members have referred to it—

Mr. MacNICOL: It has nothing to do with this vote.

Mr. KNOWLES: The hon. member may speak to it if he wishes, later on. Two other members in his group have spoken in the matter.

Mr. MacNICOL: They were out of order, too.

Mr. KNOWLES: Perhaps it is well to give the minister a preview of the case we shall be making on this point later on.

There is one other matter to which I should like to refer—and I think I can assure the hon. member for Davenport that it comes definitely under this item, which deals with the treatment of members of the armed forces and ex-members of those forces. I refer particularly to the number of medical personnel in hospitals under the supervision of the Department of Pensions and National Health.

I am not going to add to the debate we have already had respecting Christie street hospital. I refrain in part because I come from a city where, as was said earlier to-day by the hon. member for Souris, we have a hospital of which we are proud. The name of Deer Lodge is almost sacred to the people of Greater Winnipeg, and, indeed, to those of the whole of Manitoba. And yet, Mr. Chairman, it has been drawn to my attention on quite a number of occasions that the number of doctors available in Deer Lodge hospital—and I have been told it is the same in other hospitals under the department—is woefully inadequate. I have been told, further, that as a result of the fact that the number of doctors is less than it should be there has been a great deal of confusion and loss of time. I have been told that many veterans going into these hospitals must wait a long time before they get the kind of treatment they should.

I have been told by men in the armed forces that there was a reluctance on the part of doctors in the army, and particularly in Winnipeg, to have men discharged from the army hospital at Fort Osborne to go to Deer Lodge, because they are afraid that when they get there they will not receive, as quickly as they should, a continuation of the treatment they have had while under the care of army doctors. This is not the fault of the doctors at Deer Lodge; the trouble is that there are too few of them.

It has been suggested to me that this is a tremendous problem, and that it may branch out into the whole question of insufficient medical men in the country as a whole, and also the problem arising from the fact that we have four different medical services. I refer to the army, the navy, the air force and the Department of Pensions and National Health. This raises the whole question as to the desirability of coordinating these services to a greater degree, or perhaps actually going so far as to try to arrive at one medical service for the armed forces and the Department of Pensions and National Health.

Bearing in mind what has been said to me about this, I felt I should like to get some information of a statistical nature to see whether it would prove or disprove the complaints I had received. With that in mind I placed some questions on the order paper, and they were dealt with to-day. My questions as they appeared on to-day's order paper were as follows:

1. What was the total number of patient-days in each of the hospitals under the direction of the Department of Pensions and National Health for the year 1939?

2. What was the total number of patient-days in each of the hospitals under the direction of the Department of Pensions and National Health for the year 1943?

3. What was the total number of medical personnel employed in each of the above hospitals for the year 1939, (a) full time; (b) part time?

4. What was the total number of medical personnel employed in each of the above hospitals for the year 1943, (a) full time; (b) part time?

Obviously my purpose in asking those questions was to try to find out what increase there had been in demands upon these hospitals, and then to find out what increase there had been in medical personnel to cope with these increased demands.

My question was passed as an order for return at three o'clock this afternoon, at which time the minister laid the return on the table. I am sorry it was not answered in the usual way, and the figures placed on Hansard; but perhaps I can overcome that by reading in tabulated form some of the outstanding figures in the return. The total number of patient-days for the years 1939 and 1943, respectively, in six of these hospitals, is as follows:

[Mr. Knowles.]

Hospital	Total patient-days, 1939	Total patient-days, 1943
Camp Hill, Halifax....	43,378	94,665
Lancaster, West Saint John	21,850	86,981
Christie Street, Toronto	145,073	315,204
Deer Lodge, Winnipeg..	53,894	97,232
Colonel Belcher, Calgary	33,247	70,654
Shaughnessy, Vancouver.	62,194	238,756

Hon. members who will look at these figures will see that they indicate a tremendous increase in the demands made upon these hospitals.

Over against that, the other figures for which I asked, and which have been supplied in the return, indicate the extent to which medical personnel has been increased to meet these demands. In answering the question the department has chosen arbitrary dates of September 30, 1939, and September 30, 1943, and the table contains the number of medical personnel employed at these hospitals on those arbitrary dates. In my opinion that was a justifiable way in which to answer the question. The table is broken down into part-time and full-time, but, to save time, I shall give only the totals. The following table, therefore, will show the total number of medical personnel employed in the six hospitals I have named for the years 1939 and 1943 respectively, as at September 30 in each year:

Hospital	Total medical personnel, Sept. 30, 1939	Total medical personnel, Sept. 30, 1943
Camp Hill, Halifax....	11	9
Lancaster, West Saint John	4	5
Christie Street, Toronto	31	40
Deer Lodge, Winnipeg..	14	19
Colonel Belcher, Calgary	11	14
Shaughnessy, Vancouver.	14	19

It will be noted that the only place at which there was a decrease is Camp Hill, Halifax.

I should like to go back and make a comment on those comparisons. At Camp Hill, Halifax, the total number of patient days in 1943 was more than twice what it was in 1939, but there was an actual decrease in the medical personnel. At Lancaster, West Saint John, the increase in patient days is fourfold, while the increase in doctors is from four to five. At Christie street hospital, Toronto, the increase is more than twofold in demand, while the increase in medical personnel is from thirty-one to forty. At Deer Lodge, Winnipeg, the increase in demand is almost twofold, while the increase in doctors is from fourteen to nineteen. At Colonel Belcher, Calgary, the increase is more than twofold in demand, while the increase in doctors is from eleven to fourteen. At Shaughnessy, Vancouver, the increase is between three and fourfold in total number of patient days, while the increase in doctors is only from fourteen to nineteen. That seems to make it clear that all down the line there has not been a sufficient increase in medical personnel to take care of the increased patient requirements in these various hospitals.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Would my hon. friend read the note appended to the return?

Mr. KNOWLES: I shall be glad to. If the minister would like it and the committee would consent, I would be glad to put the whole return on the record.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I have no objection.

Mr. KNOWLES: The note which the minister has asked me to read and which appears at the bottom of the return is as follows:

> At many of these institutions, the department receives valuable assistance from medical personnel of the armed services who are posted for varying periods while awaiting disposal elsewhere.

I appreciate the significance of that statement, but it is difficult to do anything with it unless one has the actual figures. Even so, it brings to my mind the complaints that have been made to me to the effect that there is not sufficient care available for patients—I am speaking of Deer Lodge hospital about which I have been spoken to personally—such as the men of the armed services would like to see. As far as Winnipeg is concerned we have not anything like the complaint that the Toronto members have about their hospital. We are proud of ours, but we feel that there is tremendous room for improvement in the services to be made available to these men.

I have no desire to get under the minister's skin about it. I realize that he may be faced with a real problem in connection with this whole question of coordinating medical care throughout the country. I am fully aware that it is a tremendous problem. Also there is a problem facing anyone who tries to coordinate the medical services in the various armed services with the medical services of the Department of Pensions and National Health, but I think it is something that deserves and demands attention.

In connection with this table there is something else I should like to draw to the attention of the committee. I have divided the number of patient days in the six hospitals that I have referred to by 365 in order to obtain the average number of patients in each one of these hospitals on each day during 1943. The average daily figures are as follows:

Camp Hill, Halifax	259
Lancaster, West Saint John	238
Christie Street, Toronto	871
Deer Lodge, Winnipeg	266
Colonel Belcher, Calgary	193
Shaughnessy, Vancouver	654

While dealing in statistics I wish there were some way of showing how this works out with respect to the number of medical personnel available. The difficulty with which one is faced—this is partly due to the way in which I asked my question—is that the medical personnel in some instances are full-time, in other instances are part-time, and there is also the note to which the minister called attention to the effect that assistance of medical personnel from the armed services is frequently available. The minister may check me if he wishes on what I am about to say. But if one considers only the full-time medical personnel in each one of these hospitals to which I have referred, he is faced with the fact that a great amount of work would seem to devolve upon the shoulders of the full-time medical men. I notice there are two or three doctors in the chamber and they may comment on my figures. However, if you consider the full-time medical personnel only, you find that each doctor is taking care of the following number of patients in the different hospitals:

	Patients per doctor per day
Colonel Belcher, Calgary	32
Christie Street, Toronto	41
Deer Lodge, Winnipeg	44
Lancaster, West Saint John	79
Shaughnessy, Vancouver	81
Camp Hill, Halifax	86

I am not trying to distort the figures, and that is why I ask the committee to note that there are also part-time medical men who come into these hospitals as well as the medical men from the armed services. But the fact remains that there are these disparities in the number of patients for which a doctor is responsible in these different hospitals. I am not a medical man, but quite apart from the disparities it seems to me that the number of patients that these doctors have to care for per day is too high. I hope that something can be done about this matter.

I know that not long ago an interesting report was laid on the table as a result of an extensive survey by the medical procurement and assignment board. What worries me is that the report was simply laid on the table. I have not heard of anything being done about it. This question of medical personnel for patients in these hospitals as well as medical services for the country as a whole is the concern of the minister who is before the committee just now, and I hope that he will give this matter further consideration. For the immediate present, if he cannot concern himself about the larger picture I hope that he will give consideration to the situation in the hospitals under his supervision in which veterans are patients at the present time.

Quite a number of representations have been made to me by the non-medical personnel employed in Deer Lodge hospital about grievances that exist. I realize that there is no argument over the fact that that should come under civil estimates, and I shall reserve my remarks until that time; but I am letting the minister know that I want to bring those grievances to his attention. I say all of this in the spirit which, as I suggested at the start of my remarks, has been characteristic of this debate, namely, that all of us in this committee without regard to party are keenly interested in the welfare of our veterans. When it comes to the matter of health and the care that they should have and the adequacy of their hospitalization, we are all extremely earnest and deeply concerned to see that the very best be done. It is in that spirit that I plead for consideration to be given to achieving the best possible efficiency in the hospitals that come under the supervision of the minister.

Mr. CHURCH: The minister's department is divided into two parts, pensions and national health. I wish to say a few words about the first branch, pensions. The soldiers overseas are very much worried and are wondering why Canada is doing so much for civilians at home, such as unemployment insurance, health insurance and many things like that. Shortly after the war broke out I proposed that a system of life insurance on all our soldiers be established. I proposed it as an economy measure. We all know how complex the Pension Act is, and that it has to be amended almost every session. I have much sympathy with the adminstrators of the act. I have had a great deal to do with the officers in charge of its administration both in the last war and in this war and in the long depression, and I have found that they did excellent work on the whole. True it is that they stick to the letter of the law, and it may be that some of the boards are a little too strict in their interpretations, so that in some cases justice is not done to the soldier.

In the last war Toronto established its own system of life insurance on soldiers who went overseas from that city. We insured each soldier for $1,000, so that he would be free of the worry about what would happen to his dependents if he should die on the battlefield. Shortly after this war broke out there was an article in Canadian Insurance monthly, describing Toronto's system of life insurance on soldiers in the last war. The United States adopted a national insurance system, and I proposed in this house in 1940 and again in 1941 that we should have a national system of life insurance on all our soldiers, to include provision for their dependents, both during and after the war, and to include, for three years after the war, provision for their insurance against unemployment and want, and free hospitalization.

As I say, the United States adopted a national system of life insurance for their soldiers in the last war, and that effected a very great economy in the administration of relief and pensions. Life insurance to-day is only in its infancy. What the soldier overseas is worried about is this. He goes overseas and he is thinking what is to happen to his wife and children or to his father and mother if he dies on the battlefield. It is a constant source of worry to him. I have received many letters in the last six months urging me to bring this matter again before the house, to substitute in part or in whole for the present pension system a national life insurance scheme paid for by the state. A lady wrote me to-day about it, and I will send her letter over to the minister. She is Mrs. Dobson, a Red Cross worker in a Muskoka town, and her suggestion is along the lines I proposed to the present Minister of Finance in 1940, that life insurance be provided for all our soldiers. I know a very fine surgeon in Toronto who in 1940 gave up his practice and enlisted. He had a large life insurance policy, but the company changed the policy so that if he were killed in battle his dependents would not collect a cent of life insurance, and the premiums were raised. His dependents would have to depend entirely on the Pension Act.

The lady who wrote me—and she is one of many—points out that we should have a national system of insurance for the dependents at home of those who die on the battlefield. She says:

> In many instances young sons, husbands and fathers have carried life insurance in civilian life, but these policies contain clauses which make them invalid in the event of insured being killed on active service.
> The pensions paid to mothers, widows and orphans are a mere pittance compared with living costs, as also is the cost of living bonus paid to dependents. I am sure you must be aware of the great hardships endured on account of insufficient living allowances. These factors also contribute to juvenile delinquency when a mother is compelled to go out to work to provide for her children.

In the first great war the United States government provided life insurance for her service men and I know it continues this practice during the present conflict. In the former case, I had a young friend who left ten thousand dollars to his aged father. Part of premium was taken care of by the United States government, the balance paid by the enlisted man. As to this war, I have a young friend serving in the United States navy who has taken out a policy for six thousand dollars payable to his mother. This too is provided by his government.

I have often wondered why our government has not provided similar protection—surely it cannot be lack of money, when so much is recklessly squandered for far less vital and humane projects.

It seems to me that when a young man gives up the right to protect his loved ones financially, it should be the duty of our government to care for them adequately in the event of his death. From many conversations I am sure that any service man would share fairly with his government the premium on a policy, deductible from his pay as is now done for victory bonds and war savings certificates, which he is expected to buy to help win the war, as well as do the actual fighting.

Unemployment insurance has brought millions of dollars to a fund to protect civilians in case of unemployment. Why not use some of these millions as insurance for our soldiers, sailors and airmen, who have given up the right, temporarily I hope, to contribute to this unemployment insurance fund.

Should consideration not be given to those who are ready to give their all to protect the rights and privileges of us at home, living in comfort and safety? Does an enlisted man not deserve the peace of mind that comes from knowing his loved ones will be looked after adequately?

I want to assure you that my interest in this matter is not of a personal nature. . . .

I know she is a worker for those who have enlisted. She is urging a government-sponsored life insurance scheme for service men, which is what I have been urging for many years. This is a different war from the last, and a changing war. The Minister of Finance has already accepted one proposal that I made to him in 1941 and 1942, for to-day he announced that Canadians crossing the border can now take $150 a year across in United States funds. In view of the magnitude of this war, I am sure that the more he looks into the proposal I am making that we establish a national system of life insurance for our soldiers, the more likely he is to be in favour of it. I hope that the minister will look into it.

Mr. GERSHAW: Mr. Chairman, since this debate has wandered far afield I hope the minister will bear with me for a few minutes while I bring to his attention the fact that a great tragedy befell the people of southern Alberta during the last few months. A preventable disease, typhoid fever, has affected about seventy people in that district. There was no doubt about the disease being typhoid. Clinical and blood tests established it beyond any question. All of the primary cases had one thing in common, namely, that they had all eaten of some cheese that was made at a special factory between February 5 and February 10. This factory has a good name. It is a cooperative institution. The manager was anxious to do all he could. But it seems that no Cheddar cheese or raw cheese in the whole of the dominion is pasteurized.

It is also a fact that in Canada there have been ten cheese-born epidemics of typhoid, and three of these have been in Alberta. This one was a particularly severe type of typhoid. The patients were very sick; there was about the usual ten per cent mortality; after recovery they will be left in a weakened position, more subject to tuberculosis, and there will be structural changes which will be permanent defects in their tissues. The money cost of this alone to the hospitals and to the patients will run over a million dollars. The long periods of illness have taken people who were needed in war activities, and deaths of people in the prime of life are something to which we cannot attach a value.

Typhoid very often spreads by carriers. There can be the incubation carried, the person who can spread typhoid germs around before he is taken seriously sick; there can be the convalescent carrier, who exudes them for three or four months after recovery; and then the chronic carrier, who for an indefinite period can spread typhoid germs and be a great menace to the district. The provincial health officers after careful and prolonged search, found a typhoid carrier who had been supplying milk to this particular cheese factory, and it was a long search; but undoubtedly the source of the infection came from this cheese.

How can people be protected from such a serious tragedy as an epidemic of this kind is? Inoculations have amply proved their value, but they protect a person only for a year, and they will not protect against massive infection. The pasteurization of cheese is not done in Canada; that is with the raw cheese; it is not processed like packaged cheeses; probably this is not feasible. There is one plan, and that is, by keeping the cheese for sixty or ninety days it becomes absolutely safe; and I want to make an appeal to the minister of health and to his officers to consider making a regulation which will protect people by having the cheese kept for the necessary period of time. If one province only did this they would be at a commercial disadvantage; but if the whole of Canada did it, the cost would be a small item compared with the costs of such an epidemic.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Ralston the house adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

PRIVILEGE—MR. COLDWELL

REFERENCE TO REMARKS OF MR. REID IN DEBATE ON MAY 16

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): On Tuesday afternoon, at page 2952 of Hansard, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) made this statement:

I said that I had no direct proof about those three papers—

That is, the Province, the News-Herald and the Sun.

—but that I did have some proof about the Fraser valley. That is the record and the hon. member knows it. He endeavoured by reading the record to leave the inference that I had deliberately lied in the House of Commons.

I may say I did not do that.

He just cannot get away with that. He has got away with a lot, but he is not going to get away with anything of that kind as long as I have breath in my body.

That was a reflection upon me, Mr. Speaker. I now have a telegram from Coquitlam, British Columbia, addressed to myself, reading as follows:

Personal check-up with publishers shows no papers in Fraser valley federal constituency were threatened as Tom Reid suggests. Coquitlam Herald, Haney Gazette, Agassiz Advance, Mission Record, Chilliwack Progress, Abbotsford News. Use information as you desire.

That is signed by George W. Shelldrake, of Haney, British Columbia, who is on the staff of the Valley Press Publishers. The News-Herald in an editorial of May 15, 1944 states:

In that connection it should be said that at no time has this newspaper been officially approached by the C.C.F. party along the line indicated.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I have not one word to take back, Mr. Speaker. I stand by every word I said, and I do not propose to retract anything. I have confidence that those who have known me longest will realize and believe that what I said was true.

[Mr. Gershaw.]

[Later:]

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. When the house opened this afternoon the leader of the C.C.F. read a telegram he had received from Vancouver from a man named Shelldrake, who, I understand, signs himself as C.C.F. organizer for the Fraser Valley. I rise particularly on this occasion because I hold before me a copy of the Vancouver News-Herald of Saturday, May 13, in which this newspaper recites what I had said in the House of Commons; and here is the statement it makes:

The management of the News-Herald has not been officially approached on the subject by the C.C.F. party, but a number of subscribers who said they were adherents of the party have telephoned and stated they would cancel their subscriptions unless a more favourable attitude toward the C.C.F. party was adopted.

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Speaker, apparently this paper has written two articles.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. COLDWELL: Just a moment; the article from which I quoted did not contain that.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): This is news.

Mr. REID: This is the News-Herald. This is one of the papers I mentioned, and this article substantiates the statement I made in the House of Commons.

Mr. COLDWELL: The only paper I had on Tuesday was the Vancouver Province.

Mr. REID: I hope you keep up the argument.

RAILWAY COMMITTEE

First report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.—Mr. Dupuis.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DEATH OF SIX OFFICERS WHILE PRISONERS OF WAR IN GERMANY

Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): On behalf of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I wish to take this opportunity to inform the house with deep regret of a shocking incident involving the death of six officers of the Royal Canadian Air Force who were prisoners of war in Germany, at a camp near Dresden, Stalag Luft III. The following statement was made in the British House of Commons this morning by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Eden.

I deeply regret to have to tell the house that his majesty's government have received information from the protecting power that forty-seven air force offices of the Royal Air Force and of the Royal Canadian, Australian, New Zealand and South African air forces have been shot by the Germans after a mass escape from Stalag Luft III.

According to the information given to a representative of the protecting power by the German authorities, in the course of a routine visit to this camp on the 17th April, seventy-six officers had escaped from Stalag Luft III on the 22nd March.

Of these seventy-six officers fifteen had been recaptured, fourteen were still at large and forty-seven had been shot, some whilst resisting arrest and some in the course of a new attempt to escape after capture.

His majesty's government are profoundly shocked at this news and have urgently requested the protecting power to demand from the German government a full and immediate report of the circumstances in which these men met their death and an explanation of its failure to report the facts at once to the protecting power.

The names of the officers shot were furnished to the representative of the protecting power on the occasion of his visit and the next of kin have been informed.

The house will wish me to express its deep sympathy with the relatives of these most gallant men.

That is the end of Mr. Eden's statement. There are some points I wish to add. First, the next of kin of the members of the Royal Canadian Air Force who thus met their deaths have been informed, and their names have been given to the press. Second, as soon as word was received in Ottawa the Canadian government joined in the urgent request to the protecting power mentioned in Mr. Eden's statement, that a full and immediate report of the circumstances be demanded from the German government, and an explantion of the failure to report the facts at once to the protecting power. Third, I am sure I shall be expressing the feeling of the Canadian government and of this house when I say that we too are profoundly shocked at this news and that we wish to extend our deep sympathy and regret to the relatives of the brave Canadians who lost their lives in these distressing circumstances.

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I join with the minister in the words of sympathy he has uttered for the next of kin who have been aggrieved as he has announced to-day. It just shows the type of people we are fighting in this war. And more than that, may I say it shows, too, in bold contrast, the difference between the way the Germans have treated those prisoners and the way we have treated their prisoners over here.

WAR POLICY

MOTION, MR. POULIOT, FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 31

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I desire to move the adjournment of the house for the following reasons:

Whereas, the Prime Minister of Canada, in his address to members of both houses of parliament, at Westminster, on May 11, 1944, declared:

> Canada's war effort is a voluntary effort, . . . Our country has become increasingly proud of the fact that every fighting man from Canada serving across the seas, on the seas, and in the air is a volunteer. We can say, in very truth, that Canada's effort in this war is a voluntary effort.

Whereas, the Prime Minister of Canada, in an address delivered at Winnipeg on July 10, 1941, declared:

> What has already been attempted in the way of reviving that issue (of conscription) at this time makes only too clear the advantage that might have been taken of a lengthy absence on my part from Canada, to force the issue into the arena of party strife.
> How dire the consequences to our national unity this might have proved none can say.

Whereas, on April 27, 1944, two members of parliament asked for information on the orders of the day about the pressure to induce or coerce the personnel of various units to enlist for overseas service in the absence of the Prime Minister from Canada;

Whereas, the following day, a similar question was put by another member of parliament;

Whereas, in both instances the acting leader of the government did commit himself in his answer;

Whereas, according to a dispatch of the Canadian Press of April 27, 1944, Brigadier W. H. S. Macklin blamed the draftees who had not volunteered, and did not allow them to take part in a victory loan parade;

Whereas, the pressure and intimidation exercised by commanding officers at the Vernon, British Columbia, training centre to coerce the draftees to enlist for overseas service have been such that the city council of Quebec passed a resolution of protest, on May 12, in order that the voluntary policy expounded by the Prime Minister of Canada at Westminster should be carried on even during his absence from Canada;

I ask leave to move the adjournment of the house, under standing order 31, for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, that the voluntary war policy of the government, as expounded and defined by the Prime Minister of Canada at Westminster, shall be carried on.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member gave me a copy of the motion before I came to the house. I have not had sufficient time to look through Hansard to ascertain what may have happened in connection with this subject now brought before the house by the hon. member's motion. However, standing order 31 provides in subsection 6(c) that—

> The motion must not revive discussion on a matter which has been discussed in the same session.

I rely upon my memory as to what happened in that connection, and I have recollection of many occasions upon which this matter, now placed before the house by the hon. member, has been discussed by the house.

Subsection 6(d), as found at page 64 of Beauchesne's Third Edition, states:

> The motion must not anticipate a matter which has been previously appointed for consideration by the house, or with reference to which a notice of motion has been previously given and not withdrawn.

In the proceedings before the house there is on the order paper an order which has been the subject of discussion since March, namely, a resolution to introduce a measure to provide sums of money for the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada. The subject now before us might well be discussed under that measure. My recollection is that it has been discussed in the house; but whether it has or has not, the fact remains that there is a resolution before the house which at a later stage will be transformed into a bill. The subject matter of the motion now made by the hon. member could well be discussed either on second reading of the bill which would follow that resolution, or in committee of the whole.

But my thought is that I should try to bring to the consciousness of the house the fact that a motion such as this does not seem to me to be covered at all by standing order 31. I would point out that that standing order provides for the discussion of a matter of "urgent public importance". This is what we find in paragraph 180 as it appears at page 78 of Beauchesne's Third Edition, respecting the practice in the British House of Commons:

> Standing order 10 of the United Kingdom House in force since 1882, also provides that a member may propose the adjournment of the house "for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance." On the 13th of April, 1894, a member asked leave to make that motion to discuss "the neglect of the government to take measures for the relief of agricultural depression during the present session." As forty members rose in support of the motion, debate was allowed, but on its conclusion, the Speaker said: "I do not think that, under the Standing Order of 1882, a motion on a subject of this kind, having such a very wide scope, was ever contemplated. What I think was contemplated, was an occurrence of some sudden emergency, either in home or in foreign affairs. But I do not think it was contemplated—if the house will allow me to state my views—that a question of very wide scope, which would demand legislation to deal with it in any effective manner, should be the subject of discussion on a motion for the adjournment of the house, because, if that was so, we might have repeated motions made by the opposition of the day, not so much in the direction of censoring the government for action which had been taken or not taken, for bringing to notice some grievance demanding instant remedy, as in the direction of wishing to introduce legislation on some particular subject. That is not the purpose of the Standing Order of 1882, and would, I think, cut at the root of the order."

In my view the purpose of our standing order 31 is not that contained in the proposals offered in the hon. member's motion. For that reason I rule it is not of sufficient public importance to justify the adjournment of the house.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PEDLAR PLANT, OSHAWA—MOSQUITO PLANE PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Munitions and Supply. Has the minister received a letter dated May 16 from the united steel workers of America at Oshawa, Ontario, asking that he reconsider his proposed transfer of the shell case contract from the Pedlar plant at Oshawa to a Montreal firm? If so, will the minister tell the house what decision, if any, he has made? In the event the minister proceeds with his transfer proposals, will he tell the house why? Will the minister also tell the house what precautions he is taking to safeguard the interests of the nearly 400 employees who stand to lose their jobs, their seniority, their homes and the advantages which they have gained through specialized training for particular kinds of work?

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Munitions and Supply): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to give me notice of his question. The situation at the Pedlar plant at Oshawa is that the plant is one of three holding contracts for the manufacture of 40-millimetre cartridge cases. A reduction in the demand for that type of cartridge case has occurred, and the ordinary practice is to curtail production at the point of the greatest labour shortage, which happens to be Oshawa.

There is a tremendous demand in that city for man-power for the Mosquito programme, which is the highest priority programme we have on hand at the moment. The Oshawa plant is not being closed, but its work is being curtailed. The men who will not be required are being transferred to the Mosquito programme in the same city. Sufficient work is left in the Pedlar plant to take care of all those workmen who do not come up to the high physical standards required in the Mosquito programme. The result is that no labour will be displaced, as far as residence is concerned, and no hardship will be suffered.

The men who will be transferred will be the more recent employees of the Pedlar plant and they will receive work at somewhat higher wages than those obtaining in the Pedlar plant. I think this answers the question. There is no transfer of any contract from Oshawa to Montreal. The interests of the employees are being completely safeguarded.

SELECTIVE SERVICE

POSTPONEMENT OF CALL-UP OF FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. DORISE W. NIELSEN (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence which is of urgent importance to the farmers of Saskatchewan. A number of farmers are receiving call-up notices to go to Regina for their medical examinations. This, of course, is quite in order. A number of these farmers will automatically receive exemptions because of their farm work, but due to the poor train service many of these men will have to spend five or six or more days away from home in order to go to Regina. At this time of year when seeding is in full progress this will cause severe hardship. Would it be possible to have the call-up of farmers in Saskatchewan postponed for two or three weeks until seeding is over? These young farmers would be able to complete their seeding operations by that time.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): That is really a matter for my colleague, the Minister of Labour, to deal with as it comes under national selective service. Those men are not in the army.

Mrs. NIELSEN: Would the Minister of Labour please give me a reply?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I have been in the city only a few minutes—I have just got off a train—but I shall be glad to look into the question raised by my hon. friend and anything we can do will be done.

Mr. DUPUIS: I should like to ask that the request made by the hon. member for North Battleford be applied to other provinces so far as farmer appeals are concerned.

Mr. LACOMBE: Following the question asked by the hon. member for North Battleford, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Will he permit a postponement of two or three weeks in the call-up notices for medical examination of young farmers in all parts of Canada?

Mr. MITCHELL: I endeavoured to answer the question raised by the hon. member for North Battleford. As I say, I shall look into it and if anything can be done it will be done.

VICTORIA DAY

QUESTION AS TO OBSERVANCE AS PUBLIC HOLIDAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, nearly all the municipalities in Ontario have declared May 24, Victoria day, to be a holiday. The general holiday act says that May 24 and Dominion day are public holidays. Nearly all the mayors in Ontario have issued proclamations that it is to be a holiday. Yesterday in Quebec the courts decided that Victoria day is a public holiday notwithstanding the order in council which was passed. I notice the Secretary of State is momentarily out of the chamber. I suggest that he take this as a notice of question—what is the status of public holidays—and clear up the matter later.

EMPIRE DAY

SUGGESTED OBSERVANCE BY REFERENCES TO WAR EFFORT OF THE DOMINIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister a short question which can be considered over the week-end. Next Tuesday, the day before Victoria day, is known as Empire day in the dominion. It is celebrated in all the schools of all the provinces. My suggestion is that next Tuesday the leaders pause and take a few moments to say what they might want to say regarding the spirit of Empire day and the future empire and what the dominions have done in the war, especially in view of the conference in London which closed yesterday.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Acting Prime Minister): I shall make a note of what my hon. friend has said and take it into consideration. May I say that my hon. friend sent his question to me. I have not the slightest reluctance in connection with a matter of this kind, but I say to him, and I think the house will agree, that I think we can make the best contribution to the empire and the commonwealth by getting on just as fast as possible with the business of the house. I think none of us would want to take too much time off to offer what might be regarded in some quarters as lip-service, even though it would be most sincere, in view of the job that is necessary to be done in order to carry on the war.

Mr. CHURCH: A little education on what the empire is and means is badly needed right in war time in this house.

WAR APPROPRIATION BILL

PROVISION FOR GRANTING TO HIS MAJESTY AID FOR NATIONAL DEFENCE AND SECURITY

The house resumed from Thursday, May 18, consideration in committee of a resolution to grant to His Majesty certain sums of money for the carrying out of measures consequent upon the existence of a state of war—Mr. Ilsley—Mr. Bradette in the chair.

PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

Pensions branch—

Treatment and pension examinations—members and ex-members of the armed forces (present war), $9,000,000.

Mr. FAIR: Mr. Chairman, questions affecting the Department of Pensions and National Health are the most important we have to consider at the present time outside of winning the war. Our men and women who are over there doing the fighting must be taken care of after they come back, and I feel that this house and Canadians as a whole will be neglecting their duty if adequate provision is not made for them.

A number of vitally important questions have been discussed in this debate, and it is not my intention to go into them in detail to-day because I think the minister realizes how important they are. I shall take just a few moments to add my words in support of those that were spoken yesterday on behalf of the members of our armed forces.

One of the points I wish to emphasize has to do with preenlistment conditions. We find that a number of men who are discharged from the services are not fairly dealt with because of their categorization upon discharge. When a man goes into the army and undergoes all the examinations he has to have before he can get very far in the service, and then is discharged and put in a lower category, the government of this country should be responsible for taking care of him.

Another question that was brought up yesterday and is deserving of consideration is the setting up of health centres for restoring to health the men when returning from overseas. It has been pointed out that in eastern, central and western Canada we have those health centres. I want to say a few words here for the prairie provinces. I think most of the members realize that we have an invigorating climate in the prairie provinces that does wonders for the health of those who have been accustomed to living there, and I would urge upon the minister that he see to it that a health centre is established in at least one of the three prairie provinces.

The removal of the insurance principle from the Pension Act in 1940 is doing a grave injustice. I would strongly urge that that principle be reinstated, and, further, that it be made retroactive to the time it was taken out of the act—because, as was pointed out yesterday and has been repeatedly pointed out on different occasions, grave injustices have been done to the men, their wives and families, because of the removal of this protection. The only reason I can see for ever taking that clause out of the act was to save money to the treasury. It has been demonstrated that we have plenty of money with which to recruit these men, to train and equip them, to feed and transport them to and from the war area, and I cannot see any valid reason why adequate pensions should not be provided for them when they return. On more than one occasion since the war broke out the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have expropriated, if I may use that word, one of the slogans of the social crediters and told us that what is physically possible must be made financially possible. I contend that Canada can provide adequate pensions for her returned men, and if it is physically possible to do that, it is financially possible. There is another slogan: Give us the tools and we will finish the job. I think we have all the tools and all the requirements necessary to provide the things that are needed for our returned men. Let us see that the job is finished in proper fashion.

Mrs. CASSELMAN: Mr. Chairman, the estimates before us are of the utmost importance to the men and women in our armed forces, and through them to all of us in Canada. We have legislation that is broad in its scope and splendid in its application, although there are criticisms made in which I join; nevertheless the legislation stands as very broad in its scope. But no legislation alone, no matter how good, can give to our veterans that respected place in the life of our country which we feel is their due and which we so earnestly desire that they should have. To attain that place there are two things that are beyond the reach of legislation. There must be, first, an understanding appreciation from us who remain at home, especially from those in the veteran's own family circle. That is where women have a job which no one else can do, and which no legislation can achieve.

Secondly, much depends upon the veteran's own adaptability in taking advantage of the opportunities offered to him in fitting himself again into the life of the community and of the nation. Neither of these conditions is easy to fulfil.

The soldiers, many of them, left as boys. They come back as men. Without war, their outlook would have changed during these years from adolencence to manhood. With war, they have still more far-reaching problems of readjustment, both mental and emotional. Let us never forget when dealing with individual cases that these men are fundamentally sound in their approach to life, but may need time in which to regain their civilian equilibrium. The girls they left behind them are women now and are taking a very real part in Canada's war effort, some in uniform, many in industry or on the farm, and some just continuing that tremendously important work of looking after the homes and the children. They, too, have a different outlook. It seems to me that we need all the patience we have and all the tolerance and understanding possible in making adjustments in our homes and on a national scale. I repeat that the men and women are fundamentally sound. The more quickly the returned men come back into the stream of ordinary everyday activities, of their own volition—and individually that may take a little time—the more quickly will the invisible scars of battle be healed. We honour them, men and women, and they know that we honour them. We, who are the thousands of individual citizens, must do our part to give every opportunity for readjustment. Now that, Mr. Chairman, is beyond legislation. But there is much that is within the scope of legislation. That is why I find the broad lines for reestablishment so satisfactory. Oh, I know that there are places where changes are needed. Members from all sides of the house have given advice along these lines and the minister knows how untiringly I have taken up individual cases as well as policies with him and the members of his department. These matters are under review. Some have already been corrected, and consideration will be given to others.

But the training facilities, educational and vocational, are the best forms of reestablishment that can be given. Here is provision for the student, the artisan, the skilled worker, the labourer, the farmer, to master the tools of his trade. He will be put in a good position to carry on through the coming years and to catch up, as much as possible, with developments. I shall not take time to review all the opportunities offered. There seems to be something for almost every case.

I am particularly gratified that we have extended the principle of allowances paid for wives and children into the post-war period. Regular service dependents' living allowances are made during the training period, whether educational or vocational training is taken, and allowances are paid during the time that returns are awaited. This is of tremendous significance. It fits the income more directly to the need. It breaks down some of the resistance or disinclination to going back to school. That will not be easy, you know. It recognizes the contribution made by women and children to the war effort and to the life of the nation. That same right to allowances applies if a veteran needs hospitalization for war wounds in later years. The policy is of great importance in our progress towards raising the standard of living.

Right now may I pay tribute to the women who have taken on unusual responsibilities outside of their homes and whose work was praised by the Minister of Labour last week; also to the home makers whose work has remained much the same in raising their families and in making life happy for their men folk. Sir William Beveridge has said this:

> In any measure of social policy in which regard is had to facts, the great majority of married women must be regarded as occupied on work which is vital though unpaid, without which their husbands could not do their paid work, and without which the nation could not continue.

Homemakers take part just as much as office and professional workers in the life of the community. Their horizon is not limited. They are interested in public affairs. The walls of a house do not confine the mind. We claim the right to be full partners in a free country. What affects the men affects in almost equal measure the women.

The lines of Canadian policy were laid down early in the war, were altered and improved upon, and will be still further improved upon as the weeks go by. It is interesting to note that the United States congress is now debating some of the plans which were settled policy with us some time ago. For instance, I have here a cutting from a Philadelphia paper which contains this paragraph, under dateline Washington, May 7, 1944:

> Topping the house programme is the "G.I. Bill of Rights", passed by the senate before the Easter recess and rewritten by the house veterans committee. Debate starting Thursday is expected to centre on proposals for unemployment compensation and educational benefits for discharged men and women.

These are things we already have in Canada.

> The senate voted for 52 weeks of unemployment pay at rates varying with family status from $15 to $25; the house committee cut this to 26 weeks and set a flat compensation of $20. The committee also rewrote the education provision and in doing so drew the fire of educational leaders who assailed the action as a menace to educational freedom.

Thus they are taking up a line which already is our settled policy. The lines of our policy are the lines recommended at the International Labour Organization conference in Philadelphia, which I had the privilege of attending this month. This twenty-sixth session of the I.L.O. will go down in history as one of the most important discussions ever to be undertaken, by delegations from forty-one countries, representing government, employers' and workers' groups. In the historic city of Philadelphia, where the Bill of Rights was written for the American nation and where the first United States Congress held its meetings from 1780 to 1790, was written a new Philadelphia bill of rights for international justice and prosperity.

One of the ten committees there dealt with reestablishment of veterans. I am glad to say that the Canadian delegation was in agreement with almost every part of that policy. It was stated very much on the lines of our own established policy. It asked for training. It emphasized that the best reestablishment policy is the one which puts the returned man in a position to hold his own in civilian life, with training and retraining, and pay and allowances to provide for that period.

As you know, there were three groups of delegates from each country participating—government, employers and workers. Each expressed the greatest determination and anxiety to see fair play for the returned men. Sometimes they differed as to the means to be used, but the objective was the same. I wish you might have heard Mr. Tomlinson, head of the government delegation from the United Kingdom and joint parliamentary secretary of the British ministry of labour and national service, tell what is being done there for amputation cases, for example. He said that no man need fear that he would not be given all the care humanly possible and the appliances to fit him for work again. He himself had seen men who had lost both hands and both legs, taking their part in rehabilitation exercises. I wish our minister would take the time to tell us what Canada is doing along that line. When it was suggested that a clause be deleted from the recommendations which asked that a quota of amputation cases be included in factory payrolls, it was an employer who spoke for his group and asked that the clause be left there. He said employers were anxious to give all cooperation to reestablish those disabled, that the best ones would anyway, and that by such a provision the careless employers would realize their obligation.

We are glad that at Edmonton the military hospital facilities have been extended. We are also pleased that government house may be taken over as a convalescent home. I hope the minister will tell us something more of the progress which has been made there and as to what is contemplated in the near future.

We have heard many criticisms of the policy that Canada is following, and we do want some alterations. When I was home at Easter I met with ex-servicemen, and we discussed complaints. There were many. I am taking them up with the department. They told me also that they had written to express their opinion to Mr. Woods. I have here a copy of a letter which was sent to Mr. Woods, and as that letter is in direct opposition to some of the things I have heard I would like to read it to you:

> 616 McLeod Building,
> Edmonton, Alberta,
> March 31, 1944.
> Walter S. Woods, Esq.,
> Associate Deputy Minister,
> Department of Pensions and > National Health,
> Ottawa, Canada.
> Dear Mr. Woods:
> At the weekly meeting of this committee held on the 29th instant Mr. W. R. McLaren, welfare officer here, attended our meeting and gave our committee a most informative and interesting account of the procedure laid down by your department upon general demobilization of the armed forces and particularly regarding casualties; also as to rehabilitation.
> At the close of this discussion our committee unanimously resolved that this letter should be written to you expressing the appreciation of our committee as to the apparent care and trouble which has been taken by your department regarding this procedure and also to say that the committee realizes that your department is keeping a very open mind to suggestions regarding discharge and rehabilitation.

With kindest personal regards, I am

Yours sincerely,

S. C. S. Kerr,
Chairman,
Edmonton Ex-Service Men's Rehabilitation Committee.

That committee has on it representatives of the Amputations Association, Army and Navy Veterans Association, British Imperial Comrades, Canadian Corps Association, Canadian Legion B.E.S.L. No. 24, Canadian Legion B.E.S.L. No. 27, the Red Chevron club, and also representatives of the central committee of the women's auxiliaries in Edmonton. It is therefore, as you see, a comprehensive body.

Here is another little extract, from the Edmonton Journal, April 15, 1944, which I should read. It deals with an address given in Vermilion and is as follows:

Says Canada's War Pension Plan Best

Vermilion.—War pension system in Canada is regarded by S. C. Heckbert, provincial president of the Canadian Legion, as the "best in the world". He said so at a dinner meeting of the Legion branch here this week in celebration of Vimy, with more than 100 ex-servicemen, their wives, and members of the ladies' auxiliary present.

Recent legislation by the dominion parliament, said Mr. Heckbert, has facilitated rehabilitation of servicemen and had provided in some measure for the education of those who had dropped their own educational plans or civilian work to enlist for the war. He pointed out, however, that citizens in general have direct responsibility in facing post-war problems.

We are faced with a good many problems—new problems, such as were mentioned by the Minister of Justice this afternoon, pressing problems arising out of casualties overseas, the absence of the men overseas, and all these different things. But I was impressed at Philadelphia with how much greater problems the occupied nations face than we do. The depth and magnitude of the problems confronting these people are far beyond ours. They have our difficulties, and many more peculiar to themselves—armed enemy forces in their own country, all these atrocities and other terrible episodes of which we read. In talking, for instance, to one of the members of the delegation from Luxembourg he said, speaking of conditions in his own country, that Luxembourg has been incorporated into the German state, and that their men were being conscripted and sent to fight on the Russian front; that hundreds of their men had fallen already, fighting side by side with the Germans against the Russians. It seems to me that that is about the bitterest touch of all—to have to fight with your enemies against your friends. We do not have to face such problems, thanks to the magnificent stand made in our behalf as well as theirs by our allies, and thanks also to the courage, the endurance and the heroism of our own men. We must see to it that we do all we can in the way of rehabilitation and reestablishment and carry on the policy with vigour and with understanding.

Mr. HAZEN: A number of new and valuable suggestions in the interests of the members of our armed forces have been made during the discussion of this item by several members of the committee. I was particularly impressed by the suggestion made by the member for Vancouver South that our Pension Act be amended to include a provision similar to that contained in the British regulations, which provide, first, that it shall be presumed that a man's condition as recorded on his admission to the service was in fact his condition at that time, and second that it shall be presumed that any deterioration in a man's condition after his admission is due to his service.

These presumptions would of course be presumptions of evidence and would be rebuttable; but in my opinion they would make for justice and fair play. It happens too often that a man who is admitted to the armed services and who passes his physical and medical examinations and is qualified as A-1, on applying for pension is informed that he is suffering from a preenlistment disability, or a preenlistment ailment. Such a finding hardly makes sense, and it is a reflection, it seems to me, on the army doctors who made the examinations when he was admitted into the service.

I was interested recently in a case in which a man who had been classified as A-1 afterwards contracted a disease and applied for pension. When he went before the board he was informed that his ailment was of preenlistment origin. He went before a second board and that board said that his ailment was not of preenlistment origin but had developed during his service, though not in the course of his duty. He then went before the appeal court and they granted him a pension. If our act contained a provision similar to the British regulations I do not think that inconsistent findings of this kind would have been made. An amendment such as is proposed would clarify the procedure. It would help the board to carry on its work and make its findings and would assist members of the armed forces, who are obliged to apply for pensions, to obtain those pensions when they are entitled to them. I would urge upon the minister that he accept the suggestion of the member for Vancouver South and recommend that this provision of the British regulations be inserted in our Pension Act.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: At the risk of tiring the committee by repeating what has already been said, I wish to refer for a few moments again to Christie street hospital. I do so because that institution is of vital importance to a large number of my constituents, those who returned from the last war and families of those who are serving in this one.

Yesterday a minor attempt was made in the house to determine which of the two older political parties was responsible for Christie street hospital being where and what it is. I submit that it is no longer a question of party responsibility and that nothing can be gained by attempting to assign that responsibility to one party or the other. The fact is that that hospital to-day, notwithstanding all the improvement that has been introduced, notwithstanding the excellent quality of help and the calibre and ability of the medical men who are serving there, remains a disgrace to this government and to every former government that has had any part in maintaining it where it is. The choice of the hospital in the first place and the continuance of it now, as well as the attempt to make it apparently a permanent hospital, does no credit to any government or to any political party. In my opinion it shows a callous disregard of the welfare of the personnel of our armed forces who are unfortunate enough to require hospital treatment.

No amount of money, no amount of improvement, no amount of devotion on the part of the employees, no amount of skill on the part of the doctors, can ever make that hospital a satisfactory one for the returned men so long as it remains where it is to-day. The only way in which it can be made satisfactory, standing where it does, would be by the introduction of an enormous clearance scheme which would move the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway tracks, which would move the steel yard situated right across the road, and which would move the factories situated within a few feet of the hospital.

Mr. MacNICOL: And still there would not be a park at hand.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: Unless homes and other buildings were demolished and parks created there would be no park space for the patients in the hospital. As has already been stated, the hospital is situated on a factory site. As a matter of fact, the old original hospital was I believe a biscuit factory at the time it was taken over. It is situated seventy-five feet from the right of way of a through freight line of the Canadian Pacific. It is situated beside a number of sidings and switches, and it is immediately across the street from steel yards where cranes and donkey engines are operating all day long, and all night long as well, with the aid of searchlights.

The wards are overlooked on two sides by a factory and a warehouse and on a third by this steel yard. The building, originally a factory building, is a fire trap. Any visitor to the hospital can discover that wooden floors were originally laid on the steel beams. As other members have pointed out, there is much in the building that is easily destructible by fire. Because of the noise, the sickest and most helpless patients are usually located on the top storey of the building, and if there were ever a fire in that building considerable difficulty would be experienced in getting many of these helpless patients down from the top floor.

I cannot understand, nor can anyone who has any connection with that hospital understand, why that building was ever retained as a military hospital. I am confident that the public served by it, both military and civilian, would have supported the government wholeheartedly if it had demolished the building and used the funds that have been expended from time to time to extend and improve it to build another hospital in a more suitable place. Of course the minister has given us various explanations from time to time for not having followed that procedure. Once he blamed it on the difficulty of getting building material, a matter which he said was not under the control of the Canadian government alone but which concerned the United States government as well. I do not believe anyone in this country will accept that as a reasonable excuse for not having taken steps to provide new hospital accommodation early in this war, when the government must have known that large numbers of men would be brought back here for treatment. I say this because I do not think we can blame the United States people, the United States government or anyone other than our own government.

The contrast between the situation in the United States and the situation in regard to Christie Street hospital is very clearly brought out by an excerpt from the "Journal of the American Medical Association" dated October 30, 1943, and an excerpt from the Toronto

Telegram dated December 14, 1943, both reprinted in the News of December 18, 1943. The quotation from the United States publication is as follows:

The Schick general hospital, formally opened on October 7, is located three miles north of Clinton, Iowa. It has a capacity of 1,514 beds and 103 separate structures. The grounds consist of 89·6 acres of land. There are a chapel, laundry, post exchange, post office, ambulance service, recreational facilities and air conditioned operating rooms. Prior to the formal opening there were 2,687 patients admitted, of whom 674 were operated on. The first patient was admitted on February 15, 1943. . . . On the day of the opening there were 1,175 patients in the hospital, representing every overseas theatre of operation. The allotment of nurses is 120 and of enlisted men 512. These men are being trained as operating room, X-ray and laboratory technicians, as well as ward attendants. The project represents an investment of more than $6,000,000.

That is a report on the treatment given United States soldiers by the government of that country, fourteen months after the United States entered the war. The article reprinted from the Telegram is as follows:

Instructions have been received from Doctor R. E. Wodehouse, deputy minister of pensions and national health, ordering the whole administration staff of Christie Street hospital, numbering 165, to find other quarters at the earliest possible date, so that the hospital ground floor can be made ready for casualties returning from Sicily and Italy.

The ground floor will accommodate 140 beds, and 200 others will be placed in one-storey huts to be erected on the hospital grounds immediately.

That was four years and three months after Canada went to war. I trust that when he speaks the minister will give us an account of just what is being done at Christie street hospital to-day. Apparently it is the intention of the government to retain this hospital as a permanent institution. That is regrettable, and I am sure is not the wish of the public who are served by the hospital. I trust that the minister will tell us also what progress has been made with the new hospital that is to be built at Sunnybrook. Reference has been made already to the delay in this connection. Possibly the minister will be able to give us some good news; perhaps plans have progressed much further than would be indicated by a visit to the proposed site of the hospital. Certainly we should be pleased to hear that steps are being taken to facilitate the construction of this new institution.

I support the suggestion already made that it is time the Pension Act and the regulations under it were brought before this parliament for examination and discussion. I am confident that every hon. member of this house will agree that improvements being made now, including some which were made in the order in council brought down last week, in fairnesss to the men who served in the last war should have been made twenty years ago. I am confident that if the regulations under that act came into this house for discussion, and hon. members were free to vote as they wished, some of those regulations would be changed. I am confident there are regulations in effect to-day which would not receive the support of a majority of hon. members of this house if they could be discussed in this chamber without hon. gentlemen opposite being required to support the government.

I have brought many cases to the attention of the minister, and I want to compliment him and his officials on the way they have been dealt with. In the three sessions I have been in this house every case I have brought before the minister or any official of his department has been given prompt attention. I have found them ready at all times to investigate cases, and in every instance where regulations permitted, some relief has been provided. I am satisfied that those who are responsible for administering the act go just as far as they possibly can, under existing regulations, to relieve injustices that exist.

But the point is that there are still regulations which in many individual cases result in injustice. I am sure there is not a member of the house who has not secured for one or more great war veteran an alleviation of difficulties under which he or they may have been suffering, by bringing such cases to the attention of the minister or his department. That is good; but there must be vast numbers of people whose cases are not brought before the minister or his department. I suggest it should not be necessary for great war veterans or present war veterans to have to bring their cases to the attention of members of parliament to have injustices ironed out. The machinery of the government, and of this department in particular, should be such that, not all, probably, but a great number of such cases should be handled automatically.

In this connection I wish to cite one example. A young airman, after serving 210 days, was discharged while still in hospital. Under the regulations his wife and family were allowed dependents' allowance for 210 days. Incidentally he remained in hospital for that period, and is still there. When the 210 days expired about the middle of March the allowance was cut off. The wife and two children have had no income from that time. He was cared for in the hospital. Apparently the pension board had that case under review, since the man was discharged and turned over to the Department of Pensions and National Health. On Tuesday morning of this week I received a letter in reply to one I had written the minister in which I had called his attention to this case. His letter informed me that there was nothing the department could do for the airman in question. The regulations do not permit the granting of any allowance after the expiration of the 210 days. It was pointed out that the case was before the pension board, and that until that board reached a decision nothing could be done. I then telephoned other officials, and learned that the pension board was meeting that afternoon. Those to whom I spoke were good enough to assure me that the case in question would come before the board. The next morning I received word that after reviewing the case the board had granted the wife an allowance of $68 a month. The case is settled satisfactorily.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That would be under section 11 (3), would it not?

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: I believe that in time the pension board would have reviewed this case. The point is, however, that this was a man who had been discharged for nearly nine months, during the last two months of which his wife and children had received no support by way of allowances. My criticism is that that sort of thing should not be possible. There should be machinery to take care of situations of the kind. I am not taking credit for securing an adjustment in the instance to which I have referred. I have no doubt the pension board would have reviewed the case at its meeting on Tuesday afternoon. Probably it was on the agenda, and would have been dealt with. But the point is that it had stood for six months without adjustment, and apparently such adjustment did not take long, once the matter was placed before the board.

Then, there are other regulations in addition to those dealing with the granting of allowances for the length of time a man has served. There is the deduction made from allowances when a veteran is in hospital—and I presume this will apply to men in the present war. Because the hospitalization charges are high, and the government incurs considerable expense on that account, when the veteran is discharged he finds that his veteran's allowance is reduced, and several months must elapse before he catches up in his account. It seems to me the cost of hospitalization should not be calculated as a part of a man's income, under the veterans' allowance legislation.

Then, of course, there are questions connected with the ceiling on earnings. I am confident that if some of those regulations came before the house they would be revised. I do not think there is a member representing any constituency who would want to stand by some of the regulations.

Reference has already been made to pre-enlistment difficulties. I have said before, and I now repeat, that I think it is about time we accepted, for pension purposes, the medical status granted a man upon enlistment. If the doctors who examine him for the army are not able to locate those difficulties, then surely it is their fault and not that of the soldier. We must consider this whole question of taking care of the men and women who serve in the forces, and must accept the necessary expenditure as a part of the cost of war. We are not niggardly or parsimonious when it comes to buying tanks, ships, aeroplanes or any other type of equipment needed to carry on the war. But the human wreckage caused by the war is just as much a part of the cost as is the equipment used in the prosecution of the war. I believe we must take that attitude. Certainly it is to be hoped that no one returning from this war will be required over the years to suffer the injustices that thousands of those who returned from the last war have suffered.

Mr. CHURCH: For a few minutes this afternoon I should like to call the minister's attention to the hospital situation in Toronto. In doing so I do not offer any criticism of the minister, because, having seen him at Christie Street hospital last November 11, Armistice day, I believe I understand his feelings in the matter.

Several returns have been made respecting the situation at Christie street hospital. During the last war I was chairman of the hospital commission which had as members the late Thomas Bradshaw and the late Doctor Hastings, that great health officer. This commission sat during the last war and for four years following. At that time the same situation existed as exists in this war. At the present time there is a scarcity of hospital accommodation all over the north American continent. I do not know where a civilian in Toronto would go to get hospital accommodation; he might die for the lack of it at the present time.

I do not want to refer to the past, because the past is gone and there is no use crying over it. During the last war I criticized the hospital accommodation provided by the government which I supported, as well as by the present government. War conditions and lack of foresight are largely to blame for the existing hospital accommodation situation in Canada. A great many mistakes have been made in connection with the treatment of soldiers. During the last war we had the flu epidemic. I remember one young man who was secretary to Sir George Bury, vice president of the Canadian Pacific. He went down to the Jesse Ketchum school for a couple of days, where they had the manning pool to enlist, and then he was moved out to a camp. He arrived on a Monday and he was dead in ten days because of the terrible flu epidemic. He was only one of many hundreds who suffered. As a result of this they looked over the Toronto district for hospital sites. One on the lake shore road was considered, where the present Goodyear tire plant is built, but it was found to be too far out. There was no Hamilton highway at that time and the city did not own the street railway or the radial line, and doctors were then only on part time. Then the plant of the Canadian Kodak building was chosen as the site of the present Christie street hospital. It was surrounded by other factories. I represented that district in three parliaments and the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Roebuck) and the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol), who has done a great deal for the soldiers in that district, know the district quite well. It was decided to use that site as temporary accommodation. There was also the old base hospital closed up and vacant on Gerrard street, the old Toronto General. Some doctor members may recall that when they were students at the university. But that was not considered fit for civilians, so that I do not see why it should have been considered for soldiers. It was used temporarily and then it was decided to go on with Christie Street. That decision was opposed by the city officials and the hospital commission, but we could not do anything about it.

In two wars the city of Toronto has been very generous to the government in turning over property free of charge, and so have the school board and the university of Toronto. There is no university in Canada that has turned over more property than the university of Toronto. But the same situation still exists. I saw a train come in the other day and I saw a number of wounded men who had come back from Italy and other places. I do not know what the minister is going to do to provide accommodation for all these people.

Two or three returns have been made about Christie Street hospital. I suggest to the minister that he make a monthly statement as soon as possible about the progress of Sunnybrook hospital. He has made two or three statements which were very good as far as they went. I know that hospitals are not built in a day, or in a night either. It takes weeks and years to build them. As a constructive suggestion to the government I suggest that they consider erecting some temporary buildings along the waterfront in Toronto, or in the parks or exhibition grounds, as an emergency plan until the new hospital is ready. There are other buildings at the exhibition grounds, the Stanley barracks, for instance. I passed by Stanley barracks the other day and saw a building nearly twice the size of this chamber being used as a dining room for officers in that district. I am not criticizing that at all; no doubt it is needed. The horticultural building near the fountain at the exhibition grounds is a beautiful building. The 74th and 75th battalions were housed in this building during the last war and I believe it could be temporarily converted for hospital use at very small cost.

There are a number of private schools in Toronto. In the last war they took one of these schools, St. Andrew's college in Rosedale, and made it over into a hospital. Then there is the old lacrosse grounds which was carried on something like the M.A.A. in Montreal. There are a number of properties like that which the city no doubt would be willing to give to the government. I do not know about those in Rosedale, but I know the city is ready to help in providing urgent accommodation.

Since last session the government have acquired a number of properties. There is one now acquired at Scarborough, seven miles east of the Woodbine. This is a fine property on the lake front. Then there are properties on the island; the old sick children's hospital used to used. Any number of these places could be converted and could be used for at least four or five summer months in the year, if not longer, for convalescent homes. As I say, there are sites along the harbour and lake front upon which the government has spent some money and upon which the city spent on harbour development $25,000,000 or $30,000,000. There is plenty of land available, and with the equipment and construction branches the department and the army, navy and air force have, these temporary buildings could be made very comfortable until the larger policy of modern hospitals is carried out. The Toronto East general hospital was started as a city hospital by the late Doctor Hastings. It is located in the east end of the city. A wing containing 200 rooms was taken away from civilians and given over to government use.

No doubt it was absolutely necessary and the possibility is that the government may take over the whole building.

The duty of the government is to look after its soldiers first, but something will have to be done also for the civilians. You cannot have them out on the street Many of these people are the wives, the parents and children of soldiers overseas. The Minister of Public Works made a statement the other day about Sunnybrook. I hope there will be no delay in completing this hospital. As one who has a great deal to do with the building of public buildings I know that they are not completed over night; tenders must be called for, and all this takes time.

It is said that the completion of this hospital is held up because of the difficulty in getting equipment. The board of education in Toronto are trying to build a new wing to Riverdale collegiate as well as make additions to other collegiates and schools, including Perth Avenue in the riding of the hon. member for Davenport. The school board are trying to carry out an extensive programme but they are held up because they cannot get equipment. What is the use of talking about building houses, now castles in the air, when you cannot get the necessary building equipment? You cannot get the necessary equipment for private or public hospitals.

As I say, there are a number of private schools in Toronto as well as other properties which are exempt from taxation. Some of these could be taken over by the government and used as a means of temporarily tiding over this acute hospital situation. The necessary accommodation could be provided for soldiers and civilians alike. Something must be done immediately before the winter comes along. I do not know where we are going to be with things coming along as they are.

I think a lot has been done by the minister's department in the past six months on temporary accommodation, but there does not seem to have been much progress made on Sunnybrook. The transportation commission are willing to provide street railway services as soon as the tracks are laid. They have buses now which could go right to the door of the hospital. I have been told that the men and their families do not want to be away from the city, they want to be where proper transportation is available. The minister should inform the public monthly as to what progress is being made. I suggest that he should make a monthly report. I believe I have explained this whole situation in a fair way. The municipal services, such as light, power and transportation, can be provided immediately, if the government will lead the way. The province has also offered a lot of buildings but I think that still more buildings can be used.

I had not intended to make these remarks this afternoon, but I hope that a progress report will be issued by the minister. I do hope that something further may be done to bring about in the Pension Act as in 1940, a national insurance scheme or one separate entirely from the Pension Act. I hope that when the war is over we shall not have the situation we had after the last war. This is a citizens' army of our young people overseas, and when they come back we do not want them to have to go to a commercial bank for a loan and have it refused them or have someone endorse a note for a couple of hundred dollars to enable them to start up a small grocery or a small manufacturing business of their own. The Macmillan report as I read it places this function on the Bank of Canada, I believe that the first duty and function of the Bank of Canada is to see that our soldiers when they return from the front will be able to get such credit, and I hope that provision will be made accordingly. I also trust that the minister will bring in amendments to the Pension Act embodying the constructive suggestions that have been made and that provision will also be made so that a soldier can get the small amount of capital he requires to start up in business for himself.

Mr. PERLEY: Mr. Chairman, I think you have been pretty generous in allowing this discussion to go far afield. I think that much of the discussion yesterday was out of order.

I want to associate myself with one or two of the many constructive suggestions that have been made. I refer particularly to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Vancouver South that the minister bring in amendments to the Pension Act so that the onus will not be on the returned man to make application for pension but rather on the government to prove that the man is not eligible for pension. The status of a man before his enlistment is also worthy of consideration.

A good deal has been said with regard to hospitals and hospitalization. We have heard about Christie Street hospital almost every day, and if there is any way of settling that problem to the satisfaction of some of the Toronto members I do hope that the minister will do it. The hon. member for Melfort suggested decentralization of hospitals and hospital services. I think that that too is worthy of consideration, so that when the men return they may be able to secure hospitalization in the part of the country from which they came. I think that would be well worth while. Suggestions were made as to where certain health centres should be located. I am never backward in making suggestions to the minister with respect to my own bailiwick or my own part of the country. Might I remind him that at Fort Qu'Appelle there is one of the finest sanatoria in western Canada, and it is doing splendid work. It is second to none, I was going to say, in Canada. A convalescent home in the Fort Qu'Appelle district for men who do not require complete hospitalization but rather a rest home would be ideally located.

I am sure we are all anxious to do everything in our power for the returned men and appreciate our responsibility to them. I agree entirely with what the hon. member for Edmonton East said this afternoon when she spoke of the responsibility of the people at home. I think we all realize what the men will expect of us when they do return home.

I received just to-day a letter from a doctor who has been overseas four years. I shall not read it, but I wish some of the members would read this letter because it shows what is taking place in the minds of the men overseas. He says that the men hardly know what is going on in Canada now because they have been away from their homes and families for so long and have been doing nothing but training and getting ready to fight. He said that some of them were not very much concerned about Canada now, that all they were interested in is fighting and winning this war. This letter goes to prove that the men will come back in a very different frame of mind. He said that they are most interested in meeting men who have come back to Canada and then returned overseas, but he says that after hearing the story of these men they seem to be more confused than ever because of the reports they bring about the conditions back home.

The minister will recall that when the estimates of the Minister of Labour were before the committee I brought up the question of training ex-service men in schools and getting them prepared to start up in business for themselves. I trust that these schools will be continued, although some have not been successful, and some were started with a misunderstanding. I see the minister is smiling a little, but there was certainly a misunderstanding on the part of the men attending one school, as I think the minister was quite willing to admit. I think he is willing to see that justice is done to these men. It is a splendid thing to establish these schools where men can fit themselves for entering a new line of business. Many of our men went overseas when they were still young and had never been in business. It will be difficult for them when they come back to decide what line of business they want to follow.

I am pleased to note that some of the suggestions that have been made by the members of the opposition within the last two or three years have been implemented in amendments to the Pension Act. I am glad that the minister has seen the merit of those suggestions.

I do not want to rehash what was said yesterday. The hon. member for Trinity, referring to the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough, said that he was just threshing old straw. Personally I do not think the hon. member for Trinity would know straw if he saw it. I think the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough made a most constructive speech and I hope that many of his suggestions will receive the consideration of the minister and be implemented, even though they may not have carried much weight with the hon. member for Trinity.

I said, Mr. Chairman, that I was going to take only five minutes, and my time has almost expired. I think a man can say as much in five or ten minutes as some say in forty minutes. We all want to get on with the business of the house, so that I shall say no more.

Mr. MacNICOL: Mr. Chairman, I too shall follow the good example set this afternoon and speak very briefly. I come from a riding with more enlistments both in the last war and this than any other riding in Canada, I was going to say, but I will say more than any other riding that I know of. The riding is settled pretty largely by old country folks who have enlisted in great numbers in this war, as they did in the last. During the last fifteen years I have had a great deal to do with bringing to the attention of the department the troubles of many returned soldiers, and I am happy to say as regards the vast majority of cases I have no complaint as to the way they were finally treated. I did not get all I tried to get, or all that the men for whom I was speaking asked for, but in the great majority of cases relief was given. So that I cannot, so far as my own experience goes, find too much fault with the department. In the course of these years I have noted some points which might be considered with benefit by the department in looking after the soldiers coming back from the present war.

A number of the cases with which I was concerned had to do with soldiers who were captured and held in prison camps in Germany. I suggest that the department should make every effort, of course through neutral sources, to get particulars as to the treatment of our prisoners in German camps and the effect upon them of the conditions there, and that they should make similar observations of their own concerning German soldiers in prison camps in Canada, so that the effects of prison life on soldiers may be more exactly determined. I have had to deal with many men who were, and in my judgment are yet, suffering from prison camp life in Germany. Undoubtedly the food was not what it should have been, and coupled with it, the fear of being shot, the desire to escape, all the unpleasant elements of prison life in the last war, could not fail to have had their effects. I hope the department will make a special effort in the way of ascertaining the effects of imprisonment upon the health of soldiers who are prisoners of war.

A great number of people whose physical condition was far from perfect have enlisted in this war. In many cases I took the trouble, even prior to their enlistment, to write to the authorities advising them that this man had very flat feet, that that man was subject to bronchitis, or one thing and the other, yet these men were enlisted and classed A-1. I can never understand how a man with a disability which even the ordinary layman can see and understand can be enlisted as A-1. After serving in the army for a year or more a number have been discharged. I wonder what is their position if, having been classed as A-1, they apply for a pension. The department will have records of the particular cases which I have had to deal with, and doubtless many more, and I assume that these records will be held up to these boys if they apply for pension. There is a great deal in the contention which has already been made that anyone who passes a medical investigation one hundred per cent should become the responsibility of the government, unless, of course, he subsequently commits some misdemeanour which disentitles him to consideration.

Everyone has had something to do with soldiers who, coming back physically fit or apparently fit, have refused to apply for a pension and have later become ill. Many men with whom I am well acquainted fell sick as a consequence, they claimed, of war disabilities, but not having applied for or accepted a pension they were refused admission to military hospital. I think a change for the better could be made there. Any man who served in France during the last war or has been on active service in this war, if he is discharged as one hundred per cent fit, should not be denied consideration if he later becomes ill and is not on pension. I do not believe there is a doctor living who can state positively and prove that a man upon discharge is one hundred per cent fit. If what I suggest is not in accordance with the act, there should be an amendment which will permit treatment of men of the class I have mentioned. I know many who fought in the trenches three or four years, who did not receive a pension when they returned, and who later, when ill, were refused admittance to a military hospital.

Another class of returned soldier with whom I have had a good deal to do is the imperial. In my part of Toronto, and no doubt in Victoria and Vancouver, where so many imperial soldiers went, there are many who saw long service in the British army and served during the whole of the last war. I have in mind a man who saw service in Turkey, at the Dardanelles, in Egypt and in India. Now, having taken ill out here, he cannot go to a military hospital, nor can he obtain a pension. I believe this has been mentioned by another hon. member, and I would add my plea that the department try its best to make some reciprocal arrangement with the British government, in order that imperial soldiers who have been out here five, ten, fifteen or twenty years shall be entitled to consideration in respect of pensions and hospitalization.

I am not going to say anything critical of Christie street hospital. Other Toronto members have spoken on the subject and I can add nothing to what they have said. I know that lately some improvements have been made, and I would suggest a further one—not with the intention that the government should continue to operate the place, but as they are going to keep it for a while there is no reason why they should not improve it. The elevator service is bad, as I know because of the frequent trips I make to visit people from my riding. It is just east of my constituency; in fact it is in a riding which at one time I represented. The government should put in escalators which would go at least from the ground floor to the first floor, where half the patients are located. I have seen elevators crowded repeatedly with the relatives and friends of patients. It would be much easier for visitors and it would not cost much to install an electric escalator so that people could go from one floor to the other without the inconvenience which they experience now.

I compliment the department on the taking over of the Red Chevron. It is on a hill, surrounded by fine grounds. I do not know how many it accommodates.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Two hundred.

Mr. MacNICOL: Well, that was a step in the right direction. While criticizing the department as regards one hospital I will give it credit for its action in taking over the Red Chevron; it is a mark in their favour. Then, I compliment the government for taking over the hospital built by—I say "built" advisedly, because he deserves more credit for it than anybody else—the hon. member for Danforth. I do not believe it would ever have been built but for his activities. He wanted me to take part in helping him get the building going, but I had not the time. He deserves unstinted praise for the part he has played. Just before he went away he told me that the department had been very good in taking off the hospital's hands a new wing of 200 rooms, so that there is another mark in the department's favour.

As regards Sunnybrook, after all that has been said about it, the only thing I can suggest is that the contracts be called as speedily as possible and the work undertaken with the greatest rapidity humanly possible. If there are cases in Christie street hospital that are not in danger of dying, but that require only daily or weekly medical attention, it would be nice if they could be moved to Toronto island in the summer and brought back in the fall. There is no finer place in the world than Toronto island. It would cost little, if buildings are not available, to put up suitable tents. The military department has ample tents, because if there were a great fire in Montreal or Halifax or Hamilton or anywhere else they would quickly find the tents. That is one place where summer comfort could be given to patients in Christie Street hospital.

Recently I had to do with a soldier returning from the present war. He had been in many actions, had been under fire and had been wounded. He was not discharged at the time I met him but was home. He was away without leave on several different occasions and as a matter of fact when I went to see him he was in the clink. While in the clink he told me he felt he had been ill-treated. He had been through a great deal, and the very place that he had served in, Dunkirk, was enough to throw anyone's nerves off colour.

I hope every effort will be made to give these boys who are coming back from such terrible and bloody experience the most considerate and sympathetic treatment possible, and if they commit a few misdemeanours there should be some other way of dealing with them than by putting them in the clink. At any rate, I would be chary of putting these boys in the clink, for they have offered themselves as a human sacrifice on our behalf.

Lastly, I hope that those who are returning from this war will be more frequently accorded the consideration intended by this House of Commons when it wrote into the present act that the soldier should be given the benefit of the doubt. He is in many cases, but I know of a number of cases in which he has not been given the benefit of the doubt.

