Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the questions raised by the task force. It is not a new idea, it is one that has been under debate for many years. It is, naturally, one that I will be considering, as the minister responsible for housing, in order to decide whether it should be amongst recommendations that I will make to my cabinet colleagues.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. When the ceiling is freed, does the minister expect the rates to be lower?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WAYS AND MEANS

MOTION TO AMEND INCOME TAX ACT AND ESTATE TAX ACT

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved:

(iv) for each taxation year after 1968, shall be the amount obtained when the aggregate taxable value of gifts made by him in the year is added to his cumulative gift sum for the immediately preceding taxation year, and the rate schedule to be applied to an individual's cumulative gift sum shall be

(v) 12% where the sum does not exceed $15,000,

(A) the value at the time of death of such person of property held at such time by a trustee subject to a trust described in clause (iii) of subparagraph (a) of this paragraph, under which such person was the spouse referred to in that clause, or

(B) the amount that was, by virtue of that clause, deducted in computing the aggregate taxable value of property passing on the death of the former spouse of that person,

(i) the amount determined by applying the rate schedule set out below to his estate sum

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Speaker: Carried, on division.

Motion concurred in.

INCOME TAX ACT AND ESTATE TAX ACT

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-165, to amend the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act, be now read the first time and be printed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

AMENDMENT PROVIDING EMERGENCY PAYMENTS TO MEET DRYING COSTS

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading and reference to a committee of the whole of Bill C-162, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, we had before us earlier this year amendments to the cash advance legislation which doubled the amount of the advance available to farmers and which has been made great use of by prairie farmers since it was enacted. To date a total of $127 million has been advanced to farmers, a total of 72,000 producers, under the amendments and the previous act. This is approximately double the amount which was advanced in any previous whole year, the previous record having been in 1960-61 when 76,000 producers received a total of $64 million by way of advance. Hon. members are aware of the difficult harvesting conditions which affected last year's crop and of the importance of drying that part of the crop which was harvested in tough or damp condition.

The existing drying facilities in the terminals will not be able to dry more than a limited amount of the grain involved. As a result, there is a significant burden on the farmers of this region to dry the grain themselves. They are proceeding in this direction, but in some cases a shortage of ready cash and the credit situation in which they find themselves may be impeding the drying operation.

With a view to correcting this situation, this bill would further amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act to provide for emergency cash advances, interest free, for the purpose of drying grain on the farms. The legislation proposed would allow permit holders to apply for a further advance notwithstanding the fact that they had previously obtained an advance, indeed the maximum advance, otherwise allowed under the act. They would be allowed to apply for an advance to a maximum of $600. The security for the advance would be undelivered grain on the farm. The bill provides, therefore, for cash advances, interest free, for the purpose of drying grain or for paying the costs for grain which has recently been dried. There is a significant quantity of grain to be dried, and it is hoped this legislation will permit the prompt movement of that grain to the dryers so that maximum use will be made of the fairly considerable grain-drying equipment which exists in the prairie provinces.

It is our hope that this legislation will pass quickly. The government has been in consultation with the Wheat Board about implementing the legislation as soon as it becomes law. The Wheat Board will be in a position to undertake the necessary administrative steps so that the advances will be available in short order. I therefore urge hon. members to join in the enactment of this legislation to make available to farmers who need this additional cash, interest free, the amount they need in the shortest possible time.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, this legislation brings to mind the fact that between 1952 and 1957 Her Majesty's loyal opposition pressed for action to be taken by way of legislation to permit cash advances on farm stored wheat. Successive ministers of trade and commerce and the government as a whole said it could not be done, that it was an impossibility. Within a few days of our taking office we brought in this legislation which has been continued, as have other pieces of legislation passed under my administration although criticized at the time.

This is of interest to the minister because I recall—I say this in the best of good spirit—that a few days after the general election he said that he expected to be minister of justice but he would settle for the ministry of agriculture. This apparently is one step forward in the general direction of the latter portfolio, certainly not the former.

The minister has very carefully refrained from giving the facts of the serious situation in western Canada. The amount of wheat in western Canada still undried is 217 million bushels, of which 108 million bushels are in the province of Saskatchewan. The drying operations have been comparatively small, although not insignificant. The total amount of wheat dried on the farms is estimated to be as follows: in Saskatchewan, 16.9 million bushels; Alberta, 12.9 million bushels; Manitoba, 12.3 million bushels. So far as the interior government elevators are concerned, they too have been as nonchalant regarding this matter as has been the government. In November the total amount dried in internal elevators was 372,000 bushels; in December, 1,042,000 bushels, and up to January 17, 833,000. What does this mean? It is just further evidence of the fact that this government has no appreciation of the seriousness of the emergency on the prairies.

Recently the minister was in Saskatoon speaking to the annual meeting of the chamber of commerce and he carefully refrained from dealing with this problem but instead gave his views as to the appropriateness and worthwhileness of rule 16A. He said how helpful it was and that if it had been enacted it would have been beneficial to democracy as a whole and to parliamentary government in particular. He stayed away from the problem that the farmers face.

I doubt that this government has any knowledge whatever of the feelings of frustration among the farmers of western Canada. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) told us today that he is going to the coast to see how things are at the port of export. I wish he would go to Saskatchewan, Manitoba or Alberta and make a couple of speeches there. I am sure he would be received with hospitality and kindness. I am also sure he would be received with the utmost disdain for the attitude of this government in failing to act.

What have we here? We have a measure which in my opinion constitutes a piddling attempt to meet a serious problem. The farmers are going to be allowed to secure advances up to $600 to enable them to dry their wheat. The marketing of wheat is in a serious position because the government will not act and will not appoint a traffic controller even though at this very moment some 7,000 or 8,000 Canadian freight cars which should be in Canada and have the capacity to carry wheat are in the United States. Why is something not done in that direction? Only one quarter of the driers are being used in Saskatchewan because of the fact that the cold weather has made it impossible to utilize the driers that are there. This bill is just a makeshift measure designed to conceal the failure of this government to act.

We see the same thing happening in every field. We had an example today when I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) what is being done about Iraq. The answer was that the government has not had any word yet. It is a nonchalant government, a non-active government, a government that produces a just society that is unjust to everybody, and in particular at the moment to the farmers of western Canada.

What will this measure do? It will enable the farmers to borrow some more money without paying interest thereon for the purpose of doing work which the government should be contributing to doing rather than passing the buck to the farmer. The minister stated a moment ago that the responsibility in this matter lies with the farmer. That philosophy may be all right in Ottawa, but I would like the minister to utter remarks of this kind in western Canada. It is something that is totally unjustifiable. There is no use trying to press the government to act.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is engaged at the moment in a deep conversation when we are dealing with a problem for which his responsibility is very great and in which his conduct has been apathetic from the beginning. This government will not act, as was apparent when the minister said today that it lies with the farmers to dry their own wheat. If this is how the minister exercises his responsibility, I can only say that the situation for the western farmer is hopeless. The government is saying to him: "We will advance you the money up to the extent of $600 so that you can do the drying", when the fact is that it cannot be done because of climatic conditions and because of the shortage of driers available for the purpose. This is just another example of buck-passing in place of action.

What should the government have done? Why is action not being taken, this being a national emergency more serious than any in the last 35 years in western Canada? Why is assistance not being given? The Wheat Pool and other organizations have asked for a direct grant to the farmer. I noticed that the minister did not deal with that phase at all. The bill calls for the provincial and federal governments to assist the individual farmer with a direct payment of 5 cents per bushel for wheat that is dried up to a maximum of $200 per farmer. There is no excuse for leaving this problem on the shoulders of the western farmer as suggested a few moments ago by the minister as a solution to the problem. Our position in western Canada is a desperate one and calls for action from the government.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has a tremendous capacity for affability. He smiles.

Mr. Pepin: That is something.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He smiles attractively. He can take his place anywhere, even in Hollywood, when it comes to his capacity to smile. But what is needed is action.

Now let me point out one other phase in connection with the farm problem today, and it is all part and parcel of the same problem. It has to do with the sale of low grade wheat by farmers to feed mills. Farmers cannot market their wheat but they have to get rid of it. The result is that they are selling their wheat at 80 to 90 cents a bushel. So far as barley is concerned, they are selling it at 40 cents a bushel whereas going prices are $1.80, and No. 3 wheat, to which I made reference a moment ago, is around $1.90. Thirty-six million bushels were sold by farmers directly in 1968. The reason for that is that the farmers have this wheat on hand. They see the spring coming and they have to get rid of it so they take what they can get.

With all the power I can put into my words I ask the government as a major step to provide something in the nature of acreage payments. However, if this is not possible it should carry out the wishes of the western farmers, supported by the wheat pools and the farm organizations, by providing the farmers with at least 5 cents a bushel—some say 10 cents, the actual cost of drying being 10 cents. But I say 5 cents with a maximum amount to a farmer of $200. If the government would do something like this they would get things moving.

This legislation is all right as far as it goes but it does not go very far. It is just another example of the uncertain, nonchalant and lackadaisical way in which the government is approaching one of the most serious problems Canada has ever faced, the like of which the western provinces have never seen before. Even though the minister did not become Minister of Agriculture, a portfolio he was prepared to accept as a last resort if he could not become minister of justice, I should like to see him take a stand now on behalf of the farmers of western Canada. Many of his own constituents are in a desperate position. This legislation, though it should pass, is merely a step. What is required is a direct payment to the farmer to encourage drying operations and compensate him for the loss he has suffered through no fault of his own by reason of climatic conditions.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I say at the outset that the real question confronting us as we discuss this proposal is: does it meet the existing problem? As a member of this house and as a farmer I am bound to consider whether it meets the situation now facing agriculture in western Canada. This legislation apparently embodies what the government is prepared to do, and since the government is advancing it I presume that hon. members opposite consider it sufficient to cope with the situation.

With regard to the amount of grain of all kinds to be dried in western Canada, all we have at present are estimates. There is the flat statement by the chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board, Mr. McNamara, that only a relatively small proportion can be dried in the commercial facilities at the terminals and elsewhere and that the bulk of it will have to be dried on the farms. From the various estimates which have been made I suspect that some 300 million to 350 million bushels of damp grain on the prairies will have to be dried on the farms.

The proposal in this bill is that a loan of 10 cents a bushel up to a certain maximum be made available to farmers to enable them to cope with this problem. One of the main drawbacks is that the money is to be advanced in the form of a loan.

Suppose an area in Canada, as has happened from time to time, were to be afflicted by a disaster of outsize proportions. Surely we would recognize it as such and take measures to give the necessary assistance. I suggest to this house that the grain growing areas of Canada are facing such an emergency today. As the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) has just said, it is a disaster without precedent. I have farmed in western Canada all my life and in all my experience I have seen nothing like it. On top of this is the grain delivery situation. What we are telling farmers in this bill is, in effect: you have been able to borrow so much money because you cannot sell your grain; now you can borrow so much more money in order to dry it. But the farmer knows he will not be able to sell his product even after it has been dried, so his obligations will mount. Some may ask why the farmer does not stick his neck out since he cannot lose. Well, he has got it out about as far as he can put it right now.

The biggest shortcoming in the government's present approach is that the farmer is being asked to undertake an additional obligation in extremely adverse circumstances. The physical difficulty of drying this grain is enough in itself for the farmer to contend with. Indeed, I have serious doubts that it will be possible to dry all the grain and put it in condition before it starts to spoil next spring. I mentioned the physical difficulty of getting the grain dried. With the weather on the prairies as it is now it is very hard to get equipment moving to do the job. There will only be a very short period during which an all-out effort will have to be made if losses are to be prevented.

This grain is a valuable asset. We know from experience in Canada that though we may at times have surpluses there are other times when we can dispose of those surpluses. I contend there is urgency here. I try to be honest. I try to be objective. But I do not think the degree of the urgency was realized by the government in time. It may be they are realizing it now—I sincerely hope so—but a great deal of effort was required in order to bring the matter effectively before the house.

I wish to read now a letter which was sent to Mr. McNamara, the chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, a copy of which was sent to me. This letter is from Eston in west central Saskatchewan where I farm—one of the best wheat growing areas in Western Canada. It was written on behalf of the congregation of St. Andrew's United Church in Eston, Saskatchewan and reads as follows:

The congregation of St. Andrew's United, Eston, Saskatchewan instructed us to write to you in relation to the present crisis in wheat shipment to the west coast. We live in an area which is almost totally dependent on grain sales. This past year has been most difficult on both farmers and business dependent on them.

Our concern is twofold, the desire to sell the wheat which is presently stored in elevators and farm granaries, and to provide the hungry with the sustenance of life, bread. It seems a shame that hungry and starving people should be denied bread when we are glutted with grain. The fact that so many ships are waiting in Vancouver harbour to load grain, which hasn't been delivered to the terminals, adds to the concern.

We realize that there are many factors involved, not the least of which has been the shipment and drying of damp and tough grain. However, it seems that with some insight into prospective wheat sales that there should have been dry grain waiting in the terminals for shipment. It would appear to us that someone was negligent in his duty.

This is the people on the farms speaking.

There are millions of bushels of wheat here on the prairies that could be used to meet the needs of all our wheat customers. We trust you are doing everything possible to see that this wheat is being made available to those who want and need it.

We appreciate your work on behalf of the grain farmers of western Canada. You have a big responsibility, not only to them but to those who need this grain for food. We urge you to use every means at your disposal to meet the needs of both.

We hope that this situation at Vancouver will soon be remedied and not permitted to happen again.

I was interested to learn that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is going to take a trip west. It is time he did, and while he is there I hope he will talk to people like those who wrote the letter I have just read —responsible people, people who are concerned about this situation. There is an old tradition in Saskatchewan that in times of extreme pressure or disaster the businessmen, the church people and the farmers unite in an attempt to put their situation before those whose responsibility they consider it to be. This is what has happened in this case. This kind of action is not taken lightly. I repeat that this letter was written by people who live in one of the most prosperous areas of Saskatchewan.

The situation there is serious. Unless some effective action is taken the result will be 100-horsepower tractors operating on farms on a subsistence basis. I am shocked when I see figures indicating that our storage capacity on the west coast and at the Lakehead is only half full. Certainly that was the case not more than a week ago. Yet we have ships waiting in Vancouver for grain. I suggest that if we can transport potash across the mountains we can do the same with wheat. Trainloads of potash were crossing the mountains last week, so why can we not move our wheat?

I should like to mention a report made by Mr. Atkinson of the National Farmers Union, who said that the Canadian Wheat Board had instructed grain companies on December 5 to move the equivalent of 15 million bushels of No. 2 wheat to the coast but that only a trickle had arrived at the time he made his report. He went on to say that on the Saturday morning—I do not have the exact date but the date of the release is January 27—there were 53 cars of wheat at the Canadian National Railways yards at Vancouver and a limited number at the C.P.R. yards. He saw 22 ships waiting to load wheat from the prairie. No wonder the people of Eston are writing to the Wheat Board about their situation.

We do not lack—and I am sure the government does not lack—good advice from people in western Canada in regard to this crisis. I have referred to remarks made by the president of the National Farmers Union and also the president of the Saskatchewan Farmers Union, who like myself has operated a farm in that area. I also have before me a statement by Mr. Gibbings, president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, who has also farmed in this same area and knows the needs of the farmers.

According to Mr. Gibbings, depressed prices and sales resulted in reducing shipments by some 200 million bushels during the past year, and this made it necessary for the government—this was a year ago—to institute a floor price. Mr. Gibbings goes on to suggest guaranteed domestic prices for wheat. He also underlines the effect that this industry has upon the Canadian economy. Canadian wheat farmers during the past year bought petroleum products, machinery, fertilizers and pesticides, as well as having repairs made, to a total value of $522 million. If purchases of this magnitude are to continue we must ensure that the farming industry remains viable.

As I said, I hope the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will meet and talk with people such as Mr. Gibbings, Mr. Atkinson and the farmers. During a discussion we had in this house the other day two of the ministers opposite took exception to the attitude of some members on this side who come from western Canada. We were accused of seeking publicity. I am not interested in publicity; I am interested in seeing grain moved. It was also suggested that we were panicking. It takes quite a bit to panic me. Anyone who has farmed on the prairies for as long as I have does not get excited too easily. I have lived in good times and bad and know the difference between utter disaster and good fortune from one year to another. So we do not panic too easily. But the situation to which I refer is serious, and by some means or other the government must be made to realize that it is serious.

Finally, I hope the farmers will avail themselves of the provision of this legislation, even if by so doing they will go deeper into debt. It costs more than 10 cents a bushel to dry grain. From my experience in the drying of grain I have found that it costs between 15 cents and 18 cents a bushel to custom-dry grain. I hope that millions of bushels of valuable grain are not allowed to go out of condition and thus be lost to the people of Canada and the world. For that to happen would be a blot on Canada. Our farmers and the government ought not to allow grain to go out of condition when the expentiture of a little money would prevent that happening.

Some in this country say that the condition of the grain is the farmers' problem. After all, it is his wheat; he grew it and if he sells it he will obtain money for it. He is like any other entrepreneur. Let him carry the load; let him worry about it and let him accept his responsibilities. In answer to such an attitude one can only say that in some circumstances the responsibilities weighing on farmers ought to be borne in part by the general public. In any event I submit that the government would have been fully justified in saying: Look, we will contribute 10 cents per bushel toward the cost of drying but the farmer will have to pick up the rest of the tab. The government ought to assist the farmers because they face a tight economic situation and cash is short. There is no prospect that the present situation will be corrected in the immediate future.

Finally, I urge the government to take every step to make sure that we can supply all our potential markets. We ought to have grain in export positions so that when a customer shows up and wants grain all we have to say: Here is our product on the shelf, it is yours, please give us your money.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief, but I want to say a few words on the bill which bears the following recommendation:

> His Excellency the Governor General has recommended to the house the present measure to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act so as to provide emergency advance payments—

This measure will answer the needs of the western farmers.

Mr. Speaker, we are, of course, in favour of this Bill No. C-162 which offers farmers advance payments for their grain in order to help them save the balance of last year's crop.

We understand all the difficulties that the three Prairie provinces had last year. This makes us pause a little, we of the East, because we notice that misfortune does not always strike in the East. It often happens that the western farmers have also their problems. It is a good thing to mention it, because most eastern farmers think that all western farmers wallow in money and are all millionaire industrialists. We sympathize with them, because even if we have problems in the East, the western farmers are not free from them either and the best proof is given by the bill that is introduced today.

I shall say incidentally that they enjoy perhaps more advantages than we do in that they have a specific legislation while our eastern farmers have not yet succeeded in getting a similar measure. I congratulate them for the work they have done to make the governments pass laws that are intended to help them when they have difficulties.

As was mentioned by the former Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), that small amount of $600 is very slim considering the needs of the western farmers. In fact, it is somewhat like the scraps given to the eastern farmers whenever they ask for help.

Mr. Speaker, we have constantly reminded the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) as well as the other ministers that when he thinks of helping the provinces by granting loans at unreasonable rates of interest such as those we have now, this is of no assistance to the farmers but merely rope to hang themselves with. If the government wishes to help, it should proceed the way it does with other countries. We merely ask that our farmers be treated in the same way as the people from foreign countries, that get funds purely and simply, of $10 million and $100 million at a time, and this is done openly. When we want to help other countries, we make them a gift and not by printing dollars as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was saying today. We must put an end to that joke. Credit is used because it is a fact that, at the present time, 92 per cent of the money supply is made up of credit and the government is trying to make fun of us by raising the bogey of dollar printing.

I submit that nowadays people understand more easily the problem of printing paper money than the Prime Minister and several of his ministers because they know that all that is issued by the government is credit. Let us get rid of these gross and childish jokes regarding the printing of paper money.

As the former Leader of the Opposition used to say: if we want to help the western farmers, we should grant them a subsidy and stop compelling them to get deeper into debt. That is how we could really help all the farmers in Canada and not only those from the West.

I was quite astounded a moment ago, when the former Leader of the Opposition said that, last fall, western farmers had sold wheat at 98¢, $1, $1.25 and $1.90 a bushel. We learn something new every day and listening to those western farmers we realize that their problems are very much the same as ours in the fall when we have to sell our potatoes at 55¢ or 60¢ for 50 pounds.

The wheat grower who has made dire sacrifices for every bushel he produces is going to receive $1, $1.10 while we, in the province of Quebec, are going to pay that very same wheat $6.90, $6.95 and $7.25 per 100 pounds. Can you imagine that at the moment, we are paying $10.75 for 100 pounds of flour.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two p.m.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

[Translation]

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, before recess I was saying that Bill C-162 is an additional proof that the western farmers also have to grapple with certain problems which if they are different at the production level are not entirely so at the need level, because western farmers just as eastern farmers need money.

We always bring up the question of money. The government wishes to help a province and to help farmers, but where will it take the money? This is the first question which the government asks itself.

I want to answer this question today, Mr. Speaker, because it is dinned into our ears that if money is taken from one place to put somewhere else, in short if we want to give money to farmers, we must take it somewhere else. We heard that this morning. If we want to give money to one city for urban development, it will have to come off what is given to the province. I shall only ask the government to be logical, and to take money where they find it in order to give it to foreign countries.

I would like to know where the government found the money, for instance, to give in 1968, $840,341,600 under the Colombo Plan. Commonwealth countries in Africa received $49,631,000. Where did the money come from? The other African States received $19,198,200. Where did the money come from? Besides, the Commonwealth countries received $28,334,000.

I make those remarks in order to tell the government where it can get the money to help the western farmers. It can take it where it did when it made those gifts and I maintain what I said this morning—if it really wants to help the western as well as the eastern farmer.

We must give subsidies to the farmer and stop allowing him to go deep into debt, under the philosophy of credit that exists at the economic level. I say that the farmer, far from getting out of his financial difficulties, is worse off afterwards. We must absolutely, as the previous speakers pointed out, help our farmers as we help foreign countries. We want for the farmer the same treatment that is given to foreign countries. Moreover, if we want to lend to him, we must do it in the same way as we do to foreign countries.

Having granted 60-year interest-free loans of more than $60 million to India and of $46,263,000 to Pakistan, and having also granted loans to more than 40 other countries, free of interest or at rates of ¾ or ½ per cent, I feel that we are rich enough to help Canadians.

When our farmers are living in dire poverty, I wonder why the government sends billions of dollars to foreign countries. However, when we ask for a few millions to help Canadian farmers, we are told that there is not enough money, and the Prime Minister tells us: We are not going to print dollars.

But did we print dollars to grant interest-free loans of over $1 billion? Certainly not. Credit was created through the Bank of Canada and that is all what we want for the Canadian people. Let us stop laughing at the people! Let us stop acting as disguised actors in our rotten system, and let us help the farmers with the same kind of assistance which we extend to foreign countries. We do not ask for more.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that our farmers will be satisfied with this aid. We are not asking for the impossible, we are not asking to create anything that does not exist, we merely want to use that which is created by the government from nothing—and I repeat created from nothing—new credit for foreign countries. We do a little more for those countries: we borrow at 7½ per cent to lend interest free. I think this is most ridiculous. Some respectable ministers come and tell us seriously in this house that borrowing at 7½ per cent to lend interest free to foreign countries is good business. I just cannot understand a word when I hear people telling us that this is mere common sense.

But when it comes to spend two or three million dollars to assist our farmers, to help our largest industry employing the greatest number of people to get back on its feet, we are turned down. Then we are given childish answers as the one the Prime Minister gave us today when he said: We are going to print dollars. He knows better than I do how the actual monetary system works. He knows very well that money supply is made up of 90 per cent of monetary credit and that banknotes are very secondary. They have the same role as a postage stamp in our monetary system. He knows it very well. Let him stop making fun of the people. People are aware of those things today because they have been kept informed for the last seven or eight years. They know it is a joke.

All we are asking the Minister of Agriculture—as a former Social Credit member, he knows at least how to proceed—is to start making credit available to farmers on the west coast so they will not have to borrow money from finance companies. If he gave them real material and financial help, I think it would be a good start.

This bill will be a first step towards really assisting all the farmers of Canada.

• (2:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this bill I must say that I support the allocation of up to $600 to a farmer under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act for the purpose of drying grain. I think this is most important and is long overdue. Unfortunately, however, because of the lateness of the proposal, the ability of the farmers to dry grain harvested in the exceedingly damp and wet fall of 1968 has been seriously compromised. The gravity of the tough and damp grain situation has not been realized by the government. It has been pointed out by many of those in the farming industry that the problem is serious, that there are many millions of bushels of grain that have not been dried and even with the very best of care much of it will spoil resulting in a reduced value on the market. Although there is much talk, and it is true, that a farmer can by a great deal of work dry grain on his farm in the spring when the temperature rises, it is also true that the quantities involved are now of such magnitude that it is almost physically impossible to cope with the situation.

The statement of an Alberta official of the Department of Agriculture that considerable grain may spoil if not looked after is an indication of the concern of those nearer the problem about having it aired and remedied if possible. The difficulty of grain drying has been compounded by the limited amount of grain that can be dried at inland terminal elevators. There are only 6,000 bushels of wheat now in store at Vancouver, where there is a maximum variety drying capacity of four million bushels a month, and this has seriously compromised the movement of wheat out of the port of Vancouver. Together with the very cold winter, when it is considered that about a week ago there were only one million bushels of No. 2 northern in store at terminals there and that 11 million are needed to take care of the ships already in port and the five or six more vessels expected by February 10 to transport approximately 75,000 tons of No. 2 northern to Japan, the shipping of No. 2 northern, for which the Wheat Board has had good sales, out of Vancouver has been made extremely difficult.

It seems to be a fact that the very large amounts of tough and damp grain in store at Vancouver waiting to be dried for shipment to China have overtaxed the capacity to handle the extra sales that were generated when the Japanese entered the market and took substantial quantities of No. 2 northern for importation. So I welcome this bill as a measure to improve the lot of the farmer in drying his grain. Since much of the grain now in storage on the farms must be dried by the farmer himself, this assistance will be a welcome addition in solving his problem.

The problem of drying the grain is only part of the much larger problem of marketing and the very severe competition which we face in the world. Last week a gloomy view was taken of Canada's position in the world wheat market by the president of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange. He stated that Canada's position is precarious and unlikely to be as good again as it has been in recent years. Two recent articles in a United States grain journal, The Southwestern Miller, have been of some interest to Canadian farmers and may be a serious portent of what is in the future. One article noted that there was an underlying current of dissatisfaction in the United States with the operation of the International Grains Agreement. There was doubt about the ability of the United States to compete in dollar markets which had become prevalent or noticeable when the grains agreement had come into effect.

The American Farm Bureau Federation has an influential voice in American agriculture and may have an important voice in the new administration. At its recent annual convention the federation adopted a resolution calling flatly for withdrawal from the International Grains Agreement as part of an effort to expand trade and increase exports. As the grains agreement has been approved by Congress for three years ending June 30, 1971, it is noted that it will probably be extremely difficult to have the new Congress disallow or abrogate the agreement. But even within the agreement the new administration could move toward being a much tougher competitor than at present in the pricing of wheat in the world dollar markets.

The prospects for exports of wheat into eastern Europe or the Soviet Union seem to be rather dim. This area, which at one time was a leading importer, now threatens to become more aggressive in the export wheat trade. Russian wheat with a minimum guaranteed protein of 14 per cent is being marketed in Britain at the rate of 20,000 metric tons a month. This new guaranteed protein level will be difficult to meet and it is an area into which the Wheat Board and Canadian marketing authorities will have to look. It would be hopeful if the Russians could be induced to take up their option for the balance of this crop year, and I am sure that western agriculture is looking hopefully in this direction.

This measure will be an inducement for farmers to dry their grain because, having committed so much to the cost of harvesting it, it would be a great tragedy if the grain was not put into condition to be stored for a considerable length of time. It is stated by Mr. McNamara, chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, that there are enough driers to dry Canada's damp grain if they were in the proper place and were used to the fullest extent.

It is hoped that this measure will facilitate the situation so that as much grain as possible will be put into condition and stored before its disposal. I endorse what has already been done by the government but I suggest it cannot stop there. Many farmers are in serious financial difficulty and feel that by taking advantage of these advances they are being pushed further into debt. Hundreds of millions of bushels of damp grain are involved, and it would seem to me to be good business on the part of the government to provide a direct subsidy to the farmers to induce them to dry their grain. I do not feel that the subsidy should cover the entire cost of grain drying but it should cover at least a part of it. There is much to be done and the time is short. I hope the government will consider a direct subsidy as a partial payment in respect of the cost of drying grain in order that it may be stored and not completely lost in the year ahead.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I concur with those hon. members who have spoken before me to the extent that I am not opposed to this legislation, but I must, as members of this party have done earlier, protest against its gross inadequacy and terrible unfairness. As has been suggested in this chamber in months past, when a situation occurs such as that in respect of the harvest in western Canada last fall it constitutes something more than just a problem for farmers. It constitutes a national problem which should be solved by the entire nation. The cost of providing such a solution should not be borne entirely by the farmers but by the nation as a whole.

Earlier the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) talked about panic on the part of members on this side of the house which he alleged occurs every time the farmers face a problem. It is not panic, sir, but anger, frustration and a feeling of being completely fed up. The farmers on the prairies do not panic very easily. Nor do the members of this house who come from the prairies panic very easily. Farmers have to put up with wet years and dry years. They have to put up with being up to their eyeballs in wheat some years and having no wheat at all in other years. In recent years there have been only one or two occasions when there has been above normal rainfall, and the past fall was the worst of all. In spite of this, the farmers have in the past been able to survive and cope with all situations. In the dirty thirties they had to put up with dust, grasshoppers and gophers. They can cope with all these things but when they have to cope with a Liberal government as well it is a little too much to expect of them.

This is not the first time a federal Liberal government has been inadequate, apathetic and deadly slow in providing fair treatment on behalf of the entire nation to the agricultural industry. When we are talking about the cost of putting cereal crops in western Canada into good condition for marketing we are talking about something which will cost at least $70 million and could reach $100 million. We cannot expect the farmers to bear the entire cost. That would be unfair, unjust and unthinkable. Any government of any political party which comes up with this kind of inadequate measure without really accepting its share on behalf of the whole nation is failing in its responsibilities.

A number of farm organizations have submitted proposals to the government, but I have yet to hear a single minister, or a member on the government side of the house respond in this house or in any public manner to these proposals. As far as I know the government has not even had the courtesy to reply to these organizations or tell them why these proposals cannot be implemented.

The Saskatchewan Farmers' Union submitted a lengthy proposal dealing with the drying of grain in which it was outlined how it could be transported from the farmer's yard to the dryers and back. The union recommended and pleaded for a schedule of payments to cover part of this cost. It suggested that from last August 1 to the end of February a maximum of 12 cents per bushel should be paid to the farmers for drying, from March 1 to April 30, 10 cents per bushel, and from May 1 till the end of the crop year, 5 cents per bushel. I do not know whether the government has even replied to this proposal. I hope the minister or someone on that side of the house will indicate whether a reply has been made and, if so, what it contained. If an unfavourable reply has been made I hope someone will explain why it was unfavourable.

During an earlier debate the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) suggested to hon. members on this side of the house that there was a fundamental message that should be passed on to members from central and eastern Canada. I think we have got this message across to the members who sit on this side of the house. I should like to know whether the hon. member has succeeded in getting the message across to other members on the government side.

We have said time and again that of all the occupational groups in this country the one group which has no say about how much it is to be paid for its labour and its investment is made up of the farmers. When this group asks for fair and reasonable assistance in dealing with a situation such as the one that now exists they are not asking for something to which they are not entitled. National disasters have occurred on a number of occasions in this country and the nation as a whole has rallied to help. I have in mind the Winnipeg flood or the steel mill that went belly-up in Nova Scotia. Surely this is another disaster in respect of which the whole nation should assist.

I suggest to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt and other western members on the government side of the house that the two people they must persuade are the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). I am sure that members from western Canada who sit on the government side are fully aware of the problem. They perhaps understand the situation better than I, and I hope they will go to extraordinary lengths to persuade their colleagues in the government and the Liberal caucus as to the urgent need for assistance. Several million dollars should be made available from the federal treasury to offset a portion of the cost of drying last year's crop. This grain must be put into condition in order that it can be sold. We must prevent it from spoiling.

I think I am being very conservative, and I use that word advisedly, in estimating the total cost of this operation at a minimum of $70 million. Surely it is only fair that a third of this cost should be paid by the federal treasury. I hope members on the opposite side will endeavour to convince the Minister of Finance that for every dollar he puts into this operation now he will get $2 back next year and the year after as a result of higher income and corporation tax returns and foreign exchange benefits through export markets. If one wants to look at this situation purely from a dollars and cents point of view, the country will benefit as a result of money being spent in this way by the government. All the money spent now will be returned over and over again as a result of higher income and corporation taxes paid by farmers and industries associated with agriculture. It will also, without question, benefit our export sales and our foreign exchange position.

Surely it is good business, therefore, for the federal government to now allocate at least $20 million, and preferably $30 million, in direct cash assistance. I suggest to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt that later this session he should introduce a measure to provide that the $600 taken as a cash advance under this bill will not have to be repaid by any farmer who has used the money to dry his grain.

A number of statements have been made by members of the government, and I am sorry to say by some people in the higher circles of the grain industry and even in one farm organization, to the effect that there is apathy and complacency on the part of the farmers in not drying their grain. These people have said that the driers are not all being used. This is perfectly true; they are not all being used. There are a number of excellent reasons why all the driers are not being used. Some of these machines are so old and obsolete that a farmer would be foolish to try to dry his grain in them, because a great deal of damage could be done to the grain.

The farmers of western Canada are not stupid; they know of this and other reasons that cause them to hesitate or delay using on-farm driers. I should like to illustrate why some of them are not being used. Farmers have heard about the large number of samples that have come back showing that grain that had been put through a drier had been damaged. The farmer therefore thinks he had better not take a chance in drying his grain and further spoiling it because it is in bad enough condition already. This farm income position inhibits, and that is a mild word, any further expenditure in drying his crop. I should like to illustrate this. I spoke on the telephone last night and this morning with elevator agents and a few farmers in my constituency. The right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert can confirm that Lake Centre is pretty well in the middle of the wheat growing area of western Canada. I think it is a reasonably good sample of the grain industry in the west. A great deal of the wheat being hauled to the elevators is graded No. 4 northern or No. 5 wheat. The initial price for No. 4 northern is $1.36¾ a bushel, and if it is damp it brings the farmer $1.19¾. I am informed that after drying No. 4 northern wheat is often graded No. 5. In many instances wheat drops a grade after it has been dried. This brings the price down to $1.22 a bushel, which is a further loss of 14 cents a bushel for drying No. 4 wheat. This is when the frost shows up in the grain, and it is graded accordingly. The farmer knows that No. 4 wheat may after drying be graded No. 5. In this case he loses money on the price of the wheat in addition to the cost of drying it.

There is another reason why all the driers are not being used. The cost involved is not just a matter of the rental of the drier. There are costs involved for trucking, for grain loaders and the fuel required for both these machines. In addition there is the cost of storage and hiring labour. All these are added to the cost of drying the grain.

A test has just been carried out by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. They installed, 25 feet from a country elevator so they did not break the fire insurance regulations, an MC600 continuous-flow drier. They bought 10,033 bushels of wheat for $10,584. After drying the wheat they had left 9,267 bushels. It was worth more per bushel, namely, a total of $11,260. There was a net loss in the drying process of 716 bushels. Therefore, after the wheat was dried there was a profit of $675. But while they made a profit of $675 on the value of the wheat, namely, 10,000 bushels, the charge—and the wheat pool kept very meticulous figures when carrying out this test—for 66 hours while the drier operated, at $13 an hour, was $858. This meant there was a net loss of $182.65 on those 10,033 bushels of wheat which had originally been purchased. This is another reason why farmers are not making use of all the driers available.

The farmers know, if the Minister without Portfolio does not, that in many instances, after paying for drying and meeting all the accompanying costs involved therein, they will be even farther in the hole. Making available an additional $600 cash advance will not even begin to solve the problem; the felony will only be compounded.

We have instances in the northern parts of the province where grain has sprouted, or after being hauled into the elevator is found to be heated. There has been very little of this so far but the situation will get worse before it gets better. When farmers haul in wheat in this condition, because it is out of condition they are paid as little as 91 cents or 98 cents a bushel. If they have already taken the $1 advance they will not receive enough money to repay the advance. Now the minister suggests they should take another ten cents cash advance.

There is a further reason why all the driers are not being used. There is a natural desire—it is perfectly understandable; I would do the same, as I am sure my hon. friends opposite would—on the part of the farmer to save all the expense, time and effort that he can by holding off and trying to get the maximum amount of grain into the elevator on the three bushel damp wheat quota. As I say, this is perfectly reasonable; I would do the same and so would any member of this house who was in the same position. Therefore the farmer is not in any great rush to use the driers.

There is no apathy or complacency on the part of our farmers, but they are saying there is indeed apathy and complacency on the part of the government. This attitude of the government has further frustrated them. If the government is not interested in doing something to improve the situation with regard to grain driers and the use thereof, the farmers wonder why they should carry all the cost.

I submit that I have given six reasons, some of which are stronger than others, why grain driers are not being used to the full extent. The strength of the reasons depends upon the part of the west from which you come. I hope I am wrong, Mr. Speaker, but I am afraid that this additional cash advance program will not mean the increased use of driers that is hoped for. I am afraid that a large number of farmers will still hesitate to dry their grain any sooner than they have to. As long as the weather remains 35 or 40 degrees below zero, the situation will not be corrected. As the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) and the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) can tell you, if the farmer is faced with the cost of loading his grain on to trucks for delivery to a drier, having the grain dried and then hauling it from the drier back to his farm in 40 below weather, the driers will remain idle.

Do not misunderstand me, Mr. Speaker: we are not blaming the government for the weather. There are many other things for which the government can be blamed and we do not have to use the weather. I assure the minister that neither I, my colleagues, nor hon. members to my right are in any sense of the word panicking when we bring these matters to the attention of the government. I tell him quite frankly that I have been angry for many weeks because of this situation. I think the minister and his colleagues from western Canada have also been angry and frustrated at the inability of their colleagues, particularly those in higher places, to understand not only the magnitude of the problem but the need to provide money to assist in solving it. I must say, sir, that if the Minister without Portfolio were able to persuade the Minister of Finance to part with that amount of money, I for one would be happy to decorate him outside the city hall at high noon in front of all his constituents and applaud him.

The measure that the minister has put before us is an amendment to a bill that was originally passed in November of 1957. I would like to draw to the attention of the Minister another section of the bill—here I may be wrong, and if so am subject to correction—that I think needs amending in the light of experience in the repayment of cash advances. Unless there are some other regulations of which I am not aware, and I am not aware of any other amendments, section 13 of the act puts forward the instances in which a recipient is in default in repaying a cash advance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Benjamin: May I have a couple more minutes, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: I wanted to point out this one item to the minister so that when the bill reaches the committee he may agree with me, if I am correct on this, and agree to bring in an amendment. Section 13 illustrates the instances in which the recipient is in default in repaying the cash advance, and paragraph (c) says that if the cash advance has not been returned by December 31 in the new crop year immediately following the crop year in which the advance payment was made, or at such later date as the board may authorize in special cases, then the recipient is in default. May I suggest to the minister that a farmer who takes out the full cash advance, if he is eligible to get the full $6,600, will be extremely unlikely to market enough grain between now and the end of December to repay the entire amount. I would like to suggest to the minister that he amend this bill further and extend the date to at least March 31 of the following crop year for the repayment of these cash advances.

I realize the board can make exceptions in special cases, but there may be so many cases that it will go beyond the realm of special, individual cases. Therefore it seems to me that extending the length of time when the repayment can be made in the new crop year to March 31 would not constitute a major change in the legislation, and the likelihood that the farmer will only get five bushels delivered at the end of July, or at the best six, and perhaps units and a one bushel quota by Christmas, will not enable him to repay the entire advance. Even in the case of a farmer who is not eligible for the full amount of advance payment, it just means he is farming a smaller acreage and will haul proportionately less wheat with which to repay the advance. I hope the minister will look at this measure and, if there are no other regulations or amendments to correct, that he will bring in this correction.

I close by making a final plea to my hon. friends opposite and by saying that this matter is beyond any partisan politics. If it will help, I will even say I am sorry I made the nasty remarks I did about Liberals in my speech in order to strengthen my effort to persuade the hon. gentlemen opposite, particularly those from western Canada, to mount a campaign directed at their colleagues, particularly at the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, to allocate not less than $20 million and preferably $30 million amongst the farmers of western Canada toward paying a fair cost of putting our grain crop into condition. In our opinion it is certainly a reasonable share of the cost that the rest of the nation can bear.

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on this bill may I say I agree with the $600 advance payments to the farmers for the purpose of drying grain, but why does it take so long to get action out of the government? It is the same old story—too little and too late.

Any member from western Canada could see the tough and damp grain situation building up early last fall. Many areas of western Canada had the wettest and poorest harvest conditions we have seen in the last 20 years. On top of this, many areas had their crops touched by early frost and the grain did not ripen properly or took longer than usual to do so. Every week in the House of Commons it was pointed out to the government that there were going to be problems getting the crop dry.

Any farmer in western Canada knows that by October, no matter how good the weather, your combine and harvest day is very short. The farmer is lucky if he can start combining before noon hour and usually, because of moisture, he has to stop by 5 or 6 p.m. This is a far shorter harvesting day than in August or September. Any person driving round western Canada in October could see by the amount of crop still in the swath that there were going to be problems. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) made a tour of western Canada at that time and stated that things were not good but that there was no emergency. After hearing this statement I am sure that when he assessed the situation in Manitoba he must have just walked round the Winnipeg Airport and looked at the situation from there. I know I was alarmed when he made that statement. I know the majority of the crop in the Winnipeg area was under water. The majority of the crop in western Manitoba was still in the swath and getting wetter each day.

Finally, in late November the Wheat Board announced a special three bushel quota for damp grain. By this time the majority of wheat was testing anywhere from 20 to 21 or higher. However, in October this same grain was testing around 17 or 18. Why did the government not take action then? They were told of the situation, Mr. Speaker, and we all know that grain is far easier to dry at 17 or 18 than it is at 21 or higher.

Another question I would like to ask is, why did it take so long to get the drying facilities at the Lakehead operating on a 24 hour seven day a week basis? Surely the government must have felt concern, and could have made some attempt to solve this problem sooner. By January we heard questions being asked as to why more dryers were not being used. Any farmer will tell you it is an expensive proposition to dry grain when the weather is 25 or 30 degrees below zero.

I stated earlier that I am in favour of the advance to assist farmers in drying grain. But this government must realize that credit is not the answer to the problems of agriculture in Canada today. Right now many areas of Marquette have not even had a one bushel quota for dry grain, and here we are at the end of January. How much longer does the government think our farmers can exist on yearly quotas of five and six bushels? Our farmers need drastic action by the government to face up to the problems confronting agriculture. Let us have more aggressive efforts made to sell our grain. How can we expect the Wheat Board to be concerned about wheat sales when the Prime Minister makes statements such as he did in Winnipeg when he said "why should I sell wheat?" The government has to show leadership and direction to the whole agricultural industry, and it is time they got on with the job.

We have all heard now about the deplorable situation that exists at Vancouver with the large number of boats waiting for dry grain. Here again the government was slow in acting. It took a special debate on agriculture last January 22, proposed by members of the official opposition, to get the grain moving. Why, within 24 hours of that debate, were trains moving out of Moose Jaw with No. 2 northern wheat? It was the prodding of the members on this side of the house that was responsible.

Again I say that credit is not the whole answer to our agricultural problems. It is time the government reviewed the serious situation facing the farmers of Canada and came up with a concrete agricultural policy so that the farmers can also share in the so-called just society that this government has advocated.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I presume the minister would close the debate if he spoke now so I should like to make some comments with respect to Bill C-162.

Like the previous speaker I find I must support this bill because it does offer some measure of financial assistance to the wheat producers of western Canada. But surely it cannot be said that the bill is of any substantial significance relative to the size of the problem faced by the prairie grain producers. I listened with interest to the remarks made earlier today with respect to this bill by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and others. I find that this government has indeed been guilty of sins of omission. By mid-October of last fall it had become evident that the harvest situation on the prairies was extremely bad, from which it might have been assumed that a large part of the harvest would be out of condition. Nevertheless, in the two months from mid-October to the end of the year no real effort at coordination was made by the government or by any of its agencies to cope with the situation. It is only now, at the end of January, that any systematic effort is being made to get a sufficient number of grain dryers together and distribute them proportionately in the areas where there is need.

The question could be asked: why was the government so nonchalant about this problem throughout November and December? The weather now is cold; there has been a cold spell on the prairies since mid-January. I would imagine that the amount of drying taking place at the country elevators and on the farms is small. It is a pity that the months of November and December were wasted. It can be said without exaggeration that the government must take the blame for the fact that out of the 200 million bushels of grain which are out of condition and unsuitable for sale only a small percentage has been dried to date. I calculate, in a rough and ready way, that only between one-fifth and one-quarter of the total amount of grain which is out of condition has been dried so far, and it is unlikely that anything will be done in the next few weeks. It is only at the end of winter and the beginning of the spring season that we can expect any substantial amount of grain to be dried on the prairies and at the terminals.

The question is asked whether the job can, indeed, be done with the number of dryers available, before spoilage sets in. I know the government was entertaining a notion that if the matter were left to individual farmers they would make their own arrangements. However, when the problem is of the present magnitude it seems the only logical course is for the government to take a major part of the responsibility by acting as co-ordinator in connection with the major effort required. I have been informed that in the months of November and December some farmers were thinking in terms of action at a higher level to ensure the use of country elevators as points where drying equipment could be set up under the supervision of operators who knew their business. In all too many cases weeks, even months, passed without anyone being prepared to take responsibility for co-ordinating the effort to get drying machines set up at strategic points.

I understand from an hon. member representing one of the Ontario ridings—I do not know whether he has yet spoken in this debate—that a significant number of grain dryers from the Ontario corn-growing belt were made available to elevator companies at the Lakehead and even farther west in Manitoba and that this was done on the personal initiative of individual corn growers in those areas. We must be happy and grateful that there are people in eastern Canadian agriculture who are prepared to do such things. But one can only scratch one's head in amazement that so little initiative was shown on the part of those directly concerned—the government, particularly the Department of Agriculture, the Wheat Board and the elevator companies. What in the world was going on in the months of November and December when no action was taken? Of course, I do not blame the officials in any direct way. The onus of taking decisions, formulating policy and bringing in programs rests with the government, with the ministers of the Crown.

We had high hopes that the new Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and some of his colleagues would show themselves to be well versed in western agriculture and that they would have been anxious, willing and prepared to take remedial action. There is an old story that at the time Rome was burning the emperor was fiddling. I think it is appropriate to mention in this connection that at a time when western agriculture was experiencing grave difficulties because of a bad harvest and low sales, at a time when western farmers were facing a desperate situation, the Prime Minister of Canada, if not fiddling, was diddling. I do not doubt that some members opposite think we are exaggerating when we say that conditions in western agriculture are desperate.

If they are of that opinion I should like to refer them to the year's end analysis, if I may call it that, that was made by the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Having followed Mr. Bentley's public statements over the years, I am convinced that he is a man who is not given to overstatement. If anything, he tends to understate the facts of a situation. He was sufficiently frustrated with the present situation in which western agriculture finds itself to say, as he did about two weeks ago, that the conditions in which western farmers find themselves today are—and I pause for emphasis—desperate.

In face of this situation, the government brings forward legislation. Government spokesmen point out that the government has proposed other legislation besides simply Bill C-162 which is now before us. I agree; the government has provided other legislation having to do with agriculture. They have brought forward legislation governing interest rates on farm loans and increasing the amount of cash advances that are available. Now, there is this piece of legislation.

In every piece of legislation related to agriculture that the government has put before the house, one will notice there is nothing contained therein that will have any effect upon farm incomes. The government has increased interest rates and also the amount provided by way of interest free advances, which is fine. We now are discussing ancillary amounts up to a maximum of $600 in the form of cash advances, and for what? Apparently, it is to enable the farmers to pay the added costs caused by having to dry the grain they harvested after a bad season last fall.

There is nothing in this legislation that goes to the heart of the problem of the low incomes of farmers. For that matter, one can say that there is nothing in this bill that will really be of direct assistance to farmers who are put to extra cost in drying their grain. The day of reckoning is merely postponed. I confess there is one advantage: given the high rate of interest now prevailing in the economy, a few hundred dollars made available without interest will be of some concrete benefit.

In conclusion, if in addition to increasing the amount of cash advances available to pay specifically for drying grain the government had shown some leadership in co-ordinating operations and giving assistance to farmers, elevator companies and the pools in setting up grain dryers last November and December at strategic shipping points on the prairies, then I think the government would have been deserving of some commendation. Whatever effort is underway at the present time in the way of setting up grain dryers, very little of that effort has been made by the federal government. It seems to me that some of the provincial governments have been more prepared, and have acted more quickly, than the federal government in the setting up of grain drying equipment. The fact that we are going to support this piece of legislation should not be taken to mean that we do so with any feeling of enthusiasm whatever.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to voice my disappointment in this government for what has been called their inadequate effort to deal with the wheat problem. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer), who has just taken his seat, said that this government has shown no leadership in connection with our grain problems. If the bill presently before us is an example of the government's efforts in helping the farmers with their wheat problems, then I say those efforts are much more than inadequate. I hope that when the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) gets to his feet he will give the people of Canada some idea how much money is involved, so far as the federal treasury is concerned, in the implementation of this bill.

The word "peanuts" has been used time and time again in this house, but I say that this proposed amount is even less than peanuts if it is intended to give assistance to the farmers. I doubt whether many will take advantage of this legislation.

[Mr. Schreyer.]

I suggest that the government does not know what the wheat problem really is. Certainly, it does not know how to solve it. There are reasons for this. I was sorry to hear the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) say he regretted saying nasty words about this government. I was going to compliment him on the statement he made about the ability of this government to handle this problem. In fact, I was going to add some words of my own.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Feel free.

Mr. McIntosh: I do feel free, and I certainly will. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre said that as far as grain policies are concerned this Liberal government is apathetic, complacent and inadequate. I say that this government has no policies with regard to grain. This fact was exemplified by the statements made by three ministers in this house a week ago Wednesday. I want to refer to those speeches for a few moments, including the speech of the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt. The government has shown no leadership; and this bill is not going to help the western farmer very much, perhaps to the tune of a few hundred dollars and that is all.

The government wonders why it has been placed in this situation. I want to quote some of the words used by the minister from Saskatoon-Humboldt, because I submit that the three ministers who spoke in this house on January 22 offered Canadian farmers nothing but excuses. The government suggested there had been problems with the weather, with the transportation system, with the efficiency of the railroads, and alleged the demand for grain had been stronger than anticipated. Every member of the house who comes from a western riding knows that these problems face the wheat industry every year. There is nothing new in those aspects this year compared with previous years. Our problems may be more serious, but that is all.

I suggest that if you are in a position of responsibility you should anticipate things. You should forward plan for all eventualities. If you do not, then your administration gets in a mess. This is exactly what has happened to this administration so far as the wheat industry is concerned. Why is the government in a mess, and why is our wheat industry in a mess? The answer, in part, lies in the attitude of our ministers. I understand that the minister from Saskatoon-Humboldt said on a former occasion that representatives of western Canada in this house do not really know the history of the wheat industry. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members from the west may be more fully aware of the history of that industry than the minister is. When the minister states that the farmers this year are in a better position than last year, he is really making poor excuses which are not acceptable to the farmers of western Canada. The problems facing our western wheat farmers are every bit as bad this year as they were last year.

Let us look at the history of wheat farming and show this minister who aspires to be a history teacher just how the wheat farmer fared during 22 years when the Liberal party was in office. The policies of the Liberal administration in previous years led to a huge surplus of wheat piling up on the prairies. The Liberal government of those days did not attempt to sell that wheat, so the prospects facing farmers were bad. Many farmers wanted to move off their farms but could not do so because they lacked money. Our farmers didn't have a nickel.

What the Conservative government took office in 1957-58, they made the selling of western wheat their responsibility. I know many people wonder whose responsibility it is to sell our wheat. In the present administration the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) seems to have no jurisdiction over the wheat industry, but he said that the members of my party were in some way hurting the wheat growers. At the same time, he suggested we were afraid to attack the policies of the Wheat Board. That is not correct. We are not afraid to criticize Wheat Board policies and never have been. The Minister without Portfolio ought to read the remarks I made on August 6, 1960. Of course, it may be argued that if the Wheat Board does not prove capable of marketing wheat, we ought to get rid of the Wheat Board.

I am not suggesting that should be done. Nevertheless, we faced our responsibilities in 1960. At that time we had one minister who was responsible for wheat and not three ministers, as in the present government. Right now three ministers are each partially charged with responsibility for wheat matters. One may well ask how any government can solve problems in the field of wheat when the responsibilities in this area are divided between three ministers. Each minister in the present government tries to pass the buck to his fellow ministers, the result being confusion and chaos. It was different under the Conservative government. That government realized the problem existed and did its best to solve it. The government of that day gave leadership when leadership was needed. Today there is no leadership, the result being that our wheat industry is faced with major problems.

The major difficulty today does not stem from lack of cash advances but from lack of markets. The minister ought to examine what happened in the past to see how the Conservative government solved the problem of wheat sales. We recognized that we had to increase markets for our wheat. It is true that the responsibility for selling wheat rests to some extent with the Wheat Board, but it also rests with the government which controls the Wheat Board. The combined efforts of government and the Wheat Board are required to sell wheat.

The problem facing the Conservative government was that not enough customers were looking for wheat. Then, when a large customer for wheat was found the cabinet decided to make credit available to that customer to facilitate the sale of our wheat. It may not be fair to give the credit for that sale to any one individual. It is enough to say that wheat was sold when our minister co-operated with the Wheat Board. Administrative difficulties were overcome, credit was made available to our customer, and wheat was sold.

Those who maintain that we were afraid to criticize the actions or policies of the Wheat Board ought to read Hansard. In particular, may I refer hon. members to remarks I am reported as having made at page 7692 of Hansard for August 6, 1960:

> I am aware that under the Canadian Wheat Board Act the Canadian wheat board is given very wide powers pertaining to the delivery and merchandising of western wheat, oats and barley. I also realize that these powers were given to the wheat board by parliament. However, I feel that the present officials of the Canadian wheat board are not carrying out the policies of this government; and I wish to stress that point. They have also become too complacent in their attitude to their duties as members of that board. I might say here that the powers they have been given are too wide to be administered by bureaucrats.

I agree with that statement at the present time. I do not say the members of the wheat board have no ability; obviously they have. Yet, I cannot help harbouring the suspicion that bureaucrats are interested mainly in their pay cheques at the end of each month. That may be a harsh judgment but it is one that was made back in 1960. The Conservative government was in power at that time and backbenchers supporting the government made such charges. That just shows the value of having backbenchers express their opinions on these matters. I submit that backbenchers who represent constituencies in western Canada speak the truth when telling hon. members of the problems of western farmers.

I wish to refer again to my remarks of August 6, 1960, as reported on page 7693:

> I have reason to believe that the present wheat board policy in determining its daily selling price for Canadian wheat offerings to domestic and foreign buyers is too rigid, and that as a result of this inflexibility we have lost foreign sales which should have been available to our western producers. I am aware that those who do not agree with my remarks will charge that I am trying to interfere with the orderly system of marketing of western grain. I hasten to say that if such a system solves or will solve the problem of the western grain surplus, then I will support it wholeheartedly. On the other hand, if the present orderly system of marketing works to the disadvantage of the western grain producers whom I represent, then I suggest that some of the conditions in this system should be changed.

In so many words I have said the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt is not competent to deal with wheat matters. I ask, how can any man charged with the responsibility for overseeing one third of the operation of the wheat industry, without knowing what the ministers charged with responsibility for the other two thirds, are doing, possibly do a good job in selling wheat or administering any phase of the wheat industry. Only one minister ought to be responsible for wheat matters. At present the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) has a primary responsibility in this field. That is not good enough.

If I were charged with responsibility for deciding our wheat Policy, I should make sure that one minister was responsible for selling wheat. It is folly to have three ministers overseeing one industry. They cannot do a satisfactory job. For that reason, I urge the government to allow one minister to handle all matters connected with wheat. I do not care whether it is the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang), or any other minister. It is important to concentrate responsibility for all matters pertaining to wheat under one minister. As I have said before, our primary problem lies in our lack of markets. We shall not solve our problems by making available interest free loans for the drying of grain. If the government is to tackle our wheat problem it ought to tackle it vigorously. Yet, I doubt that the government will follow my suggestion.

Last January 22, 1960, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce made the following remarks while speaking on the motion moved by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski):

> At one point we were getting rather far from Vancouver and from the situation that exists there.

This is just an example of how close he is to this problem. He did not know what the problem was. He thought the problem at Vancouver just concerned a few ships. He said, "we should be congratulated because out of this port this year already we have shipped 5 million bushels more than we did last year". Last year wheat shipments from Canada were not adequate, Mr. Speaker, as the minister knows. Farmers in western Canada had a 6 bushel quota at best which meant they could sell 12 bushels per acre of seeded wheat because, in most cases, only half the farm is cultivated at one time. The average yield on the prairies today is very close to 20 bushels per acre. By simple mathematics, you will see there is a backlog each year of the difference between 12 and 20 which amounts to 8 bushels. The farmers are responsible for storing this amount and problems are created if the grain is not moved. I say the responsibility for moving this grain rests with the government. They have agencies to handle transportation, marketing and so on. If these agencies do not get the necessary leadership, then everything falls apart. That is happening right now and happened under the former Liberal administration.

This problem was rectified under the Conservative administration, so why not adopt their policies? Why not try them? This is all the western farmers want. Perhaps that is the reason the Liberals cannot get support in western Canada. As one hon. member said a few moments ago, the farmers of western Canada are not dumb. They are as well read as any person in Canada and know the situation. They know of the lack of action of this government and if these ministers think for one moment they are fooling the western farmers, they are badly mistaken. If the government wants support in western Canada they must take positive action by seeking the main problem which, I suggest to the minister, is marketing. The Government must try to solve it and then they will get support. This cannot be done by bringing in puny pieces of legislation such as we have today.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) gave the excuse that adverse weather conditions in western Canada had caused the problem; the storms, cold, frost, snow, rain and everything else. A few moments ago I mentioned forward planning. Why are these agencies not forward planning to take care of these situations? The minister should tell these agencies which he controls what should be done in this eventuality. Certainly, these people must have an answer. They said because of the cold weather the trains could not pull 80 box cars, but could pull only 40. What is to prevent the railway companies from running two trains? The minister said there were unanticipated demands on the west coast. Surely, someone must have known the ships were going to enter Vancouver harbour at least days, weeks or even months ahead. They knew what they were coming for and the type and grade of grain they wanted. I say this information must have been waylaid in one of the minister's baskets. It is an administrative problem and the fault of the government.

I sympathize with the minister from Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) for the job given him by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). There must only be one boss, and therefore the minister is not in a position to solve this problem. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce does not know the meaning of 5 million bushels. He thinks it is a lot, but for a country that exports approximately 600 million bushels then 5 million is very minor.

The Minister of Agriculture is not in the house. In his speech on January 22 he said that the criticisms of opposition members were spoiling the chances of western wheat farmers. How in God's name can the opposition spoil the farmers chances by criticizing the actions of the government? The speeches made by the ministers on January 22 were nothing but nonsense. They admitted to the Canadian public they did not know how to handle the situation which had arisen. This is how the western farmers and we on this side of the house interpreted these speeches. So far as trying to make political hay from this is concerned, we have already done that and will continue to do so because of the lack of action on the part of the government.

An hon. Member: They are making it for us.

Mr. McIntosh: Don't make any more nasty remarks which you may have to withdraw. I still say the efforts of this government are inadequate, apathetic and complacent. The minister should inform this government that more legislation is required to help the western farmer with the problem he faces today. I hope he gives some indication that the problems connected with the marketing and handling of grain in western Canada will never occur again. I am looking for the minister to come before the house and give excuses why this or that has not been done. We are interested in what the government intends doing about the situation. We are aware of the fact there will always be problems such as weather conditions and shortages of box cars at certain times of the year. These conditions should be anticipated and forward planning should be carried out to offset them.

Wheat growing is not a new industry in Canada and I doubt if there is any problem in connection with this industry which has not been dealt with previously in some manner, successfully or otherwise. I suggest to the government that the whole wheat industry should be under the jurisdiction of one minister, even if it be the Minister of Agriculture—although I doubt that he is capable of handling it. However, I do have some hope for the Minister without Portfolio because he may be able to solve the problems of the wheat growing industry in western Canada.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I am not going to say much in this debate because I think most of the points have been raised by the official opposition or the government. But coming from a constituency which is almost 100 per cent rural, I feel I should make a few general comments regarding this particular piece of legislation. Although my constituency is basically rural, we do have a few larger towns and cities. In Saskatchewan, whether or not you are a farmer, you are indirectly involved with the farm economy.

It is for this reason a bill of this nature should be not only of interest but of grave concern to everybody in that province and to all the western members. The previous speaker, before he concluded his remarks, made a comment about somebody making nasty remarks. Whether, or not the government or the opposition like it, I believe farmers today in all parts of western Canada make a lot of nasty remarks. I was surprised, perhaps I should not have been, by some of the comments I heard during the Christmas and New Year's recess as I toured the constituency of Yorkton-Melville. I also made a speaking tour throughout southern and western Manitoba and Saskatchewan. The farming people in western Canada are becoming very concerned about conditions as they are. They are asking a lot of basic questions, such as why the farmer is getting rougher and rougher treatment all the time. Why is it becoming increasingly difficult for him to meet his needs? Why is the farmer the only person today who, when he goes into a store, must ask how much a certain commodity is and must accept it at that price? Yet, when he sells his produce he must ask how much he will be given for it.

The farmer is one of the few people left today who finds himself suffering within the so-called free enterprise market. This is the position the farmer is strapped in; everything works against him. The whole system seems to be working against him. He is becoming increasingly frustrated and restless. This is the reason, I believe, that he is starting to ask a lot of very basic questions. This mood can be found everywhere. One finds farmers asking questions, talking about organizing, seriously protesting and demanding that they get more recognition. They are beginning to demand a reduction in the prices paid for the commodities which they must purchase before they can produce a bushel of wheat. Farmers are demanding more markets. They say the government asks them to produce grain, but when they do the same people in the government do not find markets for their grain.

We know that a great deal of food in the form of grain is going to waste. The Canadian farmers have the capacity to produce grain, but it is not sold. This is the reason they are asking a lot of basic questions. I think we should look at the real problem. It is not only the farmer of western Canada who is concerned. The agricultural industry, I think, is still one of the most important industries for Canada as a whole. It is a vicious circle. If the farmer and the agricultural industry are having a bad time, then the business community right across the country is having a bad time. This has an adverse effect upon the entire economy and they there are repercussions right through the entire nation. This is the reason we must find some new and radical alternatives in the agricultural field, rather than just attempt to solve one or two problems by one or two minor pieces of legislation.

We cannot ignore the problem. We cannot hope to solve it by just approaching it here and there, then locking the real problem in the closet and forgetting about it. It will not go away. We must take the problem by the horns and explore some new avenues. Many people have grain in their bins which they cannot sell. Some of them are on a one bushel quota, others are on a two bushel quota and perhaps a few are on a three bushel quota. But these people have tough and damp grain which they are unable to dry because they cannot afford to do so. Many of these people are in debt up to their ears because of the price of farm machinery and land. I know people who are going to the bank and the credit union begging for money and for extensions on their loans. This is how drastic things are becoming. Many of them may be forced out of business. This is the reason we must explore some radical alternatives and consider giving grants rather than loans to some of these people who are in really serious circumstances.

We can look around us. We can look, for instance, at the movement of grain. I say that we should start campaigning for a more vigorous marketing policy. I have before me some statistics from the Board of Grain Commissioners concerning shipments from country grain elevators. For the month of December, 1967 there were some 28,696 carloads of grain shipped from grain elevators. During the same period in 1968 there were 21,311 carloads of grain shipped from grain elevators. This is a decrease of about 7,300 in a year when we need increased rather than decreased shipments. All of us remember quite well the emergency debate in this house last week concerning the tie-up in the shipments of grain from the port of Vancouver. We can't afford this type of situation when it so seriously affects the people on the farms. We must speed up these things and restore some of the faith people have in all of us in this chamber, not only the farmers in western Canada but many people across this country.

Many people are losing faith in this institution. They want us to be more relevant and produce results right here and now. We see that in January, for example, of 1967 there were some 14,885 carloads of grain shipped. In the same two week period of January last year, 1968, there were 5,835 carloads of grain shipped. During the first two weeks of January this year the figure was down to some 4,674. We see a steady decrease in the number of carloads of grain that are being shipped. I believe these things prove one point. No matter how you look at it, the farmer in western Canada seems to be getting a rougher and rougher deal all the time.

I do not wish to take up too much more time. Much has been said in this debate and much more probably will be said by other members. I want to beg and plead with the government that they really explore some new avenues and alternatives in order to restore the confidence the people once had not only in the government but also in politicians, especially when these politicians refer to the basic issues which concern the people themselves and the livelihood of the people.

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, members of this chamber may wonder at my participation in the debate on second reading of Bill C-162, a bill to help the prairie farmers receive funds for the drying of grain. My interest is not very difficult to understand because I can remember quite well back in the years 1956 and 1957 when the grain was piled high in the west. Then, all the western farmers took to feeding that grain and glutted our livestock market in eastern Ontario which we more or less consider to be our market to help us keep the eastern agricultural people in a prosperous position. I remember that very well. It was not until 1957 when another government took office that things were rectified to a certain extent. I believe that even today the agricultural people consider the Conservative party to be their friend.

I welcome this legislation and the assistance it will provide in alleviating the problem in western Canada in respect of grain drying. This grain must be dry if it is to be exported. If it is not to be exported, it will be used as feed for livestock. If that is done the cattle will be a glut on an already full market in eastern Canada. Transportation is such that this beef can be transported very easily from western Canada to eastern Canada.

Hon. members will remember that a few weeks ago I mentioned there were many dryers available in Ontario, particularly in the constituency of Huron, which could be used for drying some of this grain if someone would co-ordinate the operation. At that time those responsible people opposite suggested that a lack of dryers was not the problem in western Canada, but rather that the problem involved money. One energetic individual in my constituency decided to do something about the situation and I am happy to report that he has placed a number of dryers from Huron county at the Lakehead. He moved them there on his own initiative, and they are now set up outside the Saskatchewan wheat pool elevators and the Richardson operation. The Richardson people started this operation first, so that is a mark in favour of free enterprise.

This same energetic individual who initiated the use of Huron county dryers at the Lakehead went to Vancouver to find out the situation there. He is familiar with this drying operation because in my riding the farmers dry a lot of corn. This is a normal operation unless the corn is stored on the cob. This drying business is unusual in western Canada. Under ideal harvest conditions western farmers do not have to dry the grain, but at this time there are well over 200 million bushels of damp grain in western Canada. If it is not looked after before the frost leaves it will either spoil or have to be used as feed grain. Surely, we do not want a repetition of the livestock situation which existed in 1956 and 1957.

When this individual went to Vancouver he found a desperate situation. I do not like to criticize the Canadian Wheat Board, as it has done a tremendous job in the past, but like any other body, I suppose it can become careless after being complimented for many years. There is a tremendous apathy in western Canada on the part of those who should be responsible for moving this grain to Vancouver. The president of the wheat board, Mr. McNamara, has indicated to the house through the minister in charge that the problem does not involve dryers but involves money. This is not entirely true. Inspectors from the Board of Grain Commissioners are not available to go out to each farm to make sure that the grain is not dried too fast with a resultant loss of protein quality. I do not think Mr. McNamara has looked into this situation thoroughly. The onus is on him and the board to co-ordinate operations in order to move dry grain from western Canada to the Lakehead and to Vancouver.

The gentleman to whom I have referred discovered that the elevators and storage facilities in Vancouver were filled to capacity. He was prepared to move any number of dryers to Vancouver to assist in drying this grain. Money is being made available to cover the cost of this move. The terminal elevator operators in Vancouver have not faced such a situation in a long time, and the apathy on their part is something the Ontario farmer cannot understand.

At Vancouver there are six or seven conveyor belts to carry the grain to the ships. The people there consider that is all these conveyor belts are capable of doing, but I suggest they need some direction from the wheat board in respect of drying the grain. One of these belts could be used to carry the grain to the dryers. The grain has to be put into the terminals where the facilities actually exist for unloading cars. Perhaps these operators should send a man to the Lakehead to find out how this operation is conducted there. Perhaps a similar operation could be instituted at Vancouver. I am sure this would make the farmers of western Canada much happier than they are at this time. If this were done, not nearly as much wheat would be spoiled or disposed of by feeding to our livestock. At the present time we do not need this grain for our livestock because Ontario is full of corn.

The people at the terminal elevators of western Canada are not familiar with this sort of operation. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) is not in the chamber at the moment, but I suggest he should spend a week in the west in order to familiarize himself with the problem, and should take with him someone who understands what is involved in it. I am sure that the agricultural industry of this country and those countries of the world which need our wheat would gladly forgive him if he were absent from the house for one week in order to gain experience in handling the problem.

As I say, the minister should take someone with him who understands the situation and should endeavour to take steps to solve it. The people dealing with this matter at the present time are not familiar with the job that has to be done in western Canada. I am sorry that it should take somebody with initiative from the east to try to make them see the light and get the job done; but we have lived with this sort of situation for many years since all our corn crop has had to be dried.

There are in Huron county alone, which is part of my constituency, 40 or 50 dryers available. They could be ready at short notice to be moved to and set up outside the terminals in Vancouver, in order to dry the grain. All we need is somebody to co-ordinate such a program and tell the people running the terminals in Vancouver, if they have never encountered this sort of situation before, how to do the job. We could provide a great deal of assistance in this respect if we were invited to do so by those responsible.

I put these remarks on the record so the house may understand our concern about the lack of action in this connection. I blame the government for this situation; I blame the Wheat Board and those connected with it. I suggest it is time to stop making explanations and get on with the job. This job must be done. We do not need to feed 200 million bushels of wheat to our cattle because it cannot be exported. We do not need to feed it to our hogs, turkeys, hens and broilers, because in Ontario we have enough feed for our cattle and poultry. Therefore I earnestly ask that those responsible get moving on this problem. They have not done so up to now; all we have heard is explanations. Something must be done to get the job done.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order involving the business of the house. I understand there is a willingness on the part of all concerned that a bill standing in the name of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Côté) be called at this time and proceeded with long enough to dispose of the matter. I understand there is no unwillingness that this should happen. I bring this matter to the attention of the house and Your Honour. If I am correct, the minister might like to make that request.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Is there a motion to adjourn the debate?

Mr. Baldwin: If we do this it will involve the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Mr. Baldwin, seconded by Mr. Crouse, moves:

That this debate be now adjourned.

Motion agreed to.

CUSTOMS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALE AND ABANDONMENT OF GOODS, ETC.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue) moved the second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of Bill S-10, to amend the Customs Act.

He said:

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief as I think that it has been agreed to pass this bill as soon as possible and to refer it to the committee. The purpose of the bill is as follows:

The purpose of Bill S-10 is to update certain provisions of the Customs Act giving force of law to a number of proposals presented by the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and, besides, authorizing amendments which would be more in keeping with the modern and more efficient methods of clearance of imported goods and which would meet the requirements of Canadian industry.

It is proposed to authorize by legislation the collection of revenues on goods which formerly had to be destroyed according to the law.

Previously, the goods had to be destroyed unless they could be sold, so as to produce an amount sufficient to pay the duties imposed on them.

[English]

Under the proposed amendments, and in keeping with modern business requirements, greater flexibility would be permitted in respect of the examination of imported goods. It is also proposed that the period during which eligibility for certain types of refund payments may be established be extended to overcome the difficulty the importing public has experienced in establishing entitlement to refund within the shorter period specified in the present act.

[Translation]

It is also proposed Mr. Speaker, to ratify the long-standing practice of granting a refund of duties, for the sake of justice, on goods imported at a high rate of duty, but which are subsequently diverted to a use for which they could have been imported at a lower rate of duty than that actually paid when imported.

[English]

In brief, Mr. Speaker, this bill simply has as its purpose the implementation of certain recommendations made by the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and the granting of authority for up-dating and improving certain departmental procedures and practices.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, although the minister did not say it, I suppose he could have said that really the purpose of this bill is to provide for some minor housekeeping in the Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise Division. It certainly is not my purpose to deal in great detail with the principle of the bill as it now stands. The bill will go to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, where we can look into these matters generally.

I would, however, like to make one observation in connection primarily with the purpose of clause 1 of the bill. I refer to a matter raised by the minister's colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford), when dealing with Bill S-4. That bill was considered by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and concerned the Precious Metals Marking Act. That act is very straightforward, but lo and behold, near the end of it there is a reference to the Fisheries Act.

One might well ask, why does the Fisheries Act intrude upon the Precious Metals Marking Act? The answer is, because there is a seizure procedure in the Fisheries Act which is deemed to be possibly the best method of dealing at the present time with articles which should be forfeit to the Crown or received on behalf of the Crown. I think it is absolute nonsense that there should be these cross-references to other acts. This matter will be discussed at the committee stage. The minister may share some of my concern in this regard, because my experience in the Department of National Revenue has led me to the following conclusion.

There should be one act that deals with commodities that are seized or forfeit to the crown for their disposal, then we would not have to have this nonsense of cross references to one act or to another. So, I am sure we will be able to explore that particular facet of the problem at the committee stage. Therefore, I would commend the bill to the house for second reading and referral to the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see before us Bill S-10, an act to amend the Customs Act, because I think it is long overdue. It is a very good example of how archaic legislation can become if it is not under constant scrutiny. My distinguished and learned friend, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) alluded to the fishy nature of seizure procedures, if I may be excused for putting it that way. One tends to think that much of our legislation was drawn up at the time when we were basically trapping animals and fishing and when those were our only occupations. Perhaps this legislation has not been reviewed since. The Customs Act is perhaps a good example of that kind of legislation which has not been updated. There is a need for a continuous evaluation of legislation, particularly that which affects government revenues and expenditures, because a private member can do very little about making suggestions for improvements in legislation of this kind. We are fortunate, in a sense, that through private member's bills we can make suggestions about such legislation as the Criminal Code. So long as such a bill does not involve government expenditures, worthwhile suggestions can come from the private members of this house. It might be interesting to go over the history of this parliament to see how much of the progressive legislation that is now on the books or is being contemplated found its first expression is the form of a private member's bill.

As an example of how archaic this legislation has become, we have only to look at what Bill S-10 is trying to change. It does not take into consideration the existing legislation nor the fact that we have a department, formerly called the department of defence production, which now has a new name and superior methods of finding customers for some of the goods that are abandoned. The existing legislation makes reference to the means of sale and specifies that it must be done by public auction. Certainly, this is recognized as unduly restrictive on the government's ability to find the best way of disposing of these goods. The exisiting legislation goes on to say in section 23 (2):

> —if offered for sale for home consumption, or the charges, if offered for sale for exportation, such goods shall not be sold, but shall be destroyed.

One wonders what fine protectionist finger found its way into that legislation when it first saw the light of day. Imagine saying that unless you can get a certain amount for the goods, they have to be destroyed. This method is no longer acceptable, and I am glad to see that one of the purposes of Bill S-10 is to change this notice.

If we read the bill we will run across a rather interesting little item which appears under clause 11, subsection (2) of section 170 which reads in part as follows:

> —shall be entitled to demand for each certificate a fee of fifty cents before delivering the same.

It is quite obvious that you can no longer issue a certificate for 50 cents. In fact, it is hard to hold a two minute conversation with a civil servant without costing the government more, let alone deliver a receipt. Therefore, very wisely, the amended bill permits the government to establish a fee that is more in harmony with the actual cost to the government.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

This bill will be going to the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee, and like the other legislation that has gone to that committee will receive a very careful scrutiny. Perhaps, it may emerge a better bill. I certainly hope the government will show a willingness to accept amendments that members of that committee may see fit to offer, because it has been our experience that some excellent amendments have been put forth by members of the Opposition. When those amendments have been incorporated in the bill it has been an improvement on what was first presented to the committee.

Therefore I say on behalf of this party that I am very pleased to see Bill S-10 introduced to the house and sent to the committee from here.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to speak on this bill but for certain reasons will do so. I have always been interested in the operations that take place in customs offices, and in reading this bill, which I did not have the opportunity of seeing previously, I find a number of changes that will have some significance. One of the changes which I notice is that those areas which were originally designated as ports of entry are now referred to differently since these ports no longer exist. In fact, they have not existed for a period of time. This bill removes those ports of entry which no longer exist. I suggest that there is a better way of doing it. Obviously, places where there is no physical facility for bringing in goods or no collector stationed, cannot be designated as ports of entry.

For many years the argument has been advanced that goods that are imported into Canada at an excessively high cost and were seized for non-payment of duty or because of illegal entry had to be sold at a sufficiently high price to cover the costs or else the law indicated the goods had to be destroyed. I am sure that years ago at a time when our armed forces travelled frequently across the border and when there was some difficulty in purchasing such commodities as cigarettes, which were both expensive and restricted as to brand, many people went over to the United States, particularly servicemen who lived near the border.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. It is my duty to remind hon. members that it is past four o'clock. I understood that this bill was to be given second reading within a short time, but if the house wishes to proceed at length with discussion of this bill I would ask it to say so. Is it the pleasure of the house to extend the time allotted for this discussion?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think agreement has been given because the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has asked that consideration of Bill No. S-10 be completed, even though we might have to take part of the private members' hour. This debate was supposed to take only a very short time.

[English]

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, there was an agreement to go over the time limit to dispose of this bill. It seems to me that if the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) wishes to cooperate he would not take so much time out of the private members' hour, in order that there might still be an opportunity to debate the items raised by private members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): My understanding was that this matter would take only a short time. I do not think there is unanimous consent that we should proceed to discuss this bill until five o'clock. If hon. members agree that we should set aside private members' hour until this bill has been disposed of I would, of course, be willing to accept its decision.

Mr. Drury: I think there would be unanimous consent to our continuing for another five minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Is it agreed that the time given to this bill will be extended by five minutes?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: There are many things I should have liked to have said about this bill during the next 15 or 20 minutes, but I shall certainly abide by your ruling, Mr. Speaker, It always seems odd to me that the high duty charged on certain goods coming from the United States should result in these anomalies. Cigarettes are a good example. You pay duty of about a dollar per carton. If the officer demands the payment of duty it costs as much to pay the duty as it did to buy the cigarettes. These cigarettes could obviously not then be sold at a profit. Yet, the law says they have to be destroyed if customs duty and costs cannot be recovered. I am glad the minister has decided these articles are to be sold by auction where it will not make much difference whether or not the total amount is realized.

There are a number of other clauses here which I think are important. I am sorry the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) is not familiar with the difficulties which develop in this field. Obviously, there is no port of entry near him. In places such as Cobalt, where there are ports of entry, disputes often arise between customers and customs officials when goods purchased in the United States are found to be below expectation either in quality or in quantity. This often results in disagreement about whether the full duty should have been collected on such goods. I know the minister is giving consideration to extending the time during which these discussions can take place from 30 to 90 days. I am glad this is so, because sometimes the process involves writing to the shippers of the commodity concerned to ascertain whether the labelling was correct or whether the bill of lading only covered a partial shipment.

Then again, differences often arise because a person purchasing goods covered by what he believes to be a specific rate of duty finds that the goods can be used in another category where the rate of duty payable is different. In some cases no duty is payable at all. I am pleased the minister should have agreed that in such cases, though duty must be paid initially, it can be refunded.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to abuse the time allowed me by unanimous consent of the house. I am prepared to see this bill go to committee for consideration.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, I am anxious to say a few words on this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Does the house agree that we should proceed with this bill at length? I would remind hon. members once again that it is past four o'clock. The chair could not care less whether or not it is decided to stay on this bill until five o'clock, but I would like to have a determination made whether we should proceed with this bill until its completion or whether a time limit should be placed upon the discussion. I say this because private members' hour has not been called; it should have been called, and the proper motion has not been made.

Mr. Peters: May I suggest that my hon. friend from Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) be given unanimous consent to make limited remarks. I can assure hon. members that his observations will not be in the same category as mine. I did not object to Your Honour's advice to me because of circumstances which I have already indicated, but these do not apply to my hon. friend. Maybe the house would be disposed to listen to what he has to say on this subject.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, it is not my wish to delay the passage of this bill but there are one or two points I should like to raise in connection with the legislation before us.

I believe several additional amendments could and should be included in this legislation. A number of problems have been experienced in my area in connection with the Customs Act. I should like to ask questions about these points and possibly the minister could answer them later. We have in the city of Nelson a customs warehouse for perishable goods. Why cannot its use be extended to cover general goods? An application in this connection has gone to the department. It has been approved by the region and by the local people. It would not cost the department one single penny to implement it. The customs officers are there. The buildings are there. This is something which would prove of immense convenience to the business people of the area. To my mind, this is a logical and sensible request by the people of this area and I can think of no reason why the department should turn it down. In fact, I cannot imagine why a general customs warehouse was not set up many years ago. That is one question I wanted to raise in connection with this bill.

I have one more point to make. I have received another complaint from people in my area concerning goods sent over the border. In this case they were wedding gifts. If a wedding gift costs more than $10, customs duty is charged on it. I say this is sheer and utter nonsense. In this age of inflation, and with customs regulations that were drawn up donkeys years ago, I suggest there should be an upward revision in the value of goods crossing the border duty free. Certainly, the ceiling of $10 on genuine wedding gifts that are sent to a couple should be sharply raised. In the particular case to which I refer the couple was forced to return a number of gifts to the senders and they will have to pick them up in a year or two's time. I do not think that this type of gift is really what those who drew the regulations had in mind. This is something that the minister should look into.

With those few remarks I close, and I should like to thank the house for its generosity in allowing me these few moments to express my views on this particular piece of legislation.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): It being four o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

On the order: Private Bills:

January 23, 1969—Consideration of Bill S-6, an act respecting The Canada Trust Company as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs —Mr. Blair.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), who is responsible for this bill and also the following one on today's list, is ill. Therefore I would ask the agreement of the house to stand these two items, retaining their position on the order paper.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Shall items 1 and 2 stand at the request of the government?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, before we proceed I should like to raise a point of order; this is the first opportunity that has arisen to do so. Your Honour will note that under item No. 1 there is this statement:

For text of amendment to be proposed at report stage, pursuant to section (5) of standing order 75 —see Notice Paper as appended to Votes and Proceedings of January 28, 1969.

My point is that if an amendment is going to be moved, then for the orderly conduct of business it should be attached to the original motion on this paper. I suggest hon. members will be confused if they have to look at Votes and Proceedings to find amendments. Obviously, the amendment has to be recorded in Votes and Proceedings, but in the interest of the orderly conduct of our business it seems to me that Your Honour would serve us well if you would consider having printed at this place on the order paper any amendments that are to be moved, with a notation where they appear in Votes and Proceedings.

I do not want to pursue this point of order but I would entreat Your Honour to take this matter under advisement for decision.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): This is a point that was raised by many other hon. members, and speaking personally as a private member I myself was surprised that the amendment was not included. However, I will refer this question to the Speaker for his decision.

Item stands.

THE EXCELSIOR LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Thursday, December 5, 1968, consideration of the motion of Mr. Weatherhead for the second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of Bill S-13, an act respecting The Excelsior Life Insurance Company.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, the sponsor of this bill in this chamber, the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead), explained the purpose of the bill on December 5 last. If one were to go by the explanatory statement of the hon. member only, one would conclude that the bill is innocuous enough, that its sole intent and purpose is to change the form of organization of Excelsior Life Insurance Company from its position under provincial letters patent to a federal corporation. This is one aspect of what is involved here and might be the bill's superficial purpose, but I submit what is really involved in terms of policy implications is considerably more profound.

In fact, I find it difficult to support the notion that really there are no policy implications involved in Bill S-13. We will be doing more than simply agreeing to allow this particular life insurance company to receive a federal style of incorporation if we pass this measure. We know that this is an old insurance company that has been in operation in this country for many decades, even before the turn of the century. However, we also know that it is a subsidiary of a United States parent, which itself, in turn, is part of the Connecticut complex of the life insurance industry of the United States. In addition, as an insurance company it is, in a sense, a financial institution only a little removed from the chartered banks in terms of the impact it makes upon savings and investment in this country.

Since this government is only too aware that there is in Canada at the present time a very acute and evident inflation problem, and since I think that the government should be only too willing to take specific action to counter the problem of inflation, I suggest that one matter that specifically relates to the bill and which the government should consider is this. A financial institution is asking us for incorporation under federal charter, and this it does by presenting a private bill. Although this bill has implications for public policy, we have no indication of the government's attitude to it. The matter is dealt with simply by getting the concensus of private members.

I join with those who on previous occasions have taken the position that it is about time the rules of procedure of this institution were changed so that when financial institutions and life insurance companies present private bills to this house we are given an indication by the present government of its attitude to such bills. The amount of money in this country that is available for investment purposes is not infinite, it is finite: the amount is fixed at a given point in time. At a time when interest rates are rising and funds for investment, housing construction and business expansion are increasingly difficult to get, I think this government should be concerned, and should show its concern, at what is being done with the capital that does exist in this country.

As an insurance company, Excelsior Life is competing for funds that will be invested. To the extent Excelsior Life is successful in its operation, it deprives other financial institutions of this country of money which those institution would obtain to invest. That must be borne in mind.

In the report on housing tabled by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), a predominant recommendation has to do with the availability of mortgage funds. So fierce is the competition for mortgage money in this country that the minister has been driven to the absurd length of recommending that repayment periods for mortgages be extended from 25 to 40 years and that the ceiling on N.H.A. mortgages be raised from $18,000 to $35,000, I think it is. Clearly, the minister made those recommendations because he was desperate to make mortgage funds available to the Canadian public. Yet, while he has been driven to making his absurd recommendations, and I emphasize some of his recommendations are absurd, we find that the chartered banks and life insurance companies of this country are gathering increasing amounts of the money which ought to be made available as capital.

I admit that in some cases our chartered banks are acting wisely and making available the savings they have gathered to our people in the form of mortgage money. In other cases, though, our chartered banks are gathering in supplies of money; instead of investing those moneys in mortgages or worthy investments, they are diverting such moneys into childish and even foolish channels.

Our banks spend much money in advertising loans which go towards non-productive activities. They promote red convertible loans, boots and saddle loans as well as many other types of loans for recreational or non-productive purposes. I submit that money which is presently being lent for such non-productive purposes could be used better if it were invested in mortgages or other productive fields. That money can help in the development and expansion of the less developed regions of this country. It could help to provide employment in those areas of the country which at present suffer from unemployment levels of between 7 and 8 per cent, as is the case in parts of the Atlantic provinces and northeastern Quebec.

One can understand why chartered banks are diverting their money into the field of soft consumer lending. Such loans bring high returns and our chartered banks seek to make the greatest profits on their outlays. Clearly, they are not motivated by a concern for the public interest. The diversion of money which ought to be used for housing and other worthwhile purposes into the field of soft lending is a clear indication that the banks are not concerned about the public interest. Life insurance companies have tended to display a similar attitude in the investing of savings they have gathered. From time to time when the policies of life insurance companies serve the wider public interest, everyone is happy. When those policies do not coincide with the public interest, the story is different.

Our present rate of inflation is between 4 per cent and 4.2 per cent per annum. There is fierce competition for investment capital in this country and therefore we ought to scrutinize carefully the policies and actions of all our financial institutions, among which is included the insurance company referred to in Bill S-13, now before us.

The behavior of our financial institutions seems to be inconsistent. At the end of the 1950's and in the early 1960's a number of chartered banks felt it necessary to amalgamate. The result was that fewer chartered banks operated in this country. Presumably we felt that to be in the public interest. Yet at the present time the number of financial institutions in this country seems to be growing. We are adding new financial institutions to ones already existing. Clearly, the present trend of proliferation runs counter to the past trend of amalgamation. If the trends in the past were in the public interest, can it be said that present day trends serve the public interest?

Another aspect of Bill S-13 deserves to be mentioned, and the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Fortin) spoke about this when talking on the bill before Christmas. If his colleagues wish to comment on this point I hope they do; we shall be glad to hear what they have to say. The hon. member indicated he was unhappy with the prospect of this particular life insurance company being given a charter which would allow it to operate on a nationwide scale. He was unhappy because the company was approximately 75 per cent foreign owned. There seems to be a trend, if not a tendency, in the province of Quebec for outside firms to purchase life insurance companies, particularly foreign firms. One does not have to go into the reasons, but there are a large number of insurance companies operating in the province of Quebec who finds it important, right and fair to operate their day-to-day operations in both official languages. There was a tendency with the purchase of some of these smaller firms for the new owners to discontinue conducting their day-to-day operations in the same manner.

There are quite a large number of insurance companies in Canada at the present time. I understand there are approximately 16 insurance companies in this country in which the majority of the shares are foreign owned. Apparently, they are given preferential treatment if they have been operating in Canada prior to 1964 as they do not come under the general provisions of the amendments to the insurance act passed in 1964.

I conclude my remarks by saying, Mr. Speaker, that if the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead) moves the adoption of a bill such as Bill S-13 he should be prepared to give a more convincing argument if he wants private members in the House of Commons to vote in the affirmative for the granting of a federal charter to a life insurance company, the majority of which is owned by foreign capital. The question can be asked, what harm will it do? One can equally ask, what good will it do? There has to be more than just an absence of arguments against, there must be a presence of arguments in favour before we are motivated to vote to grant a federal charter to yet another life insurance company.

I believe our financial institutions, which include life insurance companies, play an important role in our economy. The importance of this role is accentuated in times of inflation and offers competition for investment of capital. So much so the government should arrive at a policy, or should have definite attitude or position relative to applications for incorporation or charter which come to parliament from time to time from private insurance and money lending institutions. These matters should not be left to private members hour any longer.

What is involved is whether the government should have complete control over the investment situation in this country or whether the government should continue to play a laissez faire and negative role, leaving many important investment decisions in this country almost exclusively to directors who sit on the boards of these money lending and life insurance companies. With each passing year more and more cabinet ministers are of the view the government must adopt a more active role with respect to investment decisions in this country. One or two cabinet ministers are known to be in favour of the notion to establish a Canadian Development Corporation. There is only one reason for establishing such a corporation, and it is a very important one. Such a corporation would give the government an instrument for the marshalling of capital in small and medium sized amounts from hundreds of thousands of Canadian investors. In turn, the government could use this capital to the best effect, investing it in regional and economic development, where required.

We have the very antithesis of a situation where the government is playing an active role in fulfilling its responsibility to the Canadian public, because the government opts out, continues to opt out, and leaves large sums to investment capital to be gathered by private money lending institutions such as life insurance companies which, in turn, invest as they see fit. I have given some very good examples in recent weeks where this has been done, sometimes having regard to public interest which is fine, but often without any regard to public interest.

Mr. Nystrom: I would like to ask the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead) whether he is prepared to answer a question with regard to this bill?

Mr. Weatherhead: I understand that if I speak now I will close the debate, which I would be happy to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): If the hon. member speaks he will close the debate.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I would like to speak briefly on this bill. As the previous speaker mentioned it is indeed odd that in private members hour we have very important bills such as this which in effect are setting government policy as far as control of the Canadian economy is concerned. The government itself should be very desirous of setting rules to govern this type of investment in our country.

Our policy for many years has been concerned with the alarming control being exercised over the various aspects of our economy. When a private member presents a bill such as S-13, an act respecting the Excelsior Life Insurance Company, one wonders where we are heading and whether the government in control of Canada today really cares where we are going or what is taking place in the investment field.

This bill is a rather interesting one. Anyone who looks at it can read the explanatory notes. Again, it is another piece of legislation which looks rather innocent. The average reader would not be disturbed by just checking the bill. He would think possibly that there is nothing here which could be of any harm to the Canadian nation. Yet, when we go back into the history of the company we find the same old story that has been going on for many years in this country. Here, we find that the Excelsior Life Insurance Company was incorporated in Canada on August 7, 1889. Then, we find that it is a subsidiary of the Aetna Life and Casualty Company, which is a wholly owned United States company that was incorporated in Connecticut on August 25, 1967. There are a host of subsidiaries under this company.

I, for one, believe it is high time the members of our party and members of other parties directed the attention of the Canadian public to the control that is gradually creeping into every aspect of our economy. Here we see today a move to incorporate this company federally. The old company had business branches in every province in Canada and Canadians are given the impression that this is the same old Canadian company doing business at the same stand. Behind the scenes, however, control is being exercised outside the boundaries of this nation. This is the very point which I think members should discuss, debate and bring to the attention of the Canadian public; that is, that we are gradually losing control of these insurance companies. The banks in Canada are by law required to retain their Canadian identity.

Gradually, we have seen the erosion in other fields. It started in the field of resources where companies gained control of many of the major resources in this country. Oil is a good example. We find these big oil firms outside Canada almost exclusively control the oil development within this nation of ours. The refining facilities, for example, in oil are 99 per cent foreign controlled. This is a disgraceful situation in the year 1969. Now, we see the tentacles of foreign control extending further and further into a host of other businesses. This is one of them.

I feel that matters of this importance should not be left to private members or that private members should hammer out government policy in this regard. This is what is being done here. I have no objection to certain bills going through the house sponsored by private members. Some of them certainly have a place in parliament. Over the years many bills advanced by private members of all parties in this house have served the purpose of drawing to the attention of governments problems which should be investigated.

In this way, after a sufficient amount of debate, public opinion has been formed around the idea pro and con and quite frequently governments have brought in the type of legislation which would support the idea initially advanced in the private member's bill. But a bill such as S-13, to my way of thinking, should not be presented here. I might point out to members of the house and to the government that bills in respect of other life insurance companies have passed through the house. One went through I believe in 1967 to incorporate the United Investment Life Assurance Company. When this bill was passed there was written into the agreement something which I think should be written into all bills of this type to ensure that eventually Canadian investors will have an opportunity to buy into these companies and finally obtain majority control of them.

I shall place on the record some of the detail in order to show what has happened, and what I think should have happened in the case of Bill S-13. The United Funds Management Ltd.—this is the company I have been talking about—decided to subscribe for $500,000 of the capital stock of the company and to make a further contribution to a surplus of $500,000. Then the statement continues:

> Within two years of commencement of business, United Funds Management Ltd. will sell to officers, directors and employees of the Company and, if necessary, others who are Canadian residents 25% of the capital stock of the Insurance Company for the same price.

Regulations of this type are absolutely nonexistent in the legislation which is before us. I shall skip some of the statement. Then, we have the following:

> Waddell & Reed, Inc. will, within two years of commencement of business of the Insurance Company, make a public offering to Canadian residents of a sufficient number of the shares of United Funds Management Ltd. to bring its share ownership to below 75%. Accordingly, within two years of the Insurance Company commencing business, the indirect ownership of Waddell & Reed, Inc., in the Insurance Company will be reduced to a maximum of 56.25% with practically all of the balance owned by residents of Canada.
> United Funds Management Ltd. will undertake to sell to Canadian residents within 10 years of the commencement of business of the Insurance Company—

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, before the house rises for the week I wonder if I could put on the record the proposed business for the first two days of next week? As I said in my announcement yesterday, it is our intention to call as the first item of business on Monday, item 33 in respect of the Aeronautics Act. The second item of business will be item no. 41 in respect of the Navigable Waters Protection Act. The third item will be no. 37 in respect of the Canada Evidence Act. The fourth item to be called on Monday will be number 12 on the order paper in respect of the Veterans' Land Act.

My colleague the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) will be attending the Grains Council meeting in Winnipeg and will not be available to proceed with the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. On Tuesday, we will call that as the first item of business. When that is completed we will consider the bill to amend the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act in respect of gifts.

Mr. Bell: As a matter of information, Mr. Speaker, has the hon. member any idea as to when the omnibus bill will again be considered?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it would appear unlikely that we would be able to call the omnibus bill again before the week of February 17.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): It being five o'clock, this house stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m. May I express the hope that you will all enjoy a pleasurable and restful weekend.

At 5.03 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, February 3, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER ON ALLEGED IRREGULARITY IN TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Speaker: On Thursday last the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) rose on a question of privilege in relation to the tabling of a report by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier). When tabling the paper, the Secretary of State used the following words:

Mr. Speaker, I should like to table a report concerning the security agents in some of our national museums, which report constitutes a reply to the numerous questions put to me in the house in the last few days.

The report appears to have been presented to the house under Standing Order 41(2). The hon. member for Peace River has expressed the view that the terms of the Standing Order are not sufficiently broad to include the tabling of that particular document. The hon. member has been supported in his contention by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has submitted the additional argument that the Secretary of State contravened the rules and practice of the house when he replied to oral questions by tabling the answer under the provisions of Standing Order 41(2). In reply to these objections, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) suggests that Standing Order 41(2) should be given a wide, rather than a restrictive, interpretation. The substance of the minister's argument is summed up in the following words reported at page 4928 of Hansard of Thursday, January 30:

While Standing Order 41 (1) is really quite precise as to the documents referred to, Standing Order 41 (2) is in the broadest possible terms. It permits a minister or a parliamentary secretary to lay on the table of the house any report or other paper dealing with a matter coming within the administrative responsibilities of the government. I believe that the Chair should give the widest interpretation to those words.

Later Thursday afternoon, after the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) had raised his question of privilege, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) tabled a notice of motion to amend the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act pursuant to Standing Order 60, subsection (1).

Then, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) he attempted to lay on the table a document which the minister described as "explaining the ways and means motion and giving some illustrations of the consequent changes in taxes".

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), supported in his views by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), took exception to the procedure. The Chair then suggested that no further proceedings be taken and that the tabling be held in abeyance while the point of order and the previous question of privilege were being considered.

It is fitting to consider first the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) about the tabling of a document by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier). The hon. member, as well as others who supported his question of privilege, contend that the said document is not one which can be tabled under standing order 41(2). Secondly, they argue that the minister erred when he attempted to reply to questions put by some hon. members by another method than that prescribed by the standing orders. After much thought, I must decide in favour of the hon. members who questioned the procedure used, and especially the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who raised the second objection.

According to the standing orders, a question put during the daily oral question period may be answered either by an oral answer, by an order for return or by a ministerial statement on motions. I must express the opinion that the new standing order 41(2) does not provide for the establishment of a new procedure or answering oral questions.

Therefore I must conclude that the question of privilege was justified. I suggest to hon members that as far as answers to questions are concerned, standing order 41(2) should be given that interpretation.

[English]

I should like to consider now the procedural point raised in connection with the effort by the Minister of Finance to table the memorandum to which I have already alluded. As hon. members know, Standing Order 41(1) corresponds word for word with the previous rule, Standing Order 40, subsection (1). The Standing Order reads as follows:

> Any return, report or other paper required to be laid before the House in accordance with any Act of Parliament or in pursuance of any resolution or Standing Order of this House may be deposited with the Clerk of the House on any sitting day, and such return, report or other paper shall be deemed for all purposes to have been presented to or laid before the House.

That rule, corresponding, as I have said, to the previous Standing Order 40(1) determines the class of documents or papers that must be tabled by a minister pursuant to a statutory provision or to a standing or other order of the house.

The house has now adopted another Standing Order, 41(2), which reads as follows:

> A minister of the Crown, or a parliamentary secretary acting on behalf of a minister, may, in his place in the house, state that he proposes to lay upon the table of the house, any report or other paper dealing with a matter coming within the administrative responsibilities of the government and, thereupon, the same shall be deemed for all purposes to have been laid before the house.

The new Standing Order can be interpreted in only one of two ways; either it is intended to provide another method of tabling the papers described in Standing Order 41(1) or it is intended to provide a method to table documents other than those provided in 41(1). In my view, the second interpretation only is logical. Indeed, if Standing Order 41(2) means anything, it must be that it enlarges the class of papers which can be tabled by the government without notice and without leave.

The Chair is bound by the clear words of the rule to the effect that a minister may table any report or other paper dealing with a matter coming within the administrative responsibilities of the government. So long as the report or paper deals with a matter which comes within the administrative responsibility of the government, and that the paper is an official document for which the minister or parliamentary secretary accepts responsibility, it can be tabled pursuant to Standing Order 41(2).

[Mr. Speaker.]

If this interpretation of the rule results in the tabling of a type of paper or document which had not been contemplated by the procedure committee, it is of course open to the members of that committee to review the Standing Order and redraft it in a way which would justify a more restrictive interpretation. For the time being, the Chair would be inclined to accept, for tabling, papers or reports which deal with matters coming within administrative responsibility of the government and which are official papers in the sense that they are proposed to the house by a minister, either directly or through his parliamentary secretary, in the exercise of his ministerial responsibility.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

TABLING OF AGENDA AND OTHER DOCUMENTS

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that last December, when it became necessary to postpone the second constitutional conference, the question of when certain documents would be tabled in the house was raised and I answered that I would take the advice of the authorities of other governments, so that a date acceptable to everybody could be set.

Those consultations have taken place. There is now a general agreement to make those documents known on the following dates:

[English]

First, two main working documents of the conference, the report of the continuing committee of officials and a briefing paper on the discussions within that committee, are being released today by the secretariat of the constitutional conference. I should like to table these documents—

—copies in English and in French of those documents.

[English]

As to the papers of the Government of Canada, we shall be releasing these on Thursday of this week at 2 p.m. eastern standard time. This is the day generally agreed for the release of material by the participating governments, although certain of the provinces have already made public some of their position papers.

I should also like to table at this time the agenda, in English and French, of the conference beginning next week.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

EDUCATIONAL BROADCASTING STUDY GROUP

Question No. 658—Mr. Fortin:

1. Has an application for a broadcasting licence by a provincial government or its agents ever been rejected and, if so, when and with respect to what applications and on what grounds?

2. What is the composition of the study group on educational broadcasting, what are its terms of reference and, when will it submit its report?

3. Will this report be tabled in the House?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Secretary of State and the Postmaster General as follows: 1. No. The policy of the Government, as stated in the House of Commons on May 3, 1946 is still in effect that since broadcasting is the sole responsibility of the Federal Government, broadcasting licences shall not be issued to other governments or corporations owned by other governments.

2. The members of the Task Force E.T.V. are as follows: Mr. Jules Léger, Under Secretary of State, Chairman; Mr. Gilles Bergeron of the Post Office Department; Mr. D. S. Thorson of the Justice Department; Mr. Michael Pitfield of the Privy Council Office; Mr. Ivo Krupka of the Privy Council Office, Secretary; Mr. George Miedzinski of C.R.T.C. —Head of the Study Group.

The Task Force is to study all aspects of this subject in order to assist the government in fulfilling its undertaking to facilitate the development of adequate broadcasting facilities to meet provincial requirements for the transmission of educational programmes. The Task Force will undertake a variety of specific assignments and is not asked to produce a comprehensive report.

3. See part 2.

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—INCREASE IN CANADIAN NATIONAL REVENUES

Question No. 703—Mr. Coates:

What has been the increase in revenues to the Canadian National Railways from the new less-than-carload-lot rates that were imposed on shippers in the Atlantic Provinces in September, 1967, to this date?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: During the period January 1 to October 31, 1968, there have been variations in the comparative total revenues on a month to month basis. However, on a cumulative basis, system revenues from this traffic are less than 1 per cent below the revenues generated in the same period in 1967.

CANADIAN NATIONAL EMPLOYEES

Question No. 742—Mr. Godin:

In Canada, in Quebec and in the federal constituency of Portneuf (a) how many telegraph operators were employed by the CNR in 1957 and 1967 (b) how many employees of all categories were employed by the CNR in 1957 and 1967 (c) what was the total amount of salaries paid by this company in 1957 and 1967?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: As the system is administered by regions which do not conform to the geographical boundaries of the Provinces, also as telegraph operators are grouped with station agents, caretaker agents, levermen and telegraphers, the information is not readily available in the form asked, and to extract the data would entail considerable time and expense.

However, a report entitled "Canadian National Railway and the Province of Quebec", presented to the Sessional Committee on Railways, Air Lines and Shipping on December 12th, 1963, as recorded in the minutes of proceedings and evidence commencing on page 361, states that in 1962 the working force of CN in the Province of Quebec numbered 21,994 and the total wages and salaries of this group exceeded $120,000,000.

The number of employees all categories Canadian Lines and their total compensation for the years in question are as folows:—

	No. of employees	Total compensation
1957	114,750	$425,030,402.
1967	86,200	550,049,038.

USE OF RAILWAY TRACK BETWEEN MONTREAL AND OTTAWA

Question No. 764—Mr. Godin:

On what date in the winter of 1967 did a C.N.R. train, leaving Montreal and going to Ottawa, illegally use a C.P.R. section of tracks, what was the number of that train and how many minutes was the train late in Ottawa because of that incident?

Questions

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: The question appears to have reference to an incident which occurred in Ottawa on February 5, 1967 when Canadian National Railway Train No. 133 from Montreal was permitted, by signal, access to Canadian Pacific trackage in preparation for a reverse movement into Ottawa station. Through error, the train crew continued to Navan on the Canadian Pacific trackage. Train No. 133 was 1 hour and 17 minutes late arriving in Ottawa.

GOLD MINES SUBSIDIES

Question No. 827—Mr. Tétreault:

1. What amounts of subsidies were paid to gold mines in Canada during the years 1965, 1966 and 1967?

2. What amounts of subsidies were paid for products exported from Canada during the years 1965, 1966 and 1967?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Energy, Mines and Resources and Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: 1. Payments to the operators in gold mines in Canada under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act are as follows:

Fiscal years	1965-66	$14,757,573
" "	1967-68	15,199,765

2. Payments to the Canadian Wheat Board in support of the minimum prices for the sales of wheat made by the Canadian Wheat Board are:

Fiscal years	1965-66	Nil
" "	1967-68	$2,649,236

NATIONAL SPORTS COUNCIL MEMBERSHIP

Question No. 830—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many members are there on the National Sports Council?

2. Have any professional recreation people been appointed to the Committee such as Recreational Director and/or Supervisor and, if not, for what reason, and will such people be appointed?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. 33.

2. Yes.

[Mr. Godin.]

OVERSELL ON AIR CANADA FLIGHTS

Question No. 855—Mr. Robinson:

1. Is it Air Canada's policy to oversell airline passenger accommodation on Air Canada flights between (a) Ottawa/Toronto (b) Toronto/Ottawa (c) Ottawa/Montreal (d) Montreal/Ottawa (e) Toronto/Montreal (f) Montreal/Toronto?

2. Does the government intend to reduce the air fare on flights where there is no competition from other airlines?

3. What is the net revenue earned by Air Canada for passenger service provided between (a) Ottawa/Montreal (b) Ottawa/Toronto (c) Montreal/Ottawa (d) Montreal/Toronto (e) Toronto/Ottawa (f) Toronto/Montreal?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The Management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. No; the Air Canada reservations system is designed to achieve equalization between demand and capacity well in advance of departure time, and only a breakdown in communications or human error would bring about overbooking at departure time.

3. Air Canada is unable to provide the net revenue earned for passenger service between the city pairs listed, as all flights (with the exception of all-cargo aircraft which does not carry passengers), simultaneously transport passengers, excess baggage, mail, freight and express traffic. It is impossible to segregate the costs of flying aircraft as between the types of traffic carried on board the flights.

Regarding part 2, the government exercises no control over air fares. Regulation of tolls and tariffs is a matter coming under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Transport Commission, pursuant to the provisions of the Aeronautics Act and the National Transportation Act.

TRANSFER OF VETERANS HOSPITALS

Question No. 1,011—Mr. McCleave:

1. With what provinces and municipalities has the Department of Veterans Affairs held discussions about turning over its hospitals?

2. Have any hospitals operated by the Department been turned over to provincial, municipal or other non-federal control and, if so, which hospitals and on what terms, since the end of the Second World War?

3. Are any discussions continuing and, if so, involving which hospitals?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. With the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta, British Columbia, and in addition in recent months discussions have taken place with municipal authorities at London, Ontario, in connection with their interest in our property at Westminster Hospital. In 1949 discussions took place with the City of Toronto concerning the transfer of the departmental Christie Street Hospital to that municipality on the completion of our building program at Sunnybrook Hospital. There were also negotiations with the City of Ste. Hyacinthe, Quebec, in 1955, resulting in their taking over from the Department our T.B. sanatorium at that location, and in 1962 with the Ottawa civic authorities on our abandonment of the Veterans Pavilion at the Civic Hospital upon the opening of the National Defence Medical Centre.

2. During the immediate post war years there were many transactions between the Department, provincial and municipal authorities and other agencies concerning the disposal of properties that had been used as departmental treatment facilities and which became surplus to our requirements on the building of departmental hospitals or additional wings thereto.

In more recent years the following agreements have taken place:

(1) The Health and Occupational Centre at Ridgewood near Saint John, New Brunswick was, in 1965, leased for 21 years to the New Brunswick Provincial Workmen's Compensation Board under an agreement by which the Department has a lien on 30 beds for the domiciliary care of entitled veterans. Under the agreement the rental to be paid by the Province to the City of Lancaster is equal to the payments the Federal Government would have made to that municipality in lieu of taxes under the Municipal Grants Act.

(2) Sunnybrook Hospital, Toronto, was, on October 1, 1966, transferred for one dollar to the University of Toronto. The agreement provided that the Hospital would continue to give priority admission to eligible veterans requiring treatment and accordingly 630 beds were reserved for the active treatment of veterans and 570 beds for chronic and domiciliary care. The staff were guaranteed employment with comparable rates of pay and ancillary benefits. The Federal Government is responsible for the cost of a new wing of 400 beds upon request of the University of Toronto.

(3) The Veterans Home in Edmonton was, by agreement, in November 1966, transferred to the Province of Alberta for the sum of one dollar. This was replaced by a new chronic and domiciliary care unit of 150 beds adjacent to the University Hospital at a shared cost to the Department of $615,000. At the time this was opened in November 1966, the agreement provided that the Wells and Mewburn pavilions become the property of the Hospital with the Department occupying space for administrative and outpatient purposes.

(4) Lancaster Hospital, Saint John, New Brunswick, was the subject of an agreement on March 25, 1968 between the Department and the Government of New Brunswick and the General Hospital, Saint John which provided that Lancaster Hospital will be transferred to the Province on July 1, 1970, for the sum of one dollar. The General Hospital has agreed to add a veterans' wing of 300 beds to its own facilities for the priority care of eligible veterans. The Federal Government will make a grant of $4,500,000 to that Hospital. The staff will be assimilated under terms comparable to those arranged at Sunnybrook.

(5) Ste. Foy Veterans Hospital, Quebec, was, on September 1, 1968, transferred to the Province of Quebec which in turn has deeded it to the University of Laval. The real property of the hospital was ceded to the Province for one dollar. The Department has priority use of 150 beds for veteran patients of which 110 are for active and chronic care and 40 for domiciliary care. Within six years from the date of transfer the Province will erect a wing of 40 beds, the cost of which will be borne by the Federal Government. The hospital staff have been assimilated by the University of Laval at rates of pay and employee benefits not less favourable than those in effect in the public service at the time of transfer.

3. Yes, involving: Camp Hill Hospital, Halifax, N.S.; Queen Mary Veterans Hospital, Montreal, P.Q.; Ste. Anne's Hospital, Ste. Anne de Bellevue, P.Q.; Westminster Hospital, London, Ontario.; Deer Lodge Hospital, Winnipeg, Manitoba.; Colonel Belcher Hospital, Calgary, Alberta.; Shaughnessy Hospital, Vancouver, B.C.; Veterans Hospital, Victoria, B.C.; George Derby Veterans Home, Burnaby, B.C.

C.B.C. TIME ALLOTMENT

Question No. 1,034—Mr. Fortin:

1. Does the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation have a specific policy regarding the use and distribution of time it allots to (a) apolitical movements (b) political movements (c) others for public information over its networks, both (i) radio, and (ii) television?

Questions

2. If so, when was the policy adopted and on what principle(s) is it based?

3. If not, will such a policy be adopted and when?

4. If there is no intention of adopting such a policy, for what reason?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. Yes. Free time is allocated to bona fide political parties for the expression of opinion. There is no allocation of free time to groups other than bona fide political parties but the Corporation applies to all controversial issues the principles enunciated in reply to Part 2.

2. The policy of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation governing political and controversial broadcasting was adopted in the early years of public broadcasting and is based on the following principles: (i) The air belongs to the people who are entitled to hear the principal points of view on all questions of importance; (ii) The air must not fall under the control of any individuals or groups influential by reason of their wealth or special position; (iii) The right to answer is inherent in the doctrine of free speech; (iv) The full interchange of opinion is one of the principal safeguards of free institutions.

The C.B.C. does not sell time to individuals or commercial concerns for broadcasts of opinions or propaganda. It furthers the foregoing principles by the provision of free time to competent speakers to present, without let or hindrance, varying points of view on questions of the day. The C.B.C. considers that the best safeguard of freedom of discussion is a policy which permits fair opportunity for the expression of varied points of view on issues of public interest and concern.

C.B.C. policy with regard to party political broadcasting is based on the fact that for the proper functioning of representative and democratic government, it is essential that the public should be fully informed of the issues at stake in any provincial or federal election, and of the position and policies of the various parties on these issues. To carry out this policy, the C.B.C. follows a general plan for party political broadcasting which includes the provision of network time free of charge to recognized political parties during general elections. This gives all qualifying parties the opportunity of speaking to a wide public, irrespective of their capacity to buy time. In the periods between elections, an amount of free network time is made available to recognized party leaders or their representatives.

The allocation of free time broadcasts between elections traditionally has been established at a meeting between the C.B.C. and qualifying parties held at the beginning of each new Parliament.

Free time broadcast periods during election campaigns are also allocated in immediate consultation with the parties.

STATISTICS RESPECTING UNEMPLOYMENT

Question No. 1,047—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. According to the latest available statistics, what is the total number of unemployed persons in Canada?

2. What was the comparable figure for the same month in 1967?

3. Has the government any plans for alleviating winter unemployment?

4. If so, what types of programs are projected?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the Departments of Manpower and Immigration and Finance as follows: 1. The total number of unemployed persons in Canada was estimated to be 338,000 in the week ended November 16, 1968.

2. The comparable figure for the same month in 1967 was 289,000. The number of employed persons rose from 7,409,000 to 7,677,000 over the same period of time.

3 and 4. The Department of Manpower and Immigration gives consideration at all times to the improvement of manpower programs in order to combat not only winter unemployment but unemployment in general. In the current fiscal year, the federal government will spend $197 million to provide training and retraining for adult workers. As compared with the previous fiscal year, this is an increase of $47 million. The training program is planned, in co-operation with the provinces, so that, wherever possible, adult workers are placed in training when they are unemployed. There is also a program which will this fiscal year provide various kinds of mobility grants to approximately 30,000 workers involving an expenditure of $4 million. The counselling and placement services of Canada Manpower Centres across the country have been greatly extended and improved.

