Dear Sir,—The members of the Athens village council have learned with deep regret that by reason of your appointment to the office of police magistrate we are to be deprived of your services at this board. In the years that you have held the office of councillor you have manifested a public spirit, a zeal for the welfare of the village that have won the admiration of your conferees and the confidence of the ratepayers. In all matters of finance your services have been particularly valuable and we realize that your place at this council board will be hard to fill. In parting, we wish you a full measure of success in the important judicial office you have been called upon to fill.

G. F. Donnelly, Clerk.

MEDAL CONTEST

The elocutionary medal contest, under the auspices of the W.C.T.U., held in the town hall on Tuesday evening, was a great success. The contestants were all students of the A.H.S. and a keen interest was taken in the event by the juniors of the village. Mr Andrew S. Morton, principal of the A.P.S., presided over the meeting.

A good musical programme was rendered by the following local talent: Miss Edna Ackland and Miss M. Rowson, Miss Nellie Earl and Mr Frank Willows, in piano duets; vocal solos by Miss Culbert, Miss Owen, Wilts, Miss Lulu McLean. In addition to these entertainers, the audience greatly enjoyed a brilliantly executed piano solo by Miss Myrtle Loverin of Greenbush and songs by Mr T. Horsfield of Soperston, who proved very popular.

- The contestants were:
- 1—Olive Anglin
 - 2—Bertena Green
 - 3—Ruby Webster
 - 4—Ina Bissell
 - 5—Echel Mansell
 - 6—Mina Donnelly
 - 7—Myrtle Kennedy
 - 8—Eula Tennant

The elocutionary numbers were rendered in superior style and well deserved the applause they evoked. Apart from the tone of sadness running through all these recitations, the elocutionary numbers alone would constitute a good entertainment.

The judges were Mrs Byron Loverin of Greenbush, Rev W. H. Montgomery and Rev Wm. Westell. After a careful comparison and review of their figures, Rev W. H. Montgomery announced that No. 6 (Mina Donnelly) had won the medal. The audience expressed their approval of the verdict in no uncertain way, and then the contestants assembled on the platform where they were briefly addressed by Mrs Wm. Johnston, who presented the medal to the winner and to each contestant a silver pin bearing the medal in miniature.

The meeting closed with the national anthem, heartily sung.

Right at Last

Joan was silent; what was the covert meaning in the question? "Well, now, I suppose you wonder why I don't come to my important business?" Joan did not assent; in words, but her eyes did.

"Well, I'm coming to it—"

"Perhaps I am de trop," said Mordant Royce. "I'll go and smoke a cigar with Mr. Harwood," and he moved towards the door.

"No, don't leave us, please, Mr. Royce," said Miss Mazurka, pleasantly.

"Miss Trevelyan, who is to be your wife to-morrow, can have no business in which you are not concerned."

Royce shrugged his shoulders and resumed his lounging attitude against the mantelpiece.

Joan motioned Miss Mazurka to a chair; she had been standing up till now, between the fire and the door.

"I shall be glad to assist you in any way," she said, gently.

"Will you answer me a few questions," said Miss Mazurka. "And when I ask that I want to say that it is for your good that I put them."

"My good?" said Joan, with surprise.

Miss Mazurka nodded.

"Yes; you can scarcely credit that; but you will presently. Don't think my first question a riddle one, but if you do, try and believe that I have a reason for putting it to you."

"I am sure that you would not ask it otherwise," said Joan, rather coldly.

"Thanks," said Miss Mazurka. "Now, then, Miss Trevelyan, most of us actresses have a stage name and a real one; have you?"

Joan hesitated and looked at the questioner curiously. She saw a strange expression of admiration and interest, and it almost seemed pity, on Miss Mazurka's face.

"Yes, I have a real name and a stage one," she said, quietly.

"And have you told Mr. Royce your real one?"

"No," said Joan, in a low voice.

Miss Mazurka turned to Mordant Royce smilingly.

"And you don't know it?"

He shook his head.

"You amuse me, Miss Mazurka, you are so extremely like a counsel cross-examining a witness."

"Are't you?" said Miss Mazurka, laughing; "never mind, but just fancy it's a whim of mine, and answer me."

"No; I don't know Miss Trevelyan's real name," she said, gravely.

Miss Mazurka nodded.

"Now, Miss Trevelyan, how long have you known Miss Royce? Since you became an actress?"

"Yes," answered Joan.

"And have you told him anything of your life before then?"

Joan crimsoned.

"Why answer me?" pleaded Miss Mazurka, with genuine earnestness. "Please be patient. You will understand everything directly and forgive me then for paining you now."

"No; I have told him nothing," said Joan, wonderingly.

"And you know nothing," said Miss Mazurka, turning to Mordant Royce.

"No, I know nothing. And really, Miss Mazurka—"

"Oh, I know what you are going to say, but if Miss Trevelyan chooses to answer my questions, you needn't mind about it, you know."

"But—"

Miss Mazurka turned away from him to Joan.

"Now, Miss Trevelyan, will you answer this. Is it your wish to marry Mr. Royce to-morrow? Answer me truly, and if you say yes, then—well, my important business will keep until after your return."

"My dearest," murmured Royce, as Joan, pale and trembling, looked from one to the other.

"You need not answer," said Miss Mazurka. "Your silence is quite enough for me."

Royce crossed over to her.

"Miss Mazurka, your presence here is an intrusion. You distress and annoy Miss Trevelyan beyond my endurance. I must ask you to leave us."

"I'm going directly, Mr. Royce," said Miss Mazurka. "You are not master here. This is Mr. Harwood's house and I shall remain, with Miss Trevelyan's permission."

"I will go," said Joan, rising.

Miss Mazurka put on her hand pleadingly.

"No, no. Don't. Listen to me for a little while. For your own sake. If you knew what I know—"

Then she arose and pointed her finger at Mordant Royce. "Do you know what that man is, the man you are going to marry to-morrow morning?"

Joan, pale and trembling, looked from her to Mordant Royce, whose face, set and calm, smiled sardonically at the accusing finger.