Perhaps I should not now mention the next matter because I might be out of order, like my hon. friend the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) yesterday. I interjected a remark in the course of his speech. I should not have done so, perhaps, and I am sorry I did. At that time he was speaking on pensions for non-pensioned widows. All I am going to say is that I have been speaking on that subject in this house for years.

Mr. GRAYDON: You are the pioneer.

Mr. MacNICOL: Perhaps I am the pioneer in that regard, but I should not say anything about the subject under this item. I am sorry I interjected the remark I did yesterday. However, the hon. member and I will both have occasion to say something about it later on under the regular estimates.

Mr. GRAYDON: Before the minister rises to answer some questions that have been asked on the first item, may I say that a number of the members of our party would like to have spoken, endorsing many of the remarks that have been made; but being desirous of expediting matters, and not wishing to repeat too much of what has already been said in this debate, I am rising now to put our party's position on record in a very few minutes. I simply wish to say that while there were a number of planks in the Winnipeg platform dealing with war veterans' rehabilitation, there are two in particular which I should like to record at this moment in order to indicate the stand which our party took then and which it has continued to espouse. I refer to No. 4 in the war veterans' rehabilitation programme, in which our party called for:

Adequate pensions or compensation should be paid by the state on the "insurance principle" in the event of the death or disability of any man or woman serving in the armed forces. Unless death or disability results from actual misconduct, such compensation should be payable irrespective of the locality of service, and whether or not such person was engaged at the time in military duties.

May I go farther and mention one other plank in the Winnipeg platform with regard to war veterans' rehabilitation:

The Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act, or a measure similar in principle, should be made applicable to men and women discharged from service in the present war.

In addition to that, through the amplification of that programme at the annual meeting of the Progressive Conservative Association of Canada on March 3 last, certain clauses were drawn up with respect to matters which I think were properly mentionable at the time. There are three clauses in the amplified platform of ours which I should like to quote now. Two of them are short and do not come under the minister's department. I quote the first two:

That equal allowances to those received by wives should be granted by right to dependent mothers.

That in addition to an adequate clothing allowance, a generous scale of mustering-out pay should be paid to all the members of the armed forces on demobilization, based on services rendered.

The third clause comes directly within the purview of the minister's department, and it is one on which we feel keenly. Our party is prepared to battle for it because, in my opinion, it represents the kernel of the whole situation in regard to veterans' rehabilitation and the pensions problem. This appears in our record and I wish to put it on the record of the house.

That the presumption should be established that a man's condition as recorded on his admission to the service was in fact his condition at that time; and that any subsequent deterioration in his condition was due to his service. There should be no onus of proof on the claimant, and the benefit of any doubt should be given to the claimant.

In putting these clauses on the record I desire to associate those members of our party who have not spoken with the claim that is put forward in this programme.

In closing, I should like to impress this consideration upon the minister with regard to changes in the law, if one may put it in that way, which have been brought down by the minister in recent times. I suggest to him, as has been suggested before, that laws so important as these should not be a matter simply of order in council. They should be laws passed by the parliament of Canada and not simply by the executive power. With these remarks, may I suggest to the minister that he gives heed to the many suggestions that have been made in this debate. I think he will agree that the debate has been productive of many worth-while suggestions; and I hope that in consequence, from time to time, the government will be enabled to do a better job for that branch of our citizens who are entitled to have a better job done for them than any other section of the Canadian people.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I assure the minister that our group has endeavoured to do what the Progressive Conservatives have done. We have tried to reduce the number of our speakers to the minimum. The sentiments expressed by the two hon. members of our group who have spoken are the sentiments of the group as a whole, and I may add that we are in hearty accord with all the ideas expressed in the excerpts read by the leader of the Progressive Conservatives, with respect to the advances that should be made in the matter of pensions and allowances for returned men. We feel that Canada has not by any means done her full duty by these men. We are not particularly blaming the Minister of Pensions and National Health, but certainly there is a lack of social services in Canada and various other advantages which on the whole have borne heavily upon many of the men who fought in the last war.

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Pensions and National Health): I find myself in the rather invidious position either of not replying to the splendid and constructive suggestions to which I have listened for nearly two days now, or of placing myself under indictment for holding up my own estimates. However, I wish to agree immediately with the leader of the opposition that this has been a fine and constructive and, on the whole, cooperative debate, and I should like to assure hon. members of all groups and parties in the house that every suggestion of a constructive nature that has been advanced during this debate will be most carefully and sympathetically reviewed not only by the minister but by the officials of the department.

Before I come to deal briefly with some of the questions which were brought up in the course of the discussion with regard to pensions, treatment and rehabilitation, I wish to say a word about the suggestions made yesterday by some hon. members in regard to matters affecting the national health. The hon. member for Parkdale, the hon. member for Renfrew South, the hon. member for Portneuf and the hon. member for Medicine Hat all made what I consider valuable contributions in connection with this question. Emphasis was placed by the hon. member for Parkdale on the national menace in regard to venereal disease, and the hon. member for Renfrew South was able to point out that recently we had a national campaign, which I trust may have most fruitful results, to deal with this menace. The necessity of watching cases on discharge, in connection with this disease, was mentioned by the hon. member for Portneuf. I agree with the hon. member for Parkdale as to the wonderfully valuable service rendered to Canada by Colonel Williams, who happened to do his pioneering work in British Columbia. He did wonderful work for that province; since then he has done wonderful work for the dominion, and he is now becoming an international authority on this question, so that my fear is that he may be taken from us for service in larger spheres. The hon. member for Medicine Hat mentioned a recent typhoid epidemic in the west, and I can assure him that as far as the powers of the Department of Pensions and National Health go we shall pay very great heed to the suggestions he made yesterday.

The hon. member for Portneuf referred to the question of psychoneurosis, and mentioned one case by number. He rather conveyed the impression, if I followed him correctly, that there was a rigid bar against pensionability in cases of neurosis. I wish immediately to assure him and the committee that there is no such bar and that there never will be; that unless there is positive proof, as a result of the history of the case, that the psychoneurosis was a preenlistment condition, anyone suffering from the stresses and strains of battle would be pensionable, and that this would be the policy followed by the Canadian pension commission. I have reviewed the case to which he made reference, and without mentioning the name I find that following service in Canada and England this man was discharged on January 24, 1941, as medically unfit for further service because of anxiety neurosis. He was married, with seven dependent children. The record shows that in September, 1940, when hospitalized in England he gave a history of headaches, choking feelings and anxiety symptoms for the past seven years. He stated that the last time he felt really well was seven years ago, when a doctor told him that there was nothing serious but that he could not do anything for him. He was returned to Canada and admitted to Ste. Anne's hospital, where he stated that he had always been jumpy, high-strung and worried easily. Following treatment at Ste. Anne's he claimed that he was much improved and that he was practically as well as on enlistment. From a physical point of view he was reported as perfectly normal and treatment was terminated on February 7, 1941. The pension commission has ruled on first and second hearings that anxiety neurosis was preenlistment and not aggravated. When notified of the second hearing ruling on February 20, 1942, he was advised of his right to request a hearing before an appeal board of the commission. Since that time there has been no further correspondence. That may have been a very difficult case, but I wish to emphasize this, because it is most important that the impression should not go out that there is a rigid or an automatic bar against recognition of the pensionability of these neurosis cases.

During the course of the debate another suggestion was made by the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough and this afternoon by the hon. member for York South. In the course of their remarks they said something which I rather regretted—I will not say resented—when they called the hospital at Toronto a national disgrace. Well, Mr. Chairman, that is not a fact; it is not correct. We are now building, as hon. members know, probably the finest hospital in the dominion, but in Christie Street hospital will be found one of the ablest staffs, doctors and nurses and administrative staff, to be found anywhere in Canada. The strange thing is that patients who have been there, if they have a repetition of their disabilities, all want to go back to the same hospital. That is well known in the department. I know the situation is not ideal; I recognize that the location is not perfect, but this was a legacy which I inherited when I took up my duties in this department. We are now improving it; we have improved it very much this last year, and we are improving it still more, because in the ordinary course of events the new hospital cannot be ready for some time yet, and Christie Street will see us over the peak. There is no intention whatever of continuing it as a permanent institution, as some hon. gentleman mentioned this afternoon.

There has been some suggestion of delay, and some good friends of mine made facetious reference to the turning of the sod last Armistice day. I am glad to assure hon. members that the architects went to work immediately after the turning of the first sod and the presentation of the token deed to the department by the city of Toronto. I want to acknowledge publicly in this house the generosity, graciousness and cooperation of the city of Toronto in regard to Sunnybrook hospital. The complete plans and specifications for the first unit of 450 beds, plus service facilities for a much larger institution, will be ready so that tenders should be called for in June. On May 4 tenders were closed and on May 11 a contract was awarded to the Armstrong Construction Company of Brantford, Ontario, for the grading and preparation of the site.

Mr. GRAYDON: Are you sure that is not Brampton?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Well, it might equally well be the fine city so worthily represented in this house by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. The question of policy with regard to providing new hospitalization in Toronto for returning casualties involved a finely balanced decision. There were two schools of thought. The first was that temporary accommodation in the vicinity of the established Christie Street hospital should be provided, where new patients would have the benefit of the complete hospital service and equipment developed at that centre. The other school of thought believed that we should have a completely modern, new hospital on a more advantageous site. Each of these policies had its disadvantages. By the first we would have been investing further large sums in an admittedly unsuitable institution. By the second we incurred the risk of delay; for a new institution, equipped in all points, necessarily takes longer to provide and there was no point in establishing it in temporary huts or on a temporary basis. The second alternative had overwhelming public support, and has been adopted. Pending the development of these new facilities we have acquired the use of 200 beds in the East Toronto hospital, and we have removed a number of older veterans requiring permanent institutional care to the former Oddfellows home near Christie Street, now known as the Red Chevron, to which the hon. member for Davenport just made reference. In connection with the accommodation being provided by the East Toronto hospital I wish to express my appreciation of the cooperation of the hon. member for Danforth, who is now overseas.

Whatever may be said about the site and suitability of the Christie Street hospital buildings, that hospital is equipped with the most complete facilities for all-round clinical services to the sick and wounded members of our forces, and is served by the cream of the medical profession of the city of Toronto.

Having accepted the disadvantage of loss of time in getting the new hospital ready we have renovated and greatly improved the accommodation at Christie Street hospital, which must continue in use until the move into the new hospital can be made. One of the improvements is an increased provision of private and semi-private accommodation for seriously ill and post-operative cases. I think the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough referred to that yesterday.

As evidence that, despite certain handicaps, excellent treatment is being given to the patients, I should like to read a letter received only this morning from the father of a patient recently cared for in two of our departmental hospitals mentioned in yesterday's debate, namely Camp Hill and Christie Street. I am referring to this letter because it happened to reach me this morning. But I am happy to say that many such letters testify to the quality of service rendered by the staff in our departmental hospitals.

This letter reads as follows:

> My son has just returned to his home after a three-week stay in Philadelphia with relatives, to get some sunshine after four months in military hospitals.
> May I express to you, sir, my appreciation of the way in which he was treated in the Camp Hill hospital, Halifax, the Christie Street hospital, Toronto, and in the manner in which his case was treated, under the regulations with regard to discharges.
> He tells us that the food and conditions and care, and the medical attention given in the hospitals named, was without need for criticism, but rather much the reverse. For this we, his parents, are truly thankful as, owing to his severe case, he had a trying time.

So that, sir, is the situation in regard to Christie Street, and in regard to Sunnybrook.

A question was raised by one hon. member in regard to hospitalization accommodation. The answer is that as of April 17, 1944, we had operating 7,382 beds and space for 8,484 beds. We have under construction 430 additional beds, which will be operating by June. We have under construction 1,938 beds which will be operating by this autumn. We shall, therefore, enter the year 1945 with 9,750 beds operating. We have projected plans and specifications under preparation for an additional 4,214 beds which should be operating in December, 1945. We purpose providing 600 health and occupational beds in British Columbia and Ste. Anne's, for which we are still seeking a site, but which are approved in principle. This gives us a total bed capacity in 1946 of 14,600 beds, with the army operating or building a total of 15,000. We have not included in this the emergency beds which we have on hand to place in sun-rooms, and so on, if urgent for temporary periods. The combined figure would be 30,000.

I now wish to deal briefly with a question which has been mentioned by several hon. members, namely the insurance principle. I am now going to retrace the history of what has occurred in each country, so that every hon. member may be quite familiar with it. I wish to have on the record the situation all across the empire with respect to this insurance principle.

To take first the United Kingdom: Under amendments to the royal warrant passed in August, 1943, disability or death is accepted as due to war service if it is certified that (a) the disability is due to a wound, injury or disease which (i) is attributable to war services or (ii) existed before or arose during war service and has been and remains aggravated thereby; or (b) the death was due to or hastened by (i) a wound, injury or disease which was attributable to war service or (ii) the aggravation by war service of a wound, injury or disease which existed before or arose during war service.

No onus of proof is now on the claimant and the benefit of any reasonable doubt is given him. This is subsequent to what was mentioned yesterday by one hon. member. It will be seen, therefore, that while the insurance principle is technically not in effect for Great Britain, the provisions governing entitlement have been considerably broadened in favour of the applicant.

Then, with respect to the United States: The underlying principle would seem to be "line of duty" with modifications. The insurance principle does not apply there.

Then, for Australia: Disability or death must be directly attributable to having sustained a war injury. Special provision is made for tuberculosis. The insurance principle is not in force.

For New Zealand: Provisions closely resemble those of Canada. Pension is payable for death or disablement while on service overseas, or nevertheless attributable or aggravated by such service. When service has been in New Zealand only, the death or disablement must be actually due to service with the forces. Accidents or injuries while on leave are not pensionable. The insurance principle is not in force.

For South Africa: The insurance principle is not in force.

So that, after reviewing every single country of the commonwealth and the United States, the insurance principle as we have been advocating it here, and as we had it in Canada for the great war, is not to-day in force in any of these countries. I am not saying that because of that I am opposed to the insurance principle. It was discontinued because it was found that certain abuses arose early in 1940, abuses which were most regrettable. A change was made at that time, and the order in council of May 21, 1940 was adopted.

Then, as was stated by the hon. member for Vancouver South, this subject was most carefully reviewed before the committee on the Pension Act which sat in 1941. The present section 11(3) was placed in the act to meet needy cases, and has been most effective, in a commendable way. Although it is not equal to full recognition of the Pension Act, it has been most effective in solving questions which could not otherwise be met.

Mr. GRAYDON: The minister is not closing the door entirely, I hope.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Certainly not. The house has discussed pensions since 1920, and I like to hear the views of hon. members with respect to the question of the insurance principle. Let us remember that the Pension Act of this country was not the work of any one party, but rather was the joint effort of every part of the house. And I think we have built—I have said this before, and I am content that it be compared with that of Great Britain, or of the United States, or of any other part of the commonwealth—as a result of our joint effort, the finest Pension Act for any soldier in the whole world. There is no doubt about that—and I say that it has not been the work of any one party.

Mr. GRAYDON: The matter can still be considered?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That is what the house is for.

Then, in regard to present war pensions in payments, I have some figures which I shall submit. At the present time, March 31, 1944, there are 12,563, with an annual liability of $6,487,755. The following table will show the total disability awards to male members of the forces only:

Disability

	No.	Liability
Canada	1,729	673,744
Outside	5,416	1,991,933
Total	7,145	2,665,677

The same information for dependents is as follows:

Dependent

	No.	Liability
Canada	971	643,142
Outside	3,959	2,918,425
Total	4,930	3,561,567

The total of disability and dependent, as contained in the two preceding tables, is as follows:

Disability and Dependent

	No.	Liability
Total.....	12,075	6,227,244

The difference between these figures and the grand total is represented by awards to certain special classes outside the forces.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What are the figures respecting the applications for pensions for injuries within Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I would prefer it if my hon. friend would permit me to answer that when we reach the item.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: All right.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I shall now discuss the question of decentralization—and I am taking these points as rapidly as I can. This question was discussed by several hon. members during the course of the debate. Staff shortages were mentioned by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre last night. These two subjects can best be considered together. On account of the war we live in a time of shortages of man-power and of commodities of all kinds. Because of these shortages we have to make the greatest possible use of what is available. That is one of the reasons why it has been necessary to concentrate hospital services for members and ex-members of the forces in a comparatively small number of large hospitals. Another reason is that in large centres of population there are assembled groups of leading specialists in all branches of medical science. We employ these specialists on part-time salary.

As a result of having our hospitals close to large centres of population we are able to obtain for sick and disabled veterans the services of the leading specialists in Canada as and when they are needed. This would be much more difficult in a large number of widely scattered small hospitals. By centralization we raise the standard of medical services. The same consideration applies to the infinite variety of specialized hospital equipment. In times of scarcity it would be wasteful and probably impracticable to attempt to set up thirty or forty fully equipped small hospitals or hospital units. But in the small number of hospitals that we have it is possible to install complete equipment.

With respect to the staff problem we have experienced definite shortages, and our officials and employees in many cases have to do more work than we would ordinarily ask of them in normal times. The Department of Pensions and National Health is short in its medical establishment by seventy-three doctors, according to what I am told by our advisers. The situation, however, is not quite as bad as would have appeared from the figures correctly quoted by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The number of patient-days shown in the return from which he quoted includes the patients in approximately 1,320 beds in pensions department hospitals, which beds have been temporarily allocated to the armed services. These patients receive their medical attendance from service medical officers. These navy, army and air force medical officers who are in our hospitals attending to the service patients cooperate with the medical officers of my department by serving other patients who are on our own charge. The extent of this service cannot be stated statistically, but it is of material assistance.

Over and above that measure of cooperation, the armed services have placed additional medical officers at the disposal of the Department of Pensions and National Health, in numbers that vary from month to month. It is not possible to state exactly the number of service doctors thus giving full time to the department, but I am advised that thirty-seven would be a good estimate. In Camp Hill, where the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out that the number of doctors on the pensions and national health staff is actually less than it was in 1939, we have the full-time services of not less than five or six service medical officers. In Toronto this number is not less than fifteen.

The deficiency in our own staff is, therefore, largely made up by these two factors: first, the part-time services of medical officers assigned to care for service patients in pensions department hospitals and, second, the full-time services of approximately thirty-seven service medical officers assigned to duty in pensions hospitals.

Further steps are being taken to meet the shortage of doctors by advertising positions at higher salaries than have hitherto prevailed. Yesterday the hon. member for Renfrew South spoke about the low remuneration paid to these doctors, but I may say that we now have authority to offer as high as $6,500 a year to certain types of specialists. In addition, we have been advised of the possibility that some of the older medical officers with considerable periods of service overseas may shortly be replaced by younger men in the services, and thus made available for the care of patients returned to Canada and in our hospitals.

The question of private nurses was raised by the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough. Private nurses are assigned to seriously ill and post-operative cases whenever the medical officer considers it is necessary. When it is possible, nurses are selected from the hospital permanent staff, but when these are not available application is made to the nurses' registry. It is impossible to give the exact number of private nurses assigned because, when a member of the staff is placed on such duty, the incident is not necessarily a matter of record. The work is done as part of the regular duty.

I come now to a discussion of the question which was brought up, I think, by most of those who spoke yesterday, namely, the recent changes in the British regulations affecting entitlement. Several hon. gentlemen placed upon the record parts of a statement made by Sir John Anderson in London when the debate was on. The hon. member for Vancouver South read the first two paragraphs dealing with entitlement, but he overlooked the third paragraph which is vital and which relates more directly to preenlistment or A-1 condition than the other two. This is from the ministry of pensions, "Changes in War Pensions", page 2, paragraph 4:

> There remains to be considered the claim, "Fit for Service, Fit for Pension." This claim is inconsistent with the principle, which obtained in regard to the war of 1914-18 and has since been maintained, that there must be a causal connection between disablement and war service to enable a pension to be awarded. H.M. government reaffirms this principle and is accordingly unable to accept the claim, "Fit for Service, Fit for Pension." Its acceptance would mean that the minister of pensions would assume liability for a condition which became manifest at any time after the commencement of war service whether or not service had played a part in its onset or development. In the view of H.M. government a disablement in which war service has played no part should be dealt with under the ordinary social service provisions.

Although they have certainly broadened the provisions, according to the paragraphs mentioned yesterday by my hon. friend, they are far from admitting the claim, "Fit for Service, Fit for Pension."

Mr. GREEN: The minister must not misunderstand me; I did not advocate that.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): No; it was done by another speaker. Preenlistment origin is one of the most widely discussed questions in this debate. No discharged man is denied pension on the ground that his disability was of preenlistment origin unless there is positive evidence that that is the case. In many cases brought to my personal attention, I have found, upon inquiry from the commission, that the man has himself quite frankly stated that he had suffered injury or illness of the type in question prior to joining up. In other cases, precise hospital records have been brought to the commission's attention. There is no class of case, I am advised, in which the commission is more disposed to give the applicant the benefit of the doubt, and entitlement is denied only where the evidence is positive.

Much has been said about the careful examination given at time of enlistment. I am advised that, without disclosure of facts, no medical man can guarantee accurate diagnosis. In the medical examination at the time of enlistment, the medical man has to rely upon what can be observed by the various tests which are used and upon information from the recruit. If he withholds information or does not give truthful information, the medical officers may be misled. We all realize that it is not to a man's discredit if, in his anxiety to be of service, he refrains from disclosing some previous illness, the disclosure of which might debar him from service. It does not follow, from the view we may take of this action on the part of the recruit, that the country should undertake to provide pension for a disability which did not arise out of or even during military service.

I now wish to deal with the question raised by the hon. member for Vancouver South, that of accidents. Yesterday the hon. member referred to a statement by Sir John Anderson in the British House of Commons dealing with the policy of the British ministry of pensions as related to accidents sustained by members of the forces. Briefly, the statement was to the effect that His Majesty's government has decided that under war conditions accidents sustained, (a) whilst "walking out" in spare time; (b) whilst travelling to and from home on short pass; (c) whilst travelling to and from duty when living in accommodation privately arranged, can reasonably be regarded as attributable to service. The fourth category was accidents sustained whilst actually on leave.

In the latter cases His Majesty's government consider "the compulsions of service play no part and an accident sustained in such circumstances cannot properly be regarded as attributable to service". The Canadian pension commission advises me that with regard to members of the forces serving in Great Britain or anywhere beyond Canada the provisions of the Pension Act are more generous and provide full protection under section 11, subsection 1, of the act with respect to all such accidents. That is, accidents outside Canada.

Mr. GREEN: The British cover all accidents outside Great Britain.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The Pension Act provides two principles for dealing with disabilities which arise out of accidents to members of the forces in Canada.

(1) In respect of military service, during the war with the German reich, any part of which has been rendered outside of Canada, the Pension Act provides full insurance coverage for everything that happened during that man's service. If he is involved in an accident, compensation is paid for death or disability resulting from that accident and there need be no direct service causation of the condition. He is fully protected in regard to any disability which may result from an accident unless he was on leave of absence without pay at the time the accident took place—

Mr. GREEN: Is that in Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I am speaking of men who have served outside Canada—or unless, during his leave of absence with pay, undertaken an occupation which was unconnected with military service and the accident had arisen during the course of that occupation.

(2) In respect of military service which has been wholly rendered in Canada pension is awarded for disability or death resulting from an accident when the accident arose out of or was directly connected with military service.

The other clause had reference to service rendered partly in and partly out of Canada.

Mr. GREEN: That is the difference.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): While not providing full insurance coverage for all accidents that happen in Canada to members of the forces whose service is restricted to Canada only, this principle has a very broad application. While somewhat analogous to the conditions of workmen's compensation, the Canadian pension commission gives it a much broader application than the provincial workmen's compensation act and also a wider application than the United States phrase "in line of duty." It is not necessary that the injury should have been caused by some incident or occurrence peculiar only to the performance of military duty such as the discharge of a weapon or an accident while driving a military vehicle, but rather that the man should have been in the course of his service exposed to a hazard related to that service. For instance, any person engaged in games designed to improve the physique as a part of the training is entitled as of right to pension consideration for any injury so incurred.

The question of leave has been given careful consideration. A man returning from leave by an ordinary, legitimate method of transportation who suffers a fortuitous accident is undoubtedly entitled to pension consideration for any disability resulting therefrom, as is a man who is on living-out pass who suffers a similar accident going to and from his duty from his place of dwelling by proper means. Such cases have received favourable ruling from the pension commission.

A striking example is the Almonte train wreck, in which favourable consideration as of right was given to all members of the services who were killed or injured in that accident.

Another type of case is one in which the commission recognized death by drowning where the man, although not on a regular ordered bathing parade, was bathing with a group of comrades at a place which was allotted for such purpose and to which the men were encouraged to go during the warm weather when they were not on parade. It will be observed that the basis of entitlement under this section is that the accident must have arisen out of or been directly connected with the man's military service. Each case is decided on its own merits after careful inquiry. When an accident occurs, the military authorities hold a court of inquiry, and when the man is discharged from the forces, a copy of the evidence before this court of inquiry is supplied to the pension commission and the commission decision is reached only after a careful study of all the evidence adduced at the hearing.

It is the policy of the commission to award entitlement as of right in all cases of accidents where service was a factor.

It must always be remembered, however, that an unfavourable decision under section 11 (2) does not exhaust the benefits of the Pension Act. Where a disability results from an accident which is not considered to have arisen out of or been directly connected with military service, an award of pension is made if the applicant is seriously disabled and in necessitous circumstances.

Mr. GREEN: That is only under a means test?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes. The hon. member for Cape Breton South raised a question yesterday in regard to unemployment insurance, with respect to a soldier coming back who said that he could not get benefits from unemployment insurance until he had worked for so many weeks. Under an amended procedure, arrangements have been made that discharged men, for the year following their service, will draw out-of-work benefits from the pensions department before going to the unemployment insurance commission; this for the reason that the benefits under P.C. 7633, with family allowances, are on a much more generous scale.

Our administration facilities throughout the dominion are being expanded all the time, in order to give prompt service, and in Cape Breton, a civil service competition is now being held for a welfare officer, to be stationed at Sydney, Nova Scotia.

Questions were asked in regard to enlistments and discharges and I have a statement as follows:

Enlistments
(September, 1939, to January 31, 1944)

Navy
Men	81,367
Women	4,534
		85,901

		633,436
Air Force
Men	222,517
Women	22,388
		244,905
Grand total		964,242

Discharges to 31st March, 1944

Navy
Men	5,773
Women	137
		5,910

Women	3,351
		113,047
Air Force
Men	14,143
Women	1,498
		15,641
Grand total		134,598

Mr. GREEN: That is about 135,000 to the end of March.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That is right, 134,598 men and women. The discharges are as follows:

Discharged as medically unfit to 31st March, 1944

Navy
Men	2,562
Women	41
		2,603
Army
Men	68,867
N.R.M.A.	16,333
Women	2,476
		87,676
Air Force
Men	6,913
Women	427
		7,340
Grand total		97,619

Mr. GREEN: The minister's figure yesterday was wrong when he said 94,000?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes; it should have been 97,000.

The procedure in effect by the Canadian pension commission is as follows:

(a) The proceedings of the medical board on discharge are referred by the discharge depot to the Canadian Pension commission in the district where the discharge is to be carried out. This provides that, where indicated, pension medical examination may be carried out or be arranged for before the man proceeds to his home.

(b) When discharge has been effected, the head office of the commission in Ottawa is notified of the date by the service concerned and that service documents are available for pension adjudication.

(c) When the man is discharged directly to the department for treatment pension, action is delayed until treatment has reached finality.

It will be observed that in every case the medical board on discharge on account of disability is reviewed in the first instance by the pension medical examiner in the district and then by the commission's medical advisory staff in Ottawa.

Of the total number discharged as medically unfit the following decisions have been rendered by the commission to the 29th February, 1944.

First hearings:
Men	41,449
Women	150
		41,599
Second hearings:
Men	4,529
Women	15
		4,544
Appeal boards:
Men	1,900
Women	1
		1,901
Decisions other than above (special benefits provided by the act):
Men	1,169
Women	10
Grand total		49,223

It will be observed that of the total of 97,619 discharged as medically unfit the commission has rendered decisions in 49,223 cases. This leaves approximately 50,000 cases for whom no decision has been rendered by the commission. However, each case has received attention. The proceedings of the medical board on discharge have first of all been reviewed by the pension medical examiner in the district and again later by the medical advisory staff of the commission in Ottawa. When the discharge disability is of a minor nature and preenlistment in origin, a formal pension decision is deferred and the case given what is termed delayed priority.

Mr. GREEN: How many of these are outstanding?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): There were 50,000 regarded as hopeless at the start, but they have all been dealt with and only about 500 would be outstanding. This in no way prohibits application at any time; many of these delayed priority cases have made application and the regular procedure has been instituted. This procedure has been inaugurated owing to the limitations in the medical and other staff available to the commission to cope with the large number of daily discharges.

Mr. GREEN: The effect is that there will be very few of these 50,000 eligible for pension?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That is my understanding of the situation.

Mr. GREEN: How many of the other 49,000 applications have been granted?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I shall give these figures later on. I have them on another sheet.

I think I have met all the questions which were raised yesterday and to-day.

Mr. MacNICOL: Does the minister feel able at the moment to make some reference to consideration of the case of the imperials?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes. This question is one of very great difficulty. The difficulty is this, that the War Veterans Allowance Act in Canada has been applied only to those who saw service in the main in a theatre of actual war, and Canadians who served in Canada and in England in the great war are not eligible, excepting in a small number of cases, for the benefits of the act. If it is decided by this house or by any government to give entitlement to veterans' allowances to imperial soldiers who fought in the great war, the same right cannot consistently be denied to Canadians who went overseas from Canada. That is the difficulty all through the years. If it should ever come about that the veterans' allowance act were broadened out to cover Canadians who served in England only, the difficulty would largely vanish.

Mr. MacNICOL: The unfortunate part of that matter is that the imperial authorities have turned down flat the vast majority of imperial soldier applicants. They give them no consideration.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That is in regard to veterans' allowances?

Mr. MacNICOL: For pensions.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): In regard to pensions, of course the imperial veterans who served with the British forces in the great war would be pensionable under their legislation.

Mr. MacNICOL: I may be wrong, but I understand that quite a number of imperial soldiers who have resided in Canada for several years had their applications turned over by our own department to the imperial authorities, and that the request to the British authorities on behalf of soldiers who served with the British army in the great war, and who did not take pensions, but were pensionable, was turned down flat.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Not by the Canadian government; by the British government.

Mr. GREEN: With regard to the question asked by the hon. member for Davenport, is this not the situation? He was referring to imperial war veterans who have served in a theatre of actual war, and the minister likens their case to that of Canadians who did not serve in a theatre of war. Why does the minister lump the two together and say that, because the Canadian who did not serve in a theatre of war cannot get the war veteran's allowance, the imperial veteran who did serve in a theatre of war cannot get the allowance, although he may have been in Canada for twenty-four years?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I happen to have been born in the old country, and I say it would be distinctly unfair to grant the allowance to imperial veterans who served in a theatre of war and not to Canadians who went overseas but were not allowed to serve in a theatre of war.

Mr. GREEN: Who did not serve in a theatre of war.

Mr. WRIGHT: Are the government taking any action to recover damages from the railroad company in the case of the men who were killed or injured in the Almonte wreck?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That has not come to my attention. I shall be glad to look into it. We met all claims, but whether we recovered the money or not I do not know.

Mr. GREEN: The minister did not make the position quite clear with regard to the question of presumptions. I wish he would correct me if I am wrong as I make my statement. As I understand it, the position in Great Britain since last summer is this: they now have in their royal warrant under which pensions can be granted this provision; it is paragraph (3), which will be found near the top of page 3 in the white paper to which both the minister and myself have referred:

(3) Where an injury or disease which has led to a member's discharge or death during war service was not noted in a medical report made on that member on the commencement of his war service, a certificate under paragraph (1) shall be given unless the evidence shows that the conditions set out in that paragraph are not fulfilled.

The white paper on page 1 explains just what those presumptions mean, in these words:

> His Majesty's government accepts the view that the fact that a man is accepted for service in the present war in a cetrain medical category may be taken as presumptive evidence that (a) at the time of acceptance he was fit for the kind of service demanded of a man in that medical category; and (b) in the event of his being subsequently discharged on medical grounds any deterioration in his health which has taken place is due to his service.

I suggest to the minister and the committee that we have no provision of that type in our Canadian pension law. We have no provision which goes that far. It is operative now in Great Britain; I believe it is necessary under the conditions which have arisen in the present war, and I would urge upon the minister and the committee to see to it that Canada adopts those presumptions. They will help the disabled man to get a fair deal, and make it just that much easier for him to qualify for pension, and I think they are absolutely fair.

Mr. STIRLING: And they are exactly what we are asking for here.

Mr. GREEN: And as the hon. member for Yale points out, they are exactly what we have advocated in the policy of the Progressive Conservative party. Quite apart from whether this party or any other party advocates it, it is a fair provision. I think the minister will admit that we have no such provision in the present Pension Act; it could very well be added to section 62 of the act, which is what we call the benefit-of-the-doubt section. The British also have a benefit-of-the-doubt section, but they go that one step further and establish those two presumptions in favour of the men, and I think it is the sense of the members of this house and of the people of Canada that there should be that change here. I thought Sir John Anderson put the general attitude of the people of Great Britain and the attitude which should be adopted by this house clearly when, on July 20, 1943, he used these words, found on page 717 of the British Hansard:

> The treatment to be meted out to those who have made sacrifices for their country, who have lost their lives maybe, leaving dependents, or who come back shattered by wounds or disease, is a matter which engages the public conscience, and we should not rest content with any solution which fails to command the support of the overwhelming mass of reasonable people.

At the present time the Canadian Pension Act does not go far enough in this respect, and I urge upon the minister that he have steps taken to amend the pension law so that those two presumptions become part of the charter of the men who will be returning from the various fronts. Will the minister admit that we have no such provision in the Canadian Pension Act at the present time?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): In regard to the benefit of the doubt, we are about on a par now with Great Britain. In regard to the presumption mentioned by my hon. friend in the paragraph dealing with entitlement, my interpretation and my officers' interpretation of this is that the word "deterioration" here is equivalent to the provision we have had in the Canadian Pension Act with regard to aggravation. That is, we pension for the aggravation of a disability where the disability becomes increased on active service. But I would be glad to look carefully into the interpretation, and if my interpretation is not correct I shall have the matter carefully examined and see what can be done.

Mr. GREEN: I think the minister's advisers are quite wrong in that interpretation. They say that the word "deterioration" refers to an aggravation of a condition that existed before enlistment. If the minister will read the debate in the British house he will see that that was not the intention. Sir John Anderson said, at page 718:

> The first presumption—I am putting this in non-technical language—is that a man's condition as recorded on his admission to the service was in fact his condition at that time. The second is that any subsequent deterioration . . .

In other words, if the man enlisted as fit. That is the type of case to which I referred.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That is aggravation.

Mr. GREEN: To continue the quotation:

> The second is that any subsequent deterioration in his condition was due to his service.

The minister's advisers have given him the wrong advice in regard to the interpretation of the British act, and I suggest that he should have the matter reviewed again and use his own judgment.

The other question to which I wish to refer is the insurance principle. In that regard, again, it is the sense of the members of this house that there should at least be a return to the insurance principle so far as some of the men serving in Canada are concerned. There is not a member who has spoken against it; not one has said a word in opposition to it. Of course, the position is this. There are in Canada many men in training who have enlisted for service anywhere. They are kept here because those are the orders of the army, the navy, or the air force, as the case may be. I suggest that those men who, in the eyes of the general public, are ready to serve anywhere should be covered by the insurance principle. Perhaps it should not be extended to cover men not willing to serve anywhere, but it certainly should be extended to cover these other men I have mentioned. Section 11 (3), to which the minister referred, is really a stop-gap. He has admitted that it was brought in because we disagreed in the special committee that dealt with pensions in 1941. One or two of us thought the insurance principle covering all men in our forces should be left in the act, but we were voted down by the rest of the committee, and as a final solution—it was not a compromise because we never agreed to it—this provision 11 (3) was brought in. But it contains the means test. A man can get pension only if he is very hard up. He can get that pension only if he has a serious disability as distinguished from one that might not be considered serious, and he is entirely in the hands of the commission. If they had a good breakfast this morning they may give him a pension; if they have a poor breakfast to-morrow morning and do not feel so well they can turn down his application. I do not say that they do this, but there is too much discretion given to the commission in such cases. There should not be a large number of cases handled under a discretionary section of this type. The man should have the right to get his pension instead of having to depend on the discretion of these commissioners—at least, where he is willing to serve anywhere and suffers his disability before he has been able to get out of the country.

The minister said that they have not the insurance principle in Great Britain. There again I think he is wrong. His advisers have given him bad advice, because in effect the insurance principle does exist in Great Britain. If the minister will read the debate in the British House of Commons he will find that Sir John Anderson is reported to have said at page 723:

> When soldiers are on foreign service their whole conditions of life will be covered.

That is in effect the insurance principle.

> It is only when they return temporarily to the ordinary conditions of their civil life—as when a man goes normally on leave to his home in this country—that they will not be covered. That is the one exception.

Yesterday I read Sir John Anderson's further explanation in which he said, as reported at page 722:

> We are giving the fullest possible application of the doctrine that a service man places himself wholly and unreservedly at the disposal of the state during his service and we are covering everything with one exception.

[Mr. Green.]

The exception was illustrated by the case where a man at home fell off a ladder.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): They are all theatres of actual war there, which is our definition.

Mr. GREEN: That is not the British test. They do not put it on that ground. They say that once a man has given his life to the service he is under the control of the service and should be covered, except when he is home on leave. The Minister of Pensions, Sir Walter Womersley, at page 798, said:

> The only case which does not come within that ruling is when a man is spending his leave at home, or with friends, or going about just like any other civilian, or doing some occupation which very often cannot be described as having anything to do with military service. The government feel that they cannot go to that extreme and that the man must come into the ordinary social services for compensation.

That shows how far they are going, and I use the accident cases only by way of illustration. I think there are far more hardship cases in connection with disability, where a man is ill. Where a man in the service in Canada becomes ill and is discharged it is almost impossible for him to get a pension. I do not know what the figures are up to the present time. The minister has not given the number of pension applications granted—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Just now I can give them up to the end of 1943. Our grand total of pension awards for all classes of pension arising out of service in the present war, up to December 31, 1943, has reached the figure of 11,244, with a total annual liability of $5,788,184. Of these pensions, 6,484 are for disabilities, and 4,760 are for the dependents of those who gave their lives.

Women members of the three armed forces are pensionable under the same conditions as men—and eighteen of our pension awards are for disabilities incurred by members of the Canadian Women's Army Corps and the Women's Division of the R.C.A.F.

Of the 10,783 pensions awarded with respect to members of the armed forces, 977 were awarded under section 11(3)—the compassionate section to which I have referred. The annual liability for these 977 pensions is $493,665. My recollection is that the number is 13,000.

Mr. GREEN: We have to find out how many served abroad and how many in Canada. I received a return last year, sessional paper 139, giving figures showing that only one man out of thirty-three discharged as medically unfit after service in Canada was able to qualify for pension. Outside Canada less than fifty per cent qualified, although covered by the insurance principle. At any rate, the proportion of men discharged in Canada as medically unfit, who can qualify for pension, is very small. That, of course, means that the men are handicapped in getting treatment after they are discharged, and they are handicapped in many other ways. In other words, it shows that our pension law is not what it should be as it stands at the present time. Could the minister get the figures this evening showing first of all the proportion of men who served in Canada, discharged as medically unfit and unable to get pensions.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Disability and dependents, both?

Mr. GREEN: Yes, and those who served abroad.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. GREEN: Has the minister the figures I requested just before the dinner recess?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes; I have the figures as to the decisions rendered, as requested by the hon. member for Vancouver South. Decisions on disability and death, as at February 29, 1944, were as follows:

Granted
Service in Canada	2,658
Outside of Canada	6,906
Total	9,564
Not granted
Service in Canada	34,740
Outside of Canada	4,919
Total	39,659
Granted and not granted
In Canada—Total	37,398
Outside Canada—Total	11,825
Grand total	49,223

That is the figure which was mentioned this afternoon.

Mr. GREEN: Then the minister said that there were about 50,000 deferred priority cases?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes.

Mr. GREEN: As I understood it, those are cases which have not been finally ruled upon, but which have been given a preliminary review, and the opinion is that applications if made, would not be granted.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That is right.

Mr. GREEN: About how many of those come from men who served in Canada only?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I can give only an estimate, but I think about 95 per cent would concern men who served only in Canada, most of them for very short periods.

Mr. GREEN: Then this would mean that about 2,658 pensions have been granted to men who served only in Canada, and that 34,740 applications have been rejected?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes.

Mr. GREEN: And another 45,000 of the men who have been discharged—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Are not likely to have their applications granted.

Mr. GREEN: They are not likely ever to get pensions?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes.

Mr. GREEN: So that apparently only about 2,600 out of 80,000 men discharged who have served only in Canada will get pensions?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): If I may interrupt for a moment about the 50,000 deferred priorities; about forty per cent of those who served in Canada had service of less than six months.

Mr. GREEN: In any event the proportion of men who served in Canada and were discharged as medically unfit who can qualify for pension is very small under our present pension law?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes.

Mr. GREEN: I suggest that in itself this fact shows that there is need for changing the provisions of the Pension Act. Subsection 2 of section 11, which covers the men who have served only in Canada, covers also the men who serve in our peace-time forces, so that in effect our pension provisions are the same for the peace-time forces and for the men who are serving now, during the war, in Canada. I think the minister will admit that this is so. I do not think that is fair. I believe that where men are serving in time of war there should be a different pension provision to cover them than we have to cover the men in the peace-time forces. Then I suggest that the wording of subsection 2 is really drastic. For example, in the last line we find these words: "directly connected with such military service". Last summer the British, whose pension provisions contained the term "directly attributable", struck out the word "directly". We still have it in our section; and the very fact that the pension commission is giving a wide interpretation to subsection 2, as the minister stated this afternoon, shows that it is not wide enough, and that this is realized even by the pension commission in administering it. I think he said that their approach was that if service were a factor in connection with the disability, then they would grant the application. Another reason for changing the pension provision for the men in the forces in Canada is that the men who served in the last war were covered by the insurance principle, even though they served only in England or in Canada, and the men in this war should be given the same consideration that we received in the last war. Then the minister said that the change was made effective as of May 21, 1940, because of certain abuses which arose under the act prior to that time. He did not give us the details of those abuses, and perhaps it would be of interest to the committee to know what they were, so that we could help make provision against them. I believe the act could be changed in such a way that justice would be done and at the same time abuses would be prevented.

This afternoon the minister said that subsection 3 of section 11 was really a compromise, but I suggest that was hardly the case. At page 3197 of Hansard for May 27, 1941, I find these questions and answers, after I had been pressing the minister in regard to this very section:

Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury): This is a compromise, because the minister is not willing to go the whole length in principle, as advocated.

Mr. Mackenzie (Vancouver Centre): That is correct.

Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury): There is the truth.

Mr. Mackenzie (Vancouver Centre): Yes; that is correct.

Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury): If he will not change his mind, I shall not take the time of the committee to urge him to do so.

So that I think it may be said that in 1941 the fact was that the government did not feel it could go so far as to put in any wider provision.

This afternoon I mentioned the question of treatment. As I understand it, a man who has not proved entitlement to pension can get treatment for a maximum of one year only. The minister will correct me if I am wrong in that. My understanding is that if a man is entitled to pension he can get treatment as long as he lives, but that if he is not entitled to pension treatment is limited to a maximum of one year; if he served for less than a year, he gets treatment only for the same length of time as he served.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Treatment to finality.

Mr. GREEN: That has been changed, has it? Is that the provision now?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The limitation is imposed only in connection with allowances.

Mr. GREEN: But suppose a man incurs his disability on service but it is held by the pension commission that the disability is not attributable to service. I have a case of that kind before me. The ruling was: "incurred during service but not pensionable, as it did not arise out of nor was it directly connected with military service." That man has been discharged for more than a year, and he requires medicine costing $5 a month.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): May I ask if in that case a pension was awarded under section 11 (3)?

Mr. GREEN: No. The man has to buy medicine which costs $5 a month. He cannot get any further treatment from the hospital, although his condition is still bad, or becomes bad every so often. It was incurred during service, but not directly attributable to his service. That situation I suggest to the minister is unfair.

Another restriction or handicap carried by these men who are not able to qualify for pension is that they cannot take up land under the Veterans' Land Act. The ruling to date is that unless a man is a pensioner he cannot get the benefit of that act. So that the man who cannot qualify for pension, although his disability may have arisen while he was in the service, loses out in these different ways. Those are other reasons why changes should be made in the act.

I was very much impressed by the stand taken by the president of the Canadian Legion with regard to the question of the insurance principle. I refer, of course, to Mr. Alex. Walker, who, I think, has been a splendid president of the legion, and has rendered great service to the returned men of Canada. I hold in my hand a copy of the Legionary, the official publication of the Canadian Legion. This is the issue for December, 1942, and contains a statement by Mr. Walker from which I propose to read. It is headed, "Repudiated Pledge," and states:

At the outbreak of the present war the government pledged itself to apply all the benefits of the existing Pension Act, including the insurance principle to those enlisted for active service. A special order in council was passed under the War Measures Act giving effect to this pledge. However on May 21, 1940, the government changed their policy, repudiated their pledge I say, and definitely excluded all those whose service was in Canada only from the benefits of the insurance principle in a new order in council. The Canadian Legion immediately registered strong objections, and the government announced that a special committee of the House of Commons would be appointed later to go into the matter.

Mr. Walker goes on to explain about the sittings of the special committee in 1941, about the representations made to the committee by the legion, and finally about some relief being granted by section 11 (3). Then he says this:

> Two and one-half years of experience has shown the many grave injustices done to men who have contracted diseases which it is impossible to demonstrate "arose out of, and were directly connected with military service." Yet many of these men have served along our coasts, exposed to all kinds of weather, and there must always be grave doubt as to the effect of such service.

Is the government willing to take any steps to review this whole question of the insurance principle, as it applies to the men who have served only in Canada? Will the minister give any hope that this question will be considered again?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): My hon. friend has asked a question regarding government policy, which I cannot answer. But I can assure him that the insurance principle, and every other question connected with the Pension Act are being reviewed from week to week and from month to month, constantly. No doubt this question will be reviewed again, as it has been in the past.

Mr. GREEN: There are one or two other questions which I asked the minister yesterday, but which he did not answer to-day. One had to do with soldiers being discharged from the army to the Department of Pensions and National Health. I asked yesterday why it was not possible for a soldier to be treated as a soldier right through until he is discharged to civil life, or until his medical rehabilitation has been completed, rather than be considered first as a charge of the army, and then, when he becomes ill or disabled, a charge of the Department of Pensions and National Health. I believe that in some cases that change means that the soldier receives less pay, or that his dependents receive less. Why is it not possible to have him treated as a soldier, receiving the pay and allowances of a soldier, until he is discharged to civilian life? The minister did not deal with that matter.

He also said nothing about the complaint made against making changes in the Pension Act by order in council, rather than by amendments to the act. I refer to changes announced just two or three days ago.

Then, he sad nothing about the veterans' guard. He will remember I pointed out yesterday that these men are now reaching the ages of fifty-five or sixty years. Those who are discharged as fit will have great difficulty in securing jobs. My suggestion was that some provision should be made for a service pension. They have served this country in two wars, and some of them will have served for periods of eight, or nine, or even ten years. It would be unfair to force them to take a war veterans allowance, and certainly it would be most unfair to force them to go back on relief. They constitute a group which will have to be given special consideration. I should like to have answers from the minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I shall be glad to answer, indeed. In the first place, this afternoon the hon. member raised a point in connection with service rendered wholly in Canada. I would point out that in deciding when disability resulting from disease arose out of or was directly connected with such military service, the commission takes into account any or all of the following factors:

Nature of service; the history of origin of the disease as revealed by the available evidence; the record of examination on enlistment; the nature of the disease; the age of the individual; corroboration of statements.

Each case, in the final analysis, is considered on its merits, but recognition is given to the fact that conditions of service are more exacting than in civil life, and the individual is to a greater degree than in normal pursuits exposed to inclement weather, unusual mental and physical strain, and exposure to persons suffering from infectious diseases or carriers of infectious organisms. These are the considerations.

Mr. GREEN: Is that under subsection 2 of section 11?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes.

Mr. GREEN: Of course the act still remains the same.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes; but the administration has been more or less altered along the lines I have indicated.

Mr. GREEN: If the administration has been eased up, then surely the act should be eased up.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I was just answering my hon. friend's question. That is the first answer, and it goes a long way to meet the objection raised.

Then, as to hospital allowances, I will deal with the type of cases as they normally occur on discharge from the forces:

(1) If, in the opinion of medical officers of the Department of National Defence, he is, by reason of physical fitness, unlikely to be able to serve again, he is discharged.

Mr. GREEN: From the army?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes. To continue:

(2) If he requires treatment at that time, it is continued by the Department of Pensions and National Health. During such treatment he and his dependents receive exactly the same pay and allowances as paid during service except in the case of officers holding the rank above that of sublieutenant (navy), lieutenant (military), or flying officer (air) who are paid at a rate not in excess of that applicable to a sublieutenant, lieutenant or flying officer.

Mr. GREEN: In other words, their pay and allowances are cut down?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes; that is right. These allowances may be continued for a period of one year or for a period equal to the length of service, whichever is the less, provided always that treatment is required for that period. The allowances are payable not only while the man is in hospital but while on out-patient treatment or while convalescing and unable to work.

(3) If further treatment is required and the disability is deemed by the pension commission to be pensionable, hospital allowances are thereafter paid at rates based on the 100 per cent pension rate for the rank held by the patient while in the forces, less $30 a month. That was established some years ago.

Mr. GREEN: Suppose a disability is not pensionable; what happens at the end of the year?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I will come to that.

(4) If at any time within a year following discharge from the forces, a man requires treatment for any condition whatsoever, other than a pensioned one—

Mr. GREEN: That is during the year?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): —he may be given such treatment and, in addition, is paid allowances on behalf of himself and dependents equal to out-of-work benefits and training allowances payable under the reestablishment order.

Mr. GREEN: In other words, he does not get his army pay?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): No; but he goes out and comes back.

These benefits are $44.20 a month for a single man, and $62.40 for a married man, with additional allowances for children at the same rates as were paid during service, namely, $12 for each of the first and second children, $10 for the third, and $8 for the fourth, fifth and sixth. These allowances may also be paid while undergoing treatment up to a maximum of twelve months or during a period equal to the length of services with the forces, whichever is the less. No payments made while undergoing such treatment affect any benefits to which he may otherwise be entitled under the reestablishment order. No deductions are made from these rates if the man has dependents; but if he is a single man and has no obligations whatsoever, the department may decrease the $44.20 by such an amount as seems right, but not by more than $30.

Mr. GREEN: In other words, he would get only $14.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes; but he is being kept. Irrespective of the total amount to which a man would be entitled while in hospital, normally only $10 is actually paid to him each month. This amount is considered sufficient to meet the normal needs of a sick man occupying a bed in hospital. It conforms with the practice of the services and is deemed to be in the best interests of the patient from the point of view of the most beneficial treatment. However, additional sums can be paid at any time the officer in charge of the case deems that a further amount is required for any justifiable purpose. Any balance so withheld during hospital treatment is available on discharge when, in most cases, it is more needed than while in hospital.

There is another type of hospital care which has been available to pensioned veterans since 1924, namely, domiciliary care. It is intended to provide a home for aged and unemployable veterans who are unable to make other provision for their care and do not necessarily require treatment as such for pensionable disabilities. Admission to an institution for such care is not dependent upon their ability to contribute to the cost; but if they have any pension or other income the department may enter into an agreement with them whereby there is paid to the department an amount not exceeding $30 a month, out of which the man is provided with comforts and clothing, any remaining balance of the $30 being credited to the cost of care.

It is this type of institutional care that the veteran who was awarded the Victoria Cross during the great war, and to whom the hon. member for Temiscouata referred, is receiving. I may say for the information of the committee that this veteran, who is a widower and who has a daughter being cared for by relatives, has been awarded a disability pension of $45 a month, which includes an additional pension of $7.50 for his daughter.

Under an arrangement entered into with him at the time of his admission to hospital, $20 a month of the pension is paid to a relative for the care of the daughter. Twenty-five dollars a month is placed in a trust fund of the department from which comforts and clothing are supplied the patient. The annual award of £10 for the Victoria Cross decoration, which is paid by the British ministry of pensions, is received direct by the veteran to expend as he sees fit. He is not required to pay any portion of this amount to the department, as has been intimated to the committee. This is a correction of the statement which was made last night.

Mr. GREEN: Does the minister not think it would be a sounder and fairer practice to pay a man pay and allowances until he is discharged to civilian life? At a conference of the national council of veteran associations in Canada, held early last December in Toronto, which included representatives from the Sir Arthur Pearson Association of War Blinded, the Canadian Pensioners' Association, Canadian Corps Association and the Army and Navy Veterans in Canada, the following resolution dealing with treatment regulations was passed:

> That in no case should the pay and allowance of a former member of the forces of this war in hospital be less than that of his rank during service for the whole of his period of initial and continuous treatment.

I suggest that that practice should have been carried out from the start instead of getting away to these different provisions and classifications.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That was done for an obvious reason. The practice in the last war was entirely different. At that time we had a military hospitals commission and what my hon. friend now suggests should be done was done. A member of the forces undergoing treatment was on the strength of the defence forces, the militia forces or the armed forces until discharge. When the war was concluded we had many problems to face. We found that in the interregnum certain abuses had occurred which, as my hon. friend will recall, resulted in the amendments of 1936. It was found that certain senior officers were receiving extravagant allowances. This fact came to the notice of the house and the amendments were passed with great acclaim in 1936.

I frankly confess that I see quite a lot of merit in the suggestion which my hon. friend has quoted as having been passed by this organization and which he supports himself. My reaction is that for a reasonable time after discharge until the soldier or the officer—

Mr. GREEN: From the army or from the hospital?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I am thinking now of his return to civil life from the hospital. For a reasonable time he should be entitled to draw pay and allowances after military discharge while undergoing treatment and until he is reestablished. He should receive his pay as lieutenant, major or whatever rank he holds until we have effected complete establishment at home. But that practice should not be perpetuated once a man has been reestablished. I think we must then come back to a basis such as we have now.

Mr. GREEN: The pay and allowances in some cases would be less than a private would get in the army.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I do not think they are; they all come under the ceiling of lieutenant's pay. I frankly confess that there is a strong argument for the recommendation made by this organization. As a matter of fact we now have a committee in the department reviewing every single feature of treatment. This is under the chairmanship of Brigadier General Ross, with Doctor Bain, director of medical services, and Walter Woods, associate deputy minister. There are no finer three men in the whole service. This committee is giving careful consideration to every possible phase of treatment and I will do my best to carry out whatever recommendations they may make as to any inequalities they may discover.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I should like to say a few words about the section in the Pension Act which provides that a man's disability or deterioration in health must be attributable to service before he is entitled to a pension. I have a case in mind which I took up with the minister. He did make an educational grant to this particular fellow which has helped him out considerably, but he was refused a pension on the ground that his physical condition was not attributable to service.

When I was home this young fellow came to see me with his father and they outlined the whole case to me. It appears that when the boy joined up he referred to his disability which had occurred in early childhood. This was noted on his record, but that condition had not affected him for something like fifteen or sixteen years; to all appearances he had entirely outgrown it when he passed the medical board on joining the army. He was placed in category A-1, and when the attention of the medical authorities was drawn to the fact that he had suffered this disability in his early years they were particularly cautious. As I understand it, they reexamined him to see if he was really physically fit.

The doctors on the examining board have an opportunity to examine a man thoroughly before he joins the army. They have the advantage of the latest and best equipment. They are practical, experienced doctors and they can make a thorough diagnosis. After this boy had joined up for active service and had passed A-1, he was turned out of the army physically unfit after a period of eight, ten or twelve months, I just forget the exact time. I believe that he was placed in category E, because in between that time he had been in the hospital for a long period.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): What is the nature of his disability?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I am sorry I have not the file with me, but I know that in general the facts I am stating are correct. First of all, this boy wrote to me that he wanted a pension and the educational grant. I suggested that probably it would be better to get the educational grant first and later take up the question of a pension. I took up the question of an educational grant for him with the minister, through whose kindness we got that through, but there was quite a bit of red tape about it. The father sent me a letter expressing his appreciation and he asked me to convey his thanks to the minister, which I did, as the minister probably recalls. The point is that this boy when he tried to get a pension was refused on the ground that his condition was not attributable to service, despite the fact that when he joined up he had a thorough medical examination and the medical diagnosis showed that he was A-1. I do not see what better authority we could have than the expert opinion of the doctors who examined him. The condition did not recur until after he joined the army, a matter of ten or twelve or thirteen years. I am not a medical doctor, but common sense tells one that the sickness which followed after he joined up must have been entirely due to the conditions under which he was living, perhaps the strenuous training, while on active service. There is no doubt in my mind that it was his military service which caused his sickness, and it does not seem fair to me that the obligation of the government should be evaded in a case of that kind. Once the doctors pass a man as A-1, if anything happens to him afterwards it should be considered attributable to service and it should not debar him from receiving a pension. I think the minister would do well to reconsider that class of cases, which has been mentioned by others. It does seem to me to be most unfair.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Does my hon. friend remember whether it was a case of neurosis or a straight physical disability?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I should not like to say because I have not the file before me.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): My hon. friend, the member for Vancouver South, asked a question about the veterans' guard which I forgot to answer. I quite agree with the submission he made. These men are entitled to every consideration that we can give them. They are now getting close to sixty years and have served through two wars; some of them have undergone considerable hardship and they are certainly entitled to every consideration. We have a special subcommittee of the general committee on demobilization giving attention to their case. What will be worked out I cannot say. But we have not forgotten the suggestion which my hon. friend made when he was speaking this afternoon.

Mr. GREEN: My other question was about changes in the Pension Act being made by order in council.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): We are doing what was done in the last great war to meet emergent conditions which arise from time to time. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre mentioned that it might endanger some of the benefits, but I can assure him that that will not be done. In the great war all this was done by order in conucil. It is most difficult to visualize the numerous changes that may have to take place in the pension system and in the war veterans' allowance before the war is over. The ideal way would be to pass a consolidated Pension Act and a consolidated War Veterans' Allowance Act, bringing all the amendments up to date and possibly incorporating others that have not yet received the endorsation of this house. But orders in council are passed to meet emergent conditions. Otherwise we should have to amend the act three or four times a year.

Mr. GREEN: These changes made by order in council affect the men of the last war, not of this war.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): My hon. friend is not opposed to them, I am sure.

Mr. GREEN: No; but they should be put through in the form of amendments to the Pension Act; they have nothing to do with the men of this war.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): One of the first duties of parliament after hostilities cease will be to consolidate the Pension Act and various other pieces of soldier legislation, the Veterans' Allowance Act, the Veterans' Land Act and such others as will need consolidation.

Mr. GREEN: I did not get an answer to my question with regard to disability incurred during service but not pensionable. What treatment can a man who is in that position get?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Under section 11 (3)?

Mr. GREEN: No. A man incurs a disability during service, and it is held not pensionable because it did not arise directly out of his service. What treatment can that man get in hospital, and for how long, and what allowance can he get?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): After the first year of civil life he is entitled to treatment only if he is awarded a pension, unless he saw service in a theatre of actual war.

Mr. GREEN: Otherwise he gets nothing?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That is it.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: As one listens to the minister one would imagine that all is well. Perhaps the cases that came to my attention are the unfortunate ones. I drew to the attention of the minister a particular case where a man was not being treated properly and the minister promptly rectified the trouble. It appears to me that these cases should not occur in the first place. I brought to the minister's attention recently the case of a sergeant who had enlisted for active service and after two years' service in Canada was injured in training. He took sick last September. That was the first illness he had had. He was discharged in December. His sickness was diagnosed as diverticulitis. Since his discharge the man has had to go back to hospital, and the hospital authorities say that there is absolutely nothing they can do for him. All he has to do is to diet. He has to go home now and diet himself there. He has a wife and child whom he cannot support because of his disability. What I do not like about the case is this. When this man appeared in Saskatoon the members of the pension board informed him that he could receive no pension because he had not been overseas. It seems to me that the members of the board should be instructed to inform the men correctly as to what their position is, and that under certain conditions of service in Canada the man is pensionable.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Will my hon. friend send me the man's number?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: His number is L.84656.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver (Centre): Was it a congenital condition?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): The hon. member for Bow River made a remark which suggests a condition that I think should not exist. He said that through the kindness of the minister a man was able to get an educational grant. I have found on many occasions that if it had not been for the kindness of members of parliament on both sides of the house many men in the armed forces would not have been able to get their war veterans' allowance.

An hon. MEMBER: Why?

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): That is just it. Why? I know of many men who have written to myself or to other members about their cases. They could get no action upon them until some member of parliament intervened and took the case up for them. I want to say that the pension department has been extremely kind to me and has helped me out in all the cases I have brought to its attention. I am very much obliged, but I think the department should have some procedure whereby these men, when they need it, will get some action without the intervention of members of parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I think the real explanation is that these cases come to the attention of hon. members, or possibly to my attention through the good will of hon. members, before they are ever referred to the pension board or other branches of the government. The member of parliament is in the district; he knows the local conditions; he knows of cases of hardship; and I find frequently that when cases coming from hon. members of all parties are immediately referred to the departmental officials, sometimes, if not invariably, they have never come to the attention of the officials before.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): The minister is perhaps right to some extent, but these people do get much quicker action if they apply through a member of parliament than if they write direct themselves. I appreciate direct and prompt action, because it helps not only myself but other hon. members to have the cases cleaned up. We have a great number of them.

The minister mentioned a home for the veterans where they get up to $30 a month.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Domiciliary care, sometimes called veterans' care.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): In one case which came to my attention a veteran wanted to go there. He was receiving a war veterans' allowance at that time of, I think, $25, and they wanted to take the full $25. He objected strongly, and he did not go, because he felt that he should have some money left over with which to buy little luxuries that he wanted, such as cigarettes or other extras.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): May I interrupt my hon. friend, just to be cooperative? Was that not a case of somebody drawing a pension? It was not a veterans' allowance, because he must have been a pensioner to qualify for domiciliary care.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): I think that is so, but the pension was very small, only $25, and they wanted to take it all. He said, "No; let me stay out in the open. If I am with friends I will then have some cigarette money." It does not seem to me that a man should be deprived of the whole $25 or $30 pension; he should be allowed out of that, say $10 a month.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): He gets a certain amount. It is fairly small, but about $10 a month.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Is it $10?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): That is quite a recent provision, is it not?

[Mr. Ian Mackenzie.]

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): No; it is for comforts and clothing. It has been in effect for some time, I think.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): In the case of all soldiers now on veterans' allowance, is it now raised right up to the peak automatically? It was not before.

Mr. MACKENZLE (Vancouver Centre): I think I made a statement in the house last year, when the increases were announced, that they would be automatic and would not require any intervention by the applicant.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Mention has been made of demobilization. Some months ago I heard the high commissioner for South Africa speak in Toronto. He said that no one in South Africa is demobilized until a job is secured for him. I thought that was an idea which Canada should adopt, because if we did, we would not have any unemployed men—or women—from the armed forces. That is a circumstance to take into consideration. The high commissioner also said that no wounded man is demobilized until a job is secured for him, and that casualties are centralized in camps at full pay. That is different from what it is here.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): No. I believe our ideas, which have not yet been finalized, are moving along the same lines.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): They will come to that?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): In that connection, may I place a short extract upon the record? It is proposed that the Department of Pensions and National Health should establish rehabilitation facilities at each demobilization centre, and that all personnel should be interviewed by competent interviewers as a primary screening, and thence referred to one or other of the following sections, which will be operated by trained counsellors of the department: (a) vocational training section; (b) interrupted education section; (c) information officer of the Veterans' Land Act administration; (d) civil service commission representative for persons interested in dominion government employment; (e) representative of the unemployment insurance commission, with regard to employment; (f) representatives of the pensions and treatment branches of the Department of Pensions and National Health; (g) special consultants in cases presenting problems which deviate from the normal; (h) special counsellor for female members of the forces, and (i) special counsellor for disabled men. For this purpose it is deemed essential that personnel and educational officers in the three branches of the service, plus the necessary clerical staff to be drawn from the services, should be given preference in employment in the rehabilitation branch of the Department of Pensions and National Health and the administration of the Veterans' Land Act. It is considered that after primary screening and secondary consultation as has just been outlined, persons to be discharged will resolve themselves broadly into the following groups: (1) those who have a job to go to, or those who are engaged in a business or profession on their own account; (2) those who are accepted for vocational training under existing provisions; (3) those who are accepted for resumption of interrupted education at university level; (4) those who desire to be released with a view to returning to their own farms, and those who desire to make application for settlement on the land and are able to make provision for themselves until their eligibility is determined. It is thought that these four groups should be released as soon as arrangements can be made for the carrying on of the new business, training, or settlement on the land, or, if they are able to make provision for themselves pending the completion of such arrangements, it is thought that they might be discharged even earlier.

This leaves two major groups: those who are fully competent and skilled and require no training; and unskilled persons lacking the basic education to assimilate a training course. These latter groups should be referred to the employment office of the unemployment insurance commission, with a view to placement in employment.

It is a corollary of the programme which I have just described that those who are not immediately able to enter upon, for instance, vocational training, or for whom employment is not immediately available, should not be discharged from the forces until the arrangements contemplated for them have been completed.

The procedures that have been described will apply both to new recruits and personnel with short service in Canada, as well as to personnel returned from overseas.

The foregoing procedure covers those who can be absorbed by former employment, training, and farming, on their own resources.

With respect to those who cannot be so absorbed, it will be the responsibility of the government of the day, in cooperation with private industry through the facilities of the proposed department of reconstruction, to develop additional avenues of employment.

To the extent that such additional employment opportunity is not available, the device of retarded demobilization may be the necessary solution.

These are just some of the suggestions that have come before the committees who have been giving anxious thought and care to this problem.

The problem of demobilization really falls into three parts: First, the problem of repatriation, which is the task of the defence forces, that is getting the men home after hostilities are over. This may occupy a considerable time. Second, the problem of demobilization, which will be a joint problem between the defence services who are in charge of the men until they are handed over to the Department of Pensions and National Health for active rehabilitation in after life. Third, the problem of rehabilitation itself, which will be the primary concern of the Department of Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Are these suggestions put forward as those which will be the policy of the government, or are they suggestions?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): They are suggestions. They are not finalized yet, but these are suggestions made by certain committees which for the last year and a half have been giving very careful attention to this matter.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Further with regard to this talk which I heard from the High Commissioner of South Africa. He said that in South Africa, when a job was secured for a man or woman demobilized from the forces, he or she must be kept on the payroll for at least six months. That is a good suggestion, because there is the chance during the six months for that man to "find his feet". Over there they are using prisoners of war to prepare the farms which will be available under this land settlement act for soldiers.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Veterans Land Act.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Yes.

If the returned men went on some of the farms that I have seen, which are being taken over by the government for these men, they would find it very difficult for some time to make a living on them because in many cases the buildings need repairs, and there is a suggestion that if we had someone to put these farms into shape the soldier or airman or the man from the navy would have a better break. I do not know whether it was from the minister's department, but over the radio some months ago I heard the closing part of a speech with reference to amputation cases which struck me rather forcibly. The speech in question ended something like this: Ordinary people are looking for an extraordinary place in life, whereas the amputation cases are extraordinary people who are looking only for an ordinary place in life. I thought how true that was, because these fellows simply want to be reestablished.

What is being done with regard to the staff houses that are not being used any longer by Wartime Housing? Is the department going to take them over for hospitals? We have a wonderful institution of this kind in Peterborough and I should like to see it turned into a hospital.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): My recollection is that when some of these were being given up I got into touch with the officials of the department to make a survey of all the facilities in connection with staff houses and air training centres to see if they could be used for any of the essential purposes of the department, but I am sorry to say that the results were not very encouraging. The Department of Labour is making a survey of such places with a view to having them utilized for vocational training purposes when this scheme is going fully on the return of the men. How far we have gone with that survey I do not know, but as regards the medical treatment end of it the report was not very encouraging.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Would these places not be all right for convalescent cases?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Convalescent homes as such we have not under the department and have never had. The only feature of the work of the department by way of treatment that approaches convalescent homes is the domiciliary care which I mentioned; that is to say, the care of veterans. We have one in Toronto and one in Vancouver, and from 100 to 200 men are happy in their later years in these places. We may have to extend them, but we do not call them convalescent homes. The new policy of the department in connection with such conditions is rather to help and there are five centres under contemplation—possibly more. We are starting with one, and I hope that before the session is over all hon. members will take occasion to examine thoroughly the one at Rideau Centre in the vicinity of Ottawa. The idea is to foster the desire on the part of the men for work once again after their war experiences by which they have been shaken. In addition to that, there will be definite need of a psychiatric centre and the extension of small convalescent homes, though I do not like that name; I prefer to call them veterans' care homes. We are now in touch with those who have been doing excellent work for the air force and the army. They have convalescent homes throughout the country, raised by private subscription through the good will of public-spirited citizens, and we may be able to obtain some of these later on.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Is the one in Ottawa now under construction?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It is known as Rideau Centre.

Mr. ADAMSON: Is the guild of all arts in Toronto under the minister's direction?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes; that is a special psychiatric centre after the pattern of Mill Hill in England, which has had a tremendous success.

Mr. ADAMSON: It is under the minister's department?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes.

Mr. GILLIS: We are trying to stick as close as possible to the estimates.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I am afraid not.

Mr. GILLIS: Well, the members of this group are. We are trying to deal with principles rather than details. The minister will remember that a year ago when he last had his estimates before the committee I suggested to him that, because of the nature of the war, we would require a considerable expansion in our neurological hospitals across the country. The minister agreed at that time and intimated that they had this in mind. Now, a year later, he says that the establishing of psychiatric centres throughout Canada is still a matter of consideration, with a start being made, I understand, in one or two places.

I wish to direct to his attention a matter we discussed last year, and to demonstrate the necessity of the principle I will state a case for him. It is a case I discussed last year in the house. A boy received a fractured skull while thrown from a jeep. For the past year he has been going through the process of proving his claim and he did succeed in entering Camp Hill hospital. He had had a partial stroke. The decision at the hospital was that he was suffering from psychosis, and because of the fact that he had not been examined by a pensions medical examiner and assessed for pension he was shifted to an insane asylum. That man, in my opinion, and I believe in any one else's opinion, is in no condition to be placed, and should not under any circumstances be placed, in a regular insane asylum for treatment. To the best of my knowledge, there are in that institution no facilities and perhaps not the skilled personnel necessary to treat a case of that kind. I suggest that he should have been removed to Montreal to one of the neurological hospitals there.