Although the Department of Finance does not administer any programs having the direct effect of creating winter employment, its whole fiscal policy is aimed at balancing the goals of full employment, price stability and economic growth.

DOMICILIARY CARE UNDER VETERANS CHARTER

Question No. 1,098—Mr. Dinsdale:

How many veterans have been provided for under the domiciliary care provisions of the Veterans Charter each year and in each veterans' hospital since 1960?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The domiciliary care provisions of the Veterans Charter are contained in section 29 of the Veterans Treatment Regulations made under authority of the Department of Veterans Affairs Act. The following table shows the number of patients in hospital under this section of the Regulations as of March 31 of each year from 1960 to 1968. These include both chronic care and domiciliary (bed and board) types of cases but departmental statistics do not provide a breakdown of the number of patients in each category.

6. Were tenders called for this property?

7. If so, were any bids received and for how much in each case?

8. If bids were received, why were they not accepted?

9. By what means was this property finally sold by the IDB and for what amount?

10. If the property was sold quite apart from formal bids that were received, was there more than one offer?

11. Did the IDB refuse an offer that was in excess of that which was actually accepted?

12. If so, on what grounds was the lower offer given preference?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): While the IDB provides comprehensive aggregate data on its operations in its Annual Report, it has not been the practice nor is it considered appropriate to make public information concerning individual accounts.

MONTREAL—AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE AND OVERHAUL

Question No. 1,134—Mr. Schreyer:

1. What construction is planned in order to add to the (a) air terminal facilities (b) Air Canada maintenance and overhaul facilities, in Montreal?

2. What is the estimated cost in each case and what are the projected dates for such construction?

3. Is any construction planned to increase (a) air terminals (b) aircraft maintenance facilities either Crown owned or privately owned at Vancouver?

4. If so, what is the estimated cost and what are the dates projected for commencement and completion of such construction?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1 and 2. (a) In so far as the Department of Transport is concerned: Additional minimum interim facilities are planned at Montreal International Airport to cater to increased traffic and the introduction of Jumbo Aircraft in the period 1969-1972. The estimated cost of such interim facilities to be constructed in 1969, 1970 and 1971 is $9,200,000; (b) In so far as Air Canada is concerned, Management advises as follows:—

The following Maintenance and Overhaul facilities form part of the approved 1968 Air Canada Capital Budget, although construction has not yet commenced:—

Project	Cost	Year of Completion
Expansion of Power Plant Shops, Unit Shops and Support Shops	$ 2,800,000	1969
New Line Maintenance Hangar	$21,200,000	1971

Certain other requirements are presently under study and may be developed for Dorval and Malton and other points on the system but are not yet in a firm stage.

3 and 4. (a) In so far as the Department of Transport is concerned, at Vancouver some modifications are anticipated to the holdrooms and apron of the air terminal to accommodate the first Jumbo Aircraft at an estimated cost of $600,000 to be completed by 1971. (b) Canadian Pacific Airlines are constructing a large maintenance base at Vancouver Airport for completion in April, 1969, at an estimated cost of $20,000,000. TESTING OF ARTIFICIAL GRAVEL

Question No. 1,137—Mr. Mather:

Is the Road and Motor Vehicle Traffic Safety Office giving consideration to testing "artificial gravel" a substance used in improving highway safety by grading dangerous curves?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): As indicated in my announcement of October 17, 1967, outlining the responsibility of the Department of Transport in the field of motor vehicle and highway safety, the new office will have responsibility for program co-ordination and the establishment of safety standards. Therefore, the Road and Motor Vehicle Traffic Safety Office will not itself undertake tests on "artificial gravel" or similar road building materials.

The Road and Motor Vehicle Traffic Safety Office is closely following the progress of tests currently being made by a number of agencies, including some provincial government departments and particularly those relating to skid resistance of pavement surfaces to traffic accidents. The relationships between aggregate texture, polishing and skid resistance have not as yet been completely evaluated.

CAR PERFORMANCE INFORMATION

Question No. 1,138—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to requiring car manufacturers to inform car owners at the point of sale of the car's performance in such areas as (a) vehicle stopping distance (b) driver field of view (c) acceleration and passing ability (d) overall steering ratio (e) flammability of materials in car interiors?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The Department of Transport is not at present considering the need for providing vehicle performance capability information to automobile purchasers. The new Office on Road and Motor Vehicle Traffic Safety in the Department is, however, concerned with safety standards for new vehicles at the point of manufacture.

Officials of my Department are closely following the discussions in the United States on proposals which would require providing such information to automobile purchasers at the point of sale. There is some question regarding the real ultimate value of the knowledge that would be made available, quite apart from the difficulty of standardizing the manner in which it could be most usefully presented.

INVESTIGATION OF CAR REPAIR INDUSTRY

Question No. 1,139—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to investigating alleged high cost and low quality of the car repair industry?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The Department of Transport does not have authority to undertake the type of investigation implied in the question.

The car repair industry is highly localized, hence any action that might initially be taken would be on the municipal or provincial government level.

3. Have complaints been received by the government and, if so, from whom, over the delays in the construction of this building?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. On February 14, 1966 when the 1966-67 Estimates were tabled.

2. During the 1967-68 fiscal year. The delays are due to a number of successive changes in space requirements by the occupying departments.

3. Not by the Department of Public Works.

4. No date has been set.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): (a) 2; (b) yes; (c) and (d) International Harvester Co. of Canada, Ottawa $21,456.87 and $28,749.84 and F.W.D. Corporation, Kitchener $21,574.84 and $30,193.08.

In both instances the lower offers of International Harvester Company of Canada were bypassed as the equipments offered did not meet the departmental specifications; (e) snow removal operations at St. John's and Gander Airports, Newfoundland.

NATIONAL DEBT

Question No. 1,155—Mr. Matte:

1. What is the total amount of Canada's national debt?

2. What part of this debt can be attributed to Canada Savings Bonds?

3. What part of this debt can be attributed to Victory Bonds?

Questions

4. What was the proportion of the savings bonds bought by individuals?

5. What was the proportion bought by financial institutions?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. As at January 15, 1969 the total amount of Government of Canada Direct and Guaranteed Debt outstanding was $23,574 million.

2. Of this amount, Canada Savings Bonds accounted for $6,361 million.

3. At December 31, 1968 there were $6,892,000 of matured Victory Bonds outstanding. This total is included in 1 above.

4. Due to the very large sales volume of the 1968/69 Canada Savings Bond Series, the register is still in the process of being prepared and consequently it is not possible at this time to differentiate quantitatively between Canada Savings Bonds bought by individuals and by institutions. However, it is known that individuals account for the great majority of purchases.

5. Not available.

Question No. 1,162—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Has there been a request from the Universities of Calgary, Alberta, Lethbridge, Victoria, British Columbia, Simon Fraser and Notre Dame to have consideration given to revive construction plans for the Queen Elizabeth telescope project?

2. If so, will the government give its support thereto and in particular will it agree to turn over the Mount Kobau assets to a consortium of the above and other universities?

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. Yes.

[Mr. Matte.]

2. The matter is under consideration by the government at present.

CAMP BORDEN SITE FOR INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 1,163—Mr. Noble:

Has the government considered using the thirty square miles of Crown land at Camp Borden as a site for the proposed new international airport?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The Department of Transport has not, as yet, undertaken a site selection program in connection with the new Toronto Airport. The Department is, however, aware of the existence of the Crown owned property in the Camp Borden area and this area will, along with others, be given consideration as a possible site.

DISTRIBUTION OF CANADA PENSION PLAN PAMPHLET

Question No. 1,165—Mr. Aiken:

1. How many copies were printed of the pamphlet "Canada Pension Plan—Contribution Tables No. 3—January 1, 1969" by the Department of National Revenue?

2. What is the approximate cost of printing and distributing this pamphlet?

3. Except for a slight adjustment in the maximum contribution, were there any changes from the 1968 pamphlet?

4. Why was the whole pamphlet reprinted, rather than noting the maximum change by circular?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): 1. 500,000 in English and 10,000 in French.

2. Cost of printing was approximately 9 cents per copy in English and 10 cents per copy in French. Distribution cost was approximately 5 cents per copy.

3. Yes. The examples shown on pages 9 and 10 of the booklet were revised and the instructions on pages 39, 40 and 41 were rewritten.

4. Changes in the instructions and examples were necessary in order to provide employers with up-to-date information. This could have been accomplished either by issuing a circular or by issuing a revised contribution table. It was decided to issue revised tables because it has been found that the use of inserts or circulars to update regulatory instructions has proven generally unsatisfactory.

ACQUISITION OF ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

Question No. 1,180—Mr. Robinson:

Has the federal government considered the advisability of acquiring the island group of St. Pierre and Miquelon which are located within the territorial waters of Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The answer to the question is in the negative. I might point out that the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon are not located within the territorial waters of Canada. They were ceded to France by Great Britain under the Treaty of Versailles of September 3, 1783, and comprise part of the Overseas Territories of France.

CANADIAN UNITS IN NATO AND NORAD

Question No. 1,186—Mr. Robinson:

1. Are the units forming Canada's commitment to (a) Norad (b) Nato, up to establishment strength and, if not, to what extent?

2. Are the Canadian Forces up to establishment strength at the present time, and, if not, what is the present requirement to bring establishment up to strength and when is it anticipated this will be brought about?

3. Does the government propose any incentives (a) to encourage enlistment in the Canadian forces (b) to retain present members of the Canadian Forces?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): Attention is directed to Minutes No. 14 of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, dated November 21, 1968. 1. The units forming Canada's commitment to (a) NORAD and (b) NATO, with the exception of one destroyer escort, which is due to go into refit shortly, are manned to meet present commitments.

2. No, the present total establishment figure is a little over 103,000 and actual strength at the end of November was 99,064, so that there is a shortage of approximately 4,000 overall in relation to the establishment. The manning ceiling, however, has been set at 98,000 for the current year.

3. (a) and (b) Every effort is made to ensure that wages are comparable to those paid in industry for similar employment, that there is the real prospect of an acceptable career, and a fringe benefits package sufficient to offset the many disadvantages of service life.

Questions

READER'S DIGEST CONDENSED BOOK CLUB

Question No. 1,192—Mr. Anderson:

Has the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs been in communication with the Reader's Digest Company concerning any complaints received by his Department about the manner in which the Reader's Digest Condensed Book Club membership scheme is operated and, if so, has the Minister made representations to the Reader's Digest Company protesting the Company's policy of informing members of the public without solicitation that they have become trial members of the plan and billing them accordingly?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, through his departmental officers, has been in communication with the Reader's Digest Company concerning their Lucky Number Draw Promotion mailings.

The Minister has not made representations to the Reader's Digest Company protesting the company's policy of informing members of the public without solicitation that they have become trial members of the plan and billing them accordingly, because the Company has stated that they never, under any circumstances, enter a trial membership, or send merchandise without having first received a positive response to advertising material.

ESQUIMALT HARBOUR POLLUTION ABATEMENT

Question No. 1,205—Mr. Anderson:

Has the Department of National Defence completed the 1st phase of its pollution abatement program for Esquimalt Harbour mentioned on page 22 of the 1966 Report of Associated Engineering Services Ltd. on pollution in the Greater Victoria area?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): The first phase of the Department of National Defence's pollution abatement program provides for the collection of all sanitary wastes originating in HMC Dockyard Esquimalt, and their delivery to the municipal sewage system. This work is programmed for completion in 1970-71.

ESQUIMALT HARBOUR, B.C.,—DISCHARGE OF ACID WASTES

2. If so, what measures does the government intend to take to reduce this pollution?

[Mr. Groos.]

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): 1. No, acid wastes from the plating shop are diluted and neutralized before being introduced to the sewage system. However, it is an acknowledged fact that sanitary wastes are being discharged, without treatment, into the waters adjacent to HMC Dockyard, Esquimalt.

2. See reply to Question No. 1,205.

2. By whom, and for what reasons, was the decision to revoke these privileges made?

3. For how many years prior to this decision had these privileges been in effect?

4. Was there any consultation before the decision was made by the Department of National Defence with the Federal Department of Fisheries and/or the Government of Saskatchewan?

5. If so, what was the advice received from the Department of Fisheries?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): 1. On 1 April 1954, the privileges of local residents to fish in Primrose Lake were suspended when the lake was reserved for use as an air weapons range.

2. An agreement was reached between the Government of Canada and the Government of Saskatchewan to suspend the granting of fishing privileges because safe operation of the air weapons range would not permit fishing to take place.

3. This is unknown as the licensing authority was The Fisheries Branch of the Saskatchewan Department of Natural Resources.

4. and 5. Yes. Under the terms of the agreement with the Government of Saskatchewan, the Federal Government paid compensation to fishermen who held licenses and, inter alia, reimburses the Province annually for the loss of revenue from fish.

BANKRUPTCY ACT REVISION

Question No. 1,238—Mr. Fortin:

1. What is the present stage of the work of the committee in charge of revising the Bankruptcy Act?

2. When will the new Act be introduced?

3. How many bankruptcies were there, by province, for each of the last six months?

4. What steps are being taken by the government to prevent fraudulent bankruptcies?

2. As soon as the report of the Committee is available, it will receive my immediate attention.

3. See attached Schedule.

4. In July of 1966, important amendments to the Bankruptcy Act were passed by Parliament which, among other things, empowered the Superintendent of Bankruptcy to investigate cases where it is suspected that offences to the Bankruptcy Act, the Criminal Code or any other Act of the Parliament of Canada have been committed.

The Office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy was subsequently reorganized and regional offices were opened in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver which are staffed with professional accountants and investigators. In addition, the Superintendent of Bankruptcy makes extensive use of the services of the R.C.M. Police.

The complaints received by the Superintendent of Bankruptcy in 1968 totalled 279. Of these, 56 were referred to the R.C.M. QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

TRAVELLING EXPENSES FOR CABINET MINISTERS

Question No. 1,062—Mr. Beaudoin:

During the fiscal years ending March 31, 1965, 1966, 1967 and 1968, what amounts were paid by the government in travelling expenses for each federal Cabinet Minister?

Return tabled.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

PREFERENTIAL POSITION TO DISCUSSION OF ECONOMIC MATTERS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the request made by several of the provincial premiers in western Canada that economic matters should be given priority over the other important matters to be discussed at the federal-provincial conference next week, is it the intention of the government to comply with this request?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have already complied with this request. If the hon. gentleman would look at the agenda that we have tabled, he would see that the matter of distribution of powers has a high place on the agenda and that within distribution of powers we specify fiscal matters and the spending power of the federal government.

I think it is important for the public to understand that the constitutional aspects of the spending power are really the ones that should be discussed. When the provinces are worried about the federal government's interfering—as they say—in certain provincial priorities, what they are really doing is calling into question the spending power as exercised for 100 years by the federal government. We are prepared to reopen discussion on this if and when the provinces want, except that we do believe that it is essentially a constitutional matter. We also believe that the provincial demands for discussing this matter can fit very easily within the agenda, which has been modified since November, to answer this demand by certain provinces.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, before I ask a supplementary question I would point out to the Prime Minister that naturally it was impossible for me to know what priority would be given—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: —to economic matters because the program has just been—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask his question.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

SUBMISSION OF BILL TO SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Is it the intention of the government to comply with the request of provincial premiers that the Official Languages Bill be submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada to test the constitutionality of several important parts of the bill?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On this, Mr. Speaker, we have already complied with the request of some provinces, that we de not proceed with the bill in the house until the federal-provincial conference. This compliance caused us to retard our intention to proceed with the bill last December and we have since kept postponing it. As the hon. member knows, the bill is ready and has been brought in for first reading. We are postponing consideration of it by the house until the federal-provincial conference, which is now only a week away.

Although we will hear further argument by the provinces, it is our hope that they will continue to give to the language question that amount of priority we all agreed to give it last February, and that there will be no objection to our proceeding with this bill, which we think is of extreme priority. If the provinces have some objection to a specific section of the bill, we would want to consider it; if there is no agreement then there is the possibility of the matter being referred to the house.

Replying to the hon. member's remark, I might add that I realize it is through no fault of his that the agenda could not be tabled until now. We had to wait until agreement was reached on the tabling date.

Inquiries of the Ministry

GRAIN

BOX CARS TO FACILITATE SHIPMENT

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is this. Will the Prime Minister and the government give favourable consideration to the request of the western premiers for the appointment of a transport commissioner who would allocate box cars in order to try to improve the present situation in the shipments of wheat?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure that the hon. member has asked a supplementary question, but the Prime Minister, if he wishes to, might reply.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I agree with you, Mr. Speaker; I do not think this is a supplementary question. Certainly, it is not a matter to be raised at a constitutional conference. The hon. member might address this matter to the Minister of Transport, when it is that minister's turn to be in the house.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question similar to the one just raised by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Harkness). Despite the Prime Minister's suggestion that the matter ought to be referred to the Minister of Transport may I raise the question again. Since a telegram is alleged to have been sent to the Prime Minister by the premiers of the three prairie provinces asking for the appointment of a controller of transport, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he in fact received such a telegram and, if so, what answer he has given to it or intends to give to it?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I received several telegrams this morning and I believe they all had to do with the economic matter raised by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees). I sent out some telegrams to the premiers today asking permission to table the correspondence between them and myself on the agenda of the conference. I should add, too, that I will be answering their other telegrams as soon as I have had time to consider them.

Mr. Lewis: Am I to gather from the right hon. gentleman's answer that he has not yet seen the telegram I have referred to—the telegram that is alleged to have been sent to him? May I put the question this way, Mr. Speaker. In view of the seriousness of the situation can the Prime Minister inform the house whether he has turned his attention and the authority of his office to an attempt to solve the serious problem facing western grain on the west coast. If he has not considered the matter hitherto, will he undertake to do so immediately?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that when telegrams come in from premiers they are immediately directed to the departments of the ministers concerned. This has been done in the case of the Department of Transport. As for the aspect concerning constitutional matters, I have answered that already.

An hon. Member: The Prime Minister doesn't deal with telegrams himself.

Mr. Trudeau: Why do you think we have ministers.

Mr. Baldwin: We don't know, I am sure.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Considering the Prime Minister's answer to the question asked about a controller of transport and considering that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has gone out to the west coast, may we ask if the Japanese ships now waiting in Vancouver will continue to wait for the loading of the 117,000 tons of wheat they are to carry. Also, can the Prime Minister assure the house that this market for wheat will not go to Australia?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is on the west coast today. I do not know that he is personally overseeing the loading of the ships, but he is out there to deal with this problem.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Prime Minister bring to the attention of the Minister of Transport that a considerable quantity of No. 1 wheat is on hand in Vancouver. Perhaps the Japanese food agency might accept that wheat, instead of No. 2. That way we will not lose that market.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will bring the attention of the minister to this point. I am glad to see that, contrary to the opinion of the leader of the New Democratic party, the hon. member thinks that some tasks can be performed by ministers. I do not think I will need to go out to the west coast myself to perform this task.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Prime Minister been advised of the fact that Japan has cancelled its order of wheat, due to the fact that Canada seems unable to supply the wheat to Japan that is required.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY RESPECTING CLOSING OF OFFICES

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General.

Following the numerous complaints we are receiving regarding the closing of post offices, could the minister tell us whether he thinks rural mail delivery replace advantageously the post offices which have been closed?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for an opinion from the Postmaster General and I do not think his question is acceptable.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—TALKS IN CAIRO AS TO RECOGNITION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I would direct my question to the Prime Minister. My question is in connection with a news report today to the effect that communist China is willing to have talks in Cairo on the question of recognition, provided Canada cuts off diplomatic relations with the republic of China. I ask the Prime Minister whether that is so, or whether he intends to carry out the undertaking he gave on March 5, 1968. He said in Vineland, Ontario that an invitation would be given to recognize communist China, and stated "They would probably say no unless we agreed to break relations with Taiwan. We wouldn't do that."

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): May I answer the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want the Prime Minister to answer.

Mr. Sharp: There is no substance whatever to the news report. There has been no contact anywhere in the world with the People's Republic of China. This report is quite unfounded.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Whether unfounded or not, will the government of Canada carry out the undertaking given by the Prime Minister, that if communist China insists on discontinuance of relations by Canada with Taiwan—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —will the government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The supplementary question asked by the right hon. member for Prince Albert appears to be hypothetical, in view of the reply given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I very seldom rise. With deference, this time I do. It all depends where the punctuation is, if it is in the right place. What I am asking the government is this: are they going to keep the undertaking that was given by both the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs that there would be no breaking of relations with Taiwan as a condition for the recognition of communist China?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister should answer it.

Mr. Hees: We want you.

An hon. Member: There's no election; it doesn't matter who answers.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the question which is in issue of course is who speaks for the government of China?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Who speaks for the government of Canada?

Mr. Sharp: There is no question about who speaks for the government of Canada: It is the Prime Minister.

Mr. Hees: Well let him speak.

Mr. Sharp: May I deal with the question asked by the right hon. member. The question of the hon. member is, which government of China do we recognize?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, no.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Sharp: The question is this, if we recognize the People's Republic of China as the government of China, will Taiwan accept that position?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, did he on May 19 last say this: "We won't sacrifice our relations with the government of Taiwan to do it."?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In other words, to recognize—

Mr. Hees: Did you say it or not?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure of the right hon. member's punctuation, but I have the impression that when he asked the minister to confirm or deny a statement made outside the house—

Mr. Hees: Let's hear from the Prime Minister!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will reword my question. Does the minister still believe and agree there should be no recognition of communist China, if as a condition there is going to be any sacrifice of the government of Taiwan?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I said before—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Which is nothing.

Mr. Sharp: —that if the government does recognize the People's Republic of China as the government of China, relations between Taipei and Canada will of course be affected, since the government of the republic of China does claim jurisdiction over the whole of China, and we cannot have two conflicting authorities.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Who is going to be sacrificed?

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Can the minister assure the house that no substantial discussions will be entered into unless there is an assurance from the Peoples' Republic of China that there will be adherence to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. There are many countries with which we have very good relations that, unfortunately, have not yet adhered to that treaty.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR RECOMMENDATIONS FOLLOWING REPORT OF TASK FORCE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister. On Wednesday last the Minister of Transport tabled the report of the task force on housing and stated he would shortly place before the government what he regarded to be urgent recommendations arising out of that report. Can the Prime Minister tell the house how soon we can expect a statement from the government on this matter?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Transport who is responsible for housing did state that he would submit to cabinet a memorandum which would express his views as to what should be done and in what sequence. He has not done that yet. He is working on it.

Mr. Brewin: Can the Prime Minister say whether the government is at present considering the recommendation as to a minister responsible for housing?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. I repeat that this task force report will be translated by the Minister of Transport into a document to be submitted to cabinet, expressing his policy as he wants it considered by cabinet at this time.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGES IN ADVISORY COUNCIL

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): My question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is the minister prepared to make the necessary changes in the Canadian consumer council, in light of critical remarks made by the chairman of that recently formed advisory council, wherein he said, "The 24 members—"

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member must ask his question directly. He cannot quote a statement made outside the house in order to advance a proposition.

Mr. McGrath: I will rephrase my question. Does the minister plan to change the make-up of the council, in light of the criticism of its chairman?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister not agree, because of the critical remarks of the chairman—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: The supplementary question is argumentative.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—EXTENSION OF PRIVILEGES TO JEWISH REFUGEES

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the government extend to Jews of Lebanon, Syria, Iraq and Egypt privileges similar to those granted to the refugees from the invasion of Czechoslovakia?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have received representations on this question from various individuals, and these are under consideration. I am informed today that the Canadian Jewish Congress will be making some formal representations which will receive serious consideration.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SUBMISSION OF WOODS REPORT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Can the Minister of Veterans Affairs advise when he or the government intends to take action on the recommendations of the Woods Committee report respecting the organization and work of the Canadian Pension Commission? Can he say when he intends to refer this report to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to advise the hon. member and the house that at the present time we are preparing a white paper respecting veterans pensions and the Woods committee recommendations. This white paper is being given high priority and we expect later on this session to be able to refer both the white paper and the Woods Committee report to the House of Commons committee.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ZAMBIA—CANADIAN MILITARY INSTRUCTORS

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has an actual or tentative agreement been reached with Zambia for Canada to supply that country with military training instructors and other defence help?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe there has been an agreement in existence for some time whereby we do extend certain training facilities to Zambia and to the Zambian army.

Mr. Harkness: As a supplementary question, at the Commonwealth Prime Ministers Conference did the Prime Minister discuss this matter with the Prime Minister of Zambia, and assure him of further or increased support along this line?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, the matter was not discussed, and I shall have to check my own memory as to whether it is Zambia or Tanzania with whom we have this agreement.

[Later:]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think I should refer again to the question asked me by the hon. member for Calgary Centre. I said I would check my memory. I have checked my memory and the answer is that there is no agreement with Zambia. I also remember that I have not discussed that subject with the President of Zambia.

ESTABLISHMENT OF PERMANENT SECRETARIAT

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. On the agenda he tabled a few moments ago concerning the Federal-Provincial Conference next week there is an item called "mechanism of federal-provincial relations." Does this envisage discussions for the establishment of a permanent federal-provincial secretariat based in Ottawa?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the general subject of the mechanism of federal-provincial relations is one of the subjects on the agenda.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is obvious, Mr. Speaker, but I am asking whether the federal government would propose the establishment of a permanent federal-provincial secretariat based in Ottawa?

Mr. Trudeau: When I spoke of machinery, Mr. Speaker, I of course covered that subject; but there will be mention of that. There will be some suggestion of it because, as I say, it is covered in the agenda. It is not, however, one of the subjects that has been studied in detail by the continuing committee of officials and therefore it will not take a high place on the agenda.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I notice it is the last item on the agenda.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MANITOBA—OPTOMETRIC AND CHIROPRACTIC SERVICES IN MEDICARE PLAN

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether he is now in a position to answer my question of last Thursday, and perhaps comment further on my question of last Monday. On Thursday I asked him about Manitoba, the government of which has announced that optometric and chiropractic services will be included in its medicare program. Is the federal government participating in this phase of the program, and what is the present status of these other services under the medicare act?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As far as I am aware, Mr. Speaker, there is not the degree of consensus that is required between the federal government and the provincial governments to widen the coverage of services under the medicare act. I would also say, certainly as far as the federal government is concerned, that our priority would be to get as many provinces as possible into medicare under its present terms.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Can the minister answer the question about Manitoba? Is the federal government going to participate in that part of the program in Manitoba?

Mr. Munro: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Ten o'clock.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

CONTINUATION OF FUNCTIONS BY NEW BODY

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Development to be. On January 27 the minister said that the role of the Atlantic Development Board would be changed. Can he say whether the present functions and responsibilities of this board will continue to be assumed by any newly structured body?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, as soon as the bill is introduced in the house, the hon. member will see what new powers are granted to the Atlantic Development Board.

[English]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I should first ask when we can expect the legislation, but that is a redundant question. Can the minister assure us that the present functions in relation to research and education assumed by the A.D.B. will continue to be assumed, held constant, or increased?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the second question asked by the hon. member has been answered by the minister.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a further supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Bearing in mind the substantial evidence given by distinguished writers, economists and educators, showing the positive correlation between national economic development and human resource development can the Prime Minister say whether the federal government intends to expand its role in human resource development?

Mr. Speaker: I would think the hon. member's second supplementary question is wide in its scope and is the type which asks for a policy statement. I suggest to him that it should not be asked at this time.

Mr. Lundrigan: May I rephrase my question and ask whether attention will be focused on the role of the federal government in human resource development at the impending federal provincial conference? I am sorry I do not have access to the agenda.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the subject of regional disparities and regional development is one item on the agenda to which we attach great importance.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, perhaps my question was misinterpreted by the Prime Minister. It was with relation to human resource development, not regional development. It is an important matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It must be, to justify all these questions.

[Later:]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, earlier during the question period I asked the Prime Minister about the focus of federal attention on human resources development and he apparently was preparing an answer. I wonder whether it might be forthcoming at the moment?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member is right, Mr. Speaker. I was considering an answer but I do not think the hon. member will find it very helpful. Human resources in so far as they concern educational matters are mainly within the jurisdiction of the provinces. There is an item on the agenda that is concerned with the division of powers between the federal and provincial governments, and to this extent we will be considering the subject; but it will not be a subject of immediate concern.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister gets a few spare moments I will be glad to coach him on some of the latest authorities in the field of education. Perhaps he could advise—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FISHERIES

DISCUSSION ON CONSERVATION OF RESOURCES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the decline in the groundfish resources in the North Atlantic, is it the minister's intention to convene an early conference on the law of the sea in order to discuss the conservation of fishing resources at the international level with other fishing countries?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that such a conference may shortly be organized. There are a number of countries that have the same concern as we have about this. I cannot say for certain whether it relates specifically to the Atlantic ocean, but I know that on the Pacific ocean there has been a great deal of concern. It may be a conference dealing with all the oceans.

Mr. Crouse: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is the minister giving any thought to placing the matter of world fishing conservation problems on the agenda of the United Nations, with a view to inviting the United Nations to be responsible for the control and development of all fisheries on the high seas?

Mr. Sharp: I will certainly take this suggestion into consideration. At the last meeting of the General Assembly questions about the law of the sea and general resource conservation were very high on the agenda, and I shall take this into account for the next meeting of the General Assembly.

DISPUTE WITH LETTER CARRIERS UNION—DOWNWARD RATES REVISION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Postmaster General, whom I welcome back from his peripatetic seminar. Is he now in a position to say whether the government is any closer than it was last week to resolving the points of dispute with the Letter Carriers Union?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I would hesitate to make a statement on that subject at the moment because I am having a meeting tomorrow with the presidents of the national unions.

Mr. Macquarrie: As a supplementary question, in light of protests by the leader of one of the important political parties in Ontario that his party's publication will be "walloped" by increased postal rates, and in light of similar protests by the Canadian Labour Congress and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture will the minister say whether he is giving consideration to proposing a downward revision of the rates due to be imposed on April 1?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that the answer to that is no.

EFFECT OF RATE CHANGES ON NON-PROFIT PUBLICATIONS

[Later:]

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General what action if any the government intends to take to ensure that non-profit publications do not become the unintended victims of government action to increase postal rates?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I think all of us who have non-profit organizations particularly at heart will be aware of the fact that their deficits or costs will be going up somewhat, and we will be prepared to take this into consideration when we furnish our support individually.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADA CORPORATIONS ACT

DICKERSON REPORT RESPECTING CHANGES IN ACT

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has the task force headed by Professor Robert Dickerson reported to the minister with respect to its recommendations for changes in the Canada Corporations Act and can he state whether the report of the task force will be made public?

Mr. Speaker: I have some doubts as to the urgency of the question asked by the hon. member, but having been asked perhaps the minister might want to reply to it.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Professor Dickerson has made a report to me. He is still working for me on recommendations for further revisions of the Corporations Act. What will be made public are the amendments to the Corporations Act, which will be tabled in the house.

Mr. Burton: Is the minister prepared to make available the names of the team of experienced businessmen and lawyers who have been asked to comment on proposed changes to the act as reported in the Financial Post of January 6?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

[Translation]

EXHIBITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUING "MAN AND HIS WORLD"

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Would he say to the house whether the government intends to co-operate with Quebec, if the latter decided to continue the operation of "Man and His World"?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It seems rather hypothetical to me, Mr. Speaker, but if such was the decision of Quebec, we would surely be ready to consider the matter with them.

[English]

TRANSPORT

CONSTRUCTION OF NORTHUMBERLAND CAUSEWAY

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister and it is the same one I attempted to ask him last week. I spent the weekend revising it. Will the government be proceeding with the construction of the Northumberland Strait Crossing, and in answering I wish the Prime Minister would please not beat around the bush.

[Mr. Kierans.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member did not work hard enough.

Mr. McQuaid: I wonder whether I might try once more, Mr. Speaker? I now ask the Prime Minister whether the government will be proceeding with the construction of the Northumberland Strait Crossing?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there will be a policy announcement on this in due course.

SHIPPING

SAINT JOHN, N.B.—PLIGHT OF CREW OF GREEK FREIGHTER

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Transport, the first and second acting ministers, and the fact that I will be absent tomorrow I wonder whether I may leave this important question with someone. Has the federal government any responsibility for the Greek freighter at Saint John, New Brunswick, the crew of which has no heat, no food, no water and no money, and they are nearly all sick? If it does have a responsibility, what is the federal government doing about it?

CONSENT OF THE QUEEN TO MAKE STATE VISITS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, arising out of a press release issued by the Prime Minister to the effect that His Excellency the Governor General will be making what are described as state visits to Jamaica, Guyana, Barbados, Trinidad and Tobago, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's consent has been given to these state visits, in view of the fact that the Governor General exists constitutionally only because there is a Queen to be represented?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I communicated with the Queen, I believe a week or two ago, to ask her consent, and I assume consent has been given. I will check on that. It certainly will be given—it most likely will be given before the Governor General departs.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As a matter of fact, he cannot depart without it.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question.

As some provincial premiers have done, has he accepted to become a member of the Canadian loyalist movement?

[English]

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

TOUR OF PRIME MINISTER BY DOGTEAM

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, alluding to my hon. friend across the house, I have not had the weekend to prepare this question but I have had a week of forty below zero weather to think about it. Recognizing that it is not possible for the Prime Minister to accept the invitation of Duncan Pryde, a Northwest Territories councillor, to spend three to four months touring the Northwest Territories by dogteam to visit Eskimo settlements, would he consider making such a visit if a route were mapped out which would take only four to five days?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

P.E.I.—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF ECONOMIC PLANS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, will the Ministry of Forestry and Rural Development advise whether he has had conversations today with the Premier of Prince Edward Island regarding the economic plans and has he, hopefully, an announcement in this regard?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I met the premier of Prince Edward Island.

[English]

TELEVISION

SUDBURY, ONT.—COMMUNITY ANTENNA LICENCE

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, before you call orders of the day perhaps I may ask the Secretary of State how soon it is expected that a decision will be made by the Canadian Radio Television Commission into applications for community antenna licences in the town of Sudbury and other areas?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure this matter is one of urgency, and I should think the matter might be placed on the order paper or debated at the time of adjournment.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

• (3:00 p.m.)

AERONAUTICS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITION, REGULATIONS, ETC.—REPORT STAGE

The house proceeded to the consideration of Bill S-14, to amend the Aeronautics Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (for Mr. Nesbitt) moved:

That clause 10 be added as follows:

"10. The said act is further amended by adding thereto the following section:

He said: This amendment will be the precursor of a number of amendments of this nature which we in Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition will have occasion to move in respect of legislative proposals such as that contained in the amendment to the Aeronautics Act. During this first parliament since the election of June 25, which began in September, we have passed a number of bills. An examination of these bills would indicate the extent to which this government is moving aggressively and with determination to take more and more rights from parliament by way of granting powers to the government, various tribunals and boards, to legislate, to enact enactments of a prohibitory nature and the penalties in this respect. During the course of this parliament we see this being done more and more. We intend to file a caveat that in our view the government has been going too far and too fast.

I shall not attempt to breach the rules, but in support of the hon. member's amendment and the valid reasons behind it I simply want to call the roll of the bills which have gone through this house, some of which have been passed by parliament and others being in various stages of the legislative machine, having been given second reading by the House of Commons. For example, the post office bill gave vast, new powers, and from an examination of the steps taken in the debate in the house indicated that the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) already had very considerable powers to change postal rates and make variations and alterations in the vested rights of people. Almost half of what is proposed in the act to control pesticides, Bill C-154, is contained within the four corners of the regulatory sections. As a matter of fact, it has three sections dealing with regulations.

Then there are the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Farm Credit Act, the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act, the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. All these acts passed by the house provided that interest rates could be raised at the uncontrolled discretion of the Governor in Council. The Animal Contagious Diseases Act gives tremendous power to the Governor in Council in the fixing of individual compensation for people covered by the legislation. The C.N.R. financing bill for the first time gives to the Governor in Council the right to authorize the C.N.R. or any other national transportation corporation to float loans and arrange for the issue of securities. The bill before the house in respect of the Patent Act and the Trade Marks Act gives power to regulate the granting of licences to pharmaceutical manufacturers.

Let me make it quite plain that I am not quarrelling, nor would I be allowed to quarrel, with the issues and principles dealt with under these authorizations. But I am entitled to emphasize the fact that we are slowly, in some cases not too slowly, taking out of this house the legislative power which is our right and turning it over to the executive. It may well be that these matters are essential. It may well be that in certain cases this is a desirable course to take, though I am very doubtful about that. But surely it is about time the members of the House of Commons, the press and the public became aware of the extent to which the bureaucracy, the establishment and the executive are filching from parliament, from this house, the very important rights which are ours and which should not be left to the uncontrolled discretion of government. I challenge the validity of such action, I challenge the right to do it, I challenge the soundness of a philosophy of this kind.

The official languages bill, for example, grants to the proposed commissioner of languages the most drastic and formidable powers with regard to holding hearings in or out of camera and enforcing the provisions of the act. The powers this official will be granted, if the legislation passes, are simply fantastic. We all know that under the Customs Tariff legislation many years ago this house gave away to a very considerable extent the traditional right to impose taxation. Under the freshwater fisheries bill we gave to the government the right to fix the interest rate. Another example of this erosion of the rights of members of parliament is the bill to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act with which we shall be dealing later.

With regard to the bill to amend the Aeronautics Act, we find, for example, that one clause proposed by the government, and which we seek to take care of by the amendment tabled by the hon. member for Oxford, would take from the Governor in Council and give to the Air Transport Commission the right to make regulations. The practice followed by the government in this respect follows precisely what was done against my objection and the objection of a great many members of this party at the time the transport act was passed.

At that time we gave the Canadian Transport Commission the right to enact regulations in a vast area and fix punitive penalties for the infringement of those regulations. As a matter of fact, we removed from parliament and gave to the Transport Commission almost exclusive jurisdiction in the very important field of transportation. Transportation is vitally important to this country and to members of the house. The very foundation of this nation was predicated upon transportation and communications system which would draw together the various parts of the country. By the National Transportation Act we gave away those powers to the commission. Now the government is asking us to do precisely the same thing with regard to a number of powers and rights which, quite improperly, we gave away earlier to the Governor in Council. Now the Governor in Council is saying: We do not want them; we are going to pass them on to an appointed body which will deal with these questions as it sees fit.

It is for this reason that we have proposed the amendment which will provide that all orders, regulations and decrees made under the provisions of the Aeronautics Act must be brought, within one year of the time they assume the force of law, before the standing committee which is charged by the rules of this house with dealing with matters of transportation. I point out to hon. members that we are not asking that these regulations, orders and decrees not become effective, or that the right to pass them be withheld in the sense that unless the house approves them they are invalid. We are simply saying that all orders and regulations should be filed with the appropriate committee and that committee must then consider them.

I have no doubt that 90 or 95 per cent of the decrees, orders and regulations will be of no particular interest to the committee. But we are asking that the committee have the right to take an interest if in the opinion of any member of this house or, in particular, of any member of the committee, there has been an attempt to encroach and trespass upon the rights of the individual. In that event this house must give effect to the rights of members who are here as protectors of the rights of the people of Canada.

It is in that sense that this amendment has been moved. I ask all hon. members to support it. It is a matter which affects hon. members who sit on the government side as well as those who sit on this side of the house. I ask hon. members: Are you prepared to give away, without any question, these rights to the establishment, to the bureaucracy? After all, governments come and governments go, but these people stay for ever. I am not challenging their bona fides or the fact that they may be good people, fully capable of discharging their responsibilities, but I suggest it is an unsound principle for an elective body such as this house aimlessly and carelessly to give away to the executive branch of government all the powers which are being asked for here and in other bills. If we do this we shall be further validating what the government has done in the past and will continue to ask the house to do in most of the legislative proposals with which we shall deal before the session is ended.

I suggest to hon. members on the government side that an even greater responsibility rests upon them than upon members of the opposition. If they are content to sit back quietly and acquiesce in this discharge of their responsibilities and in handing them over to the government, they are the people who will have to answer for it later. It is in that sense this amendment is moved, and I would request the co-operation and the support of hon. members in giving effect to it.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this point to ask whether the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) would accept one or two questions on his remarks.

Mr. Baldwin: I will answer them as well as I can on behalf of the hon. member for Oxford.

Mr. Lewis: I would like to ask the hon. member two questions which I will put into one to save time. First, what is the reason for the term "one year of coming into force"? I ask that question because if there is validity in what the hon. member has said, then obviously it becomes pretty difficult to undo something which the regulation has brought into effect. If it has been in effect for some months and certain procedures have been established pursuant to the regulation and certain practices have become a habit, it would be pretty difficult to do something about it a year later.

Second, I would like to know from the hon. member whether this amendment really says anything more than that there would be automatic reference of any regulation, order or direction to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications in this case. The amendment says they will be filed with and considered by the standing committee. Am I right in thinking that what in effect this amendment does is to provide for automatic reference to the committee of each order, regulation and direction passed under the act? Whether or not the committee wants to deal with it is up to the committee to decide, but they are referered to it automatically.

Mr. Baldwin: It is my understanding it is the intention in the minds of those who propose the amendment that there would be an automatic reference to the committee of all orders and regulations passed and that the committee itself no doubt would ab initio, then take the right to consider them within the committee, or possibly as the result of prompting by other members of the house who might bring various cases to their attention. That is why I said earlier in my remarks that in my opinion only a small percentage of the actual orders and regulations which were filed would in fact be dealt with by the committee.

As to the question of the term of one year, my understanding is that we are not suggesting in this case that the legality of the regulations and orders would be in issue, as is the case in certain jurisdictions where it is provided that orders in council and regulations of a certain type must be submitted to the legislative body within a certain number of months or days after that body resumes its sittings and that these regulations are then null and void unless concurred in by the legislative body. What we are suggesting here is the right to examine and review them. Out of the committee's studies recommendations could presumably come to the house. From then on it would be a matter for the government to consider. I believe the term of a year was selected because in many instances some time may elapse between the time these regulations are first brought to the attention of individual members and the time and the committee has an opportunity to consider them properly, to make inquiries and then to draft and make its recommendations to the house. I understand that is the reason behind the selection of a year as the period of time.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of the principle embodied in this amendment. In the general passage of the Aeronautics Act and the National Transportation Act the house gave the Canadian Transport Commission certain powers. For years now I have objected to the giving of blank cheques with regard to the power to make regulations without anyone being required to come back to this house to account for these regulations.

This is an area where the commission can do almost what it wants without having to give an accounting or being called to state its case as to why it is doing certain things. I say, in support of what was said by my colleague, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), that this has been done far too much by parliament over the past years. I say also that this provision should apply in particular to any independent commission or board even more than, say, to the Governor in Council. Under the Regulations Act the Governor in Council must publish in the Canada Gazette, and there are certain mechanics whereby regulations published in the Canada Gazette may be laid before the house.

The government has accepted the principle of what I am saying since it has introduced amendments in the anti-dumping bill which I have been advocating precisely on these points. As an example I might cite clause 25 of the anti-dumping bill, Bill C-146, passed by this house and the other place. The act originally stated that the anti-dumping tribunal might, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, make rules respecting the sittings and the procedure for making representations to the tribunal and generally the manner of conducting any business before the tribunal. However, as a result of the committee hearings and the arguments advanced, in which I took the lead, the government then proposed subsection (2), of section 25 which states:

> Copies of all rules made pursuant to subsection 1 shall be laid before Parliament within fifteen days after the commencement of the session next ensuing after the making thereof.

The Governor in Council is also empowered under that act to make regulations, and these will be also brought before parliament and tabled. Last autumn it was accepted by the government and by the house that a special committee should be set up to look into delegated legislation. It is my view that this is precisely what that committee would aim for. The Aeronautics Act and the Transport Act delegate powers of regulation. Parliament must never lose control and when it has delegated powers to legislate by way of regulation there must be a means whereby those regulations come back to parliament for review. Therefore we must have this committee on delegated legislation, not that everything will stand in hiatus until approval has been given but so that there shall be a supervisory power. These commissions owe their existence to parliament and are accountable to parliament. But the government proposes legislation and we give powers to certain bodies which are no longer held accountable to parliament. That is wholly contrary to our system of government.

I certainly support the spirit of the amendment and I urge it upon all hon. members, particularly those on the government side. Perhaps I would have worded the motion differently inasmuch as I would prefer that any rules and regulations made by the commission should be tabled by the appropriate minister within a certain time. As to the principle, however, the government itself has accepted it in legislation put forward this year, and I believe that if hon. members would reflect upon it they would see that what we are asking for is legitimate.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I am virtually in full agreement with the position taken by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). It can certainly be said that in recent years there has been growing concern, not only in parliament but among all those who follow parliamentary affairs, about the way in which statutory instruments and regulations are proliferating in number.

The question is often asked: what procedures can parliament adopt so as to maintain effective control over the number and nature of the various statutory instruments and regulations which are passed by the executive branch of government? I have heard it argued that if this amendment were passed and all regulations established by order in council were referred to a standing committee, that committee would find itself saddled with a very heavy workload indeed. But it seems to me that if the volume of these regulations is as large as has been indicated, there is a clear responsibility on the part of hon. members to buckle down and wade through them.

It is not enough that there should be a procedure by which regulations are tabled in parliament within a certain number of days after the opening of a session. When hundreds or even thousands of regulations are tabled together, the likelihood is that none of them will be studied and analysed in a satisfactory way. In my view it would be a much more effective procedure if each department of government which establishes regulations were responsible for seeing that they were referred to the appropriate standing committees of this house.

The amendment before us appears to be an attempt to deal with a longstanding problem which has become increasingly serious during the past decade. I have tried to think of arguments which could be advanced in opposition to the proposed amendment, but I confess I cannot think of any.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I intend to be brief, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask the minister a question. He may not have the information before him now, but the answer goes to the root of the trouble which the amendment is trying to cure.

As the hon. gentleman knows, the real substance of our legislation is determined by orders in council and by regulations made after this house has dealt with the matters of principle concerned. Sometimes, indeed, Members of Parliament find themselves confused, when they see the regulations, about what they really voted for. Most of these regulations are drawn up by advisers of the government, officials within the public service. The question I want to ask the minister is: does he know how many thousands of regulations have been approved in the past year—regulations which really amount to legislation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think I should remind hon. members that we are not in committee of the whole, and that we should not engage in the type of discussion appropriate to a committee of the whole. My understanding is that there should be speeches of the kind ordinarily made while the Speaker is in the chair. The hon. member for Calgary North is asking for information which the minister can give as part of his speech, but according to our rules the minister can speak only once; he might answer all these questions when he takes the floor.

Mr. Woolliams: I did not wish to make a lengthy speech, Mr. Speaker, and this is why I was content simply to direct a question to the minister. I shall be quite satisfied to get the information when the hon. gentleman replies.

Hon. James A. Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I have noted carefully the statement made by the hon. member for Peace River, particularly his reference to several bills which have been passed recently and his concern about the authority now being given to the executive branch of government. He named the Canadian Transport Commission and other bodies.

At this time, when we are dealing with a specific amendment, I do not think it would be appropriate for me to make further reference to this general topic. What I should like to do is to refer to the amendment which was placed on record in Votes and Proceedings for January 31. In this connection I feel I should first of all thank the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), although he is not in the house—

An hon. Member: He is. At the back.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): He is only half here, as usual.

Mr. Baldwin: Better than being all gone, like the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald).

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Way ahead of you, and all gone in that sense.

Mr. Richardson: I am glad the hon. member for Oxford has just taken his place. I was about to thank him for the careful study which he has given to Bill S-14, the purpose of which is to amend the Aeronautics Act. I wish to express the view of the government in relation to the proposed amendment to this bill which the hon. member has put forward as recorded in Votes and Proceedings No. 83 of January 31. The hon. member has proposed that a new clause be added as follows:

> Any regulation, order or direction made under this Act shall be filed with and considered by the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Transport and Communications within one year of coming into force.

It seems to me the effect of this proposal would be that the officials concerned would be in direct communication with the standing committee, that they would in fact be sending material to the standing committee for its consideration. But my understanding is that a committee of the house can only consider matters referred to it by the house itself. In these circumstances I do not believe we should legislate as proposed by the hon. member.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, if I might—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not sure whether the hon. member is entitled to speak, someone else having moved the motion in his name, but no doubt he could make his remarks with the unanimous consent of the house. Is that agreed?

Mr. Baldwin: He can speak for me.

Mr. Nesbitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My remarks will be brief. The minister's objection as I understand it is of a technical nature; it is not directed to the substance of the motion. I cannot say I altogether follow his line of reasoning. It would, of course, clearly have to be the government, through one of its ministers, which would refer these regulations to the committee. I cannot follow the reasoning behind the minister's statement that the commission would be in direct communication with a committee of the house. I think it goes without saying that anything of this nature would have to be referred formally to the committee by a minister, either the minister himself if he still occupies this present portfolio or his successor.

If the minister had any objection to the substance of the amendment I might be able to follow his reasoning. As has been pointed out by other hon. members, the regulations will be made not by the minister but by the deputy minister or the Canadian Transport Commission. It is obvious that such regulations may cause a great deal of trouble in the course of a year. While it is true that any questions about regulations could be taken to the Supreme Court of Canada, this would be a pretty costly proceeding for the average person. It would be much simpler to change the regulations by referring them once a year to the house committee on transport and communications. If there were any objections to particular regulations, those objections could then be put forward by members of parliament to the committee. However, I am sure everybody else would agree to any technical change in the wording of the amendment to meet the minister's requirements, if he thought that were necessary.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put forward two reasons why the government thinks it unwise to accept the hon. member's amendment. The first was probably much in the mind of the seatmate of the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), when he expressed his reservation about an amendment which he said—I believe I quote him exactly—he could not commend as such but could at least commend the spirit of it.

My first reason is with respect to the suggestion that these matters be referred specifically to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications of the House of Commons. What the hon. member is really proposing is that we write into the statute, for all time, what the house normally does by way of an amendment to the Standing Orders. As hon. members know, we have recently gone through that process. Contrary to what is sometimes suggested, it is not necessary for parliament to change the Standing Orders; rather it is for the House of Commons to change its own Standing Orders.

As a result of the changes that were made recently to our Standing Orders, under Standing Order 65 the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications has been created. In view of the fact that the committee on procedure and organization is presently considering Standing Order 65 it is possible—certainly it is beyond mere quibble —that they may well wish to change the Standing Order again, perhaps to change the designation of this particular committee or to change its powers. Therefore, if we were to accept the hon. member's amendment we would need not only a decision of the house to amend the Standing Orders but would also have to bring in an amendment to the Aeronautics Act itself, which I suggest is really an absurd situation.

The hon. member for Edmonton West made reference to what was formerly Bill C-146 and is now the anti-dumping act in connection with the tabling in Parliament of certain papers to enable the house to dispose of them as it may wish. However, I do not think that the house should tie its hands in the matter of amending its own Standing Orders by the kind of amendment that the hon. member for Oxford has put forward.

My second reason for not accepting an amendment of this kind at this time can be deduced from the remarks made by the hon. member for Peace River. As the house knows, I moved a motion, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River, to set up a special committee on statutory legislation to look into questions concerning statutory instruments and delegated legislation of the type referred to in the proposed amendment. I think the sounder course of action would be to permit that committee to continue its study of the question of statutory instruments and to make recommendations to the house as to how best this type of delegated legislation may be brought forward for the attention of members of parliament and, if thought desirable by that committee, for the attention of a particular standing committee.

I suggest that we should not prejudge the study that is presently being made by the special committee on delegated legislation, as this particular amendment would do. We should wait for the committee to report to the house whether we should make any structural changes across the board in our federal legislative system so that we can deal with all of these questions at once, rather than in this piecemeal and unsatisfactory manner.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I hope the house will reject the amendment.

Mr. Aiken: Would the minister accept a question? The Minister without Portfolio raised some technical objections to the wording of this amendment. Is the government prepared to support or to introduce an amendment which would meet the objection the minister has raised to the wording of this amendment but carrying out the spirit of the amendment that has been moved by the hon. member for Oxford?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I will have to restate my argument again for the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken). I said that, as all hon. members opposite will acknowledge, the amendment as worded at the moment is badly drafted.

My second point was that we are now considering a procedure whereby statutory instruments of this kind may be brought under closer scrutiny by the house. I suggest to the hon. member that only this special committee can report to this house and make recommendations as to any general structural changes that affect the federal legislative system, and that therefore it would not be wise to make this kind of amendment piecemeal. The hon. member for Peace River stated that this was the precursor of a number of different amendments of this kind.

I share his concern over the fact that more and more power affecting the rights and privileges of people is being conferred on, if you like, a faceless bureaucracy that is beyond the criticism of this parliament. As I say, I share his concern in this regard. But it may well be that there are more effective ways of adopting a procedure in this parliament for dealing with the matter across the board, rather than accepting piecemeal amendments of this kind which, if accepted now might have to be later repealed and further amendments made to the Aeronautics Act when the committee reports.

Mr. Aiken: I take it that the answer to my question is no?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would not try to explain it a third time to the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the said amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the amendment negatived.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Nesbitt) negatived.

Hon. James Richardson (for the Minister of Transport) moved:

That Bill S-14, an act to amend the Aeronautics Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications on Wednesday, January 29, 1969, be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 75, subsection (13), the said bill stands over for third reading at the next sitting of the house.

NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, UNAUTHORIZED WORKS, ETC.— REPORT STAGE

The house proceeded to the consideration of Bill S-19, to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

That clause 1 be amended as follows:

Firstly, that proposed section 1A(b) be deleted and the following substituted:

1A(b) "navigable water" includes a canal and any other body of water not wholly situated within a province and not directly connected to a further canal or body of water situated in another province, created or altered as a result of the construction of any work.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Secondly, that proposed Section 2(c)i be amended by adding thereto after the word "thereto" the following:

"constructed on a navigable water."

Thirdly, that proposed Section 2(c)iv be amended by adding after the word "navigation" the following:

"on a navigable water."

He said: Mr. Speaker, the reasons for moving these amendments to proposed sections 1A and 2(c) are twofold. They are for the purpose of clarifying a situation which has existed for a long time; in short, they are to clarify the term "navigable water". They are also introduced to try to prevent an attempted power grab on the part of the federal government of pieces of real estate that were never intended to come under the jurisdiction of the federal government. I am referring to farm ponds and the like. We were told in the committee that studied this bill that things like ponds would come within the purview of this legislation.

The term "navigable water" seems an express definition; yet the fact is that navigable waters are vaguely defined in the act, to say the least. To appreciate what I mean one must look at the British North America Act. Section 91, subsection 10, sets out that navigation and shipping come under the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government. Subsection 13 refers to "ferries between a province and any British or foreign country or between two provinces." Subsection 9 refers to "beacons, buoys, lighthouses, and Sable Island." Yet another subsection refers to waters. It is clear, therefore, that section 91 of the act does not clearly or precisely define the term "navigable waters". If the fathers of confederation had considered all waters navigable waters they would not have included specifically the words "ferries between a province and any British or foreign country or between two provinces". Neither would they have included subsection 9 which refers to "beacons, buoys, lighthouses, and Sable Island." It is clear, therefore, that the term "navigable water" was in some way limited in meaning.

It is also necessary to see what the fathers of confederation intended to say when the act was drawn up. At the time of confederation navigable waters were of greater importance to transportation in Canada than they are today. I doubt that in their wisdom the fathers of confederation, gray beards and all, could have seen into the future in the manner described in Lord Tennyson's poem "Locksley Hall" and foretold the great dams that would hold back water in populous parts of Canada. These structures have created large bodies of water and serve purposes of conservation. Conserving water and other resources was not a problem in 1867. Clearly, the fathers of confederation never envisaged that farm ponds, for instance, would come under the purview of the legislation. One must remember that when looking at the British North America Act.

There is also this question: what is navigable water? There have been a number of court decisions on the subject, but I shall not refer to them. Anyone can look up court records. To say the least, existing court decisions on the point are not decisive nor helpful.

When officials of the Department of Transport were before the committee and giving evidence they were as helpful as they could be but seemed unclear as to how to define navigable waters. Most of us agree, I think, that there is a difference between a body of water that is navigable and one that is not. For example, at one time the Thames River flowing through the city of London, Ontario, was navigable. Ships used it in 1890. At one time a steamer upset on the river and 90 people were drowned. Clearly, when that happened the Thames River must have been navigable. Now the river dries up in the summer months. Another example of a body of water that may be navigable at one time and not navigable at another is a body of water containing rapids. If the rapids can be eliminated logs can be floated down the river. The officials of the department define navigable water as any body of water on which you can float a raft, canoe, or anything else. While that may be a reasonable definition I do not think that the term "navigable" was ever intended to apply to waters on which you can float only a raft or canoe. The fact of the matter is that officials of the department themselves are not too sure of the effect of the amendments proposed by the minister.

I now refer to Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 11 of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications of Friday, January 24 last. I quote as follows from page 191:

Mr. Nesbitt: If that is correct, am I then to understand, because of the additions to this act which are before us at the moment, that a person who has a summer cottage on a lake would have to get permission from the minister to build an addition to his dock or something of that nature?

Mr. J. Fortier (Legal Counsel, Department of Transport): Yes, if it is an important dock, but I do not think it is intended to cover all the small docks made up of a couple of planks.

Mr. Nesbitt: But if a person had a 30 foot cruiser, and this is not uncommon nowadays in parts of Ontario and elsewhere, then that person would have to get permission to build a dock. For instance, this would apply to the Muskoka lakes?

Mr. Fortier: Yes, sir.

Mr. McGrath: And it could include a floating swimming platform as well?

Mr. Manning: Yes, sir.

I need not take up the time of the house to show that officials of the Department of Transport, who presumably drafted the amendments for the minister, seem unsure of their effect. For example, Mr. Fortier, legal counsel for the Department of Transport said the amendments would apply to a dock if it were an important dock. I do not know what that sentence means. Legislation is specifically spelled out. It is no use saying "I do not think it is intended to cover all the small docks." When one is drawing up regulations under the Navigable Waters Protection Act one must be clear. Regulations must be clearly drawn and clearly applicable, and it is far from certain that in the minds of the officials who will draw up the regulations these matters are clearly defined. As I said, the officials must be clear in their minds about the points the regulations are to cover. The minister seemed concerned about this matter because on page 193 of the same committee report we find the following:

Mr. Richardson: Yes. Mr. Chairman, could I answer a question Mr. Nesbitt raised—I think it is of importance to all of us and I have tried to understand it in thinking about this act—in respect to small docks built on lakes. I do not think that there is going to be an initiative required by the builder; I do not think he is going to have to seek application to build an ordinary little dock any more than at present, but I would like confirmation of that to the committee from the officials.

Mr. Nesbitt: This is a pretty disturbing thing, Mr. Richardson.

Mr. Richardson: It was to me and I wanted to make certain that that was not the case. I would like to have a comment on that.

The minister seemed to have some doubt in his mind as to the effect of the proposed amendments. All this shows how well some of our committees which have been studying certain bills are functioning.

There is another matter I wish to refer to. It is touched on in Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 10, of Thursday, January 23 last. There is a brief reference I would like to make here. At page 190 I said:

The reason I asked in the first place is the question of what the federal government has jurisdiction over. Are you implying then that the federal government has jurisdiction over all waters on which anything can be floated, no matter how small?

Mr. Ballinger: This is correct, yes. I think the federal government has this as a result of the British North America Act where it has the authority for all matters relating to navigation on all bodies of water in Canada.

I do not want to spend time reading into the record of this house, but on other occasions it was pointed out this would include such bodies of water as farm ponds. I mentioned earlier that it was never intended by the British North America Act to give jurisdiction to the federal government over bodies of water which were wholly within a province or unconnected with other bodies of water. No matter how one may interpret the terms of the B.N.A. Act, I think it becomes manifestly foolish to suggest it was ever in the minds of the fathers of confederation to include farm ponds and the like under the federal Department of Transport.

On the other hand, it is quite clear there must have been some doubts as to how far the federal government should proceed in this regard because of section 91 of the act and the various subsections to which I referred earlier. Navigable waters such as the Great Lakes, which are international, and the Saskatchewan River and the Ottawa River connecting two major provinces, would have to come under federal jurisdiction. But certainly it was never intended that every tiny creek or stream wholly within a province should come under the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

The word "navigable" has been defined in statutes although in some fields there have been disputes from time to time. A river could be navigable at one time in history but not at another because it might dry up. The question is: when is a body of water navigable and when is it not? According to the officials of the Department of Transport it is any body of water, no matter how small, on which anything can float. This covers everything. This is very simple from the viewpoint of the officials of the department.

The general public would be startled to find out they need permission from the Department of Transport in order to build a dock in front of a cottage on a lake such as Lake Scugog, Rice Lake or the Muskoka lakes which are in no way connected with other lakes or provinces. The minister says: we think things will remain the same. Why then Mr. Speaker, are these powers being sought? I do not understand. The officials of the department were not helpful in explaining these matters. They were very uncertain about the effect of the legislation. This legislation at first appeared to be housekeeping legislation. The drafting of the legislation appears to have been hasty, vague and sloppy, with great powers being conferred on the federal government which I do not think were intended.

I suggest that the reasons for the amendment are obvious. The bill seeks to include all small bodies of water, even farm ponds, which were never intended to come within the ambit of federal powers. The amendment is carefully worded and reads:

> "navigable water" includes a canal and any other body of water, not wholly situated within a province and not directly connected to a further canal or body of water situated in another province—

This is understandable and necessary for waterways such as the Rideau Canal system which, although wholly in the province of Ontario, clearly connects two bodies of water, one being the Ottawa River which divides two provinces and comes under federal jurisdiction. The Trent Canal connects two of the Great Lakes which are international bodies of water. In order to include these projects there would have to be reference made to connecting bodies of water although not directly connected. The reason for the amendment is obvious in the case of waterways such as the Thames, the Grand and various others where the waters have been dammed up to create conservation ponds or lakes, as they are called, and there is no way of moving out of these ponds by any vessel as defined by the act. There is no system of locks to get in and out of the lakes.

The amendment is related to section 92, subsection 10(c), of the British North America Act which states:

> (c) Such works as, although wholly situate within the province, are before or after their execution declared by the Parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces.

This refers to works such as dams and other construction.

When the fathers of confederation were framing section 92 of the act which gives rights to the provinces they realized that the definition of "works" might cause some trouble. The minister could perhaps clear up the question of what is navigable water and what is not by drawing up an amendment to the Navigable Waters Protection Act stating that for the purpose of this act certain waters will be deemed to be navigable, such as the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence, Ottawa, Saskatchewan and Niagara Rivers. From time to time certain waters used for navigation purposes could be so designated by order in council. This might be a better way of doing it. I do not know. At the present time I cannot imagine why officials of the Department of Transport would want to seek jurisdiction over every little body of water and puddle in the country. I am surprised at this sort of thing finding its way into a statute.

There are many conservation projects in Ontario. I am sure all other provinces have administrative bodies dealing with conservation. These are creatures of the provinces. For example, the Upper Thames Authority, the Grand River Conservation Authority and others deal with the administration of dams, the use of water stored behind dams, and what is allowed on these waters. There is enough trouble already between municipalities and such conservation authorities. There is squabbling over the kinds of boats to be used on artificial lakes and over the speed they will travel at. When we have the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) also coming into the picture it will be a question of too many cooks spoiling the broth. Bring the minister in with all his officials and they can only compound the difficulties already existing between municipalities and conservation authorities.

I have been in this house long enough to know that often it is difficult for a government to accept amendments proposed from the other side. There is always the question of losing face even if proposed amendments make sense, but I hope the minister will accept this amendment because it would relieve his department of a great deal of responsiblity.

If a man builds a dock on a small lake and his neighbour does not like it, under the terms of this bill the neighbour can run to the Department of Transport to raise cain about the dock. One would need to be on good terms with the local D.O.T. officials if one wanted to build a dock.

I think the minister should be happy to be rid of the responsibility for a lot of little rivers. If his department felt it was necessary to bring certain bodies of water under the act he could do it by order in council, and in this instance I think that would be the best way. My amendment would relieve the minister and his department of the responsibility for farm ponds and little creeks and at the same time would in no way interfere with what really are the waters that must concern him and his department, namely, large bodies of water on which ships travel between countries, including all of the St. Lawrence Seaway and a number of big rivers in western Canada and elsewhere.

I assume the minister will not be prepared to accept my amendment but I submit he should introduce some amendment to clarify what is navigable water and what is not. His proposed amendments will create nothing but an administrative nightmare so far as many areas of Canada are concerned.

Giving the department responsibility over little bodies of water such as farm ponds and small inland lakes is simply to encourage spiteful actions between neighbours. If I do not like a dock that my neighbour is building, if I think he is building it out too far, I can go to the Department of Transport and complain. Nobody is suggesting that the minister should not have control over docks, floating platforms and other works on major arterial waters such as the St. Lawrence. My proposed amendment includes such control. But I am sure no one in the Department of Transport envisaged, as admitted by the officials who appeared before the committee, the taking over of every small farm pond, and administrative responsibility for private docks built by cottage owners on small lakes.

My purpose in proposing this amendment is not based on pride of authorship. It is to clear up an administrative mess. The officials of the department have told us that the proposed changes in the act will cover tiny bodies of water and docks. They said major, important docks, but they were not sure what that meant. Certainly the minister indicated some surprise that the proposed changes would cover small, local docks and floating platforms. My objective is to try to keep a great many of us, including the minister, out of administrative arguments between local authorities and the department.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) on his proposed amendment to Bill S-19. Normally I think amendments coming from the opposition parties are good but in my opinion this is an extremely foolish and far too restrictive amendment.

I do not think any hon. member is anxious to see the administration bogged down in arguments over ponds on farms or over the building of swimming pools, but all one has to do is read the hon. member's amendment to discover that a large number of very important bodies of water will be eliminated from the provisions of the act if his amendment is adopted. This is not the intention of the bill and I am quite sure it is not the intention of the government.

For example, many of the new works in the province of British Columbia which this bill would bring under the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act would be excluded if the amendment were passed. I do not think this is what we are trying to do. In an attempt to improve the legislation the hon. member proposes an exceedingly restrictive change. It would rule out most of the matters which the bill seeks to remedy.

The proposed new section 1A(b) would bring under the provisions of the act canals and all artificial bodies of water created or altered as a result of the construction of any work, and that is exactly what we want to do. In British Columbia we have had a recent series of dam constructions along the Columbia River and elsewhere. These would be included under the new section of the act. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Oxford would eliminate all this. The amendment in the bill reads:

"navigable water" includes a canal and any other body of water created or altered as a result of the construction of any work.

That would be thrown out and be replaced by these words:

—"navigable water" includes a canal and any other body of water not—

Mark that word—"not".

—wholly situated within a province and not directly connected to a further canal or body of water situated in another province, created or altered as a result of the construction of any work.

• (4:10 p.m.)

I suggest the amendment is very vague and will undo the very thing that we want done. We in the province of British Columbia are very desirous of bringing within the confines of the act the reservoir basins and so on behind the new dams which have recently been constructed. I suggest to the hon. member that if he reads the amendment carefully he will realize that he will be defeating this intent. Perhaps the minister will have a different interpretation of the amendment, but I am not satisfied with it. If it means what I am convinced it does, I have no other choice but to vote against it.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I object to this amendment for the simple reason that it complicates the present situation. We must not add to the difficulties involved in the sharing of jurisdictions between the federal and provincial governments.

[Mr. Harding.]

The proposed amendment reads in part as follows:

"navigable water" includes a canal and any body of water not wholly situated within a province and not directly connected to a further canal or body of water situated in another province, created or altered as a result of the construction of any work.

Since this amendment would complicate the matter to the point that we could not make it out, I am totally opposed to it. If, for instance, we start giving a definition of the waters situated within a province or another, we will end up connecting the waters of British Columbia to those of the province of Quebec and that is why I think the limitation which this amendment intends to establish cannot be justified.

Of course, the term "navigable water" is already quite clear since it means a place where there is maritime traffic, and I cannot see why we should through such an amendment make matters more complicated, when so often they are too complicated already.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, I do not see any necessity at all for this amendment.

[English]

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill S-19, to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act, I am sorry to note that someone in my old Department of Transport has extended bureaucracy to a ridiculous extreme in drafting this legislation. As I understand the bill, if it passes in its present form it will require someone who has a summer cottage or a farm bordering upon water of any kind to get permission first from the federal government before building a dock, a swimming raft, diving platform or any structure whatsoever. I do not think this was the intent of the minister or the government. Surely they never intended to put such sweeping powers in the hands of government officials. This will put people who are law-abiding peaceful taxpayers in the position of having to go through the tangle of red tape and regulation to obtain permission from the federal government before making any such addition to their property.

It is my belief that the legislation before us is badly and loosely drafted, and that if it passes in its present form it will simply extend bureaucracy in its most ridiculous form. The power given to the federal government by this bill in this form is both unjustified and unnecessary. For that reason I intend to support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) on behalf of the official opposition.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on the bill with relation not to acts of commission but of omission. During the transport committee hearings it came to light that the bill does not cover works of provincial governments or their agencies.

On the prairies and in the inland areas of this country very few works obstruct navigation as effectively as power dams. Hydroelectric authorities today have a vested interest as Crown corporations in right of the various provinces. Yet we have not purported in the legislation to try to control obstructions to navigation arising from power dams. This was a very serious problem to the province of Alberta when the Peace River development was taking place in northern British Columbia. Great concern was expressed about interference with the flow of water in the Peace River to Alberta and the Northwest Territories. Nothing could be done about that under federal jurisdiction.

In this day and age, with Crown corporations operating in commercial fields, I think it is incumbent upon the government to exercise its authority to protect the public not only from works of private enterprise but works of Crown corporations, and I seriously suggest to the government that it consider extending the act to cover the very serious problem that is being created.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I would like once again to thank the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) for the careful study he has given to Bill S-19 which amends the Navigable Waters Protection Act. I would like to comment on the proposals which he has made in the house today, and particularly on his amendment to the bill as it appears in Votes and Proceedings No. 83 of January 31.

It is not my intention to speak at length about the other matters he has raised because we dealt with them very thoroughly during the committee hearings. That, of course, is the primary purpose of standing committee meetings.

I know the hon. member is concerned, and I indicated that I share his concern, about small docks, diving platforms and that sort of thing, but these do not come within this act unless they obstruct navigation. That is the overriding consideration. I do not think that neighbours are going to get into fights unless someone is trying to build a dock far out into a body of water, which will in fact obstruct navigation. If it will obstruct navigation then an application would have to be made under the act. I think the concern is really unfounded so far as small private docks are concerned.

Speaking to the specific amendment, it is proposed that Section 1A(b) be deleted and that a revised definition of "navigable water" be substituted. I believe it would not be wise to do this, primarily because the proposed definition of "navigable water" is too restrictive. This has been pointed out very forcibly and clearly by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding), supported by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte).

I believe that the definition of "navigable water" proposed in the amendment would mean that the Navigable Waters Protection Act would apply only to navigable waters which flow or are located in two provinces. This is really much too limited for the purposes of the act. The definition of "navigable water" as it now appears in the bill is more general in character and would make the act apply to navigable water located entirely within one province. It seems to me that the amendment proposed is contrary to the intent of the definition "navigable water" contained in the bill, and for that reason I do not believe the amendment can be accepted.

With reference to clause 2(c)(i), it does not appear necessary to add the words "constructed on a navigable water" as suggested in the amendment, primarily because the whole act is dealing with navigable water and the addition of these words would appear to be repetitious. Finally, with reference to the proposed amendment to clause 2(c)(iv), our view is that it is not necessary to add the words "on a navigable water" since navigation cannot take place except on a navigable water. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, as well as the points raised by other hon. members, this amendment cannot be accepted by the government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the said amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my view the nays have it. I declare the amendment negatived.

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Negatived, on division.

Amendment (Mr. Nesbitt) negatived.

Hon. James Richardson (for the Minister of Transport) moved:

That Bill S-19, to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75, subsection 13, the said bill stands over for third reading at the next sitting of the house.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE—REPORT STAGE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill S-3, to amend the Canada Evidence Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on Thursday, January 30, 1969, be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Carried, on division.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that consideration be given to the motion for third reading of the bill.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill S-3, to amend the Canada Evidence Act, be read the third time and do pass.

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), I should like to thank all the members who sat on the committee on justice and legal affairs.

The minister has already had the opportunity of speaking to the House on the effects of the amendments proposed in this bill. The five proposed clauses were studied in detail by the committee on justice and legal affairs, where the minister himself dealt with each one of them.

It will have been noted that the unanimous report of the committee does not propose any change and I do not feel I need insist any further. Still, I shall review briefly the objectives of those five amendments.

The first is designed to facilitate the hearing of expert witnesses during trials; the second provides for more flexible cross-examination of the witnesses of one party; the third extends the definition of the word "Bank" to financial institutions; the fourth revises the rules on hearsay; finally, the fifth provides an honest solution to those problems which formerly arose from the form recognized for receiving oaths or solemn declarations.

In short, it modernizes the act with a view to promoting the achievement of a more just society.

[English]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in reference to clause 2 of the bill. The explanatory note reads as follows:

The purpose of this amendment is to allow a party with leave of the court to cross-examine his own witness on a prior inconsistent statement made by him in writing, in order to enable the court to determine whether the witness is adverse.

I am a little concerned that the clause goes farther than the explanatory note, because it says:

Where the party producing a witness alleges that the witness made at other times a statement in writing—

It does not have to be proved. This point has come to mind recently, although I did mention it in the discussion on second reading. The provision means that if Crown counsel merely alleges that at another time John Brown made a different statement, he can have his own witness declared hostile and can cross-examine him. It is all right to bring the Canada Evidence Act up to date, but this question requires very careful consideration. The Crown may be having difficulty in proving some narcotics cases, and the Department of Justice may have merely handed this provision to the minister without giving any thought to it. If they did give any thought to it, they overlooked a problem that will arise.

When a person is charged with an indictable offence he is entitled to elect by whom he shall be tried. If he elects trial before a magistrate, the magistrate has jurisdiction to deal with the matter. The consent of the accused is required in this case. The accused may elect to have a preliminary hearing before a magistrate and trial in a high court before a judge and jury or a judge without a jury. In order to present at the trial the best possible case for his client, defence counsel cross-examines fully at the preliminary hearing in order to find out what is the Crown's case.

I should like to refer to a murder trial in which I was engaged in order to illustrate the point I am about to make. The police had obtained from the accused, who was charged with the murder of his wife, a confession. They had taken nine and a half hours to obtain a confession of 11 pages. The confession was made up of questions and answers, questions put by the policeman and answers given orally by the accused. After nine and a half hours the accused signed a statement which was declared admissible by the magistrate and by the trial judge.

The point I am making as to the credibility of the statement is that I noticed on reading the statement that nowhere had the police officer asked the accused: "Did you kill your wife?" One would have thought that in getting a statement through questions and answers this would be one of the questions the policeman would put to the accused. In cross-examination counsel asked: "Does this statement contain all the questions and all the answers material to the murder charge, the questions that were asked by the police officer and the answers given by the accused?" The police officer said "yes".

Then a question was asked by the defence counsel which would never be asked at a trial but which had to be put, namely: "Why was that question not put?" It should have been asked during a cross-examination which filled 11 pages and must have represented some kind of confession. The policeman answered: "I overlooked something. I did ask the accused that question but I forgot to write it in the statement and I forgot I asked him that question". The next question at the preliminary hearing asked by defence counsel was: "How many times did you ask that question?" The policeman replied: "Once". He was then asked: "What was the answer?" That question would never be put before a jury because if the answer was "Yes, I stabbed or killed my wife" counsel would have hung his own client. I am not going to go into the answer that was given, but the answer given by the police officer differed from the one given at the time of the inquest.

Then defence counsel waited until the trial by jury started and asked the same question to build up the same set of facts, protected from incriminating his own client by the fact that he had sworn copies of the questions. Defence counsel asked: "Is everything that you asked the accused and everything the accused said in that statement?" The police officer, who was under oath at the preliminary hearing and whose memory failed him again or he did not know which side of the fence he was on, said: "Yes". Then he was asked: "Why did you not ask the accused 'did you kill your wife'?", to which he answered: "I forgot I did". It is a funny thing to forget. Then he was asked how many times he put the question, to which he said: "Once". So there was one answer at the inquest, one answer at the preliminary hearing, and a new answer before the jury. Of course the jury were not going to believe the police officer.

Mr. Baldwin: It sounds like a cabinet minister.

Mr. Woolliams: The point I am making is that a preliminary hearing is basically a fishing trip to find out what case the Crown has. It provides an opportunity to get a statement as a result of questions asked by the defence which could not otherwise be provided. I repeat again that this measure gives the Crown too much power. I would have moved an amendment under the new rules but, as you have seen this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, the government have a majority and they are going to get this bill through the house. I had hoped that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) would be in the house on such as important piece of legislation which changes the rules of evidence and the rights of the citizens of this nation. It is possible that he is not in the house because of a previous speaking engagement. but if this is the case, then surely this bill should have been brought to the house at a time when the minister could be present.

This afternoon I counted the number of ministers present in the house during the oral question period. I say without any hesitation or reservation that it is a disgrace that this government has so little concern for the rights of the opposition that its members do not even bother to attend the sessions and to be here to answer questions. The Minister of Justice is not here. I say he should be here at this time, and although he is a friend of mine this is my criticism of him. I say that if he could not be here it was his job to make certain this bill would be postponed until it was convenient for him to grace this place with his presence.

The attitude of the government is evident not only in the work of the committees but in the House of Commons under the new rules which they talk about with great affection. I say that eventually this institution will become decadent. The Minister of Justice should have been here to answer my questions on this important matter with reference to the Canada Evidence Act, whether we are at the committee stage or third reading of the bill.

I hope that the house leader, who is not here either, will agree that in view of my submission this debate on third reading should be adjourned until such time as the Minister of Justice can be present to assure the house that the civil rights of the accused across this nation are protected. This morning I heard on the radio about the case of a man who was kept in jail for several months for having stolen the sum of $1.96. I agree with the Liberals who speak with great affection in committees of the house about the rights of the accused. All lawyers who have to do with this type of thing realize that there is a great injustice in this country in this regard. The Liberals will rubber stamp this section, but when they get back to practising law they will find out how important a piece of legislation was passed this afternoon. I have a responsibility to the Canadian Bar Association and to the citizens of this nation. I ask the house leader to let this matter stand until the Minister of Justice can be here to answer the questions I have raised.

I repeat that defence counsel, in order to find out the Crown's case, must cross-examine at the preliminary hearing. What this measure will mean is that if the defence counsel obtains a bad answer at the preliminary hearing the Crown can ask: "Did you make that statement, without having to apply to the court to have the witness treated as hostile. They have to allege some inconsistency. This is not left to the discretion of the court but to the discretion of one man, namely, Crown counsel. As the house knows, Crown counsel, like other people, are affected by the environment they live in over the years.

I am glad that this bill came up for third reading so that I can raise this matter again. We do not have a chance to stop the government. They say they have a mandate. They are trying to tell us they had a mandate to bring in some of the changes to the Criminal Code and that they went to the people on those sections. I bet there was a quiet whispering campaign in some of the constituencies where there are people with certain religious beliefs and that certain sections of the Code were not too much emphasized so that some of the Liberals would be elected.

The Liberals never had a mandate to bring in this measure. It simply streamlines the Canada Evidence Act to serve the Crown so it can expedite its cases. It runs roughshod over the rights of citizens.

An hon. Member: How about the just society?

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: "The just society." I do not know what that means. It is one of those Madison Avenue pieces of propaganda.

I should like to hear from whoever is in authority. I see the leader of the house is back. This matter should wait until the minister is in his place. If ministers do not want to come here, let us lock the doors. Lock them now and say: Parliament is wasting time; send the members home with their $12,000 a year and their $6,000 expenses; get rid of the place, it is costing the nation too much; declare a dictatorship right now, because ministers will not come here to answer any questions or to speak in a debate.

I would like to have seen the Conservatives, when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was prime minister, treating this house with the contempt the Liberals are showing now. I should like to hear what Mr. Chevrier would have said, what Mr. Pickersgill would have said, what Mr. Pearson and Mr. Martin would have said. Boy, they would have told the government where to get off! How they would have debated it! And, talking of filibusters, they knew how to run one.

This is the kind of nonsense we have to contend with today. Gentlemen, I say this: for goodness' sake, let Liberal members who got elected from good constituencies in Canada rise up and speak, even if it is against their own party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not pretend to know whether the points raised by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) are valid, but he certainly made the kind of case which it seems to me ought to be answered, preferably by a minister, and unless someone else is ready to speak, particularly someone from the government side, it seems to me the house might agree to adjourn the debate on this matter and go on to something else. I can, of course, find out whether the house wishes to adjourn the debate simply by moving that the debate on Bill S-3 be adjourned.

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: Mr. Speaker, I am ready to answer the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams).

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house agree that the parliamentary secretary may answer?

Mr. Woolliams: I want to hear from the minister. Why not the minister?

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: Unfortunately, the minister cannot be here—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. There is no agreement.

Mr. Woolliams: I would make this suggestion on a point of order. I do not want to see the parliamentary secretary prevented from giving an answer. If he can assure us that the minister will also speak on this clause I will ask the house to give consent for him to speak again.

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give any assurance of that kind. Unfortunately, the minister cannot be here this afternoon because he is absent on official duty.

May I say I am very surprised that the hon. member should be adopting his present attitude because the bill was thoroughly discussed in the committee of which he is a member. I do not know whether he was present at the time, but this particular point was explained by the officials. The answer is that clause 10 still remains in force. This clears up the difficulty raised by the hon. member.

Furthermore, the amendment results from requests received from the Manitoba and Saskatchewan subsections of the Criminal Bar Association. In addition, the Canadian Bar Association at its annual meeting on September 9, 1967, passed the following resolution:

> Whereas there appear to be conflicting decisions as to whether a party may put to his witness a prior inconsistent statement until after a ruling of adverseness has been made by the court;
> Resolved:
> That section 9 of the Canada Evidence Act be amended to provide,
> (a) that by leave of the court a party might cross-examine his witness as to prior inconsistent written statements before a finding of adverseness;

In these circumstances I am surprised that the hon. member should have referred as he did to the Canadian Bar Association, this suggestion having been made by that Association.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the hon. member for Calgary North satisfied?

Mr. Woolliams: No, I am not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think my motion should be put. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert):

> That the debate on the third reading of Bill S-3 be adjourned.

I hope the house will accept this motion so that we can have a statement from the minister on a later occasion.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Knowles) which was negatived on the following division:

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding with private members' business it is my duty, pursuant to standing order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg)—Vocational Training—opportunities for unemployed to improve technical skills; the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—External Affairs—satellites—exchange of letters between France and Quebec; the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Serre)—Education—recommendations of the Franco-Ontarian committee on cultural life.

It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions, public bills.

NOTICES OF MOTIONS

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED MEDICAL EXAMINATION OF FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek) moved:

That in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the immediate organization of a program of medical examination of all members of the Canadian Active Service Forces who were prisoners of war in World War II, who have not been medically examined within the past five years either by the active treatment services of the Department of Veterans Affairs or on its behalf or by the Canadian Pension Commission to ascertain the effects of privation, malnutrition, injury or ill treatment on such personnel even before complaint of illness, if any, so as to forestall the onslaught of many disabilities and to prevent much later suffering and expense.

He said: I might inform the house, Mr. Speaker, that I was prompted to put this motion on the order paper after consultation with many of my colleagues in the Conservative Party, particularly those in our veterans affairs caucus committee. I am aware there have been previous representations to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) on this subject, not only by veterans organizations and individual Members of Parliament who have had to deal with this type of problem through correspondence with many of their constituents.

One of the main reasons for putting this motion on the order paper arises from conversation with the former minister of veterans affairs, now the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who has had experience not only as a prisoner of war and pensioner but has some idea of what we are trying to do. I would like for a moment to refer to correspondence between the hon. member for Edmonton West and the present Minister of Veterans Affairs. I do not have to say much about the letter sent to the minister on July 9, 1968, by the hon. member for Edmonton West, but perhaps to lay groundwork for further discussion on this motion I will read portions of both letters. In part the hon. member for Edmonton West stated:

> On a number of occasions in the past I have spoken in the House and privately to your predecessor, about the advisability of now calling in all prisoners of war, save the so-called Hong Kong group for whom this has been done on a separate program, for a thorough physical examination. Many of these men are presently pensioners and their medical histories have been established by the Canadian Pension Commission. The great majority, however, have not been near doctors of the commission or of the departmental treatment services. So many of them should, for their own good and for the benefit of both the commission and your own officers. Long term effects of varying periods of privation and hardship (different than that of men who fought long hard battle campaigns) are at work and the results must be assessed.

He goes on to say:

> Much valuable time has been lost as it is approaching 25 years since release.

He is referring to the former prisoners of war:

> The fact that I was one of them and now have a limited pension entitlement should not blur my objectivity. I have discussed this at length with a number of ex-P.O.W. who generally share my views.

The minister replied that they were going to consider this matter. He said in part:

> As you know, the Hong Kong survey was conducted by the medical advisory branch of the Canadian Pension Commission. It is generally agreed that during the period of their internment the Hong Kong prisoners were subjected to slave labour, maltreatment and starvation, and suffered from diseases not commonly known in Canada. As a result, they now have disabilities, the extent of which were not fully realized until revealed by the review.

I would add at this time that the same conditions, although possibly to a lesser degree, apply to many of our veterans who were prisoners of war in Europe. The minister goes on to say:

• (5:20 p.m.)

> From time to time there have been suggestions made to the Pension Commission by veterans and their organizations that prisoners of war from the European theatre of war be surveyed in the same manner as were the Hong Kong veterans. While the European prisoners of war suffered great privations, the commission has been able to assess with a great degree of accuracy the resulting disabilities—

I doubt that, Mr. Speaker.

> —and accordingly it has been felt that there is not the same need for a review along the lines carried out in the case of the Hong Kong group.

With that statement I disagree. The minister goes on to say:

> —the suggestion contained in the resolution passed at the Dominion convention of the Royal Canadian Legion outlines a slightly different procedure than that so far advocated. Your request is that all prisoners of war, aside from the Hong Kong veterans, be now given thorough medical examinations. Since this would include non-pensioners as well as pensioners, it could best be done by our treatment services, and I will ask them to consider the suggestion with a view to ascertaining the extent of the problem.

I hope the minister has consulted the treatment services branch of his department and that the result will be favourable. I say this because in many cases we have had requests for assistance from some of these men who were prisoners of war and who have no documentation as to their disabilities. On their release many prisoners of war were very glad to get home quickly and as a result of their urgency were not properly documented by our medical services at the time of their discharge.

Many of these men after their release felt they could go back into the stream of life, to their former vocations or into some new trade, and make a living for themselves and their families. We have received many briefs pointing out that some of them were not able to do this because the disabilities they suffered while prisoners of war have since shown up. Now they have difficulty establishing that their condition is the result of disability suffered during service to their country.

The nation has a national obligation to all of these men whether we admit it or not. Most of them were volunteers at the time that their country needed them. They dropped whatever they were doing and volunteered for service. Regretfully, I say, possibly the medical examination given to some of these men when they were attested was not what we would have liked it to be, and now we get reports from the Canadian Pension Commission, when applicants apply for pensions, that the disabilies from which they are now suffering are of pre-enlistment origin. I do not see how the commission can make such a decision with the lack of evidence before it, since the medical examination at the time the men were attested was very scanty and in many cases did not detect any disability.

I would also remind hon. members that we who have the privilege of sitting in this house representing the people of Canada have an additional obligation to see to it that our veterans are not just remembered on Remembrance Day for their services to their country but that they receive a square deal 365 days every year. This does not apply solely to the veterans for whom this plea is made. It applies to the families of the veterans, to the families of enlisted men who were prisoners of war and who are now suffering disability as a result of service to their country. We have an obligation and a responsibility to do what we can to further the desire of our country to look after our veterans.

The branches within the department have two responsibilities. Granted, one is to watch the pursestrings to see that no one gets a pension to which he is not entitled. However, I would say there is not enough emphasis given to the benefit of the doubt clause, section 70, about which we have heard so much. The other responsibility is to see that the country's obligation to those who served in the armed services is carried out.

To bring this matter a little closer home to members of the house, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say I know of several veterans on the House of Commons protective staff who are suffering because of their service to their country. For example, just the other day one member of the protective staff had a severe stroke. He is a disabled veteran. In fact ever since leaving the armed services he has lived with one lung. He thought he could carry on. However, because of chance, and maybe because of the nature of his duties, he suffered a stroke. He has been in receipt of only a 20 per cent disability pension stemming from his service to his country. Now his wife and children are going to suffer the consequences if he passes on, as many people do after suffering such attacks.

There are also other people serving on the protective staff who have nervous disorders which may or may not be as a result of service to their country, but we have ample proof in briefs from various veterans organizations, complete with medical reports, to show that we in Canada and authorities in other countries are not yet aware of the results of spending a long time as a prisoner of war. I would like to read portions from some of these briefs but they contain some almost unpronounceable medical terms.

I am sure many hon. members will agree that the requests for assistance they receive from veterans fall into three categories. In this instance I am referring to late applicants who up until now have not made application to their country for a pension, those who are having difficulty in establishing that their present illnesses are attributable to war wounds.

This is very difficult in the case of what we call a good soldier. Most men who have served in the armed services know that a good soldier very seldom went on sick parade. If he could possibly walk he did not go on sick parade. I am not trying to belittle those who did get pensions, those who had complete medical reports, and I am not saying it was very easy for them to get pensions. But many men, no matter how ill they were, did not report to the M.O. unless they were carried there and forced to go to hospital. These are the people who are now having difficulty in establishing their right to the pensions that the people of this country promised them if they ever needed them. The people I am talking about are very proud. I know most hon. members must have a number of letters on their files from such persons.

The second category of request deals with the conditions of service under which men served, and the third relates to P.O.W.'s.

All of us know that when men were P.O.W.'s, particularly in the European theatre and I assume the same applies to other theatres, no medical records were kept of their disabilities and other troubles during the time they were P.O.W.'s. With respect to the Dieppe veterans I understand this covered a period of three and a half years. At the moment I am not referring to the Hong Kong prisoners who were looked after, perhaps not as well as we would have liked but I think they are quite satisfied with the treatment given them by the country they served. But there are a great number who were prisoners of war in the European theatre and who should get the assistance that the country promised them.

I could refer to many articles on this subject that have appeared in the press. I have a large file on them but I do not want to take up the time of the house quoting them because I am sure someone on the government side will want time to reply.

I see the chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs in the house. He may have something to say about this, and I know there are some members on this side of the house who want to say a few words. Let me refer to some of these articles which I have mentioned.

The first is from the Sault Ste. Marie Star dated May 7, 1966. The heading of the article is "Reneging on High Promises". Let me just read the concluding paragraph:

> It is hard to believe that, even twenty odd years after that period when nothing was too good for "the boys", Canadians in general can be complacent about this sort of reneging when it is brought to their attention.

Another article is taken from the Oshawa Times dated January 13, 1966. Again, I will just read the last paragraph:

> None in Canada would quibble on the fact those veterans who remain deserve a new pension deal. As the Charlottetown Guardian says, the surprising thing is that they have been made to wait so long for it.

There are many articles which support this desire of the people of Canada. If those members of this house who are interested in the reason this motion was originally placed on the order paper want more support, let me refer to a brief presented to the committee on veterans' affairs by the national Dieppe Prisoner of War Association. I do not intend to read the brief, but the opening part reads:

> The Dieppe raid, one of the most scaring engagements of the second world war took place on August 9, 1942.
> Of the 5,000 Canadian troops who set out for the coastal town in Normandy only 2,000, mostly men who did not land, came back.
> Records show that 1,946 men, most of them seriously wounded, were taken prisoner. It is also recorded that 72 of these men died in captivity.
> The period of imprisonment for those who survived was approximately three years.
> In 1953 the federal government established a war claims commission and named Mr. Justice Thane A. Campbell as chief commissioner.
> In his report, Mr. Justice Campbell found that general maltreatment did exist in prisoner of war camps in Europe where Canadian troops were imprisoned and that extraordinary brutal treatment had been proved in many cases. The finding of the war claims commission resulted in granting almost equal awards to both Hong Kong and Dieppe prisoners of war.
> The effects of imprisonment have for some years been a matter of grave concern to those Dieppe prisoners of war who still survive, and it is their hope that the government will instruct the standing committee on veterans' affairs to conduct an inquiry into their plight which is in so many ways identical to that of the Hong Kong prisoners.
> Among these similarities are the prevalence of peptic ulcers, lumbar spine disabilities, nervous disorders and other problems commonly attributed to avitaminosis.

I am sure members are aware that a number of the staff of this house are among those referred to in this brief, which then states:

> The Standing Committee on Veterans' Affairs have for some time known that the circumstances of the Dieppe prisoners of war should be reviewed along the lines of what has been done in the case of the Hong Kong prisoners.

That brief contains a number of recommendations, and sets out certain war conditions under which these prisoners of war existed. There are medical reports which indicate the actual disorders we can now look for in these former prisoners of war. All of us who know certain individuals who were prisoners of war can see signs of these disorders.

In order that this country live up to its responsibilities, I suggest that the minister or the chairman of the Committee on Veterans Affairs give serious consideration to this motion. I am sure the country would not begrudge the cost of this proposal. I understand that the amount of money given to all disabled veterans does not amount to any more than hon. members vote each year to the C.B.C. Were it not for the type of people who were prisoners of war there might not have been a Canada today, and perhaps there would not have been a C.B.C. There are some who might suggest we should have lost the war when we take this fact into consideration.

I am not aware of the number of veterans who might be called in under this survey. Perhaps some veteran or another member could provide that information. In any event, I do not think the number could be very great. It is the responsibility of all of us who have been elected by the people of Canada to see that this obligation is fulfilled.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) for bringing this matter to the attention of parliament, and for this excellent way of focusing attention on the needs, if needs exist, for the treatment of our prisoners of war. They certainly do merit special consideration.

Prisoners of War Medical Examinations

With reference to the Hong Kong prisoners of war referred to by the hon. member, the parliamentary Committee on Veterans Affairs recommended that this group receive special consideration. No group of Canadian prisoners of war have ever suffered from starvation, slave labour, general maltreatment, and diseases not commonly known in Canada as did the Hong Kong prisoners of war during the period of their internment. Some of the diseases and disabilities which the Hong Kong prisoners incurred were not fully understood until the review by Dr. Richardson was completed. In fact, this review revealed that these men suffered much more severe disabilities as a result of avitaminosis than previously assessed. Consequently, pension increases, in many cases quite substantial, were granted.

While it is true that prisoners held in the European theatre suffered many privations it has, nevertheless, been possible to assess with a great degree of accuracy the extent of the disabilities resulting from such privations. Furthermore, the study of the plight of the Hong Kong veterans has given the commission a much sounder basis from which to work in dealing with the assessment of disabilities incurred by all prisoners of war. Of course, it goes without saying that if conditions common among Hong Kong prisoners become manifest in other prisoners, the same consideration will be given. In the meantime, prisoners of war of whatever theatre are free to request re-examination at any time. If such an examination reveals that pensionable conditions have become worse then, of course, the pension would be increased.

Representations, on behalf of Canadians who were prisoners of war in Europe, and particularly those taken prisoner at Dieppe in August of 1942, have been under study intermittently for years. The evidence examined to date does not indicate residual disability comparable in kind or degree to that experienced by prisoners in Japanese hands. Tentative plans have been drafted for a more comprehensive study beginning with a review of the records and files of ex-European prisoners.

Dr. H. A. Richardson, the deputy chief medical advisor, has made a study in depth of the points raised in the brief alluded to by the hon. member. Those points have been very carefully considered by the medical advisory branch in recent years.

The evidence examined to date does not indicate residual disability in ex-European prisoners of war comparable in kind or degree to that experienced by prisoners in Japanese hands. In other words, the prisoners in Japanese hands suffered privations which resulted in residual disabilities, such as avitaminosis, which are not apparent in any other group of ex-prisoners of war, and there is no evidence to establish that the European prisoners of war merit the type of survey which was conducted of the prisoners of war held by the Japanese. It is obvious that since these prisoners of war held by the Japanese obtained certain additional benefits as a result of the survey undertaken some years ago, the European prisoners of war are demanding the same type of survey in the hope that they will receive the same benefits. As Dr. Richardson points out, there is no evidence to indicate that they would be in any way entitled to the benefits granted the prisoners of war held by the Japanese or that such consideration is merited.

As everyone knows, prisoners of war have over the years been given special consideration by both the Canadian Pension Commission and the treatment services of the Department of Veterans Affairs. These ex-prisoners of war are still free to report for medical examination for any condition, at any time. At the moment, the medical advisory branch of the Canadian Pension Commission has drafted plans for a more comprehensive study of the files of all ex-European prisoners of war, and this will start with a review of a random sample of records.

Dr. Richardson has suggested that the possibility of having a survey conducted by persons not connected with the Canadian Pension Commission or the Department of Veterans Affairs might be considered. While the results of any such survey, with particular reference to pension payments and treatment, would have to be considered by both the treatment services and the medical advisory branch, such a study would nevertheless have the advantages of being undertaken by an independent group.

Our medical advisory branch has already concluded, from the information they have obtained to date, that the ex-European prisoners of war suffered no special disabilities other than those suffered by the regular serviceman who was exposed to normal combat conditions. Under the circumstances, it might be thought by this group that any report prepared by our own medical advisers might be prejudiced. In any case, such an independent survey would either support the opinion of our medical advisory branch or indicate that it is not necessarily correct. Further action, if it is found to be necessary, will without question be taken.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, there are others who wish to take part in this very important debate. At one time I thought the hon. member who introduced the motion was going to talk it out himself. I would not wish to deprive other members, who are very anxious to participate in the debate, of the opportunity to do so. Again, I say that I am very pleased the hon. member saw fit to bring this motion to the attention of the house.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During the first half hour this motion was before the house, a motion dealing with the veterans of Canada who gave so much in blood, sweat and sacrifice to their country, not one member of the cabinet nor parliamentary secretary was in the house. No member of the cabinet has since entered the chamber. At 5.30 one parliamentary secretary only, the parliamentary secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), sat down, took no interest in the debate, and started reading something. This simply exemplifies the lack of interest of the Liberal government and Liberal members in the affairs of our veterans who gave their lives and blood for this country.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. That is not a point of order.

[English]

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I appeal to the Chair to recognize a member from this party because of the importance of the motion that is before us. A distinguished member of the Progressive Conservative party introduced the motion and spoke to it. A Liberal member has spoken to it, and our party would like the opportunity of speaking to it, if this is at all possible.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I raise one small point here? Unless my memory is wrong, I am the only prisoner of war who is a member of this house. This motion deals with a subject which I have tried many times to put forward. There are a number of people who have done a great deal of work in this regard, and I should like to refer to them. If the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) can guarantee that he will leave me five minutes, that is fine; otherwise I shall ask that I be heard first.

Mr. Saltsman: I would be very pleased to keep my intervention down to about seven minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is fine.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has placed a very important matter before the house and I congratulate him for so doing. We, in this party, wholeheartedly support the purpose and intent of his motion. Thinking back to my own war years and those following the war, I can recall how grateful the Canadian public seemed to be to those men and women who offered their services at a time when the country needed them most. I can also remember how full of goodwill and resolve were the Canadian public at that time to see that nothing but the best was done for those who returned, not so much because they deserved it in their own right but as recognition of what had been done.

We are really recognizing what our veterans did. It is like giving a medal to somebody. It is a form of recognition of those men and women who did not come back. This is one of the ways in which we can remember them. All of us can remember standing for two minutes of silence in the cold weather of Remembrance Day and thinking that if there was something we could do to honour the memory of those who did not return, we would do it. This is one such opportunity that I think the house should take to ensure that we honour the memory of those who did not return. We can do it by accepting this private member's motion.

I think it would establish a very important principle if, instead of waiting for a veteran to be so incapacitated that he had to come pleading to the Department of Veterans Affairs for assistance, we would help him before he had to crawl to us. I think this is important. If somebody comes pleading to you and you help him, it is not quite the same thing; you are in effect giving him charity. When you say, "We remember what you have done and will do what we can on your behalf," the principle is entirely different.

As has been pointed out, many veterans do not ask for help at the time an injury occurs to them. As a result 20 or 30 years later they find they have been damaged as a result of their war activities, but have no proof that the damage resulted from war service. This is very important, particularly if, as I think is the case, the Department of Veterans Affairs is wrong in its interpretation of the benefit of the doubt clause. We all know that there is very little benefit of the doubt given to our veterans. Those of us who have had to deal with veterans' problems know that a man must have almost incontestable proof his injury resulted from war service before he is eligible for assistance. The motion before us is one way of assisting the veteran in this regard, and it would be a more dignified way than we have adopted in the past. However, by accepting the principle of the motion we open the door to other things. Perhaps the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) will excuse me if I add some of my own ideas to the motion and say that we should go beyond what he requests. What we should be doing at this time is to provide a guaranteed annual income for all veterans. We are going to have a guaranteed annual income for the citizens of this country. I am certain of that, although it might be five or eight years from now. It would be a tragic thing if when that guaranteed annual income were established it was too late for those who fought in the wars. Let us have it now, and let us start with our veterans. Let us get rid of this benefit of doubt situation. Let us go beyond the prisoners of war, although I agree that the principle of starting there is a good and valid one. Let us recognize the great work that the sons and daughters of Canada did on behalf of their country and be generous, humane and grateful for their efforts.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this notice of motion deals with a more limited number of men than might be seen at first blush. The purpose of it is to bring within medical survey those members of Canada's active armed forces during world war II who were prisoners of war and who have not, for one reason or another, been medically examined in the last five years by either the Canadian Pension Commission or someone on its behalf or by the treatment services of the Department of Veterans Affairs. The purpose of this motion is not to establish pensions for prisoners of war, but rather to do for some of them what was so needed for the Hong Kong prisoners of war. I will be the first one to admit that the degree of privation and malnutrition of European prisoners of war, except perhaps in the odd case, was not nearly as severe as it was in the case of the Hong Kong prisoners of war. It took a lot of pushing and prodding by members of the opposition and by some members on the government side some three or four years ago to have all of those members of the Hong Kong force who could be located examined.

There is a rather ironic incident that was told to me by a member of that force who comes from Saskatchewan. I met him during the last election campaign. He said he was called in for an examination and he went to Regina to be examined to see whether he had suffered any disability as a result of having been in Japanese hands. Whom did he meet but a Japanese doctor who was acting on behalf of the Pension Commission. Sometimes some people just do not use their heads. It put both men in a very difficult position. I am sure that the doctor himself would not have willingly accepted that task if he had known what was going to happen. What this Hong Kong veteran said to me afterwards was not printable and certainly should not be repeated. He did not think much of the type of service that had been given to him.

The Dieppe Prisoner of War Association was organized by a former Royal Canadian Engineer, one of the real sluggers. This chap by the name of Sandy Shusterman is now a taxi driver in Toronto, and an indefatigable man working in the interest of prisoners of war. The Dieppe Prisoner of War Association has tried to encourage prisoners of war to get together to make representations. They should emulate New Zealand Veterans. I have never seen such a strong organization of veterans as the New Zealand Prisoner of War Association who have been very active in keeping the interests of their members before the governing authorities.

The purpose of this motion—and both the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. MacIntosh) and I collaborated very closely on this—is to get those men who have not been seen by the Pension Commission or the treatment services within the last years, examined and documented. For one thing preventive medicine is better than curative medicine at any time and, as my colleague said, the records of illnesses during those two or three years that the men were imprisoned were not very complete.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there have been occasions when I have had to make a personal statement in support of one of those people who were in my camp attesting to the fact that this man had suffered from a cold and from certain privations because 10 or 15 years after liberation he developed tuberculosis or some other ailment of which there was no record. Because the man happened to have an old bronchial scar which showed up in his discharge records, it was said that the scar had been incurred prior to service. Every kind of excuse was given to refuse a legitimate claim to benefits while the man was undergoing treatment to cure tuberculosis. There were other ailments, such as stomach illnesses. I know of several men who are suffering from arthritis and nerves. There were also cases of alcoholism. Unfortunately, I know of several chaps in the same camp as I was who have undergone serious bouts of nervous depression. For some of them it has been too much, and they have done away with themselves.

If I had continued as minister, it would have been my aim to bring all of those men in and have them examined long before now. Such an examination would give us the records of what privation and malnutrition will do. I also suggest to the members of this house that in the long run it would save us some money because some of these men are going to develop serious illnesses which may be attributable to pensionable disabilities. Their lives will be shortened. We may be faced with heavy expense in treating a disease or some disability that is pensionable, and there may be a great argument about it. They become very hard cases. We should catch these conditions early and deal with them. Not only are we salvaging a veteran and adding some years to his life, but we will be learning more about the effects of the type of life veterans had to endure for some period of time. As I said, there are not that many men. Among the Dieppe prisoners, there were over 2,000. A number of them, like myself, have been through the hands of the Pension Commission for one reason or another. Some of them are now dead. On the army side there are not that many who have not been checked out. I would say today that the men we are really looking for are chaps from the air force because over the period from September 1939 to May 1945 many of the prisoners of war were airmen who had been shot down. The certainly outnumber the army prisoners of war.

I do not say that a prisoner of war has a greater claim to consideration from the point of view of sentiment or of the duty that he performed. He was a serviceman like many others, but he did not have to go through battle, as many did. So far as I was concerned, I was in one battle and that was it.

I do not say my treatment was worse than that of many other servicemen. We did tend to lose an awful lot of weight, and I did not weigh nearly as much when I was captured as I do now. But all my friends in my old regiment say the same thing, there is something in each case which goes back to those days when we were incarcerated in cold buildings during the winter and given poor food to eat. Then, there were the mental pressures, and so on. So, I make a plea to the government to take up this question. There are not many men involved, relatively, and I do not believe the expense would be great. It would take some time to organize, but I think something should be done. I will put the question—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired I do now leave the chair to resume the same at 8.00 p.m.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen (for the Minister of Justice) for the third reading of Bill S-3, to amend the Canada Evidence Act.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks to make prior to consideration of the actual contents of Bill S-3. The first matter I want to raise may result from inadvertence, and I want to give the government house leader every break that is possible. Both of us are members of the committee on procedure and realize that the purpose of the change in the rules governing the legislative process was to shift the emphasis in the debate to the report stage and the third reading. Over the dinner hour, I searched diligently but could find no record of the transcript of our discussions in the justice committee relating to this bill. How on earth can any reasonable person expect the members of this house to be able to discuss this or any other bill under these circumstances, having changed our procedure to put greater emphasis on the value of committee hearings?

As has been said by members on both sides of the house, hon. members of the house were to be given the opportunity to delve into the details of the bill and put their comments on record at committee hearings. In this way, they would not waste the time of the house asking questions. There are some sections of this bill that bother me.

I also went through the records of the Senate, with no cumulative index to assist me, to see when the legislation was handled there. What one has to do, Mr. Speaker, is to take the Hansard report of the other place and go through it section by section to see when the bill went through second reading, when it went through committee, and when it was read a third time. Third reading in the Senate occupied four lines. In other words, the record of the other place, as far as I and other hon. members are concerned, revealed precisely nil by way of any explanation of this bill, and was of no assistance.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Abolish it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would not agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) there, because I have gone back to the reports of a committee of the other place that has examined the bill with care and the evidence and questioning have been of great help. But in this particular case, I cannot rely on what happened in the other place.

I hope that the government house leader, in calling this bill, was not aware that our own reports were not ready. In such circumstances, how are we going to place proper emphasis on the report stage and on third reading? We have downgraded second reading stage by having fewer speakers and by agreeing that bills go to committee for examination so that hon. members are equipped to deal with them there. Yet, here we have this particular item called in the house and we have nothing to assist us. Either we have to stop this nonsense here and now, or what we hoped and I think quite rightly, was to be a change for the better in our procedure will go for naught.

It must be remembered that there are certain housekeeping requirements between hearing evidence in committees and the appearance of the reports which are made available to hon. members. I may be wrong about this; I thought my search during the dinner hour was a rather thorough one. I know that my secretary is a fairly faithful and competent woman who keeps my filings up to date. But as I say, I looked and looked and I could find no reports. If hon. members correct me and tell me that the reports regarding the study of Bill S-3 are in their hands, then I will apologize. Until that is established I will say that the calling of this bill at this time was an imposition on the house. It was quite unfair. I hope we are not left in the position, with other bills to come before us, of not having in our possession copies of the committee hearings. I know certain committees work faster than others, and I have no cause for complaint about the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, of which I am a member. Everything works fairly well in that committee; bills are sent to us to be studied and transcripts of proceedings are readily forthcoming.

I wish to emphasize that unless steps can be taken to schedule properly the report stages and third reading stages of bills before this house, we ought to forget the new rules and revert back to the old rules. We ought to have committee transcripts in our hands at report and third reading stages.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am not saying the old rules necessarily were any better than our present rules; but please do not say you are going to make a change, claim advantages for that change, and then not deliver the goods.

Mr. Woolliams: They cannot deliver the evidence given before the committee.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): My next point is made with all due apology and is not meant personally against any parliamentary secretary. I support my colleague for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and other hon. members of the house—after all, we have reached a stage of particular importance with regard to this bill—who asked for the responsible minister to be here to answer to the house. The parliamentary secretary may be able to give us certain information, but under our system parliamentary secretaries have no responsibility. For this house to question the parliamentary secretary and hold him responsible for answers touching questions of policy is quite improper under the rules unless the roles of parliamentary secretaries are changed. Personally, I should like parliamentary secretaries to be given greater responsibilities. Their positions ought to have some tangible meaning. But that has not been done. All power is kept in tight, grubby little hands.

Mr. Brewin: Grubby or crummy.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is only natural for members like the hon. member for Calgary North to be concerned about the implications of clause 2 of the bill, which amends section 9 of the Canada Evidence Act. If ever a clause sought to load the dice in favour of the prosecution, it is clause 2. I see the parliamentary secretary shaking his head. I hope he has had even one tenth the experience in court of the hon. member for Calgary North, to say nothing of the right hon. gentleman for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). This clause purports to say that when a witness is to be declared hostile a statement merely has to be made to the court to the effect that there is a difference between the evidence being given at the moment and evidence that was given elsewhere. The prior evidence must be reduced to writing. The court then is invited to declare the witness hostile. I say that is wrong. There must be proof of the facts alleged. A witness ought not to be declared hostile merely on the word of one man. After all, the entire matter ought to be looked into by way of examination and cross examination.

The hon. parliamentary secretary may not have the experience that trial lawyers have had with preliminary hearings, après enquête. It is not necessary for defence counsel to call witnesses. Defence counsel has the right to examine the Crown's witnesses to see what kind of case the Crown has. There is a stage in justice where a preliminary hearing is held in order for the court to determine if there is sufficient evidence to substantiate the charge. That is, if there is a prima facie case. The accused or his counsel have the inalienable right to examine every iota of evidence put forward by the Crown to determine whether there is evidence to substantiate the laying of the charge. Of course, the Crown calls its witnesses, not necessarily all of them, to substantiate the validity of the charge, in the judgment of the Crown. That evidence is recorded. Later, if there is the slightest difference between the evidence given at the preliminary inquiry and the evidence given at trial, the Crown prosecutor does not even have to prove the preliminary hearing transcript, because the wording of clause 2(2) is:

> Where the party producing a witness alleges that the witness made at other times a statement in writing, or reduced to writing, inconsistent with his present testimony, the court may, without proof that the witness is adverse—

And so on and so forth. That is how a witness may be declared adverse and to my way of thinking this clause attempts to load the dice in favour of the Crown.

The minister ought to be here, Mr. Speaker. What were the government's reasons for bringing in such amendments? It must have had its reasons, although we do not know them not being possessed of the testimony given before the committee. We do not know what that testimony was and yet we are asked to pass this bill. The basic reason the hon. member who sought to adjourn debate on this bill this afternoon had for bringing forward his motion was that there is no transcript before the house of the evidence taken in committee. We therefore wonder why the government has advanced these amendments to this section.

I find myself very embarrassed, Mr. Speaker, at third reading to be asking such questions. After all, I am not a member of the committee that studied the bill, and that is the difficulty. Reasons for advancing these amendments may have been furnished before that committee but we do not know of those reasons because we have no transcript. The burden is on the government proposing the change to substantiate the need for this change in the law. The clause appears to me, and I am a lawyer, to be loading the dice in favour of the prosecution. That is all I will say on the point. But before I consent to passage of this bill, there must be a satisfactory explanation of the government's thinking. That explanation might be made available either through adjourning the debate so that we can obtain the transcript of evidence taken before the committee or by calling the minister—or at least having him present in the house—and allowing him to explain the government's thinking on the matter.

My second point deals with clause 3 which purports to amend section 29 of the act and the definition of a financial institution. Again I wish we had the transcript of the committee proceedings. Does a financial institution as defined under section 29(3)—I am referring to the bottom of page 3 of the bill—include treasury branches in the province of Alberta? There is a recent case, Green versus the Treasury Branch of Alberta and other parties, which alleges as a defence that the Treasury Branch is not a financial institution within the meaning of the act. This case went to the Supreme Court of Canada. Bill S-3, at the top of page 4 reads in part:

—any institution incorporated in Canada—

It is my information the Treasury Branches of the Province of Alberta are merely emanations of the treasury of the provincial government. I have never known the treasury of a province to be deemed to be incorporated. Therefore, by omission, do we perhaps have here a form of financial institution? These branches do a tremendous business in the Province of Alberta. One can consider the volume of business being transacted by the Caisse Populaire in the Province of Quebec which is comparable to the Treasury Branches in Alberta.

What did you say?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member if he is aware that the amendment has been requested by the credit unions of the province of Alberta?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): By the caisses populaires of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Cantin: By the credit unions.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Very well, but I am referring to the Treasury Branches—

[English]

Treasury branches are financial institutions carrying on the business of banking, and yet they have not been incorporated. Undoubtedly there was legislation in the past authorizing the government of the Province of Alberta to create branches of the provincial treasury. I would like to know from the minister—

An hon. Member: He isn't here.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —or perhaps then the parliamentary secretary, as to whether the question of the provincial treasury branches of the Province of Alberta has been considered in the light of this amendment. If not, then somebody had better do their homework. The debate should be adjourned and the necessary amendment moved to cover the point.

I have approached this bill as a Member of Parliament as well as a member of the legal profession. I have been unable to obtain any information regarding this act. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I have belaboured the point but I want to emphasize it and over-emphasize it, not only for this act but for other acts. My point is that unless and until the committee system is working sufficiently well to have the transcript of evidence before the members of this house no bill can be considered. I stress this point to the government house leader, and ask him to clarify this point. I am certain the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome), who is a lawyer as well as a member of the Procedure Committee will agree with me on this point. We agreed everything in our committee discussions would be transcribed at a later stage and everyone would be better informed. However, on this bill, Mr. Speaker, we are less informed. On that point, I would like to hear from both the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and the government house leader.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I do not intend to speak very long on this bill. I am a member of the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee and I share the feelings of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) when he complained of the absence of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). I also agree with his complaint that we are asked to deal with the bill at this stage without having available to us the transcript of evidence given before the committee.