"You don't? Well, I will tell you. He's a swindler and a card sharper!"

Joan shrank back and caught at the back of a chair, overcome for a moment.

Mordant Royce sprang upright, his face ablaze, then it went pale again and he laughed harshly.

"Thanks, Miss Mazurka. You have played your part very well, and we are intensely amused and interested. But please to remember that this is not the house of the Coronet, that it is a lady's drawing room, and that however deeply you may consider that you have been injured by me, it is not worthy of even you to slander me before Miss Trevelyan."

"Very well done indeed," said Miss Mazurka, nodding approvingly. "Oh, I didn't think you wasn't game, Mr. Royce, though you were brought up in the gutter. I knew you would make a fight of it, and you are aren't you? Quite right; but you won't find it much use. I tell this lady that you are a swindler and a card sharper. You deny it?"

"No; I don't take the trouble," said

Royce, scornfully. "If you had said a gambler, alas! I should have had to plead guilty. But I have touched cards for the last time, Miss Mazurka; I leave them and all the evil companions of my past behind."

Miss Mazurka flushed hotly under the covert insult.

"Will you desert Mr. Craddock, also?" she said.

"Mr. Craddock?" he said, with a beautiful look of bewilderment.

"Yes; Mr. Craddock, of Chain Court, who picked you out of the gutter! Mr. Craddock, the money lender, whose jackal you have been; the jackal who entrapped and enticed the victims into Mr. Craddock's den in the city. Are you going to desert him?"

His face quivered, but the smile still sat upon his lips gravely, as he turned to Joan, standing pale and amazed and bowed down under a sense of coming ill.

"I am afraid Miss Mazurka's love for romance is leading her into extravagance of imagination, Ida," he said.

"Don't you think this unpleasant scene has lasted long enough?"

"Not quite," said Miss Mazurka, before Joan could reply. "You don't know Mr. Craddock! It is not you who led Lord Dewsbury into his clutches? It is not you who go down at night to Chain Court, Fenchurch street; who received Mr. Craddock at your rooms in Mount street, Mr. Royce?"

"It certainly is not," he said, with a scornful smile.

Miss Mazurka went swiftly to the door and opened it, and Lord Bertie entered, pushing old Craddock by the shoulders in front of him.

Bertie thrust the old man against the wall, where he stood trembling and shaking, his small eyes gleaming at Royce like those of a rat caught in a trap, and Bertie went and took Joan's hand.

"Will you come away now?" he said. "Come with me and I will tell you all that this means."

But Joan shook her head and clung to her chair.

"No," she said, trembling, but trying to keep calm. "I will not go. I must know all!"

Bertie pressed her hand and stood beside her protectingly, drawing still closer as Mordant Royce, white with passion, strode up to him.

"Lord Dewsbury," he said, between his clenched teeth, "this is an intrusion, and I resent it! Leave this lady's side, sir, and this house!"

Bertie, pale and stern, looked him full in the face.

"Keep out of my reach," he said.

And although that was all that passed his lips, Royce shrank back to his former position by the fire, where he stood, his dark eyes turning from Bertie to Miss Mazurka, as if he could slay them with a glance.

"Mr. Craddock," said Miss Mazurka, "this gentleman"—and she pointed to Mordant Royce—"says he doesn't know you. Is that true?"

Old Craddock looked around stealthily, and moistened his trembling lips, and steeled himself against the wall with his claw-like hands.

"N—o!" he croaked. "He knows me. I brought him up from a boy. I taught him everything. He's clever, but I picked him out of the gutter." Then he turned appealingly to Mordant Royce. "Royce, it's no use; the game's up. This woman—she's a devil!" and he shook his claw at Miss Mazurka, who smiled sweetly—"she found it out—the old man knows how! They came and seized me at my office, and dragged me here against my will! But I'll have the law of 'em! I've got you under my thumb, my Lord Dewsbury, and you shall smart!" and he grinned threateningly at Bertie, who scarcely wasted a glance upon him.

Mordant Royce glared at him.

"What do you know?" he said, hoarsely. "That I, like many other men, have had dealings with you! That's all!"

Old Craddock shook his head despairfully.

"They know more than that, Royce!" he croaked. "I can't tell how much they do know!" he whined. At that moment Bertie moved slightly, and the old man's eyes fell for the first time upon Joan. With a shrill shriek he shrank against the wall. "Royce! Royce! Who's that? Look there! There! He's extended a shaking hand in the direction of Joan. Look at her!"

There was intense silence for a moment, and in that moment Mordant Royce screwed up his courage.

"For shame!" he cried, turning on Lord Dewsbury. "Don't you see the condition of the old man you have brought, as you think, to confound me? He is out of his mind. Look at him! Ida, for heaven's sake, come away with me from these people!" and he took a step toward her.

Joan, scarcely knowing that she did it, shrank back, and put her hand upon Bertie's arm.

"Stand back!" he said, sternly, warningly. "He is not mad, and you know it. Who is this lady?" he demanded of old Craddock, who was still glaring at Joan.

"She's Joan Ormsby! Joan Ormsby, the old girl's granddaughter," he croaked, absently. "The girl Royce and I nearly found. 'No, no!' he croaked, suddenly, 'no, she's not! I forgot, Joan Ormsby was drowned, wasn't she, Royce? drowned!"

Joan rose white and trembling, and opened her lips as if about to speak, but Bertie gently forced her into the chair and whispered:

"No! say nothing."

"Joan Ormsby?"

Royce, scornfully: "I never heard the name! What numskully is this? Ida—"

"Address another word to this lady much use. I tell this lady that you are a swindler and a card sharper. You deny it?"

"You see," said Miss Mazurka. "Mr. Royce knows nothing of all this, Mr.

Craddock. He never heard of Miss Ormsby, this respected granddaughter of Lord Arrowfield. He knows nothing of a will which you and he have been looking for nothing at all!"

Royce forced a smile to his white lips.

"For the first time during this strange scene Miss Mazurka speaks the truth," he said. "I may have had dealings with this man Craddock. Like others, I have been the victim of his villainy."