I bring this to the minister's attention because it definitely proves that in most sections of Canada there is not the kind of institutional care necessary for such cases. The letter I have received in connection with this case is dated May 16. It comes from the pensions medical examiner in Camp Hill hospital. He states that this man is suffering from psychosis, having been admitted on April 25, 1944, and transferred to the Nova Scotia Mental hospital at Dartmouth on April 27, 1944, and at the present time he is undergoing treatment there under the new clause 2, which is the old clause 20. I believe that disability is admitted as attributable to service. While in the institution he gets pay but he is not assessed for pension. My objection is to placing a boy with that sort of disability in such an institution.

There is another matter I wish to discuss and I shall be brief. In the matter of pensions for women serving in the auxiliary services, I suggest that they should be treated exactly as the service personnel in the men's section of the services. The same rates should apply. In the present regulation the differential that exists in the schedules or wage rates or whatever you want to call them has been carried forward into the pension schedules. Many of these girls are overseas and many of them are likely to suffer the same disabilities as the men. If on returning from overseas they have disabilities of ten per cent, fifteen per cent or twenty-five per cent, the rates which apply in the case of regular service personnel should certainly apply to them also. I think everyone in the house has admitted that in connection with the wage schedules generally there are good arguments why the women should be treated the same as the men. I merely leave that thought with the minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): We did raise them quite recently from two-thirds to four-fifths.

Mr. GILLIS: Yes; but I think they should receive 100 per cent, at least in this matter of pensions.

Mr. FAIR: We have made provision for the rehabilitation of certain groups coming back from overseas, but I have in mind one group in particular for whom no provision is made; I refer to business and professional men whose careers have been interrupted by the war. Has any consideration been given to granting capital loans in such cases? Take, for instance, a young lawyer who worked hard to get through college and who was in practice for perhaps only a year or two before entering the service. When he comes back he will have a very hard time to get going unless some provision is made for his rehabilitation. The same is true with respect to men in other lines of business, and I wondered if any consideration has been given along the line I have suggested.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Is my hon. friend referring to capital loans for the purpose of establishing such men in business?

Mr. FAIR: Yes. I mention it because certain capital loans and grants are being made to men settling under the veterans' land act, and I wondered if something similar was being considered for men in business.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That is also receiving consideration by a special committee of the demobilization committee.

Mr. CARDIFF: Is a soldier granted a pension according to the application or presentation submitted by him, or is the pension decided on the evidence available in the case? Does it make any difference how the application is presented by the applicant; will the decision be the same in any event? I ask this question because there is a great difference in the ability of men to present a case, and I do not consider that a fair way of arriving at a decision. I believe that a case should be decided on its merits rather than on the ability of the applicant to present it. I have in mind the case of a man in my riding who served all through the last war. When the present war broke out he enlisted again and served for three years in England. He was knocked down by a motorcycle in a blackout one night, and injured to the extent that it was necessary to discharge him. If his pension is decided on his ability to present his case, I do not think he would get along very well.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Perhaps I should outline the procedure that is adopted. It is as follows:

(1) When an application is first made for pension the commission reviews all relevant records including such documentary evidence as may be submitted and makes such inquiry through its medical and other officers as appears advisable into the facts upon which the application is based, and if satisfied that the applicant is entitled to pension it makes such award and takes the necessary steps to cause the payment of pension to be made.

(2) When the application is not granted the applicant is notified in writing of the decision with the grounds therefor, and advised that unless he makes an application for second hearing within ninety days the case will be closed.

(3) If a second hearing is requested, the commission informs the applicant in writing:

(a) That if he so desires he may have the assistance of the veterans' bureau free of charge, or a service bureau of a veterans' organization, or by some other person at his own expense in the preparation and presentation of his application;

(b) That a summary of all available evidence will be mailed to him by the veterans' bureau; and

(c) That his complete claim must be submitted within a period of six months of the date of mailing of the summary of evidence.

(4) The commission also notifies the veterans' bureau that an application for second hearing has been accepted, and the veterans' bureau thereupon prepares a summary of all available evidence and mails a copy to the applicant.

(5) When the applicant notifies the commission within a period of six months that he is satisfied to submit his claim, the commission makes its ruling on second hearing.

(6) If the ruling on second hearing is not favourable to the applicant the commission notifies the applicant accordingly in writing, stating the grounds therefor, and informs him that if he so desires he may appear before an appeal board of the commission, provided that he so requests within ninety days.

(7) For the purpose of hearing applications an appeal board of the commission consists of three members and holds sittings periodically throughout places in Canada. The members of such appeal boards are designated by the chairman of the commission, but shall not include any member of the commission who has previously ruled on first or second hearing of the application. At such hearings appeal board representations may be made in person and sworn verbal evidence adduced.

(8) The decision of such appeal board shall be final except that an application may be made to a special appeal board of the commission on the grounds of error, or by reason of evidence not having been produced to the commission for leave to reopen the application.

This is the result of many years of discussion by veterans' organizations, and I think it is a fairly successful procedure.

Mr. ESLING: Is there any hospital for ex-service men between Vancouver and Calgary?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Not definitely, as such, except the contract hospitals with which we have made arrangements for their care.

Mr. ESLING: Last session I endeavoured to impress upon the minister the dire need of some accommodation, either by way of a hospital or convalescent homes, in the interior, for the reason that the distance between Vancouver and Calgary is just one thousand miles, which is a long stretch for invalids to travel. From the interior we have sent overseas fully five thousand men, more than two thousand coming from the staff of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting company alone. No more beautiful location for a veterans' home or hospital could be found than on the shores of Lake Kootenay, where there is an ideal climate and every conceivable recreation. It would seem only reasonable for the minister's advisers to give some consideration to hospital accommodation in the interior. Just to illustrate my point, in the latter part of 1939 we had a member of the 111th battery discharged from hospital in Edmonton. He came to Nelson, where he had enlisted, went into hospital for a month, and then was taken to his home some thirty miles distant. Then it became necessary for him to receive immediate hospital care, and they had to send back to Nelson for an ambulance. It cost the parents of that boy some $45 to have him taken to the nearest hospital, which would be in Denver, about thirty miles away. When he sought to recover the cost of the ambulance he was told that he should have gone to the Shaughnessy hospital in Vancouver. The minister will realize the impossibility of moving a boy in a critical condition a distance of five hundred miles, where there is hospital accommodation available within thirty miles. Does the minister countenance this sort of thing? Is it not possible to care for returned men in local hospitals when they require hospitalization?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes.

Mr. ESLING: And have the local medical officers authority to send these men to local hospitals?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes; if they are reported immediately at the local centres they are entitled to look after them, and the men can stay at home instead of going to Shaughnessy hospital.

Mr. ESLING: May I ask the minister if he will not have his hospital advisers look into the situation in the interior of British Columbia?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. ESLING: Because it covers a vast area. They have made their contribution of men in all arms of the services, and it would be a kindly act to see that they are cared for on their return.

Mr. EDWARDS: I should like to support and endorse with all my heart what the hon. member who has just taken his seat has said. After all, we do represent the beauty spots of Canada. Healthy, well people travel thousands of miles to enjoy the invigorating air and the beauty of the scenery which alone is to be found in the valleys of the Rockies. It would seem almost trite to say that if the surrounding scenery and invigorating air contribute to the well-being, spiritual as well as physical, of the normal healthy man, it would have an even greater and more beneficial effect upon one who has sweated, toiled and laboured in the defence of us who are more fortunate and remain here at home.

I have often wondered why there are no rest homes anywhere between Calgary and Harrison Hot Springs in the Rocky mountains. And yet there are objections which I can well see might be advanced. I do know—and I shall make further reference to it on another occasion—that when veterans come home they do not want to be isolated, or placed away from their fellowmen. However, there are centres in the mountains, places such as Banff, Lake Louise and Nelson, all charming and delightful spots in themselves, and inhabited by people generous to a degree, from whom the sick or the convalescent soldier would receive that care and friendship which contribute so much to speedy recovery.

Without casting any reflection upon anyone who may be so unfortunate as to have to live in one of our metropolitan centres, I venture to say that the convalescent soldier, the sick man, will find more of the warmth of human sympathy and kindness in those smaller towns and cities, yea, in the villages, if you will, or in the wide open spaces of the prairies or the foothills or the mountain valleys, than he will find anywhere else in Canada. At Nelson, at Banff or at Lake Louise, where our transportation companies have invested millions for the well-being of people who will visit there, we as a nation might very well spend some money in building rest homes and hospitals for those who have given the best years of their lives for us.

In that connection I would refer to another matter connected with pensions and national health. May I say how much the people of Calgary appreciate the good judgment and discernment of the department in locating at Calgary what I have every reason to believe is probably the finest military hospital of its kind to be found anywhere on this continent, or probably in the world. It is a credit to Canada and to the department. In that hospital is to be found every modern convenience known to medicine and surgery for the care and treatment of our returned soldiers. It stands in striking contrast to the miserable accommodation provided for the heroes of the last war. I congratulate the minister and the department upon their sparing no pains, money or scientific knowledge in the lay-out of that hospital, and I commend them, too, for the care and attention our returned soldiers are now receiving at the hands of the department.

I have only one other suggestion to make, and it has to do with the problem of rehabilitation and the integration into civilian life of our returned men. For the last four years—and it may extend to five years—our men overseas have been trained in the arts of war and the habits of military life. To whom do they look, and to whom have they looked for the last four years for counsel and advice in regard to their physical, social, domestic and military problems? I believe it is correct to say that in ninety per cent of cases they look to their officers. They look to the officers who command them, the officers to whose commands they respond. When the war is over, the control of those officers will be gone. No longer will the men have any right to look to them; no longer will the officer have any right to command. I wonder if we are not missing something in our plans and our programmes if we do not give consideration to the retention of the services of that officer, who has been the leader of those men and that he should be the last man discharged from the armed forces. Should we not retain the services of those officers in order that they may minister to, counsel and advise the soldiers and the non-commissioned officers who have served under them? Is there not some way whereby we can retain the services of the officer for his men?

I appreciate, as I am sure most hon. members do, that seventy-five per cent, or perhaps even a higher percentage of the men who will be rehabilitated into civilian life will have little difficulty. But there will be a remaining fifteen to twenty-five per cent who in normal, ordinary peace-times were, and will continue to be, if you will, problem cases. They had difficulties. They were not able to fend for themselves; they had difficulty in finding their niche. They were the men who relied upon their more experienced fellow citizens to counsel and advise them. They are people who were in the habit of having to be told what to do. Can we not by some means retain the services of the officers in our armed forces for the benefit of those men, so that they may counsel and advise?

My next thought is connected with public health. We have heard considerable discussion respecting a serious problem, particularly in the rural areas of Canada, more particularly those of western Canada. During the Easter recess I attended a meeting at which two doctors were present. One of them to come to this meeting—and, frankly, it was a political meeting—had driven 125 miles. The other one had driven approximately sixty miles and thought nothing of it. This one doctor serves a territory with a radius of approximately 125 miles centering on his home, and yet he has to supplement his income from his professional services by engaging in the raising of stock such as cattle and hogs, and the growing of grain. I commended his enterprise. He is a man beloved and highly regarded in his community, but what is the answer to this problem? He is staying there from a sense of duty and obligation to these people.

It seems to me that we ought to help people to get medical services. In this day and age we should not insist upon a doctor living in a rural community where he cannot make a comfortable or decent living, where he cannot take advantage of modern hospitals and equipment. Why cannot we take the doctor to the people who require his services, or bring those people to the doctor by modern methods and means? At one time, between Calgary and Banff, a distance of eighty-five miles, there were four doctors. One was located at Cochrane, one at Exshaw, another at Canmore and another at Banff. What happened? The doctor at Cochrane has ceased to practice. Why? With the advent of the automobile people who were critically ill would drive past his door to go to Calgary where they could get better hospitalization and, as they thought, more skilled attention. The same thing happened at Exshaw, and now there is no doctor at either place. The result is that Calgary is serving an area seventy-five miles to the west. Toward the northwest many people live from 125 to 200 miles from a doctor.

I suggest that there should be attached to each medical centre a modern aeroplane with a competent pilot to serve an area with a radius of at least 200 miles. The aeroplane could take the doctor to patients needing his services or, if it were urgent, bring the patient to the medical centre. From time to time we hear and read of "mercy flights" in western Canada, but we should not regard them as exceptional any longer. Why not answer the call of modern times and use some of our aircraft for this purpose? I think it is a deplorable situation that professional brains and ability should have to spend time driving across our prairies in a Ford or Chevrolet automobile when the same distance could be covered by an aeroplane in ten or fifteen minutes.

[Mr. Edwards.]

If the minister has not already given consideration to this matter I suggest that he should consider giving financial aid if necessary to the provinces in order that they may modernize and stream-line their medical services. The armed services in Italy and the air force on our sea coasts, as well as the navy, are doing this sort of thing to-day. We have an abundant supply of modern aircraft which could be adapted to that purpose and used to take the doctor to his patient or bring the patient to the doctor, and thereby save time and suffering and conserve and distribute medical skill and hospital facilities.

The CHAIRMAN: I feel that we have reached the stage when we should keep within the item. I have allowed a wide discussion, but I think hon. members will realize that they should keep within the terms of the first item of the Department of Pensions and National Health.

Mr. KNOWLES: Speaking for just a moment to a matter covered by the item, I wish to refer to what the minister said this afternoon in reply to questions I asked last night. First of all, may I say that I appreciate the spirit in which he spoke in replying to my comments concerning the shortage of medical personnel in the hospitals under the supervision of his department. I felt that when the minister spoke he made it clear that he is deeply concerned about this problem, which of course serves to underline the fact that it is a problem which should be faced.

There is one matter about which I should like to have the record clear, and then I wish to ask the minister one or two questions. The return which was tabled yesterday, sessional paper 214A, gave an answer to the questions I had asked about patient-days in the hospitals under the supervision of the department. Do those patient-days cover all patients in the hospitals, or do they refer only to Department of Pensions and National Health patients? At first I thought the figures referred to all patients, because that was what I intended by the wording of my question. But when I break down the figure with respect to Deer Lodge it shows only 266 patients per day, and I am sure that there are many more beds and many more patients than that in that hospital. Perhaps the minister can answer that question now.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It covers all patients that the department is treating. Admissions for the last fiscal year to the departmental hospitals were 41,848, and to other hospitals, 27,544.

Mr. KNOWLES: The inference can be drawn from what the minister has said that there are other patients in these hospitals. I am sure that there must be after having studied the figures with respect to the hospitals.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): What does my hon. friend mean by "other patients"?

Mr. KNOWLES: Patients of the armed services.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Oh, yes.

Mr. KNOWLES: In that event I think I should point out that it is hardly proper, so far as these statistics are concerned, to stress the fact that medical personnel of the armed services are in the hospitals of the Department of Pensions and National Health.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The point I was trying to make was that we had many patients from the armed services before we got this additional assistance by the medical officers. It has always been our duty to look after serious active service cases.

Mr. KNOWLES: Along with getting the additional service of the medical personnel from the armed services, to which the minister referred and which is covered by the note at the bottom of this sessional paper, his department has also received an additional responsibility in the form of other patients not covered by the figures in this return. In other words, the responsibilities of the Department of Pensions and National Health are even greater than they were on the basis of the figures I had. I may say to the minister that another reason for my raising the matter last night was the fact that I had taken a little time to look over—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Perhaps it will help my hon. friend to know that at the end of March we had in our hospitals 3,071 patients from the armed services and 5,397 of our own.

Mr. KNOWLES: I think that will answer the question once a person has had a chance to analyse the figures. I have looked over the extensive national health survey made by the Canadian medical procurment and assignment board, which was laid on the table of the house by the Minister of National Defence on March 13 of this year. It is a very bulky document identified as sessional paper No. 217, and in part VII of volume X I find this recommendation, which is along the line of what I had in mind last night:

Recommendation No. 13.

Inter-service hospitalization should be encouraged:

Army tables indicate the small amount of inter-service hospitalization which exists as between the navy, army and air force. It is felt that inter-service hospitalization should be encouraged wherever possible.

The next sentence covers the point I want to make because we are talking about hospitals of the Department of Pensions and National Health. It goes on:

This would relieve the burden carried by Department of Pensions and National Health hospitals and would promote interlocking of service medical facilities.

As the minister will recall, I was concerned last night about the shortage of medical personnel in the hospitals under the supervision of his department. I was also concerned about the confusion that exists in some of these hospitals, and I point out that the very fact that medical personnel are congregated in these hospitals from two or three or four different services may be a reason for some of this confusion. I also know from things that have been told me that there have been some fine examples of cooperation among the medical personnel of the armed services both among themselves and with the Department of Pensions and National Health. Yet, at the same time, the reports that have come to me seem to indicate the lack of any overall plan and seem to indicate difficulties of which the minister may be more aware than I am in bringing about a real coordination of the medical services as among the armed services and between them and the minister's department. I would appreciate it if the minister would indicate whether any progress is being made in an endeavour to carry out the kind of recommendation to which I have referred, namely, that it should be clear, for example, in the hospitals under his supervision who is in charge when you have medical personnel of all the different armed services there, and whether any progress is being made in connection with the last suggestion in the recommendation which I quoted to the effect that some effort should be made to promote interlocking of service medical facilities.

I was hoping I might find somewhere in this national health survey report a point-blank recommendation that the medical services of the various armed services be united in one service, but I confess I do not find any such point-blank recommendation. There are, however, a number of recommendations such as the one I have read which imply that that would be a good idea, and the statements and reports that have been made to me by some who are concerned about this matter are to the effect that that kind of thing ought to be done. I believe that the minister agrees with me as to the desirability of what I am arguing for, and I would appreciate it if he would indicate whether any progress is being made in that direction.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes, I can tell my hon. friend that substantial progress has been made since that report was made available. There is the closest possible liaison at the present time between the services and the department with reference to hospitalization. I believe they are giving us all the assistance they possibly can and we deeply appreciate the cooperation we have received. The medical services of the armed forces have been most cooperative in every way.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: As an old footslogger myself I should like to ask the minister whether the disease called callosity is covered by the Pension Act in this war.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): For the first time to-day I am stumped.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: In case the minister is not familiar with the medical term callosity is the medical description of calluses caused by sitting too long on hard chairs.

Mrs. CASSELMAN: May I ask what progress has been made in establishing a convalescent home in Edmonton?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I do not think there is any convalescent home as such in Edmonton, but my hon. friend is aware, of course, of the two wings to the hospital. We have no convalescent homes anywhere except that we have started two for veterans' domiciliary care, accommodating from eighty to a hundred, one in Toronto and the other in Vancouver. They may have to be extended across the country, but nothing has been decided as yet.

Mrs. CASSELMAN: I understood that government house at Edmonton was being taken over.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That is under consideration at the present time.

Item agreed to.

Detention allowances on behalf of Canadian seamen, $100,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: A night or two ago the Minister of Fisheries was before us and had an item for pensions and other benefits for seamen and fishermen. Does this item cover a similar service?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The object of this item is to provide an allowance to Canadian seamen and their dependents who are detained in enemy or foreign country due to enemy action, as authorized by order in council P.C. 12/4209 of June 12, 1941. There was expended in 1941-42, $52,971.31; in 1942-43, $58,264.27, and in 1943-44 to March 31, $369,716.10. A large portion of the allowances is being retained to the credit of these men, and will be payable when they are released from enemy custody and returned to their own country.

Mr. MacNICOL: These men are at present detained in the harbours or ports of Germany?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Payments are being made to their dependents.

Mr. MacNICOL: And what is done with the balance?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It is placed in trust.

Mr. KNOWLES: If I may revert to the previous item for a moment, under what act or authority are pensions to fishermen and seamen paid as itemized in the previous vote?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That is under a special order in council.

Mr. KNOWLES: Their position being similar to that of the seamen to whom the minister has just referred?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Health branch—
Civil defence, $1,038,500.

Mr. MacNICOL: We want to help the minister along, but we need some explanation. What is embraced in this item of $1,038,500 for civil defence under health?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The amount estimated is $1,038,500. Last year the amount was $3,543,650, to provide for organization of protective services in areas in Canada deemed subject to enemy visitations by air and sea, purchase of suitable equipment, such as anti-gas clothing and masks—

Mr. GRAYDON: A.R.P.?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes. The new name is "civil defence". It has been changed, with the consent of the war cabinet and chiefs of staff, since Brigadier General Alex. Ross took over, to correspond with the name in other countries.

Mr. GRAYDON: That explains it?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Industrial hygiene, including inspection of industrial plants, $31,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: Each province has its own inspection department in connection with industries. What industries are inspected by dominion government inspectors under this vote?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It is the object of this item to provide for salaries of personnel and cost of inspection of the laboratory services arising from the inspection of war contract premises under the authority of order in council P.C. 1550 of March 2, 1942.

Mr. MacNICOL: But at the same time has each province not its own inspectors? Ontario has.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): This has to do entirely with dominion government war contracts.

Mr. MacNICOL: I realize that, but the Ontario government inspectors still must go into these plants working on government war contracts. Are we to have two sets of inspectors inspecting the same plants?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Under the order in council I cited, the definite responsibility is placed on the Minister of Pensions and National Health to see that this inspection work is carried out. It is a definite obligation.

Mr. MacNICOL: Well, the Ontario government inspectors cover the same plants in Ontario.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I am not definite on that point, but I do not think so.

Item agreed to.

Processing, storage and distribution of blood for transfusion, $565,000.

Mr. GRAYDON: I think this is one part of the minister's estimates as to which we ought to have a short statement from him. In practically every community in Canada the practice of blood donations has taken root. There is scarcely any phase of civilian war work in which our citizens take a greater interest and concern and, may I say, a greater pride. As the minister knows, there are to-day scattered throughout Canada these facilities and these opportunities, which have been readily and willingly grasped by the civilian population in order that they may take their share in helping to fight the battles of the nation. The hon. member for Davenport mentions the sacrifice which has been made and the service which has been given as constituting a good deal of expense to those who are involved. In addition to the expense factor, I would say that the sacrifice and the service which people engaged in this work are rendering is exciting the interest of the public generally. I think the minister might take a little time to indicate the extent of the work and what is being done under this very important branch of our war effort.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I entirely agree with the remarks of the leader of the opposition. No tribute can be too high to those who are carrying out this splendid service for the nation. The details are: first of all, processing, storage and distribution of blood for transfusion, Connaught laboratories, Toronto, 1944-45, $500,000. The approved estimate for last year was $520,000. The object, as we all know, is to provide for the purchase, installation and maintenance of laboratory equipment by the Connaught Laboratories, university of Toronto, and to meet the cost of operation and expenses involved in the processing of blood in the Connaught Laboratories. The expenditure in 1941-42 was $160,840.46; 1942-43, $174,173.94; 1943-44 to the end of March, $512,572.56. The detail of the expenditure in 1943-44 was: capital expenditure, $81,541.76; consumable supplies, $240,203.56; operation and maintenance, $190,827.24; total, $512,572.56. The details of the estimate of this year are: consumable supplies, $300,000; operation and maintenance, $200,000. Then, when we come to the processing of blood at the university of Montreal, the amount submitted is $200,000. That was increased from the first estimate to provide for payments to Montreal university to meet operation and maintenance expenses involved in the processing of blood for distribution by the dominion government services; authority order in council P.C. 128 of January 7, 1943. Expenditure to January 31, 1944, $58,203.32. Detail of expenditure: capital expenditure, $36,232.18; operating expenses, $21,971.14.

Mr. GRAYDON: Has the minister any figures as to the amount which was donated?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I should have.

Mr. GRAYDON: It would be interesting to have that information, if the minister is able to provide it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Montreal university, out of the estimated capital expenditure and operating expenses for the twelve months' period, production capacity, first semester, is estimated to be 800 bottles a week; second semester, estimate, 1,500 bottles a week.

Mr. STIRLING: Does this cover the cost of collecting it from all over Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That is done by the Red Cross organization.

Mr. PERLEY: How many blood donors are there throughout Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It has already exceeded 22,000 a week.

Mr. PERLEY: I know that as far as the west is concerned the people are enthusiastic about this, and there is not any trouble at all in securing the number of volunteers to go to the hospitals for this service. When I was home at Easter time there was a man from our town, eighty-one years of age, who insisted on being a donor.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The order in council which recites the facts was passed on May 9. In regard to the university providing for the processing, storage and distribution of blood, by order in council of April 27, 1944, the following expenditures were authorized, it being stated that the Canadian Red Cross Society anticipates a greatly increased output of processed blood during this fiscal year 1944-45 as compared with that of the previous fiscal year, and has submitted estimates based on a maximum of 25,000 a week.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is throughout Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: Can the minister tell us if it makes any difference from what colour of person blood is taken? Is there any difference in the blood of various races, whether white, red, black or any other shade?

Mr. KNOWLES: Or Scotch or English?

Mr. MacNICOL: The reason I ask is that I read in an article that there is not any difference, that blood of persons of different colours can be mixed, and that it does not matter what the colour of the donor is. Somebody ought to know.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The hon. member for Medicine Hat can, I am sure, answer that question.

[Mr. Graydon.]

Mr. GERSHAW: If they conform to the same types. There are four different blood classifications or classes. There is no specific difference in the character of the blood between a dark and a white person.

Mr. GRAYDON: Is this the new parliamentary assistant?

Mr. NICHOLSON: The leader of the opposition has expressed the general sentiment that the Canadian people have fully cooperated in this service. Would the minister give us some information as to whether this vote provides for publicity work, or is publicity taken care of by the Red Cross?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): No publicity is provided for under this vote.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Is the response providing all the blood that is needed?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Of course, we are asking for more donors all the time and the efforts of the people have been most laudable. There is always a demand for more blood, and in view of what may soon be happening, that demand will be still greater in the next few months.

Mr. GRAYDON: If the Red Cross or the government knew what the demand would be they would be in a better position to make a statement in regard to the supply.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Has the minister found the grant adequate for the needs?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): So far we have, yes. We have always been able to meet the demands made on us from time to time, but if we needed something in an emergency, we could ask for an emergency grant and we would not have any difficulty getting it for this sacred purpose.

Mr. MacNICOL: Is the work done by the officials where blood is being donated voluntary work, or are these officials paid?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Are all volunteers, except a very few trained personnel.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am glad to hear that. I was in a small town in Ontario recently, a town that forms the centre for quite a community of townships and smaller villages round-about, and the people were coming into that town to donate blood. There seemed to be a rivalry between smaller communities adjacent to or near the town as to which one would supply the greatest number of donors. The Canadian people have demonstrated that they are most generous in contributing blood, and they have done such a wonderful work, from which such splendid results have been obtained, that in my opinion the minister should make a public statement in the strongest terms in appreciation of the Canadian people. The work is all voluntary and a good deal of it is done at the expense of the people themselves. Many of them come from quite a distance to donate their blood.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I thank the hon. member for his remark.

Item agreed to.

Maintenance, medical and other care of incapacitated non-resident seamen pending deportation, $50,000.

Mr. STIRLING: Would the minister describe what this is for?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The amount this year is $50,000. Last year it was $40,000. The object is to provide for the cost of medical care and maintenance of seamen, non-residents of Canada, who have become incapacitated and who will be deported when possible under the authority of T. B. minute 20/7149 of May 9, 1941. Last year the expenditure was $33,522.01. There are at present detained in hospitals thirty-four seamen and under present conditions the number is likely to grow, since there are no means of returning them to their native countries. The cost of maintaining an ordinary patient is $1,000 per annum, and a mental patient costs around $500. Fifteen of the number are in mental institutions, and 110 have received treatment under this authority since the commencement.

Mr. BLACKMORE: How many seamen of this class are in Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): There are 110 who have received treatment since the commencement, and there are thirty-four at present in hospitals.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the Canadian Nurses' Association to increase the supply of qualified nurses in Canada, $250,000.

Mr. KNOWLES: We all recognize that this work is exceedingly worth while. But could the minister indicate the ways in which the money is spent by the association? Perhaps I might take a moment to call the attention of the minister's colleague, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gibson), to this item. We shall come to it again on a subsequent occasion; but, as he knows, a great many parents of nurses feel keenly over the fact that, while nurses are needed, and funds are provided to encourage young women to go in for nursing training, yet they are not allowed that exemption under the income tax regulations afforded those who have sons or daughters in educational institutions.

Mr. GIBSON: The matter has been brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance and I know he is giving it consideration at the present time.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am glad to hear that.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The object is to provide, subject to the approval of the governor general in council, certain grants to the Canadian Nurses' Association, for the purpose of increasing the supply of nurses in Canada. The 1942-43 grants were authorized by order in council 72/6073 of July 16, 1942, and the 1943-44 grants were authorized by the war appropriation bill. The expenditures for 1942-43 were $115,000, and for 1943-44, to the end of March, $200,000.

The details of the estimates now submitted are:

Administration	$ 25,000
Recruitment of students and training student nurses	155,000
Supervisors and teachers	40,000
Department of nursing in universities, public health nursing organizations.	30,000

Mrs. NIELSEN: How many probationist nurses entered training this year, and is the number sufficient to cover the needs?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The following figures have been obtained recently and are indicative of some of the accomplishments. In February, 1944, 11,359 student nurses enrolled in 175 approved schools as compared with 10,759 student nurses in 173 approved schools in 1943 and approximately 8,500 in 179 schools in 1939. This shows an increase in enrolment of approximately 2,850 students since 1939. The number of graduate nurses enrolled for the full year's course at universities during 1943-44 is 272 as compared with 262 in 1942-43 and 196 in 1938-39. In addition to this number, over 562 nurses have enrolled for shorter courses given at the universities and hospitals as special war-time programmes. These courses have varied in length but are in addition to the shorter refresher courses organized in many districts in various provinces. These are some of the tangible benefits resulting from the assistance received from the federal government. It is realized that the programme initiated through the grant has done much to stabilize nursing services and has strengthened morale. This information comes from the general secretary of the nurses' association.

Mrs. NIELSEN: I think the figures given are impressive, but when we consider that immediately after the war, or as soon as possible thereafter, we shall be inaugurating a health scheme in Canada and nurses will be needed for rural areas, would this not seem to be the right time to afford opportunities for more girls leaving our high schools who desire to go in for training as nurses? They are going into the nursing profession from grade twelve in many cases and it takes a few years for them to become qualified. Their parents are not in a position to give them the assistance they need and it seems to me that we might provide them with a small supplement. There are a great number of girls who would like to take up the nursing profession but whose parents cannot afford the necessary funds.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I may tell my hon. friend that we have definitely in mind training some of the girls now serving with the forces; I have forgotten the exact number, but it is quite considerable. They will be entitled to vocational benefits while taking courses which will qualify them for nursing work, and I am sure they will give excellent service to Canada both now and in post-war days.

Mr. GRAYDON: I should like to pay a tribute to the nursing sisters both overseas and in Canada. Perhaps they have not been given the recognition they deserve, in connection with both the last war and this war, and we should not let this item pass without a word in appreciation of the services performed by these most estimable people. The nursing profession does a quiet, effective and useful job in time of peace, and in time of war performs even greater services and more useful tasks, but seldom receives public recognition of its work. Therefore I should think this committee would want something on record as expressing our appreciation of the work of the nursing sisters both in the war areas and in civilian activity. The same difficulty has been experienced in connection with nurses as in connection with doctors; that is, as the minister knows, there has been a very great shortage. This has meant that nurses have had to work long hours. Many of them, I know, have gone without holidays for two or three years, working almost every day without any respite whatever. I believe that we should pay our tribute as a parliament to the work of these estimable women to whom we owe a debt of gratitude for the work they are performing in behalf of both our civilian population and our armed forces.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I agree with every word the leader of the opposition has said. We have seen the work of our nurses in the last war, in the days of peace, and again in the present great conflict, and the service they have rendered to our forces and to Canada as a whole could not be surpassed.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The minister read a list of figures which indicated that the number of nurses in training had greatly increased. Could he give us some idea of how the expenditure of this sum of money has contributed to that increase?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It has contributed both directly and indirectly, I would say. According to the memorandum before me, the need for more graduate nurses and specialists has increased, so that it was decided to increase the grant to the Canadian Nurses' Association, as follows:

(a) $25,000 for administration, to increase the campaign for recruitment of student nurses, and for increased publicity;

(b) $155,000 for direct assistance to schools of nursing to provide for increased registration.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Would the minister just elaborate on that item, to show how the money is spent in order to increase the number of nurses?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): We just make the grant, which at the end of the year is vouched for in a proper financial way by the association. We make the grant to the Canadian Nurses' association and they decide how it is to be allotted; then we are informed how every cent has been spent during the year. The memorandum continues:

The present grant did not permit assistance to many schools where such aid would have provided for larger registration. It is planned to increase the number of students in many more training schools as soon as money can be provided for increased training facilities.

(c) $40,000 for scholarships. The need for specialists is increasing. The grant last year permitted forty-five scholarships, but this took care of only half the eligible and desirable applicants.

(d) $30,000 for direct assistance to schools of nursing in universities and in public health organization in order to extend their facilities for giving post-graduate specialist training. Present facilities are taxed to capacity and direct aid will provide for an increased output of trained specialists. The method of distribution of the direct assistance to teaching institutions and universities is subject to the approval of the department.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The minister indicated that he had a statement from the nursing organization showing how the money had been spent. Would he mind giving that to the committee? I am not able to form a clear picture of just how this money would help to increase the number of nurses. Perhaps the minister would elaborate.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes. First I have the distribution of scholarships by provinces in 1942-43:

Alberta	3
British Columbia	3
Manitoba	4
New Brunswick	1
Nova Scotia	1
Ontario	1
Saskatchewan	5
	18

Mr. BLACKMORE: Are these scholarships given to high school students, or to nurses in training, or to nurses who have finished training in order to enable them to go on and take higher training? Just why are the scholarships given, and how do they assist in reaching the objective of increasing the number of nurses?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): We do not lay down the conditions under which these grants are made; the Canadian Nurses' association apply the grant as their best judgment dictates. The plan is then submitted to the department, and of course they account to us for everything that is spent. The scholarships are for graduate nurses deemed to be promising material as teachers, supervisors and administrators.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I was interested in just what this nursing association has told the minister as to how the money is spent.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I was just coming to that. The next item is the distribution of direct assistance to training schools in 1942-43:

Alberta	$ 9,240
British Columbia	9,900
Manitoba	9,900
New Brunswick	3,960
Nova Scotia	6,600
Ontario	11,900
Prince Edward Island	2,000
Quebec	11,900
Saskatchewan	7,920
	$73,320

Then comes direct assistance to universities:

McGill university	$2,100
Institute Marguerite D'Youville University of Montreal (covering courses in clinical teaching and supervision to groups of graduates from approximately twenty schools)	1,500
Ecole D'Infirmieres Hygienistes University of Montreal (additional instructor and supervision of students on field work)	1,500
	$5,100
Deficiency to be made up by reducing grant for last quarter where possible	$3,420

Mr. BLACKMORE: Has the grant made to McGill university, for instance, definitely increased the number of nurses in training; and just how has it increased that number? What guarantee have we that it has actually done so?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): As far as we are concerned in the department, we just make the grant to the nurses' association after approval of their submitted programme; it is for a most worthy purpose. I have a long letter in which they tell us exactly how they carried out the work. I just read part of it; I can read it all if necessary.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Ordinarily I do not ask questions of this sort, but I do believe it is the duty of members of parliament, in the case of a grant as large as this, to probe into the matter to some extent just to make sure there is proper supervision of the expenditure of this money. I want to give the minister an opportunity to give us the statement.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Later on, of course, there will be an audited statement accounting for every cent that has been expended, but from my knowledge of the people in charge of this organization I can assure my hon. friend that they are the most worthy and most careful that could be found.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am not questioning the people; I am just endeavouring to be businesslike in the conduct of the country's affairs.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I have not an audited statement here.

Mrs. CASSELMAN: I believe the nurses' association is entitled to great credit for coming to the minister with a plan pretty well laid out as to how, by the expenditure of a certain sum of money, the number of girls entering the nursing profession can be increased. Grants were made for definite purposes to the hospitals where the training is done, in order to increase the number of students they could handle, and also to enable further training to be carried on in the schools themselves. The heads of the nursing association are very able, and had a plan very well worked out when they brought it to the minister. I wonder if he would put that letter on the record? Perhaps he could put it on Hansard without reading it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): With the permission of the committee.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I should like to have the minister read it. Most of us have more reading than we can possibly do.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It is as follows:

Information has now been received in this office on the expenditure of the projects made possible through the grant given by the federal government to the Canadian Nurses' Association 1943-44, as the result of the most generous support afforded by you and others in your department. On behalf of the Canadian Nurses' Association, I have been requested to forward a report on these to you. In submitting their report regarding expenditure of the allocations made to them, much appreciation is expressed by the registered nurses' association in each province.

You will recall that the grant was made to support the following objectives:

(1) The development of war-time programmes, including extensions of facilities for giving post-graduate courses, in departments and schools of nursing in universities, also in public health organizations;

(2) Recruitment of students and their preparation;

(3) Direct assistance to schools of nursing to provide for increased registration;

(4) Administration, including the work of the national adviser and general publicity;

(5) Bursaries to assist nurses in taking post-graduate work and qualifying as teachers, supervisors and administrators.

With the exception of the allocations for administration and bursaries, expenditures of the grant have been made through the provincial associations of registered nurses, subject to the recommendations of the Canadian Nurses' Association and the approval of your department.

The following is a brief summary of a number of projects which have been undertaken in the provinces, and notations on the results as reported by them.

1. In seven provinces travelling instructors have been employed: to give refresher courses to nurses in order to bring them up to date, when this is necessary; these courses are of special value, as many married and retired nurses have been taking advantage of them and are giving very valuable assistance during the present crisis; to advise with staffs in hospitals and boards of directors regarding problems arising out of the present crisis; to promote recruitment of students through direct contact with high schools. The assistance given by travelling instructors has been declared to be of the greatest value, and has been characterized in one province by hospital representatives as one of the most effective measures ever taken to assist small hospitals and to bring expert advice and suggestions to them in a time of need.

Mr. BLACKMORE: May I interrupt the minister there to express warm commendation of that particular project. That is something with which we can be thoroughly satisfied.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The letter continues:

2. Additional instructors and supervisors in a number of schools of nursing and in some public health organizations throughout the dominion have been made possible through assistance given through the grant. They have made a fine contribution. It is very essential that the teaching staff should be strengthened, especially at this time, when in many instances provision must be made for an increased enrolment of students and all health organizations and institutions are working under great pressure. It is true, that at this time students are being required to assume greater responsibilities as graduate nurses have to be released for more advanced duties, therefore supervision is of special importance to safeguard the welfare of patients.

3. Additional teaching facilities and equipment have also been provided in a number of schools of nursing in which increased enrolment has taken place.

4. To meet the increased demand for nurses with special preparation, post-graduate courses have been extended and adjusted in universities, hospitals and public health organizations. A portion of the grant made to the provinces has been used for this purpose. Special courses have included refresher, extension, summer school courses and institutes, by which many nurses have been reached. In a number of instances the support of universities has made the organization of these courses possible.

In addition to the projects carried out by the grant to provinces, the support given in the form of bursaries to enable nurses to take post-graduate work has been of the greatest assistance. Not only has the number of nurses who are enrolled for courses at universities increased, but very favourable reports are received on the calibre of the nurses taking these courses and their contributions in the different fields of nursing upon the completion of the course. Although a total of 141 bursaries was awarded in 1943-44, only about fifty per cent of the applications could be granted. Of these twenty-one bursaries were awarded to French-speaking candidates.

Through the national adviser personal contacts were made in many of the provinces during the past year. A French associate adviser carries on activities from time to time as these are deemed necessary. The publicity campaign is being continued for the recruitment of students, and direct appeals are also being made to nurses to give service where this is most needed.

The Canadian Nurses' Association is proud to report that it is our understanding that there is no dearth of nurses applying to enlist with the armed forces. The demands for nursing service to meet civilian needs presents a more serious problem. As you are aware, The Canadian Nurses' Association has been making every effort to assist in meeting these since the outbreak of war, and we can state with confidence that much has been done to overcome shortages which would not have been possible without the generous assistance received through the grant.

The following figures have been obtained recently and are indicative of some of the definite accomplishments:

In February, 1944, 11,359 student nurses were enrolled in 175 approved schools as compared with 10,759 in 173 schools in 1943, and approximately 8,500 students in 179 approved schools in 1939. This shows an increase in enrolment of approximately 2,850 students since 1939.

The number of graduate nurses enrolled for the full year's course at universities during 1943-44 is 272 as compared with 262 in 1942-43 and 196 in 1938-9. In addition to this number, over 562 nurses have enrolled for shorter courses given at universities and hospitals as special war-time programmes. These courses have varied in length, but are in addition to the shorter refresher courses organized in many districts in the various provinces.

These are some of the tangible benefits that can be reported as directly resulting from assistance received from the federal government. In addition it is realized that the programme initiated through the grant has done much to stabilize nursing service and to assist in strengthening morale in these difficult times.

On behalf of the Canadian Nurses' Association, Miss Lindeburgh, the president, wishes me to express again appreciation of the sympathetic hearing given to us at all times and of your continued support.

K. W. Ellis,
General Secretary.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Was not another letter mentioned?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It was a memorandum.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am pleased with that letter. But can the minister tell us how many post-graduate courses were given nurses?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That is a matter I would have to ask the Canadian nurses about. I believe the number exceeds 100.

Mr. BLACKMORE: In respect of a grant like this it would be easy for an institution to take a grant of money, apply it to general expenses and spend it without getting actual results. It would be well if we had a report to show that such had not been done.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I shall be glad to get a full report for my hon. friend, and present it when my main estimates are before the committee.

Mr. MacNICOL: Does the Canadian Nurses' association select candidates for refresher courses and university courses?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): So far as I know they do.

Mr. HAZEN: What hospitals in New Brunswick receive part of this grant?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I shall have to get that information for my hon. friend.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The letter mentions that a number of post-graduate courses are given. How many are there?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I have not that information, but I will get it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: While I am quite satisfied to take these statements on faith, I believe that if we are to do business in a businesslike way we should have it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I shall be glad to get it.

Item agreed to.

Contribution toward health services at Halifax, $45,000.

Mr. KNOWLES: This is an item which we did not vote last year. But do I understand that this replaces an amount passed by order in council about a year ago? If so, would the minister indicate what it was possible to do last year with that amount of money to meet the conditions reported to us respecting Halifax?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I do not think any expenditure has been made up to the end of the fiscal year just completed.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Would the minister give some details as to how this money is to be used? Is it necessary that this money be spent at Halifax rather than Saint John, for example, or Vancouver?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It has not been used yet. The order in council sets forth the purpose. Does my hon. friend wish me to read it?

Mr. BLACKMORE: It would be appropriate to this matter and the minister might make a job of it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It reads:

Whereas by reason of exceptional circumstances of a highly extraordinary character arising out of the large movement of naval, air and military units and merchant seamen into and out of the city and port of Halifax and the extreme concentration in the area of enlisted and civilian personnel not ordinarily resident there, it is desirable and expedient that the dominion government should assume part of the cost of maintaining the essential health services of that city;

And whereas the outbreak of an epidemic or the development of other conditions inimical to the health of residents of the city of Halifax would seriously interfere with the overseas movement of troops and supplies and generally with the Canadian war effort;

And whereas in the opinion of officials of the Department of Pensions and National Health an average annual expenditure of approximately $100,000 is required in order to provide essential minimum standards of health services in the city of Halifax;

And whereas it is considered desirable for the dominion government to assist the city of Halifax in reaching this required expenditure by contributing an amount of $45,000 during the first year after the going into force of this order, an amount of $15,000 during the second year, and thereafter an amount of $30,000 annually, toward the cost of health services in the city of Halifax for the duration of the present war and one year thereafter, provided that the municipal government of the city of Halifax continues to expend from municipal funds an amount of $70,000 annually, and provided further that the said municipal government agrees to the conditions hereinafter attached to the payment of such assistance.

Now, therefore, His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Pensions and National Health and under and by virtue of the War Measures Act, chapter 206, Revised Statutes of Canada 1927, is pleased to order and doth hereby order as follows:

1. The Department of Pensions and National Health is hereby authorized to assist the city of Halifax, N.S., to improve municipal health conditions by the payment of an amount of $45,000 during the first year after the coming into force of this order and of an amount of $15,000 during the second year after the coming into force of this order and thereafter of an amount of $30,000 annually for the duration of the war and for one year thereafter, such payments or any of them to be made in the manner and with the provisos hereinafter set forth:

(a) That such payments or parts thereof shall be made by the Department of Pensions and National Health to the minister of public health of the province of Nova Scotia for disbursement as prescribed herein to the municipal government of the city of Halifax and shall be expended in implementing such recommendations, in the report of the survey of health conditions in the city of Halifax conducted by the international health division of the Rockefeller foundation and dated the 17th November, 1942, as may be agreed upon between the Minister of Pensions and National Health and the minister of public health of the province of Nova Scotia; and

(b) That any such payments or parts thereof shall be made to the minister of public health of the province of Nova Scotia upon receipt of a joint certificate, acceptable to the chief treasury officer of the Department of Pensions and National Health, from officers of the provincial department of public health and the provincial treasurer that the expenditures by the municipal government of the city of Halifax have been incurred in implementing the recommendations of the aforesaid report as agreed upon between the Minister of Pensions and National Health and the minister of public health of the province of Nova Scotia.

2. The cost of carrying out this order shall be charged against funds provided from the war appropriation for these purposes, subject to the approval by the treasury board of the estimate of cost, and allotment of funds in conformity with the terms of order in council P.C. 6695 of November 19, 1940.

[Mr. Ian Mackenzie.]

Mr. KNOWLES: The thing that puzzles me is not that we have been asked to vote this money but that it has not been spent.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That is a matter entirely for the local authorities.

Mr. KNOWLES: I recall that it was asked for last year because reports had been received that conditions in Halifax were pretty serious.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): We were asked for assistance, but accounts were not submitted.

Mr. KNOWLES: In other words, you have had no request from the local authorities?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): No.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Has the minister any idea why that is?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): No, I have not.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The order in council seems to have viewed the matter quite seriously.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It was placed before us as a matter of great seriousness; otherwise we would not have passed this rather unusual order. It was represented to us that conditions were serious from the health point of view, mostly because of the movements in connection with the war effort of Canada. We arranged to give assistance but it has not been spent.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Are we to gather from this that the provisions for the safeguarding of the health of the troops are not being taken?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Measures may have been taken. That is a matter for the local authorities.

Mr. KNOWLES: Is the minister referring to the city or provincial authorities?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Both.

Mr. BLACKMORE: This order in council was passed originally as a result of a request from the authorities?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Sundry services $43,480.

Mr. BLACKMORE: What were the sundry services?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The details are:

Treatment of Canadian fishermen and seamen	$15,000
Analyses of food and drugs	10,000
Hire of boats	14,400
Health unit—Prince Rupert, B.C.	4,080
Amount submitted for 1944-45	$43,480
Approved estimate for 1943-44	$30,680

Mr. BLACKMORE: I notice that once more the money apparently was not expended.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The expenditures have been much smaller than the amounts voted. In the case of treatment of Canadian fishermen and seamen, the amount submitted for 1944-45 was $15,000, and the approved estimate for 1943-44 was $1,000. The following expenditures were made:

1941-42	$560 50
1942-43	397 31
1943-44 (to March 31, 1944)	968 23

Mr. BLACKMORE: Could the minister give us an idea of the kind of service given to these seamen? Was any money spent in connection with accidents?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It is to provide for the cost of treatment required by persons employed on ships of Canadian registry and Canadian salt water fishermen who require treatment as a result of enemy action or counter action against the enemy, who are not otherwise eligible for free treatment under the provisions of part V of the Canada Shipping Act, authority order in council, P.C. 3492, dated November 10, 1939. To provide also for the care and maintenance of indigent and disabled seamen returned to Canada due to sickness and disabilities incurred while serving on board merchant ships of allied nations in dangerous waters and for whom no other provision exists.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I gather that we had almost no accidents during last year.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Not otherwise provided for.

Mr. GILLIS: Perhaps the minister will remember the case of a Canadian seaman I took up with him. This boy landed in Halifax and wound up in a mental institution, and he is still there as far as I know. In correspondence with the minister and the department I was given to understand that nothing could be done, but after listening to the details of this item I feel that something could have been done under it. When the father was negotiating with the authorities in Halifax he was informed that if someone had provided the necessary funds the boy could have been taken to Halifax and given the proper treatment with the possibility that his health would have been restored.

To my mind this boy was definitely a war casualty since he served in the merchant marine for two and a half years. He had been at Crete and had undergone considerable bombing. To the best of my knowledge he is still in a mental institution. I mention this now because I think that under this vote something could have been done at least to give him a chance to regain his health.

While I am on my feet I should like to ask one more question. The minister will remember bill No. 5, which guaranteed the soldier the right to his job when he came back. The minister was on the canteen committee along with myself. When we discussed the bill I thought it was understood, or at least we intended it in that way, that the administration would rest with the Department of Pensions and National Health. I am wondering if that department has taken over the administration of this bill, or is it being taken care of by the Department of Labour? I have two cases I should like to bring up and I should like to know where to take them.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): At the present time it is administered by the Department of Labour, but the statute contains a provision that it may be administered by such minister as may be designated. The minister may be changed.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Agricultural supplies board—administration, $51,300.

Mr. GRAYDON: Mr. Chairman, in opening the agricultural items of the war appropriation resolution I should like to ask the minister if he is in position to give a general résumé or review of the war-time activities of his department.

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to go into any detail with regard to the activities of the department in relation to the war appropriation, partly because we have already covered most of these activities in the discussions with regard to administration that we had when the regular estimates were before the committee. Matters having to do with the meat board, the previous bacon board, and with the agricultural supplies board, also some items relating to the special products board, and administration as related to the agricultural food board, were discussed quite fully when the ordinary estimates were before the house this session.

There have been only one or two important changes in the set-up in the department to handle matters having particularly to do with the war. In the first year of the war we set up the agricultural supplies board, with which this first item has to do. That board, it will be recalled, was made up of the deputy minister, the assistant deputy and the heads of the different divisions in the department. Those men laid out the plans for greater production very early in the war and have had charge of our production programme from that time down to the present. Under the board we have called together the representatives of the provincial governments and the representatives of farm organizations from time to time, and have had eleven conferences since the beginning of the war with those representatives to discuss the necessity for greater production of farm products. The plans laid out as a result of those conferences have been carried through by the farmers in the different parts of Canada. The activities of the board have to do with the different programmes which are enumerated on page 395 of Hansard of February 11, 1944.

So far as the meat board is concerned, we had in the earlier years of the war the bacon board, which handled bacon and ham and hog products marketed in Great Britain. That board entered into contracts with the British government under which we have supplied bacon and ham to Britain year by year since the beginning of the war until early in last year, when the bacon board was changed to the meat board. The reason for the change was that a surplus of beef was beginning to show up on this market partly because the United States market had been closed earlier in order to supply the shortage on the Canadian market. Early last year when we began to see signs of the development of a surplus of beef on the Canadian market, preparations were made for the marketing of our surplus beef in Britain. A very considerable amount of beef has been marketed in Great Britain since then down to the present time. The change in name simply meant that the meat board was prepared to enter into agreements covering not only bacon and ham and hog products but beef as well, also mutton and lamb, and we have been shipping these products to Britain now for some considerable time.

The one outstanding change was made a year ago when the agricultural food board was set up. That is the last item in this vote. The food board is headed by the deputy minister of the department and contains other representatives, and associated with the board is an advisory committee composed of representatives from the different provinces and representatives named by the farm federation. That advisory committee meets from time to time and advises with regard to the handling of food products which are produced on farms.

The items in the war appropriation this year cover very much the same matters as were covered last year. They vary to some extent in accordance with the changed circumstances in relation to different food products, but I think those matters can be better discussed when we reach the different items.

There is considerable overlapping between the votes for war purposes and the votes in the regular estimates. That is to say, the same persons who administer the votes in the war estimates also administer the expenditure under the votes in the regular estimates, so that the fact that hon. members perhaps may not discuss on these estimates, certain matters in which they are interested would not, of course, preclude them from discussing them on the regular estimates. That is due to the fact that the next item to be discussed in the regular estimates is the vote for experimental farms, after which, as hon. members know, come all the marketing votes, and those votes are associated with much the same kind of administration, with the same persons administering them, as the estimates now before the committee. I think that is all I care to say at the moment. Mr. Chairman, in submitting these estimates for the approval of the committee.

Mr. BURTON: I wish to thank the minister for giving us the background of this vote. I realize, of course, the minister's desire to have his estimates passed as quickly as possible. There may be other reasons operating—

Mr. GARDINER: None whatever. I am going next Saturday night whether they are carried or not.

Mr. BURTON: I was going to assure the minister of my cooperation in getting his items through.

Mr. GRAYDON: You must be wanting to get away too.

Mr. BURTON: The vote this year is five times as large as the vote last year. Therefore we should not be too hasty in approving it without a full explanation of the various items from the minister. I want it perfectly understood that I am not raising any objection to the vote being five times as large this year as it was last year, but coming from different parts of the country I think hon. members should familiarize themselves with the reasons for these appropriations being asked.

Since the beginning of the war those who have supplied the foodstuffs for this nation and the allied nations have been operating under very difficult circumstances. I should not like to have any member think that anything which the agricultural department has been able to do for these producers has been in the nature of doing something for nothing. I think the minister and many other hon. members will agree that those engaged in this country in the industry of agriculture have made a really worthwhile contribution to our war effort. In fact I feel so keenly about it that I would go so far as to say that for a number of years they were not given the proper recognition in the war effort of the nation.

When we come to where these items, as the minister said, seem to overlap, I wondered in which way he would prefer us to proceed with the various questions we want to discuss. Would he prefer to go on item by item and discuss each one, or would he prefer to have us give him lists of questions covering the various items and then deal with them at the conclusion? I assure the minister that my inquiry is made with a view of enabling him to pass the estimates in a reasonable time, and whichever way he would prefer, I am prepared to cooperate with him.

I might remark that I have a number of questions which, when I look at the page listing the items, cause me to wonder at what point they should properly be asked. For instance, at one place we find "freight assistance on western feed grains"; a little further down we find "subsidy on western wheat used exclusively as feed for live stock". What strikes me first of all is that to the ordinary person that might appear to be a subsidy for the western farmers. I submit that this would be the wrong deduction, because the western farmers could have disposed of all this feed grain in other markets at better prices than they have been able to obtain this way. If my analysis is correct, this is not a subsidy to the western farmers; it is really a subsidy to the farmers in the east. I do not raise any objection to that, but I should like to have the facts clearly understood. Too often we in the west have thrown at us the reproach of seeking hand-outs from the treasury. We in the west year after year have helped other parts of the country without their realizing that we were doing so. I repeat that we could have obtained more for our grain by delivering it in other markets. We are quite prepared to have it go where it is going; we are quite willing to have people assisted by getting this grain, but I do not think it can be fairly said under the circumstances that we are receiving a subsidy.

There is another matter about which I wanted to inquire. This item, it seems to me, contains several overlapping parts. In one part I find "seeds administrator, administration, and seed programme". Several items further down we see "special products board: administration, and seed export office". I do not know why they are separated or how they come to be separated in that way.

In connection with this seed programme, would the minister kindly explain what is undertaken in connection with it? I find that last year $180,000 was voted; this year $500,000 is required. Again I would make it clear that I am not objecting to the item, but I think we who represent different parts of the country should be able to tell our people what these items involve. As regards the export office, the amount is very small, but I should like to know how it is related to the other seed programme. As regards the item "assistance in disposal of agricultural products rendered surplus by the war," would the minister give us a fuller explanation than he did in his brief opening remarks?

Coming to the very last item, "subsidies to producers of food products, $47,600,000," may we have a little better break-down to show what this involves?

I conclude these few remarks by again assuring the minister that I am seeking this information so that we shall be able properly and fully to explain these matters to the people whom we represent.

Mr. GARDINER: With regard to the suggestion as to how we might proceed, probably it would facilitate matters if we took them item by item. The information is compiled in that way in the books which I have, and it would be much simpler and, I think, give better information if we were to go through them item by item, deal with each one, complete it, and then go on to the next.

As regards the general remarks having to do with the total expenditure, I think a general statement of explanation is all that need be made at present.

The items themselves indicate in a general way what the difference is. The outstanding difference which brings about an increase in 1944-45 as compared with 1943-44 is the one mentioned by the hon. member for Humboldt, namely $16,500,000 for freight assistance on western feed grains. That, of course, is due to the fact that shipments are expected to be very heavy in connection with feed grains beginning with the first of the present financial year and extending on throughout this summer to the following winter. If shipments are heavy, very considerable expenditures will have to be made.

The subsidy on western wheat is another item which has been increased. That is owing to the greater amount of wheat which is being fed in the eastern part of Canada, particularly, at present and probably will continue to be fed over the remaining period of the war. We are paying a subsidy on the wheat which is being fed in the eastern and other parts of Canada. The reason for that is that we have a ceiling price set on the products which are produced through the feeding of live stock. There is a ceiling price on all dairy products and on meat consumed in Canada, and it is thought advisable to have a ceiling on the feed which enters into the production of it. Therefore a subsidy is paid in connection with the wheat which is used for feeding purposes in the eastern part of Canada, payment for that wheat being fixed at a price which makes possible the selling of meat and dairy products at the ceiling.

The next item which is dealt with is that of the seeds administrator and seeds administration—

Mr. BLACKMORE: Would the minister permit a question before he goes on? Is it so that a man who raises wheat, we will say in Saskatchewan, and feeds the wheat on his own farm to his own stock, is unable to have a subsidy on his own wheat, but that if he sells that wheat to his neighbour who does not raise any wheat, to feed stock, the neighbour can have the subsidy?

Mr. GARDINER: The subsidy is paid to persons who have not a permit book for the marketing of wheat. If a person does market wheat and also tries to buy wheat he, of course, does not get the subsidy, the reason being that if he had fed the wheat in the first instance it would not have been necessary for him to buy it and if paid in that way it would be an inducement to everyone to sell his own wheat and buy someone else's. The subsidy could not be paid in that manner. The subsidy is paid to persons who are not marketing any wheat.

Mr. BURTON: I realize that there is a difficulty such as the minister mentions, but I was wondering whether the minister had given consideration to what the hon. member for Lethbridge said. On many of the farms in western Canada especially, there are hundreds of people who have increased live stock production at the request of the department, knowing it was for the benefit of the country. They did this, and yet at the same time they are producing wheat and using for feed a lot of that wheat which otherwise was more or less a nuisance for the time being on the hands of the government. Yet they are in the position which the hon. member for Lethbridge pointed out. I was wondering, therefore, whether the minister had given any thought to the question as to whether help could be given to the people in that way without doing what he mentioned a little while ago.

Mr. GARDINER: Considerable thought has been given to it, but no practical way has been found of doing that kind of thing. I do not know how you would keep the records or how you would handle it. We have given considerable thought to the question, but up to the moment no way has been found of making payments of that kind.

Mr. BLACKMORE: As matters now stand, the man who raises his wheat and feeds that wheat to his own stock is deprived of the assistance which is readily given to the man who does not raise his own wheat but buys wheat and raises his stock. It means that the man who is raising his own wheat and feeding his own stock is being penalized and put at a disadvantage in comparison with the other.

Mr. FAIR: Is there anything to prevent the government from paying the subsidy to a man who grows wheat and feeds it, apart from the system of accounting?

Mr. GARDINER: There is a reason why it should not be done, but we are experiencing such great difficulty in administering the payments even in connection with oats and barley that we shall have to institute a great many prosecutions. It has been found most difficult, and I am afraid that if we cannot get any greater cooperation than we have had, that kind of payment will have to be discontinued too, because the reports that come from all parts of the country are to the effect that it is being greatly abused.

Mr. PERLEY: In connection with coarse grain?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. PERLEY: How is it being abused?

Mr. GARDINER: There is only one way in which it can be abused, namely, by the elevator operators not keeping proper records in connection with the weights that go through their elevators.

Mr. FAIR: In my opinion, a number of the subsidies that are paid are misnamed. The subsidy is actually a portion of what the people should receive in the prices of the produce they have to sell, because farm produce is selling at far below the cost at which it should be sold.

Mr. PERLEY: Did not most of this feed wheat come east?

Mr. GARDINER: There is no difficulty such as I have been speaking of in connection with wheat coming east. Most of the amount is paid on wheat that came east, but there are cases where wheat is purchased by feeders in the west—they may not be farmers but commercial feeders—and they get the same kind of treatment as the man who buys it in the east.

Mr. PERLEY: It is getting rather late and I had a few remarks to make.

Mr. GARDINER: I think I should finish the statement I was making in answer to the hon. member for Humboldt. I was going to say that there is a considerable increase in connection with the seed programmes. We can go into details in that connection when we come to the item. That has to do with encouraging people to produce seeds for which probably there will not be a commercial sale. We have been inducing farmers to produce seeds, some garden seeds and some for production of plants from which we can get rubber, and other plants of that kind, and in the seed programmes, providing seeds for these purposes, there is a possibility that there will not be a commercial market apart from the market the government provides. I shall come to that as we go through the different items, and give further explanations in regard to it.

The other outstanding item is the last one of $47,600,000. That is a new item, and it is new because the food board was set up a year ago and that setting up of the board was to provide payment of producer subsidies. Those subsidies are on milk products of different kinds and on many of the other food products which we can deal with again in detail when we come to the item. These are the chief increases throughout the items which account for the fact that we have $73,666,070 this year as against $14,240,309 a year ago.

Mr. PERLEY: Outside the three items, the estimate is considerably less, about $10,000 less than last year.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Monday, May 22, 1944

The house met at three o'clock.

THE PRIME MINISTER

WELCOME EXTENDED ON RETURN TO THE HOUSE FROM LONDON CONFERENCE

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Leader of the opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is not often in the history of a leader of an opposition that he can speak on behalf of the whole parliament in which he sits, and at the same time be reasonably sure of unanimous support for what he says. I feel in this particular instance, however, that I am in that position.

Because of the war and the serious matters connected with it, there is not much time left for pleasant occasions such as that which is afforded now to members of this house. Therefore this occasion stands out in bold relief; because after nearly four full and very strenuous weeks in which the Prime Minister has dealt with important commonwealth, international and war-time business for Canada overseas, he has returned to our midst, again to take his part in the affairs of parliament.

One of my words at this time should be an expression of gratitude and appreciation to His Majesty, to the Prime Minister of Great Britain, to the members of the United Kingdom cabinet, to the members of the House of Lords and the House of Commons at Westminster—indeed to the entire people of Great Britain—for the spontaneous and open-hearted welcome they extended to our Prime Minister while he was there, a welcome which we in turn, as a nation of Canadian citizens, are pleased to share.

The general tone of the welcome the Prime Minister of Canada received in that overseas domain was an indication of how the nation he represents is held over there. I fancy the gesture of good will and affection extended to the Prime Minister on behalf of himself and the people of Canada will remain long with him as a treasured and prized memory, as it will for the rest of us in Canada who share it with him.

May I say this to the Prime Minister: We are glad you are back. We are glad your journey was a safe one, and that you have been able to maintain and to preserve that measure of good health in which you left and which, apparently, is unabated on your return. We hope, too, that in the near future we shall be able to welcome two other leaders from the sister dominions of Australia and New Zealand. We shall welcome them not only on their own account, but because of the splendid achievements of their respective nations, both in war and in peace. They stand high in the esteem, the admiration and the affection of the Canadian people, and I think it well that we pay this public tribute to them.

And so, if I may, on behalf of the members of the house, I extend to the Prime Minister the very warmest and most cordial of welcomes upon his return, and I say to him: We are happy indeed to have you with us once more.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I am sure every member of the house, regardless of party, will re-echo the words of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Graydon) on this occasion. It was indeed kind of the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Ralston) yesterday to let us know that the Prime Minister was to arrive last evening, so that we might be present and see him land safe and well, and apparently not too tired.

We feel, as I think all the house feels, regardless of our political affiliations, that the Prime Minister on his recent trip represented Canada with distinction to himself and honour to our country.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, members of this group are glad to welcome the Prime Minister home. We feel it is a cause of satisfaction that he was able to make the trip safely, over there and back, and we shall be glad indeed to see him ready again to take his part in the government of the country.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am sure you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members will not be surprised when I say that it is with great difficulty I find words wherewith to express my appreciation of the welcome extended to me this afternoon, as I return to my duties in the House of Commons.

May I say to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Graydon) that it was particularly pleasing to be welcomed by him, both as an old friend and as leader of the opposition in the house. There are times when, I imagine, my hon. friend would not welcome my return as cordially as he has this afternoon. But may I say to him that I have never come into the House of Commons at any time when I found myself more pleased with having that opportunity. I thank him for the exceedingly generous and felicitous way in which he has extended a welcome on behalf of his party, and I thank too, my hon. friends, the leaders of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation and the Social Credit parties for the equally felicitous and generous manner in which they have extended their good wishes, and those of their followers. I shall ever remember with gratitude as well as pride, the welcome accorded from all sides of the house.

May I say to all hon. members that at no time have I been insensible of the burden of responsibility which was mine. If I have been fortunate enough not to disappoint too greatly any hopes or expectations they may have been kind enough to entertain of my representation of this House of Commons in Great Britain, I cannot be too grateful. The welcome which I received in Britain, which as my hon. friend the leader of the opposition quite rightly says was a welcome of the entire people of Britain, from their majesties the king and queen to those engaged in humble but essential tasks in that country at this time was certainly a welcome to the representative of the people of Canada and an expression of the feeling of the heart and mind of Britain toward the Canadian people. My visit afforded me an opportunity to realize how deeply the people of the United Kingdom feel toward the people of Canada. No words could begin to acknowledge the expressions that came from all sides as to the war effort of our country, and what it meant to have Canada and the other self-governing nations of the commonwealth represented at the side of the British government and people, at this of all times in the history of the world.

Had time permitted, and had I not just concluded a journey of over four thousand miles in one day and night, I should have liked to say something to the house of the many impressions gathered while in the United Kingdom, but doubtless I will have other opportunities for doing so. I shall accordingly make but a reference or two to those impressions. First, I should like to say that I think the conference in every way was a very great success, not only in what it disclosed of unity of purpose, unity of feeling and unity of action on the part of all who were there, but also in what it represented, in a symbolic way, to other parts of the world of the complete unity of the British commonwealth of nations and their high purpose at this time. It would not be possible to overestimate the value which the discussions at the conference were to all present. We had the privilege, the very great privilege, of having the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Churchill, preside over practically all the meetings. It was an inspiration to have his leadership. I am sure hon. members will be pleased to know that the Prime Minister of Great Britain was never in better health and never displayed more vigour than at the present time. During the last few years I have seen him on many occasions; at Washington, here in Ottawa and also in Britain, but I can say that I do not recall ever having seen Mr. Churchill display the vigour, the energy, the tirelessness and the utter freedom from fatigue that he displayed throughout the entire conference. This means a great deal to all of us.

The discussions were free, frank and friendly. I could not honestly say that there were material differences between us on any questions. There were shades of opinion; there were points of view that were perhaps different, arising out of the different geographical positions of the different nations of the commonwealth, and the local situations they must necessarily take into account, but there was no difficulty whatever in arriving at a convergence of view with respect to all matters that were discussed. The programme itself was very full. It covered a variety of subjects, dealing of course primarily with matters of defence, with plans of the whole war, but dealing also with questions of foreign policy, matters related to the period of transition, to post-war reconstruction, and to the fashioning of a new world order. In the nature of things the proceedings of the conference were very secret, and one has to be doubly careful at this moment to disclose very little of what took place within its secret councils. These are moments when the enemy is more active than he has been at any time. He would be quick to piece together remarks that might be made in different parts of the world as to what had taken place, and turn them to his own advantage. But I can say, and I am proud to say, that its entire proceedings were marked by a degree of unanimity and determination that it would be impossible to exaggerate.

I believe the house would be interested were I to give just a line which might come to hon. members as from Mr. Churchill himself, for it, better than anything else I can think of, describes what the conference meant not only to him but to all of us who were present from the other nations of the commonwealth. I give the words as spoken by the Prime Minister at the opening of the concluding session, at the time the representatives signed the declaration which was subsequently published. Mr. Churchill said:

> We have found comfort in hours of stress and anxiety. In days when great military operations are proceeding with vigour, and, at last, not uncheered by hopes of success, we have found pleasure in meeting men whose companionship is a comfort, whose comradeship is strong as a rock. . . . My confidence in the future is enormously strengthened by all that has passed around this council board, and I am sure that this meeting will in future years be looked back to as one of the important milestones in the history of our united association.

My hon. friends have been kind enough to make reference to my part in the proceedings. May I say to them and to other hon. members of the house that, if it was in any way satisfactory, that was due to the circumstance that I had the privilege of giving expression to what I believe to be feelings and sentiments which are held in common throughout this dominion. I sought to avoid making reference to matters which might represent differences of opinion on any question. The things that we all hold in common are so much greater than the things that divide us that it was not difficult for me to feel that, when I spoke, I was speaking not for any particular party, not for either side of the house, but for members of all parties in this House of Commons and for the people of Canada as a whole.

My stay in Britain over the past three weeks and more has permitted me to gain exceptional information from the inside, from those who know more about the position of affairs in Europe and throughout the world than any other men; to obtain information from those in the highest positions on the military side as well as from those in the highest positions on the civil side. I have been permitted, also, to see something of the tremendous developments that have taken place in preparation for the final great task which may come at any moment. As a result of what I have seen and heard, I feel more reassured than I have felt at any time as to the certainty of ultimate victory. But may I say also that I feel more deeply than ever that the struggle is going to be very much greater and more difficult than any of us begin to comprehend.

I believe it is going to be longer than perhaps most of us imagine. As to its being a difficult struggle, a hard and severe struggle, a stupendous struggle, there can be no doubt. It will be the greatest conflict in arms that has ever taken place in the history of the world. We must be prepared, all of us, everywhere, to hear from time to time of situations that may cause us, for the moment, great concern. But let me say to the people of Canada, when that moment comes, have no doubt whatever as to what the ultimate outcome of the struggle will be, for I believe, knowing the plans of the united nations and what is being done to give effect to them, that there can be no question at all as to what the ultimate outcome will be.