Having said that, I would now like to say that I see nothing difficult, sinister or improper regarding that section of the bill. It is a perfectly reasonable section and speaks for itself. It states, "the court may" not that "the prosecution may".

Mr. Lewis: Without proof.

Mr. Brewin: Without proof, certainly. Without proof of what? Without proof that the witness is adverse, a procedure which every practising lawyer realizes is a stupid procedure,—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brewin: —whereby a witness must be provoked into some exhibition of irritation before being declared adverse. If this is not done the witness cannot be cross-examined although he has been tampered with, has given a written statement, and is now giving a totally inconsistent statement. This amendment makes more sense than the law as it now is, and I do not know why so much time is being wasted on it.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I rise to deal with some of the observations made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I can assure him that his researches are correct. I am advised that the transcript of evidence is not now available of the proceedings in that committee. I am also advised that the committee on Tuesday, January 28 dealt with the bill for approximately one hour. No amendments were moved to change any provisions of this bill and more particularly with regard to the section which has so much concerned the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and the hon. member for Edmonton West. I can assure them there was no attempt to take advantage of hon. members. The assumption was made, because of the apparent non-controversial aspect of the bill, that we could proceed.

When I stated to the house on Friday that it would be called as the third item of business for today I understood there would be no objection to proceeding with it because there appeared to be general agreement with the terms of the bill. I do not think I have to apologize to the hon. member for Calgary North because he is a member of the committee and knows his rights. He could have exercised them in the Committee.

This bill has been before parliament for many months. It started, Mr. Speaker, in the other place. It was on the record of, and considered by, the other place for some time. It was then referred to this house. It was not a bill which was hidden behind a money resolution. These terms have been available to the house for a very long time, and to the hon. member in particular. The bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, where it was considered and dealt with quite expeditiously. I think we had reason to believe there was no particular contest with respect to its terms. It was because of the understanding there was no contest that it was called forward to be dealt with by the house.

An hon. Member: It is never good to make assumptions.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I realize it is never good to make assumptions about the hon. members opposite. I must say I am concerned about the latent interest in this bill, but I think it can be reasonably said there was plenty of opportunity for investigation. No amendments were put forward at the committee stage. No hon. members, such as the hon. member for Calgary North, put forward any amendments. In my opinion it was not unfair to make the announcement last Friday. If any hon. member felt hard done by, then he should have spoken to me in that regard. My understanding was that the evidence would be available, but as I understand it there are different timetables for preparing the evidence and I quite appreciate the reasons for that.

On the whole I feel that no injustice has been done by calling the bill at this time. It seems to me that if any hon. member felt hard done by, then I might have heard about it before the middle of this afternoon and been told that members felt the bill should not be brought forward.

The only other comment of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) that I wish to deal with is his objection to the fact that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cantin) has charge of the conduct of this bill. I might recall to hon. members the fact that my colleague, the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, has had the conduct of a great many pieces of legislation in this house, for which the hon. member for Edmonton West had the responsibility of speaking for this party on that side of the house.

With respect to the complaint of the hon. member for Edmonton West that the parliamentary secretary has the conduct of this bill—and I might read into his reference "a mere parliamentary secretary," and I say this as one who for five years was a parliamentary secretary—I say that the parliamentary secretary is fully capable of taking the bill through all its stages in this house, in committee, and everywhere.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I therefore say, Mr. Speaker, that there is no precedent for a valid objection to the conduct of legislation through this house by one of my colleagues who is a parliamentary secretary, and in particular by my colleague, the parliamentary secretary from Quebec. I say there is no authority for that proposition whatsoever, and it is entirely within the proprieties when a qualified colleague of mine, such as the parliamentary secretary from Quebec, has the conduct of this particular bill.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that I am not in a position to debate the merits of the bill. This has not been my responsibility. But I notice that the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), who has had a great deal of trial experience, who was a member of the standing committee and who participated in its deliberations, takes a different legal point of view from that of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). Again, I assert that there was no surprise and no unfairness in the calling of this bill at this time. If there was a feeling of surprise, if hon. members really after a period of months were not prepared to go ahead with the bill, then I submit that I should have been told about it prior to the calling of the bill this afternoon. On the whole, it seems to me it would be reasonable to go ahead and give the bill third reading.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise somewhat hesitantly to speak on a bill dealing mainly with matters which might well concern members of the legal profession. I admit quite openly that I am not a member of the legal profession but I have always believed that justice must be fair, must be just, and also must appear to be just and fair. On reading over clause 2 at the top of page 4 of this bill, I can hardly assume that the measure appears to be fair.

I have listened to the arrogant member for Rosedale—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner: —the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald), if hon. members prefer that, tell us that nobody suggested there was any opposition to the bill and therefore we had better rush it through parliament in a hurry. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask hon. members opposite what would have happened if we had rushed through the estate taxes bill in a hurry, on October 22 last? What would have been the effect on the public today?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: That was not done. In the interim, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) heard an outcry and some changes have been made in that bill. I do not believe enough changes were made, but this was one good effect from having some feedback, some delay, some criticism and some thinking about the bill.

I was not a member of the standing committee that examined this bill, but I was a member of the rules committee.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Until you were replaced.

Mr. Horner: Until I was replaced, as the hon. member for Rosedale says. I had an opportunity to travel overseas on a NATO committee at a time when I thought the government was reversing its stand on NATO, and I thought I should concern myself more with that problem.

Mr. Nesbitt: Like the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans).

Mr. Horner: I reluctantly gave up my position on the rules committee but before doing so I firmly understood that no bills, after examination in committee, would be debated on third reading until the committee proceedings had been printed and all hon. members of the house had an opportunity to examine them.

A parliamentary secretary on the government benches may well say, "Well, there was no opposition. We had no trouble about this." I reply that all 264 members of the House of Commons are of equal importance. My constituency, the constituency of Crowfoot, is of equal importance to that of any other constituency in the country. Therefore, I should be given the opportunity, the right to examine the evidence to ascertain whether or not this bill purports to be fair, purports to be just, and in my mind and in my constituents' minds contributes to the just society in which I and my constituents might well believe.

From my brief skimming through the bill, and in particular through clause 2, and without having the committee evidence before me, I cannot honestly say that a witness should be re-examined without proof in any way, shape or form that he is an adverse witness.

Again, with respect to the clause dealing with banking institutions I do not believe it should exclude provincial treasury branches. When the question of banking institutions came up in the debate on the bill amending the Farm Credit Corporations Act I spoke of the part the treasury branches played in the province of Alberta in creating competition. We in this party believe competition is the guide to efficiency, is the key to efficiency in this society of ours which is founded on free enterprise. But hon. members to the right of you, Mr. Speaker, believe that if they can hide the evidence—and this is the only conclusion I can draw—then ignorance is bliss; all shall pass and everybody will forgive because in the name of the just society everything is right and nothing is wrong.

I don't believe that because I believe that justice must appear to be just. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) says, in effect, that in the past the way in which this matter has been handled in the courts has been ridiculous and therefore we might as well pass this amending legislation. A number of members in the Hitler administration, Gerhardt included, believed, "We must push on; we must reach decisions in a hurry." The suggestion is that counsel must be given the right to cross-examine their own witnesses if they find the witnesses are adverse, but without proof that they are adverse. I cannot for the life of me understand why they do not know that beforehand. They call them as witnesses in the first instance.

The minister who has just spoken was the chairman of the rules committee. He reported to the house on the rules. He cannot honestly say—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, and just as a matter of accuracy the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) was the chairman of the rules committee.

Mr. Horner: I accept the point of privilege. The minister wasn't the chairman of the rules committee.

Mr. Nesbitt: The Gray Eminence.

Mr. Horner: He was the gray eminence of the chairman of the rules committee. He dominated the rules committee—

Mr. Woolliams: As Mr. Goebbels.

Mr. Horner: He brought the wishes of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) into the rules committee. One of the clear, explicit understandings of the rules committee was that after second reading a bill should be passed to a committee. Then the committee would examine it extensively, and after extensive examination the bill should come back into the house for third reading. At that time the committee evidence would be printed and each member of the house would have the evidence of the committee available to him.

This has not been done in respect of this bill, and I issue a warning to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to every member opposite in the government that this should not happen again with regard to other committee proceedings. This is not fair or just. It is no more fair or just than this bill appears to be when it refers to witnesses being declared hostile without proof. It is not fair or just when we consider that the treasury branches, which have played such an important part in accepting deposits and lending money to the public, will be excluded under section 3 of the bill.

I was amazed when the minister said that he was not aware of any conflict or opposition to the bill. He as much as said that had he known he would never have brought it forward, but, rather, would have waited until the evidence was printed.

Mr. Harkness: Just another "booboo" on the part of the government.

Mr. Horner: That is exactly correct. The minister stated he did not know there was opposition or that anybody would rise and debate the issue. He thought the government would receive carte blanche from this house. I suggest to him now that if he had known there was going to be opposition then, by his own statement, he would have held the bill until the evidence of the committee had been printed. Surely, then he should have accepted the motion this afternoon to adjourn the debate. This would have given hon. members an opportunity to read that evidence. The hon. minister, in my opinion, admitted that had he known of this opposition he would have held up third reading until members had sufficient time to examine the evidence to ascertain whether or not justice would be done or would appear to be done as a result of the application of this change.

The only conclusion I can draw is that the government is attempting to hide evidence and control or manipulate the House of Commons. After all, this is a debating forum in a free country. As we regulate ourselves more and more, thus allowing ourselves to be manipulated, we find our freedoms slowly slipping away. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the house leader that Canadians as a whole are becoming aware of this erosion of our freedoms. This proposed change is one more bit of evidence that, in this way, our freedoms are being eroded and will continue to erode if this government is allowed to pursue this course. Certainly, we in the opposition and those to my left must be alerted to stand on guard against this continuous erosion. This is a planned attack under the guise of a just society. This bill is a perfect example of what I am suggesting. Under the guise of a just society, the government is attempting to erode the freedoms of Canadians as we now know them.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak on a question of privilege which arises after listening to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) and others. Under the new rules, this house is being asked to give third reading to certain legislation before the evidence of the standing committee has been printed. We have heard the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the hon. member for Crowfoot and the President of the Privy Council state that the evidence of the proceedings in this committee have not been printed. We must assume that the Liberal party and the government do not care whether their members know what this legislation is all about because they are going to vote for it anyhow.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a guestion of privilege I would appreciate his coming to it quickly.

Mr. Woolliams: I can come to it very quickly, Mr. Speaker. I can come to it so quickly it will make your head swim.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, the members over there have shouted and made their jokes—

An hon. Member: Have some respect for the Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: I would say this to him. The giving of a bill third reading without having the evidence of the standing committee printed so that hon. members can examine it and find out what the bill contains involves a privilege that affects the whole house. Surely, the new rules do not intend that a bill should be put through a committee, but that it doesn't matter what the committee says and that the evidence need not be printed until months later at which time somebody on examination might find out that someone made a mistake. If that is not a question of privilege in this house there never has been one.

I am shocked to think that we can go through third reading stage under the new rules, which certain people embraced, without the evidence of the committee being printed so that hon. members, who because of other duties were not able to attend the committee meetings, could find out what the bill says and means. If that is not a point of privilege, I do not know what is. I would ask the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker to find where in the new rules it says committee reports should be printed before third reading is given in this House of Commons. What kind of a place is this when evidence—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Woolliams: You know why they say "order, order"? It is because they are a group of sheep in a sheep pasture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams: I don't intend to sit down, sir, because you state "order", because I am not going to until—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will resume his seat.

Mr. Woolliams: —you rule whether or not this is a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Let me make this observation. In my view the question of privilege constitutes more of a grievance about our proceedings. In this form it contains a recommendation that in future the evidence of a committee should be before the house prior to third reading. As I said, I do not think it constitutes a question of privilege but it might be taken by the house as a recommendation by an hon. member that in future this sort of situation might be avoided.

Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is as follows, that Bill S-3, to amend the Canada Evidence Act, be now read a third time.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, in spite of the fact that you are standing—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams: You are standing and I am standing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat.

Mr. Woolliams: As far as I am concerned if this house can consider the bill without the evidence—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: Before you put the question, Mr. Speaker, I just want to say this: what a phoney place this is—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Woolliams: —when we can pass a bill without the benefit of the study made by the committee, when members can stand in their places and vote without receiving the evidence from the committee. What a phoney vote this is going to be.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before putting the motion to hon. members I might say that the Clerk of the House has drawn my attention to the difficulty in which we have placed ourselves. Hon. members must realize that we have been operating under new rules and it has been obvious during the past week or so that the administrative facilities of the house have been taxed to the full. This has resulted in some difficulties.

At the same time, the situation with which we are now faced is an indication of the trouble which may result from unexpected changes in the order of business in the house. It seems to me that under the new rules we may find ourselves in a position where it is more important than ever not to change the business of the house, particularly in connection with the necessity for notice. It is obvious we are all in the dark to a considerable extent as to the functioning of these rules and it will require a great deal of co-operation on the part of all hon. members—on the part of the opposition and, I am sure, on the part of the government.

The Chair will make a special effort to try to overcome the difficulties which have arisen and I can personally assure the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) that the important matter he has raised will be looked into very closely, and an effort will be made to ensure that there is no repetition of the administrative problems we have faced in this particular instance.

Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I did not vote. This was not because I was paired but because I felt I was not in a position to vote until I had read the evidence of the committee.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, I merely want to state that we in this party felt constrained to vote against this legislation because we did not feel it reasonable that we should be called upon to pass judgment on the bill when the evidence given in the committee to which it was referred was not available to us.

VETERANS LAND ACT

AMENDMENT SUBSTITUTING RATE PRESCRIBED BY GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that Bill C-152, to amend the Veterans Land Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs on Thursday, January 30, 1969 be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

Mr. Dubé moved that the bill be read a third time and do pass.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpèque): Mr. Speaker I would ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs whether he has any statement that he would like to make at this point.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Dubé: No, Mr. Speaker. I did make a statement on second reading. The bill then went to committee and the committee received evidence from the director of the Veterans Land Act. I have no statement to make at this time, but if there are any questions members of the opposition wish to ask I will be available.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on third reading of Bill C-152 I am glad to report that this was one time when there was general agreement amongst all party members on both sides of the house in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. The Committee only had to clarify and verify items in the bill concerning the welfare of a very important segment of our population, thus giving recognition to those who make up a very important part of our nation, the war veterans. This bill exemplifies the realization of all members of parliament that it is the duty of the government of Canada to continually review and provide for the war veterans, so that they can have the opportunity of providing a livelihood for themselves and their families.

It is significant that today, in this House of Commons, a notice of motion was put forth by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) asking the government to give consideration to the immediate organization of a program of medical examination of all members of the Canadian active service forces who were prisoners of war in world war II and who have not been examined in the past five years. This shows that we, as representatives of the citizens of this country, must constantly be reminded of the part played by war veterans in the building of this great nation of Canada. This is a responsibility that we must never take lightly.

We, as members of the committee, were pleased that the rate of interest on loans up to $6,000, which was established in 1942 at 3½ per cent, will not be affected by this bill. The main item of change will permit the rate on loans of over $6,000 and up to $20,000 to be determined from time to time by the Governor in Council. In this regard I feel it should be mentioned that the Royal Canadian Legion, who represent the majority of war veterans in Canada, recognized the sharp increase in recent years in mortgage rates, bond interest and the rate of interest on money lent by the Bank of Canada. They, therefore, recommended that the rate be that paid by the government to secure the necessary funds, with administrative costs being borne by the government.

I wholeheartedly agree with the recommendation of the Royal Canadian Legion; but we are all prepared to realize as responsible citizens—and I am sure the war veteran realizes too—that as the cost of money increases progressively this extra cost must be borne by all citizens who need to borrow.

I, and the members of the standing committee from the opposition side, are satisfied that the veteran who applies for the average loan of, say, $20,000 will be in the slightly preferred category that he deserves. On a loan of this proportion he will pay an average of a little over 6 per cent, because he will be paying 3½ per cent on the first $6,000 and 7¾ per cent on the remainder.

We are concerned, however, about the availability of funds. We are concerned that the amount available each year has dropped until it is now $74 million. We hope that we will not hear the old cries of "restraint in spending" and "feasibility studies" and "task forces" coming to the fore. We hope money will be provided for loans to veterans for as long as they are required, and that the amount provided will be commensurate with the needs of all applicants. I am prepared, however, to believe that the government is aware of the debt we owe the veterans of this country and will live up to its responsibility to make available the necessary funds which will continue to provide opportunities for these important citizens of Canada.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, there is one matter relative to this legislation that I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. I realize that under the new rules it is awkward, if not impossible, for the minister to reply directly to any question that I might put to him now. However, perhaps he can give the matter consideration and indicate when speaking later this evening, or by letter, what can be done about it.

Bill C-152 will have the effect of increasing the interest rate payable by veterans on all loans granted to them by the director of the Veterans Land Act. However, I notice, in particular, that clause 9 of this bill provides that in the case of all loans or advances that have already been applied for by a veteran the old rate of 5 per cent under the old act will continue to apply.

That is logical enough, but what about those cases where a veteran may not have made a formal application as such but has brought to the attention of the director of the Veterans Land Act that he has a particular problem in connection with his property or his house. The director has agreed that additional funds are required and has stated in writing that the veteran is eligible for a loan of $3,000, $4,000 or $5,000 if he cares to make formal application for such loan? Clause 9 says specifically that the old rate of 5 per cent shall apply only to such loans as have already been applied for by the veteran. Those applications must be in the hands of the director at the time of the coming into force of this act. Does the minister not think it appropriate to interpret this legislation so that undertakings in writing given by the director to veterans at any time up to the coming into force of this act will be covered. I know the bill does not specify undertakings in writing in any of its provisions; it refers only to formal applications for assistance approved by the director. Perhaps the minister can indicate now whether veterans who have had dealings with the director, and who have been promised in writing loans at the old rate, will in fact be able to obtain those loans at the old rate up until the time Bill C-152 comes into effect.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Dubé, seconded by—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I understand the minister was rising to make some kind of response.

Mr. Speaker: The minister did not appear to be rising quickly. If he does so now, he will be recognized.

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have had a quick consultation with the officers of the table, who have brought to my attention the fact that the minister does not have the right to reply.

Mr. Lewis: Except by consent.

Mr. Speaker: I shall therefore put the question.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I understood that the minister said to the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) he would not be making a statement. I do not think that the word "no" can be taken as a speech.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair considers these things very seriously. It may be that the minister was rising to reply to a point of order. With this interpretation he might be allowed now, at this stage, to make a statement.

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, may I express my appreciation to the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) for his contribution to the debate. I assure him that I, too, am very concerned about the availability of funds for the coming year. I hope there will be sufficient funds to supply all applicants, but this decision has not been made at this time.

The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer) raised a specific question about clause 9. I wish to assure him that all applications made before September 13 and before the coming into force of this act will come under the old rate of interest. As to other applications, the standing of which is not clear, I assure him that they will receive a very liberal interpretation.

Mr. Lewis: Which liberal?

Mr. Speaker: According to the new rules, the minister has not closed debate. Before any hon. member takes advantage of this I shall put the question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN OVERSEAS TELECOMMUNICATIONS CORPORATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, LIMITATION OF POWERS, ETC.

On the order:

Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications of Bill S-5, An Act to amend the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act—The Postmaster General.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I realize the President of the Privy Council told us not long ago we should be proceeding with this bill, but it happens that copies of the bill are not in our files. I do not have a copy, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) has no copy and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has no copy. It seems that no hon. member here has a copy.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Take up Bill S-4.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think we ought to have copies of the bill, even if we do not have time to read it.

Mr. Kierans: It was passed by the Senate on October 8. Hon. members should have it on file.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We have checked all our files, but I can find no hon. member who has a copy.

Mr. Speaker: I am advised that additional copies are being obtained. The Clerk of the house assures me the bill has been distributed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps we might proceed with the next item of business, No. 27 on the order paper, having to do with the marking of articles containing precious metals.

Mr. Speaker: Shall this order stand for the time being?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order stands.

PRECIOUS METALS

LEGISLATION RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, MARKING, ETC.

On the order:

Consideration of Bill S-4, An Act respecting the marking of articles containing precious metals, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. —The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported back from committee without amendment. During the committee proceedings the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) raised a question with regard to clause 8(4).

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand that no debate is allowed unless there is an amendment. I understand there is no amendment.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. Basford: May I ask the unanimous consent of the house to move an amendment?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is basic to the rules that there may be no debate by the house unless notice has been given of an amendment. If hon. members, by agreement, wish to allow the minister to make a statement and propose an amendment at this time, it is of course up to hon. members to make that suggestion.

Mr. Peters: No, Mr. Speaker.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On a point of order. As the minister has explained, I made representations with regard to one of the clauses. The minister took it under advisement, consulted one of his officials and advised me personally he would propose the amendment. I am told that notice has been filed with the Clerk.

Mr. Lewis: It is not in Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is not in Votes and Proceedings. This afternoon it was decided we would try to get to this bill and that the minister would ask for the consent of the house to put forward the amendment, which is only one word. As far as we are concerned, this would be acceptable. It would be strange if it were not. That is why this rather extraordinary procedure is taking place at this time and I hope the members of the house and the Chair will accept it.

Mr. Speaker: Of course the Chair has no choice in the matter. It is up to hon. members. The standing order requires notice, even if notice has been filed before six o'clock. It has not appeared in Votes and Proceedings. However, if there is unanimous agreement we will proceed. There will be no difficulty from the Chair.

I see the hon. member for York South is anxious to contribute.

Mr. Lewis: This is a new procedure, Mr. Speaker. Either all hon. members of the house, including Ministers of the Crown, will abide by it or we are going to be in trouble, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I know other members of the house seeking to move amendments at the report stage without the notice being in Votes and Proceedings will be denied the opportunity if it suits the majority so to do, whereas exceptions are made in this case. I therefore cannot agree that it should be done. It seems all that was necessary was for this not to be called today so that the amendment could appear in Votes and Proceedings.

Either we are going to have a parliamentary regime in accordance with the new rules which will be orderly and every member will know exactly what is happening. Then members will learn to put amendments in such a way that they will appear in Votes and Proceedings and be proceeded with in a way which we have now decided to proceed or we start making exceptions. If that is done, the regime which we have set up will come tumbling down.

Mr. Woolliams: It already has.

Mr. Lewis: The solution is very simple. If the minister is of the opinion the amendment he wants to move is of some importance, all that is necessary is that this particular order not be called, leaving it for tomorrow or the day after which will give time for the amendment to appear in Votes and Proceedings. In this way, the rules we have adopted will not be torn up.

I suggest we are all learning the new rules. There are a good many disadvantages when compared to the old rules because some of us feel we are deprived of the opportunity to ask questions in the house and receive answers from ministers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I think we ought to be strict about following these rules if they are to mean something in the development of an orderly procedure.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a point of order also, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member and his group feel they cannot assent to the change proposed by the official opposition, then the disposition of the government would be not to go ahead with the bill at this time. On that basis, I wonder if the hon. member's group would be ready to go ahead with Bill S-5?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, we are prepared to go ahead with S-5.

Mr. Speaker: We will deem it that this order has not been called, so that no hon.

member will be prejudiced from filing a notice if this bill should not be called tomorrow.

CANADIAN OVERSEAS TELECOMMUNICATIONS CORPORATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, LIMITATION OF POWERS, ETC.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General) moved the second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications of Bill S-5, to amend the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act.

He said: It gives me great pleasure, Mr. Speaker to recommend the two basic amendments in this bill for approval by this house. I may say in explanation of the main overseas telecommunications service that it was formed in 1949. It was established for a number of purposes among which the most important was to establish, maintain and operate in Canada and elsewhere external communications services for the conduct of public communications.

Since 1949 until the present time, Mr. Speaker, this Crown Corporation has had an enviable history of accomplishment and achievement. It has accomplished very well all of the objectives which the government and the people of Canada laid down for it in 1949.

At the present time it is a corporation with assets exceeding $83 million. Its revenue last year was $24 million and it showed a profit of $4 million. The corporation has shown a profit for every one of the 18 years it has been in existence and during that time has paid to the government over $20 million in interest charges, $19,912,000 in income tax, and has returned $16 million of its advances from the government. The officers and employees of the corporation have proved themselves capable of managing their affairs in the interests of the Canadian people and I think that is a real justification.

Their past record justifies their request at this time, which I am happy to put forward, for additional powers and greater flexibility. The corporation is a member of the International Telecommunication Satellite Consortium and represents Canada on that board. It is much concerned with the expansion of satellite services all over the world and of course maintains Canada's interest and attention in all that goes on in international satellite relations. The corporation itself is expanding the use of Atlantic satellites to cope with the need for more capacity to cater for increasing demand for service between Canada and European countries and foresees the need for a Canadian earth station on the West coast for operations with the Pacific satellites. As is well known the corporation some years ago built an earth station at Mill Village in Nova Scotia at a cost of some $12 million. An additional earth station is now being built there which will have the capacity to receive communications from satellites including the French satellite when it is launched.

I feel the people in Canada should be more aware of the contribution that this corporation makes. At the present time it has inaugurated overseas dataphone service and it expects this service also will be very profitable. This has been background information for the benefit of hon. members and I will now go to the bill specifically, Mr. Speaker.

• (9:50 p.m.)

As it noted in Bill S-5, we wish to amend section 2(f). In the original act section 2(f) says:

> "external telecommunication services" means the telecommunication services between Canada and any place outside of Canada and between Newfoundland and any other part of Canada;

Section 6(b) also makes reference to "Newfoundland and any other part of Canada." When the corporation was formed Newfoundland had become Canada's tenth province but from a telecommunications point of view it was overseas and the service was provided by the Canadian Marconi Company by high frequency radio.

When under the act, chapter 42 (1949) the C.O.T.C. was formed, the corporation expropriated the property and equipment of the Canadian Marconi Company used in connection with its external services; that is, radio stations at Drummondville and Yamachiche. It was not practical at that time to exclude from the total expropriation that part of the equipment used for service with Newfoundland, although it had by that time become the tenth province.

The corporation undertook to provide the additional facilities necessary to meet the growing demand for service between the island and the mainland. However, it rapidly became clear that this service should more properly rest in the hands of a domestic carrier and accordingly after lengthy negotiations these facilities were transferred to Canadian National Telecommunications on January 1, 1966. Therefore, to bring this act up to date it is desirable to remove the references to Newfoundland.

With respect to the second amendment that we recommend, the figures that I have quoted give you some idea of the tremendous performance, the strength and the size of the corporation, and therefore of the capacity of the people who direct it to handle their own affairs. Their power, flexibility and ability to make decisions are gravely limited by a section in the original act which reads:

Unless the approval of the Governor in Council is first obtained, the corporation shall not

(a) enter into an agreement involving any expenditure in excess of fifty thousand dollars;

With the establishment of cable systems between Bermuda, Canada and other countries, and with the corporation investing in satellite systems and switching systems, it is continually coming before Treasury Board for approval of a number of decisions that we feel the directors should have the power to make themselves. For example, during the last six years Orders in Council were requested for 146 different actions taken by the board of directors. I seriously question whether any more than 30 or 40 of those should have been forthcoming. That was one part of the limitation of power. Subparagraph (b) was another and provides that the corporation shall not:

—enter into for a period exceeding three years any agreement or lease that involves an expenditure in any year of more than five thousand dollars;

Hon. members will realize that when a corporation with annual revenues of $24 million, with assets exceeding $80 million, with total fixed assets in the order of $97 million—that, of course, is not the depreciated figure—is faced with a limitation on the directors that they shall not enter into any lease involving an expenditure of more than $5,000 in any year, it is a serious limitation.

Then there is another limitation in subparagraph (c) which says that the corporation shall not:

—acquire any real or personal property, the cost of acquisition of which exceeds the sum of fifty thousand dollars, or in any manner dispose of any such property having an original or book value exceeding the sum of five thousand dollars.

Just two or three weeks ago I had to approve a request to the Treasury Board that the corporation be permitted to sell some used, obsolete equipment the original value of which was about $9,000. These amendments will avoid this procedure. It is time consuming. It limits the capacity of the directors to handle their own affairs, a capacity which has been well demonstrated during the years, and so I heartily recommend that these amendments be approved.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I ask the minister a question before he sits down, Mr. Speaker. Would he explain how the administration of the corporation gets greater powers under the amendment in clause 3 of the bill than it had before, when it needs to have the recommendation of the Treasury Board and the approval of the Governor in Council before it enters into any agreement or lease?

Mr. Kierans: What will happen is that the Treasury Board will lay down the same rules that apply to other crown corporations. The Treasury Board will prescribe such limits as it may consider to be appropriate. In other words, the limitations presently listed in the legislation may not be the limitations which the Treasury Board will set. The corporation has to be under some control but that control would be less, at least as to physical amount, than presently exists.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, for the convenience of hon. members perhaps the government house leader would be agreeable to putting on the record again the business which the government proposes to bring to the house tomorrow and Wednesday.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as indicated on Friday last it will be the government's intention to call as the first item No. 48 on the order paper, that is to say, the motion for second reading and reference to Committee of the Whole of Bill C-162 to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. We would hope we could make some progress on that bill and possibly by leave get it through all stages. If we are successful in that, we would then call as the second item No. 50 on the order paper, the motion for second reading and reference to Committee of the Whole of Bill C-165 to amend the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under standing order 40 deemed to have been moved.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hillsborough.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I have opted out of my particular question that was set for debate at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nickel Belt.

EDUCATION—RECOMMENDATIONS RESPECTING REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. Gaétan-J. Serré (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, last week I directed to the secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) a question concerning some recommendations of the Franco-Ontarian Committee on cultural life which were presented to the Ontario Minister of Education.

That report contains some very important recommendations on federal institutions which come under the central government.

In my question, I asked the Secretary of State whether he intended to answer favourably the request of the Franco-Ontarian Committee on cultural life that the C.B.C. establish French radio stations (AM and FM) and television stations wherever there is a sufficient number of French-speaking people in Ontario.

As I have been unable to get from the Secretary of State an answer to that question which is, I feel, of capital importance, not only to French-speaking people in Ontario but also to English-speaking people and to the whole country, I was bent on raising it tonight.

In order that the Secretary of State, hon. members and the Canadian people might have a better understanding of the purport of my question, I hasten to quote two recommendations made by the Franco-Ontarian Committee on cultural life. The first one reads as follows:

That French radio and television stations, in Ontario continue to be supplied through Montreal, but that local and regional production centres be established in Ottawa, Toronto, Windsor and Sudbury so as to form a Franco-Ontarian radio and television network.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

The system, while complying with the standards of quality approved by the C.B.C., would be responsible for Ontario public affairs and the development of local talent.

The second recommendation reads as follows:

That the C.B.C., while maintaining its standards of quality, offer programming which is better suited to the interests of Franco-Ontarians, when the C.B.C. station is the only French-speaking one in an area.

Mr. Speaker, the C.B.C. has certainly made great efforts to help the Franco-Ontarians in the last few years, but the present services are far from satisfactory.

It is worth noting that in Ontario, there is only one French television station, CBOFT, the C.B.C. station in Ottawa, and that there is no other private French television station.

The Corporation offers French television to a great number of French Canadians of the "Middle North" of Ontario, that is the Sudbury and North Bay region, and to those of the "Far North" or the Timmins, Kapuskasing and Hearst area. Of course, this is a great help to the French Canadians of Northern Ontario, but it is not enough, because often they do not have much interest in programs originating in Montreal and Quebec City. Besides, and that is the most important point, for the French-Canadians of Southern Ontario who are quite numerous, there is no French television station at all.

Mr. Speaker, if we accept the principles underlayng the Canadian constitution, if we recognize the bilingual and bicultural nature of Canada, if we sincerely want to safeguard the French-Canadian culture in North America, we must think of taking immediate steps to correct the gross injustice being done to almost three-quarters of a million Franco-Ontarians and to provide them quickly with the means not only to survive but also to develop in a normal way.

We all agree that mass media can play a leading role as a medium of culture. However, without any newspapers, radio or TV of their own, Franco-Ontarians are bound to disappear, as is now the case, considering the increasing number of them who are unavoidably assimilated.

Mr. Speaker, the Franco-Ontarians are not asking for any privileges, they are only demanding their rights. They are only asking for the same treatment the English-speaking minority gets in Quebec. In every Quebec community where there is a sufficient number of English-speaking people, the latter can enjoy radio and television in their own language.

We must stop identifying French Canada with Quebec and recognize that French Canada comprises Ontario, New Brunswick and reaches out to the west, across the whole continent. The government, under the clever leadership of our present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) undertook to protect the rights of minorities; it undertook to promote bilingualism and biculturalism across the country wherever it is deemed necessary and the people of Canada have accepted that fact, judging from the results of the June 25 election. I know the Secretary of State is more than inclined to do something in this respect.

If Ontario becomes a truly bilingual province where the two great cultures will be allowed to develop and enlarge through one another, in the most complete harmony, it will become an example of good understanding and of co-operation for the other provinces. This will belie the views held by some Quebec extremists by proving to them that Confederation can and will operate and thus we will have taken a great step toward the achievement of national unity.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask once again the Secretary of State if he intends to assent to the recommendations of the Franco-Ontarian Committee on cultural life.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the recommendations of the Franco-Ontarian Committee on cultural life have been considered with a great deal of interest by the Secretary of State and the C.B.C.

As a matter of fact, the C.B.C. has established an internal committee to consider the whole matter of broadcasting in French. This matter is now being considered by the officials of the corporation and it is hoped that a policy might be implemented as funds become available.

I call the hon. member's attention to the fact that a new French language radio station has been licensed in Windsor, Ontario, and that the possibility of issuing a permit for the operation of a television station is now under study.

[English]

I might also mention that the C.B.C. is hoping to make application in the near future for French television service in my own city, the third largest French speaking city in Canada, Toronto, and also Pembroke. Another area the C.B.C. is seriously considering for this service at the present time is the whole northern Ontario region in which my hon. friend is so interested. Extension of service is planned for that region in accordance with the representations of the hon. member and his colleagues from northern Ontario. I am advised, too, that other communities are also in the corporation's mind. The whole question of French language service is of great, current concern to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.12 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER—REMOVAL OF COAT OF ARMS FROM PUBLICATION OF STANDING ORDERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, some ten days ago I raised a question on the omission of the coat of arms from the new Standing Orders of the house. Of course I realize I am not permitted to ask Your Honour any questions, but I would appreciate it if it could be made clear as to whether an examination by Your Honour has been made of the question that I raised, and what will be the position from now on of the coat of arms on the publication of Standing Orders.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman knows what the rules are in so far as the Chair is concerned. The only way that questions can be asked is in writing. There has been a communication in writing with the right hon. gentleman and it was my hope that the answer which was conveyed to him would be satisfactory.

I think that there should be as few exceptions as possible to the rule, because it is a good rule, that communications with the Speaker in so far as inquiries are concerned should be made in writing, and the reply made in the same way by the Chair. If the house will allow the Speaker, however, to make an exception to the rule, I will say that the intention of the officers of the house and of the Speaker is that eventually when the Standing Orders are published in this final form they will be published in the traditional way which has always been observed in the House of Commons.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The coat of arms will come back then.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1969-70

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE TREASURY BOARD

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1970, was presented by Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board), and read by Mr. Speaker to the house.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the budgetary estimates for 1969-70 total $11,858 million. Normal lapsing would bring expenditures based on these estimates down to something below the $11,670 million figure projected by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in his budget speech last October. The 1969-70 budgetary estimates of $11,858 million compare with anticipated total 1968-69 estimates of $10,826 million. The increase between years is, therefore, $1,032 million. Of this increase, $859 million relate to statutory items and the balance, or $173 million, to items requiring annual appropriations.

It should be recalled that the Minister of Finance has mentioned on several occasions that expenditures could easily vary from the projection of $11,670 million by about 1 per cent either way. In this connection I should point out that while these estimates were being printed the provincial governments were asked to provide us with more up-to-date forecasts of their expenditures under the Canada Assistance Plan, the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, and for post-secondary education. These latest forecasts confirm the validity of the total amount included in the estimates tabled today for these programs. It is not possible for me to be more definite in this report, since most provincial treasuries are still in the process of preparing their own 1969-70 estimates, which will not be presented to their legislatures for some weeks yet.

There may be a need, as in the past, for supplementary estimates in the course of the year to meet urgent and unforeseen requirements. The government is determined that such supplementary estimates, if any, will be kept to a minimum and held to figures consistent with the declared objective of a balanced budget.

The estimates make provision for the expenditures required under programs for which statutory authority has already been granted by specific acts of parliament, such as the large programs already mentioned, as well as medicare and public debt charges, or resulting from formal agreements with the provinces such as those relating to occupational training of adults, and regional development. It should be noted that in respect to medicare, as indicated in the budget speech, provision has been made on the basis of participation by all the provinces for the full year.

Apart from these outlays, which are not readily manageable in the short term at least, the estimates for 1969-70 provide the required funds for the government to carry out its current defence commitments, and reflect the decision of the government to give priority to a number of specific areas of activity within an over-all framework of budgetary restraint.

Increased allocations have been made to programs for the efficient growth of the economy; to measures that contribute to raising the level of industrial technology, research and development and improving productivity; to programs for the support of research in the universities, and to water research programs.

Growth has also been provided in programs essential to the strengthening of national unity; to the reduction of regional disparities; to the improvement of the situation of Indians and Eskimos, and to the expansion of our external aid.

Finally, provision has been made to meet the increasing needs of parliament and essential funds have been allowed for the protection of persons and property, toward the acquisition of a communications satellite, and for postal operations.

A careful scrutiny was carried out of the manpower requirements of the various departments and agencies of the public service with the result, shown at page 476 of the estimates blue book, that the over-all manpower allocation for the year 1969-70 shows a decrease of 9,332 man-years from the levels authorized in the current year. The program of restraint on the over-all size of the public service which was announced by the government in March 1968 will be continued in 1969-70.

[Mr. Drury.]

The considerations outlined above are reflected in the major elements of increase in the 1969-70 estimates over those of the current year. About 83 per cent of the over-all increase is made up of the requirements for programs authorized by existing legislation such as: medicare, $335 million; superannuation—civil and R.C.M.P., $154 million; public debt charges, $130 million; fiscal transfers to the provinces, $101 million; hospital insurance payments, $65 million; post-secondary education payments, $53 million; superannuation—defence, $51 million; Canada Assistance Plan, $48 million.

In the category of programs for which annual appropriations of parliament are required and which account for $6,185 million or 52 per cent of the total, the major elements of increase are: defence services, $51 million; regional economic expansion contributions, $46 million; federal government accommodation, $35 million; adult occupational training, $34 million, Indian, Eskimo and northern development programs, $33 million; external aid (excluding loans), $18 million; broadcasting, $15 million; grants for scientific and social research, $14 million; postal services, $13 million; industrial development assistance, $7 million; water research programs, $5 million.

The foregoing amounts relating to budgetary expenditures do not include loans, investments and advances on non-budgetary account, for which parliamentary approval is also being sought, in the amount of $614 million in the 1969-70 estimates. The corresponding amount in total estimates for 1968-69 is $720 million.

Similarly, the budgetary expenditures set forth in the preceding paragraphs do not include the forecast expenditures for Old Age Security payments. These payments, amounting to an estimated $1,760 million in 1969-70 —compared to $1,581 million in 1968-69—are carried separately from the budgetary expenditures provided for in the estimates as a statutory charge against the Old Age Security fund to which are credited the special taxes levied for this purpose.

I should also point out that a few presentational changes have been introduced in the 1969-70 blue book of estimates. For the first time we are providing details of the estimates requirements of crown corporations. Further, we have simplified the presentation of manpower detail and introduced a new standard expenditure coding system.

Finally, I would like to add that we expect to make available to the members of this house and of the other place in the next week or so booklets setting forth the 1969-70 estimates in the form that we proposed to the Public Accounts Committee should be adopted for the formal presentation of the estimates for 1970-71. I trust that these booklets will be of assistance in the examination by parliament and others of the 1969-70 estimates. In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the estimates blue book for 1969-70 as well as a number of tables setting forth further details on the 1969-70 estimates and comparisons with 1968-69 totals. The tables are five in number. Table I compares the total estimates for 1969-70 with previous years.

Main Estimates 1969-70

Table II shows selected major items in budgetary estimates for 1969-70 and 1968-69. Table III is a division of the 1969-70 and 1968-69 budgetary estimates into the administration, construction and grants categories. Table IV is a list of the loans, investments and advances by agency for 1969-70 and 1968-69, and Table V is a list of the budgetary estimates for 1969-70 and 1968-69 by major function. By leave of the house, rather than reading these tables, may I be permitted to ask that they be printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PERCENTAGE DISTRIBUTION OF BUDGETARY EXPENDITURES BY MAJOR FUNCTION
1969-70

NOTES: General Government Services—includes expenditures for the protection of persons and property, the budgetary requirements of Parliament and the central administration of the Public Service, and the collection of taxes and duties.

Other Expenditures—includes services provided by certain departments to other departments, the government's contribution to employee pension and medical plans, and the Treasury Board Contingencies Vote.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, at this time I wish to make two or three comments on the estimates. I have just received them and heard the minister's remarks, and I think they are worthy of a little more study than I have been able to give them so far. Therefore I will not attempt to make extensive comments. Yet I could not help noting that the minister's remarks seemed to be delivered in an apologetic way. That may have been a personal impression, but it is an impression, nevertheless, that struck me very definitely.

I notice that the estimates are increased by $1.32 billion over the revised estimates for last year, in round figures an increase of 10 per cent. That increase contrasts sharply with a conviction expressed by the former minister of finance a little over a year ago that the estimates would not be increased by more than 4.5 per cent. At any rate, the increase in estimates was to be confined to that percentage. The actual percentage of the increase is double that fixed, so to speak, by the former minister of finance. The undertaking of the previous minister was guaranteed, of course, by the present Minister of Finance.

We will, of course, study these estimates carefully. Nevertheless, because of our experience during the past year, we will take them with a grain of salt.

An hon. Member: A whole bag full.

Mr. Stanfield: We shall do so, particularly, since the minister sprinkled salt on the budget estimates when he said he was in no position to be particularly firm on estimates of joint cost programs.

It is also a matter of regret to me that these estimates are not being presented to the house in a context of satisfactory financial relations between the federal government and the provinces. There ought, at least, to be an apparent willingness on the part of the federal government to meet with the provinces and frankly to work out with them priorities and approaches that would be in the interest of the Canadian taxpayer. Therefore it is a matter of regret to me, and to most Canadians I think, that the atmosphere existing between the federal government and the provinces in the realm of financial relations is not good.

It will be the duty of the opposition, sir, to examine these estimates with care. This we will do in the light of experience we have had in the past year.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I remember when other estimates were tabled. The present estimates are much like the others and reflect a stale likeness, as if the merit of any set of estimates is to be judged by how well the figures on both sides of the ledger balance. Any bookkeeper can make figures balance.

We concede that it is necessary for the government to run its operation on a businesslike basis, yet any businessman would be appalled at the government's attitude. After all, any business seeks to expand, to make use of initiative and seek out new avenues of opportunity. The present government does not seem to be prepared to act that way. It is perfectly content to demonstrate that the figures on one side of the ledger balance the other side.

We in this party look forward to the day when we will have a government that takes some of the actions that members in our society in the past have taken. It takes the attitude that this is a country that needs governing and leadership, that has an exciting future and deserves far more than a flat assessment of the debits and credits as given to us today. We look forward to the day when that will take place.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the minister who has just presented the budgetary estimates for the year ending March 31st, 1970 speaks of the importance of a balanced budget. Now, in order to achieve this, restrictions have been made, as usual, in every sphere of Canadian economic activity while the physical possibilities of developing the wealth of our country have been completely overlooked.

Mr. Speaker, I am anxious to see a responsible minister rise in this house to speak to us not only of a budget which enables us to spend the taxes levied but of a balanced budget which would take into account the potential resources of Canada and would make everything financially possible, according to the theory we advocate, throughout Canada, in short wherever we go, that is to make financially possible what is physically achievable.

Mr. Speaker, I note in those estimates that the interest on the national debt this year will amount to $1,604,000,000. Although that item increases from year to year, the minister never speaks of reducing the service charges on that debt, which this year represents 13½ per cent of a total budget of $11,858,000,000, and the government finds that normal.

We go visiting countries throughout the world trying to help them, while we cannot even take steps to help the Canadian people who develop or are willing to develop the natural resources of our country. If that is what is called a just society, it is indeed a strange just society. In fact, it is, as we hear so often, a "just for fun society" which completely ignores the needs of the people and their capacity to increase productivity and the standard of living of the whole country.

Mr. Speaker, the Créditistes will keep on harassing the government. We are going to scrutinize the estimates and we shall fight any measure which would tend to prevent the development of our natural resources in any province.

The estimates are presented to us only a few days before the opening of the famous federal-provincial conference which should start next week. In my opinion, it is a simple invitation to the provinces to keep down their requests because when their representatives meet the federal authorities, they will be told that their needs cannot be met. As of this afternoon I could predict anything which is going to happen next week between the provinces and the federal government. In fact, the whole matter will be a taxation issue. The federal and provincial governments state that they are not able to meet their financial requirements. The mayor of the city of Montreal tells the right hon. Prime Minister: We are at the end of our resources, come to our rescue otherwise I resign. We are living through a period of giving up. I would not be surprised, some fine day, to see the Prime Minister come to the house and tell us: I am fed up, I am going too. But, there is one group which will stay here and it is the Ralliement Créditiste; it will keep on giving the facts.

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to add for the time being but we shall have something more to say later on. However, before closing I wish to say that instead of seeking a balanced budget in accordance with our present tax system, we should balance our national economy according to our physical capabilities, therefore putting our finances at the service of those capabilities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Caouette.]

AIR TRANSPORT

STATEMENT RESPECTING POSSIBLE FATIGUE FACTOR IN JET PILOT OPERATIONS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, some days ago I undertook to make a brief statement with respect to the limitations on air crews serving on our regular air lines. The physical and mental condition of flight crew is a matter of continuing concern to governments all over the world. For this reason in the late 1940's ICAO, the International Civil Aviation Organization, recommended that member states take action to establish limitations on the flight time of flight crew members in the interests of flight safety. This ICAO recommendation was accepted by Canada and minimum standards in keeping with the ICAO recommendation were formulated with the assistance of the aviation industry associations concerned. Because of the variety of aircraft operations in Canada to which such standards must apply, the standards adopted were, of necessity, general in nature.

Over the years they have had to be amended slightly to meet specific situations, but it can be said that, notwithstanding a recognized need to refine them to take full account of individual types of operation, they have been given general acceptance by operators and crews alike.

In the application of these standards the Department of Transport requires every operator of large aircraft engaged in commercial air operations to submit a proposed text to the department for approval, for inclusion in the company's approved operations manual setting out instructions in this regard for compliance by company personnel. In considering the acceptability of such proposals the department takes into account environmental factors involved, such as the length of route stages, weather, type of aircraft, number of landings and take-offs, etc., as well as the consistency of the proposal with the standard itself. The acceptability of such a proposal is an important prerequisite to the over-all safety certification of the operator.

As an example the flight time limitations approved for Air Canada's operations limit flight crews to a maximum of 85 hours per month, 14 hours in any one day including the time necessary to prepare for and terminate a flight. There is also a requirement for a minimum rest period of eight hours between duty periods during which the crews are relieved of all duties associated with their employment.

Some concern has been expressed about the length of time spent on duty by Air Canada crews on the Montreal-Moscow service. In this regard I can say that the maximum duty time on the Montreal-Moscow service is 9½ hours.

While the procedures now followed in establishing flight time limitations through the approval of the company operations manual have served the purpose for which they were intended, future developments in aviation will require more scientific methods for determining fatigue levels. To this end the Department of Transport is participating in a study by McGill University. The Federal Aviation Agency of the United States also has a study under way. Depending on the outcome of these studies the department will take whatever action is necessary in the circumstances.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members are glad to hear that something has been done and is now being done to establish certain standards for pilots of aircraft commercially operated in this country. However with his announcement the minister has left a very great deal to our imagination, to conjecture, as to what is going on. For instance, he did not give us any idea how soon these recommendations are to be submitted by pilots for consideration by the government. Meanwhile presumably certain requirements have been made of pilots which are hardly in the interests of safety.

I note the minister has told us that at the present time pilots cannot be on duty more than 14 hours at a time. That is somewhat encouraging. The minister also said that pilots on the Montreal to Moscow run are not required to be on duty for more than nine hours at a time. I am glad to hear this, but it may be like the law against murder: there is a law against murder in Canada, but it does not prevent murders sometimes taking place. There may be regulations saying that these things cannot take place, but the information I and other hon. members have received is that some of the regulations simply are not carried out.

I have cited statistics in this house and in committees of the house as to the length of time that, it has been brought to my attention, pilots have been required to be on duty. It is now apparent, from the length of time that the minister has been looking into this matter, that something is indeed amiss.

A very large percentage of the Canadian public now uses aircraft on a daily or weekly basis, and it is very little comfort to the public to know that the government will consider certain recommendations which will be proposed some time, somewhere, some place by air line pilots. I can only hope that these recommendations will be made promptly, and that for once the government will act promptly with respect to them. Until that is done many of us, and I am sure most of the travelling public, will not feel very easy if we have doubt about the safety regulations covering commercially operated aircraft.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, the statement the minister has just read to us treats of a very technical subject. One assumes that the changes that are to take place with respect to new procedures and regulations covering the civil aviation industry will be made after a long period of painstaking testing and surveying, and after the receipt of submissions from experts in the field, and from the pilots associations.

One also assumes that Canada, as with other nations in the world, has a rather good reputation for maintaining a high level of safety performance in the field of aviation. It is gratifying to see that the minister and his department are keeping abreast with changes in this industry, to make sure that as technological improvements take place Canadian civil aviation operators will have to live up to new, high standards.

In specific terms, I wish to say I hope that the new regulations, when they come into effect, will be enforced effectively with respect to those air lines that operate on a charter basis. One has only to think back to a few months ago to an accident at Vancouver airport, when the aircraft in question was being piloted by a captain and co-pilot who had served a large number of hours of continuous duty, some 17 or 18 hours. It was small wonder that one and possibly both of them were rather punchy with fatigue, having spent that much time at the controls. This sort of thing can hardly be tolerated. For this reason it would seem that the minister's statement, which bears directly on this problem, should be welcomed by hon. members.

In conclusion I should like to say that in the future I hope the minister will show the usual and normal courtesy in making documents available. One would hope that he will not make a statement again to the house without first circulating, at least to each group in the house the contents of the statement he intends to make.

GRAIN

CANADA GRAINS COUNCIL—ESTABLISHMENT AT WINNIPEG MEETING

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to report to the house on the meeting held in Winnipeg yesterday at which the Canada Grains Council was established, and I should like also to table for the information of hon. members certain relevant documents. These documents include the terms of reference of the council, the list of member and advisory organizations, along with a list of those organizations whose representatives will form the executive of the council, as well as a document showing the organizational arrangements that were approved by yesterday's meeting.

At that meeting the chairman and the vice-chairman, Messrs. A. M. Runciman and G. Heffelfinger, respectively, were installed. Subsequent to the meeting of the council the chairman held the first meeting of the executive committee. I am pleased to report that the initial meeting of the council was marked by an obvious desire on the part of those present to work together to solve the problems of the grain industry for the mutual benefit of all concerned.

The executive committee is immediately directing itself to the problems of establishing priorities for the various tasks that have been suggested by member organizations, the recruitment of staff, and are also to give consideration to the type of legal entity that will best suit its purpose. As soon as we have the views of the council on this latter subject, the necessary action will be initiated.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, in rising to comment on the statement by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) with regard to the setting up of the Canada Grains Council, I might add that to a large extent he has left us still in the dark concerning the jurisdiction of the council. He suggested that the terms of reference were actually discussed at the meeting in Winnipeg, but he did not inform the house exactly what the jurisdiction of the council will be and whether it will be over and above that of the Canadian Wheat Board or the Board of Grain Commissioners. This is something we want to know. The minister shakes his head indicating that this is not the case.

I can only comment that the Grains Council as we see it today could bring forth no new ideas. Mr. Runciman, a man I have admired and a man who has a great deal of wisdom with regard to the grain trade, has been very actively involved in the grain trade in the past number of years. I do not think he has in any way been negligent in performing his duties in advising the government in the past number of years concerning ways in which the grain trade could be improved. I fail to see how his appointment as chairman of the proposed Canada Grains Council will in fact make him more diligent in respect of this very important industry, with which he has been involved in the past number of years.

The minister has not told us the exact terms of reference and the jurisdiction of the council, nor has he told us who will pay the cost of operating and maintaining the council, and I would hesitate to say whether it will prove to be beneficial or just be another board which will divide further the responsibility of handling grain, a very important problem this year, and one which will be very important in the coming months.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, it would have been appreciated had the minister seen fit to give us these documents so that we could have had a brief look at them. I have tried over the last two or three months to obtain information concerning the proposed terms of reference for this proposed council. I regard this as an important event. I believe this will be important for the farmers of western Canada. We should know what this council will do. We should have information concerning the role it will play. I think what it really has within it is the concept of a new base for decision making in respect of western agriculture. I believe this is a deliberate attempt to shift that base into what is often defined as the agri-business sector. I think it will result in a downgrading of the role of the farm organization, and that the decisions with regard to western agriculture will increasingly be made in the halls and offices of big businesses. It is not that I have a bias against big business—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gleave: Nobody believes me. Well, I am sorry I have been interrupted, Mr. Speaker, but I want to say to the members of this house that I have successfully made a living as a businessman. However, I also wish to say that I do not want business of any kind to tell me and my fellow farmers in western Canada how to run our businesses. What concerns me is what this particular move portends for the farmers of western Canada.

An hon. Member: Socialism; that is what it is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, to some extent at least the people who will dominate the Grains Council will be the grain businesses—the 10 per cent people—those companies who have been living on an income guaranteed by the Board of Grain Commissioners and the farmers of western Canada over the last number of years. I think we deserve from the minister information concerning the terms of reference, the manner in which this particular council will operate and the way in which it will be financed. Is it to operate under legislation that is to be brought before this house, which will clearly define its role, or will it be an advisory body?

We would like to know whether the reports of this council will be made public, so that the farmers and producers will know what recommendations are made. Only a week or two ago I asked for a report from the Department of Trade and Commerce with regard to the dairy industry. I was told that this is a confidential document. Will the Grains Council be another body that will issue a number of confidential documents, on the basis of which the government will take action, while the actual producer sits out in the country wondering who is calling the shots? So far as I and the farmers of western Canada are concerned, this is what we want to know.

The grain industry is vital to our welfare; we depend on it for a living. When I see reports quoting the chairman of the council as saying that one organization is representing the commercial farmers, and the other organizations are representing the non-commercial farmers, I become concerned.

Who is going to decide who is, and who is not, a commercial farmer? Who is going to call the shots in this situation? I want from ministers of the Crown answers to these questions. I am not prepared, and I say this flatly, to have the industry people in Winnipeg or anywhere else make, behind closed doors, decisions that will affect my welfare and that of my fellow farmers, and then tell us the decisions when they feel like it.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I just had a look at the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) about the Canada Grains Council.

Like many other members, I was here during the debate that took place again last week on the grain question in western Canada. When I say "again," I do not mean I find the problem boring, on the contrary, it is because I see it as a very complicated problem, that requires the attention of all members in order to be solved as soon as possible.

I see that at their meeting on February 3, the Canada Grains Council, endeavoured to find means of solving in this problem for the time being at least.

The western grain producers wish to be paid too for their work so as to get an income that will enable them to meet their obligations.

The problem concerning the sale of western grain is beyond me. If we were going through a shortage at the present time, we could say: Good gracious, what is the matter? The land is getting barren, the people are hungry, there is not enough wheat to feed mankind, to feed our people; there is not enough grain to feed our cattle and produce meat, again to feed mankind. Then the situation would really be terrible. But it seems to me that the problem we face here is not that unusual since Providence is giving us the opportunity to produce on a large scale and to meet the needs of mankind so that we may, together, find a way of distributing that wealth we owe to the bounty of our land, to the toil of mankind and to the generous care of Providence.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that if the Commissioners really mean business, and do not merely sit once or twice every year, just for the sake of meeting each other, but have a genuine desire to find a way out, they will be able to reach the goal aimed at. I am hopeful that, through this means, we may, together, find answers. Maybe, in a year from now, we shall be able to say that the Canada Grains Council has made progress and that the Minister of Agriculture was well inspired when, he made the statement we heard today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

AMENDMENT TO REDUCE INTEREST RATE ON N.H.A. MORTGAGES

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-166, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to amend the National Housing Act. It is designed to increase the supply of mortgage money available for residential purposes and to reduce the interest rate payable on N.H.A. mortgages. It is a very lengthy bill—

Mr. Baldwin: Did you tell Paul?

Mr. Kaplan: —which is necessarily so because it provides for the conversion of every existing N.H.A. mortgage into a bond mortgage divided into unit bonds as small as $100. Provision is made in the bill for the resulting bond mortgages to be offered to the public at an interest rate of one-half of one per cent less than the rate payable under the mortgage by the borrower. The one-half of one per cent deducted is remuneration to the trustee administering the mortgage.

Under present legislation, only very large financial institutions are eligible to make N.H.A. insured loans. At present rates, N.H.A. mortgages represent a high yield and very secure investment, which would be attractive to many Canadians who are at present unable to invest in them. There is in Canada at present, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, over $16 billion—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kaplan: —invested in bonds—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE REPLACEMENT OF FAULTY APPLIANCE PARTS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-167, to amend the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs Act (electrical appliances).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

[Translation]

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the present bill derives from the fact that, and I quote:

Consumers buy stoves and other electrical household appliances which are manufactured in one part of Canada and sold across the country, as well as their spare parts.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to ensure that within a stated time manufacturers of all electrical appliances and parts shall be responsible for the replacement of individual faulty parts, or alternatively shall give a written statement at the time of sale that no replacements will be available.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

PROPOSALS RESPECTING DISTRIBUTION OF POWERS AND REVENUE SOURCES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of the answers he gave yesterday to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) and remarks attributed to the Prime Minister outside the house to the effect that economic matters, including fiscal questions and the spending power of the federal government, would be discussed at the federal-provincial conference under the heading "Distribution of Powers". Would the Prime Minister say whether the federal government will have any concrete proposal or proposals to make concerning a possible redistribution of powers and/or reallocation of revenue sources?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the continuing committee of officials did not reach the point in their discussions where they were asked to submit propositions on this matter. Because of that we do not intend taking the initiative to raise these matters and to make proposals of our own at this conference as they have not yet been discussed by the continuing committee of officials. But I repeat that we are prepared to discuss any and every aspect of the constitution any time and anywhere with any of the provinces at any meeting they want to suggest. So if they want to make proposals if they want to change the agenda, and if there is general agreement to do so, we will do it, but we insist that this is a constitutional conference and that the constitutional aspect of these problems be discussed. If the provinces want to have another meeting of the ministers of finance, this can also be agreed to, of course. But we believe that these questions can only be fruitfully discussed in the context of the constitution.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would I be justified in concluding from the Prime Minister's remarks that it is the position of the government that the present distribution of powers and allocation of revenue sources are adequate to meet the needs of confederation and the constitution for the time being at least?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I was never one to say that there should be a vastly changed distribution of powers between the two levels of government, but again this is something I am prepared to discuss and on which this government is prepared to argue. If it is felt that certain areas of jurisdiction could be better administered by the provinces than by the federal government, and if this is the desire of the Canadian people, we will amend the constitution in consequence; vice-versa, if it is felt the federal government could better administer certain areas of the constitution which are now provincial, we would want a transfer in that direction.

As regards fiscal resources, the Leader of the Opposition knows that under the present B.N.A. Act both levels of government have nearly universal access to all forms of taxation, both direct and indirect. If it is felt however, that amendments of the text of the constitution are called for, we are prepared to discuss these also.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

He said a while ago that the tax structure allows the provincial governments to draw from the same source as the federal government and that the tax problem would of course be discussed at the conference, and I would like to ask him if the monetary system, which is under federal jurisdiction and has nothing to do with the provinces, is also to be discussed at the federal-provincial conference?

Mr. Trudeau: In regard to the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, I do not want any misunderstanding. I said that for all practical purposes taxation sources are open to both levels of government, and all aspects of indirect taxation are certainly not open to the provinces under our present constitution.

As for the second part of the question, none of the provinces showed its intention to put the monetary problem, as such, on the agenda, and I am not aware that any of the provinces, even Alberta and British-Columbia, are willing to discuss the matter of Social Credit at the conference.

Mr. Caouette: Another question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister be ready to discuss Social Credit at the federal-provincial conference?

[English]

REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES BILL

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the light of the statements made by the premiers of the prairie provinces, and to some extent by Premier Robarts yesterday, with regard to the languages bill, would the Prime Minister consider that the federal government should seek at this conference under a particular item to establish clearly the points of reference with regard to the languages bill that might be made to the Supreme Court in order to remove any and all doubts about its constitutionality?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I believe the language question is very high on the agenda and we certainly would be very anxious to have the provinces explain their point of view on this matter. We commenced from the decision made at last year's constitutional conference to the effect that the report of the B. and B. Commission should be implemented to the extent that it said the French language should, in the rest of Canada, have equivalent rights to those enjoyed by the English language in Quebec. It is on the basis of this recommendation of the federal-provincial conference that we drafted our language bill which, as the house knows, applies only to the federal government and does not at all affect provincial legislation or provincial areas of jurisdiction.

I believe that the constitutional objection is not based on the fact that we would be interfering with provincial jurisdiction but merely on the fact that our bill may go beyond the bounds contained in section 133 of the constitution. We hold, of course, that it does not, and we have made extensive studies of this point in the Department of Justice. But if the provinces want to argue that section 133 does not permit the federal government to implement bilingualism in the way in which the language bill does, we are prepared to have the courts arbitrate on it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not arbitrate.

Mr. Trudeau: To give an opinion on it, to adjudicate on it. But I feel, if section 133 of the constitution does have the effect of preventing the federal government from implementing bilingualism at its level, that we will have to fight very hard to have section 133 amended.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am not contradicting the words of the Prime Minister but my question was whether it would be settled at this conference as to what the points of reference would be. After all, the federal government takes one stand in presenting its views, and so do the provinces, and obviously there is a difference of opinion. Will the points of reference to the Supreme Court be settled at this conference in the light of the stated positions?

Mr. Trudeau: I thank the hon. member for his question and I hope that some attempt will be made to give more precision to that matter. The point of view that the provinces and some of the public have taken, as I understand it, is that the bill in total would be ultra vires of section 133. I hope that the provinces, if they want to raise this question, will indicate what particular section is ultra vires because surely they cannot think that the whole bill is.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question. Would the Prime Minister say what the government's position is with regard to amending the B.N.A. Act? Does he take the position it would affect only the federal government? Does he have to get the consent of the provinces or would he only have to go directly from this house to the imperial parliament for that amendment?

Mr. Trudeau: Is the hon. member's question relevant to the amendment of section 133?

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member knows that the amending procedure is not very precise in our present constitution. However, on this aspect of the question I think he would admit that the 1949 amendment of section 91 (1) precludes the federal government from proceeding on its own to amend finally the rights of the French and English languages as expressed under section 133 of the constitution. Therefore, apart from my own inclination, which has always been toward consultation rather than unilateral action, I think section 91 (1) answers the question.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Could the Prime Minister tell the house whether he has considered or considers the possibility of obviating the Constitution by way of a referendum?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not understand, Mr. Speaker, how it is possible to "obviate" the Constitution by way of a referendum but I am ready to consider the suggestion, if I am given some more explanation.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to remind hon. members that the question period is limited and that several other members wish to put questions on other subjects.

Mr. George Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Sainte-Marie want to put a supplementary question?

Mr. Valade: No, Mr. Speaker, my question refers to another subject.

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INCREASED EXPENDITURES AS A STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister on another subject. Is the reported objective of the Minister of National Defence to persuade, if he can, the Treasury Board to increase defence expenditures to 3 per cent of the gross national product, a statement of government policy? Also, how does the action of the minister fit into the review of foreign and defence policies which we are told is now taking place?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the minister made it quite clear that his remarks should be interpreted in the light of the review of foreign policy and defence policy which is at present under way, and that his suggestion that defence expenditures be tied to a certain percentage of the gross national product, or perhaps the national income, is purely an exploratory idea which he wants to have discussed. It is not government policy.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps I might preface it by saying that the actions of ministers during the period of this review are of some importance to parliament and to the people of Canada. Does the Prime Minister mean that individual members of his cabinet are free not only to express different opinions on policy publicly but also to seek publicly to persuade other ministers to accept their policies, as is reported to be the case in this instance?

Mr. Trudeau: As the house knows, in every government every minister would like to have a greater percentage of the budget applied to his department. There is competition for funds among all ministers; it takes place within the cabinet and it takes place outside of it. This does not distress the government, and we hope it is not causing too much confusion in the ranks of the opposition.

Mr. Lewis: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps I might preface it also by informing the right hon. gentleman—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is getting into the habit of prefacing all his questions by statements; this he cannot do according to the rules.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, when a minister, in answering a question, makes some suggestion about the behaviour of the opposition—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: —it is a very strong temptation to make a comment in return. I am sure Your Honour appreciates the sheer humanity of that position.

NATO—POSSIBILITY OF BILLING FRANCE FOR MILITARY INSTALLATIONS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Is it the intention of the Prime Minister or the Canadian government to follow the example of the American government and send a bill to the French government for Canadian equipment left in France after the withdrawal of NATO troops in compliance with orders given by the French government?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we had not considered that additional source of revenue, but we could perhaps think about that when the province of Quebec sends a bill to the French government for the Quebec flag provided to the Quebec delegation in Kinshasa.

[English]

EXTERNAL AID

POSSIBILITY OF REACHING UNITED NATIONS OBJECTIVE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): A further supplementary for the Prime Minister on the same subject—it is not a question of being confused but of understanding exactly what is taking place. Would the right hon. gentleman inform the house whether, in view of the fact that the estimates tabled today still leave Canada's foreign aid much below 1 per cent of the gross national product, any member of the cabinet or of the government as a whole is setting a target date for reaching the United Nations' objective of 1 per cent?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member knows that the subject of foreign aid also forms part of the review of our defence and external policies. The government is not yet in a position to state what increases may be made or at what rate this 1 per cent figure will be reached. In the meantime, I am sure various ministers and various members on the government side will be promoting more foreign aid, while others will be promoting different objects of expenditure.

An hon. Member: No minister is pressing it.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, I am pressing it, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: There have been a number of supplementary questions on this point and I suggest we move on to another subject.

EXHIBITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBILITY OF CONTINUING "MAN AND HIS WORLD"

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

I would like to know whether he or someone from his cabinet has met Mr. Saulnier, chairman of the executive committee of Montreal, in order to discuss a proposal regarding "Man and His World".

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did meet Mr. Saulnier. In fact I had the pleasure to have lunch with him and we spoke a great deal about politics but very little of "Man and His World".

I can say that Mr. Saulnier did not come to Ottawa mainly in connection, I think, with the future of "Man and His World" but regarding the city of Montreal's debt to the federal government, and vice versa, for the world exhibition. This afternoon, he is to meet Treasury Board officials to discuss that matter which, as the hon. member can see, is rather special and has nothing to do basically with the future of "Man and His World."

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Could the Prime Minister tell us whether the chairman of the executive committee has submitted a specific and concrete proposal to the federal government, in addition to the other subjects discussed in connection with "Man and His World"?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer without speaking out of turn, because it is for the chairman of the Montreal executive committee to state the reason of his visit but essentially once again, his specific proposal has nothing to do with the future of "Man and His World" but rather with the liquidation of the past. As for the future, I leave it to him to speak about it.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Since the Prime Minister has met Mr. Saulnier, is he confident that a solution will soon be found to settle the problem of "Man and His World"?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am confident that a solution will soon be found to settle the problem of man and his world.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HIGHWAY SAFETY

REQUIREMENT AS TO HEIGHT OF REAR BUMPERS ON TRUCKS

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): I have a question for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister take the necessary action to require all trucks to be equipped with rear bumpers low enough to prevent cars from going underneath them in a rear-end collision?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether this matter comes within the administrative responsibility of the federal Minister of Transport. In any case, I suggest this is the type of question which might be placed on the order paper.

THE MINISTRY

PUBLIC DISCUSSION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY BY MINISTERS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister arising from his statement with regard to discussions by ministers of government policy outside the cabinet. Would the Prime Minister kindly inform the house where he draws the line as to which policies may be debated in public and which must be debated in cabinet, with the press excluded?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I believe the theory should be quite simple to state, Mr. Speaker. A decision which has become government policy is not debatable by ministers. All of them are responsible for the decision and all of them must abide by it or else withdraw from the cabinet.

However, regarding policies that are in the formative stage, regarding priorities that the government will have to decide upon in the future, regarding the long-term orientation of the country and regarding planning in general over the next three, seven or 11 years, ministers and all members of the government party are encouraged to discuss, not only in the house but in the country, all kinds of new ideas that will be conducive to the progress and dynamic future of this country.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Supplementary to that, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister could advise us at what stage the confidentiality of cabinet sessions enters into the picture when formulation of policy is being discussed after a debate outside the cabinet?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that this type of discussion is highly academic and philosophical, and I am not sure that it is the type of debate we should have during the question period.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): With the greatest deference, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister himself put the question in issue, and as a Privy Councillor I would ask for an explanation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think I should remind the hon. member that it was he who put the question at issue by his question. I doubt that the matter should be pursued by inviting the Prime Minister to make another academic or general philosophical statement in answer to this type of question.

AIR TRANSPORT

IMPLEMENTATION OF REGIONAL AIR POLICY

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can the minister tell the house whether the Canadian Transport Commission is proceeding with plans to implement the provisions of the government's two year old regional air policy in areas of Canada other than British Columbia? I ask the question not only in view of developments in British Columbia which took place recently but also in view of the minister's indication that the government is actively studying the possibility of a merger between Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first part of the question, this is a matter of continuing concern. There are now some rays of light on the horizon, including the one just referred to by my hon. friend.

In reply to the second part of the question, I think I answered it in the house a day or two ago.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MALNUTRITION IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES RESERVATIONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether the minister for Indian affairs is now in a position to answer the question I asked the other day with particular reference to the Indians in the La Biche area of Saskatchewan, and also Indians elsewhere in reserves who, because of the very severe and inclement weather, find themselves unable to have for themselves the ordinary things of life, with the result that youngsters have to be kept from school.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I made inquiries following the question put by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), and I was informed that in La Loche, Saskatchewan, out of 800 people, only 100 are registered Indians.

In December and January, the 45 Indian families received social welfare payments according to their needs. Moreover, the department gave each of those families the necessary equipment for trapping and provided transportation for eight families to the working site. In addition, we established a special residential building program and gave special assistance to enable some Indians to do commercial fishing. We also took the necessary steps to inform the Saskatchewan government of the matter raised by the right hon. member and three officials of the department left this week for the northern region of those provinces to see what the situation is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I again ask the minister to look further into this question? Otherwise, unless action is taken that is effective many of these Indian people who have been law-abiding will join the mainstream of civil disobedience.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the conditions of Indians in La Loche, I am sure there is nothing abnormal at this moment. As for the Metis population, I am sorry to say that I have no jurisdiction on that matter.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

ACCIDENTS INVOLVING TRUCKS OPERATED INTERPROVINCIALLY

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport a question concerning the increasing number of highway accidents across the country involving interprovincially operated trucks. What steps are being taken at the federal level to meet this particular traffic hazard?

Mr. Speaker: The question asked by the hon. member is very wide in scope and requires a statement that should normally be made on motions. I suggest to the hon. member that the question cannot be asked in this form at this time.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR RECOMMENDATIONS FOLLOWING TASK FORCE REPORT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Yesterday the Prime Minister told the house that the minister was preparing a document for submission to the cabinet setting out his urgent recommendations arising out of the report of the task force on housing. Could the minister tell the house how soon he expects to be able to present this memorandum to his colleagues?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of information that is not normally provided to the house, but I can say to my hon. friend that I hope it can be done without delay.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, of which I have given the minister notice. Has the government adopted the public housing policies set forth in that paper, or will those projects that are now in the pipe line, to use his word of Friday, be completed?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, no decisions have yet been taken. In any event it is very difficult to generalize because all of the projects are at different stages. However, the government will be considering policy in respect of these matters and will decide what changes, if any, are to be made in the present policy.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

DESTRUCTION THROUGH OIL SEEPAGE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources but because of his regrettable absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the seepage of oil over vast areas of the Pacific Ocean because of a leak in a well on the ocean floor, will the Prime Minister indicate whether certain safeguards are required from oil companies when permits are granted for offshore drilling on the Atlantic coast in order to prevent a similar occurrence on the east coast which could be destructive of our deep-sea fishing industry?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take notice of the question. I should like to inform the house that, in view of the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will unfortunately be away from the house for a few months because of illness, an order in council was passed this morning appointing the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan acting minister during this period. I should appreciate it if in future questions were addressed to him as he will have responsibility for that department.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REMOVAL OF QUOTA DISCREPANCIES

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the difficult wheat marketing situation, is it the intention of the government to remove the discrepancies that exist between delivery points in regard to the quotas allotted thereto? Many places are still on a unit quota while others are on a two, three or even four bushel quota. Is it the intention of the government to equalize this situation as soon as possible?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the Wheat Board makes every reasonable effort during the course of the year to give the maximum amount of equalization, but at the present time, as hon. members opposite should of course particularly appreciate, it does become very important on occasion to unbalance the quotas in order to provide for the delivery of the appropriate amount of grain to the appropriate spots.

Mr. Horner: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is a well understood practice that grain for export must be either at the Lakehead or the Vancouver terminal. In southern Alberta and southern Saskatchewan much grain was harvested dry. Deliveries over most C.P.R. lines are based on a three bushel quota whereas those on many C.N. lines are based on a one bushel quota.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member please ask a question.

Mr. Horner: My question is this, Mr. Speaker. Quotas were allotted because there is a need to bring certain types of grain to the terminals. Why, therefore, is there this discrepancy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is an argument rather than a question.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING FIVE DAY DELIVERY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Can he advise of any progress being made in his discussions with the unions regarding the dispute over five day delivery?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, there is not very much dispute over the five day week. What discussions are going on relate to other changes taking place in the post office. I spent over an hour and a half with union representatives this morning and I expect to see them again later in the week.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If there is no dispute, may I ask the minister why an order went out from him or his deputy minister to the effect that representatives of the postal unions should not display on the walls of various post office premises reports of complaints by postal employees concerning the five day week? Why was that order given? Is there not free speech among postal employees?

Mr. Kierans: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal of free speech. During the last weeks there has been a great deal of free speech among postal employees. At one time union representatives wanted to distribute a bulletin, to which the right hon. member has referred, which gave directions to employees of the post office that I considered to be within the purview of management and not within the purview of the union. At that time I gave instructions that these bulletins were not to be posted. I should like to make it clear that the unions are not opposed to the five day week but there are a number of other changes they are questioning. We are considering their point of view and accepting many of their suggestions. I am confident that by the end of this week all our differences will have been satisfactorily settled.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that in the estimates he tabled today there are substantial increases for the various superannuation accounts, may I ask whether any of these moneys will be used to increase the pensions of civil servants already retired? If not, will other funds be found for that purpose?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the sums shown in the estimates request with respect to superannuation accounts relate to the sums needed to make up actuarial deficiencies and are not for the purpose the hon. gentleman mentioned. I reget to say that as yet no decision has been taken to make additional funds available to superannuates.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the President of the Treasury Board aware of the fact that in the United Kingdom arrangements have been made to increase the pensions of retired civil servants on April 1, for the seventh time? Will he study this and see—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AIRPORTS

QUEBEC—LOCATION OF INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Is he in a position to advise us where the negotiations being carried out between the officials of his department and the government of Quebec stand at this time, in connection with the site of the future international airport?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there will be at least one further meeting before any final decision is taken. My hon. friend can therefore conclude that the negotiations continue.

TRANSPORT

RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT—PUBLICATION OF COSTING ORDER

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of widespread concern about pending hearings on rail branch line abandonments, can the minister inform the house when the long overdue costing order will be published by the railway transport committee?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall whether the order has been made public. In any event, I shall be glad to refer my hon. friend's question to the Canadian Transport Commission.

IMMIGRATION

HONG KONG—DELAY IN PROCESSING APPLICATIONS

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of what appears to be an unnecessarily long delay experienced by applicants seeking admission to Canada at the Hong Kong immigration office, would the government consider taking steps to make its operations there more efficient so that prospective immigrants can be admitted more expeditiously?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. gentleman is not asking a question but making a representation. I assume it has been noted.

ARMED FORCES SERVICE BY U.S. IMMIGRANTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has his department issued a directive to examining officers instructing them to ask prospective landed immigrants from the United States whether they are currently in the armed forces? If the answer is in the affirmative, are the instructions to officials at border points to delay or deport such United States citizens wishing to enter Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the directive I think my hon. friend refers to was sent out last July. Its purpose was not to alter the practice that had been in operation until then but merely to clarify the operation of that practice.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it true that last week in Toronto an officer of the department asked a prospective immigrant to testify under oath about his armed forces service and to say whether he held desertion to be a crime?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should not ask the minister to confirm or deny a statement made in this way.

AIR TRANSPORT

STATEMENT BY MEMBER AS TO INFLATED FARES

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will he inform himself of certain facts and investigate the very serious charges relating to inflated air line fares in western Canada made by the Liberal member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Harries)?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, serious charges have been made by a member belonging to the minister's party. They were made not in the house but outside. Surely the minister must take cognizance of those charges and conduct an inquiry. Will he undertake to do so in order that the truth may be ascertained for the benefit of Canadians generally and the people of western Canada in particular?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to make sure that the representations made first from this side of the house and now from the opposition are brought to the attention of the Canadian Transport Commission which is responsible for approving air fares in Canada.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—EXPANSION OF MALTON FACILITIES

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In the government's search for a new location for an international airport near Toronto, arising out of the need to expand facilities at Malton, has consideration been given to the building of an airport extending out into lake Ontario that would supplement the facilities at Malton? Such an airport would be immediately adjacent to downtown Toronto and would not be near residential property. Therefore no resident could complain of noise or pollution.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making a submission to the minister similar to other submissions made by other hon. members. I would think the matter could be allowed to rest there.

Mr. McKinley: With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, a number of similar questions have been asked about airports during the last three months and have been allowed. Many of those questions had to do with an airport to serve Toronto. If the minister was granted leave to answer those questions, why can he not answer my question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I know the hon. member has asked a question but we must hold the line to some extent. I realize that some hon. members will feel constrained to ask questions relating to their particular regions, but very little can be achieved this way, I suggest. That is why I suggest that perhaps the hon. member's question ought to be placed on the order paper. However, if the hon. member wishes to discuss the matter he has raised, he may do so at the time of adjournment.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—ANNOUNCEMENT OF POLICY BEFORE MINISTERIAL MEETING

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask whether the government's policy on NATO and our membership in NATO or otherwise will be determined and announced prior to the NATO ministerial meeting in April?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is the deadline we have very much in mind. We shall try to meet it.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the event that deadline is not met, does the government intend to include the Postmaster General among its representatives so that the views of the Postmaster General and the government may be adequately presented to NATO?

Mr. Trudeau: It sounds like a very good idea, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether we can include as well some members from the opposition because there is quite a variety of opinions on the other side.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I must bring to the attention of hon. members that the question period has expired. I know that a number of members who are anxious to ask questions have not had an opportunity to do so. I have made a note of the situation. Perhaps they can be given priority tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Chrétien: I have a question to answer, Mr. Speaker, and I will not be in the house tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister is seeking unanimous agreement of the house to answer a question. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Simpson: Could the minister not get a special dispensation from the Prime Minister to be in the house tomorrow?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow afternoon I have to work in my office.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BUFFALO NARROWS, SASK.—ACTS OF VIOLENCE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Dauphin asked last Friday a question concerning the locality of Buffalo Narrows.

Buffalo Narrows is not an Indian reservation, but a locality whose inhabitants include mainly Metis and non-Indians. Only three Indian families live there, and they settled down there of their own will. It comes under the jurisdiction of the province of Saskatchewan and the Premier of that province has indicated that his government is to conduct an inquiry on the conditions prevailing in that locality as soon as a full police report has been received on the acts of violence which broke out there lately. No Indian was involved in those incidents.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

AMENDMENT PROVIDING EMERGENCY PAYMENTS TO MEET DRYING COSTS

The house resumed, from Friday, January 31, consideration of the motion of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) for the second reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole of Bill C-162, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, this additional cash advance to assist in drying damp grain is another indication that the government failed to recognize the problem which began to develop last fall. It failed to bring forth measures soon enough in order to alleviate the difficulty which was apparent as early as last October. The government has now made a belated effort to shift the responsibility for drying the grain from the terminals which have customarily done the drying for the farmers.

The problem of damp grain arose in 1959 and again since that time. Mr. McNamara, the head of the Wheat Board, has said until very recently in any event that farmers must use a great deal of caution in the use of driers on their farms because of the danger of burning or cooking the wheat which would ruin the protein content and make it lower than our export standards. In the last few weeks the Wheat Board has published full-page ads in weekly papers advising farmers that they should dry and not fry their wheat. The government is encouraging the farmers to dry their grain rather than consolidate it and have it dried commercially either at the terminals or on the prairies. It has said it will give the farmer a cash advance of 10 cents a bushel, but it is not giving the farmers anything but the interest. That is all. The bill is not clear on the point whether the cash advance is over and above the allowable six bushel quota cash advance which many farmers may have at the present time. If it is, it is still not enough.

Debate regarding the damp grain has arisen in the house from time to time throughout the winter. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) in his last speech scolded the opposition for attempting to make headlines. He said that the net effect of debating this question in the house has been very detrimental to the grain trade generally. Mr. McNamara held a press conference in Winnipeg and stated there were 800 million bushels of damp grain on the prairies, including wheat, oats and barley. He stated the terminals could not possibly dry this amount and it would have to be done by the farmers. Because of that press conference debate was initiated on the matter. If there was any detrimental effect on Canada's grain trade it was caused as much by that action as by any action in this house.

In previous debates on this subject the Minister of Agriculture suggested that the opposition had not offered concrete suggestions. We have made suggestions, and had they been acted upon soon enough perhaps this bill would not have been necessary. Some time ago the Alberta Department of Agriculture stated that if more grain was not dried on the farms there would be an estimated $36 million loss to the farmers of Alberta because of the prospect of spoilage of damp grain this spring. On a previous occasion I suggested that the tariff on commercial driers ought to be removed. This suggestion was promptly accepted by the government. I suggested also that the government should ascertain through the municipalities where the largest number of driers were located which were not being used, find out where the largest amount of damp grain was located and then get the two together. I suggest the government should pay the transportation costs for the movement of driers. These driers should be operated by skilled people so that the protein content of the grain would not be endangered by frying rather than drying. The drying system has become a hit and miss affair.

From time to time we read in the weekly papers of one government or another, and in particular the premier of Saskatchewan, having stated that only half of the driers on the prairies are being used. I say to the minister neither that he nor the government made any real attempt to have the unused driers moved to where the damp grain is located. The minister never offered a subsidy or mileage payment or in fact any payment at all to ensure that the facilities already on the prairies would be used to capacity.

Additional interest free money has been offered in the hope the farmers will dry their own grain. The bill states that the grain must be damp. However, the minister did not say that it must necessarily be damp. How will the farmer's wheat be inspected to determine the moisture content and decide whether it is damp or dry? As I understand the terms of the bill it would be very easy for a farmer to collect the extra $600. If I am wrong the minister can correct me. Unless the damp grain is actually inspected it will be very difficult to prove that a farmer is not in fact getting an additional $600 plus his six bushel quota and the $6,000 cash advance already made to him.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: Do you want it to be more difficult?

Mr. Horner: The Minister of Agriculture asks whether I want it to be more difficult. All I am trying to do is to solicit information from him and from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on how the provisions of the bill will be applied to farmers. If the minister suggests he wants to make it more difficult—

Mr. Olson: No, you did.

Mr. Horner: I made no such suggestion at all. I said that in many cases this bill will allow farmers to collect $600, over and above the six bushel quota they enjoy and over and above the cash advances already made to them to a maximum of $6,000, unless the government appoints somebody to inspect the grain to see whether or not it is damp or tough and, when the grain finally has been delivered, whether or not it has been dried.

I say to the minister that in effect this bill is too little and too late. Of the 800 million bushels of damp grain on the prairies only about 200 million bushels have been dried. The terminal elevators at Vancouver and the Lakehead have cut off any further shipments of damp grain to them. They have all the damp grain they can possibly dry between now and spring. Surely the government should bring in measures such as I suggested previously to move large commercial dryers into pockets where damp grain exists and have that grain dried on a commercial basis. To some extent this is now being done by the elevator companies but they have only a moral obligation to do so. They have been given no financial encouragement whatsoever. They are under a moral obligation only to help the grain trade and try to satisfy their customers.

A little over a week ago we had an emergency debate in this house on the grain stituation. The government stated that the biggest problem was the weather. Now we have milder weather on the prairies. Will this alleviate the situation?

Mr. Olson: Certainly.

Mr. Horner: It is doubtful. We were told that approximately 360,000 box cars were being handled monthly at Vancouver, and now we are told that the port of Vancouver will have to handle up to 800,000 box cars in February in order to meet customer demands. What changes does the government propose to make this feasible? Is it going to provide 800,000 box cars of damp grain, dry grain, tough grain, or what class of grain? Certainly it would be dry grain under the provisions of this bill.

At no time has the Alberta Wheat Pool elevator at the port of Vancouver been plugged. It could have been taking grain all this time. What was the trouble? During the question period today I tried to elicit information from the minister as to why points in southern Saskatchewan and southern Alberta have a three or four bushel quota while points in northern Alberta, where most of the damp grain was grown, in some cases are on a unit or one bushel quota. Why is there this discrepancy between the two areas?

In my view the biggest problem lies with the railroads and their handling of damp grain. Some years ago there was a similar problem at the Lakehead and a traffic coordinator was appointed. I am thinking of the fall of 1965. Since then the idea of a coordinator has been dropped. Now a new Grains Council is being established. I did not have a copy of the minister's statement this afternoon when he announced that the terms of reference of the new Grains Council will give it power to inquire into all facets of the grain trade. However, I point out that the Grains Council is to meet only twice a year. The minister announced that one meeting was held in Winnipeg on February 3. He did not tell us when the next meeting is going to take place. I hope it will be before October or November, 1969.

The minister did not say what powers the council would have. He did not say whether it would do research into improved drying methods. He did not say who would finance the Grains Council. It looks to me as if it is another body which has been established so that ministers can say, when replying to questions in the house: The Grains Council should handle this. We will have the Grains Council look into this. Surely you are not complaining about the people on the Grains Council. No one has complained about the people on the Grains Council.

As I said earlier today, the people appointed to the Grains Council are people who have been involved in the grain business. They are not going to do any more than they have been doing in the past unless they are given power to demand greater service and greater efforts from the C.P.R., the C.N.R. and other bodies. But the chairman of the Grains Council has been given no authority to tell the C.N.R. or the C.P.R.: You have not moved enough box cars to Vancouver; you are not moving the grain fast enough. What effect will the Grains Council really have? It will have the effect of smothering the whole problem, of putting another blanket on the whole problem so that we cannot get at its roots.

At a delivery point in my constituency 214 box cars, I believe, were loaded on January 1, but up until a few days ago those 214 box cars, mainly loaded with No. 2 wheat, were still sitting on the siding. After the emergency debate in the house some of the cars were moved and now there are only 120 still sitting on the siding.

Mr. Whelan: A frozen asset.

Mr. Horner: Somebody says "a frozen asset". A frozen government fits the description better because most of those cars contain dry No. 2 and No. 3 wheat which has been in demand at Vancouver for the past week or ten days. Of the 120 cars still at that rail divisional point 85 are loaded with dry No. 2 and No. 3 wheat. All they need is a locomotive to move them.

We are told that the C.P.R. is renting power units from the United States. Surely to meet the problem of moving 800,000 box cars a month to Vancouver we need something more than just a Grains Council with an over-all blanket approach to everything. We are told that the Grains Council is going to do research, is going to examine the movement of grain and transportation costs, is going to promote exports, is going to review, appraise and make recommendations. If it cannot do more than make recommendations, if it cannot do more than appraise, it will not aid in solving the damp grain problem.

With respect to the 800,000 box cars a month needed at Vancouver, the Alberta Wheat Pool elevator authority has stated that it can take 120 cars a day but the railroads can move only 85 box cars to the elevator. Where is the problem? The Alberta Wheat Pool has one-third of the storage at Vancouver, 7½ million bushels. The total storage capacity at Vancouver is 23 million bushels and at Victoria it is 11 million bushels.

Surely it is not good enough to encourage the farmers to the tune of 10 cents a bushel on another 600 bushels of grain. This bill will enable them to obtain cash and to buy or co-operate with a neighbour to buy a dryer to dry an additional 600 bushels. This is not enough. This will not eliminate the problem. To begin with it is estimated that of the 800 million bushels that were damp 200 million bushels have been dried. Recently the Alberta Department of Agriculture stated that if more grain is not dried in that province the farmers there stand to lose approximately $36 million because of the decay of grain which could conceivably come about with the warmer weather this spring.

We proposed the granting of permits for the movement of damp grain across provincial boundaries. The Minister of Agriculture, who criticizes the opposition for not offering constructive suggestions, said that it was a novel idea and would be considered. That is all we have heard about it. At least the grain trade and the Wheat Board know that damp grain is now moving illegally across interprovincial borders. Dry grain is also moving across and depressing prices to a large extent. While statements have been made about the grain trade in the United States to the effect that in the years ahead wheat will become a very difficult commodity to market, this government has followed an attitude of pessimism. The government has not announced how many bushels it will sell this year. All the minister who is the assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce has stated from time to time is that X number of cars more than last year were moved this year and that X more bushels will be moved this month than were moved last year in the same period. That is not good enough.

The government should renew confidence in the market by putting a stop to the practice of farmers selling their grain at reduced prices. Today the farmers of western Canada have no confidence that the government will in fact sell as much grain as it did last year. They say that if we get rid of the five bushel quota we will, by the looks of things, be lucky. How can you blame the farmers when some of them are still on a unit quota? The minister says that this disparity arises because of the distances involved in getting the grain to the market. This is not the only reason. The disparity this past fall and winter has been greater than ever before. It cannot all be blamed on the damp grain situation. Many of the points which have a quota for damp grain have not been able to take any because there is no movement at all of damp grain.

It is not good enough for the government merely to bring in a bill to encourage farmers to dry a little wheat. In many cases this will encourage the farmer to get $600 in the form of a cash advance whether or not he intends to dry his own grain. I would not blame him for doing that because the government, through its silence, has created a very pessimistic attitude in western Canada. All the government needs to do is to say that it believes 400 million bushels of grain will be sold this year. This will encourage the farmers to dry their wheat and not sell it at reduced prices.

Any feed market operator in Alberta will tell you that he receives calls every day from farmers in Saskatchewan offering to deliver damp grain in Alberta. They want to move it. The Prime Minister tells the farmers of western Canada that they should sell their own wheat, that they own it and if they do not want to sell it the government will take over their farms. I am sure statements of this type do not aid the farmers or create confidence in the government. The assistant minister of trade and commerce knows that such a statement brings about a deterioration in confidence in the agricultural industry and to some extent in the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board.

The other day the Minister of Agriculture said that I was attacking the Minister of Trade and Commerce when I should be attacking the Wheat Board. I have never attacked the Wheat Board. I believe the chairman of that board is doing an admirable job. However, he is faced with a great many handicaps. He has the handicap of a minister who knows nothing about the subject. He has the handicap of a Prime Minister who goes about urging farmers to sell their wheat themselves for less and even take it across interprovincial borders. I suggest that the assistant minister of trade and commerce consult the officials of the Wheat Board. They know that damp grain and dry grain are moving across interprovincial boundaries, and they know it is illegal. They have not prosecuted a case because the Prime Minister told the farmers to sell their wheat any way they could and at any price.

Many farmers today, rather than waiting to take advantage of this bill, are selling their damp grain at 10 cents a bushel less. Anybody in the trade knows that damp grain can be bought for well below a dollar a bushel even after it is delivered over 100 miles away. There is no question but that the government has failed in this regard. It is the duty of the government to create confidence in the financial markets of the country and confidence in the major commodities that are marketed by this country. Yet the government has failed ever since it assumed office to create confidence in the wheat growing and marketing industry. The industry has continued to deteriorate because of statements like those made by the Prime Minister and because we have ministers in charge who have a limited knowledge of the subject.

I am pleased that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is now in Vancouver studying the problem.

Mr. Paproski: It is about time.

Mr. Horner: Yes, as an hon. member points out, it is about time indeed. We have heard a great deal about Roberts Bank and the movement of potash and coal. Is any consideration being given to the building of grain storage facilities at Roberts Bank? Are any facilities being created for the movement of railway cars to that point? We need greater grain drying facilities, particularly at Vancouver.

Someone said earlier in this debate that the grain drying facility at Lethbridge was not operating because it was out of order. Is that a good enough excuse when Alberta farmers are likely to lose $36 million? The government has a $5 million elevator at Lethbridge which is not being used because the grain dryer is out of order. Surely long before this time the government should have had the grain dryer working or should have bought a new one. This is not good enough when we are trying to encourage farmers to dry their own grain by giving them interest-free money which they must pay back. The government should consider the idea put forward by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) the other day in this debate that perhaps an additional $200 would encourage the farmers to rent a dryer and move it on to their farms to dry their grain.

It is not good enough to create a blanket, such as the Canada Grains Council may very well be, give it no authority, and shrug off the responsibility by placing it on the farmers and saying: You dry the grain. The greatest asset of the Canadian wheat trade has been the quality of the wheat sold. It has long been considered one of the best quality wheats on the market. What will this bill do to create a better quality of wheat, or even to ensure that the present quality is maintained? If we had built more drying facilities and paid farmers a bonus to move their grain to drying centres, as was suggested earlier in the debate, it would have been more beneficial to the farmers.

The provisions of this bill are beneficial to the extent that they will allow farmers who have damp grain to obtain a cash advance of $600. I encourage farmers to obtain this advance whether their grain is damp or dry. The provisions of the bill are so unenforceable in this regard that farmers could easily do it. I encourage farmers to make use of these provisions and dry their grain, having taken advantage of the cash advance. However, I assure the minister that the provisions of the bill are not wide enough to save many millions of bushels of grain which may well spoil this spring unless additional assistance is provided for the movement of grain to dryers or the movement of dryers to the grain.

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I was tempted to speak in this debate last Friday but was under the impression that there was agreement to pass the legislation that day and I did not want to deprive opposition spokesmen of the opportunity of speaking. It seems a little strange to me that many hon. members opposite should at the beginning or during their speeches indicate their support of this measure and then proceed to talk about other matters in connection with agriculture and delay its passage. A little delay in the implementation of this emergency cash advance legislation is not really very serious, however. The main thing is that the farmers should know it will be forthcoming before spring. This has been known to most of us ever since the government announced some weeks ago its intention to provide this special form of assistance.

There has been some criticism of this method of providing cash to help farmers pay the cost of drying their grain. Certainly some farmers and farm organizations requested outright cash assistance. This would have been the popular way to do it, and I am sure most people would prefer a grant to a loan if they had a choice. Some farmers in western Canada have been saying, though, that it would be unfair to make cash payments to farmers who had damp grain, giving nothing to those thousands of farmers whose crops were reduced in yield, quality and value by frost, drought or hail. Many farmers with damp grain also have other grain that may have been harvested dry, or has been carried over from last year. Many have livestock and poultry. Very few are destitute and seeking charity.

It has been alleged that by using this method of providing assistance the government is getting off scot-free so far as the unusual, emergency damp grain situation which exists on the prairies is concerned. I point out that these cash advances are interest free to the farmers but not to the government. I ask hon. members to remember that the amount of cash advances was doubled last fall, and with these special advances the government will now be putting up a very substantial sum of money by way of interest and carrying charges on loans, some of which will not be fully repaid for many, many months.

Farmers know this cash advance money will be available shortly. We know, too, that in a few weeks we will receive the final payment for the 1967-1968 crop. We know that the government has not abandoned us. We know that much legislation regarding agriculture has been presented this session. We know that cash advances have been doubled, that farm improvement loans have been reactivated, and more capital has been made available to the Farm Credit Corporation. We know that the government recently put the Wheat Board on a permanent basis. Some $3½ million were spent last year in implementing, for the first time in history, a guaranteed floor price for wheat. We know that in the past crop year, for instance, the federal government picked up between $40 million and $50 million of the cost of storing wheat under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. We know that the government continues to provide hundreds of services to agriculture across Canada, ranging from research to inspection, disease and pest control, right up to outright price support.

We all know it is important to the economy of Canada to do everything possible to ensure that our damp grain does not spoil. It would be a shame if this happened in a world in which there are so many hungry people who need the food we can produce. But it is also extremely important to the economy of each individual farmer who has damp grain to see that he does not lose it. He knows that sooner or later he will sell his grain or feed it, and he is not going to let it be ruined.

I believe that bad weather and snow conditions are the main reasons why some dryers have been idle in recent weeks. It is simply not practical to dry grain outside on the farm when there are sub-zero temperatures. When the weather improves there will be an increase in drying activity, and I am confident that with the assurance of the availability of these special cash advances all farmers will take the necessary steps to preserve their grain and protect their investment in it.

The farmer's cash position could be somewhat improved if in the immediate future something effective were done to speed up delivery of grain to the terminals. On January 22 I asked the government to appoint a transport controller. This has not yet been done. In support of that request. I submit the following quotation from page 1785 of Hansard for May 8, 1967. The quotation is from a report of the Standing Committee on Agriculture on its investigation into grain handling facilities in Canada, and reads as follows:

> The committee is of the opinion that the appointment of a transport expediter during periods of recent stress performed a useful service in facilitating the movement of grain. It is your committee's recommendation that the government give consideration to appointing a transport expediter on a continuing basis.

I still think that if we had had the continuous services of a transport controller or expediter, we would not be experiencing the difficulties that exist at the present time in the movement of grain to the west coast. I believe that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) is at the present time conducting a personal survey of the situation at Vancouver. I trust that everything possible is being done and will be done to make sure that sales are not being lost or our future markets hurt.

The agriculture committee report of May 8, 1967, also recommended the developing of a block system for grouping our country elevators for more efficient handling and shipping of grain. I am happy to note a recent announcement that two such experimental blocks will soon be in operation, one at Medicine Hat, Alberta, and the other at Dauphin, Manitoba. We farmers will watch these experiments very closely. It may well be necessary to inspect, grade and seal grain right on the farm and extend much further the principle of advance payments. There are many other implications of this scheme but perhaps these should be discussed at another time.

Another recommendation contained in the same committee report reads as follows:

> Your committee strongly recommends that the government and Canadian Wheat Board encourage the railway companies to speed up their plans for new track in the Vancouver area, and the improvement of the trackage already there. Your committee feels it would be desirable to co-ordinate all harbour and handling facilities for maximum efficiency.

I doubt very much that this recommendation, which like the others was presumably adopted by parliament, has been carried out to any appreciable degree, if at all. So I again urge the government, the grain trade and the railways to act quickly to overcome one of the main reasons for the farmers' shortage of cash—the grain transportation bottleneck.

Some hon. members made disparaging remarks the other day about the Liberals and their attitude toward agriculture. One reason I am a Liberal is that when I started farming on my own in 1931 in Saskatchewan, the first four or five years of my farming experience were under Conservative governments, both provincial and federal. Those were the dirtiest years of the dirty thirties. I took less than 20 cents a bushel at the elevator for the top grade of wheat, and less than 50 cents for flax. Those were not initial payments; that was the total payment with no final payment to come later. We hear talk now about the $1 a bushel that farmers voluntarily take as being something unthinkable. I am reminding hon. members of some of the things that have happened in years gone by under the Conservative government.

Mr. Horner: Who founded the Wheat Board and what party voted against it?

Mr. Douglas: Another reason I am a Liberal is that the best farming years in the past decade have been since 1963 when the Liberal party came into power. Our overseas exports of wheat are currently about 25 per cent ahead of what they were a year ago, and I am sure that the wheat surplus problem will be overcome and that we farmers can look forward with optimism and with full confidence that agriculture is not and will not be neglected by this government. Let us get on with the job and pass the legislation so that this very desirable assistance will be available to those who need it at the earliest possible date.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate because of the continuing desperate economic situation that our farm families are having to contend with on the prairies at the present time. The fact that we are only now considering legislation to make up to $600 available to each farmer for the purpose of drying his grain is but another indication of the complete muddle in which this government finds itself in regard to western agricultural problems.

Last fall the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) made a tour of southern Manitoba. He was accompanied by two of his political henchmen. After wading around in the soggy fields of southern Manitoba and having his picture taken as the saviour of the situation, he arrived back in Ottawa and told us that things could have been much worse. He was right because they have become much worse, chiefly because there has been no leadership on the part of the government in marshalling grain drying facilities or in co-ordinating our grain handling and transportation problems.

We have three ministers who are more or less responsible for this situation: the Minister of Agriculture who took a look at the fields, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), and the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) from Saskatoon. Since last fall opposition members have been told that everything was under control, that these problems would be looked into or that the government would be discussing them with the railways, the Wheat Board or the grain companies. The three ministers worked on the principle that a soft answer turneth away wrath. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce maintained his charm and his benign smile, which demonstrated the fact that he just did not know what to do. The Minister of Agriculture continued to play politics, at which he is very apt, and the Minister without Portfolio was too new at the job to know what was expected of him. In the meantime the situation at Vancouver reached crisis proportions, unloading problems piled up, supply routes got choked with the wrong grades of grain, and one large cargo which apparently was badly out of condition was shipped to Japan, a situation which should never have been allowed to happen. Ships hung around the harbour for weeks waiting for a berth. Here is what the Ottawa Journal of January 31 had to say:

> By January 15 there were 19 grain carriers around her, some seeking the same cargoes, others after Nos. four and five wheat bound for mainland China.

One ship, the Toyota Maru which arrived on December 11, finally pulled out empty on January 31. The article went on to say:

> To keep the vessel in trim cost about $2,500 a day.

This means that it cost roughly $130,000 to keep that ship in Vancouver harbour waiting for a load of grain.

> Demurrage—funds paid to ships idled due to circumstances beyond their control—will cover about $30,000.

This will be charged against the final payment farmers will get for their grain.

> Captain Kimishima hopes the Canadian Wheat Board, which acts for western Canadian wheat growers, will compensate the owners at the rate of $1,000 a day effective December 31.

That gives us some idea of the real mess with which we have to contend in Vancouver and about which the government does nothing. In fact, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in a speech made in Saskatoon said, after a visit during which he saw grain dryers in operation, that the grain situation in Canada is due to many factors. He cited the damp grain harvested last fall, record crops for three years, high sales and cold weather as the most evident reasons. But he admitted there were other less obvious factors. He said:

> Probably everyone could have done a bit more . . . even me.

We have been trying to tell the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister without Portfolio and the whole government that they should be trying to do more, but they have been leading us down the garden path. We have been doing all we can and we find they have been doing nothing. Surely conditions such as these demand action and not the evasive answers that opposition members have been getting over the last four months. Even the Minister of Agriculture will agree with that.

Mr. Olson: I wonder whether I could ask the hon. gentleman a question? Could he advise us how we could go about giving directives that the weather should be warmer now and that there should be no rain during the harvest season, because these are the major factors involved?

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): If the Minister of Agriculture will have a little patience I will tell him how he could have had the situation in hand months ago. We have had bad weather and rain for years; it is part of the western scene. We do not stay indoors just because of rain or because it happens to be a little cold. I noticed that the minister had become a little soft since he came to Ottawa, but surely not that soft.

Mr. Olson: Neither have the farmers.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): The government should give immediate consideration to the appointment of a transport controller—they should have done so long ago but it is still not too late—who would have authority to co-ordinate the movement of grain in order to meet our export requirements. The three western premiers have made this suggestion in an attempt, as they put it, to prevent any further loss of wheat sales. It is a sensible suggestion.

All this government bumbling has placed the prairie farmer in a very grave economic position. No business can carry on for long in a strait-jacket where, even if it is efficient, sales do not equal expenses. We have already had one year when a six bushel quota still left 50 per cent of the grain on the farms and this year, as the many letters I have received testify, some areas have not even delivered the initial quota.

Cash advances have helped and this legislation extending a cash advance for drying grain will help. But when one considers the expenses for fuel, seed, fertilizer, repairs, taxes, without even mentioning living expenses, mortgage payments and other expenses incurred in the operation, one wonders how much longer farmers are going to be able to carry on.

As one hon. member mentioned a few moments ago, grain drying on the farms is almost at a standstill because it is almost impossible to dry grain in sub-zero weather. This means that if we are to save the 200 million bushels of tough and damp grain on the prairies, all the work will have to be done after the weather improves. To make this possible, the government will have to know where every bushel of out of condition grain is located. It will have to see that grain drying equipment is available at strategic points, and it will have to make available the financial assistance which will be required to do the job, other than the loan of a maximum of $600.

The $200 acreage payment made by the former Conservative government to compensate the farmers for lack of markets other than the Canadian market paid dividends to the nation as a whole. I am sure that one Liberal finance minister can attest to that; he found that revenue from grain sales saved Canada's balance of payments situation on more than one occasion. Indeed, it has contributed to the nation's prosperity year after year.

I should like to point out to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and to members of the government that though successive Liberal governments have repeatedly promised a two-price system for wheat, nothing has been done to implement this promise. One is led to believe that it is just another promise which can be dusted off at election times and conveniently pigeonholed afterward.

The acreage payment program amounting to a dollar per bushel for wheat used for human consumption in Canada was implemented by the Conservative government when the situation on the prairies was almost identical to that which exists today—huge surpluses and falling markets. In those days the Liberals described the payment as "peanuts", but it did help, if only by showing our farm people that the government of the day understood the seriousness of the situation and was prepared to use the resources of the nation to avert a disastrous situation for agriculture. If offers of assistance are any criteria, there has been no such realization of the seriousness of the situation in western Canada by the present government. Certainly there has been no imaginative leadership to help solve the problems we face in agriculture today.

While prices and wages in industry have risen appreciably over the last decade, prices of farm products have remained almost static. I am sure the Canadian consumer does not expect the hard-pressed western farmer to subsidize the cost of his bread. But because bread is a staple food, used particularly by families on low incomes, I still think it would be good business for the government to give consideration to meeting the difference out of the consolidated revenue fund. Payment of the domestic price could be made on the initial quota and the amount to be paid out would be calculated on the basis of the total amount used in Canada for human consumption. That is how simple it would be to initiate the two-price system. If the government fails to do something in this regard, the taxpayers of Canada are apt to find out, when the family farmer is forced to quit, that the corporate farms which will be replacing him are not too interested in keeping Canada a cheap basic food nation.

In closing let me say that if the government fails to respond to the pleas of western farm organizations and western members to initiate a program immediately to help preserve agriculture as a viable industry, the whole nation will be the loser and the industry itself will suffer irreparable damage.

I again ask the Prime Minister to appoint a transport controller, one who is familiar with the situation as it exists today, even if on a temporary basis only until the problem is in hand.

An hon. Member: With unlimited power.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Right. Further, I join with my hon. friend from Swift Current-Maple Creek in asking the Prime Minister to appoint one minister to be responsible for the Wheat Board and for the over-all marketing of our grain—one through whom the transport controller could report to parliament. We cannot expect a troika of ministers, each deferring to the other, without clear authority, to get us out of the grain-handling mess brought about by the government's bungling and incompetence.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, this bill is a pretence and a farce. In my view it is a substitute for action. It is one more illustration of the government's inability and unwillingness to take effective steps to deal with a crisis which is much more than a farm crisis or a western crisis. What we face here is a national crisis which has already taken its toll and will cost the Canadian economy much more if effective measures are not taken immediately.

Let me give the house some examples of the effect of this situation to date on various sectors of the Canadian economy. Take a look at retail sales in Saskatchewan. In the most recent six months for which figures are available, that is, from May to October, a period which predates the immediate crisis, retail sales in Saskatchewan amounted to $540.5 million, a drop of about $7.6 million compared with the figure for the same six months in 1967. If one takes into account the inflationary factor of approximately 4 per cent it means that the comparable figure for 1967 would be about $570 million, which would produce an effective drop in retail sales of some $30 million or over 5 per cent. There is little doubt, I believe, that this decline in retail sales will continue in the province, with an adverse effect both on the economy of Saskatchewan and on the economy of Canada as a whole. I suggest that all hon. members in this house should be concerned about the consequences of this situation.

As another example I draw attention to the situation in which auto dealers in Regina find themselves. They have experienced a decline of between 40 and 50 per cent in their car sales compared with a year ago. This, of course, has a direct effect on the automobile industry and will be of immediate concern to hon. members from Windsor, Oshawa, Hamilton and Oakville. Sales of farm equipment are also falling considerably below those of a year ago and this, in turn, has a serious effect upon the farm machinery industry.

When he introduced this bill on Friday the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) really had very little to say. I note, however, that he did use the following words:

> I therefore urge hon. members to join in the enactment of this legislation to make available to farmers who need this additional cash, interest free, the amount they need in the shortest possible time.

He was urging the greatest speed in getting this legislation through the house. It seems to me it takes a great deal of nerve to urge speed on the house in dealing with the legislation when one recalls that the announcement that the measure would be introduced was first made on December 24 and that the earliest date by which the government could bring it before the house was January 31. I do not think the government has any cause to talk to anyone else about the need for speed in dealing with this problem.

It would seem to me that either the minister found little to say in favour of the bill when he opened this debate, in which case I can sympathize with him, or he did not consider that there was a cash shortage on the prairies such as to make the legislation really necessary. I should like to hear a forthright statement on the minister's views in this connection. The Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt, represents an important agricultural area. I should like to know whether he agrees that there is a cash shortage in western Canada at the present time in agricultural circles. I note his statement as reported in Hansard for January 31 at page 4996:

> The existing drying facilities in the terminals will not be able to dry more than a limited amount of the grain involved. As a result, there is a significant burden on the farmers of this region to dry the grain themselves. They are proceeding in this direction but in some cases the shortage of ready cash and a credit situation in which they find themselves may be impeding the drying operation.

Note the "may" in the minister's statement. If these are the real feelings of the minister it seems to me that a proposition like that is a rather shaky basis on which to introduce legislation in the house. I think that both members and the people in western Canada would also like to know whether or not the minister agrees that there is an unwillingness to borrow money to cope with the present situation and to carry on grain drying operations, and whether or not he agrees that this stems from an awareness on the part of farmers of the seriousness of the quota situation and that in coming months they will have a great deal of difficulty finding the necessary ability to repay any loans extended to them, even though they may be interest free.

I would also ask the minister whether he can muster sufficient support from his colleagues to ensure adequate policies to deal with the situation or, as I asked him previously, is he not convinced that there is a need for further action? It seems to me that some of the ministers who have been concerned with the western situation have been so entranced with and mesmerized by the business of setting up the Canada Grains Council that they have given the current crisis the minimum of attention.

The Minister without Portfolio, who told his constituents both before and after the election that he would go to eastern Canada and tell the people and the government about western farm problems, has given a performance that I suggest has been an abysmal failure. If the minister has not been able to persuade his colleagues of the scope and nature of the crisis that is facing western Canada, it seems to me that this indicates one of three things. First of all, it could mean that he does not understand the situation. Second, it could mean that he cannot persuade his colleagues of the seriousness of the situation. Third, it could mean that the government will not be persuaded. I should like to know which it is. Since I have known the minister personally for a long time I should like to give him the benefit of the doubt and suggest that it is the third possibility, but we would all like to hear what is the real answer.

The present grain situation is a national crisis. Today I talked to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) who has just returned from the city of Vancouver, and the hon. lady reported that in her own constituency she found a great deal of concern about this situation. In her constituency there are a great many stevedores, people working in the port of Vancouver, grain handlers, railway workers and a whole host of people who are very concerned with the movement of grain as a daily occupation.

I have also given examples of the effect this situation has on retail trade and the effect it will have on industry in other parts of Canada. What has been the response of the government to this situation? I think the government has demonstrated the greatest combination of callousness, indifference and mismanagement ever witnessed in western Canada. Can the government not see the effect that this situation is having on the national economy or on many people in one of the major regions of Canada, which may result in people being pushed off farms unless a solution is found to the immediate crisis as well as to the long-range problems?

This bill is supposedly designed to help farmers dry grain. Over the past several months there have been contradictions in the attitude and policy of the government. First of all, the government would not recognize that there was a problem. Some members on this side of the house asked questions about the situation within a few days of the commencement of the session on September 12, but the government indicated that there really was no problem, that it would see how the harvest came along, that everything was under control.

Several weeks later, when it was finally recognized that there was a problem, we heard that there would be a three bushel over-delivery quota for tough and damp grain, and this was introduced in one step. I think it is now recognized by all people concerned and interested that the manner in which this over-delivery quota was introduced, not the fact that there was an over-delivery quota, but the manner and way in which it was introduced, has contributed substantially to the present problem and to some inequities that exist with respect to it.

After the government recognized that there was a problem the farmers were told they would have to dry their own grain. At the same time no help was offered to dry the grain and there was no co-ordination. It seems to me that this was the first step that should have been taken. I have witnessed previous crisis situations where there was a joint co-operative effort on the part of the federal and provincial governments, the grain industry, farm organizations and the farmers themselves which resulted in a program being worked out to deal with the problem that was confronting them. We now have belated recognition of this problem and some very inadequate steps have been taken as a gesture to meet a crisis that is now acknowledged.

When farmers hauled their grain to the elevators after the introduction of the over-delivery quota, it was not moved fast enough to the terminals. Many terminals had to operate at below capacity for some time. Now, of course, they are plugged with damp and tough grain in many cases. There were delays in drying all the way along the line. Even when we received export orders, tough and damp grain kept coming to the terminals.

I for one have always believed that one of the advantages of the cash advance system was that it would provide more flexibility for the Wheat Board, when dealing with the business under its jursidiction, to move grain in such a way as to take the best possible advantage of market conditions. But all the way along the piece we have had bottlenecks, from farm to elevator, to the railways, and to the terminals. I suppose it is possible that the next bottleneck will be in shipping. Certainly that is going to happen if ships continue to leave the port of Vancouver at the rate they have over the past several days.