"What?" shrieked old Craddock, shrilly; "villainy! You say that, Royce—you! You took from the gutter—you! I made what you are—"

"Silence!" said Bertie, sternly. "You deny all knowledge of this lady's real name and position, and of Lord Arrowfield's will. Are you mad? Do you forget it was I who found that will?"

"Found the will!" croaked old Craddock; "found the will! Royce, do you hear that?"

Mordant bit his lip.

"This is a conspiracy," he said. "I refuse to remain here to be baited by an old madman and a pair of vindictive fools," and he glanced scornfully at Bertie and Miss Mazurka. "Ida," and he turned swiftly to her with a sudden despairing, pleading tone and gesture, "for heaven's sake, send them away, or some with me. I will do anything, anything, Ah, come!" and he held out his hands.

She shrank back, her hand on Bertie's arm, and her eyes fixed on Mordant Royce's face as if she would read his soul.

She read there in his eyes enough to convince her. With a sigh that was almost a groan, she held up her hand as if to put him from her, and turned her head away.

With a cry, low and fierce, and full of infinite despair, he put his hand before his eyes, as if to shut out her gaze, then staggered unsteadily to the door.

"Quick!" cried Miss Mazurka, and as she spoke Bertie rushed forward, seized the retreating man by the arm, and him round against the wall.

"Give me the will!" he said, in a stern voice.

Mordant Royce looked at him with a world of hate and malice.

"You fool!" he hissed; "you will never see it! I have burned it! Let me pass!"

CHAPTER XL

Mordant Royce looked round with a scornful defiance.

"I have burned the will," he said.

A dead silence fell upon them all, and Bertie stood agliss and appalled for the moment.

Mordant Royce stepped back to the fireplace and regained his old attitude, his glance shifting from Miss Mazurka, who sat regarding him with the most marked self-possession, to Lord Bertie, who seemed utterly non-plussed by this admission of villainy.

"If you had listened to me," said Mordant Royce, hoarsely; "if you had treated me with common fairness, I would have dealt openly with you. But you forget that a man driven to bay is desperate. The will is burned," and as he spoke he drew a paper from his pocket and dropped it into the fire.

Emily saw the action and cried out, warningly.

"Look! He has thrown something in the fire just now!"

Lord Bertie sprang forward, but Mordant Royce, exerting all his strength, kept him back for the half-minute required to consume the paper; the rest seemed too paralyzed by excitement and fear to make any attempt to save the document.

"You scoundrel!" exclaimed Bertie, sternly. "Do you realize what you have done? You have burned the will! Where is the paper?"

Joan stood, pale and sorrowful. "Do you realize that you have robbed the woman you professed to love? He paused, reluctant to use the word "love."

"To love," filled in Mordant Royce. "Yes, I understand. I loved her—Heaven knows I loved her as well as deeply as you would do, my lord. And if she had stood by me and been true to me, I would have made her the woman of Vienna when he had taken his her, but she made her choice; she resigned the fortune which that will which now lies in ashes there would have given her."

He raised his eyes for a moment and shot a baleful glance at Joan, then turned to Miss Mazurka with a sardonic smile.

"You are a clever young lady," he said, slowly, softly; "very clever; but you have overreached yourself, Miss Mazurka. This skillfully prepared denouement has, I fear, not culminated as well as you could wish. Flame yourself and let your friend, Miss Ormsby, thank you for the scheme which deprives her of her estates."

Miss Mazurka returned his glance without a word.

Bertie paced up and down, overcome for a moment by the deliberate, cold-blooded villainy of the man he had once trusted and believed in as a friend. Emily barely understood the ramifications of the plot, yet realizing that Joan had lost a fortune, wept silently.

Joan alone seemed quite untouched by the incident.

There was a moment or two of silence, then Mordant Royce raised his gleaming eyes.

"May I ask, Lord Dewsbury, what is the next step you intend taking? Is it your desire that this scene should be prolonged? I have an important engagement which demands my presence elsewhere, or I should be delighted to remain and assist in this interesting conference."

A low murmur came from Joan, and the words, "Let him go!" dropped from her pale lips.

"No!" exclaimed Bertie, sternly; "he shall not go. By this last diabolical act he has rendered himself answerable to an outraged law. He shall meet the punishment he has merited. Miss Trevelyan, let this villain go free would be an injustice to the world at large."

"Let him go!" murmured Joan, pleadingly.

"Such a man should be trodden under foot! Yes; he shall go—in custody. Mordant Royce, I charge you with stealing and destroying the will of the Earl of Arrowfield!" and he strode to the bell.

Mordant Royce shrugged his shoulders.

JUST ONE WOMAN IN THOUSANDS

Who Can Say "Dodd's Kidney Pills Made Me Well!"

Mrs. Louis Delorme, who was always tired and nervous and suffered from backache, tells how she found a cure.

St. Rose du Lac, Man., April 3.—(Special)—The story of Mrs. Louis Delorme, a well-known and highly respected resident of this place, is identical with that of thousands of other women in Canada. It is all the most interesting on that account. She was tired, nervous and worn out. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured her.

I suffered for five years from backache and too frequent urination, which destroyed my sleep," Mrs. Delorme states. "My head would ache, and I was always tired and nervous. My limbs were heavy, and I had a dragging sensation across the loins. Dodd's Kidney Pills made me well. I used in all ten boxes, but they fixed me for good."

Thousands of other Canadian women who have not used Dodd's Kidney Pills are in just the condition Mrs. Delorme was in before she used them. Thousands of others who were in that condition and who used Dodd's Kidney Pills, are now well and strong.

We learn from the experiences of athletes, and those experienced us that the weary and worn women of Canada can find relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"You will find it difficult to prove, my lord," he said, quietly. "I admit I may not even the existence of the will. Who has seen it? Who knows anything of it? You will find your charge difficult to substantiate. You talk of punishment; in punishing me you will subject this lady"—waving his hand towards Joan—"to a scandal which will live as long as she lives. As for me"—he shrugged his shoulders—"but I doubt whether she will care to appear in a crowded court and give her evidence against the man she was about to honor with her hand."