I should like to add a further word as a result of what I have heard and seen and felt. I do not believe that this war is going to end the conflict between the different classes and races of men. The enemy of to-day must be completely destroyed, but forces of evil have been let loose in this world which it is going to be difficult indeed to bring to bay. These forces of evil are going to continue to destroy much of what is best in the world, for many days, I am afraid, possibly years, after the main struggle is over. In all of our deliberations here, as I am sure will be the case in the deliberations of all other assemblies of free nations, we must never lose sight of the fact that our greatest work may still lie ahead in seeking to trample under foot and slay the dragon that to-day is seeking to destroy humanity itself.

I have been impressed more than ever with the truth that Britain holds the gates of freedom for the world. She has carried a great burden through the years, almost through centuries, in keeping open those gates of freedom. She has been hard pressed, very hard pressed in recent years in keeping those gates ajar. I believe that if the nations of the commonwealth had not found it possible in their hearts, from their love of freedom and sense of justice, to come immediately as they did to the side of Britain when this great struggle broke out, she herself might not have found it possible to keep those gates open. If those gates are ever closed there will be no more freedom for men in this world, I believe, for a thousand years to come. So I say that our task should go beyond this war and that we must continue to share with all freedom-loving peoples the great task of keeping those gates of freedom, which Britain represents, open to mankind.

I should add that I never was so proud of Canada as I was in Britain when I saw what our armed forces meant to the people there, and what they are accomplishing. It was not my privilege, obviously, to witness our naval forces in action, though events took place at the time of my visit which caused us all to realize their service and sacrifice as perhaps they have not been recognized at any other moment. But I did have the privilege of visiting our bomber group at one or two of its stations and of seeing something of the army and of its extent and work. I felt a pride in Canada's effort greater than any I have hitherto known or expressed. On some other occasion I shall have a chance to say a word about that and about the work people on the farms and in industries in Canada are doing to keep Britain supplied with the food and the war materials she so greatly needs.

Let me conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that I was never more proud to be a Canadian than I am at this hour, and I was never more proud to be a citizen of the British commonwealth.

Mr. ABBOTT:

REPARATIONS

Mr. WRIGHT:

1. What was the total amount of reparations paid by the German government to the Canadian government after the war 1914-1918?
2. What is the total of these reparations paid for the purpose of reimbursing individuals who had suffered injuries because of mistreatment or neglect by German nationals?
3. What were the names of and amounts paid to such individuals?
4. How much remained in this fund after all claims had been disposed of?
5. What final disposal was made of any amounts remaining in this fund?
6. What were the names of the members of the committee that handled the fund?
7. How many claims were made against this fund for which the claimants received no reimbursement?

Mr. McLARTY:

1. $26,672,246.06.

2. The reparation payments were not paid under any particular heading of the treaty of peace, since under article 232 compensation may be claimed from Germany in respect of damages under the following categories:

(1) Damage to injured persons and to surviving dependents by personal injury to or death of civilians caused by acts of war, including bombardments or other attacks on land, on sea, or from the air, and all the direct consequences thereof, and of all operations of war by the two groups of belligerents wherever arising.

(2) Damage caused by Germany or her allies to civilian victims of acts of cruelty, violence or maltreatment (including injuries to life or health as a consequence of imprisonment, deportation, internment or evacuation, of exposure at sea or being forced to labour), wherever arising, and to the surviving dependents of such victims.

(3) Damage caused by Germany or her allies in their own territory or in occupied or invaded territory to civilian victims of all acts injurious to health or capacity to work, or to honour, as well as to the surviving dependents of such victims.

(4) Damage caused by any kind of maltreatment of prisoners of war.

(5) As damage caused to the peoples of the allied and associated powers, all pensions and compensation in the nature of pensions to naval and military victims of war (including members of the air forces), whether mutilated, wounded, sick or invalided, and to the dependents of such victims, the amount due to the allied and associated governments being calculated for each of them as being the capitalized cost of such pensions and compensation at the date of the coming into force of the present treaty, on the basis of the scales in force in France at such date.

(6) The cost of assistance by the governments of the allied and associated powers to prisoners of war and to their families and dependents.

(7) Allowances by the governments of the allied and associated powers to the families and dependents of mobilized persons or persons serving with the forces, the amount due to them for each calendar year in which hostilities occurred being calculated for each government on the basis of the average scale for such payments in force in France during that year.

(8) Damage caused to civilians by being forced by Germany or her allies to labour without just remuneration.

(9) Damage in respect of all property wherever situated belonging to any of the allied or associated states or their nationals, with the exception of naval and military works or materials, which has been carried off, seized, injured or destroyed by the acts of Germany or her allies on land, on sea or from the air, or damaged directly in consequence of hostilities or or any operations of war.

(10) Damage in the form of levies, fines and other similar exactions imposed by Germany or her allies upon the civilian population.

and the total amount paid represented an insignificant percentage of the cost to Canada under the above ten headings.

It is assumed, however, that the question relates to awards made by various reparations commissioners, the last of whom was Errol M. McDougall, Esq., K.C., who submitted his final report in March, 1933. All payments based on reports of the various reparations commissioners were provided by funds appropriated by the Parliament of Canada and the total amount distributed out of the appropriations provided by parliament was $8,580,245.88.

3. The reports of the reparations commissioners were made to the Governor General in Council and were printed in blue book form and placed on the table of parliament. These reports deal with the cases submitted and the decision in each case and cover more than 1,700 printed pages.

4. Since the funds were appropriated by vote of the Parliament of Canada and the last commissioner submitted his final report in 1933, no balance remains in the funds so appropriated.

5. Answered by No. 4.

6. There was no committee dealing with the funds, but commissioners were appointed under the Inquiries Act to deal with claims submitted. The appointments of these commissioners were as follows:

The Hon. Chief Justice Sir J. D. Hazen, 31st October, 1921, who asked to be relieved of his duties and did not deal with claims.

The Hon. William Pugsley, 13th March, 1923, who died before making his report.

James Friel, Esq., K.C., 19th June, 1925.

Errol M. McDougall, Esq., K.C., 6th September, 1930.

7. It appears from the reports that 3,194 claims were submitted and 2,025 claims allowed in whole or in part. This would mean that 1,169 claims were rejected.

[Mr. McLarty.]

DOMINION ELECTIONS

MEASURE TO ENABLE WAR SERVICE PERSONNEL TO VOTE IN GENERAL ELECTION

Hon. N. A. McLARTY (Secretary of State) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to provide regulations enabling persons (to be described as Canadian war service electors) to exercise their franchise and the Canadian prisoners of war to vote by proxy at any general election held during the present war; and also to provide amendments to the Dominion Elections Act, 1938, consequential to such regulations; and to provide further that any expenses incurred in the carrying out of the said measure shall be paid out of unappropriated moneys in the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

PRIME MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

VISIT TO CANADA OF PRIME MINISTERS OF AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question to direct to the Prime Minister. Perhaps I should preface it by saying that in his absence an inquiry was directed to the acting leader of the government with respect to the prospective visits of the Prime Ministers of Australia and New Zealand. The acting leader of the government at that time was not in possession of full information with respect to the details of the projected visit, but indicated to the house that the invitation extended by the Prime Minister to the Prime Ministers of Australia and New Zealand had been accepted. Is the Prime Minister now in a position to give us any information with respect to the visits of these two prominent gentlemen?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am happy to say to my hon. friend that both Mr. Curtin, Prime Minister of Australia, and Mr. Fraser, Prime Minister of New Zealand, intimated to me that they were much looking forward to being in Canada in the course of the next few days, or at latest the next few weeks—they were not quite certain as to the particular date at which they would leave London. I rather expect that Mr. Curtin will be here very soon, and Mr. Fraser immediately after. I should like to say to the house that I mentioned to Field Marshal Smuts how delighted we would be if he could find it possible to visit Canada at this time, but his house is in session and he will be returning to South Africa. The other gentlemen are each fortunate in having concluded a session.

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON PROCEEDINGS IN LONDON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Leader of the Opposition): I have a further question to which, perhaps, the Prime Minister may not be able to reply at this time, but as to which the house, I am sure, will be glad to have information at an early day. No doubt he will be anxious, perhaps in the immediate future, to discuss the matters which relate to his visit overseas. Is he in a position to indicate whether these will come up in the usual way when the war appropriations for the Department of External Affairs are before the house? If so, is it anticipated that they will be brought up this week, or at a later time?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): As I remember, there are two or three items relating to external affairs which appear in the war appropriation. Personally I should be pleased if they could be discussed by themselves and not as part of a general discussion on external affairs, but I would be prepared to take up the main estimates of the department within, I hope, a fortnight. I say a fortnight at least because there are many matters to which I have to give consideration as a result of my absence for a time, and some others which have grown out of subjects which came up for discussion while I was abroad. I shall try within a fortnight, or very shortly after, to be prepared to take up the external affairs estimates and to have discussed on those estimates matters related to the recent meeting of prime ministers, in so far as they can be discussed, and any other questions which may come up under external affairs.

Mr. GRAYDON: That means that the Prime Minister would prefer to have the two or three war appropriation items discussed having regard only to the matters related thereto, and then later, when he introduces his civil estimates on external affairs, the general discussion will take place which I mentioned; is that the understanding?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is it. The items under war appropriation are small ones and might be disposed of in short order; but the others, if so desired, might be discussed at length.

WORLD MONETARY CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO INVITATION TO AND PARTICIPATION BY CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Minister of Finance inform the house if the government has been consulted with respect to the reported calling of a world monetary conference to consider plans for stabilizing international finance and promoting post-war world prosperity? If so, is the government in a position to indicate under the auspices of what nation the conference will be called, and the date and place of the meeting; also whether Canada will be represented at this proposed gathering?

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): There are two questions, and the answer to the first question is in the negative: this government has not been consulted with respect to the reported calling of a world monetary conference to consider plans for stabilizing international finance and promoting post-war world prosperity. We do not know whether such a conference is to be called.

WHEAT

MAILING OF PRODUCERS' CHEQUES FOR 1940-41 PARTICIPATION CERTIFICATES—CONFERENCE OF FOOD SUPPLY BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. E. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, based on a recent report in the western press that the chairman of the Canadian wheat board had just returned from Britain, where he had attended a conference of the food supply board in Britain. Is the minister prepared to make any statement as to when we can get a report, or shall we get a report, on what took place at that conference, and whether there is to be any change in the system of supplying food to Britain? Also will he indicate to the house to what extent payments have gone forward on the 1940 wheat participation certificates?

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I do not think any report in which the public would be interested will be available shortly with reference to the visit to the old country of the chief commissioner of the Canadian wheat board.

In connection with the distribution of participation certificate cheques, I have not heard recently, but I know that ten thousand cheques went out in the course of the first day and a half, and they are in substantial numbers.

PENSIONS AND HEALTH

REPORT AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF CONVALESCENT HOMES FOR WAR SERVICE PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I had hoped that the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. Mackenzie) would be in his seat, but I observe that he is for the moment absent; therefore the question I propose to ask, if permitted, may be treated as a notice. I understand that the policy has been announced of erecting five convalescent homes for returned men, three in Ontario, one in Quebec, and one in British Columbia. I might point out that the number of voluntary enlistments for the three services from the maritime provinces is equal to if not better than that of any other part of the country, and I wonder why the maritime provinces are being by-passed.

SELECTIVE SERVICE

POSTPONEMENT OF CALL-UP OF FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): On Friday last the hon. member for North Battleford (Mrs. Nielsen) and the hon. member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Lacombe) raised the question of farm workers being called for medical examinations under the National Resources Mobilization Act. I promised that I would look into this matter to see what could be done to prevent these men at this time from being taken away from their farms for several days in order to have these examinations.

As I explained to the committee of the house when the war appropriations of my department were recently discussed, a constant check-up on the status of individuals under the mobilization regulations is made by selective service. National registration took place in 1940, and there have been many changes in the status of individuals since that date Divisional registrars of the mobilization boards are required under the regulations and present instructions to send calls for medical examination. Unless these calls are sent, no one would report.

We have been greatly concerned not to interfere with farm operations, and farm workers are at present instructed to go to the nearest doctor available, generally involving not more than one day's absence. No request for postponement for taking medical examination is refused where the applicant states that to report immediately would impede seeding operations.

No further orders-medical will be sent out until after June 1, at which time more men become callable.

MOUNTED POLICE

ARRESTS IN CONNECTION WITH KILLING OF MAN CHARGED WITH CONSPIRING TO COMMIT INDICTABLE OFFENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. LIGUORI LACOMBE (Laval-Two Mountains): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. St. Laurent). (Translation): Can the minister tell us now whether two members of the R.C.M.P. have been arrested and charged with manslaughter by the attorney-general of Quebec in connection with the death of young Guénette, of Saint-Lambert de Lévis, who was fatally wounded by the federal police? Has the minister been informed of this matter?

(Text)

Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this is the third or fourth time recently that the hon. gentleman has chosen to ask me questions without any previous notice whatsoever. I might be in a position to answer the question as put to-day, but I do not think I should do so.

Mr. LACOMBE: I would ask the Minister of Justice to translate into French what he has just said.

MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY

METALS RESERVE CORPORATION—CANCELLATION OF LEAD AND ZINC CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): I have here the latest press release of the Department of Munitions and Supply wherein it is set forth that four zinc and lead mines operated in this country for the Metals Reserve corporation are being closed down or suspended, "so that labour and materials involved may be put to better use." I would like the minister to say how many men are employed in these mines and what is the better use to which their employment will be put.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Munitions and Supply): The four mines referred to were opened under an arrangement with the Metals Reserve Corporation of the United States. The Department of Munitions and Supply merely acted as agent in the transaction. Recently the supply of zinc and lead has been easier and the contracts have been cancelled by Metals Reserve Corporation, with the resultant cancellation by the department. The production is not required.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It is stated here that the labour involved may be put to better use. The question is, how many men are employed and to what better use will the labour be put.

[Mr. Mitchell.]

Mr. HOWE: I have not the employment figures, but I suppose the better use would be to have those men who are producing something that is not required put to work producing something that is required.

INTERNMENTS

CAMILLIEN HOUDE—SITTING OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. LIGUORI LACOMBE (Laval-Two Mountains):: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct another question to the Minister of Justice, not on the same subject. (Translation): Could the minister tell us on what day of the current month the advisory committee called upon to consider the application and the case of Mr. Camillien Houde will sit, at Fredericton?

(Text)

Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I had understood that it was the practice of members of this house, when they wanted to put any questions, to give some previous notice to the minister to whom the question was addressed. I have not received any previous notice of this question and I do not think that without notice I should try to answer it at this time.

Mr. GRAYDON: With reference to what the minister has said, I do not think he should carry that principle too far. I suggest that it is a courtesy to the ministry which is very often exercised but it is not one of the conditions precedent to the answering of a question by the minister. It does help the ministry considerably in making the answer on the particular day on which the question is asked, but I would hope that the ministry would not take this suggestion made by the Minister of Justice as a precedent for the future. I think most hon. members will want to be free to use their own discretion as to whether that courtesy should be extended to the cabinet or not.

Mr. SPEAKER: The only objection I have to the asking of questions such as are being put before the orders of the day are called, where a member takes refuge in the fact that he has sent a notice to the minister concerned, is that an attempt is made to have questions answered which should be placed on the order paper—and some of the questions asked to-day should certainly be put on the order paper.

WAR APPROPRIATION BILL

PROVISION FOR GRANTING TO HIS MAJESTY AID FOR NATIONAL DEFENCE AND SECURITY

The house resumed from Friday, May 19, consideration in committee of a resolution to grant to His Majesty certain sums of money for the carrying out of measures consequent upon the existence of a state of war—Mr. Ilsley—Mr. Bradette in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Agricultural supplies board—administration, $51,300.

Mr. SENN: This appropriation calls for $51,300 for the administration of the agricultural supplies board, which was set up, I understand, in September, 1939, under order in council P.C. 2621. The duties of the board are clearly set out in the order in council. They are very wide and comprehensive. There are a number of them, but I think I should place on Hansard the first duty of the board as it is laid down in the order in council:

To direct and regulate through the various dominion and provincial agricultural services and through advisory boards representative of the industry which are already constituted or which may be established, the production, preparation and conservation of farm products.

A little farther down it gives the board power:

Subject to the approval of the governor in council; to deal with matters pertaining to the purchase of agricultural products.

I believe that opens up in a general way the whole question of agricultural production and of the collection, processing and marketing of farm products. I should like therefore to take this opportunity to deal for a few moments—and a few moments only—with the agricultural situation in Canada as I see it. It is true that these estimates relate closely to the civil estimates, some of which have already been discussed. It is however very difficult, as I pointed out when the civil estimates were first being discussed, to separate the two; therefore if in the course of my remarks there may be some overlapping or some repetition I am sure that the committee and the minister will consider that it is unavoidable.

I believe that everyone in Canada, and particularly the farming population, should view with a good deal of pride the high level which our agricultural production has reached. There has been a steady increase in that production each year since the war began. On several occasions the Minister of Agriculture has presented figures to the house showing this to be true. I think it is only fair to say that in the course of his remarks he has sought to give credit for that increase in production to the Department of Agriculture and to the government generally. In doing so he has been backed up more than once by hon. members on the government benches, who have from time to time sought to attribute the increase in agricultural production to the minister's activities and to government policy.

When the civil estimates were before the committee on February 18, I recall that the hon. member for Moose Jaw, the hon. member for Macdonald and the hon. member for Brant made statement to the effect that this increase in agricultural production was largely due to government policy. In fact, their remarks were so flattering that I could not help thinking that a parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture may be appointed at some future time and hon. members were vying with each other as to who would have the best chance of getting the position.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Too many applicants.

Mr. SENN: In fact, their desire to give credit to government policy for the increase of agricultural production reminded me of a comic strip I saw not so very long ago. Two little boys wanted to go fishing, but they had no tackle. They went to their father about it but he did not listen and would not provide any tackle. However, in the way that boys generally have, they managed in some way to acquire fishing poles, lines and hooks. They went out and had a very successful day; they caught a lot of good fish. The final section of the comic strip showed the father standing proudly with a smile on his face, holding up the fish and having his picture taken, and taking the whole credit to himself. It seems to me that is the attitude of some hon. members on the government benches in regard to agricultural production and the general agricultural situation in Canada to-day. As a matter of fact the increase in our agricultural production is not because of but in spite of government policy. We must all admit that Divine Providence has given us a bountiful harvest, and for that we should be duly thankful; but after taking that into consideration I believe the farmer himself is entitled to the credit. He has achieved remarkable results, and he has achieved them in the face of great discouragement and difficulty.

I should like to point out a few of the difficulties. At the beginning of the war the farmer was in a weak financial position. Years of low production and low prices had resulted in a heavy burden of debt. The depleted condition of the farmer's buildings, fences and equipment, and sometimes his live stock, was mute but none the less convincing evidence of his weakened financial position. Everyone knows that without capital no industry can succeed, and that it is working under a severe handicap.

The second difficulty under which the farmers have been labouring ever since the war began is that of insufficient prices. I will admit immediately that prices are somewhat more favourable to-day than they were at the beginning of the war, but there has been and there is still an improper relationship between the prices of the farmer's products and the prices of the goods and services that he has to buy. This is due in no small measure to the policy of the government and to their attitude with regard to the price ceiling and the application of this price ceiling not only to farm commodities but to what the farmer has to buy. The lack of parity between farm prices and other prices results from the wrong foundation laid by the wartime prices and trade board when price ceilings were established. No one will deny that the price of farm products went out of line with other prices during that period. The period chosen was October 15 to November 11, 1941. The price ceilings have been calculated on that basis ever since; therefore the farmer has been at a decided disadvantage so far as the price structure is concerned.

The third difficulty I should like to mention is that of labour shortage on the farm. It is true that the farmer's efficiency has been greatly enhanced by the increased use of power machinery, but here the farmer has again been at a disadvantage because often he has not been able to procure the machinery he needs. There has been a dearth of supply. Sometimes priorities have been to blame. It is an open secret among the farmers of Ontario that they have not been able to purchase the supplies that would have been available from the United States because of government and board interference.

No one will deny that there has been a labour shortage; it still exists. Just the other day I read in one of the labour reviews that between March 1939 and March 1943 over 100,000 men had left the farms to go into the army, the navy and the air force, and over 250,000 men had left the farms to go into industry of all kinds. In spite of this drain, however, agricultural production in Canada is some thirty per cent higher than it was in 1939. It is interesting to note that agricultural production per worker in Canada is over fifty per cent higher than it was in 1939, owing, of course, partly to the bountiful harvest which we have had, but as well to the increased labour of the farmer. This increase in agricultural production has been brought about often at great sacrifice, not only on the part of the farmer himself, but on the part of his wife and family who have perhaps done from time to time more than their share.

Another factor in the labour situation is the increased cost of labour on the farm. I have already mentioned that the prices of agricultural products are somewhat higher than they were at the beginning of the war; but it is also true that the price of labour on the farm has gone up to a far greater extent than the price of farm products. To-day labour on the farm, when it can be found, is enjoying wages twice and sometimes three times as high as it was before the war began.

I have often wondered why it is that farmers are expected to carry on and to prosper without a fair share of the national income. I have often heard it said that if farmers were to keep books as other industries do, and provide for depreciation, repairs, wages and all other incidentals, they would never put a plough into the ground because they could never show a profit. That fact is all the more deplorable, because Canada, with her vast agricultural areas, is and must continue to be an agricultural country. Prosperity of the farmers is the key to national prosperity. I believe that is a statement with which everyone will agree, particularly in a country such as this. Therefore too great consideration cannot be given, in any scheme for reconstruction, to the welfare of agriculture.

Another disturbing consideration in our national economy is the fact that although agriculture is so important, our farm population is gradually declining. As we look at the census figures for different decades we find there has been a steady decrease. The 1941 census shows 45 per cent of our population classed as rural, but of that percentage only 27½ per cent consists purely of those who are on the farms and are classed as farmers. The other 18 per cent is vitally interested in and closely connected with agriculture, of course. The 55 per cent who are not at all classed as rural are also vitally interested in the farmer's prosperity.

In 1940 our capital investment in agriculture in Canada amounted to about four and a half billions of dollars, made up of land, buildings, equipment, and live stock. The outlay of the farmers for building materials, equipment and repairs affects to a great extent the welfare of all the people. Everybody is vitally interested in the ability of the farmer to spend. The other day I found a paragraph in the report of the advisory committee on reconstruction, dealing with agricultural policy, which I believe would be of interest to hon. members. This is what I find at page 8, relating to volume of business:

> Closely related both to the number of persons engaged in agriculture and to the capital investment in the industry is the volume of business, or the proceeds from the employment of labour and capital. In 1942 the gross value of Canadian agricultural production was $2·1 billion. Of more significance, however, is the cash income from the sale of that portion of the output that eventually reaches the market. This figure, $1·1 billion, represents the amount the farmers of Canada had to pay their hired help, maintain or improve their plant and equipment, pay taxes, and provide for the well-being and education of their families. Most of this money is spent immediately—much of it, in fact, was actually spent before it was received—and its contribution to rural and urban development is both direct and significant.

I read that because I believe it bears out what I have been trying to convey to the house, namely, that upon the prosperity of the farmer depends the prosperity of a country such as Canada.

When the Minister of Finance spoke, closing the debate on the Bank Act, he mentioned that there have been in Canada cycles of prosperity and of depression. This is true, and it is a condition which I believe will always remain. It is unfortunate however that the farmer is usually the first and greatest victim of depressions. In support of that contention I point to a fact which in my opinion is important. Distribution of national income varies as between times of prosperity and times of depression. When we compare the farmers' share of the national income in the basic year 1926, which is often used as a basis for comparison, with the farmers' share of income in depression years, we find that during the depression, farmers' income was only 45 per cent of the share which they held in 1926.

If we take the group of salary and wage earners we find that the share of the national income they enjoyed in the depression years amounted to 91·6 per cent of that enjoyed in good years. The investment income group were even better, at 94 per cent. It is clear therefore that during depression years the farmers' share of income dropped 56 per cent, while that of other groups dropped only six per cent or nine per cent. I believe this condition is to a great extent responsible for lengthy depressions. When the farmer cannot purchase consumer goods the result is unemployment of other groups in the community. There is no doubt in my mind that the purchasing power of the farmer cannot be as effective as it should be until a proper relationship is developed between agricultural income and the income enjoyed by other groups. Despite any increase there may be in farm prices, and despite what may be contended by members of the government, that relationship is not satisfactory to-day. And if we need any proof we need only look at an item further down in the estimates where we see the government has provided $47,000,000 for farm subsidies.

After the price ceilings were established in 1939 it was very soon found either that the ceilings must be changed or prices to the farmers must be supplemented. The government—the wartime prices and trade board, or whoever was responsible—decided to provide subsidies. For some time those subsidies were meted out by the Commodity Prices Stabilization corporation. Last year—I believe it was either May or June—a change was made, and this work was given over to the agricultural food board. The minister might very well explain why the change was made. Although I have no doubt he has a good reason for it, I should like to know what the reason is.

I have already pointed out that, in the last census, farmers constituted some 27½ per cent of the population. But their percentage of national income was much lower than that. Figures received recently from the bureau of statistics show that despite their percentage of population, in the four war years the farmers' share of national income amounts to only 13·4 to 14·5 per cent. I cannot use the figures for 1943, because they are only estimated, and I have been asked not to use them. But if we take the figures for 1942 they show that the national income was some seven and a half billions of dollars. Of that amount the farmers' share was $1,084,000,000 or 14·5 per cent. If we add to that the whole $47,000,000 provided in the estimates for farm subsidies, we find that farmers' income amounts to only about fifteen per cent of the total income. I want to emphasize as strongly as I can the need for some action which will provide more equitable distribution of the national income as between agricultural and other groups.

Farmers are looking forward with a good deal of hope and expectation to the action announced by the government in the speech from the throne to provide floor prices for agricultural products. In the past it has been the practice to accept the consumer price as the basis for the farmers' price structure. From the consumer price must be deducted profits of the retailer, the wholesaler, the processor and the collectors of farm produce. The farmer —the primary producer—has had to take what is left.

In support of the point I am making I wish to refer to a statement made by Mr. Stanley McLean, head of Canada Packers. When he appeared before the price spreads committee he bore that statement out to the full. It seems to me the time has come when the system should be entirely reversed. In my judgment there should be a producer price based upon the cost of efficient production. The profits of middlemen, such as collectors, processors and distributors, should be sufficiently liberal to provide an incentive for them to operate, because we must have them to process and distribute our goods, but I believe there should be government interference if their profits are exorbitant or there is evidence of speculation so that they exploit either the producer or the consumer.

As we go through the estimates I shall have an opportunity to discuss other matters, but at the moment I want to discuss just one point which I have mentioned to the house more than once previously. I refer to the personnel of the various boards which have been set up and which come under this item. I have in mind the agricultural supplies board; the meat board, formerly known as the bacon board; the special products board; the agricultural food board, and the dairy board. In addition we have two other boards which from time to time have dealt with farm products as to prices and so on; that is, the wartime prices and trade board and the commodity prices stabilization board. All these boards deal with agricultural matters, but I am sorry to say that there is not a representative of agriculture or a primary producer on one of them. On the meat board we have a representative of the packers and a representative of the transportation companies. There are no producers on the dairy board, but there is a representative of the distributors and a representative of the shippers. I have brought up this matter on a number of occasions. I presume the minister's answer will be, as it has been in the past, that the government have set up advisory boards on which there is producer representation, but none of these advisory boards has any power. They may be consulted by the other boards, but I have heard it said that very often decisions are reached and policies enunciated and then sent to the advisory boards for their consideration, after the thing has been done.

I am not bringing up this matter in order to criticize, but the farmers feel very keenly indeed the fact that there is no producer representation on these boards, which are composed principally of members of the Department of Agriculture. All these boards are more or less interlocking; that is, you may find one man on two or three of them. These are estimable gentlemen, and I do not want to find any fault with them. I know they are industrious, capable and honest, but I do not believe any of them is a primary producer, and I think they might very easily get a different viewpoint if they had some producer representation on these boards. Once more I appeal to the minister to change his policy in this regard. For his own sake, for the benefit of agriculture, and in order to put farmers in a better frame of mind, he should see to it that there is producer representation on these boards.

Mr. LACOMBE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, since we are on agricultural appropriations and production, I renew my request for full and final exemption for farmers from military service. Who could estimate the amount spent in travelling expenses and the time lost by farmers because of the way the Mobilization Act is presently enforced? Why insist on medical re-examinations when the family doctors have already categorized the men who have been called up? Is it reasonable or fair, Mr. Chairman, thus to belittle the undeniable qualifications of the civilian physicians and the service they have rendered their country? I say it is an uncalled for insult to men who have devoted their time and made sacrifices for the government and the Canadian people.

As for the agricultural situation in Canada, it is becoming more and more alarming. The lack of market for hogs and other meat cattle, added to the scarcity of farm help, during the last few months, have created an unbearable situation. Ask the farmer who has sold hogs and beef cattle since last fall what treatment he has received at the hands of Canada Packers and other similar trusts, whom the government should bring to their senses.

All the necessary powers are vested in the ministry to guard our farmers from those heartless firms, who have been taking advantage of them and swindling them for so many years. The government and the trusts have to take the blame for the spoilage of millions of pounds of meat, while our civilians were rationed and large families and young children were suffering from hunger. I urge the government to see that such a deplorable state of affairs never recurs as it is a shame for our country. That is all.

Mr. WRIGHT: I listened with a great deal of interest to the speech of the hon. member for Haldimand in regard to agriculture in this country, and I concur in many of the things he said. However, I felt that the effectiveness of his speech was somewhat lost when I remembered that he was a member of this house from 1931 to 1935; that his party was in power in those years and he was chairman of the agriculture committee, and that during this period agriculture received the lowest share of the national income that it has ever received in Canada's history.

Mr. GRAYDON: To what party did you belong?

Mr. WRIGHT: The party to which I still belong. As a matter of fact at that time I believe agriculture received less than nine per cent of the national income. Even to-day we are not getting our fair share of the national income, but still we are a great deal better off than we were during the years I have mentioned. I think that deeds count for more than words when it comes to endeavouring to improve the position of agriculture. I do not propose to follow the remarks of the hon. member, but I should like to pay a compliment to the producers of this country for the way in which they have increased production under great difficulties, particularly in regard to the amount of labour that has been available to them. When you consider the number of men who have gone from agriculture, and consider further what agriculture has been able to do during this war period, the record is a remarkable one.

I should like to draw the minister's attention to the matter of increasing the supply of farm implements. In the agriculture committee last year we were promised that there would be a considerable increase in the amount of farm equipment made available during this year. That increase has not come about as yet, at least from information I have received from western Canada; they are in an even worse position than last year in regard to the number of new implements available. I believe the minister would do well to bring this matter to the attention of the departments that have the responsibility for seeing that the necessary release is made of steel and other raw materials required in the manufacture of agricultural implements.

With respect to coarse grains, I believe they should be handled entirely through the wheat board. Last year the wheat board took over complete control of the handling of wheat and flax, which was taken entirely out of the hands of the speculative market. But this has not been done with coarse grains and the result is that the government has had to pass a number of regulations to control and direct the people who are at present handling coarse grains in Canada. It has been a bigger headache to the wheat board than if they had been handling the whole thing themselves, both as regards making coarse grains available to feeders in eastern Canada and as regards exports. I see no reason why all our grain should not be handled entirely through the wheat board. I think it would be to the advantage of everyone concerned. But apparently the government is determined to keep a nucleus of the Winnipeg grain exchange alive so that it may again start to function as soon as the war is over. I see no other reason why coarse grains and rye should have been left under the present set-up. I know that the farmers of western Canada are firmly convinced that the speculative market in Winnipeg should be got rid of at the earliest possible moment. It is pretty hard to convince them that the selling of their crop six or seven times over on the speculative market adds one more bushel to it or changes its quality whatsoever, and it is equally hard to convince the consumers that because the grain has been handled several times on the Winnipeg market the price of bread is thereby decreased. Certainly everything that is taken out of the price of the grain between leaving the farmer and reaching the consumer comes out of either the producer or the consumer. We believe that that spread could be recouped if the grain were handled through the wheat board.

Another matter I would bring to the minister's attention has to do with the rebate on feed grains. At present in western Canada men who are engaged in the feed business but who do not operate a farm are able to obtain a rebate of 10 cents a bushel on oats, 15 cents a bushel on barley and 25 cents a bushel on wheat for feeding purposes. The minister in reply to a question by the hon. member for Selkirk, said, when his estimates were before the committee last, that the government was not particularly interested in the people who were operating feeding lots.

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): I am sure that my hon. friend does not want to misrepresent the situation. There are no rebates paid to people who feed grain. There is an extra amount paid to the farmer who delivers to the elevator.

Mr. WRIGHT: The man who buys it from the elevator gets a rebate of 10 cents.

Mr. GARDINER: No, the man who buys it from the elevator buys it at the ceiling price, but the man who sells the grain gets an extra 10 cents on oats and an extra 15 cents on barley. There is no rebate for the person who buys it.

Mr. WRIGHT: It amounts to that so far as the farmer who is feeding the grain is concerned, because he feeds that grain at the ceiling price plus 10 or 15 or 25 cents a bushel as the case may be. It means that the man who is operating a feeding lot and is feeding the grain gets it cheaper than the producer who is feeding the grain.

Mr. GARDINER: There are costs in connection with it that have to be taken into consideration—costs, for instance, in moving the grain from one place to another, as against feeding it right on the farm.

Mr. WRIGHT: But the farmer has to pay those costs in delivering the grain to the elevator.

Mr. GARDINER: The farmer who purchases it to feed pays just as much as the other in getting it moved to his farm.

Mr. WRIGHT: All he has to pay is the cost of handling at the elevator and the cost of taking it from the elevator to his own feeding lot. That gives to the man who is operating a feeding lot an advantage over the farmer who is feeding that grain on the farm. The farmer who is feeding the grain on his farm should receive some consideration, if the minister wants to see the production of stock in Canada kept at its present level. Sometimes I wonder whether the minister is anxious to see agricultural production maintained at its present level. At all events his policy with regard to feed grain in western Canada does not so indicate. I feel sure the minister will find that within the next year there will be a considerable reduction in western Canada because of these differentials. The minister would do well to consider giving to the farmer that extra 10 or 15 cents a bushel on the grain he is feeding on his farm.

There is also the matter of malting barley. At present there is a premium of five cents a bushel on malting barley. In the United States the premium is from 20 to 30 cents. If the producer in western Canada were able to ship his malting barley to the United States he would receive from $1.20 to $1.40 a bushel. If he sells it in Canada he receives 69¾ cents a bushel, plus a premium of fifteen cents which is paid by the government, or a total of 84¾ cents. I do not know whether the maltsters in this country are paying to the government the 15 cents a bushel which the government allows to the farmer as a premium, but even if they are, they are still getting their malting barley very cheap as compared with the United States price. The premium in Canada is not sufficient. I believe it should be increased by at least ten cents a bushel. It would not mean any inflation so far as Canada is concerned, because at the present time the government, through the excise tax, if the figures given to the house a year or so ago by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie are correct, receives 12 cents a pound on malt in the form of excise tax. There are 37 pounds of malt in a bushel of barley, so that the government receives $4 a bushel in taxation on every bushel of barley that is malted in Canada. The additional ten cents a bushel which I advocate for the producer of malting barley in western Canada would mean much to him, and very little either to the maltsters or to the government.

With respect to the distribution of coarse grains as feed in eastern Canada, at present the coarse grains are distributed through various feed firms in the east. As I understand it, the grain is sent down the lakes and placed in terminal elevators by the various firms that handle it, either commission or grain firms, and from there it is purchased by the eastern feeders. My understanding is that during the winter months, when feed grain was short in western Canada, certain of the distributors in eastern Canada purchased greater amounts of this grain than was needed, in some cases, in their particular districts. As a result the government found that there were areas in which there were shortages of feed and they had to step in and bring pressure to bear to see that this grain was distributed to other firms. In certain cases grain was sold three or four times before it reached the final consumer, thereby adding to the cost of the grain to the consumer in eastern Canada. If that is so, and I believe it is, something should be done about it.

Also the government should keep a closer eye on the quality of feeds which are sold in eastern Canada. I was in the eastern provinces last winter, and at a meeting one evening a gentleman spent ten minutes giving me a calling down on the quality of the grain which the western pools were shipping to eastern Canada. He had with him a sample of ground barley meal, and apparently blamed western producers and shippers for the quality. I explained to him that we had nothing to do about it, that apparently eastern dealers were mixing various low-grade materials with this meal. The producers in eastern Canada would be well advised to join their own cooperative organizations and secure feed through these organizations, which could buy it direct from the western cooperatives, so that nobody would be handling the feed except themselves and it would be to nobody's advantage to adulterate it. I know that there are certain standards governing various grades of feed sold in eastern Canada, but after seeing some of the feeds down here I am convinced that a tightening up as respects these standards should be made and a more thorough inspection should be had of the samples to see that they are kept up even to the standards required at the present time.

Another matter with respect to feed about which I have had complaints from different parts of eastern Canada is that men who wish to purchase feed are compelled by the dealers to take also a certain amount of flour. If they buy a half ton of feed they must also purchase a considerable quantity of flour. One man took me out to his granary and showed me several sacks of flour "enough", he said, "to last me if I live to be a hundred, but I can't buy feed unless I take flour each time." I do not think his local dealer was to blame. Perhaps the large milling company who supplied that local dealer was forcing him to take, with his regular supply of feed, a certain amount of flour.

Mr. GARDINER: I think that has now been corrected.

Mr. WRIGHT: I hope it has been. I know there were many complaints about it. It was a condition which should not have been allowed to exist. I know it existed three months ago. At that time I had one particular complaint with respect to it. Apparently these milling companies, because they are subsidized in the price they are paying for wheat, are making a nice profit on the handling of flour and they were forcing their dealers to take flour in order to obtain their feed.

There are several other matters which I wish to bring to the attention of the minister, but I will do so as the individual items are taken up.

Mrs. NIELSEN: In any discussion generally on the question of agriculture and its place in Canada, it is necessary for us to consider and agree that food production as it exists at present must be maintained for the period of the war, and that possibly food increases will be necessary after the war. This premise is necessary first of all for the projects we contemplate through our work on UNRRA and also for the fullest inplementation of the section of the Atlantic charter which deals with the freedom of the people of the world from want. It is a fine thing for those of us who for several years have lived in agricultural parts of Canada, particularly the west, to realize that food has become such a powerful weapon of the united nations. At the present time it is one of the most important weapons in their arsenals, though it may be almost a paradox that while most weapons of war are death-dealing, food as a weapon in this war is a means of sustaining life.

Not only must we step up our programme of food production for the purposes of the war, but Canada's agricultural policy must be much more far-reaching. During the Hot Springs conference, when it was decided to set up an interim commission and to have one representative from each of the forty-four nations to draft a constitution for a permanent food organization, Canada was recognized among the nations as having a great part to play. Mr. L. B. Pearson, who was one of the members of the important committee on supply of UNRRA, writing in Canadian Affairs magazine, April 1, 1944, said this:

> Peace sits uneasily on an empty stomach. . . . When the United States and United Kingdom governments decided some time ago that the united nations should begin the process of organizing for peace, they did not convoke an assembly to discuss general political or economic matters. The first united nations conference in May 1943 at Hot Springs dealt with one question only, and an essentially practical one, "Food and agriculture." Hence the first permanent united nations organization set up in the world will likely be that on food and agriculture, now being worked out in Washington by the interim committee representing the forty-four nations.

It would appear that in the past wars have been mostly of a destructive nature. Possibly this war is different from all others which have preceded it in that it is producing more new and constructive types of thinking. One of the most constructive lines of thought which are being developed concerns this question of cooperation of peoples after the war, to see that the want which prior to this war had devastated such large regions of the earth shall never again prevail. In other words there will be a great impulse to further cooperation among the nations. I am glad to see that our own government is giving a constructive lead on this particular question. I do not like always to quote from United States authorities on this subject, and I am glad to be able to cite the words of Doctor Barton, our own deputy minister of agriculture. In a statement to the press which was reproduced in the Ottawa Citizen on June 2, 1943, he is reported from Washington as follows:

> Canada will be required to increase food production, not only in the immediate post-war period, but in the years to follow, if the recommendations of the united nations food conference are carried into effect.

> The whole picture, as it has been developed here, should appeal to Canada because it is one of expanding agricultural economy.
> The deputy minister went on to say that in the period of shortages immediately after the war there will be need for orderly marketing through some form of international arrangement and, even in the long-range view, it may be necessary for some farm products. "To that end," he continued, "we may have to join with others in recognizing that some form of co-operative production may be required."

In viewing the vast perspective which now opens up before us in this new era of peaceful development which we believe will be possible after the war, two things stand out in my mind most clearly. First of all, food production must be increased according to this country's ability to produce certain types of food more cheaply than other countries can produce them, in the first place for the immediate purpose of present war needs and for relief schemes; and secondly, food increases must be maintained and absorbed to a far greater degree than before by our own population through gradually achieving higher standards of living.

Canada's farm requirements, we must recognize, have depended in the past upon the income of her people, but food requirements are not like other things. They are a basic necessity for the life and health of the nation, and we should not judge food by the ability of the people to pay for it; we should judge the quantity of food needed by the accepted standard necessary for health. In 1940 the average consumption of food in Canada was roughly 1,038 pounds per year per person. That was a fairly high average, taking into consideration the food consumption of other peoples of the world. But without doubt we must realize that numbers of our own people could to their great advantage increase the amount and quality of the food they eat.

In certain surveys made in Canada just prior to the war, I think we can find evidence enough to prove that a larger consumption of food in this country is still a desirable thing. Studies made just before the war among numbers of families in the country show that when the average income was anywhere from $1,000 to $2,000 per annum, these families used an appreciably larger amount of protective foods than did those families whose income was below $1,000 per annum. Those who received from $1,000 to $2,000 used on an average 12 per cent more meat, 10 per cent more milk, 10 per cent more eggs, 7 per cent more fish and a larger amount of vegetables, fruit and butter than those who received less than $1,000 a year. These same studies would indicate that the more well-to-do families whose income was anywhere above $4,000 a year ate far more of the nutritionally important foods which give the human body a greater fighting chance to resist infection and disease. This income group, receiving over $4,000 a year, ate 50 per cent more fish, 34 per cent more meat, 38 per cent more milk, 15 per cent more eggs and a proportionately larger amount of fruit, vegetables and butter than families earning less than $1,000 a year.

The point is that if the people of Canada were able to procure the amount of food which it is necessary for them to have for their health, we should need more food than we were having prior to the war for our own home market. The same Canadian council on nutrition stated, that in order to bring the adequate level of nutrition of all Canadian families up to the desired point, we would need roughly 1,500,000,000 pounds of food a year in the form of milk, eggs, meat, vegetables, dried beans, small fruits and things of that kind.

It is all very well to speak of Canada, and Canada of course is of greatest importance to us when it comes to the welfare of our people. But we must recognize that our own standards are very much better than those of many others in the world. If you come to consider the question as it affects some of the other nations, you realize what scope there is for the increase of food production if we are to implement those clauses of the Atlantic charter which declare that no people should suffer from want. The report from the mixed committee of the League of Nations before the war showed that in the countries with the largest surplus of food, such as Canada and the United States, there was still a considerable amount of malnutrition, but it was nothing in comparison with the conditions that prevailed in India and China. Take one food product, such as milk. In Canada there are three or four people dependent on the milk of one cow, whereas in China there are roughly fifty thousand people to every cow. This will give some indication of the need for an increase in live stock if we are to supply the needs of the people of the world to give them the health conditions to which they are entitled.

In normal times it is estimated that in China about 8,000,000 people die of malnutrition every year, and in India the condition is similar. Diet deficiencies are causing infant mortality, blindness, crippling of children, and this condition is widely prevalent among India's 400,000,000. In the last disastrous famine in India, roughly 1,000,000 people died from malnutrition. In Africa, Mexico, South America, Egypt, and in other parts of the world you find malnutrition and diseases resulting from diet deficiencies. Estimates made by the same committee of the League of Nations show that of the 2,100,000,000 people of the world, roughly two-thirds, or 1,400,000,000, have always eaten diets consisting of about eighty per cent of cereals and potatoes, though the health authorities say that a good diet should contain only about twenty-one per cent of cereals and potatoes, the rest being made up of protective foods.

If peace can be maintained with some degree of security after the war by the continued collaboration of the nations of the world it will make a great difference to the ability of many countries to grow food. For instance, many of the countries of Europe, if they were freed from war, or at any rate from the fear of war, would be able to reduce certain of their cereal crops and animal products which before the war they insisted on producing in their effort to be self-sufficient. If in the future they are not in fear of war they will cease to grow these things and buy them from countries like Canada which can produce them more cheaply, and in Europe the farmers will concentrate to a far greater degree upon the production of such things as milk, eggs, fruit and vegetables, so that their own diet will be of a greater variety. That will add greatly to the ability of the farmers of this country to continue the exports of food which they can grow. Therefore a great deal of the agricultural problem of the world depends upon the ability of the united nations to collaborate in trade agreements whereby those who can produce certain types of food shall be encouraged in such production, and whereby free trade with other countries who are producing types of food different from those produced at home will bring about better results.

It becomes very clear to all of us that if the people of the world are to be free from want, if we are to see that food is available for all, it will be necessary for us to ensure that people are in a position to buy food. That of course is the other part of the problem. There must be employment. There must be increased industrial production and there must be free international trade. We can remove the devastation of poverty and hunger from the world only if we see that certain selfish interests and political prejudices no longer are in a position to deny to the people of the world their free access to food. I think we should all back up the statement which was made a while ago by the vice president of the United States of America, Mr. Wallace. He said:

> Whenever these forces, of special privilege and international monopoly are found, our job is to fight them.

For surely the winning of the peace is bound up with the regulation of food supplies to the peoples of the world.

The agricultural workers of Canada have done remarkable things during this war to increase production. I think that all of us who come from agricultural constituencies have a great deal of pride in the fact that with their limited supplies of man-power, and with women and children having to help out considerably in the fields and during harvest time, the farmers have increased the food production roughly by about forty per cent.

Farming, of course, is not like industry. It is not possible to regulate farming on such short notice. You cannot say this month that you can increase your stock or increase the production of certain farm commodities next month. All farm planning has to be of a far longer and greater range. It would seem to me that our farmers at the present time are greatly in need of more assurance from the Department of Agriculture—or perhaps I should say from the Minister of Agriculture—of the necessity for maintaining, and the possibility of increasing, or rather the necessity for increasing, food production in the future. We should have surveys made as to the types of food which will be the most cheaply produced in Canada, and therefore the foods which we should concentrate on growing when the war is over. I know that the Department of Agriculture is doing work in this connection but I still feel that there is greater need to bring this information more closely to the farmers to get them to understand. Some people are expressing fear on the question of making gifts of food after the war is over. Some farmers are even a little dubious as to whether it will be the correct thing for us to do. Here again I believe the Department of Agriculture should show to the farmers how, if the nation as a whole takes on the burden of paying for food to give to other countries, and if at the same time the farmers themselves are guaranteed a fair price, that in itself will be of the greatest good to Canada; because that increased food production with fair prices to the farmers will assure them of being able to buy many things which industry can supply. It will provide employment to the industrial sections of Canada and set a cycle for an increased standard of living throughout the whole of the country.

Generally speaking I would say one of the most important things with regard to agriculture at the present time is to insist on Canada's taking a very strong position on all the boards of the united nations relief and rehabilitation administration and in all matters pertaining to the setting up of trade relations with other food producing countries.

With regard to our own farmers, I cannot help but emphasize—even though the Minister of Agriculture may be sick of listening to these things which have been stated many times, I do not think we can reiterate them too strongly—the necessity of our farm people having the opportunity to obtain for themselves short term loans and credits through a special agricultural bank, something like the farm security administration in the United States, which has been responsible for such a tremendous increase of food from the smaller types of farms.

Without the shadow of a doubt I believe that our farming people should be guaranteed not only by the federal government but by the provincial governments security of tenure on their land, so that, instead of looking forward only a year or two ahead, they will begin to plan for a long future, in order that the people on the farms can have a stake in the whole rehabilitation programme of Canada in the era of peace.

Undoubtedly the machine problem is a difficult one to solve. In the areas where we have the smaller farming districts which are engaged in mixed farming it is not sufficient for the government to allow a certain quota of machines to be sold. The man who has a farm of a certain size, and the ability to buy a machine, is not always the person who should have it. We would find it of greater value to have certain new machines placed in machinery pools; many farmers would then be in a position to hire a machine, which in many instances could be used on many more farms than a machine purchased by one man. In the smaller mixed farming areas machinery pools and machinery repair depots should be set up under the care of the federal government and its jurisdiction. Repair depots are just as essential as supply depots, because much of the old machinery will still be available. The great difficulty at the present time is the lack of repair centres.

Then there is the question of floors and ceilings on all agricultural products, with a guarantee of at least two or three years in the future. It cannot be denied that that is something which the farmers are seeking before they go into any increased production, particularly of live stock, with any degree of certainty.

The representation of farmers on marketing boards has been dealt with by the two hon. members who preceded me. I can only say that I am in agreement with what they have said. Definitely the farmers themselves are only too anxious to cooperate in all these matters of marketing, but they have in large measure been left out of the discussion on marketing boards, and for that reason I believe they feel that there are many things in connection with marketing which are not just as they should be. They feel that they have many suggestions to offer which I am sure the Minister of Agriculture would find to be not only to the farmers good but to the general good of agricultural production.

I should like to emphasize—and I believe the minister is in agreement with this—the necessity for the extension of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act to cover the whole of the dominion. In the rehabilitation period, when we have the returned men taking up farming again, and are considering the problem of the best areas for the production of certain kinds of food, I believe there will be the necessity for moving certain of our farmers from submarginal lands and leaving those areas for grazing and reforestation. Our farmers are justified in asking that in the processing of foods there will be more government supervision through greater control of the middleman. Amongst the farmers of western Canada there is resentment because they realize there is an appreciable difference between the prices paid for their raw products and the prices asked for the product which is placed on the market after passing through the hands of one or two middlemen. Definitely there should be an investigation in this sphere to limit or to hold down at least the profits of the middleman. To assure a fair share of the prices to the producer would be something to give satisfaction to the farming people.

I do not feel that any thing should be emphasized more than the necessity for planning and giving to the farmers a clearer understanding of what is to be required of them in the future. The resentment which is still felt—and I urge upon the minister that he realize that this resentment exists in western Canada—is based on the fact that the farmers do not know soon enough ahead of time what is to be required of them. The hesitancy which has been part of their whole attitude toward increased agricultural production would thereby be removed.

When we come to the peace period and thousands of men are being returned to the farms, definitely we should have further provision made for farm labourers. Farm labourers should come under the unemployment insurance provisions, so that we may guarantee to them a definite standard of living and make them feel that their job is to be well paid and recognized as a part of the great industrial development of this country.

These are matters which I believe more than any other are important to the development of agriculture. Members who come from agricultural constituencies must take pride in the fact that the production of food and the increased output of agricultural products in Canada will play an important part not only in the winning of the war but also in the stabilization of the peace to follow.

Mr. WINKLER: I was interested a few moments ago to listen to the speech of the hon. member for Melfort. He referred to the difference in the price of barley sold on the United States side for ordinary feeding purposes and for malting purposes. Last fall it so happened that nearly all the crop I had for sale in my farm in Manitoba was barley. Inasmuch as the elevators were almost full, and I could not sell very much of it, I obtained export permits from the wheat board to sell my barley on the United States market.

Then, in December, when I was ready to sell it, unfortunately the United States elevators close to my constituency filled up. Since I wished to sell in one quantity all at once, I could not find a place to market it. At that time I believe the bonus for malting barley was between five and ten cents at United States elevators in North Dakota. I was anxious to get that bonus, because it would have meant a considerable profit. However, I was forced to forgo the sale of my barley at that time, and proposed to sell it when I returned during the Easter recess.

At that time I found, after visiting many of the elevators on the United States side, that the malting bonus had almost disappeared; and by the time I had made my bargain with the elevator there the price was, indeed, $1.20, but there was no bonus for the malting. I visited eight or ten different points in North Dakota, and found that they were uniform in their price, and that there was no bonus for malting barley. There may have been a time when the facts outlined by the hon. member for Melfort applied. But my barley was sold in the latter part of last month, and the early part of this month, and certainly there was no bonus for malting barley at that time. The United States price of $1.20 prevailed, and that was the top price at the time. I thought the committee should have these facts.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I wish to make a few remarks concerning this war-time appropriation. I would point out to the minister and to the Department of Agriculture that in spite of some of the action taken by the government in a supposed effort to prevent some of the evils of peace-time marketing, a great many of those evils remain. Despite the fact that the producer is receiving a larger return for his product, he is still not receiving the share he should get.

May I give a few cases in point. These are things I had drawn to my attention. Some western farmers who were in a special position to get hold of range cattle and feed them as a special product, found themselves in an awkward situation. They had special feed supplies to last them about ninety days. They brought in Hereford cows from the ranges, and proceeded to fit those animals for market. When the ninety days were up and the animals were ready for sale on the market the farmers were told that the market was glutted, that there was no room for them, that the storage capacity was filled and that the packers could not handle them. The farmers were in desperate circumstances. Their feed supply was gone. It was a matter of continuing to keep the cattle alive by feeding them higher grades of wheat and straw. The farmers were losing money. But the peculiar thing was that, despite the fact that those farmers had been told by the buyers that there was no room on the market for their cattle, other buyers—representatives from the packing plants—offered to buy from the farmers at a cent or a cent and a half a pound below the market price.

Because of their desperate position the farmers sent a delegation to the government at Ottawa. That delegation was assured that after some adjustments the packing plants would take the cows. The fed cows were bought; but the peculiar thing about the transaction was that according to information sent to us later steers were not being accepted at the market price. People who had steers for sale were told exactly the same story, that the packing plants were full and that a sale could not be made. They, too, were offered a cent and a half less a pound for their product.

That type of thing destroys the producers' confidence in the government. It is bringing some to the realization of the fact that so long as the packing industry continues to control the purchase of cattle and other live stock in Canada the farmer can have no hope of any redress, or a proper return for his labour.

Then, too, we had a rather unfortunate circumstance develop on the Winnipeg market within the past year. As in peace time, during these war years there has been a glut of live stock on the market at Winnipeg in the fall. As soon as live stock requires feeding on the farm or in the corral extra labour and expense are involved with the result that farmers usually try to place their live stock on the Winnipeg market early. The result is a fall in price, the farmer taking the loss. By placing floors on farm products, to a certain extent, the government has practically circumvented this difficulty. It has introduced regulations whereby it can take over live stock and have it slaughtered if the price falls below a certain level. That however has not cured the situation. The market in Winnipeg became so congested that the packing plants refused to take any more animals.

My information is that something over 140,000 hogs came to the Winnipeg market, and the Winnipeg packing plants could not handle them. The result was that the hogs had to be shipped east, to the Toronto and eastern markets. A terrific loss was suffered, because of the loss of time, the change in feeding, and the necessary delays which occur in shipping, particularly during the winter months.

I would ask the minister, when dealing with this matter, to explain to the committee how the government goes about reimbursing the producer for the loss in grade and price which takes place on these animals. There must be a difference in loss suffered, determined by the number of days required to transfer the animals to the packing plants in the east.

All this naturally leads one to the conclusion that what is needed is orderly marketing, and that proper information should be sent out to the producers respecting the capacity of packing plants and other facilities across the country to take care of production. If there was a shortage of packing space, then the government should and must have known about it. It must have known about this condition, and should have made preparations to meet it. There has been congestion at Winnipeg for some time, and it still exists.

Here is a farmer who is shipping hogs. He has them fattened, right to the pound, and when he gets them to the market at Winnipeg he finds it is closed. Those hogs hang around for a day or two, and within twenty-four hours they lose their grade. If they have to be shipped back to the farmer, he undergoes a further loss there. Why should the farmer be compelled to take the loss in these cases? Why can there not be some proper adjustment and regulation of the live stock reaching the packing plants so that the animals may be slaughtered at their prime and the greatest possible return made for the farmer? I do not see why the farmer should have to take the loss that results from the fact that facilities are lacking to handle his products. Surely the Department of Agriculture should be able to give information to the shippers at every point, letting them know exactly what is the situation so that they may ship at the very best time.

[Mr. Castleden.]

Last year there was a change in the price of coarse grains being fed to live stock. As the hon. member for Melfort pointed out, this resulted, in the case of a man growing his own grain, in an increase in the cost of producing hogs. As a result many farmers said, "Well, if the government expects us to lose money in producing these hogs we might as well get out of the business," and hundreds of farmers shipped all their hogs, even brood sows, to the market, the consequence being that there was a terrific glut of live stock reaching the Winnipeg slaughtering plants. Farmers were shipping out their brood sows; and figures presented to this house in a return dated February 3 show how the shipment of sows to the Winnipeg market increased. In August, 1943, over 69,000 sows were shipped, as compared with 34,000 in August, 1942; in September, 71,000 were shipped as compared with only 27,000 the year before; in October, 61,000, as compared with 19,000 in 1942, or over three times as many. In November, some 39,000 sows were shipped as compared with 24,000 the year before. At that time an embargo was placed on the shipment of these animals; otherwise I suppose in that month also three times as many sows would have been shipped as the year before. As a matter of fact I believe the embargo is still in effect. In December, 24,000 sows were delivered on the Winnipeg market, as compared with 25,000 the year before. At that time conditions in the stockyards at Winnipeg were terrible; these animals were suffering deterioration in every way, and any sows not accepted were shipped back to the farmers. This should never have happened.

Mr. GARDINER: It really did not happen for the reason indicated, either.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Does the minister say that these figures are not correct?

Mr. GARDINER: No. I say there were three times as many pigs in Canada last year as in a previous year, so that naturally there would be more sows marketed.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: And apparently there were no facilities for handling them.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Then why the congestion?

Mr. GARDINER: I shall deal with that in a short time.

Mr. PERLEY: Canada Packers will tell us all about that.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Yes, Canada Packers will let us know why.

Mr. RICKARD: There are more hogs in Canada than ever before.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Of course there are.

Mr. GARDINER: And that indicates that there were more sows.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Yes, and it should require proper facilities for handling them, so that the farmers would not have to take a loss because of congestion. The farmers are taking that loss, and as the minister admitted in the house nothing is being done to make up that loss to them.

Mr. PERLEY: I have the report of Canada Packers. They do not care whether it is a sow or anything else; they make just as much money.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I believe that is so. The farmer himself will have to go into the shipping, processing and selling of his own products. The organizations of producers should be given assistance and information. They should be given information in regard to the world situation, particularly with respect to markets for their products. I think sometime last March the minister said that he would tell us whether or not a longer term bacon agreement had been signed with Great Britain, and I hope that when he makes his report to-day he will give us this information. Producers in Canada should have complete information as to world production. They are kept in the position that they do not know whether to go into the production of cattle or stay out of it. If they do not know what the production is throughout the world, they cannot properly plan their production. You cannot go into the production of beef overnight; it takes several years to build up your herd. The farmers should be given the information as to what the market will be for years ahead, as nearly as the government can give it. We realize that it is difficult to say when the war will be over and what will be the needs of the world; but if we know the production of the world; if we know the present consumption; if farmers and farm organizations could be taken into the confidence of the government and told what is the world food situation, they could do something to adjust their own production. The farmers should be supplied with proper information in regard to the packing houses and storage facilities, and there should be some proper regulation of the flow of live stock to the centres where it is processed. In speaking to farmers throughout the country I find a common complaint to be that the whole thing appears to be left to chance. The funny part of it is that the packing plants always come out with the big end of it. They seem to have too much control of the boards. I do not know why the packing plants have to be represented there.

Mr. HENDERSON: Why could the farmers not build more packing plants?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: That is what they will have to do; it is the only thing left for them. Would the minister give the committee some information as to the quantities of meat that have spoiled in Canada and have had to be destroyed? A number of rumours have been going the rounds but apparently have been hushed up. I should like the minister to give the committee some information with regard to the storage facilities available in Canada, the quantities of food that have spoiled in the packing plants and have had to be destroyed during each of the last three years, and what steps have been taken to reimburse those who have suffered the loss. I know the western farmer would like to know what facilities will be available next fall to handle his live stock, either in Winnipeg or in the east, so that he may plan his production accordingly. Then, when there was great congestion in Winnipeg the farmer would have liked the government to take advantage of the United States market. Apparently at that time there was a shortage of meat across the border, and with the difference in exchange that seemed to the western farmer a practical way of overcoming the situation which existed in this country at that time. I should like also to have a statement from the minister in regard to the present situation in Winnipeg. Has the congestion there eased off, so that the farmer can ship his hogs to that market with some certainty that his shipment will be accepted? Has anything been done in this long period to reimburse the farmer for the loss he has had to take, and for which he was in no way responsible?

Mr. GARDINER: With regard to the last suggestion that we might utilize the United States market, I should like to read a few satistics to show that conditions across the line were pretty much the same as conditions which prevailed here recently. These figures are taken from the last statement got out by the Department of Agriculture on May 18, 1944, and at the bottom of page 3 the United States live stock situation is dealt with, giving the federally inspected slaughtering at thirty-two selected centres in the United States, and the figures given here were obtained from United States statistics with regard to these thirty-two centres.

The number of cattle inspected at these thirty-two points spread over the United States was, in round figures, 181,000 head for the week ending May 6 last: for the previous week, 179,000; and for the same week last year, 150,000. That is, 31,000 more head of cattle were slaughtered at these points this year than in the same week of the year previous. Then calves; 83,000 were inspected for the week ending May 6 last; 87,000 for the week previous; 55,000 for the same week a year ago; hogs; 1,223,000 for the week ending May 6 last; 1,170,000 for the previous week; and 964,000 for the same week a year ago.

When one considers those figures, one can only come to the conclusion that the situation is much the same in the United States as it is here. In other words, the farmers of the United States have responded to the call for greater production of food products just as the farmers in this country have done, with the result that slaughtering places in the United States are glutted with live stock, just the same as they are on this side of the line. That is why recently the United States followed the lead we gave a few weeks earlier and did away with rationing of meat except steaks and high qualities of beef. Their experience has been similar to ours. That is the chief reason why it has been found difficult, if not impossible, to take advantage of the United States market, because it would have put our friends across the line into difficulties even greater than those they are now experiencing, and it would have compelled them probably to take action which we would much prefer to take ourselves under all the circumstances which existed.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Would the minister also give the slaughtering and storage capacity figures in the United States and Canada in 1939 and 1940.

Mr. GARDINER: I have not those figures, but they can be had in due course. I have the slaughterings in Canada. For the week ending May 6 last there were 194,000; for the week ending April 29, 196,000; for the week ending May 8, 1943, 140,000. We have a record of the slaughterings at all the plants across Canada, and the figures I have just given are the record of the killings in Canada at inspected plants, just as the figures I previously gave were a record of the killings at thirty-two different centres in the United States. When you take that fact into consideration you will see that the increase on the United States side of the line is just about in line with the increase on our own side.

At exporting plants, which are the plants we have under consideration in dealing with our exports of bacon and ham to Britain, for the week ending May 6 last the slaughterings were 182,000; for the week ending April 29, 187,000, and for the week ending May 8, 1943, 130,000. So that it will be seen from those figures that conditions are much the same on both sides of the line.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: How many of these places are unable to take the supply of stock which comes in?

Mr. GARDINER: I will deal with that later. I have given the figures with regard to slaughterings to clear up just one point.

The discussions this afternoon were opened by the hon. member for Haldimand who, apart from the introduction to his remarks, gave us, I think, a clear indication of the general position. But in his opening remarks he dwelt at considerable length on statements that have been made previously in the house by himself and by others. In that regard I wish to call to mind the statements which were made by the hon. member for Haldimand himself, by the hon. member for Yorkton, who has just taken his seat, and by the hon. member for Melfort and others in the house during the first three or four years of the war. During that period of time the challenge which was hurled across the floor to the government, and particularly to myself as Minister of Agriculture, was to the effect that the farmers in this country were never going to be able to meet the demands that would be made upon them for food production to supply the necessities of war because we were not giving leadership to the farmers. That was the claim made during all that period of time. I was pleased, therefore, to be able to sit here and listen this afternoon to the same hon. members telling us that the real difficulty now is that we have produced so much food that we have not the plant capacity in Canada to have it processed.

Mr. SENN: I did not make that statement.

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend did not make that statement in so many words, but the hon. member who just took his seat did, and others who have spoken previously have suggested it. It pretty well indicates that someone was giving some leadership after all. I am not particularly worried about who gave the leadership. The fact is that the farmers have done what we suggested ought to be done. I believe that the farmers themselves have provided a great part of the leadership. The direction was indicated by the department and by myself, and in following that direction the farmers have done what we desired to have them do and what the British people desired they should do, namely, provide greater quantities of the different types of food which are required in connection with the prosecution of the war. Our farmers have done that to a greater extent than anyone anticipated before the war that we would ever be able to do in this country.

Mr. BLACKMORE: And the farmers paid the shot.

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend says that the farmers paid the shot.

Mr. BLACKMORE: And they are still at it.

Mr. GARDINER: I think the farmers will agree that some of the shot was paid by the British people and some by the Canadian people generally. While some of them may have the view that the pay was not as high as it might have been, I think they will all agree that the shot was paid for to the extent it has been paid, by the federal treasury on behalf of all the people of Canada, and by the British government on behalf of the people of Britain. That being the case, the farmers responded to the call which was made for more food.

Discussing the point which was raised a few moments ago by the hon. member for Yorkton, that we are marketing a great many sows, all I have to say in that regard is that in marketing the great numbers of hogs which have been marketed in 1944, during which period we marketed more hogs than we ever did before in any similar period in our history —sows and all kinds of hogs—the percentage of B1's and A's of the total marketed compares favourably with that in any other previous period in the marketing of hogs in this country.

That in itself suggests that there has not been a greater number of sows or of heavies or of lights marketed than one would expect under the circumstances. As a matter of fact, one of the chief criticisms which were made of the department, of myself and of the government was to the effect that by the time we reached this period of 1944 so many sows would have been marketed that we were not going to be able to supply the British market at all. Looking at the last week for which we have the records, I find we are now in this positon, that we had marketed over seventy per cent—to be exact, about seventy-seven per cent—of all the hogs which the present agreement calls for. In other words, instead of sows being marketed to the extent that we would have no pigs, we have so many pigs that we wonder how we are to be able to process and market them. In other words, farmers did not slaughter the pigs as they came from the sows, as was stated by members of this house outside the house in the fall of 1943. Farmers were not selling their pigs at the prices that were indicated by some hon. members outside the house; they were retaining these pigs in their pens and feeding them, and these pigs are to-day coming on the market in numbers such as I indicated a few moments ago, thousands upon thousands more than ever came into the market in the corresponding week of preceding years. So that we have records which bear out what has been said this afternoon, namely, that our farmers have done a particularly good job in producing food; and if they have done it without any leadership from the Department of Agriculture—well, we are quite satisfied.

The question was raised that we ought to have more producers on our boards. That is an old story, and it used to come from all quarters both inside and outside the house. But it has ceased to come from many quarters recently, and there is a reason for that, too. When the war started we placed upon the boards which were set up in the agriculture department the best farmer experts that I know in the dominion, and I think even the hon. member for Haldimand will admit that with regard to some of them. These men came from the farms; they were hired by the Department of Agriculture through the civil service commission in years gone by, most of them by the opposite political party to that to which I belong, in periods of time when we were not in office. These men were hired because they did know agriculture. These men were hired because they were born and raised on farms all over this country.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Mr. S. E. Todd?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, and Mr. Todd knows very much more about agriculture than the hon. member does.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Was he raised on a farm?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. Mr. Todd was raised on a farm and was employed by the government before he was employed by others; and he still farms.

Mr. BLACKMORE: By proxy.

Mr. GARDINER: These men were born and raised on farms; they were put through the best agricultural institutions we have for training men to be able to assist in the farming operations of the farmers of Canada, and then they were employed by the civil service commission to give service in the Department of Agriculture to the farmers. What I wish to say to hon. members who make speeches such as have been made on a number of occasions with regard to these officials is, that if the government took any farmer and put him on one of these administrative boards, he would immediately be an employee of this government, and in the minds of hon. members sitting opposite he would cease to be a farmer or one assisting in production in this country.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It would help, to try one or two.

Mr. GARDINER: We have tried. Perhaps my hon. friend will not have so much to say about it before I am through.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I shall have more.

Mr. GARDINER: I must admit that when the war began I, as Minister of Agriculture, was inclined to say that farm organizations would be ill-advised to have their best officials leave those organizations, come into the employ of the government and take their directions from those of us who happen to be in charge of the department for the time being, if they desired to serve the farm organizations to which they belonged and which had placed them in the positions they occupied. So that we said that officials who know agriculture, who have been advising in connection with agriculture, ought to head these particular boards and should have something to do with the directing of the marketing of the farm products during the war period. In the very first meeting we had with the farm federation at the beginning of the war I pointed out to them that during the period of the war, at least, it would be the policy of the government to set up government boards for the purpose of handling farm products, and gave as one of the reasons that we would be dealing direct with boards set up by governments in Great Britain and elsewhere which were going to purchase the products we had to sell. For that reason, if for no other, during the war period it would be necessary to have these boards appointed by the government and under government direction. In addition, it was the intention, and that intention has been followed out, that agreements would be made as between the government of this country and the governments of other countries for the sale of Canadian farm products to governments of other countries, such products to be used in connection with the prosecution of the war; and under those circumstances it would become necessary from time to time for our government, not only to purchase the farm product and place it as the disposal of a board at some point or another on its way between here and the British market, to be placed at the disposal of a board set up by another government, but for the government actually to finance the marketing of the farm product; first, the assembling of it at some point, and finally the marketing of it, taking care of the financing of payments from time to time. It was pointed out that under those circumstances it was very important that men who had been trained in the government service should be at the head of these boards in order to see to it that proper administration was given to the transactions that were conducted.