It seems to me that if the government is going to pursue a policy of drying grain on farms it would surely be logical in following up that policy to provide cash grants as assistance and as an incentive in order to show that the government really means business. In this regard a number of proposals have been made, as the minister will be aware. For example, the Saskatchewan Federation of Agriculture and the western conference of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture proposed cash assistance grants of up to five cents a bushel with a $200 maximum. Some of the friends of the minister in the Saskatchewan government had suggested six cents a bushel as a cash grant. Other farm organizations, such as the National Farmers Union, were proposing assistance of 12 cents a bushel.

Surely the government would have been able to work out an equitable scheme in conjunction with the provincial governments and the authorities concerned. This would have been an effective support and stimulus for the policy that we are urging upon farmers. As was suggested the other day, an investment of some $20 million to $30 million would be repaid ten times over and would also benefit the national economy. Instead we have had inaction, confusion and contradictory policies.

It seems to me that policies and programs to deal with grain drying now under consideration in this bill are only part of a larger picture and must be considered in a context that involves harvesting, handling, transport and export of wheat. The problems that have been created through government policies, or lack of policies, have been reflected all down the line. For example, to follow up this policy of farm drying of grain, why does the government not follow through with effective policies that will co-ordinate grain movement and handling all the way to the point of export?

Experience has shown that elevator companies do not like to keep damp grain. There has been no co-ordination with elevator companies and no control over them. Their operations have not been regulated and no penalty has been imposed if they do not ship grain as ordered. They have taken damp and tough grain thinking they would be able to ship it out shortly after receiving it. I know that elevator companies which have received shipping orders for No. 2 wheat have filled those orders with damp and tough grain. I think the minister is aware that is so. Certainly elevator companies are not required to adhere strictly to shipping orders given to them. Some of the difficulties with wheat have arisen from our lack of control over elevators and from lack of co-ordination with elevator companies.

There has been a great deal of uncertainty and apprehension in western farm circles. Some coming from the rural areas of my constituency report they have never seen the people of the rural communities there so despondent and dejected as in the last few months. It is obvious we must co-ordinate and control activities in the grain industry. We on this side of the house have been urging since last October the appointment of a transport controller. I was happy to hear the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) urge the appointment of a transport controller. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has argued against this proposal a number of times, suggesting that a grain transport committee would serve as a better alternative. From our past experience we have found that controllers are effective in speeding up the movement of grain and dealing with specific situations at particular times.

I am glad to see in today's newspapers that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is today looking into the difficulties at Vancouver. His is a rather late conversion; all the same I am glad he is looking into the matter. I hope that his action will be followed by other action which has been recommended today and on many other occasions.

The situation at Vancouver is relevant to the present debate. Damp and tough grain has plugged up the terminals at Vancouver. There is no excuse for that situation. Orders were given last fall that priority must be given for the shipment of damp and tough grain. Late in November new export orders for wheat were received from Japan. It seems only logical that if grain movements had been adequately controlled and co-ordinated export wheat would have received shipping priority.

We ought to have made certain that wheat required to fill export orders was available at export points. I understand, in fact, that the Canadian Wheat Board issued such orders on December 5. I also understand that the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and the Alberta Wheat Pool adhered to these instructions for the most part. Nevertheless some other elevator companies continued shipping damp and tough grain, their idea being to get it out of their systems, out of country elevators where it constituted a serious problem. Because this happened we experienced a bottleneck in grain movements. That bottleneck has been particularly serious in Vancouver. The situation has been brought on as a result of government inaction. I say that because the government failed to deal with conditions which developed last fall.

I know that on a number of occasions the government has made excuses. First it hid behind the excuse that weather was a problem. Of course, no one can control the weather. The weather has made the movement of grain difficult. May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that I have had some experience in railway operations, having been employed on the railways for several years. Severe weather conditions are experienced by our western population every winter and it is often necessary to cut back on train service and shorten trains. These are normal operating conditions and ought to be taken into account. At the same time, I understand that weather conditions this winter were somewhat worse than most winters.

May I also point out that the government knew about the Japanese export order and knew it had been confirmed long before the severe spell of winter weather set in. If the government had wanted to take effective action it ought to have made certain that wheat was in export position long before the bitterly cold weather set in some weeks ago.

Members of the government have also pointed out that during the past several weeks we have increased export sales of wheat. In particular, we made a large sale of wheat to Japan during November. We give the Canadian Wheat Board full credit for its actions. I submit it is incumbent on the government, particularly since it is involved in various phases of the wheat situation, to support the Wheat Board. I think we all know that the railways do not place priority on the shipment of grain unless required to do so by the authorities. Most people in western Canada know this. I note, however, that the other day there was an announcement in the house that a special shipment of wheat was to go from Moose Jaw to the terminal at Vancouver. That is commendable although, goodness knows, there are serious problems connected with the build-up of shipping in Vancouver harbour.

The government has attempted to hide behind the skirts of the Canadian Wheat Board. We have indicated clearly that we support the actions of the Canadian Wheat Board and we do not wish members of the Wheat Board to be blamed for any shortcomings attributable to the government. Members of the government are accountable for our present difficulties.

Mr. Woolliams: You can say that again.

Mr. Burton: Canadians generally are concerned about our difficulties, and well they might be. The Prime Minister ought to be concerned, as should his ministers. We have been disturbed by statements attributed to the Prime Minister which show he is not taking much interest in the subject of grain. We have also been disturbed by the actions of his ministers.

I wish to make it clear that I do not question the general capability or sincerity of the ministers involved in grain matters. But we do need effective action on the part of the government to deal with specific problems, and the government generally has demonstrated that it cannot cope with our problems. Western Canada and all of Canada will hold the Prime Minister, the ministers involved and the Liberal government accountable for their actions.

In order that problems facing our western community may be adequately dealt with we urge the appointment of a grain movement co-ordinator or transport controller who would co-ordinate the movement of wheat to terminals and on to ships. Second, we recommend that there be direct cash payments to farmers for grain drying. I suggest that about 10 cents per bushel might deal with the present situation. Third—and this has been suggested previously—we suggest that the government of Canada should pay demurrage charges on ships forced to wait for wheat, so that this added cost will not be subtracted from the final payment to farmers. Fourth, we urge the government to take additional and energetic efforts to see that more wheat sales are not lost and to make certain that we retain our share of world markets. Fifth, I suggest that an immediate study be undertaken with respect to grain drying on a long term basis. A delegation from Saskatchewan, led by Mr. Woodrow Lloyd, leader of the opposition in the Saskatchewan legislature, recently went to North Dakota to investigate grain drying facilities there. I shall be happy to make available to the minister any information this delegation gathered. Members of the delegation discovered that grain drying is a standard feature of elevator operations in North Dakota. It is the accepted practice there that elevators be equipped with grain drying facilities. Elevators are the proper places in which to instal drying facilities.

Elevator companies in this country hesitate to move into the drying field because they fear the large investment in equipment they have to make. They consider drying operations economically marginal. Such investments must be considered as bringing in returns over a long period. I urge the government to consider studying the feasibility of assisting in setting up facilities in this country similar to those in North Dakota. The installation of such facilities would help to deal with the immediate crisis facing western Canada.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few brief comments in support of Bill No. C-162 which was introduced in this house last week.

[Mr. Burton.]

In my opinion, we do not misuse the time of the house, when we point out problems to the government, especially those dealing with farming.

I have noted that during the past few months, in various parts of the country, those problems have been raised intelligently, sometimes in strong terms—at the proper time, I think it is not a bad thing—and with much vigour.

Mr. Speaker, the discussion on wheat, grains, drying, etc. had a beneficial effect. In fact, it has prompted the government and particularly the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) to present the house with bill No. C-162 which is an emergency measure—

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is five o'clock.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): —designed to facilitate the temporary solution of a problem, and to help western producers solve the drying problem by—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is five o'clock.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg)—Vocational Training—opportunities for unemployed to improve technical skills; the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert)—Information to Hon. Members Respecting Legislation; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler)—Power—Nelson River, Man.—alleged harmful effects of development.

It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

PUBLIC BILLS

NEWS SOURCES PROTECTION ACT

PRIVILEGE OF COMMUNICATION BETWEEN JOURNALISTS AND NEWS SOURCES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved the second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of Bill C-15, to provide for the protection of news sources (press privilege).

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is rather rare that the idea embodied in a private member's public bill becomes topical at the time of its debate in the house. I believe that this measure to protect reporters from being forced to disclose the source of their material has an immediacy now because of the attitude to the press revealed so recently by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I refer to his petulant outburst at Claridges in London on Wednesday, January 15.

There is additional evidence from two other situations involving the Prime Minister to justify this bill. Most of us remember his reaction to the printing by the La Presse of Montreal of details of the report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. He put the R.C.M.P. on a hunt, and a young lady reporter was investigated and harassed in order to elicit from her the source of her information. A more pungent story was disclosed with the publishing of the hon. Judy LaMarsh's book. In it she writes at length about the irritation and concern of former Prime Minister Pearson about leaks from the cabinet in particular but also from the Liberal caucus. Miss LaMarsh describes the scene at the cabinet table involving a particularly gross revelation of a matter privy to the cabinet. She discloses that it was the present Prime Minister, then Minister of Justice, who advanced the means to put an end to the leaks by having the R.C.M.P. trace the leaks in order to determine the sources. So when the Prime Minister burst out in London with the proposition that the R.C.M.P. might be put on the trail of reporters to investigate their private lives it was the third manifestation of an idea held by our executive head of state, to preserve secrecy in government operations and to put newsmen at arm's length from government and politics by calling in the police.

Of course, defenders of the Prime Minister will claim that he was merely applying the argumentative technique of reductio ad absurdum to the matter in order to make its nature clear, as well as its silliness. Defenders of the Prime Minister will point to the apparently open, innocent invitation to debate the issue of the relations of the press and politicians. The Prime Minister is fond of this debating, dialoguing, participating gimmick. It suits his purpose since most of its advantages, at least to this point, lie with him. It is a cinch to dialogue with a pack of university kids in convenient gatherings where he has the stage, the microphone, the prestige of his office and his "trendy" popularity, while they are down in the pit and limited to a question or two. Again in London we saw the hollowness of this dialogue when the Prime Minister told one young questioner not to bother coming back to Canada if he thought that housing was a field falling within the federal jurisdiction. A fine dialogue that is and an ironic answer too in light of the Minister of Transport's task force report.

I take seriously the Prime Minister's threat in London regarding use of the R.C.M.P. because most of the reporters who were there believe he was not fooling. For example, two good and fair journalists are George Bain of the Globe and Mail and W. A. Wilson of the Montreal Star. It is clear from their stories of the event that these men took the Prime Minister at his word. I have digressed, but the clear fact is that we have a Prime Minister with a Gaullist view of reporters.

One of the poorest features of the parliamentary system of government is its fetish for secrecy in order to protect the bureaucracy and the executive. We in the opposition are always probing and pressing for information. It is en elemental part of the political game in Ottawa and one of its great frustrations. This fetish for secrecy, this developed distaste for openness in information about both administration and policy development, puts a heavy onus on reporters of the day to query, to speculate, to cultivate particular sources. Why? Because it is their job to find out what is going on, what factors are under consideration on any issue or regarding any personality and agency in politics and government. If reporters did not do this we would receive our political information largely by handout and with an inordinate amount of news management.

In the Toronto Telegram of April 3, 1967, there appeared an article written by Douglas Fisher and Harry Crowe regarding politicians and the press. The article refers to the policy of a journalist to conduct his business in a proper journalistic manner, and reads in part as follows:

> Any journalist with perspicacity—reporter, columnist, radio or TV—knows that the best way to find out the main elements of what is going on or is likely to develop in Ottawa is not through the open happenings that pass on the floor of the house or at press conferences.

• (5:10 p.m.)

> One has sources, "leaks", politicians and their assistants and their officials who want to create an impression or set up a situation or counter a "going" interpretation. One probes and gropes and listens and weighs.
> The process has many of the elements of a kid's secret society about it. Prejudices and enmities and rivalries build up. Then they burst into the open when someone, usually the politician, comes to believe he is getting a raw deal.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister wants to manage the news. He does not want anyone, even his associates, to get between him and the voter. So we get all this flummery about feed-back, regional desks, and all the jazz about dialogue and participation. So we got that dictum from him right after the election that any cabinet minister who got out of line by revealing information would not be a cabinet minister for very long.

It is easy enough to understand how this authoritarian, rather arrogant style of the Prime Minister developed. He has not gone through the apprenticeship of constituency and party politics. The personal freedom given him by wealth and exceptional opportunities for education without the pressures of earning a living have bred a feeling that he is above the common Joe. And he comes out of a society which, in his formative years during the Duplessis regime, was very authoritarian and strong on hierarchy and order. So it is in his nature, and it is as a result of his training that he calls for the police—

Mr. Gibson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Peters: —to ferret out those—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Peters: —who dare to pierce the screen of his cabinet's and his own activities.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, I and I am sure many other members are interested in this bill. But what we seem to be getting from the hon. member is a personal attack upon the Prime Minister rather than dealing with the bill itself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must confess that I was developing the same misgivings and I would invite the hon. member for Timiskaming to try not to stray too far from the precise provisions of his bill.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I was explaining why there is a considerable need for this type of bill today, and I was pointing out that the actions the Prime Minister has been taking would lead one to demand the type of protection being asked for in this bill. I repeat that it is in the Prime Minister's nature and it is as a result of his training that he calls for the police to ferret out those who dare to pierce the screen of his cabinet's and his own activities. I think he will learn that such threats are un-Canadian, that this is one part of the French heritage that Canada can do without.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Peters: But the fact that he thinks this way is a prime and timely reason to enact this simple measure that I advance. Remember that this bill is not designed to protect a reporter or his employer from libel. It is no protection for a reporter who goes beyond the law and decency in interfering with the privacy of individuals, groups or corporate entities. The effective part of the bill is clause 3 which reads:

> A journalist is not compellable to disclose or produce to a court the source of information relating to public news, intelligence or reports of events that is given or communicated to, or is seen, heard or otherwise obtained by him and published or broadcast in whole or in part by a newspaper.

Several examples were in my mind when I brought in this bill. Most of us remember the late Blair Fraser of Maclean's, a man whom many would put on the highest level of Canadian political journalism with Dafoe, Dexter and O'Leary. A decade ago he refused in court to reveal the source of a piece of information which was in one of his stories and he was held in contempt of court for his stubbornness. As I remember, his defence was that if he broke the undertaking between himself and his source the latter's identity would not be confidential and he would be guilty of a breach of professional ethics. He believed that the quality of trust in the reporter would be destroyed. A few years ago a woman reporter from a New York paper went to jail rather than reveal the source of a piece of information she had used in a story.

I am neither an intimate nor a close student of the press and the people who work as reporters. But I know that those of us in politics, particularly in opposition to a reigning government, would do much more poorly at our jobs if the reporters were not at work probing for sources of information. There is nothing a government likes better than to be in total control of what goes on within it and there is nothing as bad for the public weal if it can exert this control.

I and my colleagues believe that the test of secrecy of information ought to be not what the government chooses to reveal but that it should reveal everything except what is explicitly made private. This has become the practice in Scandinavian countries. In Sweden any citizen is entitled to look at almost every government file if he so wishes. This is surely the ideal of an open society. This bill, of course, is not so positive and embracing. Indeed, it is a short bill designed to protect a specific kind of worker in the pursuit of his calling in a society with a government system that is not yet ready to be open and frank. In spite of its narrowness within a huge field I believe this bill merits the support of hon. members.

I understand that tonight in the other place Senator Davey is moving a motion for a study of the press in Canada. I do not know what special gifts or expertise he has for this chore. If such a committee study is to be undertaken it would certainly seem to me that it should be done by a house committee. One of our privileges is a vital one in that what we say here is protected from action in court. We can appreciate the importance of this privilege. What I seek to extend here to reporters is a much smaller privilege but one important to them and perhaps essential if the Prime Minister pushes farther his penchant for using the police for investigations into the source of reporters' news.

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I submit that the normal rules of the game prohibit unfair disclosure of news sources as a rule in news reporting. However, sir, it seems to me that when serious slander or libel occurs, when the security of the nation is breached, or when malicious and unfair rumours are blazoned forth by the press against possibly innocent victims, it is time to step in and demand that the source of the witch hunt be revealed. Obviously the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) is intent on an attack on the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) today and is not interested in anything else but getting headlines for his own benefit.

Mr. Peters: From private members' hour? Are you kidding?

Mr. Gibson: He failed to address himself to the real principle of the bill. Certainly anyone who heard the entire dialogue with the university students in London would be greatly impressed by it as the most interesting example of dialogue in which any prime minister in the world has even taken part.

An hon. Member: Did you hear it?

Mr. Gibson: I did, sir.

Mr. Woolliams: You are looking for an appointment.

Mr. Gibson: Looking for an appointment, sir? From my seat, so close to the curtain, I assure you I am not that optimistic.

[Translation]

In this second language I am trying to practise as much as I can, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the press is enjoying presently all the freedom it needs, without our providing it with any more protection. Let us not allow it to go so far as destroying individual freedom.

[English]

For that person who slanders his neighbour I for one hold no respect and will not grant privilege. Surely it will be agreed that in the normal course of events there is no problem. But I say that when there is a problem, when someone's reputation is attacked and when the source of the rumour hides, why leave the source immune? Why leave the victim of the unanswered rumour to be pilloried by the press?

• (5:20 p.m.)

I say that to ensure fair investigation there is a paramount duty of fair disclosure of news sources for the very good reason that only by unrestricted disclosure can the truth be revealed and aired in public and true justice be done. Otherwise the heroes of the hidden press, the unreliable journalists, can play a game of gossip, shelter behind privilege and laugh at the innocent victim as he struggles to overcome his ruined reputation. On most occasions there is no need for disclosure, but when the chips are down I submit it offends natural justice to give the press loaded dice and leave the victim out on a limb.

Therefore I resist this bill as offending the law of give and take. As all hon. members know, there is a rule of law to the effect that all people are equal in the eyes of the law.

This is an area in which one side does all the giving and in which the often innocent victims of malice, with or without oppression, do all the taking.

For these reasons I oppose this bill as a denial of the right to a fair and just trial. It is fair only to one side and discriminatory and vicious in respect of the victim on the other side. I question most strongly the provisions of clause 3 of the bill which reads as follows:

> A journalist is not compellable to disclose or produce to a court the source of information relating to public news, intelligence or reports of events that is given or communicated to, or is seen, heard or otherwise obtained by him and published or broadcast in whole or in part in or by a newspaper.

I submit that in a government inquiry into intelligence matters it may be that the security of the nation is more important than the protection of a newspaper editor. I submit that this bill would mean an unwarranted change in the law, something which we should consider very seriously before adopting.

Mr. Peters: There is a special law, the War Measures Act.

Mr. Gibson: When we are at war conditions are different.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I shall be quite brief. I say without any reservation that I support this bill. I think it is a good bill. I should like to make three points. I think hon. members on both sides will agree that all news media—newspaper, television or radio—in a democracy are part of that democracy. After all, it is the news that is published which causes the public to be informed concerning what parliament and the government are doing. In fact you can carry this to any extent so far as a democracy is concerned. In a democracy it is the responsibility of the press to report the facts.

Some people may suggest that over the years there has been some change in reporting in that the reporters now act more as column writers, commentators and artists who paint the news as they see it rather than print the facts so that the people can draw their own inferences. I believe, however, we must accept that the newspaper is a very important part of the functioning of any parliamentary system. All one need do is think of any European country which has established a dictatorship to realize that those dictatorships control the press. The people there are fed the kind of information the dictator and the group around him want the people to have. We have seen the invasion recently of Czechoslovakia. We know that when the U.S.S.R. took over that country their first attempt was to control the press in order to hide from the people there the real issues and the views of their leader so far as liberty and freedom are concerned. So on this basis I support the bill.

In order to obtain news—and this is where I fall out with the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson)—the press must have sources. The great news stories of the world come from certain sources. If those sources must be disclosed then the tap of news dries up. I have always felt that a medical man should have the same privilege a solicitor has. If someone discloses information to a solicitor that information is privileged; it cannot be given in evidence in court. The solicitor can apply for the privilege and it will be given. This does not apply to medical men. I think, however, that this privilege should apply to the press. For instance, if I personally happened to be the source of information I might not in that particular case wish my name to be connected with the story.

If we were to say that the names of people must be disclosed we would dry up the news; we would close the tap and shut off the flow of truth to the nation. I support the bill wholeheartedly. I believe that when the members of the committee take a look at it they will appreciate that as the hon. member suggested there is a protection under this bill. When one speaks of slander and libel, nowhere in this bill is there anything which prevents the newspaper or the reporter being sued for libel or slander.

Mr. Gibson: What about security?

Mr. Woolliams: I will come to that in a moment. If a newspaper breaks the security laws of the nation it is liable. It may be that a person who has certain secrets would give them to a newspaper. That situation might arise. But we are not dealing with the security of the state; we are talking about news of parliament and news which flows through the community. I am sure that the newsman from the Toronto Star, when he found that Mrs. Munsinger was not dead but alive, obtained that information because he hustled about day and night and found people who would talk to him.

An hon. Member: Fly by night.

Mr. Woolliams: Very true; that is an illustration. Then we have the words of a Privy Councillor, a Liberal, the words of Judy LaMarsh which are found at page 345 of her book. I am sure my good Liberal friends will not say I do not have a good authority. This is what she says; "Then Trudeau suggested...". She had been talking about cabinet leaks. There have been cabinet leaks and as long as there have been parliaments there have been caucus leaks. I often learn through sources I have about some of the very important debates that go on in the Liberal caucus and I know the Liberals sometimes obtain information about the Conservative caucus. Maybe it is a good thing that the truth and the facts do slip out through sources so that the people of the country are kept informed. This is a very startling situation. The minister who wrote the book, Judy LaMarsh, was asked on television whether she broke her oath as a Privy Councillor and she said no.

• (5:30 p.m.)

This is what she says when talking about cabinet leaks, and they had lots of leaks; in fact, there were various kinds of leaks.

Mr. Crouse: Worse than the Bonaventure!

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, and far more damaging to a person's character. Miss LaMarsh says:

Then Trudeau suggested that we should put a stop to it once and for all.

He came forward with an idea for stopping these leaks.

He proposed calling in the R.C.M.P. to find out how the leak had happened and from what source.

In other words, her suggestion was that there must have been a Liberal source or a cabinet source that was feeding the news to the newspapers, television and radio. The then minister of justice said: We will get the police after our own men. Judy LaMarsh continues in her book:

At first there were some murmurs of agreement.

I can just see the cabinet members sitting around their beautiful table, with paper and pencils, and some of them murmuring in agreement. This is very interesting.

On reflection, the public reaction—should our action ever become public that our ministers could be so little trusted that they had to be under police scrutiny all the time—would be bad and the suggestion was shelved. It would really be throwing out the baby with the bathwater.

I remember speaking to Judy at the time the house was discussing the Canada Pension Plan. She said she was the mother of all pensions. I said I hoped that was one baby she had rocked to sleep, because it was conceived in haste and delivered in confusion. Her book continues:

That incident made me question the ruthlessness of Trudeau, although at the time I thought his suggestion only half meant. Subsequent events have already shown that his mind is still running to the prevention of leaks.

He does not like leaks.

I thoroughly approve. It will never be necessary for more than a threat to keep the cabinet's lid on and the ministers' mouths closed. Of course, there will be plenty of news, but it won't be premature. The government is supposed to make the news and the press report it; many of the press have come to believe it is their position to actually make the news themselves. Pundits talk and write about the public's "right to know," and by extension as the public's eyes and ears, of the press' right to know. If there is such a right, it must be a pretty limited one.

I do not know whether the Prime Minister, who holds the highest office in the land, was serious when he referred to the press, following his actions and experiences while attending the commonwealth conference as the "crummy" press. There were no doubt sources of information that the press found and followed. The Canadian people had the privilege, whether it is right or wrong, of reading about the conduct of the Prime Minister while at the commonwealth conference. People will draw their own inference, from the facts printed by the press, whether that conduct was of the kind we expect from a Canadian Prime Minister. That is not for me to decide.

Mr. Laniel: How come the press aren't here to listen?

Mr. Woolliams: That is a question I will leave with you. I am sure you can answer it. The press do not have to sit in the gallery. They can read the press-run of the proceedings in this house; they can read what I have said and write their story on that.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Keep reading from the book; that is more interesting.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member should not table the book, in view of the fact that he is reading from it.

Mr. Woolliams: I would agree to that suggestion, Mr. Speaker, were it not for my ancestors and the fact that the book cost me $8. Therefore I cannot see my way clear to asking that it be tabled. My last point is this. All the bill does is guarantee to the press freedom to find sources of information about the government, parliament or individuals.

If, when Hitler rose to power, Germany had had a free press the people would have been informed about the Reichstag fire, which was blamed on the communists. Then, Germany would never have been a dictatorship and the black terror which was responsible for six million people being thrown into the furnaces would never have crept into that nation. It is through the media of newspapers, television and radio that we as citizens are able to maintain our freedom. All this bill seeks to do is to give to the press freedom to obtain information from whatever source. You must have a source for these things; you must have the well with the water in it. Sources of information will dry up if one has to come forward and say: I am the man—or woman—who gave that information.

I think the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) is very happy to be a source of information at certain times. That is only human. The human reaction of members of parliament is such that we like to read about our statement, about ourselves, about parliament and the government. We like to see our party portrayed in the best light. I am sure that if the press went to the hon. member and asked for information that would place him, his constituency and party in a better light, he would not want to blow out the candle. I would like to see this bill go to committee. I support it. I think other members who have the opportunity to speak will support it. I hope that when it comes back from committee it will obtain approval, because we de facto now have this right. The hon. member is asking only that the right be guaranteed to the press, because of statements made by the Prime Minister and perhaps others in public life.

As the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) knows, Alberta at one time brought in a bill to control the news media. That provincial act was declared by the Supreme Court of Canada to be ultra vires of our constitution and civil rights. This is basically a very liberal bill. It is the kind of liberal, with a small "l", bill that would guarantee our freedom here and elsewhere throughout the nation.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I endorse the remarks of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and I approve wholeheartedly this legislation involving some basic matters.

To approve such legislation is simply to approve freedom because in this day and age a free press or the freedom of the press is synonymous with a free nation. The press having become above all a most important and even essential means to ensure a well functioning democracy, it follows that we must protect at all costs those who, by their actions or their role as journalists, promote true freedom. We can only rejoice that such a bill was introduced, which if passed will give well deserved protection to those dedicated people, as they sometimes sacrifice themselves for freedom. I will give an example. A couple of months ago, some articles published in the Montreal newspaper La Presse, were excerpts from Volume 3 of the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission report on bilingualism and biculturalism. If La Presse had not had access to this source of information, we may never have been informed of what was written in a certain chapter of that volume, and this at the public's expense, because if we compel those who obtained that information to divulge their source, they will never again have access to it.

Quite often, we realize that information originates almost exclusively from the press, and we, on this side of the house, have often complained that the press knew the facts ahead of us, even in cases involving parliamentary prerogatives.

If news sources are good only when one is in power, I cannot see why a distinction should be made in other circumstances, because since the reporter has to play an essential part in our society, he must enjoy full liberty of action.

As pointed out by the hon. member who spoke before me, it goes without saying that if a reporter, in order to get information, breaks the law of the country, then he runs the risk of being prosecuted, and he will have deserved it.

The question here is to protect him, by not compelling him to disclose his news sources.

To follow up the instance I have just given, I was saying that an editorial in the Montreal newspaper La Presse had even blamed the R.C.M.P. for checking up the news sources of Miss or Mrs. Gagnon, one of its reporters. That editor of La Presse felt that a very base device had been used to try and discover her news sources.

I feel therefore that this bill, which ensures the protection of news sources, deserves the unqualified support of the house.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has introduced this afternoon, Bill C-15 concerning a very important matter which can be connected with the main question of the privileges or the freedom of the press.

It is a matter which in history has given rise to interesting debates and even to several epoch making cases. It is a burning issue because thanks to the technical development of present media, news reach an ever increasing number of people.

However, I am sorry that the hon. member for Timiskaming and the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) dealt so little with the principle of the bill which, I understand, does not attack the question of the freedom of the press in general, but simply aims at providing privilege of communication between a journalist and his news source or in respect of his source where the source is a document or other material, on the occasion of proceedings under the federal authority.

However, the hon. member took unfair advantage of it, thus transgressing the rules, to attack the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). In fact, his reference to the London incident constitutes, in my opinion, a case where it can be said that there has been misuse of the freedom of the press in that the latter did not act exactly as it should have, regarding the privacy of people.

On the other hand, the hon. member for Calgary North also took that opportunity to speak of the freedom of the press and of what happened, for instance, in the countries behind the iron curtain or in Germany before the last World War, when the press was controlled.

I do not think it is intended in this bill to put any limitations on the freedom of the press which must remain independent and impartial. I would like to deal more specifically with the purpose of the bill which would entitle a journalist, when sued for defamatory libel, for instance, or for something else concerning perhaps the security of the country, the private life or the reputation of a citizen not to divulge his news source. And I think this is the matter the hon. member wished to put before the house this afternoon.

However, press privileges—what we call the freedom of the press—include of course the right for a reporter to gather, as he sees fit and practically without any limits, information he may broadcast thereafter, and this bill provides for a communication privilege between the journalist and his news source in any proceedings conducted before criminal or federal courts. In fact, if we consider the bill, we notice that it goes far enough, because the definition applies to, and I quote:

> —a criminal proceeding held before or under the authority of a court exercising judicial authority—

The bill goes on as follows:

> —an inquiry or investigation held or made under authority of a law of Canada or by order of Her Majesty before or under the authority of a court, tribunal, commission, board, power, authority, or a judicial, administrative or ministerial official, or any other proceeding or matter whatsoever coming within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada or within the prerogative of Her Majesty;—

When we look at the definition of "journalist" or "newspaper", we see that it includes not only the written news, but also radio, television, etc.

This is therefore a bill that goes quite far, but during a trial for libel, for instance, where the private rights of a citizen may be involved, should a journalist who has free scope to publish information obtained by him, be considered as a preferred witness, under no obligation to disclose his news source, when he appears before the court? I think that an entirely new situation would be created.

As the hon. member must know, the courts have always in the past, except in cases where national security was threatened, compelled newspaper men to disclose their news sources. The right to conceal news sources has never been considered a privilege comparable, for example, with that of a lawyer and his client, as pointed out by the hon. member for Calgary North who wanted to put the newspaper man on an equal footing with the lawyer.

Now, some distinctions can surely be made between the two and I ask the following question: Does the newspaper men have more rights than the ordinary citizens before the law or should they enjoy an exceptional status, as for example, the one existing between husband and wife or that enjoyed by the counsel for the defence in a criminal court?

In my opinion, the scope of the freedom of the press can be restricted by the exercise of other liberties, by the basic rights of other citizens, in order to assure a better administration of justice.

I am thinking particularly of the rights of the ordinary citizens when his reputation is involved or in order that his private life be respected. In the present case, a newspaper man would have the privilege of not being compelled to disclose in the proceedings listed in the bill his source of information for news and reports on events of public interest which are published or broadcast.

As a result of the proposed legislation, a reporter could refuse to answer a question, or to produce a document which would disclose his news source. The right to invoke this privilege would be given to the reporter alone, and not to his source of information, and it seems that it would be impossible to ask why he refuses to testify.

In law, apart from some exceptions I have mentioned earlier and which are well specified in statutes, the general rule is that any person can be a competent witness and can be forced to reveal the names of those who gave him the information according to which the article was written.

The Criminal Code and the Evidence Act grant this privilege to certain people such as the accused, for instance, who is not obliged to testify at his own trial or at the trial of his wife, subject to some exceptions when the accused could get protection should he incriminate himself by his answer. He can then ask for the protection of the court, so that his answer could not be used as evidence in future procedures; however, he cannot refuse to answer. The privilege is also extended to the lawyer and his client—and it is understandable—since the obligation for any able person to testify during judicial procedures on relevant facts known to him, is justified by the fact that it is the best way to get full justice and that it gives the courts the possibility to judge with complete knowledge of the facts. That is why the administration of justice imposes this obligation.

As a matter of fact, I think that the authors have established rules which are considered essential towards recognizing that privilege of not being compelled to disclose to the court certain information, and the four following rules are set forth:

(1) The communication must proceed from the assurance that it will not be disclosed.

(2) That assurance must be essential to the complete and satisfactory maintenance of relations between the parties.

(3) The relation must be one which the community is interested to protect.

(4) The adverse effect that the disclosure of the communication could have on the relation must be greater than the benefits which could ensue from the disclosure of the said communication in case of conflict.

These are the rules taught by the authors in order that the fact of not disclosing certain information may constitute a privilege before the court. When one thinks particularly of the relations which could exist between say a lawyer and his client, one sees that in such a case the rules are obviously adhered to. If, for example, a lawyer were to testify in a trial, that would more or less amount to saying that the client would be compelled indirectly to testify against himself. The same principles are involved in the case of the relations between husband and wife.

However, if we look closely at those rules, we realize that they do not apply at all in the case of a journalist who appears as a witness and who can be compelled to disclose his sources of information; he cannot benefit from those rules which are based on past experience.

The hon. member alluded to the case of Mr. Blair Fraser—whom several members have known and who unfortunately is dead—who had been involved in a lawsuit that created a great stir. He was sued by the Attorney General of British Columbia who had brought an action for damage against that journalist and the magazine who had published such information.

However, the precedents which were mentioned but that unfortunately I have not had the time to study thoroughly, refer particularly to the British jurisprudence. The Court's decision was that the journalist would have to reply to the questions. This judgment was based on a very elaborate jurisprudence. He appealed from the judgment of the Appeal Court of British Columbia which had upheld the judgment of the court of first instance, and the authorization to appeal to the Supreme Court was rejected. This case is referred to in the 4th volume of the Dominion Law Reports for 1954. Here is what one of the Justices said; and I am quoting from page 334:

> In the present case, in my opinion, the refusal of the defender to divulge the source of his information is sheer stubbornness. He has persisted for more than one year in his refusal to obey the orders of this country's courts. Now, he is more or less telling us that, after careful consideration, he believes his moral obligations towards the people who gave him the information are more important that his duty to obey the judgment of the Court.
> Under these circumstances—
> —as pointed out by another Justice—
> —he must realize that his refusal brings about as a consequence the result achieved by the rules.

Well, it was decided that in a civil proceeding resulting from a libellous information published in a newspaper, the newsman had to answer questions. In this case, English jurisprudence was studied, where perhaps it seems to grant the privilege that the hon. member wishes to grant to the newspapers, but which does not extend to newsmen. In Canada, no decision was taken on this matter, but it was mentioned that the newspaperman in this case had to reveal his source of information.

Mr. Speaker, the bill presented by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) may, at first sight, seem to be of some advantage. But if we consider it in relation to its consequences, especially for certain persons who might be involved by newspapersmen's charges—and we know that newsmen sometimes go a bit too far—I submit that the freedom of the press must also be limited by other freedoms: that of individuals, in particular, and I am unable to support the principle of the bill because it goes a little too far.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Could I ask a question? In what way does this bill limit the right of an individual to take action against a newspaper reporter? It is not the purpose of the bill to interfere with the libel provisions of our law, but only to provide protection for persons who supply information.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: I know, Mr. Speaker, that this bill would not prevent a person from bringing an action for libel against a journalist. This certainly may have an effect on the outcome of the trial. As a matter of fact, it is possible that the information cannot be obtained from the journalist who can plead his good faith.

To sum up, this bill goes a little too far and I could not endorse it. I think that, in view of the circumstances, it should not get the support of hon. members.

[English]

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): It is indeed regrettable that a bill which deals with matters of principle as serious as this should have been introduced in a way which really avoided the principles involved and relied upon what can best be described, I think, as a distasteful attack on the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The sympathy which one might have felt for the principle of this measure is bound to be diluted to some extent as a result of the manner in which it was introduced.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mahoney: Nevertheless, the principle is important today. We hear, with great sympathy, hon. members in that corner of the house asking when it is the government's intention to bring in a bill dealing with electronic eavesdropping and other invasions of privacy. This, Mr. Speaker, is the other side of the coin at which we must look. We are living in days when we must be very conscious of personal rights and privileges. It is certainly a time in which we cannot dispose of a bill of this kind without a very deep discussion on principle.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) inquired of the parliamentary secretary how this bill could possibly affect the laws of libel. This may be a trivial incident but nevertheless the area of college football is rather important to some people. It was less than two years ago that the University of Georgia athletics director, Wally Butts, was accused in a Saturday Evening Post article of selling or giving away his team's football strategy to Alabama coach "Bear" Bryant. Butts sued the Saturday Evening Post, and apparently the courts in the United States did not regard the matter as trivial because judgment for libel was entered at $460,000, and was upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The basis of the judgment was that the Saturday Evening Post had relied on sources on which they had no business to rely. The judgment would not have been possible had not the source been disclosed and available. The Post could have relied on the usual press exemptions in libel cases, apologized and that would have been that. But the fact was that the Supreme Court of the United States determined in the case that the Saturday Evening Post was anxious to change its image by introducing a policy of sophisticated muck-raking and pressure to produce a successful exposé was on them.

In selling their papers they went beyond the limit and used a source who at that time was on probation for passing bad cheques. They knew about this and did not check the sources to which he attributed the story. In general they relied on evidence on which they had no business to rely. As I say, the libel action was successful. So, sources are relevant in freedom of the press.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair to resume same at eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

AMENDMENT PROVIDING EMERGENCY PAYMENTS TO MEET DRYING COSTS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) for the second reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole of Bill C-162, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock I was saying that there had been repeated remarks on the opposition as well as on the government side and that some government members, taking their role seriously or assuming their responsibilities had sometimes blamed the government for not acting in time. However, to stir up the sense of responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture in that field we had to have the emergency debate about a week ago, that somewhat clarified the question.

The object of Bill C-162 is to empower the government to grant advance payments to grain producers to enable them to better finance the drying of damp grain and provide storage otherwise than in an elevator.

[Mr. Mahoney.]

I suggest that this legislation could have been more generous. However, it could not have changed the weather in any way. The government members say: Well, everything depends upon the weather; there was too much rain in the fall and this winter, the weather is too cold. Indeed, such things are not controlled by the government but from above. The Progressive Conservative members said to the government: You have failed to act in time. You waited until the cold weather had set in. They blame one another. The Liberal members say to the Conservative members: When you were in power, things were not much better, for you also had problems, such as grain drying. What did you do then?

Mr. Speaker, we must forget the past. There is surely no question of drying the grain that was used up as it does not exist any more. Let us speak instead of the 1968 crop for that is the grain that has to be dried.

I believe the problem facing the western farmers is a financial problem. They could not get the equipment needed to dry their grain.

That is the reason why they asked the government to grant them cash in advance to enable them to afford the costs of drying the grain and of putting it into the elevators so that the ships would not leave Vancouver half empty. It might have then been possible for us, in the east, to have grain in fair condition at the proper time since there are, allegedly, several empty box cars waiting for this grain.

So we have a problem within the country. On the one hand, the western producers are complaining and, on the other hand, we, in the east are waiting for grain in fair condition that would enable us to produce milk, butter, cheese, meat, etc., so as to meet the needs of our people while helping those who are starving in the world.

This afternoon, we were once more reminded in the house of the so-called starving peoples so, they do need our contribution.

I remember that in 1940-45 everybody was talking about the war effort. We had to do our bit to save Christendom, to save civilization, to save our markets in Europe. Today we are asked to bring our contribution, not for war but for peace, in order to give assistance, in a spirit of mercy, to the peoples who need it most urgently and which we could help with our wealth and with that wheat which is such a problem for us when it comes to distributing it.

Bill C-162 may not be very generous, still it is a step forward. Producers will be able to benefit from it.

Mr. Speaker, the passing of this bill must not be delayed, but we must not either be accused of dawdling and punishing the western farmers while making interminable speeches in the house. It does not take two hours to speak one's mind and say what one thinks about a subject. It is a matter of coming out with it, of speaking frankly, and as a great general would say: Let us get to the bottom of this and find the real cause of the situation. For my part, as an eastern consumer of cereal, as a dairy producer, as the member for a rural riding, as spokesman for the people of eastern Canada, I can say that our party is in favour of this bill being passed as soon as possible. We agree that once it is passed three months should not he spent in drawing up regulations while the producers wait again. We should get into the habit of reaching our decisions and applying our laws more rapidly, specially when the western producers are waiting.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I am in favour of this bill and why, when it is put to the vote, I shall vote for it gladly.

• (8:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): In rising to speak in support of Bill C-162, Mr. Speaker, I feel the government deserves a severe scolding for their gross lack of inaction by not showing leadership in tackling the grave accumulation of tough and damp grain which many members on this side of the house have drawn to the attention of the government constantly. The government has brought in at this late date a measure which can only be described as a confession of incompetence.

It would be unrealistic to pretend the measure is not welcome. Under the present situation it is a necessary measure. I believe it would not be necessary had it not been for the situation created by the government. This situation could have been avoided, or at least relieved to some degree. This government continues to bring forward legislation aimed at bailing itself out of a mess created by its own policies.

The government put an 11 per cent sales tax on housing. We now have a minister of the government stating in a public report that this tax should be removed. Then, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) says, "Over my dead body".

The government entered into an agreement with France. We now have the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) becoming annoyed because the province of Quebec takes action under the same agreement. These are only some of the complications which this government has created.

The grain situation is the worse mess this government has caused up to the present time. Last November a motion to adjourn the house was moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam), seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Muir) to debate the question of damp grain. Nothing was done. This problem was raised during the discussion of the estimates on agriculture, at which time the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) accused the opposition of being publicity seekers and attempting to damage markets. What has the Minister of Agriculture done to procure and establish our markets? He has readily attacked the opposition on every occasion we brought the matter to his attention. His only solution was that he had faith in the western farmer's ability to dry the grain, despite the serious difficulties being encountered.

It is with a feeling of sorrow and desperation that I refer to the incredible mishandling by the government of the current year's grain shipments. There was the grain handlers' strike this past summer which wasted six weeks of valuable time. The government did absolutely nothing and grain deterioriated in the field and the grain piles on the prairies grew higher. The strike was followed by inaction on the part of the government with regard to the problem of drying grain. There were no incentives, no encouragement or no co-operation in the handling of driers and a 3 bushel quota of damp grain in effect plugged every available storage facility without consideration being given to the drying capacity available.

The Japanese are now demanding indemnities because of damp and second quality grain. They are also demanding compensation for ships tied up for days in Vancouver harbour. This is because the government failed to do anything about the moving of box cars. A Conservative Member of Parliament raised the matter in the house and boxcars were then brought from the United States and rushed to Vancouver. What good were they then? We now have the Japanese going to Australia for a large wheat contract which should belong to Canada. Many of my own neighbours have had their incomes cut in half because of the government's refusal to take any action in this serious situation. While the farmer's income is cut, his expenses continue to rise. The farmer is getting it at both ends.

It is a tragedy and a damaging blow to Canada's economy that a large part of an entire year's grain crops and sales have been sacrificed because of bureaucratic bungling. Because of failure to organize transportation we not only face the loss of markets, but we have lost markets. The government refused to move to organize rail facilities to transport wheat to Vancouver. They failed to get the right grade to the right place at the right time. While millions of dollars in wheat went begging in Canada, box cars which should have been available were out of the country picking up a few bucks for the railways. If the railways are going to act in this manner, then they must be brought to task by the government, and that means a government capable of doing the job. The present government is more concerned with questions of manners and morals than the livelihood of the western farmer. Little wonder farmers all across western Canada are sick at heart at the way the situation is being handled.

Many farm leaders have expressed concern with regard to difficulties the farmers will experience in 1969, such as the rising cost of operation, loss of markets and loss of reasonable return due to deterioration of their grain caused by climatic conditions. Mr. Speaker, 1969 is here and, believe me, it is difficult on the prairies. Business is lagging, unemployment is rising, automobile and machinery sales are down, accounts receivable are running at an all-time high and becoming stagnant. Above all an ever-growing lack of confidence is being experienced in the future of farming and business enterprise. What about the future? According to Japanese reports, 117,000 tons of Manitoba No. 2 wheat contracted for December and January have not arrived in Tokyo. Can any country run its business that way? This government has allowed the Wheat Board to float by itself and to carry the whole load. The government has not helped or supported the board in any way. It was too concerned with its abortion bill. Surely, it is time we got back to the real things of life. Canada cannot tolerate disruptive mismanagement on the part of the federal government. Certainly the provincial governments will not tolerate this for any length of time.

Seven Japanese ships, among the 30 odd ships waiting in the Port of Vancouver, got sick of waiting. The Japanese, as we know, are no fools. They are the smartest businessmen in the Orient. They have taken a great interest in Canada, and have invested a lot of money here. The Japanese are prepared to buy our wheat, but they insist on the same high standards which they follow in their own affairs and if we do not deliver they will shop elsewhere, as they are now doing in Australia.

There has never been a time when the affairs of the western farmer have been more poorly managed by the government. The government simply let a whole year's grain crop drift away and we wonder if this is going to keep on because, if it does, then the western farmer will be in the same position as the eastern farmer. The policy announced by the government for the eastern farmer is to take him off the farm and put him in the welfare office in the city. The western farmer does not want that and will fight for his right to enjoy the prosperity he has created by his own sweat.

We have witnessed a whole year's crop flushed down the drain by Ottawa mismanagement. Here it is February and the government has finally managed to persuade the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) to go to Vancouver. It is too late to do much this year. We have been witnessing events which have sadly shaken the faith of farmers all across Canada.

Certainly all hon. members welcome the fact that the minister is now concerned. If the efforts of the opposition have done nothing more, I believe they have enlightened the minister on the fact that he has a massive job to do. It is encouraging to see that, for the first time, he has really taken the bull by the horns.

The situation in my own area, that is the federal constituency of Vegreville, is that we do have orders. As a matter of fact, we have many orders. We have some box cars loaded but they are stacked along the sidings. I have here a letter from a constituent of mine who states that in his area they have had only 14 box cars since August 1, but have had none since November 1.

Many farmers have made deliveries only on the unit quota. The elevators are filled, mostly with damp grain, and there is no movement of grain whatsoever. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, you cannot operate a farm on the strength of a cash advance and a unit quota delivery. The results of this situation are a critical shortage of cash, stagnation of business resulting in the future outlook for our economy being disgusting, and a complete demoralization of all avenues of business. I am sure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), with all his good intention of creating a just society, must be equally disturbed at the whole mess of the grain markets, handling of grain, and in particular the lack of foresight in solving the damp and tough grain situation. I hope that he, too, takes the bull by the horns and gets some action. The passage of this bill may be a start.

Meanwhile the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce continues to smile. He says he is serious when he is smiling but, Mr. Speaker, the farmers in my area are not smiling. To them, Liberal years are lean years. They will continue to be lean years until the government can organize quickly and provide encouragement and co-operation in solving this desperate situation. We need leadership and we need action. We need action with responsibility and sincerity.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, when I was considering what I would say this evening I could not help but think that the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) from Saskatoon must have gone out to the country and contacted some of the farmers in his area. I could not help but wonder if the provision in this legislation resulted from the recommendation that farmers made to him to try to solve the damp grain problem. If this is the solution that was offered him, then all I can say is that it is quite different from the solutions put forward in the letters I have been receiving from farmers.

Admittedly, last fall we had an awkward problem. In my area four inches of rain at harvest time gave us too much moisture. In fact, one farmer told me that in his area there were 14 inches of rain. I suggest that if a similar type of thing happened in other parts of the country it would be regarded as a national disaster. But the government has not looked upon this situation as such and has dealt with it on a much more casual basis.

I suggest that a partial subsidy rather than a straight loan would have been of more benefit to the farming industry. However, I was glad to note, according to last night's newspapers, that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) had admitted that maybe he could have done more as minister. I am glad to see he is conscious of the fact that he might have made a mistake.

I wish to compliment the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon (Mr. Lang) on his promotion announced this afternoon. I hope and trust that following his promotion he will not forget the problems of the prairie farmers and of the Wheat Board.

As I have mentioned, we have had an awkward problem with regard to damp grain. We have had another awkward problem in the fact that we have a new Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), a new Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and a New Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang), all involved in trying to move grain. Perhaps the fact they are all new ministers makes me think of the Three Musketeers but, whereas the Three Musketeers went out joyously to battle, these three hon. gentlemen wring their hands and cry in their root beer.

I would like to see these three ministers accept the challenge involved in this situation. Admittedly, they have had to learn something new, just as I, a new member of parliament, had to learn my job. In view of their newness, I question more in sorrow than in anger the mistakes they have made. However, because of their casual approach to this problem; because of the fact that they ignored Opposition suggestions earlier that this problem was raising its head; because of the very nonchalant attitude of the Prime Minister with regard to selling wheat, I find myself getting quite angry. I have had a lot of letters these last few days from angry farmers. If the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) read some of the letters I have received they would know what farmers are thinking. In this connection I would like to quote the following from the front page of the Maidstone Mirror of January 30:

> The primary problem is that the C.N.R. has not made sufficient effort to make cars available for loading grain.

In that particular area, the C.N.R. has not done its job. I might add that other letters I have received from farmers cite other causes for the problem.

I think one of the problems has been the lack of leadership and responsibility on the government. If the government were as good at organization and at providing foresight as it is at making excuses, more would be done. I think they should admit that the three bushel quota for damp grain initially announced by the Wheat Board was a mistake. People say that hindsight is better than foresight. After that announcement, many farmers thought the Wheat Board had made arrangements to handle that much damp grain and that they would all be entitled to sell on the three bushel quota.

The other day the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) spoke about people panicking. I am a farmer, Mr. Speaker. I have delivered only the one bushel quota, and this is now the month of February. As a farmer, whether I panic or not, I certainly feel a little uneasy about the situation and I do not like anybody suggesting that this is something we should take lightly. We want some solutions.

Speaking as a farmer, I would like to talk about another item. For a time back in the 1950's we had a grain congestion problem, and we have had the same problem now for some time in the 1960's. I have seen the grain companies, the railway companies and the Wheat Board all passing the buck from one to the other when the moving of the grain is mentioned.

I am not suggesting that this is done intentionally, but I never saw such a run around in my life. I was a wheat pool delegate for several years. I have been active in politics at the local level for many years and am now a member of parliament, but I have never seen such a situation before. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) suggests we have a transport controller, one person, to unify these three outfits that are involved in moving grain. I suggest that something certainly is wrong, because mistakes can be made too easily. As a farmer myself, I would suggest that the government listen to the hon. member for Assiniboia in this regard. He has had some experience.

Normally in the farming industry when grain sales are moving, when a farmer has cash and a promise of something happening next year, he arranges to put in his fertilizer in the fall. I normally put in quite a few tons, and I consider twenty tons to be quite a bit. But this year I have not put in a bag of fertilizer and do not know whether or not I will be using it. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture is aware of what constitutes efficient farming, and realizes the importance of keeping up the production per unit. But why should one have input on a farm when he does not have any output? This government does not seem to be concerned about this problem.

I would suggest that government members from Edmonton and Calgary, where there are fertilizer factories, see how happy these people are. I would suggest also that the government members from Hamilton, Toronto, Brantford, Windsor, or wherever the parts for farm machinery are manufactured find out whether the people there are happy about what is happening in western Canada. In speaking to the implement dealers, it became obvious to me that they were very uncomfortable in respect of the situation. Yet, the minister from Saskatoon says that we should not get panicky. The government has a responsibility here. I suggest that everything is integrated and when there is a problem in western Canada there is also a problem about which members in eastern Canada should be concerned.

I should like to mention one other thing before I sit down. I am a little concerned about the amused reaction of backbenchers, not all of them but some of them on the government side of the house, when legislation is introduced which in effect says that the farmers have no credit. However, they need credit so credit will be made available and then things will be all right by and by. I suggest that this is not the case, and is only postponing the solution. Perhaps government members are hoping for some miracle to save them. I suggest that this is not a realistic attitude. We should be more concerned with this problem, face up to it and realize that all we are doing is postponing the solution.

The fact that there is $120 million now out in cash advances is an indication that something is seriously wrong with the situation in western Canada. I ask the government and the government backbenchers to come up with some solution. The three musketeers I mentioned earlier may have to convince their colleagues something is wrong and that they must take some action.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-162 to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act I wish to say I support the principle of this legislation. I must hasten to say, however, that the benefits will be too little and too late. What are some of the reasons that western farmers find themselves in a financial situation which is almost as bad as the hungry thirties? The predicament in which members of the western farming communities find themselves has developed from several causes. The first is the indifference and inaction of the present government toward the problems of western Canada. The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), who resumed his seat a few moments ago, outlined some of the action opposition members in this house have taken as far back as last September in an effort to draw to the attention of the government the situation which existed. Since we realized what could develop, we kept the government briefed on the situation.

As I mentioned in a previous address, I had the honour to represent our party in moving a motion to adjourn the house on November 28. This was followed by an emergency debate on December 5. All these things, coupled with a statement by Mr. McNamara, the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, which received quite wide press coverage, alerted the government. So, they cannot say they did not know the problem existed. This is one area in which I think the government can be most severely criticized. Secondly, we must admit that the weather aggravated the situation; but as was pointed out by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) this afternoon we have always had to contend with the weather. Weather is always a problem and will always continue to create emergencies in the agricultural industry. This is no excuse. The government must be prepared for such a situation.

I was very interested, and in fact quite surprised, I might say dismayed, when I listened to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) a couple of weeks ago tell the house what the government had done to meet the serious emergency which faces us now. In listening to him, one would think that nobody else ever faced an emergency. I am not known to be partisan, but the minister brought up this topic concerning the wonderful record of his party in respect of what is being done now. I should like to refer to the year 1961 when the hon. minister was not sitting in this house. At that time we had the lowest water table in the history of western Canada. Some livestock farmers were faced with not having any opportunity to provide fodder or maintain even their basic herds. At this time farmers were queued up at the stockmarkets at western points disposing of even their basic herds. This sale of stock started to depress the market by one cent or two cents a pound. We all know what would have happened had action not been taken in this regard.

I was a member of the standing committee on agriculture at that time when the former member for Qu'Appelle, the then minister of Agriculture, called an emergency meeting of the committee. We held two meetings as a matter of fact, one on Friday and one on Monday. As a result of these emergency meetings we established a program. This is relevant, Mr. Speaker, in so far as this bill is concerned because I shall refer to action taken at that time which should have been taken under present conditions. We made an announcement that all the P.F.A. benefits, the full amount of $800, should be allocated to the farmers. We also co-operated with the ministers of agriculture in the three provinces. We put a ceiling price of $20 a ton on fodder so that there would not be a tendency for people to try to exploit one another.

At the same time we set a ceiling price of $15 a ton to the farmer and provided a subsidy of $5 a ton equally divided between the provincial government and the federal government; in other words, $2.50 each. We also re-enacted legislation to move haying machinery from one place to another in order to provide fodder wherever needed. The federal and provincial governments co-operated in this program to pay 50 per cent of the freight charge for moving the haying machinery or fodder into position.

We made arrangements with the community pasture managers to send pelleted feed from eastern Canada to provide sustenance for our livestock in these pastures. These are only a few of the emergency measures that were taken within just two days. In the result, when the program was announced publicly on television and radio and in the press it immediately quelled the fears of western farmers; they stopped their mad rush to market with cattle that were not properly finished, and within three days the market had regained its normal strength. In fact, the market went up 2½ cents a pound by Christmas. These results were achieved, and we saved the day by concerted action. I enumerate these points in order that the Minister of Agriculture may realize that he will not get away with the remarks he has made about this emergency, namely, that his government is the only one that has done anything in situations like this.

The next problem is the lapse of the international wheat agreement and the loss of grain sales, with resulting low incomes to farmers so they have been unable to finance the drying of a large quantity of wet grain. This has been one of our major problems. The catastrophe facing western Canada results in part from the lapsing of the international wheat agreement which has created serious financial difficulties in our part of the country.

As members from the west know, we are plagued with large surpluses of dry grain in storage. This has been caused by the inaction and indifference of the government at the Kennedy round of talks at Geneva two years ago. I was interested in listening to the comments of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), my neighbour in western Canada, who was trying to paint a bright picture out of the very dim one that we have out there. I do not blame him for that; it is his prerogative and, I suppose, his duty because he is a member of the party which forms the government.

He referred to the fact that last year we had a 25 per cent increase in sales over the previous year. But it must be remembered that we had last year only 30 per cent of the sales we had the year before. Therefore, an increase of 25 per cent last year is really an increase of only 7½ per cent, or a quarter of the 30 per cent. This is a very meagre increase and does not solve the problem at all. We have to go out and make wheat sales if we are to solve the basic problem underlying western agriculture.

I bring these facts to the attention of the house just to keep the record straight. We have heard a great deal about the Grains Council; the minister made an announcement about it on motions today. This is all well and good, and naturally I will support anything that will help to develop, maintain and continue the maintenance of sound agricultural policy in this country. But I am afraid this council will be only window dressing if it is to meet just once or twice a year and has on it people already involved in the grain trade. I cannot for the life of me, and I hope I am wrong, see what the council will achieve in these circumstances. The council should use its influence, I suggest, to immediately try to reconvene the International Grains Council so that the international wheat agreement can be put back on the rails. It is all well and good to say the agreement has been re-established, but we are not deriving any benefit from it; our competitors are selling their grain and we are sitting back with our bins full of grain.

My fourth point is that the order of the Wheat Board opening up a three-bushel quota on wet grain to terminals has created great difficulty in agriculture. It has choked up our drying facilities for three months and eliminated all possibility of moving dry grain into position to meet world market demands. The question is, who demanded that the Wheat Board take this action? Was it the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), or the Minister of Agriculture? Surely, it was not the Wheat Board alone that decided to make this order. I have known Mr. McNamara, the Chief Commissioner of the Wheat Board, for many years and have great difficulty believing that he would give this order. I am afraid he must have been pressured into it by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or somebody who was not familiar with the problem. In any event, Mr. McNamara made this unwise decision as a result of pressure from somebody. The result of the decision was that the pipe line was immediately choked up with wet grain. Anyone who knows the situation in western Canada realizes that we have about 25 million acres of wheat under cultivation. A three-bushel quota means 75 million bushels of wet grain immediately going into what we refer to as the market pipe line.

Mr. McNamara, in his statement of November 28, said that the total drying facilities at all the terminals, Vancouver, Fort William, Lethbridge, Edmonton, Moose Jaw and Saskatoon was only 12 million bushels per month. Is it reasonable for a man in Mr. McNamara's position to make a decision that would mean the moving of 75 million bushels of wet grain into terminals that could not dry a quarter of it? Somebody told the Wheat Board to make this decision, and I would like to find out who it was. I hate to think it was the Wheat Board alone that decided on this action; therefore I ask the question of the minister.

The fifth problem is the serious shortage of box cars and other rolling stock to move grain into market positions, and the resulting large number of grain ships sitting empty in the port of Vancouver. These ships are costing farmers hundreds of thousands of dollars in demurrage charges and a serious loss of grain markets because Canada has been unable to deliver this commodity.

The sixth basic problem, and a prime reason why agriculture is in serious trouble, is that we have three ministers involved in the affairs of agriculture. It is a case of too many cooks spoiling the broth. I ask, Mr. Speaker, how can one man serve two masters? We have had this problem in the past and this is a case of history repeating itself. In 1958, under the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), whom I had the honour of serving at that time, we had 750 million bushels of grain piled up all over western Canada. When we raised this problem with the then minister of trade and commerce, he said it was the responsibility of the department of agriculture and his department did not have to worry about it. We went to the minister of agriculture, who said the minister of trade and commerce sold the produce of this country.

We did not fool around; we took the Wheat Board from the minister of trade and commerce and placed it under the control of the minister of agriculture, at that time the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, and started to get action. The Wheat Board, which is the body primarily responsible for moving our grain, should be under the jurisdiction of the minister of agriculture. This is where the Wheat Board should be, and it should stay there.

The seventh point, and I think one of the most serious matters in connection with this whole problem, is a psychological one. I have listed these points in numerical order, and because this is the seventh I do not mean it is the least important. As I have said, this is a psychological problem and when you get psychological problems in a depressed area, the over-all problem is aggravated. The problem is that farmers have become very discouraged with the situation because of the inaction of the government. Government action in this field has been too little and too late.

We find the Prime Minister of this country saying in Winnipeg at a $50 a plate dinner for the Liberal party that his government—he said this to the farmers in answer to a question—was not responsible for selling grain and it was up to the farmers to sell it. This was the last straw. After all, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and his department, or somebody in Ottawa, must take the initiative. The farmer cannot himself take it. The inaction of the government has resulted in the serious and difficult situation of western agriculture and is the basic cause of the trouble.

It is all right for me to criticize and enumerate the causes of this problem, but what should we do about it? I feel that the $600 that we are providing now is a start, but it is not enough. It represents about 10 cents a bushel for the farmer who may have grain to market, but the cost of drying his grain amounts to about 20 cents a bushel. An average farmer would have around 10 thousand bushels of grain, and at the cost of 20 cents a bushel he would have to spend about $2,000. The $600 might help, but it does not go far enough.

Some time ago I indicated that we should provide an outright grant in an emergency. At that time I suggested an acreage payment because in 1959 that is what we gave when millions of bushels of grain were under snow. We also did that in 1961 at the time of the emergency to which I referred a while ago. We also used acreage payments on another occasion, but this extra incentive of an outright grant or acreage payment was just enough to give farmers the encouragement they needed and to make them feel we were interested in helping them.

I also suggested on several occasions that we should provide a co-operative plan in conjunction with provincial ministers of agriculture to subsidize the movement of machinery. We did that back in the hungry thirties and also in 1961. We should have done it in this case so that drying equipment would be moved into place. The latest figures show that around 3,200 pieces of drying equipment exist in western Canada but that only 900 are being used. When one starts to question the reason behind that one finds that a large number of farmers have not the wherewithal to pay for transportation to get the dryers into the area where they should be used. As a result, we are losing much valuable time which could be used if equipment were put to work until the end of April, when we are really going to have a serious problem with grain starting to heat. At that time the warmer climatic conditions will cause the damp grain to heat, and everyone who understands agriculture will know to what I am referring.

We should be utilizing every piece of equipment immediately until the end of April to get over perhaps part of the emergency. But even then, we stand to lose millions of dollars worth of grain in western Canada. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) mentioned this afternoon a figure of $36 million in Alberta. We must remember that even though Alberta produces a large amount of grain, Saskatchewan produces more wheat than Alberta and Manitoba put together. I am not saying this to brag, but wheat happens to be our chief agricultural commodity. So if Alberta is faced with a loss of $36 million, we can say we are faced with a loss of $72 million, to use a compararable figure, and Manitoba faces a loss of $36 million. If you add up these figures, you can readily understand some of the difficulties and problems that we have, as well as the loss they may be incurred as a result of this emergency situation in western Canada.

So I am in favour of this legislation and, although it is too late and too little, there are many things that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), and the Minister Without Portfolio (Mr. Lang), together with their colleagues could do to show they are really interested in agriculture. I hope they will take further action in this respect.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we have no problem supporting amendments to Bill No. C-162. At the same time the remark made by the Minister Without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) that in some cases a shortage of ready cash and credit may be impeding the drying operations is the understatement of the year. This fact should have been realized way back last fall, and brought to the attention of the government. I was particularly interested in hearing the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) a short while ago refer to the fact that finally the government has taken the bull by the horns. I suggest the farmer is getting fed up by the amount of "bull by the horns" action that is taking place and he is prepared now to see some real action take place. We know about the belligerent attitude of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) last fall when these questions were brought to his attention forcibly. Then, he refused to give us any answers. He told us: "There is no use crying yet, boys, you are not hurt", but the farmers and the minister knew then that the farmers were going to be hurt and that something had to be done.

I appreciate the fact that the Minister of Agriculture as well as the Minister Without Portfolio are familiar with agricultural problems. I agree that possibly they would have liked to do something if they could have convinced their colleagues of the necessity for action. I was very pleased to see the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce go out west. I am sure that when he comes back he will know the difference between a dry kernel of grain and a wet one. I am pleased he is going out there to see for himself exactly what is happening.

The measure before us suggests that we advance $600 per farmer for the drying of grain. At the same time, we know perfectly well that the grain is not being moved efficiently at a time when the markets overseas are crying out for No. 2 northern. A short while ago I returned from Moose Jaw and I know that as of Sunday morning there were more than three million bushels of No. 2 northern in that particular government elevator.

We also know that the drying facilities are working on a seven day 24 hour basis, which I say is excellent. I think the government is to be commended for allowing this facility to operate at its maximum capacity. However, with the number of cars available for loading purposes the elevator at Moose Jaw is now only working six days a week, 16 hours a day and holding up No. 2 northern. I would respectfully suggest that the minister in charge should immediately take action to speed up the movement of grain to allow the elevator to work on a seven day a week, 24 hours a day basis. I am sure that with the warm weather that has come to the western provinces the railways should be able to haul trains and supply cars. If they do not, they should answer for it. Elevators could then load on a 24 hour basis and fill the ships that are waiting. The wet grain that is being dried at that particular facility is no good, and the loading facilities for dry grain are not being used to their maximum capacity.

I will be very brief because I am sure that everyone has made it clear to the minister exactly where they stand with regard to this situation, as well as with regard to the cash advances proposed in Bill No. C-162. I would like to suggest that grain is Canada's main natural resource, and that it is being wasted. I sincerely suggest that the people in the eastern area of our country are not familiar with the situation which exists at present. For example, every time a question comes up with regard to agriculture, some hon. member sitting on that side suggests that if we keep going strenuously enough we can dry lots of grain. I am sure they are not sufficiently familiar with the grain drying operation to realize the amount of forced air it takes to dry the grain. We need a little more help. I think we must keep in mind that the $600 that was suggested as a maximum cash advance only takes into account the cost of drying damp grain, but the farmers themselves have to pay the cost of moving that grain to the dryer and back.

If you look at the cost of transportation in that area, you will realize that the movement of this grain costs the farmers a certain amount of money which they do not have at this time. I think the government should give serious attention to this fact. We also know that the $600 which will be given to the farmers to solve the emergency will be the cheapest $600 that the government has ever expended because they will certainly get it back. There have been cyclones and other disasters in every area of the country, and each time the government has been prepared to assist the people affected. There is no agricultural producer today who is asking for a handout. All he asks is fair play and fair treatment. He has to have that to retain the stability of the agricultural economy.

In closing, I should like to urge the minister in charge to pay serious attention to the loading of dry grain at the Moose Jaw terminal and at other terminals that are not working at maximum capacity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The Minister without Portfolio. I must advise the house that if the minister speaks at this time he will close the debate.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, we have had a rather long discussion on the grain situation on the prairies while proceeding with the second reading of this bill. We have heard hon. members opposite repeating for the third or fourth time speeches they made earlier in the house. I am happy to see the prose is slightly improving as they go on, although the text does not change.

The debate was led off by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), and perhaps I should refer to a few of the things he said. He was kind enough to ask whether I was in the habit of saying in Saskatchewan what I have been saying here about the grain situation. I should like to reassure him about that. He referred to a speech I made in which I may not have mentioned the grain situation. But, of course, he overlooked one I made two days before at the Farm and Home Week in which the grain situation was the sole topic.

I have no trouble discussing this issue with the grain farmers in Saskatchewan because if the situation is put to them in the way I see it they end up agreeing with me. I find no difficulty in understanding that the mail received by the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson) should be rather different from the mail which I receive. He receives mail along the lines: don't you think it would be a good idea to give us something. While I get mail from people who say they are getting on with the job, and asking for suggestions and comments as to how they can best help themselves. This is the key to the present situation.

I might add that the right hon. member for Prince Albert—I refer to this to set the record straight—made reference to a couple of portfolios in connection with myself. This is typical of the right hon. gentleman's performance, one at which the country has often marvelled, when he takes a half truth and runs a long way with it. The difficulty in this instance is that the part of the truth involved was even less than usual and the distance run was far greater than normal.

There is no doubt at all in my mind that there is an extremely serious cash and credit position affecting agriculture on the prairies, that there is a serious cash shortage and a serious extension of credit. This has resulted in the difficult position in which farmers find themselves when tackling the work of drying grain. Hence, this legislation. I have no doubt, however, that the cash and credit situation is a symptom of a deeper problem. I should like to refer hon. members opposite again to something I have suggested to them once before, namely, that they are doing the cause of western agriculture no good at all by homing in and complaining and panicking about every issue from which they think they can get a political advantage. When I said "panicking" I did not mean the farmers. I was speaking about the panicking of hon. members opposite in a political way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I should like to point out to hon. members opposite that in the process of doing this they are debasing the coinage of their argument throughout the rest of Canada about the fundamental problems of agriculture.

I am happy to say that several members opposite did get the message and did deal with the fundamental issues affecting the serious economic position in which agriculture finds itself. This is a long term situation. It is a situation which has existed for years, though it has varied in intensity and seriousness, depending upon a number of things. A bumper crop can stave off the difficulty for a while but essentially the problem is an underlying one. Hon. members opposite attempt in a very petty way to assess blame from the vantage point of their hindsight two or three months later, but it does no good to the cause of agriculture.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask a question at this point?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I would prefer that the hon. member put any question he might wish to ask at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. Baldwin: We shall have a lot of time in committee.

Mr. Southam: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister has made a statement criticizing members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. That is not a point of order.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Again, members of the opposition have used the 3-bushel quota in an attempt to assess blame in connection with that. I should like to draw their attention to the many months which went by after that quota had been brought into effect before they began to think they could use it for petty political advantage, though they welcomed it at the beginning.

Mr. McIntosh: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: There is no point of order.

Mr. McIntosh: He is a stooge. The minister cannot impute motives to the opposition and you are allowing him to do so, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: He is not.

Mr. McIntosh: Oh, sit down, stooge.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): This has been their tactics throughout. Now again, instead of simply welcoming the bill and allowing it to pass, they point to this fault and to that fault, with the benefit of two month's hindsight. The hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) referred to the bill as a pretext and a farce. But I have no doubt that if he is in the house he will vote for it.

[Mr. Lang.]

I appeal to members of the opposition. It might be thought I should not be concerned about members of the opposition and the way in which they are debasing the coinage of their case, but I am concerned because they should be spokesmen for agriculture in western Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I should like to say that the progress which has been made in dealing with the damp grain situation is a real credit to many thousands of individuals. Some of the measures taken by the government have been an important help. I have in mind the accelerated depreciation allowance, the tariff remissions, and co-operation with provincial departments of agriculture in organizing individual enterprise. I should like to pay tribute to the provincial departments of agriculture in a general way, as well as to agricultural representatives and others in the provinces who have done an excellent job in bringing to the attention of individual farmers the best ways in which to dry grain.

I was in Saskatoon over the weekend with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) and we were extremely impressed by the manner in which the grain drying equipment which is now there in great quantities is being readied for the great task ahead.

Mr. Horner: Being readied? Why is it not ready now?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): It is not in operation because of the weather conditions, but it is being readied, and in an efficient manner. It is being located in many instances near local elevators so that the drying can be done both swiftly and efficiently and so that the equipment at the local elevator itself may be used in the operation to reduce the drying cost. In most cases it was reported to me that the cost of drying is in this way being reduced to eight to ten cents a bushel, or something much less than had been spoken of previously with regard to many operations. In this fashion, individual farmers are capable of dealing with the damp grain situation.

There was a time when they were waiting, hoping that they could deliver more grain to the system for drying than was actually possible. On January 15, the transportation committee issued a release emphasizing that no farmer could expect any additional quota for damp grain above the three bushels which had been opened by the Wheat Board earlier in the year. This was firm notice to the farmers that the drying job, which could be done at the local level with a significant degree of organization, had to be done; that it was important that the organization be commenced.

Upon receipt of this notice the grain drying equipment began to move into position and to be made ready for operation. I am not in any way suggesting that a serious problem has now disappeared. Neither am I suggesting in any way that those individuals who have performed well in regard to this operation can now let up. The situation will continue to demand an important and all-out effort.

Indeed, it has been discovered that this year's grain may not keep as well as damp grain has kept in past years; that the peculiar frost and damp conditions may mean that the grain will not keep as well in spring weather as it has kept in past times. I emphasize this because it is important that we get on with the job in the quickest possible time.

I should now like to come to the issue that has been raised by some of the members opposite as to whether there should have been a grant to those who have dried grain instead of a loan. Again, I suggest that this is the kind of unfortunate suggestion that is made by hon. members opposite which misleads people who are outside the agricultural community into thinking that the fundamental reason for there being an income problem on the farms is the damp grain situation that exists this year, or it is due to this problem or the other problem.

Although this is not the fundamental problem, people who themselves are not farmers may be misled into thinking it is because of the way the problem has been tackled. It would not have made sense to give an outright grant to those farmers with grain to dry when side by side there may have been a farmer whose crops had suffered frost damage or who for one reason or another had no crop at all. Although one can fall back on the basic economic argument about the need for assistance to agriculture, it should not be tied to the peculiar existence of damp grain this year. I urge that consideration very strenuously on all members of this house.

In the course of the debate, some points were raised which were relevant to the bill itself. Hon. members opposite asked some questions about its operation, and in one or two cases about its meaning. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) indicated that he had an amendment which he thought it might be necessary to move and asked me whether I would comment upon the concern he felt. I think I can show him that the amendment he referred to is in fact not necessary and that the cash advances act, as amended, will be adequate to allow for every situation.

Under the act no farmer is in default until a number of circumstances occur. If he has been making his deliveries he is not in default until December 31. The hon. member thought that perhaps this date should be extended. I would point out to him that this is not necessary, because where a farmer wishes so to do he can merge any outstanding balance in this year's cash advance with the cash advance for which he may apply next year and thereby update any outstanding cash advance. This will be the general situation.

There may be a situation where a farmer has an outstanding cash advance but has no crop next year, and therefore cannot apply for a cash advance. As the hon. member pointed out, in those special cases there is discretion vested in the Wheat Board to extend or to waive the ordinary default provisions. In that way, there is adequate provision made for default situations.

If this measure passes in short order, I expect that the assistance available under the act will be extended to farmers early next week. Farmers will apply for assistance on forms supplied to the elevator companies by the Wheat Board, and the cash will be made available to the farmers at the local elevator.

The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) asked about the repayment situation. The answer to his question is that the additional amount borrowed under the emergency cash advance provision is added on at the end of the repayment schedule without changing the schedule. This is a question which farmers on the prairies have been asking and which I appreciate the hon. member raising so that the matter can be brought forcefully to their attention.

I think I have dealt with most of the points that I should deal with at this stage, and I urge hon. members to join with me in their spoken intention to see early passage of this measure. May I indicate to all members that I should like to ask for their co-operation and proceed to third reading tonight, as well as complete the next stage.

Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and, pursuant to standing order 54, the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in committee of the whole on Bill C-162, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

On clause 1—Emergency advance payments.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I am eager to have clause 1 carried and also to have the bill carried this evening; I assure you and the committee of that fact at the commencement of my remarks. I should like to refer to the minister as the assistant minister of trade and commerce, though that is not his proper title. His position is more like that of a parliamentary secretary except it is an honorary one in that he gets cabinet pay but does little more than that which is done by a parliamentary secretary. His leader does not feel him worthy to have the Wheat Board placed firmly within his jurisdiction. While he may well have been a lawyer and a dean of law, he has been a long time off the farm. His remarks tonight prove that fact beyond the shadow of a doubt. I must warn him that he has lost touch with the basic facts of farming. He said, in reviewing clause 1 of the bill, that the opposition is up to its old tactics and will just not allow the bill to pass. His attitude was that we should welcome the bill and allow it to pass. Why is it that the Liberals of this house are like the Liberals of old? They think they operate by divine right; that everything they bring in is right; that nothing they do should be criticized and that all their actions should be welcomed by those representing farm ridings. The minister's attitude was that we should bow down on one knee and say, "Thank you, Mr. Minister, for bringing in this bill. We now allow it to pass." That is what he said in essence. Why is it the Liberals think they have a divine right to be in power and that everything they do is all right.

• (9:20 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Give it to them, Jack.

Mr. Horner: I said this afternoon that the Liberals brought in this bill too late. They did not act early enough to take care of this problem.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Lang.]

Mr. Horner: I said this afternoon the government should have been aware of the situation as early as October and met it with concrete steps. Instead, they bring in a bill which, in the minister's words, does nothing more than allow farmers $600 on top of the $6,000 they already owe. The minister said, "Don't worry; this may be carried on next year; we do not expect the farmers to pay the loan back next year because it may be carried on." I live and farm in what is commonly called a "next year" country. I am well aware of the effect this type of legislation will have on our population.

An hon. Member: Speak up there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Crowfoot has the floor.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I would not have spoken unless the minister had made some glaring omissions—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner: The catcalls from the government benches show the government supporters are not concerned about this problem. They do not realize the extent of the problem facing western Canada.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Horner: I am sure that rural voters of Saskatchewan and city voters of Calgary did not elect hon. members to come down here and laugh when agricultural problems touching western Canada are discussed. I am sure those constituents did not send their members here to do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: If they want to hoot and laugh and make fun—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner: At least I speak my mind—

An hon. Member: Say something.

Mr. Horner: I am. I remember when the farmers of Ontario marched to Ottawa last fall. The tractors rolled up. Some of them were good looking tractors and some of them were poor looking tractors. Some had signs and some were without signs. I remember one tractor that had a sign saying, "Pierre doesn't care." I read that sign and thought how true it was. I thought the "doesn't care" meant the Prime Minister didn't care.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Horner: Tonight, we are having a lot of hoots and catcalls from the government benches. There are a whole lot more hon. members over there who, along with Pierre, do not care about our agricultural problems.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: The minister has just come back from a trip to Saskatoon, where he was last week end, and was pleased to see a lot of the grain drying equipment now is being readied. I must emphasize the words, "is being readied". I was thunderstruck that a minister would have the gall to come into the house at this time and say, first, "You in the opposition should welcome this bill, support it and let it pass". Then, after returning from his trip last week to Saskatoon he adds "A lot of the grain drying equipment is being readied for the drying of grain." We heard that from the No. 1 minister involved in wheat marketing.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Horner: If I had the Prime Minister's vocabulary I might say, why the hell hasn't the equipment been readied?

An hon. Members: Speak up.

Mr. Horner: Of course, I haven't the Prime Minister's vocabulary but I shall still use his words. Why has the equipment not been readied? Why was it not ready two months ago? Why is the equipment not drying grain now? Why is it not working at 100 per cent of capacity today? Why is it "to be readied" or "being made ready"?

The minister may say, "Oh, but I do not accept responsibility for the ineptitude of this minister or that minister. The Wheat Board is the responsibility of one minister and it is really he who is responsible for this. But the equipment is being readied for drying."

It is clear that when it comes to delegating responsibility, the government adopts a scattergun approach. Responsibility is given to one minister over there, another minister over here and still a third somewhere else. One minister is responsible for the grain council, and a second attendant from Saskatchewan is given another bit of responsibility. I do not yet know exactly what his responsibilities are. He is an honorary parliamentary secretary; that's just about what he is. He is a so called honorary parliamentary secretary receiving the pay of a cabinet minister and not earning it. If grain matters were the entire responsibility of one minister, we might know where to pin responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: If the minister can go out to his own riding in the first week of February and then say that grain drying equipment is being readied or to be readied, I say to him he has not earned his honorary parliamentary secretary's pay, which is the same as a cabinet minister's. He said that we on this side had suggested that farmers should receive grants, his attitude being that it would be terrible to suggest grants when some farmers have already dried their grain and others harvested their grain dry. We on this side have suggested that grants should be made available in order to permit grain dryers to be moved to where the damp grain is. Has the government done anything about this? It has not.

We suggested that permits be granted for the movement of damp grain across the U.S. border to drying facilities. The reaction of the Minister of Agriculture was, "That is very interesting—a novel suggestion. Why have we not thought of that before. We will give it consideration." We on this side of the house suggested the removal of tariffs on commercial dryers coming into Canada, a minor item. On farm dryers there was no tariff, because the government had acted on one of our suggestions. I suggested to the Minister of Agriculture that the tariff on steel silage bins which can store damp grain or hay be removed; he has not done that, and that is a minor matter.

An hon. Member: Shout louder.

Mr. Horner: Words of wisdom are coming from government backbenchers. We in the opposition are always pleased when government backbenchers speak, because they rarely have the chance to do so. I have always believed in free speech and I always encourage government backbenchers to take the opportunity to speak. I welcome interruptions from government backbenchers, because only when interrupting are they allowed to speak. They can interrupt me all they like.

An hon. Member: Speak up.

Mr. Horner: I am sorry government backbenchers suffer stiff hands to close their mouths, because the cabinet and the Prime Minister are doing just that in keeping them silent.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

An hon. Member: You are a sick man.

Mr. Horner: A good many catcalls are coming from the government side. I have just listed four steps which ought to have been taken. The government has only acted on one of them. Hon. members of the opposition have suggested, and we suggest once again, the setting up of a transport controller to control the movement of grain at Vancouver. Although the government has weighed the pros and cons of the issue, it has not acted. When the Pearson government took office some years ago there were 60 days of decision. This government is prepared to have four years of indecision.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: The government says they are reviewing the grain handling problem. I say they are reviewing so much they cannot review the grain program. They have handed to a grain council the task of reviewing the marketing, research, production and transportation of grain. We have never been informed who is paying for this review. Will it be the farmer or the government? That question has not yet been answered.

An hon. Member: They know the answer.

Mr. Horner: I am not condemning this bill. As the minister has suggested, if we don't like it then we don't vote for it. This bill, we admit, is a step in the right direction but we state categorically that it is far too late.

An hon. Member: Too little, too late.

Mr. Horner: The minister is proud because of the fact he went to Saskatoon to review the grain handling situation. I ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), who is from the province of Alberta, and is fairly knowledgable in some phases of agriculture—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: —is he concerned about the forecast by the Alberta Department of Agriculture that Alberta farmers may lose $36 million if the grain is not dried before spring? There are approximately 76,000 farmers in that province. One can see that $36 million divided amongst 76,000 farmers amounts to a sizeable loss of money per farmer.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) sits smug in his seat. Some hon. members call him Scrooge. He really doesn't care because he knows eventually he will get it all anyway.

Mr. Benson: That is not true, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Horner: The farmers do not receive too much. In any case, if they did he knows he will get it all when the farmer dies. I would like the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture to make a study of the age of Canadian farmers. How gleaming and smiling the Minister of Finance is when I suggest the farmer's age. He knows how quick he will own the land, and then he will be able to say to the Prime Minister, "Now we own the land, we have to sell the wheat. The farmers are working for us". That is the attitude he has adopted.

The Chairman: Order, please. I would ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to Bill C-162.

Mr. Horner: I apologize, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I also ask the hon. members of the committee to bear in mind the hon. member's time is limited and he should be allowed time to make his remarks.

Mr. Horner: I apologize for straying from Bill C-162, Mr. Chairman, but if you could only understand the concern of western farmers with regard to the estate tax,—

The Chairman: Order, order.

Mr. Horner: —the number of letters which I and other members receive concerning estate taxes—

The Chairman: Order, order.

Mr. Horner: When I see the gleaming look in the eyes of the Minister of Finance, I cannot help being diverted.

Mr. Benson: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman. I would simply like to say to my hon. friend that if I am gleaming over here it is only because of my friendship for him.

Mr. Horner: I appreciate the minister's remarks. I have found him to be a courteous person with whom to discuss matters but a difficult person to convert or change his opinion. There is a question between the two of us. The minister says the special burden on the farmer is not undue. Any lawyer will realize these terms are debatable and argumentative. I am not a lawyer but I would like to defend the fact that the estate tax is a special burden on the farmers.

May I return to Bill C-162? I have suggested five specific things the government should do. They have done one. I should now like to make the sixth suggestion. They should have consulted with the municipalities and offered a bonus for moving the large commercially operated grain driers to the damp grain areas. The government could have facilitated the movement of grain driers, even the ones manufactured in my constituency. Last fall they could have paid a bonus to anyone who purchased a grain drier. The Minister of Agriculture has suggested the opposition never offer constructive suggestions. I now give a seventh suggestion. The government could have paid a subsidy of $50 or $100 to a farmer purchasing a grain drier. The government made no such suggestion because they were not concerned. They threw the problem back in the lap of the farmer. The Cabinet told Mr. McNamara, the head of the Wheat Board, to advise the farmers to dry the grain themselves. The farmers will have to dry 800 million bushels.

We lost grain sales, we lost ships. One ship returned to Germany last week. Another went to Australia to pick up grain and we lost the sale of 500 million bushels to that country. Who is going to pay the demurrage charges on the ships from Japan which will amount to $32,000? The farmers of western Canada will have to pay that unless the government is prepared to pay it. We do not necessarily object to the passage of this bill. The point I am making is that it does not go far enough. The minister says the government is doing a great job, and therefore we should allow the bill to pass. We cannot do this if the minister feels this is the final answer to the whole grain drying problem. I say it is not the only answer to the problems of western Canada.

I have listed this evening seven definite steps which could be taken. The government has taken only one, and that was to remove the tariff on commercial grain driers. There have been less than 100 driers enter Canada since the removal of that tariff which amounts to practically nothing. I say to the minister who is piloting this bill through the House of Commons, if you want to earn your pay then get acquainted with the problem and be determined to convince your colleagues of the seriousness of the problem. It is not good enough to sit with a bunch of trained seals behind you patting you on the back. These pats on the back are not earned. The group is well trained and they pat you on the back for no reason.

We on this side will pat you on the back when you do a job and earn the pat. But when you rise in your place, in the first week of February, and say that the grain drying equipment is being readied you get no pat on the back from this side of the house. This equipment should have been ready three months ago. I say to you that, as a new member of parliament and a new minister, you have a hard road ahead but you will get your share of credit from this side of the house if you earn it, but not unless you earn it.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of privilege. I possibly should have done this earlier but I did not want to interrupt the hon. member for Crowfoot in the full flow of his adrenalin. Others less charitable might say martinis, but I will settle for adrenalin. In any case, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member chose, and I think it is the third time this session that allusions have been made from the other side, to refer to what I have been doing in this house at a given time. This may, of course, be attributable to the unusual amount of time I spend here by some people's standards, but in any case I would like to record that when I was alleged to be hooting and so on, I was behind the curtain smoking.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, let us establish very clearly that this is not a point of privilege. A point of privilege has to be raised at the very earliest possible opportunity, and certainly I never at any time referred to the hon. member for Calgary South. However, I say to the hon. member that if the cap fits, wear it. I also represent part of the city of Calgary—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

Mr. Horner: I am speaking on a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: There is no point of order. If the hon. member has a point of order I would like him to state it.

Mr. Horner: My point of order is that the hon. member for Calgary South rose to speak on a point of privilege. The point of privilege was, in fact, not a point of privilege. He referred to me as being in full flight in a speech on agriculture—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner: Well, he boasted about his record of attendance in the House of Commons, which was completely uncalled for. I can only say that, in view of the remarks he made during the election campaign—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Horner: —to the effect that Calgary is not concerned with agriculture, today he must have a guilty conscience with regard to the whole subject of agriculture.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I was a little bit surprised this evening to hear the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) accuse the opposition of bad faith and then say that he hoped the co-operation of the house would be given to get this bill passed this evening. Really, Mr. Chairman, the two approaches are a bit conflicting, and we have had the old panic button bit again. I, myself, would like to see this bill go through tonight, not because I am fully convinced it is what should be done, but I think it is all the government intends to do.

I do not intend to say anything about grain movements or that sort of thing. However, I will say that in my opinion the government has failed to tell this house the nature of the problem and how it proposes to deal with it. For example, the government has not indicated how many millions of bushels it thinks we have to contend with under this bill. There has been no indication of the probable cost per bushel of drying grain or how this offer is related to the probable cost per bushel of drying it. The Minister has not dealt with the number of machines and the type of equipment available. These are the relevant facts that I had expected the government to put before the house.

If we on this side are being asked to support this bill, and if our co-operation is requested, then we must consider the kind of information that should have been provided to the house. I am not going to deal further with this matter except to say, as I have said before in the house, that the farmers do not come here as beggars or supplicants. This is a serious situation and we expect it to be dealt with in a serious manner.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, in light of the minister's remarks I have a similar feeling to that of my colleague from Saskatoon-Biggar. If the minister thinks for one moment that we enjoy castigating him, I can tell him that we do not. In fact, we think he is a nice fellow.

Starting back on October 14 proposals were made by members in the opposition, both in the Official Opposition and in our group, dealing with this problem. We are not suggesting that our proposals were 100 per cent right. They were made on specific points. A dozen proposals were made by members in this group and by members of the Official Opposition, yet we have never received the courtesy of a concrete reply from government ministers as to how good, bad, adequate or inadequate they thought our proposals.

We do not pretend that our proposals were perfect. We put them forward as ideas, and we would have liked to receive a reply to them. But we did not get that. Instead of a reply from the minister we got abuse; we were told that we speak in bad faith and that we are trying to gain political advantage. Mr. Chairman, in that respect we do not need to say a word because the action or inaction of the government is giving us all the political advantage we need in the prairie provinces.

However, I will say this for the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang), he is the first and only minister to date who has fairly answered the proposals made by members in the opposition parties. These proposals have been made a number of times since mid-October concerning direct cash payments for the drying of grain and putting it into marketable condition. He is the first and only one who finally said no. We could not even get that answer out of the Minister of Agriculture, although I am sure he was getting that answer from the Minister of Finance.

The minister and the government are perfectly entitled to decide as a matter of policy that they will not make a cash outlay for this purpose. However, it is wrong to use the kind of logic that the minister used when he said that if he makes cash payments to farmers who have grain to dry, then what about the farmer who does not have to dry grain, and what about the farmer who does not have a crop at all?

Let us apply the same logic to the occasion when the Winnipeg flood occurred and public funds were spent on behalf of the city of Winnipeg, and rightly so. The question could then have been asked, what about all the other poor cities that did not have a flood. You could apply the same logic to the case of the steel plant in Nova Scotia when funds were provided to save it. At that time there were lots of other steel plants doing well. Such a logical reason for not providing cash advances does not wash with members of this house.

I submit that probably the Minister without Portfolio, his colleague the minister of Agriculture, and possibly the hon. member for Assiniboia made sincere efforts to persuade the government, and in particular the Minister of Finance, to part with some money but they did not succeed. That is fine if they have done that, and I will give them A for effort. But I refuse to accept the kind of arguments the minister put forward tonight as logical or reasonable against the idea of providing cash outlays to put cereal grains in a marketable condition.

The other day I raised another question. I would still like to know if the Minister without Portfolio, the Minister of Agriculture or anyone else answered the Saskatchewan Farmers' Union request. If so, what was the answer? The proposals by the members of the opposition just did not originate with the New Democratic party or the Conservative party. The Saskatchewan Farmers Union, the National Farmers Union, the Saskatchewan Federation of Agriculture, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Alberta Farmers Union, all these ask for the same thing. If the minister suggests they are all wet too, I hope he will stand up and say so. I also wonder whether the minister can assure me, if it is already in the legislation I may have missed it, that it is possible for a farmer to carry over a cash advance in the next year. If such provision is in the legislation, perhaps he would point out to me where it is. If it is not in the legislation, I should like to know whether it is in a regulation somewhere. If he can satisfy me on this point, then I will agree that an amendment to section 13 is not necessary. If he cannot satisfy me on this point, I would hope the minister would look at it again and quickly bring in an amendment to the bill.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I rise to address a few remarks to the minister, more in sorrow than in anger, in connection with this matter. I recognize his right to give the answer he did on second reading, but I suggest to the hon. gentleman who is now assuming other responsibilities that when the members of any opposition party in the full exercise of their rights and responsibilities criticize the manner in which the government has introduced a bill, criticize the extent to which the bill goes in terms of meeting the problems with which it is designed to deal, that ministers playing partisan politics should not seize on this opportunity to attack opposition members as it seems to me the hon. gentleman did. He talked about half truths. This seems to me to be very peculiar coming from a member of a government which would not recognize the truth if it lay down alongside it.

The former constituency of Peace River embraced within its limits more farmers than any other constituency in this country. It was redistributed and split up, so this situation no longer prevails. I have been content to leave in the hands of my competent colleagues in Her Majesty's loyal opposition the task of criticizing the various agricultural measures which have been brought in. I have not said anything, although at times I felt I should have. However, I believe they have fairly put what people have been saying all over Canada; that is, that it is about time this government got off its big, fat, lazy establishment and did something. That has been the tenor of our criticism and I believe it is justified and rational criticism. I am sorry the government has not taken into account the few hundred dollars which are being paid by this measure, which barely constitutes the amount by which the Minister of Finance and the government have caused inflation in this country. The $600 probably represents the extra cost of living which the farmer has to pay today.

Mr. Benson: Nonsense.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister will have an opportunity to deal with this later on his own measure. Never have we seen with regard to the agricultural problems of western Canada a more flabby, futile, indifferent, inefficient, attitude by a government. The weather has been used as an excuse for not doing what needs to be done. I think this is a terrible example. In the past few days I have had letters from constituents in my area who mentioned meetings which had been held at which the Liberal candidate, among others, had attended. The only solution presented to those meetings was that the poor farmers in the Peace River country could wait until some time in the late spring, then possibly the Minister of Agriculture would go there to console them. They could weep on his shoulder. This is small consolation in respect of the problems which face these people.

I think that the minister, who is obviously concerned about seeing this bill go through, might benefit if he would read the contribution made in this house by the former minister of transport, now the President of the Canadian Transport Commission, concerning the piloting of a difficult bill. That gentleman referred to the importance of securing the participation and co-operation of hon. members from all sides of the house.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, unlike my colleague the hon. member for Peace River, I rise to speak on the first clause of this bill more in anger than in sorrow.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIntosh: Yes, oh, oh! I only wish I could convey to members of the house how angry a great number of the farmers are about the inability of this government to cope with this agricultural problem. I have listened, until I am sick and tired, to the utterances of the two ministers who are in the house tonight to the effect that the members of the opposition who have spoken on behalf of the grain farmers are doing a disservice to the people whom they represent, the western farmers. This is their excuse. Much has been made of the weather, and the fact nobody anticipated this type of weather. These ministers also make excuses about transportation, the lack of box cars, and the lack of sales. Then, when they have anticipated sales they do not know how to cope with them. As one hon. member pointed out boats are sent away empty. This is a disgrace because these things have an affect on the economy of the whole country and not just that of western Canada.

I say to the minister from Saskatoon that he is doing a disservice to the people he is supposed to be fighting for in this house. If he would make the statement he has made about the opposition members to the cabinet, outlining the disservice the cabinet is doing to the grain farmers because of their inability to find markets for the grain and the lack of future planning, then he would be doing a service to the western farmers. He would also be doing a service to his party because the position of the Liberal party in western Canada is now even worse than it was during the last election, and that is saying something. I suggest that the minister should be telling the cabinet they should review their whole attitude with regard to agriculture since they came to power in 1963 because they have said, time and time again on public platforms, that it is not up to them to sell wheat. These ministers say that for the Canadian Wheat Board should sell wheat and that it was just a circumstance that wheat was sold when another government was in power. When the farmers in western Canada have experienced both types of administration with regard to agriculture, they find such statements hard to swallow. The next time the minister stands on the platform in an election campaign he will have difficulty in putting that argument across.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I would ask the hon. member to restrict his argument to clause 1 of the bill.

Mr. McIntosh: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps I have deviated from clause 1 but it is a very broad clause. I am sure I can substantiate the statements I have made because I felt the statements the minister made should be answered from this side of the house. He has given his own members a wrong picture. The minister is giving all the eastern members an incorrect picture. The eastern members feel that every time farmers from western Canada receive either an interim of final payment from the Wheat Board that this money comes out of the federal treasury. This is not so; it is the farmers' own money.

The minister referred to grants requested by some members on this side of the house. What is wrong with that? The farmers of western Canada have contributed to every national project in this country, including the St. Lawrence Seaway and the C.B.C., although until last year my constituents had for the previous eight years paid an average of $20 per house per year and did not receive service from the C.B.C. These people did not complain one bit.

There is one disservice the minister is doing the people he represents; he should be trying to paint the proper picture to his colleagues from western Canada on that side of the house and some of those from eastern Canada on this side. Western farmers do not receive the grants which some people have suggested they do. They are losing money out of the wheat pool, and are losing money by reason of the ships being tied up in Vancouver. The farmers will have to pay the demurrage charges in this connection. This money does not come from the national treasury; it comes off the price the farmer gets for his wheat. The farmer suffers the loss in this regard. The minister should be explaining these things to his cabinet colleagues so they may understand the problem. Then, perhaps they would not be cat-calling as they did this evening when members on this side of the house tried to fight for their constituents.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, before we proceed to other business I should like to confirm that tomorrow and Thursday we shall be calling as the first order of business the bill to amend the Estate Tax Act. Perhaps I could also indicate that there have been discussions, and particularly a suggestion, that although the Minister of Justice will himself be occupied at the federal-provincial conference next week we propose to call again the second reading of the omnibus bill to amend the Criminal Code. This will be done on the understanding that at a later stage, either that week or the following week, the minister will close the debate. Therefore hon. members interested in participating in the debate have notice that the bill will be coming forward again, probably on February 11 rather than, as I suggested on a earlier date, February 17.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under standing order 40 deemed to have been moved.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING—OPPORTUNITIES FOR UNEMPLOYED TO IMPROVE TECHNICAL SKILLS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the house the question I asked the other day with regard to vocational training. On January 21 I asked the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) whether additional funds would be made available for vocational training and facilities therefor. He indicated that no additional funds would be allocated for vocational training in technical schools. I then asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on January 24 whether, having in mind his statement that with the elimination of the municipal winter works program, additional funds would be provided for the upgrading of such technical schools as required them? Would he agree that there should be funds allotted for such a purpose, particularly because of the urgency connected with the situation? My question was not accepted and I referred it to the late show.

I should like to refer briefly to some of the statements made in the house by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In October, the Prime Minister said he had explained that the winter works program would be replaced by programs entailing much higher and much more useful expenditures as far as the economic expansion of the country was concerned. In answer to a question the Prime Minister also said that when the government abandoned the winter works program, it did so because it felt there were other ways in which to ensure prosperity. On September 16 he said that we must terminate any programs which could be replaced by more productive ones, and must defer any which were not immediately essential. The Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand) suggested that our intention was to increase the amount of training during this period.

This program was not introduced in order to help municipalities but to improve the employment position in the winter time. I would suggest that in each and every one of these cases those responsible for making the statements were dealing with the upgrading of people going to technical and vocational schools. It put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) as to whether additional funds would be available, and he answered "no". I now suggest that an answer should be given in the house as to whether or not the additional funds that were said to be allocated for the upgrading of those people who need this type of training will be provided. It appears that no such funds are available. We realize that there is some difficulty in projecting what will be necessary in the future for the upgrading of certain skills, but I suggest that in these provinces where technical and vocational schools are provided there is a definite need for federal participation in view of the rapid movement of employees in this country.

We all realize that there is a great mobility in our society, and it becomes the federal responsiblity to provide funds to upgrade those people who must move. I suggest there is a real urgency in providing this type of facility. I am given to understand that the budget has not been increased to provide additional funds for the upgrading of the vocational training which is desperately needed at this time.

I believe in all sincerity that the government, in the statements that have been made in the house, has led us down the garden path in suggesting to us that the municipal winter works program was curtailed in order to provide additional funds for vocational training. If this is the case and no additional funds are being provided, then what was the purpose of the government in suggesting they would cut down the municipal winter works program to provide this type of funds? We knew at the time that the abandonment of the winter works program would curtail employment in the communities as well as on projects that were well planned in advance.

We ended up with more unemployment than was necessary and without the facilities to make the upgrading of these people possible. I suggest that some answer should be given in the house by the minister as to whether or not the government was sincere when it said that addtional funds would be provided for vocational training in this nation.

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration): It is true that the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) asked this question on January 21 and 24. It is also a fact that the government was very sincere when they said sufficient funds had been put away for that purpose to the extent that the budget would allow. In point of fact, retraining funds have been substantially increased in all provinces this winter, well beyond the money that would have been spent had the winter works program been continued. In the Atlantic provinces the increase has been in the neighbourhood of $9 million, for a total of approximately $26 million. When this $9 million increase is set against the total federal winter works expenditure of just over half a million dollars, one can appreciate the impact of this additional effort. In Ontario, the training program expenditures are up by $13.5 million, and in Quebec by $18.6 million.

In the hon. member's own province, the funds have been increased from $5.4 million to $7.6 million. This compares with a winter works outlay of less than three quarters of a million dollars in 1967-68. The total expenditure on the winter works program for 1967-68 amounted to about $25 million and the increase in the cost of the manpower training program provided for in this year's budget amounts to 100 per cent. So, provision is made in this year's budget for double the money spent on the winter works program. This being the case, no doubt can be read into the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or the words of the minister directly responsible when they say the winter works program has been changed to allow for a form of expenditure which would be of greater benefit to those concerned.

Even though the hon. member may not be satisfied by the way in which we are spending this money he should at least, in my view, recognize the effort the government is making in this field, and take a note of the expenditures involved. I cannot say what the next budget will bring, but I am pretty sure that there will be a further increase in the sum provided. It is along these lines that the government intends to proceed to correct some of the problems in connection with which members of the government are reproaching—

ESTATE TAX ACT—INFORMATION TO HONOURABLE MEMBERS RESPECTING LEGISLATION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question arises out of one I directed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) on January 29 suggesting a possible leak by members of the government caucus with regard to certain proposed changes in the Estate Tax proposal.

If one refers to Hansard at page 4899, one will find that I asked the minister whether he had authorized the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Smerchanski) and the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Cobbe) to disclose his intention to make certain changes, and bow to some of the opposition to the bill. The minister replied: "No, Mr. Speaker".

The reason I object to that answer is that just by the sheerest coincidence the two hon. members I mentioned had held a press conference at Liberal party headquarters in Winnipeg on the Monday. I am told the hon. member for Portage had appeared on television. And they made statements to the press.

I have before me a clipping from the Winnipeg Free Press of January 28, wherein it is stated:

> Changes in the proposed estates tax bill are expected to be announced in Ottawa shortly by Finance Minister E. J. Benson, two Manitoba M.P.s disclosed at a Winnipeg press conference.
> Gerald R. Cobbe, chairman of the Manitoba federal caucus, and Mark G. Smerchanski said the Canadian Finance Minister had decided to bow to the opposition on the bill that had come up from both within and without the party in recent weeks.

First, they dealt with the matter of exemption, and indicated the exemption figure would probably be made considerably higher. The exact figure of $50,000 was not given, but it was indicated the figure would be considerably higher. In the second place, the press were told the revised proposal would include:

> An altered method of paying so that estate taxes could, if necessary, be paid over, say, a five-year period—an annual penalty based on "current interest rates" to be charged.

> To eliminate the uncertainty about proposed legislation that would not be retroactive to October, 1968, an arrangement whereby the new tax would only take effect from the date it becomes law. Thus, persons in the process of making decisions regarding their estates until then could have an option of whether they prefer the old or the new legislation.

Other statements were made by the two hon. members, blowing their own horns, to the effect that they had put pressure on the minister, and so forth.

That is just so much barnyard fertilizer, Mr. Speaker. We know there was opposition. There has been opposition by mail. There has been every type of opposition from this side of the house. There has been opposition from backbenchers. Those chaps aren't telling us anything. The minister's own members would tell us that they were opposed to many of these things.

Speeches were made on the subject by members on this side, both inside and outside the house. I have heard speeches made before the tax foundation, assessments of the proposals, and I participated in the discussions. But what I am objecting to is members of the government party claiming that they have influence on the minister and are able to zero in on precisely the three points that were announced by the minister in his press release the following day. The coincidence is very close, and is also very touching.

Mr. Benson: It is not close at all. Read what was said.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I know what the modifications are as much as the minister. The exemption was raised considerably. They did not use the figure of $50,000, but it was considerably higher than the $20,000 that they mentioned. With regard to payments being spread over five years, again this indication was given, and also the current interest rates were mentioned. This is precisely what has been provided for, instalment payments. That provision is in the minister's own statement.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): Over five years though.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister says in his statement that there will be up to six instalments, but these are over a period of five years.

Mr. Benson: That is now.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not intervening for the purpose of informing the hon. member that time has expired but to remind both the hon. member and the minister that there should be no debate at this time.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I could argue with the minister on this. Previously there was an option. The minister could grant relief in the case of hardship; now it is granted as a matter of right. But the period is five years with six instalments.

There is also an option with regard to the legislation coming into effect. In the case of persons whose estates fall in before August 1, 1969 they can elect either to be assessed under the old legislation or under the new provisions, and as far as the estate is concerned they will naturally chose the more advantageous alternative. This is also forecast. Slightly different words were used, but that was the intent of them.

What I am asking is how these two members were able to call a press conference and announce that these would be the changes to be made about four or five days before the minister actually made his announcement.

Mr. Francis: They were smart.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will take care of the hon. member later.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have only three minutes as opposed to the seven minutes taken by the hon. member. First of all, in respect to the estate tax I did not receive a single letter or request for a meeting from any member of the opposition. Secondly, I should like to say that the most frequent submissions with regard to the estate tax dealt with the level of the exemptions and difficulties concerning payment of estate tax, as well as with what would happen to the estates of people who died before the law came into effect. Everybody knew this except the opposition members, who were not paying any attention to what was happening.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister is factually wrong.

Mr. Benson: I told everybody who made these submissions that I would give them sympathetic consideration, in the same way as I have said I would give sympathetic consideration to representations respecting tax reform in this country. That is all I have ever said to anyone. Beyond that, there was no leak. If my hon. friend examines what people in Winnipeg have been saying he will find they are not even remotely representing what I actually did.

• (10:20 p.m.)

I have been speaking of the three major points submitted to me across the country. Almost everybody knew about those except hon. members of the opposition who seemed to have no interest in the matter and who did not want to make submissions to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is not factually correct.

Mr. Thompson: I have received more than 1,000 letters on the subject.

Mr. Benson: Why did the hon. member not speak to me about the matter or send me the letters? If hon. members on the other side of the house wish to make submissions I will give them sympathetic attention. That is all I have ever said.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has the floor.

[Mr. Benson.]

POWER—NELSON RIVER, MANITOBA—ALLEGED HARMFUL EFFECTS OF DEVELOPMENT

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question arises because of great concern being felt over something that potentially is very good for northern Manitoba. We have two important rivers, the Nelson and the Churchill, which fall in approximately parallel courses towards Hudson Bay. As is probably well known, it is planned to harness the Nelson River and obtain about 6 million kilowatts of power from it at a cost of about $1 billion. The federal government is taking part in this enterprise by contributing to the cost of 596 odd miles of transmission line south from the power site. This could be a bonanza for the province and for most of us in Canada, but there is another side to the coin which seriously worries me and which has prompted my participation in this debate at this time.

There are experts who are very, very concerned about an Indian community of 100 families who earn an average income of $3,600 a year from trapping, fishing and that sort of thing. That sort of income is very unusual for Indians. These Indians are completely self-sufficient. I believe one man only is on welfare. Everybody else is secure in employment there. The Indians there are in tune with their environment and able to live well.

It is proposed to back up the Churchill River and allow this valley where the Indians live and South Indian Lake to be submerged under 35 feet of water. The Indians living there would have to move away without receiving adequate compensation. There is no sign yet that they will receive adequate compensation. That sort of thing has already happened to one Indian community, and it was ruined by having to move.

The people of Churchill are also concerned about what will happen to them if 80 per cent of the water of the Churchill River is diverted. The federal government is taking some interest in this area. The people there wonder if the river will freeze in the winter. Will there be enough water to service existing sewage facilities? Will shipping be able to come there? Will there be enough water for the whales, and will the whaling industry there survive? Also, will there be enough water to fill existing wells and, as I have already asked, will ships be able to come to the port? I am not a prophet of gloom but I do not believe these questions have been adequately answered by anyone.

Another community called Nelson House which consists of 1,200 people is in serious trouble. This community, fairly close to Lake Winnipeg, is in potentially serious trouble. Financial experts feel that, to the Indians at South Indian Lake, their fishing is worth $1,171,000 in income, and their trapping is worth $51,000. Those figures might be taken as the basis of any compensation awarded to those people. The industry of the people up there will be ruined because the provincial government will not listen to experts who have looked into the situation. These experts are not spurious or invented. They are real experts whom I can name. A report has been submitted to the provincial government by its own experts. If the government does not listen to them that is its own business, but the loss affects all Manitoba.

The premier of Manitoba says that he will reconsider his decision on the matter. But I am worried in case he is tied to an agreement with the federal government respecting the supply of power lines which may be one of those non-negotiable, non-changeable situations in which the dictates of common sense must be ignored for the sake of a piece of paper. I hope that is not so. From reports I have seen it is indicated that changes that would take place in the development of power, if any of the alternative suggestions proposed by the provincial Hydro authority were accepted, would be infinitesimal when one considers the five or six million kilowatts of power that would be produced by the entire development. Certainly, the proposed changes are not great enough to justify the steps proposed to be taken. Viable alternatives to present courses of action exist. For instance, water needed to produce power could be held or stored in Saskatchewan. It seems, however, that the Manitoba provincial government wants to have control of this water. Other alternatives might be considered. The provincial government might consider taking water from Minnesota or North Dakota. At any rate, we should ask ourselves if we need this water badly enough to dispossess the people I have referred to of their livelihoods.

I hope the federal government is not irrevocably committed to a situation that will allow the provincial government to turn the areas I have spoken of into a swamp that may last for 100 years. In the opinion of ecologists and other experts the swamp will last that long. On the other hand, if the provincial government wishes to hide behind the coat tails of the federal government and do nothing, it should say so. But we should try to compensate those who will lose their livelihoods.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Mines, Energy and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has been talking about the problems which have been brought about as the result of the growth and development of our country. As any of our important resources are developed people may have to be relocated, or allocated other places to live. Of course, if resources both under the ground and on top of the ground are to be developed there will have to be a relocation of our people.

The hon. member has touched on something that is fundamental to our thinking. He is concerned about the people from Nelson House and South Indian River and is worried that they will be forced to move because of economic development taking place in their area.

I should like to review some of the arrangements which have been made between the federal government and the provincial government of Manitoba with respect to what I consider a magnificent opportunity for economic development in Canada. I am, of course, talking of the transmission line the hon. member mentioned and the development of the Nelson and Churchill Rivers. The federal and provincial governments arranged to share in the cost of developing the site. Studies included a complete power survey of the Nelson River and a study of the Churchill River diversion as well as alternative routes. The power development project then proceeded into phase 1. This includes a transmission line financed by the federal government, as the Manitoba government was unable to undertake the project by itself. The line will be made available to the province for operation on a lease basis.

Manitoba's responsibilities in phase 1 include the Nelson River generating stations, the Churchill River diversion, and control of the level of Lake Winnipeg. Studies of the Churchill River diversion were undertaken by consulting firms which delved into all aspects of the situation, including the provision of facilities for relocation of families whose lands might be flooded. Under the agreement, Mr. Speaker, this was a provincial responsibility.

The federal government has committed $170 million for the transmission line project. The province has committed $250 million for the Nelson River hydroelectric development and the Churchill River diversion.

I say to the hon. member the cost of relocating the people affected will be covered by the province. I am sure the province recognizes this. The financial cost and also the human and economic cost of diversion or relocation of the people involved is the fundamental problem. This problem rests with the province in terms of what happens to the people. I feel sorry for the hundred families of the South Indian Lake area who could be forced off their land. At the moment, this responsibility rests with the provincial government. The federal government has not made a cost-sharing arrangement with the provincial government in order to proceed with economic development.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You didn't answer the question.

Mr. Orange: I did.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the house is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this house stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. THOMPSON (RED DEER)—ALLEGED MISSTATEMENT BY MINISTER ABOUT REPRESENTATIONS ON ESTATE TAX

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege relating to remarks that were made last night during the "late show" by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). These remarks were in reply to a complaint that was legitimately made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) in regard to a press release that appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on January 28 and provided to this newspaper by the hon. members for Portage (Mr. Cobbe) and Provencher (Mr. Smerchanski). Their release dealt with changes in the estates tax that they said would be brought about by the finance ministry.

As a result of the complaint made by the hon. member for Edmonton West in regard to members of the government party making statements to the press in advance of a policy statement being made to the house about government policy, the Minister of Finance stated, as reported in Hansard at page 5160:

> First of all, in respect to the estate tax I did not receive a single letter or request for a meeting from any member of the opposition. Secondly, I should like to say that the most frequent submissions with regard to the estate tax dealt with the level of the exemptions and difficulties concerning payment of estate tax, as well as with what would happen to the estates of people who died before the law came into effect. Everybody knew this except the opposition members, who were not paying any attention to what was happening.

I rise on this point of privilege because I believe that the Minister of Finance is either ignorant of what comes into his office, is not aware of what is being said in the House of Commons, or else is intentionally misrepresenting the facts. I say this because this statement is not according to the facts.

A little further on in the debate I myself pointed out that I had received more than 1,000 letters protesting against the estate tax, in reply to which the minister said:

> Why did the hon. member not speak to me about the matter or send me the letters?

I would remind the minister that I did write him a letter, to which was attached a number of petitions; I did not bother him with the individual letters. The text of the letter is as follows:

> I am enclosing herewith copies of several petitions which have been received from communities in my constituency protesting against the pending estate tax which, together with the flood of mail to this date, reaches well into the hundreds. It is my impression that public opinion is overwhelmingly against this bill. I believe that such legislation, if enacted, can prove extremely detrimental whether it affects farm, business or home. It will also, in my opinion, be harmful to the economy in the sense that it will discourage initiative and, at the same time, drive much needed capital out of the country. I believe that you would be well advised to modify or withdraw altogether this part of the current budget proposal.

I have not received, as yet, a reply to this letter.

I wrote a similar letter to the Prime Minister, who did have the courtesy to reply. On January 30 I received the following letter from the Office of the Prime Minister:

> On behalf of the Prime Minister, I acknowledge with thanks receipt of your letter of January 29, enclosing copies of several petitions from communities in your constituency, protesting against the pending estate tax.
> Your comments regarding public reaction to this bill are being brought to Mr. Trudeau's attention.

I am not the only one in the opposition to protest against the new estate tax. Many others in the opposition protested. I know the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), spoke directly to the minister about this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should state the question of privilege. I suggest that we should not have a full fledged debate on the question at this time. The hon. member should state the question of privilege and indicate whether it will be followed by a motion.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have just mentioned these points to substantiate that what the minister said last night was not correct.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): His statement was a gross misrepresentation of fact. In order to comply with your instructions I will not quote from Hansard. I could refer to 12 quotations from Hansard to show where hon. members of the opposition spoke against the provisions of the new estate tax. I could also quote from two major speeches made by my leader in the House of Commons in which he spoke against the provisions of the tax.