Bertie stood undecided, inwardly raging at the sinister cunning which met him at every point.

"You scoundrel!" he could only exclaim.

Mordant Royce smiled.

"Hard words are easily bandied, my lord," he said. "What do you intend to do? Will you give me in custody on this charge? I think not."

"He's clever! He's clever, is Royce?" Joan glided Craddock, who was covering in a corner of the room, forgotten by all, but watching the scene with ghoul-like interest.

"Yes, he's very clever, isn't he, Mr. Craddock?" echoed Miss Mazurka, quickly, without removing her eyes from Royce's face.

Joan glided forward, and laid her hand tremblingly on Bertie's arm.

"Let him go, for my sake," she murmured. "Ah, let him go."

Bertie bit his lip and led her back again.

"For your sake, then," he said, gently. Then he turned to Mordant Royce.

"The only way you have so far wronged me, is that you have forgotten by all, you should meet the fate you so richly deserve. You may go, Mordant Royce. If you value a sound skin and whole bones keep out of my sight the rest of your life. Go!"

GOOD READING

is Not Necessarily Costly to Procure by the People.

Good prose that paints a picture and imparts an idea is a democratic thing; John Bunyan was a tinker, and George Fox was apprenticed to a shoemaker before he began that work which ended in the Society of Friends; yet, both have written such prose as many more fortunate in the world's estimation would be glad to write if it gave them like fame. "Pilgrim's Progress" can be found in any public library, and good editions of the book, English and American, may be bought for very little money; the "Journal of George Fox" is easily had. Now, both these men write a language that for simplicity, strength and sweetness is hard to beat, and their words are those of the people, not of those that learn from mere academic sources and thereby perhaps insensibly lose touch with the people. The prose of such men as Fox and Bunyan is a part of the music of the people; where one has read the "Essays" of Sir William Temple, a thousand have read enrapt the wonderful story of Christian and Great-heart, and Fox will in a sentence or two paint to you such a picture as shall be vivid to the eye. Nobody is asked to read a parable in a letter of business or to be graphic where exactness is of the essence of the matter, but none can escape the duty of precision; and this can be learned by each man for himself by reading, but reading what is good—Christian Science Monitor.

HIS OATH.

(Pittsburg Gazette.) John D. Rockefeller, jun., at the recent reunion of the Bible class of which he is vice-president, said of a somewhat abusive magazine writer: "He attacks my country's greatest men, when I read his attacks, I can't help thinking that he is rather like old Uncle Rastus. "Uncle Rastus, testifying in a certain lawsuit, refused to be sworn. "Ah will affirm," he said. "But Uncle Rastus said the judge, 'how is this? Last week in the Calhoun case, you swore readily enough.' "Yo' honoh," said Uncle Rastus solemnly. "Ah was mo' sursh o' mah facts in dat case dan in dis one."

HOW TO SAVE MONEY

A Pointer to Housekeepers. Look at the financial side of Zam-Buk's use. A cut sustained in the home, the store, or the workshop, a sore which is untended, results, say, in festering or blood-poisoning. You have to lay off for a day or two. What does that mean when pay day comes round? Zam-Buk insures you against that loss! A little Zam-Buk applied to such an injury prevents all danger of blood-poisoning, takes out the smarting and healing.

Dangers of Shaving.—You get a cut at the barber's shop. A little Zam-Buk smeared on the wound prevents all danger. If any ailment has been contracted, Zam-Buk cures. Mr. George Hobden, 108 Manitoba street, writes: "I have used Zam-Buk on a contracted barber's rash, and the whole of my left cheek broke out in a mass of red, watery pimples and sores. These spread to the other parts of my face until face and neck were covered with running sores. How far the disease would have spread had it not been for Zam-Buk, I don't know. I applied this balm, and in a short time Zam-Buk effected a complete cure."

Zam-Buk Soap is as good as the balm, but in a different way. Washed in Zam-Buk Soap the skin is disinfected and disease germs lying upon it are killed. Mothers will find it unequalled for baby's bath. Zam-Buk Balm and Zam-Buk Soap are sold by all druggists and stores at 50c for the balm and 25c tablet for the soap.

HERE YOU ARE!

Hints for You When Crossing-Intersecting Streets.

Don't pause 'mid car tracks to admire a harem skirt— Or to philosophize on some favorite passage from Browning— Or to adjust hatpins or any portion of your attire— Or to examine your shopping list or investigate the contents of your valise— Or to decide which way you want to go— Or to stare at the faces of the four directions— Or to flirt—flirting, always idiotic, appears extremely so when done in the middle of a car track— Or to admire an oncoming auto—or to test your ability to recognize its make before its name is within reading distance, and about all—

Don't fail to remember that there are four avenues of approach to intersecting streets and that this means eight "right of way" to teamsters, cabmen, delivery wagons, automobiles, pushcart men, messengers on bicycles, etc.; therefore, after flashing a glance in the four directions, level one eye on the direction indicating aim of the policeman, and the other on your destination, take a good, deep breath (it may be your last), and hurry manly to the corner you are aiming for, concentrating all your attention on the fact that you may accomplish it without a sequel of ambulance or morgue.

CAN QUICKLY REPORT.

(Washington Star.) Col. Roosevelt, while not active in the manager's office, is near enough to be numbered among those present at short notice. Any tramp will tell you that a dog in the manger is worth two in the front yard.

WAITING IN THE SPRING

How to Get New Health and New Strength at this season.