For a time farm organizations did take exception to that policy, but when we set up the food board I placed the matter squarely in the hands of the federation itself. I said, "We are prepared to take one of your officials—you name him—and preferably your president, and put him on the food board. We would like you to make the decision as to whether we shall do that or not." After giving it consideration they came back—the records are on the files to indicate what I am saying—and stated that they preferred to have representation on an advisory committee. I think they showed good sense in coming to that conclusion. So that, instead of having their president on the board, the president is chairman of the advisory committee to the food board. He has his office here in Ottawa; he is not under our direction; he has access to my office and the office of the officials at any time he desires to have access; he discusses the different farm problems relating to food with us, and there is an advisory committee set up that he calls together from time to time after consulting with those of us in the department as to the necessity for a meeting. He calls that committee together. It is composed of nine representatives nominated by the provincial government and three representatives in addition to the chairman nominated by the federation. Some of those men who are nominated by the provincial governments are representatives of farm organizations in their own provinces and others are officials of the Departments of Agriculture in the provinces. That committee meets from time to time when any important matter relating to the marketing of different farm products is under consideration and advises with regard to what should be done in connection with that particular product.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Do you ever take its advice?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. If we did not take its advice sometimes, I suppose my hon. friend would have known there was such a committee in existence and functioning. They would have made it known themselves. In connection with a matter of this kind, not only is it an advisory committee to the government or to the Department of Agriculture or to the feed board; it is a committee which advises its own nominators as well. It gains information by sitting in committee with regard to the different problems that confront the government in the marketing of the product and gives its own opinions as to what ought to be done, discusses those opinions pro and con with the board and the minister; and after a decision is reached, it is in a position to explain to its own people why certain decisions were necessary and why certain results were obtained. I may say that since that decision was arrived at, since that action was taken we have had the most satisfactory association with the farm federation, which represents farm organizations from one end of Canada to the other. Their advice is freely given. They sit in and offer their opinions with regard to what ought to be done in connection with the different farm products. We listen to their opinions and apply as many of their ideas as we possibly can, and they in turn make explanations where explanations are possible as to why certain things had to be done. Therefore we have had a very satisfactory arrangement and things have worked quite effectively in the interests of the farmers of Canada during the last year under that organization.

I have made this statement in order to show that so far as personnel of the food and other administrative boards is concerned it is comprised largely of officials of the department. The advisory committee has, as its chairman, the president of the farm federation, and other representatives from that federation, nominated by themselves, and accepted by me as minister and recommended to the government for appointment. They have been appointed and have been functioning on the committee throughout that period of time.

That is one of the reasons why the change was made about which I was asked for an explanation by the hon. member for Haldimand. In the spring of 1943 we set up the food board and we set up this advisory committee on which there are representatives of all the different agricultural activities across Canada, from which we get advice. At that time it was decided that all matters having to do with encouragement of production should be placed under the Department of Agriculture. Some of the subsidies previously paid for production were paid under the prices board organization, but in the spring of 1943 they were placed under the Department of Agriculture, more particularly under the administration of the food board.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have followed with a great deal of interest what little I have heard, but I would point out that last summer, in connection with the production of new potatoes, the policy was to subsidize the consumer, and that was intended to be done through the wartime prices and trade board and through the Commodities Stabilization corporation. Owing to an error in the drafting of the regulations, however, it became a subsidy to producers. Why was that not all included under the food board? Perhaps the minister does not know about it, but I call his attention to the matter. It was intended to be a subsidy to the consumer and turned out to be a subsidy to producers, and thousands of dollars have been paid out which it was never intended should be so paid out.

Mr. GARDINER: As I understand it, the position is that the subsidy which is paid in connection with potatoes is a consumer subsidy.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That was the intention; there is no doubt about it.

Mr. GARDINER: That was the intention, and that is why it is under the prices board. The idea of paying the consumer subsidy through the prices board is that the prices board is controlling the cost of living—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Quite so.

Mr. GARDINER: —in which is included the cost of food, and they say that where food costs too much they will subsidize the consumer.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): There is no doubt about the theory, and I am not objecting to it, but it turned out that it became a producer subsidy until it was caught, and the money cannot be got back.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand there is some difficulty with regard to some payments in connection with potatoes, but that is one of the difficulties that develop in connection with controls. The intention, however, was that it should be a consumer subsidy.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Quite right.

Mr. GARDINER: Those were the two matters which I wished to discuss to some extent at the moment. I do not wish to prolong the discussion in connection with administration under this item. It will be noted that there is administration under all these items. The first one is administration of the agricultural supplies board; then there is administration under the feeds administrator; there is administration under fertilizers; there is administration under subventions and freight allowances, and there is administration under the meat board. Up to the moment we have all been out of order in trying to discuss all these various matters under administration of the supplies board, because administration comes under each of the items that I have mentioned. If we are to discuss the meat board we ought to reserve our discussions until we are dealing with that item, or with items having to do with the meat board. I suggest that there has been considerable leeway up to the moment, and I think the committee will agree that we can get along much better if we discuss the various matters as we come to them under their respective items. We have nine chances to discuss administration, and there is no reason why we should discuss all these matters under one item.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I think we should come to some understanding on the matter. I wished to discuss the question of meat, and I thought the proper place would be under the item dealing with the meat board. If we agree to discuss it there, very well; if we agree to fight it out here, that will suit me.

Mr. GARDINER: I was asked by the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Burton) how we would prefer to proceed, and I suggested on Friday evening that it would be better to take these matters item by item than to have a general discussion ranging over all under one item. We have had a general discussion from all quarters of the opposition with the exception of Social Credit, and I think that if we can agree to go on from here and discuss administration in connection with each of these branches, discussing matters having to do with it under each vote, we shall make better headway and get information more readily, because the information is all compiled in that way.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Under what item does congestion of delivery of stock come?

Mr. GARDINER: Everything having to do with the delivery of stock will come under the meat board.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I believe that the department have bungled the beef-producing job in southern Alberta. I shall have more to say on that later.

Mr. GARDINER: I will, too.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I shall be here to hear it.

Mr. PERLEY: I thought a general discussion was to be allowed and we were to have the same latitude that has been extended to other hon. members. I did not get into the discussion for the reason that I thought it would continue. It is now nearly six o'clock. I could not conclude the few general remarks I should like to make before six, and therefore I ask you, Mr. Chairman, to call it six o'clock. I shall take about twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN: Before I call it six o'clock may I say that I believe the point taken by the Minister of Agriculture is well taken. Hon. members of the committee will realize that we have already spent seven or eight sittings on agriculture. I do not want to curtail discussion—I am not able to—but I believe we should discuss the item before the committee at the present time. I am confirmed I am expressing the views of the majority of the hon. members of the committee when I say that.

Mr. SENN: Before you make that decision, Mr. Chairman, may I say that at the opening of my remarks I laid a basis for what I had to say. The order in council sets up the agricultural supplies board and gives it very wide powers in regard not only to production but to all phases of the agricultural situation. That is the reason why I went as far as I did. It seems to me that that is sufficiently wide to carry on a general discussion unless the committee decides otherwise.

Mr. GARDINER: The only thing I have to say with regard to that is to repeat what I said a moment ago. We have "administration" in every one of those items. I think the committee can get better information and better results by discussing all there is to be said about administration on those particular items when we come to them. The information will then be available, but it is not readily available at the moment when the committee is wandering all over the place. I think we can get better results if my suggestion is followed out.

Mr. PERLEY: I thought it was understood on Friday night last that there would be more or less general discussion on the first item, such as has taken place this afternoon. If the ruling had been made after the first two speakers had concluded their remarks this afternoon it would have been all right, but I do not think it is proper to make the ruling now because there are two or three other hon. members who would like to say something. I have spoken to them and they have told me that they intended to go on. We have heard from the far corner. I refrained from going on because some hon. members in that corner wanted to precede me. I think, Mr. Chairman, that you should call it six o'clock.

Mr. GARDINER: Let me clear up that point. I think the hon. member for Qu'Appelle will remember that the hon. member for Humboldt asked that question definitely on Friday night. After delivering his speech he asked me how we were to proceed.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): After he had had his say.

Mr. GARDINER: I said that we would take up this item and discuss it and not wander all over the place. I will admit that that has been departed from by one speaker from the official opposition, two speakers from the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, the hon. member for North Battleford, and the hon. member from one other party who talked about the employment of labour in agriculture. After having gone over all that, I think we should call a halt and discuss the particular item that is before the committee.

Mr. PERLEY: There are about five or six administrators and three or four boards. If a general discussion is to be allowed on each one of those then we may say all we have to say in a general way for about five minutes on each one. If we do that it will not facilitate the passing of the estimates. Nor shall we be doing that by closing down the discussion as suggested at the moment. There are three or four other hon. members in the same position as myself. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that you call it six o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: I believe that it is a matter of understanding among the hon. members of the committee. It is impossible for me to curtail the discussion. It is not my intention to do so at the present time, but there has been a great deal of repetition. I believe it is the wish of the committee that the discussion be curtailed to a large extent.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. PERLEY: Mr. Chairman, on Friday last the minister's war estimates were before the committee for only a short time before eleven o'clock. We did not get very far that evening. This afternoon there has been a general discussion on the first item, in conformity with the usual practice. Just before six o'clock the minister pointed out that he thought we had had enough general discussion, and should discuss the item in detail. All I have to say is that I think the minister was perhaps a little optimistic. I do not think his estimates will be held up very long, however, because I am sure that when the different boards are under discussion in detail he will be prepared to give all information asked, and as a result possibly he will get through sooner than he expects.

I was interested when, just before six o'clock, the minister replied to the hon. member for Yorkton, placing on record the increase in the production of hogs, and a record of the slaughterings both in Canada and in the United States. I believe the information he gave showed that the increase was about the same in each case, a situation only to be expected. I trust that the minister clarified other conditions, such as the increase in the marketing of sows, to the satisfaction of the hon. member for Yorkton. If that hon. member is not practical enough to absorb what the minister has said, then there are one or two other members in his group who are practical farmers and who will be able to explain things to him.

The minister took some little time this afternoon to answer the hon. member for Haldimand and, to some extent, was complimentary in what he said about that hon. member. In my view the hon. member made a well-considered and constructive speech. It was, of course, critical in some respects, but constructively so. He made several suggestions whereby the operation of the different boards, and the department generally in respect of its war programme, might be made more efficient, so as to give the farmer a little better deal. The hon. member for Haldimand referred to increased production and increased prices, and also dealt with the farm labour problem, and the difficulty farmers have in securing machinery. It is clear that farming operations, in view of the shortage of labour, require more machinery under present conditions.

The hon. member made a point with respect to the cost of production, and showed how, even under present conditions, and despite increased production and increased prices, the farmer is hardly getting what is coming to him, and is not getting a fair share of the national income.

The minister endeavoured to answer what had been said by the hon. member for Haldimand, and, I was interested to note, to give credit to the farmers on this occasion. However, I can well remember another occasion to which the hon. member for Haldimand made reference. I can remember when the minister's estimates were before the committee before the Easter recess, upon which occasion the hon. member for Moose Jaw, the hon. member for Macdonald and the hon. member for Brant spent considerable time in eulogizing the minister, paying him compliments and giving him credit for the increased production, the increase in prices, and the apparent prosperity the farmer has lately enjoyed. I recall that on that occasion the minister absorbed the eulogies, smiling occasionally, and expanding himself when he rose to reply and to thank his supporters for their compliments.

To-day, however, he did go out of his way to make proper references to the hon. member for Haldimand, and to a certain extent did give credit where it belonged; that is, to the farmer. If I remember correctly, his expression was that the farmer had followed the instructions and requests made by his department, in almost every respect, in regard to increased production.

The minister referred to the farm representation on different boards, a point which had been raised earlier by the hon. member for Haldimand. The minister's reply was that the government had set up advisory committees, and that on those committees the farmers have direct representation, just as they have in some of the farm organizations and cooperatives. Well, that is all very well. I might say that a review of some of the statements made by different organizations discloses that they have such representation. But it is a little difficult to see where the suggestions they make from time to time are implemented or put into force.

Replying to what was said this afternoon by the minister, I would point out to him that if he will go back to 1942 and 1943, when the boards were first set up, he will see that on those occasions the hon. member for Haldimand, and others on this side of the house, demanded that farmers and producers have direct representation on the boards. That was not allowed. The farmer did not receive such representation at that time, and he is getting it now only in a roundabout way, by representation on the advisory committees. Well, that is all to the good.

To return to the credit hon. members tried to give the minister, on the former occasion when the minister's estimates were before the committee, might I say that when those hon. members gave the minister credit for increased production and increased price levels I was tempted to ask the minister then what Providence might have had to do with it. What did the farmer, himself, have to do with it? I believe it is apparent he has had much to do with it. Then, what has the war had to do with it? Surely we realize that it has brought about a demand for increased production of all kinds. I suggest that these are some of the reasons why we have had the increase. No matter who might have been sitting on the treasury benches, the farmer would have met the demand, when or if it was necessary.

[Mr. Perley.]

I shall not deal with subsidies until we reach the item in the estimates dealing with that subject.

May I express my agreement with what has been said by the hon. member for Haldimand with respect to prices? The ceiling price should not apply to certain farm products, but certainly floor prices should. I, for one, was disappointed that before this we had not had presented to the house the bill to establish floor prices which the Minister of Finance said was to be introduced. We should have had that bill before us before these estimates were presented. We should have it before us, before concluding our discussions on the war appropriation estimates, so that we may know exactly what the minister has in mind, what he means by floor prices, how he is to establish them and what they are to be. We should have had that information, particularly in view of the minister's announcement of Friday last that he was going to go west next Saturday night, no matter what happens, whether these estimates are through or not. Before he leaves this city to go west, to take part, as we know, in a certain campaign out there, he should let us have that bill respecting floor prices, so that we may know what it is all about.

The stock grading system is not satisfactory. I have had communications from and talked with farmers and shippers who are not at all satisfied. I suggest that to make it more satisfactory some change should be made.

The situation set out this afternoon by the hon. member for Yorkton with respect to the processing and distribution of live stock works all to the advantage of the packers, I do not think the present grading system is what it should be. I believe it should be revised. I am going to quote the statement referred to this afternoon by the hon. member for Haldimand, as having been made by the president of Canada Packers before the price spreads committee in 1934, in regard to live stock prices;

> The total live stock is sold for the total sum, whatever it is; from that sum is deducted first the packer's expense and the packer's profit and the farmer gets the balance.

I imagine the same rule is followed at the present time. There has been no change in the grading system or the regulations; the farmer gets whatever is left after the packer takes his profit and expenses. On previous occasions we on this side have suggested that a board of live stock commissioners should be set up in order to assist producers of live stock as the board of grain commissioners assists producers of grain. I think I have referred to this matter once or twice already this session. If we had such a board, with proper representation, I believe a great many of the difficulties that now exist in regard to grading, marketing and processing would be done away with. A few moments ago I referred to Canada Packers. I have in my hand the last annual report of that company, which I received just a few days ago. I am not going to read from it at any length, but I recommend this report to all hon. members.

Mr. GOLDING: Does the hon. member think he is the only one who has read it?

Mr. PERLEY: If my hon. friend has read it he will see that the packers themselves say they make so much profit on every pound of pork, beef or other meat that goes through their plants, no matter what animal it may come from. I am glad to know the hon. gentleman who interrupted has read the report, for I am sure he will agree with what I have said and will join me in recommending it to the attention of hon. members.

I wish to refer briefly to the matter of the disposition of agricultural products of which surpluses have been created because of the war. In certain products we now have surpluses as a result of increased production and other causes; and after listening to the statement made this afternoon by the Prime Minister we must realize that our difficulties are not at an end yet, that we may still have a bad year or two ahead. I suggest that the minister should make a start in implementing some of the suggestions contained in the report of the reconstruction committee dated December 16, 1943. At page five of that report, under the heading, "Industrial Utilization of Farm Products," I find this:

> That a new government-supported laboratory limited to research on the utilization of farm products and with facilities for pilot-plant investigations, be established in the prairie provinces.

The suggestion was made this afternoon that we should have more packing plants, perhaps smaller in size, which would help take care of surplus live stock marketed from time to time, but here we have a definite recommendation in this report. Then on page 24, in regard to the industrial utilization of farm products, I find this:

> A survey of Canadian research on the utilization of farm products reveals that in the past agricultural research has been directed mainly to increasing production; in the future, greater emphasis should be placed on utilization problems.

So that I would ask the minister, when he comes to discuss these items in detail, to say what has been done in this connection and just how far the government is going in carrying out the suggestions contained in this very worth-while report. At page 27 of the same report I see a reference to one or two interesting items having to do with a general research programme which they suggest in connection with such matters as wheat starch, vegetable proteins, vegetable oils and so on. I think we should have a statement from the minister on some of these items, whichever he thinks most suitable, as to what is being done in regard to accepting some of the suggestions advanced by this committee.

The last item under this estimate has to do with the agricultural food board. This is a new item in the minister's estimates, and it provides for a proposed expenditure of $47,600,000. If we go back to item 5 we see a proposed expenditure of $16,500,000 on freight assistance in connection with western feed grains; then we have another item of $8,000,000 for a subsidy on western wheat. If we add together the first two items I mentioned we get a total of $64,000,000; if we subtract that amount from the total of $73,500,000 we have left $9,500,000, and if we subtract that from last year's total we find that the net increase this year is only something like $4,500,000. I believe this new item involving some $47,000,000 should be explained thoroughly by the minister, who should tell us exactly what is to be done under the new board that is to be set up and how the work is to be carried on. Also with respect to these items the minister should tell us the number of people employed this year as compared with last year. I have before me the auditor general's report for last year. If you go through this report and take the minister's estimates item by item you will see all the details. I find that in one year there was an increase of almost one hundred employees drawing salaries of from $2,400 to $3,000 a year, in addition to their expenses, as well as many stenographers and clerks. I think we should be told by the minister just what increase is anticipated for this year.

There are one or two interesting items in the auditor general's report on which I should like some information from the minister. They have to do with advertising. At page A-71 I see an item for advertising with respect to the production of wheat and coarse grains, amounting to $15,000. I should like to know what is to be done this year under this item. Then on page A-73 I find an advertising item of $7,000 for special war-time pamphlets. On the same page we have an item of $30,000 for advertising "re farm women's activities," and the comment on the following pages is that this—advertising in farm publications to assist farm women in their home and farm duties and allied war work.

> . . . represents payments to the Canadian Advertising Agency Limited, Montreal, for

On page 74 there is another advertising item for $555; another advertising item of $15,000; an item of $12,000 for advertising a sheep raising programme. On page 75 there are two or three more advertising items, including an item of $22,000 for advertising to stimulate live stock production. I am not going into details as to who got this money, although it would be interesting to know who it was in Montreal who got the most of it. My point is, does the minister really need to carry on this expensive advertising this year, or will the advertising that was paid for last year suffice? The amount spent on advertising does seem out of all proportion when you have boards set up, with inspectors and key men going all over the country. When I was at home at Easter I stopped at an hotel in a small town, and standing outside were eight or ten cars. I said to the hotelkeeper, "You must be doing a good busniess, with so many cars outside." He said, "Come on out with me and look at them." Half of them were departmental cars, three of them belonging to the Department of Agriculture. They are doing a lot of advertising and your boards are doing a lot of advertising, so that I think these advertising agencies should not receive again this year the amounts that were paid them last year. The best advertising we can get with respect to farm production in Canada is a fair price, and that is all the farmer asks—a fair and square deal and a parity price. There has just come to hand to-day the Searle index giving comparative prices on 147 items and the price shown for farm products is 102 instead of 156. A fair price for the farmer is the best advertising of all.

When we come to the individual items we shall have questions to ask. It is our responsibility to help the minister get the necessary production of food to assist in bringing the war to a successful conclusion. But I think, too, we all want to see the agriculturist, who is carrying on the largest industry in the country, get a square deal.

Mr. HLYNKA: Mr. Chairman, before we proceed with the consideration of individual items in a more orderly fashion I should like to say a few words.

The Minister of Agriculture seems to be very well versed in his subject and has a lot of statistical information at his finger-tips whenever he is asked a question. He also delivers some very good speeches on the floor of this house. But for some reason or another the farmers are never set at ease by the speeches which the minister delivers, and I believe that the results which the farmers received from their operations justify their feelings. I should like to hear the minister give this committee and the country the assurance that farm income in Canada after the war will be maintained at a high level.

Mr. EVANS: It is higher this year than ever before in the history of this country.

Mr. HLYNKA: I quite agree that the income which the farmers have been receiving during war time is considerably higher than that which they received before the war, but one or two years of better prices for farm products do not place the farmer in a position where he feels safe and is able to meet his daily obligations.

Mr. EVANS: The farmers of Alberta are liquidating their mortgages this year.

Mr. HLYNKA: Yes, but Alberta has a good government. That is the difference.

Mr. DUPUIS: Twenty-five dollars a month.

Mr. HLYNKA: If I may proceed, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister to tell us how he proposes to keep farm income at a high level. Has he any formula? Or is he unable to give the committee and the country the assurance that farm income will be maintained at a high level?

Would the minister also tell the committee whether he still entertains the view that agricultural prosperity depends upon and can only be maintained by foreign trade? That is the view which this government held in the past. Our farmers were told that they could not possibly expect better times because we could not sell our wheat abroad. Will the minister tell the committee whether this government feels that immediately after the war the Canadian people can be assured of an adequate income, or must they again hear the excuse that because we cannot sell our products abroad the people must go hungry at home?

Would the minister also tell the committee whether or not he is satisfied that under his administration it will be possible to make available to the farmers sufficient credit to enable them to carry on their farming operations as they would like to do? I must say that in the past, and it is partly the case now, this government has chosen to put the farmers on a sort of relief system. The farmers were forced to live on relief, and they still do, whether it be in the form of subsidies or other assistance that the government gives the farmers from time to time. I believe in subsidies for both the consumer and the producer. But first of all we must endeavour to set and maintain a parity price on farm products. I believe that subsidies should be used only for the purpose of adjustment.

Another item which I should like to mention, and to which brief reference has been made to-day, is the condition of farm machinery. For the past five years the farmers, particularly those of western Canada, have been operating with old machinery. Much of it is broken down and some is beyond repair. Will the minister tell the committee and the country what he proposes to do in this matter? I should like to hear an assurance from him that repair parts will be available, and they must be made available if the farmers are to carry on their operations efficiently.

The minister seems able to produce statistical information on practically every question which is asked, and I congratulate him upon his knowledge of this information. But he should also from time to time indicate to the farmers what they may expect in the future. It is well to tell them what the country expects of the farmers, and it is well to inform the farmers what they may expect of the country.

At the appropriate time I intend to make a few more remarks with particular reference to the beef situation and the marketing of bacon.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): This item has to do with the programme to encourage the production of essential war supplies. I believe the specific matter we are discussing is that of the agricultural supplies board administration.

Mr. GARDINER: That is the item.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I listened to the minister's replies to some of the questions asked this afternoon, and, as the hon. member who has just spoken indicated, the minister gave a very nice speech. But I am endeavouring to find a solution of some of the problems which have been outlined. I have before me a petition which was sent to me by my constituency and is signed on behalf of a number of farm organizations, complaining about the unsatisfactory marketing of hogs. I am aware that the minister on May 8 gave quite an explanation of why the packing plants could not handle the large number of hogs which were being brought to them, and he returned to the subject to-day, saying in general that many more hogs had been brought into the packing plants this year than in any other year since the war started. I do not suppose there is any question about that; the minister has given the figures and I accept them as correct, but that does not solve the problem. The condition complained of still exists. The minister went to quite a length this afternoon to show how well the farmers have responded to the "leadership", as he called it, of the Liberal party in raising the required production. I do not know whether that is evidence of leadership. I would have thought that when the government asks the farmers to raise a large number of hogs to supply war demands, the government should be in a position to handle those supplies. But that is where the minister's explanation stopped; he did not go on to say that the government have plans to take care of this production for which they asked. That does not show planning, or leadership.

Mr. GARDINER: I did say that when we got down to the item I would be prepared to discuss it; that is, the meat board.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): That is what I am dealing with.

Mr. GARDINER: No; it comes under the meat board.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I have looked over the details carefully, and I cannot see where the raising of stock would come under that.

Mr. GARDINER: The whole handling and marketing of live stock—hogs and cattle—comes under the meat board.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I will finish now what I had to say, and then I need not repeat my remarks if the minister will answer the question. The point is, that while the minister has reviewed the facts I have indicated he has not solved the difficulty which faces the farmer, and I have been waiting for his explanation so that I can answer the great number of letters I have received and tell the farmers just how soon their problem will be solved. It is all very well to say that the farmers are very patriotic in their response to the call. That is true; but the fact is that, in making that response, they, like those in other industries, should receive proper remuneration for their labours. I recall having visited about a year ago some aircraft plants, which, too, are doing a good job; but in this industry, as in the building of ships and the manufacture of guns, industrialists receive a profit on their labours. The full costs of production, including labour, raw material and overhead are ascertained, and upon these outlays their profit is calculated. It seems to me only fair that the farmers, when they raise hogs at the request of the government in a time of national war emergency, should be guaranteed the cost of production plus a fair and reasonable profit. I would not claim for them an excessive profit, and they are not asking for it. But the situation is that they complied with the government regulations in every detail; they bring their hogs to the stockyards to be sold, and quite frequently—this was revealed to me only about a week ago—they are forced to take their hogs home again and hold them for another two or three weeks. Immediately they are required to do that they undergo a loss. If they continue to feed the hogs, there is a danger of overweight when they are brought in again; if they feed them just enough to maintain the required weight, they are out the cost of the day to day feed; if the hogs lose weight, again the farmers lose. It seems to me that the problem should be tackled in a different manner. If an aircraft manufacturer makes a plane which the government is not prepared to take from him at once, he is allowed the cost of storage, insurance, and like charges. The farmer should be treated in the same way; when he brings his hogs into the stockyard the government should be prepared to buy those hogs then and there.

Mr. BLAIR: What would they do with them?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): They asked for them. What do they do with surplus aircraft? They store them or pay for the storage, because they are the government's property when they are brought out of the factory.

Mr. DUPUIS: The conditions are not the same.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): The planes belong to the government and not to the aircraft manufacturer. It should be the same with the farmer; when he brings his hogs into the stockyard the government should take possession of them. If they want to have a feeding lot there or something of the sort, that might be the solution; but delivery should be taken of the farmer's hogs as he brings them in. Then the nation itself would assume responsibility for any loss incurred after the time the farmers had delivered the stock.

Mr. DUPUIS: Does the hon. member mean to say that the western farmer does not make a profit on hogs—that he is not making a profit on hogs this year?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): You never heard me say that.

Mr. DUPUIS: What is your complaint, then?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): If you want to say that, go ahead.

[Mr. C. E. Johnston.]

Mr. DUPUIS: What is the situation of the eastern farmer?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Do your own talking, please. If the hon. member wants to say that the farmers are making too much profit in the west, that is his privilege—

Mr. DUPUIS: I do not say that, but I say they make a profit.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): —but I am trying to assist the Minister of Agriculture because I know he is having difficulty in solving the problem.

An hon. MEMBER: What would be your suggestion?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I am sure the people in the west are not satisfied with the way in which the thing is being handled now, and merely to recite what the packing companies are doing to-day as compared with a year ago is not the solution. Everyone knows, or can know if he will read the figures which the minister has given—and no one doubts the correctness of those figures—that the packing plants are doing much more than they did before. Only look at their profit sheets and you will find that out. But that does not solve the difficulty. I have an important suggestion to make to the minister. I do not know whether he will accept it or whether he has something better to propose, but I think some plan should be worked out whereby, when the farmer brings his product to the market, the government would at once take possession of it, whether it be hogs or beef or any other commodity, which is an essential war material. The government, from the point of view of war necessity, has appealed to the patriotism of the farmers to produce, and when the farmers comply with that request they have done their share. But to penalize the farmer and force him to take his hogs home, and definitely to incur a loss on them, is not good business from anyone's point of view. I should like to see the minister, therefore, make some plan for taking over possession of these hogs and paying the farmer the price that is coming to him.

Item agreed to.

Assistance in disposal of agricultural products rendered surplus by the war, $550,000.

Mr. QUELCH: There is no doubt that prices paid at present for agricultural produce do tend to increase production, but it is a great mistake for anyone to think the prices which the farmers are receiving are unduly high because they seem to be so good compared with prices received in the past. Let us remember that the farmers to-day are still not receiving anything like their fair share of the national income on a per capita basis. Until that end is achieved, we cannot say that the farmers are in reality receiving fair prices for the things they have to sell. Let us put that on a comparative basis. From 1914 to 1919 the farmers, representing thirty per cent of the population, received thirty per cent of the national income. To-day the farmer is not receiving anything like thirty per cent of the national income, so that it is altogether unwarrantable to say that the prices the farmers are receiving now are out of line.

Mr. EVANS: Would the hon. member not admit that the increase in wages has lowered the percentage of the farmers' income?

Mr. QUELCH: Not only the increase in wages but the increase in the price of materials, the increase in the cost of machinery, and other factors entering into the situation. All of these would, of course, offset the return which the farmer receives. However, I simply wish to emphasize the fact that although to many people the prices of agricultural products seem high to-day, those prices do not make it possible for the farmer to get a fair share of the national income, and there are still products for which the farmer does not receive a fair price. That is true, for example, in regard to sheep, because I have here a resolution from the sheep-breeders' association protesting bitterly over the low price received for lambs and mutton. They say that they cannot be expected to expand production in sheep until fair prices are assured them. Although the prices received may encourage production there are, on the other hand, certain factors that are definitely decreasing the efficiency of farmers in production. For instance, if you go to the west to-day and speak to the farmers there you will find that they are somewhat jittery about the prices which they are likely to receive in the future. They remember what happened after the last war. They remember how prices fell within three years from the end of the war. Prices at that time went to a very low level. For example, at the end of the war cattle sold at around $125 and the price dropped within a few years to $25 and $30 a head. The same was true of other lines of produce. The farmers remember that fact; they do not intend to be caught in the same way after this war if they can avoid it, and that has a detrimental effect on production. They hesitate to make capital expenditures and to expand their holdings of stock. It is necessary, therefore, that the government should at the earliest opportunity give some assurance to the farmers that the prices now received will be maintained and a market guaranteed for a certain length of time, instead of expecting farmers to operate from year to year in a state of uncertainty.

Three or four years ago I visited several farms in the west where I saw two or three brood sows being kept. On those same farms to-day there are anywhere from twelve to twenty brood sows, but there is hardly any change in the buildings and the conditions for raising pigs. The reason the farmers give is that they do not know how long they will remain in hog production at that height. They say, "We are keeping twenty brood sows to-day, but if prices drop we will go out of hog production. We will not make the necessary capital expenditures to put up the hog houses needed to take care of the hogs efficiently." That is bound to have a detrimental effect on hog production, and that condition is largely to blame for the high mortality in young hogs. Throughout the west, in the part of the country in which I live, there was a heavy loss of young hogs last year. One could see young hogs herding out of a small building on a cold day, many of them sweating, with the result that they got pneumonia and thousands died. It is said that the farmers received a poorer grade for hogs now than in the past and I have a number of letters making that charge. If it were said to the farmers that this was owing to the fact that the hogs were not raised under ideal conditions, I doubt if the farmers would agree, because they blame the packers rather than the way in which the hogs have been raised. But I can visualize the raising of hogs under conditions that are not ideal having a detrimental effect on the grade of hogs.

In the past few weeks I have received a number of letters stating that since the new hog policy has come into operation the grading and dockage of hogs have increased tremendously, and the increased grading and dockage have offset the price. Whether that is due to the packers or to other causes I will not say; but no doubt the farmers would blame the packers, and if I were farming now I would do so, from past experience. I think the government should be in a position to give the assurance to which I have referred, and I suggest that the assurance could be given without the government taking any risk even if they want to continue the same type of export policy they had in the past. The demand for the produce will stay up until the end of the war. We have every reason to believe that and to believe that there will be a good market for our produce for a number of years after the war. There will be a higher demand than at the present time because more shipping will be available.

Under UNRRA it will be possible to dispose of a good deal of agricultural produce, and I am sorry that the scope of UNRRA has not been widened. Under the Atlantic resolutions the scope of UNRRA was restricted, but no doubt, as the demand for goods under UNRRA increases, so will the scope of UNRRA be expanded, and for the duration of the war we shall continue to make gifts under the mutual aid legislation and the lease-lend provisions. I hope that after the war a similar provision will be kept in operation to make it possible to continue large gifts to countries that have suffered as a result of the war.

If it is decided that we should not continue that policy then, of course, some other policy will have to be introduced, maybe some form of international monetary proposals. But one thing is certain, namely, that those nations which have suffered in consequence of the war will not be in a position to pay by export for the things they need. We shall have to make those things available either as a gift or under some international monetary proposal or under some long-term loan. I think those nations are perfectly justified in expecting that Canada, the United States and other countries which are away from the theatre of war will continue to make those gifts. I look upon it as a moral obligation, owing to our geographical position. It is fortunate for us that we have not suffered as a consequence of the war. When it is recalled what has taken place overseas I think it is quite easy to see that we have not made any sacrifice inside this country. We have had a number of little irritations, but they can scarcely be called sacrifices. I think it is part of our duty to help to rehabilitate the devastated areas of the world. That is a job we shall have to complete after the war. One of the best things we can do in that regard is to make supplies of agricultural products available. It will help to maintain agriculture in this country and it will help us over the transition period.

I just mentioned that to show that that is almost certain to be the situation. The government, of course, is in a better position to know this than I am. I feel quite sure that that is the situation; and if the government knows that that is the situation, surely it should be able to guarantee the farmers a fair price for three or four years after the war. If the farmers are guaranteed a fair price for a number of years after the war, they would not then hesitate to make the necessary capital expenditures to provide proper housing and fencing, provided they could obtain the material.

[Mr. Quelch.]

I should like the minister to tell us just how far the government will be able to go in giving the farmers this assurance. Some people may call it "leadership", but I have left out that word because some people object to it. I have used the word "assurance". In the past the minister has seen fit to give that assurance for only one year at a time, except with regard to wheat. Of course, we are to have a floor under agricultural prices. The bill is to be brought down some time. That floor may be satisfactory, but on the other hand it may not. We should have an assurance that the present level of prices will be maintained for three or four years. Could the minister give an assurance in that regard?

Mr. GARDINER: I had hoped I would be able to get through at least the first item without making another speech; but since four members who have preceded me have insisted I should say something more, probably I had better say something.

A few moments ago the hon. member for Qu'Appelle asked some questions with regard to advertising, and since the item we are now considering covers programmes to encourage the production of essential war supplies and amounts to $93,560, probably this is the point at which I should give an answer to these questions.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. That item has been passed. The item we are now on is "assistance in disposal of agricultural products rendered surplus by the war."

Mr. GARDINER: We are even farther ahead than I thought we were. Two items were carried while I was looking over these records. This item is still higher and it gives me more latitude. The item amounts to $550,000. Its object is to assist in maintaining production of quality hogs in Canada in order to meet Britain's war-time requirements of bacon, hams and other pork products. That is one of the objects of the advertising that is put out. Five advertisements of approximately five hundred lines each in English and in French were put out for this purpose. Approximately thirty farm journals across Canada and about fifteen of the foreign language papers in western Canada contained these advertisements. The time was April, June, July, October and November. The cost of that advertising was $27,717.62.

Then we come to western feed grains. The objective was to acquaint Canadian farmers, east and west, with the regulations, conditions and government assistance policies under which purchases of feed grains from western farmers could be made. I am sure that members of the committee will agree that it was necessary to put out that information in order that farmers might take advantage of the opportunities provided. Those advertisements, one of 498 lines, divided into (1) an eastern Canada, (2) a prairie provinces and (3) a British Columbia edition (English and French), were put out. The media was approximately seven hundred rural weekly newspapers, thirty-seven farm journals and nineteen foreign language newspapers. The time was October, 1943, and the cost $15,282.61.

The next is war-time gardens. The objective was to encourage—

Mr. PERLEY: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. PERLEY: Would the minister give us the amount that it is expected to spend this year with respect to the same item so that we shall have a comparison with what was done last year? With respect to the weekly newspapers, did every weekly newspaper get that advertisement?

Mr. GARDINER: The amount in connection with each of those items would probably not be any greater than it was last year. Some items it will not be necessary to advertise at all. If there is no change in the policy it will not be necessary to give other advice with regard to the matter. The amounts contained in the item spent for actual advertising are not contained in the amounts that are estimated here. They are amounts which are spent from time to time. They are amounts of money set aside for war purposes, which are voted by order in council from time to time as the necessity arises.

The objective of the advertisements was to encourage the growing of garden crops in the urban centres of Canada so that the immediate supply of fresh vegetables in the summer and fall months would release more of the commercial production for processing and canning purposes. The advertisements consisted, one of 800 lines, or 600 lines in English and French. The media were ninety-two daily newspapers in Canada, thirty-six in group A, 800 lines, and fifty-six in group B, 600 lines. The time was April, 1943, and the cost $5,505.51.

The next is the meat recipe folder. Approximately 260,000 war-time meat recipe folders, English and French, were produced for distribution from May to August at a cost of $3,879.86. That is another example of the advertising which is carried on when it is decided to ask the farmers to do certain things or to acquaint consumers with the fact that certain products are available. Then we put out advertising in order to direct them as to what may be done; in other words, this is the method by which we give the leadership that the committee has been insisting on all afternoon and this evening.

Mr. PERLEY: May I ask a question? Why is it that some of the weekly newspapers in Saskatchewan carry advertisements every week, and others in adjoining towns within twenty-five or thirty miles do not carry the same advertising?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that some of them do carry it for a number of weeks, although they are paid probably for one or two weeks. Some of the papers do run it for more weeks than they are paid for; others do not run it for any more weeks than they are paid for. I think the hon. member for Qu'Appelle understands the situation which exists in Saskatchewan. I believe that all of the weekly papers in Saskatchewan are organized in one association. That association has a president, a secretary, and officers or an executive. The papers operate under that association, and those who put out advertising contracts in Saskatchewan I think on practically all occasions, put the advertising out through that executive. Of course, more of the advertising will be placed with some papers than with others because of larger subscription lists, since all advertising is carried in accordance with the number of people who are to be reached by putting it in the papers. But the arrangements made are made, I think in all instances—if not in all, in practically all —through that association.

Mr. PERLEY: I have asked that question because complaints have been coming to me in which publishers say they cannot get advertisements, and that certain newspapers—and the minister will know which ones—never have to go without an advertisement.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not know of any in that position, but they must be more liberal with their space than some others, rather than Liberal in the sense my hon. friend suggests, to get that result.

Mr. PERLEY: It is the Lemberg Star. All you have to do is to go to the reading room, and check on it.

Mr. STIRLING: Does the department make the arrangement with the association, or with individual newspapers?

Mr. GARDINER: The Department of Agriculture, ever since the first or second year I have been associated with it, has done all its advertising through one agency.

Different advertising agencies have had different departments to deal with. The agency with which my department has dealt is the Canadian agency in Montreal. As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said a few moments ago, I think it would be found that all of the advertising was done through that agency. That simply means that all the advertising of some other department is done through some other agency. But so far as my department is concerned, it has all been done through one agency.

Mr. STIRLING: I understand the minister to say that there is an association, and that advertising is done through that association. What I want to know is whether the payment of money passes through the hands of that association, or the individual papers which used that advertising. Are they paid separately?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not certain about that. I know only this, that when I was in Saskatchewan we made our arrangements with an association. I think the cheques were actually issued to the local papers, when payment was made. However, I would not be absolutely certain about that. In some cases small amounts probably went out to the association, and they distributed them.

The other suggestion which has come up among the suggestions made since the dinner recess is to the effect that I should give some assurance to the farmers of Canada as to what the future has in store for them. I do not know why I should be asked to give that assurance again, because on each occasion my regular estimates were before the house I was asked to give an assurance, and did give it. Then, on a previous occasion, when the speech from the throne was read to the house, an assurance was given. On an occasion prior to that the Prime Minister gave it, in a radio address which covered all Canada. And on an occasion even prior to that I myself gave it from the city of London, Ontario.

If another assurance now can help any, I have no objection to giving it, but I must say those assurances have been given regularly. They have been to the effect that there would be brought before the house this session legislation to provide for floor prices on farm production. The reason given for bringing this legislation down this session to establish floor prices under farm products is that during the war, or during the greater part of it, we have had controls on farm prices in the form of ceiling prices, which have indicated the highest prices at which those products could be sold.

Consequently it has been said that since we have had control on inflation through the setting of ceiling prices, toward the end of the war and after the war we should have control against deflation, and thus provide floor prices under farm products. That assurance has been given by the government on quite a number of occasions, and by me on many occasions in so far as farm products are concerned.

But hon. members who have spoken are not satisfied to ask just for that assurance. They have made some comments on past policies in relation to prices, and on the accomplishments in relation to those prices. I would repeat what I said in the house on a number of occasions, namely, that we have had floor prices on farm products ever since the first year of the war. As a matter of fact we had a floor under wheat before the war started. Since the war began we have had floor prices under many other farm products, until to-day there are floor prices under most of them.

One product, to which that statement does not apply, and to which some hon. members would no doubt suggest it should apply, is potatoes. We have had some discussion in recent weeks as to whether we should have a floor price under potatoes. I can only say what I said to the house last session in that connection, namely, that we have been giving careful consideration to the question as to whether we ought to place floor prices under potatoes.

Western members will understand what I mean when I say this, that if I had my choice as to what potatoes I was going to eat I would eat western potatoes. I have a reason for saying that. My hon. friends from New Brunswick and from Prince Edward Island will probably not agree with me, nor would I expect them to. But anyone who gets a roasted potato out west—

An hon. MEMBER: He has something.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, he has something. In order to emphasize the importance of that statement I would recall to the minds of hon. members that if they would go into the United States—or had they been there prior to the war; one is not permitted to go so often now as he was then—they could scarcely have driven through any part of the western United States without seeing Idaho licences on motor cars. And whenever one did see an Idaho licence, he saw Idaho potatoes advertised. The reason for that is that Idaho potatoes are known for their quality over the greater part, if not indeed the whole of the United States. Because of the climate in which those potatoes are grown, and because of the kind of soil in which they are produced. they are exceptionally fine. We have much of that similar climate, and much of that similar soil in the western part of Canada.

Might I add that we have a few hundred thousand acres of potatoes grown in Canada. At the present time the natural place to grow them is in New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island—

An hon. MEMBER: And Nova Scotia.

Mr. GARDINER: And Nova Scotia, my hon. friend says. Most of them are produced in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, for commercial purposes. I have visited those areas, and I am inclined to think that if any other group of farmers in Canada were to take away the market which the people of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island have for potatoes, the people who live in that section of Canada would have a difficult time making a living for themselves. I do not think this government should do anything, even in connection with floor prices, which would make it impossible for those people to have the market to which they have been accustomed for the potatoes they grow in those areas.

That brings me to the point that we have about 300,000 farmers in western Canada, all of whom, or practically all of whom grow on their own farms the potatoes they require. But they have not been accustomed, and to my mind there is no reason why they should become accustomed to producing potatoes to be marketed in other parts of Canada. But I wish to say that if they were induced to produce only five acres each of potatoes, there would not be a market anywhere in this country for potatoes produced in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. Five acres on each of the farms in western Canada, producing potatoes of the kind they can produce and in the quantities they could produce, and shipped to the markets of this country, would drive potatoes from other parts of Canada off the market. With regard to a product of that kind some thought and attention and some care have to be given by the government. We have to be careful not to get results which we do not intend to get.

Therefore I wish to say only this, in so far as potatoes are concerned, that we had to give considerable care and attention to the setting of floor prices which would be sufficiently high to induce people all across Canada to go into the production of potatoes—because you can produce potatoes in any backyard, anywhere across this country, from one end to the other.

When it comes to other farm products, however, such as have been discussed here this evening—cattle, hogs, wheat and feed grain products—there are reasons why they can be discussed from a different point of view. Take feed grain, for example. We have been accustomed to feeding the greater part of the feed grain we grow on the farms where it is grown, shipping comparatively small quantities from the west to eastern Canada in order that the eastern farmers might produce more live stock than they could otherwise. The problem of dealing with coarse grains, in relation to both ceiling and floor prices, is quite different from the problem of dealing with the other products of which I have been speaking.

Then as far as beef cattle are concerned, in Canada we have been producing beef for two markets. Before the war we produced beef for the Canadian and United States markets, with very little going to the British market. We sent some 20,000 to 40,000 head to Britain and some 300,000 head to the United States; the remainder were consumed in this country. The problem with regard to beef is somewhat different from the problem in regard to either of the products of which I have been speaking. Beef cattle can be and are raised on practically every farm all the way across Canada. We can and do raise them in British Columbia, on the prairies, in central and eastern Canada and in the maritimes. The same thing is true in regard to hogs, but I am sure hon. members will agree that we have had sufficient experience during the war to know we can get an enormous production of hogs by changing the price level. It has been suggested that the price level has not been changed as much as might have been the case, but I should like to mention the prices in regard to these two products during various months in the years from 1938 to 1944. The figures in regard to good steers, up to 1,050 pounds, at Winnipeg, were as follows for the month of January in each of the following years:

Year	Per 100 pounds
1938	$ 4 83
1939	5 99
1940	6 65
1941	8 07
1942	8 83
1943	10 44
1944	11 31

So that there has been a gradual increase every year from 1938 up to the present. I now give the figures for the month of June in the same years:

Year	Per 100 pounds
1938	$ 6 50
1939	6 24
1940	7 46
1941	8 15
1942	11 58
1943	11 63

Of course we have not reached June of 1944.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Could the minister give us the prices the feeders had to pay in the fall of each of those years?

Mr. GARDINER: When we get down to the general item on cattle I will do that; I am dealing now with the general question of inducing farmers to produce by a higher price level. I now have the figures for October in the same years:

Year	Per 100 pounds
1938	$ 4 85
1939	6 03
1940	7 00
1941	8 08
1942	9 43
1943	10 45

Those are the prices for good butchers at Winnipeg, which as hon. members, and particularly those from the west, will understand is the basic price for steers delivered to that market.

I should like to make a comparison with hogs, and I am going to take the live weight price for hogs because in the earlier years we did not have rail grading; but I have reduced the rail grade prices to the live weight basis in order that the figures may be comparable. These are the prices per 100 pounds for hogs, at Winnipeg, in January of the years in question:

Year	Per 100 pounds
1938	$ 8 28
1939	8 54
1940	8 61
1941	7 65
1942	10 40
1943	11 55
1944	12 23

In other words, starting in 1938 with $8.28 the price has increased each year, with one exception which I am sure hon. members will remember, until it reached $12.23 in January of this year. I now come to the figures for June in the same years:

Year	Per 100 pounds
1938	$10 66
1939	8 78
1940	7 75
1941	9 23
1942	10 62

Again we are unable as yet to give the figure for June of this year. It will be noticed that there is a difference between the period I have mentioned and the present period. It will be noticed that the high price for hogs in 1938 was in the months of May, June and July. The price in May was $10.28; in June, $10.66, and in July, $11.83. It dropped in August to $9.63; in September to $9.21, and in October to $7.80; then it went up again in January to $8.28. The next year war broke out and prices changed to some extent. The following year there was another change in prices. Coming down to 1943, however, we find the price in January, $11.55; in June of the same year, $11.87, and in October, $11.73. In other words, the price is maintained at approximately the same level throughout the whole year. That was true from January through to October; then on October 1 our hog year changed and the price went up to $12.05. The following month it was $12.23, and in April of this year it was $12.29. In other words, the price runs along almost at a dead level throughout the year, whereas previously the high prices would be in May, June and July.

There is an explanation for that, and that explanation applies to beef as well as hogs. Up to the moment, however, it has not applied to beef to the same extent, largely because we have had very little export of beef since 1942; all our beef has been consumed in Canada. We are, however, exporting beef this year. As a result of our experience during the war we have established more or less of a flat price for hogs throughout the year, something for which farmers have been asking during my experience. The farmer has been saying that he does not want a condition under which, because of a rush of hogs to the market, someone can force the price down at one period of the year, process the hogs, put them in the form of bacon or keep them in freezers and carry the pork into another period when the price is higher, and make great profits at the expense of the farmer. Producers of live stock believe that prices should be kept fairly level throughout the year. Our first opportunity to do that came during this war period, and it came about in this way. Ever since the war started there has been a constant demand for all the hogs we could produce. That constant demand has come from the British market; there has not been very much variation in the demands of the Canadian market. When the Canadian demand did go up we imposed regulations in order to prevent the Canadian people from consuming as much pork as they were prepared to consume. The reason was that we wanted to send over to Britain the full supply that she wanted. In order to make that possible, we entered into a contract with the British government in the first year of the war, in the fall of 1939. We contracted to supply bacon and ham to Britain to a quantity of 291 million pounds in the twelve months from October 1, 1939, to October 1, 1940. We did supply in that year to Britain, because of conditions I have described in this house before, 330 million pounds.

In the next year we contracted to supply to Britain 425 million pounds, and we did supply about 440 million pounds. In the next year we contracted to supply to Britain 600 million pounds, and we supplied approximately 600 million pounds. The next year we contracted to supply 675 million pounds, and we supplied that amount.

What are we doing this year? We entered into a contract with the British last fall to supply them with at least 900 million pounds of bacon and ham within two years. The terms of the contract were "at least 900 million pounds". There was nothing in the contract, as I have told the committee before, to prevent our marketing 900 million pounds to Britain in 1944. But there was a lot of agitation in this country to the effect that the signing of the contract for 900 million pounds in two years meant that we were restricting the supplies of bacon and ham to Britain to 450 million pounds in the first year as against the 675 million pounds that we had supplied in 1943.

What has our experience been? Our experience has been that seventy-seven per cent of the 500 million pounds which was the minimum that we eventually said we would supply in 1944 has already been purchased for the supply of Britain, and we have yet to pass through the remainder of the fifth month of the year. In other words, we are well on the way to supplying Britain this year with the whole quantity of 900 million pounds that we agreed to supply her in two years, and there is the possibility that if we get our increases of hogs in the fall of the year in proportion to the numbers we have got in preceding years we may find it necessary to market very close to the full quantity of 900 million pounds in the first year rather than to wait for the second year in which to supply that quantity.

What position does that put us in? My hon. friends across the way want to know what assurances we can give the farmers that they will be able to market hogs in the future. The assurance has been announced on a number of occasions. I do not know why I am asked to announce it again, unless to advertise what the department is doing, and I rather enjoy doing that. I am quite prepared to give it to the committee. I have announced it all over the dominion. I have announced it in Alberta; I have announced it in Saskatchewan, in twenty-five different places; I have announced it in Manitoba; I have announced it in Ontario, in a number of places; I announced it only within the last week in the province of Quebec; and while I have not been in the maritimes to make the announcement I know that what I say gets down there because I read some of the Tory press from that section of the country. Therefore I think the idea has been pretty well disseminated all over Canada. But in order to make doubly sure that it is known, I think the committee will agree that I ought to put one of these advertisements in the papers to tell those who do not already know it that we have negotiated an agreement with Britain for four years. That negotiated contract will cover 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947; and what we have attempted to do in that contract is to have the British agree to take as many hogs from us in the next four years as they have taken from us in the last four years, and to take them over at a price which is higher than has been paid for them before, whether we pay for them out of the federal treasury or the British pay for them out of the British treasury—that they be paid for at a price, within the figures I have just spoken of, equal to about seventy-five cents per hundredweight higher than we obtained in any other year except the year we are now in.

I had expected—probably I should not have said this to-night—to be able to announce the terms of the contract to the house before this, but I am not going farther than to say that we have negotiated the contract. It has not yet been signed. It may be changed in some of its details before it is finally signed. But I can assure this committee and assure the farmers that there is no reason for worrying about our not going to have a market for a very considerable part of our hogs for a period of years. When I have said that, I do not want anyone either inside the house or outside to misunderstand me. Any agreement which we enter into with the British or with anyone else cannot lose sight of the fact that we are living in a world where we have associations with other people. We are not simply the citizens of one country. Anyone who realizes what the Atlantic charter means—and that has been spoken of a number of times to-night—knows that when this war is over, if we are to be able to live under conditions of peace for a period of years—and we all hope it will be a long period of years—we must take into consideration the fact that people are living in other parts of the world and that people are producing in other parts of the world the same products that we produce in Canada. We must take into consideration, too, that the British are not going to be always buying from this country all the food they require. We must recognize that that will be one of the factors of the future. So that when hon. gentlemen say to me, "Why don't you tell us what you are going to do?" I can only say in reply: If anyone in this house can tell me what the conditions are going to be for the next ten years or for the next five years, and absolutely guarantee that those are going to be the conditions, I can guarantee that inside of two or three weeks' time we will work out and put into effect a policy that will be satisfactory under those conditions. But I must confess that I do not know all that is going to happen within the next five years, and certainly I do not know all that is going to happen in the next ten years. If, however, we can get a satisfactory agreement—satisfactory to the farmers of this country and satisfactory to the Canadian people generally—covering products of this kind for a four-year period, we are certainly giving some assurance to the farmers as to what they can do in the years that lie ahead.

Then, as already announced, we have a two-year contract on eggs, at a higher price than in the past. We have already announced a two-year contract on cheese, at the same price that we have had in the past.

If I had not been able to get these ideas over to this house by reciting them to the house half a dozen times over in one form or another, then I submit that I ought to have more money for advertising in order that I can get these ideas out, at least to the country.

The position in connection with these contracts has been placed before the house. I recall, when I say this, that every session until this session every member who has risen on the opposition side of the house, with very few exceptions, and at the moment I cannot think of one, to discuss this problem has talked about parity prices. I think we heard this mentioned twice to-night. I have an idea that an hon. member mentioned it and realized he was reciting his last year's speech, and he dropped it just as quickly as he could get away from it. Why has he dropped it? Because we have parity prices on all farm products to-day, and higher than parity on most of them. So that if anyone wants us to go back to parity he wants us to go lower down than we are at the present time. I do not agree with that policy; I think we should at least hold what we have for the time being and see to it that our farmers get the returns which are guaranteed in the returns we now have.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Someone said, "Oh, that is just because of the war". The war has had considerable to do with it in this way, that Britain wants food products. Before the war we were supplying part of her bacon and ham. To-day we are supplying as much bacon and ham as she got from all the other countries in the world before the war. Her main supplier before the war was Denmark. We are supplying practically all the bacon and ham of the Danish type and the Canadian type that are going into the British isles to-day. We may not be able to hold all that business when the war is over. We may require to find some markets elsewhere. Britain has been taking eighty per cent of our bacon products; she has been taking between seventy and eighty per cent of our cheese; she gets seventy to eighty per cent of our wheat which is marketed; and so on right down the row.

There is to-day a demand for these products such as we did not have at the beginning of the war, and such as we have not had down to the present time even during the war as far as wheat is concerned. The demand for wheat is increasing, and we have sufficient to supply Britain for many months in advance, with the storages of wheat that we have in this country at present.

Let me repeat that the reason why we have been able to maintain prices at the level throughout the year is the fact that there has been a constant demand for all of those products that we can produce, with the exception of wheat, and the demand is growing for wheat. As the demand has grown from year to year we have been able to maintain a higher level of production and a higher level of return for the product.

Someone says, "Where do you get the money?" I know that is something in which my friends of the Social Credit group are interested. They wonder where we get the money from. I suggest to them that money is a medium of exchange.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Hear, hear. It is time the minister learned that.

Mr. GARDINER: I learned that away back in my boyhood days. I found that if I did not have a little of it in my pocket I could not get much in exchange.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is still true.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; but the first fundamental thing is to have the products, and the next fundamental thing is to have a market to put them in because somebody wants them. To-day, because Britain wants them, and because we want to see that she gets them in connection with the prosecution of the war, we are able to arrange that all the products shall be taken and that certain price levels shall be set in payment for them. You say, "Who pays for it?" Britain pays part of it and we pay the other part. In other words, we go right into the pockets of the people of Canada; we ask them to put up sufficient of the price to make it possible to get the increased production we are getting of farm products from one end of this country to the other.

Mr. QUELCH: You created a billion dollars last year.

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend says that we created a billion dollars. We created a billion dollar's worth of wealth, a billion dollar's worth of food, plus munitions, plus machines, and we distributed it to different countries where there was a very strong demand for it.

My hon. friend says, "What are you going to do in the future?" Well, I am afraid we shall have to do very much as we have been doing during this war, and very much as we had to do over a long period before the war started. Anyone who gets the foolish idea that the law of supply and demand, which was not written by anybody but simply exists, does not exist, is not going to do much to solve the problems which will be in existence when the war is over. If there is a demand, and there can be a demand, for all the food that we are producing on our farms, of course we shall be able to dispose of all that we produce, and I believe that any government that is in existence in this country or in any other country which has been associated with the allies in this war should be convinced that we ought to do everything we possibly can to see that these markets are assured in different parts of the world for the food which Canada produces.

The hon. member for North Battleford mentioned the point this afternoon when she referred to the needs of India, China and other countries. Of course we all know that the peoples in those countries, at any time in the generations that have gone by, could have consumed very much more food products than they were able to have delivered to their countries for consumption. We know, too, that there will be available a place in those countries for these food products if certain things are done here and certain things are done there, and those things we all hope will be possible as a result of any peace which is made at the end of this war. But when all that is done, it will continue to be true that there will be a demand for food in some parts of the world and a surplus of food in other parts of the world, and there will still be the necessity of transferring surpluses from where they are to the places where the supply is short. If that is done, we in Canada will be able to produce to the limit of our possibilities and market the products at a return which will make it possible for us to carry on our farms.

I hope that I have made myself plain on this occasion. I hope that I shall not be asked on every item of administration to say the thing all over again, but if I am asked another three or four times I suppose I shall have to say it, and I shall be quite pleased to do so if it is insisted upon.

Mr. PERLEY: Did I understand the minister to state that we have a parity price with respect to wheat?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. We have at present a floor of $1.25 under wheat, and all the wheat that is being sold at present is being sold at above the parity.

Mr. PERLEY: Does the minister maintain that the farmers receive what is termed the parity price?

Mr. GARDINER: The farmer is getting a guaranteed advance of $1.25 a bushel, no matter what the price of wheat is; but the price of wheat has been above parity, if not ever since that floor was set, within a very few days after it was set; it is continuing there; and the farmer has a participation certificate.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I might preface my remarks by saying that fools enter where angels fear to tread. If we have disposed of wheat and pigs I should like to ask through you, Mr. Chairman, if I am in order, a question with reference to berries. I am not endeavouring to enter into an argument; I want some information: Is this the item on which I can get it?

Mr. GARDINER: I am afraid that it will not come under any of my items, because I believe the question which the hon. member is about to ask has to do with prices set by the prices board, which is not within my department.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: That is not the question I was going to ask. What I am particularly interested in is what policy the Department of Agriculture intends to recommend in connection with the disposal of our surplus crop of berries in the Fraser valley. There are several questions I want to ask, but first I would point out that there is an order in council, not under the minister's department, which affects agriculture in British Columbia to this extent that the disposal of our berry crop there has been settled. I understand that it does not affect any other province. We have been told that we must dispose of our processed berry crop, our SO_2 crop, this year in a certain way—someone is interrupting me. It may be S.O.S. in Nova Scotia, and I do not wonder if Nova Scotia needs an S.O.S. because the maritimes have always been tagging along for the reason that they will not fight for themselves. However, we are told that we have to dispose of our berry crop to the manufacturer in the east—another interruption. It is all right. I am getting a lot of advice in this corner from a lot of hon. gentlemen who know nothing about farming, not the slightest thing.

I will quote the order so that it will be on the record. I am referring to administrator's order A-1200, according to which any raspberries or strawberries must be sold through the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation Limited, or designated manufacturers. In British Columbia we do not object so much to the fact that we are forced to sell through that medium; but last year, in March, we sold some berries and did not get paid until October. I am not complaining at this time that our berries are allocated to different manufacturers; but, if we are compelled to dispose of our surplus crop in the manner directed, will some arrangement be made to finance that transaction instead of having the farmers themselves carry it over from the time the pack is put up until the following year?

Mr. GARDINER: As I said, the corporation spoken of is under the prices board and they, of course, will be able to explain, when their estimates are before the committee, the reason for the regulation to which reference has been made. All I can say with regard to berries is that on each of the occasions on which they have had a surplus of berries in British Columbia since the beginning of the war, the special products board, which operates under the agricultural supplies board, has marketed the supplies in Britain, and I think I should say also that the hon. member who has just spoken has had more to do with the pressing of that and getting it done than anyone else. Nevertheless it has been done. We marketed in Britain 1,186,640 pounds in 1942, about 3,260 barrels, and last year I understand there was not a surplus of them and there was no marketing in Britain that year. I presume that so long as they are required in Canada, the prices board, which after all is entrusted with the task of trying to maintain food in Canada to feed the Canadian people, after it is once produced by the farmers here, will see that we have sufficient to supply our own people, and if there were a surplus, arrangements could be made to have that surplus shipped to Britain.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am not quarreling; I am seeking information. I repeat that the position in British Columbia is this. Our crop is allocated to manufacturers in the east and the board tells us how we must ship. The farmer must hold the crop until such time as the board gives directions. Our crop may be out in July and August, but we cannot ship until we are so instructed. My question is, will any provision be made so that the board will finance the crop through the bank or otherwise, while we are holding it, until the board tells us where to ship and when?

Mr. GARDINER: All I can say in answer to the last question is that it will be taken up by the minister in charge of that board when his estimates are before the house. I would point out, however, that the same principle applies to all farm products grown in Canada at present. The first charge upon farm products is the requirements of the Canadian people. It may be by rationing that we limit the requirements of some products; but once it has been decided by the prices board and those associated with them as being necessary for feeding the people in Canada, including the armed forces, that amount of food is retained here. The only products of which a continuous movement is maintained from one end of the year to the other are those of which there is a continuous supply in excess of consumption. That is true of cheese, wheat, hogs and cattle, and arrangements are made to move the surplus, sometimes throughout the year. One of the reasons why they had a difficulty with cattle in Alberta is that we have not had that arrangement made up to the present in connection with cattle, because this is the first year in which we have had a surplus continuously to ship since 1942.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: If I am not mistaken, there is an initial payment on wheat. I do not think the minister has followed me. I repeat that I am not quarreling with the fact that our crop is allocated to Canada or anywhere else, but I do quarrel with the fact that the farmers' cooperative should be compelled to carry $450,000 worth of fruit because the board says that it cannot be shipped to eastern Canada, Ontario and Quebec—I presume Quebec again has too much to say in the matter—except under certain conditions that are stipulated. The board tells us when we can ship, and tells us that we cannot ship, let us say, until six months from the time of production, and we submit that the government or the board should finance the transaction. I put it directly, Mr. Chairman, through you to the minister: Is that not a fair assumption? Is it not an assumption that he as Minister of Agriculture might recommend to the board?

Mr. GARDINER: The assumption of anyone is that until the crop is pretty well assured and we are well on in the season in which it is picked, no one will be in a position to say whether there will be enough berries harvested to supply all the people in Canada. I should think, however, that those who are regulating the supply will see to it that a certain distribution is made in the sales of these berries by those who produce them. In other words, whatever proportion of the berries is taken will be taken from all the people. I would imagine that would be the case, and if that is the case then I presume that if ninety per cent of the berries are to be consumed in Canada, that ninety per cent of the money or value of them will be paid to those people as they go along. There may not be the necessity for financing in so far as day to day is concerned. I am under the impression—I may be wrong in this—that in all the sales that have been made in the past when there has been a surplus these costs have been taken into consideration when sales of these surpluses that come through have been made later to the British government. I would imagine that when the time comes to sell any surplus that may be in existence attention will again be given to that consideration, and I have no doubt that the matters which have been mentioned by the hon. member will be taken into consideration.

Mr. FAIR: The question of parity prices has been discussed to some extent to-night, and I am afraid that we are being led astray again because of the word "parity prices." I understand that the period 1926 to 1929 has been used as the base for computing those prices. If my understanding is correct, the farmers of Canada received 16·6 per cent of the national income during that period. At that time the farmers of Canada comprised about thirty-three per cent of the population. Therefore, one-third of the population of Canada received only one-sixth of the national income, and our prices are based on that. My belief is that if we are to figure parity prices as they should be, then we should take the period 1915 to 1919 when we had much higher prices. At that time the farmers of Canada received a percentage of the national income in comparison with the farm population to the whole of Canada. I do not think we should be misled by having statements made that we are now getting parity prices or above. When we come to the period 1926 to 1940 we find that on the average the farmers received only 9·6 per cent of the national income, and when we get back to 1932 we find that the farmers of Canada received five per cent or one-twentieth of the national income, whereas we were entitled to one-third. I think these things ought to be taken into consideration when we are figuring parity prices.

Some hon. member across the way said that the farmers were now paying off their debts, and supposes that everything is O.K. I wish that that hon. member would look back at some of the legislation that has been wiped off the statute books of the western provinces. One such piece of legislation was debt-protective legislation, and the mortgage companies were turned loose and were taking very good andvantage of the opportunities that were given to them by the removal of this debt-protective legislation. That is one of the reasons why farmers are paying off their mortgages. Another reason is that farmers are producing to the very limit at the present time. The condition of their buildings is going down, not up. Paint is needed. Their farm implements, in almost all cases, are wrecked, because they have not been able to buy machinery. If a true picture of conditions on the farm is given then we shall have an entirely different position presented here. I am quite free to admit that conditions are better on the farm to-day than they have been, but why compare prosperity conditions of the present day with depression conditions that existed particularly between 1930 and 1939? I think we should take into consideration some of the downfalls and pitfalls of the farmers of Canada before we make statements that everything is all right with them at the present time.

Mr. GARDINER: I have not said that everything is all right at the present time, nor have I compared prices with the prices of the drought period or of the depression period. I have made a comparison with the prices of 1926 and 1929, which were the years of the highest income that the farmers had ever obtained before the present period. At that time the highest cash income that the farmers ever had was $1,063,000,000. That was in 1928. The greater part of that farm income was due to the fact that they harvested a crop of 560,000,000 bushels of wheat that year, most of which we were able to sell at a high price. When one takes that into consideration and remembers that in 1942 the cash income of the farmers across Canada was $1,114,000,000 and in 1943, $1,396,000,000, or almost $1,400,000,000—and there is no doubt in the world that if we get an average crop this year that figure will be increased by some hundreds of millions of dollars—one can see that the farmer is certainly better off. I am not saying that the farmer is getting all that he ought to get, or that his condition has improved as much as some people like to picture it, but I am saying that at the present time he has the best conditions economically that he has ever had, and if that is not better than parity then I do not know what parity is. Again, if one wishes to know whose definition of parity it is, let me say that the definition of parity that I am using is the definition which was put out by the farm federation in 1940 when we started the drive for parity prices. Now that we have passed it I am not going to let anyone, with my consent, change the definition.

We were asked for a certain thing. We started out to get it. We got it and we passed it, and when we passed it I said to everyone who made representations to the government: "I am not satisfied with parity prices for the farmer." I said that in 1940. I have repeated it in this house every session since. I am not satisfied with parity prices for the farmer, because for ten years prior to this war the farmer took returns such as no other industry in Canada and very few farmers elsewhere in the world took for their farm products. That is illustrated by the fact which was emphasized by the hon. member for Melfort when he spoke this afternoon, that back in 1932 the total cash income of the farmers of Canada was $383,000,000. When hon. members rise in this committee at the present time and complain that the condition of the farmer is not better when the cash income is $1,396,000,000, more than $1,000,000,000 higher than in 1932, then I say that they are not giving consideration to all the facts in connection with the matter. When I say that I am not suggesting that this government is responsible for all the change, but I would remind the hon. member for Haldimand and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle that they were not on sound grounds either this afternoon or this evening when they suggested that there was a good crop in Ontario and Quebec last year.

Mr. PERLEY: I did not suggest that.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member for Haldimand suggested that was one of the reasons why we got such high returns. One of the poorest crops that they have ever had in Ontario in the last fifty years was harvested last year, and in spite of that we have this $1,396,000,000 of income across Canada on our farms. While a year ago when someone twitted us with taking credit for the increased income and said that we had the best crop we ever had, I said that I preferred to be on the side of those who are responsible for the climate, and liked it better to have them on our side, on this occasion when the same hon. members come back and twit us with the idea that we cannot take credit because we passed through a year of the poorest crop in fifty years, then I think they are playing two ways with a vengeance. The fact is that the income was $1,396,000,000 in 1943, and that it has been going up as compared with 1943 every week since the beginning of 1944, and if conditions continue as they are we shall probably have a very much increased cash income in 1944.

The CHAIRMAN: We are now on item 2. The minister having answered all the questions asked, I suggest that we should stay within the item.

Mr. CARDIFF: I shall stay within the item, because I believe it would include surplus beef. There is no one in the house who admires more than I do the way in which the Minister of Agriculture expresses himself in regard to government policy. I would not expect him to admit that government policy was to some extent responsible for the bottleneck in the beef market this spring. Nevertheless, that is so.

Mr. GARDINER: I did not say that.

Mr. CARDIFF: Two years ago we were short of beef. We were told to hold our beef at least one year longer so that we could increase the weight, and thus have more beef. A great many farmers held their beef a year longer with the result that this spring we had a surplus of beef, and could not dispose of it. Some time ago, I cannot just say when, meatless Tuesday was arranged. That continued until there was no space left to store beef. We had no outside market. The market was for home consumption. Then meatless Tuesday was discontinued.

I blame the government for that condition. Before every space was filled, meatless Tuesday should have been cut off. I do not suggest that any government could be perfect, because I realize no one is perfect. But when the government makes a mistake it should be ready to admit it.

Mr. FAIR: I think the minister has given us what we call in the west a bum steer. He is taking into consideration gross prices and not net prices, and forgetting entirely the extra cost farmers have to pay for bringing about this production. He must also remember that last year we had one of our biggest grain crops in the west. A number of other things have not been taken into consideration. I have not my figures here to-night, but there will be another occasion when this matter may be discussed further.

If the minister will go back and look over the percentage of national income for the period 1915 to 1919 he will find that the farmers received one-third of that national income, and I believe that that is still the level upon which our parity price should be based, regardless of any recommendation that has been made by the federation of agriculture.

Mr. EVANS: If you have parity prices—

Mr. FAIR: The silent member from Saskatchewan may make his own speech, when he has the chance, later on. At the present time I am making my contribution. On another occasion, when I have a chance to get my figures together, I think I can support the statement I have just made to the effect that the period 1915 to 1919, when farmers received one-third of the national income for their one-third of the population, is much better and much closer to the mark than the period 1926 to 1929, when we received only one-sixth of the national income for our one-third of the population.

Mr. PERLEY: Just a moment ago the minister referred to the hon. member for Haldimand, and what we had said with regard to parity prices. He said that for the last ten years he has not been in favour of parity prices for certain farm products, because he maintained that it was not enough.

Mr. GARDINER: I said that I was in favour of more.

Mr. PERLEY: Yes; he was in favour of more. I should like to know if any hon. member in the house has ever heard him say so in the last ten years.

Mr. GARDINER: You can read it out of Hansard.