My point of privilege is this, sir. I believe the Minister of Finance owes the members of the opposition an apology and he owes me an apology because what he said last night was not correct. His statement makes it appear we are prevaricators and distorters of truth. I believe this is a legitimate point of privilege and there is overwhelming evidence to substantiate it.

Mr. Speaker: I think I must indicate to hon. members that I have no inclination to allow a general debate on a subject which will be debated later today, and which is on the order paper for today. Basically, the hon. member's point is that he claims a statement made by the Minister of Finance is incorrect. Whether that constitutes a question of privilege I am not too sure. In any event, I suggest to hon. members that the Minister of Finance perhaps might be allowed to say a word and the ruling might be made after that.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the point of privilege, I wish to say that I received many letters about the estate tax. I have had some checking done this morning because I also considered what I said last night, and I thought about it afterwards. I said I had not had a single letter from any member of the opposition or a request from an hon. member of the opposition to speak to me in my office about the estate tax. The latter part of my statement is quite correct.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Benson: Just a moment. Am I not to be allowed to conclude, Mr. Speaker? I have not had any members of the opposition make representations to me personally with respect to the estate tax. That is correct. I checked through my correspondence. I had it checked this morning and learned I have received eight letters from members of the opposition with respect to the estate tax. That is exactly four times as many letters as I received from an independent hon. member of this house who sits in the Chair. I received 100 odd letters from hon. members who sit on another side of the house with respect to the estate tax. If I misled any hon. member last evening I sincerely apologize.

Mr. Horner: You bet you did.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, on the point—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Red Deer has already spoken and made his point. The rules do now allow him to raise a second point of privilege.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Looking at the matter objectively—and I speak as the person who sat in the Chair last night when the matter was raised by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) by way of interjection to the remarks of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) who was replying to a question asked on the adjournment debate—it is obvious there is a dispute as to the facts.

The hon. member for Red Deer states that the Minister of Finance was in error when he said that no representations had been made to his office. The Minister of Finance says he was wrong. I am not sure whether the minister actually said that, but perhaps the Chair might say he admitted that representations were in fact made. Whether the situation constitutes a question of privilege, I have serious doubts.

In any event the hon. member for Red Deer has made his protest. The minister has answered and recognized that the hon. member for Red Deer was correct when he said he had made representations to the minister's office. I doubt very much in the circumstances whether we should embark upon a general debate on this matter because, according to the rules, no motion has been moved. The rules are very clear in this regard.

Hon. members have given the Chair these rules to interpret and I have interpreted them to the effect that no motion having been made the point raised by the hon. member for Red Deer should not be pursued. I suggest we should now go on to the business of the House of Commons.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

GREAT SLAVE LAKE RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 206—Mr. Schreyer:

1. Has the Minister of Transport made a decision relative to the claims submitted to him by those contractors that were engaged in the construction of the Great Slave Lake Railway for the C.N.R. and, if so, what is the decision?

2. If such claims have been accepted as valid, is Treasury Board approval being sought for payment, either in whole or in part, of these claims?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. A review has been made of the circumstances relating to the claims of various contractors against the C.N.R. in respect to the construction of the Great Slave Lake Railway.

Notwithstanding that one may have considerable sympathy for the circumstances in which the contractors find themselves as a result of these contracts, it appears that the claims to the extent that they remain outstanding, are matters which must be settled between the companies directly involved and the management of the C.N.R.

The C.N.R. has informed the Minister of Transport that some of the claims have been dealt with and additional payments have been made in some cases.

2. Not applicable.

5. There is no special policy regarding imports of U.S. corn. From October 30, 1968, to December 31, 1968, imports of corn from all sources not entitled to entry under the British Preferential Tariff or any lower tariff were subject to special valuation for duty. Since January 1st, 1969 corn imports have been subject only to the normal provisions of the laws regarding customs duty, valuation for duty and freedom from disease.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable, subject to obtaining the usual consent of the province concerned, and with the reservation that any correspondence or documents, the publication of which would be detrimental to the competitive position of the company, be excluded.

Motion agreed to.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ESTIMATES

AGENCIES ABSORBED INTO REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT ACTIVITIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development It arises from the fact that the estimates tabled yesterday for the fiscal year 1969-70 show no separate vote for the Atlantic Development Board and that projects formerly listed under the Atlantic Development Board vote are now to be found in departmental estimates. I would like to ask the minister whether the government is liquidating the Atlantic Development Board and absorbing its activities into the proposed new department simply as departmental activities?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, as I said before in the house, the functions of the Atlantic Development Board will probably be absorbed by the department and the credits which would normally be affected to the Board will go to the department. If ever the house decides otherwise, it will be easy to make an adjustment.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: In other words the Atlantic Development Board is being liquidated and terminated as an administrative agency?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think that only the bill will give clear indications about that.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: As a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the same estimates and the work of the minister's department, are we to assume that, since the projects under ARDA and ADA are now listed under departmental operations, these agencies are also being absorbed into the administration of the proposed new department and that these programs, in particular ARDA, are being eliminated as such?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the administrative functions of those various bodies, I think it can be deduced from the estimates that they will come directly under the department from now on.

As for the duties assigned to those agencies, as I said they will be outlined in the provisions of the basic legislation governing the department.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask one further supplementary question. In view of the apparent liquidation of the Atlantic Development Board, the apparent changes under way with regard to these other programs, and the uncertainty and the void that now exist, will the minister undertake to make a full statement within the next day or so as to precisely what the plans of this department are, how these matters are to be handled and how the fight against regional disparities is to be undertaken?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I am going to make a full statement when the legislation is introduced in the house—

Mr. Stanfield: When is that?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): —and I hope this will be in a very short while.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Will the minister assure the house that this action is not punishment against the Atlantic provinces for voting against the government?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INCREASED EXPENDITURES FOR PROFESSIONAL AND SPECIAL SERVICES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question arising out of the estimates tabled yesterday which I should like to direct to the President of the Treasury Board. It arises out of the fact that there is a 20 per cent increase in the estimates for professional and special services, from some $327 million to some $397 million. Could the President of the Treasury Board explain to the house the reason for this 20 per cent increase in that item relating to professional services outside the departments?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think it would probably be more satisfactory if the hon. member were to put these questions in relation to specific departments when the programs of the individual departments are being considered in committee.

Mr. Lewis: Well—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Without wanting to interrupt the hon. member in the line of questioning which he intends to pursue, I wish to say I have some doubts whether it would be in order at this time to question all the items in the estimates. I have some serious doubts as to whether this can be done according to our rules, but this having been said I will allow the hon. member for York South to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am not asking this question about specific departments. This might suit the minister better, but I do not think that is the point. May I ask the minister whether this very huge increase in outside professional services is due to the freeze on entry into the public service itself, so that work now will have to be done outside the department which otherwise could have been done by personnel inside the department, if those personnel were engaged?

Mr. Drury: The policy in relation to engaging outside services is in each case a judgment as to how the work can be done most effectively and most economically. There is no general rule either that individuals must be hired to do work within the government service, or that the work must be contracted out.

Mr. Lewis: I have another supplementary.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must again remind the hon. member for York South that it is not open to hon. members at this time to go into all the detail of the estimates and ask why there has been an increase or decrease in certain of them. That might lead to a rather complicated question period. I do not think this type of question is in order, but again I would allow the hon. member to ask a supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if it is your ruling that I should not, I will not; but with very great respect to you, sir, I am trying to find out something that is applicable to all the departments which, under the new régime, I will never have the opportunity to do, since the estimates are to go to the standing committees. The further supplementary I had intended to ask the President of the Treasury Board is whether as a matter of policy Treasury Board enters into the question concering whether outside or inside professional services would be more economic and would be to the advantage of the government and the people of Canada, or is this a decision made by each department?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, in cases where it lies within the administrative competence of the department to make a judgment, such judgment is made within the department. Where in order to secure authorization there has to be reference to Treasury Board, the judgment probably is made by Treasury Board.

In reply to the first question I might point out that column 4, which I believe the hon. member has been reading, it appears could quite well contain an error.

Mr. Stanfield: Not another one!

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board if the government has considered the necessity of these outside studies and reports to parliament, or is this a device to keep such information away from the chamber?

Mr. Speaker: The question asked by the hon. member is argumentative.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In one of his answers the President of the Treasury Board said something about an error, which I did not entirely hear. Surely if in giving an answer there is an error, he ought to tell us what it is instead of leaving it hanging in the air, as he did,—for what purpose I do not know. There must be some purpose which does not permit him to let the error be shown the light of day.

Mr. Drury: I did not say there was an error. I said there may be an error which I should like to check.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Could this loosely be called, for example, patronage?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION IN NATIONALIST CHINA

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to put to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I have had recently the privilege of travelling around the world and I visited Taiwan. I noted that we have in Hong Kong and in Tokyo, for example, distinguished Canadian representatives, most charming ambassadors, and I am wondering why we do not have any such representation in Taiwan. Is the minister in a position to tell us if, eventually, Canada will have an ambassador or a chargé d'affaires there to welcome Canadians?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I remember that the same question was put very recently to the Prime Minister or to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I do not believe it need be asked again.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

In view of your ruling that an hon. member has already asked that same question, I wish then to ask the minister whether or not the government has regular diplomatic relations with the government of Taiwan.

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, when the Nationalist government of China retired to Taipei the Canadian ambassador did not follow. However, since the ambassador of China was already in Ottawa he did not have to move. That remains the situation.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REFERENCE OF BILL TO SPECIAL TRIBUNAL

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister announced recently that he would agree to submit to the Supreme Court of Canada the matter of the official languages. As judgments on constitutional matters by the Supreme Court of Canada have not always been recognized by all the provinces, would the Prime Minister agree to have the bill concerning the official languages referred to a special tribunal made up of judges appointed by the federal and provincial governments in order to obtain a decision acceptable to all the interested parties?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would not object to any method that would result in reaching a prompt decision on this subject.

We are deeply convinced that the government should proceed urgently with the bill on official languages. It is our opinion that ours would be a strange country if it cannot be done, but we are agreeable to have the provinces refer the matter to the Supreme Court if they so desire. If the hon. member's suggestion were made by the provinces and if results could be more quickly achieved, I would not object to it, in principle. However, in my opinion, this would not be a more expeditious solution than the others and, as we deem this to be an urgent matter, I would not be inclined to readily accept the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question.

Along the same lines, could the Prime Minister tell us whether, during the federal-provincial conference, government representatives will be asked to consider the opportunity of establishing a constitutional court to discuss such cases?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Where mention is made on the agenda tabled Monday of the institutions of federalism, we refer to the Senate and the Supreme Court, and that means there will be an open discussion on that matter. We believe that the constitutional court must be the Supreme Court, but other participants might want to suggest another one. We will listen to their representations in that respect.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Malpeque.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I should like to defer to the hon. member for Oxford if I might.

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should also like to thank my colleague, the hon. member for Malpeque. My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Has the Minister of Transport submitted his resignation as Minister of Transport, and if so has the Prime Minister as yet designated a successor?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have not checked with my office but I will be prepared to do so after I leave the house.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

P.E.I.—REDUCED SPENDING ON PLAN

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development whether the government has arbitrarily decided to reduce spending in respect of Prince Edward Island economic development plans, as I understand has been stated by the Premier of Prince Edward Island?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, the estimates tabled in the house yesterday provide for the granting of $25 million a year to Prince Edward Island, subject to the signing of an agreement which, unfortunately, has not yet been completed. In my opinion, that is not a reduction but a considerable increase in our assistance to Prince Edward Island.

[English]

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Speaker, has an agreement been reached between the governments of Canada and the province of Prince Edward Island as to how the cost of this proposed plan is to be shared as between the two governments?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the whole agreement is still under negotiation. We hope to reach an agreement soon, but we are having some difficulty and I cannot report that there is an agreement as yet.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

ATOMIC ENERGY

REPORTED INCREASE IN RADIATION LEVELS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Having in mind the reported increase in radiation levels in a number of Canadian areas following the United States nuclear test of a few weeks ago, his Canada investigated the situation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, National Health and Welfare officials have confirmed that radioactivity detected in air filter samples from Fort William, Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal increased between December 11 and December 15. No danger to public health was involved. Because of the small samples involved, it was impossible to determine whether, in fact, this increase could be attributed directly to the United States Schooner explosion test, which took place in Nevada on December 8. However, the coincidence with correspondingly higher levels reported in the United States some days earlier was brought to the attention of United States authorities.

No comment has been offered formally, but liaison concerning the levels of radioactivity is continuing. Because the higher readings could not be attributed directly to the schooner test, no formal representations were made to the United States authorities.

I should also point out that this test explosion was intended to explore possible peaceful applications for nuclear explosions in which Canada has been interested. The Canadian authorities were informed in advance of all details regarding the proposed test.

AIRPORTS

QUEBEC—LOCATION OF INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that in the estimates tabled yesterday an allocation of $6,600,000 is provided for the acquisition of land where the international airport is to be built, and also that the Farnham authorities have made a proposal for the use of a tract of land which is federal property, does this mean that the town of Farnham has been rejected from the alternative sites considered by the Department of Transport, in respect of the location of the future airport?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must remind the hon. member for Shefford that a similar question was asked yesterday by a member from another province and was declared out of order; I believe I must decide likewise in respect of the hon. member's question.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO CONTROL INFLATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, in view of the recent statement by Mr. G. K. Bouey, an economic advisor to the Bank of Canada, that policies to cure inflation have not been working satisfactorily since early last fall, has the Minister of Finance and his department been working on new initiatives to control this inflation which has been increasing steadily since last September; and may we expect an announcement soon?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must invite the Minister of Finance to be patient while I suggest that the question as asked by the hon. member is of a very general nature and of the kind which would require a statement during motions. I do not think it should be answered at this time.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question and ask the Minister of Finance what specific new proposals he has to make to the house to control inflation?

Mr. Speaker: I would have to make the same ruling on the second question.

EXPO '67

WRITING OFF OF MONTREAL AND QUEBEC INDEBTEDNESS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he or his deputies have received requests from the province of Quebec or the city of Montreal to be forgiven their share of the loss in respect of Expo 67?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that I have not received such a request from the province of Quebec or the city of Montreal.

Mr. Hales: Does the minister know whether any of the debentures held by him from the corporation have not been honoured or paid?

Mr. Benson: I should like to take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Did the authorities of the city of Montreal endeavour to get loans from the Bank of Canada so as to settle their financial problems?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY AS TO APPEAL BOARD

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue in his capacity as minister responsible for the Tax Appeal Board. We have been advised today that the chairman of that Board has retired and it is implied that the Board could be abolished. Would the minister tell the house whether he intends to merge this Board with another judiciary institution, or what is going to happen to it?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): No decision has been reached in this respect, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Can we expect an indefinite period of time to elapse before a new chairman is appointed or will the minister or the government announce within a few days what will happen to the Board?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): The new chairman will be appointed soon, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

EXTERNAL AID

ASSISTANCE TO PEOPLE AFFECTED BY CIVIL CONFLICT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I did not send notice of my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On November 26 during the debate on the Nigerian war the minister told the house that the government would work toward a better international legal framework within which humanitarian assistance could be provided to people affected by civil conflict. In view of the many thousands of lives that might be saved if a solution could be found to this problem, I should like to ask the minister to tell the house of any progress made with regard to his undertaking?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in an address I made to the General Assembly to the United Nations I referred to this matter. I should like to examine the records of the committee to which this question was referred, in order to give a complete answer to my hon. friend.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ROADS TO RESOURCES—INQUIRY AS TO RESUMPTION OF PROGRAM

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government is considering the re-institution of the roads to resources program and, if so, when the house may be made aware of the decisions the government has reached?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): There has been no policy decision made on this, Mr. Speaker. This is the kind of subject which will come under the authority of the new department to be created soon under the government reorganization act.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CULTURAL AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND FRANCE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, when can the Secretary of State for External Affairs give a report to the house on the implementation of the France-Canada agreement, including amounts so far spent by France?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I referred this question to my department, and I will make inquiries to see when the explanation will be available.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether Brittany is included under the agreement? May I ask whether the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs has received correspondence from sources in Britanny asking for discussions with Canada, and requesting for Brittany equal status with the province of Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: I have some serious doubts as to whether the question should be allowed.

[Mr. Brewin.]

TRANSPORT

NORTHUMBERLAND CAUSEWAY—REQUEST FOR ALLOCATION OF FUNDS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, since the main estimates tabled yesterday contained no vote for the completion of construction of the Northumberland crossing, can the Minister of Public Works assure the house that items for this project will be included in the first supplementary estimates?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think this matter was dealt with by the Prime Minister yesterday, and I have nothing to add to what he said. I think his words were that a decision would be taken in due course.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—WITHHOLDING OF FUNDS UNTIL COMPLETION OF REVIEW

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, since we have under way at the present time a genuine review of our foreign and defence policy relating to NATO, can the Minister of National Defence assure the house that the plans to allocate funds for the construction of permanent buildings at Canadian bases in Europe will be kept in abeyance until this review is completed?

Hon. Leo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any such plans.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, will the minister assure us that he will look into the matter.

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): With pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REPORT OF TASK FORCE INVESTIGATING INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour when we may expect the Woods commission report to be tabled?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I have mentioned on previous occasions, this question should be directed to the Prime Minister, since the disposition of the Woods report relates to his office. I can tell you, and I am sure he will agree, that it will not be tabled before the French version is completed. At the present time the English version is up for translation. Provided it is the intention of the Prime Minister to table it, I would say it would be tabled some time in March.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I should like to repeat my question to the Prime Minister.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN DELEGATION AT MEETING OF FRENCH SPEAKING COUNTRIES

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Can he tell us if the Canadian government has received an invitation to the conference of the French-speaking community at Niamey? If so, will the Canadian government delegation be similar to that which was sent recently to Congo-Kinshasa?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that we did indeed receive an invitation a few months ago, that we have discussed with the province of Quebec the make-up of a Canadian delegation, that we have, in fact, accepted the invitation and that the make-up of the delegation itself has not been definitely agreed upon. I know that discussions on this subject are taking place today in Quebec between provincial and federal officials.

As to the second part of the question, I will say that the delegation will not be similar to that of Kinshasa. In Niamey, the conference will deal with several subjects over which the federal government has jurisdiction.

Therefore, we intend to send federal ministers as delegates, as opposed to Kinshasa where the conference was on education, a subject which concerns only indirectly the federal government. That is why we sent officials there while all the provinces sent ministers.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT IN HOUSE FOLLOWING MEETING

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Recently the minister has had discussions with representatives of the Atlantic fishermen and with government officials, and he promised an announcement. Will the minister assure the house that this announcement will be made on motions in the house and not through some other channels?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

DEMURRAGE CHARGES ON VESSELS AWAITING CARGO

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Because of the difficult weather conditions in the fall and the difficulties with grain shipment arising from the weather, is the government prepared to accept the demurrage charges on the boats waiting in Vancouver?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has been in Vancouver, since yesterday, I believe. He is there today and I understand it is his intention to make a statement on the whole matter when he comes back to the house tomorrow.

Mr. Horner: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is reported in today's Vancouver paper that the minister stated that the demurrage charges will have to be picked up by the farmers. I urge the Prime Minister to consider accepting demurrage charges.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

ARDA—ASSISTANCE IN DRAINAGE PROBLEMS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. I should like to ask the minister whether the government has discontinued assistance through ARDA for rural drainage problems.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have an impression this question was asked earlier during the question period, although I may be wrong. If I am, I would certainly invite the minister to reply to the question.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I dod not hear it and I do not believe it was asked.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, drainage programs are planned by the provinces.

Of course, there is a limit with regard to our financial contribution to that end. There was no provision for it in the estimates, and our policy has not changed in that respect.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT ACT

REQUEST FOR TASK FORCE REPORT

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the herculean efforts of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to implant in all Canadians an idea of fitness through the formation of a fitness and sports task force, will he tell the house when the force is likely to report and what is the precise value of the off-the-cuff remarks now being made publicly by some of its members, such as the chairman, Dr. Rea?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I expect the task force report to be completed some time next month. I believe the remarks of Dr. Rea are helpful, but would not affect the report in any way.

Mr. Paproski: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister see to it that the sports task force is fully apprised of its particular terms of reference, in order that something constructive may emerge to help young athletes in Canada and give them a feeling that the government is really behind them?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a submission and a representation to the government.

AIRPORTS

QUÉBEC—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING LOCATION

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, who is responsible for regional development.

Since regional economic development will play a leading part in the selection of the site of the future Montreal international airport and since that aspect of the question was often raised by the Quebec provincial authorities, does the minister intend to have consultations with those authorities in the near future?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking his question in the form of a representation. I must remind him that it is quite similar to the one asked by the hon. member for Shefford. Should I be mistaken and should the hon. member deem the question urgent, it could be easily discussed at the time of adjournment tomorrow evening.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

My question is not similar to the one asked by the hon. member for Shefford. I believe those negotiations could take place before long and that it would be urgent for the minister to answer it.

Mr. Speaker: If there is a difference between those two questions, we shall not discuss the one from the hon. member for Shefford tomorrow evening.

HOUSING

FURTHER REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE RESPECTING URBAN RENEWAL PROGRAM

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister and it arises out of the answer given the other day by the Minister of Transport regarding urban renewal programs. If I recall correctly, the minister could not give the house any assurance that there would not be cut-backs with respect to urban renewal programs that have already been started. I was wondering whether the Prime Minister can advise this house whether the government intends to make a statement as to its future role in urban renewal programs that have already been commenced. I ask this question because the answer that was given to me has left a number of municipalities hung up in the air as to the future of programs that they have already started.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will take it up with the minister and see if I can add anything to what he said.

ALLEGED INJUSTICES AFFECTING COMMISSIONAIRES FROM NATIONAL MUSEUMS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what steps he is taking to deal with the injustices done to Corporal Walsh and Corporal Clark, both in terms of loss of wages and rank, following their removal from the national museums.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and I are not getting our information from the same source. I am not aware that either of the two persons he has named would have lost his rank or salary, except that for one of them it could have been possible to have a salary reduction if he refused proposed employment in his own place of residence and insisted on working in Ottawa.

According to the last report I have received, this possibility existed. I would ask the hon. member to tell me where he got the information leading to his assertion because, according to the chief of the corps of commissionaires, no commissionaire lost any salary or seniority or rank as a result of transfers that were made.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Secretary of State inform the house whether he is still insisting on bilingualism for these war veterans, even though their jobs have to do exclusively with security.

Mr. Pelletier: I cannot be still insisting, Mr. Speaker, because I never did.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's supplementary is just a bit late. I have recognized the hon. member for Waterloo.

DRUGS

MACE—TESTS TO REVEAL POSSIBLE DANGERS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has his department been conducting tests in connection with the chemical called MACE and, if so, is he prepared to publish a report on the dangers which may be connected with the use of this chemical?

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest the hon. member place this question on the order paper.

Mr. Saltsman: May I rephrase my question and ask the minister whether he would be prepared to make a statement in connection with tests which his department may be conducting in this regard?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I would have to take that suggestion under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already made a relevant statement on this subject.

FINANCE

REFORM IN MECHANISM OF INTERNATIONAL EXCHANGE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether it is the view of the government that existing international monetary arrangements are satisfactory, if reinforced by appropriate domestic policies on the part of the various countries, and that further reform of the mechanism of international exchange is not urgently required?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thought I had made my views on this subject fairly clear in a statement I made earlier. I believe the hon. gentleman is referring now to a statement made by the Governor of the Bank of Canada. We believe the existing system is working pretty well. There is continuing consultation taking place with respect to changes in it. However, we do not believe it would be to the benefit of the world monetary system if another Bretton Woods conference, for example, were called, because it would simply cause further speculation. We believe, rather, that within OECD, the Group of Ten and the governors of the central banks, continuing exchanges should go on with regard to the international monetary system.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the minister, without pressing him to divulge confidential information, whether the Government of Canada is promoting any specific reforms in specific areas of international currency arrangements with a view to improving the international monetary system? In other words, are the minister and his associates simply entering into general discussion or is the government of Canada advancing a specific point of view in this regard?

Mr. Benson: Without disclosing any confidential information I can say there is continuing consultation with other western nations through the existing streams of communication which are available to us.

Mr. Stanfield: I wonder whether within a reasonable length of time the minister would be prepared to make a statement on motions with regard to the official position of the government of Canada in connection with the present international monetary situation and the steps which might be taken and properly pursued by this country to strengthen international arrangements.

Mr. Benson: I have made statements in this regard both inside and outside the house. However, I will be pleased to consider the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman.

HOUSING

REMOVAL OF TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It arises from a statement attributed to the Minister of Transport in Vancouver yesterday to the effect that the Minister of Finance might juggle a future budget so as to eliminate the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. Will the Minister of Finance tell us whether the elimination of this tax is now under active consideration by the government?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Carter: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Bearing in mind earlier statements by the Minister of Finance that the government may not bring in a budget until the spring of 1970, will any action on the financing and taxation recommendations of the task force have to await the presentation of a budget?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the basic assumption was wrong.

[Mr. Benson.]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there has been an agreement to alter slightly today's program, I wonder whether the President of the Privy Council would not make the new arrangements known to everyone?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to learn there has been agreement on this point. The suggestion is that after the Minister of Finance and perhaps a spokesman for each party have taken part in the debate on the bill to amend the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act, we should then adjourn the discussion and proceed with the bill concerning the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. If there is general agreement on this point, perhaps we could make an order of the house now to that effect.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT AND ESTATE TAX ACT

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved second reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole of Bill C-165, to amend the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act.

He said: First, Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate, with deference to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), that it was my intention at the beginning of my speech this afternoon to clear up any misapprehension which may have arisen in connection with my answer to a question on the late show last night. I was not trying to suggest that members opposite were not interested in the estate tax and that they had not made representations in writing. But the letters simply had not come to my attention at that point. As a result of a search this morning I found there were eight letters from members of the Official Opposition, as I indicated was the case.

Mr. Stanfield: You can only see red ink, now.

Mr. Benson: Most of the red ink is on the other side of the house.

During the three month period since reform of the estate and gift taxes was announced in the budget, the country has engaged in a lively debate about the government's proposals. Some of the argument has been misleading and destructive, such as the expensive advertising claiming that the legislation means the end of family farms and small businesses, or that the whole thing is a communist conspiracy. This is just not the case. But there have been many constructive arguments. With some exceptions, Members of Parliament have tried to sift fact from fiction. They have tried to influence the government to legislate in the best interests of their constituents. This constructive attitude means, I believe, that most members and most Canadians recognize that the proposals represent a reform. They recognize that while we are retaining the estate tax, we should change the structure of exemptions to help widows, widowers and young children.

At the start of this discussion on second reading I want to describe to hon. members some of my reactions to the public debate. My mail and the discussion inside and outside parliament convince me that the criticism is far out of proportion to the impact of estate taxes. Ninety-five per cent of Canadians never pay any estate taxes at all, and we expect this ratio to stay about the same in the future. As for those 5 per cent who will pay some tax, more than half of the revenues are collected from estates valued at $500,000 or more. I can only conclude that much of the confusion and criticism results from misrepresentation of the government's proposal, though not all, of course. Some individuals have looked at the tables and concluded correctly that certain estates will pay more tax. For others, the October announcement may have been an emotional shock which forced them to think about their estate situations for the first time in their lives. Some mail I have received indicates clearly that a number of the writers thought there was no estate tax in Canada before last October.

My second reaction is that a good deal of the opposition stems from the view held by some persons that there should be no estate tax at all. These persons and groups condemn the proposed reform, but few suggest a return to the old system. They seem to want to have their cake and eat it too. They are not the government and they do not have to raise the funds to pay for the expenses of the state in creating an economic climate in which business can survive. Therefore they are seemingly unworried about the revenues that would be lost through abolition of the estate tax.

More than $200 million a year is raised through the estate tax and provincial succession duties. Some critics might argue that we could do away with this kind of tax if governments tightened their belts and reduced spending by this amount. Our conclusion as a government is that the estate tax is a fair and equitable part of our total tax system regardless of the amount of revenues we need.

This is because governments have at their disposal only two forms of taxation which are progressive. By "progressive" I mean a tax which can be weighted to take relatively more money from the wealthier persons in our society and relatively less from the poor. The two progressive taxes are the income tax and the estate tax. The rising demand for services from all levels of government makes it unlikely that the total revenues of government can be reduced. Therefore those who would abolish the estate tax and gift tax must produce a satisfactory alternative to raise more than $200 million for governments at the two levels.

We estimate that to raise about this amount from roughly the same group of persons who pay the bulk of estate taxes, that is, those with incomes over $10,000, would require a 15 per cent income surtax. If, instead, we raised this amount in income taxes from those whose estates are over $500,000 we would have to double their present income tax. Before proposing an end to estate taxes, abolitionists should produce a convincing argument that increases in income taxes of this dimension will not adversely affect incentive, will not speed up our brain drain and curb our rate of capital investment.

Perhaps the abolitionists would prefer that the same revenues be raised from all income groups instead of from those who pay most of our estate taxes now. At present fewer than 5 per cent of the population pays any estate tax. To spread the cost of this revenue loss to all taxpayers would, for instance, require an estimated increase of almost 1 per cent in the social development tax.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the minister permit a question? He may have given this information already; if so, I regret asking him for it. Could the minister tell us how much revenue he expects will be lost by the concessions that he has made with regard to intramarital transactions?

Mr. Benson: I think I made this clear previously both in the house and outside the house. The change in estate tax is designed to raise exactly the same amount of money that was raised before. There is a change in the burden of estate tax but the revenue will be exactly the same.

Mr. Stanfield: I understand that, but would the minister indicate how much revenue he has to make up as a result of granting these proposed exemptions in respect of gifts to wives and the other additional matters?

Mr. Benson: I do not have this information in front of me though I have seen it. I will be pleased to give it to my hon. friend before this debate is over. But I should point out that the changes in estate tax are not designed to take more money out of the Canadian economy. What they are designed to do is to help widows, young orphaned families and disabled children, and other people will have to pay for this. So there is a shift in the burden.

There are other reasons why an estate tax is desirable. Nowadays it is an integral part of the taxation system of most western countries. Our two major trading partners, the United States and Britain, raise a larger portion of their total government revenues from inheritance taxes than does Canada. Despite the opposition of a vocal minority through the years, the majority in all these countries consider it a fair tax.

In Canada, where about seven million persons pay income tax, it is fair that the relatively few who have accumulated the greatest wealth should contribute at death to the common good of our country. They are usually the ones who have benefited most from the collective effort of Canadians to build a strong economic and political system.

Federal abdication from the estate tax field probably would not result in their abolition in all ten provinces. Royal commissions in Ontario and Quebec, where two-thirds of our population resides, have recommended their continuation in one form or another. The provinces now receive about three-quarters of the money we collect through estate taxes. One should consider the provincial revenue requirements at this time before engaging in any wishful thinking about the total abolition of death taxes in Canada.

There has been a good deal of discussion recently in the prairie provinces about inheritance taxes. One province has abolished them, another is committed to doing so and a third is apparently considering such a change. Following their weekend meeting, the premiers of the three provinces sent a telegram asking us to postpone legislative consideration of this bill pending consultations with the provinces.

I would like to place on the record my reaction to these various developments. In provinces where the tax is refunded any changes in the federal law will not affect provincial revenues. A federal-provincial conference has been held since the reform was announced last October and there has been a good deal of criticism of our putting off introduction of the bill from October till the present time. At that federal-provincial conference I indicated that interested provinces would have every opportunity they desired to raise the subject with me. There was also consultation concerning the estate tax following publication of the Carter royal commission report on taxation.

I believe that this government has always made it clear to the provinces that any changes must first be proposed to parliament. In taxation matters in Canada we cannot go to the provinces and say that we are going to make these changes before we tell the parliament of Canada. Our responsibility is first of all to the members of this house. To do otherwise in our system of responsible government would, I believe, be improper.

Once the government decided to retain the estate tax it had to decide whether the tax was being levied in the fairest possible way. It considered, but rejected, the recommendations of the Carter royal commission on taxation which would have doubled the revenue from taxation of inheritances.

Mr. Broadbent: Why?

Mr. Benson: Why? Because we decided that a buck is not a buck is not a buck. Instead it decided to keep the revenue yield about the same while instituting reforms to help widows, widowers and young children in this country.

• (3:20 p.m.)

On this point I was interested to read a report yesterday, I believe, which said that the United States treasury department has proposed that in the United States action be taken similar to ours to allow tax free transfers between spouses in that country. The reform to exempt from taxation transfers between spouses is most significant for widows. It recognizes the contribution wives make to the accummulation of a family's wealth, but it also does much more. It helps to take care of a social need. On average, wives outlive husbands by at least seven years. If the husbands are Members of Parliament the wives probably outlive them by 10 years or even 20 years. In half the cases where estate taxes are collected there is a surviving widow. Most of us know of families where the father has died and the children have had to leave school early because there is a lack of money in the family. The reform removes any influence the estate tax may have had in these unfortunate situations. Annuities left to widows will now bear no federal estate tax. We expect this change to take on increasing importance in future years because of the tremendous growth in pension plans as well as the increasing benefits that will accrue under that excellent piece of legislation, the Canada Pension Plan.

Besides the basic $20,000 exemption for all estates valued at more than $50,000, a new exemption of $10,000 is provided for all adult children, that is, for children 26 years of age and over. For all healthy children receiving bequests of $10,000 or more there is an extra $1,000 exemption for each year the child is less than 26 years of age. This means that a healthy child under one year of age might receive an exemption of $35,000. For an incapacitated child, that is, a child which is unable to support itself, the total exemption may be as much as $80,000.

May I give some examples of how the new exemptions will work. First of all, certain estates left to widows are exempt. If a husband died—he would be a father—and had four children whose ages were 18, 16, 14 and 7 years, he could leave $105,000 on which no estate tax would be levied. He could leave that on top of any amount he might leave to his widow.

I think there is no quarrel about helping widows and small children. A good deal of the criticism about the reform, indeed, about retaining estate taxes at all, centres upon its effects on family businesses and family farms. Some groups have suggested total or partial exemptions for these kinds of enterprises. We believe this is not reasonable and I wish to explain our thinking at some length at this time.

During his lifetime the farmer or the small businessman benefits from government programs and from the general well-being of the country as much or more so than the salary or wage earner benefits. Once exceptions are made for one group in society other groups feel aggrieved and demand the same privilege. Special privileges can also cause distortions in the effects of a tax system. Exempting farms, for instance, would encourage land buying by wealthy non-farmers seeking to avoid the payment of estate taxes. A development of this kind would only add to our difficulties with land speculation in the country and especially around our major urban areas.

An estate tax may place a special burden on estates in which the major assets are not liquid. I admit that. But how great is the burden? Let us consider a case where the impact is most severe, where a father leaves an estate directly to one son without any use of the $2,000 annual gifting provision prior to death. In that case the father would not have availed himself of provisions allowing him to sell the farm or the business to his son, something many fathers do when they contemplate passing their property on to a son. In the worst case, and we are considering a $200,000 estate—that is a net estate; after provision for all liabilities have been made the estate would be worth $200,000 in cash—the tax would be $43,200, or slightly less than 22 per cent of the value of the business. This falls well within the bounds of liabilities assumed by many Canadians as a matter of course. I do not think anyone would acquire a $200,000 business without assuming a liability against it of at least $43,000. By way of contrast, when a business is purchased, or if a farm is sold, it is normal for the incoming or new entrepreneur to assume a liability against that business or farm totalling 75 per cent of its worth, as against the 22 per cent tax liability that must be assumed by those inheriting businesses or farms under the worst conditions where the inheritance is worth $200,000 net.

Mr. Horner: The government's credibility gap is growing all the time.

Mr. Benson: I said that the $200,000 was net. But even the 22 per cent tax arose from an extreme example because in that case it was assumed there were no liquid assets in the estate at all. That example assumed that there was only one child. Usually there would be some cash—for example, the proceeds of an insurance policy. Two or three would be a more usual number of children. For farmers, perhaps three adult children is a more typical example. For farmers with three children the proposed tax is lighter than before until the estate exceeds $160,000. With four children, it is lighter until the estate exceeds $210,000. And with five children, it is lighter until the estate exceeds about $250,000.

About eight out of ten estates on which taxes are paid, are valued at $160,000 or less in Canada. About nine out of ten estates are valued at $200,000 or under. When you consider that taxes are collected on fewer than 7,000 estates each year, and that for families of three or four children the new taxes are less under these amounts, it becomes clear to me, at least, that this is a good reform in the estate tax field. Surely this puts the lie to claims that the changes will adversely affect hundreds of thousands of Canadians or that we have doomed the family farm or family business. That is just not the case.

Since the October budget there has been sincere concern that some might find it a hardship to pay estate taxes in one lump sum. Provision has always existed under the estate tax law for the Minister of National Revenue to permit payment of the tax by instalments in cases of hardship.

We knew there were only about 40 applications in the past ten years for permission to defer payment.

Mr. Horner: At what rate of interest?

Mr. Benson: It was at 5 per cent.

Mr. Horner: Is it to continue at 5 per cent?

Mr. Benson: No, it will not continue at 5 per cent. The large number of representations led us to believe that perhaps there were persons who failed to apply because they thought they would be turned down or because they were unaware of the provision. So we now propose to permit anyone who chooses to pay, with interest, in six annual instalments starting six months after the date of death. The interest rates will be those current in the market. I might explain to my hon. friend that we do not want to make the deferment of estate tax payments an attractive investment for people. The intention is to take care of cases of hardship and not to encourage people not to pay their estate taxes and invest their money elsewhere because their money can bring higher rates of interest.

The complete exemption of estates valued at $50,000 or less has been restored partly because of the confusion in the minds of holders of small estates created by misleading advertising. The new exemptions for close dependents meant that these estates would have paid little or no tax anyway. But there were some widespread claims that all estates worth more than $20,000, the basic exemption level, would be taxed. This change does not harm the basic principle of the reform and, I believe, has set many minds at rest.

To ensure that nobody suffers from the transition to the new from the old system, the Department of National Revenue is levying taxes according to the exemptions, old or new, which favour the estate during the interim period.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I know of no tax, Mr. Speaker, which has achieved universal popularity.

An hon. Member: I wish I would have said that.

Mr. Benson: All taxes have advantages and disadvantages for politicians who propose them. As I said earlier, the estate tax is one of our two progressive taxes. I believe in progressive taxation because it puts the burden to pay on the people who can afford to pay.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): It is not my purpose this afternoon, Mr. Speaker to engage in a polemic with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) on the subject of the desirability or otherwise of progressive taxes in a country that requires capital but has not accumulated capital. I suppose this could be deferred to some other occasion, but I understand from the minister's remarks that there is in these tax proposals more than just a grain of belief in the philosophy of spend now and be merry, for tomorrow when you and your wife die the government will take it from you. In other words, one could say: Don't save, don't invest, don't be successful, because the government will take it from you when you die.

An hon. Member: How can they take it from you when you die?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am not going to engage in the whys and wherefores, but I think Canadians must take cognizance of the attitude of this government. The government encourages small businessmen to devote their abilities for 16 or 18 hours a day in order to be successful. The penalty of success, according to the government's philosophy, is ulcers and high blood pressure.

I cannot subscribe to this philosophy. I am certain a great number of members on the government side who are successful in their personal businesses have acquired ulcers and high blood pressure. However, they have not done this in order to have the rewards taken away from them. When these people die their children, who may have worked with them, will be heavily in debt.

Mr. Otto: When you are dead you are dead.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) says, "When you are dead you are dead".

Mr. Otto: And they cannot take it from you.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, but it is strange that people are still interested in developing. When a person dies and it is necessary to sell assets in order to pay taxes, the absentee home owner steps in. Let us look at the province of Saskatchewan. In southern Saskatchewan much land is owned by individuals or corporations from the United States and is no longer part of the tax base available to the Canadian government. The tax base becomes narrower as more Canadian assets become foreign owned. That is a consideration which escapes many hon. members and the government.

Let us talk about the background of these changes. First we had the Carter commission report. The former Minister of Finance indicated he would table a white paper for study by the house and there would be some consensus as to changes of the tax structure. In so far as succession duties and assets are concerned the Carter report recommended they should be lumped on the basis of a buck is a buck is a buck. If a son took over a farm and received title to it on his father's death, it would be taxed as income at the marginal rate. The government has repudiated the position of the Carter report but has almost adopted one part of it. The minister said there will be a bill later this year to block out or to indicate the substantial changes to be made in the tax structure. The minister did not wait for that bill, and already the government has moved into an area where suggestions have been made that the minister has out-Cartered Carter.

I refer to some phrases used by the minister on October 22 last. The minister indicated that transfers of property by title as between individuals are not, at least for the moment, being included as income. I would very definitely underline the words "at least for the moment". Is this an interim step to fool Carter? The changes proposed by the minister would eliminate a doubly felt grievance and it is difficult to project their effect.

The minister has indicated he does not expect there will be any change with regard to the revenue which will accrue to the federal government. I wonder whether the minister will be as accurate in this forecast as he has been in others, not only as to budgetary deficits or balancing the budget but as to the size of the budgetary expenditures or the estimates figures he gave us on October 22. Now that we have the bluebook the lid is completely off. I pay very little attention to what the minister has said regarding financial effects or revenue changes. I suspect that because of inflation the calculations will be out of line and certainly far more assets will be hit by these taxes and the rates will be much higher than anticipated.

With all his fancy words this afternoon, I am certain the minister did not take into consideration the inflation factor. I listened to the minister talk about farms and farm operations. I would like him to visit my province and estimate the value of farms. He will see that all farms are not close to cities and being held for speculation. These farms are valuable on the market today. My colleagues from agricultural areas can speak and give first-hand knowledge as to the effect the proposed changes will have on farm properties.

Take the case of a man who has been a good farmer, has not been a spendthrift and has built up a productive farm. When the man passes his farm on to his son we load it with debt, and this is to be done for generation after generation. We forget that many capital expenditures have to be made by farmers in order to keep up with technological changes in the farming industry. Therefore this bill runs counter to the programs of the provinces, and even to programs of other departments of the federal government designed to develop viable farms and businesses free of debt.

With all deference, Mr. Speaker, to the man who operates a small corner store, a peanut wagon, a small business or small shop or what have you, I wish to say that is not what makes the wheels of the country go round. Once again a crushing burden is to be placed on a segment of Canadian society. We are not concerned about the millionaires. They are few in number and are able to get excellent tax advice. They are able to go offshore, and this legislation will drive many more people offshore. There will be quite an exodus, and not only of those people whose assets are in seven figures. Other people will also say: If this is going to be done in Canada, we too will get out.

As a matter of fact, I have seen reports to the effect that estate tax rates in Canada will now be much higher on estates of $300,000 or more than rates on the same size of estate in the United States. It is true that such estates are not uncommon in Canada today, although certainly they are not a majority. As a result of the new estate tax rates people will be tempted to say to themselves: Once I have got it made I will get out.

Estates in Canada of $250,000 or even of $100,000 are not usually inherited wealth, certainly not in the provinces where a great deal of development has taken place. In the last 20 years many men in the province of Alberta who started out with a mortgaged property on which there was a large lien are today worth $250,000 or $500,000 simply because they had the guts, energy and initiative to work hard and become successful. Now we are going to penalize these people. This legislation is the greatest killer of initiative to be found. I speak as one who comes from that area of the country and I am sure the same holds true in many parts of Canada.

Yet the minister cites to us examples in Great Britain and the United States, both countries which have accumulative wealth. People in Great Britain exported their capital to the United States when the United States was in process of development. The United States is now exporting capital to Canada. We need capital. Yet when we ask Canadians to save, to invest in Canadian enterprise, when we tell them, "Don't spend, put your money to work," at the same time we tell them, "We will tax you because the more you save the more you have, and so the more we will take away from you."

I find this an extraordinary philosophy. On previous occasions when major changes in estate taxes have been proposed it has been customary to provide for some breathing space between the public announcement of the new policy and the actual implementation. For example, the present Estate Tax Act was first introduced, if I recall correctly, in late 1957 or early 1958. The bill was given first reading but was not proceeded with in order to give the public an opportunity to make representations concerning hardships and anomalies contained in the draft legislation. May I say that the estate tax principle was far ahead of the succession duty principle. Yet by these proposals we are abandoning the estate tax principle and going back to the succession duty principle in part. To me this is a regressive step.

The present act was reintroduced in parliament in the fall of 1958 and was passed on September 6, 1958. However, and this is a significant point, it was not proclaimed in force until January 1, 1959 in order to give both the professional advisers and the persons affected an opportunity to examine their situation and to make the necessary changes. It was applicable only to estates of persons who died on or after January 1, 1959. Thus, not only was the public made aware of the proposed changes and given an opportunity to seek improvements in the legislation but when the legislation was actually passed a further period was granted to enable persons to rearrange their wills and financial affairs to fit the new legislation.

There is no doubt that the present proposals contain radical changes in the Estate Tax Act, and the effective date of the proposals has been stated to be October 22 last. The minister made an announcement on January 31 and people were prejudiced as a result of the government not announcing for over three months an optional date for the coming into effect of the present proposals. I do not think it is fair to approach the matter in this way.

I remember the two-month period after the budget disclosures and prior to the minister's press release on December 27 when all sorts of things were bothering tax advisers. First of all, they could not tell anybody if they could include a common disaster provision in a will. This applies whether the will covers a $5,000, $20,000 or $100,000 estate. I suppose I should not use the figure $5,000 and instead say $25,000 because at that time the exemption was only $20,000. But it was unclear at that time whether these wills could include a common disaster clause. The minister cleared up this matter, but that was two months after the disclosure of the proposals.

Then there were questions concerning exoneration clauses and remarriage clauses which appear in, shall we say, 80 per cent of wills other than simple wills. Yet there was this delay. It is no wonder so many letters were received protesting the uncertainty that this created. I do not know whether it was a design of this participatory government that this be done merely to excite the populace, create uncertainty and get them to debate estate taxation, but certainly the effect was very profound.

At the time the Carter report was published some comments were made by a well known tax commentator, I. H. Asper of Winnipeg. Instead of the derogatory remarks made by the minister with regard to Mr. Asper I find that what he says makes a great deal of sense. On December 12 he wrote as follows:

I commented at that time: "One is inexorably led to the frightening impression that the commission views all capital and income as being the property of the state and if one is allowed to keep a portion, it is purely a gesture of munificence from on high.

While this tone might be expected in a post-revolutionary emerging state, it is both unbecoming and saddening to see it urged upon a young country competing for world markets, seeking talented people, and constantly requiring risk capital, all to the purpose of sponsoring a dynamic and productive wealth-base."

The comment still stands and applies equally to Mr. Benson's proposed legislation.

The government claimed in its budget speech that it was not accepting the Carter concept. But it now appears to have out-Cartered Carter.

As of Oct. 22, gifts will be taxed, not at rates stopping at 28 per cent, but escalating to 75 per cent. Clearly the making of large gifts will stop.

And the $40,000 estate tax exemption is cut to $20,000, while the tax rates are steeply escalated so that the privilege of paying 50 per cent of one's life savings is achieved once one's estate reaches $300,000.

What is the purpose of these tax changes? Is it to accomplish an increase in government revenues? In the light of the budgetary problems facing the government one would have thought the budgetary proposals would be designed to provide more revenue for the government, but instead we have legislation through these estate tax proposals which is asocial. Yet this legislation, because it is introduced through a budget proposal, does not go to a standing committee and is not subject to comment by the public through representations. Other legislation, such as a broadcasting bill, a bill on drug prices or something else, would of course go to a standing committee and the people would have a chance to comment on it. But no, not in this case. Simply by raising the gift tax to a high of 75 per cent and imposing estate tax rates based on what a man has at his death plus what he has given away during his lifetime, the federal government has made it impossible for people to deal with their property freely at any time.

Since we have operated until now on a system in which private property rights are important, it is only right that any negation of those rights should not be achieved through tax law. I think these comments by Mr. Asper are legitimate. I do not intend to go into the details of the schedules and so on because we can take any kind of situation. We can find examples under certain circumstances where at a particular time it would appear that the tax payable today on the assumption of death in the future, assuming the values to be today's values and not the values at the time of death, is less under these proposals than under the present estate tax. But equally—and I have any number of examples—it would appear that the tax incidence will be much higher and much more punitive.

If hon. members will bear with me I might go through a typical example in business. The minister discussed the situation of a farmer with one child. He indicated how much tax would be levied on an estate with a net value of $200,000 in the case of a farm and indicated that there would be some $40,000 payable in estate tax and that this was a fair proposition for one son to take on. Of course that does not take into consideration how much the son may have worked on the farm. He may have worked for practically nothing for many years contributing to the farm and this is his reward.

Let us look at another example. Certainly in my part of the world and I am sure in the part of the world of many hon. members it is a typical example. Say that a father when he starts out saves his money. He has a job, saves his money and at age 35 is able to buy or found a company with a capital of $200,000. Assume that he had $50,000 himself and financed the remainder. This typical business could earn $40,000 per year before tax.

This man has two sons who have worked with him over the years. He himself draws a salary of $10,000 a year, pays tax on that salary and puts the remaining $30,000 in the company which is taxed in the amount of $17,000 per year. This leaves an income after tax for the company of $23,000. From this amount the father extracts a dividend of $13,000 on which even after dividend tax credits he is taxed. He leaves $10,000 in the business for expansion and uses his dividend to pay the principal and interest on the $150,000 he borrowed to buy or finance the company. The interest alone, which is not deductible because it is his personal expense and not that of the company, is $13,350 a year at current lending rates.

The father and sons apply themselves, take low wages, work long hours, and increase the company's profit to $100,000 a year. This is not outstanding. Now the company is in the 53 per cent income tax bracket. Nevertheless, by hard work and by refinancing, one way or another, the business is paid for by the time the man is 60. In other words, it has taken him 25 years to pay for the business. For the next 10 years he extracts, say, $100,000 and then dies at age 70. He leaves $100,000 to his wife with which to buy an annuity, and the two sons inherit the business. It is now earning $150,000 a year before taxes. At present rates this would mean about $80,000 after taxes. Based on the estate tax valuation method used at the present time the business is valued at $800,000. Under the new estate tax the tax would be $340,000 on $800,000, 42 per cent of what is inherited. These sons are 45 and 50 years of age. They have accumulated no capital themselves because they took no salaries, retaining only their living expenses, because the extra funds were left in the company to help it grow. This is typical. The father had been running the show up to this time.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: He had been giving them shares.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, but under the present tax all the gifts he gave during his lifetime are brought into his estate, so whether the shares were given before or after death matters little because they are all brought into the same basket and the sons are no farther ahead.

In any event, the only way the sons can keep the business is by borrowing $400,000. They could then pay about $60,000 in income tax and the remaining $340,000 would cover estate taxes. It would not be the company borrowing the money to pay the tax but the sons borrowing the money so that as the new owners with personal responsibility they could pay the tax. Therefore the company which at the time of death was worth $800,000 clear would now find itself owing $400,000. All the sons would see ahead of them would be the prospect of spending the rest of their working lives taking low wages and paying 63 per cent in income tax and the rest of the earnings to pay back the $400,000 and at least another $400,000 in interest charges on the loan. Why should these boys not sell to foreign interests?

Let no one suggest that this is not being done. I know from personal experience how and why this is being done. It is being done because of the way Canadian tax law is being applied. Growing businesses are being sold to foreign interests. The heirs are quite prepared to take the capital gain they have earned. They take the $800,000, the proceeds of the sale, pay the $340,000 in estate tax and invest $460,000 in C.M.H.C. mortgages which pay 9.3 per cent interest. They then live comfortably on the income and never work another day in their lives. This is a typical example and I repeat, this is what is happening. Men in their forties who have worked day and night almost like demons for seven days a week to put together a viable business, because of the incidence of tax take the first good offer of a sale to foreign interests and then retire. What a shameful loss this is to this country. These people ask themselves the question, why should they be faced with this situation? They obviously decide to get out.

My criticism of the estate tax proposal is not that its greatest impact is on the very wealthy, and I made that clear at the beginning. What is the nature of estates in Canada? I am informed that in 1966, of about $900 million in taxable value of estates only 72 had assets of more than $1 million and that this total reflected 15 per cent. I suggest it is the small and middle-size estates that will be hit. In 1966, of 5,700 taxable estates, 4,694 or 82 per cent had taxable assets ranging from $50,000 to $300,000 and of these about 70 per cent were less than $100,000. Previously these estates were untaxed. They will now be subject to tax, although the number has been diminished tremendously by the changes proposed by the minister on January 30. These middle-range estates will feel the new rates the hardest.

We should not be concerned about any particular group of taxpayers caught by the provisions of this act. Our legitimate concern should be for all taxpayers. By far, however, the impact is much greater in respect of the broad strata of Canadians whose estates will exceed a net of $50,000 and reach up over $300,000. These are estates of independent businessmen, farmers and professionals, the broad middle class of this country. They are the ones to be hit by the estate tax and they also pay the heaviest income tax.

We must remember that estates are accumulated with tax paid dollars. These are the people for whom the minister has always expressed solicitous concern. We now see that this concern is a sham. I could quote from representations made by the construction association. In this field we find small contractors and large construction companies. Many of them are family concerns which will be adversely affected by these tax proposals.

I do not intend to go into detail about the changes proposed by the minister on January 30, but I should like to point out that on page 2 of the communiqué the minister refers to the $50,000 starting point and indicates in the third paragraph that this will mean, for example, that a small estate left by a brother to a sister or a grandfather to his grandchildren will not be subject to estate tax. In other words, if the estate is less than $50,000 the range of gifts is limitless. However, if the estate happens to be over $50,000 then one must look out because gifts other than those to a spouse will be subject to heavy tax.

Let me now refer to the question of instalment payments. We have been hoping to see this for quite some time. This is not the result of new representations. My colleague, the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales), has had resolutions on the order paper for years in respect of instalment payments on estate taxes to avoid fire sales. The fact that there have been options open to the minister in cases of hardship does not alter the situation. The difficulties involved have been so great it was almost impossible for any estate to qualify, and there were very few which did qualify for deferment. I wonder how many companies were sold literally on a fire-sale basis and bought cheaply by foreign interests or larger Canadian entities? These fire-sales have taken place because the heirs to the estates had to pay estate taxes but had no liquid assets. If the minister would like to know what the effect is on estates which cannot be liquidated easily he should consider large farms such as those which exist in western Canada, or perhaps large companies existing in eastern Canada which are privately owned or closely held.

I want to terminate my remarks by saying that these proposals leave unanswered some very important questions. First of all, we have heard nothing from the minister, either by way of press release or in his speech in the house—and I trust the parliamentary secretary to the minister will note this point—as to how provincial tax credits will be handled. Has this been worked out? Second, what about foreign tax credits? Have these been worked out? Third, in view of the fact that a different philosophy has now been brought into play with regard to the estate tax, different in many ways from that prevailing with regard to the succession duty acts in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, how can individuals living in these provinces be properly advised in arranging their affairs when the fact is that if they take a certain course of action under the federal proposals they lay themselves open to much heavier incidence of tax under provincial legislation, and vice-versa? There is no co-ordination.

As I have said before on many occasions, the tax structure changes that have to be made must be made not only on the basis of the Carter commission report and an ouija board here in Ottawa but must also take into account the proposals of the Smith and Parent reports on provincial taxation. These provincial reports affect two-thirds of the people in Canada. Surely to goodness we are going to compound the difficulties of Canada's taxation jungle if the federal government goes off on its own orbit and the provinces follow the bent suggested in their own taxation reports without the three of them consulting with one another to try to get some sense and purpose out of the taxation systems.

Lastly, what is the position in connection with estates in the province of Alberta? The minister indicated that action had been taken there. We know that, but it has come to my ears—and this is what I want to find out definitely—that it has been or it is the policy of the government to tax the refunds in the province of Alberta as a result of the elimination of succession duties on April 1, 1967, in that province. Are these refunds being taxed as revenues in the hands of the beneficiaries of the estates and, if so, on what grounds? I have not been able to substantiate these reports but I would like to know definitely whether this is being done.

There are a number of other points that could be gone into in detail, but we will deal with those matters at the time of the clause by clause study. A good number of my colleagues will have something to say about this bill, and many of them have made representations to the minister himself. As a matter of fact, at least one of my colleagues even made an appointment with the minister and told him to his face what was wrong with the act. Yet this was forgotten. My colleagues will now tell him what they think from their seats in the house, and I hope that as a result some changes will be brought about so that more sense will be brought into the tax situation than exists at present.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, like most members of this house I have received an inordinately large number of letters on the subject of estate taxes. Not since Nosey Charlie appeared on the balcony have I received as much correspondence, some of which was perhaps no more relevant than the statement made by the aforementioned gentleman.

I come to this debate with a considerable amount of anger over what 5 per cent of our population is doing to the 95 per cent who do not have estates to worry about. I marvel at the fact that these people can make use of advertisements to frighten almost the entire population into believing that everything they have worked for or owned is going to be confiscated. This is a typical example of what has gone on in our society since the beginning of its history. The very rich who do not wish to pay taxes try to convince those who will not be paying them that their interests are alike, in other words, that the rich man is really and sincerely concerned about the poor man. The unfortunate thing about the situation is that so often these people are successful in their campaigns.

We have only to look through the newspapers to see what is being done. One would have thought from the advertisements and articles that have been appearing that every house and every car were going to be taken away. There has been no balance and no perspective in this whole debate. I took the occasion to make a personal call in reply to most of the letters that came to me because I knew some of the people who had written them. I could not understand their concern because I knew they did not have an estate that large, so what were they worried about? Some of them believed what they had read. Some of them had listened to one radio commentator who told them that 75 per cent of everything they had would be taken away. They also believed the stories that appeared in some of the farm journals and magazines that they would be deprived of the fruits of their work. When it was explained to them that the bill contains practically no change from the present law they were surprised.

I resent the people who spread this propaganda. They are full of cynicism in not standing up and making an argument giving the reasons why they should not be taxed. There is cynicism in trying to persuade and to make propaganda to convince those whose interests are not the same as theirs that they are in the same boat. I am angry at the Tweedledee and Tweedledum debate that has preceded this bill. One would think that the government has brought in some magnificent reform. What has it really done? Let us give it credit for some things that it has done. It has made it possible and universal that wives will not have to pay tax. This is a good thing, but is it really so new? After all, most estate planners made that provision for wives in the past. The government has made the tax somewhat more progressive at some levels but it has not altered the whole package. It has not increased the proportion of our revenues from this particular source but merely shuffled it around.

We are not asking who is more progressive in this debate as between the government and its nemesis in the opposition but who is most reactionary, because it is very hard to say on which side in this debate a reformer should stand. When I listen to spokesmen for the government I become incensed at what they are trying to palm off on the Canadian people as a worth-while reform. It is no such thing. It has made no major concession to the principle of equity. Then I have to listen to what is said by members of the Official Opposition, to the irrational arguments they have dragged out of the nineteenth century.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Lewis: The eighteenth.

Mr. Saltsman: When I hear these views I begin to feel sympathetic toward the government, not because I think the government is right but because I think it is being unjustly condemned for something which it really has not done.

Our position is simple to understand. We want to see some genuine reforms in the tax system. We want to see the government move along the lines suggested by the Carter commission. I would point out that the Carter commission did not go all that far. Many people have justly called its report a capitalistic document. It does not really reform the capitalist system but at least it recognizes the inequity of our present taxation laws, particularly in connection with estates.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) pointed out that had he acted on the basis of the Carter recommendations the revenue obtained from estate taxation would have been doubled. That is the position he should have taken instead of the kind of proposal we are considering now. I hear people crying because a poor, unfortunate child who inherits a million dollars will only be left with half a million. I know thousands of people who are not sure how they will be able to meet their rent obligation. They are taxed on every single thing they buy. I find it difficult to work up sympathy for the poor, unfortunate child who only has half a million dollars left after tax. At least a quarter of the population of this country is living in poverty. These people do not even know whether they can secure accommodation for themselves or their children and their prospects are not very bright. If tears are to be shed in this chamber, let us shed them for those who deserve them.

When the Minister of Finance introduced his budget I had the opportunity to present my views on his proposals. I said then I thought it was a very reactionary and regressive budget. It ignored the needs of the Canadian people. In that budget two items might have been singled out for neutrality at least, if not for praise. One of them was the arrangement to tax insurance companies in a more equitable fashion, something which had been overlooked for a long time. As it turns out, this has imposed no great additional liability on the insurance companies. The other item was the measure we are now considering making some adjustments in estate taxation. When I looked at this latter proposal I thought: it is the minister's concession to his conscience; he had to introduce this little reform just so he could live with himself after introducing that regressive budget. I did not think he deserved a great deal of credit for it, but at least I recognized this was what might have motivated him. As I say, I was not very sympathetic toward the minister because I did not believe he was entitled to sympathy after the kind of budget he had imposed on the Canadian people.

My sympathy began to move in his direction when I saw how unreasonable, how biased, the arguments were against this minor reform. It became impossible to stand aside without attempting in some way to defend this small measure. Let me give the house one example of the kind of advertisement which has been nationally circulated in this country. This one says:

> The new tax is represented as a concession to widows. They will no longer pay any tax when they inherit a husband's property.

That is very true. But it is significant that the advertisement makes no comment about this. It does not say how important this is. I believe that most men, when they have married and raised a family, are far more concerned about what the future holds for their wives than they are about the future of their children. After all, a wife is generally not that young when the husband goes.

An hon. Member: That is not very gallant.

Mr. Saltsman: She may be very beautiful, of course, but one cannot deny the facts. The children, on the other hand, have their lives ahead of them. If their parents have given them the opportunity to profit from a good education, if they have given them affection, understanding and a decent environment, they have surely done a great deal. The most important thing, therefore, is that the widow be left with some means of supporting herself after her husband goes to other fields—and, as has been pointed out, if he is a Member of Parliament he may depart sooner rather than later.

Mr. Lewis: And to a warm place.

Mr. Saltsman: Hopefully, not. It depends on what side of the house he sits on, of course.

The advertisement goes on to say that widows will not long outlive their husbands and that when they die estate tax is levied at sky-high rates to be paid by the heirs. I suggest that seven years is a reasonably long time. During this period the widow has complete use of the assets of the estate, and in this sense the legislation moves in the right direction.

I stated earlier that it is already possible with careful planning and the advice of people experienced in these matters to ensure that an estate is passed on in trust to the widow, enabling the wife to enjoy the advantages mentioned. What this legislation does is to make it possible even to those who may be uninformed as to what may be gained by employing tax lawyers.

The advertisement goes on to say:

> Many people think the new tax was designed to hit only rich men. This is not true. Most of its victims will be men or women in moderate circumstances.

In other words, the upper 5 per cent of our population is living in moderate circumstances. What, then, is to be said about the condition of the other 95 per cent? We are not really thinking here about people in moderate circumstances. People in moderate circumstances pay moderate taxes. We are really talking about those in other circumstances who are objecting to paying what should be considered a fair tax.

All of us, to some extent, take positions which arise from our experience and background. I have to admit that this is true in my case and that to some extent this debate has, for me, a personal aspect. It is also the case that my party has very strong feelings on this matter. We are a party that believes in equal treatment and fairness in the tax system, that each member of our society should be willing to carry his share of the challenges and responsibilities of that society.

Earlier I said that poverty in Canada has been carefully and incontrovertibly documented. We are not going to cure poverty by talking about it but by raising sufficient revenue to cope with it. What is necessary is a just and fair distribution of the resources of our society. We must have some sense of priority, of what is important and what is not important. I suggest to hon. members that the urgent need of society today is to find revenue to meet the needs of those people who are living at a level at which no human being should be asked to exist. These poor people are not to be blamed any more than the rich man is to be congratulated. I recall a famous cartoon that appeared during a United States presidential election campaign which depicted one of the candidates looking accusingly at a beggar and saying: "Well, it's your own damn fault for not having been born to a father who owns a department store." We may laugh at that sort of thing but we do tend to make this kind of value judgment.

It is not enough that the poor of our society inherit the disadvantages of their condition, that in so many cases these people are born with ill health or born into an unnecessarily harsh and unfeeling environment. On top of all this they suffer the disadvantage of having their needs ignored.

On the other hand, if the sons of rich men were never left any money they would be infinitely better off than the poor people I am talking about. First of all, they would be better cared for because their parents were in a position to care for them and had the money to do so. How much more advantage do we give to those who have already been born into advantage?

I have heard on many occasions about the terrible things that will happen to the poor if they are given welfare or are helped. They will, I think the phrase is, lose their backbone. It seems to be a terrible thing to give somebody welfare or something which he has not earned by working. What about welfare for the rich? It does not seem to affect their backbone at all. No one seems to worry that an inheritance of $500,000 will affect the beneficiary's backbone. These people must have a different kind of anatomy from the poor, and the chances are they will probably do less well with it.

Another assumption that is made, one which I heard argued in this house a short while ago, is that it almost seems as though the wealth that an individual accumulates is entirely due to his own efforts. No thought or consideration is given to the inputs of our social system. Where would the rich be unless they could move their goods to market, unless there were forces to protect them against fire and disasters of various kinds, unless people were trained and educated to operate their enterprises? People of initiative, people who work hard and build up businesses, are entitled to credit. But so is society, and let us not forget that. No man can build anything on his own. He does it with the assistance of his wife, the people who work for him and all those around him in this nation. Therefore we have to assume that he has some sense of obligation, of responsibility to those who have helped him and made his success possible. Is this so much to ask? Is this such a terrible thing?

Historically speaking, if we removed the words "estate tax" from this debate and substituted "corporation tax" or "income tax", we would find that the arguments were just the same. I was reading a debate which took place in 1917, I believe, when income tax was first introduced in this country. At that time the tax was very small but it was going to change our whole social system. Business was going to collapse, it was said. The world was coming to an end. The pools of private capital needed to develop this country were going to disappear.

Although it may be anarchy, is it so terrible to yell "communism" any more? After all, the Minister of Finance has been accused of being a communist in almost every journal in this country, so I guess that makes it legitimate now. We have heard this argument before and it has been a bad argument. One would think that General Motors was run like a corner grocery store. Today most of the financing and capital accumulation in our society does not depend upon private pools of wealth. We are only kidding ourselves if we argue that we can advance this country by means of small private pools of wealth and therefore, so it is argued, can reduce taxation and people can keep everything they earn. It is just not that kind of world.

We in this party feel very strongly for people like small businessmen and farmers, who in some ways are in a special position in our society. The small businessman and the farmer are more than just economic units. I have never been a farmer but I have been a small businessman and I know that many small businessmen might be better off working for somebody else if they were to calculate the number of hours they put in. I speak now as one who has put in long hours, and perhaps even made some mistakes, and I can tell the house that I could have worked for somebody else and made more. However, it was my decision to make. Nobody told me to open up a business. Nobody came to me on their knees pleading with me to go into business. I went into business because I chose to do so and because I wanted that kind of life. But I have asked as a small businessman for what I think farmers are also entitled to ask, namely, that if my business has to be sold but my family, my children in particular, wish to preserve it, then an opportunity should be provided for continuance of the enterprise. This is the case in this legislation, as it has been the case in previous legislation. This legislation spells it out a little more specifically, and to that extent we have been given an advantage.

We must also remember that in trying to assist a very small number of legitimate claimants who will be allowed to spread their tax payments over a number of years we have made available to the very rich a concession they do not need. That is one of the dangers arising from blanket proposals and blanket legislation. Such legislation does not consider the needs of some of the more worthy social organizations of our society.

I ask, Mr. Speaker—and I ask with sadness even though I began speaking in anger—what kind of dialogue has taken place on this legislation? Why is there an absence of a real focusing on the issues involved in the taxation of estates? How the powers to be in our society have poured out their sympathies for the very rich! How they have cried their tears in a misguided cause while ignoring completely elements in our society that are most worthy of all the sympathy we can muster! I do not know how many in this chamber inherited wealth. From my knowledge of most hon. members I do not think many inherited wealth. Most of them made it on their own and they are none the worse for it. We talk about inheritance. Should we not be concerned to hand down to our children not money which they may or may not be able to keep and which may or may not make them happy, but a more just, more fair and more equitable society. This we can accomplish by taking an intelligent view of estate legislation. And our view must be more intelligent than the one we have seen demonstrated in this house.

Before I sit down I wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

> That Bill No. C-165 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to a complete revision of the federal estate tax legislation with a view to making the rates of taxation under such legislation truly progressive and equitable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I shall put this amendment before the house with the caveat and postulate that it should be referred to Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. McCleave: Before Your Honour recognizes the next speaker, may I ask the hon. member who has just sat down a question? How much thought has he, along with the other members of his party, given to the fact that some estates could be very liquid and thus able to raise estate tax money more readily than other estates? If he does not wish to answer the question now, perhaps one of his colleagues might answer it later in the debate. I think this is an important aspect to consider.

Mr. Saltsman: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, may I answer the question. We are very concerned about this matter. We do not wish to see estates liquidated any more than anybody else does. But I suggest to the hon. member who has had considerable business experience that an asset is still an asset and that banks and other financial institutions are prepared to lend money on the security of assets. We are not talking about getting rid of assets. We are merely asking whether assets ought to be handed down unimpaired or whether they should be encumbered with a mortgage or a liability. Speaking for myself—and I make an open offer to anyone prepared to be generous—if anyone were to leave me $1 million and I had to encumber that inheritance with a liability of $500,000 I would gladly accept the inheritance, encumber it to that extent, and hold myself most fortunate.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), I was thinking over his statement that he had not received as many letters of protest since the general's visit and his statement from the balcony.

In our case, perhaps we did not receive as many letters, although there are at present 400,000 unemployed in Canada of whom 200,000 are in the province of Quebec. As a matter of fact, we are receiving thousands of letters, not on account of estate duties, but rather about problems resulting from unemployment and the tremendous difficulties it is creating.

On the matter of the amendment now proposed by the government, and knowing myself its insatiable desire to increase taxes, I would be afraid that a proposal to review the present taxation system and the Estate Tax Act would be an invitation to levy more taxes. For this reason, I am somewhat reluctant to approve part of the amendment proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson).

The proposed legislation has been a little improved in order to assist families. In other words, it is more or less what it was prior to October, 1968. That is why I hesitate a little to support that amendment. At any rate, I think the previous speaker has tried mainly to see in it a review of the estate duties that would result in the abolition of all taxation.

Consequently, as the members of the Ralliement Créditiste are opposed to any kind of taxation in Canada, we will surely approve this amendment, or the proposed review, by having the amendment referred to the appropriate committee.

While the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) was speaking, I wondered why, when his party was in power—since he seemed to criticize the act as a whole—he did not ask that the Estate Tax Act simply be abolished. Since the hon. member seems to feel that we need such a severe tax system, he could at least have asked that the Estate Tax Act be handed over to the provinces; today, he would not have to criticize it.

Mr. Speaker, I should like, first of all, to point out to the Minister of Finance that we, of the Ralliement Créditiste, are opposed to any tax at all in Canada, and that the very fact of levying a tax on private estates discourages private enterprise. That is why we say that the Minister of Finance should seek another formula. Indeed, the Bank of Canada is at his disposal, and that is where he should turn to keep families from being choked systematically.

Unfortunately, as we are living under a tax-over-tax system, we must be content with it. It is coming to an end, anyway. We see that further pressures are to be exerted upon us since unemployment will be tolerated. As we must accept that system, we will support this amendment. We want the Minister of Finance to adopt it as soon as possible, for, had he levied a tax on $20,000 estates as he wished to do originally, through the October 1968 bill, he would have given the death-blow to many family enterprises.

The minister has seen fit to deal once more with the proposed legislation because we represent the official opposition from Quebec. I therefore conclude that he listened to the voice of the opposition, and that is the undeniable proof that we can be greatly helpful in this assembly.

Let me say also that I am in favor of adopting the amendment, which I shall read so that Canadian families will learn about this particular privilege which is, I think, the only really human aspect of the measure. So I quote from page 5 of the statement issued by the Department of Finance, on January 30, 1969:

> In the case of a legacy to a crippled child, wholly dependent, the proposals provide for an exemption of $1,000 for each year until he is 71 years old, over the basic exemption of $10,000.
> Therefore, the maximum exemptions are as follows:
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | Child in good health, over 25 years of age | $10,000 |
> | Child in good health, under 25 years of age | $35,000 |
> | Crippled child | $80,000 |

The human aspect is greatly important and we have said over and over again that we heartily support any amendment that makes a law more human and more logical. I think this lenient aspect will prompt parents to keep at home the children who are not as lucky as we are and who cannot lead normal lives. The amendment will certainly benefit those families.

As for the amendment that provides that six months after the death, the unpaid sums must be paid in six instalments, I find it is only a way of getting the money little by little; besides, there will be interest on the unpaid amount. There is the risk that people with a small fortune, not seeing the urgency of the problem since they will have six months to pay, will probably forget about the urgency and will take, as they do now, a $50,000 or $100,000 insurance policy to cover the estate taxes. In the past, a person used to buy an insurance policy in order to pay the succession duties in one lump sum. I have noted that this legislation makes it possible to spread them over six installments and to pay them six months after death occurs. There is a danger that people will not be wise enough to buy an insurance policy on the life of the head of the family in order to pay off all those moneys, all those taxes levied by the government.

I wish to make another remark. When drawing up these amendments to the Estate Tax Act, the government forgot to return all those duties to the provinces. I have already referred to that point. If this had been the case there would probably be no need for discussing today the matter of succession duties that have been claimed for so many years by the provinces. Such an amendment would have enabled the federal-provincial conference, which is to convene in a few days, to open on the right foot, because the provinces, the same as the federal government, the municipalities, the school boards, etc., thirst for money. I am sure all hon. members would agree that succession duties must be transferred to the provinces.

I also regret that the government has not, in this amendment to the Estate Tax Act, exempted insurance brotherhoods. I think the government missed a good chance to help those organizations which are not taxed anywhere else in the world. They grew up on many sacrifices for the purpose of helping our people and they are going to be smothered by the new tax. I am really disappointed that provisions concerning brotherhoods were not included, as we had requested, in the amendment to the Estate Tax Act.

Finally, I have just read a newspaper article stating that, by a quick calculation, it can be concluded that the government will suffer a loss of $15 million by adopting the proposed amendment. As everybody knows, problems resulting from lack of money will continue to exist for all federal and provincial governments, as well as for school boards.

What is the solution then? I gave it at the beginning of my remarks, when I recommended that the Bank of Canada be put at the service of Canadians. Moreover, after assessing the production of wheat which seems to be a thorn in our side, we could simply distribute it to Canadians and to countries all over the world.

Anyhow, I am convinced that the major problem which will be discussed next week, during the federal-provincial conference, will be that of finance. Let us be logical once for all and let us settle the problems in a different way. For 35 years, we of the Ralliement Créditiste have been requesting a solution whereby credit given to society will put an end to all those taxes which prevent private enterprise from progressing. In fact, we know that truth will prevail one day and I urge this government to pass immediately legislative measures which will make it possible to grant credit to the people, through the Bank of Canada, instead of taxing individuals and hence discouraging private enterprise.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Pursuant to special order made earlier this day this debate is adjourned and the house will now proceed with the next item of business.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

AMENDMENT PROVIDING EMERGENCY PAYMENTS TO MEET DRYING COSTS

The house resumed, from Tuesday, February 4, consideration in committee of Bill C-162, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act—Mr. Pepin—Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose last evening clause 1 of the bill was under consideration.

On clause 1—Emergency advance payments.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Chairman, I had not planned to speak on this bill. I thought that the quicker it was passed the sooner it might be some help to the farmers, but after hearing the Minister without Portfolio last night I think I should try to set the record straight. He misrepresented the situation to members of his own party who are not familiar with western Canada when he said, as recorded on page 5148 of Hansard:

> Again, members of the opposition have used the three-bushel quota in an attempt to assess blame in connection with that. I should like to draw their attention to the many months which went by after that quota had been brought into effect before they began to think they could use it for petty political advantage, though they welcomed it at the beginning.

I think this is a terrible statement to be made by one who should be familiar with the situation. The government put a three-bushel quota on damp grain, but what good did it do? It was detrimental to western farmers because in many cases they would have been better off to leave their wheat lying in the swath inasmuch as they found out later that there was no room in the elevators for the damp grain. Farmers in my own constituency had only a one-bushel quota and they were not able to take advantage of the three-bushel quota. The three-bushel damp grain quota was useless in my constituency.

Just yesterday I was in contact with the largest shipping area in my constituency and I was informed it still has only a one-bushel quota and, as one man put it to me, it has not had a box car since God knows when. If this is all the minister saw of the seriousness of the situation when he was out west I think he had better go back there again and take another look.

The situation is very critical. Yesterday I was informed that very little, if any, drying equipment has been placed in position in the Meadow Lake area. It is being moved into position, but I point out that we are now in the month of February. Why was this equipment not put into position much earlier? The minister talked about drying charges of eight cents to ten cents a bushel, but the reports I received from my constituency say the charges run from 18 cents to 20 cents a bushel.

Furthermore, in this difficult situation for western farmers I understand that few, if any, payments have been made under P.F.A.A. This is something this glorified parliamentary secretary should start looking into. I have not yet heard of one single P.F.A.A. payment going out to my constituency although many districts there have had crop failures.

[Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake).]

On September 25 last year I asked the Minister of Agriculture to inquire whether a survey of P.F.A.A. needs was being made. We are now well into the month of February and I have not heard that one single farmer in my constituency has received a payment under P.F.A.A. I thought this was a matter which I should bring to the attention of the house.

I certainly welcome any assistance that this legislation will provide farmers to meet the cost of drying their grain. As I say, the three-bushel damp grain quota encouraged many farmers to thresh damp grain when it would have been better to leave it lying in the swath until good weather in the spring. As I indicated at the outset of my remarks, I thought the record should be put straight about the very serious situation in western Canada.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, last night I was surprised at the partisan way in which the Minister without Portfolio spoke. I am interested in this legislation and in the support it has received from the opposition, but now the government is trying to take considerable credit for this important step.

I have been long enough in this house to see the farming situation in western Canada deteriorate on at least four occasions and the situation that has developed this year occurred on each of those four occasions. By August last it was realized by western farmers, members of the government and members of the opposition that a serious situation was developing. By September, when grain was in the harvesting stage, people were able to ascertain that there would be a great problem to meet in drying damp grain. But when members of the opposition brought this matter to the attention of the government, what did the government do? Frankly, I am not sure what it did but I am sure of what it did not do. It did not really get around to solving the problem.

When the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce returns from the west I am quite sure the recommendation he will make will be to appoint a controller to regulate the flow of grain. It is all very well to supply a farmer in a desperate position with an additional $600, which in effect will be a debt, and ask him to dry wheat, but is it not time we got around to handling the wheat we have on a more equitable basis? Every day some hon. member gets up and asks why we are not able to fill the ships waiting at the ports on the west coast. Then the question is asked what assistance is being given to those areas where damp grain is such a serious problem, and why an open quota is not put on damp grain so that it can be dried. The situation is now so bad that the damp grain will not even be any use for commercial feed come springtime.

I notice in the Western Producer that in some areas the unit quota has not been fulfilled, and on the prairies there are 345 points where the unit quota is not available. At the other end of the picture you will find there are some areas which have a four bushel quota. There are 329 prairie shipping points which are on a three-bushel quota today. Obviously there is inequality in this regard.

The minister made an attack on hon. members. I have heard this sort of thing many times not only from this government but from the previous government. On every occasion when the problem finally was settled it was because the government appointed an overall controller to deal with it. A controller would decide where the grain would be moved from, from what farm points, from what country elevators, and he would decide what box cars would be delivered to the elevators and what grain would be moved from the inland terminals to the coastal terminals. He would also have control over the vessels and the expenses that were incurred by the vessels.

Let us make no mistake about this. It does not do any good for farmers to pay the demurrage in respect of boats which cannot be filled through no responsibility of theirs but through the inability of the transportation facilities, the Canadian Wheat Board and the Board of Grain Commissioners to put the proper grade of grain in position for loading. If this advance of $600 interest free to be added to the debt of the farmer is considered to be a solution, then the minister obviously has not looked into the matter.

Last night the minister did a good deal of talking. I do not know why he was belligerent. He will not win many votes for a long time. His handling of this situation certainly would not win him any votes this year in western Canada if there were an election. If the minister really is serious in bringing about a solution to this problem he should sit down with the Prime Minister and decide who will handle this problem. There should be one person appointed who would decide how to solve this problem. It is not a new problem. We learned about it in August last year. We heard about it in September, October, November, December, January, and now we are in the month of February. It will probably be another three months before the situation comes finally to a head, and if the grain is not dry it will be lost to the farmers and to the economy of the nation.

I have a great deal of respect for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I am also of the opinion that he has far too much responsibility for any minister, even one with his capabilities. He has at least three times the responsibility any minister should assume because it is impossible to do the job well. However, I am sure that when the minister discusses this problem with those who are involved with transportation and transportation facilities in western Canada he will come to the conclusion that it is necessary to have a transport controller in western Canada in order to solve it.

The Minister without Portfolio was wined and dined by the Grains Council, the people who are involved in one aspect of this problem, while he should have been turning his mind to the whole problem. I asked a western farmer about the Grains Council, its membership and what happens when a person brings grain to a country elevator which does not want it. The elevator agent is told he must move it, that there is a necessity that he do it, but I am sure they are not expediting the situation. Mention is made of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railways, but I am sure they will not expedite a solution to the problem in western Canada. I am told that it is not as profitable to haul grain as it is to haul almost any other commodity. So the transportation facilities will be used for any purpose other than hauling grain. This will be the last resort when they cannot do anything else.

A controller would allocate the shipping points and see that a certain number of box cars are kept fluid for the transportation of grain at all times. He would decide to what points they would be delivered. In this manner the inequity could be cleared up. There is quite an inequity in respect of the shipping quotas. The controller obviously would work toward rectifying this situation.

Each and every member of this house, if he is really interested in the national good rather than in playing party politics, will be interested in solving the grain crisis in western Canada in the most satisfactory way. I suggest that the minister, instead of lecturing members about things which he does not understand, should try to create, as the Prime Minister would say, some participation with the members of the house through dialogue. If he would look at the problem and see how it has been solved in prior years he would find that the solution is fairly obvious and is one which this government should take.

I think it is a credit to the controllers who have been appointed in years when we have had difficulty that they have been able to solve the problem quietly and efficiently. They have been very pleased when they have terminated their duties to report wholehearted co-operation by the wheat pools, the grain companies, the transportation facilities, the harbour personnel and all other persons connected with the grain industry. They obtained this kind of co-operation. Never since I have been here have they made a report to parliament which indicated they did not receive this kind of co-operation. I suggest that the government does not have the same kind of co-operation. This $600 will only make the farmers $600 poorer. I have been told that 10 cents a bushel for drying grain will not accomplish very much for most of the farmers who have 90 per cent or 100 per cent of their grain in a damp condition.

I hope the Liberal members of this house, on the passing of this legislation, will not thump their desks and say that this is the end of the problem in respect of the grain crisis in western Canada, because I think it is only a start. I was interested to note that the Minister of National Revenue indicated that very little advantage has been taken of the removal of the tariff on grain drying equipment and the provision that certain types of grain storage facilities may be imported without additional cost. These actions really have not done anything to solve the problem. The problem will only be solved when there is equality of opportunity to move damp grain into market position and when we have the full co-operation of and direction over the transportation facilities so that no ships will be standing idle waiting for grain which has been contracted for and then not delivered.

The problem will not be solved until every area in western Canada has a three-bushel quota which will allow the farmers to make arrangements for drying facilities on a cash basis. I suggest that the minister really has not done anything about the problem in western Canada. The introduction of silly pieces of legislation such as this as a solution to a crisis is a pretty ineffective way to solve the problem. I hope the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, when he returns from western Canada, will rise in the house and recommend the immediate establishment of the office of transport controller so that the actions now being taken by provincial governments and by other interested parties may be co-ordinated. The situation certainly has been helped little by the Minister without Portfolio who is now trying to do something about grain dryers when they should have been in operation for the last five months. If this problem is not solved in the very near future many farmers will discover that their losses will be considerably greater because of frost damage and an anticipated early spring. Therefore the loss to Canada will be much greater.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word or two more about this matter before this legislation passes this afternoon. I regret that the minister in charge is not here. I understand he is on a fact-finding mission in Vancouver. It is unfortunate that this debate could not take place after his return. We might then hear more proposals to solve the damp grain problem in western Canada and perhaps suggestions to transport grain more efficiently.

Let me quote briefly from an article which appeared today in the Vancouver Province under the heading "Pepin Hopes But Hedges". Those words do not give a great deal of confidence to the agricultural industry in western Canada. The article states:

> The grain crisis in western Canada could be over in a matter of weeks, perhaps in a month, Trade Minister Pepin said Tuesday in Vancouver.

A grain crisis could well develop after the month of March. It was estimated that there were 200 million bushels of damp and tough grain harvested in Alberta alone. It is also estimated that up to this time 15 million bushels of that grain have been shipped or loaded into elevators. It might well be estimated that 85 million bushels have been fed to cattle during the winter or will be fed to cattle before spring. That leaves some 100 million bushels of damp and tough grain in the province of Alberta to be dried between now and spring.

If we assume there are 100 days of cold weather left during which the grain will be preserved, and there will not be that many, we are still left with one million bushels of grain to be dried per day between now and spring. I suggest through you, Mr. Chairman, to the minister that this crisis will remain with us much longer than another month unless greater action is taken by the government to dry the grain and to assist the farmers to dry more grain on their farms.

As I suggested last night, there are seven ways the government might have acted and might still act to improve the situation in respect of damp grain. Let me suggest one more. Before doing so let me read from an article in the Vancouver Province. It states:

> After conferring all day with senior port, transportation and Wheat Board officials, Pepin's smiling optimism at a press conference was mixed with a cautious spreading of blame for the shipping snarls of recent weeks.

At least we have accomplished something. The minister admits there were shipping snarls. While he apparently could not find any particular person or persons to blame, the minister did attempt in a cautious way to spread the blame around. The article then continues:

> He admitted there had been serious misjudgments, such as the hasty and premature shipment of too much inferior damp grain to the coast for drying when priority should have been given to better grades.

This is what I said earlier in the debate on this subject. Damp grain should not have been moved to the coast in greater quantities than could be handled by the grain drying equipment there. Apparently someone thought he might be the saviour of the grain industry by one stroke of the pen. The article then continues:

> Both the railways, said the minister, are taking extraordinary steps to make up for delays, but he added that he could not say until noon today, when they are due to report to him, just what further shipping commitments they are prepared to accept.

In other words, the railways still have not made any further commitments in respect of eliminating this difficult situation.

I should like the minister now in charge of piloting this bill through the house to understand clearly, as other members from western Canada understand, what the situation is. The article states:

> The minister made it clear that, in the matter of demurrage, the full load will eventually have to be carried by the grain producers themselves.

Those are the words of the minister as reported in this article. The demurrage charges in respect of these ships in Vancouver will have to be carried by the grain producers. The article states:

> Twenty-one ships are idle in Vancouver harbour waiting to load.

Who is responsible for these shipping snarls which the minister has tried to put on somebody's shoulders? He has admitted there are shipping snarls and he tried to spread the blame. Surely he cannot find any way of placing the blame on the farmers.

Some time ago we had a special debate on this matter and we were told that the problem had developed as a result of weather conditions and that everything was being done by the minister, the Wheat Board and the government. We were told that the railway companies were working overtime but that weather conditions created special problems. For the sake of argument let us assume that the weather did create the problem which resulted in shipping snarls. Weather conditions surely can be classed as acts of God. Why should the producers have to pay the demurrage charges as a result of these shipping snarls?

If the government is conscientiously concerned about the farmers in western Canada, the very least it should do is to pick up the demurrage charges, perhaps not for the full year or even half a year but at least for the time during which the shipping snarls existed. The minister suggested in Vancouver, as reported in this article, that the trouble may be over within a matter of weeks or in a month. Perhaps the government could pick up the demurrage charges for that period of time.

At least 21 ships are still idle in Vancouver harbour, and two weeks ago there were 33 ships waiting to be loaded. We know that at least two or three ships left empty. This means that we have loaded perhaps nine ships. During this period more ships might have entered the harbour had there been any prospect of their being loaded. In any event, 21 ships are still waiting. Surely the farmers should not have to pay the demurrage charges in respect of these 21 ships.

Let me make another suggestion to the government in respect of the movement of this grain. The government should immediately accept the demurrage charges caused by the shipping snarls which have existed throughout the period of processing damp grain at Vancouver. Perhaps this could be done at least in respect of that one port. It is not a great deal of money, and if the government would pay these charges it would show that it is really concerned.

Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act

The previous speaker dealt with the appointment of a controller and so did I yesterday. We are both of the opinion that a controller should be appointed. The three prairie premiers also suggested that a controller should be appointed. An article in the Vancouver Sun of February 5 says that the minister stated that "he intends to determine whether a prairie co-ordinator is needed to improve movements of wheat from farm to port." He still has not determined whether this is necessary. It is now February 5 and we have had this problem with us for nearly a month.

I stated yesterday that at a C.P.R. point in my constituency on January 1 there were 214 box cars loaded with wheat, 75 per cent of which were loaded with No. 2 and No. 3 wheat in dry condition. At the end of January there were still 120 cars on that same siding still loaded. I gave just one instance but I could cite several more. Many hon. members could cite many more incidents of box cars loaded with wheat not being moved now and not having moved since December. Is this not sufficient evidence on which the minister should by now have made up his mind that a prairie co-ordinator is necessary, and should he not now urge the railroads to greater action? The minister admitted in the press conference he gave yesterday in Vancouver as quoted in the Province that he does not know "just what further shipping commitments the railroads are prepared to accept". The Alberta Wheat Pool has advised me that the railways can handle around 120 cars a day at their terminals in Vancouver but the railroads advise us that the best they can move in there is 85 cars. This is not enough; the railroads have to move grain with greater speed.

The hon. member for Timiskaming, who resumed his seat a moment ago, suggested that grain was the lowest paying product that the railroads move and therefore they move it last. May I say that grain has been the bread and butter of the railroads on the prairies for the last 50 years.

Mr. Benjamin: Not according to the railroads.

Mr. Horner: That is right; the railroads always like to have a little more butter on their bread and a little more cream with their milk. Every year that grain shipments have been large the revenues of the railroads have gone up, and every year that grain shipments have gone down to a minimum the revenues of the railroad have also gone down. There is no way in which the railroads can say that they can operate on the prairies without hauling grain. Immediately many miles of track become inefficient. The railroads know they are the only ones that can haul grain and so they haul anything else in its place because they know that the grain will wait for them. Grain movement is a national concern and so is the movement of damp grain. The railroads have a monopoly in this field and are morally obligated to share the national concern and to do their utmost to assist the economy of every region of Canada, not only with regard to the wheat problem on the prairies but other problems in other regions of Canada.

I would like the minister who is piloting this bill through the house to give us his views. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce suggested he has yet to determine whether a prairie controller is necessary. But what is the position of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt who represents the prairies? Does he believe a prairie controller is necessary? Will the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt, the prairie representative in the cabinet who is particularly concerned with wheat, urge the minister to appoint a prairie co-ordinator? Let us have a little dialogue between these two ministers. We have seen a public dialogue between two other ministers with regard to the subject of NATO and defence. Perhaps the minister is prepared to tell the house whether he believes a prairie co-ordinator is necessary. Most of the prairie people, particularly those in the grain trade, believe that a prairie co-ordinator has served their industry well in the past and could do so now in this crisis as well as in the future, even though the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce suggests this emergency will only last for another month. He is doing a lot of wishful thinking in that regard.

I would also like to know from the Minister without Portfolio what he will tell the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce with regard to the demurrage charges on the 33 ships which were in Vancouver two weeks ago and the 21 which are there today waiting to be loaded. The article says that 21 ships are idle. What is the minister's position in this regard?

He and the Minister of Agriculture have said that the main cause of the snarling of the shipping traffic has been the weather and that this was an act of God. The difficulty in the handling of damp grain which froze in box cars was the weather. The Minister of Agriculture said it took eight men with crowbars three hours to unload one car. He painted a very gruesome picture. For the sake of argument let us accept the fact it was the weather. Surely the government should be prepared to accept the responsibility and pick up the demurrage charges instead of charging the farmers and telling them: "You have not had enough to contend with. You have just had six weeks of 40 below weather in Alberta and Saskatchewan so we will give you the demurrage charges also because they were brought about by the weather and you are able to cope with severe weather conditions." The least the minister can do before this bill passes and before six o'clock is to answer these two questions.

In conclusion I should like to repeat the two questions to make them quite clear to the minister. What is his opinion with regard to the appointment of a prairie co-ordinator for the movement of damp and dry grain so as to eliminate in the best possible way the shipping snarl that has been troubling us and that will be with us for at least a month, according to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce? Second, what is his opinion of the suggestion I have made that the government should pick up the demurrage charges, particularly at the port of Vancouver, brought about by the shipping snarls of late January and early February and which may continue for another month, as suggested by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

These are the questions I ask. The minister can give us his opinions. Naturally the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will make a statement when he returns tomorrow. We may comment but we shall not be able to debate the issue. We are prepared to allow this bill to go through, but if the minister does not give us an assurance that he will fight and work for the prairies it might be wise for prairie members to hold up this legislation until the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce returns. We would then have an opportunity to debate with him the suggestions I have made and to find out exactly where the minister places the blame for the present situation. A press cutting I have here states:

> Pepin's smiling optimism at a press conference was mixed with a cautious spreading of the blame for the shipping snarls of recent weeks.

It might be advisable to hold up this legislation until we find out where he spread the blame in his cautious way. Certainly he could never spread the blame on the backs of the farmers, although it is the farmers who will have to pick up the demurrage charges.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that when this legislation is passed I hope the government will follow through by assessing the precise nature of the situation on the prairies. I think it is necessary to estimate how much grain there is to be dried locally on the farms. A good estimate could be made through the Wheat Board and the grain companies. This figure should then be related to the amount of equipment, including local driers, which is available, and an effort made to determine whether there are sufficient man hours available to do the job adequately in the time left. If the answer is that the amount of equipment available is insufficient or that there are too few man hours available, something should be done immediately. We should not wait until next spring when we hear cries of grain spoilage.

This must also be related to the cost. I agree with an hon. member to my right that the cost is likely to come closer to 15 or 20 cents a bushel than the 10 cents we have been talking about. This would be another factor. If the farmers have a feeling that this administration is really concerned about the problem and is ready to go to work with them to meet it, we shall get the kind of action needed.

I do not propose to say anything further about the movement of grain because the subject has been debated thoroughly. As to the need for a controller, I made that point myself weeks ago without effect. Farmers have done their part. We put millions of dollars into a pool terminal out on the west coast. Let me tell hon. members that the farmers—and I was one of them—put up the money out of their own pockets to build that terminal because there was a shortage of storage. It is indeed distressing to find out now after paying these millions of dollars that the grain has not been effectively moved into position.

I do not want to belabour the point further. I merely wish to make this final comment. I do not think the government can assume that if this bill passes they can forget about the problem and that the tangle which now exists will automatically unsnarl. That is not the way it will happen.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I am glad of this opportunity to make one or two further points because this may be the last occasion on which hon. members—I am thinking particularly of those from western Canada—can discuss this subject in any detail.

Last night the minister finally and unequivocally said no, on behalf of the government, to the idea of making direct cash payments to farmers for the purpose of drying grain. I accept this as being the government's position, though I do not agree with it. In these circumstances I have a suggestion to put forward. Perhaps the minister will go at least this far, and try to persuade his colleagues to agree that the farm industry should not be expected to bear all the extra cost caused by the condition of the crop. If the hon. gentleman would agree to this principle, then something at least could be done to assist western farmers.

May I suggest an alternative method by which the treasury would bear some of these costs. The Wheat Board will be faced with additional costs amounting to millions of dollars because of the difficulty of dealing with tough and damp grain. It will be paying out extra money in demurrage charges on ships and box cars. It will be paying out tens of thousands of dollars in respect of carloads of grain charged as dead freight because grain is light in weight and cars cannot be loaded to the limit. There will be additional costs in diversion charges and switching charges directly attributable to the condition of the grain. If the federal treasury were to bear the additional cost attributable to tough and damp grain, the amount of money received by farmers next spring need not be reduced, and in this way indirect assistance could be given to our farmers.

May I support the pleas of those who have called for the appointment of a transport controller. We should like to see such an appointment made as soon as possible. There are three members of our group in the house who worked on the railway, and we have some knowledge of the way in which chief despatchers, chief superintendents and transport supervisors operate in the allocation of railroad equipment, both box cars and motive power. Their attitudes have not changed. Unless someone tells them how much equipment they are to allocate for the movement of grain they will only act at their convenience. I cannot overemphasize this point.

Finally, may I gently remind the minister to reply to the question I asked him in connection with the submissions of the farm organizations concerning direct federal payments? Again, would the minister indicate where I might find, either in the act or in the regulations, provisions concerning the payment of advances and the circumstances in which farmers would not be considered in default?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I should begin by referring briefly to some of the questions which have been put to me by hon. members opposite. I may say that the kind remarks last night of the hon. member for Crowfoot left me in any case with a desire to reply to a couple of questions which he had brought up previously.

I want to draw attention to the fact that the figures I have are very different from those he used with regard to the quantity of grain involved. He used a figure of 800 million bushels. The Wheat Board, as a result of its survey, has indicated that the figure is some 217 million bushels. This includes both damp and tough grain.

The hon. member asked about the Grains Council. I should like to assure him that when the council met in Winnipeg it talked about holding a very early meeting to deal with the process of launching its endeavours. He asked, further, about money for the Grains Council. I refer him to vote 35 in the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce tabled yesterday and to a similar item in the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

Today, he and other hon. members asked about demurrage. May I simply say it would be out of step with ordinary policy if the government were to undertake to pay demurrage charges. This responsibility should really belong to those who make the decisions about when boats are to load, in order that this measure may be operated responsibly, and decisions like this are taken by the Wheat Board.

I was asked about the appointment of a co-ordinator. I should like to say that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce would, at any moment he felt the appointment of a co-ordinator would improve the situation, recommend such action. But at no time up to the present has this necessity been apparent. It was with the purpose of staying close to the situation that my hon. friend went to Vancouver to investigate the matter.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: Would the minister permit a question on that point? I did not ask him what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce would do about a controller; I asked him for his opinion whether a prairie controller would help at this time in light of the premier's statement in that regard.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I agree completely with the action and decision taken by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in this regard.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre asked about the right to take an advance on an amount outstanding. As a matter of interpretation of the act this is not specifically barred and I think really follows. But let me refer him specifically to section 3, subsection 4, and section 4, subsection (1) (e), which make clear the procedure that is used in an ordinary case to take an advance when there is an outstanding amount from a previous year.

A number of members referred to the price of grain drying. In my remarks last night I referred to a discovery that pleased me very much during my most recent visit to the prairies. Previously on other visits costs were kept fairly low only in exceptional cases. On this occasion I found that in many cases, when grain drying equipment was set up near the elevators, a cost of eight to ten cents was being charged. I emphasized that setting up this equipment near grain elevators was a very important development. In this regard I am confident that there is adequate equipment on the prairies to do the drying and that it is really a matter of moving it into place.

Mr. Horner: One more question before the minister finishes with this subject. If the cost of grain drying has now been reduced to eight to ten cents a bushel, can I assume that the minister will work hard to reduce the difference between that figure and the cost of drying damp wheat of 16 cents a bushel?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I would have thought the hon. member would know that there is no direct relationship between the cost of drying grain and the appropriate figure to be deducted when grain is delivered in a damp state. In addition to the cost of drying there is a significant change in the value of the wheat because of shrinkage. A man who delivers damp wheat gets an advantage because included in his price is the water that he is delivering at the same time as he delivers the grain.

Mr. Horner: Is the minister suggesting that there is a considerable difference in the wheat, whether damp or dry, because of deterioration in quality?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): This depends very much on a lot of factors.

Mr. Gleave: In regard to charges for drying grain, would the minister indicate how wide his survey was and give instances of charges that were assessed for drying grain?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I will be glad to give the hon. member some specific examples.

Mr. Gleave: The reason I ask the question is that my own personal experience indicates a charge, on a custom drying basis, much higher than that indicated by the minister.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): As I say, Mr. Chairman, with no fee I will be glad to give the hon. member the names of a couple of places where he can get his grain dried a little less expensively.

Mr. Gleave: I would not expect the minister to charge a fee. What I want is information.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I have two questions to put to the minister. He may have answered the first which relates to the one clause in the bill and its reference to advances. I do not know whether these circumstances will ever arise, but where a farmer has had a $6,000 advance and then applies for the maximum advance for drying wheat, would this prohibit him from receiving the $600 since he has already received the maximum of $6,000? Is the one provision contrary to the other?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): A farmer who has obtained the maximum of $6,000, or indeed any farmer who is in any position regarding applications under the existing act, will be able to obtain an additional $600 under this bill regardless of his delivery position.

Mr. McIntosh: My second question is with regard to wheat that has actually been spoiled during the drying process. I believe the Wheat Board sends out instructions to operators on how to dry wheat, at what temperature and so on. I understand that in some cases the heat has perhaps been excessive and grain has been spoilled. In such cases farmers have refused to pay the operators of the drying equipment for drying their wheat. In addition, farmers have had to take a lower grade for their wheat because their wheat was spoiled in the drying process. It has gone down from No. 2 or No. 3 grade to feed grade, and as the minister knows this is a great loss. What happens in cases like this? Will there be any court cases, and who is responsible?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I am sure that as far as the farmer satisfying the provisions of the bill to qualify for the advance is concerned, no difficulties will arise. I will not comment on the position as between the farmer and the person who dries his grain.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, may I go back to the minister's answer about the repayment of the advance and the fact that the act now says farmers may go till the end of December in the ensuing crop year in making repayments. Am I correct in the event of a farmer taking the full advance—to take a hypothetical case, $6,600—and having delivered all the wheat required under his quota until the end of December but having failed to haul sufficient to repay the entire advance, this would mean that in order not to be in default he would have to take out another advance to repay the old one?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): No. That situation, as the hon. member put it, would not arise until December 31 at the earliest.

Mr. Benjamin: That is what I meant.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): If by December 31 the farmer's grain deliveries had not repaid the earlier advance, he would then be in the position that, unless the Wheat Board exercised its discretion in his favour, he would have to take out an advance to cover the previous advance or he would be in default. This is a matter within the administration of the Wheat Board at that point, and it is really only at that point that this position would arise.

Mr. Horner: May I quickly ask another question. The minister will correct me if I am wrong, but if a farmer has already dried his grain and has taken out the $6,000 cash advance, if he has sufficient grain can he still take out the $600 even though the grain may well have been dried?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): He may. However, there is one limitation to this and that is that if he has already delivered all of this dried grain then, according to the act, he would not be able to get an advance on it.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Mr. Horner: According to the bill it is provided at the top of page 2 that only grain that is damp and on the farms will qualify. It does not imply that if the grain is already dry the farmer can still get the advance.

Clause agreed to.

• (6:00 p.m.)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, may I raise a matter before you ask the committee to deal with the preamble and title of the bill. I am still very much concerned about the position at the end of December of the farmer who takes out a cash advance. If he is in default with respect to any repayment he is accountable to the board. It seems to me that many thousands of farmers might be in that position at the end of December and, frankly, I do not see how the board could administer such a great volume of cases. I hope there will be unanimous consent for Your Honour not to see the clock in order that we may finish this bill. I wish to move an amendment which will deal with the matter I have raised. I hope the minister will permit it to pass. I move:

That Bill C-162 be amended by adding thereto the following new clause 2:

"2. Paragraph (c) of subsection 1 of section 13 of the said Act is amended by substituting the word "March" for the word "December" in the first line thereof.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment does not carry. I regret the hon. member found it necessary to move it. The administration of the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act has been marked with tremendous success over the years and the rate of default under the act has been very low. If the hon. member's amendment were adopted and the date changed to March from December, serious inconvenience would be felt by many in an ordinary year. The law adequately covers the situation at present. The Wheat Board has over-all discretion in the matter of payments. The provisions of the act do not allow the Wheat Board to recognize any default in payments until December 31 of any year. The proviso, of course, is that farmers are making appropriate deliveries. After December 31, of course, although the Wheat Board has the right to proclaim that a default exists it would not do so in a year like the present one, especially since parliament has permitted farmers an additional $600 advance. The board would not institute default procedures unnecessarily. In fact, it would be most difficult for it to do so under the present circumstances. One could expect the board to display a generous attitude in present circumstances. I hope the amendment does not carry since the law at present is perfectly adequate to meet existing circumstances.

Mr. Benjamin: May I point out to the minister that the present act, from my reading of it, says that any farmer, even if he did not want to avail himself of a cash advance, damn well has to. That is my interpretation of the legislation although I admit I am not an expert in these matters. If my assumption is incorrect all I can say is that the wording of the bill is not clear. Certainly farmers would find it more convenient to make their payments in March. After all, they would have in their pockets the final payment and would be able to repay existing cash advances without having to avail themselves of additional cash advances. I still think the minister ought to accept the amendment. I can see difficulties facing the Wheat Board in administering cases involving thousands of farmers who have to meet the December deadline. Such a backlog might take a long time to clear up.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Benjamin) negatived: Yeas, 13; nays, 24.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall the title carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I would ask one of the ministers of the old guard to confirm that tomorrow we will take the estate tax bill.

Mr. McIlraith: As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, there has been no change from what was announced last night as the business of the house. If there has been, I will advise the hon. member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being six o'clock this house stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 2 p.m.

At 6.05 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

ISSUES TO BE FACED AT FEBRUARY MEETING—TABLING OF FEDERAL PAPERS

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all hon. members know that a second meeting of the federal-provincial constitutional conference will take place next week in Ottawa.

At the first meeting, which was held in February last year, the heads of 11 governments participating in the conference agreed that the revision of the constitution they had undertaken was so important that it had to be attended to on a permanent basis until completion.

Unanimously, the Premiers recognized that, in view of the urgency of the task, the conference should not be adjourned but rather suspended to be resumed periodically. They also agreed that such an important task required the creation of a standing committee of officials who would be entrusted with the heavy responsibility of making investigations and reporting.

Moreover, they agreed that the scope of the undertaking entailed the establishment of a secretariat.

[English]

In February of 1968 there was unanimity in recognizing the perils that were besetting confederation, and in the importance of identifying and offsetting those perils by constitutional means. I have no hesitation in saying, Mr. Speaker, that the importance of this task of constitutional review has not lessened in the past 12 months. Nor do I hesitate to say that in my belief the task is even more urgent now than it was when we began a year ago. It would be folly of the most dangerous sort for us in 1969 to persuade ourselves that the discontent in French Canada which we all recognized in 1968—and the causes of which the first session of the conference dedicated itself to removing—has in any appreciable measure disappeared. It would be hypocritical of us as legislators if we accepted, in the face of the steadily mounting evidence to the contrary in our society, that the individual human being needs no protection of his basic rights against the inroads of governments and the bureaucratic institutions and agencies which governments spawn. It would be an act of irresponsibility if we accepted the simplistic argument that there is nothing wrong with Canada that a revision of revenue sharing would not correct.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Prime Minister Pearson stated last February that at stake in this sweeping process of constitutional review and reform was nothing less than Canada's survival. I would not be candid if I did not say that today, one year later, the stake has not in my opinion changed. Canada's survival remains in issue.

If we are not able to take whatever steps are necessary to provide in this country equality of opportunity to all Canadians—equality which reveals no exceptions based on use of either of the official languages, or on regional economic disparities, or on basic individual freedoms—then we shall have failed. We shall have disappointed the expectations of the Fathers of Confederation. And we shall have disappointed as well the expectations of persons in many other countries who regard Canada as an example of a workable federal system in a co-operating bilingual community.

I believe that we shall not fail. I believe that we are capable of meeting successfully the challenge that faces us, which is no less than a systematic and comprehensive review of the structural framework of our Canadian society.

[Translation]

Such a review involves the establishment of priorities, as well as a selection of means which are necessary, according to the Canadian government, to carry them out. That is the subject of the document "The Constitution and the People of Canada" which sets forth the position of the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to table English and French copies of this document.

Tabling of Government Papers

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I hope I create no security problems for the Prime Minister by thanking him in public for his courtesy in providing me with an advance copy of the document he has just tabled. I appreciate his courtesy.

As the Prime Minister indicated, the document relates to the constitution, as some of us thought it might, and not to fiscal problems or problems of economic disparity which exist with the present constitutional arrangements. Although this booklet envisages a comprehensive review of constitutional problems, the proposals contained in it relate to a limited number of areas. There is a preamble which states purposes. The proposals of the booklet relate also to human rights, Senate reform and Supreme Court reform. Yet there is no specific proposal relating to the division of powers within the country. I presume that while the federal government is prepared to hear discussions on the subject, it is not making any proposals in this regard. Also, no specific proposal is made about any amending formula. The booklet is extensive in scope but nevertheless covers only a fraction of the constitutional problems and questions facing the country. Many of its statements seem to flow from previous statements of positions. There are some statements in it regarding provincial constitutions. The wisdom of putting into writing some of our unwritten conventions is questioned. We must be cautious in approaching this matter.

Perhaps the newest suggestions relate to the Senate and the Supreme Court. These suggestions are most interesting and I expect hon. members of the house and the people of the country will wish to study them carefully.

I do not rise at this time, Mr. Speaker, to emphasize any objections I might have to the proposals before us, or to express any differences of opinion. The document sets forth some limited objectives, and I must make it clear that I join with the Prime Minister in emphasizing the importance of the questions raised in it. It is important that we should succeed in having a constructive conference, one which will enable us to make progress toward strengthening the country. This is a subject of worry and concern, particularly in view of the seemingly small area in which agreement was reached by the officials of the various governments, as disclosed by documents summarizing the conference they held.

So it would be difficult to exaggerate the importance of the outcome of the constitutional conference. I do not expect, and I do not think the people of Canada expect solutions to all our difficulties; but we hope and pray for progress.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I did not rise to criticize or to express any reservations I might have or any differences of opinion that might exist with regard to priorities to be followed. Regardless of whatever difference of opinion there may be concerning these proposals, its great underlying purpose is to strengthen the country. I accept the conference on that basis; we all fervently hope this will be the consequence of its deliberations. I and my colleagues in this party extend our good wishes to the Prime Minister and his associates, as well as to the premiers of the provinces. We hope the conference will be noteworthy for its wisdom, moderation and understanding, indeed for the patriotism of those who participate.

I wish to make a statement which might possibly be misunderstood as implying criticism, but I put it forward after much consideration as a constructive argument. There is a reference in the document tabled by the Prime Minister to the importance of improving the spirit of co-operation between the federal government and the provinces with a view to reaching a genuine solution rather than suffering more from some of the difficulties which have occurred through the years. There is a grave uneasiness, Mr. Speaker, among the provinces regarding the willingness of the federal government to co-operate in solving fiscal and economic problems faced by the provinces.

The Prime Minister has emphasized this will be a constitutional conference, that fiscal and economic matters will be discussed in the constitutional aspects, but not with regard to their workings under the constitution as it exists. If this is the position, then I suggest it is of the utmost importance that the government give firm assurance to the provinces before the conference begins that it is prepared to co-operate fully in trying to reach solutions to problems which exist. The federal government should not merely give an assurance that it is prepared to confer fully and without restriction on these matters at an early date; it must consider taking some definite steps which would generate trust. There should be concrete terms and a genuine desire to consult and co-operate.

This government has proposed two tax measures which have not yet been adopted.

One of these is the estates and gifts tax, which is not a revenue item but is proposed as a measure of reform. This measure is resented by quite a number of provinces because of the lack of consultation, and one can make a good case in suggesting that the provinces ought to have been consulted with regard to this matter. I suggest it would be a concrete indication of the government's desire to co-operate, and might very well substantially improve the circumstances in which the conference meets, if the government were to say they would defer further consideration of this bill until there has been an opportunity for full consultation with the provinces.

I would also suggest that the government give further consideration to permitting the provinces to share in the so-called 2 per cent development tax. This is another source of real irritation. This is another way in which the government could take a concrete step which would give real and convincing evidence of its desire to co-operate in matters which strictly may not be before this conference, and yet may well have a very profound effect upon its success.

I do not put these suggestions forward lightly, Mr. Speaker. I realize that many of the suggestions which I am putting forward involve problems for the federal government, but I do emphasize the immense importance of the success of this conference upon the constitution. I do emphasize the need of the government of Canada to take every reasonable concrete step within its ability to create a belief among the provinces in the desire of the federal government to participate in creating a sense of confidence. I suggest that this is a wise course, and the government should not risk any failure in confidence resulting from a failure to take one or two steps I have suggested.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I also want to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for letting me have a copy of this document, as he did other leaders of other parties in the house. Of course, Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that I wish him and his colleagues and the spokesmen for the provinces the very greatest possible success, in view of the importance of the conference, but I must say that I have some profound doubts about the approach which is revealed in the document the Prime Minister has tabled today.

First it must be noted—and the Prime Minister really recognized this—that it is a sad and disturbing fact that the constitutional conference which opens next Monday will open in a much less hopeful atmosphere than was the case a year ago. It also seems to me, and I am sorry to be driven to this conclusion, that the paper tabled by the Prime Minister, and his comments today, may not help to move the conference forward in a dynamic and fruitful direction.

The responsibility for this worsening situation is probably shared by all governments to some extent, but in my opinion it lies primarily with the federal government for reasons which I will indicate. Mr. Speaker, the document tabled by the Prime Minister, which I have studied very carefully, in my opinion discloses a myopic view of the Canadian problem, and is again an example of the purely legalistic approach which the government takes on so many matters. To me the document discloses a complete disregard for the basic social and economic storms which daily grow in intensity in Canada.

If you look at the paper you will find it deals with the instruments of government, with the Governor General and the cabinet, the House of Commons and the Senate, the Supreme Court of Canada and related matters. It reiterates the federal government's desire for an entrenched Bill of Rights—to which I will come back in a moment—but neither the paper nor, on the whole, the Prime Minister's comments contains any reference of substance to the problems of taxation, of revenues, of economic planning and development, or of the division of powers and responsibilities for the two levels of government.

If I may put it this way, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the provincial leaders come to Ottawa next Monday for bread, and in the spirit of Marie Antoinette the federal government insists that they have cake. No one denies—and I make this comment because I share with others great anxiety about the conference and the future of our country—no one denies the importance of considering the ways in which the instruments of government in Canada must be brought up to date. But instruments of government can be fashioned sensibly only in relation to the functions which they are to perform, and one of the two most important facts facing Canada today is the disarray of our economic and social condition as between the federal government and the provincial governments. The other is the question of language rights.