Even the most robust find the winter months trying to their health. Confinement indoors, often in overheated and nearly always bad-ventilated rooms—in the house, the office, the shops and the school—takes the vitality of even the strongest. The blood becomes thin and watery, clogged with impurities. Some people have headaches and a feeling of languor; others are low-spirited and nervous; still others have pimples and skin eruptions; while some get up in the morning feeling just as tired as when they went to bed. These are all spring symptoms that the blood is out of order, and that a medicine is needed. Many people rush to purgative medicines in the spring. This is a mistake. You can not cure these troubles with a medicine that gallops through your system and leaves you weaker still. What you need to give you health and strength in the spring is a tonic medicine that will enrich the blood and soothe the jangled nerves, and the one always reliable tonic and blood-builder is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These Pills not only banish spring weaknesses and ills, but guard you against the more serious ailments that follow, such as anemia, nervous debility, indigestion, rheumatism and other diseases due to bad blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new, rich red blood, which strengthens every nerve, every organ and every part of the body, and makes weak, ailing people bright, happy and strong. Mrs. James McDonald, Harcourt, N.B., says: "In my opinion Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do all that is claimed for them. My system was run down, and I was so weak I could hardly do my work, and taking care of my baby added to my difficulties. I used a few boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and they made me feel like my own self. I very cheerfully recommend the Pills to all who are weak or ailing."

THE "TASK SYSTEM."

An Explanation of "The Kernel of Scientific Management."

From Will Irwin's "The Awakening of the American Business Man" in the April Century. When Frederick W. Taylor and his earnest apostles of efficiency set about to revolutionize machinery and production, they had to reckon from the very first with the workmen's set, negative conservatism. He had learned his trade under the old hit-or-miss system; to do certain things in certain inefficient ways was habit with him. The action-struggle between capital and labor, which began in the oppression of the English textile operatives, had rendered him sullen and suspicious. Taylor understood from the first that methods of scientific management, which worked out so wonderfully in the laboratory and on paper, must have the consent and co-operation of the worker before they could be applied. The most obvious method to accomplish this was the "piece-work" plan, but industry learned that the efficacy of such a system. On piece work certain operatives push far ahead of others. Their earnings become so great that they make what seems to the management an undue warren, cut in rate follow the wages of the expert few reach a higher level than the rest, and many go down toward the starvation point. The operatives work beyond all reasonable hours of work irregularly; the lax conditions, disease, reduction of the working life follow, until finally we arrive at conditions like those of the "sweatshops" in their most pernicious and both sides lose.

FOCUSSED SOUND WAVES.

Few people are aware that sound can be focused just as light can. All are familiar with the burning glass of focusing lens which, if placed in a beam of sunlight will focus the rays into a small spot, which is so hot as to be able to set fire to a piece of paper. Light is a wave in the ether, but sound is a wave in a material medium, generally the air.

If we make a convex lens out of rubbers or collodion and fill it with gas heavier than air, say carbon dioxide, we shall have a sound lens analogous in nearly all respects to a glass lens for light. It will be found that we can focus sound waves in the following manner: Take a watch and place it some feet away from one side of the lens and put your ear on a line with the watch and the centre of the lens, but on the other side, and move outward from the lens. While moving out you cannot hear the watch until you get to a certain point where the waves are focused, at which place you will hear it plainly. This is called the conjugate focus of the watch.—New York Tribune.

WOMEN SHOULD BE CAREFUL.

(Montreal Gazette.) By a judgment rendered in the Superior Court in this city the marriage of two Roman Catholics, contracted in this Province, has been declared null, on the ground that the clergyman who officiated was a Protestant. The civil union in the case gave effect to a decision of the Roman Catholic Church authorities, who, in the spirit of the Ne Temere decree, held unions contracted under such circumstances to be non-sacramental and void. The wisdom of making the civil law subsidiary to the ecclesiastical law in such cases is not in issue just now. The court simply interpreted the law, and there are precedents for the decision. What is in issue, however, is that men and women, especially women, should be careful that when they consent to marriage the ceremony shall be performed under circumstances that will not permit of its validity being questioned. Neglect of this may subject them or their children to humiliation and shame and grief.

Shiloh's Cure quickly stops cough, cures cold, soothes the throat and lungs.

TAKING FORTY WINKS

HOW PROMINENT BRITISHERS STOLE THEIR LITTLE NAPS.

Gladstone Was a Famous Al Fresco Dozer and Often Slept Through Debates — Palmerston Was Called the "Great Sleeper—Half an Hour's Rest is a Wonderful Freshener for Lloyd George.

Lord Morley, in his interesting Life of Richard Cobden, shows that one of the famous Free Trader's greatest gifts was his ability to fall fast asleep whenever he wanted to do so. Mr. Gladstone also possessed this wonderful gift. He could sleep anywhere, and often enjoyed "forty winks" on the Treasury Bench when his political opponents were hurling charges at him of which he was perfectly oblivious.

Lord Westbury could sleep almost at will. When in Parliament, and not wanted in the House, he would sit in the library reading his briefs with an attention which amazed his colleagues. He occupied the occasionally dropped off to sleep, and awakening after a short interval, resumed his work without apparent effort. In the same way Lord Brougham found relief amidst his work, sleeping whenever he had the chance. Many anecdotes have been related of Pitt's habit of sleeping at odd moments. One day, when an attack was made by an antagonist on Lord North, who had a similitude of sleeping, a member, thinking he was dozing, exclaimed, "The Premier is asleep."

"Not so," said the First Lord; "but I wish to Heaven I were."

Lord Palmerston, from his snatching an occasional nap in the House of Commons, was nicknamed the "Great Sleeper."

On one occasion, when Burke was wearing his hearers by one of those long speeches which attracted for him the name of the "Dinner Bell," a nobleman happened to enter the House just as Selwyn was leaving it. "Is the House up?" he inquired. "No," replied Selwyn; "but Burke is."

The Duke of Wellington could sleep when he chose; and, according to his biographer, "it was one unbroken slumber with him, when in health, from the time he laid his head on the pillow until he rose again. Napoleon, also, could sleep at all odd moments. John Leech suffered much from want of sleep, and Carlyle tells us of himself how, when upset by overwork and sleeplessness, he would get down to smoke in the back yard "in his nightshirt. It was one of the beautifullest nights; the half moon, clear as silver, looked out as from a canopy, and the great dawn was streaming up. I took a remorse, a kind of shudder, at the fuss I was making about a sleepless night, about my sorrow at all, with a life so soon to be absorbed into the great mystery above and around me."