Mr. PERLEY: He cannot find it in Hansard, and I will venture to say he never said, on the floor of the house, that he would maintain a better price than parity for certain farm products. I will go farther and say that it was first mentioned by this group, on this side of the house. I know I can show a press report of two years ago wherein a good deal of publicity was given to a discussion in the House of Commons on parity prices, and complimentary references were made to two members of the official opposition. It was pointed out in the report that they were the only ones who knew what they were talking about. If the minister was so much impressed with the idea of a better-than-parity price, particularly for wheat, why was it that in 1935, and particularly in the early part of 1936, when he became Minister of Agriculture, he endeavoured to sell about 250,000,000 bushels of wheat of western Canada at a price to break the market. He put on a fire-sale price. He was accused of it, and he did not deny it.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, I denied it.

Mr. PERLEY: And he tried his best to sell wheat day after day. They could not sell it fast enough, to break the market, and later made a handsome profit out of wheat which had been accumulated by the previous government. Why did the minister on that occasion inaugurate the policy of selling wheat, so much every day during trading hours in order to try to break the price and get it down below the price which had been set, and which was above parity price at that time?

Mr. GARDINER: If the hon. member will come into my office to-morrow morning I will give him a pamphlet in which I said I never was at any time in favour of a fire sale, and that there never had been a fire sale, in the sense in which my hon. friend speaks of it.

Mr. PERLEY: What kind of sale would the minister call it?

Mr. GARDINER: Well, I ran an election on it in the spring of 1926, in the next constituency to the hon. member's, and was elected by a majority of 3,600, despite the fact that he was there campaigning against me.

Mr. HENDERSON: I heard the minister say that he was in favour of selling at better than parity price and would not be satisfied with just parity prices. I heard him make that statement, all over Saskatchewan.

Mr. WRIGHT: I do not wish to get into a discussion about parity prices; but if the minister was so much in favour of parity prices, why did he not give a little kinder reception to the wheat pool delegates when they were here a couple of years ago asking for parity prices?

Mr. GARDINER: The advance was raised twenty cents.

Mr. WRIGHT: This is an election year, when it is likely to make more kudos for the Liberal party. That is why we get parity prices from the government. Before the dinner recess the minister spoke about the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and complimented them upon the cooperation he was receiving from them. Well, they were prepared to give that same cooperation in the first year of the war, but they did not get any cooperation from the government. There was a fight to get prices of agricultural products rasied to the point at which they are to-day. What did they have to do to raise the price of butter? What did they have to do to riase the price of grain?

As the minister said, there has been a gradual increase. A concerted attempt had to be made by organized farmers to get justice from the government. But it is only at the present time that they are getting anywhere near justice—and even at that it is not full justice. I remember well in 1927 buying a tractor in western Canada, and paying $1,485 for it. Last year I bought the same make of tractor, and it cost more than $2,000. At the time for which the minister quotes his parity price we were paying in western Canada wages of $50 or $60 a month, but to-day we are paying fifty per cent more than that. So that there is still a long distance between parity price to-day for farm products, and the price the farmer should receive.

The minister mentioned that farmers in western Canada had been wanting for years to get an even price for hogs over the full year, and he quoted prices to show that that condition obtained to-day. I will tell him this, that the farmers of western Canada have not been fighting to get an even price for hogs over the whole year. Anyone who produces hogs knows that it costs fifteen per cent to twenty per cent more to produce hogs during the winter than in the summer. What the western farmers objected to was the fluctuation in the market in the fall of the year, when they marketed their greatest number of hogs. As a matter of fact, in its first bacon policy after the war started this government intended to establish a differential between prices of hogs raised in the summer and those raised in the winter, but found that, because of the increased production of hogs resulting from a greater number of people going into that business on a commercial scale who found that they could raise hogs for practically the same price the year round, it was not necessary to level out the supply in that way. When the war is over, however, and we get back to normal times we shall find it necessary to make a differential between prices of hogs raised during the summer and those raised in the winter if we are to have an even supply and keep our packing plants operating throughout the year.

The minister has taken a great deal of credit for the increased production of hogs and cattle. Let me say that the increased production this year is owing largely to the fact that in 1942 we had the largest grain crop ever produced in the history of Canada, and there was no market for it. The only way in which it could be marketed was in the form of hogs and cattle, and those are the hogs and cattle that are coming on to the market to-day. That is why we have such large amounts of meat products coming on to the market. The crop was not as large last year, and by this time next year the minister will find that the production of meat products will have dropped. That will be quite natural, because there just is not the feed in Canada with which to produce a greater number of cattle and hogs.

That was not what I rose to say; I wanted to ask a question with respect to this item, which has to do with assistance in the disposal of agricultural products rendered surplus by the war. I suppose this item of $550,000 is largely to take care of the apple surplus, and I should like the minister to break down the item and tell us in connection with what products this assistance will be given.

Mr. SENN: While the minister is getting ready to reply, I notice that last year $1,080,000 was voted under this same item. When the minister is answering the hon. member for Melfort will he give us some idea of how the money voted last year was expended, and with what results?

Mr. GARDINER: The suggestion of the hon. member for Melfort is correct; the greater part of this item has to do with the apple crop in Nova Scotia, British Columbia and Ontario. The larger portion of the expenditure is for Nova Scotia, and there is a considerable amount in connection with the British Columbia crop as well. Not much has been spent in regard to the Ontario crop. Perhaps I should say that the market has been so adjusted that the Ontario crop has an advantage on the Canadian market over the others which are being assisted by the treasury of Canada. For the year 1943-44 the amount provided for the Nova Scotia apple agreement was $3,158,000, and this year the amount provided is $550,000. This is not the amount which will be involved in the 1944 agreement, however; this sum is to pay the balance owing on the 1943-44 agreement. The agreement for 1944-45 is not ready yet, so that it is not possible for me to state what amount will be involved. We know very little of the crop as yet; as a matter of fact I do not think it is even in the blossom.

Mr. WRIGHT: Does this vote apply to any product other than apples?

Mr. GARDINER: That is all; apples.

Mr. STIRLING: Would the minister put on record the figures for British Columbia and Ontario?

Mr. GARDINER: The amount provided for British Columbia in 1943 was $212,000, and this year that is reduced to the amount shown, $50,000.

Mr. STIRLING: That is, $50,000 less than that was required?

Mr. GARDINER: No; this item is $162,500 less this year than it was last year; but the agreement with British Columbia has not yet been concluded, so that we do not know what will be involved in this year's contract.

Mr. STIRLING: But my recollection is that in the public accounts for 1942 the figure was about $2,500,000 spent for Nova Scotia and something over $250,000 for British Columbia, and I wondered whether we might have the comparable figures for 1943.

Mr. GARDINER: The appropriation for British Columbia in 1942 was $1,000,000, but the expenditure was $311,434.37. The appropriation for Nova Scotia was $2,000,000; the expenditure was $1,763,670.13, and there was a recovery of $352,672.73. That is, the products were sold for that amount, so that the net cost was $1,415,997.40. The net expenditure for British Columbia on the 1942 crop was $212,500.

Mr. STIRLING: Is the comparable figure for 1943 available?

Mr. GARDINER: No; the figure for 1943 is not yet available.

Mr. STIRLING: In the public accounts the allotment for Nova Scotia was just over $3,000,000, and the expenditure was just under $2,500,000. For British Columbia the allotment was $965,000, and the expenditure was $261,000. Was that the figure the minister just gave?

Mr. GARDINER: The figure I gave was $261,414.06.

Mr. STIRLING: And we cannot have the 1943 figures yet?

Mr. GARDINER: No.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): A moment ago the minister mentioned the agricultural income for all Canada. Could he break that down into the agricultural income for each province?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, I have that here.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Could the minister give the figures for the last eight or ten years?

Mr. GARDINER: I could put them on the record; they cover most of this sheet.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I think it would be all right if the minister just gave the figures for last year and put the rest on the record.

Mr. GARDINER: The figures for 1943 were as follows:—

Prince Edward Island	$ 15,920,000
Nova Scotia	30,940,000
New Brunswick	34,450,000
Quebec	200,030,000
Ontario	389,140,000
Manitoba	136,140,000
Saskatchewan	311,440,000
Alberta	223,080,000
British Columbia	55,810,000

That makes a total of $1,396,600,000. If the committee desires the break-down by provinces for the ten years, with your permission, Mr. Chairman, I will now put them on Hansard. They are as follows:—

Freight assistance on western feed grains, $16,500,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): An instance which was drawn to my attention not long ago I should like to bring before the committee, because it may be typical rather than an individual case in connection with this assistance given on feed grains. It is a situation which I think is unfair. A farm was owned by a widow who moved into Calgary. She rented her farm to a man in that neighbourhood, who farmed it for one year and raised coarse grains while he was renting it. Then he moved off and a new renter came on this year. Being a young fellow he bought stock and was going to feed hogs and cattle. He bought the grain which the farmer who had previously rented the place had raised. Then, when he applied for his fifteen and ten cents a bushel on the grain for feed purposes he was refused it. The government claimed that the subsidy could not be paid because the coarse grains had been raised on the same land where the stock was to be fed. The thing seemed so obviously wrong to me that I immediately wrote to the man and told him that I was sure there must be some mistake. As I began to go into it a little farther, I was informed unofficially that probably the reason for refusing the subsidy was that the permit had to stay with the land regardless of who the farmer might be. It seems to me that when there is an entirely different man renting the farm, the permit should not be attached to the land but rather to the man who raised the crop, and that the man who rented the farm should be entitled to his fifteen cents a bushel on the grain for feed purposes. I wish the minister would clear that up.

Mr. GARDINER: I assume that the only reason that could be given is the one just stated. If the permit was associated with the land and remained there, then the regulation, as I understand it, provides that anyone who has a permit to sell wheat or feed grain this year cannot himself become a purchaser of the grain and get the assistance that is paid on the grain that is purchased to feed.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): The man who had the permit and sold the grain was not the feeder. It was an entirely different renter.

Mr. GARDINER: It comes under the wheat board, under the Department of Trade and Commerce. But I have had correspondence with regard to other cases which involved the matter of requirements with respect to the permit book. I cannot see any other reason. I do not know why the permit book would follow the land. I think it is a case that requires some discussion with the wheat board, and if there has been a wrong interpretation by someone, I am sure that it would be straightened out.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): While it is not in the minister's department, I think it would assist the committee if the minister could state that the permit went with the man who raised the crop and did not stay with the land. There is the difficulty.

Mr. GARDINER: I am not in a position to state that, because I imagine it would depend somewhat on what the deal was as to whether the permit would or would not remain with the land. But if a person is buying grain from another person who previously owned it, and he had no interest in it, I would think that under the regulations if he drew that grain into the elevator and weighed it and then drew it out again, he would be able to draw the ten and fifteen cents. But it may be that he took the grain out of the bin and fed it to the hogs and cattle. If he did that, he would not be able to draw the ten and fifteen cents. He must take it into the elevator, weigh it and get a certificate, and move it out again.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): It has to be taken into the elevator and taken out again?

Mr. GARDINER: That is as I understand the regulations.

Mr. WRIGHT: Before the dinner recess I was mentioning the difficulties in the distribution of feed grains in the east. I would ask the minister to give us some account of what is being done and to tell us whether there are cases where the grain is being handled by several different firms before it gets to the consumer in eastern Canada, and, if so, what is being done to prevent that. It seems to be an unnecessary expense. There is also the question of grain which has to be shipped by water and goes into the terminal elevators in the east, on which transportation the freight rate is approximately $4 a ton, while the rate on grain brought by rail is $4.50. I should also like a break-down of this item by provinces. How much assistance has been given to feeders in Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes?

Mr. GARDINER: The amount of money paid out in freight assistance from October, 1941, to March 31, 1944, by provinces is as follows:

Province	Tonnage	Value	Average rate per ton
Ontario	2,601,309	$11,705,890 50	$4 50
Quebec	2,072,308	10,919,431 26	5 26
New Brunswick	258,831	1,941,232 50	7 50
Nova Scotia	319,698	2,589,553 80	8 10
Prince Edward Island	91,286	748,545 20	8 20
British Columbia	431,714	2,730,214 41	6 32

Total tonnage shipped east and west, 5,775,146; value, $30,634,867.67.
Average rate per ton, eastern $5.22.
Average rate per ton to British Columbia, $6.32.

Mr. WRIGHT: Why is the rate so much higher to British Columbia when the distance from Alberta is so much shorter?

Mr. CARDIFF: It has been stated from this side of the house and from the other side that the western farmer is not getting sufficient for his grain and that therefore, we are being allowed freight assistance. I would point out that when that freight assistance was given by the government, the ceiling price was raised just about that time to the extent of the freight assistance.

Mr. WRIGHT: I assure the hon. member that, in inquiring about this freight assistance, I was not trying to intimate that we in western Canada object to it. We have no objections to it whatever.

Mr. CARDIFF: I was not making any particular reference at this time to what the hon. member said, but on Friday evening several hon. members spoke of western Canada receiving this freight assistance. When the freight assistance was supplied the price of the feed went up to the extent of the freight charge, and while we appreciated the fact that we were getting freight taken off, I think the western farmer is receiving just as much for his grain, and always will, so long as we have a Minister of Agriculture who comes from the west.

Mr. GARDINER: With regard to the statement just made, I feed hogs and cattle in both eastern and western Canada, and those that I feed in the east are not very far from where the hon. member who has just spoken lives. Last year I shipped a carload of grain from my farm in Saskatchewan to my farm in Ontario, and I must say that the grain was landed in Ontario without any cost to me. I could have fed the grain at exactly the same price on my farm in Saskatchewan as I was feeding it at in my farm in Ontario, which indicates to me that by the action of this government something happens between the two farms which makes it possible for one to move the grain all the way from the west down east, if he farms in both places, and to feed it here at the same cost as if he lived and fed it on a farm in western Canada. I am not saying that that is any greater help to eastern farmers than to western farmers because there is involved in that, ten cents on oats and fifteen cents on barley, which goes to the western farmer, and there is involved in the freight assistance given to the eastern farmer an average of somewhere about twelve cents a bushel.

Mr. SENN: On barley.

Mr. GARDINER: Well, on the average of the different feeds that are used. So that I think one is treated just about the same as the other. It is our intention that they should be, and I think that is the way it is working out. I do not think it can be contended that anybody is getting any particular advantage over some other person.

Mr. CARDIFF: I do not think so either. But the minister will admit that the time the price was put on grain the market price was raised to almost the same amount as the freight assistance.

Mr. GARDINER: I will not admit that, no. There has been no rise in the selling price since the price was first set.

Mr. CARDIFF: But the selling prices of the commodities which are sold here have been maintained right through.

Mr. GARDINER: There are different prices on grain products that are sold in eastern Canada; because—again—I purchase them in both places, and I have purchased grain in Huron county for feed and have bought it at three different prices. When I go there to buy it and ask why I have to pay a higher price for one lot of grain than I pay for another, they tell me it is made out of grain that is of a higher grade, and I assume that that is the reason for the grain costing me more. But so far as I know there has been no increase in the selling price since the ceiling was first established.

Mr. CARDIFF: But the ceiling was established just prior to the time the freight assistance was given to us, was it not?

Mr. PERLEY: What was the date of the freight assistance?

Mr. GARDINER: There has been freight assistance on this basis since October, 1941, and that was the same time as the price ceiling was set.

Mr. CARDIFF: That is what I said.

Mr. GARDINER: They were set at the same time; all set about the same date.

Mr. SENN: I think the hon. member for Melfort asked the minister a question which he has not yet answered. I understand that when I was out of my place for a minute the minister took me to task about my statement in regard to Providence giving us a bountiful harvest. Nobody knows better than I do that our spring grain crop last year in Ontario was more or less of a failure, but that does not alter the general situation.

The point, however, which I wish to put to the minister at the moment, and I think it was mentioned by the hon. member for Melfort, is that, as the minister has already stated, different prices are charged in different parts of Ontario to farmers who are buying mill feeds which come from the west, in the shape of grain. I have heard criticisms on the part of the farmers, many of whom are not able to finance the bringing down of a carload of grain for themselves. The grain is bought by milling companies or other small companies which manufacture it into feed, and different prices are charged. Is there any supervision on the part of his department to see that the farmers are not charged two or three prices illegally or wrongfully by different companies, some of whom would make a greater profit than others? It seems to me that when a milling company gets freight assistance in this way it should be fair at least to the man who has to feed the grain.

Mr. GARDINER: My information is—of course I am not now in a position to follow it through—that the ceiling price on mill feeds in Ontario is established on a level throughout the province. There is a mark-up which is allowed by the prices board under certain conditions. I am not able to give the details with regard to them, but the ceiling price that was established has been maintained, as I understand it, all the way through.

Mr. SENN: My information is that different prices are charged, and it seems to me that somebody, either the wartime prices and trade board, or the Department of Agriculture, which is supplying the freight assistance, should see to it that the farmers all over the province get an even deal.

Mr. WRIGHT: The minister did not answer my question with regard to whether there were three or four dealers handling this feed between the time it arrived in the east and was finally sold to the producer. I have been told that last year, during the shortages of feed in the east, certain firms had control over large quantities of grain in eastern Canada; that deficiencies occurred in areas where these firms did not have outlets; that as a result grain had to be transferred, sometimes as many as two or three times, before it reached the consumer, and that each one of the people who handled it got a commission on it. I do not see any reason for the existence of that condition, and I wish the minister would give us some information on the subject.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that there have been cases where there have been shortages. As a matter of fact, when I was in Paris, Ontario, some time this spring a gentleman came to me and told me that he had had difficulties for a week or so in getting grain, because the regulation was that they had to take it from the lake front and they were not able to get it from the lake front, and there was a supply at Toronto. As soon as they made their application to the board and got the matter dealt with, there was a shipment made from Toronto into that area, and that involved some additional freight. I am informed by the representative of that board here that the freight was paid by the board and that it did not cost the farmer any more than it would have cost him had it been shipped from the lake port. In other words, the ceiling price was maintained on the grain just as though it had come from where it was first ordered to come from, but where it could not be obtained because the supply was not there.

Mr. WRIGHT: In other words, the extra commissions are paid by the government rather than the producer. But I still do not see why the cost should come out of the pockets of the public, or why there should not be a better distribution to avoid this expense.

Mr. PERLEY: Will the minister state why there is over 100 per cent increase in this item? Will he also state whether the $8 million voted last year was fully expended, or was it overexpended? Also, who is the administrator, and what staff does he have to administer this vote of $16,500,000?

Mr. GARDINER: It was very much overexpended.

Mr. PERLEY: Last year?

Mr. GARDINER: The estimates approved for freight assistance on western feed grain amounted to $20,750,000, and cash allotments, $20,750,000. The actual expenditure was $17,758,291.79.

Mr. PERLEY: And the amount voted last year was all expended?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. PERLEY: That is the reason for the increase this year?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. PERLEY: Who is the administrator?

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Davidson.

Item agreed to.

Subsidy on western wheat used exclusively as feed for live stock, $8,000,000.

Mr. CARDIFF: About a year ago I asked the minister some questions with regard to screenings coming from the west. As far as I know, the western farmer gets nothing for the screenings. We in eastern Canada, especially in the county I represent, can feed vast quantities of these screenings if we can get them at a reasonable price, but we find that by the time we get the screenings they cost from $24 or $25 to $30 a ton. The western farmer, however, gets nothing for it. There is no reason why we should not get these screenings at more reasonable prices. If the western farmer were getting his fair share out of it, it would be a different story and we would not begrudge him what he might get; but when someone else in the middle class gets what he should not get, then I suggest it is high time the minister took a hand in it so that we might get the commodity at cost.

Mr. GARDINER: If the screenings amount to 1½ per cent the farmer gets paid for them after cost of cleaning is accounted for. I presume the reason why some particular amount is stipulated on screenings is that the cost of cleaning practically involves the price of the screenings. But if it runs over that, the farmer in the west is paid for it.

Mr. SENN: Has the minister any idea of the quantity of screenings that came down last year? I can recall that in years gone by there were bitter arguments in this house and in the committee on agriculture in regard to the advisability of bringing from the west to Ontario screenings which are full of weed seeds. There was a time when it was advocated that all these screenings should be ground before being brought into Ontario. Ontario is infested badly with weeds at the present time, and it would not make it any better to bring in a new crop of weeds from the west and have them ground here and have vital weeds sown. Very often weed seeds do go through the grinders and are still vital. Is a considerable amount of these screenings coming down? If so, is any attempt made to see that the weed content of the screenings is not vital?

Mr. GARDINER: The amount of screenings which came down in 1942-1943 was 48,225 tons, and the amount that came down in 1943-44, 39,790 tons, a decrease of approximately 9,000 tons.

Mr. SENN: They were not ground?

Mr. GARDINER: No, they were not, I imagine. They were ground in the plants here before going out. The hon. member for Haldimand knows that most of the regulations with regard to seeds are provincial regulations. We may put them into effect and enforce them in connection with the shipping of grain from the west, but before changes are made in them we consult the provinces. This last year, in order to make it possible to get feed grain down, we had to raise the seed content of the grain from one per cent to 3 per cent so as to avoid having all the cars go to Fort William to be unloaded and the cost added to the grain shipped east. To avoid that, we got the provincial governments to agree to the seed content being raised from one to three per cent while shipment is going on. We advertised that fact all through Ontario so that the farmers could clean the grain if they thought it wise.

Mr. SENN: I understand that the weed seed content and the control of weed seeds are largely in the hands of the provincial governments, but it seems to me that our federal department should have some interest in the matter, because, after all, a certain proportion of that material which comes down is taken to the farms and ground by the farmer's own power machinery. Very often it is not effective and a certain amount of weed seeds go through the grinders and are sown finally through the manure, and they are vital. In the interests of agriculture something should be done to see that these weed seeds are not distributed through the country. It is a very live question, and there is always a certain proportion of careless farmers, as there are careless persons in every other class, who allow this to be carried on. They do not mind, so far as their own farms are concerned, and at the same time they infest other people's farms. More care should be taken to see that these weed seeds as they come into Ontario and the eastern provinces are more closely controlled.

Mr. BURTON: I presume that the wheat under this item of $8,000,000 for subsidy on western wheat used exclusively as feed for live stock is purchased from the wheat board?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. BURTON: I was wondering why it is only on western wheat. Can the minister explain why it does not apply to all wheat that is purchased for feed?

Mr. GARDINER: I presume it is for the same reason that we do not pay anything on the movement of grain in eastern Canada from one place to another. It is much for the same reason that we do not permit the payment of ten cents and fifteen cents on oats and barley in the west to the farmer who actually grew it. In the east you have soft wheat, which is different from our western wheat. In some years it has been higher in price than the western wheat and in other years lower. I remember one year, if one shipped western wheat to the east—two years ago—he would sell it here at twenty-five cents a bushel more than you could get for eastern wheat. One could sell his wheat here at twenty-five cents more than it cost him to get western wheat shipped from the west and put on his farm. At present it is the other way around. Probably the farmer gets a little less for his wheat than we get for our wheat in the west. At least, it was that way a few months ago. When these changes take place from one year to another we do not follow it through and adjust the differences. They balance, over time.

Item agreed to.

Flax fibre administrator—administration, $32,300.

Mr. BURTON: Can the minister give us an idea of what has been done in connection with flax fibre?

Mr. GARDINER: At the beginning of the war we were asked by the British to assist in providing seed for fibre flax. We were also asked to produce more fibre from flax in Canada. Speaking from memory, I believe the acreage in fibre flax at the beginning of the war was about 12,000 acres. It is now somewhere around 43,000 acres. There has been an increase from around 12,000 or 13,000 acres to about 43,000 acres. That has been about the acreage for the last two years and I think it is about what we expect this year.

[Mr. Senn.]

Mr. BURTON: What strikes me as being odd about this is that it is all for administration. Is there nothing to show for the assistance of those who have undertaken the work?

Mr. MARSHALL: Before the minister answers that question, may I say it was my intention to go into the matter of flax raising and processing.

Mr. GARDINER: This has not to do with western flax, but with fibre flax.

Mr. MARSHALL: Has it nothing to do with the matter of administration of flax?

Mr. GARDINER: The matter of the control of prices of flax and all that comes under the wheat board and the Department of Trade and Commerce. This has to do with fibre flax only. To answer the question that was just asked, this is all spent on administration in connection with fibre flax.

Mr. MARSHALL: Where can we discuss the question of the establishment of a flax processing plant in western Canada?

Mr. GARDINER: Is the hon. member speaking of flax seed for linseed oil or fibre flax? There is a plant at Portage la Prairie—

Mr. MARSHALL: Is there a processing plant in western Canada?

Mr. GARDINER: There is one being placed at Portage la Prairie.

Mr. MARSHALL: For what purpose?

Mr. GARDINER: For testing of fibre flax and fibres of all kinds.

Mr. MARSHALL: Not for the purpose of manufacturing linen?

Mr. GARDINER: No, it is a pilot plant to make studies in connection with fibre, the proper kind of flax to grow in the west, the conditions under which it should be grown and the areas in which it should be grown.

Item agreed to.

Fertilizers and pesticides administrator—administration, $31,850.

Mr. WRIGHT: There is considerable information with respect to this item that I should like to have from the minister. Last fall I was in the maritime provinces, and there I found a considerable shortage of fertilizer among the potato growers of New Brunswick and the other maritime provinces. At that time fertilizer dealers had orders to supply only the customers that they had the year before and not to allow them any more than they had the year before. That meant that there could be no increase in the production of potatoes in those areas, because they require fertilizer if they are to produce a good crop.

This spring I also had a letter from Saskatchewan and I should like to read a short portion of it. It deals with this matter and is as follows:

> We usually order our fertilizer in the fall. Last fall we ordered one hundred tons from our local agent. A few days ago we were notified by our agent in Carragana that owing to a federal order he would not be able to fill our fertilizer orders. All he could get on his hundred ton order will be twelve tons. Out of that twelve tons he will have to supply registered feed growers first, which will take all he has.

Then the letter goes on to point out that in this particular area of Saskatchewan it is essential that they have fertilizer; that it means that their crops ripen probably a week or ten days earlier and that they get away from the frost. It also says that there is a considerable production of live stock there for which this feed is necessary. I took this matter up with the fertilizer administrator, and the information which he gave me was that there was a shortage of fertilizer in Canada and that the government were doing the best they could to see that there was a fair distribution of it.

A few days later I received bulletin No. 2095 from the Department of Trade and Commerce. It is dated March 25, and in it I find a statement of exports of principal commodities. In the month of February, 1943, there were exported from Canada $1,268,000 worth of fertilizer, while in the month of February, 1944, there were exported $2,268,000 worth. In other words, during the month of February we exported from Canada a million dollars' worth more fertilizer than we had the year before, while apparently our own producers in Canada, who are producing the grain, are unable to obtain this fertilizer. There must be some explanation for this. I know the fertilizer used in New Brunswick is probably not the same kind of fertilizer that is used in western Canada, but I know the fertilizer which is being exported from western Canada is of the type that is being used out there on the farm. When we can get a better price in the United States for the grain we produce in western Canada, but it is needed in Canada, the government sees that our home market is supplied. In the matter of fertilizer apparently it is a different proposition. If these figures are correct, manufacturers of fertilizer are allowed to export large quantities to the United States where the price levels are higher than ours and where they get more for fertilizer than if it were sold on the Canadian market.

When the minister's estimates are up to-morrow I should like him to tell us the amounts of fertilizer that were imported into Canada during the years 1942 and 1943 to date, and the amount which was exported from Canada of different types so that we shall know exactly what the position is. I think the farmers of Canada are entitled to all the fertilizer that they can get, if that fertilizer is in Canada, or if it can be obtained for them. I should like the minister to give some figures with respect to that to-morrow.

Mr. GARDINER: I think the principle involved is really more important than the figure. It has always been necessary to exchange the ingredients of fertilizer between this country and the United States. There are some things which they have a surplus of and some things which we have a surplus of, and under conditions such as we have at the present time it is, of course, necessary to give as well as take. When there are some fertilizers required there or some of the ingredients of fertilizer mix which is used are required there and we require something else here, well, of course, the commodity is divided up in the manner which is thought advisable.

The fertilizer most used by the farmers of the prairie provinces has been the 11-48 brand of ammonium phosphate. This fertilizer with its fifty-nine units of plant food, is one of our most concentrated chemical fertilizers and therefore much in demand during the war by the United Kingdom, who wish to economize on shipping. The prairie farmers used approximately 6,000 tons in 1942 and 8,000 tons in 1943. The demand this year has been again increased. In order to make good our promises to the United Kingdom we had to notify the Consolidated Mining and Smelting company, who manufacture this fertilizer, that they could not sell on the prairies amounts in excess of last year until our allocations to the United Kingdom and the United States had been made. The company has increased its production, and the fertilizer year is drawing to a close with the amounts promised exported to our allies and 10,000 tons delivered on the prairies. Because of the feared shortage in the west 1,344 tons of 16-20 form of ammonium phosphate and 270 tons of ammonium sulphate have been delivered to the prairie farmer. The net result is that he has received more fertilizer this spring than in any previous year. Therefore I think probably very little complaint can be made about that. I believe it is true that the western farmers are becoming more inclined to use fertilizer and it is going up. It has gone up from six to eight and now to ten, which would indicate that he is using, if he can get it, very much more than he was using before.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like the minister to give complete figures of the imports and exports to-morrow, so that we shall see for ourselves. I have no doubt the minister may be right, but I should like to see the exact figures.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS COMMITTEE

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources) moved:

That the name of Mr. Picard replace that of Mr. Durocher on the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Crerar the house adjourned at 11:05 p.m.

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

The house met at three o'clock.

EMPIRE DAY

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in looking over the proceedings of the house I notice it has been suggested that some recognition should be taken by the house of the fact that this is Empire day in Canada.

An hon. MEMBER: To-morrow.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, it is Empire day in Canada to-day. To-morrow, as I understand it, is Victoria day. I doubt if a more appropriate means could be taken by the house to recognize Empire day than that we all join in singing together the anthem which will be honoured in all parts of the empire on Empire day. If this meets with the approval of hon. members I suggest that we now join in the singing of God Save the King.

(The members rose and sang God Save the King.)

PETITION

SOLDIER SETTLERS, VETERANS OF FIRST GREAT WAR

Mr. ROBERT FAIR (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by approximately 12,500 citizens of western Canada, asking, among other things, that veterans of great war No. 1 who hold land under contract with the soldier settlement board be granted clear titles. I do not think anything more appropriate could be granted on this anniversary than that which is asked for in the petition.

VACANCY

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received a communication from two members informing me that the following vacancy has occurred in the representation, viz:

Of Eugene Durocher, Esquire, member for the electoral district of St. James, Montreal, by decease.

I accordingly issued my warrant to the chief electoral officer to make out a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

FARM LOAN BOARD

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING RESIGNATION OF S. T. SHABBITS

Mr. D. C. ABBOTT (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): I beg leave to present parliamentary return, reference 248, asked for by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson), for a copy of all letters, telegrams and other documents with respect to the resignation of S. T. Shabbits.

While there is no objection to the production of the correspondence in this case, nevertheless it is not considered generally in the public interest to produce inter-office correspondence, and the production in this case is not to be taken as a precedent.

It is to be noted that the Canadian farm loan board has been constituted by parliament as a body corporate and politic and is vested with full control over the employment and dismissal of all its employees other than chief executive officers whose appointments are subject to the approval of the governor in council. The board, moreover, is charged with the responsibility of carrying on its operations on a self-sustaining financial basis and does not come to parliament for an appropriation of funds for administrative expenses.

QUEBEC SYNAGOGUE

CIRCUMSTANCES OF DESTRUCTION BY FIRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister, who has no doubt read the reports of the shameful incident which occurred in the city of Quebec, where a newly built Jewish synagogue was burned down. I am suggesting that since this is the kind of occurrence which we witnessed in Europe, the Prime Minister might express on behalf of the house a condemnation of such proceeding. Then, possibly the Minister of Justice might enable the mounted police to cooperate with the city police to try to bring the culprits to justice.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): My hon. friend was kind enough to give me notice of his intention to ask this question. Although I have not had an opportunity thus far to read the newspaper account to which the hon. member referred, I would not hesitate to say that any act of criminal arson cannot be too strongly condemned, and is many times more reprehensible when its motive is that of in any way seeking to promote racial or religious prejudice.

So far as cooperation of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police with the provincial police is concerned, it is my understanding that it is the practice of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to cooperate in every way possible with provincial police, when asked to do so by provincial authorities.

STATUTORY HOLIDAYS

STATEMENT AS TO REDUCTION IN NUMBER AS EMERGENCY WAR MEASURE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. N. A. McLARTY (Secretary of State): On Friday last the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) requested that a statement be made in connection with public holidays. Possibly it would clarify the situation somewhat if I were to make a brief statement.

Under the statutes of Canada Sunday is the only day upon which ordinary businesses are compulsorily closed.

With the development of the production of war materials in Canada on a large scale, it became necessary to make provision, as an emergency war measure, for a reduction in the number of holidays which had been generally observed. Accordingly, by an order in council passed under the War Measures Act and tabled in this house, it was provided that apart from Sundays or such weekly days of rest provided in lieu thereof, the following statutory holidays, and these holidays only, should be observed by employers and employees during the war: New Year's day, Good Friday, Dominion day, Labour day, Thanksgiving day, Christmas day; and that reasonable opportunity should continue to be allowed to employees for the performance of their religious duties.

It was also provided that the provisions of any collective labour agreement that are inconsistent with this declaration of policy should be suspended for the duration of the present war by mutual consent of the parties thereto but pending such suspension should remain in force and continue to be observed. This was a declaration intended to express the views of the dominion government in relation to industry and more especially to war industry.

It will be observed that the terms of this declaration are not mandatory but constitute a declaration of the policy which the government, having regard to the necessities of the war, felt should be followed by employers and employees throughout the country in these critical days.

The order in council, however, dealt with two specific statutes of the parliament of Canada. One is the Civil Service Act, which prescribes the holidays to be observed by the public service of Canada. The other is the Bills of Exchange Act, which contains a provision prescribing the days which in all matters relating to bills of exchange should be observed as legal holidays or non-juridical days. The order in council provided that the terms of these statutes relating to holidays should be suspended during the duration of the war or until otherwise ordered and that the only holidays which should be observed were the ones I have enumerated above.

If provincial governments and municipalities proclaim any day to be a public holiday within their jurisdictions, it is not a matter with which the dominion government has anything to do, but any day so appointed is not a day which can be observed as a bank holiday.

Victoria day, the 24th of May, is not a public holiday in the United Kingdom, and, while there have been suggestions that the order relating to the observance of Victoria day should this year be modified in Canada, the government has to keep in mind that at any hour, so far as we know, word may come of the beginning of military operations on a gigantic scale in which Canadian forces will be heavily engaged. It would, therefore, seem inappropriate that the government of Canada should select this particular time for modifying the regulations which it felt it its duty to make, having regard to the needs of our war effort.

It is, I am sure, the hope of all of us that before the 24th of May next year conditions may have so changed as to permit the public observance of this popular holiday on a national scale. In the meantime, however, as I have said, if provincial governments or municipalities set aside this or any other day as a holiday within their jurisdictions, for schools and the like, it is not a matter in respect to which the dominion government has responsibility.

There seems also to be some uncertainty as to the proper date for the observance of Dominion day. A perusal of the order of the 7th June, 1943, will show that Dominion day is to be observed and celebrated on Saturday, the 1st day of July, 1944.

WAR APPROPRIATION BILL

PROVISION FOR GRANTING TO HIS MAJESTY AID FOR NATIONAL DEFENCE AND SECURITY

The house resumed from Monday, May 22, consideration in committee of a resolution to grant to His Majesty certain sums of money for the carrying out of measures consequent upon the existence of a state of war—Mr. Ilsley—Mr. Bradette in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Fertilizers and pesticides administrator—administration, $31,850.

Mr. WRIGHT: Can the minister now give the figures I asked for last night with respect to the amount of fertilizer and component parts thereof imported in 1942, 1943 and to date in 1944, and the amount exported during the same periods?

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): The figures asked for make up quite a table. I think it would be better to have it placed on Hansard, if that is agreed.

Mr. WRIGHT: That will be quite satisfactory.

Mr. GARDINER: I will first read the statement accompanying the table.

The three main plant foods required by our crops are nitrogen, phosphate and potash. There is no production of potash in Canada. Our entire supply has to come from the United States. It is essential in eastern Canada and in British Columbia for the production of potato fertilizer and fertilizer for other crops requiring potash.

There is no suitable commercial phosphate rock mined in Canada. All our requirements come from the United States. The production of ammonium phosphates at Trail and of superphosphate at our plants in eastern Canada would not be possible without this phosphate rock. Even with this 310,000 tons of rock, Canada produces only approximately one-half of her requirements of superphosphate. The other half of our superphosphate, namely 135,000 tons, must be imported, and large tonnages of it come from the superphosphate plants in the eastern United States. Our maritime provinces especially depend on American supplies.

Of the 600,000 tons of fertilizer materials under allocation by the combined food board for export by Canada, all is surplus nitrogen with the exception of approximately 40,000 tons of mixed fertilizers exported to Maine and 53,000 tons ammonium phosphate to the United Kingdom and the United States. This surplus nitrogen was produced for export to meet the needs of food production of the united nations throughout the world. Much was produced in the government nitrogen plants established primarily for munitions purposes. In 1942-43 four tons of ammonium nitrate were shipped to the United States for trial as fertilizer. In this year, 1943-44, 162,367 tons are being shipped. Similarly, in 1942-43 we exported 94,689 tons of ammonium sulphate, this coming year 197,426 tons. These tonnages were exported only after the Canadian farmers' needs for these chemical materials were fully met. In exchange for them we received the potash and phosphate so badly needed.

I will now ask to have the table put on Hansard, Mr. Chairman:

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): It is my understanding that the purpose of this vote is to equalize the cost of fertilizer to the farmer in different parts of Canada, and the government pays the freight. But on referring to Canadian war orders, No. A-1036, dated December 23, 1943, I observe that in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island the cost is uniformly higher than it is in Ontario and generally higher than it is in the province of Quebec. On most ingredients it is 50 cents per ton higher in the martime provinces than it is in Ontario. In the matter of fertilizer under 9-5-5, used largely by orchardists, more of which is used in Nova Scotia than in other parts of Canada, the cost per ton is $1.50 higher in Nova Scotia than in the province of Quebec. I would ask the minister for an explanation of these excessive costs in the maritime provinces and why these provinces are apparently discriminated against in comparison with the central provinces.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I would support what my hon. friend has just said. I have not my files with me but I have had extensive correspondence with the officials of either the Department of Agriculture or some other department of government. I think there has been discrimination in some parts of the country in favour of cooperative societies as against ordinary consumers, on the theory that the cooperatives are able to buy a little cheaper and distribute the difference by way of dividends among their associates. That is the theory which was sold to me by somebody; I do not state it as a matter of fact. I should like to know exactly what the position is. The fact remains, as the hon. member for Cumberland has just stated, that costs of fertilizer in the maritimes are higher than in the central provinces. We are supplied, as the minister has stated, from the United States side of the line. I do not see why on principle there should be any difference in price, especially as the government is paying a subsidy so that, as I understand it, there may be support for these people, and equalization. Like the hon. member for Cumberland, I ask why there is a difference, perhaps more than fifty cents a ton—

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): Up to a dollar and a half.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): —up to a dollar and a half as against certain parts of the country in comparison with the central provinces. It is the old story: down there we have to pay a little more for everything than is paid in the central provinces, and our people are just fed up with that condition. There may be a reason for it, I do not know; but the reasons which were given to me do not over-persuade me that there is justification for it. I should like to know what the justification is.

Mr. GARDINER: Well, Mr. Chairman, selling prices and price controls generally are not under this department.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I realize that.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand there is a wholesalers' price which is established the same all the way across Canada, but for some reason which I am not able to explain—probably those who come from the maritimes can explain it—fifty cents greater profit is allowed as between the wholesaler and the retailer in the maritime provinces than is permitted elsewhere.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not know why that should be.

Mr. GARDINER: I am informed it has always existed, not only since the prices board took control, but before the board had anything to do with it. Apparently they simply acknowledged the business conditions which existed, which before control was taken, provided for the higher prices in the maritimes than exists elsewhere.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): Is it not a primary duty of government in a war measure such as this to protect the consumer?

Mr. GARDINER: Again I should not be speaking for the prices board. Some of us are occasionally very critical of them, but after all, what most of us have insisted upon is that they maintain the condition which was there in the four weeks over which the price level was taken and apply it for the period ahead. I assume that if business conditions in the maritime provinces necessitated that during that period of time and previously, it has been maintained down to the present.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): If it is the policy of the government to protect the wholesaler against the consumer, they should make a reduced price and pay the extra cost from the government's funds rather than impose additional cost on the consumer. If they intend to perpetuate this excessive charge against the consumer, the government should certainly pay the difference and not impose that additional cost upon the farmer and the user of the fertilizer in the maritime provinces, in contrast with what is done in central Canada.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I realize that this matter does not come under the minister's department.

Mr. GARDINER: And for that reason it is not very fair to be discussing it now, when the minister in charge is not here.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am inclined to agree, and, knowing the great anxiety and care which the minister has for the farming population of this country—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): —especially those on the western prairies, whom he has bonused time after time to cut down production, I suggest that he and the officials of his department look into this complaint, and that the minister try to persuade his colleague who operates the wartime prices and trade board to rectify what I believe is a discrimination, and what the farmers of the maritime provinces do not hesitate to call gross discrimination as compared with their competitors in Quebec and Ontario. I make that suggestion to the minister. I have to go to a meeting now. If I can find my file I shall be back to tell him what the excuses are—not the reasons, but the excuses which have been put up to me for this discrimination—and I ask him to be a friend of the farmers of the maritime provinces.

Mr. GARDINER: I can scarcely let the suggestion go by that we have subsidized the farmers of western Canada to reduce production, because all one has to do is to look at the records to find that if that was the objective, we certainly have failed. Production in every line in western Canada has been very much increased, more particularly in the lines which we subsidized in order to get that increased production. On the other hand, dealing with the question which is now brought before the committee, I would again submit that it is impossible for me to place before the committee the proper answers to the questions which are being asked.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I accept that.

Mr. GARDINER: All I can say is that farmers right across Canada, in the maritimes and everywhere else, since price controls have come in, through the assistance we give, in addition to the price controls, by paying freight, are getting their fertilizers at approximately two dollars per ton less than they had to pay before we did anything about it.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): What is the subvention?

Mr. GARDINER: The subvention has to do with the freights on shipping from the places where the fertilizer is made to the places where it is going to be utilized. It works out at approximately two dollars per ton.

Mr. ROY: I wish to refer to a matter in connection with the subsidy. The subsidy which was paid by the government last year to farmers on their purchases of fertilizers has been abolished, and replaced by the freight assistance provided for under order in council P.C. 89868. This change of policy has resulted in quite a heavy loss to the farmers, of which I will give the committee a few examples.

On a carload amounting to some forty-one tons which was shipped from Quebec to Mr. Emile Frenette, of Portneuf, Quebec, the subsidy last year would have provided, on 23,000 pounds of superphosphate, twenty per cent of the amount, or $34.50; on 46,000 pounds of mixtures 2 x 12 x 4, it would have brought $69; on 10,000 pounds of mixtures 4 x 12 x 6 it would have brought $19.50; and on 2,500 pounds of mixtures 3 x 18 x 0, $4.50; a total of $127.50. All that the freight assistance has brought to Mr. Emile Frenette under the scheme actually in operation is $12.13.

I have another case: some forty-eight tons of fertilizers bought by Mr. Armand Gamache, of Iberville, Quebec. Actual freight assistance brought him $9.60 and last year the subsidy would have given $154.10. That means a loss of $144.50. These two examples should be enough to prove that the farmers are receiving a good deal less than they did last year with the subsidy as formerly paid. At this time when the country needs to encourage farm production and when the government has given the farmers to understand that they will receive more help than ever, it is hard to understand the policy that has actuated the government in the rescission of the subsidy of last year. Can the minister tell us why the change has been made?

Mr. GARDINER: The question is why the change from the policy of paying the farmers a subsidy on fertilizer, the policy which was followed last year, to that of paying so much on the freight, has been brought about. The answer is that a year ago, and earlier than that, we undertook to encourage the greater use of fertilizers, and through that policy, and the tendency of farmers when they obtain higher prices for their products to use more fertilizer, we finally came to the point where all the fertilizer we had was being utilized, and there was no point in trying to encourage the still greater use of it. In other words, all the fertilizer we had was being made use of by the farmers. The policy was therefore changed so that instead of trying to encourage the use of more fertilizer we endeavoured to equalize the cost of fertilizer to farmers. The result is that we now pay assistance on freight, so that the farther away the person is from the plant, and the more the commodity cost before, the higher the subsidy paid. One can take letters such as the hon. gentleman has just referred to and find that a person living close to a plant is paying more this year than last year, but he is probably not paying as much as someone who lives a considerable distance from the plant. If you went to the end of the road and took the quotations from that location you would probably find that there was as much difference in the opposite direction. The intention is to assist the farmers throughout the country in getting fertilizer at a more nearly equalized price, whether they live close to the plant or at a distance from it. That is the objective, and that is the reason for the change.

Mr. ROY: Looking at the figures, it seems to me that last year the government paid to the farmers under the subsidy over $1,000,000. Does the minister expect to pay to the farmers throughout Canada as much this year under the new scheme of assistance as was paid a year ago?

Mr. GARDINER: It will probably work out at about three-quarters of a million this year instead of a million—about three-quarters of the total amount.

Mr. ROY: So that the farmers are receiving less.

Mr. GARDINER: Some are, and others more.

Mr. ROY: I am speaking of the farmers as a whole. Was the change in the policy from a subsidy to freight assistance suggested to the agricultural supplies board by the fertilizers advisory committee?

Mr. GARDINER: It came from the fertilizer administration after discussion with all the provincial governments. It came to the supplies board and from that board to the department.

Mr. ROY: What is the personnel of the fertilizers advisory committee? Who is the chairman?

Mr. GARDINER: The chairman is Mr. Peart. He is an official of the department.

Mr. ROY: And who is the vice-chairman? While the minister is looking up the information I will supplement the question. I do not know if my information was wrong because I was told that the chairman of the fertilizers advisory committee was Mr. Grubb. He is general manager of C.I.L., Montreal. The vice-chairman, I understand, is Mr. A. Mooney, general sales manager of Canada Packers Limited. I am told also that one of the members for Quebec is Mr. Thomas Pope, general manager of International Fertilizers Limited. Is there any representative of the cooperative federation of Quebec, which handles about seventy-five per cent of all the fertilizers used by the farmers in that province? Is there also on the committee a representative of any of the farm organizations of Ontario or of the maritime provinces?

Mr. GARDINER: Again I am afraid the hon. member is discussing another committee which comes under the prices board. The names he refers to are those of members of the advisory committee which is working with the prices board in connection with the prices of fertilizers. The controller of whom I am speaking is an official of our department having to do with the other matters to which we referred a moment ago.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is the price practically set by a committee of manufacturers who advise the board? However, that is not what I rose to ask the minister. To-day fertilizer is being used in the west as well as elsewhere and from time to time farmers have told me that it has been very useful, while on other occasions they have said that they do not see any material benefit from it. Is there any organization to which the farmers in the various provinces could apply and get advice as to the fertilizer they should use, the type of fertilizer and the quantity per acre, as it is with us, or on some other basis as in the fruit growing area? Have we such an organization to which farmers can apply?

Mr. GARDINER: For the information of the hon. member for Gaspe (Mr. Roy), may I say that the chairman of the fertilizer board is Mr. G. S. Peart; the secretary is Mr. A. M. W. Carter. These are two members of the board that I am speaking of when I refer to the activities in our department. The other question was to the effect that there are different results obtained from the utilization of fertilizer at different times.

The utilization of the same fertilizer may not give the same results at different times or on different lands. Of course there are two reasons for that. First, my understanding is that the commercial fertilizer shipped down from Trail to western Canada operates best under certain weather conditions. That is, if you have a dry season your results are different from what they will be if you have a fair amount of moisture. Then, there are different conditions all across Canada. The activities in the different provinces are different; that is, they require a different kind of fertilizer for potato crops in New Brunswick from what is required for grain crops in the west, and for that very reason it is best that those boards should be provincial boards, and they are provincial boards. The fertilizer boards that advise on matters such as those which have been referred to by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar are boards set up in each of the provinces. They do advise farmers as to what fertilizer to use and how to utilize the fertilizer that they are using. Application for information in that regard should be made to the Department of Agriculture in the province.

Mr. COLDWELL: The reason I asked the question is that I have been told it is impossible for small organizations in the province to do this job to the extent that may be required. I quite understand that fertilizer will give a different result in one year from that of another year. What I had in mind was this: extensive soil surveys have been made in Saskatchewan. It seems to me if that were known the farmer, instead of listening to some salesman's advice with regard to fertilizer, could get advice from the soil surveys branch. I have been asked on occasion by farmers where they could get some information regarding their land. I have told them to write to the soil survey branch of the university of Saskatchewan. I am not sure whether that is widely known or whether the university branch is sufficiently staffed and equipped. My observation is that while the university has done a very good job on soil surveys, it has an inadequate staff and therefore cannot do the detail work that is required to give the kind of information I have in mind.

Mr. GARDINER: I think it will be found that the advice given is not exactly the advice that should have been given in that particular case. This is what the soil survey organization does, and we give some assistance to the universities in connection with that. They examine into the nature of the soil, and they can give the farmer information as to what the soil is lacking. They can at least give him information as to the nature of the soil. The proper authority to whom to apply for information as how to utilize fertilizer in order to build up the soil on that particular land is the provincial fertilizer board. They are presumed to have the information which the farmer will require in that regard, and it is to them that the farmer should write for advice.

Mr. WRIGHT: Could the minister give us the names of the boards in Saskatchewan?

Mr. GARDINER: The chairman is Mr. Auld, the deputy minister. I think the deputy minister in each province is the chairman of the fertilizer boards. Each has a certain staff of advisers who work under him.

Mr. McNEVIN: Were the differentials in prices referred to by the hon. members for York-Sunbury and Cumberland in effect from 1930 to 1935?

Mr. GARDINER: I am sorry; my information does not go back that far. I should be pleased to give it if I had it.

Mr. SENN: Under what conditions is the freight assistance plan being carried on at the present time? If my information is correct it is based on the freight rate from the nearest fertilizer plant to the farmer's nearest station. I have been given to understand also that the maximum amount which the farmer can receive is about one dollar a ton. Will the minister give the committee an outline of the plan and what amount can be realized by farmers who are purchasing fertilizer?

Mr. GARDINER: I do not know whether the hon. member has been in the committee since the discussion started, but I thought I gave a sort of outline of it a few moments ago. I was probably wrong in saying that the freight is always paid from the manufacturing plant. That is not necessarily so, because it is paid from the mixing plant, which may not be the place at which the different ingredients that enter into the production of fertilizer are produced. For example, I think that some of the fertilizer manufactured at Trail is shipped down to Vancouver and the mixing takes place at Vancouver. The different ingredients are assembled there and the freight is paid from there out, which has an effect on the freight rate that is paid in the different communities. I am informed that mixing takes place at New Westminster too.

Mr. SENN: Did I understand the minister to say that a subsidy or subvention is paid from where the stuff is originally produced to the mixing plant? I did not understand that. I do not think that is so.

Mr. GARDINER: There is no premium, assistance or subsidy paid where the freight is a dollar or under. Up to three dollars is paid above that one dollar figure.

Mr. SENN: Then three dollars are paid?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; that is the plan under which payment is made.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): Does the assistance apply to fertilizer used in the cultivation of potatoes? I understand that it did not apply last year. Is that still the situation, and if so, what is the justification for not applying it to fertilizer used in the growing of potatoes? That is one of the main crops in Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and parts of Nova Scotia. It is one of the most necessary and staple food products. The feeling among potato producers is that they should get the benefit of any subsidies or payments on fertilizer used in the raising of their crops.

Mr. GARDINER: The subsidy paid to the farmer has been paid over a period of about a year and a half. During that period it was part of the policy followed by the government to encourage the production of feed grain, and it applied only to feed grain crops. But since the policy has been adopted of paying freight on fertilizer it applies to all crops on which fertilizer is used. It applies to potatoes as well as grain. There is no discrimination now as between the two.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): When did that come into effect?

Mr. GARDINER: My recollection is that the date of the order is January 3, 1944. I understand it applies from January 1 of this year.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): It did not apply last year?

Mr. GARDINER: No.

Mr. SENN: Just one more question. Did I understand the minister to say that this freight assistance applies in cases where the fertilizer is hauled by truck rather than by rail? In a great many places in Ontario and the central provinces fertilizer is shipped by truck rather than by rail. Does the assistance apply in both cases?

Mr. GARDINER: It does apply to trucking, but it is based on the rail cost, that is, if the trucker is travelling over a certain route which can be reached by rail it does not apply until he gets out to the dollar point, and from there on it applies in the same way as it would on the railway.

Item agreed to.

Seeds administrator—administration, $19,100.

Mr. SENN: Before this item carries I should like to discuss the matter of seeds. I am not sure whether it might not better come under another item farther down under the special products board, seed export office. I have something I want to say in regard to—

Mr. GARDINER: It would come under the special products board.

Item agreed to.

Meat board—administration, $71,300.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I should like to discuss the question of beef. I said yesterday that I believed the government had bungled the whole question of beef production in southern Alberta. Whether or not I was wrong in my judgment I think will depend upon the answers that may be given to a number of questions. I find a great deal of confusion in the minds of the people regarding beef matters; therefore I should like to ask the minister a number of questions and give him time in which to look up the answers, so that he may place them upon Hansard. Then we will be able to study them and enlighten ourselves, and determine whether or not we have been wrong in our judgment.

The first question I wish to ask is this. Is it a fact that in August, 1942, the beef producers of Alberta waived the right to export beef to the United States? Did the beef producers surrender this right to the wartime food corporation, which means, was it understood that the wartime food corporation was to export beef to the United States? In return for the waiving of the right to export beef to the United States, did the Canadian government agree to review production costs from time to time, and wherever justified to adjust the selling prices of beef? How many times since August, 1942, has the cost of production of beef been officially reviewed by the government? By what agency was the review conducted, and on what dates? Was a report made on each occasion? If so, to whom was it made? Did the agency or board or committee to which each report was made have authority to adjust the selling prices of beef? Before giving the other questions I may add that there is an impression abroad among the people in my constituency that the government has organized a set-up in which it is able to give the run-around to anyone whatever who asks for information regarding the production of beef, so that it is quite impossible to find the truth from anybody.

Now I wish to go on with the questions. If the agency did not have authority, did the agency receiving the reports pass on such reports to the agency that did possess the power or authority to adjust selling prices upward? Was the report accompanied by a recommendation for an upward adjustment? If not, why not; and if so, was an adjustment made? If so, by how much, and how many times? If no upward adjustment was made, why not? Again, in return for waiving the right to export beef to the United States, were beef producers promised by the government—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. If I may be allowed, we are discussing dairy products now, and I wonder if a discussion of beef would be in order at the moment.

Mr. GARDINER: No, we are discussing the meat board.

Mr. BLACKMORE: This is the item covering the meat board, Mr. Chairman; this is the point at which I expected the beef discussion to be carried on. In return for waiving the right to export beef to the United States were the beef producers promised by the government that in case the price of beef fell below a certain level, live cattle would be purchased by a government agency? If so, how many grades and what grades of beef did the agreement cover? What government agency was given the authority and responsibility to buy such beef? At what price was the purchase to take place? On what dates did prices descend to that level? On what date was beef purchased, by whom; at what price; how much beef on each occasion; what grades of beef; how much of each grade, and on how many occasions did beef prices dip to or below the point at which purchases should have been made by the government in accordance with the agreement? In return for waiving the right to export beef, were the beef producers promised by the government that the government would protect the position of the beef industry in the United States market, by selling Canadian surplus beef? If so, how much beef was sold in the United States by the Canadian government between August 31, 1942, and March 1, 1944; what grades; how many of each grade; on what dates; and what agency made the sales? From whom or what agency did that agency purchase the beef? At what price? And at what price did it sell the beef to the United States? Did the government agency at any time purchase any red or blue brand beef in Canada between August 31, 1942, and March 20, 1944? What federal government agency has authority to implement the resumption of exports of live stock to the United States?

Before going on with these questions, of which I have several more, I want to say that it did not seem to matter a bit whom you asked in the government for details as to the position with regard to beef. No one seemed to know; and always the people who had the authority were the people whom you were not asking. In other words no one could do anything, nor could you find out who had authority to do anything, or who had the responsibility. These questions are designed to elicit the facts in regard to these matters.

Now I resume my questions. What federal government agency has power over beef marketing machinery? Is it the meat board? If so, why did the meat board neglect to buy for weeks, until beef feeders began to lose heavily and prices came down? From all I can gather the whole marketing situation with respect to beef simply deteriorated and almost collapsed in my constituency this year; and considering what the government had promised and what the farmers had a right to expect, the situation was reprehensible.

The next question is: Is the meat board the policy-making body in respect to beef? If not, what body is? Again is it true that in February, 1943, packers were scouring southern Alberta for fat ewes, and offering unheard-of prices? Is it true that in the same area during the corresponding period of 1944 fat ewes were not salable? Why should conditions like that exist in a supposedly controlled market? The beef and mutton producers in my constituency had the impression that when government control went into effect it meant government control, not a slipshod, half-hearted control that did not control anybody but the producers. Did not the minister say some time in February that we could not send live stock to the United States and sell them to better advantage than in Canada? I believe he did, but I want to know whether or not he actually did make that statement.

Then I come to this question: Have we reached the point where if boats are late or other transportation facilities are held up or congested, it is necessary to hold live stock in feed lots? I may say in commenting on that question that if feeders of cattle ever imagined that their ability to sell their cattle depended upon the possibility of ships being available, surely they would never have taken the risk of the terrible losses into which they could be forced. If such is the case, then do you not think weight restrictions should be modified to prevent loss to the feeders? And do you not think that in the light of increased cost, the ceiling should either be raised, or cattle and lambs should be subsidized, in the light of the precedent with respect to hogs?

Is it a recognized principle of the government live stock agencies that spreads are necessary in the winter feeding of live stock? If so, would it be your opinion that one and a half cents to two cents would be a reasonable spread, under present conditions? Do you not think steps should be taken to encourage the maintenance of live stock production at its peak, as a vital contribution to the nutrition of Canada and her allies, and to develop a reservoir of meat products and breeding stock for the post-war years?

Again, what was the price below which it was agreed fat cows were not to be allowed to fall during January and February, 1944? And is it true that fat cow prices in southern Alberta during January and February, 1944, ranged between $6.50 and $7.50 per hundredweight? Is this figure not definitely below the price agreed upon? Was the price of fat cows during January and February and early March of 1944 considerably below the price for fat cows during the corresponding months of 1943? When these cows came off the grass in September, 1943, was the price at least eight and a half cents a pound?

May I speak briefly in connection with that question? Yesterday the minister read a list of prices of beef at certain times in the year, in each of the years from the beginning of the war until now. I suggested that he give at the same time the cost of those beeves when they entered the feed lots the previous fall. The minister indicated that he would give such a list, but I think he must have overlooked doing it.

Mr. GARDINER: I am just coming to it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is fine. I do not wish to be unfair to the minister, and I am sure that he does not wish to be unfair to the beef producers. But it is obvious that if the farmers have to pay eight and a half cents a pound for fat cows coming off the grass, and then have to feed them during the winter, into February or March, and sell them at six and a half to seven and a half cents, the stage is all set for calamity, so far as feeders of fat cows are concerned.

Was it for some time almost impossible in Alberta for feeders of fat cows to get bids on their fat cows? Whose duty and responsibility was it to buy fat cows for the government to keep up the price of cows? Had that body the authority to buy?

Then, with respect to heavy steers, our troubles in my area were aggravated this year. Here are some of the questions on this point: Did the Minister of Agriculture announce he wished stockmen to keep their steers a year to grow into heavy beef? Was it difficult to sell heavy steers in southern Alberta in January and February, 1944? The answer to each of these questions, according to my information, is yes. If that is so, then obviously the minister's administration went to pieces with respect to fat steers, and the producers were simply betrayed.

Now, with respect to handyweight steers, through the latter part of February and early in March, 1944, was there a period during which buyers evinced very little interest in handyweight steers? And were the causes of this stalemate the lack of ships and of storage space? I expect that those questions would be answered yes. Then I wish to ask this question: Notwithstanding that, were steers bought when prices came down low enough to be highly lucrative to buyers, and was the market situation for meat, both beef and mutton, serious in southern Alberta around March 15?

It is reported to me that the minister in a letter dated February 15, 1944, written to the president of the council of western beef producers, used these words:

> At the time this was done (when the United States market was closed) I stated publicly that just as soon as farmers had cattle to deliver to that market, and the Americans were prepared to take them, I would be prepared to back farmers in insisting that that market be opened.

Did the minister use those words? Has he at any time backed the farmers in insisting that the United States market be opened? If so, on what occasion; if not, why not? The answer may be that the United States did not want this. I wonder what evidence can be adduced from various places in the United States to show that they did not want them. The information I have is that there are places in the United States where they were sold out of beef, and were much at a loss to know what to do to get it.

Did the deputy coordinator of primary products, wartime prices and trade board, assure lamb feeders during the 1943-44 season that supporting purchases of meat had been authorized and made at levels comparable with floor prices for carcasses, namely one and a quarter cents below the ceiling price? This is a very important point. Were such purchases made? Did the price of live lambs advance, as a reflection of these purchases? If the answer to those questions happens to be of the right kind, then they write a sad story.

Has the Department of Agriculture or any agency of that department at any time announced to the public what prices of live lambs and cattle ought to be? If not, why not? Otherwise, what protection can feeders or growers of lambs, calves and feeder cattle have?

May I just comment upon that for a moment or two. In the fall, when it comes time to fill feed lots, prospective feeders naturally go to the various markets with the object of buying stock. They begin to bid, and sometimes prices are bid up to a considerable height. In that way some people are tempted to buy at prices which are rather too high. But when prospective buyers do not know what the prices are to be, and have no definite idea what the prices of the finished products will be, or indeed whether they will be able to sell the finished products, they are utterly helpless in the matter of using their judgment as to what prices they should pay, and how many stock to buy to put into the feeding lots.

If the minister will prepare careful answers for all those questions he will then pave the way for a more intimate discussion on this whole matter at a later time which, I promise him, I shall be glad to enter into.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Chairman, if I were to prepare detailed answers to the questions which have been asked by the hon. member, I would have to ask the hon. member either to put his questions on the order paper or to submit them to me in detail in order that I might have such detailed answers prepared. However, I think there is a simpler way of answering the questions than by following his suggestion that the answer to all his questions would be yes.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I did not say that.

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend said a minute ago that in his opinion the answer to those questions would be yes.

Mr. BLACKMORE: But I was referring to only three of them.

Mr. GARDINER: He indicated that if the answer were yes it would show that there had been some—

Mr. BLACKMORE: Gross irregularities.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, gross irregularities, or something even stronger than that, in connection with the policy itself.

In my view the best way to answer a suggestion of that kind is to outline what the situation has been with regard to cattle and the marketing of cattle in Canada, not only for the period of years to which the hon. member refers, but for a considerably longer period.

This takes me back to the fact that in 1936, I believe it was, there was brought into effect an agreement between Canada and the United States respecting duties to be paid on cattle passing from Canada to that country. The effect of that agreement was that whereas the duty on live cattle weighing over 700 pounds had prior to the time of the agreement been three cents a pound, the Americans undertook to reduce the duty to 1½ cents a pound until approximately 193,000 head of cattle of beef quality had been imported into the United States. During the first year of the existence of that arrangement some difficulties developed because the farmers rushed all their cattle into the United States in the early months of the year, and thus there was quite a supply of cattle on the United States market. Later, farmers in Canada, particularly in Alberta, where they market their cattle in the fall of the year, experienced some difficulty in marketing their cattle coming on the market in the fall, and so it was decided to divide the year into four quarters. An agreement was accordingly entered into with the United States whereby some 51,000 head of cattle would be allowed under quota in the first three quarters, with a smaller quota for the last quarter until the 193,000 head had been shipped into the United States. That agreement continued down until June of 1942. After the price control policies to which the hon. member for Lethbridge referred were brought into existence, the record from March, 1942, is pretty much as follows—and again I say that much of this record has to do with the activities of the prices board, some of it with the activities of the Department of Agriculture. The chronological sequence of events in connection with that policy from March 23 down to the present is pretty much as follows.

On March 23, 1942, the wartime prices and trade board, by order 109, established general principles of a wholesale ceiling price for beef, cattle and pork as follows:

> No packer or wholesaler shall sell at a price that is higher than the highest price charged in the basic period by the same packer or wholesaler to the same buyer for the same kind, brand, quality and/or cut of meat or meat products.

That was a general statement of the policy which was put into effect by the prices board on March 23, 1942. It simply meant that any wholesaler who was selling meat to retailers had to sell it at the price at which he was selling it in the basic period, which was during part of the month of September and part of the month of October of 1941. That order was revoked on June 1, 1942, by order 134. On June 25, 1942, order 151 of the wartime prices and trade board authorized the wartime food corporation, which is an organization under the prices board, and not under the Department of Agriculture, to issue licences to beef cattle exporters, requiring exporters to obtain authorization for each shipment. That is the order to which the hon. member for Lethbridge refers when he speaks of the first action taken to restrict or control the shipment of beef into the United States.

As I stated a moment ago the original arrangement was that in any quarter we could send into the United States up to some 51,000 head of cattle over 700 pounds in weight. During the early part of 1942 we sent in the full 51,000 head a few weeks before the end of the period. Then, immediately after April 1, 1942, cattle were shipped into the United States to a total, speaking from memory, of about 10,000 a week until the total number of 51,000 had been shipped into the United States. That was around June 1, 1942, when the wartime prices and trade board took action in accordance with the order I have just read, which required anyone shipping cattle into the United States to get a permit to do so.

At the same time, I think, the wartime food corporation was set up, which was the only body licensed to ship cattle into the United States, the corporation set out to purchase cattle to be shipped into the United States. The hon. member for Lethbridge asks me how many cattle were shipped into the United States, but as this operation was not performed by an organization under this department, I have not the numbers with me. The fact remains that that policy was found to be one which very rapidly brought about a situation where the purchasers for the corporation were about the only persons who would be on the market to buy cattle, the reason being that they could buy cattle at a higher level than this particular market provided for, and most people naturally wanted to sell at the highest price. The consequence was that the corporation found itself in the position where they were buying the cattle and then turning them on to this market to the extent of its needs, and if they had a surplus it was to be shipped to the United States. My memory is that there was no surplus to ship to the United States, that cattle were not shipped to the United States by the corporation but were purchased for consumption in Canada.

That brings us to the point of realizing that we had reached the period in Canada when we were consuming all the beef that we produced. That was about the middle of 1942. There were certain reasons for that condition developing. As I stated a few moments ago, we had entered into an arrangement with the United States in 1936, which was renewed later, to the effect that we were permitted to ship 193,000 head of cattle into the United States. We also shipped calves and breeding stock into the United States. We were shipping upwards of 300,000 head of cattle into the United States in certain years, prior to the experience of which I am speaking, and during that time we were sending to Britain two or three thousand head of cattle in one year and up to some 40,000 in another year. They were shipped live weight to Britain, but practically all the live weight cattle that we had to ship anywhere went to the United States.

After the declaration of war we undertook to supply Britain with bacon and ham, and yesterday I gave the amounts we have supplied. At this point I should say that I had intended at the beginning of the discussion this afternoon to correct a statement I made last night with regard to the negotiation of a contract with Britain for the marketing of hogs for the next four years. I was under the impression when I came into the house last night that those negotiations had been completed and that we had now a definite programme for four years. But on going into the matter this morning I find that the negotiations are not completed with regard to the last two years. The negotiations are completed with regard to the first two years, and there is an undertaking by Britain to take from us at least 500,000,000 pounds of bacon and ham and pork products in each of the years 1944 and 1945 and any additional amount which they require and we are in a position to ship. That is final both with regard to quantities and with regard to price.

Mr. SENN: I understood that that agreement had been in force for some length of time. Has it not?

Mr. GARDINER: No. The agreement has not been in force on that basis for some time. It was in force on the basis of a two-year contract, with at least 900,000,000 pounds to be delivered within the two years. The new understanding which is reached is that the minimum figure for the two years for 1944 and 1945 will be 500,000,000 pounds and that the price will remain the same as the price which was negotiated for 1944. But the present position is that we have not completed the negotiations with regard to quantity and price for the years 1946 and 1947. The British are prepared to enter into a contract with us and we are prepared to enter into a contract with them, but, as I have stated, the negotiations are not at the moment concluded. I wanted to make that correction.

But what I wish to refer to at the moment is that in 1939, after war was declared, we undertook to supply all the bacon and ham that we possibly could to the British market. This we did for two reasons: first, that the British needed it, for they had been cut off from other supplies and later on were cut off from further sources of supply; second, that before this war began we had never had the opportunity, or had never taken advantage of any opportunities we did have, to prove to the British that we could completely supply from Canada, if necessary, their requirements in bacon and ham. With these ideas in mind we entered into a contract for the outside figure that we could obtain from our farmers in Canada in any particular year. In 1940 and 1941 we restricted the amount of pork products to go on the Canadian market in order to make possible the greatest quantity to be shipped to the British market. That policy was continued through 1942, and indeed the restriction of supplies of pork on the Canadian market was increased during that year; in other words we took more off this market and put more into the British market. The natural result was that through 1940, 1941 and 1942 there was a gradual increase in the consumption of beef in this country. There was no decrease in production—as I could indicate by figures—and no decrease in the slaughtering of beef for marketing purposes in Canada during that period of time, the increase in beef consumption being largely accounted for by the considerable restriction of consumption of pork products.

By January or February of 1942 we were not able to supply all the beef which was demanded by the markets at Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, and Vancouver. In all the important sections of Canada there was a shortage of beef in the butcher shops. The wartime prices and trade board being entrusted with the task of securing beef for the Canadian people, for those who were training in the armed forces in Canada, whether the air force or any other, some of whom came from other countries, undertook to control the marketing of beef into the United States for the purpose of seeing to it that sufficient beef was on this market to supply its requirements. So that when in June, 1942, they found it necessary to restrict shipments into the United States, or at least to issue permits to their own corporation to secure beef which possibly might be shipped into the United States, it became necessary to turn practically all if not all of that beef back on to the Canadian market at the United States price. That is the reason for what happened, and it grew out of a situation which developed in connection with the production of meat fed to the British, to our other allies, to the armed forces in this country and to our own people. That policy continued until 1943.

I should here answer, perhaps, one of the questions asked with regard to 1942. The hon. member for Lethbridge asked whether, during the fall of 1942 or the spring of 1943, when actions were being taken with regard to beef, I had made any statements regarding the shipment of cattle into the United States. He also raised certain questions as to the discussions which took place between the farmers and ranchers of Alberta and any authorities in Ottawa with respect to price control and its relationship to the marketing of cattle in the United States.