I suggest that the overwhelming majority of Canadian people are concerned with finding new and relevant ways of meeting pressing social and economic needs, rather than with the structures of institutions, important though they may be. What I wish to emphasize is that the concentration in the paper on the structural framework may meet with indignant resistance from many if not all provincial leaders, and in my opinion such resistance will be justified.

The time has come for placing at the head of the constitutional discussions the role of the spending power of the federal government, the ways in which all provinces can be assisted to meet their pressing obligations to the Canadians within their borders, and the ways in which we can establish a system of comprehensive planning and co-ordination by both levels of government—planning with regard to priorities, tax rates, tax-mix, budgetary changes and even monetary policy. Nor is it reasonable to expect that these subjects can be discussed on a purely theoretical level. The opportunity must be given at the conference next week for a discussion which is relevant to the immediate problems, as well as to future developments.

I suggest that if the Prime Minister continues to insist that the discussion next week must be confined within a legal constitutional framework, the meeting will come up against insuperable difficulties and the responsibility will be primarily his. In order to succeed the conference next week will require effective recognition and meaningful discussion of the basic social and economic problems which bedevil the rich provinces, and frustrate the poor ones.

In one other respect the atmosphere in Canada has suffered some deterioration. A year ago it looked as if the equality of the two official languages in Canada, was on the verge of becoming a fact, as if the fears and objections had been, if not removed at least allayed. This now appears to have been too rash a conclusion. Perhaps the deterioration started with the ill-advised, shortsighted and rather bigoted actions in a few places in the province of Quebec where the language rights of the English speaking minority were seriously challenged. This is a great pity.

I do not see any reason for this development. Every Canadian, who believes as I and many of us do in the value and richness of bilingualism in Canada as well its contribution to Canada's future unity, cannot but deeply regret this retrogression in that great province. But deterioration is by no means limited to the province of Quebec. It is evident in some other provinces as well, and was climaxed by the declaration of the three prairie premiers a few days ago with respect to the official languages bill which is now before parliament. I hope with all my heart the premiers of the prairie provinces will be persuaded at the conference to change their position on this point. It will require an immense effort of patience and understanding, in order to regain the ground lost in this aspect of our Canadian life. One can only hope the effort will be made, not only by the Prime Minister and federal spokesmen but also by many of the provincial leaders, in order that it may succeed.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Finally, on previous occasions spokesmen for our party have made clear our support of the idea of an entrenched bill of rights, including linguistic rights. I want to assure the Prime Minister that our party is firm in its conviction that such a provision in our constitution would enhance liberty and freedom in our Canadian society and deserves the continuous support of all thinking Canadians.

We are engaged in an exercise of monumental importance for the future of the Canadian people. The demand and the need for re-assessing the functions of the two levels of government and for reconstituting the instruments which serve them are recognized by all.

A Prime Minister and a federal government which has a broad and deep vision of the social and economic framework and of the need for fundamental changes can give dynamic leadership to this search. On the other hand, a government which confines itself within arid areas of legalistic argument and a purely structural framework, as unhappily now appears to be the case, can unwittingly shortcircuit an urgent national undertaking. I say these words, critical though they are and are intended to be, because of my anxiety about the present climate and the atmosphere in which the conference will meet, and the arid legalism with which alone the document tabled is filled.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I only had a few minutes before this sitting began to look over this document just handed to us by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). This paper should create an impact and serve as a working instrument during the federal-provincial conference beginning next week.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the federal-provincial conference which took place last year was a preliminary step to the one commencing next week. As a matter of fact, it has been considered by several persons that the first conference cleared the way on the question of bilingualism. I am of the opinion that the results achieved by the conference beginning next Monday will be proportional to the good will of the premiers and officials participating in it.

Like most people, I have noticed that some of the provincial delegates will be attending this conference with the intention of discussing financial priorities rather than the program proposed this afternoon by the Prime Minister.

This attitude leads me to believe that, for the provinces as a whole, the primary objective would rather be one of economics than one of languages or constitution. Therefore, as the working instrument offered by the central government does not, if I am not mistaken, deal at all with monetary or economic objectives, some provinces will be disappointed in the orientation of the talks.

In my estimation, due to the prevailing attitude, the priority objective is indeed of a constitutional nature, that is constitutional reform. However, I would think that efficient measures should be taken in order to achieve the proposed objectives.

On the matter of Confederation, the government is putting forward four objectives. I would like at this time to quote the third one which is as follows:

> To promote national economic, social and cultural development, and the general welfare and equality of opportunity for all Canadians in whatever region they may live, including the opportunity for gainful work—

Mr. Speaker, not only do I think that this objective has not been reached in our 100 years of Confederation, I even believe that we are still very far away from it, since we have now much too many unemployed, much too many Canadians who do not have jobs, or do not enjoy the comfort they are entitled to. Governments who for the last 100 years have followed one another, just as the present government, have denied them that right, and today again, we are making the same proposal, we are trying to reach the same objectives.

What is the government offering by means of this amendment to the Constitution, by this constitutional review? What is it offering in order to reach that objective? I have not seen anything in the document, Mr. Speaker, and if the representatives of the provinces are coming to the conference next week in this state of mind, they will be very disappointed indeed, because the government is not proposing anything to improve the present situation.

I think that this aspect of the constitutional reform was forgotten and that it should be added on the order paper. I hope that the provincial delegates who are crying the loudest for fiscal benefits will at least propose a reform of our monetary system to the federal government, so that it might become what it should be, not a source of revenue to refloat departmental budgets and defray the cost of government administration, but a source of revenue designed to take the money from where it is not needed, when there is a surplus. However, this is not the case right now.

The provincial premiers will be here next week and they will be fighting to find out which level of government will be the first to take from the peoples' pockets the money needed for administrative purposes.

According to me, this is not the purpose of taxation. The government had better offer sources of income to them, which would enable them to administer the provinces, and then establish a taxation system in order to secure surplus money where it can be found, and the provinces should put forward proposals in that connection, since the federal government does not do so.

However, I trust that next week the conference will give all Canadians a glimmer of hope that will enable them to look forward to the days when they will have an equal chance to live, wherever they might choose to settle.

GRAIN

REPORT CONCERNING MOVEMENT TO WEST COAST PORTS

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I had very constructive meetings in Vancouver on Tuesday with all elements of the industry concerned with grain movements. Present at the meeting were officials of the Canadian Wheat Board, members of the grain transportation committee and the producers advisory committee to the Canadian Wheat Board.

With regard to the existing backlog in the grain movement to and from the west coast ports, I wish to report that the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways have given me their firm assurances that the existing backlog, occasioned in particular by the recent severe weather, will be corrected promptly. The elevator companies have assured me that the proper grains, and grades of grain, will be loaded at country points, as has been the case in recent days, in accordance with Canadian Wheat Board instructions, and that box cars will be unloaded without delay at terminal positions.

In private meetings, I was pledged the capacity and the continued co-operation of labour in meeting the challenge of the coming weeks. Given these firm assurances, and with more normal temperatures expected, I am confident that the situation at Vancouver will be corrected promptly. It would be folly of course for me to give an exact date as to when normalcy will return.

The discussions I had in Vancouver were both frank and enlightening. While I do not wish to be specific at this stage, it was conceded during these meetings that mistakes had occurred in recent weeks—mistakes that were extremely difficult to correct rapidly because of the unusually severe weather in January. In order to obtain the full picture of what actually happened, I suggest that hon. members consider hearing representatives of the railways, the elevator companies and the Canadian Wheat Board before the agriculture committee later in March. I consider that, in the interest of the grain producers, the efforts of those responsible in the grain industry should at this stage be directed as a matter of the highest priority to moving grain.

With regard to the demands for a transport controller made by some opposition members, and by premiers of the western provinces as well as by some government supporters, it is the confirmed opinion of everyone concerned—the producer representatives, the Canadian Wheat Board, the elevator companies, the railways and the Board of Grain Commissioners—that the present two co-ordinating committees in Winnipeg and Vancouver are better able to cope with the present situation than would be a transport controller. I am in full agreement with this position.

The situation in Vancouver highlights the importance of the excellent work of the grain transportation committee in the past two and a half years. The committee has fully accepted that in the long run the use of unit trains, larger country elevators and computerized control are essential. The desirable objective is to establish a more efficient grain handling system in the interest of reducing costs to farmers and maximizing export efficiency. The basic research has now been completed and a new shipping order system has been developed. Basically, this system will involve 50 shipping blocks instead of 2,000 individual shipping stations. The first two shipping blocks will go into operation on an experimental basis in February in the Medicine Hat area, and in the Dauphin area in March. If the system works satisfactorily in these two areas, then it will be expanded for the whole of western Canada.

This work must be given the highest priority in order to ensure that we are equipped to take care of unusual demand situations. Many representatives at the first meeting of the Canada Grains Council expressed support for the need to modernize our grain handling system.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I shall be in close touch with the situation in order to ensure that progress is in conformity with the assurances I received in Vancouver.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the house commend the minister for going out to Vancouver, ascertaining the direct cause of the problem and doing whatever he thought would eliminate or alleviate the difficulties the farmers now have to face. We had hoped he would have made this trip at least a month ago or, in fact, two months ago, when we had the first indication that Japan was not satisfied with the grading quality of United States wheat. The warning signs were then issued that trouble would arise in Vancouver because of the congestion that could well develop with regard to the necessity of having dry and high grade wheat there, and also damp grain which had to be dried, which would perhaps result in a lower grade quality wheat being stored.

The minister in his statement suggested that on his trip to Vancouver he ascertained there was an existing backlog of grain. This is an important admission on behalf of the government. Up until now the government has tried to shrug this problem off by saying it was a situation that arose only because of extraordinarily bad weather conditions. The minister also said that mistakes had occurred in recent weeks. We are interested in this admission by the government.

The minister also suggested that the railroad companies had assured him that the difficulty could be resolved, and because of these assurances he felt that the mistakes made in respect of shipping conditions could promptly be corrected. He did not tell us what the causes were and how, all of a sudden, the railroads could assure him that they would improve the situation.

The minister's statement suggests that the railroads have been negligent in the movement of grain up until this time, but they are going to pull up their socks after having talked to him. He did not say this, but he suggested it in his statement. We in this house know the problem that is involved. If there were not enough diesel locomotives with which to move the grain, why did not the government obtain some on a rental basis from the United States?

The minister also suggested that a new shipping order would go into effect, after due consultation with all the people in the grain trade, in an effort to reduce the cost to the farmers. The farmers were not consulted. All the representatives of the grain trade were consulted, except the producers. The producers themselves should have been consulted in this regard. It is suggested that the new shipping order will involve 50 shipping blocks, rather than 2,000 individual shipping stations. The minister's words suggest to me—and we will later examine them closely—the initial breakdown of the quota system, which ensures fair and equal opportunity for all farmers, if the system is properly administered, to deliver their grain.

The minister suggested, also, that the interested parties could be called before the agriculture committee. We commend this suggestion. I am sure the agriculture committee will want to know whether the railroads have been at fault, and why the trouble developed. It will want to know why, if the Wheat Board was at fault, the situation was allowed to develop. The committee will want to know what was the breakdown of communications which created this backlog of grain. We will want to know how the costs to the producer are to be reduced. If 50 shipping blocks are provided, this will in effect make the farmer deliver his grain to a shipping point that is perhaps much farther from the point to which he now has to deliver. This will increase the farmer's cost.

We on this side of the house are concerned about these questions. Surely the farmers should have been consulted before action was taken. The farm unions, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and representatives of the producers should have been consulted about whether a transport controller was really necessary. The minister in his statement said that the situation in Vancouver highlighted the importance of the excellent work of the grains transportation committee, which has been in effect for the past two and a half years. Surely if the grains transportation committee is the solution, with one committee in Winnipeg and one in Vancouver, and the minister saw evidence of excellent work there, there should not have been this backlog. If the minister is right, why has there been this ball-up of grain movement? We on this side of the house are not convinced that a transport controller, with absolute authority for the movement of grain, could not play an effective role in clearing as quickly as possible the backlog of grain that exists and the problems we have at Vancouver.

We are very, very disappointed that the minister did not mention anything about the government picking up the demurrage charges for the grain now at Vancouver. The demurrage charges for the ships waiting there should be picked up by the federal government. The minister said this problem arose because of weather conditions. If it did arise because of weather conditions, surely it was an act of God and the government should help the farmers by at least paying the demurrage charges of the ships at Vancouver. The government should at least pay these charges for the first three months of this year. Surely this is not asking too much of the government. If the government wants hon. members on this side of the house to sincerely believe it is interested in helping the producers, it should do something to alleviate the problem in this regard rather than helping the middleman, because by its action the government is just increasing the problems of the producers.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, it is a good thing the minister finally went west, and saw for himself the situation that we face. I am sorry he has not seen fit to appoint a transport controller, or better still a co-ordinator who will take into consideration the whole movement of grain from the prairies to the west coast. The minister is, in effect, asking us to accept the proposition that the very committees which have failed to deal effectively with the situation in the immediate past are to be depended upon to do so in the immediate future. We are supposed to depend on them to deliver the goods.

Essentially, we are still in the "wait and see" situation which we have experienced since last fall in regard to this problem. We will probably have to "wait and see" for some time yet before we know whether this committee is doing effectively the job it is supposed to do. Our figures show there is less wheat in store on the west coast than there was on January 24. Some 9,300,000 bushels are in store now as compared with about 12 million bushels then. In effect we have failed to keep supplies moving in fast enough to keep pace with the outward movement, let alone build up a reserve of grain so as to take care of sales as they are offered.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Farmers have a right to expect better co-operation from the grain handling companies and from the railways than they have received. We are asked to run our farms efficiently; this is constantly being preached to us. But our being efficient is not much use if services essential to moving the grain break down. We do not ask these companies to serve the industry out of a spirit of charity, or just to be good to us. They make money out of it, just as the farmers hope to do. But in a period of extreme need they have failed to deliver the goods. We all know this is a time of fierce competition for grain sales on the world market, and that this situation is likely to continue.

I am all in favour of the research which is presently being done to discover new systems of moving grain. If the grain companies and the railway companies can work out new methods in co-operation with the Department of Trade and Commerce, more power to them. But I am not satisfied that, up to now, they have made an all-out effort to get the grain in position.

I am pleased to have the assurance of the minister that steps will now be taken to this end. I hope those responsible for moving the grain do not let him down because, if they do, they are letting the farmers down also. What is badly needed is some confidence on the part of the farmer that this job is being properly handled. I will tell the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, that the confidence of the farmers in the government, the grain handling companies and in the railways is at an all-time low. If the people who purchase our grain overseas come to the conclusion that we cannot be relied on to deliver it, we are in bad shape.

I shall be pleased to see representatives of the Canadian Wheat Board and of the grain handling companies appear before the Standing Committee on Agriculture. In fact, I asked that the representatives of the Wheat Board should appear before now, but I was told—and I accepted the statement at the time—that they were too busy to do so. I hope they were too busy. Let us not forget that the first order for wheat for Japan was given away back in November.

In closing I urge that steps be taken to keep a day to day tab on shipping orders out of the elevators, and that a similar day to day check be kept of car loadings and their movement. Remember, it is necessary to unload between 550 and 600 cars a day at the terminals in Vancouver if we are to keep up to our commitments. I see the minister agrees with me.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I admit that the first time this serious question was raised in the house, I found it very difficult to determine who was right, since there were so many different opinions. Today, in the light of the minister's statement, I am sure that a problem existed. However, if one cares to set to work and to devote all one's energies to the task, it is possible to find a solution.

I congratulate the minister for his statement following his trip to western Canada to meet all the organizations interested in the movement of grain to various parts of Canada and also abroad.

Having listened to the encouraging remarks of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), it will be interesting to follow the developments in this matter. I am sure that all members will be much interested in following progress in the next few days, and that grain handling will be done normally, bringing relief not only to the government, but also to grain producers who had to face a very serious problem.

Therefore, I congratulate the minister and I can assure him that the members of the Ralliement Créditiste will always be ready to help find a solution to problems which come under his department.

CANADIAN CURRENCY

EFFIGY OF FORMER PRIME MINISTERS ON BANK NOTES AND COINS

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-168, respecting Canadian currency (Effigy of former Prime Ministers).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): The purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to honour former Prime Ministers of Canada by placing their effigies on the obverse side of our currency. This will also give a character to our currency which is more Canadian.

In introducing this bill I think it is well to mention that there is a precedent for this; the effigy of our first Prime Minister appeared on the obverse side of one of our bank notes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I ask that this measure be referred to the appropriate committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES BEFORE PROCEEDING FURTHER WITH TAXING MEASURE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would consider a suggestion I made a little earlier about the government deferring further action on the bill relating to estate tax and income tax until the provinces have been conferred with and consulted. In view of the importance of the matter, would he give it immediate attention?

I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman also whether he would consider consulting with the premiers about the modification of the position the government has taken with regard to the so-called 2 per cent social development tax and the refusal of the government to share this tax revenue with the provinces.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As to the first suggestion, my comment is, of course, that this proposal was made in the budget by the Minister of Finance last October and that he subsequently invited the provinces to discuss it with him. They have had several months in which to do so, and discussions have taken place. As the house knows, the Minister of Finance modified the proposals slightly in the light of those discussions. We felt this was sufficient consultation. Moreover, we repeat that we intend, when we overhaul in a basic way the tax system of this country, to proceed in the same way or alternatively by submitting a white paper. At that time the provinces will have even more time and more specific invitations to submit their views.

On the second point, about giving the provinces part of the 2 per cent tax, or the totality of the tax as some provinces suggest, my only comment is that if there were agreement by the Leader of the Opposition to the effect that he would not mind if we did not balance our budget, or if he recommended we come out with some other tax of our own for the purpose of balancing the budget, then we might be prepared to consider this. We raise money because we need it; we raise money because we believe that the budget should be balanced; and we raise money because we want to use it for federal purposes. We believe that the country has to have the assurance that the federal government is aiming toward a balanced budget, which it would not be doing if it gave the money produced by its taxes to the provinces.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I ask this question because it too might give some reassurance to the provinces. Is there any possibility that the tax reform measures of the government, the balance of the package that has not yet been disclosed, will be presented in the form of a white paper rather than in the form of a draft bill, as the Minister of Finance indicated previously?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have considered that possibility. Our first indication was that it would be a bill, because we felt that it would be more useful for all concerned to look at the exact measures in a bill, so that their precise effect could be studied. However, if there is sufficient argument made strongly for a white paper, the Minister of Finance has been telling me that he is prepared to consider that alternative if it appears more helpful to the house and the provinces.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE PROPOSALS MADE AT CONFERENCE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, so far as the government's position at the coming federal-provincial conference and what will happen later is concerned: In view of the fact that the government's position has now been made clear in a white paper, or in the document that has been tabled, and that the conference will probably focus attention upon all problems or differences that exist, and in view of the fact that according to the document that has been tabled there are changes purposed that will materially affect parliament's position and its future role, does the government still have insuperable objections to the establishment of a parliamentary committee following the federal-provincial conference to examine and review the proposals that have been made?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker I think the government would be prepared, if the leaders of the various parties agree, to set some time aside in the house, as we offered at the time of the last federal-provincial conference, to debate the results of the conference or the substance of the paper.

On the establishment of a continuing committee to take up the constitutional problem, I do not believe that this government's position has changed from that of Mr. Pearson's government. We still think that such a committee would cause a great deal of delay in the constitutional process. It is already a fairly lengthy and difficult process, with representatives of ten provinces carrying on discussions with representatives of the federal government at the subcommittee level, at the committee level and then at the ministerial level. If all of this would then have to be processed as well through a house committee, especially a committee of the house whose membership might include opposition members who do not agree on what kind of constitution we need, I think an endless amount of time would be taken. I am hoping we will be able to proceed in a more urgent fashion.

However, this does not preclude a clear statement by opposition parties on what they think we should do with the monarchy, or what they think we should do with the executive function, whether we should keep our parliamentary democracy or adopt a congressional system, and so on. All of these views would be extremely helpful, but we think that they could be stated quite clearly in a day or two and not require months and months.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would not the setting up of such a parliamentary committee and having such discussion be quite consistent with the Prime Minister's views which he recently expressed about the desirability of consultation and dialogue, both in this house and throughout the country, on matters of this kind?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, consultation and dialogue on the constitution have been open, I repeat, since last February when the federal-provincial conference on the constitution began. There has been constant consultation and dialogue between the provinces and the federal government through the continuing committee of officials. In our caucus we have constantly encouraged discussion of the constitution, and we have encouraged it in the country every time we have talked about languages and everything else. We hope that the opposition will make up its own mind on what kind of constitution it wants for Canada and will say so clearly.

Mr. Hees: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would not a logical addition to the consultation and dialogue that has been going on be consultation and dialogue within this house among members of parliament in general? Would that not be greatly beneficial to the government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the positions of the federal government, as stated in this paper, have been the object of long discussion within government ranks and within cabinet. All of the aspects of the suggested subjects on the agenda have been the object of dialogue, and we hope that the country will continue this dialogue.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The country will die!

Mr. Trudeau: We do not want the government to be prevented from proceeding because the opposition does not know what kind of constitution it wants.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: I think the Prime Minister can do better than that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—EXCHANGES AMONG BIG POWERS AS TO SETTLEMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to dialogue for a moment with the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he inform the house whether the Canadian government is being kept informed of the exchanges among the big four powers concerning the Middle East situation and the search for a settlement in that area?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think we are being kept fairly well informed.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question. I am glad to hear that. In view of the direct involvement of each of the big four powers in the Middle East situation in ways that I do not need to detail—indeed, it would be out of order to do so—are these four powers keeping in touch with the Secretary General of the United Nations, and are they consulting with the United Nations mediator, Mr. Jarring, or proceeding entirely on their own? If the minister does not happen to have this information now, can he ascertain the position and let us know?

Mr. Sharp: I think I can answer fairly directly, Mr. Speaker. The house may recall that when I made a statement on the executions in Iraq I supported at that time the efforts of the four powers to bring about or to assist in a settlement in the Middle East. I also said that I thought the efforts of Ambassador Jarring, who acts on behalf of the Secretary General, should be supported. In the information that has been given to us about the efforts of the big four in this field, it is clear the big four all support and intend to continue to support the efforts of Ambassador Jarring.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister's idea of a dialogue the same as the Prime Minister's—a long monologue interspersed with short bursts of applause from his docile backbenchers?

IRAQ—REACTION TO CANADIAN GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether the question I directed to him some eight days ago in respect of the communication with the government of Iraq by the Canadian ambassador in regard to those ill-timed and heinous executions has received any reaction from the government of Iraq?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the message from the Canadian government to the Iraq government was delivered and received, but we have had no other reaction.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On what date was it delivered?

Mr. Sharp: I should like to take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker. It was delivered about the time I said it was.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You had better have more dialogue with your ambassadors.

EXPO '67

REQUEST FOR SUBSIDIES FOR "MAN AND HIS WORLD"

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

He sent us this morning a news release which reads in part as follows:

> Mainly thanks to Expo, we have reduced by half our total deficit which now stands at $543 million,

In view of the help given by Expo, would the minister be willing to loosen the strings of the purse of the Department of Finance to save "Man and his World"?

Mr. Speaker: Once again, I feel the hon. member is repeating a question which has been put several times. On the other hand, in view of the importance of the question, the Minister of Finance may want to give a reply.

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend would examine the statement I made last evening, a statement I sent to him and other hon. members, he would also see that our deficit in current account was also decreased during 1968 by another 50 per cent, down to about a quarter of a billion dollars. I think we should all be very proud of that.

With regard to the second part of the question, the government is not, to my knowledge, presently considering further assistance with respect to payments toward Expo, on which the people of Canada spent about $150 million.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Since his return, has he had time to find a formula to keep "Man and His World" operating, or is he content to wait for the city of Montreal or the province of Quebec to take the initiative in this regard?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not had time to do so, but I am under the impression that the chairman of the executive committee of the city of Montreal got in touch with the Prime Minister. I have not yet had time to contact the Prime Minister in this regard.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Can he give us the results of his meeting with the chairman of the executive council of the city of Montreal?

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but exactly the same question was put yesterday.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Can he tell us if there will be a tripartite commission to deal with the management of "Man and His World"?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, again, my position is unchanged. I shall just repeat what I have already said several times.

I doubt whether the city and the people of Montreal, the people of Quebec and Canada in general still have much money for Expo. We are willing to discuss the proposal, if the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal so decide. I am afraid that the financial difficulties of the province of Quebec and of the city of Montreal, as well as our own, would leave very little room for hope to the members of the Ralliement Créditiste. They should know that there are, for our people, other priorities than that of Expo.

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Could not the Prime Minister assure the house that a loan without interest, like that which was recently granted to Brazil, might be managed to save "Man and His World"?

[Mr. Benson.]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

SYMBOLIC PICKETING—FIVE DAY DELIVERY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General about the continuing dispute between his department and the letter carriers over straight-through delivery. Can the minister inform the house whether the letter carriers have advised him of their intention to commence symbolic picketing of post offices in Canada and whether he is again considering altering the date for the introduction of the five-day delivery?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, as soon as the question period is over I am meeting with the national executive of the council of letter carriers. We will explore all relevant questions. I have heard nothing about any picketing, symbolic or otherwise.

Mr. Macquarrie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise the house of the estimated annual dollar savings which will accrue from the obviously contentious straight-through delivery?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for statistical information or for the type of information which I suggest to him cannot be sought at this time.

Mr. Macquarrie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, a very important part of the public service of Canada has threatened industrial action over this matter. I am wondering whether it is not important for us to know the money value of what is involved.

EXPEDITIOUS DELIVERY OF PENSION CHEQUES

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he can give the house the assurance that the pension or any welfare cheques will be received on Friday whenever there is a long week-end.

I am asking this question, Mr. Speaker, because this year there are six months during which the delivery of cheques will be delayed for four days or more.

Mr. Speaker: I have serious doubts whether this is a supplementary question. Would the hon. member for Joliette have a question that would be a legitimate supplementary one?

POSITION RESPECTING ROD SERVICE CONTRACT

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

I should like the Postmaster General to tell the house whether he intends to reassure the employees of Rod Service Limited and whether the contracts between Rod Service Limited and the department will be honoured until March 1970.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the question is under consideration now.

IMMIGRATION

APPEAL BOARD DECISION RESPECTING POLISH SEAMEN

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Manpower and Immigration would inform the house about the decision of the Immigration Appeal Board which last Monday reheard the case of the Polish refugee seamen. Does he intend to review and improve the regulations affecting refugees before ordering them to submit to a special inquiry?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I suggest that since this matter does not involve the responsibilities of the minister the question is out of order. In any event, the answer to it has been made public information through other media.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was one of the hon. members, I believe, who asked questions about the very same matter. He was unhappy when I suggested the question might be delayed to the following day.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if I might answer the question, I think the house will be interested in knowing that the Immigration Appeal Board dismissed the appeal of the nine Polish seamen, and four others. But in the exercise of its authority it ordered the department to allow the seamen to remain in Canada for a two-year period, after which time it will be determined whether they ought to be landed. In the case of two other Polish refugee seamen the board has reserved its decision.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

O.A.S.—POSSIBILITY OF CANADIAN MEMBERSHIP

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I can hardly believe my luck in being recognized, Mr. Speaker. May I direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In his meeting yesterday with Mr. Plaza, the Secretary General of the Organization of American States, did he advise the Secretary General that Canada is considering entry into that organization or in any way moving closer toward that position?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in my conversation with the Secretary General I said what all hon. members of the house know, that we are considering the question and have not yet determined our position.

Mr. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): A supplementary question Mr. Speaker. Will the minister make available the document given to him by Mr. Plaza, which is described as outlining a legal view of how Canada's relations with Cuba would be affected if Canada joined the O.A.S.?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman sent me notice of this question. Perhaps I ought to correct one impression left by the news report. The Secretary General did not give me this memorandum personally; he gave it to the department. I should be very happy to discuss with him whether he would like to have it tabled. Other than that, we are quite willing to do so.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

ARDA—ASSISTANCE IN DRAINAGE PROBLEMS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. A few days ago the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McKinley) and one or two other hon. members asked the minister questions about ARDA grants to be made available in the province of Ontario for purposes of drainage. At that time the minister took the question as notice. Is he now in a position to answer that question?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall saying that I would take this matter into consideration. On the contrary, I think I answered that decisions concerning drainage programs were the responsibility of the province and not of the federal government.

A limited amount of money is earmarked for drainage in our budget. All the commitments of the province will be respected but within our budgetary limitations.

[English]

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to take it from the minister's answer that the federal government does not contribute anything to the province of Ontario at the present time for this purpose?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Of course we are, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

HOUSING

IMPLEMENTATION OF TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister concerned, I shall put my question to the Prime Minister.

Would he tell the house what steps the government intends to take, in co-operation with the provinces, to implement the recommendations contained in the Hellyer report?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the minister concerned was not scheduled to be in the house today. I think that he should be here tomorrow.

[English]

AGRICULTURE

P.E.I.—PHASING OUT OF EXPERIMENTAL FUR FARM

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct this question to the Minister of Agriculture. Does the government have any plans to continue with the work which was carried on at the experimental fur farm in Prince Edward Island, which will soon be phased out?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I will take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker, and give my hon. friend a more detailed answer, although I am sure he is aware that a section of the new facilities on the farm in the Greenbelt will be devoted to research on fur-bearing animals.

THE BUDGET

REQUEST FOR PRESENTATION IN SPRING

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Finance. As the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster would probably say, it is nice to have the minister here on one of his days off.

My question is based on a statement the minister made to the Montreal Bond Traders Association last evening in which he stated that once in a while bond dealers like to have statements as to the government's financial position. Will the minister treat parliament the same way, and will he now assure us there will be a budget presentation this spring?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have neither said there will or will not be a budget this spring. However, I indicated to the house I am quite willing at any time to review the financial position of the government. This is what I told the bond dealers last evening.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PERSONNEL OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who looks too unmolested to remain that way. When may we hope to learn the names of the members of the proposed prices and incomes commission, and the precise terms of reference of that commission?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No decision has been made in that regard, Mr. Speaker. For purposes of the terms of reference I am still consulting with various groups in Canada. On Tuesday next I am having a rather lengthy meeting with some of the officers of the Canadian Labour Congress and meetings with other groups will follow. No decision has yet been made on the membership of the board.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question. Will we have to wait as long for the names of the commissioners as we had to wait for the white paper?

Mr. Basford: I hope not. The Leader of the Opposition had some reservations about the policy when it was initially announced. If he would like to make any suggestions to me as to who should be on the board, I would be open to such suggestions.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): A supplementary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is it the intention of the Minister to establish or set up a research laboratory in connection with his new department?

Mr. Basford: Not precisely, Mr. Speaker. The standards division of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce was transferred to me in July. A survey of governmental laboratories available to the department has been made. We feel it would be unnecessary to set up our own specific laboratories. We are concerned, as are all departments of government, with keeping our expenditures as low as possible.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Baldwin: Have you looked at the estimates?

Mr. Hees: That is the humorous side of the news for today.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF RIGHTS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. With regard to the Prime Minister's important statement Tuesday, relating the languages bill to English language rights in Quebec, will he at the first opportunity explain what those rights are and where they are set out?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not quite sure I understand the question, Mr. Speaker. The language rights in Quebec are defined by section 133 of the constitution, and by the laws that the province desires to enact under that constitutional provision. It is, of course a question of law.

Mr. Speaker: I was going to suggest to the hon. member that the question as he asked it seems to be very wide in scope. He is asking for a constitutional interpretation. I have the impression this is a debate which will take place at the constitutional conference and I do not think this should be entered into at this time.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I thank the Prime Minister for his reply, and I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the government studying the St. Laurent amendment of 1949, embodied in section 91(1) of the B.N.A. Act, which prohibits parliament from legislating language rights?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In answer to another hon. member of the Conservative Party the other day I referred to section 91(1). There are many aspects of language bills, Mr. Speaker. They also come under property and civil rights. The right to contract in one language or another can, for example, be determined by the province.

DIGBY-SAINT JOHN FERRY TERMINALS

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. In view of the good news regarding the Digby-Saint John Ferry, will he make an announcement to the house soon in connection with the construction of terminals?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it would be our hope that we shall have the terminals and approaches ready when the ship is ready. I made that statement in Saint John the other day.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has there been a firm agreement signed between the government and the company on the arrangements for the terminal facilities? If so, will the minister table that agreement?

Mr. Laing (Vancouver South): I do not think that agreement is a responsibility of my department.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. As a result of the minister's visit to Saint John, is he planning for a greater percentage of his departmental expenditures in the maritime provinces, in view of the fact that central Canada got everything this year?

IMMIGRATION

APPEAL BOARD HEARINGS IN TORONTO

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that an Immigration Appeal Board has been set up in Montreal, does the minister intend to set up an Immigration Appeal Board in Toronto in order to save appellants time and expense?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The board is setting up a pilot project, Mr. Speaker, based in Montreal. A separate board has not been set up there. The question of a similar project in Toronto will be given consideration in the future.

GRAIN

INCREASED SHIPMENTS THROUGH WEST COAST PORTS—QUOTAS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Following his optimistic pep-up statement of a little while ago, so the western farmers will have some idea as to what they may expect can he tell the house what is the projected increase in the number of bushels exported through the Pacific coast ports that now can be expected, in view of the changes which have been made? Second, what hope is there of an increase in the quota for the various parts of western Canada? They are operating under very low quotas with the result that the farmers' credit facilities have almost been exhausted.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): If I could answer the first question, Mr. Speaker, I would be God. I cannot give an answer because, as the right hon. gentlemen knows, there are constant negotiations between the Wheat Board and foreign importers. I cannot say what the exports will be from west coast ports. With respect to the quota, the chief commissioner of the Wheat Board has said that he hopes to make it a six-bushel quota in due course.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have never ascribed the powers or authority of the Deity to the hon. gentleman, and I want that to be perfectly clear. But with the return to reasonable normalcy in climatic conditions surely there must be some expectation of what the increase in exports will be during the next month or so over what they have been during the last two months? I know the minister has figures on that.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have the figures comparing last year with this year. They show for all wheat grades up to January 21 this year 152 million bushels compared with 125 million bushels last year, and with respect to all grains 178 million bushels this year up to January 21 as opposed to 158 million bushels last year.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Are those figures for exports by way of the Pacific coast?

Mr. Trudeau: It does not matter as long we sell it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Surely the minister knows the figures for the west coast?

Mr. Pepin: I would like to be generous—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the minister resume his seat. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants.

[Later:]

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, may I make a clear supplementary statement in answer to the right hon. member for Prince Albert, because I know he is impatient to know the figures. The figures for exports last year were about 355 million bushels. The chief commissioner of the Wheat Board has said in recent days that he hopes to do as well this year and possibly go up to 350 million bushels, but I have not got exact figures for the west coast. I will get them for tomorrow.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REMARKS BY FERNAND GUERARD ON JOINT BROADCAST

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State, of which I gave the hon. gentleman notice. It has urgency because of the meeting next Monday of the broadcasting committee in Montreal with employees of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Would the Parliamentary Secretary use his good offices to help the members of that committee by speeding up the return to Order No. 66 made by this house on January 29 and set forth at page 636 of Votes and Proceedings?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to do that. It is being translated so that the hon. member will get it in both official languages at once. I hope it will be ready tomorrow.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

DIRECTIVE RESPECTING CHANGES OF ADDRESS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General. Could he tell the House whether he has instructed postal staff across Canada not to waste time trying to find new addresses for people who have moved and, if so, would he say what advance notice the public had of this new directive?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR REDUCED INTEREST RATES

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Could he tell the house whether the government intends to decrease taxes on building materials and the interest rates on mortgages for residential housing in order to comply with the recommendations contained in the Hellyer report?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, unless I misunderstood the question, I believe I answered it a day or two ago, but if I have misunderstood it I will get supplementary information for the hon. member tomorrow.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, if I may I would like to make the weekly statement on business for the next week. Tomorrow, Friday, we will commence with the report stage of the bill to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, item No. 30 on the Order Paper, to be followed by continuation of second reading on item No. 23, the bill to amend the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act. We will follow that with item No. 27, the Precious Metals Marking Act, which is at the report stage. If we complete those stages tomorrow we will then turn to Bill C-154, item No. 18, with respect to pesticides.

On Monday it would be our intention to call for third reading of the Precious Metals

Marking Act, assuming that the report stage has been adopted on Friday and then, on the same basis, the third reading of the bill dealing with the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. We would then call second reading of the bill to amend the Export and Import Permits Act, which is item No. 49, and thereafter third reading of items Nos. 33 and 41 respectively concerning the Aeronautics Act and the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

On Tuesday, as I have already indicated, we would call again the motion for second reading of the omnibus Criminal Code bill on the understanding that if all those who wish to speak do so before the close of the sitting that day the debate would be adjourned so that the Minister of Justice, who will be absent next week at the federal-provincial conference could come into the house the following week and, in closing the debate, reply to remarks that have been made.

On Wednesday and Thursday of next week it would be our proposal to call Bills C-154 and C-155, and depending upon the progress of those bills it would be the intention then to call Bill C-151, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, which I understand passed the committee today.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman whether it is quite clear that the omnibus amendments to the Criminal Code will only be called for Tuesday, and that the other items mentioned by the hon. gentleman will be proceeded with on Wednesday and Thursday irrespective of whether the motion for second reading of the Criminal Code bill has been completed on Tuesday?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker. With further consultation it might be possible to call that bill again later in the week, but it is hoped to go ahead with the farm bills on Wednesday.

Mr. Schreyer: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since the President of the Privy Council has given the order of business for the next several days I think it is appropriate to ask the minister what he has in mind to deal with the report of the committee on transportation. That committee presented its second report to the house on December 3 last. More than two months have passed and there has been no motion for concurrence made. Could the minister indicate what will be done in this regard?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may not be aware of the fact that that report has been made the subject matter of a reference to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. It seems appropriate that that committee should arrive at its findings on that particular report before any further action is taken on it.

Mr. Schreyer: Still on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like the minister to indicate how much longer the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections will be studying that report?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot ask this question. He is now dealing with the deliberations of a committee and this cannot be debated.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT AND ESTATE TAX ACT

The house resumed, from Wednesday, February 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson for the second reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole of Bill C-165, to amend the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Saltsman (p. 5191).

Mr. Barney Danson (York-North): Mr. Speaker, I choose to rise in support of this new estate tax legislation because along with my colleagues I have studied its features and consider it not only very good legislation but legislation which reflects the Liberal position in relation to taxation. In doing so it highlights the principal differences between the various political philosophies represented in this house.

An hon. Member: A big "L"?

Mr. Danson: A big "L" which has a small "l" connotation. It is legislation that is a distinct departure and, I believe, an improvement over that which previously existed. The recognition of the equal yet very special status of the widow is important. It recognizes the changing role of women in our society and their fundamental rights. At the same time it recognizes that they are still women, and for that we are truly grateful.

Now for the first time widows will not be faced with agonizing decisions for which they are frequently unprepared or unequipped at a time when they are making, I believe, the most difficult adjustment of their lives.

However, this brings up the possible unwritten gigolo provision in the legislation which makes some of these widows who become heirs to estates particularly susceptible, and we hope some of these estates will not be loved away.

The bill recognizes the importance of education in our society by quite reasonable allowances for children during the period of their education and well into university. This hopefully will prevent the early drop-out of children forced to produce income owing to the loss of the breadwinner in the family. This is particularly important in an age of increasing technological advance when the quality of education is much more important and is becoming even more important than ever before. It further recognizes the special responsibility of families with handicapped children. I think this is one of the matters of particular concern to legislators. In my own range of priorities first consideration must go to the aged and others who cannot look after themselves. This includes the handicapped and those in jails. Second priority must go to the youth. The rest of us in our middle-aged predicament will have problems which must be dealt with, but the first priorities in my view belong in those areas.

Another interesting aspect of this bill is that it meets the problem of a widower who too must make adjustments and provide for his children while he continues to work and while his family is growing up. I think in every respect this is very thoughtful and humane legislation in all its manifestations.

The main criticism of this bill by my Conservative friends is that it will dampen initiative and cause the sale of family farms and businesses while penalizing success, to use the words of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). My N.D.P. friends claim that it does not go far enough as an income leveller. They consider a buck is a buck in the Carter sense, and we have not accepted that.

I suggest that much of the criticism has been without thought or adequate knowledge of the implications of the bill or that it has been tragically irresponsible in creating a totally unwarranted hysteria among segments of society which will be unaffected or minimally affected. I must compliment the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) for mentioning and stressing this in his talk yesterday.

The small farm or small business will almost always be exempt. Those not so small will pay some tax as before. In some cases they will pay a little less and in others a little more depending on the circumstances, but in no case will their situation be so drastically different that it will change the ultimate disposition of the estate.

The demise of the family farm is a matter of serious concern to society, to government and, of course, to the farmers themselves. I submit that this problem exists with or without estate taxes. The prime concern of the farmer, indeed of all businessmen—and the farmer today must operate as a businessman—is that of economics, productivity and profitability. Another major factor in family farming is the willingness or lack of willingness of sons to remain on the farm. More and more farm children are choosing educational pursuits and skills which attract them to other endeavours and regions, particularly urban centres.

This legislation is being used as a smokescreen by some to place the blame for a much larger problem on the shoulders of the government. I hope it might have some beneficial results. Just as the farmer has had to change from the horse to the tractor, just as he has had to become more scientific in his approach to basic farming, the farmer now will have to be more inclined to seek needed professional advice in preparing his estate. He should consult a lawyer, accountant, trust company or even a well qualified life insurance underwriter to determine the structure of his assets in his lifetime and in preparation for his death.

The mortality rate among farmers is the same as for all Canadians, 100 per cent. I think the farmer or small businessman who seeks such advice will be surprised to learn how little, if at all, the new amendments affect him. If they do he has the pay-out period of five years now so that he can plan his pay-back of estate taxes if they are burdensome. Under a special appeal to the minister I am sure that in special circumstances he could have an even longer period.

In so far as penalizing success is concerned I suggest that this reflects a type of thinking that went out the window generations ago. Most of us in our society recognize that those who for a number of reasons are blessed with material success above the norm have an obligation to those less fortunate. Most men of wealth accept also the responsibilities of wealth; if they do not, they should.

If these amendments meant that all wealth was to be completely equalized and if they did not allow for reasonable retention of the main fruits of one's efforts, initiative and entrepreneurship, they would indeed warrant some of the hysterical criticism that the social and economic Neanderthals are hurling, but I suggest there is still a great deal left. I am not at all convinced that substantial inherited wealth is at all desirable for the proper development of one's children. We want to give these children a good start in life, a good education and an opportunity to prosper, but I do not think we necessarily want to give them a future on a silver platter. A sense of values comes into play here. Children today are questioning these values. I suggest to the gentlemen opposite and to my left that their value judgments, if indeed they are judgments at all rather than reflex actions, are far out of tune with our times and with the very children for whom they allege they speak.

This past weekend I had a constituent call me who was very concerned about this bill because he thought his estate was being absolutely devastated. In speaking to the man a little further and finally realizing who he was I found out that his estate consisted of many millions of dollars. The problem was whether he was going to leave $4 million or $5 million, $3 million or $5 million—it really does not matter very much. That man was very concerned about giving his children a good start. I suggest that children with $2 million or $3 million are not getting a bad start. On the other hand, there is the converse; I am not really sure this is a good start for kids.

There is an exception which should interest us as legislators. There is a very interesting tradition of inherited wealth being beneficial. This is in a case where families—the Kennedys perhaps are the best example—have gone into public service and have used that wealth constructively, even ill-gotten wealth, I think, in some cases. I should not mention names of families because some people might think I am singling out the Kennedys or the Rockefellers. But the result of the efforts of these families has been really quite valuable. It is families of this type we should choose to emulate among those who are fortunate enough to inherit such wealth.

There is another important economic factor involved. I refer to the continuation of the family business with family management. In my experience, for every example of successful second or third generation family management of a business there are at least ten examples of failure. Professional management is becoming more essential and this nostalgia for the good old days perpetrates a myth from which, if continued, the industries of this nation could suffer severely.

I do not believe the new estate taxes in themselves will result in additional sales of family businesses. I hope that such businesses will continue to be sold when the next generation does not have the drive, the desire or the skill to ensure their dynamic continuance. There are lots of Canadian dollars looking for investment as indicated in the York University study, but even foreign dollars combined with dynamic management are far preferable to home-grown and inherited mediocrity.

The pay-out period gives opportunity to dispose of the inheritance on a fair basis and make the proper deal that should be made. It will not involve a forced sale because there are many people looking for businesses today.

Then we have this talk about killing initiative. The people who are supposedly affected by the highest rates are generally beyond the stage where money is the sole object. The money, the profitable balance sheet, is the scoreboard of success. These men want the challenge, the accomplishment, even the power, power to be used responsibly, I believe, and for constructive purposes. The men with ideas, the leaders, the entrepreneurs, the men who provide the dynamics of our society and economy have many motivations. Money is only one. After a certain level of accomplishment its value is used only as a measuring stick of success or for achieving greater success. Someone has said that most men are self-made but that only the successful admit it. I am not sure that is always true.

My friends in the N.D.P., I regret, fail to recognize the value of this device and the need for a realistic measurement of accomplishment. They somehow consider profit immoral while the greater immorality is the lack of profit, for it is profit that makes investment possible. It is profit that makes higher wages possible. It is profit that makes research possible, and it is profit that makes taxes possible. It is the misuse of profit or its achievement by improper means which is truly immoral. This immorality is almost as great as the toleration and encouragement of this immorality by others, including government.

This is a most interesting debate because the problems we are talking about are problems of success and of affluence. We have people now with sufficient assets to be concerned about estates, although we find a lot of their concerns are unfounded. How much more fortunate we are to face these problems than problems of the lack of prosperity. Certainly there are areas and pockets which have been shamefully neglected and with which we should be dealing much more vigourously, but in the main we are all living better than ever before.

Our problems are problems of priority in necessities which we considered luxuries a few years ago. Most people today do not face the difficult decision of whether to buy a car but really how expensive a car and, in a growing number of cases, how many cars. Many people are worried about whether to buy a coloured television set or a second black and white set for the recreation room or the bedroom, or a new outboard motor or a skidoo. This does not apply to all our population but to a very large and growing segment of it.

We have so much going for us in this country that we should really be counting our blessings. Certainly we have problems that we must face and tackle vigourously. Some of these will be solved and others will not, and when we solve some then there will be new ones we never expected. The danger is in losing perspective. Some cry gloom and doom whenever we make a progressive step, as we are now in updating and humanizing our estate laws, changes I support with considerable enthusiasm, and it worries me terribly that there is an element of a lunatic fringe which brands it socialist or neo-communistic. Some of my friends opposite are encouraging this hysteria. I am afraid they are backing themselves into a corner from which they may never emerge, but perhaps that is a good thing.

We must have a responsible alternative to the government, but by encouraging this hysteria and this lunatic fringe hon. members do not prove themselves to be a responsible alternative. Instead, they run the risk of losing their credibility. I think this is a pity because one never knows but that in 15 or 20 years the people of Canada might want a change of government. Those who seek to fill the position at that time may well have lost this responsibility. I do not suggest they have done so; I just suggest it is possible.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it has been made pretty clear by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) that we are not dealing here with a revenue measure. This measure is not put forward for the purpose of raising money but as a measure of social and tax reform. The minister told us yesterday that only 5 per cent of the people of Canada would ever pay estate taxes. I do not know whether he intended to suggest that what happens to the other 95 per cent is of little concern—I do not suppose he really meant that—but that was one possible inference to be taken from his attitude.

When the minister put forward his bill in its initial form, which would have meant taxing very small estates, he must have known that it would have affected hundreds of thousands of estates. The minister shakes his head, but considering an estate of $20,000 to $40,000 and the constant deterioration of the value of money, it would have begun to affect a very substantial proportion of the Canadian people.

Mr. Benson: Three thousand estates.

Mr. Stanfield: My friend made his speech and, incidentally, failed to give me some information which I sought.

Mr. Benson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asked yesterday for information which I have asked the department to provide. It has not come to hand but it is on the way along with answers to questions posed by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

Mr. Stanfield: It is surprising to me that the minister would have presented this measure to the house without having this information at his fingertips.

Mr. Benson: I have it in the department.

Mr. Stanfield: There are two or three objectionable features to the bill as it now stands. I admit it is not nearly as bad as when first introduced, but I would have much more respect and confidence if the minister had been prepared to admit that he made some very serious errors in judgment in respect of the first bill introduced. The fact that he introduced a bill with so many grievous and obvious errors, from which he has now retreated, does not give me very much confidence in his judgment to persist in going ahead with the bill as it now stands.

First of all I should like to emphasize that the bill is very objectionable on the basis of federal-provincial relations. I do not refer so much to the bill itself as to the manner in which the minister has proceeded. The government gave the assurance to the premiers of the provinces in regard to any tax measures that it would not necessarily consult them in advance but would at the very minimum make sure there would be a full opportunity to consider them. In this instance no such course was followed. This assurance given by the government of Canada has not been fulfilled. This has provoked a further serious deterioration of federal-provincial relations.

The provinces have a very genuine right to be consulted about a bill such as this. They are concerned about the possible effects of legislation upon rates of growth and incentives in the provinces. They are concerned about social policies affecting the family. I am sure the minister would not assume that he and his colleagues are in any position to be the sole repositories of wisdom respecting social policies relating to families.

Several of the provinces are in the business of collecting succession duties. These changes are bound to cause confusion and difficulty in those provinces. To be frank about it, one would almost wonder whether this procedure on the part of the minister, on top of the hard line he has adopted with the provinces generally, is not deliberately provocative. Certainly it has resulted in confusion. This method of procedure is absolutely inexcusable by any standard one may choose to judge.

Is there any need to proceed with this particular aspect of tax reform without a white paper or the draft bill which the minister promised to present to the whole country before the government proceeded with reform? Such a procedure would give the whole country, provinces and individuals, the opportunity to consider the measures, to criticize them and make suggestions about changes. Was there the slightest possible reason for the minister coming forward with what was certainly originally a half-baked measure introduced as a tax measure before it had been adequately considered?

We continue to hear comments from the other side of the house about participation and discussion; yet the government is constantly producing measures about which there has been no consultation or discussion. These have ranged from measures such as the one before us to the secret abolition of the Atlantic Development Board. This makes a farce of all the assurances about participatory democracy and discussion. This in itself is sufficient reason for the house to throw out this bill—because of the manner in which the Minister of Finance has proceeded, because of the slap in the face he has given the provinces, and because of the damage the bill is doing to federal-provincial relations at a very important time in our history. This example makes some of us at least very sceptical about how much discussion of tax reform there will be when the minister is ready to present his measures for our consideration.

Coming to the taxing aspects of the bill, the so-called reform aspects, I want to make it very clear that the question at issue is not the principle of succession duties. I would be among the first to agree with the Minister of Finance that progressive rates of taxation are perfectly valid and justified and, indeed, required in the field of succession duties. I agree that this is one of the two areas in which progressive taxation is possible. So never mind all these red herrings about abolishing succession duties or talking about how much would be involved in the complete abolition of succession duties. This is not the issue. Let us talk about the issue before the house. It is not a question of whether we should have a progressive rate of taxation. The question is, have we a correct rate of progression or is the proposed rate of progression too heavy within certain categories?

The previous speaker talked about a man worth $4 million or $5 million. We need not worry about that man. The chances are he has such good legal advice that in the end the Minister of Finance will not collect too much in taxes from him anyway. We are not concerned about him, because this bill will not very much alter the effects of taxation upon a man with $4 million or $5 million. But the bill will have a very serious effect on the man in the middle range by virtue of the rates of taxation going up very sharply and reaching the maximum at $300,000 instead of $2 million.

So let us talk straight, Mr. Speaker. Let us not confuse the issue with a lot of pretence that the fate of multimillionaires is at stake. They are not the people about whom we are concerned. They are not the people who will be affected by this bill. In all probability the person who will be affected by the bill is the western farmer whom the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) a few weeks ago was trying to help by providing him with more loan capital. This bill will also adversely affect the moderately small businessman whose role in the economy the government is always so loud in praising. Lord knows, he is having a hard enough time anyway holding out and making his way against the corporate giants who are constantly surrounding and pressing him.

So the question is not the abolition of succession duties. It is not whether we should have progressive rates of taxation. The question is whether the progressive rates proposed in this measure are wise. The provisions of this bill represent a sharp increase in the maximum rates which hits the middle range income people most of all. I suggest the bill is likely to have a substantial effect on the incentive and drive of this kind of man. I believe the hon. member who preceded me would be inclined to agree that this is so. The hon. member was a little confused and perhaps did not realize the effect of this bill on the small man. He was perhaps confused by the telephone call he received about the man who is likely to die with an estate of $4 million or $5 million. He was quite right not to be concerned about him particularly but quite wrong not to be concerned about the man who has built up a small enterprise which will be hard hit in this way.

The Minister of Finance said that the estate of the family farmer who has one son and dies leaving a farm worth $200,000 would be subject to a tax of about $43,000. He said the son should be prepared to take this on as a mortgage. But if that farmer was moving ahead and increasing his capital, as he should have been to improve the operations of the farm, the chances are that the farm is already subject to a substantial mortgage. The minister can make abstractions and quote examples which suit his convenience, but they may be very far from appropriate to the conditions that exist. This bill will mean that if a man spends some years on a farm he will have to make sure that he does not enter into new undertakings which will involve him in substantial debt in relation to his enterprise, because in addition to anything undertaken in this way his son will have to take on a further heavy mortgage in order to meet the increased estate taxes that the minister is trying to impose in this bill.

I would like to know, and we should know for the purpose of this debate, how much money we are talking about. How much does it cost the Department of Finance to grant these exemptions as between husband and wife? The minister came in the house yesterday and built a straw man of $200 million.

We are not talking about $200 million. We are not talking about $100 million. What are we talking about—$10 million, $15 million, $20 million? How can we discuss this measure intelligently when the minister cannot tell us what is involved?

Mr. Benson: I will tell you tomorrow.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the minister says he will tell me tomorrow.

Mr. Benson: Or later this evening, if you stay in the house.

Mr. Stanfield: I am just as capable of staying in the house as my hon. friend. When the Minister of Finance is trying to persuade the house that we should adopt certain tax increases for certain categories of people, I think he should be able to tell us, and it was his duty to tell us long ago, how much money he is talking about. We need to know the amount he is talking about so we can judge whether the risks we are running with regard to the incentives of people, for example, are in any way commensurate with the amount of money involved. Is the Minister of Finance going to endanger the initiative of people in this income or property range?

This bill will possibly have a very profound effect on agriculture and also the more prosperous parts of the country which are moving ahead rapidly. The businessmen in these areas will be adversely affected by the provisions of the bill. Is the minister going to do this for $10 million, $20 million, or something of this sort? Why cannot he tell us? It is all very well if one adopts the position of a socialist economy and takes the attitude that these incentives are not important. That is at least consistent. But if we believe that this kind of drive and energy is important to the maintenance of private enterprise, we have to exercise some care in the degree to which we impose these taxes.

I repeat that we should certainly subject these people to succession duties, we should certainly subject them to progressive rates of taxation, but let us do it in a sensible way. I say again that the Minister of Finance is not hitting the wealthy man, he is not hitting the multimillionaire. He tried to hit the fellow right at the bottom but was scared off and is now hitting the fellow in the middle. He is not doing anything very substantial about the wealthy man. I do not know why we should be asked to grant an unlimited exemption in respect of transfers between husband and wife. Suppose a man has $50 million; why should we be asked to permit him to transfer the whole amount free of tax to his spouse?

I think there is a lot of nonsense in this bill. Incidentally, the bill obviously makes it more difficult for anybody to take reasonable care of an aged parent either during the lifetime of the child or after his or her death. There can be no question about this. The bill makes it much more difficult to meet many of the obligations involved in ordinary family life. That is why I say it is half-baked. Certainly, no reasonable person would criticize the provision for easy transfer to a wife. There is no question about that. The question is whether the other things which have been done have not made it unnecessarily difficult to help other dependants, members of the family, possibly including an aged mother, whether they are not imposing an undue burden not on the wealthy but on the people in the middle.

Now, sir, I would think there are better ways of raising the revenue that is involved. Perhaps that is a foolish thing to say because the minister does not seem to know how much revenue is in fact involved. But I suspect there are better ways of raising this money, possibly by means of some kind of tax on non-essential items of consumption. I agree the bill is not as bad as it was initially and I congratulate the minister on at least backing away from some of the absurdities involved in the original proposal. When it was first put forward in the house he refused to acknowledge the injustice and the confusion he was creating. Somebody, thank God—I do not care who it was—persuaded him that the action he was contemplating was too foolish for even this government to get away with.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I suggested earlier in the day that having regard to the bad feeling which has arisen between the federal government and the provinces as a result of measures such as this, the bill should be deferred at least until there has been further consultation. A reasonable course for the minister to follow would be to incorporate this proposal in his white paper. I suppose the hon. gentleman will tell me he was so anxious to help the wives and the widows that he could not delay things. Well, I have no objection to his going ahead to deal with that aspect, but I believe far more consideration ought to be given to the other questions involved such as the possibility of providing for other members of a family. In addition, much more consideration should be given to means by which the money which the minister is yielding by making these concessions with respect to transfers between husbands and wives can be replaced.

Without taking any more time, Mr. Speaker, I say that the procedure followed by the minister with respect to consultation with the provinces and with the people of Canada was wrong and inexcusable. It involved a breach of an undertaking given specifically to the provinces and generally to the Canadian people that tax reforms would be incorporated in a white paper or in a draft bill. I am glad to note from what was said earlier today that the government appears to be having second thoughts about its position in this regard and will perhaps come forward with a white paper as it was originally supposed to do.

The house is now being asked to deal with a piecemeal, haphazard measure. We shall certainly support the minister in granting reasonable relief to a reasonable extent in connection with transfers between husbands and wives, but we do not wish to be a party to actions which will be detrimental to relations with the provinces, which will perhaps cause damage to an important sector of the economy and place an unjust bill on hundreds or thousands of individual Canadians who find themselves having to accept responsibility as virtually the sole support of a mother or a father.

I think this is a bad bill on a number of counts. I hope the minister can be persuaded, if not by me then by some of his more sensible backbenchers or colleagues, to put the whole thing into cold storage until it has been thought about a little more.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great attention to the right hon. gentleman—

Mr. Stanfield: Not yet.

Mr. Otto: —and to the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I do not intend to review the specific problems they mentioned, but I thought I should answer the question raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) when he asked why a wife should be exempt from tax as this proposal suggests.

I believe the minister has presumed, as we have the right to presume today, that a wife has a very important role to play in the acquisition of an estate. It is not the husband alone who is responsible for its accumulation. Very often today the wife works to help improve her family's position. That is one reason for bringing forward this reform.

For the last three or four months we have been hearing hon. members ask: where are the reform measures which this swinging Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was going to introduce? Where are these reforms?

An hon. Member: A good question.

Mr. Otto: Well, reform means change. But it seems to me that the opposition—and I am not speaking now only about hon. members opposite but also of opposition on this side of the house—tends to say: we want the reforms but don't change this, or don't change that. How can there be reform without change? This is the issue which is involved in the bill before us.

I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that this measure should possibly have been introduced along with other reform measures. I believe Carter was right when he said that if it was intended to introduce a large number of changes, especially in the taxation field, they should all be introduced together, not piece by piece. You see, Mr. Speaker, the people who will be hurt by this bill are not likely to forget it when we introduce another measure later which will be of benefit to them, for example, the single taxation of corporations. On the other hand, members on the other side who are pleased to see the introduction of this bill will condemn us anyway if we remove the burden of double taxation from corporations. All these changes should have been introduced together. Possibly the Leader of the Opposition was right on this point.

However, there is another point to be considered. It is essential that as much time as possible be given to those who are responsible for the planning of estates. The disposal of estates has to be thought out carefully and in advance. Wills have to be made. Notice is now given that when this bill becomes law all those responsible for estates must prepare themselves.

Let me deal with some of the objections raised specifically by the hon. member for Edmonton West. He criticized the bill because it would mean, he said, the dispersion of capital. This argument was based on the presumption that all inherited wealth is immediately invested in corporate or other fields of investment. This is nonsense. Inherited wealth is not, in the main, the source of investment capital. I should like to know where the hon. member got the facts upon which he based his presumption. I do not think that presumption is valid. Nor, as the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) pointed out a little while ago, is the presumption valid that there is something sacred or sanctified about the continuation of family corporations. I think he was accurate when he said that approximately 10 per cent of such corporations are successful and the majority not. It is not likely that we will get succession of ability merely because a son's father had brain and drive. This is not so.

Consider also that when most corporations reach the stage where succession duties become a problem a move is made toward public subscription, at the same time maintaining the power structure within the family unit or among friends. If there is any one thing in Canada that is the cause of inefficiency so far as industrial growth is concerned, it is that we tend too much to keep control of corporations in the hands of family units.

Mr. Porter, in his volume "The Vertical Mosaic", was quite right when he said that it is one of the detriments of Canadian corporate society that about 85 per cent of our wealth is controlled by 190 families. You cannot expect the constant and certain succession of ability merely because the father of the family left sons behind him to run the business. History and experience teach that the opposite is true. Facts from across the border indicate that it is much more advantageous to introduce new blood into a corporation than to keep it in the family. However, I accept the fact that the hon. gentleman was obviously quite successful in the business in which he engaged before becoming Leader of the Opposition and premier of Nova Scotia.

Let me say a word about farms. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) said that in cases where farmers have two or three sons working on the farm to make the enterprise successful who do not have any income of their own, it would be unfair when the father died to expect them to pay succession duties or estate tax. Let me put the proposition another way. What would the hon. gentleman say if I had stated that it would be quite proper, using the same analogy, to allow an executive in a plant to draw an income of, say, $4,000 a year and to receive $200,000 or $300,000 worth of corporation shares tax free when he retired? He would scream blue murder. But the fact is that even though farmers' sons do not draw any income or pay income tax, they are still taxed at the death of their father.

As I have suggested to the minister, I would be in favour of letting beneficiaries amortize their inheritance, if they so chose, over a period of ten years by paying income tax annually and then having a lump sum tax free. But they cannot have it both ways. You cannot put one group of people into one category and, as the minister said, put another group in another category.

Further, the hon. gentleman said that there was something very evil about corporation farms rather than the preservation of family farms. It seems to me there is a place for family farms if people want to continue farming. But many western farmers are not really family farmers as much as men running a business. They have to watch the stock market and feed prices in the same way that other businesses have to watch for certain indicators. Provision should be made in other legislation to give them the same opportunity to receive capital and an adequate supply of labour. But the small family farmer is not going to be hit by this bill. He will not have an estate to worry about. It is the large farmer who runs a big farm as a business who will have to worry, the same as other large businesses; they are both in the same position. I can see no rationalization whatever in putting farmers in a position different from other citizens.

The corporate farm, which was condemned, is not in issue here. However, I submit that in some cases it can be justified. After all, if we are going to consider farming as an industry we have to make it as efficient as possible. If corporation farming is the most efficient way for the industry to operate, then what is wrong with it? If the purpose were to have farms for the exclusive use of large corporations, that would be a different matter. But that is not the purpose. The purpose of farming is to produce the most on the least amount of land in the most efficient way.

Let me now get down to the main issue, which is whether we acknowledge the fact that there is such a thing as inherited privilege and whether we are going to perpetuate it in the face of world opinion and the movement forward. Everyone wants to leave a mark on this earth. It seems that Canadians and Americans especially want to leave something for future generations. But the fact is that future generations do not want it. They want to make a start on an equal basis. They want education, and this we are providing. They want the same chances as other individuals. Certainly I think that the idea of leaving behind some privilege is passé; it is square. It is only our generation, our square generation, that is so concerned about it.

Let me put it another way. If we accept the idea of inherited privilege what, then, is the purpose of the legislation to assist education? If I read it correctly, it seems to me that we have said it is no longer important whether one parent has worked hard, whether he has saved money, whether he has the means to grant the privilege to his children of going to university, and another parent has not. What we have said is that we are going to put both in the same boat. If one student is a good student but does not have wealth behind him, he is put in the position where he can borrow money and also receive an education.

If hon. gentlemen opposite are insistent upon preserving inherited privilege, or if they question, as the Leader of the Opposition did, the rate of estate tax, which is really the same thing, then why should we not say that a man whose great grandfather made a great contribution politically should be entitled to certain privileges? How can you argue inherited privilege in the one case but not in the other?

Mr. Schreyer: He should be appointed to the Senate.

Mr. Otto: Better still, appoint him a member of the House of Commons, if that were possible. This is the issue that is really at hand.

• (4:30 p.m.)

We constantly ask, what incentives drive a man. On the other side of the house it has been and still is presumed that men work hard and suffer ulcers and heart attacks in order to benefit someone after their deaths. I do not think that is so. If Mr. Desmond Morris, the author of "The Naked Ape", is correct in his assertion that we are aggressive creatures who like to swagger and domineer, he lends credence to my argument. I think the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) is on the right track. It is not the prospect of leaving wealth after death that pleases us; it is the prospect of controlling that wealth during our lifetime that drives us. Therefore, by introducing this measure we are in effect saying to the entrepreneur or to the taxpayer: enjoy your life more.

[Mr. Otto.]

Actually we have done away with double taxation in this measure. It is nonsense to say that a man will not try to pile up wealth if he thinks his estate will be taxed after death. People do not quit trying to accumulate wealth because taxes will be levied on their estates. All the evidence contained in psychological journals shows that people pile up wealth because they want to, because they enjoy a certain amount of power, because they want to command others and not because they want to leave money after they are dead.

Frankly, I was rather disappointed that the minister raised the lower limit on estates from $20,000 to $50,000. Still, one must consider that many so-called estates really are not estates. If a man leaves a dwelling unit in a metropolitan area to his wife, that might be considered an estate. Under the old law that estate could have been taxed. Now estates of $50,000 and under will not be taxed. I believe a man could leave a $50,000 house and $50,000 in cash, making $100,000 in all, and that estate would be exempt from estate tax. Certainly $100,000 is a large sum to exempt from estate taxes.

I do not agree with the minister's contention that this measure is really not all that important because it will affect to a measurable extent only 5 per cent of our people. It will affect those 5 per cent among whom are found the entrepreneurs and employers who give work to the other 95 per cent of the population. Stricly speaking, the government will not make money by collecting estate tax on the estates of these people. This measure is being brought in as part of the government's scheme of reform. After all, hon. gentlemen in this house wanted reform. This government was elected to bring in reforms, and this measure is one of those reforms. The purpose of this bill is to bring a greater prospect of equity to our society. If there are to be reforms there must be changes, and one of those changes is embodied in this measure which seeks, as I said, to bring a measure of equity to our society.

Mr. Benson: May I rise on a point of privilege, sir? Earlier this afternoon the Leader of the Opposition was pressing me for a figure. I told him I would provide it as soon as it came down to me from my office. I wish to say that I gave him that figure before he left the house a minute or two ago. It was $45 million.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time firmly convinced that a major battle confronts the agricultural industry with respect to the estate tax proposal the minister brought down last October 22. In kicking off this debate the minister said, "Oh, there has been a lot of misrepresentation." He complained of how everything he said had been distorted. His attitude was that everyone in the country, every tax consultant, farmer and lawyer was wrong and he was right. He reminds me of the lady watching her son, who had just enlisted in the army, marching and saying, "Johnny is in step but everybody else is out of step."

An hon. Member: You should say "Benny".

Mr. Horner: Yes. It should be "Benny is in step and everybody else is out of step."

When I went to the minister's office before the Christmas recess to speak to him about the estate tax he said, "Don't fear, rest easy. I am not as bad as everyone thinks I am. I am not harming the farmers as much as the newspapers say or as much as people think." Well, I am afraid I did not rest easy and the minister did not put my fears at rest with his proposal. I will give my reasons for my attitude in my speech.

I am pleased to understand the N.D.P., position on this legislation. When it was first introduced on October 22 I suspected it was socialist legislation. Now that the N.D.P. has fully adopted its proposals I am convinced it is socialist legislation. This is very interesting because the minister said the government was introducing a new philosophy in legislation. This measure was to remedy some existing injustices and inequalities. He said: "That is all we are doing, just transferring money." It turns out he is transferring $45 million to government coffers. If the present legislation merely seeks to transfer money from one part of the community to another, then clearly it is socialist legislation.

Many Canadians were aware of the Prime Minister's thinking along socialist lines. Many were blinded by his supposed charisma but it did not fool the farmers of western Canada. They have mistrusted socialist ideas and that is why they did not send too many of his party to Ottawa. Certainly their mistrust of the Prime Minister was not misplaced, because his government in fact has introduced socialist legislation. Let us see what the Winnipeg Free Press had to say about this matter:

> The new rates have been described by Saskatchewan's Attorney General Daryl Heald, as confiscation, rather than a tax.

He went on to say that this measure will make it increasingly difficult for a farm to be passed on to a son or daughter. Mr. Runciman, who was appointed president of the new Grains Council, also said that the new tax would make it difficult to pass a farm on to a son or daughter. I could read many quotations supporting this view. The president of the Farmers' Union of Alberta described the tax as vicious in its effect on farmers. Yet to all this the minister says: "They are all wrong; I am the one who is right."

It is interesting to note that the N.D.P. position is that there is no reason why a man should not pay a tax of $43,000 when he inherits a $200,000 estate. Personally I have long been sceptical of socialist principles, and the present legislation is an example of socialist principles being carried into legislation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question? Have we said we are supporting this legislation?

Mr. Horner: Have I misinterpreted? I gathered from remarks made by hon. members belonging to his party that his party generally supports this legislation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the hon. member permit a further question? Is he not aware that we have moved an amendment to the second reading of the bill?

Mr. Horner: I am aware of the amendment. If the hon. member's party does not support this legislation and if I have incorrectly interpreted the attitude of the hon. member's party, I hope that members of that party will correct my impression in speeches yet to be made in this debate.

It has long been my belief that in a free country such as Canada a man should be able to benefit from the fruits of his labour, the education he can acquire and the risks he is prepared to take against the elements of nature, competition or whatever it may be. It is also my belief, as well as the belief of the Conservative party, that in some respects a man should benefit from a thrifty attitude. There is much talk about efficiency. Generally speaking people should benefit from thrift, particularly with regard to the family farm. A farmer should benefit from all the members of the family co-operating. However, this estate tax makes it difficult to achieve any benefit.

It is interesting to note that the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre) had much to say about the tax and how it would apply to farms. I refer to an article in the Calgary Albertan concerning an interview with the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin in which he said this new tax really hits the ranchers. I do quite a bit of farming. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, it hits the farmers too. He said that the average ranch shows an average return on capital invested of 0.85 per cent, and yet the minister wants to take away a lot of that capital.

Farmers throughout western Canada, in fact all across Canada, have worked hard to build up economic units to pass on to the next generation. In his speech the other day the minister said there would be little effect on the farmers. I recommend that the minister read the article which appeared in the Calgary Albertan. I am sure he will find it interesting. The article states:

> I'm worried that the estate tax is going to accelerate the sale of these ranches to foreigners. People just won't have the money to pay the estate taxes. But nobody here will concede this.

The farmer in the just society is the forgotten man, and this has been apparent ever since the difficult fall harvest.

In his opening remarks the Minister of Finance, as reported on page 5181 of Hansard, had this to say:

> During his lifetime the farmer or the small businessman benefits from government programs and from the general well-being of the country—

Is the minister suggesting that, because the farmer benefits from government programs, in the end the government should get all those subsidies back by taking half the farm when the farmer is through with it? Is that the type of Indian-giver he is? I am certain that when previous governments established rates or guarantees for the sale of products of the farmers the government did not expect the money back. The minister went on to say:

> —as much or more so than the salary or wage earner benefits... An estate tax may place a special burden on estates in which the major assets are not liquid. I admit that. But how great is the burden?

The whole point of my speech is how great is the burden. Every farm leader in Canada has said the burden is great, the tax is vicious, it is confiscation, not a tax, it is the ruination of the family farm. Every farm leader across Canada states the burden will be too great, but not the Minister of Finance.

Why will the burden be particularly great at this time? Looking at the agricultural industry we realize that slowly and surely the average age of today's farmer is becoming higher. The approximate age for farmers in Ontario is 60 years; Alberta, approximately 55; Saskatchewan, approximately 58. These farmers are at an age when they are concerned about having their sons or daughters inherit their farms.

Another reason it is too great a burden at this time is the accelerated inflation over the last ten years which has caused the price of farm land and machinery to increase vastly. The government and the Farm Credit Corporation are aware of this. The government set up an inquiry to see whether the prices of farm machinery could be lowered or, if not, kept at the same level. Every year since 1963 there has been a price increase of 4.5 per cent. The government has promoted a sharply inflationary condition. In his speech to the 122nd annual meeting of Canadian life insurance companies, Mr. Graham Towers said he was fearful governments could no longer control their spending. This is apparent in the 10 per cent increase tabled in the government's estimates, which represents a $1.2 billion increase in spending. We are talking about a shift of $45 million.

As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) stated, it is not the wealthy people who will carry the burden. It is in fact a shift from the very wealthy to the middle class people and in particular that group of farmers who have toiled many long hours to build up efficient units. These are the people who will be hurt. The minister admits it is a burden. He calls it a special burden. The minister is not a farmer but he takes it upon himself to say the burden is not too great. He has disregarded farm leaders and practically every farmer in the country. When he stated in his speech that it is not too great a burden, he did not quote any agricultural professors.

The Economic Council of Canada, when tabling its report last fall, stated that the agricultural industry needed more capital. I say to the Minister of Finance, what will this tax do regarding capital in the agricultural industry? It will take capital out of the industry. The report stated that one of the things drastically needed in the agricultural industry was greater capital because Canada is almost 20 per cent behind the United States. The minister has given no recognition to this fact in his budget or in this bill.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Under the previous provisions of the Estate Tax Act allowance was made for a $10,000 once in a lifetime gift of farm property from one parent to a son. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture sent a telegram to the minister asking that the level of this exemption be raised to $25,000. The minister admits that this tax is a special burden but he does not think it is too great a burden. Surely it would not mean too great a loss of revenue if he increased this figure to at least $30,000. However, the minister blindly closes his eyes and turns his back on the farming community. I suppose he adopts the idea that half the farmers must go and then the government will deal with the remaining half.

In his speech on February 5 the minister said that this legislation would actually cause a reduction in estate tax on farms worth up to $160,000. The minister circulated his own tables to show the amount of tax involved. Those tables show the third way in which estates are generally willed, especially farm estates. An estate is left in trust with the income to the widow during her lifetime and the assets divided equally among the children on her death.

The tax on a $80,000 estate if a family had one child used to be $2,600. Now it will be $8,700, a marked increase. On a $150,000 estate the tax will now be $26,700.

Mr. Roberts: Will the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Horner: How much time have I?

An hon. Member: Forty minutes.

Mr. Horner: Very well.

Mr. Roberts: Would the hon. member like to give the tax figure on that same size of estate if the estate if left half to one child and half to the widow?

Mr. Horner: I will deal with that later.

Mr. Roberts: It is zero.

Mr. Horner: Please let me deal with that in my own time. Let us look at an estate of $150,000. Under this bill the tax will be $26,700. Under the old provisions it was $6,800. There is a marked increase. Surely the minister cannot pull the wool over the eyes of members of the House of Commons as he has attempted to pull the wool over the eyes of all the farm leaders and farm spokesmen. Surely he cannot pull the wool over the eyes of the hon. member for Coast-Chilcotin and over the eyes of other hon. members from rural areas.

Let us now take a look at Part IV covering estates left outright, with one half to the widow and one half divided equally amongst the children. Therein lies the difference. The government is actually taxing only half the estate at this time and naturally the rate is lower.

Mr. Benson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend would not want to be wrong. The tax figures quoted in all these examples are the complete tax after both persons have died and the estate is moved on to the children.

Mr. Horner: The minister is making a very interesting statement and it will bear close examination.

Mr. Danson: Will yours?

Mr. Horner: I hear the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) making some comment. In his speech he suggested that all farmers should see a lawyer, a tax consultant, an insurance adjuster or someone like that. Certainly, because he is in the legal profession. So is the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Danson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I really must have this straightened out. I am not a lawyer and I would like the record to be clear.

Mr. Benson: Neither am I.

Mr. Horner: The hon. member is not a lawyer but he is certainly soliciting business for the lawyers. If the estate tax is not high enough on farmers at the time of their death he wants to herd them together and clip them when they are still alive. Farmers cannot afford any more taxes.

The minister suggests that the provision in Part IV is the total tax on the total estate. Then why is he so concerned about not increasing the exemption to farmers? Why is he so concerned about the special burden? Why does he admit it places a special burden on liquid assets? It is interesting to note the minister's interest in the agricultural industry, but his disregard for it is also very evident.

In his speech the minister said that 95 per cent of the people escape paying estate tax altogether, that in fact all the estate tax collected is paid by 5 per cent of the people, and that half of the amount collected in estate taxes is collected from estates of $500,000 or more. This is the way it has been up until this time.

Mr. Benson: No, the way it will be.

Mr. Horner: That is the way it will be. Well, that is a very debatable figure. If the minister had a record of being in any way correct in his forecasting one could perhaps put more faith in him, but as his record has not been too good in that regard one can hardly blame the farmers for paying very little attention to his forecast.

Dealing with estates worth $500,000 I point out that there are many farms and ranches in western Canada worth that amount, in fact, nearly 50 per cent of the farms and ranches in western Canada. In his opening statement the minister said that the maximum estate tax rate would be reduced from 54 per cent to 50 per cent, but he is lowering the amount of the estate to which the 50 per cent rate will apply. The maximum rate used to apply to an estate worth $1,500,000 or more. Now it will apply to estates of $300,000. I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Consumer Affairs—establishment of joint committee on price stability; the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott)—Transport—leasing of water lots on canal systems; the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter)—Housing—removal of tax on building materials.

It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills, public bills.

[Mr. Horner.]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

UNIDENTIFIED FLYING OBJECTS

SIGHTING BY MR. STEVE MICHALAK IN 1967

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster) moved:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all letters, reports, studies or other data in respect to an exchange by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Royal Canadian Air Force, the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Geological Survey of Canada and the National Research Council of Canada regarding the sighting in 1967 by Mr. Steve Michalak of an unidentified flying object.

• (5:00 p.m.)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up the time of the house at any great length on the matter referred to in notice of motion No. 19 which asks for an order for a copy of all letters, reports and so on, the details of which you have just read. I do, however, have a few points I should like to put forward. First, there is the failure of the government to table the papers referred to and the significance of that failure as it bears upon the rights of members of parliament in representing the people of Canada. Second, I wish to comment on the present situation in our official dealings in respect of reported sightings of u.f.o.'s or flying saucers.

At the outset may I say that in respect of u.f.o.'s I am an agnostic. I neither believe nor disbelieve; I just do not know. I have no special interest in the matter. Indeed, the first time I heard the term u.f.o. I thought it had to do with the United Farmers of Ontario. So I am by no means a flying saucer devotee.

My reason for bringing up the matter in the first place and later and in asking for the tabling of papers was simply to comply with a request from constituents who, as are many other Canadians, are much interested in what reportedly happened to Mr. Stephen Michalak in eastern Manitoba last May when he was prospecting near Falcon Lake. According to Mr. Michalak, who later published a pamphlet on his experience, about noon that day he saw two oval-shaped objects glowing an intense scarlet approach overhead. While one stopped in mid-air the other landed on a flat rock nearby. After a few moments its companion resumed flight and swiftly disappeared. Overcoming his shock Mr. Michalak approached the landed object. He described the appearance of it in detail. He later touched it and the touch burned his rubber glove.

Mr. Michalak states that the object tilted up and released a sharp beam of heat that scorched his chest. It continued upward and disappeared. Immediately after this Michalak states that he experienced severe headaches and nausea and with difficulty returned to his home in Winnipeg. He later lost weight and developed a rash and other symptoms which were never clearly diagnosed.

It was this reported happening and the interest by my constituents which prompted me to write the National Research Council section which receives or records such sightings. I asked for a report on it. I was told that R.C.M.P., R.C.A.F., Health and Welfare and Geological Survey of Canada reports have been received by the branch, and while these would be made available to me to read if I would go to that office the branch would not agree to table the material.

It seemed to me then and now that this material should be made available to all members of parliament in the usual way so that it could be studied by any interested member. With this in mind, in October, 1968, I asked for the production of papers. When this was refused and the data was not tabled in the house I took the step of transferring the matter for debate.

I believe that in the field of unidentified flying objects the Canadian government does not show enough serious concern. The position of the government agency is exemplified by a statement in a letter to me from the head of the upper atmosphere research section of the radio and electrical division, National Research Council of Canada on September 27, 1968, which reads as follows:

> In March of this year the N.R.C. accepted the responsibility for filing and cataloguing all u.f.o. reports sent to the federal government. We keep these on the non-meteoritic sighting file which is maintained as an auxiliary file to the fireball report file. This office acts as a co-ordinating headquarters, etc... It should be understood that we do not actively solicit non-meteoritic sightings, nor do we in general carry out field work of such sightings unless they show a fairly definite promise of giving useful scientific information—

In other words, there is no real or active interest by this division in the very large and conceivably important area of u.f.o. information. This government agency is out of tune with the desire for more knowledge in this new field by a great many serious-minded North Americans. It is estimated that no less than five million Americans now claim they have seen u.f.o.'s, and the United States government recently received a detailed report by a special body which spent some years and half a million dollars to investigate alleged sightings. The fact that the report was of the opinion, in brief, that there was nothing to the stories and reports of u.f.o. incidents immediately aroused criticism by a number of scientifically oriented groups who are or appear to be very well informed to the contrary.

At any rate, I believe that in Canada we should have a more tangible policy regarding u.f.o. investigations. I think the government should table all information available pro and con about these phenomena. I think we should also consider that our own little earth is now sending out flying objects, and if life exists on other planets the flying objects which the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R. are sending into space may very well appear to that form of life to be unidentified flying objects.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I find the following brief comments by some well informed people of interest: "The existence of these machines is evident and I have accepted them absolutely"—Air Chief Marshal Lord Dowding; "I believe extra-terrestrial intelligences are watching the earth and have been visiting us for millenia in their flying saucers"—Dr. Hermann Oberth, rocket scientist; "I believe in u.f.o.'s"—Knut Hammarskjold, Director General of Internal Air Transport Association; "the hypothesis that these u.f.o.'s are extra-terrestrial surveillance...I regard as most likely"—Dr. James McDonald, physicist; "at first, without any question at all, I thought it was stuff and nonsense, but not any more"—Dr. J. Allen Hynek, astrophysicist.

I have two points. I think the papers should be tabled so that we can all find out what they say, and I believe Canada through its agency in this field should take a more serious interest in establishing the facts.

• (5:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather) has filed a notice of motion transferred for debate in which he asks that an order of the house do issue for all letters, reports, documents, etc. from the R.C.M.P., the R.C.A.F., the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Geological Survey of Canada and the National Research Council concerning a flying saucer or at any rate an unindentified flying object sighted by Steve Michalak who, if I understand well, is a constituent of the hon. member, and we understand his interest for that individual.

The hon. member raised two points, the second of which precisely takes into account the fact that he is not an expert in the matter of flying saucers and I think that I could say so myself.

An hon. Member: You have never been in one?

Mr. Forest: I have never travelled in a flying saucer.

But the hon. member mentioned that he was specially concerned about his constituent, and his intervention was aimed at drawing the government's attention to those who claim having seen flying saucers. He mentioned a report recently published in the United States, which does not give much credit to the statements of alleged witnesses. I do not think the government will establish a royal commission on that matter, but I am sure the Department of National Defence and the Research Council of Canada carry out routine investigations about those who claim having seen, in the skies over Canada, unidentified flying objects.

But I am coming back to his first question, in which he asked that the documents be tabled to enable hon. members to read them and get a clearer picture of the situation.

The hon. member will understand that the government does not have much to conceal on a subject like this. As to the request of the hon. member for the complete file, the latter includes some documents which are marked "confidential", such as advice, opinions or reports which have not usually been made public in the past for obvious reasons. If the government were to divulge publicly these opinions or confidential documents every time it is requested to do so, I would think that the departmental officials concerned would not be very inclined to offer candid opinions or to submit complete reports.

On the other hand, I want to inform the hon. member that I have the complete file containing some reports, including articles which have been published in newspapers by various reporters. It is a complete file from which a few pages have simply been removed. They are interdepartmental reports or others originating from officials who may have expressed opinions which in no way affect the nature of the file and the publication of which would not be in the public interest. Any other procedure would, I think, create a dangerous precedent that would not contribute to the good administration of the country's business and such has been the policy of the present and preceding governments.

If the hon. member is willing to approve this suggestion, we would be ready to table a complete file immediately and hon. members could thus be informed of this interesting question raised by the hon. member for Surrey.

[English]

Mr. Mather: If I am in order, I should like to thank the hon. member for the offer he has made and accept it.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, I am ready to table the report asked for by the hon. member for Surrey, according to the proposal that he has just approved, with the reservation that some confidential documents have been removed from the file.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Under the circumstances, does the hon. member for Surrey wish to withdraw his motion?

Mr. Mather: I do, Mr. Speaker, and I again thank the government for tabling the documents.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): By unanimous consent the motion is withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

LANGUAGE USED IN RENDERING JUDGMENTS

On the order:

Mr. Fortin—That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a return showing, since the Supreme Court of Canada was instituted (a) the number of judgments rendered by judges whose mother tongue was French and, of those, the number of judgments rendered (i) in French (ii) in English (b) of the judgments rendered in English by judges whose mother tongue is French, the number of judgments respecting Quebec (c) the number of judgments rendered in French by judges whose mother tongue is English.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have one remark. It is not, for myself or the government, a matter of taking the hon. member by surprise. I know he is not here. I want to state this: There is absolutely nothing else to add, with regard to this motion, to the statement made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) himself on January 15 last.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The motion stands.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: The motion has not been put.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), who introduced this private bill, as well as the others, items 2 and 4, under the heading Private Bills, is still sick. Therefore, I move that these items be allowed to stand.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILL

BRITISH NORTHWESTERN INSURANCE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, December 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand for the second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of Bill S-9, respecting British Northwestern Insurance Company.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I am sure everyone was taken by surprise at the rapidity with which the government decided to table the papers requested by the motion of my colleague. I am trying to locate the bill now before us.

In looking at the title of this bill one could presume there is very little objection in so far as the actual overt intention is concerned, but once again I suggest that this is the case in relation to many bills that come before us. I am wondering what the purpose is behind this proposed change of name. As I understand the bill it is an act respecting British Northwestern Insurance Company. I begin to wonder why the hon. member opposite introduced it in the house at this time and what might be behind the apparent intent.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I wonder whether changing the name to Eagle Star Insurance Company of Canada—unfortunately I cannot yet pronounce the French name—is required for a specific purpose. It seems to me that if the British Northwestern Insurance Company has been able to carry on a good business with the people of Canada, there is no great advantage in changing the name to Eagle Star Insurance Company. I wonder whether this company has a specific reason for changing its name, and if it has—

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Skoberg: Yes.

Mr. Allmand: The hon. member has wondered out loud about certain things. He has wondered whether the company is going to do this or that. I ask the hon. member if he was present during the three other debates on this bill or whether he has read the explanation, which he will find in Hansard, when the bill was introduced.

Mr. Skoberg: I think I was present during one of the debates on the bill, and I can assure the hon. member that I am quite capable of reading and of realizing exactly what is involved in the interpretation of the bill. I also assure the hon. member that we can understand it. However, there is still doubt in my mind as to the exact intent of the bill. I am sure the intent has not been spelled out in its entirety.

I am amazed that the hon. member would introduce a bill merely to change the name of the company when the purpose and intent of the bill are in some doubt, to say the least. Various reasons have been suggested for the change of name. The committee which studied Bill S-9 asked a number of questions in this respect. We realize that the bill has been dealt with by the other place. The representatives of the company were present at that time, and it would have been better if a more detailed explanation had been given with regard to exactly what is involved in the bill.

I realize that the Superintendent of Insurance dealt at some length with the bill, an act respecting British Northwestern Insurance Company changing the name to Eagle Star Insurance Company of Canada. But it seems to me there are other matters involved than just the change of name. Any time a company comes before the people of Canada through this house to change its name only, I wonder whether there should not be further investigation.

This is a federally incorporated company transacting fire and casualty insurance business in Canada. British Northwestern Insurance Company has transacted this type of business in Canada and there is no reason why it should come before the house to change its name. Obviously it does not need to do this in order to stay in business. The present name of the company must mean something by way of honour and integrity to the public of Canada, and I am sure the people of this country have a justifiable pride in the company.

When one reads the transcript of the evidence given before the committee one realizes that there is reason to ask questions about the company. It is registered under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act. It has operated under its own name and also formerly through two subsidiary companies. It intends to concentrate its efforts in the company mentioned in the bill and wishes to change its name in order to be identified more closely with the group. In my opinion, when you attempt to identify yourself with a particular group it is a straight indication that you are trying to take advantage of that group. There is no reason to change the name of the company because, after all, in most cases the people remain the same. If the people remain the same, the intent and purpose of the company or any other group in society must be the same so far as the public is concerned.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, could I ask a further question of the hon. member?

Mr. Skoberg: Certainly.

Mr. Allmand: The hon. member suggests that there is not much purpose in changing a name if most of the people remain the same. Would he kindly explain why his party changed its name from C.C.F. to New Democratic party five or six years ago, when they are still the same people?

Mr. Peters: That should be good for half an hour.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, I would be only too happy to oblige the hon. member by explaining why the New Democratic party, with its broad base in Canada, adopted that name. I know that other parties have changed their names for specific purposes. If Your Honour would allow me to do so, I could spend perhaps 15 minutes answering the hon. member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. This is not the place to answer such a question.

[Mr. Skoberg.]

Mr. Skoberg: Then I ask the Chair why the question was allowed in the first place. It seems strange—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The question was out of order.

Mr. Skoberg: I am pleased to hear that, Mr. Speaker. I must refer briefly to what the hon. member said about changing names, because I believe this is the basis of the bill before us. Although the name is to be changed, the people in the company remain the same. British Northwestern Insurance Company wishes to change its name without giving any good reason. There seems to be something wrong somewhere in the back rooms of the insurance companies.

One has only to read the evidence given before the committee to realize that a considerable number of questions were asked about the company. One question was whether there now was such an entity as the Eagle Star Insurance Company. The Superintendent of Insurance answered that there was such a British company, the parent of the company we are considering. I am very surprised that the hon. member opposite has not answered this question and settled the doubt in my mind as to the name.

Mr. Allmand: I did, three times.

Mr. Skoberg: The Superintendent of Insurance was asked when the Eagle Star Insurance Company took over this company. The answer was that the Eagle Star Insurance Company owned British Northwestern Insurance Company. If the Eagle Star Insurance Company owned British Northwestern Insurance Company, why did they not use their own name rather than British Northwestern Insurance Company? It appears there is a conspiracy to convince the public that they are different insurance companies, with different policies. Evidence was given before the committee of the other place that Eagle Star Insurance Company owned British Northwestern Insurance Company, and they should have retained their name when this company was incorporated. I can see no useful purpose in having many insurance companies in this country trying to hide under the cloak of the name of a subsidiary company.

• (5:30 p.m.)

That is one of my main points. Too many of these insurance companies are coming here for purposes which one can only guess. We are told that in this case there may be a tendency for the company to transact business which was formerly written by the parent company. The question remains: where does ownership lie. I am sure than an examination of many of the applications which have come before us would show that in many cases ownership rests in the United States, where corporate enterprises have been set up, possibly to avoid some of the inequities of our present taxation system. The bill we were discussing earlier may do something in this direction, though I doubt it. It is my contention that Canadians should concern themselves more directly with the affairs of insurance companies of this type. In this case, it may be that the directors of the company are Canadians, but it is almost impossible to find out where control will ultimately lie, and where the money which is to be syphoned off will be used.

There is another question which arises in my mind in connection with the transfer of policies between companies with different names. How will our senior citizens, who have great faith in the British Northwestern Insurance Company, feel about the change of name to Eagle Star? I believe such a change would have an important psychological effect on a good many people, and this is something to which we should give consideration.

Another question arises in connection with the increase in capitalization for which the company is asking. The explanatory note tells us:

> The purposes of this bill are to change the name of the company to Eagle Star Insurance Company of Canada ... and increase the capital stock of the company from $2,000,000, divided into 50,000 shares of $40 each, to $5,000,000, divided into 125,000 shares of $40 each.

I am sure that when the bill was discussed earlier many hon. members were wondering about the reason behind this wish to increase the capital stock of the company. One fact did come out. We were told that the bill was really for the purpose of incorporating a new insurance company which would conduct all classes of insurance except life insurance. Well, it has been proven that with the number of insurance companies in existence already the general public is getting well fleeced. One can be well assured that the public will certainly pay the large dividends these people expect after changing their name to something else.

There is one other point I should like to raise. As the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) has mentioned, it has been discussed on one or two occasions earlier. It has to do with the nature of the explanatory notes. I do not think they give the house enough information to enable members to know exactly what these companies are asking for, and in my opinion we should be given more informative explanatory notes when we are dealing with subjects of this kind. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully suggest you might recommend something along these lines.

Mr. Allmand: May I put a question to the hon. member? Since he would like fuller information, would he not be willing to allow this bill to go to the committee so that he could examine the officials of the company, put direct questions to them and obtain all the information he wishes?

Mr. Skoberg: I would answer the hon. member's question by indicating how impossible it is for us to attend every committee meeting which is held.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Skoberg: He suggests I should cross-examine the representatives of the insurance company who might be present at committee meetings. I would simply say that if one is to try to do a job in this house one cannot attend every committee meeting which may be held.

An hon. Member: Sickening.

Mr. Skoberg: I hear some hon. members opposite doing a bit of braying. I remind them that they themselves very often do not have time to devote themselves to the work of all these committees. The question brought up by the hon. member—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret that the time allotted to the hon. member has expired.

Mr. Peters: Who is taking time? It is the sponsor of the bill, surely?

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I must say that in spite of the high level of the discussion and the complex nature of the subject under consideration I do not feel that this matter has received the wide range of study that it should. Before we take a serious decision on the question of principle I feel we should spend much more time in the house discussing it. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this bill be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have anxiously awaited the opportunity to speak again on this bill. The fact that an amendment has now been proposed gives me an opportunity to do so. I intend, with your permission, to say a few words on the bill.

An hon. Member: On the amendment, surely.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: I have had the opportunity of being present when this company has come before us on previous occasions. I agree with the hon. member from Oshawa that we do not have sufficient information about this matter to make a decision. I do not know what this company told the sponsor of the bill, but whatever it was he did not communicate to the house the real reason behind this bill.

This company has been incorporated under the laws of Canada for a long time. Amending bills have appeared on several occasions. The first bill is to be found in chapter 70 of the Statutes for 1910. There was an amending bill in 1952 and again in 1958.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe there is a specific amendment before the house, which is that the bill be read six months hence. I submit that any speech must be directed to the amendment and not to second reading of the bill. The hon. member is now making the sort of speech that he has made on three or four other occasions on second readings. I would ask for a ruling on this particular matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I would ask the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) to restrict his remarks to the amendment. I understand he is giving his reasons for postponing second reading of this bill.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, far be it for me to lecture the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), but if he is familiar with the motion he will know it is a negative motion and a killing motion as well. We are not amending the bill in a restricted sense but in a substantive way. In effect, in arguing for a six months hoist I am also saying why I am not in favour of the measure. The hon. member may not agree that this motion should be moved, but I am of the opinion that just because the bill has been before us on a number of occasions dealing with two major specifics, it does not necessarily follow that we have the full story on which to base our decision.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

I have much more information about this company than that which appears in this small summary. In the report of the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada there is information concerning this company that goes back some period of time. There are many reasons why not only this company but a number of other companies as well should be questioned closely. We should consider this matter carefully before changing the structure of this insurance company in particular, and allowing a proliferation of insurance companies in general. These companies are asking not only to change their name but also to change their capitalization.

This company is asking to increase its capital stock from $2 million to $5 million. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace may not be aware, as I am sure other members are, that if this bill and the 20 or 30 other bills which will be presented by other Liberal members are passed we will be taking money out of the Canadian economy. From that part of the economy which is the direct concern of the Canadian government, we will be extracting several hundred million dollars which could otherwise be used to develop the nation.

Mr. Allmand: That is not true.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member says that is not true. Certainly I am not prepared to take his word for it because it would be very difficult to ascertain how much of this money would be directed to the places to which we would like to see it go. I am sure that in a sober moment even the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace would agree with that.

The report on housing has just been presented to us. Instead of taking $3 million out of general circulation and handing it to this insurance company, I think we would do much better to put this sum into housing. We must not forget that this $3 million is only a small part of the accumulated capital amount.

As the company now stands, it has an authorized capital of $2 million. It is now asking for an authorized capital of $5 million. Last year it had assets amounting to $7,347,735. Its total liabilities amounted to $6,133,000.

Last year its total disbursements were $2,500,000. In its surplus account at the end of the year it showed a capital gain of almost $1 million. Therefore, I suggest it would be very hard for the hon. member to claim that this amount would make no difference to the development of the nation.

The representatives of thousands of insurance companies are trotting up and down our streets selling insurance to the same people for identical risks. The hon. member who sponsors the bill says that this does not affect the economy, but it is interesting to note that a colleague of his in a somewhat remote sense, namely, the premier of Saskatchewan, decided not long ago during an election campaign to turn over the government operated insurance plan to free enterprise. Did he do this? No, he did not. He may have decided to raise premiums but he certainly did not drop government controlled insurance because he fully realized that if he did so he would take out of circulation money that would be useful in other fields.

This company probably handles about $200 million every year. If it increased its capitalization two and a half times, this would mean that its potential for doing business would increase two and a half times. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace may have some particular reason for sponsoring this bill or he may not. If he has not, then as a member of this house I say he is a sucker. If he has, then I would like him to explain his involvement. The hon. member may be pushing this bill because in some way it affects his riding; at any rate, he ought to examine what companies like this do in the field of insurance. I know him to be progressive minded.

• (5:50 p.m.)

An hon. Member: He is a rebel.

Mr. Peters: Some may say he is a rebel.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I submit the hon. member is not speaking to the amendment before the house. He is speaking on the motion itself.

Mr. Speaker: It is my understanding that this type of amendment does not preclude the hon. member from speaking to the substance of the bill now before the house. I gather this is the hon. member's second contribution to this bill. At any rate, he has made a minimum of two contributions. He will be limited, firstly, to consideration of matters which are of the essence of the bill before us. Secondly, he should not repeat statements he made in the first instance. I am not suggesting he has done this but those are the two sole limitations he would face at this time. I would not think the amendment before the house now would limit him too seriously in his present contribution to the debate.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I have not looked at what I said on previous occasions when this bill was discussed. If I repeat anything it is accidental. I was saying that the hon. member is progressive minded, although I hesitate to use that term when describing government supporters. Certainly, he has an inquisitive mind as I have noticed in standing committees. No doubt he would be interested in examining financial statements relating to British Northwestern Insurance Company. It might also be wise for hon. members of this house generally to be aware of amounts of money being collected by such companies and being disbursed. The hon. member sponsoring the bill ought to have all pertinent information in his possession. He should know, for instance, whether the premiums collected by the company bear any reasonable relation to claims paid out. I notice, for instance, that for an insured amount of approximately $1,600,000 the company collected premiums of approximately $544,000. I hope my interpretation of the figures is correct. That amount relates only to fire insurance, Mr. Speaker.

I doubt whether the combines investigation branch could determine whether arrangements between insurance companies constitute combines or restraint of trade. I think it is well known that the companies say to each other, "You scratch my back and I will scratch yours; we will see that certain rates are set and that one company does not carry more than a certain share of any risk." It is well known that companies re-insure their risks with other companies, which in turn re-insure still further with other companies. In that way, insurance risks are spread over the entire insurance industry operating in any particular field.

I may favour an amendment, to be moved later, Mr. Speaker, which would have the effect of sending this bill to a standing committee in order that special inquiries could be made about the company. We have placed tremendous reliance in the past on the Superintendent of Insurance. I have listened to him on several occasions in committee and been impressed with the way he answered questions. Sometimes it seemed as if he directed the deliberations of committee members. Indirectly, he has great influence in this house on matters of insurance. I think it would be wise if in some way guidelines could be laid down as to how we ought to deal with companies like the one referred to in this bill. These companies come before the house and ask for an innocent change of name. Yet when one looks into the matter one discovers that the control of the company has changed, the structure of the company has changed, and that really the company is not what it purports to be. Mr. Speaker, these companies are as phony as $3 bills. There is nothing honest about them. They move in a jungle of finance that is above the heads of most hon. members. I admit frankly that I do not understand the workings of that jungle. It might be useful if the activities of this company were studied thoroughly in committee. As I said, when looking into the activities of the company one may well find that an innocent change of name is not all that is involved but that ownership and control of the company has also changed.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) but the hour appointed for consideration of private members' business has now expired. The house will resume its business at eight o'clock p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT AND ESTATE TAX ACT

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson for the second reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole of Bill C-165, to amend the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Saltsman (p.5191).

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock I was dealing with the effects the estate tax will have on what is generally considered to be the family farm or what has now become established in many places in western Canada as a farm of an economical and efficient size.

The minister suggested this tax would be a special burden on the farmer. He justified this by saying farmers have received subsidies from the federal government during the years they operated the farm and it was only fair that this advantage should be equalized with the burden carried by the wage earner by imposing this special tax upon farmers. This change will involve $45 million. The minister stated he was not trying to raise more money by this change, which someone called a philosophical change, but claimed it would apply more fairly to all segments of the industry. If this is true, Mr. Speaker, it is a shame this government feels the farmer must have this special burden placed on him, particularly in the light of the report last fall of the Economic Council of Canada. Their report painted a vivid picture of Canadian agriculture in dire need of more capital. This tax is a direct tax on capital, there is no question about that.

The minister has said the estate tax in the past has brought in $200 million. The proposed changes are an attempt to shift $45 million of that figure to people in different occupations. I would like to ask the minister if these proposed changes will result in a drop in income from $200 million to $190 million?

Is the raising of the exemption from $20,000 to $50,000 going to have any real effect on the income the government receives? Surely, his computers have worked out some estimates as to what change in dollar income this will bring about.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture has suggested the exemption on a once in a lifetime gift of a farm from father to son be increased from $10,000 to $25,000. I have suggested this figure be raised from $10,000 to $30,000. This would not involve many dollars and would lessen the burden the minister has placed on farmers.

The report, "Transfer Taxes: Their Effect on Productivity and Control of our Economy" published for the Ontario Economic Council has some interesting facts with regard to transfer taxes on capital. I quote from page 9 of the report:

> As the economies of large-scale farm operations become more prevalent, and the world demand for food accelerates, are the working capital requirements of our agricultural industry to be compounded by the imposition of substantial transfer taxes on our farms?

This is exactly what the minister is doing. The report also points out that Canada leads 13 countries in the free world in transfer tax on capital. One commodity Canada is short of is capital. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) should realize that this country is basically an importer of capital and therefore we should not have the highest possible taxes on that capital. There is a table on page 11 of the report which vividly illustrates the percentage of revenue which the government receives from transfer taxes. The report also vividly points out there is a direct relationship to economic growth and tax on capital. One example in the report is West Germany. Over the past 20 years this country has had the quickest acceleration of economic growth and the lowest tax on capital, a direct relationship between tax on capital and economic growth of the country.

We in this country complain of foreign ownership and what steps the government could adopt to allow more Canadians to take part in the growth and ownership of this wonderful country of ours.

• (8:10 p.m.)

As the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) pointed out this increase in estate tax will encourage Americans to buy land and businesses in Canada. I will read again from the article quoting the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre):

> I'm worried that the estate tax is going to accelerate the sale of these ranches to foreigners. People just won't have the money to pay the estate taxes.

In a young and vibrant country like this, with all our natural resources and potential, we are taxing capital; yet capital is one of the commodities which we import and for which we pay high prices, first in interest rate and secondly in the loss of Canadian ownership. Canadians all across the country want to own more of the land and participate in the growth of the country.

In today's economy, the farmer works longer hours and receives less pay per hour of labour than workers in any other industry. In days gone by it was often said that a farmer lived poor and died rich. With this increase in estate tax he will continue to live poor, and he will die poor.

It has been said that this bill represents a new philosophy. From whence did the philosophy come? A number of months ago Bruce Hutchison wrote an article in which he said he has known the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for a long time. He wrote that as a young man the Prime Minister was very embarrassed by his riches, by the wealth left to him. Let us give Bruce Hutchison the benefit of the doubt. The Prime Minister is now 50 years old, and he has no children. He has not worked to build up an estate like a farmer with the sweat of his brow, with the use of his muscles, and with backbreaking work over long hours. Why should he be concerned about leaving an estate for anybody? Just think about this.

I know a lot of people are annoyed at the Minister of Finance. But he is a dutiful servant of his Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: Slave.

Mr. Horner: Someone says slave. I do not really think he is a slave because I talked to him about this particular tax and I know he was fully confident in his own mind about it.

Mr. Benson: I still am.

Mr. Horner: He is obeying the wishes of his master.

Mr. Benson: Oh, nonsense.

Mr. Horner: It was his master's mind that devised this cruel, special burden for the farmers across Canada.

Let us examine the farmers' position. Many businesses in our economy can pass on rising costs of labour in the price of their products. A shipbuilder can increase the price of his product. A car manufacturer can increase the price of his product in spite of the automotive pact arrangement made by the government. Nearly every manufacturer in Canada can increase the price of his product to cope with increased labour costs. But a farmer cannot.

A farmer has his wife, sons and daughters pitching in to help make his farm productive. Many hours are spent building up the farmstead, beautifying it, making it more efficient, modernizing it through greater use of electricity and gas. This adds to the efficiency of the unit, but in many cases the wife and the sons do not take any salary for the work they do. Maybe they should. I would not say that they should not, but in many cases a farmer cannot afford to pay them

Let us consider the case of a farmer growing wheat in western Canada. To date, he has not sold any wheat and he has to meet the expenses of a full year's operation. His son is quite prepared to work for the family unit in the hope that someday he will take it over. Under these circumstances perhaps the farmer's son should put a lien on the farm for back wages. When his father dies he could say, "I have worked here for 20 years, so I will make a claim, against my father's estate for $20,000 for back wages." That would be only $1,000 a year. Let us suppose that he claims $2,000 or $3,000 a year, and that the farmer's widow also claims in this way. Many farmers' wives drive trucks hauling wheat to the elevators, and throwing off feed to the cattle in winter time without receiving any pay in the financial sense.

Let us take the case of a farmer with three sons, who spends $20,000 educating two of them, and the third son wants to farm. The father may say, "Well now, I realize you want a farm. You will have this place when I go, and we will buy another quarter section or half section of land with the money I would have spent on your education." Many farmers' sons quit school at Grade 9 and get their basic education on the farm by actually participating in the management and the work of the farm. Should they tack a bill on to the estate for the education they receive?

In many cases the education they receive that way is far better to them than going to university to study agriculture as I did, or going to an agricultural college as I did. They probably learn just as much by taking part in the day to day close supervision of the farm work. The other two sons who got an education carry that education with them. It cannot be taken away from them when their father dies. But the lad for whom the father purchased an additional quarter or half section of land will be hurt by this cruel and, to quote the President of the Farmers' Union in the province of Alberta, vicious tax that the Minister of Finance is imposing.

There is no question in my mind that the agricultural industry today is at a crossroads. The question is whether it is going to continue in existence or whether it will bumble and collapse. I could quote many articles to show the exact position of agriculture in many parts of Canada. For example, some time ago I read that in the province of Quebec ARDA is buying up land and putting farmers on social welfare. Surely, something better than that can be done in this country of ours. Surely, we are not going to force farmers to go on social welfare because of this cruel and vicious tax. Surely, the minister will reconsider and accept the suggestion by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture that the once in a lifetime gift exemption be increased to $25,000 from $10,000. Before this debate concludes, I would like the minister to indicate how much money that would cost.

At the rate members of the government have been spending money I can well understand the minister's great desire to acquire some money. What farmer could afford a $38 waste basket? What farmer could afford to spend $9,000 renovating an office?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there is unanimous agreement—

Mr. Horner: Just for one quick sentence.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, in view of the kind words that the hon. member is delivering, we would be pleased to have him continue and finish.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent of the house to allow the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Horner: I see the house is in a very generous mood tonight. I would be the first to admit that I have taken up my fair share of the time of the house in contributing what little wisdom I have—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: —to the general well-being of the government. But I will assure you, Mr. Speaker, and through you the minister, that I will be brief. We on this side can well understand the government's position that they cannot afford to lose that $200 million because the minister issued the great cry across the land that they want to hold the line on expenditures. We heard that during the last election campaign. The amount of money that would be realized through the estate tax is very very small compared to the total expenditures of the government. It is less than one third of one per cent. As a matter of fact it is less; it is nearly one sixth of one per cent of the total expenditures of the government. Even after the forceful statement that they were going to hold the line on expenditures, those expenditures were increased by $1,200 million. A well known fact was stated in the Globe and Mail a few days ago. I will quote the article of January 31:

> There is no way by which the Government can guarantee that taxes plus borrowing can produce any certain amount of revenue.

Then, the article goes on to suggest the government really does not do much business:

> Although the Government of Canada operates a few enterprises which can be classed as income producing, ranging from Air Canada to Polymer Corp. and the Post Office, its net income from such sources is very small at best. For practical purposes, any money it has to pass out comes either from taxes or from borrowing.

In addition, we had the grave warning of the former governor of the Bank of Canada to the effect that he was afraid the government, in spite of itself, could not hold the line. The farmers can hardly be expected to be convinced that the government really needs this $200 million from the estate tax when they see a gigantic increase in the estimates of $1,200 million at a time when the government says it is holding the line. Can you imagine what the situation would be if it were a period in which they were not concerned about holding the line on government spending. As I was suggesting previously, the government could pay $38 for a waste basket or spend $3,900 in renovating an office. No farmer could afford that nor could he even envisage what a $38 waste basket would look like. Before I complete my term as a member of parliament I intend to visit those offices to see what a $38 waste basket looks like.

This is the type of extravagant expenditure this government makes while at the same time placing a special burden on estates which consist mostly of non-liquid assets. The minister says this burden is not an undue one. Well, as I said in my opening remarks and it is well to repeat it, the minister is like the mother whose son had just joined the army. As he marched by her in a parade, she said, "My Johnny is the only one in step". All the farm leaders say this is a burden. The minister does not know the extent of the burden he has placed on the farmers. I urge him to reconsider. The very least he could do would be to take into consideration one of the recommendations of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture that the $10,000 once a lifetime gift from a farmer to his son be increased at least to $25,000. They are asking for a small thing in respect of an industry which is crying out for more capital and in which capital is very necessary, particularly in light of what this government has done to all farm capital.

This government has increased the interest rate from 5 per cent to nearly 8 per cent and we are told that before long it will be over 8 per cent. I ask the minister to please reconsider that small item of the once in a lifetime gift and show the farmers that he wants to allow them to pass on what they have accumulated through many long hours of hard work late at night. The farmers have worked by the sweat on their brows. I know that last January in Alberta when it was 48 below zero at night and 20 below zero all day very few people were prepared to throw around bales of hay in that kind of weather. Surely, the minister should consider the plight of the farmer. I plead with the minister and if he wants me to get down on bended knees I will do so. I will do anything I can in order to urge the minister to reconsider his position. Surely, it is not too much to ask. I would like him to feed into his computer the question of how much money the proposal would require. It would be an infinitesimal amount compared to the increases in government expenditures in one year. I ask the minister to think about it. We will not hold it against him if he makes one more small change in his budget resolutions.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member who has just spoken that there has been a tendency in the last couple of years at least for the government to be excessive in its administrative procedures and the way in which it goes about decorating its ministerial offices. However, I do not wish to take any time of the house in saying anything more about this since the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) has already made considerable reference to it. I was not aware of the $38 waste baskets, but I do know that in the past couple of years the government has been leasing office space, paying pretty fancy prices for it and allowing it to go unused. Tens of thousands of square feet have been allowed to go unused for months on end. I shall say no more about that, other than to say that the government should take more care in respect of some of the jet set attitudes which prevail in some of the ministerial offices.

I appreciate very much the fact that the minister is patient enough to sit here and listen to some of the comments I shall make with regard to the proposed estate tax legislation. I say this sincerely, because for our part we have some specific criticisms to make and it may well be that the criticisms I will be making will be based on a misinterpretation. If the minister is able to refute these specific criticisms, then we may find ourselves able to support the bill. I hope the minister will be in a position to turn aside what I consider to be some glaring inconsistencies in his proposed estate tax legislation.

I have been intrigued with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) for some time, and I have taken the trouble to look up a number of his old speeches. One speech in particular which I found very interesting was delivered on January 16 to the London West Liberal Association. Surely, the minister recalls this speech very well. After reading this speech, one comes quickly to the conclusion that the minister feels he has been unjustly attacked in respect of estate tax legislation. He went back into history and referred to some rather surprising historical names to support his conclusion. The minister made reference to Julius Augustus, Plato and one or two others. What did the minister say in his speech to the London West Liberal Association? He said it was a solemn obligation on the part of the state to take pains to avoid scheduling taxation which results in extreme wealth on the one hand and poverty on the other. That is a very commendable attitude on the part of the Minister of Finance in our time. One can have no quarrels with that, but I should hope the minister would be a little more successful in translating his high ideals into a form of reality in respect of tax measures.

The minister has failed in certain respects in this bill before us to introduce or maintain equality in the proposed rates of taxation. The minister must be well aware that if there was some consolidated opposition to the proposed changes in estate tax rates it was first of all because he lately proposed to reduce drastically certain exemptions. These reductions would have had the effect of making estates of a rather modest size subject to taxation. He has since conceded that it is necessary, perhaps as a result of representations or pressures, to exempt estates under $50,000 from taxation. Unfortunately, the minister has not followed that idea of making estates under $50,000 exempt in the true sense of the word. While estates of $50,000 or less will not be subject to tax after this latest modification, the minister has distorted if not destroyed any inherent exemption in respect of estates over $50,000 and up to $80,000.

When looking at the tables supplied by the minister, one sees a grave distortion because of the lack of progressiveness in respect of taxes levied on estates of $55,000, $60,000, $65,000, $70,000 and $85,000. I intend to put on the record in a few minutes some figures to show just what the marginal rate and the effective rate of taxation will be on these smaller estates; those over $50,000 but under $100,000.

I do not want to be too critical of the minister in a general way because I do not feel he deserves some of the exaggerated criticisms levelled at him in recent weeks. Perhaps some of the criticism has occurred in this house, but certainly the most abusive and exaggerated criticism has been levelled outside this house. I do not think it is fair to refer to the minister by the nickname "Red Benson". I do not think that is very fair to the Minister of Finance, particularly in view of his rather idealistic notions in respect of taxation. In any event, he is certainly not putting those idealistic notions into effect. He is not proposing anything in this legislation that borders on confiscation.