A physician at Magdeburg, Dr. Justinus Bon dem Fischweiler, asserted in his will that his own great age, 109, was entirely to be ascribed to his constant habit of sleeping with his head towards the north. It is told how, at a military hospital in Russia, some years ago, there were some sick patients of highly sensitive natures, who were rapidly recovering. But when removed to another wing of the building they made no progress, so that it was found advisable to get them back to their former wards as quickly as possible, where the heads of the beds were to the north.

Lord Harrington never enjoyed sounder naps than his "forty winks" on the Treasury Bench.

Mr. Lloyd George has the happy gift of being able to sleep at any time. P. O'Connor tells the following story about the Chancellor's power of falling asleep at will.

"In the House of Commons," says T.P., "during one of the all-night sittings over the budget, Mr. Haldane was left in charge. A critical moment arose, during which most other Ministers would have called for the immediate attendance of the official in charge of the budget. Mr. Haldane sent Mr. Lloyd George's room, and he was brought back the next night with a hair. "Leave him alone," said Mr. Haldane, and cheerfully went on without him. A little sleep does some men and women immediate good, and Lloyd George is one of them. After half an hour's rest on a sofa or a couple of chairs he can return to work as fresh as if he had had a whole night's rest."

Swinburne, the poet, required very little sleep, and according to Mr. Edmund Gosse was able to fall asleep anywhere. Mr. Gosse says that when he has parted from him in the evening "he has simply at back in the deep sofa in his sitting room, his little feet close together, his arms against his side, folded in his frock-coat like a grasshopper in its wing-covers, and fallen asleep, apparently for the night, before I could blow out the candles and steal forth from the door."

Beating and Growing.
Persons concerned as to the smallness of their stature may take heart from the experiences of Jeffrey Hudson, of whom a likeness has lately been acquired by the National Portrait Gallery. After reaching the age of 18, he was 18 inches high, and now at all times is 15 1/2 inches. According to his biographer, "he was made a captive at sea, and was taken to a country where he was sold as a slave. He was kept in a small room, with a low ceiling, and frequent beatings. He now shot up to a little more than that height of stature which he retained at in his old age, and the three feet nine inches, the cause of which he himself ascribed to the severity he experienced during his captivity."—Pall Mall-Gazette.

COW TESTING

Dairy farmers are rapidly awakening to the necessity of weighing and testing the milk of each individual cow in the herd. Twenty new cow testing associations have been organized in Quebec since the beginning of this year, twelve new ones have commenced operations in Ontario, two more in Nova Scotia, and one more each in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. This means at least four thousand more cows being checked up each month in addition to the 11,800 in 1910. Probably many more members will be added this month.

Forms for recording weights of milk are supplied free on application to the Dairy Commissioner, Ottawa. When applying, the number of cows should be stated and whether forms are required for weighing daily or on three days each month.

PROTECTION NEEDED

Weekly Sun: One of the really national industries of this country is the manufacture of maple sugar. Few industries, under proper conditions, offer better opportunities for the making of a fair profit. No product, when properly made, is more acceptable when placed on the table of the consumer.

"There is, perhaps, no Canadian industry which has been placed under greater disabilities through adulteration. Every season the market is flooded with stuff, bought in the belief that it is maple syrup, but which has never been near a sugar bush. The frauds perpetrated on producer and consumer alike should be prevented and the way to prevent is to prohibit the use of the word "maple" either as the whole or part of the name used in the sale of articles professing to be the product of the maple tree."

Many manufacturers in this part of Leeds County are endeavoring to protect their goods by the use of a label guaranteeing the purity of the contents of each can and giving the name and address of the maker. The use of this label has been found to develop a direct trade with consumers at a price considerably in advance of local market quotations.

SUN-DIALS AND ROSES

"Every real garden must contain a mystery," writes Katherine Hale in April Canadian Home Journal, and P. O'Connor tells the following story about the Chancellor's power of falling asleep at will.

"In the House of Commons," says T.P., "during one of the all-night sittings over the budget, Mr. Haldane was left in charge. A critical moment arose, during which most other Ministers would have called for the immediate attendance of the official in charge of the budget. This Feeding Floor Could Be Built in The Fall and it would help greatly to preserve the condition of your live stock in the Spring.

Every farmer knows that in the Spring of the year his barnyard is almost bottomless. The live stock mire down into the mud and almost freeze around - greatly to the detriment of their physical condition.

By building a concrete feeding floor in the yard, this trouble is done away with.

A Feeding Floor of comparatively small area and built this Fall, would pay for itself next year. Concrete is the only material that can be used in this way at a moderate cost.

Will you ask for your copy of the book which we have prepared for you - "What the Farmer Can Do With Concrete" - free - and, take our word for it, you will find it one of the most interesting pieces of such literature you ever read. And profitable, too - because it will save you money.

Sunday School Work

The Rev. P. K. Dayfoot, M.A., General Superintendent of the Baptist Sunday Schools for Ontario and Quebec, visited Athens and Plum Hollow on Monday. In the afternoon he conducted a conference in the Athenaeum Baptist Church, and the discussion proved interesting and profitable. In the evening, Mr. Dayfoot conducted a similar conference at Plum Hollow and also gave an address on Sunday School work. Until recently, Mr. Dayfoot was pastor of the church at Simonsville, in the earnest request of the Sunday School Board of the denomination to which he belongs, he was appointed to take up his present duties, and the denomination is to be highly congratulated on having secured an able exponent of Sunday School work.

I wish to convey to my friends and neighbors my most sincere thanks for the kind and beautiful wreaths sent to me by the ladies of the Methodist Church who, at the death of my dear wife, expressed their appreciation of her worth in the society of which she was a member; also to those who so kindly sent such beautiful words as to let that in itself speaks words to me that are cherished beyond expression.