This matter did not take place under any actions started by the Department of Agriculture, but rather as a result of negotiations carried on by representatives of the prices board. My understanding, however, is that meetings were held in Alberta, and so far as I can remember the federal Department of Agriculture was not represented there. Those represented at the meetings were the producers of Alberta, plus representatives of the advisory committee of the prices board on meat, and the members of that advisory committee from Alberta were: Mr. Ross, who is an Alberta rancher; Mr. Taggart, who is a farmer at Olds; and, I think, at that time Mr. Grisdale, though perhaps he was an official of the board itself. All these men were Albertans, and, I assume, have a knowledge of cattle raising and ranching activities in that province. Discussions were held at public meetings and certain resolutions passed, and some of those resolutions were on the line of the suggestions made a few moments ago by the hon. member for Lethbridge. One was to the effect that they believed that, under all the circumstances, the United States market should be made subject to permits issued by some government authority. I think they also recommended that a corporation should be set up which would purchase cattle up to the United States price, and certain discussions took place with regard to that particular matter. I am quite sure that nothing of the nature of the undertakings suggested in the questions asked by the hon. member for Lethbridge ever took place. I mean by that I do not believe any agreements were reached between the producers and the board.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I think the minister had better reassure himself.

Mr. GARDINER: I have had quite a bit of discussion with regard to it, and I state that with fairly good assurance.

Mr. BLACKMORE: We have a mighty good memory of these things.

Mr. GARDINER: I have had serious difficulty even in finding the resolutions which were passed, perhaps because some people are not very proud of them.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It will not take me very long to find them for the minister.

Mr. GARDINER: But these resolutions were passed, and certain actions were taken by the prices board, based largely on the suggestions made at that time. I do not think any assurances were given as to what would happen under certain circumstances; I believe there were discussions as to what might happen under certain circumstances, but I can say with assurance what I myself said, and what the hon. member has asked me to repeat on this occasion. I did state at that time what was read from a letter which, I think, was written to Mr. Ross, a rancher in Alberta and the gentleman to whom I referred a few moments ago as being a member of the committee who gave that advice. I wrote him to remind him of the fact that there were discussions at that time, and in doing so I also recalled a statement which I made at a public meeting, I believe in Brandon, Manitoba, during the time the discussions were going on, something to this effect, that when the time came that we had a surplus in Canada which was not required for the feeding of our allies, particularly the British, and the Americans desired to have any surpluses which we in Canada had, I would be a supporter of the farmers and everyone else, I assume, in Canada in asking that the United States market be opened up. That, I think, to all intents and purposes is the meaning of the statement read to the house a few moments ago. In order to determine whether or not that time has been reached, we should pursue the story as to what has happened in connection with beef. The suggestion was made that I had advised the farmers at that particular time to hold their cattle for heavier weight, and again I say I gave that advice to the farmers then.

Mr. BLACKMORE: They took it.

Mr. GARDINER: And they were quite satisfied in taking it. They were wise in taking it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: They surely paid for it.

Mr. GARDINER: They made money by taking it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: They lost money.

Mr. GARDINER: I will show in a few moments that they made money. Now, why was that advice given? The advice was given in the fall of 1942 because it had been demonstrated to the satisfaction of everyone that all the beef we had in Canada in the summer of 1942 was needed on this market. That was demonstrated right through until the fall of the year. I recall that the member for Lethbridge got up in the house following the fall of 1942 and made a statement. I have not forgotten what he said; I have always remembered it, because I intended to reply to it some day. He got up following the fall of 1942 and criticized me as Minister of Agriculture. He criticized the Department of Agriculture and criticized the government because commercial feeders in Alberta and elsewhere were not able to buy cattle at as low a price in the fall of 1942 in relation to earlier prices as they had been for twenty years previously. Well, that means only one thing. It means that since less than ten per cent of the beef produced in Canada is produced in feeder lots, ninety per cent of the farmers in the country ought to have been prepared in the fall of 1942 to take at least one and a half cents less—and provision was made at the time for two cents less on beef—in the fall of 1942 for their cattle in order that somebody might be able to make a profit on them in the spring of 1943.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Was not a subsidy possible?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: I have no hesitation in saying that I did object to that policy. I did advise the farmers to feed their own cattle instead of selling them at one and a half cents to two cents less in September or October. I advised them to utilize the great crops of grain we had produced in Canada in order to feed their own cattle through the winter, and by so doing at least double the selling price which they were allowed to make on their grain if they sold it to other farmers to feed cattle elsewhere, or to commercial feeders. In other words, it is obvious to anyone that if a man has cattle on his farm which sell at nine cents a pound in the fall, if he has oats on his farm pegged at 51 cents a bushel, barley pegged at 64 cents a bushel, wheat pegged at 90 cents a bushel, and if he puts those cattle into his own stalls and feeds them through to the spring, putting from 200 to 300 pounds on each of them, and if he gets two cents a pound more for them in the spring than he would have got in the fall, he will make at least $1.25 on his oats, $1.70 on his barley, and a considerably higher price on his wheat. And so I said to the farmers, "Keep your cattle in your own barn. Feed them your own oats, your own barley, your own wheat. Instead of giving them to the commercial feeders in Alberta or anywhere else in Canada, feed them yourself, finish them, and then you will sell your grain to better advantage in the spring than you would have been able to do if you had sold the cattle and the grain as well."

My hon. friend says that the farmers took my advice. I now answer his question as to whether or not by doing so they made a profit by simply referring him to the facts that I have stated. Ninety per cent of the farmers made a profit by doing it. Ninety per cent of the cattle fed by the farmers brought greater profits to the farming industry by following that policy than the farmers would have received by selling the cattle at nine cents per pound in the fall of 1942 to some person who would feed them over the winter with the farmer's own grain, which the farmers sold to them, and in the spring of the year sell the cattle on the market at eleven cents a pound. I advised against that policy. The farmers, therefore, did not deliver as many cattle in the fall of 1942. They did hold their cattle through to the spring of 1943, and when my hon. friend asks who paid the bills, I refer him right back to the criticisms he made a few moments ago. He attempted to indicate to the house committee, and as a matter of fact it is true to the extent of one cent or two cents, or four or five cents a hundred, and for as high as sixty-five cents a hundred at one time, that the farmers in the spring of 1944 were getting less for their cattle than in the spring of 1943. They did get slightly less, and the reason was that the farmers, in taking the advice given by the Department of Agriculture in the fall of 1942, benefited by following that advice through into the spring of 1943 and delivering their cattle when a higher ceiling was provided for on those cattle.

The ceiling established during the fall of 1942 was one that reached 18¾ cents per pound on sides of beef on April 27, 1943. It dropped by three-quarters of a cent on two dates later, and finally by one-half of a cent to place the lowest level. From September 20 to December 18 it was at two cents below the highest point in the ceiling, and from December 19 to February 6 it was at three-quarters of a cent higher. From February 7 to March 19 it was one-half of a cent higher, and on March 20, 1943, it raised another three-quarters of a cent, while on April 24 it was again back to the high point of 18¾ cents.

The fall ceiling price was two cents on beef below the highest point in that ceiling, which was between May 27 and August 14. I submit that under that arranged ceiling farmers would require to go into the market in the fall and sell their cattle at a lower price, because the price of the commodity was down at that period. Because the price of the commodity was down at that period of time the purchasers bought the cattle low and fed them into the higher period to be sold in the spring of the year.

In May of 1943, yielding to representations which were made by the Department of Agriculture, the prices board established a new ceiling, and that ceiling was made a flat ceiling. It was put at a quarter of a cent above the highest position in the previous ceiling throughout the whole year. In other words, there was a higher ceiling for 1943-44 than there was for 1942-43. That ceiling was a quarter of a cent higher than the highest point in the old ceiling. But there was established at that time by the prices board a varying floor, and that varying floor was made exactly the same as the ceiling which had been asked for by the Alberta representatives in the fall of 1942. In other words, right down to the present time the lowest price at which cattle were presumed to be sold was established through the setting of a floor price on beef, which was equal to the ceiling price established in the fall of 1942; and the higher ceiling was established throughout the year on representations made by the Department of Agriculture at that time.

We have operated under that latter policy during the year and down to the present. Certain difficulties have arisen, and some of them were referred to a few moments ago by the hon. member for Lethbridge. He asked why we did not buy meat in the early part of the season of 1943.

Mr. BLACKMORE: 1944.

Mr. GARDINER: 1943 to begin with. We did buy meat through 1944.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I asked particularly about 1943.

Mr. GARDINER: I will deal with it in my own way and say this. In 1943, from May on, there was a standing offer from the meat board of the Department of Agriculture to buy beef from any of the packing plants or any of those who had it for sale for export. It is true that we did not buy any until late in the fall, and there is reason for that. When you establish a floor such as was established—and such by the way as is still insisted upon by the men who have been mentioned by the hon. member for Lethbridge—when you establish a floor which is 2¼ cents below the ceiling for the months of September and October and rises by three quarters of a cent at one time and half a cent at another—in other words, you step it up over the period of time until it gets back to within a quarter of a cent of the ceiling—in order to prevent the packing plants of this country from making a killing in buying cattle on a low level and selling them on a high level of price, you have to make a further regulation and say that if the packing house takes those cattle in at the bottom of the floor price he must, when he turns the surplus over to the government, sell that surplus to them on the same basis. Otherwise he would be buying his cattle at the low point of the floor, slaughtering them, putting them in cold storage and selling them to the government on the higher step. Therefore the regulation must say, and it does say, that at whatever level the packer bought the cattle and at whatever level the price was when he slaughtered the beef, he must of necessity turn the beef over to the government at that particular price.

That can result in only one thing, Mr. Chairman. It can only result in the packer doing what any other individual or member of this committee or a business man anywhere would do. He would say: There is no sense in my buying meat down on that lower step, putting it in my coolers and keeping it when there is no provision made for the carrying charges to take it up on the higher steps. What he actually did, and I submit any hon. member of this committee would have done the same thing, is this: he went out and bought the beef that he required for the business that he was doing and sold the beef that he bought at the price of that level; and then when he got up to the next step he paid the price that was possible under that particular price level, and so on until he got up to the present level, which is at the top, when we are only a quarter of a cent below the ceiling.

It was during the period when we were going up those steps that we met difficulties. We would go to the packing plants and say, "We want to buy your surplus." They would say, "There is no surplus here," and we were not able to get it. After a time we had to enter into special negotiations in order to get certain types of beef from the plants under that plan; and I must say that each delegation that came down from Alberta—and there were two of them—sat in my office by the hour, as a result of which the letter which was quoted here a few moments ago was written. I tried to convince them that they ought to recommend that that policy be changed. Up to date, so far as I know, they have not made any such recommendation. They have still, in so far as their advice to the prices board is concerned, given the advice that that floor, the old ceiling which was established in 1943 as the new floor, should be maintained in order that they could buy cattle feeder lots down at the bottom of the price in September and October and sell it up at the top of the price in the spring of the year.

That brings me to the answer to the question which was asked last night and referred to again to-day. It was: What does the minister think the farmer needs if he is to buy cattle in the fall and carry them over till the spring in order to be able to market those cattle successfully? I am going to answer that question by saying that the policy that is supported by the advisers who come down from Alberta, the policy that was supported year after year in the fall during the years in which we had great surpluses of beef in September and October, was based on twenty years' experience before this war, when every year the ranchers from Alberta came in in the fall with their herds off the grass and placed them on the market in Winnipeg or Moose Jaw, or shipped them down to the market in the United States. So far as this side of the line is concerned when that great quantity of beef came on this market it glutted the market and the price of cattle for every farmer in Canada was forced down. They realized that as well as anyone else, and therefore they established the policy themselves in Alberta with the intention of righting the position to that extent. That policy was based on the idea that somebody should go out in September and October in Winnipeg or Moose Jaw or Calgary; that somebody should go on those markets, buy good butcher cattle, take them out and feed them until spring in order that there would be fewer cattle on the market in the fall and more beef on the market in the spring. Again I submit that that policy was logical and probably very helpful in time of peace. But what is the condition prevailing to-day? I have outlined the position through 1942 and the greater part of 1943, when we were eating all the beef that came on the market in every part of the year and when there was no difficulty in the marketing of it from day to day. But in the fall of 1943 the advice given to farmers in the fall of 1942 began to produce results, as did our hog policy also. We were taking such a rush of hogs on the markets of this country that we were unable to process them and take them over to Britain. Therefore we removed the restriction on the consumption of hogs in Canada, and said: "Go ahead and eat all the pork you like. There is so much of it to-day that we are not able to get it processed and shipped to Britain." The people of Canada proceeded to eat all the pork they wanted, but they ate less beef than they did before. Therefore our beef in time began to pile up on us, and we had to come out with the policy which is now followed. From the point of view of the consumer and many of the producers that worked all right during the period when you could not sell beef as fast as it came on the market at certain periods, but it did not work when the packer had to buy more than he wanted for his own business before he was in a position to sell any to the government; and the varying floor under which we were working made it difficult if not impossible for the government to get that meat.

To finish my story with regard to the feeding of those cattle, how did the commercial feeders make money by feeding cattle before the war? They took butcher cattle, which were then ready for slaughter, and fed them for a period. Those butcher cattle make very good eating and are very good beef; as a matter of fact most people like them at that stage rather than at the fatter stage, because there is not so much loss in connection with them, but there are people in Canada who like red label beef. About the only place I ever saw red label beef sold before the war was in railway dining cars, and they charged me $1.50 for a slice of the steak. It was sold also in some of the first-class hotels of this country, where they charged similar prices for it. The commercial feeders would take these good butcher steers which were ready for the block in the fall, put them in their feed lots and feed them through into the spring of the year, by that method producing extra fat or extra well-finished beef, which is called red label beef from one end of Canada to the other and sold at higher prices. By that system, under the conditions then existing, they were able to make money and at the same time serve the farmers to good effect by tending to keep up prices in the fall of the year.

Then we came to 1943, when we turned our pork back on to the market because we had enough of it to supply Britain with all she needed and to give our own people all they wanted to eat. Then beef started to pile up on our markets. In January and February of this year we said, "The offer is still there; we still want to buy the surplus," and, as the hon. member for Lethbridge has said, the buyers on the Calgary market were prepared to pay certain prices for cattle until the packers got the supplies needed for the market that was immediately available to them. Then some rancher out in the country would phone in and say, "I would like to sell my cattle." The packer would reply, "Well, I have all I can handle at the moment," but the rancher would say, "I want you to come up and see them." So the packer would go up and look at the cattle and say, "I do not want your cattle at any price at the moment; I have all I need." But the rancher would reply, "I have to sell them. This is the usual time for selling them, and I want to get rid of them." Then the packer would say, "Well, if you are bound to get rid of them, though I do not want them I will give you a certain price for them. In the meantime I will see that somebody looks after them until I am ready to kill them." That is practically what it amounts to. The same thing would occur if you went over to your neighbour and said, "I have some cattle here which I am bound to sell." The neighbour might reply, "Well, I have all my stalls filled now; I have all the cattle I can feed, and I really do not want any more." But if you were to say, "Well, I cannot keep them any longer; I want you to take them," your neighbour might reply, "All right, but if I must feed them for another month or so, which means I will have to buy more feed, I will have to pay you a lower price for them." In other words no policy can be established by this government or anyone else which will make it possible for a person to keep his stock for a higher market than is available, and then insist that they be taken on a certain day or during a certain week. People must be prepared to spread the marketing of their product over a sufficient period of time to make possible the handling of it to advantage by whoever is buying it, whether a private individual or the government.

So that they ran into some difficulties for a few weeks, while we were on the second step of the stairs I mentioned. There were also difficulties when the last step was reached, but when we got to the top the difficulties disappeared. To-day the farmers who are selling cattle are getting the prices they said back in January and February they should be getting. But my hon. friend says the government should have taken them. If the government had taken them we would have had to hire some rancher to keep them until they were required for the market, or until they could be handled by the packing houses. So that we would have been in the same position that we were in as a result of what actually did happen. But another difficulty arose, about which a question has been asked. There were cows for sale. Well, anyone who has lived on a ranch in western Canada, or who has walked across a ranch, knows what happens. I have been on ranches in the west on which there were six and eight thousand head of cattle. The sires are running with the breeding stock, and the cows are bred. When the herds are taken in and sorted in the fall of the year some of these cows are prepared for market, and the usual practice has been to sell them before they begin to show that they have been bred. In January of 1944 these cows were ready for sale, but because of the circumstances I have described to the committee there was not a ready market for them. In the first instance the producers insisted on the government buying the cows. We replied that we were prepared to buy the beef just as soon as they could get the cows through the plants and the beef into position so we could have it frozen and sent to Britain. Finally, after some little delay, arrangements were made under which these cows were taken in, but not before some of the producers had taken a loss on them because of what developed, and not before some of the cows were in such a condition that it was not possible to market them in the spring of this year, so that they will be held over for another year.

The difficulties eventually were overcome, and most of the meat was marketed at a reasonable price. It is true that during this period the so-called floor price on cows would have been about 7½ cents a pound, and a few people were offered 6½ cents. I do not know how many sold at 6½ cents, but I do know that some producers wrote the department and said they had been offered this price, stating that this was one cent below the floor. Of course we replied that actually there was no floor price on cattle. The farmers have insisted that there should not be any ceiling on cattle, and as a matter of fact there is neither a ceiling nor a floor. Neither is there a ceiling nor floor on hogs, though there is both a ceiling and a floor on pork and beef. So that before cattle can get into the position that we buy them at the floor price, they must be in the form of beef.

I should like to offer a suggestion to the hon. member for Lethbridge. I am not stating my own idea as to the solution of the difficulty, but I have talked the matter over with the men in Alberta whom he has quoted; I have discussed it in the city of Calgary, and I think these people are convinced that this is the correct plan. I suggest to the hon. member that he go back to Alberta and convince those people living in the vicinity of Lethbridge, particularly those whom he has quoted this afternoon, that the advice they have been giving in connection with the marketing of cattle in Canada does not suit the conditions that prevail on at least ninety per cent of the farms in this country. He should convince them that there should be some variation of the plan of setting floor prices under beef and, in accordance with that floor price, a somewhat different arrangement for a floor price under cattle; that is, not an actual floor price under cattle but the price that would result from the floor under beef. I am quite certain that if this is done we shall not experience some of the difficulties that have been experienced in the past in connection with marketing.

It has been said that the policy which has been followed over a period of years has resulted in great losses to the farmers. Well, I happen to have here the prices for the years 1942, 1943 and 1944 on three different markets, namely, Toronto, Winnipeg and Calgary. Since we are speaking of the Alberta position, probably I should take the Calgary market. The same is true, however, proportionately, on the other markets, as we go farther east across Canada.

This table shows the figure for the last day of the week in each of the weeks from January to the end of May. I shall take only the first week of each month, in order to give an idea of what has happened. In January, 1942, at Calgary the price of beef cattle was $9.25 a hundredweight; in 1943 it was $10.50, and in 1944, $11.35. There is not any indication in those prices to show that there was any loss taken in the first week of 1944 as against the first week of 1943. But in order not to pass up that month, without covering the other weeks, may I take the third week. The figures show that in the third week of January, 1942, the price was $9.35; in 1943 it was $10.50, and in 1944, $11.25. Those are the prices for good butcher steers, the type we always take as a basis for prices. Some would be higher, and some would be lower than that.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. BLACKMORE: They are handyweights?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. Then, these figures show that on February 3, 1942 at Calgary—that is the next month—the price was $9.25; on the same date, 1943, it was $10.75, and $11.15 in 1944.

In the first week of March, 1942, the price at Calgary was $9.25; in 1943 for the corresponding week it was $11.50, and in 1944, $10.85. This figure represents a drop in the first week of March, 1944, of sixty-five cents a hundredweight. Then, coming down to April, 1942, we find the Calgary price in the first week at $9.75; in 1943, for the corresponding date it was $11.65, and in 1944, $11.15. Again we find a drop of about 50 cents in 1944 as against 1943. Coming down to May we find that on May 4, 1942, the price at Calgary was $10.25; in the corresponding week for 1943 it was $11.35, and in 1944 it was $11.30. In other words, by that time we were up on the top step in the floor price.

These figures show, further, that on May 11, 1942, the price at Calgary was $10.25, whereas in 1943 on the same date it was $11.65 and in 1944 it was $11.30. Then, coming down to the third week, beginning on the eighteenth, the price at Calgary in 1942 was $10.50; whereas in 1943 it was $11.35 and in 1944 it was $11.35. We are back on exactly the same floor we had in 1943, and we have exactly the same price in 1944 as we had in 1943.

I have not the prices for the Calgary market for either to-day or yesterday, but I do know that on May 22 the price at Toronto was $11.00 to $12.25 in 1943. This year it is $11.75 to $12.50. In Winnipeg on that date it was $11.25 to $11.75, and this year it is $11.75 to $12.00. So that the price this year, when you get up on the top level of the floor, is just as much as or even a little higher than a year ago. That no doubt is due to the fact that the ceiling is a quarter of a cent higher than it was prior to the arrangement made in May of 1943.

That is the history of the beef situation, with this exception, that we have bought a great many cattle in the form of beef.

Mr. TUSTIN: Would the minister put the remaining figures on the record?

Mr. GARDINER: I have the figures for several months, and for each week in each month. Perhaps I might be permitted to place them on Hansard without reading them.

The CHAIRMAN: With the unanimous consent of the committee, that may be done.

Mr. GARDINER: Something has been said with regard to marketing of cattle. In this connection I shall give only totals. I could give them for the months of the years, but I shall deal only with the totals and go back several years. This is a record of cattle marketings from 1938 to 1944.

Mr. BLACKMORE: For the whole of Canada?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Under the government?

Mr. GARDINER: These numbers are for the years before the time the government took anything as well as during the war. The figures for cattle marketing are as follows:

	Head
1938	972,000
1939	1,061,000
1940	1,026,000
1941	1,167,000
1942	1,097,000

This indicates a drop of about 70,000 head in the fall of 1942, as against the marketings in the preceding year. In 1943 the marketings amounted to 1,024,000.

The only thing I can do to give an indication of what is happening in 1944 is to come down to the month of March. These are the marketings for the month of March in succeeding years:

March—	Head
1938	83,000
1939	71,000
1940	72,000
1941	70,000
1942	80,000
1943	76,000
1944	101,000

In other words, our marketings in the spring of 1944, the month of March to be exact, were very much higher than they were in the same month in preceding years. I could give other figures, but I do not think it is necessary to do so, to indicate what I am suggesting to the committee. It all adds up to this, that whereas under the agreement we had with the United States before the war we were permitted to sell 51,000 head of cattle to that country in the first three months, and 51,000 head in the second three months, in the present year, up until the end of the last month for which we have any record, we have purchased for delivery to Great Britain sufficient meat to cover 107,000 head of cattle. That is more cattle than we were permitted to sell under the special arrangements, with the benefit of a decreased tariff which we had during the period preceding the war. In other words, while there are increased marketings, there are increased sales being made off those marketings. We are selling to Great Britain at the present time, or have sold during the period beginning just before the new year, the period during which we have been buying beef and preparing it for the British market, 107,000 head of beef cattle for that purpose, in the form of beef.

Some suggestion was made a few minutes ago that I ought to say whether or not the American market is going to be open. It has been said that I ought to state my position on that point, in view of the statement I made in the fall of 1942. In that connection all I wish to say is this. The British are pressing us for all the beef we can send them. In answer to a question which was asked a few minutes ago I would say they are suggesting to us that they will provide the shipping to take it away. Up to date they have been providing that shipping to take away our pork products, and also to take, as well, this additional beef. We have been attempting to secure beef and to secure pork products, and to have them at the ports to be taken away by the British ships when they arrive. So that in so far as one condition upon which I made my statement in 1942 is concerned, I would say that we have not yet arrived at the position where the British do not want the surplus meat that we have. We have not yet arrived at that point.

Dealing with the other side of the question, as to what the Americans think about it, I would call attention to what I said last night in connection with packing plants. American packing plants are working overtime to approximately the same extent as our packing plants in Canada. They are having difficulty in finding labour to man their plants, and we are having difficulty in getting labour to man our plants. They find themselves with the greatest live stock population, particularly cattle, that they have ever had in their history—just as we find ourselves with the greatest live stock population we have ever had, and particularly cattle, in our history.

So that the problems on their side of the line are the same as those on our side. I have not any doubt that if someone went to an American packing plant on the other side of the line or to an American drover and said, "Are you prepared to come to Canada and buy at lower prices than you have to pay in the United States and then take them on to the American market and sell them there?" he would get the natural answer. But in the United States they have a government, as we have one in Canada. We have spent much time in discussing these problems back and forth, and we think we understand the point of view of the United States. Believing that we understand it from the discussions we have had, we are not asking them to say what we ought to do with our cattle. We are trying to deal with our own problems, by doing something that will not multiply their problems. We are trying at the same time to satisfy the British, who want all the surplus beef that we can send to them. We are trying to do that. We are now entering into an agreement with Britain—and there will not be any great difficulty about it—which will suit their needs and at the same time suit our own necessities; and if we are able to reach an agreement of that kind I am quite sure that the orderly marketing of our beef on the British market will be a possibility from now at least until the war ends. If during that period our production increases to the point where the Americans can take some of our meat, and we are extremely desirous of that taking place, I do not think there is anyone on this side of the line who will have any desire to prevent that meat from getting into that market.

In the meantime we are trying to suit the needs of all parties concerned to the best of our ability, and I think we have done a fairly good job despite the fact that the hon. member for Lethbridge thinks we have bungled in relation to our beef and beef cattle policies. We believe that in giving what is obviously a price which compares favourably with any price we have obtained under similar circumstances in the past, the policy is not something that works to the disadvantage of our farmers. We believe, too, that just as we now have a flat return throughout the whole year for hogs, a flat return for cheese, and a flat return for some other farm products, without prices going up and down at different seasons of the year, if at all possible we should get a flat return on beef. If I had time this afternoon to put the prices on the record it would be found that the policy we are now following is establishing a flat price for beef, and since the demand for beef continues in Britain throughout the whole year there is not the necessity of taking care of great rushes of cattle on to that market at one time and of shortages at another. We can take in beef as it comes just as fast as our plants can handle it, and when it is taken in we can freeze it and ship it out to Britain as the boats are available, and thus market the product orderly throughout the whole twelve months of the year. That is the answer, Mr. Chairman, which I wish to give to the questions.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I should not be surprised if the minister finds it inconvenient to answer my questions; I may have to answer them myself before we finish this debate. I think the minister will have a hard time answering the answers which I will give. May I deal with the minister's rejoinder?

Even his remarks to-day give indication to the house and the country that there is a very strong demand for beef, that there is a demand for all the beef that Canadian farmers can produce. In the light of that fact, and in the light of the fact that a year ago beef was rationed in Canada and the price of beef was very high to those who wished to buy it to eat, and the great deal of talk there was of the need of beef for Britain—I ask you in the light of those facts how the ordinary farmer, the ordinary feeder, could possibly conceive that in the spring of 1944 he would not be able even to sell his beef. There were thousands of beef in my constituency that remained on the feeding lots until the feeders sustained a devastating loss because they could not get an offer for the beef, whereas a year before buyers had been scouring the country for that very kind of beef and offering for it prices that were attractively remunerative. That is the disaster which overtook the feeders of beef in my constituency this year. It is all in those simple words, and no amount of speaking will cover the matter up. If there is need for beef, surely the beef producers should be able to sell when they are ready to sell. The minister simply has not taken into account the fearful loss a man sustains in feeding a herd of twenty-five or thirty up to a hundred head of beef cattle after the beef are ready to market, with prices of hay and feed and labour as they are to-day.

Mr. GARDINER: Beef are not like hogs. You do not have to sell them at a certain weight to make money out of them.

Mr. BLACKMORE: There is a maximum beyond which they do not readily add weight.

Mr. EVANS: Do not the two and three-year olds add weight?

Mr. BLACKMORE: Heavy weight steers do not gain very rapidly, and mature cows which are fed after they are eight years old do not add weight rapidly. Do not let the minister think I know nothing about beef.

Mr. EVANS: You do not know much about feeding cattle.

Mr. BLACKMORE: You have no idea what I know. You might be astonished. But I do not undertake to reveal all that I know before the hon. member. I was not always a member of parliament, not by any means. I was raised right up with beef and know beef pretty well.

This is the situation. No man who was feeding cattle could conceive last fall that he would be unable to sell. Not one man in a hundred could have conceived last fall that he would have to sell at lower prices than in 1943. The very figures which the minister gave when he read out the prices for 1942, 1943 and 1944 picture the tragedy. Imagine having to take a lower rate—

Mr. GARDINER: For a few weeks.

Mr. BLACKMORE: —for the three succeeding periods which the minister mentioned!

Mr. GARDINER: All inside a few weeks. Let me give the figures again.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Yes; give them again. The minister spoke for so long that I may have overlooked something.

Mr. GARDINER: March 2 is the only one that I gave where there was a considerable decrease.

Mr. BLACKMORE: But it was a decrease.

Mr. GARDINER: Let me read the figures: $9.25. 1942; $11.50, 1943; $10.85, 1944.

Mr. BLACKMORE : Enough to ruin a man.

Mr. GARDINER: That is a decrease of sixty-five cents.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is enough to ruin a man feeding a herd of 50 cattle.

Mr. GARDINER: If he bought them at the price my hon. friend suggests he ought to be able to buy them at, one cent or one and a half to two cents under that selling price, he certainly was not going to take any loss. The representative who came from Alberta told me this, and I agree. He said: "I can take cattle on to my range in the spring of the year at ten cents a pound, and I can sell them off the grass in the fall of the year at nine cents a pound and make money on them."

Mr. BLACKMORE: Certainly, because he is on the grass.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, on the grass.

Mr. BLACKMORE: He is not feeding grain and hay.

Mr. GARDINER: I can give the hon. member for Lethbridge the answer I gave him "There is another reason; you have cheaper grass from the government."

Mr. BLACKMORE: And less labour.

Mr. GARDINER: "You can put your cattle on the grass in the spring, and on the increase in weight you can make money."

Mr. BLACKMORE: Exactly.

Mr. GARDINER: But I said, "Why do you come to the government and ask the government to take care of your problem? Why do you not sell the cattle at a cent less to these feed lot men, instead of compelling them to pay from ten to eleven cents for the cattle in the fall and they having to sell them at over eleven and one-half to twelve cents in the spring in order to make a profit?

Mr. BLACKMORE: The minister is contending for the very thing I am contending for.

Mr. GARDINER: I am just telling the hon. member what some of the advisers he is quoting from had to say, and what the reply is to them.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I did not quote any advisers.

Mr. GARDINER: In other words, that is not a problem for the government to deal with or to take money out of the treasury to deal with.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I did not quote any authority at all.

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend has quoted the president of one of the associations to whom I wrote a letter.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I quoted no authority.

Mr. GARDINER: Then, on April 6: 9·75 cents in 1942, 11·65 cents in 1943, and 11·15 cents in 1944.

Mr. BLACKMORE: All right, another disastrous loss.

Mr. GARDINER: That is a drop of half a cent a pound.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Over a whole month.

Mr. GARDINER: Over a whole week.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Over a whole month of marketing.

Mr. GARDINER: That particular date—yes, that is a month later.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is disastrous.

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend knows this, if he knows anything about cattle—

Mr. BLACKMORE: He knows about cattle.

Mr. GARDINER: —as he says he does; he knows that anyone who is attempting to feed cattle and market them on a margin of less than half a cent a pound—well, he must have a remarkable judgment in connection with cattle. Anyone who does not bank on there being a difference of half a cent a pound over a month any year in the marketing of cattle is taking very long chances in his feeding. You can take any year for the past twenty years and you will find variations very much greater than that variation in the price of cattle as between different years.

On May 4 there is a difference of five cents.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Another drop. That is two quotations.

Mr. GARDINER: 10·25, 11·35, 11·30.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Well, who would imagine it?

Mr. GARDINER: Who would imagine a farmer buying cattle and making a great loss because of the difference between 11·35 and 11·30?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. BLACKMORE: But there are two whole months of marketings there.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, even if there are two whole months of marketings.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The minister does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. GARDINER: The half cent a pound over that period of time, as compared with another year in which the prices were the highest on record in recent years, does not indicate that the farmers were up against the possibility of an enormous loss, because of that alone. I am speaking now of ninety per cent of the farmers. The man who paid eleven cents in the fall and sold at eleven cents in the spring no doubt lost some money, but I am speaking of the man who had some cattle and grain and fed the cattle on the grain, and that applies to about ninety per cent of cattle in this country.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Who would imagine that, with a higher ceiling price in 1944 than there was in 1943, the price of stock would be lower than it was in 1943? You see the situation is just practically absurd to any intelligent man.

Mr. GARDINER: There is a quarter of a cent on beef, which is about one-eighth of a cent on the cattle, and if my hon. friend can figure any closer than that, he is a good one.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is a lot, on fifty steers. I understand the feeding business fairly well; the picture which is delineated by the minister spells disaster for feeders of stock, and there is not a feeder in my constituency who will not support me in that statement. Remember, there was a higher ceiling price in 1944 but a lower price for the stock being sold, and many men were unable to get offerings at all. It is just so terrible that one would hardly think the minister would fail to realize it.

One other thing. The minister even yet has not given the price at which these cattle entered the feed lots. He must bear in mind that, when prices for finished cattle were high, in 1943, naturally those who had feeder cattle to offer demanded higher prices for their feeder cattle, and those who were prospective feeders naturally felt confident in offering higher prices. The result was that feeders were put in a position where they were exceedingly vulnerable. If you want any more evidence to prove that the whole situation was bungled, you are certainly hard to convince.

The minister mentioned cows. The cows which were fed were not cows that were preparing to freshen. It is a settled custom to take cows which have finished their usefulness and feed them as beef. Many, many cows were fed in that way in my constituency.

I think that is enough in a general way. Now I want to read the minister one or two things and see whether he recalls that something like this actually occurred. I asked three questions to start with. Maybe I had better repeat those questions. It is a long list; but you have to get to the facts; you have to get to the basis of this thing to realize how bad it all is.

Is it a fact that the beef producers of Alberta in August, 1942, waived the right to export beef to the United States? The answer is yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Well, I would say that the answer is no, and I answered that question while I was speaking. A few Alberta ranchers and others met and passed a resolution, but I do not think anyone in Canada waived the right to market cattle in the United States. There was a regulation put out with regard to it which all of us had to live up to, but nobody waived any rights.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Well, they felt they did. They met on August 25, 1942, in Calgary, and after careful deliberation passed a resolution by which they waived this right, and they laid down the conditions under which they waived the right. The resolution was the beginning of an agreement between themselves and the wartime prices and trade board. The minister may not consider that binding, but out west we do consider a thing like that rather binding.

Mr. EVANS: Do the Lethbridge feeders govern the feeding of western Canada?

Mr. BLACKMORE: Nothing idiotic like that.

Mr. EVANS: It sounds like that.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The hon. member just makes himself foolish in the eyes of intelligent men.

Mr. EVANS: Not half so foolish as some people make themselves.

Mr. BLACKMORE: On October 7, 1942, I am informed there was a press release entitled "Press Release No. 0231," issued according to my information by the chairman, Donald Gordon, in which the following words were reported as being used:

> The wartime food corporation will be prepared to buy cattle if there is at any time a surplus supply which threatens to depress cattle prices unduly, and after providing a reasonable supply for domestic consumption, will export any remaining surplus cattle.

These words can mean only one thing, that if a man had a corral full of fat cows, the like of which he had been able to sell at nine cents or nine and a half cents in February and March of 1943, and in 1944 he has to wait for weeks for a bidder, and finally sell between six and one-half and seven and one-half cents—

Mr. GARDINER: What was the date of the press release?

Mr. BLACKMORE: October 7, 1942.

Mr. GARDINER: That is a long while back.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Exactly, but it was the beginning of this. The minister went back to 1936. I will indulge in a little history too.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, but what I am pointing out is that that condition existed under an order which was passed at that time. That order was changed later, and what he announced would take place did take place down to a certain time.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Can the minister give the press release which cancelled this one?

Mr. GARDINER: I do not know whether there was one or not. I did not issue the press release.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is just the point. The western feeders did not know either. If there ever was such an order it certainly was not widely publicized among the feeders in the west, and that is an evidence of bungling.

Mr. GARDINER: No. There was a standing order all through 1943. There was a standing order from early in the spring of 1943 right down to the present time for the purchase of surplus beef that was in frozen form in store in any of the plants—all the way through. There was no surplus there until the fall of 1943.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Then how could it be possible that the farmers were told that they were unable to sell beef in February and March, 1944, because the packing plants were full?

Mr. GARDINER: That is very simple. You had upwards of 100,000 hogs in a week coming in more than came in before, which of course filled the packing plants, and you had beef at the same time coming in. There were times when you had 30,000, 50,000 and upwards of 100,000, in that period of time, coming in during one week, in addition to the number reached in previous years, and that being the case, the packing plants were filled.

Mr. BLACKMORE: If the standing order prevailed at that time, surely the government would have been taking meat out of the packing plants as fast as it was brought in. The whole thing does not fit together to make sense.

Mr. GARDINER: It does to some people. It makes sense to me.

Mr. BLACKMORE: To the ordinary person it does not. The minister says that there has been a standing order to take beef, and that this has prevailed since a certain date in the fall of 1943.

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member forgets the other part of the statement I made in answer to his question. I said that one of the reasons why there was not a surplus of beef there was the policy proposed at the meeting to which reference was made. Where you have a rising floor beginning at a low level, in September and October, and rising to a higher level in April and May and continuing through to August, while that rising process is taking place the packer does not buy any more on that step than he can sell on that step, and that was one thing that delayed the purchases of cattle, resulting from the fact that beef was not on hand in a surplus to be sold. As to the change of policy, I made a recommendation to the very people the hon. member is talking about, the people in Alberta, the suggestion being that it would help considerably to have it changed. As long as they are insisting on the policy that is being followed there will be trouble if it is maintained, but if they take the position that it should be changed from the plan set out in Calgary in 1942, there will probably be more favourable consideration given to it at this end.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The minister is not entirely logical. This order, this press release by Donald Gordon, undertakes to purchase any surplus of beef that threatens to depress the price. The very minute that the packers cease to buy, thereby causing a surplus to accumulate, threatening to depress prices, then unquestionably the Wartime Food Corporation should step into the picture to rectify the situation.

Mr. GARDINER: The order has been there all the time for any surplus of beef, and where there were surpluses they were bought. They were bought to the extent of 107,000 head of cattle, which was more than was bought previously to be sent to the United States market, and this is sent to the British market.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The important point is this. Why were not these cattle bought which were standing in the way in my constituency, occasioning such a loss? If the standing order was there, and this statement of the wartime prices and trade board has never been revoked, why was it not put into operation?

Mr. GARDINER: I can tell my hon. friend why they were not bought. I did not sell my cattle in those weeks that were referred to when the price was down. The fact that the price was at a certain level on the market does not mean that every farmer sold his cattle. Many carried their cattle through, which was the proper thing to do under the circumstances. When the market is glutted with stock, stock that you can carry over, you ought to carry over, and many farmers carried cattle to the last week in April or the first week in May or later. In fact, they are coming on to the market now in great numbers, as the figures which I read indicate.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Exactly so; but the cattle, the presence of which occasioned people concern, were ready for the market in the early days of February. The difficulty arises in the fact that this supporting purchase of live cattle did not come into operation, and when the people who are concerned tried to find out who would buy these cattle in accordance with the statement made by Donald Gordon all they got was a run-around.

Mr. GARDINER: Oh, no.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Let me give evidence to show that it is as I say.

Mr. GARDINER: The farmers all know, and they would explain it to the hon. gentleman if they were here, that the price paid for beef on the last step before they reached the top was within a quarter of a cent of the highest floor. They were all instructed to that effect and the price was paid. It was not half a cent below the high floor during the latter part of the period; it was up to within half a cent of the ceiling, which is a quarter of a cent below the highest floor; the cattle during that period did sell readily, and beef was taken off the market readily in that period and is still being taken off the market in great quantities.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The minister's statements are not in accordance with the facts as they exist in my constituency, not by any means.

Mr. GARDINER: I am talking about Canada, not the hon. member's constituency.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Just the same, I will show that this is not an area that can be ignored or neglected or kicked around or shoved about, because there was a meeting of 289 persons in Lethbridge on March 15—

An hon. MEMBER: Where is Lethbridge?

Mr. BLACKMORE: I expected that the hon. member would not know his geography, judging from other things he has said. At this meeting there were 289 people, and they had altogether 26,000 head of cattle —

Mr. GARDINER: It turned out later that they had between three and four thousand.

Mr. BLACKMORE: — and 86,200 sheep.

Mr. GARDINER: It turned out later, on checking the records at the time that statement was made, that there were three or four thousand head of cattle ready for market.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The evidence I have here is not to that effect; I have been in close contact with the people there and I believe they know. This is the point. If a man named, let us say, James Jones, in an area outside Lethbridge has fifty fat cows ready to sell in the third week of February and he has no offer for those cows at remunerative prices, and is running out of feed, whom should he approach to have those cattle taken off his hands, in accordance with the promise implied in Donald Gordon's press release?

Mr. GARDINER: He should approach somebody who could turn them into beef and get them frozen in the places where they could be marketed in the sense covered by the statement of Donald Gordon.

Mr. BLACKMORE: In other words, the government had no agency for buying the stock.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, there were agencies.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Well, what were the agencies?

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend seems to know what the agency was. He has been speaking of the different plants at which the product could be marketed. They are the agent of the meat board in connection with the marketing of hogs that go to Britain; that is, the plants that are able to process hogs and turn them into bacon and ham. The government has considerable authority over them; they have maintained, through all the period since the war began, the prices paid farmers for hogs in order that those prices might bear a proper relationship to the ceiling price of bacon and ham, and everyone who has examined into the matter has agreed that the relationship has been properly maintained. The same will be true in the marketing of beef in the British market. The facilities that are there for the processing of beef will be the agency which is purchasing cattle and turning it into frozen beef that can be sent to Britain to supply them with food. The facilities that are there will be utilized as the agency to do it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Suppose the marketing plants in the area refuse to take the cows, then what?

Mr. GARDINER: That is supposing something which does not happen.

Mr. BLACKMORE: But that occurred.

Mr. GARDINER: Oh, no.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That occurred.

Mr. GARDINER: There was a glut on the market for a few days, but within a short time a representative of the government reached Calgary, met the men and settled the whole problem to the satisfaction of those who were out there. My hon. friend is talking about a problem which existed for a few weeks in January and February and which he knows was settled to the satisfaction of those concerned.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The minister is entirely overlooking the fact that a man who has fifty or sixty head of stock can be ruined in a few weeks. That is the point the minister is overlooking, and he has not told us yet to whom this man, James Jones, could apply to market his cattle. All he has said is that the nearest packing plant or packing plants would take them. If the packing plants are not prepared to act then the man is simply out of luck.

Mr. GARDINER: What would the hon. member propose ought to be done?

Mr. BLACKMORE: Certainly there should be some realistic interpretation and application of this press release. Notice what it says:

> The Wartime Food Corporation will be prepared to buy cattle.

That is not the fact, certainly.

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend has read the statement and I now say to him that that particular arrangement was changed.

Mr. BLACKMORE: When was it changed?

Mr. GARDINER: It was changed in the spring of 1943.

Mr. BLACKMORE: From that time thereafter—

Mr. GARDINER: From the time the meat board was set up it became responsible for purchasing meat.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Then, James Jones should apply to the meat board?

Mr. GARDINER: No; he should sell his cattle to the plants where the beef can be processed, and then the meat board will purchase the meat from those plants.

Mr. BLACKMORE: From what the minister is saying this is not designed to be a government agency to buy that surplus meat?

Mr. GARDINER: At the floor which was established as a result of representations made from Alberta.

Mr. BLACKMORE: This press release specifically states that the Wartime Food Corporation will buy. The minister now says that the meat board was going to buy.

Mr. GARDINER: At the floor price, but there was no one in Alberta who was prepared to sell cattle at the price fixed as the floor for beef. That is the reason why they were raising difficulties about it. They want to sell at a higher price than that. They want to sell it at the ceiling, not down at the bottom.

Mr. BLACKMORE: What was the floor price for fat cows on February 10?

Mr. GARDINER: The ceiling price on beef was 18¾ cents all through the year, and the floor price from December 18 to February 7 was 1¾ cents below that.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Below what?

Mr. GARDINER: Below 18¾ cents. That would be 17 cents a side.

Mr. BLACKMORE: What would be the price on cows?

Mr. GARDINER: I have given the price of steers, commercial grade. The price of cow beef would be 16¼ cents.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The price of cows would be 14¼ cents.

Mr. GARDINER: No, 16¼ cents. The price of steer beef was 17 cents.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The minister will be interested in hearing this letter from very responsible feeders.

Mr. GARDINER: The price I gave was for beef, not cattle.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Yes, fat cows. Here is a letter from Cardston:

Alberta, February 9, 1944.

Mr. L. W. Pearsall,
Meat Board,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear sir,

We were obliged to sell our fat cows for the best offer we could get. We held them as long as possible on your advice that improvement was expected, but fat cows cannot be held indefinitely as you are fully aware, and we received only 7½ cents for these choice cows.

Mr. GARDINER: That is the floor.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

Mr. BLACKMORE:

Cows of no more quality were bringing 9½ cents at this time last year. These same cows only grass fat, at the lowest price under your ceiling, brought 8½ cents last September. After three months of grain feeding and with advances allowed under your ceiling regulations, we are able to obtain only 7½ cents. The result of your ceiling regulations has been apparent, but so far we have seen no action to maintain a price.

Mr. GARDINER: That is exactly in accordance with what I was telling the hon. member in my statement. The ceiling price is a flat ceiling running right through the year, and cows, of course, can be sold near the ceiling while they are buying for a market in Canada. Cows can be sold at a higher price if it is possible to retail the beef right up to the ceiling. During the period when the packer was buying cattle in order to supply his market at that particular price level the farmer who sold them early in that period and got the price which was near to the price made possible were by beef being sold near the ceiling, would get something near the ceiling; but when it came to the time that the packers had all the cattle they wanted for their trade under this policy which was laid down in Calgary and recommended here from Calgary, the situation changed. The packers said: "if we buy any more cattle we have to turn them over to the government at the floor." They said: "All we can pay for cows is 7½ cents." That is the floor. They would then offer 7½ cents for any additional cows, the beef from which they were going to put in storage and deliver to the government. That, of course, is what is meant by a floor and ceiling price. What I suggest as the real criticism of the policy is that it was meant to suit the sale of fat steers to commercial feeders in the fall of the year so that they would be able to sell them as red label beef in the spring. That was all right in peace time but in war time it does not necessarily work on all grades of cattle. The reason for that is that you can sell all those steers as butcher steers when they come in. You can sell them as they come in, put them through cold storage, freeze them and ship them to Britain in quantities all during the year. Therefore it is not necessary to send them back to the farm to be re-fed. They are taken right in, and if a man comes on the market and tries to buy them and take them back he will have to pay up to the ceiling price for them because somebody else is prepared to take all these cattle and slaughter them. Under present conditions the old policy just will not work; that is all, and as soon as the few men out in that section view as a fact what all the rest of the farmers of Canada realize, that it will not work, and make recommendations in accordance with the experience of the present, I am sure that conditions will be very much better than they have been recently.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The reason why it will not work is that we destroyed what is called the free market. Is that not so?

Mr. GARDINER: I would not say that we destroyed it; I would say that Hitler destroyed it. There is no free market in war time.

Mr. BLACKMORE: When the government agency established a ceiling price they came rather close to destroying the free market. They established control over the whole market. As I said a few moments ago, control ought to mean control for everybody. It ought to control the prices of the materials that go into the product as it controls the price of the ultimate product. It ought to control everything pertaining to the commodity if it is to work properly.

Mr. GARDINER: If we undertook to do that we would say definitely to the men who have been feeding butcher cattle for red label beef, "you are not going to be allowed to do that." That is what we ought to say if we are to follow the suggestion made by the hon. member. It would be then the government's duty to tell everyone what he ought to do. The first thing we ought to tell him, in order to make this thing right, is that we do not want him to feed these cattle up from good butchers to red label. When he once brings them on the market they will be sold. We want them butchered and put on the market. On the other hand, if he wishes to go on with his commercial feeding there is one way of doing it. Take those cows. They can be fed for commercial purposes. They can be bought down below the prices that we have been talking about this afternoon. They can be fattened and sold by the same people who were previously building up steers that were already in shape for the market; they can take the unfed cattle. If this year conditions were to develop as my hon. friend's constituents believed a week or two ago they would, into a period in which we would have short grass and very little feed, then of course along toward the fall of the year steers could be bought which would have to be fed before coming on the market. The commercial feeder could feed these to the point where they would make good beef. Up to date the government has not endeavoured to carry regulation that far back, and I am not proposing that we should do so. If we were to follow the suggestion of the hon. member for Lethbridge, it is there we would have to start.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It is certain that you cannot control part of a market and leave the rest of it uncontrolled, and have a good condition. That is obvious. That is where the difficulty lies in connection with this matter. The government is quick enough to control all the things that might give the farmer a profit, but it does not control those things which bring him a loss. The element in the whole situation that would make the policy of the government workable is the very element indicated in this press release; in other words, just as soon as there was a surplus of cattle that threatened to depress prices, a government agency would step into the picture and buy. That did not happen; it has not happened, and the fact that it has not happened constitutes a condemnation of the government's beef policy.

Mr. GARDINER: It is happening right now.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Is a government agency buying live cattle to-day?

Mr. GARDINER: Not live cattle, and our press release does not say that we are going to buy live cattle. It says that we are going to buy beef.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The point is that what was promised was not carried out. Men were eager to sell, were losing money every day, were trying frantically to find who would buy the cattle. When they approached a member of the meat board they were told that this board had no power to make policy, and when they approached a representative of the wartime prices and trade board they were told that it was the business of the Department of Agriculture to buy the beef. Therefore the misery was complete, and the disaster to hundreds of feeders was such that probably a good many of them will never recover from it.

Mr. GARDINER: We bought 107,000 head.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Alive or dead?

Mr. GARDINER: Dead, of course.

Mr. BLACKMORE: From the packers?

Mr. GARDINER: From the packers.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Does anyone conceive for a moment that the farmers would take this press release to mean that the government was going to buy from the packers?

Mr. GARDINER: Certainly; read it again.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It reads:

The Wartime Food Corporation will be prepared to buy cattle if there is at any time a surplus supply which threatens to depress cattle prices unduly, and after providing a reserve supply for domestic consumption, will export any remaining surplus cattle.

Mr. GARDINER: The old cattle order was the one that was put in at the time the corporation was prepared to buy cattle and send them to the United States; but the basis on which we have been working since the spring of 1943, which was announced, was that we would have a floor price for beef as well as a ceiling price. Before that it had always been a ceiling price only. We said that we would have a floor price as well as a ceiling, and that the government agency would always be prepared to buy beef at the floor price. That is the undertaking which was given, and it has been carried out.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I contend that it has not been carried out in the spirit of the announcement at all. I am now going to read the rest of this letter. The minister sees clearly that if the government is prepared to buy beef only from the packers it leaves the producers at the mercy of the packers.

Mr. GARDINER: It does not do that with hogs.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is the point; it does not do that with hogs, but it is doing it with cattle and sheep.

Mr. GARDINER: There is only one reason for that in connection with cattle; that is, as a result of the varying floor price instead of the flat floor price we have in connection with hogs.

Mr. BLACKMORE: But surely a varying floor could be applied just as well as a flat floor.

Mr. GARDINER: It cannot.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The minister might explain why. I go on with this letter:

We fed these cows on the understanding that beef was urgently required, and your guarantee that the price would be maintained. The assumption that this beef was in urgent demand appears erroneous and the assumption that you would maintain a price has also proven erroneous to date. We would like to know what we may expect in the way of bonus or compensation inasmuch as these cows should have been sold for not less than 9 cents to be in line with previous prices paid.

That is signed by Smith and Kearl. These gentlemen are reputable stock feeders, reputable ranchers and very conservative men; this letter must carry a considerable amount of weight. Now here is the letter from Mr. Pearsall:

Mr. J. S. Smith,
Smith & Kearl,
Cardston, Alberta.

Dear Sir,

We have for acknowledgment your letter of February 9 relative to cows which you marketed recently, and which did not return you price anticipated.

We regret that owing to circumstances then prevailing and which we explained previously in our wires, you unfortunately found it necessary to market your cattle at the most difficult time. We further regret that there is no provision to adjust the price to the shipper under such circumstances.

Mr. GARDINER: Is my hon. friend suggesting that $90 a head is not a good price for old cows? A price of $7.50 a hundred for a 1,200 pound cow, which is not a big cow, would be about $90 for a cow that has been used for breeding purposes for some time and then fattened and sold. Is my hon. friend suggesting that that is not a good price?

Mr. BLACKMORE: Is the minister forgetting the fact that those cows were bought for 8½ cents in September?

Mr. GARDINER: Why did he pay that?

Mr. BLACKMORE: Because he counted on the government of Canada playing fair with him.

Mr. GARDINER: He had no reason, under any price levels that were set, to buy those cows at the price stated and think he was going to sell them at higher prices later on. He had no justification whatever for thinking he would be able to sell them for a higher price in January. If he thought he would be able to sell them at a higher price in the latter part of April or May there might have been some justification for it, but not for thinking he could sell them at a higher price in February, under any price level that was set, following the floor suggested from the Calgary meeting.

Mr. BLACKMORE: If the minister will just refer back to the figures he so proudly read a few moments ago, giving prices in the various years, he will see that there was a steady increase commencing with the first year and continuing into 1943. The war is still going on; we have had international food conferences meet and announce that they are going to need almost limitless supplies of food. What man using average intelligence would conceive that the price of beef in the spring of 1944 would be lower than in 1943? There just is not any sense in that idea at all.

The mere fact that the price had been up in 1943 as compared with 1942 was justification for expecting that while the war continued, Britain would still need meat and the price would be maintained. In addition we had rationing of meat in Canada, and a promise like this had been given, so that certainly there was justification for anticipating that prices would at least be up to 1943 levels.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. BLACKMORE: No; it is not carried yet. We have only started on this thing.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Mr. Chairman, before the committee took recess I was discussing with the minister the question of the marketing of beef in my own constituency. I believe that I used up about as much time as I should at this particular phase of the debate. However, I should like to finish reading the letter I commenced to read, and also read one more. I was reading a letter dated February 21 from Mr. L. W. Pearsall, secretary-manager of the meat board, to Mr. J. S. Smith of Smith and Kearl, Cardston, Alberta. The last paragraph reads:

> We believe you will realize that it is quite impossible for us to provide against ocean shipping difficulties over which we have no control. These were primarily responsible for storage congestion and thus depressed the market for your particular class of cattle which was not in current demand on the domestic market.

The committee will be interested also in the letter which Smith and Kearl wrote in reply under date of February 28, and which reads:

> We have your regrets contained in your letter of February 21 which are of no value to us. We were amply supplied with regrets before it arrived.
>
> In place of these regrets we should appreciate some information. We have seen the price ceiling operative throughout the west. (Your letter appears to be a frank admission that there is not and never was any attempt to provide a floor price for the producer in spite of the fact information to that effect was widely circulated.) Your last paragraph indicates that demand alone dictated the price on these cattle, yet your control of exports which are prohibited to the United States and price ceilings are responsible for this congestion. We realize that you cannot control shipping difficulties, but if it is not your job to control prices, then we feel at liberty to ask what is your job?
> These cows that went to the packers for seven and one-half cents one week and for which a week or two later they would have paid eight and one-half cents went to the consumer at the same price as usual. We noted no fluctuation there. We note your regret that there is no provision to adjust the price to the producer. It appears quite clear to us who your present policy is benefiting. We should like to know why no provision was made to adjust the price to the producer if you expect to maintain price control. We should like to know why provision is not made now. We no doubt regret a great deal more than anyone else, other than producers, that it has not been done.

I think I have said all that I care to say at the present time.

However, in closing I should like to say that in my judgment the government was exceedingly remiss in its duty by failing to protect feeders and producers of beef against possible losses over which they had no control and which they could not possibly have foreseen. I think the government should be censured further for failing to centre responsibility. If certain adjustments had been made a great deal of loss would have been saved. If the responsibility for the purchase of beef had not been divided between the wartime prices and trade board and the Department of Agriculture much of this trouble would not have occurred.

I suggest to the minister that he urge upon the cabinet that his department be allowed to take over complete control of the whole matter of marketing of animals and also to exercise a measure of supervision over prices. Wherever the minister has had complete control over any matter pertaining to agriculture he has either found a solution or has put forth a substantial effort to do so. I believe that if the minister were entirely free to do what he deems to be best, he would do a good job. I should like to see his department have complete control over this matter, and I think I speak for my constitutents when I say that.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: In the course of his remarks the minister did not reply to a number of questions which I placed before him when we were dealing with the general item. First, I asked what steps had been taken to provide for adequate marketing and storage of the increased live stock production which is occurring in certain areas at the present time. I asked also what the policy of the government was with regard to applications for new storage or packing plants. I asked also what the government was doing to reimburse farmers whose stock had not been accepted on the Winnipeg market and who had to ship east, with a resulting delay. I inquired about the quantities of meat which had been spoiled in the different years—I understand there has been spoilage—and what steps have been taken to reimburse those who have suffered losses.

There is another matter in connection with our bacon shipments to Great Britain. The Western Producer of March 23 states:

Associated with Mr. Peterson was Dr. George B. Miller of Ottawa, bacon specialist with the Canadian meat board, who has recently returned from Britain where he inspected handling of Canadian Wiltshire bacon. He explained that all bacon reaching the British housewife was "slightly stale" because supplies were kept on hand three or four weeks. Often, he found, Canadian bacon was kept on British wharfs two or three days before getting to refrigerated storage.

I believe that since that time the government has adopted some policy to overcome this matter, but I submit that this practice deteriorates the quality of our bacon and will possibly affect the demand for Canadian bacon as compared with the demand for Danish bacon when the war is over.

I referred also to labour within the packing plants. At different times labour has been blamed for the stoppages and congestion which have occurred in different plants and I do not think that charge was justified. I should like to know whether the Minister of Agriculture has taken steps to deal with the labour situation. There were one or two things the labourers in these packing plants wanted, and if these were granted I think it would help considerably in relieving this situation. One was equal pay for women.

The CHAIRMAN: I wonder if we are in order discussing labour matters on the present item?

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member is dealing with labour in the packing plants which is necessary to put out the hogs, and I think he is quite in order.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The other complaint was that a certain amount of income tax was being collected at the source for overtime work, which mitigated against the willingness of the people to work overtime. If these matters were straightened out I think it would do a lot toward easing the situation in regard to labour in these plants. We all know a great number of the skilled workers have been taken by selective service and those people who are now going into the plants are not nearly as efficient. If one visits one of these plants he realizes that the job these men and women are doing is at times at least nauseating, and deserves special consideration.

A report in the Winnipeg Tribune of October 15 last stated that sheep had hit an all-time low of about fifty cents per 100 pounds. Has anything been done to see that this type of thing shall not occur again this fall? Are steps being taken to smooth out the flow so that producers will not suffer from gluts as they have in the past?

[Mr. Castleden.]

Mr. GARDINER: On the question of shipment of hogs east in order to take care of over-supply in plants in the west, I may say that to December 31 the number shipped east was 46,246, and the subsidy paid by the government was $35,202.50. For January the number shipped east was 57,656. For February the number shipped east was 36,365 and the amount paid. $30,088.99. For March the number shipped east was eighty-five and the amount paid, $59.46. The total number shipped east from last fall until March was 140,352, and the amount paid was $111,-253.70. The basis on which these payments were made was the order of the meat board dated February 11, 1944, which reads:

Under authority of meat board regulations P.C. 4187, the board hereby determines that:

As it is deemed advisable to protect the producer against loss from dead and crippled hogs, payment is hereby approved of the following additional allowances, for this purpose, on such hogs as are eligible for the regular rebate of 50 cents per hundred pounds:

1. Shipments originating in Manitoba—20 cents per hog.

2. Shipments originating in Saskatchewan—30 cents per hog.

3. Shipments originating in Alberta—40 cents per hog.

Then on May 1, 1944, the following order was made by the meat board:

Under authority of meat board regulations P.C. 4187 the board hereby determines that in view of the changes in basic prices for hogs which became effective on April 10, 1944, hogs shipped from the western provinces and slaughtered in Ontario or Quebec plants must on and after that date be settled for on the following basis, in order to be eligible for the rebate of 50 cents per hundred pounds:

The price at which hogs are settled for to the shipper shall be $17.75 or better per hundred pounds warm dressed weight, on the basis of B.1 grade, or $18.15 basis A grade, delivered at eastern plants.

It will be understood that that change was necessary because of the change in grading and in the method of payment that was made at that time. Those facts give the answer, I think, with regard to hogs shipped east, the payments made and the manner in which they were made.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Possibly not sufficient account is taken of the fact that these hogs may be on the road for two or three days longer, with a consequent loss in weight and therefore in grade. I do not think less than one dollar would cover that.

Mr. GARDINER: The basis was decided on after twenty years' experience of shipments east and takes care of all those matters except exceptional cases where damage took place. The fifty cents covers everything, including shrinkage.

The next question was that of labour supply. I have a statement before me which furnishes some answer to the question as to what happened recently in packing plants. I was in the west on the 17th of April and met a number of representatives of producers in Alberta. I was in Calgary and met there most of those who were interested in the problem then developing in the packing plants in Calgary, Edmonton and Winnipeg. Representations were made to the effect that farmers were being asked to retain their hogs at home until the rush of deliveries at the plants could be taken care of. The difficulty which developed at that time was largely owing to the fact that we have been following certain practices in connection with farm labour. Ever since the spring of 1942 it has been provided in our regulations that those who are essential to agriculture are given postponements in the matter of military service, but the postponements are conditional upon the men remaining on the farm. During the past two winters provision has been made for farm labour leaving the farm in the winter months and going into necessary work such as work in the bush, in the coal mines and in these packing plants, but the definite undertaking was given that these men would be returned to the farms in the spring, leaving whatever activities they had been engaged in during the winter. Accordingly, we had a number of these men in the packing plants during the winter months who, in the month of March, began to move back to the farm in compliance with the regulations.

The hon. member has asked what was done to cope with the problem. All I can say is that immediately those representations were made I wired to the Minister of Labour. He was in Philadelphia at that time, so that the matter was immediately taken up by his deputy and inside of a few hours I had a wire from him which indicated that something was being done to take care of the problem which was developing. The Minister of Labour can explain what was done to better effect than I can. It was to assure those who were working in the packing plants that if they remained there they would have protection against the regulation that they must return to the farm in the spring, provided that they themselves were agreed that they should remain in the plants. That, of course, did not fully take care of the matter because some of them had already gone home and could not return to the plants on account of the labour situation on their own farms. At that time I took the trouble to interview Mr. Robert Gardiner, president of the United Farmers of Alberta, and suggested to him that the surest way of dealing with the problem was for farm labour to be so organized that we could utilize as much as possible of it in the packing plants whether in the winter or in the summer months so long as it was needed there, the idea being that if we are to assure the farmers of a certain amount of labour to produce the live stock which is necessary for the prosecution of the war, the labour necessary to process that live stock is just as essential to the war effort and this indicates that the plants should be considered as part of the farming operations, so far as it was possible to do so. The Department of Labour got to work on the problem immediately, and that is the situation as it exists at present. The farm organizations in western Canada have been appealed to, to co-operate with the government in organizing that labour. Provincial governments have also been appealed to. They all have organizations working on it, and my understanding is that the problem is being dealt with as effectively as possible under the conditions existing.

In order to illustrate what has been happening, let us take the period from April 29 to May 13. At the plants at Vancouver there were seven fewer men working on May 13 than on April 29. In Alberta there were 117 more employees on May 13 than on April 29, 243 having been taking on and 126 having left, making a net gain of 117 employees. That does not cover the whole period with which I am now dealing, but it does cover a very considerable part of it. In Saskatchewan 172 had been hired in that period and 136 had left the plant. The Winnipeg position is that there are eighty-three more employed now than were employed before; and I put figures on the record to show that at about the period of this first date there were more men in these plants, taking them as a whole, than were in them in January. So that there has not been any decline in the amount of labour available at these plants; as a matter of fact there has been more labour put into the plants than has gone out of them, and the plants are operating to the best possible advantage. The total in so far as the position across the country is concerned is that there were 320 more employees in the packing plants on May 13 than there were on April 29, and I assume that an improvement has taken place over the past ten days.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: How many of these are women?

Mr. GARDINER: I have not the breakdown of that.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The packing-house workers wanted equal pay for women who are doing equal work. I wish to know whether that principle is in effect in Canadian packing plants at the present time.

Mr. GARDINER: In view of the fact that the Minister of Labour and his department are dealing with this problem, which was put up to them by the Department of Labour, perhaps the minister would state in a few words what the position is.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend knows the situation in the packing industry. He knows there has been a tremendous increase in the production of live stock in this country. Speaking approximately, there are now 4,000 more people engaged in the packing industry than there were at the outbreak of war. I recently returned from the United States, where we had a discussion of problems affecting the agricultural industry, and a similar situation exists there. My hon. friend raises the issue of equal pay for equal work. The national war labour board has laid down certain guiding principles. The organization to which my hon. friend refers has the right to appear before either a regional board or the national board, whichever jurisdiction may cover its particular problem. I do not think the question is one which can be discussed in detail in committee of this house. Whatever case the applicants can make before the board, in conformity with the wage stabilization policy of this country, the board will consider and render a decision upon. If it is a regional board question the parties have the right of appeal to the national board, whose determination is final.

There was some talk, I believe, of a slow-down strike in a plant in Edmonton; I think it was the Burns plant. The matter involved was one of provincial jurisdiction, coming under what I think is called the wages and industry board of Alberta, and my information is that Mr. Clayton Adams, chairman of the board, discussed the issues involved in the slow-down in Edmonton; that the slow-down stopped last Friday; that at the present moment negotiations are taking place between employers and employees in that particular industry, and that it was expected that a conclusion would be reached to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I can take it from the minister's reply that the answer to my question is: no, there is not at the present time equal pay for women for equal work.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend is not going to put words like that in my mouth.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Then would the minister just answer the question?

Mr. MITCHELL: That is all right; I know that is good campaign material out in the country, but the hon. member is not going to get away with that.

[Mr. Castleden.]

Mr. CASTLEDEN: And probably I shall not get an answer to my question.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend does not need to worry about that either. I was describing the process of labour negotiation in this country. I do not know neither does my hon. friend or he would not have asked the question what will be the outcome until this particular organization has made its case before the regional board in Alberta. If they feel that an appeal to the national board would be a just exercise of their rights, no doubt they will appeal. I do not think either my hon. friend or myself can answer a question of that description.

Mr. WRIGHT: The Minister of Agriculture stated a moment ago that he thought that some of the responsibility for the securing of this help rested with the farm organizations of western Canada, that they should supply some help from the farms to the packing plants. I cannot agree with him about that.

Mr. GARDINER: I did not say that some of the responsibility rested upon them. I said that they had been asked for their cooperation and that they had granted it.

Mr. WRIGHT: Absolutely. It seems to me that they might be made available in seasons of the year when they are not needed on the farms. But there are a number of industries in Canada which are less essential than agriculture.

Mr. GARDINER: Some of the fellows who come out of them would not be of much use, on short notice.

Mr. WRIGHT: They probably would have as much experience in the packing plants as some of the people who are taken from the farms.

Mr. GARDINER: Not at throwing something around as heavy as a hog.

Mr. WRIGHT: I have been through a great many packing plants, and I have not seen any man having to throw around a hog. To-day things are done pretty well by mechanism.

Mr. GARDINER: He is a lot better man if he can do it.

Mr. WRIGHT: No; strength is not the main factor. That is borne out by the fact that a number of women have been taken into these plants and are displacing men. I strongly suggest to the Minister of Labour that he make a survey to discover if there are not other industries from which men can be drawn instead of asking the farmers of western Canada to supply more labour, especially in the summer time.

Mr. MITCHELL: I am not going to get into a discussion of selective service, which has been talked about in this chamber recently for just over a week. But let me tell my hon. friend that when it comes to the organization of man-power, the Department of Labour does not take a back seat to any country, excepting perhaps Great Britain, among the united nations.

Mr. WRIGHT: What happened with respect to labour for the unloading of grain in western Canada a year ago?

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend talks about other industries. As I pointed out the other evening, we are just about at the bottom of the barrel. When nearly six out of every eight people between the ages of fourteen and sixty-five are either engaged in the fighting forces or in avocations necessary to the successful prosecution of the war, it gives some indication of the organization that has taken place of the man-power of this country. I do not know of a better organization to go to in western Canada or in Ontario on a question of this description than those with which the department has dealt; it is essentially a farm problem in its broadest sense. The farmers raise the hogs; the packing plants process them, and we have done everything humanly possible to supply sufficient labour for these purposes.

While I have not the figures in front of me, the contribution made by women in this industry and every other industry in the dominion has been magnificent. I said the other evening that we could not win the war without the contribution which is being made by the women of every one of the united nations.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Do you give them equal pay for it?

Mr. MITCHELL: Let me say also that that contribution has been made possible by the leadership of this government and the cooperation of the people involved. The records indicate that. We sat in this chamber and listened to Madame Chiang Kai-shek when she said that the per capita production of the Canadian people was the highest in the united nations, which is an indication of the organization which has been taking place.

You could not know in advance the number of pigs that would be born this year. As I intimated when my estimates were before the house, I could put 160,000 people to work to-morrow morning in the higher priority industries of the country, which is an indication of the part that the Canadian people are playing in the present war. My hon. friend can rest assured that everything that is humanly possible will be done by the Department of Labour to support those engaged in agriculture.

Mr. GARDINER: In further answer to the hon. member for Yorkton, I have now a set of figures covering a little longer period than those I gave a few moments ago. The payroll on May 13, 1944, was 16,728 in these plants; the payroll on April 1, twenty-nine days earlier than the statement I gave, was 16,164. The difference there is an increase of 564 in the period from April 1 to May 13. That gives an indication of the numbers that the policy which is being followed under the efforts of the Department of Labour has produced in that period. With regard to what was said by the hon. member for Melfort, to the effect that we should find this labour somewhere else, I think he will find, if he discusses the matter with leaders of farm organizations in the west, particularly in Saskatchewan and Alberta, where the problem existed, that they are not inclined to agree, and there is a very good reason why they should not be inclined to agree with the statement that agriculture should not be appealed to on an occasion of this kind to do the best it can to man these plants with labour.