Perhaps it would be of interest to note a particular passage which the minister quoted from the report of the Ontario committee on taxation which was tabled several months ago. Let me cite the minister's quotation:

> Though differences in wealth will always be with us, extremes of affluence and poverty must be prevented in the interests of a stable society. While other arguments may have been added in the theoretical support of equalitarianism, there is a continuing validity to Plato's warning that the state should avoid riches and poverty—"for the one produces luxury and idleness and revolution, the other revolution and meanness and villainy besides".

I support and agree completely with this idea. That is to say, an extreme of riches produces luxury and idleness and revolution while the other produces revolution, meanness and villainy. The report then states:

> A reasonable tax and wealth is one way of ensuring a proper balance between these two objectives; capital accumulation and control of extremes of wealth.

Having that in mind, and a proper review of taxation in the modern state, one would have hoped the minister might have been a little more careful in setting up estate tax rates. Let me point specifically to a very bad feature or effect of the new estate tax changes. Let us take for example an estate that is left outright to a widow and which, on her death, is divided equally amongst her adult children. In the case of a $60,000 estate, under the new proposal the estate will pay more in estate taxes. In the case of an $80,000 estate left outright to the widow and, on her death, left to one child, under the new proposals the estate will pay more than under the existing estate tax rates. This is based on the $60,000 and $80,000 rates. Let us turn to the effect of the new proposals on an estate left outright to a widow which is left on her death to one child. I have in mind an estate of more than $1 million. In this case, instead of the estate paying more, as in the case of a smaller estate, it will pay less. As a matter of fact, it will pay $85,000 less in taxation. Perhaps I am misinterpretating the minister's tables, but it would appear that on a $1 million estate left to a widow and, on her death, to one child, under the existing taxation system the tax would be in the order of $511,000. Under the new rate it wauld be $434,000. I take that to mean there would be $85,000 less in taxes.

In other words, the tax saving alone on the very large estates will in this instance be more than the entire size of the estate that will be taxed more heavily under the new proposals. So I agree with those members of the Conservative party who have made a point of saying that there is really nothing beneficial under the proposals of the minister in so far as modest sized estates are concerned. Quite frankly, I think that is where our concern should be, for the reason some members of the government party mentioned this afternoon. I still hear ringing in my ears the words spoken this afternoon by the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) and the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto). They both spoke to the same effect, namely, that the leaving of large amounts of capital wealth by one generation to the next is not particularly beneficial to the family line itself, to the inheritor, nor to the country.

I agree with those who state that there is something beneficial, perhaps something nice, if I may use that word, about the idea of one generation giving a helping hand to the generation that comes after it. This we have done in the form of increased educational opportunity, better health service, health care, and so on. I agree also that the idea the state should approve of one generation helping the next generation by monetary assistance, if you like, is laudable and supportable. As far as I know, no one in our group is opposed in principle to the idea that our tax laws should be benign and approve of the leaving of small estates by one generation to the next. But when we are dealing with estates of the order of $500,000, $1 million, $1,500,000 or $2 million, there is nothing beneficial in looking at the problem in the broadest possible way and allowing transfers of huge amounts of wealth from one generation to the next. This in fact helps to accentuate the extremes of wealth and poverty and perpetuates economic injustice.

We in this country have heard a great deal in the last five years about this government's intention to fight a war, a crusade, against poverty. The government cannot seem to find the money with which to wage an effective war against poverty. Let us consider the number of family units in this country that in 1964 were considered to be living below the poverty line and compare this with the number of family units today considered to be living below the poverty line. In 1964, what could be purchased for $3,000 would require today about $3,500. The number of household units, or families, in this country still living below the poverty line is about the same; in other words, there has been no progress whatsoever in our much publicized war against poverty in Canada.

The concern in this respect does not seem to be mounting. Tax legislation is put before us, and suddenly there is great preoccupation and concern about what will happen to those children who will inherit large amounts of money; there is concern that they may have to pay a little more in the way of estate tax. I suggest that between reality and the ideals hon. members have expressed there is a wide gap. That wide gap is not closing when one considers the tax legislation proposed by the minister, because one sees that the very large estates come off best and the smaller estates pay more than is the case under the existing estate tax system.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Schreyer: Yes.

Mr. Benson: I do not wish to interrupt, but I wonder whether the hon. member realizes this: If one looks at the tax rate on $1 million estates about which the hon. member was talking, and assumes that people with $1 million have the best possible tax advice, the minimum amount that can be paid is $305,300, and the amount proposed is $338,400; and from this one could save much by gifting.

Mr. Schreyer: I have already said that in the case of estates which a number of children would be inheriting there is really nothing disproportionate in the minister's schedule. But when one looks at the minister's figures one sees that with respect to an estate under $100,000, certainly under $90,000, which is being left outright to a widow, and on her death to one or two children, more will be paid in the way of tax once the new law comes into effect than is the case at the present time. Once you get over the $100,000 mark with respect to estates being left in a similar way to a widow and one or two children, less tax will be paid. This is the simple fact of the matter, and I cannot understand why the minister would be satisfied to leave it this way.

Surely, there must be some way in which to avoid this glaring lack of proportionality or progressiveness. To realize the inequity that will exist, one has only to compare the tax effect on estates under $100,000 with those over $100,000. The situation gets worse as the value of the estate increases. At the $1 million mark there is, as I have said, a substantial reduction in tax. Would it not have been better to increase the exemption to a basic $50,000 and then to leave the marginal rate of tax on estates over $1 million at 54 per cent as it was, rather than reduce the marginal rate at the top so that the same marginal rate is being applied to inheritors of estates of $300,000 as it is to $1 million estates? They are paying the same marginal rate as those who will inherit estates of $1 million or $2 million. I do not think this is a very equitable way to proceed with what is alleged to be estate tax reform.

I would like to put on the record some figures with regard to the effective rate of taxation on estates of various sizes. Let us compare the old estate tax rates with the new ones. The effective rate on a $55,000 estate, for example, will be 50 per cent under the new proposals. On a $60,000 estate, the effective rate will be 50 per cent. On an $80,000 estate, the effective rate will be 36 per cent. The effective rate decreases gradually. I think it is possible to generalize as follows: With respect to estates valued at less than $90,000 the effective rate according to the new proposals will be 10 to 15 per cent higher than under the existing estate tax system. The effective rate on estates of $500,000, $1 million and $2 million will be less in comparison to the existing rates than is the case with smaller estates.

It is difficult to verbally convey statistical data. I ask the minister to read this document which has been prepared by specialists in analysis. Tax reform in Canada still has a long way to go. It is my opinion that within three or four years the government will implement substantial tax reforms in this country, one of which should include tax on capital. The proposed new rates will reduce initiative and have negative effects on our economy. What is even more destructive of personal initiative is a system which taxes income very highly and does not tax capital gain or inherited wealth. One does not have to ponder too much to reach the conclusion that taxation on wealth or capital is destroying initiative at a time when high rates of taxation on earned income are being levied.

When the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) moved his amendment yesterday it was for the following reasons: The proposed legislations was not designed to produce more revenue than the existing legislation but rather increased the rate of taxation so that it weighed more heavily at the top end of the scale. I have already dealt with the fact the proposed legislation is not progressive enough, Mr. Speaker. Small estates are subject to a higher rate of tax than estates in the bracket of $1 million or more. The proposed legislation is completely inadequate in terms of introducing real equity into the tax structure.

As the minister knows the introductory paragraph of the Carter Commission report stated the tax system in Canada is basically inequitable. This is the sum and substance of the commission's findings. There can be no more damning indictment of a tax system than that it is inequitable. The government has had the time to study the recommendations of the report. What have they brought forward? The Government has introduced Bill C-165, which purports to be more equitable with respect to tax treatment of estates, the transfer of wealth from one generation to another, and for the life of me I cannot see how it can possibly be termed more equitable.

I have already pointed out it is the small, modest estates of between $50,000 and $90,000 that will bear the heaviest burden. In case hon. members have not been impressed by this argument, I refer to the fact that even after the latest modification conceded by the minister in the case of a $60,000 estate left to a widow and one child, the amount of tax paid will increase from $2,600 in actual tax levied to $4,800, almost double. In the case of a widow with two children, the amount will also be increased.

How can the minister possibly say this is a logical, coherent, progressive tax proposal? No one would object to one generation giving a helping hand to the next by building up a modest estate. It is precisely in this case where more tax will be collected. But then, lo and behold, estates of large size, the people who have enjoyed an abundance of opportunity and a concentration of economic power in their hands, when transferred to a widow with one or two children, the tax will be less.

If I am wrong in my interpretation, I would be happy to hear how the minister explains this apparent aberration which appears in this tax bill.

Mr. Stanfield: A good name for that bill, apparent aberration.

Mr. Schreyer: A commendable feature of the bill proposed by the minister is that estates passed to the spouse will not at that point be subject to estate tax. This is fine. We could have had a bill which we would have supported in every sense of the word if only the minister had got rid of those aberrations which have the effect of hitting the smallest estate harder while the very large ones in some instances reduced taxation. The minister has an opportunity to speak on the amendment, and I wish he would exercise that opportunity.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Alastair Gillespie (Etobicoke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer briefly to some of the remarks made by the previous speaker, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer), and his predecessor. The hon. member for Selkirk was speaking in favour of the amendment. It seemed to me that his was a refreshing performance after that of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). At least, it started out that way. It was sensitive at first but then it seemed to me that the hon. member became confused and distorted the record as presented in the schedules from which he read. He also referred to aberrations. I suggest that the aberrations are in his own eye. If he looks at—

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. I did not make any charges or statements that were in any way a deliberate distortion of the minister's own tax schedules. The minister has supplied every member here with a tax schedule showing what will be the effect of these proposals on estates of different sizes, of, in cases where estates are left outright to a widow, or a widow with 1, 2, 3 or 4 children, estates left outright to children, and so on. The hon. member suggested that I had distorted—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a point for debate, not a question of privilege.

Mr. Gillespie: Let me just refer the hon. member for Selkirk to schedule 1A, the last column, item No. 3. Under the present law a $1 million estate left to a widow with one child qualifies for an estate tax of $305,000. Under the proposed law the tax payable is $434,000. That is what I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) was trying to point out to the hon. member opposite who referred to aberrations, and I am suggesting that those aberrations are in his own eye.

I should like to refer to some of the remarks of the hon. member for Crowfoot. I think we were all impressed by the sincerity as well as the volume of his remarks, and indeed by his imagination. If the fields of the farmers on whose behalf he claimed to speak were half as fertile as his mind, our agricultural production would increase tenfold. The hon. member referred with modesty to the little wisdom that he had shown, and also mentioned that he was impressed by wastepaper baskets. As we listened to his remarks we were reminded of exactly the same thing.

In rising to speak on this issue I am conscious that I may cover some of the ground that other members on this side of the house have covered. However, I want to emphasize to all members the social importance and the justice of this proposal that is before us this evening. This measure is going to benefit, in terms of family security, thousands of families across Canada.

This is the first time that we have had an imaginative approach to estate tax. I refer in particular to the tax free transfers during life and at death between spouses, and in particular to the very much larger exemptions for younger children in the form of bequests. I should like to give a couple of instances. By eliminating pensions, a real inequity has been removed from many estates. Under the existing law a survivorship pension in the hands of a widow forms part of the taxable assets of her estate, or more particularly her husband's estate. For example, a widow at age 64 receiving a pension of $250 a month would have that pension valued for estate tax purposes at $32,000, which is a big bite out of the basic exemptions for which a widow would be eligible. A younger woman aged 40 receiving $250 a month would have her pension valued for estate tax purposes at $50,000. Both of these situations will now be eliminated by the bill before us.

I should like to draw the attention of hon. members to the case of the young family of a widow of, for instance, 35 consisting of four children under ten. Under the old act that family would have had up to $100,000 in exemptions,—$60,000 for the widow and $10,000 for each minor. Under the new bill there will be no tax payable on the death of her husband and the transfer of the assets to the wife.

Let me take the case where this same widow might be killed shortly after the death of her husband. Under the old act her estate, which one can presume would have been made out in favour of her children, would have had a basic exemption of $100,000; that is to say, $40,000 general exemption and $15,000 for each child, for a total of $100,000. Under the proposed bill these exemptions rise to $160,000 before any tax is payable; $35,000 for each child and a $20,000 minimum exemption. The amount of $160,000 for a young family which the father has provided through life insurance and other means is not a large estate if the wife has to face the future alone. In short, these changes will help those who are the most vulnerable. I refer to the aged widows and the young families, those who can the least provide for themselves, those who in fact need help.

There have been several forms of criticism and I should like to single out two in particular for comment. In leading off the debate for the opposition the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) said we were taxing success. In his remarks, as reported on page 5183 of Hansard, he said that this estate tax would continue "for generation after generation", as if he had suddenly discovered something new. Those were strange words to come from one who was a member of a previous government that last revised the estate tax legislation. He made several further statements, the import of which were that the estate tax was a new tax that Canadians face. At page 5184 of Hansard he said in so many words what he took the attitude of the government to be. I quote:

'We will tax you because the more you save the more you have, and so the more we will take away from you.'

[Mr. Gillespie.]

That is his idea of the government's attitude. Remarks of this sort seem designed to appeal more to the emotions of men rather than to inform them.

The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) considered this a tax on capital. I say to him, has he better suggestions for raising the revenues needed in the country today?

An hon. Member: But are they needed?

Mr. Gillespie: If he can in some way save or collect $200 million by implementing other measures, let him say so. Let him make suggestions. Of course, Mr. Speaker, the estate tax is a tax on success. How could it be otherwise, and why should it not be? Why should not the strong be taxed rather than the weak? Why should not those who have been fortunate help to pay for those who have not been so fortunate. What is wrong with that? Why should the well off not pay at a time when it is easiest for them to pay, that is, after their families have been provided for and on the death of one of the partners?

The second main criticism I have heard stems from the belief that somehow or other farmers have special claims for better treatment than businessmen ought to receive. I am not persuaded by the arguments of hon. members opposite. It seems to me the small businessman has an equal claim to consideration. The problems of farmers and businessmen are those of liquidity. Those who criticize succession duties imposed upon family businesses passing from one generation to another seem not to have heard of estate planning and seem to have ignored the fact that the minister has provided, as a matter of right, for instalments payments of tax debts over a period of five years.

The drawing of a will is a most solemn and personal matter, probably one of the most solemn and personal things a man has to do during his lifetime if one excludes the marriage contract. For many it is a final accounting. It is their way of saying, "I have totalled it up and this is the way I am going to leave it." So, it is not surprising that there should be thousands of Canadians who are concerned about the effects of these changes. Many of them think they have made a final accounting. They wrote it on a piece of paper and tucked it away in the bottom drawer. But they will have to pull out that piece of paper and obtain advice. For many, this will not be easy; for some it may not be possible.

Mr. Peters: Especially if they have left nothing.

Mr. Gillespie: The minister has recognized some of the difficulties likely to occur. He has provided for executors of estates and for estates generally to choose as a matter of right the most favourable exemption schedules up until July 31 of this year. I shall ask the minister to give further consideration to this area of the matter, since it needs clarifying. There may well be estates that, because of prevailing circumstances, cannot take advantage of existing provisions. I am, of course, referring to the type of situation we have here in Ontario. In Ontario we shall have to wait for the provincial government to amend its succession duty act to make it compatible with the federal Estates Tax Act, so that possible benefits accruing under the Estate Tax Act can flow to the people of Ontario.

Mr. Stanfield: Will the hon. member permit a question.

Mr. Gillespie: I wonder if the hon. member would ask his question when I have finished my remarks.

The drawing of wills is a complicated matter, and it is not always easy for one to obtain the advice one needs. I suggest we need to give further consideration to this point as July 31 may come around too soon for some.

The second point we ought to consider is that some people who have drawn wills may now be mentally incapacitated or infirm in some way and not able to change their wills. They may not be able to derive benefits from the new act. It seems to me that we ought to consider this point also.

Mr. Stanfield: They are lucky. They will never know about the act.

Mr. Gillespie: I have referred to estate planning. I should like to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to a number of provisions in the bill and to comment on their implications as I see them. The minister has said on a number of occasions that gifts up to $2,000 a year by each parent to each child are to be tax free. That is to say, if you have a normal family of a mother, father and children, $4,000 each year may be transferred to each child each year until the death of the first partner. After that, $2,000 a year may continue to be passed on tax free. I wish to make two points clear. First of all, over a ten year period this provides an opportunity for parents to pass to each child $40,000.

Mr. Peters: I don't know anybody with that much to pass.

Mr. Gillespie: Secondly, the transfer does not have to be in cash. If a parent makes gifts exceeding $2,000 a year to a child that parent is liable to pay gift tax on the cumulative total of such taxable gifts which are over and above the basic minimum I have just referred to. Through estate planning, it is possible to split estates and to minimize the effects of gift tax liability. For example, if one looks at the schedule one will see that accumulated gifts of $200,000 would be taxable at $71,500 and at the marginal rate thereafter of 75 per cent. If the gifts were split, and made by husband and wife, that is if they each gave $100,000, the tax is $21,250 for each parent, for a total of $42,500, which is $30,000 less than the figure I mentioned previously. The marginal rate also is only 36 per cent, half the marginal rate on the unsplit $200,000 accumulated gift.

• (9:20 p.m.)

May I refer quickly to other opportunities allowing for the transfer of assets to those of younger generations. I have already referred to the exemptions for younger children and to the fact that for each child under 11 years old the exemption is now $35,000. I referred in my example to a family of four children under the age of 10. The total exemption for that family would be $160,000. Similarly, the exemption in respect of disabled children has been considerably increased. An adult child aged 41, for instance, who is dependent because of infirmity would qualify for an exemption of $40,000, and provision is made for exemptions to dependant adult children up to $80,000. Surely, this is a compassionate move. For adult children not so dependent, the exemption is $10,000. I have referred also to the provision for the payment of estate tax over a period of five years in six equal instalments. This will enable estate planners to use much more latitude when considering ways and means of financing the tax, because it will take the heat off the forced sale.

One further point on estate planning: It may be argued that only those who are wealthy can afford the kind of tax advice which will enable them to undertake estate planning. I would say that anyone who has an estate of $50,000, or is likely to have such an estate, is quite able to afford the kind of tax advice needed to minimize the effect of estate taxation. The fact is that anyone who has an estate worth more than $50,000 should seek the advice of a tax consultant or an estate planner or a lawyer. He cannot afford not to do so.

In conclusion, I should like to refer to the terms of the amendment. We are asked to give consideration to a complete revision of the federal tax legislation with a view to making revisions in such legislation which would be progressive and equitable. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that in the three months since these proposals were put forward in the budget resolutions there has been ample opportunity for intensive review. The very fact that changes have been made in those resolutions reflects the kind of intensive examination which hon. members may have requested. The amendment refers to a progressive tax and to equity. I suggest that both principles are well embodied in this bill. It seems to me the hon. member who moved the amendment wrote it out before he had read the bill.

The whole area of estate taxes is one of the most complicated in tax law. It touches on the most personal plans of thousands of people. Some larger estates will be worse off under this measure. Some of the 5 per cent of the people who pay will have to pay more. But for 95 per cent of the people of Canada and for a very large proportion of the remaining 5 per cent, the proposals contained in the new bill represent a major improvement.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): I was somewhat surprised, Mr. Speaker, to hear the previous speaker, the hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Gillespie) suggest, in connection with the government's taxation policy, that the government was acting on the principle of the strong helping the weak. That came as a great surprise to me in the light of the record of the party which he supports. I am thinking particularly, now, of the social development tax of 2 per cent with its $120 limit and the fact that in the legislation now before us the minimum rate of estate tax has been increased by 50 per cent, from 10 per cent to 15 per cent, and the maximum rate reduced from 54 per cent to 50 per cent. How can anyone say this is a policy of the strong helping the weak? I fail to see it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Schumacher: In rising to join in this debate, I do so as a member from a province which is presented with a particular problem in this field. My province has a peculiar relationship with this estate tax issue inasmuch as it has declined to profit by this field of taxation and today rebates to its citizens the provincial share of federal taxes raised in such a way.

As the minister himself has pointed out, 75 per cent of the tax revenue raised by federal estate tax goes back to the provinces. In the province of Alberta, the amount raised by federal tax collectors in this connection is rebated to the individuals concerned. This sounds like a neat, straightforward operation at the end of which the taxpayer is fully recompensed, having suffered no financial loss. Unfortunately, this is not quite the case.

Although the federal tax collectors know that the money will eventually be paid right back to the beneficiaries of the estate, the federal tax collectors still insist on collecting the money, taking it into the federal coffers, and paying a lump sum back to the provinces which must then be rebated by the province to the individuals concerned. Apart from the cost and effort involved in this process, there are two serious drawbacks attached to it. First, those responsible for the collection of federal estate tax insist on prompt and full payment of the tax even though they realize it will eventually be rebated. Second, and this is much more serious, the sum rebated can be viewed as income by the federal government and taxed as such, as pointed out by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) in his speech yesterday.

I cannot believe that the minister would have gone to all this trouble, and courted the public abuse he has received in respect of this measure, simply for the sake of the revenue which the estate tax will produce. On his own admission this revenue, according to the estimates he has, will amount only to some $30 million.

Perhaps the answer lies in the income tax revenues which he expects will flow from taxable provincial rebates, particularly in view of the fact that several other provinces have indicated they will follow Alberta's lead in rebating this tax. Whatever his reasons for perpetrating this tax horror on Canadians, the minister has so far shown no public awareness of what the impact will be. He has scrambled a few figures around and made a few more confusing statements, but the main body of his tax measure remains untouched. As it now stands, this tax proposal is a lethal weapon pointed directly at the family farm and the small businesses across Canada. If it becomes law, it will wipe out a large segment of our national, social and economic life within one generation. The minister has made light of this claim and says everyone will be much better off than before. He seems to think that by raising the tax floor from $20,000 to $50,000 people will believe small businesses and family farms will be made safe. If he really believes that, which I doubt, then he is sadly out of touch with the facts of Canada's economic life.

After all, the revisions announced by the minister on January 30 do not change the exemptions one iota. All he has done has been to say that no estate under $50,000 will be taxed. The $75,000 estate will still be gouged as heavily under the revised proposal as under the original. Thanks to the reckless spending habits of his colleagues of this and previous Liberal governments, inflation and rising costs have made $20,000 look like $50,000 and $50,000 look like $100,000.

Let us take the example of farm units in the province of Alberta. The latest reliable figures are those available in the 1966 agricultural census, and we should remember what has happened to prices and costs since then. I read in the newspaper last night that real estate prices in Ottawa have risen 13 per cent in the past year. If that is true of real estate in this city, just think what has happened to the capital value of farm units since 1966. In that year there were 69,411 farms in Alberta. Of these, only 519 were run by managers. The others were all owner or tenant, or owner-tenant operated. In other words, they were farms that could be designated as family or privately operated farms, not run by syndicates or large corporations.

As of 1966 there were some 30,000 farms in Alberta capitalized at more than $50,000, and another 20,000 or so just under that figure. The latter have probably graduated to the $50,000 figure by now after three years of spiralling costs and inflation. Perhaps these figures, Mr. Speaker, will give the minister some idea of the dimensions of the problem his new estate tax has created for Canadians.

The Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities sent the minister a letter some time ago about his new tax. They drew attention to the menace it posed to farming in particular. The letter reads in part:

> Because of high land values and large land holdings which successful farming operations require, farm estates attract large estate taxes but have no liquid assets readily available to pay them. We cannot see how our national wellbeing would be served by the breaking up of production units to pay estate taxes.

Nor do I, Mr. Speaker. The proposed tax system, the letter states:

> —will expose the farm estate to taxes which could compel the farm to be broken up and sold.

It is true that the minister has now made an allowance for payment of estate taxes on an instalment basis. This is hardly a measure of relief. It is very like the hangman telling the condemned man that instead of breaking his neck quickly with one short, sharp drop he will be merciful and let him strangle to death slowly.

No, Mr. Speaker, however one looks at this tax it is an iniquitous and unnecessary measure. Personally, I believe in abolishing all taxation of estates. I am unalterably opposed to any action that tends to discourage individual initiative and business enterprise, and even more to any measure that destroys accumulations of private capital. If we pursue such a blind policy as the discouragement of individual business enterprise and the destruction of private capital, the nation is doomed to slow economic death. History is full of examples of what happens to a state that follows this course.

Canada remains ravenously hungry for capital. It is among our largest imports. One of our most pressing needs for the realization of our potential as a people and as a nation, is capital. The last thing we should be doing is taxing our own sources of capital out of existence. One of the most interesting documents on this subject is the report of the Economic Council of Ontario. Last fall the Council finished an exhaustive study of the question for that government. The report notes:

> While allegedly aimed at the "redistribution of wealth", these taxes (death duties and estate taxes) are to a very significant degree extracted from individuals who by today's standards cannot be considered wealthy.

And then later on:

> One may question whether a $70,000 farm represents an "undue concentration of wealth" when carried to this degree ... (and whether to tax it) ... is economically sound policy.

In its introduction to the chapter on transfer taxes, the description used by the council to cover all estate and similar taxes, the report states:

> Though the percentage of revenue from transfer taxes received by the Canadian governments is exceeded among the nations of the western world only by the governments of the United States and United Kingdom, the relative maturity of the economies of these two prominent countries, when compared to that of Canada, raises a question as to the merit of thus dissipating and discouraging private accumulations of investment capital.

The answer may well be that most Canadians are unaware that transfer taxes are, in fact taxes levied on investment capital... and that Canada ranks above all other nations in the share of taxes raised from all forms of capital investment.

There is irony indeed that Canada, which needs capital almost more than any other western nation, is the most assiduous in destroying the incentive for accumulating such capital and, when such accumulation is made, taxing it out of existence. I am absolutely opposed to this legislation, Mr. Speaker, in theory as well as fact. I believe that instead of considering ways of increasing the tax burden on private capital we should be considering measures to free it entirely from its government-imposed shackles.

Mr. John Roberts (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind that the government's proposals for estate taxes have caused a great deal of concern, particularly among rural people. In common, I suppose, with many hon. members I received many letters, indeed hundreds of letters, concerning this subject. Along with the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson), I have conducted conversations, discussions and meetings with various farm organizations. I found that as we explained to the farm organizations the facts of the matter, a great deal of their concern evaporated. There is a great deal of misunderstanding and misrepresentation,—no doubt accidentally,—in the press in relation to the estate tax, and I think this is very unfortunate. I think this is very unfortunate because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), who should be receiving credit for a progressive piece of legislation, is receiving a few brickbats.

The fact of the matter is that in introducing the five year period to pay, a great progressive step has been taken. The fact of the matter is that in enabling wives to inherit tax free, and receive gifts tax free, a great progressive step has been taken. We have heard a great deal of talk to the effect that the family farm is going to be hit and will probably disappear. The facts are that most family estates are going to be much better off under the new legislation than they were under the old provisions.

I was frankly amazed at the argument presented by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in relation to this measure. It is a complex problem. He had a very simple solution—throw the thing out. Why? Well, there has been a lot of confusion, a lot of misunderstanding. What does that prove? That proves it was really a half-baked idea. Really, I do not think that proves it was a half-baked idea.

[Mr. Schumacher.]

If the government were unprepared to listen to reason he would be the first to complain that they were rigid, that they were stonewalling or that they were arrogant. When the Minister of Finance is prepared to accept reasonable suggestions from people on whatever side of the house he says, "Ah, that proves it was a half-baked idea". He says, "Let us talk straight; let us not have any confusion". Well, let us not have any confusion. Let us talk straight about where he stands on this issue. He says "Throw it out". What does he want to throw out? Does he want to throw out the five year payment principle? Does he want to throw out the fact that wives will receive tax-free inheritances? Does he want to throw out the fact that wives will be able to receive gifts tax free? Does he want to throw out the fact that the gift tax exemption has been effectively nearly doubled? I ask what is it that the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) wants to throw out.

When we get to the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) then the confusion becomes compounded. What does he say? He said that the Minister of Finance says the burden is not too great. Then, this member says "But let us talk to the farm leaders". Let us do more than talk to the farm leaders; let us have a look at the facts. The fact is that the new proposals do not, on an over-all view, reduce exemptions on estates. What they do is provide advantages to estates involving families with children in comparison to those involving families without children. That is because there is a new exemption. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition wants that thrown out too. There is a new exemption of $10,000 for each child no matter what his age is. It is true that the basic exemption has been lowered from $40,000 to $20,000, but the total exemptions will slide upwards depending on the number of children in the family.

We should really keep in mind that these exemptions in many cases apply twice. That is to say, the exemptions will apply at first on the half of the estate going to the children and they will apply again on the half of the estate which is provided to the wife when it passes to the children upon her death. So, in circumstances I have described the exemptions applied to the estate will be at least equal—and where there are children in most cases they will be more—than at the present time, provided the husband divides his estate between his wife and child.

Now, there is a new gift tax exemption. Perhaps that is something the Leader of the Opposition wants to throw out. It is double the previous exemption. It is not an exemption that applies only to children. It can be given to any person. So, in many cases expensive gifts can be made tax free over a period of time. For example, a man can give $2,000 a year to his son tax free. He can also give $2,000 to his daughter-in-law tax free. He can give $4,000 to his wife tax free and she can pass on $2,000 each to the son and to the daughter-in-law tax free. In one year, therefore, $8,000 can be transferred tax free within a family situation.

It may be true that some family farms or businesses will have difficulty paying their estate tax. But they would have even more difficulty paying if the estate tax changes were not put into effect, both because of the extended time given for payment and because an estate, properly arranged, will now generally pay less tax when there are children in the family.

Estates will quite properly be arranged so as to minimize their tax. If the estates are changed, and if we are dealing with a family estate, the tax levied under the new proposals will almost always be less than at the present time. But if people refuse to take advantage of the opportunity offered them, they may pay more tax. It is misleading to suggest that people will not take advantage of the new provisions. It is even more misleading to imply that if they do not choose to take advantage of these provisions they will be forced to pay higher taxes. The fairest thing is to compare the minimum tax they would have to pay under both the old and new legislation if they take the most advantageous way of arranging their estate. On such a comparison, a family estate will now pay less tax.

Let me illustrate my statement with some figures. The hon. member for Crowfoot had some trouble with his figures and the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) does not really understand the situation very well either. Let us look at the least advantageous situation, that in which there is one child. On an $80,000 estate, if the tax is arranged as favourably as possible there will be a tax of $1,500 which is $1,100 less than it would be under the most favourable conditions at the present time. If the tax were paid on an instalment basis the instalment payment would be $300 a year for 5 years; and on an estate of $80,000, at 6 per cent, the income on the assets would be $4,800 a year. Let us go to an estate in the amount of $100,000. The tax would be $3,000. That is down $3,200 if the estate is arranged as favourably as possible. The amount paid on an instalment basis would be $600 a year. And at 6 per cent the amount paid on $100,000 would be $6,000 a year.

Then, we might take an estate of $120,000. The tax would be $9,600. This is down $600 in respect of an estate arranged on the most favourable basis at the present time. The tax on the instalment basis would be $1,920 a year for 5 years and with interest at 6 per cent the amount of return on $120,000 would be $7,200. On an estate of $150,000 the tax would be $15,300. That is down $1,500 over the present situation. The tax on an instalment basis would be $3,060 and the annual income on the asset would be $9,000. On an estate of $200,000 the tax on an estate arranged in the most favourable way would be $26,400. That is down $2,200 over what would be paid under the most favourable circumstances at the present time. The tax instalment would be $5,280 and the revenue at 6 per cent interest would be $12,000 a year.

If we start to deal with estates valued at half a million dollars or more there will be more tax paid than at the present time. It may be that the hon. member for Crowfoot is worried about those estates. I would rather worry about the estate valued at under half a million dollars. So long as we are talking of families with at least one child, and an estate valued at less than half a million dollars, under the new arrangement the tax will be less than under the previous arrangement. Those are the facts, and I wish the hon. member for Crowfoot and the hon. member for Palliser would have a look at them.

Someone might ask whether there should be estate or succession duty taxes at the provincial level. It does not make much sense to have them at the provincial level because one province would then have an effective tax advantage over another unrelated to potential economic advantage. Someone might also ask whether we should have a tax at the federal level. One could say that the amount collected, which is approximately $100 million a year, less than one per cent of the federal budget, is not really worth while.

One could also argue on the social side, as I as a Liberal would argue; that is, I do not like a system where a large accumulation of wealth can be passed on from father to son when the person benefiting has not exerted any effort in accumulating the wealth. I would not want to see a situation where enormous sums of money and the power and influence which is attached to them, could be passed on from generation to generation without some regulation.

I do think there is a special problem, and a special case, in relation to farming and family enterprises. Succession or estate tax duties may fall unfairly on family and farm enterprises because of unliquid assets. There are two approaches one can take to this problem. You can say let us evaluate or assess the farm land for estate tax purposes at farming value, not at real commercial value and, if later that land is converted to other uses, let us go back and charge retroactive taxes on the property on the basis of real commercial value. I can see certain disadvantages to this. It might lead to an uneconomic use of the land, if the land is high priced because it could be better used in another capacity, and thus reduce efficient use of our economic assets.

Also, if you follow such a procedure there might be an encouragement to a large number of gentlemen farmers to push into farming simply to reduce their other profits by operating farms at a loss. They would be encouraged to do so because of taxation. The proper way to look at this tax reform is in the committee of finance later on this spring or summer.

Really the solution to the problem in relation to family farms is to bring in, not a $50,000 exemption which the minister has suggested, but a $100,000 exemption. This should deal with the problem of family farms. A $100,000 exemption would take account of the increase in respect of the value of farm property in the past ten years. It is a fair figure.

This second, and perhaps more fruitful, approach should be looked at by the Finance committee later in the spring when we are considering reform of the whole taxation system. The important thing to recognize at this stage, as long as we are talking about family estates under this new legislation, is that these estates are going to be better off than they have been in the past. Whatever injustices or inadequacies there have been in respect of estate taxes, they have been diminished by the progressive steps taken by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). We may not have come all the way down the road, but we have come down two thirds of the way, as a result of the nature of this progressive legislation.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under standing order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRICE STABILITY

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) the following question:

> Can the minister tell us when the standing joint Senate-Commons committee on price stability, income and employment, will be established?

The minister's answer on that occasion was very vague. I hope tonight he will answer my question in some way other than by saying that before this joint committee can be established the prices and incomes commission must be established. I hope he will not tell me this, because I already know it.

My question is directed to him for the purpose of speeding up the process of establishing both the commission and the committee. I know they are both essential to the process of dealing with prices and income. The minister's white paper on prices and stability, which will be discussed by the committee on Tuesday, was published about December 20 last. I also know that this idea was not new then. Strangely enough, it was exactly two years to the day when the joint Senate-Commons committee on consumer credit and prices published an interim report. One of the recommendations at that time was that a joint committee be established to review consumer affairs and the state of the Canadian economy. This has already been talked about for two years and considerable thought has been given to it.

It is my considered opinion that the state of the Canadian economy is worse now than it was two years ago. I have been quite impatient because there are a great many people in this country looking forward with great anticipation to a study being made with respect to inflation, prices and incomes. These factors are very badly in need of attention.

The cost of living increased over 4 per cent last year. Pensions and allowances have increased by 2 per cent, but this increase does not come close to offsetting the four per cent increase in the cost of living. While wages have been increasing their ratio to the increase in the cost of living has been lessening. When talking about different factors in our economy one must consider that the one thing completely out of line is the increase of profits to large companies. I do not have to go back in history to illustrate this. Let must just refer to an item which appeared today in the Globe and Mail. It states in part:

> Higher profits are being reported by a wide range of companies in initial 1968 annual reports.

It continues as follows:

> Only four of the first 35 companies to report show lower profits for 1968.

The article refers to a number of companies. I shall only refer to one or two. The Algoma Steel Corporation of Sault Ste. Marie had a profit of $1.70 a share compared with $1.22 cents in 1967.

An hon. Member: That's all right.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Sure, it is all right for Algoma Steel, but this is the sort of thing we have to deal with when we are trying to keep prices and incomes in line. The Ford Motor Company of Canada Limited, Oakville, showed profits increasing by 58.8 per cent to $30.26 a share last year from $19.04 the previous year.

I could go on through these corporations one by one, but I do not intend to do so. I do want to emphasize that when you look at these factors you find that prices have gone up on the one hand and that the incomes of people have not been keeping pace on the other. They are not now in a position to pay for the things they need. The cost of living has gone up higher and faster than incomes, wages and pensions, yet profits have gone way out of line. These are the things that need to be studied.

The function of the joint committee when it is set up will be to deal with and consider the reports of the commission on prices. Let me read you the minister's own words about the function of the standing parliamentary committee on price stability, incomes and employment, as found in the White Paper:

> What is envisaged is a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. It would receive the reports of the commission for review and discussion and would make recommendations.

What will be the reports of that commission? The minister went on to say:

> While it will be empowered to make recommendations as to government policy, its main function will be to rally a sense of public responsibility leading to voluntary restraint.

The minister emphasizes very definitely that he does not intend to have anything but voluntary restraints. Let me point out to the minister that what we have right now is forced restraints on certain sectors of our population.

• (10:00 p.m.)

We have forced restraint of pensioners, whether they are old age pensioners, retired public servants, people on veterans pensions and allowances, or the blind. We have forced restraint of the most blatant kind, because these people have no means of raising their income. Parliament has turned a deaf ear and a blind eye on them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): All right, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say that the profit-makers are running wild and I want to see this situation brought under control.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) for raising this issue tonight and for paraphrasing from the white paper, which says that inflation hits hardest at and has gradual effects on those on fixed incomes, those on limited incomes, those unemployed, and the elderly. It is illustrated again and again in the white paper that these people are hurt most by inflation, and this is why we must evolve new policies to curb inflation.

I am also grateful to the hon. member for raising this issue tonight and urging me, I take it, in the strongest possible terms, to follow up and pursue the policies set out in the white paper. I am a little surprised at this, because the group to which the hon. member belongs has been very critical of those policies. The former member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, who is now involved in a by-election, made a big speech the other night in Nanaimo in which he said that this policy is no good. Therefore, I am delighted to have support from the New Democratic party for the policies set out in the white paper. I am also delighted to have the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway urging me to get on with the policies I have set out in the white paper. I said in the white paper and in the house that I intended to use the policies in the white paper as a basis for—

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that on the adjournment debate we do not follow the procedure of raising points of order.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I just want to say that I am not supporting the policy. I am supporting the idea of having the committee study this question.

Mr. Basford: I have said in the white paper and in the house that I would use the policies set out in the white paper as a basis for consultation with interested economic groups before doing the things set out in the white paper. That process of consultation is now under way. I said in the house today, for example, that I had met on Tuesday for a long session with the principal officers of the Canadian Labour Congress. I think that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in particular would want me to consult with the Canadian Labour Congress before I set up a prices and incomes commission and a parliamentary committee to deal with its report.

This process takes time. I am meeting with the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. I have already had one meeting with two officers of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. I am grateful to them for the advice they have already given me. I am looking forward to further consultations with that body. This is why the committee to which the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway referred has not yet been set up. It will not be set up until these consultations are over and we pass an order in council establishing the prices and incomes commission, which I hope to do as soon as I can. But I will do it only after I have had the consultations that I have promised the people in the private sector I would have with them.

[Mr. Basford.]

TRANSPORT—LEASING OF WATER LOTS ON CANAL SYSTEMS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, on January 29 I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) whether it was still the department's intention to pursue its program with respect to water-lot leasing on the Trent and Rideau Canal Systems. For the past two years the tourist industry on the Trent and Rideau Canal systems has been threatened with additional taxation by way of water-lot leases. Such legislation, if passed, would affect only the commercial operators on these two canal systems. It would not apply to their competitors on other bodies of water such as the Great Lakes, Muskoka, Couchiching, or Simcoe.

In other words, commercial operators on these two systems are being placed at a distinct disadvantage in relation to commercial operators elsewhere. I venture to suggest there will be numerous cases where property ownership will be in serious dispute; cases where it has never been clearly established whether the shoreline involved does in fact belong to the Crown. Much of this shoreline has never been removed from the deeds of the original and present owners. These people are already paying an annual property tax and, because of the present inflated value of waterfront property, their municipal tax assessments are high. Now the department wants to institute a form of double taxation by forcing them to lease property on which they are already paying a high premium.

There are many questions about such legislation which could well lead to complications. First of all, will the property owner pay for a lease on all improved property? Second, if the property is of such size as to allow for the erection of several docks, will the property-owner pay for a lease on the entire waterfront, or for a lease on each dock, and will he have a choice as to whether to lease the entire property or split it into several separate leases around independent docks?

A further difficulty arises. Due to differences between the nature of one waterfront and another, one operator may have to build a dock out 125 feet or more on a shallow beach-type land contour in order to service a boat docking. On the other hand, another operator, perhaps enjoying access to government improved land which, because it is dredged regularly, is close to deep water, may be able to service the same boat with a 20 foot dock. Nevertheless, the operator with the long dock and the shallow beach will have to pay more for his lease because of the length of his dock, something over which he has no control. This constitutes an inequity in taxation.

Has the government considered how little profit may be derived from the water lot leasing when the costs have been deducted for implementation and enforcement of the program, a program which is being carried out against a very small segment of Canada's third largest industry. I would point out, however, that it is the largest industry in the Kawartha Lakes district which I have the honour to represent.

Since figures for 1968 are not yet available, and since, because of Expo, the 1967 figures would tend to give a distorted view, I am going to quote from 1966 statistics which indicate that 40 million tourists visited Canada in that year, 18 million of whom came to Ontario and over two million to the Kawartha Lakes region. More than one billion tourist dollars were brought in, $398 millions to Ontario. And the 1968 figures should be considerably higher.

However, as a profit-making business the tourist industry is only marginal. High operational costs, competition between lodge operators and the competition provided by an ever-increasing number of private and provincial trailer parks, some of which are now offering plush facilities, have combined to narrow the small margin of profit enjoyed by lodge owners. Now, these same people are threatened with yet another monetary demand. Where, and when, is it going to end?

If the department feels that legislation to lease water lots must go through, surely a simpler and more economical method could be found. In closing, I should like to suggest that the Department of Transport make a further review of the entire program before going ahead with this method of water lot leasing.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased at this time to assure the hon. member that because of the number of representations received on the subject of water lot leasing on the Trent and Rideau Canals the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) intends to personally review the situation and the program.

HOUSING—REMOVAL OF TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) a question dealing with the recommendation made by the task force on housing that the 11 per cent sales tax presently being assessed by the federal government on building materials be eliminated. My question was prompted by a statement attributed to the minister responsible for housing in Vancouver, at which time he was alleged to have stated that the Minister of Finance might juggle a few items in the budget so as to eliminate the federal sales tax on building materials.

In reply to my question, the minister stated that no consideration was being given to the recommendation of the task force with regard to the elimination of this tax. His reply indicates to me that there is nothing but confusion in this government. In my opinion, they have injected confusion into national policy. Some time ago we had the Postmaster General (Mr. Keirans) pontificating about NATO. He said that NATO had to go. Not content with reorganizing the Post Office Department, he is now endeavouring to reorganize the world.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Might be a good idea.

Mr. Carter: Not by the Postmaster General, if his reorganization of the post office is any indication.

We have a task force headed by one minister which says: "Take off the 11 per cent tax on housing". The Minister of Finance says: "It will stay on". So, obviously there is no unity whatever in this cabinet. Everyone knows that the 11 per cent sales tax must come off.

Mr. McGrath: Everyone but the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Carter: Exactly. In my opinion it is the greatest single contributing factor to inflating the final cost of housing. This 11 per cent tax often means the difference between owning a home and not owning a home.

Since the Minister of Finance is not here I will direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. Was the so-called task force on housing just another step in the personal publicity campaign of the Minister of Transport

(Mr. Hellyer)? I ask again: Are the recommendations of the minister and his task force to be pushed aside? Why have a task force headed by a minister if we ignore its recommendations? This government is attempting to take credit for doing something about housing when actually the housing crisis has been brought about by the inflation that has been created by this government.

Canadians are being subjected to what is probably the heaviest burden of taxation in the western world as this government, by its artificially induced inflationary policies, siphons away the prosperity that they have earned. The 10 per cent increase in income tax two years ago, followed by the 3 per cent increase one year ago, the 2 per cent increase for social security, not to mention the vicious increase in estate taxes and this ruinous tax on building materials and homes, in my opinion have contributed to destroying the prosperity of our nation. I say to government members that they should get together and remove this tax on homes, thus giving the average Canadian a chance. The attitude of the Minister of Finance represents outright rejection of the recommendations of the task force on housing headed by the Minister of Transport.

What we have here, Mr. Speaker, is one minister publicly repudiating the advice of another. Of course, I would say that this advice was improperly offered. The Minister of Transport had no business heading a task force. Yet, knowing his great love of, and reliance on, public relations one can see how he was dragged into this situation. But now the position is this: his suggestion has been publicly repudiated and rejected by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Bell: Shame.

Mr. Carter: He has become unwanted, along with his advice. He is in the position of a minister whose advise has been turned down and whose policy is rejected by cabinet. In my opinion and, I am sure, in the opinion of many Canadians, he has only one thing left to do, and that is resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Carter: The Minister of Transport headed a task force on housing at great expense to the Canadian taxpayer. It is his opinion that in order to provide decent housing accommodation for the average Canadian citizen we must eliminate the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. If the Minister of Finance and his other cabinet colleagues refuse to go along with that recommendation, the only honourable thing for the Minister of Transport to do is to resign from cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Carter: I suggest, too, that unless the government follows through on the recommendations of the minister and the task force he headed, he has no other choice.

A recent release by real estate dealers in Ottawa shows that homes in this area have increased about 34 per cent in price since 1965. Liberal governments have been in power since before 1965. In the city I have the honour to represent, St. John's, we have several public housing projects, but some of them are not working out very well. The latest public housing project in St. John's cost the three levels of government, the municipal council, the provincial government and the federal government, over $20,000 per unit to build. I say that if the only way to bring down the price of homes and provide decent accommodation for our average and low income workers is by having the government enter the housing field, then by all means let the government build houses that the average Canadian can live in without social stigma. The houses ought to be built at prices the average Canadian can afford.

Surely, a time when government expenditures are rising higher and higher—they are up nearly 10 per cent in the latest estimates—is no time for anyone to continue gouging our young people in search of a home. May I conclude with a few more words, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has provided some heat, but I shall attempt to throw at least a little light on the matter. Everyone can, I think, be sympathetic to the idea of lowering taxes where possible. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has himself indicated that he would like to be able to propose tax reductions. However, he has pointed to the hard fact, Mr. Speaker, that must be faced and that is if important tax reductions were made at the present time the public would either have to pay the same amount of tax in some other way or go without some service or benefit which it has come to expect from the government.

Estimates based on the value of production of building materials and related statistics led to the conclusion that the sales tax on all building materials now yields over $300 million. The revenue from other materials used in the construction of housing—in other words, single family dwellings, apartment buildings and other units—is even more difficult to estimate but is believed to be between $130 million and $140 million. Thus, if the sales tax on all building materials were to be repealed at this time, I am informed that it would have to be replaced by increasing the rate of sales tax by more than 1.5 percentage points, or increasing the revenue from the present personal income tax by about 7 per cent. In other words, some equivalent measure would have to be introduced.

Mr. McGrath: What about winter works?

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. Gray: The exemption only of building materials used in housing would involve lower amounts, but the tax increase in other areas to offset this loss would still be important and difficult.

Mr. McGrath: I said, what about winter works programs?

Mr. Gray: Also proposals to eliminate the sales tax on building materials would affect the 3 per cent old age security tax that is part of the sales tax. An exemption for building materials would reduce the old age security tax revenues which go to pay the old age security pensions.

It would, of course, be very difficult to administer an exemption restricted to building materials used only for housing construction. The tax is paid by the manufacturer of materials who does not know whether the bricks, lumber or glass he produces will be used to build a house or a factory. Any exemption, therefore, would probably have to be administered by refunds or by certificates from builders. It might well be better to consider payments to house or apartment builders or home owners of amounts calculated by some formula which would be approximately equal to the sales tax included in the cost of a housing unit.

In general, Mr. Speaker, the recommendations of the task force with respect to the item raised by the hon. member are certainly deserving of serious consideration. In doing so, we cannot overlook factors such as those I have mentioned. We must certainly take them into account in carrying out our duty to the people of this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the house is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this house stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE ON AGENDA—EXCHANGE OF TELEGRAMS WITH PRAIRIE PREMIERS

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table two sets of correspondence. The first is an exchange of correspondence and telegrams with the several provincial premiers concerning items to be included in the agenda of the constitutional conference next week. The second is an exchange of telegrams with the prairie premiers following on their meetings of last week. Included are my answers on various subjects they talked about.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXHIBITIONS

MAN AND HIS WORLD—CONSIDERATION OF QUEBEC PROPOSAL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether his government has considered the financial proposal reportedly made by the government of Quebec concerning the continuation of Terre des Hommes. Would the Prime Minister indicate any decision his government may have reached?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I only saw the telegram from Quebec City this morning, suggesting some form of federal assistance. We will give very careful consideration to it, Mr. Speaker, in due course.

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY CONCERNING NEW MINISTRY OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to establish a separate ministry of housing and urban development as recommended by the task force on housing and to appoint the present Minister of Transport as the new minister of that department?

A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Probably the Prime Minister did not hear my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I did not think the hon. member was serious in asking the question. Obviously we cannot appoint a minister to a department which has not been created.

Mr. Gilbert: That is why I thought he missed the first part of my question. Is it the intention of the government to appoint a separate ministry as recommended by the task force on housing?

Mr. Trudeau: We are not considering the question, Mr. Speaker. We are waiting for a memorandum from the Minister of Transport, which he said he would send to cabinet.

Mr. Gilbert: This question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the statement that the government is preparing recommendations and legislation to be ready within three weeks, when is it the intention of the minister to bring that legislation forward?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): As the Prime Minister just stated, it will be preparing a memorandum to cabinet indicating the parts of the report I feel are within the jurisdiction of the federal government and on which early action should be taken.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Would that include removal of the sales tax on building materials?

AIR TRANSPORT

AMALGAMATION OF AIR CANADA AND CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Can he tell us whether negotiations have been undertaken between Air Canada and the Canadian Pacific Airlines for the possible amalgamation of those two airlines?

Mr. Speaker: I think that this question was asked last week, but the minister could perhaps answer it just the same.

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISIT TO CANADA OF PRESIDENT NIXON AND PRIME MINISTER WILSON

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the forthcoming visit of President Nixon to Europe, for the purpose of consultations with members of the Atlantic alliance, and in view of the wide range of subjects of mutual interest to Canada and the United States, will the Prime Minister say whether discussions are under way with a view to arranging an early visit by the President to Canada?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The subject has been raised, Mr. Speaker, between the government of the United States and the Canadian government, but there is nothing precise to report.

Mr. MacLean: A supplementary question. In view of reports that Prime Minister Wilson of the United Kingdom may be visiting Washington, will the Prime Minister say whether the government is considering extending an invitation to visit Canada during his trip to North America?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am considering that and, depending on the dates and on the eventuality of the trip itself, it would be something that would lead me hopefully to arrange a visit to Canada by Prime Minister Wilson, either at that time or at some other time.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the Prime Minister does in fact arrange discussions with the President of the United States regarding Canada's position in respect to NATO, will the Postmaster General and the Minister of National Defence accompany the Prime Minister, so that Canada's position can be placed before the President in all its clarity and simplicity?

DRUGS

LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE REPAYMENT OF OVERCHARGES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. I put it to the right hon. gentleman because I believe it concerns a matter of government policy. In view of reports that a number of drug firms in the United States are making payments of $120 million to cover overcharges that had resulted in excess profits, is the government of Canada studying this matter and considering any legislation that may be necessary, so that any similar overcharges in Canada might be repaid?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker. I will read it in Hansard.

THE SENATE

CONSULTATION WITH SENATORS RESPECTING REFORM MEASURES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister in connection with the projected suggestions of Senate reform, which we have had ever since the days of Mackenzie King.

Mr. McIlraith: He left before doing that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He did make a reform. He substituted live Grits for dead Tories. I ask the Prime Minister whether or not, in view of the massive nature of the changes, there has been any consultation with members of the Senate, and in particular whether government supporters in the Senate were consulted before this course was entered into? Secondly, has he any means whereby such changes could be made or brought about constitutionally without the consent of the Senate?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In reply to the first question, Mr. Speaker, there has been consultation on the constitutional question on several occasions in caucus and caucus committees. We have discussed the future of the constitution, and all the subjects that were raised as a result of last February's federal-provincial conference.

I was not, of course, in a position to spell out in detail to caucus what propositions we were making, because they were considered confidential, but the caucus was encouraged to discuss all aspects of federal institutions, including the Senate, and the subject was discussed. There were many senators present at the time as they always come to our caucus meetings.

On the second question, Mr. Speaker, this is a legal opinion for which I am being asked, but I would say that I see no desirability of proceeding with such a reform of the Senate without ample consultation with the Senate, and without giving the Senate a chance to express its views on the subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in view of the discussion that took place in the Senate yesterday afternoon, led by Senator Connolly, a former leader of the Senate, and other senators, to the effect that this was the first knowledge they had of such ideas being held by the government, what has the Prime Minister to say?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think the Prime Minister should say what he feels should be said in this regard on another occasion, rather than in an answer to a question at this time.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

SEATING ACCOMMODATION FOR CERTAIN MEMBERS

Mr. Gérard Laniel (Beauharnois): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether apart from the seats allocated to hon. members, proportionally to their party representation, to attend the federal-provincial conference, there will be seats for other members not chosen to be part of the official delegations of observers?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there will be no other seats in the room itself, since all available ones have been, as mentioned by the hon. member, allocated among the various parties. But in an adjoining room, a closed television circuit will enable the members of all parties to follow the conference in all its details. It will be, I think, room 371 in the West Block.

ROYAL FAMILY

CANCELLATION OF SALUTE TO QUEEN MOTHER

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the universal affection with which the Queen Mother is held in this country, will not the government reconsider its decision to cancel the honour accorded her of a 21 gun salute on the occasion of her birthday?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is this part of the just society?

Mr. Speaker: While the question is being considered the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

[Later:]

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister based on the question asked a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Palliser. His question was based on a Canadian Press dispatch which stated that in response to a cabinet order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows very well that he has to ask the question directly. If he wants to ask a supplementary question he should do so without quoting a newspaper story or report, on which his question is based.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, with great respect, the Prime Minister was unaware of this important situation and I was explaining it to him. Let me rephrase my question. In view of the cabinet order issued last Friday cancelling the royal salute on the anniversary of the coronation, the birthday of Prince Philip, the birthday of the Queen Mother and on two other royal birthdays, and in view of the affection, especially for the Queen mother, in this country, will he ascertain whether that order can be rescinded?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we in this government believe that we should express our affection otherwise than by shooting guns.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hellyer: That shot you down, George.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government hopes by this tremendous savings to recoup the losses in respect of the Bonaventure?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR FINAL PAYMENT

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of the very stringent economic situation now existing in respect of western agriculture, can the minister say when the Canadian Wheat Board will announce the final payments on wheat, oats and barley for the last crop year.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I have already given the dates and have said that the cheques would be received about the 10th day of April or about that time.

Mr. Southam: In view of the serious economic situation, would the minister ask the officials of the Canadian Wheat Board to get the cheques out a little earlier.

INDUSTRY

DEVCO—PRE-RETIREMENT PROGRAM FOR MINERS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development who reports for the Cape Breton Development Corporation. In his absence possibly the question might be taken as notice by the acting minister or the parliamentary secretary. Would the minister be in a position to advise when the pre-retirement program for Cape Breton miners proposed by Devco will go into effect and, if not, can he give assurance that due and timely notice will be given the coal miners who are affected, so that they can prepare for the future.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): I will bring this to the minister's attention.

RESEARCH

AVAILABILITY OF REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAM

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt. A few days ago I asked him if he had completed his review of the government's policy in respect of scientific research. He seemed to be a little bewildered about the question.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted by the hon. member's continued interest in my extracurricular reading and I would be glad to discuss it with him, both fiction and non-fiction, outside the house at any time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to thank hon. members for their applause but I am not at all sure I share the same—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question he should ask it without making a speech.

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think this is a very serious matter—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Don Valley.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, and is supplementary to the one asked earlier by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. Can the Prime Minister say whether he has assigned to any cabinet minister responsibility for the review of the government's scientific policy and if so to which minister.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The committee which has been mentioned is an interdepartmental committee under the chairmanship of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. This committee has undertaken a review of government programs for the support of research, development and innovation in Canadian manufacturing industry. I think this clarifies the situation.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury Board to the Senate committee yesterday, that Canadian science policy is an accidental byproduct of separate cabinet decisions, can the minister indicate when the house might expect a statement from the government about priorities in respect of scientific policy?

Mr. Pepin: With respect, Mr. Speaker, when we debate the reorganization bill there will be an opportunity to bring this question to the floor of the house.

HATE LITERATURE

DISSEMINATION OF PRE-RECORDED MESSAGES BY TELEPHONE

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Prime Minister. Is the government taking any steps to prevent the use of telephones for the dissemination of pre-recorded hate messages which are now being transmitted in the city of Toronto and which are causing concern to may people there?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have just heard of this this morning. I cannot tell the hon. member of any concrete steps in this place, but I would remind members of the house that the government has introduced in the Senate a bill on hate propaganda, with the intent of curtailing all forms of communication which are not legitimate debate, and which are aimed at disseminating hate against groups in Canada.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Could the Prime Minister give the house any indication when the proposal will be brought before this house?

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot of course predict what will happen in the other place. It will be brought before this House as soon as the Senate finishes considering it.

Mr. Orlikow: In view of the fact that it is obvious some senators are not enthused about the proposed legislation, is the Prime Minister discussing with the Senate house leader the possibility of hurrying it up?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

PARTICIPATION IN PROGRAM BY MARITIME PROVINCES

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I suppose I should direct to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister assure the house that in spite of the apparent cancellation, retardation or postponement of various development projects in the Atlantic provinces, along with the apparent abandonment of the Atlantic Development Board, it is not the purpose of his colleagues to drive the Atlantic provinces out of Confederation in time for them to qualify for some of the $20 million increase provided for the Canadian international development agency in the next fiscal year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

POWER

NELSON RIVER, MAN.—RE-NEGOTIATION OF AGREEMENT

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister without Portfolio who is responsible for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is there any feature of the agreement signed in 1966 by the federal government and the government of Manitoba concerning power development of the Nelson river that precludes re-negotiation of its terms in whole or in part?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member realizes that he is asking the minister to make a legal interpretation of an agreement. A question in those terms cannot be asked at this time.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I may ask a supplementary question, or perhaps try to rephrase the question the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre put to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. May I put it this way: Is the federal government willing to renegotiate the agreement with the government of Manitoba regarding the power developments in the north, particularly as they affect the Indians South of Indian Lake?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I will check into the matter, Mr. Speaker, but so far as I know the question is hypothetical; I do not know of any approach from the government of Manitoba requesting a renegotiation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LEGAL AID TO INDIAN FAMILIES AFFECTED BY EXPROPRIATION

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since, according to the reply of the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the government of the province of Manitoba has not asked for any renegotiation of the Nelson river power development, is the minister's department providing, or does it intend to provide, legal counsel or legal aid to those Indian families affected by Manitoba Hydro expropriation procedures?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the question was put to me a few days ago, and I answered that the government of Manitoba had given the people concerned financial assistance for legal advice, in order to find a solution to the problem.

[English]

Mr. Schreyer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the government of Manitoba is the expropriating authority in this case, does not the minister think that the federal government should be providing legal counsel for these people?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is argumentative.

AIR TRANSPORT

RATE ON NORDAIR SERVICE TO HALLBEACH

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether the Canadian Transport Commission recently approved a 73 per cent rate increase for services provided by Nordair to Hallbeach in the Northwest Territories?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that this question should be placed on the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION OF REVIEW

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can indicate at this time when it is expected that the review of Canada's external affairs policy will be concluded? Does he expect it will be concluded during the current year?

[Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humbolt).]

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I expect it will be concluded during the current year. Of course the review has been advanced in some parts more than in others. There are some decisions we have already taken—the decision concerning China, the first steps concerning the Vatican and our trip to South America. Those were all parts of the review. Certain stages have been reached in various parts of this review, but the bulk of it will be announced later this year.

HOUSING

REMOVAL OF TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Does the minister intend to withdraw his recommendation to abolish the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, in view of the statement made in the house last night by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think the question as asked is argumentative and should not be accepted at this time.

REQUEST FOR RECOMMENDATIONS FOLLOWING REPORT OF TASK FORCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether it is his intention to make to the government a package recommendation of a comprehensive nature with regard to housing, or whether it is his intention to give priority to certain aspects of this matter. I ask the question particularly in view of the reported shortage of mortgage money in the month of January and the continuing escalation of interest rates relating to mortgage money for housing.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will know that it is not customary to indicate what will be included in recommendations to cabinet; but I think it would be fair to tell him that the matters I am most interested in are those which I feel have the greatest urgency and which should be acted upon within a matter of weeks, or months at most. These are the things which will be given the greatest priority.

TORONTO—OFFICIALS TO COME TO OTTAWA FOR DISCUSSION

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that officials of the city of Toronto have referred to the recommendations of the task force on public housing and urban renewal as "disastrous" and the social planning council of Toronto called them "kindergarten arithmetic", is it the intention of the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask a question.

Mr. Gilbert: —is it the intention of the minister to call to Ottawa these officials to discuss the recommendations with him?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to recommend to them that they do the kind of research which is necessary in order to evaluate some of the projects presently in place. After they have done that, we can have a discussion as to how we can provide the best accommodation for people of low incomes, the best value economically, but more important the best value in so far as sociological and psychological benefit to the people being served is concerned.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Minister of Transport thinks there is any real possibility that his recommendations on housing will be any more illuminating than his answer to my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North rising on a supplementary question?

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. Will plans which have been completed or almost completed by municipalities, in co-operation with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, with regard to urban renewal and public housing be permitted to proceed in the very near future, or is there an indefinite freeze—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my recollection that a similar question has been asked at least once in the last few days and replied to by the minister.

DRUGS

L.S.D.—INVESTIGATION BY R.C.M.P. INTO ILLEGAL IMPORTATION

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In light of the testimony given in a London, England, court hearing yesterday of a charge against Michael Wool-Lewis, is the R.C.M.P. investigating the suggestion of complicity between Canadian businessmen and United States criminal organizations to transport l.s.d. to Canada from Europe?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is the practice of the R.C.M.P. to co-operate quite closely with authorities in other countries in an attempt to prevent effectively the illegal importation of certain deleterious drugs and related substances into Canada. I would not want to give any detail in a particular case as to the state of investigation, unless it had come to a conclusion and there was something I could disclose properly at that time.

Mr. Schumacher: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Solicitor General undertake to advise the house of any other evidence of the involvement of national or international criminal organizations in the trafficking of l.s.d.?

Mr. McIlraith: I will undertake to look at the question and its implications and bring forward an answer to it.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

ASSOCIATION OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL PARLIAMENTARIANS

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question.

Would he take advantage of the federal-provincial conference to ascertain what are the feelings of the provincial premiers toward a possible Canadian association of federal and provincial parliamentarians, of which the main purpose would be the progress of our federalism and through which there would be a continued dialogue between the representatives themselves, in addition to that which exists at the ministerial and committee of officials level?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That idea appeals greatly to me, Mr. Speaker. I cannot promise to talk about it at the conference itself, since it is not an item on the agenda, but I shall certainly undertake to do it at the two private receptions and in private conversations I will have with the provincial premiers. I thank the hon. member for having suggested the idea.

INCOME TAX

COLLECTION OF SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT TAX BEFORE APPROVAL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the Department of National Revenue is collecting income tax at the source which appears to be based on the inclusion of the social development tax, and in view of the fact that the bill for this tax is not yet even before us, may I ask the minister how long the government intends to collect a tax that has not been approved by parliament.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Not very long, Mr. Speaker. I hope to have it approved by parliament in the very near future.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the government facing the possibility that its bill might be defeated?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It was last year.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FISHERIES

ESTABLISHMENT OF FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION—REPORT STAGE

The house proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-148, to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish and to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore) moved:

That Clause 3 (1) be amended by placing a semicolon after the word "province", on line 14 and by substituting a comma for a period after the word "years" and adding thereto the following:

"and shall be actively engaged in the fresh water fishing industry as fishermen".

He said: I thought that the Minister without Portfolio may have some statement to make on the amendments proposed, but in the absence of any statement I would like to make a few comments at this time. Under the old rules, the resolution preceding the measure calling for a Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was debated in the house, and the bill received first reading on December 18 of last year. On January 16 the bill was again before the house and was given second reading and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

On Tuesday, January 28 the standing committee met and a clause by clause study was given to the bill. The bill was amended and reported to the house. But I would point out that only those amendments which were made in committee by members supporting the government were accepted by the committee, even though the amendments moved by the opposition members who served on the committee were in keeping with the minister's stated intent, and were therefore basically in line with the government's policy and its program. I hope it will be possible for every member of this house to read the evidence as tabled by the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry respecting Bill C-148 as it occurred on January 28. This evidence indicates the basic weakness of the committee system. It indicates the committees' lack of authority to suggest, to approve, to improve, to amend or to recommend changes in the legislation brought before us. To date, the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry has served only as a rubber stamp for this government's legislation. Its hearings have been ineffective, frustrating and time consuming.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member to remind him that according to our new rules the only matter before the house at the present time is the particular amendment proposed by the hon. member, and I doubt very much whether this should be the occasion to speak on the general procedure followed either by this or by any other committee of the house. I think the remarks which the hon. member is making now—which I am sure are important to him—might better be made at the third reading stage of the bill. If the hon. member has a protest to make, in my view it should be made when there is a general debate on the bill which, according to the new rules, should take place on third reading. I realize that some of the remarks he has made until now are introductory in nature and I assume that in due course, and perhaps very soon, he will submit to the house his views in connection with the amendment he proposed.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I was endeavouring to explain just why it was necessary, as a result of conditions which existed in the committee, to bring the amendment before the house at the present time. I would not wish my words to be construed as a reflection on the chairman of the committee, for the evidence will show that he has been fair and impartial. The doubts which I mentioned expressed my concern about the over-all effectiveness of the entire committee system.

When the rules were changed, the members of the house and the Canadian people were led to believe that more authority would be placed in the hands of the committees. They were to serve as a sounding board for legislation, in the hope that out of our deliberations would come changes and improvements which would be helpful. This was my understanding. The function of the committees was to speed up the legislative process, so that the time spent in committee would not have to be spent again in the house. This may have been all right in theory, but in actual practice it is not working out according to plan. We must still come to the house with our amendments, suggestions and recommendations for improvement in the legislation, in the hope that the government will take our recommendations seriously.

It is for these reasons that I have filed notice, pursuant to standing order 75 (5), that Bill C-148, an act to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish and to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation be amended by these three amendments:

That Clause 3 (1) be amended by placing a semicolon after the word "province", on line 14 and by substituting a comma for a period after the word "years" and adding thereto the following:

"and shall be actively engaged in the fresh water fishing industry as fishermen".

That Clause 18 (1) be amended by striking out the word "may" in the first line thereof and substituting therefor the word "shall" and by adding after the word "Committee" in the last line thereof the following:

"and at least one-third of whom shall be actively engaged in the fresh water fishing industry as fishermen".

That Clause 17 be amended by adding thereto a new sub-clause (3) as follows:

"The accounts and financial transactions of the corporation shall be audited annually by the Auditor General".

I wish to make it very clear that we in this party are not opposing the legislation. During the various discussion stages of the bill we made certain recommendations which we thought would be helpful, but at no time have we registered direct opposition to the measure now before us. We are hopeful that some of the many problems faced by our inland fishermen will be resolved by the marketing corporation, and that the major goal of the corporation, which is to obtain a larger share of the export price and of the consumer price for the fishermen, will be realized. To date the Canadian inland fishermen, when selling their fish, have been in a relatively weak bargaining position, and if they did not like the prices offered for their fish all they could do was to threaten to quit. But this would have been an empty threat, for in many instances the fishermen have no other training and there are no other employment opportunities available to them. I am informed that this is especially true in the northern parts of Saskatchewan, in Manitoba, Alberta and in northern Ontario where the fishermen are mostly Indians and Métis.

The very remoteness of these fish producing areas has presented vast problems to this particular industry, and in my opinion this factor will continue to present a very thorny problem to the marketing corporation, which it will require all the ingenuity, imagination and resourcefulness of the president and his associates to surmount. According to the McIvor Commission report—a commission appointed in July of 1965 to bring in recommendations on this important industry—the fishermen in our inland freshwater fishing industry receive only some 50 to 60 per cent of the export price. It is the major task and responsibility of this marketing corporation to increase the percentage of return to our fishermen, otherwise this whole exercise—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must confess to the hon. member that it is not clear to me in what way what he is saying now relates to the amendment before the housing. As I see it, the amendment: "and shall be actively engaged in the fresh water fishing industry as fishermen" should be the subject of a limited debate in the house. The hon. member knows that there has already been a general debate on second reading and there will be another debate on third reading. If the rules are to be interpreted in such a way that there may be a third general debate at the report stage, I would think we will be heading into difficulty in the interpretation of the rules. So I invite the hon. member to limit his remarks within reason to the particular amendment now before the house.

Freshwater Fish Marketing Report

• (11:50 a.m.)

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I am endeavouring to do just that. I appreciate your comments and I shall try to relate my remarks to the amendment. It is my understanding that the government of Canada is setting up this marketing board, in co-operation with the provinces concerned, in order to assist the fishermen in the marketing of their products so that they received a better price. In my opinion, if this board is to meet with any measure of success, it will require the complete co-operation of all the fishermen concerned.

This is a statement of fact borne out by events in every other industry. If I may give an example, at the present time there is a slowdown in mail deliveries in the Post Office Department. When labour is unhappy over wages or terms of employment it goes on strike, and we see a complete shutdown of the particular industry.

For these reasons we believe that the inland fishermen must be guaranteed a place on the board of directors of this marketing corporation as well as on the advisory board of the corporation. There is no provision in the bill to guarantee that the fishermen will be represented on the board. In our view one way to make sure that the fishermen will be behind the board is to guarantee their representation on the board. After all, if things do not go according to plan it will be fishermen themselves who will be the most seriously affected.

These are not my views alone; they were endorsed by the Minister without Portfolio when he spoke before the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry on January 28. At one point he said that he is fully on record in the house a number of times as indicating there should be adequate representation from the fishermen's groups on the advisory committee. Even the McIvor Commission report recommends that the membership of the board provide adequate representation of regional interests. I submit that one can rightly interpret regional interests in this matter to be directly applicable to the fishermen concerned. For these reasons I hope that the government will give favourable consideration to our amendments concerning actual representation of fishermen on the board of directors, and on the advisory board of this corporation.

Finally, I wish to refer to the financial control of the corporation. Clause 15 of this bill provides that the corporation is to be a corporation within the meaning of the Financial Administration Act. Clause 16 provides that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) may make grants to the corporation up to $100,000 for initial operating and establishing expenses, while under clause 17 the governor in council may guarantee and make loans to the corporation up to $5 million. There is nothing in the bill—

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It has been brought to my attention that the hon. member may be referring at this time to the second or third amendment, although I am not too sure whether that is the fact. I would remind him that we should discuss the first amendment, so perhaps he would make his comments on the second and third amendments when they are reached, I hope later on today.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of your ruling, having placed my case before the minister for the appointment of fishermen to the board of directors and to the advisory board, I will have further comments to make on the third amendment after we dispose of the first two.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I shall try to confine my remarks to the substance of the amendment before us. I think the amendment is rather important, though I must confess, as it is written and as I try to relate it to the rest of clause 3, it is rather difficult to understand it clearly. Nevertheless, as I say, I believe it to be an important amendment, because if there is to be established a board of directors for this Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, I think it is essential and certainly worth while that at least some members of the board of directors be actively engaged in the industry itself.

As I construe the intent of the amendment moved by the previous speaker, the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), it would seem that he is proposing in the amendment that of the members of the board of directors, which consists of nine persons, four be appointed from among those who are actually fishermen. If that is the intent of the hon. member's amendment, I think it ought to be supported.

On the other hand, if he is going beyond that and suggesting that a majority of the members, or that every member except the chairman or president of the board be chosen from those engaged in fishing, then it would seem to me a rather impractical proposition. Therefore I will proceed on the assumption that the hon. member is suggesting that three or four members of the board of directors be selected from among those who are actively engaged in the industry as fishermen, and I would support the amendment on that basis.

I also think it is important that there at least be some representation of those engaged as fishermen on the board of directors, inasmuch as the board will, in a sense, be operating with and spending money that is really the fishermen's money. I understand that there will perhaps be an establishment grant in the order of $100,000 paid by the federal government and each of the three provinces, which will be contributing on a prorated basis, such as $50,000 federal and $25,000 from each of the three provinces, or some proportion of that sort.

Once the $100,000 establishment grant from the federal and provincial governments has been received, all of the operating expense of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board will come out of the proceeds of the corporation's operations, which in turn will be derived from the production of the fishermen themselves. Therefore, if the money of these fishermen is going to be spent in operating the board and paying its administrative costs and salaries, it seems only logical that the fishermen be granted some direct say at the board of directors level.

The minister may well reply that provision is made later on in the bill, in clause 18 or so, to enable the minister to establish an advisory board consisting of 14 or 15 persons. It may well be that the minister may want to select five, six, seven or eight of the 15 members of this advisory board from among those who are actually engaged in fishing. But it is interesting to note that there is nothing specific in the legislation that provides that the advisory board shall necessarily have fishermen-producers actually on the board. It seems to me that the minister would want to agree that the legislation should make some specific provision to include fishermen on the advisory board.

It may be that there will be a number of fishermen on the advisory board but I would insist that there be at least 2, 3 or 4, some small number such as that—I would not want to go beyond that figure for practical reasons—on the membership of the board of directors itself. I do not know what arguments the minister would advance in opposition to this amendment, but we shall soon find out.

• (12 noon)

I have also one further argument to advance in support of the contention that there be some fishermen among the membership of the board of directors. There is a tendency, human nature being what it is, for boards or administrative bodies to start making free with other people's money. We can see how that has happened with the Canadian Wheat Board. One can see it happening with boards of directors of private corporations. Once set up boards of directors or similar administrative bodies establish themselves in lavishly furnished headquarter offices and they do not stint on the trappings that go with administrative offices. I feel that such a tendency toward extravagance would be curtailed if on the board to be set up one or two actual producers or fishermen were included. Their presence on the board might restrain any tendency toward extravagance by other board members. I think this is a concrete argument, and I believe there should be provision in this bill for the inclusion of two or three producers or fishermen on the board to be set up.

I will say no more, Mr. Speaker, because I am interested to hear the remarks of the Minister without Portfolio. I hope he will support the amendment.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, if the minister rises now will he terminate debate?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is referring, of course, to a substantive motion moved by a minister on second reading or third reading. What is before the house at the moment is an amendment moved by an hon. member. Therefore the participation of the minister will not close debate.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the amendment before us was raised in committee and the committee decided, in its wisdom, against allowing it. I had the opportunity of commenting to the committee about the amendment, and I wish to say that our position at this time remains the same. The amendment is an undesirable one. The purposes of the corporation are of a commercial nature. Marketing is to be the corporation's prime objective. The possibility exists that the corporation may engage in many different facets of the fishing industry. It is therefore important that the men appointed to be directors should be chosen from the ranks of those who have had experience in operations of commerce. It is important for the participating provincial governments, which will appoint five of the directors, and for the federal government to have as much freedom of action as possible in appointing at any time persons most suited to undertake the work of directors. That freedom of action would be destroyed if the amendment were to carry. I am therefore opposed to the amendment.

I find difficulty in interpreting the words of the proposed amendment. Is it intended to exclude men who have recently been active fishermen but are not now engaged actively in fishing? If the amendment were to carry it would make much more difficult the appointment to the board of men qualified to handle the business of the corporation. The corporation is to be set up on the lines of a commercial venture and it is designed to serve the best interest of the fishermen themselves. I might add that I have had difficulty in finding line 14 of the clause referred to in the amendment. I presume line 6 is the line intended to be referred to.

Mr. Crouse: No. It is line 14 on the page if one begins counting at the top of the page.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I thank the hon. member for his explanation. We wish to be flexible in our choice of prospective directors. If the amendment were to carry we should lose that flexibility and eliminate the possibility of choosing exactly the right directors for the job. It is important for our fishermen that the board function adequately.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): It is important for hon. members to understand, Mr. Speaker, that under the legislation responsibility for fish marketing is to pass from the private sector of our community to a corporate body set up by various governments. The amendment provides that on the body to be set up there shall be fishermen representative of Canada. Fishermen from various parts of Canada will be asked to serve on the board.

As the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) indicated, the amendment before the house was one of the amendments moved in committee. It did not pass in committee. I will not take up the time of the house by explaining in detail what happened in committee; it is enough for me to say that if hon. members read the committee proceedings they will see how totally inadequate is our present committee stage in the legislative process.

The proposed amendment seeks to make certain that active fishermen are appointed to the board. The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) said, "Oh, you can take my word for it. On this corporate body there will be representatives of fishermen. I give you my guarantee that this will be so." We wanted a commitment of this kind from the minister so that the fishermen of Ontario, the prairie provinces and other parts of Canada would know they are going to be represented on the corporate body. As I say, the minister gave his word, or we interpreted his remarks to mean that he had given his word. In view of that commitment we thought the minister would support the amendment that has been moved. Unfortunately, in the discussions before the committee on this point we learned that the government does not intend to appoint fishermen to the board. We learned that they want on this corporate body people who are experts in marketing, in commercial aspects of fisheries, in finance, negotiations and so on. Although he had given his word, the minister turned around and argued that there was a need to appoint experts to the board and that fishermen might not be able to fulfil the requirements.

Another point which was raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) was that fishermen were not well enough educated to occupy positions on the board. That remark left me thunderstruck. I was really taken by surprise.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a question of privilege?

Mr. Speaker: Before I hear the hon. member on a question of privilege I must warn the hon. member who now has the floor that he cannot review in the house the debate that took place in committee. This would further complicate matters. It is elementary to the rules of this house that we cannot have a duplication here of proceedings which took place in committee. Having said this, I will allow the hon. member to state his question of privilege.

• (12:10 p.m.)

Mr. Osler: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is very difficult to present correctly something out of context. I think the point at issue at the moment is the definition of a licensed fisherman. It would be possible for a group of semi-literate fishermen in a far away community to fall into the hands of unscrupulous representatives who had taken a licence. I was in no way reflecting on the intelligence of the fishermen.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member this is not a question of privilege but a point of debate, and he will have the opportunity to take part in the debate later if he so wishes.

Mr. Baldwin: On the point of order Your Honour raised in regard to the question of the debate in the committee, I do not think this is the time to debate the point of order involved in the ruling by Your Honour. I think your point of view is quite correct, but I would point out that one of the possibilities envisaged at the time the new rules were introduced and debated in the house was that on the report stage an amendment might be moved by reason of certain discussions and statements made in the standing committee. In other words, an amendment such as the house is now considering may have to be based upon certain aspects of the proceedings in the standing committee. The direct point Your Honour made is of course quite acceptable, but we hope it will not rule out the possibility for a member of this house, in moving an amendment at the report stage, to base his support for the amendment on certain facts disclosed in the standing committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I join with the hon. member for Peace River in asking Your Honour to study this matter in the event it arises again, as I am sure it will. An amendment moved and defeated in the standing committee can be moved at the report stage; surely that should carry with it the right to put forward the same arguments here in the house. I recognize Your Honour's view that we should not revive debate on extraneous matters, but in the old days bills went to the standing committee and then came back to Committee of the Whole. It was a very common practice to read evidence from the minutes of proceedings and evidence in an attempt to win a point in the house which had been made and perhaps lost in the standing committee.

I think the general proposition which Your Honour is making is valid. Debate should not be revived, but I would hope this would not rule out the right to read evidence in the house from the minutes of proceedings and evidence, when necessary, to support an argument. Your Honour is perfectly right in trying to keep us to the subject matter of the proposed amendments, but surely arguments related to those amendments should be in order.

Mr. Lundrigan: I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that both hon. gentlemen took the words right out out of my mouth on that last point. I think it is in order for me to make reference to the point about the level of education of fishermen. So as not to misquote the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre I will quote from page 218, report No. 11 of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry:

> I am not a specialist in fishing, but as a tourist going to the fishing areas I see the quality of education of many of these people and I submit that there would be a danger in stipulating exactly how many people had to be on the advisory committee—

This was an indication by him that there was a lack of education and this was his argument against utilizing people in an advisory capacity from the fishing sector of the population. I am sure all hon. members who are interested in the welfare of the fishermen of Canada are in favour of this amendment. It is a refutation of the argument of expertise presented by the minister and other hon. members.

On page 4 of Bill C-148 there is an indication of the purposes and powers of the proposed corporate body, which go far beyond the level of expertise that would indicate that the people in question would have to be marketing experts and financiers. The terms of reference of the corporation include everything from taking the fish from the fisherman's boat to putting it on the plates of the consumer. This is the whole gambit of the fishing operation. The only thing in which the corporation is not involved is the actual catching of the fish. Clause 7(a) states that the purpose of the corporation is to:

> —buy fish and dress, fillet, freeze, package or otherwise prepare fish for market;

This is an indication of a process which is a far cry from the type of expertise which the minister indicated in his argument. Clause 7(b) states:

> —buy, manufacture or produce fish products and fish by-products and package or otherwise prepare fish products and fish by-products for market;

All eight subclauses of clause 7 indicate that the purposes of the corporation takes in the whole gambit of the fishing operation. My contention is that fishermen occupy a very important segment of the total fishing operation in that they are the people who are expert in the actual catching of the product and bringing it to the point of departure for market. I contend this is the most important sector.

One of the biggest problems in the fishing industry in Canada is the fact we have not taken the advice of people expert in certain aspects of the fishing operation, people whose livelihood depends on it. Hon. members from the Atlantic region have seen indications of government officials going to fishing communities and having break-waters constructed without regard to the benefits to be derived from these structures by the people who will use them. These programs have not been based on a knowledge of the industry and have been set up without ascertaining what is necessary.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, practically every person engaged in the total fishing operation will in one way or another play an active role in the corporation. I think the intent of the government is to have the fishermen now involved in the trade become employees of the corporation. There will be tradesmen, financiers and marketing experts on the board. The only people completely left out are the people for whom this legislation is designed, the fishermen of Canada.

I know that hon. members have been chit-chatting back and forth ever since I began my remarks. If I had the privilege I would like to point out exactly what took place in the standing committee, but I know that to do so would take up the time of the house. I could show exactly the kind of flimsy arguments that were advanced by the minister and some of his colleagues against having fishermen on the board. We challenge the minister to present us with any indication of a sound argument against having these people on the board. He has said that we can take his word for it that the government is interested in the fishermen and in hearing their views. We ask him to give us proof of that in this legislation by accepting the amendment. We will then be happy with the minister's word.

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add a few words of support to the argument in favour of the amendment. This amendment, if accepted, will ensure representation of the fishermen on the board of directors. It is a straightforward matter. The fishermen will have to co-operate with this new board and unless they do so the board will not function properly. The way to get it to function properly is to have fishermen appointed to it.

When the minister introduced the bill, and again during the deliberations of the standing committee, he guaranteed that fishermen would be represented on the board. If there is such a guarantee why can we not put it down in writing? I think the government is convinced that there is no fisherman capable of handling the job. I am convinced the government is not serious when the minister says he can guarantee that fishermen will be on the board. A moment ago he said this was an undesirable amendment. Is it undesirable to have fishermen represented on the board?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would like the record to show that the hon. member is referring to a conversation in the committee. The commitment we discussed in the standing committee was in relation to the advisory committee and not in relation to the board which the hon. member is now talking about.

Mr. Comeau: I accept the minister's excuse but I point out that when we introduced a similar amendment with respect to the advisory committee the same arguments were advanced against it. I submit that the minister has no real excuse for not accepting this amendment other than that the government and its members on the standing committee do not want to accept any reasonable amendment brought forward by the opposition.

I hope hon. members will have read the evidence printed in the 11th volume of the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry before voting on the amendment. It was very obvious in the standing committee, and it is again very obvious today, that the government does not want to ensure that fishermen will be represented. I honestly feel it will be a mistake not to accept this amendment.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite certain that I would like to be tied to the specifics of the amendment but it seems strange that the legislation does not guarantee that some of the persons who produce the particular product involved, in this case fish, will be represented on the board. If for some reason the country found it necessary to socialize the services of lawyers and if a board were formed to look after the payment of lawyers and the act establishing the board did not provide for lawyers to be represented on it,

I think the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) would find it very strange indeed.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): There might not be any lawyers left.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I would ask the minister to consider the matter in that light. I am a primary producer and I know that a similar matter has been a bone of contention with farmers for some time past. When a man is involved in an area of primary production for a lifetime or half a lifetime he picks up an education that an expert on marketing may miss.

As another illustration I cite the discussion we had in the house the other day on the appointment of a transport controller to expedite the movement of grain. A practical producer on the government side of the house and practical producers on this side of the house suggested that something like this should be done. But the Minister without Portfolio, who had not been involved in this matter, and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) said it should not be done. It does not seem rational.

If the Minister without Portfolio would introduce an amendment guaranteeing fishermen the right to representation on the board I might withdraw my support for the present amendment, but if he is not going to write into the legislation that the producers of this product shall be represented on the board and if he is not willing to recognize the fact that producers of this product have a right to such representation, then I question his good judgment and the good judgment of the government. It is a reflection on the fishermen that they should not have a right to representation on the board. It is the ultimate insult for these people not to be represented. For this reason I support the amendment.

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak against the amendment. The purpose of this board is to market fish. The object of setting it up is to improve the position of the fishermen by making, we hope, better and more successful efforts to market fish. We know full well that our fishermen are successful in catching fish because if they were not we would not have the problem of marketing and selling we are facing now. Therefore we need the best possible people on this board to do the job for which we are setting it up, which is to market fish.

So far as the proposal that all four of the federal appointees should be actively engaged in fishing is concerned—I think this is what the amendment seeks—this obviously would not serve the purpose which we are attempting to serve with this bill. The federal government will have only these four appointees on the board. To provide that they should all come from a particular profession which is not essentially the profession that can best help the board, in other words, the fishing rather than the marketing profession, would be a negative and retrogressive step. Quite clearly, if we want this board to function properly and want to be successful in selling fish we must make sure the best possible group of people are on the board.

The minister has assured the house that an active fisherman or fishermen will certainly be appointed to the board. But to restrict him entirely to members of this profession would be a mistake. Members of this profession certainly could add a great deal to the deliberations of the board, and it is for this reason the Minister of Fisheries intends to appoint members of this profession to the board. But I believe it would be absurd to tie his hands and make it impossible for him to appoint a man who, for example, is expert in the field of selling freshwater fish or a man who has devoted his life to marketing. This would not serve the interests of the fishermen, it would not make this board effective, and in the long run it would probably make this legislation ineffective. I am not saying that fishermen cannot understand the problems of marketing and I am not saying that they should be kept off this board, but I am saying that in the matter of marketing we need people who are expert in that field.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question? Has be read in detail the terms of reference of the corporate body to be established? The terms of reference set out the power and purpose of the marketing board. The minister and the hon. member have done the same thing; they have misrepresented the purpose of the marketing board. The purpose is not only to market fish. If the hon. member will read the purpose and powers he will see that the board will be doing everything but cook the darned stuff.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wishes I could read the purpose as stated in the bill. Perhaps this would be acceptable to him, and I believe it is necessary. Had he read the bill himself he would not have to ask me to read it for him. The hon. member asked me specifically about the purpose. Here is what is set out:

The Corporation is established for the purpose of marketing and trading—

"Marketing and trading" are the words used there.

—in fish, fish products and fish by-products in and out of Canada—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would invite the hon. member to return to the specific issue before us at the moment which is the amendment.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the hon. member who has just spoken does not know, but I believe most people in this house know the purpose of the bill. Perhaps this is the reason he has made an error in his attitude toward the bill. He does not understand the purpose and therefore does not understand who should be on the board.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Again I would remind the hon. member that we have before us a specific amendment. I would invite him to restrict his remarks to that amendment.

Mr. Lundrigan: May I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker? I suggest it might be in order to allow the hon. member to continue because what he is saying points up the arrogant attitude some people have toward this measure.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for being the cause of your displeasure. I recommend to every member of the house that he read the purpose and powers which are set out on page 4. The amendment would completely tie the hands of the Minister of Fisheries in respect of appointments. If, for instance, each province decided to appoint someone to this board from the fishing industry it would then be impossible for the federal government to appoint marketing experts to the board. One can see the problem with which the minister would be faced if he did not have control over the appointments. If the provinces decided to appoint experts in fishing as opposed to experts in fish marketing, it would then fall upon the federal Minister of Fisheries to rectify the composition of the board in order to restore the balance and make sure that experts in the field of marketing were appointed to the board.

I could go into this matter at length but I believe the point is relatively simple. It destroys the arguments in respect of the need for the amendment. I shall therefore sit down, but before doing so I would urge all members to vote against this amendment.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, may I say that last week the fisheries committee met for a total of five hours. Report No. 11 contains the evidence taken at that committee. A number of hon. members were on that committee, not including the hon. gentleman who just spoke. We deliberated for five hours before that committee the purpose of this legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member does have a point of privilege, possibly he would get to it quickly.

Mr. Lundrigan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is necessary that I point out the background in order to establish the point of privilege. The hon. member said that I do not understand the purpose of the legislation. We spent five hours before the committee on that matter and the hon. member was not even present.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon).

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. I was not present at the meeting of the committee on that day because I had been taken off in view of the fact that I was in my riding on the west coast. I did, however, take the opportunity to look at the evidence taken before the committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It might be in the interests of our deliberations on this bill if we heard the hon. member for Lambton-Kent.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure my contribution will be that great but I appreciate the introduction. I am a little concerned about one matter. Is this a social measure or is the corporation to be a true marketing board? If it is the latter, then I feel that this amendment certainly should be welcomed by hon. members. Just because a person happens to be a fisherman, I see no reason that he should be precluded from being a member of this corporation. Indeed, I think some members from the trade definitely should be on this body. My point is that the general statement of the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) that there will be fishermen on this corporation would not mean anything in a court of law. If he has in the back of his mind that there should be fisherfolk appointed to the corporation, then I see no reason that he should object to the addition of a couple of practical fishermen at least.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak very briefly on the amendment being proposed at this time. I have no hesitation in supporting the amendment 100 per cent. For many years I have said that we have too many governmental agencies on which there are no practical people. As time goes on the gap becomes wider and wider. I believe the amendment is quite in order and should be supported by members on both sides of the house because it tries to spell out the idea that we must have practical people on this body.

It has been suggested that the fishermen are capable of catching the fish but cannot be of assistance in marketing it. I am sure the hon. member who made that statement should realize, if he does not, that in every industry there are practical people who actually are doing the work in that industry. These people make themselves aware of the problems affecting their industry. I am sure the same holds true in the fishing industry as in the building industry, the transportation industry or anything else. There are some very excellent people in this industry who have as much expert knowledge in the field of marketing as any university graduate. I respectfully suggest that in this case many individuals could be named, I am sure, by members from the Atlantic provinces, who could do an excellent job in marketing.

It is not in keeping with what we know to be the facts in this country for any member to suggest that the government must have absolute authority in the making of these appointments. The minister has suggested that this amendment might limit his choice of individuals. The bill spells out very clearly how many people will be on the board of directors. I am sure there is ample scope to choose some members from among people who are experts in fishing. The four additional members, as the amendment suggests, should be actively engaged in the freshwater fishing industry as fishermen. This does not necessarily mean individuals who go out with nets and lines, but it does mean that they must be actively engaged in the industry at the time of appointment, doing exactly those things which give them knowledge of the industry with which they are concerned.

I suggest that the amendment does not attach strings to this part of the bill as the minister suggests. It spells out that there must be people on the board with practical knowledge of the industry. I do not suggest for one minute that the university graduates who invariably end up in these positions are not qualified. However, on a number of occasions in the agricultural industry we have experienced the appointment of people to particular positions who were not qualified in a practical way and could not keep track of what was taking place in the industry at a particular time.

The proposed clause 3 indicates that these individuals shall be appointed for a period not exceeding five years. This makes it very clear that the people appointed by the Governor in Council are not permanent. If they are not doing their jobs they can be removed, and I suggest that if they do not do the job they should be removed. Very often people are appointed to commissions and boards who are unable to represent the industry they are appointed to represent. Very often they continue in their positions, for reasons with which we are all familiar. I urge members on both sides of the house to accept this amendment which will not undermine in any way the authority of the minister in charge of this department.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I find it very difficult to understand why the government cannot accept this amendment, particularly in view of the fact the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis), during meetings of the committee that studied this bill, gave assurance that the fishermen would be represented on the board. What happens when the minister leaves his present portfolio? Perhaps he might be moved to a portfolio more suited to his talents. We may have a new minister of fisheries who would not have the same regard for the representation of fishermen on the board. In view of the minister's attitude it is difficult to understand why the government refuses to accept this reasonable amendment which merely ensures that people who are actively engaged in the industry will have some say and influence as to how the fruits of their labour will be marketed.

The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) referred to the fact that fishermen were successful at catching fish, in fact, too successful because this board had to be created. He implied that all fishermen are good for is catching fish. I suggest to the hon. member that this is an outmoded concept.

Mr. Anderson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McGrath: I did not interrupt the hon. member when he was making his speech.

Mr. Anderson: I rise on a point of order. I appreciate that I was not interrupted by the hon. member while I was making my speech, but on the other hand I did not refer to him as he has done to me. I did not state that fishermen are incapable of doing anything else. I think they are capable of doing other things and doing them well, but I say they are extremely successful at fishing. Marketing seems to be an area in which we have not had the same success, and that is the reason for this bill.

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member did make the suggestion from which I drew that inference. He went on to refer to the amendment as a negative and retrogressive step. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the attitude of the government toward this amendment is both negative and retrogressive. This concept is no longer accepted. It is outmoded to think that fishermen are merely good at catching fish and no good for anything else. It is a shameful concept and a shameful thing for a member of the government party to suggest. This is what the government is suggesting by refusing to accept this amendment.

The hon. gentleman, in trying to defend the government's attitude, went on to say that the government has to ensure that we get the best possible people on this board. Is he suggesting that fishermen are less than the best possible people? Surely they know more about fishing than anyone else. Who would know more about the marketing of fish or the people who buy fish than those actively engaged in the industry?

I suggest that on reflection the hon. member will wish he had not said these things. If he came from the Atlantic provinces he certainly would not have said them. Perhaps he said them because he comes from the province of British Columbia where the industry is operated on a different basis. Otherwise it is difficult to understand why he would put the proposition forward that fishermen are not capable or qualified to participate in the functions or deliberations of this board.

I am becoming increasingly suspicious about the government's preoccupation with experts and computers. We saw an example of what experts can do in respect of the refitting of the Bonaventure. We can well do without that kind of expertise.

I regret to note that the Minister of Fisheries, the Minister without Portfolio and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) are absent, but we are pleased to have the house leader here. Perhaps after consultation with the Minister without Portfolio, who has the responsibility of piloting this bill through, they might have a change of heart, having listened to the debate in the house and examined the report of the committee. Perhaps as reasonable men they might come to the conclusion that this is a reasonable proposition, a reasonable amendment, and that only an unreasonable government would reject it.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker, I should like—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must remind the hon. member for Lambton-Kent that he has already spoken and has the right to speak only once. Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. McGrath: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Crouse) negatived.

• (12:50 p.m.)

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre) moved:

That clause 13 be amended by adding the words "or in the immediate vicinity thereof" immediately following the word "Winnipeg".

He said: This is a terribly controversial clause, Mr. Speaker. I anticipate at least as many fireworks between the members from the east coast and those from the west coast who happen to sit on opposite sides of the house, because I know that both groups would covet the privilege of having the head office of this corporation in their own areas so they would get to know many of the fine fishermen who we are assured will be board members.

The decision was made that the head office of this corporation would be in the city of Winnipeg. It was pointed out that the words "the city of Winnipeg" were highly restrictive in that the head office of the board would be confined to the centre core of the city. This amendment was designed in order that this would not be the case. It would amend the bill so that the metropolitan city of Winnipeg, the finest city of Canada, the heartland of the country—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Osler: —would be eligible for this head office.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, how could I keep my seat after those wonderful words about the great city of Winnipeg? Like the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler), I represent the city of Winnipeg itself and I suppose I should therefore adopt a parochial position and say that the head office should be in the core of my city. But I think it does make sense that the head office should be located in the Winnipeg area; for example, it might even be located as far north as Selkirk. I wonder whether the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre could ask someone on his behalf, since he has spoken, to be a little more specific as to the meaning of the words "in the immediate vicinity". What is "immediate"; what is "vicinity"? I also ask the—

Mr. Osler: Are you suspicious?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes. Anything that comes from that side makes me suspicious. I have been here a while.

An hon. Member: That is a mutual feeling.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Friday is a good day, is it not, Mr. Speaker? Perhaps the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) can tell us what is in mind in this respect. I realize that the amendment has been moved by a private backbencher, but it looks as though it has government support. Perhaps the minister can explain what is meant by the wording. Where does the government intend that this board shall have its head office?

Mr. Orange: Hay River.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipge North Centre): I thought "vicinity" was very wide.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, in rising following the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) I am pleased to venture into the realm of legal interpretation for him. I am happy to say that I support this amendment, that I see it as having a good degree of wisdom, according to my interpretation of it. The clause, as it stood originally, may have read rather restrictively as including not even all of Winnipeg as we generally know it, since the words "the city of Winnipeg" may have had a technical meaning rather narrower than the general, geographic area of metropolitan Winnipeg.

It is with that interpretation that I am pleased to see this amendment which will give the board of the corporation the discretion to locate the office in that general area. I would like to assure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that I see nothing in the amendment to indicate any distant move of the head office from the centre of Winnipeg.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my comments on this amendment will be very brief. I listened with interest to the words of the mover of the amendment as well as those of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Just to show how reasonable we on this side of the house are, we have absolutely no objection to this amendment and it is our intention to support it, as we hope members on the government side will support the other two amendments that will be dealt with after lunch.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Just one sentence, Mr. Speaker. I, too, will support the amendment, but I must say to the government that it really constitutes a most inadequate exchange for taking away the Air Canada facilities.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I also support the amendment in the same way as the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse). This shows our reasonableness. Our reasonableness was indicated in the committee when some of my colleagues voted against an amendment which I moved. I would like this attitude of reasonableness to be regarded as a precedent by all hon. members. Also, I would accept in principle any move on the part of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) which will help offset the supercilious remarks made about the illiteracy of the fishermen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion.

Amendment (Mr. Osler) agreed to.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): One o'clock.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore) moved:

That Clause 17 be amended by adding thereto new subclause (3) as follows:

"The accounts and financial transactions of the Corporation shall be audited annually by the Auditor General."

He said: Mr. Speaker, my comments this afternoon will be directed to Bill C-148, an act to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, with special reference to the financial control of the corporation.

Clause 15 of the bill, for example, provides that the corporation is to be a corporation within the meaning of the Financial Administration Act. Clause 16 provides that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) may make grants to the corporation not exceeding in the aggregate $100,000 to enable the corporation to meet initial operating and establishment expenses, while under clause 17 the Governor in Council may authorize the Minister of Finance to guarantee and make loans to the corporation up to an amount which shall not exceed $5 million.

There is nothing in the bill, which I have read from cover to cover, about the books to be kept or who is responsible for the preparation of financial statements or who is responsible for auditing the accounts of the corporation. In the absence of any direction in the act, section 85 of the Financial Administration Act leaves the financial statements of the Crown corporation subject to such directions as to form as the Treasury Board may give, and states under section 77 (1) that where no provision has been made in any act for the appointment of an auditor the Governor in Council shall designate someone to serve as auditor.

I believe that the question therefore arises whether the Auditor General is to be appointed the sole auditor or a joint auditor in accordance with the recommendations made by the Public Accounts Committee in its eighth report of 1964-65. I hope that the government will agree that it would be in the best interests of parliament in its control of public funds if the Auditor General were empowered to audit the accounts of all the Crown corporations, agencies and other public bodies which are owned or controlled by the Crown and report thereon to the house.

It is for this reason, therefore, that I move, seconded by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan), that the following amendment be incorporated into the act to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish and to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation:

That clause 17 be amended by adding thereto new subclause (3) as follows:

"The accounts and financial transactions of the Corporation shall be audited annually by the Auditor General."

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, it is with some regret that I rise to say that I am opposed to the amendment because I am certainly not opposed to the general sentiment and spirit of the mover of the amendment as recently expressed. Indeed, under the existing provisions of the bill, without this amendment it is a very likely possibility that the Auditor General will in fact be appointed to be the auditor of the corporation. In the absence of the amendment as now proposed, section 77 (1) of the Financial Administration Act applies and allows the Governor in Council to designate a person to audit the accounts and financial transactions of the corporation. The Auditor General is eligible to be the auditor or joint auditor. This means that the result desired by the amendment may—and I emphasize the word "may"—be accomplished under the existing bill without the amendment.

• (2:10 p.m.)

The difficulty with the amendment lies really in a double proposition. First, the government would like to have the advice of the directors of the corporation and its managers before making a final decision in regard to this matter. The other part of the proposition, and the reason for the first part, is that it is very possible, in terms of present considerations in connection with the operations of the corporation, that various commercial accountants will have to be engaged by the corporation, especially in the early phases of its operation, to deal with many parts of its operations. It may well be most desirable at that time to use similar services in connection with auditing.

Therefore it is not because of any opposition to the general spirit of the remarks of the mover but because of the desirability of flexibility that I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this amendment. I support in principle what the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) is seeking, namely, that the auditing of the accounts and transactions of this board should be carried out by the Auditor General. I hope that the word that has now come from the minister will result in that choice being made.

If the government is opposed to the amendment there is not much chance of its being carried this afternoon, so I shall have to content myself with making the plea that the choice of the government for this particular job should be the Auditor General. I recognize that auditors are auditors, that they all do a good job. But I also know that there is a difference in the kind of report that we get from the Auditor General of Canada when he does an audit compared with the kind of report that we get from private auditing firms for some of the Crown corporations or bodies that are associated with government operations.

For example, when we get a report from one of these auditing firms, what does it say? I do not have one in front of me, but I can tell hon. members fairly accurately what it says: "We have audited the accounts and we have checked all the records and are satisfied that everything is in order, sincerely yours", and then appears the name of the company. I cannot recall any report from a private firm of auditors going into the kind of detail into which the Auditor General enters when he does an audit. That is the reason I think it is better that any concern which is making use of public money in any way, even by way of a loan or on the basis of a government guarantee, should be subjected to that kind of audit.

I accept the minister's statement that he is not going to support this amendment, and therefore it is not going to carry. But I hope that when the time comes for the Governor in Council or the Treasury Board to make a decision as to who will be the auditor, the choice will be the Auditor General of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those in favour of the proposed amendment please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those opposed to the amendment please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Crouse: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Crouse) negatived.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore) moved:

That clause 18 (1) be amended by striking out the word "may" in the first line thereof and substituting therefor the word "shall" and by adding after the word "Committee" in the last line thereof the following:

"and at least one-third of whom shall be actively engaged in the freshwater fishing industry as fishermen."

He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving this amendment my simple purpose is to ensure that the Governor in Council will appoint an advisory committee to assist the president and directors in their deliberations and advise on policy. As I stated previously, I believe that the advisory board is not going to function in a satisfactory manner unless there is representation on the board from the primary producers. There is nothing in the bill to guarantee that fishermen will be represented on this board.

In our opinion this marketing board has been proposed at the provincial and federal government levels. To date there is very little evidence to indicate the attitude of the primary producers toward this proposal. However, in order to be effective I believe that the board must have the unqualified support of all the fishermen in the vast area that is covered by this program. And it is a vast area, encompassing northern Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Northwest Territories.

In my view there is no better way to encourage the fishermen to get behind the board than by guaranteeing them representation on the advisory committee. By moving to amend the advisory committee clause of the bill, which calls for not more than 15 members, we are stating our belief that at least one-third of the members of the advisory board should be fishermen. I hope that the government will give favourable consideration to this amendment.

We have heard it said that it may not be possible to secure qualified fishermen to serve in this capacity. This type of argument is facetious, for our fishermen have been co-operating with the packers and shippers for many years. They have assisted them in handling the catch. I think it would be a distinct loss to the president and the directors of this new marketing corporation if the skill and expertise of these men were lost to the board. After all, these are the people who will be primarily affected if the marketing corporation is not as successful as we hope it will be. Surely it is not asking too much that they be given some say in the control and management of their own affairs.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, in regard to this amendment I think a more logical case could be made for representation of the fishermen on the committee than in the case of the last amendment, with regard to which the government could argue that, after all, there had to be some expertise, some commercial know-how, people with degrees, to do a proper job. Surely it can be legitimately said that those who are actually engaged in the industry should be allowed to have their say on the advisory committee. If the government picks the membership of the board, the board could well turn down any advice given to it by those involved in the fishing industry itself.

The attitude taken by government speakers in relation to the last amendment tempts me to believe that they think that the government knows best, even in fishing matters. I have the feeling that big brother is watching them, that big brother is telling them what to do, and this is why they are treating the fishermen in this fashion. We all know that our farmers have suffered somewhat from the misadventures of government boards, and I cannot help but feel that those boards would have avoided making many of their mistakes had they listened to the farmers' advice. If we had sought advice from the farmers we would not now face the present mess in Vancouver in respect of grain sales.

• (2:20 p.m.)

In the field we are now considering advice ought to be sought from those who have practical experience. You can have all the degrees you want, you can know a great deal about many subjects, but it is better for you to be qualified in some practical aspect of the fishing industry—notice, Mr. Speaker, that I said "qualified"—before being appointed to the board. The minister and the government ought to give active fishermen the right to be on the board. Those fishermen ought to be able to express the desires, feelings and wishes of fishermen in general about the sale of their products, which will be the concern of this government marketing board.

[Mr. Crouse.]

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the debate and the minister's replies to the remarks of hon. members who have proposed various amendments. I find it difficult to understand why the government is reticent to accept this amendment. The minister said it is very likely that there will be fishermen on the board and it is very likely that the Auditor General will audit the books of the board. That means nothing; that is a general statement of the minister. I should prefer to see enshrined in this legislation the right of fishermen to be members of the board.

I return once more to a thought I expressed when this measure was first introduced. Is this just another welfare state social measure or is the government setting up a true marketing board? If it is to be a true marketing board, why are people with practical experience not to be included on it? How many other marketing boards dealing with other commodities exclude from their membership those who have had practical experience? If this is to be a straight, out and out social welfare scheme, then let us follow up our thinking by appointing to the board academics with no practical knowledge of fishing. If it is to be a true marketing board, then I wish to see enshrined in the legislation the right of those with practical fishing experience to be on it.

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate why the hon. member moved the amendment and I wish to congratulate him for taking considerable interest in the fishing industry. I think that the remarks of hon. members, both before and after lunch, indicate that we need in the legislation specific provision for fishermen or representatives of fishermen actually engaged in the catching of fish to be on the advisory committee. This morning I spoke of the need for members of the board itself to be experts in marketing; my remarks now pertain to the advisory committee, which is not quite the same as the main board.

I am glad to see that the hon. member who moved the amendment has returned to the house. Would he accept a subamendment? My subamendment would insert after the word "be" in the clause "shall be actively engaged in the fresh-water fishing industry as fishermen" the words "persons or representatives of persons." I think we agree that fishermen should have full representation on both the advisory board and the full board. The minister made this clear many times. If the hon. member who moved the amendment genuinely feels that there may be insufficient representation of fishermen's interests on this board, I hope he will accept my amendment to his amendment and make it possible to appoint people who, while not necessarily actively engaged in fishing, could be representative of those who are so engaged.

I do not think it is necessary to restrict appointments only to those who are actively engaged in fishing. A man may have been a successful fisherman for a number of years and then gone into some other phase of the fishing industry such as marketing. He could make an important contribution on the advisory board. I feel that by permitting the words "persons or representatives of persons" to be inserted after the words "and shall be", the aspirations of the hon. member who moved the amendment would be satisfied and the problem would be met adequately. As the wording of the amendment now stands a man who was an expert fisherman but is no longer engaged in fishing would be excluded from the advisory board. Such a man could not be appointed to the board. If a vacancy had to be filled we should have to go back to the fishing fleet and find another fisherman. I think my subamendment might meet the difficulty. I wonder whether the hon. member who moved the amendment would accept my subamendment.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker,—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for South Shore has already spoken and will need unanimous consent to take part in the debate again.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich. Inasmuch as under the new rules there is a requirement that any amendment to be moved must be tabled 24 hours before the bill is dealt with by the house, I wonder whether the subamendment is in order. Aside from that, I should like to see a copy of the subamendment so that I can compare it with the original amendment and understand what we are discussing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I must refer the hon. member for South Shore and other hon. members to Standing Order 75(8) which reads as follows:

> When the order of the day for the consideration of a report stage is called, any amendment of which notice has been given in accordance with section (5) of this order shall be open to debate and amendment.

Consequently the subamendment suggested by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich is in order and may be moved at this time.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to all hon. members for not circulating a copy of the subamendment. If hon. members will turn to the second last page of the order paper they will see at the top of the page the amendment moved by the hon. member for South Shore. That amendment reads:

> —and shall be actively engaged in the freshwater fishing industry as fishermen.

My suggestion is that certain words be added after the word "be". I am sorry, but I shall have to ask Your Honour to read the subamendment. I have given you my only copy.

• (2:30 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The amendment will now read as follows:

> —and at least one-third of whom shall be persons or representatives of persons actively engaged in the freshwater fishing industry as fishermen.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): It comes as a great surprise and welcome relief, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) in consultation with the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) has finally consented to accept our proposed subamendment. It means that five hours deliberation in committee and a tremendous amount of prior work have not been wasted. This is the sort of thing for which we have been pressing.

As the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) indicated earlier this afternoon, the reasons for this amendment are more evident now than when first presented. It sometimes takes a little longer for people who are not exposed to the fishing industry to realize the importance of these things. I am happy to support the amendment. It will now be easier for fishing organizations or unions and their representatives to become involved. The fact the minister has changed his mind is an indication there may be more constructive deliberations on matters pertaining to the welfare of people in various parts of Canada. On page

213 of report No. 11 of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry the minister said:

> To designate certain persons as representing a certain interest is apt to produce the wrong atmosphere and attitude on the board.

In his commentary the minister stated he was in favour of having fishermen on the board.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Will the hon. member permit a question? The hon. member has referred to the minister's statement. Would he indicate whether he was talking about the board as such referred to in clause 7 of Bill C-148 or whether he was referring to the advisory board?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I have to get this in order. The subamendment should be put first. It is moved by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, seconded by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, that the amendment be amended by inserting therein, after the word "be", the following words:

"persons or representatives of persons".

Mr. Lundrigan: I am prepared to refrain from commenting until we vote on the subamendment. It is my understanding that we can debate the amendment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The motion as amended.

Mr. Lundrigan: The minister posed a question, Mr. Speaker. The minister asked to which board I was referring, the advisory board or the corporate body. I will clarify this for him. The comments I have been making are in relation to the minister's statement on the advisory board. It is my understanding this is what the amendment is about. We would like the minister to write into the proposed legislation that fishermen will be represented on the board. This would give a guarantee to the fishermen of Canada that they are worthy of political involvement in this great participatory democracy at this point in time. The minister said, "You have my word this will be done." Later I felt the minister did not really mean that. I quote again from the minister's remarks at page 213 of report No. 11:

> To designate certain persons as representing a certain interest is apt to produce the wrong atmosphere and attitude on the board. I would not really want to see six people coming there and saying: "I am the fishermen's representative and those guys are for someone else." I think that is the wrong approach. The men who are on the board are to advise the industry as a whole, not to be representative of a particular interest, but to have a background that makes some good representatives on the advisory committee. I think that is a matter of general issue.

At one time the minister indicated these people should be on the board and at another time that it would be wrong. I am happy that the minister and the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich have realized these people are necessary on the board, that they do have expertise in their own right, are aware of problems involved in the fishing industry and are capable of advising the academics who make political decisions which are now costing $13.6 million as shown in the estimates.

I think there will be more confidence in the corporation which may have an effect on prices in the fishing industry. I feel greater benefits will accrue to the people doing the greatest amount of work to produce the primary product. I am certain hon. members will support this amendment, which was defeated in committee and about which some hon. members were annoyed. Apparently the same amendment is now being accepted by these hon. members. Those who made disparaging remarks about the fishermen of Canada should now go on record and say they misunderstood. I am not going to speak any longer. I would just like to say I am happy hon. members have seen the light.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): I am not really surprised, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) is not familiar with the attitude of the committee which discussed this bill clause by clause. Because of the atmosphere after the first couple of hours the hon. member walked out in high dudgeon.

He referred to a general principle which I still think to be a good and general point of wisdom. However, it is perhaps not the most important one and indeed he might have noted it was the last point of several to be made in connection with the earlier debate. Several of the earlier points showed up as changes in the form of the amendment which was proposed to the house on the order paper. The difficulty with any amendment of this form frequently lies in choosing words which will not in fact create technical difficulties. I think the words which have now been proposed by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) are satisfactory in this regard and this, with the other changes which were made by the hon. member for South Shore before placing his amendment on the order paper, produces a satisfactory result.

The main point in going forward with the inclusion of this provision in the bill is that whereas during the committee I had expected hon. members opposite would accept the commitment which had been made about representation of fishermen on the board—and I dare say most hon. members opposite would so accept it—it became clear that some hon. members were not in that mood. So with that, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support the amendment to the amendment and then the amended amendment in turn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Shall the amendment to the amendment carry?

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) has moved a subamendment to the amendment which I originally moved and, as I understand it, the amendment would now read:

—at least a third of whom shall be persons or representatives of persons actively engaged in the freshwater fishing industry as fishermen.

The subamendment would indicate that the government and its supporters have had a change of heart. It would indicate they have given this bill and the amendment which we proposed very serious consideration, and this is a welcome change. I very much appreciate the comments that were made by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) with regard to this matter. As I said earlier, this Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation in the years ahead will make a great impact upon a large area of Canada. In some parts of this nation the freshwater fish industry is the only type of vocation in which some 7,000 people are engaged, and their economic future is basically tied up with the success that will be achieved by the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. If it is not properly managed it can only bring heartbreak and financial distress to a great number of people in a large area of Canada.