Yours most sincerely

DAIRYMEN AND RECIPROCITY

Taking a broad, patriotic view of the probable effects of reciprocity, farmers of Eastern Ontario are becoming interested in the protection of the cheese, trees of British Columbia, by their chief concern naturally is to see the effect the trade agreement will have on dairy and sell. The following is from an editorial appearing in the Toronto Globe will be read with interest: -

Dr. Charles Publow, one of the best authorities in Ontario on dairy prices and conditions in the dairy industry, quotes the prices offered for milk by the Borden Condensed Milk Company of New York, the largest milk firm in the United States. They offer per cwt. as follows: - April, $1.50; May, $1.25 June, $1.10; July, $1.30; August, $1.45; September, $1.55. The average price in Prince Edward county, a typical dairying section of Ontario, Dr. Publow says, was 85 cents per cwt. last season. After careful inquiry into the cheese-making situation he makes the very positive statement that, confining himself largely to the softer variety of cheese, the American cheese-maker produces eleven pounds of cheese from 100 pounds of milk, while the Canadian maker produces only nine pounds of cheese from 100 pounds of milk, or, in other words, there is from forty to forty-two per cent, of water in the softer American cheese, while there is only about thirty-six per cent of water in the Canadian product. With American cheese at fifteen cents per pound and Canadian at twelve cents per pound, 100 pounds of milk in the United States is worth fifty-seven cents more than it is in Canada.

These are the statements of an expert who is actually engaged in the dairying business. Certain products from the United States, such as eggs in winter, early fruit, and mess pork; will undoubtedly be shipped north and tend to moderate prices in the markets of Canada at certain seasons. On the other hand, many makers of dairy products who are not in close touch with the chief Canadian cities and who ship the bulk of their products at present to Great Britain in the form of cheese will unquestionably send cream and cheese and butter in largely increased volume to the markets of the United States. The dairy farmers of Ontario and Quebec and the Maritime Provinces will be among the chief beneficiaries of free trade in foodstuffs.

She made her home in New York and superintended the musical education of their child. In the meantime, the poet lived alone. Then Miller fell ill. His recovery dated from the arrival of his daughter. After he had improved sufficiently to warrant it, Miss Miller returned to the east to close her studio, and arranged to make her permanent home with her father. She returned with her mother and a touching reunion resulted.

PRESBYTERIAN LABOR CREED

A Proposed Confession of Faith Outlined on Social Problems.

Clauses Drafted by the Social and Moral Reform Board.

Rev. Mr. Inkster at a London Labor Meeting.

London, Ont., despatch: In his address to the London Trades and Labor Council, Rev. J. Gibson Inkster, of the First Presbyterian Church, enunciated some clauses of the proposed Presbyterian Confession of Faith on social problems. This new creed was prepared at a meeting of the Social and Moral Reform Board held in Toronto last week. It will be presented to the General Assembly when it meets in Ottawa in July, and will be then the subject of discussion. If it is accepted it places the Presbyterian Church strongly behind those who are fighting the battle of the laboring interests.

Rev. Mr. Inkster told his hearers that he was not there to address them as members of the laboring class. He objected to the class distinction, which should not exist. He spoke of the problems which the workmen of to-day have to face, and urged the necessity of their studying these problems, so that they will have strong men ready to represent them in Parliament. Then he spoke of the necessity of men keeping in touch with the church. In the past it might not have done all possible for the workmen, but now it is fighting to make the conditions under which they labor more congenial, and to bring about a fairer distribution of the world's goods.

The resolutions prepared at the meeting of the Social and Moral Reform Board in Toronto last week declared in part:

(1) For the acknowledgement of the obligations of wealth to the poor. The church declares that the getting of wealth should be in obedience to Christian ideals, and that all wealth must be held or administered as a trust from God, for the good of humanity. The church emphasizes the danger, ever imminent to the individual and to society as well of setting material wealth above religious life. The church protests against undue desire for wealth, untempered pursuit of gain, and the moderate cultivation of riches.

(2) For the application of Christian principles to the operation of industrial associations, whether of labor of capital.

(3) For a more equitable distribution of wealth.

(4) For the abolition of poverty. We realize that social poverty is due to vice, idleness or imprudence, but, on the other hand, we hold that much is due to preventable disease, uneducated accidents, lack of proper education, unemployment, and other conditions, and which are beyond the control of the individual.

(5) For the protection of childhood.

(6) For such regulation of the conditions of the industrial occupations of women as shall safeguard the physical and moral health of themselves, the community and future generations.

(7) For adequate protection of working people from dangerous machinery and objectionable conditions of labor, and from occupational diseases; for such ordering of the hours and conditions of labor as to make them compatible with health, physical, mental and moral life.

(8) For provision by which the burden imposed by injuries and death from industrial accidents shall not rest upon the injured person or his family.

(9) For the release of the worker from work one day in seven.

(10) For the employment of the methods of conciliation and arbitration in industrial disputes.

(11) For proper housing.

(12) For the application of Christian methods in the care of dependent and defective persons, by the adequate equipment and humane and scientific administration of public institutions concerned therewith.

(13) For the development of a Christian spirit in the attitude of society toward offenders against the law.

The church holds that a Christian society must seek the reformation of offenders, and that it must endeavor to prevent the commission of crimes by furnishing a wholesome environment, and by such education and corrective measures as will develop moral sense and industrial efficiency in the young.

(14) For opposition to vice.

We believe that the law of the land should vigorously combat vice, and that it is the duty of society to discover and remove the causes of vice.

(15) For pure food and drugs.

We believe that foods and medicines should be so inspected as to guarantee their freedom from adulteration, poisons and infection.

(16) For wholesome recreation.

We believe that the play of children and the amusement of adults are of great importance to morals, and that they should be brought under social control, so as to free them from the evil effects of unrestrained commercialism, and make them minister to the physical and moral well-being of the people.

KIDNAPPED A MACEDONIAN

Taken From His Boarding House and Hustled Away on Train.

Man Was Abducted by Stranger Posing as a Private Detective.

Chauffeur Fooled Also—Police Now Looking For Man.

Toronto, despatch.—Toronto police are confronted with a mystery which they believe may develop into a real live international complication. It arises out of the kidnapping of Angelus Antonoff, a Macedonian, from his boarding house at 362 East King street yesterday noon by a man who posed as a private officer, but who hurried him off in a taxi, and after a visit to a house in Ward Seven, hustled him out of the city on the Parkdale station on a train westbound at 1:15 o'clock.