Mr. WRIGHT: I did not say that. I said that during rush seasons on the farm they should not be called upon.

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend said that the department should have been making appeals to somebody else. That is about as near to what he said as I can put it. The Department of Labour, of course, and this department did make appeals to others as well, but the particular appeal was made to the farmers, and the reason why that appeal was made to them was twofold. In the first place, there is no one who knows better how to handle live stock, apart from persons who have been running butcher shops and working in packing plants, than the farmers themselves, those who have been brought up on farms. Almost every farmer knows something about butchering, because he has butchered his own hogs and cattle from time to time and he knows something about it.

Mr. GRAYDON: The farmer has to know something about everything.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. Most of them have some knowledge of most things, and there is one thing they must have that some others have not. They must, if they are to make their way in life on a farm, have a little muscle, and that is necessary, too, around a packing plant. But there is another reason why they are not only prepared to take part in this activity but extremely desirous of doing so, and every farm organization, as a matter of fact, is desirous of helping them to this end. No industry has been more criticized by farmers than the packing industry and there is some reason behind the criticisms; but I venture to say that if one boy from every farm had an opportunity at some time to work in a packing plant for a while he would know more about the preparation of live stock, how to feed it and put it on the market than he does now. He would know more about the handling of it in connection with slaughtering for his own use and otherwise. Not only is every farm organization familiar with the fact that it would be of assistance to the farm home in western Canada to have someone who has had that experience, but farmers are also anxious that there should be a closer association between farm organizations, farmers in general, and the packing industry as it affects themselves than there has been up to the present time.

We hear a great deal of discussion from my hon. friends over in the group across the floor to the effect that all these plants ought to be run by the state.

An hon. MEMBER: Cooperatively.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. Well, the best kind of cooperation I know of is the kind we are getting at the present time, where the farm boys are going into the plants and assisting in the running of them, getting to understand the running of them; and if at any time in the future they do take the notion that they would like to have cooperative plants run by their own people there will be at least some of them who will have had the necessary education to run such plants. Personally I am of the opinion that cooperatively run plants, whether so run as among farmers, or run as between the businessman and the farmers, are superior to any system of state ownership and control that could be set up either in western Canada or in eastern Canada to handle the problem. I am therefore a little surprised to find that two of the leading advocates of state ownership, control and operation of packing plants object to the fact that farmers are cooperating now in running them in western Canada, and no doubt intend to do so.

Mr. WRIGHT: As usual, the minister has set up a straw man and knocked it down. This group has never advocated state ownership of packing plants in western Canada; he knows that. We suggest that they should be run cooperatively for the people who are raising the stock and those who are consuming it.

Mr. GARDINER: The straw man always goes down hard enough to knock you straight up.

Mr. WRIGHT: What is more, I did not suggest that farm organizations in Canada should not cooperate in seeing that labour from the farms was made available to these plants in the season when it was not needed on the farms. That was the wise thing. But I do not think it is a wise thing that the people of western Canada, those engaged in agriculture, should be asked to supply men when they are needed on the farms, when there are other industries which are less essential from which this labour could be drawn. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is all very well to say that; it looks nice when Hansard gets back home. But I would be glad if my hon. friend would tell me where we should get these people. That is the question I want to have answered. Do not pose the question; give me the answer.

An hon. MEMBER: No answer.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: There were three other questions which I wanted the minister to answer. One was with regard to the quantities of meat spoiled that had to be destroyed, another was with regard to sheep, and the third was with regard to the bacon market in Great Britain.

Mr. GARDINER: The quantity of beef that had to be destroyed?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Beef and pork.

Mr. GARDINER: This question was up on my general estimates earlier in the session or on questions across the floor—the question with regard to a certain amount of meat in cold storage in Quebec city. I have in my hand a report made by Inspector G. A. Rose, assistant chief veterinary inspector, who went and made the inspection. This is dated January 4, 1944.

National Harbours Board,
Ottawa, Ont.

Gentlemen, on instruction from the Ottawa office I went to Quebec on January 20 and visited the cold storage warehouse of the National Harbours Board, Quebec.

Mr. LaFrance accompanied me while I examined the following meats which had been defrosted to enable examination:

2 veal carcasses.
1 lamb carcass.
1 mould boneless beef.
1 bologna sausage (visking).
1 meat loaf.
1 beef front quarter.
1 meat loaf.
1 beef front quarter.

I was informed by Mr. LaFrance that these meats had, until forty-eight hours prior to my visit, been stored in room 11A since September 15, 1943, at a temperature of 22° F.

On examination the meats were found to exhibit heavy mould formation on serous and cut surfaces.

In my opinion, if the meats examined were representative of the entire stock that had been stored in room 11A, treatment of the meats should be undertaken to render them fit for use as food since these moulds are generally superficial and not harmful.

The treatment necessary would include defrosting, removal of the mould by scraping and subsequent washing with vinegar or dilute acetic acid.

In some instances where the moulds may have proliferated into slits, gaps, vessels or cuts removal of the part so affected might be necessary.

These operations should be supervised by a person of experience and good judgment.

After defrosting as indicated above the meats should not again be frozen.

Yours very truly,

G. A. Rose,

Assistant Chief Veterinary Inspector.

From the time at which they were stored in the cold storage of the National Harbours Board, Quebec, none of these meats were under the supervision or control of the Department of Agriculture.

On information of owners:

Only 20,000 pounds (all veal) were actually spoiled and unfit for human consumption. The remainder was wiped, restored and part of it is yet in store. There probably was more than 300,000 pounds in store but only 20,000 pounds spoiled.

I understand that is the basis of all the statements or suggestions which were made the other day that hundreds of thousands of pounds of beef had become spoiled during this period. The fact is that some meat was placed for too long a time in a storage that was not suitable for the storage of meat of this kind. When one remembers what was said in this committee a few moments ago with regard to the great quantities of meat that is being turned in to the packing plants across the country in the form of cattle and hogs and finds that 20,000 pounds were spoiled at this particular plant, one is inclined to feel that somebody has done a pretty good job, and I am not saying that it is the government that has done the job. The job has been done by those who are running these cold storages and processing this meat from one end of Canada to the other.

A question was asked as to what the government has been doing in order to provide extra storage. Well, we have had on the statute books since 1922 or probably earlier than that a statute which provides that the government is prepared to pay thirty per cent of the cost of cold storage plants in Canada. When the war began we had considerable cold storage space provided in Canada, much more than we had been utilizing, and we had a shortage of finances with which to proceed at the time and a shortage of material with which to construct cold storages. Therefore, for a time activities under the act were slowed down and for a short period of time they were discontinued; but when a shortage of cold storage space began to develop the government again went actively into the promotion of cold storage under that act, and I was going to say scores—I am not sure of the number, but there has been a considerable number of cold storages that have passed in council in recent months for the payment of the thirty per cent, right from one coast to the other. At the present time cold storages are being constructed in every province for those who are concerned with this end of the business.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The last question had to do with the present wartime salt curing of bacon going to Britain. Is that being continued?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, and will require to be continued so long as we are not able to get properly fitted boats. The storage accommodation on the boats is not as good as it is in peace time, and in so far as the United Kingdom is concerned it is not our responsibility. Under the agreements ever since the war started the British take over the product from Saint John or Montreal. Immediately it goes on the boats it is out of our hands. That is a part of the agreement that probably is not sufficiently emphasized at times. The British take full responsibility for getting the meat across the ocean and for all storage and care of it after it arrives in Britain. We can only get reports on that; we have no responsibility for it.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: We have men carrying on inspection in the United Kingdom?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, we have half a dozen men there.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: It does affect our market.

Mr. PERLEY: At page 3102 of Hansard of yesterday there is an answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Lake Centre. This answer gives information with regard to the grading of hogs. In reading that answer I find that there are many different grades. I have stated before that I do not think the grading system is satisfactory. While it may suit some parts of Canada, possibly the east, I think a lot of improvements could be made. Who grades the hogs and how are the graders selected to do this work? Are there any qualifications, or how do they get the position of grader? Then on the next page of Hansard a reference is made to the differentials that are paid after the bonus system was discontinued. It mentions a differential of forty cents per 100 pounds between A grade and B1 grade carcasses being paid after the discontinuation of the packers' premium. This is how the answer reads:

Following the discontinuation of the packers premium of $1 per head on A grade carcasses as at April 10, 1944, a differential of 40 cents per 100 pounds between A grade and B1 grade carcasses was agreed to, with prices paid for other grades to be determined by, and based on, actual value.

Who sets the differential on the grades under the B1 grade? I should like the minister to catch this last question: Is there a uniform differential paid by the packers throughout Canada? With respect to the question of its being based on actual value of certain grades and that bonuses are paid, who determines the actual value of a graded carcass? Who does the grading?

Mr. GARDINER: The answer to the first question is that the government inspectors do the grading. There is at least one government inspector in each plant and they do the grading.

Mr. PERLEY: What is the qualification?

Mr. GARDINER: The qualification is a lot of experience, knowledge of the product. Practically all the inspectors are graduates in animal husbandry of some of our agricultural colleges. They get their qualifications by that method. The question of grades as submitted in the answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Lake Centre, which was placed on Hansard yesterday, is referred to. I call attention to the fact that under the old system of grading there was C1, C2, C3, D1, D2 and D3. Under the present system there is A, B1, B2 and B3, as there was under the old grading system, but there is one classification of C and one classification of D. The other descriptions of grades are much the same as they were before. They have to do with specialities such as lights, heavies, injured, ridglings, stags and sows. There is not much you can do about the classification of grades there, but there has been a cutting down on the number of grades by making one C and one D as against these C's and three D's as before.

On the question of the establishment of values it will be remembered that the old system was established not by the government but at a meeting held in 1922 between the producers and the representatives of these packing plants. At that time a conference was held, and after discussion a plan was agreed upon. They set up what was known as a swine committee, which acted in connection with the grades over a long period of years. At that time they decided that in order to promote the production of high-grade hogs it would be a good thing to have a premium of $1 paid on select hogs, and this premium was continued on the same basis after rail grading came into effect. That premium of $1 was in addition to what was known as the basic price; and the basic price was the same for B1 hogs as for A hogs. There was no premium on B1 hogs; there was a premium of $1 on A hogs, so that the producer of A hogs got $1 more for his hogs than the producer of B1 hogs.

In January we announced a change in the system of grading, and it took us until April to get the new system into operation. At the same time we announced that there would be a change in the payment of premiums, which in future would be paid by the government. Previously the premiums were paid by the packing plants, but the premiums were obtained out of the transactions in connection with hogs throughout the range of the different grades, by taking from those who brought in undesirable hogs a certain amount of money by means of discounts and paying a similar amount of money to those who brought in selects. In other words, the man who brought in both heavies and selects probably would be discounted on the heavies and paid a premium, from the same money, on his selects. However, if one individual brought in all selects while another brought in all heavies, the money taken from the latter individual would go to make up a fund from which the premiums would be paid to the other. We changed that system; we decided that the government would pay the premiums, just as we have been doing with cheese, and that in future these premiums would be $3 on grade A hogs and $2 on grade B1 hogs.

In our contracts with Britain there is a real differential in the payment for the different grades of bacon coming from these different grades of hogs, so that it was thought a real value should be established in connection with both grade A hogs and grade B1 hogs. Therefore we asked the representatives of the producers on our advisory meat committee to give consideration to the question; we also asked the packing plants to consider it, and as a result of the discussions that took place between the two groups and the representatives of the government the present plan was decided upon. Under this plan we take the $1 which was originally paid as a premium, which was found somewhere in the marketing of all the hogs, and distribute it over both the B1's and the A's, on the basis of an actual value of about fifty cents per 100 pounds of slaughtered hog. We decided that this should be divided in the ratio of ten cents on the B1's and 40 cents on the A's; so that the new price basis is the old basic price plus 10 cents for B1's and 40 cents for A's. In addition the government pays a premium of $3 on the A hog and a premium of $2 on the B1 hog. It was further decided that the $2 and $3 premium should go out in the form of a warrant attached to the settlement the farmer gets from the packing plant. Now he obtains his payment for the hog and the premium at the same time, and it is clearly indicated on the statement that the premium is paid by the government and is in addition to the actual market value of the hogs upon which it is paid.

Mr. PERLEY: Is there then a uniform system of differentials throughout all the packing plants?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, there will be, at a given point. The price will be different in Winnipeg from the price in Toronto, but at each point the price is uniform. The differentials are the same throughout.

Mr. PERLEY: How has it worked out since the change was made on April 10? Is it working to the satisfaction of the producers and those marketing hogs?

Mr. GARDINER: Of course the system has not been in operation very long, but up to date there have been no complaints with regard to it.

Mr. PERLEY: Then would the minister say that the system of grading is generally satisfactory throughout Canada?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, I would think so.

Mr. HLYNKA: I raise no particular objection to the way things have been handled or the way they have been going on during the war period. I believe most of us will agree that in times such as at present it is not so easy to handle everything to the satisfaction of everyone. At the same time we should seek to eliminate all the irregularities and irritations which may be found in the present system in regard to the production and sale of meats. As most hon. members of this committee are aware, I am not an advocate of the nationalization of industry. At the same time I would point out that prior to the war the profits which accrued from the sale of bacon and beef, in particular, went perhaps more to the plants and less to the producers themselves. I have in my hand a pamphlet entitled, "Price Spreads and Profits in the Pork Packing Industry". At page 6 I find this interesting paragraph. This pamphlet was published in 1941—

Mr. MITCHELL: By whom?

Mr. HLYNKA: By John Proskie, B.Sc. (Agr.), M.A., agricultural economist; it was published in Edmonton. I believe that the figures quoted were taken from those issued by the minister's own department and the bureau of statistics. This is what Mr. Proskie has to say:

> During the period 1923 to 1939 inclusive, a seventeen-year period, the packing plants in Canada fulfilled the function of slaughtering and processing in their plants, 84,411,009 animals, which were valued at $1,663,251,100. The average fixed and working capital used by the packers to carry on this colossal business was approximately $58,000,000, of which approximately $30,000,000 was fixed in the form of land, buildings and equipment, and the balance in workable capital. The gross return on capital realized by the packers during the seventeen-year period, after labour, management and cost of animals and materials was paid for, was $272,085,154, or an average of $16,005,009 per year. Taking into account the total number of animals killed and taking the gross profits into account, it averaged at $3.22 per animal, a fairly substantial spread, after labour, management and cost of materials used were paid for.

It seems to me that prior to the war something should have been done to see that the farmer and not the packing plant was the beneficiary. It is all very well to speak about the marketing situation and the production of meats during a war period, and the minister has painted a fairly rosy picture of the situation which some people may take at its face value. But on looking through the Financial Post of May 20 I find an article by Kenneth Wilson, Ottawa correspondent, who went to Great Britain to see for himself how things were going on in connection with marketing. He makes this statement:

> One authority with whom I talked expects that two months after the European war Denmark will be ready to negotiate with Britain on post-war bacon sales. The same authority thought the Danes would be in the British market in a big way within two years of war's end.

Farther down he says:

> They emphasize one important point, seldom discussed in this country: namely that Denmark will always have the edge on Canada, so long as the bulk of Canadian export bacon comes from grain-fed hogs and has to compete with Danish bacon which is complementary to a dairy industry.

And he makes this statement:

> The important point is that Canadian bacon, as now delivered in Britain, does not, in the view of the trade, rank as high as that of Denmark, even in spite of the strides made in the Canadian industry in recent years.

He gives the figures of our exports down to the end of 1943 and goes on to say that we may be able until the end of the war to sell about 400,000,000 pounds annually. He then says:

> Some of the big distributors with whom I talked remarked on the deterioration in quality of Canadian bacon.

On more than one occasion the members of this committee have heard the minister express the view that the Canadian farmer was holding his own in this particular field. As a matter of fact many Canadian farmers are being docked for overweight in order that a better grade of bacon may be produced. When that happens it is rather discouraging to read statements of this sort.

Mr. MITCHELL: Is Mr. Kenneth Wilson an expert on agriculture?

Mr. HLYNKA: I do not know Mr. Kenneth Wilson personally, but the way in which he sets out his information in this article—

Mr. MITCHELL: What paper?

Mr. HLYNKA: The Financial Post of May 20, 1944.

An hon. MEMBER: You cannot disagree with that.

Mr. HLYNKA: The reason why I attach the value I do to this article is that it seems to be compiled fairly well, and the statistical data he gives checks with what I have read in other publications.

Mr. BLAIR: Who publishes the Financial Post?

Mr. HLYNKA: I am sure that the publisher of the Financial Post is not a Social Crediter; he may be a Liberal. The fact is that when our farmers produced bacon which was too fat they were docked for overweight. With the experience gained in this war the farmers of this country should be assured a post-war market. This article states that prior to the war Denmark filled about sixty per cent of the needs of the British bacon market, Canada filling only from eighteen to twenty per cent. Great Britain should be Canada's best bacon market. But unless we are able to produce the quality of bacon that the British people want to buy, our farmers will find themselves in the position in which they were prior to this war. Every hon. member from western Canada knows that the situation was desperate at that time, and statements have been made on the floor of this chamber that we will never go back to pre-war days. Yet the situation seems to be heading that way. I suggest to the minister that he and his experts should see to it that matters are worked out in such a way as to guarantee a fair share of the national income after the war to our farmers.

I do not want to raise any particular objections to the present state of affairs at this time because I think we must all recognize that to run any department during war time is not an easy task. The Social Credit party is not endeavouring to fight a Saskatchewan election in this chamber, although other gentlemen may seem to be concerned with that particular issue at this time. We are merely placing our views on this subject before the committee because we believe that this matter is of importance to the farmers of Canada.

I should like to say a word about beef marketing and the embargo placed upon the movement of beef to the United States. Not long ago I had an opportunity of visiting our good neighbours to the south, and not once during my four days' stay there did I see beef on the menus of the restaurants. Yet this afternoon the hon. member for Lethbridge and the minister were matching arguments as to the true situation concerning beef. When the minister and his department found that they were unable to market all the beef produced, surely they could have made arrangements within twenty-four hours to sell to the United States what beef they could not otherwise dispose of.

The farmers of Ontario were calling mass meetings and getting together from one end of the province to the other, sending resolutions to this government to lift this particular restriction so that they could sell their beef to the people in the United States who needed it at that time. But no action was taken. Our people were told to take their cattle back home when they brought them to the market. That sort of situation cannot possibly be justified. Surely we should have taken advantage of every opportunity to sell what we had to sell, and the people of this country are in a position to produce more if more is required.

The Minister of Agriculture said that he was unable to forecast what was going to happen in the future, that everything depended on the law of supply and demand. That is an old story, Mr. Chairman, and it will not stand the test now. In the first place our people must have all the food that they require, and our farmers are ready to produce all the food that our people can consume. But in order that the farmers may buy the commodities which they need in order to get along, they must be able to sell some of their surplus products to other countries. That subject has been discussed by members of this group on many occasions. The government has always maintained that unless we are able to export our surplus products to other countries, then our own people in Canada must go hungry because we shall have no money. After this war we must get down to brass tacks and assure the people of Canada that they will never, never go hungry again because we can produce all the foodstuffs that we need and still have a surplus to export to other nations. That is the first thing we must ensure. Second, we must be ready to exchange our surpluses with other nations. This talk that goes on from time to time to the effect that everything must be based on gold or some other fictitious basis will not hold water after this war. Mr. Wilson, when he was speaking to one of these gentlemen, was given a plain indication of what might be expected. He was told: "We will buy all the bacon and cheese and wheat you want to sell us, provided that you buy a like amount of British products in return." We must recognize the fact that exchange of goods is the basis of all trade. To repeat, we must first of all produce to satisfy the needs of our own people. Second, we must export our surpluses in exchange for the goods we need. If the minister can assure our people of those two things, this committee and the people of Canada will not blame him for the difficulties that may arise.

Mr. BURTON: It is quite apparent from the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture that his idea of cooperation does not agree with that of some of the rest of us. I am quite certain that we farmers and all our farm organizations are prepared to give the packing plants all the cooperation the minister speaks of under the present circumstances, but we regret we did not have leadership coming from him in trying to bring about cooperation when the packing plants were making the greatest profits in their history while the farmers were receiving almost nothing for the things they produced.

Mr. GARDINER: When was that?

Mr. BURTON: To go back to that, it was when the Minister of Agriculture was premier of Saskatchewan.

Mr. GARDINER: No; in 1932 I was leader of the opposition. Your party was in power in Saskatchewan at that time.

Mr. BURTON: We hear this talk about cooperation now when we farmers are already overburdened and have little to cooperate with. But when there is talk of cooperation to ensure that the farmers may share in the wealth they produce, too often the talk of cooperation is missing. However, that is not what I rose to say.

The hon. member for Vegreville might think I am making a pre-election speech because I really rose to express my appreciation to the Minister of Agriculture for the information which he has given us under this item. He has given us much clearer information than did the Minister of Labour, who left me up in the air; I could not tell, after he got through, whether or not women in the packing plants are getting equal pay with the men for equal work. The Minister of Agriculture did a better job because I at least understood some of the things he told us.

I am going to make another statement to which some hon. members may take exception. If the prices we farmers are receiving for our beef cattle to-day had been received during the years gone by, there would have been little if any complaint. Only twice in the forty years that I have been on the farm in the district from which I come have there been such handsome returns from the production of beef cattle as there are to-day.

Mr. EVANS: Perhaps you did not raise the right kind.

Mr. BURTON: Both of those times were times when we as individuals and as a nation had to pay a tremendous price. Why is it only in war time that we can get a decent return for the products we produce on the farm? That is what strikes us farmers. In between these two wars there were times when you could produce cattle and keep your head above water. But it was only in these two wars that, taking all costs into consideration, the farmers could get a good price for their cattle.

In the discussion which took place this afternoon between the minister and the hon. member for Lethbridge, one thing which I did not think the minister entirely cleared up was the position of those people who have been feeding cattle. Everyone remembers that only a few years ago farmers and feeders were called upon to exert themselves to the limit to increase production of beef and pork. Feeders were called upon as well as the rest of us farmers to do what they could. I submit that when these people were prepared not only to carry on their usual operations but to expand them, provision should have been made to enable them to "take the bumps," so that they could operate properly and efficiently. We were told that meat was needed. Meat was raised. We were told that it was of the greatest importance that we farmers produce as much as possible, and feeders were included in that class. I might point out that when the Minister of Munitions and Supply needs something for the war effort, he sees to it that those who are called upon to produce for the good of the nation are protected against loss. Why was a similar arrangement not made on behalf of feeders of beef cattle?

There is another point in this connection which seems strange to me. We had a publicity campaign the object of which was to have us produce more and more, but apparently the increased volume which resulted caught the department entirely unawares. They seemed to know nothing about it until the glut was so heavy that they could not move any more; then they realized that something was going on.

If I have a criticism to make of the department it is in that connection. I believe that they should have had their ear to the ground and that their eyesight should have been a little keener to know what was going on and make a certain amount of provision for it.

In connection with beef, the minister mentioned the different grades—blue label, red label and so on—which go into the meat-handling establishments. It seems strange to me, however, since I have come to the city, that the beef which has been served to me almost invariably reminds me of the kind of beef which came from cows that were in the condition to which the minister referred this afternoon. It is a long way from the kind of beef to which I was accustomed out west.

Mr. JACKMAN: You aristocrats!

Mr. BURTON: If you go to the meat-handling establishments you can call for certain grades of beef. When we come to pork, the minister's department seems to have a fairly effective inspection of the plants which we supply. I can assure him that it is not a very good feeling when, upon delivering your hogs, you find that some of them are three pounds overweight and you are docked three dollars, or at the rate of a dollar a pound.

Mr. GARDINER: That is all gone.

Mr. BURTON: That is all gone, but it is something we had to contend with, and some of us farmers do not forget these things so easily.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The grading is tougher now.

Mr. GARDINER: The government did not do that.

Mr. BURTON: We were docked at that rate, and not so long ago. I could still hunt up the old slips to show you.

Mr. GARDINER: That was under an arrangement entered into between the producers and the packers; it was not a government arrangement.

Mr. BURTON: Yes. But here is the point. We have to operate under these arrangements as they vary from time to time. There is still quite a loss to the farmer if he cannot get his hogs off at the right time. They are graded as they go through the packing plants. I quite agree that grading should take place and I am content that this inspection should go on, but the point I would bring to the minister's attention is that we are graded so fine when we produce our hogs and deliver them to the plant. A railway man told me at one time that if it continued the way it is now we farmers would soon be sending our hogs to market by parcel post, because it was almost impossible to get them fine enough for the grade line, and consequently we would be shoving them off individually instead of in lots. But when consumers of meat go to the butcher shops or the meat-handling establishments, where can they ask for the thick smooths, the extra heavies, the B-1's, the AA's, and so on? We take our cut when we deliver a hog which weighs a few pounds overweight, but neither I nor any other consumer has the privilege of stepping into a butcher shop and saying, "I want a slice of bacon or a cut of ham from an extra heavy hog". That is a condition of things to which we object, and object most strenuously. We accept our cut in an endeavour to get the standard of bacon up to what the department says it must be so as to carry on our export trade.

Mr. GARDINER: I am sure the hon. member does not want to misrepresent the matter. There are different grades of bacon in the butcher shop. I believe there is a difference of $3 or so between top grades and seconds.

Mr. BURTON: Quite true. You have side bacon, different kinds of bacon, and different kinds of pork that you can buy. In the case of beef, which is finished up to a certain degree, you have red label beef and blue label beef, and again you have the ordinary butcher variety, as one may say; but as regards pork there is no such choice, and the consumer has not that benefit. That is one of the points I wish to bring to the minister's attention.

Mr. CARDIFF: With reference to the minister's statement yesterday, who sets the difference in price between the different grades of hogs? At page 3103 of yesterday's Hansard the minister made the following statement:

> Following the discontinuation of the packers premium of $1 per head on A grade carcasses as at April 10, 1944, a differential of 40 cents per 100 pounds between A grade and B1 grade carcasses was agreed to, with prices paid for other grades to be determined by, and based on, actual value.

Who sets that actual value?

Mr. GARDINER: There is really no established price on all the different grades of hogs. The price of heavies may be a little higher at one time than another because there is a scarcity of them and a demand for that type of pork. They may vary, but there is no definite set price that must be paid for heavies in any particular market. If there are too many heavies the price will be lower, and if there are not enough heavies it will go up somewhat. The variation takes place, but there is no hard and fast rule. As a matter of fact, competition on the market retains the position pretty well. People buying for a particular market bid against one another, and the tendency is for prices to be much the same as a result of the experience they have on the market. But there is no one who says that such and such has to be the price.

Mr. CARDIFF: I do not think the minister has answered the question. I am still at a loss to know how the price is set. That is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. GARDINER: The basic price of hogs since the war started has been pretty well set by the agreement with Britain which takes from seventy to eighty per cent of the product, and that has set the floor price ever since we entered into these contracts. Early in the war, when there was a scarcity of pork on this market, because we were taking great quantities off and sending them to Great Britain, the price of pork sold in Canada was much higher than the price obtained for the pork that went overseas, and the price on this market therefore averaged somewhere between those two prices. Since we have had price control we have set a ceiling for pork, not for hogs but for pork, and we have gradually raised the price of the British contract until to-day there is not a very wide margin between the price that can be obtained on this market when you are at the ceiling and the price that is obtained for the pork which goes into bacon and ham that go overseas. So that there is little variation in the price. It varies a little up and down, probably above five cents, but that is as much leeway as they can take between the ceiling and what is now the floor constituted by the agreement. Therefore the price stays almost at one level. But that is the method by which it is set. It is the relationship between the ceiling price and the price we are obtaining for the seventy or eighty per cent of the hog products sent to Britain.

Mr. PERLEY: What is the basis used for arriving at the penalties on the lower grades, and where does the packer come in in assessing the penalty or arriving at it? Does the packer have a say?

Mr. GARDINER: There are no penalties now. They were done away with in the present system of grading. There is a price established in the manner I have indicated, a basic price so far as B1's are concerned. There is a higher valuation placed upon A's and there is a lower valuation upon the grades that run down from B1. When you get into the heavies and lights the price that is established there is governed by the supply of them into the market as related to the B1 price. Most people prefer what comes from cuts of B1 hogs, but there are people who want the heavier hog. It depends on the number of people who want the heavy hog as compared with those who want B1 as to what the price will be for heavy hogs.

Mr. WRIGHT: Is it not a fact that most of the pork consumed in Canada is from the light and heavy grades? Most of the export, the seventy per cent of exports, is usually from A and B1 grades, and the packers I believe receive probably more money from lights and heavies sold on the domestic market than they do for what is exported. Is the money made on lights and heavies on the domestic market used to subsidize the export, or is it clear profit to the packers? I ask that question because they do sell these grades at a higher price on the domestic market than they get for the export.

Mr. GARDINER: Not very much higher now. They did earlier in the war. The ceiling price based on the actual price that did exist in the fall of 1941 has been established under the prices board. Since that time there has been very little upward movement. At the same time, there has been every year an increase in the contract price of the pork that is going to Britain, which has resulted in the floor established by that agreement gradually drawing closer to the ceiling. Today it is so close to the ceiling that there is not very much room for variation, and while lights may be bought at a slightly lower price than B1, which would leave a wider margin as between the ceiling and the price purchased at, and heavies may be bought at a lower price, still my understanding is that under the ceiling prices set, there is a lower price set for heavies, but there is no lower ceiling price for lights, so that there is a possibility of a person purchasing lights and making a bigger profit than he would if he purchased A's and B's. Of course, we are anxious to get A's and B's into the plants where they will be processed and sent overseas. That is one of the reasons for paying a $3 premium on A's and a $2 premium on B's. They must be inspected by our inspectors before that premium is paid, and that means that most of it must come into the plants where it can be processed and sent overseas. But the other product sold on this market is ruled by competition in buying and selling.

Mr. PERLEY: Is it not a fact that the packers get a certain quantity of high-class bacon out of C and D grade hogs?

Mr. GARDINER: The statistics show that they do not. The bacon and ham that come out of A's and B's are practically all covered by high standards of bacon.

Mr. PERLEY: Is there any particular way of checking the packers?

Mr. GARDINER: It is all inspected at seaboard and checked as to grade.

Mr. PERLEY: The inspectors must be pretty good, because I happened to be on the train with some of the representatives of the packers coming to Ottawa on one occasion and they had samples of bacon that had been taken from five or six different weights of hogs. You could not tell the difference. In fact they admitted to me that they could take so much of A or a higher grade of bacon out of a hog weighing from 250 pounds down. They did not make any bones about it. That was not last year or this year, but a year or so ago.

Mr. GARDINER: I think that is the old story, but you have to trim a lot of that hog before you get the bacon out of it, and it may be sold at a very much lower price than the other.

Mr. PERLEY: They could sell a lot of that right at home. As one hon. member stated a while ago, I think the Canadian people are eating a lot of that stuff and paying more for it.

Mr. GARDINER: Somebody is eating it.

Mr. SENN: There is one more point I should like to bring up before this item passes. The minister referred to it a moment ago. Since the new regulations came into effect and a $3 premium is being paid for grade A bacon and $2 for grade B the local butchers have been practically put out of business. I know the minister has had representations made to him by the local butchers because they find themselves unable to buy their hogs and pay the premium owing to the hogs not being graded. Representation was made to me from one particular county asking that a local grader be provided if a hundred hogs or more could be found in that locality for grading purposes. If that were done the farmers could sell their hogs to the local butchers who in turn could sell to the local trade in the smaller towns and villages, and the farmer would enjoy the premium. In nine cases out of ten if the farmer does not get the premium he will not sell to the local butcher. Has the minister given any thought to any scheme which would help out the local butcher in this way? As conditions are now it means that they are being practically put out of business. The trade is all being driven into the hands of the packing houses. It is all very well to say that we need the hogs for bacon for Britain. It seems too bad that the Canadian people have to eat the lower grades of pork all the time, either lights or heavies or other classes which can be purchased and which would not get any premium in any event.

Mr. GARDINER: We did give consideration to that matter when the present plan was set up. The provision we made was that wherever an average of fifty hogs are being slaughtered each week—

Mr. SENN: In one plant?

Mr. GARDINER: In one plant at any one place. If two or three butchers could make arrangements to have their hogs slaughtered at one place the government would provide an inspector who would check the hogs. There must be some limitation somewhere. It is not possible to have government inspectors for half a dozen a week or ten a week, and the point at which we made the division was fifty. We say that where there is an average of fifty hogs a week being slaughtered we make provision for inspection. There are some places where it is most difficult even to carry out that arrangement, and that is because of the nature of the plant that is provided in which the killing is done. It is impossible to have killing done just in any place, out in a shed that is put up on some farm or in some small place where the facilities are not such as would take care of the sanitary conditions. These hogs must be properly inspected and proper care taken with regard to disease before they are turned into the packing plants where food is being provided for so many people. Some care has to be taken with regard to that. Apart from that I think the matter has been dealt with fairly satisfactorily. In the last few months I have found some complaint in Ontario. I have had butchers come to me, half a dozen at a point, and discuss the matter, but most of the difficulties that have arisen have been corrected, to a degree at least.

After having said that I will say that I think most butchers in most parts of Canada are getting their supplies in the same way that they always got them, and that under the ceiling prices which are arranged in the different parts of Canada they can buy possibly mostly off-grade hogs, and can pay a sufficiently high price for them under the ceilings to be able to carry on their butcher business and cater to the kind of trade which they have in their district. I quite agree that in places where there is a packing plant and where there is a number of people who kill in a small way roundabout it is more difficult for those men to carry on than it is in some other sections; but again it is easier for those men to make arrangements to have their hogs killed in the packing plant if there is one in their vicinity. Therefore the matter is taken care of in that way. One difficulty that I have run into, and where it has been almost impossible to make satisfactory arrangements, is where persons desire to kill in plants whose facilities are such that the packing plants would not allow those hogs to come in for processing because of what might happen in connection with their whole food products.

Mr. SENN: I was not making a plea for hogs that are going into the packing plants after having been slaughtered. I fully realize the difficulties that are in the way. It is very difficult to get government graders to go out to all these small places, but I had a proposition put up to me the other day. I do not know how the minister would consider it, but this is what it was. Some local man who is a fairly good judge of hog carcasses or the agricultural representative in the county could go around one day a week to eight or ten of those houses that are slaughtering for local consumption, and if he grades those hogs and shows that they are entitled to a premium as A's or B's that could be accomplished without very much difficulty. There are usually men in each of those places who are perhaps just as good judges of hog carcasses as the government graders. They could be hired very easily as part-time inspectors, say one day a week, to go around and grade the hogs. If that were done it would be very much to the benefit of the local butcher who has been carrying on a butcher business for years and who now finds himself in difficulty because the only type of hogs that he can get is, as the minister says, the off-grade hogs.

Mr. QUELCH: Last year I received a complaint about the grading of hog carcasses. This year I received a number of complaints about grading dockage. It has become very severe. I received one letter which said that a 740 pound hog had been paid for at the rate of three cents a pound. Could the minister explain what a hog like that is used for? I should have thought if it were used for anything it would be worth more than three cents a pound. Is it rendered down or used as sausage meat?

Mr. GARDINER: It would be rendered down. I am afraid I had more trouble myself with a hog of that kind recently than the gentleman who wrote the letter. I had one that I estimated weighed 800 pounds. I sent him in to the cooperative at Winnipeg and lost him altogether.

Mr. QUELCH: What happens to the hog?

Mr. GARDINER: I have not been able to find out what happened to that one.

Mr. TUSTIN: I should like to ask a question with regard to the deductions that are made on hogs below grade B. As the minister said a few moments ago the $3 that used to be deducted has been wiped out under the new system. Is that in reality a fact? I am given to understand that in many cases where hogs are graded below B the deductions are greater than they were before. I am not certain as to whether there are as many grades now as there were before the present system came in. Apparently the government has set a basic price for grades A and B. What reductions are made for grades below B? If the regulations are not set by the government, who sets them, and are those reductions left entirely in the hands of the packing plants?

Mr. GARDINER: I am afraid I would not be in a position to give the prices for the different grades as they are established on the different markets, other than that the B1's on the Toronto market are, I think, about $17.25 at the present time, while the B2's and B3's are about twenty-five cents under that figure and the C's are about $16.60. I have the average prices for last week, as follows:

A	$17 60
B1	17 20
B2	16 95
B3	16 95
C	15 95
D	15 70
Light	15 70

Mr. JACKMAN: Would the minister amplify the statement he made yesterday to the effect that to-day we are sending Britain as much bacon and ham as she got from all the other countries of the world before the war. What was the total consumption of Britain in normal pre-war years? Then may I ask a further question. If Canada should be fortunate enough to send 900,000,000 pounds of bacon this year, would that have any effect on the four-year contract, which extends to 1947? Would that lessen the amount we might send under the present contract during the next three years?

Mr. GARDINER: The quantity consumed by Britain the year before the war began was about 1,400,000,000 pounds. Of course she is not consuming that much now; her people are rationed. I have not the exact figures before me as to the British consumption at present, and what part of that consumption we supply, though I could obtain them. The Americans are sending some, but the greater part is sent from this country. I understand that about sixty-two or sixty-three per cent of their hog products comes from Canada, but about eighty per cent of the bacon and ham is sent from Canada. The Americans are sending more of the fat type of hog in the form of pork than we are sending from this country.

On the other question, the answer is that it would not make any difference in succeeding years if we should send over 900,000,000 pounds this year. Under the new agreement which is being negotiated we would still supply 500,000,000 pounds next year, as a minimum; and if they required as much next year as this year we could send over another 900,000,000 pounds next year if we had it. I do not know whether the hon. member was in the house this afternoon when I corrected the statement I made last evening. I said I had been wrong in stating that final agreement had been reached with regard to the years 1946 and 1947. I discovered this morning that those negotiations are not complete, and that we are not sure of the quantities and prices for those years. As far as 1944 and 1945 are concerned, however, while I doubt if we shall send over 900,000,000 pounds this year, though we may come fairly close to it, even if we do we shall still have 500,000,000 pounds to send over next year, and anything more Britain requires in addition.

Mr. STIRLING: But still this is to be a four-year contract?

Mr. GARDINER: We are hoping it will be. We may have to make some adjustments; discussions are going on, but we are hoping that it will be a four-year contract.

Mr. JACKMAN: Could the minister amplify at all what may happen in 1946 and 1947? If he cannot say definitely that 500,000,000 pounds will be the objective, could he say whether it will be more or less than that amount?

Mr. GARDINER: In spite of what was read by the hon. member for Vegreville, I am quite satisfied in my own mind that Britain will still want at least 500,000,000 pounds in 1946. I should be sufficiently satisfied on that point that if we could not make a satisfactory agreement now covering the four years, we should not be in too much of a hurry. Conditions that may exist three or four years from now are uncertain so far as the British are concerned, as they are uncertain so far as we are concerned, and I would not be in favour of agreeing to an arrangement now which in two years we might find not in the interests of our people. If it gets too far over in one direction I do not think it would be good policy on our part to enter into an agreement now for the longer period of time. If it gets to the point where we think it will be to the advantage of everyone concerned to have the agreement made now for the longer period, of course we shall sign the agreement.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Then do I understand that there is not a four-year contract at the present time?

Mr. GARDINER: At the moment there is not a four-year contract signed; I corrected that statement to-day, and said that the final negotiations had not been completed.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Then what are we operating under at the present time?

Mr. GARDINER: We are operating under the two-year contract for 900,000,000 pounds.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Signed when?

Mr. GARDINER: Some time about February, I think.

Mr. QUELCH: Yesterday the minister expressed great surprise that hon. members did not know that an assurance had been given for the next four years, saying that it had been advertised all across the country. Now we are told that the contract is for only two years. Has he been advertising all across the country that it is a four-year contract?

Mr. GARDINER: I said that it had been advertised across the country that a four-year contract was under negotiation. Last night I thought I would be able to say to-day that it had been completed, but I find it has not.

Mr. QUELCH: Then is the minister in a position to give an absolute assurance that there will be a market and that we shall be able to maintain the price, despite the fact that the contract is for only two years? Certainly he was very much surprised yesterday that hon. members did not know of the four-year contract. To-day we are told that the contract is not in existence, so that apparently the hon. members who spoke yesterday were right.

Mr. GARDINER: Of course yesterday hon. members were not talking about a four-year contract; they were talking in general terms about assurances having been given the farmers that there would be a market. I dealt with more than hogs yesterday; I said that there was a two-year contract on eggs, a two-year contract on cheese, a four-year contract under negotiation in connection with hogs, which I thought was nearer conclusion than it is, and also a contract under discussion with regard to beef. All these matters are being considered by the government. It is not a question of losing sight of any of these things.

Mr. QUELCH: But we were arguing that the assurance should be for a longer period than two years, because a two-year period does not guarantee a farmer against the costs involved. We were urging that a four-year guarantee should be given. Now, even though a four-year contract has not been consummated, the minister does feel in a position to give the farmers the assurance that there will be a good market for the next four years?

Mr. GARDINER: I will give the same assurance I gave last evening, upon which I based the argument to which reference is now being made. I said that the Prime Minister had announced by radio, and other ministers had announced, that we were to have floor prices under farm products. That is the real assurance. That does not mean necessarily that we shall be able to sell the product at that price; it may mean that we shall have to take money out of the treasury after the war in order to give the farmer the floor return, whether or not the market can provide that price.

Mr. QUELCH: And I suppose it may mean that the guaranteed price will apply only to a certain quota. It may not mean that you will take an unlimited quantity at that price.

Mr. GARDINER: At the moment I should not like to say whether or not it may mean quotas; that is a matter which will have to be dealt with later. The main guarantee is that there will be floor prices under farm products.

Item agreed to.

Dairy products board—administration, $21,690.

Mr. QUELCH: Will the winter rates be continued during the summer months?

Mr. GARDINER: The rates were announced some months ago. The rate on whole milk, fluid milk, for the summer months will be thirty-five cents in the areas in which it was fifty cents in the winter time and twenty-five cents in those areas where it was twenty-five cents in the winter time. So far as canned milk is concerned, the rate will be fifteen cents as against thirty cents which was paid in the winter months. The rate on cheese is twenty cents all year as against the thirty cent rate in the winter last year and nothing at all in the summer. The rate on butterfat is ten cents all the year through this year, and it was ten cents in the winter last year. It is correct to say that the rates are not as high on fluid milk, cheese and canned milk as they were in the winter last year, but they are higher on all these commodities than they were in the summer last year.

Mr. QUELCH: There will be the same rate on butterfat all the year?

Special products board — administration, $50,190.

Mr. WRIGHT: Some time ago I was inquiring with regard to participation certificates which were issued on purchases of alfalfa seed for export. When were these participation certificates authorized and what are the conditions governing them?

Mr. GARDINER: If my memory serves me aright, I placed on Hansard, either by way of an answer to a question or at the time the estimates were up, a list of those who were purchasing alfalfa seed.

Mr. WRIGHT: There was nothing placed on the record with respect to the regulations under which participation certificates were issued. Were they issued to all growers from whom the seed was purchased, or were they issued only to growers from whom seed was purchased for export? There was considerable difficulty about the matter in certain sections of the country, and it was stated that participation certificates had not been issued to all growers.

Mr. GARDINER: My understanding is that participation certificates were issued to all farmers who sold seed to the persons contained in the list placed on the record.

Mr. WRIGHT: Was it compulsory to issue participation certificates for all seed purchased after the date the order came into effect?

Mr. GARDINER: There seems to be some doubt as to whether it was compulsory. I imagine a man could sell his product outright if he wished to do so. I can sell my wheat outside the ordinary elevators at any price I like; I can dispose of it completely without getting any participation certificate. The same principle prevails here. If a man sells to a concern which is licensed by the government, he may get a participation certificate, but there is nothing to prevent his selling to anyone else.

Mr. WRIGHT: I do not know whether my information is correct, but I am told that some of these firms were purchasing seed outright and not issuing certificates. I was wondering whether they could do that.

Mr. GARDINER: I think they can if the farmer is satisfied to sell it. It is just the same as it was when we were pooling in the west. But the farmer has a right to get a participation certificate in advance if he desires.

Mr. WRIGHT: It seems to me that it should have been compulsory upon these people to issue participation certificates for the alfalfa they purchased after the date of the order. A number of farmers did not understand the situation thoroughly, and the information I have is that they sold their grain and then found out afterwards they could have obtained participation certificates which would have been worth considerable to-day. I am pointing this out to the minister in order that he may make an investigation. If the facts are as I have stated, in another year he should see that certificates are issued to all farmers from whom seed is purchased by the firms authorized to purchase. That would be the fair way to do it.

Mr. SENN: I suppose if a farmer did not want to take a participation certificate there was no reason why he should take it. Most of the farmers in my district did take participation certificates after the new regulations came out. The special products board quite early in the season, although not early enough, took over the export of seeds from Canada. They also set the price at which they would buy seed for export. Unfortunately that price was considerably below the retail ceiling price set by the wartime prices and trade board. The result was that the primary dealer, who bought the seed from the farmer, gave it a preliminary cleaning and then passed it on to the next dealer, usually a wholesaler, had to buy on the basis of the export prices which had been set by the special products board and which, as I have said, were less than the ceiling prices.

It is true that they set prices at the seaboard for different classes of seed such as alsike, red clover and alfalfa, and the primary dealers were forced to buy in accordance with those prices. They had no idea how much of the seed they purchased would go into the domestic trade and how much into export. There was a good deal of dissatisfaction among the farmers because they realized that the prices being paid were lower than retail ceiling prices.

It is true that participation certificates were issued and the farmers expect to get something from these, but I believe there was little if any red clover seed exported, so that those participation certificates will be valueless. It is equally true that there was very little alfalfa exported, so that those participation certificates will not have much value. I suppose it is a little too early in the season to ask the minister what those participation certificates will bring to those who received them. I understand that a certain amount of alsike seed has been exported or will be exported before the season is over, and there will be a return to the farmers in that event. Perhaps the minister could give us an estimate as to what these participation certificates will be worth.

I think it is unfair to lay the blame upon the primary dealer for the lower prices that were paid. He had to buy in accordance with the export prices, and if any profit was made it did not accrue to him. It accrued to the larger houses who recleaned the seed and then sold it to the retail trade. I think it is only fair to the primary dealers to say this. I believe the minister will agree with me that if any blame was to be attached to anyone, it was owing to the fact that the special products board made more or less of a mistake in not placing a high enough price upon export seed.

Mr. GARDINER: All I can say is that there is an established price as has been suggested, and the dealer can pay any price at all up to that price. He gives an undertaking to give a participation certificate in any case where the farmer desires to have it, although he is not compelled to do so.

Mr. SENN: They did so in my district.

Mr. GARDINER: In some cases he pays a price somewhat below the top price that might be paid. My understanding is that he gets one-eighth of a cent a pound by way of commission for issuing the certificate. I would point out that grass seed is a thing that farmers buy as well as sell and I hope that they are not being billed any more for it than I have been billed if they want to plant it to make a pasture.

Mr. SENN: There is a price ceiling.

Mr. GARDINER: It is a pretty high ceiling.

Mr. WRIGHT: How does that price ceiling compare with the price received last year for alfalfa seed by the cooperatives in western Canada?

Mr. GARDINER: I was billed thirty-seven cents a pound for alfalfa.

Mr. WRIGHT: The ceiling this year was thirty-seven cents.

[Mr. Senn.]

Mr. SENN: The retail price as set by the prices board in lots of thirty-one pounds was thirty-seven cents for alfalfa, twenty-nine cents for alsike, thirty-four cents for red clover, early double cut; single cut, thirty-five cents.

Mr. GARDINER: That is commercial grass.

Mr. SENN: Of course, if the minister were using fancy grades it would make a difference, but the average farmer is not using that kind of grade. As long as it is clear of weed seeds, that is all he desires, provided that the seed is vital. The only point I wish to make is this. I think somebody did make a pretty handsome profit on the seed that went into domestic use in the country because the price ceiling is high enough to allow that. I know that in some cases the seed was not sold as high as the ceiling. In my own village it was not, but they made a handsome profit just the same. I should not like to see the primary dealers, who are performing a useful service to the farmer in collecting, cleaning and marketing the seed, blamed for paying a price that was too low.

Subsidies to producers of food products, $47,600,000.

Mr. NOSEWORTHY: Can the minister give any more definite information than was given yesterday in reply to a question by the hon. member for York-Sunbury as to the subsidy paid on potatoes?

Mr. GARDINER: No. I think it was agreed yesterday that that was a question which would have to be asked when the prices board estimates are before the committee.

Mr. WRIGHT: Is there a detailed break-down of these subsidies? I am not asking the minister to read it, but perhaps it might be placed on the record.

Mr. GARDINER: The break-down is as follows:

Payment of subsidies by agricultural food board on products delivered to distributors and manufacturers during fiscal year ending March 31, 1944.

(Refund made in April for March deliveries)

	To April 30, 1944
Fluid milk at 25 cents	$ 2,632,908 82
at 55 cents	6,289,085 60
Total fluid milk	$ 8,921,994 42
Butterfat at 8 cents	15,954,297 21
at 10 cents	3,050,353 30
Total butterfat	$19,004,650 51

Concentrated milk at 30 cents...	$ 638,675 61
Concentrated milk, March and April, 1943, at 25 cents.....	234,065 52
Total concentrated milk.....	$ 872,741 13
Cheddar cheese milk at 30 cents.	$ 1,171,557 64
Total milk and milk products..	$29,970,943 70
Canning crops.....	$ 945,441 06
Berries for jam.....	$ 261,025 06
Grand total.....	$31,177,409 82

Mr. STIRLING: How is the difference between that $31,000,000 odd and the $47,000,000 made up?

Mr. GARDINER: The $31,000,000 was for last year. The $47,000,000 odd is the estimate for the coming year. The subsidy payments estimated for 1944-45 are as follows:

Subsidy payments estimated for 1944-45

Subsidy	Rate	Estimated cost
Butterfat used for creamery butter.....	10 cents per pound butterfat.....	$28,200,000
Fluid milk.....	25 cents and 35 cents (summer)..... 25 cents and 55 cents (winter).....	11,200,000
Cheese.....	20 cents per hundred pounds.....	4,200,000
Concentrated milk.....	15 cents (summer)..... 30 cents (winter).....	1,400,000
Subsidy on fruit for jams.....		600,000
To producers of tomatoes, corn, peas and beans.....		2,000,000
Total.....		$47,600,000

Mr. PERLEY: Would the minister give us a break-down by provinces of the fluid milk subsidies paid?

Mr. GARDINER: I have not the figures for this year except by the months, which are not totalled. But the total amount paid in subsidies on milk for fluid use in all Canada in 1943 was $4,968,477. The other figures of subsidies paid are as follows:

	Milk for fluid use	Milk for cheese	Milk for manufactured use	Butterfat subsidy
	1943	1943	1943	1943
CANADA	$4,968,477	$800,270	$464,955	$15,724,915
Prince Edward Island	22,250	4,484	.....	231,166
Nova Scotia	188,775	.....	1,751	359,649
New Brunswick	136,304	2,747	.....	371,487
Quebec	1,314,072	301,261	128,965	4,825,545
Ontario	2,219,833	470,201	268,935	3,810,740
Manitoba	261,709	11,707	.....	1,721,330
Saskatchewan	137,188	1,881	231	2,286,856
Alberta	211,341	5,371	16,254	1,902,125
British Columbia	477,005	2,616	48,818	216,017

It will be noted that, in respect of milk for fluid use, Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan are the provinces with the lowest subsidy.

Mr. STIRLING: I do not follow the figures of the break-down that the minister gave, because there seem to be so many omissions; for instance, all the subsidies on imported goods, tea, molasses, oranges and all those sorts of things.

Mr. GARDINER: Those are paid under the prices board in connection with consumers subsidies. These are only producers subsidies.

Mr. STIRLING: In the subsidies on domestic goods, besides those to which the minister has referred, there are eggs, groceries and things of that sort. Do they not come into this item of $47,600,000?

Mr. GARDINER: No; we do not pay any subsidies on eggs, that I recall. There is the milk subsidy, again paid to consumers by the prices board. That does not come into this.

Mr. STIRLING: Maple products, rye, vegetables?

Mr. GARDINER: Of course the vegetables are in this, $2,000,000.

Mr. STIRLING: Vegetables come in. Berries and jams and canning of produce, under canning?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; canned vegetables, like peas, corn and so on.

Mr. STIRLING: The remainder of this return to the house comes under other items?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. STIRLING: What would the minister describe this forty-seven millions as?

Mr. GARDINER: It is producers subsidies, given for the purpose of getting greater production.

Mr. PERLEY: How much of a staff does it take to carry this on?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that this is about the staff, sitting at this table, with two or three more, that handles this particular thing.

Mr. PERLEY: Well, if all the boards were correspondingly small I would be "tickled to death". I think it is a compliment to these men, and an achievement for other boards to work up to.

Mr. GARDINER: We sometimes get a little criticism for not having outsiders. Practically all of the work during the war has been done with our own staff.

Mr. BURTON: Would the minister explain this item under the heading, "agricultural food board, administration, $68,175"? I was comparing it with the corresponding item under the special products board, of $50,190. In respect of the disbursement of $47,600 the cost of administration is about the same as under the very small item of the special products board.

Mr. GARDINER: The special products board handles, of course, quite a number of different products. It deals with everything except meat, which is handled under the meat board. Dairy products are handled under the dairy products board. Everything else is handled under the special products board.

Mr. SENN: I think what the hon. member means is that, if there are only three or four people administering this particular item, $68,175 is quite a lot of money to pay.

Mr. GARDINER: In explanation of that I may say that there are the travelling expenses of our inspectors, a few of them, and also the travelling expenses of the advisory board that most members are very anxious we should have. That amounts to a considerable sum of money. We bring in people from all over Canada as an advisory committee for the food board, and they are brought in on a number of occasions.

Mr. SENN: Then you must have a larger staff than you indicated.

Mr. GARDINER: That is not staff. They are people who are brought in from around the country as representatives of provincial government and farm organizations.

Mr. PERLEY: The amount stated by the minister as expendable in Saskatchewan and Manitoba is so small that he will not require a large staff of inspectors to carry on in those provinces.

Mr. NEILL: Did I understand the minister to say that this is the item which covers the subsidy to milk producers?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: Perhaps he can explain this situation. I am asking for information. Somebody moved for a return the other day, and it was brought down. What was asked for was a statement of the various market areas, I think they are called, and I see there is a large number of them throughout Canada, including several in British Columbia, but there is not any reference to Vancouver island. I know there are some payments made on Vancouver island; there must be one or more areas. Why was Vancouver island omitted from this return which was brought down?

Mr. GARDINER: The return is for the twenty-five cent market only; and I understand that all of Vancouver island is fifty-five cents in the winter and thirty-five cents in the summer. The reason why the island was not reported in the twenty-five cents return is that it receives more than the areas which are contained in that return.

Mr. NEILL: How would we find out about the fifty-five cent areas? Ask for a separate return? It would not have hurt the department to have covered both payments in the return.

Mr. GARDINER: There are 525 areas which are getting fifty-five cents; among them is the area of Vancouver island. Those can be listed, but it would be quite a list. I do not know whether anyone has an interest in getting them, but I think the best way to get this is to ask a question or ask for a return and have them all brought down in the return.

MINES AND RESOURCES

Mines and geology branch—development of tar-sands of Alberta. Remodelling and expansion of plant of Abasand Oils, Limited, $500,000.

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources): The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) had some discussion on this matter when the estimates of the Minister of Munitions and Supply were before the committee. The hon. member for Davenport is absent to-day, and he indicated that he would like this particular item to stand until he is here. That is quite agreeable to me, and I suggest that we might take the next item.

Mr. PERLEY: That is all right. I was going to ask the minister one question with respect to certain reports that I think are available and that he might have ready to bring down when this item is taken up. To preface what I was going to ask, I received a sample of the tar sands about the middle of March, and a certain person on his way to Chicago called and picked this parcel up, about a foot square, and took it to Chicago and had it analysed by an outstanding chemist there. He said that the extraction of oil was quite easy, that there was no difficulty about it, and he showed also that in the white sand there was a trace of gold, which was something new, something that had not been heard of so far in connection with tar sands. This person said that the government here in Canada had employed a Doctor Egloff in Chicago to do research work in connection with this tar sands development. My question is this. Is there a report from Doctor Egloff and, if so, will the minister give it to the committee when the item comes up next.

Mr. CRERAR: I do not know whether we have such a report. There was a concern in Chicago, Universal Oil Products, that specialized in this sort of work. That is the only concern there that I know of that had anything to do with it. What was the name of the gentleman?

Mr. PERLEY: Doctor Egloff of Chicago. The person to whom I have referred says that this professor had been employed by this government to do certain research work and that there was a report available on the subject which would be interesting. I have never heard of it, and I would ask the minister to look into this matter and, if such a report exists, to let us have it.

Mr. CRERAR: I am advised that the gentleman in question is with Universal Oil Products of Chicago, which company is doing research work on bitumen. Perhaps we might let the item stand.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I understood that the minister would make a statement on tar sands. I would suggest that he give that statement now and let the item stand, and in the meantime we could examine his statement so that we might be prepared to discuss the question when the time comes around. I should like to have his statement and have a chance to examine it, and then we could have the debate later on. I am very much interested in this subject, having spoken on it on a number of occasions. I was in the minister's office and I went through a large file in connection with it. I understood that he would make a full statement on this subject, and if he would make this statement now and then let the item stand until such time as he desires to bring it up again, I think that would meet the convenience of hon. members.

Item stands.

Investigations of petroliferous deposits and of potential petroliferous areas in Canada, $145,000.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: This has to do with the investigation of petroliferous deposits in various areas in Canada. I suggest that we might have spent a little more and done a lot of the work, in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, which is apparently being handed over lock, stock and barrel to other authorities. On May 5 of this year the minister tabled an order in council, P.C. 2904, having to do with the handing over of all rights for the exploration of oil fields of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and practically all the oil-bearing territory of that area. At that time he gave a very full report in explanation of the first part of the order in council. It is interesting to note that in this agreement with the United States it is arranged that the United States government is, under this order in council, entering into a contract with a Canadian company for further exploration and development of the oil industry in that territory. Apparently there has been quite a bit of prepartion going on with regard to organizing and getting that order in council ready, because I find that order in council P.C. 742, which was passed on January 28, 1943, states that the governor in council:

> . . . on the recommendation of the Minister of Mines and Resources and pursuant to the powers conferred by the Dominion Lands Act and the War Measures Act, is pleased, hereby, to make the annexed regulations for the disposal under permit of petroleum and natural gas rights, the property of the crown, not disposed of under lease or permit specifically reserved by the crown by P.C. 4140, dated 18th May, 1942, to be effective immediately, notwithstanding the provisions of section 75 of the Dominion Lands Act.

On February 12, 1943, P.C. 1138 was passed whereby:

> The regulations for the disposal of petroleum and natural gas rights, the property of the crown in the Yukon territory, shall no longer apply to the area defined as follows.

And they take in the Yukon—a portion of it at any rate—and a portion of the Northwest Territories. Later, on March 26, 1943, there is an interesting order in council whereby:

> The regulations for the issue of oil and gas permits and leases in the Northwest Territories shall no longer apply to the area defined as follows:
> 1. The whole of the Yukon Territory.

2. Then follows the description in regard to the Northwest Territories, which takes in a part of the mainland of the district of Mackenzie, west of a line commencing at a point on the shore of Beaufort sea on the east side of Mackenzie river, distant seventy-five miles from the centre of the main channel of the east channel of Mackenzie river at the south point of Richards island, and a line following that down.

I submit that the Canadian people should be completely informed on the development of this area and upon the contents of this order in council. In the first place, we find that the agreement is entered into in this case between the United States government and the Imperial Oil Company of Canada. They are to do the exploring, but the Imperial Oil Company is controlled entirely by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey which is a part of a world-wide combine in oil. So that it means that the United States are entering into an agreement with their own company and are given practically all the rights of development of the field in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, and what the government gets out of it, so far as Canada is concerned, is extremely little in return for the great resources which are being handed over.

On page three of the order in council the area to be developed is:

> . . . a unit operation by the company, the oil produced therefrom to be disposed of by the company in the ordinary course of its business, the government's share therein to be sold at prices satisfactory to the government.
> (b) The government's share of the oil to be one-third and the company to be paid the actual direct costs of producing it, plus a fee of ten per cent.

It does not say in here how the actual costs are to be arrived at. Then the order in council goes on:

> (c) Subject to the prior and preferred supplying of all local requirements for crude petroleum and petroleum products, the company to have the right of giving an option to the United States government to purchase for its own use, but not for resale, an amount up to one-half of the oil recovered from the proven area, not exceeding thirty million barrels, the price therefor to be the cost of production, plus twenty cents per barrel. From its share the Canadian government will supply one-third.

I think P.C. 2904 is of sufficient interest to the people of Canada, since it has to do with one of their great natural resources, to warrant its being tabled and put into the records of this house. I therefore ask the permission of the committee to have P.C. 742, 1138, 2447 and 2904 placed on Hansard.

Mr. CRERAR: I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend, but what he is talking about has nothing whatever to do with the vote we have under consideration. There is not a single penny in this vote that is in any way associated with the matter that he is discussing. There was a statement made in the house on May 5. I gave a very full statement to the house and at the same time tabled the order in council that had been passed a few days previously dealing with the development of the oil resources in the Mackenzie river area. The orders in council to which he refers were tabled from time to time previously in the house, and I do not see any reason why they should now be reprinted in Hansard.

I have not the slightest objection at the appropriate time to discussing the policy of the government and what it has done in association with the United States authorities in the development of the oil resources of the Mackenzie river valley. But, Mr. Chairman, it has nothing to do with this present vote because, as I said a moment ago, there is not a penny in this vote that is associated with the development.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The particular item we are discussing has to do with the investigations of petroliferous deposits and of potential petroliferous areas in Canada. As a war-time measure we should have done this investigation ourselves with a Canadian company and reserved those natural resources for the Canadian people. I am sorry that instead of spending $145,000 outside that area we had not spent a million dollars or more in that area to develop the resources and to sell the product to whatever country wanted to buy it. The giving away of the birthright of the Canadian people in this way at this price seems to me to be wrong. Under this item I think we are dealing with a war-time emergency development, and with this order in council making this agreement with the United States government I think at least the Canadian people ought to have an opportunity of reading the agreement and the order in council which has to do with it.

Mr. CRERAR: I still repeat what I said a moment ago, that the vote we are considering now, this item of $145,000, has nothing whatever to do with the development that is taking place in the Mackenzie river valley. There is not the slightest objection on the part of the government to discussing at the appropriate time all the development that has taken place in the Mackenzie river valley country and the part the government has taken in it, not the slightest. I know that the questions brought up by my hon. friend may make some headlines in the papers and perhaps in certain places have some useful results, but it is—

Mr. CASTLEDEN: All we are asking for is the facts.

Mr. CRERAR: No. My hon. friend has got the matter all wrong to begin with. And in the second place, as I have said now for the third time, it has nothing whatever to do with what took place in the Mackenzie river valley.

Mr. GREEN: Which is the appropriate vote?

Mr. CRERAR: There is another vote here for it.

Mr. COLDWELL: The minister says that this can be discussed at the appropriate time. This item reads:

Investigations of petroliferous deposits and of potential petroliferous areas in Canada.

My hon. friend is discussing petroliferous areas in Canada when he is discussing the Yukon territory and the Mackenzie basin.

Mr. CRERAR: Quite true.

Mr. COLDWELL: Will the minister tell the committee what would be the appropriate item under which this project could be discussed? Whether it makes good headlines or bad headlines is not the question. The question is whether it is a good or a bad deal for Canada; whether we are giving away, as I think we are, one of our great resources to the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and not getting adequate compensation for it; whether we are, as we have done in the past, alienating one of our great resources to a great corporation again and leaving the people of Canada without control of that resource. Obviously any ordinary member of this committee, not having a break-down of this particular item, in looking at it and seeing that it was for the investigation of petroliferous deposits and of potential petroliferous areas in Canada would conclude, and intelligently, that it took in the Yukon and the Mackenzie basin and that, therefore, was the item under which this could be discussed. Could the minister tell the committee, first, where it can be discussed and, second, what this item of $145,000 really is.

Mr. CRERAR: Yes, I can tell what the item of $145,000 is. But if the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar will look further down the estimates under "Lands, parks and forests branch" he will find there an item of $10,000 for "expenses of liaison officers in connection with the Alaska highway and Canol projects". I think it would be quite proper to discuss the Canol project under that item, if it is desired to discuss it.

Mr. COLDWELL: I understood the minister to say a few moments ago that there was nothing in this war appropriation which dealt with the Canol project.

Mr. CRERAR: If I did, I did not intend to say so. I said that there was a time when it could be discussed.

Mr. COLDWELL: After all, the $10,000 item seems such a small one under which to discuss such a huge project. If the only interest we have in the Canol project is the $10,000 item in these estimates, then our interest is very very small.

Mr. CRERAR: My hon. friend is not right at all.

Mr. COLDWELL: The minister invited that sort of comment.

Mr. CRERAR: May I tell the committee that up to the present the federal government has not spent a single dollar—

Mr. COLDWELL: It has given away one of our resources.

Mr. CRERAR: No. That is rather extreme too. We are not in the habit of giving away our resources.

Mr. COLDWELL: Governments have.

Mr. CRERAR: We can discuss the whole Canol project, as far as it relates to the government under the item I mentioned a moment ago, and I would suggest that we leave it until we come to that item, and deal with this $145,000. The $145,000 is to cover explorations, or surveys, if you like, by seismograph and in other ways of other possible oil structures within the provinces of Canada, mainly in Saskatchewan and Alberta. Last year there was an item of $500,000 in the war appropriation vote for this purpose. A good deal of work was done, some of it in the Wainwright park area of Alberta. There was some aerial photography in Entrance and Wapiti areas in Alberta, and also certain surveys made for oil exploration in New Brunswick. Surveys also were made near Fort McMurray, Alberta. There is one other item which I should mention, namely that covering the work done by the Consolidated Mining and Smelting company in drilling the tar sands in the Fort McMurray area. That work was done under an agreement made with the company. This $145,000 is to continue similar investigations this year.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Would that include further work in the tar sands area?

Mr. CRERAR: Yes; it has to do with the drilling of the tar sands. Briefly that is the purpose of this vote. I do not know exactly where the surveys will be conducted this year. One of the difficulties we are running into in this connection is getting the personnel to head up the geological parties and to service them while they are in the field.

Mr. COLDWELL: Did we spend the $500,000 last year?

Mr. CRERAR: The vote was $500,000, but we did not spend that much.

Mr. COLDWELL: What did you spend?

Mr. CRERAR: We spent $154,000 last year.

Mr. COLDWELL: And what happened to the balance?

Mr. CRERAR: It was not spent.

Mr. COLDWELL: It has not been transferred to some other item?

Mr. CRERAR: No.

Mr. COLDWELL: It is possible under this resolution, is it not, to transfer any unexpended balance to some other project?

Mr. CRERAR: It can be done only with the approval of treasury board, and treasury board does not give its approval very readily in these matters.

Mr. COLDWELL: But it is not under the control of this house once the item is passed. It is not like the regular estimates, in which the expenditure is definitely limited.

Mr. CRERAR: If we had $500,000 for investigations or explorations for petroliferous deposits and did not spend that amount; then if under the next item, which deals with the search for strategic minerals, we wanted to spend more money, with the approval of treasury board we could transfer the balance from one vote to the other, but it has to be done with the approval of treasury board.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is different from our ordinary budget resolutions and estimates. However, I was going to ask the minister what were the results achieved by spending $154,000 on this project. If we are to spend another $145,000 this year I think we should know what results were obtained by the expenditure last year of $154,000.

Mr. CRERAR: In the Wainwright park area, for instance, the investigations were very encouraging; so much so that presently the area is to be put up for competition for companies to go in and drill. Part of the structure is within the park and part is without the park, and we have arranged with the government of Alberta that the areas will be put up at the same time. All the data we have gathered in these surveys and explorations are available to any company that wants to go in and bid for these claims.

Mr. COLDWELL: Supposing a company goes in, drills wells and finds valuable deposits of oil. What do we get out of it?

Mr. CRERAR: In Alberta they will be subject to the royalties of that province.

Mr. COLDWELL: I was not thinking of Alberta. This is a dominion expenditure.

Mr. CRERAR: If they are discovered in the park they will be subject to any royalties we may impose.

Mr. COLDWELL: And as a rule what royalties do we impose?

Mr. CRERAR: We have never fixed royalties in the parks before, but I believe the royalties in Alberta are from five to fifteen per cent.

Mr. COLDWELL: But this is a dominion expenditure, and I am wondering what benefit accrues to the dominion by way of royalty as a result of this expenditure.

Mr. CRERAR: The only royalties we shall get will be those on any oil which may be found in the park. Those royalties will be determined, probably, on the same basis as those of the province of Alberta.

Mr. COLDWELL: And will the province of Alberta collect royalties as well?

Mr. CRERAR: They will collect royalties in the area outside the park; that is their property.

Mr. COLDWELL: The minister said that the area would be put up for competition by the government, so that companies could compete for the opportunity of drilling. How is that done; is it advertised?

Mr. CRERAR: Yes, it is advertised.

Mr. COLDWELL: How does the competition work? If we get nothing but royalties and those royalties have not yet been determined, what competition is there?

Mr. CRERAR: A person or company applying for a licence will offer a bonus, and the competition really is on the bonus. No matter what company gets the privilege, it has to pay a royalty in addition to the bonus offered.

Mr. COLDWELL: I did not quite hear what the minister said.

Mr. CRERAR: We lay down certain regulations for drilling in particular areas. Certain royalties have to be paid. The areas are put up for competition and it may be that one, two, three, four or five companies will bid for the right to explore. The highest bidder gets the right to go in and do the drilling. If he finds oil he carries on in a commercial way and pays a royalty to the proper government authority.

Mr. COLDWELL: Then practically it means that this is a competition among certain companies; and the company that can offer to pay the highest bonus will get the right to drill. Is that the idea?

Mr. CRERAR: Yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: Naturally this squeezes out any small man who may want to go in and try to find oil.

Mr. CRERAR: I do not think either the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar or myself would have sufficient capital to go in and bid on one of these leases.

Mr. GRAYDON: Perhaps we could cease drilling operations now; it is eleven o'clock.

Mr. COLDWELL: Apparently there are certain limits to free enterprise.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned until Thursday at three o'clock p.m., pursuant to special order made Monday, February 21, 1944.