CROPS ARE GOOD

Conditions in the Canadian Northwest Are Most Satisfactory.

Wheat Doing Well and Much New Land Broken This Season.

Victoria, B. C., April 3.—F investigation by local grain exchange members, by mill men, and reports from Minneapolis and Chicago, show most satisfactory agricultural conditions in the Canadian west to-day.

Fall wheat is reported to be in excellent shape both in Northern and Southern Alberta, having come through the winter well. There is considerable increase in acreage. Experiments with fall wheat in some parts of Manitoba are also promising.

The open character of last fall resulted in a big amount of fall ploughing, though this would have been still further increased had it not been for continued drought. But heavy and frequent snow falls which have had a chance to soak well in have removed this danger.

It is difficult to estimate how much new land was broken last year ready for seeding this spring, but the area must have been very considerable, especially in Saskatchewan, where entirely new districts have been brought under the plow. Speaking by districts, estimates of increased acreage to be seeded to spring wheat run from ten all the way up to fifty per cent.

TRAIN MINISTERS

First Let Them be Reporters or Policemen to See "Real Life."

"Let Them Know Whereof They Speak," Says London's Chief.

London despatch.—The talk of juvenility in the boys' and young men's clubs has led Chief Williams to express his views on theological education.

"What are the boys going to do?" the Chief enquires. "Some of them don't like the Y. M. C. A. Some of them are not ready to stay home every night and read. Are they to be on the streets?"

"They must either go there or to the clubs which they form themselves. It is only one boy in a dozen who is content to stay at home and read every night. The ones who do will not amount to much in after life either. They might make ministers, but nothing else. And they would be the kind of ministers who read nice little sermons dealing with problems of which they know little or nothing."

"If I had a son who felt called—as they say to the ministry, I would take a different means of educating him from that usually adopted." And the chief emphasized the remark with a tap of his cane.

"I would make him a reporter on some good paper, or a member of the police force for a couple of years. After that I would send him to college."

"His experience in the world, mixing with all kinds of people, would show him what people need. He would be in a position to try to do good when he finished college."

"I believe," urged the chief from his own practical creed, "I believe that some such thing as that should be made compulsory in the education of every minister. Let them know whereof they speak."

HOLLWEG SPEECH

Morning Post Praises German Chancellor's Address.

Favors Organization of Anglo-American Peace League.

London, April 3.—The Morning Post considers that the debate in the Reichstag on disarmament and arbitration deserves the close attention of optimists, who imagine that an era of universal peace is at hand.

It praises Dr. Von Bethmann-Hollweg's speech, adding that universal arbitration, like universal disarmament, is impossible until some means of control is devised by which a recalcitrant nation can be forced to obey the decision of the court to which by agreement the matter has been referred.

The Daily Express considers that it is not necessary to despair of arbitration, because Germany looks with suspicion on the great idea. The important thing, the Express adds, is to organize an Anglo-American peace league and to that league many powers will certainly attach themselves, and the hope of that league will be great enough to check any aggressive or warlike designs on the part of unattached powers.

DR. PATTERSON.

Cooke's Church Sends Message to Belfast Congregation.

Toronto despatch.—The congregation of Cooke's Presbyterian Church, together with many other citizens of Toronto, said good-bye last night to the Rev. Dr. William Patterson for many years pastor of that church, on the occasion of his departure from Canada to take up the work of the pastorate of May Street Church, Belfast.

Hon. J. M. Gibson, Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, who presided, submitted this message to the gathering in the form of a resolution, which carried unanimously.

In a brief address, Dr. Patterson reviewed the life and work of "the great Henry Cooke," whose place he was going to fill in concluding Dr. Patterson said: "No matter how long I live, and I hope I may live for a long time, Canada will have a warm place in my heart. And Toronto—I don't think even Edinburgh is in it with Toronto. I am not going away for good, I shall have to come back to see how you are getting along, and I hope to have the privilege, too, of inducing many others now in Ireland to come to Canada."

It was in 1888 that Dr. Patterson first came to Canada from the north of Ireland, and to Cooke's Church. He remained here until 1900, when he went to Philadelphia. For the last year he has been Canadian missionary of the Presbyterian Church in Canada.

With the prospect of local option campaigns in Frontenac and the city of Kingston, the Whig hastens to record a declaration in favor of license reduction in preference to the option law. The expression of this opinion by such a progressive paper as the Whig will be rather surprising to its readers. The time when the success of local option could be honestly questioned is of the past. With a straight majority vote to decide, this province, including the cities, would be "dry" in three years.

"The House of Hats"

THE HOUSE OF HIGHEST QUALITY

To succeed in business to-day it is not enough that you should look out for Number One. You must look out for Number Two. That is, you must consider the needs of the buyer and make his interests your own. To sell a person something he does not want, or to sell him something at a price above its actual value is a calamity—for the seller. Business is built on confidence. We make our living out of our friends. Our enemies will not trade with us. In law the buyer and seller are supposed to be people with equal opportunity to judge of an article and pass on its value. This is not so, for the seller is a specialist and understands his products, and so the buyer must depend on the honesty and good will of the seller. We are in business determined that we would build a House of Highest Quality. Making it our constant aim to make and sell only the best of its kind, guaranteeing everything we sell, refunding the money of our friends who are not satisfied. HATS, FURS, CLOTHING, FURNISHINGS.

FOOD - FOR THOUGHT

Who pays the enormous expense of those show rooms in our towns and cities? Is it not the people who buy pianos there?

Why buy from them when you can get just as good, and in many cases better, from me, delivered Free from the factory to your door? This is one of the reasons I can sell you a piano for less money than you pay at any show-room.

All kinds of instruments taken in exchange. We defy competition for the money in all grades. Get my prices before purchasing, for they are certainly very low for strictly high grade pianos.

Also agent for Raymond, New Williams, and New Home Sewing Machines
P. S.—Pianos sold on instalment plan when wished.