It was for these reasons that we moved the amendment originally in the hope that people who are knowledgeable of the industry, knowledgeable of its problems, would have an opportunity to express their opinions in an advisory capacity to the president and the directors of this board. I wish to thank the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich for his subamendment. In my opinion it actually strengthens the amendment which we placed on the order paper and I hope it will receive general agreement throughout the entire house.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for his kind words but I would like to make one minor correction. When he read out the subamendment he said "representatives of persons," and in actual fact it is in the singular "representative of persons." Does this in any way alter the hon. member's opinion or attitude toward it?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, or a point of grammar, I think it should be "representatives."

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): It isn't.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): According to the wording which the Chair has it is actually "representatives", plural.

Mr. Crouse: That is what I have here.

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I had a big speech written out but I am not going to deliver it since the government and its supporters have changed the amendment. Therefore I will take just a few minutes. I want to put on record the fact that in the standing committee we discussed this amendment and all types of amendments. We asked the government supporters if they would accept any type of amendment at all, but it was no go. We put on the record of the committee the fact that they were not prepared to accept any amendment from the opposition, and we have proven it again today. Therefore I say the committees are a farce.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, am I entitled to speak on the subamendment?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member has already spoken.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) during his brief remarks made reference to my storming out of the committee. For the benefit of hon. members I think it should be pointed out that our standing committee met for a total of five hours, and it was on this very principle of having the fishermen involved that I finally decided that if I could not get that through I was prepared on their behalf to leave the deliberations of the committee altogether. I think there has been a tremendous misrepresentation of my motive, and I wish to state that I am prepared at any time to walk out of a committee on behalf of these people. If it has this kind of result perhaps I ought to walk out more frequently.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say I am happy to see the minister and the government give this recognition to the fishermen, and for this reason we are happy to support the subamendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Shall the amendment to the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, would you read it again? You stated that it was in the plural and the hon. member has stated that it was in the singular. To clear up any misunderstanding on this point you should read the subamendment as it is now written.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The amendment to the amendment reads as follows:

That the amendment be amended by inserting therein after the word "be" the following words: "persons or representatives of persons."

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I rise to say that I was under the impression that it was the other form that was before the house when I was speaking. I wonder if there could be consultation with the table about the form which lay before the table at that point?

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, while the deliberations are going on I would just like to say that if government members think this way about amendments one would think they could get them ready in the committee so that we would not have this last minute "kafuffling.".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. Mr. Anderson, seconded by Mr. Roberts, moves:

That the amendment be amended by inserting therein after the word "be" the following words: "persons or representative of persons."

Shall the amendment to the amendment carry?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): With respect, Mr. Speaker, I think that the words lack sense and clarity if the word representative is in the singular. That seems to suggest that there shall be persons engaged in the industry itself or a representative, and it can only be one person who is a representative. If the words were "persons or persons representative" I think the point might be all right, but just to say "persons or representative" I think is not grammatically correct.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): On that point, I think if you read the whole amendment as amended rather than simply the amendment it shows it is limited to simply one person:

At least one-third of whom shall be persons or representative of persons actively engaged in the freshwater fishing industry as fishermen.

Grammatically, that makes sense. I do not say that the suggestion of the hon. member would not be better but I think this makes sense.

Amendment (Mr. Anderson) to the amendment agreed to.

Amendment (Mr. Crouse) as amended agreed to.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (for the Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved:

That Bill C-148, to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish and to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Next sitting.

CANADIAN OVERSEAS TELECOMMUNICATION CORPORATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, LIMITATION OF POWERS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Monday, February 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Kierans for the second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications of Bill S-5, to amend the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation Act.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised at being allowed to go into orbit so soon. I had not anticipated that the people interested in the fisheries question would—I was going to say alight so soon but that would not be the proper word. I shall begin by saying I am generally in accord with the remarks which the Postmaster General made on the night of February 3 when he opened the discussion on this measure. I have the highest regard for the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation and not just because it is a profitable organization, although there is nothing wrong with even a Crown corporation showing a profit. We deal in this house with those that do make a profit and many that certainly do not.

I am looking at notes I have here. My typist, instead of typing "corporations do not have to lose money", wrote "corporations have to love money." But I do not think that is quite the point here! One can say, however, as the Postmaster General said the other night, that this organization has shown great competence in managerial and administrative ability through a good many years and deserves the commendation of the Canadian people for that.

With much of the bill it would indeed be impossible to take exception. I suppose the first two clauses are close to being textual or consequential changes resulting from developments in the cable connections with what used to be an overseas area, namely, the province of Newfoundland, a province which for nearly 20 years has been a welcome, valuable and great portion of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. McGrath: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes.

Mr. McGrath: Would the hon. gentleman tell the house at what point Newfoundland ceased to be an overseas province?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On April Fool's Day, 1949.

Mr. Macquarrie: My hon. friend would have to check with his esteemed and enduring prime minister in that province who has constantly told Canada it is a great mistake to call Newfoundland an island province because it has a very large mainland portion of which the premier is apparently very fond and determined to retain. So I could say to my hon. friend I come from the only island province in this dominion and the only province which, if it were not in a gulf, would be overseas.

Mr. McGrath: I would remind the hon. member that if this government has its way it will remain the only island province.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the hon. member not trying to cease being an island?

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, I am beset by people both on the right and on the left. It is a difficult orbit I am in. If the hon. member asks whether I think Prince Edward Island would lose its unique insularity, personality or spirituality I would say no, but we will still accept that causeway when the government decides to resume its obligations in regard thereto.

Having had these odd complications—I will not say from odd people but from two people—I shall try to return to the legislation before us. The sections of the bill which require some careful consideration are in the third clause. Before I get back to earth in this discussion I will have a suggestion or two and perhaps a forecast of some specific suggestions which we might make in committee. I am sorry the minister is not here because I had intended congratulating him for making in a sense his debut in his role as minister-designate for communications. We have had him before us in this role as Postmaster General in some unforgettable debates with still significant after-results.

I was interested in the minister's remarks on Monday, February 3, when he pointed out the following, as recorded at page 5086 of Hansard:

> Their past record justifies their request at this time, which I am happy to put forward, for additional powers and greater flexibility. The corporation is a member of the International Telecommunication Satellite Consortium and represents Canada on that board. It is much concerned with the expansion of satellite services all over the world and of course maintains Canada's interest and attention in all that goes on in international satellite relations. The corporation itself is expanding the use of Atlantic satellites to cope with the need for more capacity to cater for increasing demand for service between Canada and European countries and foresees the need for a Canadian earth station on the west coast for operations with the Pacific satellites.

He then referred to that very important establishment in Mill Village. I am wondering whether it is the intention at some future date to increase the scope of the C.O.T.C. as Canada moves forward in the satellite area both in what is called the domestic satellite field and in what can be regarded as a more clearly defined international aspect. I wonder whether the minister was indicating a greater role for the C.O.T.C. Whether its role is to be increased only in the international or also in the domestic area is a matter of interest to Canadians. We are moving into an era of great concern with regard to the whole question of satellites. I think there is a great deal of mysticism and perhaps a good deal of mythology about satellites when we talk about the waves of the future, blackboards in the sky and data computers in every home. It is interesting and practical that we be in the vanguard of thinking on these matters and look carefully at what our technological competence may allow.

I have been concerned in recent months that, perhaps while the script is becoming fairly extensive, the background and footnotes are not forthcoming. We are perhaps going to be launching in this country a very expensive satellite program. Many very important questions have not yet been answered for the Canadian people. We have been seeking information for a long time. It is many months since the MacIntosh report was handed in, but it has not yet been tabled. The so-called Whitehead mission has been to Europe and back these many months, but there has been no indication about its findings and observations. There has been no statement by the minister as to what was involved, and we would like to know about this.

The whole question of satellites and indeed the question of telecommunications is a complex, sophisticated and extremely difficult one. Having been assigned some responsibility in this field, I can testify to the tremendous difficulty in trying even vaguely to comprehend some of the complexities of this field. I think it is important that there be a great deal more done to enlighten the Canadian people as to what is involved.

For instance, are we to be sending up into orbit a costly domestic satellite built in Canada and, if so, what is the cost to be? I have seen estimates all the way up to $160 million. I also read that a United States built satellite might be sent up having an equal or greater capacity for telecommunications service at a fraction of that amount.

There are advantages to a Canadian built satellite. Some people might ask whether the price of our scientific nationalism, if it comes to $200 million or so, is not too high. I would not say that. I would say, however, that the rationale behind a Canadian built project should be more fully explained to the Canadian people. In the long run, I think it is clear even to the most lay of the laymen that no Canadian domestic satellite will be put into orbit by Canadian efforts alone. Someone else will have to do the launching for us, and to that extent it will not be exclusively one of our own operations. I am inclined to believe there is justification for a Canadian built satellite, but I believe the people responsible should do a more sustained job of informing the Canadian people. I do not think they will find opposition from those who have been so advised.

Let me say in passing, if I may, how very much I appreciated the opportunity of being at Vandenburg air base a week ago in company with the minister who, I presume, is subbing for the Postmaster General at the moment, (Mr. Drury) and some other members of parliament and members of the scientific community involved in the creation of the Isis A satellite. I was pleased to note the success of the launch, and I was delighted with the obvious co-operation of the governments of the United States and Canada in the launching of a Canadian ionospheric satellite by the United States.

An hon. Member: And the Hollywood stars.

Mr. Macquarrie: We saw no Hollywood stars, in answer to my more youthful friend. I was impressed by the name "Isis A". While the Canadian scientists told us many things about this satellite, I did not hear from anyone a recollection of the mythological connection, which might indeed have been very appropriate.

Isis was one of the more, indeed for a long time, paramount goddesses of ancient Egypt. She was regarded as the daughter of the earth and sky. I thought this was a very appropriate name, although I know that Isis means something else. It is one of those initialled conglomerations which not only clutter the international jargon but the scientific jargon. I also recall, and this may not be esthetically very pleasing, that Isis was a horned goddess. The minister (Mr. Drury) will recall a certain anxiety about whether or not antennae would be projected from Isis A. They were projected and I assume everything is working fine, so we not only have the goddess Isis up there but it is appropriately a horned goddess. We are very proud of this operation, and I think Canadians can take pride in their scientific community.

I do not want to carry on too long on this quiet and friendly Friday afternoon because I know there will be other opportunities to discuss this matter when the bill setting up the Department of Communications, and the corporation are before us as well as committee discussions. However, there are as well as international obligations, domestic implications of a broad political nature which are of concern.

It has pained me that in recent weeks most of the discussions in the Canadian press about the whole question of satellites has dealt with argumentation and disagreement between governments representing the provinces and the dominion. The last thing I should like to do at this time or at any time is to say anything which might exacerbate differences within this country. I recognize, as any thoughtful resident of a federal state must recognize, that this is a very difficult question. There is no argument that the dominion responsibility in the field of the development and projection of satellites is clear. I agree with the white paper, the author of which is sitting opposite me, and the statement that the government is responsible for the international negotiations concerned with communications satellites, both domestic and international. I also agree with the statement that the government is the only body which can negotiate with other countries in this field and that the relationship between domestic communications satellites and the national interest is of vital and unique importance. This must be made unmistakably clear.

I think this is a propitious statement; indeed, perhaps an axion of international relations in this country which we can accept. Yet—this is the complexity of a federal state—that the content of satellite programs would in part be educational and cultural. They are not purely appraisors of weather data. Education and culture would be very important parts of the larger payload, to use another bit of jargon I have been picking up. That this is the concern, indeed the jurisdiction, if I may use that word, of provinces can hardly be denied. It is not surprising that some of the provinces are expressing an interest in this sophisticated, modern "razzle dazzle" vehicle of communications. The interest of one of the provinces has been expressed over a long period of time. Therefore, it should be no surprise that the province of Quebec has more than a passing interest in this particular question.

• (3:10 p.m.)

It was a long time ago that Premier Bertrand, speaking in Hull, said:

> We want an integrated and complete system embracing not only education and culture, but also the transmission of data and exchanges among knowledge banks.
>
> It is in this perspective that we have turned to communication satellites. Efficiency demands that we control this integrated system in its entirety, but this will not inhibit co-operation and exchanges with the other provinces and with the federal government, if such is to be.
> This is a field in which Quebec must act if Quebeckers are to feel that their culture and their own particular genius can be put to use not only in the field of arts and letters, but also in that of science and technology.

This statement was made a long time ago, and there have been others. Therefore, we would have to observe that Quebec's interest is not something of recent vintage. Mr. Cardinal in his discussions with the officers, and indeed the officer, of the Republic of France a few days ago was not breaking new ground. One cannot, and certainly I do not, applaud all that Mr. Cardinal said or did in that particular context. I would suggest that consultation with the dominion government should have taken place before the initialling of agreements or the signing of letters of intent.

I think that a nation state must be the only vehicle for the expression of international personality. Yet as one who is concerned with all of Canada and its provinces, I cannot refrain from asking other questions. One asks what has happened to the old idea of co-operative federalism, as we used to call it. I am interested in the pattern of consultation which has been reported for some time. The Foreign Secretary of France and the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau), held discussions in Quebec. The Foreign Secretary of France and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) have had what are described as long and cordial discussions at the United Nations, with satellites as part of the agenda. Technicians of France are in Canada working in co-operation with our scientific people. There is an exchange of, and I note this, not educators but technicians between Quebec and France. But where in all of this pattern is the co-operation, or discussion between the other two members of the triangle? When do Quebec and Canada get together? When do Ottawa and Quebec city engage in a dialogue? This is, I submit, a very, very important question.

On November 26 before, I am sure, a large and enthusiastic television audience, the minister-designate of communications said that we were going to sit down and talk to Quebec about this problem of a province like Quebec getting involved with foreign governments in the creation of a satellite. I make that remark parenthetically. When he was asked when he was going to do this, his answer was, "Right away".

One asks, were these discussions held? What was the result? The cool, polite statements of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the cool and, I think, polite response of Mr. Cardinal lead me to ask when these chats took place and how effective they were. Surely, in Canada there should be no barrier of silence between federal and provincial people on this or any other matter. It would be a strange flaw in communications if this were the case. I feel very deeply that the advanced technology which makes communications satellites possible in this wonderfully advanced and, in some ways, highly enlightened age, should be a great agency for unity, for closer relations between the peoples not just of one country but indeed between countries. How dreadful it would be if this modern device and this modern expansion of man's capacity to communicate should in our own country become a vehicle, not for harmonious and strengthened communications, but of discord and disunity.

I am anxious to see this country go forward in its satellite program. I have immense confidence, and indeed pride, in the advances made by some of our scientific people. I note with the greatest approval the participation of the university field in this branch of the sciences. I have every confidence in the corporation which we are now discussing. I am sure that all of these people can do the technical job, but we must make sure that the broader political decisions are made thoughtfull and in time.

There is much more that I could say, and in weeks hence perhaps I shall have a chance to do so. When we get into committee we may submit, for the consideration of the committee and eventually the house, an improvement to clause 3 of the bill. I wonder whether a raising of the ceiling figures set out there, and thereby the assurance of getting parliamentary control where it should be, coupled with a vote of confidence in the corporation to discharge operations far in excess of the small amount set out at the present time, might not be a better way of dealing with the matter. I think this is something we would ask the committee to consider.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

I want to end as I began, Mr. Speaker, by expressing great support for the work done by the C.O.T.C. and the hope that it will be a useful vehicle for greater activity. We will be interested to hear whether any plans have been made for its use in the domestic satellite program, despite the word "external" in the bill. We shall be urging, as we have in recent weeks, that the Canadian public be more fully informed on what is in store for this particular aspect of communications. It is costly; it is important; it is sensitive. There are involvements international and domestic which are most acute. I think there is no better way of guaranteeing public support and understanding than by full, ample and prompt communication.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), expressed the hope that he could set the tone for a particularly dispassionate debate this Friday afternoon on the propositions contained in Bill S-5. There is no doubt that the hon. member has succeeded in setting such a tone. Perhaps because the hon. member is a friendly sort of person—very analytical, too, I might add—he has succeeded in doing this. But I suspect there is a second reason, namely, that the bill before us is quite non-controversial. As I see it, there are two provisions contained in Bill S-5.

• (3:20 p.m.)

One is to delete the special reference to Newfoundland in the operations of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation. Even though the hon. member for Hillsborough and the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) are in some disagreement as to whether or not Newfoundland is unique in Canada in being an overseas province, I will stay out of that argument. Neither do I know whether Prince Edward islanders really consider that province to be an island in the same sense as is Newfoundland.

I also read the comments made by the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) on February 3 when he spoke on this bill. I agree that perhaps it is time the spending authority of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation be revised. I am not sure, however, that the minister should be proposing to remove the limitations completely and to vest in the cabinet the limiting power by way of the Governor in Council.

I would have preferred an amendment whereby the ceilings would have been increased substantially from $50,000, which was the limit set in one case, and $5,000 which was the limit in another case. I think it would have been better to increase these limitations substantially but without removing them from the statute. I do not know how significant it will be to transfer the limiting power relative to this corporation from parliament into the hands of the Governor in Council. Inasmuch as members of the cabinet and the Governor in Council are responsible to parliament, it really works out to the same thing.

I would like to take the opportunity, as has the hon. member for Hillsborough, to make some reference to our domestic communication space satellite plans and program. I do not agree with the hon. member that we would be making a mistake if we engaged in the construction of a Canadian built communication space satellite. As I understand the remarks of the hon. member, he seemed to be of the opinion that if such a space communication system were to be developed by Canada, and if it were to cost us in excess of $70 or $80 million, this might well be too high a price to pay. He suggested that perhaps we should look to the United States to provide us with such a satellite at a reduced price.

I feel that because of the advantages which could accrue to our scientific community in the building of an even greater scientific expertise, it would be worth the price for us to build a communications space satellite capability in Canada, even if the cost does rise to the level estimated by the Postmaster General. As I understood him, he estimates the cost to be in the neighbourhood of $70 million to $100 million. It is often said that one of the advantages that a country derives from military conflict, and this is rather ironic and sad, is that at least at that time scientific expertise and technological competence surges forward and increases rapidly. I should like to think that in our time man can, through peaceful scientific programs of endeavour, increase his expertise and technological ability without having to resort to warfare in order to do so. So, I emphasize that I would consider it very sad if, for the purpose of saving a few million dollars, we decided to buy a communication space satellite from some other country. I am sure that in so doing we would be relegating our Canadian scientific community to the background and the repercussions from that would be felt for many years.

I say to the minister, let us by all means go full speed ahead with the plans for the construction and development of a Canadian space communication satellite capability.

I also want to bring to the minister's attention the fact that, as I read his comments when he introduced this bill, he gave us to understand that within a relatively short time from now Canada would be constructing a second ground receiving station in Nova Scotia in order to take advantage to a greater degree of the programs that are receivable from the Intelsat Atlantic satellites. I do not know exactly how many Intelsat satellites are in orbit over the Atlantic region in Canada and Europe, but I do know that in recent days Intelsat has launched a communications satellite in the Pacific region. To the best of my knowledge, Canada does not yet have a ground receiving station on the west coast. As I interpret the situation, this means that Canada cannot avail itself of any communication receivable through the Intelsat Pacific region satellite, and yet we are paying for it.

Canada is a member of Intelsat and pays 5 or 6 per cent of the cost of that organization. However, we are not able to make any use of whatever facilities Intelsat has in the Pacific region because we have not yet established a ground receiving station there. It seems to me the minister should explain at an early date why the policy is to go ahead with the building of a second ground receiving station on the east coast while at the same time we are not building the first one on the Pacific coast. I think that is a valid point which the minister might want to deal with at some future date.

The hon. member for Hillsborough, in his remarks relative to this bill, also made some mention of the fact that there was a consortium in Europe attempting to develop a launching capability to send up a Franco-German space satellite and that Quebec would be involved in this venture. About two months ago I asked the minister if he could indicate whether the province of Quebec was really serious about the building of a ground receiving station somewhere in the province which would be capable of receiving signals from the Franco-German satellite. Perhaps the minister was not in a position to reply at that time, but since then there have been some developments. Quebec seems to be determined to build such a ground receiving station with or without federal assistance. There is a rumour that direct assistance will be given to the province of Quebec by the government of France. I would not attempt to go into the constitutional aspect of such an action, but I do say to the minister that the only possible justification for the construction of a second ground receiving station on the Atlantic coast would be that it might help to remove the necessity of Quebec building the ground receiving station. In that event, I suppose one could go along with that idea.

Although I did not have the pleasure of attending with other members of parliament about a week or ten days ago the launching of Isis at Vandenburg Air Force Base, I did have the opportunity about two months ago of attending the meetings of the Canada-France Parliamentary Association in France. While there we were invited to view the scientific space communications satellite development program, and we were taken on a tour of the Centre National des Études Spatiales just outside Paris. It becomes obvious to us that France is well on its way, and very determinedly, to developing a space communications satellite capability of its own. Judging from some of the comments that I heard at that time, there seems to be an equal determination somehow to bring the province of Quebec into that program. I wish the minister the best of luck in the days ahead in his attempts to cope with that thorny constitutional problem.

I conclude by saying that so far as the specific provisions of Bill S-5 are concerned, there is nothing at all to which to object. I merely wish to register a small caveat. Perhaps, instead of removing entirely the statutory limit on the spending power of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation and leaving it within the discretion of Treasury Board or the Governor in Council, it would have been better to have revised the amount upwards substantially, from $50,000 to, say, $1 million, or from $5,000 in the case of long term leases to an amount of four or five times that. With those comments, I feel that I have at least had my say so far as Canadian communications policy is concerned.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I was delighted to discover that, according to this bill, Newfoundland is no longer considered to be an offshore area. I am glad that my two colleagues have straightened that out, and also the government's thinking. It does seem to me about time because, if my memory serves me correctly, 1949 was their year of confederation.

I should like to direct a few remarks to the minister about clause 3. According to the bill, the purpose of this amendment is to remove from the act the requirement that transactions of the corporation involving amounts in excess of limits specified in the act be approved by the Governor in Council and to provide that the Governor in Council may, from time to time on the recommendation of the Treasury Board, prescribe the limits to transactions that may be entered into without approval.

Like the previous speaker, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer), I have no objection to a change in the ceiling; no doubt the figures should be updated. According to subsection (2) of the act, the corporation may not enter into any agreement that now involves an expenditure in excess of $50,000; neither may it enter into, for a period exceeding three years, any agreement or lease that involves an expenditure in any year of more than $5,000. Further, under paragraph (c) of subsection (2) the corporation shall not acquire any real or personal property, the cost of which exceeds $50,000. At today's inflated prices, these are not very large sums.

However, instead of leaving the matter to the parliament of Canada to decide, the decision is to be made by Treasury Board. This is the factor that I find somewhat objectionable. We are witnessing more and more delegated authority. The new rules in the House of Commons are designed to expedite the business of the house. However, this should not mean complete abandonment by the house of its scrutiny.

Further, I do not think authority should be delegated in such a general way. For example, when discussing the piece of legislation that was before the house earlier today the minister in charge made some general comments about provisions that some of us wished to see included in the legislation. He gave his assurance that he thought certain things we suggested would be done. This kind of generalization would be no good in a court of law. I think the house must be much more specific when directing legislation.

I conclude my remarks by saying that I hope the ceilings presently in the act are reviewed. Surely, we should not be expected to give Treasury Board carte blanche to set its own figures; I suggest this is a matter for parliament.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief; I do not want to hold up reference of this matter to the committee. I would be remiss if I did not rise to speak briefly on the bill before the house.

I should like to mention that I was fortunate to witness the launching of Isis A at Vandenburg base about a week ago. I assure the house, I am sure the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) will agree with me, that there was no greater feeling than witnessing the launching of Isis A, knowing that it was built and designed by Canadian scientists and technicians. The launching was done by United States authorities, and I believe that is as it should be because the cost of constructing launching facilities is tremendous. I believe that with co-operation internationally this particular facet can be looked after.

I am sure every member of the house agrees that we have the talent, the scientists and physicists in this country capable of constructing and developing communication satellites. We would not want to see control of these satellites taken away from us. I am sure that the over-all design of the corporation will be to develop in this country the co-operation that is required to efficiently take care of this capability of which we are so proud.

When the Postmaster General (Mr Kierans) introduced this bill on February 3, he said that the purpose of the bill is to establish, maintain and operate, in Canada and elsewhere, external communications services for the conduct of public communications.

I do not think that any province in this nation ought to have the right to put up a satellite over which it would have exclusive control. Such a province would then have entire control over a national communications system. This aspect will be discussed later when regulations are drawn to govern the new communications department. The subject has been mentioned in a report which indicates that it is necessary for the federal government to control Canadian communications satellites.

I have heard it said that officers and employees of the corporation have done a magnificent job in looking after the interests of the Canadian people in this field. Certainly, what we saw at Vandenburg substantiates such claims. We are proud of the contribution Canadians have made in the field of satellites. Without doubt, their work has put Canada in the forefront of nations developing satellites. Our people co-operated well with the United States NASA people, which augurs well for future Canada-U.S. co-operation in this field.

As the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer) emphasized, we should move quickly to establish a communications department. The year 1971 will be upon us all too quickly. We must not waste time that could be used to good purpose. Other countries of the world are developing communications satellites and if Canada is to remain a leader in this field we must move quickly and establish the new department.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I wish to remind hon. members that if the minister speaks now he will close debate.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for their constructive approach to this bill and for their co-operative attitude. I wish to reassure hon. members opposite that I share with them the desire that our future satellite should be developed in Canada and, as far as possible, manufactured in this country.

Several hon. members mentioned what is really one point. I suppose it could be taken up in committee but I thought I would explain the matter to them now. I agree that we should raise the rather unrealistic limits now imposed by the act on the directors of the corporation. Raising those limits to $200,000 say, or $500,000 would constitute an appreciable improvement. There is no question about that. But I emphasize that this would not eliminate the need for future amendments to be brought before the house if conditions were so to dictate. It must be remembered that in this country we have two pieces of legislation that must be considered, the government contracts regulations and our financial regulations. If we raised the limit as has been suggested, the C.O.T.C. would remain an exception to the financial control mechanism prescribed by the Financial Administration Act with respect to all other government departments and agencies. It might further be noted that the C.O.T.C. is listed in the schedule of government departments and agencies to which this act should apply. Thus, we would have an existing inconsistency in legislation, which would really be a misalignment.

Section 22 of government contracts regulations provides that the Governor in Council may, from time to time, on the recommendation of Treasury Board prescribe the limits to transactions that may be entered into without approval. Perhaps I ought to read that section, which is as follows:

> 22. Notwithstanding anything in these Regulations, the Treasury Board may, in respect of a particular contracting authority, upon notification to the contracting authority, increase or decrease any one or more of the amounts specified in Parts I, II, III and IV.

Canadian Overseas Telecommunications

Part I deals with construction contracts; Part II with purchase contracts; Part III with service contracts and Part IV with leases.

The proposed amendment will remove the existing limits which, as was explained on February 3 and again today, are considered unreasonable. Secondly, it brings C.O.T.C. under the financial control mechanism the federal government has instituted in respect of government departments and agencies as prescribed by the Financial Administration Act. Section 39 of that act reads as follows:

39. The Governor in Council may make regulations with respect to the conditions under which contracts may be entered into and, notwithstanding any other Act,

a) may direct that no contract by the terms of which payments are required in excess of such amount or amounts as the Governor in Council may prescribe shall be entered into or have any force or effect unless entry into the contract has been approved by the Governor in Council or the Treasury Board, and

b) may make regulations with respect to the security to be given to and in the name of Her Majesty to secure the due performance of contracts.

What we are really doing here is bringing the C.O.T.C. into the financial structure governing the activities of all other departments of government or agencies. In other words, the C.O.T.C. will not be an orphan. I think we have all the control we want through appropriate institutions which have been set up and through structures as outlined and detailed in legislation to which I just referred. I simply want to place that fact before hon. members.

Before concluding my remarks, may I move that the motion for second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications of Bill S-5, an act to amend the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act be amended by substituting for the words "Standing Committee on Transport and Communications" the words, "Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I direct the minister's attention to the fact that he is not allowed to amend his own motion. Perhaps by unanimous consent of the house we could substitute the names of the standing committees. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

[Mr. Kierans.]

PRECIOUS METALS

LEGISLATION RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, MARKING, ETC.—REPORT STAGE

The house proceeded to the consideration of Bill S-4, respecting the marking of articles containing precious metals, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Hon. C. M. Drury (for Mr. Basford) moved:

That clause 8, subsection (4) be amended by striking out line 35 on page 5 thereof and substituting the following:

"(4) no person shall knowingly make a false or"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would someone like to make a statement?

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I rise, Mr. Speaker, to speak on behalf of the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) who is unable to be here this afternoon. The amendment proposed by the minister pursuant to Standing Order 75(5) arises out of the deliberations of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. It was agreed at that time to pass the bill without amendment. Following questions raised in committee by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), however, the minister did agree to consult the Department of Justice with regard to the technical wording of clause 8(4).

The minister did so, with the result that in the proposed amendment before the house the section in question takes full account of the view expressed by the hon. member for Edmonton West to add the word "knowingly" to subsection (4) of clause 8. In view of this situation, Mr. Speaker, I feel hon. members will readily accept this amendment.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): May I say, Mr. Speaker, this bill has been carefully examined by the committee. As the parliamentary secretary has stated, one of our members did raise questions which have been answered and an amendment proposed in accordance therewith. This particular amendment having been adopted, we see no objection to the bill itself in its amended form. Fundamentally, the bill is concerned with housekeeping, cleaning up certain matters which have been outstanding for some time.

Subject to what I have just said we have no opposition to the motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Basford) agreed to.

Hon. C. M. Drury (for Mr. Basford) moved:

That Bill S-4, respecting the marking of articles containing precious metals, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on Thursday, January 30, 1969, be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Next sitting. It is now four o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Peters: Since it is almost four o'clock, perhaps the house would be agreeable to call it four o'clock so we may proceed to private members' hour.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hogarth: Could it be understood, Mr. Speaker, private members' hour will be one hour in time?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being four o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely private bills.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to order No. 1 and order No. 2 standing. If this is being done as a courtesy to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), the mover of the bill, I hope the same courtesy will be extended to this side, if he is ready to proceed on a day when the mover of the amendment is not able to be here.

PRIVATE BILLS

AETNA CASUALTY COMPANY OF CANADA

The House resumed from Thursday, December 19, the motion of Mr. Wahn for second reading of Bill S-11, to incorporate Aetna Casualty Company of Canada.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): On December 19, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn) sponsored Bill S-11 which is an act to incorporate Aetna Casualty Company of Canada. After a very erudite exposition of this particular company he made the remark that he was ready to answer questions. I note with sadness that he is not in the house this afternoon because we in the New Democratic Party have many questions to be answered before this bill is finally passed.

Mr. Peters: He is derelict in his duty.

Mr. Gilbert: I notice other hon. members who have sponsored similar bills are here. I hope they will listen attentively and absorb some of the remarks I will make, then pass them along to the hon. member for St. Paul's.

Bill S-11, Mr. Speaker, is an act to incorporate Aetna Casualty Company of Canada and sets forth in the incorporation the names of some very successful lawyers as well as an insurance agent.

The capital stock of the company shall be $5 million divided into shares of $50 each. The amount to be subscribed before the general meeting for the election of officers is called shall be $500,000. When this particular bill was before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on October 23, counsel for the company stated that the Aetna Life and Casualty Company is the parent company of Aetna Life Insurance Company of Hartford and the Aetna Casualty Insurance Company of Hartford. One would find that rather difficult to follow, Mr. Speaker, unless you have a full appreciation of the corporate conglomeration that prevails in our society.

The company has a wide, horizontal and vertical base not only in the United States of America but also in Canada. They have operated in Canada for approximately 49 years. This is an attempt to incorporate a company dealing in all classes of insurance other than that of life. You will notice in clause 6 of the bill an enumeration of the classes of insurance in which it hopes to participate. It goes from the letter "A" to the letter "Z" which would indicate there are 26 classes of insurance. I have heard it said that when it comes to a matter of security we should have security from the womb to the tomb. Here, we have insurance from "A" to a "Z" which is quite a remarkable expansion by this company.

Last week, Mr. Speaker, I happened to see the picture "2001 A.D.", which dealt with the problems of space. I looked in this bill to see if there was any reference to outer space insurance and I noticed there was not. I would ask hon. members on the other side to bring this lack to the attention of the sponsor of the bill. In the near future young men will be flying to the moon, and I would like to think that some company would have outer space insurance.

It would be rather interesting to you, Mr. Speaker, to hear an enumeration of the particular types of insurance in which this company will engage. They are fire insurance, accident insurance, aircraft insurance, automobile insurance, boiler insurance, credit insurance, earthquake insurance, explosion insurance, falling aircraft insurance, forgery insurance, guarantee insurance, hail insurance, impact by vehicles insurance, inland transportation insurance, livestock insurance, machinery insurance, marine insurance, personal property insurance, plate glass insurance, real property insurance, sickness insurance, sprinkler leakage insurance, theft insurance, water damage insurance, weather insurance and windstorm insurance. The list is quite impressive.

This brings me to the main thrust of my remarks. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that just in the past week or two we had an application from a company called Excelsior Life Insurance, and I notice that this company has a 70 per cent interest in Excelsior Life Insurance.

We have an American owned company having a 70 per cent control of a Canadian insurance company called Excelsior Life, and now it wants to incorporate another company to cover all forms of insurance with the exception of life insurance. I would imagine it thinks it can use Excelsior Life Insurance Company to take care of its insurance holdings.

In his opening remarks, the sponsor of the bill pleaded with members of the house to consider that even though it was American capital that was setting up this company the employee content would be Canadian. In a rather tender plea, he suggested that the intention of the company is to have its profits remain in Canada for Canadian use. When I say that is a tender plea, it makes me realize that the profits of this particular company in Canada, with regard to this same type of business under a different name, amounted to $785,000 for the year 1967, a substantial amount.

In the Banking and Commerce Committee one of the able Senators asked how many Canadian shareholders there were in this company. After a little examination and huddling together by those concerned, they suggested that there were 300 Canadian shareholders. In the Aetna Insurance Company, which is an American company, there are 25,000 shareholders, and here we have a Canadian content of 300 Canadian shareholders.

In days like these, when you have take-over bids by American companies for Canadian insurance companies, I would have thought the government would have brought an immediate halt to the incorporation of companies which are American owned until it made a full examination of this take-over problem. Remember, Mr. Speaker, during the last week one of our big Canadian insurance firms attempted to mutualize its company to avoid an American take-over. When I speak of mutualization, I refer directly to the ownership of that company being in the hands of Canadian shareholders. This is what mutualization means.

The bid for mutualization with regard to that particular company failed. Now, it has exposed itself to the strong winds of American companies with regard to the take-over of Canadian life and other insurance companies. If the sponsor of this bill and some of the hon. members on the other side of the house realized the impact and import of this attempt by American companies to take over and dominate the insurance field, I am sure they would rise to their feet and ask that the government take immediate steps to stop this intrusion into our economy.

Mr. Peters: What action did the government take in this matter?

Mr. Gilbert: The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has brought forth a very salient point. He asks what action did the government take. I am sorry to say members of the government performed as usual. They just sat there and did nothing.

I recall that when I referred to the performance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at the Commonwealth Conference as being a zero performance there was a great howl on the other side of the house. When I referred to the performance of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) in the task force on housing and said he had scored a double zero with regard to that important matter, there was another great howl. Here again we have a fundamental issue with regard to the economy of our country and the government once more sits idly by and does nothing.

This is a sad commentary on this government that attempted to gain power in Canada on the supposition that they would be men of action, avant-garde men. This great leader, whom they elected at the party's leadership convention, would lead Canada into a position of strength and stability. Unfortunately, this has not happened.

Most Canadians are worried about American ownership in Canada. When I reiterate that Aetna Insurance Company has a 70 per cent interest in the Excelsior Insurance Company and has a broad base of insurance right through Canada and the United States, it brings to mind the wisdom and the experience of Walter Gordon. You, Mr. Speaker, remember the contemptible attitude that was taken by some members on the other side with regard to this outstanding Canadian who had a remarkable record in the financial affairs of our country, and who came to Ottawa with the hope that he would be able to lead Canada through these troubled times. He wrote a book which was well received, underlining the problems of foreign ownership. Here, we have a government that not only rejected his ideas but rejected the man himself.

I happened to read the recent book by Peter Newman called "The Distemper of Our Times". He sets forth the position of which Mr. Gordon attempted to make the Canadian public aware. It is rather unfortunate that Mr. Newman's book should have come out late in December at a time when another book by another Canadian personality came out, because the second book by that great woman of Canada—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member for Broadview but I would request that he try as best he can, and I know he is able to do so, to restrict his remarks to the motion before us at this time.

Mr. Gilbert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It so happens that the book by Mr. Newman struck me so forcibly that I just had to bring it to your attention. So many members have not read that book, although they have read the other book by that gallant lady who sat on the other side.

At page 222 of his book Mr. Newman set forth the problem of foreign ownership. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the main burden of my remarks is with regard to foreign ownership. I noticed that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) looked up. This is rather important because he was the man who sponsored the Canada-U.S. auto pact or at least piloted it through the house. He knows what I am talking about when I mention the problem of foreign ownership. But he, like so many members of the cabinet, pretends to be unaware of the remarkable penetration of our economy that has taken place by the United States. I hope he does not take that attitude, but rather agrees with me there should be a task force set up to study the situation in respect of insurance companies in Canada. A study should be made of their ownership, the types of insurance they sell, the need for insurance companies, the use of capital by the insurance companies and the necessity for the allocation of the capital funds of these particular companies. I am sure he would agree with that general principle.

I should like to return to the matter of Mr. Newman's book because he has a very succinct and persuasive manner in his writing. He sets forth this problem in respect of foreign ownership. He refers to the report that was published by the task force set up to study foreign ownership and control in Canada. We now call it the Watkins report. At page 222 we read:

> The report stressed that foreign investment is not simply the movement of capital between two countries, but also a political phenomenon. "Foreign control," it concluded, "means the potential shift outside the country of the locus of some types of decision-making. To the extent decision-making is eroded, national independence—being, in a broad sense, the ability to make decisions in the national interest—is reduced." It also warned about the use by foreign governments of the parent-subsidiary relationship as an instrument of their foreign policy. "The Canadian-based subsidiary," the report noted, "is confronted with two peaks of sovereignty; it must choose and might be expected to defer to the higher peak. In the nature of the case, the higher peak will typically be the home country."

I mention that because of the remark made by the sponsor of the bill to the effect that the profits of this company would be retained in Canada. One always remembers the action of the United States government with regard to the equalization tax and the direction by the United States government that subsidiaries of United States companies operating in Canada send back some of their profits to the United States to take care of the balance of payments problem. This appears to be a very serious problem in the United States, and we in Canada also have suffered in respect of the balance of payments problem. However persuasive the sponsor of this bill may have wanted to be with regard to the retention of profits in Canada, we are subject to the statement that a subsidiary of a United States company would have to act in accordance with United States law and the dictates of the parent company. This is an unfortunate happening. It is an unfortunate fact in the economic life of our country and throughout the world that any subsidiary branch plant operating in another company is subject to the direct control of the parent company.

This is the opening remark set forth in the statement by Mr. Newman. I shall read again this very interesting material of which all of us should be aware:

> Gordon's complaints about the behaviour of foreign subsidiaries in Canada included such things as the absence of a minority Canadian interest in their equity stock distribution; little meaningful Canadian representation on these firms' boards of directors; the fact that export policies were set by parent organizations, often against the domestic Canadian interest; and the reluctance of most American firms to process their raw materials before shipping them to the United States—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Peters: Carry on.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there general agreement that the hon. member should continue?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the remarks my friend was making at the time his 20 minutes expired. The argument he was developing was directed to the control of the Canadian economy by outside interests. A number of private bills such as this dealing with the insurance problem have been before us. Again, I shall ask a question which has been asked before. Just what is the government's position on this particular phase of our economy? Are we to take it for granted that it is government policy to allow the insurance field to be increasingly dominated by outside interests or are we to try to retain for Canada a larger degree of control than we presently have?

It is interesting to read the reports of those in charge of the insurance department. They realize what is happening in the insurance field. This is really part of the financial structure of this country. Slowly but surely to a very large degree we have lost control of this particular sector of our economy. It is amazing that private members constantly bring these bills before the house. Sometimes I wonder whether they go back to their constituencies and tell the people who elected them that they are in favour of selling Canada lock, stock and barrel to foreign investors. That is exactly what is happening. Private bill after private bill is brought in by members who, in fact, are telling us and the Canadian public that they are in favour of taking another chunk of our Canadian economy and shipping it south of the border or to some other nation. They are in favour of shipping out of Canada the control of our economy.

This is the story we are trying to get across. This is the story we are trying to leave with the Canadian nation. It is time the government laid down a policy. This policy should not be left to a handful of private members who bring in these bills. The government gets out from under by saying such bills do not represent government policy, but only policy negotiated by members who happen to be in the Liberal party.

If these bills go through, and hon. members are hoping they will, another chunk of our economy will be going down the drain. Let us have a look at this specific bill. It is designed to incorporate the Aetna Casualty Company of Canada. I am not going to go over the arguments which other hon. members have put before this house. The control of this company is completely held in the United States. Just last week, we had another bill before us which involved a subsidiary of this same company. That bill represented an attempt to kid the Canadian people that this company was the same old company with the same old name but not controlled by outside interests. It is not my intention to go over the memorandum again, but I suggest it shows what can be done and should be done. When any insurance bill goes through this house we should write in some safeguards. This should be the policy and intent of every member elected to the House of Commons, unless the member is anxious to have Canada completely and thoroughly dominated by outside interests.

This memorandum is dated a couple of years ago. It refers to an insurance bill that was before this house. I think it is important for hon. members to know that bill was opposed by members of this house who argued that changes ought to be made. After a great deal of thought, we found that an agreement could be reached with this particular company. Canadians were going to have some control, and this control was written into the agreement. This is the type of thing we want. We want to write in safeguards when these bills come before parliament. There is absolutely no reason why safeguards cannot be written into these agreements. That is true of the particular bill before us.

The purpose of the incorporation sought by the earlier bill to which I have referred was the same as the purpose of incorporation in respect to the bill before us. The company was to be incorporated for the purpose of carrying on the business of life insurance in Canada. There is nothing wrong with that purpose. There are other parts of this agreement which I wish to leave with the members of this house for what I hope will be thoughtful consideration.

I am not going to read the entire context of this rather lengthy memorandum, but I will gladly provide a copy to anyone who wants it. It indicates that within two years of commencement of business, United Funds Management Ltd. would sell to officers, directors and employees of the company and, if necessary, others who are Canadian residents, 25 per cent of the capital stock of the insurance company for the original price. The memorandum goes on to suggest that within two years of the commencement of the business of this insurance company, it will offer Canadian residents a sufficient number of shares to bring its share ownership below 75 per cent. It says that within two years of the commencement of business the indirect ownership of Waddell and Reed will be reduced to a maximum of 56.25 per cent with practically all of the balance owned by residents of Canada.

Another paragraph of this memorandum indicates that United Funds Management Ltd. will undertake to sell to Canadian residents within ten years of the commencement of the business of the insurance company sufficient shares then owned by the insurance company to bring the direct ownership of Waddell and Reed in the insurance company to below 50 per cent.

I am not going to go into the details, but this is supposed to provide an opportunity for Canadians to participate and eventually gain control of the company. There is absolutely nothing wrong with this idea and that is what members on this side of the house are very interested in assuring. We want to see moves made in this direction. As the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) just pointed out, we have to make up our minds fairly soon as to what we intend to do in this connection.

Bills of this type should not be passed by this house unless we attach limiting restrictions. This is the forum in which to debate these issues. I for one would be extremely happy to hear members on the government side of the house defend this continuing sell-out of Canadian industry and control to outside sources. Stand up in your seats and defend your positions, if this is government policy. We have seen too many instances where outside control has been disadvantageous to the nation. Either we take a stand very soon or it will be too late.

We have been warned. We have had the Watkins report on foreign ownership which went into all phases of economic control. It touches every facet of the Canadian economy.

We come back to the financial institutions. In this area we have had some control over ownership, and I think it has been good. But anyone who tries to divorce insurance companies, and the terrific power they wield by reason of the tremendous portfolios of investment which they hold, from the financial field is very foolish indeed. We have talked in this house about investment in Canadian industry. Here is a source of funds for investment in Canadian industry. I suggest that it is essential to have the insurance industry under Canadian control. This does not mean wiping out all foreign insurance companies. There is a host of them in Canada now, and they take dividends out of this country and control to a very great extent their extensive portfolios of investment. We are losing the battle for Canadian control of industry in this country by continuing the type of legislation that is before us this afternoon. Before resuming my seat, Mr. Speaker, I have one or two more things to say on this bill. I have said before, and say again—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Harding: —that I do not think private members in this house should have the right to introduce this type of insurance bill. If it is government policy, the government should be in a position to advance this type of legislation. If the government favours the incorporation of these companies, it should say so; it should be part of the government's over-all program and policy. But the government does not do this. It tries to sneak in through the back door legislation of this type, hoping there will not be in the chamber enough members who wish to speak against this loss to the Canadian economy.

I believe several hon. members wish to speak on the bill. I would like, Mr. Speaker, to make my position very clear. As a Canadian, I am sick and tired of seeing the old line parties allowing the resources of this country to get out of the control of the Canadian people. We are paying for this policy. We see fabrication taking place in other nations, when the emphasis should be on fabrication taking place in our own country, thus giving jobs to Canadians in the Canadian setting. The people of this nation are gradually waking up and demanding that something be done in this respect. If the Liberal government does not do something to bring about the repatriation of some of the Canadian economy, it will be thrown out of power so quickly that it will make its head spin.

People hoped that a new direction would be taken by this government. I suggest that as far as industry is concerned the government should lay down a solid, sensible program of investment and control. Let us know where the government is going in this respect. I suggest it should start with very important industries, of which the insurance industry is one.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to state my views on this bill, in order to complete its consideration.

I think that Bill S-11, as drawn up, is quite important. Like the previous speakers, I think that we are selling Canada piecemeal.

If we maintain that we must control our economy, those who are acquainted with the operations of the stock market and our economy will tell you that 69 per cent of our economy belongs to Americans and 31 per cent to Canadians.

This shows how healthy our administration has been, because we are selling Canada piecemeal.

We are now dealing with a big American company which wants to compete with other American and Canadian general insurance companies already in operation.

If my information is correct, in Canada there are about 292 companies selling insurance other than life insurance. Those American companies collect money in Canada for the benefit of the parent company established in the United States.

Someone wishes a child to be born in Canada, more precisely in Toronto, to collect money to be sent to the mother who lives in the United States. As an example, I will mention the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, which, on the one hand, invested 4 per cent of its assets in Canada in 1967-68, and on the other hand, made about 16 per cent of its revenue here.

You can see how profitable it is, and what happens when competition exists. The provinces pass legislation on crop insurance. The federal government and some provinces want to establish medicare. And now, bills are introduced authorizing American companies to open subsidiaries in Canada, naturally for the benefit of the United States.

It is not that I bear American investors a grudge, but I think it is time to take our economy in hand. Government members should ask economists to "rack their brains" in order to create the $5 million in credit which would enable the company involved to set up an organization which, thanks to the productiveness of its premiums, could invest again in Canada and enable Canadians to profit by the "revolving" money which would be invested in our private and public institutions.

I did not want to delay too much the discussion, but I think those considerations are very important. As the previous speakers said, in the field of mines, trade, industry and natural resources, we have already "Americanized" enough. When we speak of investment, it is not a time to create a "dumping" of money in favour of Americans, but rather to keep the ownership on our economy, in order to be able to say one day that we are a strong people.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I did not have the opportunity to prepare a speech on the bill before us.

I wish to welcome our new colleague the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin). Although he is not yet a member of the New Democratic Party, maybe he will join our ranks before long.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

I want to take a few minutes to say something about Bill S-11, to incorporate the Aetna Casualty Company of Canada. I took the opportunity to refer back to the minutes of proceedings of the Committee on Banking and Commerce of last October 23, at which time the subject matter of this Bill S-11 was before hon. Senators in the other place. It would seem that what is involved here is an attempt on the part of the Aetna Casualty Company to change the mode of operation of its Canadian branch and to change the form of incorporation. Rather than operate in Canada in the future as a branch of a U.S. company, it seeks now to become incorporated as a Canadian company. But it is interesting to note that even though the company will be registered as a Canadian company, and operating under Canadian law, it will still be owned in very large part, if not exclusively, by the U.S. parent company which goes by the same name.

It is also interesting to note that, according to the Financial Times of last year, the United States parent company is now facing litigation in the United States on anti-trust charges. Of course, one might argue that this problem of litigation facing the parent firm has nothing to do with the bill that is before us, but I think there is some relationship. It is certainly a point which hon. members should take into account when considering the pros and cons of Bill S-11, preliminary to deciding how they will actually vote on the bill.

Some hon. members might think that this is a very routine proceeding in which we are engaged, that some private member is simply sponsoring a bill to incorporate an insurance company or to change its charter. However, I suggest that it is not routine. There are many ramifications and implications for the whole Canadian economy. We know that insurance companies take their premium income and invest it in the economy, and that is fine. But we do not know specifically to what extent Canadian premium insurance dollars are being collected in Canada and invested abroad.

I suspect that the trend in the last four or five years has been a rather dramatic increase in the amount of Canadian insurance premium dollars collected from Canadians here and invested outside the country. Certainly, in February and March of 1967 there was a dramatic increase in the outflow of Canadian insurance premium dollars which were invested in the United States by companies operating here. So dramatic was this increase in February, March and April of 1967 that even our financial journals, such as the Financial Post and Financial Times were moved to comment about it on more than one occasion. We are often told that one of the great problems in our country is the reluctance on the part of Canadians to invest in risk enterprises. Sometimes we are presented with such a bald statement. The fact of the matter is that there would be much more investment by Canadians if there was a greater availability of stocks for purchase, and if Canadian insurance premium dollars were directed to investment in Canada.

I believe it is fair to say that very often potential Canadian investors cannot find an adequate supply of public stock. I know this might sound a little hard to believe but I think it is being said with more and more frequency, that there is actually a scarcity of public stocks on the market relative to the availability of investment capital. This is completely contrary to the conventional belief of the past decade that there is an under supply of Canadian investment capital. The situation seems to be exactly the reverse of what we are so often told.

I took a couple of minutes to make that point because it relates to the operation of insurance companies here in Canada. I noticed news items in the Ottawa Journal issues of February 5 and 6. These articles stated that in the Canadian insurance industry there has been quite a bit of activity lately and that some insurance companies have been engaged in take-over bids of other insurance companies. Apparently this has resulted in a rapid increase in share trading on the stock exchange in insurance company stocks. One is curious as to why Canadian insurance companies should, all of a sudden, be engaged in such takeover bids and stock market shenanigans. Certainly, this is what appears to be the case. There must be something of immediate private interest to insurance companies to cause them to change their articles of incorporation and their form of organization and operation. There must be some advantage to them in wishing to split their shares. All of these things make it a little easier for insurance companies to manipulate and manoeuver in subscribing for capital, and make it easier for them to operate on the stock market. I do not know of what benefit this can be to the public interest or to the national economy as a whole. We do know that foreign investment in Canada has been a growing problem in the post-war decade. One or two Liberal cabinet ministers were brought to the point of stating it had become a matter of urgent national interest great enough to necessitate the appointment of a special commission to study it.

On reading the report of the Watkins commission and its recommendations, we find that indeed the problem of foreign ownership has increased drastically in our time. The prospects are that the problem will linger with us and get worse in the years ahead unless some concerted effort is made by the government to treat the problem of ever increasing foreign ownership of our natural riches and resources. So far, we have not had an indication from the government as to what it intends to do with respect to this specific and concrete problem. The validity of the words spoken by my colleague, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) is fortified. He is suggesting to hon. members that it is not too late now for us to insist that the government have a policy and an attitude with respect to private bills which come before us week after week asking for the incorporation of new financial institutions and for a change in the mode of operation of insurance companies.

I do not think it is enough that bills of this kind should be introduced by private members and voted on by the small handful of members in the house at the time with the government adopting no attitude whatever toward them. I am sure that 30 or 40 years ago the government would have adopted a position of respectful neutrality toward private bills praying for the incorporation of financial houses or insurance companies. However, I do not think that sort of attitude is any longer valid, simply because the amount of capital accumulated by insurance companies in premium form has increased greatly in the past decade. It therefore follows that the amount of investment capital that insurance companies are able to marshal and invest in the way they so choose has a very direct and substantial effect on our entire national economic performance.

Let us look at the performance of insurance companies in Canada during the year 1967. In that year insurance companies invested something like 40 per cent of their investment portfolios in mortgages on real estate and homes. There is nothing wrong with this; indeed one hopes they will make even more of their investment portfolios available for mortgages, and in that way help play their part in solving the rather grave problem created by the housing shortgage in this country.

At the same time, these insurance companies have been rather pleased with the way they have been able to escalate the interest rate on mortgages accepted by them on real estate and homes. For example, the interest rate charged by insurance companies on mortgages all through the 1950's was of the order of 4 per cent, 4.3 per cent, 4.5 per cent and 4.6 per cent. By the early 1960's it had reached the 5 per cent level. However, in the past two years interest rates on mortgages in Canada have increased so greatly and irrationally that one can only say that these rates have run amok since early 1967.

The fact that insurance companies do have a large volume of capital available for mortgage investment has not seemed to make any difference to these rates. Therefore, I conclude that insurance companies operating in Canada have not been motivated by any desire to do what they can to hold the line on interest rates in this country. They have been as anxious as the rest, if not more so, to see interest rates escalate. Since nearly half of their investment portfolio is in the form of mortgages, the higher the interest rate, the better they like it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Five o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, I hear some hon. members calling it five o'clock. I understand there is general agreement to call it five o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order. My understanding is that private members' hour started four minutes before four o'clock, on the understanding that the hour would expire after the normal allotted time. Therefore, I must bring to the attention of hon. members that the hour set aside for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

I understand the President of the Privy Council has an announcement to make.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to confirm that on Monday we will be on script as indicated in my announcement yesterday, starting with third reading of the precious metals marking bill and then going on to third reading of the bill dealing with the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. Following that measure, we will call second reading of the bill to amend the Export and Import Permits Act. Assuming passage of that measure, we would then deal successively with items 33 and 41, third reading of the bill to amend the Aeronautics Act and third reading of the bill to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

At five o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, February 10, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—PROGRESS REPORT ON ESTABLISHING RELATIONS WITH PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to give a brief statement to the house about the government's progress in establishing relations with the People's Republic of China. Our embassy in Stockholm has been instructed to get in touch with the embassy of the People's Republic of China in order to convey the Canadian proposal that talks concerning relations between the two countries be held at a mutually convenient time and place in the near future. I hope that before long we shall have a reply from the Chinese government and that representatives of our two countries can then begin to discuss the question of recognition of the People's Republic of China and the exchange of embassies between Ottawa and Peking.

We also hope to be able to take this opportunity to explore with Chinese officials the whole range of Sino-Canadian relations, and to discuss the possibilities for expanding and developing our relations in a number of areas. Even without diplomatic relations, we have been able to develop our trade, exchange correspondents between Ottawa and Peking, and increase contacts between Canada and China in a number of fields in recent years.

There will be a number of questions for our officials to discuss with the Chinese. It is not only a question of working out a satisfactory basis for recognition and the exchange of embassies, but of reaching agreement on a number of details relating to the operations of a Canadian embassy in Peking and a Chinese embassy in Ottawa. Since these questions are to be the subject of discussion, I do not think it would be appropriate to say any more about them now.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): First of all, Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat awkward to attempt to respond to a statement concerning the People's Republic of China without having notice, but I suppose members of parliament have been made aware, by statements, of the government's intentions in this regard. I would hope those countries of the world such as Italy, Belgium and Canada that are now engaged in serious negotiations with the People's Republic of China will be flexible enough so that the Nationalist government of China as represented in Taiwan will not by its action be outside the world community. However, presumably this would be a decision of the government of Taiwan and not a decision of the government of China.

Of course it is quite unrealistic for 700 million of the world's people to be outside the ordinary diplomatic exchanges among nations, and I think that anybody who has made a study of international matters feels that a change would have to be made, I personally hope the day will not be too far removed when the People's Republic of China can take its place as a member of the United Nations, because I believe that universality of membership in the United Nations is an objective that all countries should pursue.

Obviously the negotiations will take place in secret, but you know, Mr. Speaker, white papers do not have to be lengthy documents and it would be a help in a so-called participatory democracy if the government's intentions toward the People's Republic of China and the Nationalist government of China were made the subject of a white paper.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we of the New Democratic party welcome the announcement that has been made today by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). As the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) has just indicated because of reports in the press we have been aware of the moves the government has been taking. We are glad, however, to have this progress report made on the floor of parliament itself.

We wish the government well in the discussions into which it is now proposing to enter, and we hope they will be successful. We are glad to note that the discussions will be concrete, in that the government aims not just at formal recognition but at the actual exchange of ambassadors.

We would like also to support the plea made by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal, which we have made for years, that the Canadian government go the further step and urge that the government of the People's Republic of China be seated in the United Nations.

Any views that any of us have on this matter are entirely apart from any question of ideology. Whatever social or economic philosophy the people of Mainland China may be following, the fact is that they are 700 million people, a very large proportion of the world's population, and it has been quite unrealistic for them to be outside of the family of nations, in the way that has obtained for the past number of years. We welcome the statement; we wish the government success in these important negotiations.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

AMENDMENT REQUIRING STATEMENT OF LIFE EXPECTANCY OF PRODUCTS

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-169, to amend the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, very briefly the purpose of this bill is to benefit the consumers of Canada by requiring that the manufacturers and retailers of manufactured products, such as appliances, state at the point of sale the life expectancy of their products, thus informing the purchaser of what service timewise he or she is going to get for his or her dollar.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

SALE OF LANGUAGE STUDY AIDS

Question No. 985—Mr. Fortin:

1. Does the Queen's Printer, or any other official of the government envisage the sale at a reduced price of records or other aids whereby the study of French or English could be brought within the reach of all Canadians and, if not, for what reason?

The role of the Queen's Printer is to meet the publishing requirements of government departments, and no request has yet been received for the publishing of such material.

2. The Secretary of State Department through its associated agencies extends culture in a variety of ways to all Canadians.

The National Film Board provides a nation wide service by distributing films through film libraries to educational institutions, clubs, societies; the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation provides Canadians with a national broadcasting service in French and English, operating networks of television and radio stations and producing and procuring programs of information and entertainment; the National Library lends books to all libraries in Canada and provides reference services to institutions and private citizens; all accredited students and researchers have full access to the Public Archives; the National Museums collect, conserve, catalogue and exhibit objects all year round in their respective fields, conduct research, plan and execute static displays and travelling exhibitions and arrange lectures, guided tours, films slides and extension programs.

Books, monographs, brochures and catalogues are available free or at a nominal cost. The new National Arts Centre will present French and English performing arts to Canadians by subsidizing tickets to reduce rates. The Canada Council, through a system of grants and scholarships helps Canadians to study the arts, humanities and social sciences.

Questions

4. Yes. According to the latest information obtained by the Department of Industry, the University of Toronto has received from the Paint Research Institute of the Federation of Societies for Paint Technology financial support for one of its research programs for the years 1966-68. The Federation of Societies for Paint Technology, in turn, receives support from the Canadian Paint Manufacturers Association and other Canadian paint associations.

It is understood that the Institute's grant to the University of Toronto is not being continued for 1969.

4. The studies were not completed by November 30, 1967.

5. The studies were prepared for the information and assistance of those working on tax reform measures in the government and others who are interested in the subject. COQUALEETZA HOSPITAL, SARDIS, B.C.

Question No. 1,190—Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway):

1. What is the patient-capacity of the federally-owned Coqualeetza Hospital near Sardis, British Columbia?

2. What has been its daily average of patients since January 1, 1967?

3. Has the federal government initiated talks with the Government of British Columbia with a view to having the provincial government take over this hospital for either extended care patients or as a mental hospital?

4. If so, when were these talks initiated?

5. What was the response of the provincial government to the offer of the federal government?

6. Is the provincial government prepared now to take advantage of the federal government's willingness to turn over the hospital to the Province?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The present rated capacity of the Coqualeetza Indian Hospital is 95 beds.

2. 1967, 84 patients; 1968, 45 patients.

3. The Minister of Health Services and Hospital Insurance of the Province of British Columbia initiated discussion concerning the future of the Coqualeetza Hospital and its possible use as a mental health and geriatric facility. These talks followed upon the continuing liaison carried on at the operational level concerning the appropriate method of hospitalizing within the existing system of hospitals the Indian patients in British Columbia requiring tuberculosis or mental hospitalization.

4. April, 1968.

5. It was apparent that a careful study was required of a number of factors bearing upon the best future use of the hospital. These factors relate to the integration of the hospital into the total health care system, the selection of an agency to operate the hospital, future financing of the hospital and the suitability of the building itself for various possible uses. Rather than "a response to an offer" there was agreement to carry out such a study prior to further action.

6. The Province continues to show an interest in acquiring the hospital.

CANADIANS ON U.S. QUOTA BASIS

Question No. 1,212—Mr. Woolliams:

1. Has the government any knowledge of a new Immigration Act which recently became law in the United States placing Canadians on a quota system with peoples of other nations?

2. What is the quota for Canadians wishing to go to the United States to live and work on a permanent basis?

3. Has the Canadian Government protested to the American Government that Canadians are having to wait seven months to a year before they are advised whether they can be admitted to the United States?

4. What is the average time taken to process applications by Americans wishing to live and work in Canada on a permanent basis?

5. Has the Canadian Government received complaints from various corporations and industrial concerns in Canada that this new immigration legislation in the United States is discriminating against Canadians going to the United States to take employment?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of External Affairs and Manpower and Immigration as follows: 1. The Canadian Government has been aware of the possible imposition of a ceiling on Western Hemisphere immigration into the U.S.A. since the relevant legislation was first introduced in the United States Congress in 1965. The ceiling came into effect on July 1, 1968.

2. While an individual quota has not been established for Canada or the other countries concerned, an aggregate quota has been imposed limiting immigration from all independent Western Hemisphere countries collectively to 120,000 per year.

3. The Canadian Government places a high value on the traditional absence of any numerical restrictions on the freedom of movement of citizens of Canada and the United States across our shared international border. It is therefore the view of the Canadian Government that the introduction of a numerical limit on the movement of people between the two countries is regrettable in principle and sets an unfortunate precedent. The views of the Canadian Government were made known to the United States Government when the law was introduced in 1965 and again in 1968.

4. On the average, it takes approximately three months from the date on which a formal application is first received from an American citizen until the granting of landed immigrant status can be authorized.

BILINGUAL MEAT INSPECTION MARK

Question No. 1,244—Mr. Fortin:

1. Does the government intend to amend paragraph 5 of section 8 of the Meat Inspection Regulations in order to provide that the inspection mark be in both English and French and, if not, for what reason?

2. What is the present stage of the study on the printing of labels in both official languages undertaken by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

3. Will this report be laid before the House and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Agriculture and Consumer and Corporate Affairs as follows: 1. Section 8 of the Meat Inspection Regulations deals with the application for registration under the provisions of the Meat Inspection Act and there is no paragraph 5 in that Section.

The Meat Inspection mark is provided for in part 4 Section 68 of the Meat Inspection Regulations. This section was amended on December 8, 1965 to provide for a redesigned Meat Inspection mark bearing only the word Canada together with the establishment number in figures.

Paragraph 5 of Section 68 which required the legend mark to be in English was revoked on December 8, 1965.

The original legend bearing the words "Canada Approved" was left in the regulations in order to provide for a transition period from the English language legend to the one bearing only the word Canada.

2. Preliminary discussions have taken place with a number of trade associations on the subject of the use of both official languages on labels in order to ascertain the extent to which bilingual labels are now used and to consider the technical, marketing, legal and graphic problems encountered in bilingual labelling. The discussions are informal and exploratory and consideration has not so far been given to the preparation of a report on the subject.

[Translation]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The federal-provincial conference of Ministers of Welfare, which is now being held annually, was convened to consider a number of problems of mutual interest in the social welfare field. Major attention was given to the Canada Assistance Plan. The ministers agreed to collaborate in a variety of activities aimed at making their welfare programs more effective, particularly as they affect disadvantaged and alienated persons. They agreed to set up a number of task forces, working groups, and intergovernmental committees to achieve these objectives. The question of Indian welfare was considered, and the Ministers of National Health and Welfare and of Indian Affairs and Northern Development repeated the federal government's offer to the provinces to share in the costs of welfare programs to ensure that Indians would receive the same level and quality of services provided to other residents of the province. It was agreed that continued negotiations would be held on this subject.

2. The question of federal support to provincial legal aid programs was discussed, but no conclusions were reached. Further consideration will be given to this subject at future conferences. The question of the establishment of a national legal aid program was not discussed. If and when any action is taken in this matter, it will be announced to parliament in the usual manner.

3. It was agreed that three study groups would be set up. The first will develop a research program on alienation as it relates to social assistance recipients. The second will study the possibility of a developmental approach to public assistance, with the aim of directing the major public assistance programs toward the rehabilitation of those who have a potential for complete or partial self-support. A study will also be undertaken of cost factors in social assistance, with special attention being given to improved financial and statistical reporting and better methods of analyzing caseloads and the factors contributing to rising assistance costs.

The determination of the terms of reference and membership of these study groups is being worked out in collaboration with the provinces. Reports of the studies will be made to a conference of federal and provincial Ministers of Welfare.

How many applicants for the 29 vacant places in the eight week retraining programme at George Brown College in Toronto are being refused because of an imperfect command of the English language?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No applicants for these vacant places have or will be refused because of an imperfect command of the English language.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SEIZURE OF GOODS IMPORTED UNDER JAY TREATY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister and the Minister of National Revenue. It has to do with the seizure of a truck and commodities thereon brought in from the United States by Indians claiming their rights under the Jay treaty of over 150 years ago. Would the government advise whether or not this very harsh treatment of seizure under the particular circumstances will be ameliorated by a withdrawal of the seizure? After all they were our allies for generations.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how much the government knows about this, but I think we ought to have—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman knows that even if the government does not know as much as it ought to in questions of this kind, the right hon. gentleman is allowed to ask the question but not to convey the information.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to convey any information. I simply ask this: First, will this harsh treatment be immediately avoided by a release of the truck and also the goods seized? Secondly, in view of the fact that the treaty rights with Indians should be upheld, even though juristically they are not in effect, does the government intend to respect the Jay treaty and the rights of these Indians by bringing in legislation to actually rectify our failure over the years to approve the Jay treaty?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): I do not know whether that question should be directed to me or to the Acting Prime Minister but, as far as the Department of National Revenue is concerned, it only enforces the law which does not contain any treaty. As for the incident of the seizure of the truck, officials are considering the consequences of that action.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue whether the policy of applying the law of which he speaks is one which has been followed over the last number of years, or whether it is a policy which has just been operative in recent times.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I do not think that is a new policy, Mr. Speaker. A certain custom might have been condoned in the past concerning some Indians in the area, because it is well known that in some houses, the living room is in Canadian territory while the kitchen is in American territory. It is rather difficult to control all that, but upon my return from hospital, I knew that there had been some problems about certain customs. Anyhow this whole problem is under consideration.

LABOUR RELATIONS

KELVINATOR COMPANY—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING LAY-OFFS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to address this question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In his absence perhaps I might put it to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that more than 300 workers of the Kelvinator Company of Canada at London received lay-off notices last week, and in view of the fact there has been a recent change in the ownership of this company, will the government make representations to the parent company in the United States in the hope that these workers might not lose their jobs?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the question has already been brought to the attention of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration by one of the members on this side of the house. I understand that representations are also being made by the department to prevent, if possible, these lay-offs and, in the event the lay-offs are inevitable, at least to make the transition for these people much easier through the services of the manpower department.

[Later:]

Mr. Mackasey: Earlier, Mr. Speaker, I was asked a question about the lay-off at the Kelvinator Company. I was somewhat ambiguous in my answer but I should like to be more specific. I said the matter was brought to my attention by a member on the government side. I should have said it was brought to my attention by my hon. friend from London East (Mr. Turner).

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—EXTENSION OF PRIVILEGES TO JEWISH REFUGEES

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will remember that I asked last Monday about the possibility of Canada admitting Jews from certain Middle East countries. Apparently the Jewish people of Iraq are particularly vulnerable at this time and I should like to ask the minister for a progress report.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since this question was raised in the house the government has received a number of representations from the Canadian Jewish Congress and also from certain associations of Protestant churches, which have supported the plea that Canada take measures to provide a home for these Jewish people of various countries of the Middle East. These groups will be meeting this week with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, and probably myself, to discuss how best we can take effective action. It is most important to realize, as I am sure my hon. friend knows, that we want to take action of a kind that will be most helpful to the people concerned, and will not result in any reprisals or any other actions that would be detrimental to their interests.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

SUBMISSION OF NEW TAX-SHARING PROPOSALS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): In the absence of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance who are in another place—not the other place—I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government of Canada will have new proposals to make to the federal-provincial conference on the matter of tax-sharing?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As the Prime Minister made very clear at the conference this morning, which I had the privilege of attending, all matters affecting the division of powers both on the spending and taxation side are open for discussion at this conference. He said he would welcome just as open a discussion on these matters as he would on other matters in respect of which there are specific proposals from the federal government.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT BASEL BANKERS MEETING

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether Canada was represented at the meeting of western central bankers at Basel which is reported as having reached an agreement on a plan to combat the flows of speculative funds from one country to another, and did we agree to the plan?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this question as notice in order that my colleague the Minister of Finance can answer with authority.

TRANSPORT

NORTHUMBERLAND CAUSEWAY—ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING CONSTRUCTION

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether the government will be taking the opportunity this week, while the premier of Prince Edward Island is in Ottawa, to make a full and clear statement on action in respect of the construction of the Northumberland Strait crossing?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I saw in the press that the Premier of Prince Edward Island indicated that he is desirous of meeting a group of cabinet members when he is here, and I imagine that may be one of the matters he will want to discuss. I would think that an early, definite statement in respect of the crossing could be expected.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister in this connection? Has he any information with regard to meetings that will be held by the government with the Atlantic premiers, apart from the conference itself, on such matters as Atlantic union, transportation, and things that are important to those provinces?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am quite satisfied that the premiers of those provinces would not lose an opportunity of making their views known to the government, and I am sure members of the government would be very happy to hear what they have to say while they are in Ottawa.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, can I take it that the government is also interested, and will show some leadership, in the matters I have mentioned, namely transportation, Atlantic union and other questions important to the Atlantic provinces?

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

EFFECT OF RATE CHANGES ON NON-PROFIT PUBLICATIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Has the minister received representations from non-profit organizations, such as professional groups like doctors, church groups, co-operatives, trade unions and the ethnic press, to the effect that the new postal rates will mean the end of many of their publications, and difficulty for all their publications?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is not in order. It is not sufficient to ask what representations have been received by a minister.

[Later:]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could rephrase the question I tried to ask the Postmaster General, and ask the minister whether he is reviewing the new postal rates set for non-profit publications, in view of the difficulties being experienced by these publications.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that all of those who support various non-profit organizations take account of the increased costs of their projects.

NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING FIVE-DAY DELIVERY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Is the minister now in a position to report any progress in his discussions with the leaders of the postal workers unions on the question of five-day delivery?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I met on Thursday for a lengthy period with the national council of the two unions. I am at their disposal. They are continuing their own discussions. I expect, or hope, that I will have something to say tomorrow.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Postmaster General. As a result of his discussions with the unions, is the government or his department contemplating giving mail delivery to businesses and retail establishments on a six-day basis?

Mr. Kierans: No, Mr. Speaker; the question of extending the five-day week has not come up.

AGRICULTURE

P.F.A.A.—INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PAYMENT

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the limited number of inspections under P.F.A.A., when does the department expect to complete payment to those eligible for payment?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, no specific date can be given at this time. Some of the inspections had to be delayed because harvesting was not completed last fall in some of the townships. The severely cold weather in the area until a very few days ago also prohibited the normal inspections that would have gone forward at that time.

TASK FORCE—PUBLICIZING OF RECOMMENDATIONS BEFORE AGRICULTURAL CONFERENCE

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that some reports of the task force on agriculture have been made public, is it the policy of the minister to release to the public all the papers of the task force on agriculture prior to the agricultural conference in late March?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking the minister to make a policy statement. The question as asked is not in order.

Mr. Gleave: May I rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker? Will the minister release these policy papers to the public prior to the conference in late March?

Mr. Olson: They are not policy papers; they are position papers containing findings and some alternative recommendations of the task force. It is our hope that all nine of them—I believe there are nine separate papers—will be ready and translated so that we can distribute them to the approximately 400 delegates who will be invited to attend the agriculture congress. When they are released or sent to the delegates who will be attending, I see no reason why all members of this house, and indeed the press, should not have copies of them also.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

TETRACYCLINE—EVIDENCE OF PRICE FIXING

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): In the absence of the minister, my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Does the government have any evidence of price fixing in Canada on the part of companies manufacturing the drug tetracycline, and if so what action is the government contemplating?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question should be placed on the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—MAINTENANCE OF PRINCIPLES OF HUMAN RIGHTS DECLARATION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs based on the important announcement he made today in connection with the discussions which are to take place with the People's Republic of China. In any such discussions would the government of Canada bear in mind the principles of national self-determination, nuclear non-proliferation, and other principles contained in the universal declaration of human rights?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I can say to the hon. gentleman that one of the purposes Canada has in mind in establishing relations with the people who are under the control of the government of the People's Republic of China is to facilitate the sort of international discussion that has produced the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and the declaration of human rights. By bringing about a closer relationship with the government of that country we hope we can promote the acceptance of these principles in that area, as well as in other parts of the world.

Mr. Baldwin: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister did not deal with the third proposition I put before him, that of national self-determination, which I think is of some importance.

Mr. Sharp: I certainly did not mean to overlook that. It is the very foundation upon which relations between states are based, and certainly we hope that the government of the People's Republic of China will support that principle as strongly as we do.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Later:]

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpèque): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for clarification. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said, in answer to an earlier question, that it is the intention of the government to exchange diplomatic relations with Mainland China, as if this were a firm decision. Will this not be dependent on negotiations that are to take place, and also to some extent on the terms to be agreed?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have indicated on a number of occasions, and so has the Prime Minister, that it is the purpose of this government to establish relations between Peking and Ottawa and to exchange diplomats. Whether we achieve that purpose will of course depend not only upon our own actions but upon actions of the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I have a supplementary question. Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs assure the house and the people of Canada that such an agreement between Mainland China and Canada will not be at the expense of the government of Taiwan?

Mr. Sharp: I have dealt with this question on a number of occasions and really have nothing more to add to what I have already said.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

FEASIBILITY STUDY OF GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs and ask him whether he or his department is giving any consideration to a feasibility study of a guaranteed annual income for veterans.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking a question of very wide scope. He is asking the minister to give a policy statement, which, I suggest to him should not be done at this time.

Mr. Saltsman: I wonder if I might make my question a little more specific and ask the minister whether he is considering the question of a guaranteed income for veterans.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the second question appears to be very much like the first one, and I suggest to the hon. member that the rules applying to the second question apply to the first one, and vice-versa.

[Mr. Sharp.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—DENIAL OF ACCESS TO BERLIN

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has Canada been participating in the talks or consultations which West Germany has been holding with her western allies over East Germany's restrictions on access to Berlin, and what is the Canadian government's position in regard to the latest attempt to deny access to that city?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We have been kept informed of these discussions through our membership in NATO. Since we are not one of the four powers involved, we have not been direct participants in the discussions, so it has not been necessary for us to take a position.

FISHERIES

IMPLEMENTATION OF 12 MILE EXCLUSIVE ZONE

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the Canadian government obtained the views of the new United States administration on the implementation by Canada of the 12 mile Canadian exclusive fishing zone?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We have not entered into discussions with the new United States administration. There have of course been a number of consultations with the United States government in this field over a number of years, but not recently at a ministerial level.

Mr. Anderson: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can we assume from the minister's reply that it is the intention of the Canadian government to discuss this question with the United States authorities in the near future?

Mr. Sharp: I can assure the hon. member that we in the government recognize that this is one of the more urgent questions facing us, but we have not yet determined how best we can make progress in achieving our objectives.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the Acting

Prime Minister inform the house what progress in being made on Canada's territorial sea and fishing limits bill with the government of France, since the base lines have been determined near the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, and there would appear to be some difficulty—

Mr. Speaker: I have some doubts whether that question is in order. The hon. member is asking the minister to give a statement of a very general nature. Unless there is urgency in the matter which escapes me, the question is not in order. However, if there is, perhaps the minister might want to reply to the question.

Mr. Sharp: Of course the whole question of fishing zones is a matter that affects not only our relations with the United States but also our relations with France, with whom we have a treaty. These matters have been the subject of a good deal of attention within the government, because we realize that if we are going to make progress in one direction we probably have to make progress in all directions with all the countries affected. I have not yet personally engaged in any discussions with the French government, but the matter is very much before us at the present time.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a supplementary question. Would the minister call upon the services of the government of Quebec in this regard? Perhaps they might be a little more helpful.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INCREASED RENTAL CHARGES FOR BOXES

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the wholesale protests over the increased rent on post office boxes, has the Post Office Department initiated a review of this problem?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is not in order. Perhaps the second part of the question is in order but it should be prefaced by a statement. However, this caveat having been made, perhaps the minister might like to reply to the question.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we announced the policy that we were trying to recover the costs of the rental of post office boxes in various communities across the country, and that policy still stands.

COMMUNICATIONS

ALLEGED COLLUSION BETWEEN TELEPHONE AND CABLE TELEVISION COMPANIES

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, but in his absence and the absence of his two substitutes may I direct it to the Postmaster General, who will have some interest in the subject matter under the new reorganization of the government. Is his department or the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs conducting an investigation into a case of apparent collusion between Bell Telephone Company and five cable TV companies in the Toronto area?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question should be placed on the order paper.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PRECIOUS METALS

LEGISLATION RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, MARKING, ETC.

Hon. Otto E. Lang ((Saskatoon-Humboldt) for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill S-4, respecting the marketing of articles containing precious metals, be read a third time and passed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

FISHERIES

ESTABLISHMENT OF FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio) moved that Bill C-148 to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish and to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, be read a third time and passed.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I rise to speak briefly on the third reading of Bill C-148, an act to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish, and to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. It is my opinion that this particular act has received a thorough study by all concerned, at all stages of the bill.

The measure was first debated at the resolution stage under our old rules of procedure, and was given first reading on December 18, 1968. On January 16 the bill was again before the house where it was thoroughly debated, given second reading and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. The standing committee met on Tuesday, January 28, a clause by clause study was carried out, and the bill as amended was reported to the house.

On Friday, February 7, the house again dealt with this measure at the report stage and members on this side of the house did their best to amend the legislation in order that the corporation, when opening its doors for business, might be truly representative of the people whom it was designed to serve. In this we were only partly successful, but the subamendment moved to our amendment by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) indicated a change of heart on the part of members supporting the government, and we believe the corporation will be better served by an advisory committee of 15 members, of whom at least one third should be persons or representatives of persons actively engaged in the freshwater fishing industry as fishermen.

It is unfortunate, in our view, that the government could not accept the suggestion that the Auditor General be appointed to carry out an annual audit of the accounts and financial transactions of the corporation. We took this stand because the bill does not indicate who will keep the books, who will be responsible for the preparation of financial statements or who is to be responsible for auditing the accounts of the corporation. The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) has stated that in the end the Auditor General may well be the auditor appointed to audit the books of the corporation. However, his refusal to place this wording in the act raises some doubts in our minds concerning the person or persons who will ultimately be responsible for auditing the accounts of the corporation. After all, the Canadian taxpayer has a considerable stake in this corporation. It is to receive, initially, a grant of an amount not exceeding $100,000, with power to borrow up to five million dollars, backed up by the resources of the federal government, which really means by the people of Canada.

It is easy to understand our concern with regard to the responsibility for auditing the books of this corporation when one looks at some of the classic examples of mismanagement and improper estimating which have come to light recently. The increase in expenditures over estimates for the refitting of the Bonaventure, the increase in expenditures over the estimates for the National Arts Centre, are staggering and they literally have the taxpayers of Canada hanging on the ropes.

When setting up this corporation we are dealing with an estimate, made by someone within the department, and we are told that a grant of $100,000 will enable the corporation to meet initial operating and establishment expenses. From experience of the examples to which I have referred, we have no way of knowing what the actual costs will be. We can only hope and pray that this estimate will be more accurate than estimates made in the past, since under clause 15 (1) the corporation is required to conduct its operations on a self-sustaining financial basis without appropriations therefor by parliament. If the initial estimate is too low, what happens to the corporation? Neither the bill nor the minister has been very clear on this point and I suggest it is one which he may wish to clarify.

The same question would apply to the amount which may be borrowed by the corporation, since the amount of any bank loans shall not exceed five million dollars. I presume this figure is also an estimate. I cannot help but wonder what would happen to the corporation if its total funds became tied up in property and in holding fish in storage to obtain higher prices. Certainly the fishermen could not come to its rescue, and I wonder whether the responsibility would not rest with the federal government or the provinces to provide more capital.

It is evident, Mr. Speaker, that under the terms of this all-encompassing legislation covering the buying, filleting, freezing, packaging and preparing of fish for market, high costs will be involved at the initial stage. The corporation, according to its purposes and powers, must not only buy and prepare fish but it must store, ship, insure, import, export, market, sell and otherwise dispose of fish and fish byproducts manufactured or produced by it. In addition it must establish branches or employ agents in Canada or elsewhere. It must make loans of working capital on a seasonal basis to persons engaged in fishing for commercial purposes in a participating province, and do all such other things as are necessary to the carrying out of any of its functions under the act. And it must do all these things, Mr. Speaker, on a capital grant of $100,000.

It seems to me that what we have before us is another faulty estimate. If this corporation is to carry out all the requirements of the freshwater fish industry I question the judgment of the man or men who made the initial estimate covering the requirements of the board.

If the corporation can be established and become a successful, effective organization, providing better prices and services to inland fishermen, using the amounts as listed in this bill, the corporation will in my view have achieved its objective. There can be only one purpose for this corporation, and that is to provide some 7,000 inland fishermen in the vast area covering northern Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Northwest Territories with a better standard of living through a higher percentage return on the fish they catch. Under private enterprise, according to the McIvor Committee report, fishermen received between 50 per cent and 60 per cent of the export price. These figures are known, so it will be up to the corporation to do better.

It will be the responsibility of the corporation to bring about an improvement in the bargaining position of our inland fishery, by co-ordinating supply and demand and by providing uniform standards and quality control. It will be the responsibility of the corporation to improve the quality of all the fish it places on the market, so that the consumer will have confidence in Canadian fresh water fish products.

It will also be the responsibility of the corporation to co-ordinate the handling and processing of all freshwater fish; and, most important of all, it will be the corporation's responsibility to see that the hoped for higher export earnings will be passed on directly to the fishermen. In the final analysis it is the lone fisherman with whom we must be concerned. Unless his earnings are increased, unless he is given an opportunity to improve his status in the community, unless he is given a better income to provide for the needs of his family and for the education of his children, this whole exercise becomes one which only increases government bureaucracy, without providing any real assistance for the people it was designed to help.

Since the marketing board concept for an inland fishery is an entirely new departure—to the best of my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, this is the first time we have had a federal fresh fish marketing corporation in Canada—I cannot help but wonder what efforts are being made by all the governments concerned to acquaint fishermen who reside in this vast area with the authority as well as the scope of the operations of the board.

In view of the marketing difficulties experienced by our fishermen, which in effect brought about the establishment of this marketing board, I cannot help but wonder whether the Canadian government has made a formal approach to the government of the United States to agree on a method of inspection of whitefish satisfactory to both governments. This is an important consideration at the initial stages of the setting up of this corporation. Apparently some 80 per cent of all our fish exported to the United States consists of whitefish. Since there is no standard inspection and since the whitefish at times are infected with a parasite, making the fish unacceptable to the United States authorities although that fish may be accepted by our Canadian authorities, I suggest to the government and the minister piloting this bill through the house that, if the freshwater fish corporation is to be successful, this is one area in which the government ought to consider taking action.

I wish to say that we, on this side, support this legislation. We hope, for the sake of the people in the vast area the corporation will serve, that the corporation will be successful in its operations.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my remarks on third reading of Bill C-148, an act to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish and to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, will be brief. The hon. member for South Shore who has just taken his seat gave the house a comprehensive resumé of how this legislation will affect our freshwater fishermen. I am rising at this time to suggest to the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang), who is piloting this bill through the house, that he should look at the record of a fish marketing board which was set up in Saskatchewan a number of years ago under a socialist government in that province. As I recall, the record of that board, was none too enviable. We ought to make certain that the board to be set up under this legislation is not similar to the one set up under that socialist government. Under the previous board Saskatchewan fishermen complained that the return they received from their product was too low and not equitable to the cost of production. The administrative costs of that board were also too high.

Before regulations under the present bill are finally implemented I suggest that the minister take a look at the records showing how the previous board operated. A close study of that situation may be well worth while. I am sure he will appreciate what I am referring to.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few brief comments on this bill. We have had a good debate at all stages of the bill, one of the last to go through a resolution stage before the rules changed. We had a lively discussion in committee and, although we did not succeed in getting amendments through, at least the government accepted several of them in a watered down version. The result is better legislation.

Before the minister replies to our questions and closes debate I would ask that, in the course of his summation, he shed some light on the government's timetable regarding the establishment of a salt fish marketing board,—and I hope you will permit me to speak for just a moment on this subject, Mr. Speaker. I shall not speak as to the merits of a salt fish marketing board, but I do express the hope that the board to be set up under the present bill is a forerunner of a similar board to do with the marketing of salted codfish.

Meeting with the president of the Newfoundland Federation of Fishermen, the Minister of Fisheries indicated that it was the government's policy to set up a marketing board for the marketing of salt codfish. Considering the serious marketing problems facing this industry we hope the government is sincere, and will set up such a board. Perhaps in reply the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan might take us into his confidence, as his colleague, the Minister of Fisheries did with the president of the Newfoundland Federation of Fishermen.

We in this party, Mr. Speaker, support this legislation. We wish the minister well in this particular endeavour. At the same time we point out that any piece of legislation is only as good as those administering the legislation. For the sake of our fishermen we hope fish prices increase, and that the markets remain stable and improve in size. In all these respects we wish the minister well.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I hope I am not out of order under our new rules in asking the minister responsible for piloting this bill through the house to reconsider the decision with respect to appointing the Auditor General to serve as auditor of this corporation. When the amendment was before the house the minister said he was not in favour of so appointing the Auditor General, because he wanted to remain flexible in the matter of appointments. His position seemed vague, and I for one would prefer the minister to take a definite stand on this matter.

[Mr. Southam.]

Could this bill not have a provision written into it similar to section 16 of the measure establishing the National Arts Centre, or section 35 of that setting up the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation? Those sections specify that the Auditor General of Canada shall be the auditor of the corporation in question. I think hon. members of the house feel that our own Auditor General ought to audit the books of this corporation, and I am at a loss to know why the minister turned down the amendment the other day. I hope he will give the matter second thoughts, and that the Auditor General will be permitted to audit the books of the corporation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I expect hon. members know that according to the rules the minister is not entitled to reply on third reading. Of course if hon. members agreed by way of unanimous consent that the minister be allowed to reply to some of the speeches made, there would be no difficulty. Otherwise, by virtue of citation 166 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, there would be some difficulty in allowing the minister to reply at this stage.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the minister be given the consent of the house to speak at this stage. I would also like to suggest that Your Honour, or perhaps the Committee on Procedure and Organization, might take another look at this point in view of the slight change of emphasis which has been made with respect to second reading and third reading. Under our former regime the second reading was extremely important and treated as a substantive motion which permitted the mover of second reading to reply at the end of the debate. The second reading stage has now been slightly downgraded, at least, the second reading vote, and the third reading stage upgraded. It seems to me it makes sense that on the third reading it should be regarded as important for the minister to have the right of reply. All I suggest today is that we consent to the minister replying, and I hope he will give a favourable reply about the Auditor General. I think the right of reply at this stage might be looked at in the light of the changes made in the rules.

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is of great interest. As a leading member of the committee in question, I am sure he will want to initiate discussion. He may suggest that instead of the right of reply being on second reading, it could be on third reading so that citation 166 would not apply at third reading but would apply to second reading. This is something to which hon. members will want to give consideration. For the moment the Chair is guided, I am afraid, by the precedents, although as I suggested a moment ago there is no difficulty if hon. members agree. I assume they will agree to allow the minister to reply at this time.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the indulgence of hon. members in allowing me to say a few words at this stage. I also appreciate the comments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I had no real intention to rise and speak at this point. It is really only to answer several of the questions raised by hon. members that I do so at this time. The matter has had very full debate and I will not cover any ground already traversed.

The hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) was somewhat concerned about the amounts of money specifically referred to in the bill. This, of course, is the best estimate at this time as to the amounts which in effect are appropriate maximums for the various purposes involved. It is difficult to decide when a maximum is in fact a reasonable maximum, but it would be a bad principle to enlarge these amounts indefinitely above what is reasonably to be expected. Should these expectations not be verified by the developments, we might be in the position of having to look at them again, but this is our best expectation at this time.

I would like to assure the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) that we had a careful look at the manner of operation of the fish marketing board which was an experiment in the province of Saskatchewan. We looked at its controversial record to which he referred in rather more definite terms. Marketing of fish is by no means limited to the borders of one province. However, the scope and power of that fish marketing board were necessarily limited to one province. In that regard this corporation we are now setting up will be much better off, because it will have the marketing control over the bulk of the freshwater fish from a very large area and the main control over almost all fish of a specific species. This board will be in a much better position to improve marketing conditions than was the Saskatchewan Board.

I will not comment on timetables for salt fish marketing boards or other endeavours in that regard. My colleague the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) has very much in mind the problems in this area. He will no doubt bring forward appropriate solutions to these problems in due course.

I regret to say to the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that I have nothing to add to the remarks made the other day in regard to the Auditor General. At that time I indicated I supported the sentiment of those who felt this was a proper use of the Auditor General. I indicated that the point of not legislating specifically was to allow some flexibility and some discussion about this matter with the corporation itself and the possible use by them of commercial auditing facilities in different aspects of their business prior to the formal audit, and the consequent convenience of using the same people for the audit. Certainly the use of the Auditor General is not in any way excluded.

Mr. Crouse: I wonder whether I may ask a question of the Minister without Portfolio? Could he tell us whether the Canadian government has made a formal approach to the government of the United States asking them to agree on a method of inspection of whitefish which would be mutually satisfactory? This is a very important matter and I would like to know if representations have been made along these lines?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I do not have anything new to report in regard to the discussions in areas like this which are going on at all times. I have no specific report to make in regard to the creation of this particular board.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING APPLICABILITY TO CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION ACT

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt) (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of Bill S-25, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill to amend the Export and Import Permits Act is a fairly simple one. It extends for a further period legislation which has been in effect for a considerable period of time. Legislation in 1947 created the Export and Import Permits Act as a successor to the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act. Since 1954 the bill has been brought before the house at three-year intervals to be re-enacted in each case.

The re-enactment at this time is scheduled for a five-year period as against the three-year period previously used. It is our feeling there may well be merit in having re-enactment of this bill by each parliament. The three-year period could bring it back before the same parliament for a second time, which is undesirable. Accordingly, this amendment is for a longer period.

The only other change in substance is the inclusion of the Canadian Dairy Commission Act in the list of acts under which action may be taken. This is really a housekeeping matter since this change in the Export and Import Permits Act has already been made in the Canadian Dairy Commission Act.

It is under this legislation that certain steps can be taken by the government in regard to some matters of export and import control. The export control may relate to such matters as arms and ammunition or may supplement certain other specific intergovernmental arrangements that have been entered into. The import controls are similarly designed, frequently to supplement other governmental action and particularly to supplement action where stabilization of price is being undertaken under some other legislation.

The purpose of the act is also to ensure that in certain cases goods which are of particular importance to Canada may not be exported outside Canada without regard to the interests of this country. Therefore the bill before us is a fairly simple continuation of the existing legislation, and I am pleased at this point to move its second reading and that it be referred to the appropriate committee.

[Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt).]

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the minister has indicated, this is essentially a housekeeping bill to provide for the extension of the legislation for a further period of five years. The extension to five years instead of the normal three years is not a matter to which anyone will take much objection.

Certainly the need for the extension of the legislation is quite manifest. As the minister has outlined, its chief purpose is to enable the government to impose import controls particularly so far as agricultural products are concerned, so that it will be possible to carry out the provisions of the Agricultural Stabilization Act, the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act, the Agricultural Products Board Act and the Fisheries Prices Support Act. To these is now to be added the Canadian Dairy Commission Act.

If that type of price stabilization is to work satisfactorily it is essential that the government have power to impose import controls on goods which would otherwise come in, undersell Canadian subsidized products and thus make the workings of our stabilization legislation ineffective. The chief point I would like to make in that connection is that I hope the government will be more active than it has been in the past in making use of this act. During the past four or five years the government has been very loath to use the act and put import controls into effect in cases where Canadian agricultural products were being damaged simply by the failure to use the provisions of the existing legislation. As a matter of fact, during that period some import controls were done away with. I recall that last year when poultry producers, particularly turkey producers, were in very considerable difficulties the government refused to take action and put import controls into effect. Speaking for this party I would say we are not only in favour of this legislation being renewed but that we are strongly in favour of it being used more effectively than has been the case in the past several years.

Dealing with the application of the act so far as export controls are concerned and the protection it provides, particularly with respect to the export of warlike material of any kind, I think that protection is manifestly necessary and nothing more needs to be said about it. The same applies so far as certain rare metals are concerned and metals which are in short supply from time to time. I anticipate that the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs when examining the bill would like further information with regard to the extent to which the act is being made use of at present, and would like some expression of the intention of the government as to how effectively it will use it in the future.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, we are all interested in seeing this bill reach the standing committee where we can examine it in details. The bill involves a clear example of the kind of power possessed by governments but which is not used by them in certain cases where the national interest would be best served by doing so.

My party feels that the scope of the bill should be enlarged to cover all imports and all exports, rather than being confined to those specified in it. My reason for saying this is fairly straightforward. Quite obviously the reason that warlike materials and some agricultural products were included originally under the provisions of the act was that there existed an urgent need in those areas for the government to exercise control at some stage of their import and export. Even though in the past governments have been reluctant to act on these matters, they possessed the power to do so if the national interests or the interests of specific industries were in jeopardy. But by restricting this power to cover only certain items we run the risk of emergencies arising with respect to other items, and the government would not be able to act even if it wished to do so.

The legislative process is a lengthy one. It takes time to bring legislation before the house, to examine it and to pass it. There can be no other way to handle legislation in a democratic nation and this must be recognized. It is for this reason that we think the government should possess the power to act in case of emergencies with respect to other items.

With respect to import restrictions the provisions of the bill deal almost solely with agricultural products. I think it must be clear to many hon. members that there are other goods which stand in the same jeopardy as the agricultural products listed in the bill. My area of Waterloo has two major industries, a textile industry and a shoe industry, which from time to time are seriously jeopardized by imports from foreign countries. Sometimes the production costs in those countries cannot be ascertained, and it is difficult to apply the anti-dumping legislation, even difficult to define whether dumping has taken place.

The powers given the government under this bill have to be used sparingly, not as a form of national protective policy or as a way of getting around agreements that we have entered into under GATT. This is very important. But on occasion some of our major industries that are large employers of labour are seriously jeopardized, and I can foresee the necessity for the government to take immediate action. When such an occasion arises is not the time to start thinking about legislation. The legislation should be in existence and ready for implementation. Therefore we would like to see such blanket powers included in this bill.

There have been occasions when the provisions of the act have been inadequate to protect the national interest. A year or two ago minerals like copper and nickel were in short supply and Canada, one of the major producers of these commodities, faced shortages of these minerals for its own industries. Our own industries were not able to obtain the copper and nickel which they needed, while many exportations were taking place. During that period the Minister of Trade and Commerce was asked concerning his intentions to act in this regard. The answer we received was that exports are more important than looking after the internal needs of our own industries. This to me is a very unacceptable proposition. If we are to move away from the exportation of raw materials as has been the case in the past and become more of a manufacturing nation, which we are capable of becoming and should become, we must ensure, particularly in those areas where we are major producers of raw materials, that those raw materials are not denied to our own manufacturers. In looking at this bill I do not think such protection is available under the enumerated powers in the bill.

I should also like to say a word about war materials. Under the consolidated Export and Import Permits Act it is clearly indicated that the government of Canada has the power to prohibit the export of war materials of various kinds. Our quarrel is simply that the powers possessed under this act have not been exercised in order to carry out what I believe is the considered judgment of the Canadian people. We have been guilty of complicity in the war in Viet Nam by sending war materials from this country to the United States. Our people did not want to participate in that war and yet our government has refused to act when it clearly has the power to do so.

Therefore there are two points which our party wishes to emphasize. First, the bill should be enlarged to include the emergency powers that may be necessary to protect industries which are in danger of extinction in this country, especially those industries which we have made a decision to support. Second, the government should pay more attention to the desire of the Canadian people in respect of controlling our own future, our utilization of our resources and our unwillingness to participate in other people's immoral wars. When the bill is before the committee we intend to present these points. We hope we will have an opportunity to bring forward some amendments which may be acceptable in order to make what we think would be worth while part of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, similar to the two preceding speakers I should like to say that the Export and Import Permits Act and the amendments now before us should be used effectively under the changing conditions in Canada generally. In the field of agriculture particularly we have a tremendous ability to produce. There is also a tremendous ability to produce on the part of our neighbour to the south and the European communities. It was stated by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), as reported in the press, that there is scarcely a developed nation in the western world that is not capable of producing a great deal more agricultural products than can be consumed by that nation. This means in effect that the market for dairy products so far as Canada and many other countries are concerned is practically limited to the country. I assume that is the reason the dairy commission is specifically included in this bill.

In respect of the production of feed grain in western Canada and corn in Ontario we find that the market is flooded with these products from other countries and that our own producers are at a serious disadvantage. I do not think we should allow ourselves to drift—I repeat, drift—into the position where we will be buying supplies from overseas or from our neighbour to the south which we can produce efficiently and easily at home. If we do not follow the policy of using our own resources we will find ourselves trying to get foreign exchange to pay for products which we should be producing here. As has been mentioned, this applies to turkeys and rapeseed in western Canada and to vegetable production as well.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

I hope the government will use the power it is taking through this bill. In the agricultural sector particularly I believe we are entering what might be described as a selective position. It will be necessary for us to maintain an export market for much of our agricultural production. At the same time we will have to maintain a domestic position in respect of other parts of it. It is my impression that we may not be able to apply effectively the Customs Tariff dumping provisions in the areas I have mentioned. Therefore I support this bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I rise to point out to the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I am of course heartened by the sentiment of the hon. members in the opposition who have tended to show, it seems to me, great trust and confidence in the government, a trust and confidence which of course is not misplaced—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Explain.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): —in urging that the power should be made broader, indeed, than in the contemplated amendments now before us. The government, of course, in amending the act is conscious of its general philosophy of moving the world toward a freer trade position. I would not want to think that hon. members would fall into the trap of backing free trade generally and at the same time demanding specific protection for specific purposes one after the other.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Speak to the members on your own side.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): This is a very difficult and yet sometimes politically attractive position to get into. The bill before us will now move to the committee. I shall be very interested to hear hon. members pursue some of the lines of inquiry they have indicated here in order to see how far their general philosophy goes and how far they are really talking about a specific area interest. I am pleased, therefore, to move the second reading and referral to the committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

• (3:30 p.m.)

AERONAUTICS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITION, REGULATIONS, ETC.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt) (for the Minister of Transport) moved that Bill S-14, to amend the Aeronautics Act, be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill S-14 now before the house for third reading deals with amendments to the Aeronautics Act. As hon. members know, this act regulates and controls civil aviation in Canada. The amendments contained in Bill S-14 have been studied in detail during a clause by clause consideration by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. They have been fully outlined and explained at the second reading stage.

The minister in whose name this bill stands would, I am sure, like me to express his appreciation to hon. members for the study the bill was given in the committee and here in the house and, through that study, the demonstration of the need for the amendments and desirable improvements contained in the bill. Therefore I am pleased to recommend that the house give third reading.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, all I have to say is that in spite of all the glowing descriptions of the government by the minister we have very serious reservations about powers given to the government to act by order in council. We are not going to vote against this bill on third reading but we file a caveat because we still have this reservation in our minds. Subject to that reservation, I assume the bill will pass and we will wait to see how it operates.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, in order to be clear about this bill I should like to ask the minister one question. Following the passage of the bill will the Department of Transport have the authority to spend sums of money on improvements or expansions of airport facilities in Canada, and will this money be spent without the department having to come to this house for approval?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I am always hesitant to give a legal interpretation in answer to hon. members' questions. I am sure the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) would be delighted to do so were the hon. member to approach him at any time.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, this is not a very satisfactory answer at this time. The question I asked is important and hon. members require an answer. If what I suggest is in fact the case, this is a pretty serious situation. Parliamentarians should have some control over spending by the government, and apparently by this measure we are giving the department a free ticket to spend money on airports. Surely we should have a more definite answer to this question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITION, UNAUTHORIZED WORKS, ETC.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt) (for the Minister of Transport) moved that Bill S-19, to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I intended to reply to the minister after he had made a statement. If he does not intend to do so I should like to comment on the motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I take it the minister is not going to make a statement. It was my impression that we had debated this matter on third reading. That was my mistake. I recognize the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the removal of the $5,000 limit in respect of which the minister's approval is required for construction of any facility on a navigable water makes every dock, boathouse, launching ramp or other facility on a navigable water subject to approval by the federal Minister of Transport. In addition, facilities already in existence can now be ordered removed. The act, as this bill proposes to amend it, will apply to every work which projects over a body of water, no matter how small. It will include even a couple of planks built on a couple of posts on a very small stream in any part of Canada.

This is one of the most dangerous pieces of legislation ever brought before parliament. I am positive that the Department of Transport could not possibly enforce it. At the present time there are in existence many facilities such as boathouses, wharves, launching ramps and marinas which have not been approved by the minister. If the owner could prove that these facilities cost less than $5,000, before these amendments are adopted, he would be fairly safe to go ahead without applying to the departments. These amendments remove that $5,000 limit. Every navigational facility will now be brought under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. Facilities of any size on any body of water no matter how small will be covered by this measure.

The interpretation of the word "navigable" has never been made clear, and I appreciate the difficulties involved. At the moment there are two obvious tests. There is a difference in the interpretation of "navigable" by the Department of Public Works and the interpretation by the Department of Transport. The term "navigable water" was interpreted by a number of witnesses who appeared before the transport committee as any body of water on which you can paddle a canoe. Therefore this measure has been extended to every situation involving a body of water in Canada.

I have been very close to the work done by the harbours and rivers branch of the Department of Public Works because I represent a part of the country in which there are many cottagers and tourist operators. Whenever they go to the Department of Public Works seeking approval for the construction of a wharf, a launching ramp or a boathouse on a small body of water, they have been told that this was never the intention of the B.N.A. Act in respect of navigable waters. These people have been told that the B.N.A. Act was never intended to cover small structures such as launching ramps or boathouses on small lakes or rivers. They have been informed that the B.N.A. Act was intended to relate to large navigable waters such as the oceans, the Great Lakes and larger inland lakes. They have been told not to ask the government to build a dock on Beaver Creek, for example, because that is not a navigable water in terms of this act.

We now have the Department of Transport coming along and saying that this is all right for the Department of Public Works but the Department of Transport will control navigation on any body of water no matter what its size. This has been a real problem and it has not been cleared up. In fact, the amendments to the Navigable Waters Protection Act that we are now considering make the situation worse. Just a week ago I was at a meeting in connection with the facilities in Algonquin Park. One outfitter there was disgusted that a body of water in the park in which he was interested had been declared navigable. He said there were six month old frogs in that creek that had not even learned to swim; yet it had been declared a navigable water.

This is a very sloppy piece of legislation and the Department of Transport cannot possibly carry out its provisions. They cannot possibly carry out their responsibilities because the act will provide that every person who proposes to build a dock, launching ramp or boathouse which extends over the water will be required to obtain a permit from the Department of Transport. If he does not do so, he runs the risk of the department coming along later and saying: We are sorry, but you must take this construction down. People who propose to build these structures will not have the protection that exists now under the section which provides that if the structure costs under $5,000 they are safe. Now there is no limitation. This means that under the legislation the department will undertake to receive applications from anybody in Canada who wants to build a dock or a boathouse. I know the department cannot do it; it is an impossible task.

A few years ago the province of Ontario tried to catch up on their responsibility in this matter and found it was impossible. There were docks and boathouses all over the province and they could not possibly do it. That is only one province. I do not know how the Department of Transport expects to carry out its responsibilities in this regard for the whole of Canada. This will be a carte blanche for every federal marine agent to go to a private owner in Canada and say: Remove your boathouse because you did not obtain a permit. They will be able to do this without any reason being expressed.

This legislation will also make it possible for a cottager to go to the Department of Transport and say that the fellow next door to him is building a dock and he wants the department to stop it. He can ask whether his neighbour has obtained a permit to build the dock. If the department says it did not bother to require a permit to be obtained because it was just a small dock, the man making the complaint can have the building of the dock stopped because his neighbour does not have a permit. If this man is not stopped, the department is derelict in its duty. If he is stopped, it is unfair to the man who is trying to do exactly what his neighbour has done. I am seriously concerned about this situation.

The minister tried to clear this matter up at the report stage. I do not have his exact words, but in essence he said that the department was not going to worry about little docks with a couple of planks. This was also said in the committee. But it is not what the bill says. The bill says that included within its provisions is every little dock with a couple of planks. I ask, Mr. Speaker: At what point is the Department of Transport going to carry out its responsibility? At what point is it going to be derelict in its duty? I think this legislation leaves the situation wide open.

I should like to mention the situation in which the provincial authorities are placed. At the present time, if you want to build a boathouse or a dock and want to be sure it will not be torn down, you must go to the provincial department of lands and forests, or whatever department is concerned, and obtain a permit to occupy the land under the water because it is provincial crown land. Therefore you must either obtain a patent of ownership for that little piece of crown land under the water, or an annual permit to occupy it, that is, a licence of occupation.

This situation has created a mess for the province because all the docks built without permits are there and a lot more are being built without permits. Some are being built with permits. It is an impossible situation because there are in Canada hundreds of thousands of facilities of this type. It is impossible for even the provincial authorities to regulate this matter. I remember that about 15 or 20 years ago the provincial government of Ontario decided to survey the situation with regard to its responsibility for docks and boathouses on inland lakes. After they looked at the situation for a while they decided it was an impossible task and had to leave it alone. Now we have the federal department wanting to take on the same responsibility in connection with ten provinces and the territories, despite the fact that to my knowledge it is a job that no provincial authority has been able to handle.

If at the present time you want to build a dock with two planks and a couple of posts, you must go to the provincial authority and obtain a licence to occupy the land under the water. Now you will also have to go to the federal Department of Transport and obtain a licence to build a facility on the surface of the water in order to comply with this bill. There is no use saying that if it does not project too far into the water it does not obstruct navigation, because if it projects one foot over the water you are obstructing a channel that someone may have used. Whether the construction projects one foot or two feet, if it projects over the water at all you are obstructing navigation. There is nothing in this bill that says how far such a construction shall project before it obstructs navigation. If it projects five feet will it be all right, but if it projects seven feet will it be an obstruction? If it projects 15 feet will it be all right, and will 20 feet be too far? There is nothing in the bill that deals with this question; there is no definition of what constitutes an obstruction in this respect. There is absolutely nothing the department can physically do to carry out the provisions of the bill.

A number of other objections to the bill were raised by the members of the committee. The committee went into this matter fully. Questions were asked but I do not think they were satisfactorily answered. There was a debate on this matter at the report stage, but the bill left in a very vague and unsatisfactory state. We moved amendments at the report stage and they were defeated.

I cannot understand the Liberal members supporting this bill, particularly those who have cottagers or tourist facilities in their ridings. I do not know how they will be able to go back to their constituents and explain the situation when someone says he has been ordered to take down his boathouse because it projects over the water. Will the member concerned say that he is sorry but he did not understand what was actually happening when this bill was passed? There are not in the house at the moment very many members who will have this responsibility. I hope those members who are here understand what is being done, because in the not too distant future they will perhaps have to explain this situation to their constituents.

However, the government has its majority. They have defeated our amendments and we are now on third reading. They are entitled to have their will unless we want to filibuster until the end of time, and we are not prepared to do that on third reading. But the bill is sloppy, poorly drafted and dangerous. If the majority of the house feels it should be passed, then I am going to ask that it be passed on a division.

Navigable Waters Protection Act

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on Bill S-19 to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act. While the bill before us does bring in some good changes, I felt that the over-all act is still wholly inadequate. In the committee and in the house the bill was discussed and I hoped that one or two major amendments would be brought forward by members on the government side.

I do not know if all members of the house are aware of the fact that the Navigable Waters Protection Act does not apply to all organizations in Canada. For example, the main users of our water resources are provincial and federal Crown corporations. They are the ones that use the navigable waters of this nation, and we find that they are not covered by this act. I think they should be. In my frank opinion the government and the minister are derelict in their duty to the people of Canada when they fail to include the main users of our great water resources. It is a disgraceful attitude for the government in the year 1969 to ignore the damage which can be done to water resources by failing to bringing in another amendment to include Crown corporations under the act.

This afternoon I would like to speak rather briefly to point out why I feel further amendments should have been made to Bill S-19. I am very disturbed by the fact that Crown corporations are excluded from the provisions of the Act. I come from the province of British Columbia where we have had some pretty sad experiences of what can happen to the navigable waters of a province merely because there was no agency that could insist on a proper job being done when certain hydro dams, for example, were being built. Here we have a bill amending the Navigable Waters Protection Act and excluding those agencies which most often do not take into consideration all the effects of the damming of certain rivers or lakes. This is the reason I suggest to the government that the bill is anything but adequate.

I feel that Canadians are very anxious that we exercise much tighter control over the use of our water resources than we have had in the past. During the committee hearing the legal counsel pointed out to the members of the committee that unless we specifically include in the act provincial and federal Crown corporations they will be exempted because of a clause in the Interpretation Act. It seems to me that the greatest omission that has been made is that these Crown corporations are not going to be forced to do the will of the federal government. Farther on in the act under section 12 we find that the federal government may exempt any group, individual or corporation from the provisions of the act if it so desires. If they can provide a good case for the construction of a dam or the flooding of a certain area or the diversion of a river, then the federal government has the right, under the act as it now stands, to exempt them from the provisions of the act. But if Crown corporations are not included—and they are not included either in this bill or in the old act—then they are home free and can do anything they wish in so far as the damming of waterways is concerned.

I would like to give the house several good examples of what has happened because we have not had sufficient protection in the act to insist on surveys being made before projects were commenced. It seems to me essential in this day and age that in the exploitation of our water resources we consider every aspect before proceeding with a project. If dams are to be built, I feel that proper ecological surveys should be made. We should know the results upon the local economy, upon wild life, vegetation, pollution, fish, tourism and a number of other related aspects. I hope that the concept of the multiple use of our resources will replace the blind, single-purpose development which apparently we have in Canada today.

I also want to point out that when the Navigable Waters Protection Act was before the house for second reading the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) spoke about the damaging effects which the Portage Mountain Dam in British Columbia was having on the whole of the Mackenzie River system. He pointed out that the provincial government did not go to the federal government for permission to build the dam. Protests were made but nothing was done. I think this is an excellent example of the need for control. Absolutely no ecological studies were made. As a result, we find that a neighbouring province, Alberta, and the area to the north of that province, are suffering. I am certain something could have been worked out to the satisfaction of all the governments concerned had full and proper surveys been undertaken before the project commenced. No improvement will be possible until an amendment along the lines of the one I have suggested has been enacted.

• (4:00 p.m.)

About a week ago I received a letter from a group of interested university people on the very subject upon which I am speaking. It outlined clearly the need for immediate action in the field of resource control and should be of interest to every member of the house. I understand the letter has been sent to several newspapers; if any hon. member would like a copy of it I would be glad to supply one. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read it into the record. I could outline the gist of it, but I think reading it would give a clearer picture of what these people are asking us to do. The letter comes from the Department of Electrical Engineering of the University of Alberta, Edmonton. It is dated January 28, 1969, and was addressed in this case to myself, though, as I say, it was sent to several newspapers. It reads as follows:

We are concerned that there seems to be a lack of policy by both the federal and provincial governments in Canada with regard to evaluating the ecological implications of the development of our natural resources. It appears that in the exploitation of these resources little or no attention is being given to the consequences upon the local economy, wildlife, vegetation, prevention of lake and river pollution, preservation of scenic beauty and other related values which ultimately mean so much to the Canadian people.

For example, it has recently been brought to our attention that there has been a considerable disruption of the ecology in the Peace River delta area in northeastern Alberta. A large portion of this area lies in Wood Buffalo National Park. Before the Portage Mountain Dam was built, the spring floodcrest on the Peace River provided a natural damming of the waters of the Athabasca River. This damming of the Athabasca River permitted it to back up and flood the forementioned delta area. This annual flooding was a vital factor in the ecology of the region. As a result, the area was able to support large numbers of muskrat, and to provide good spawning conditions for whitefish and goldeye in Lake Athabasca and adjacent waters. The muskrat provided a livelihood for the local Indian population—approximately 1,200 people—and the fish have supported commercial fishing for many years.

Now, all this has been threatened by the Portage Mountain Dam which will eliminate the floodcrest on the Peace River. Already, the water level of Lake Athabasca is some eight feet below normal, and is threatening the whitefish population. Both Richardson Lake and Mamawi Lake are dry and Lake Claire is now only five feet deep and is expected to freeze solid this winter. It has been estimated that in this year alone a quarter of a million muskrat will perish due to abnormally low water levels. The lack of water in Mamawi Lake has virtually eliminated the goldeye run in Birch River.

The above ecological changes were predicted and brought to the attention of the provincial authorities while the Portage Mountain Dam was in its planning stages. Apparently the information went unheeded.

Once more a dam is being planned without any apparent attention being given to the ecological repercussions. We are referring to the proposed Bighorn Dam on the North Saskatchewan River near Nordegg, Alberta. Already it is apparent that this dam will considerably affect the local wildlife population and at this stage one can only guess as to what else. Since we are very concerned about the possible consequences of this project, we are bringing it to your attention in the hope that you can initiate a critical review of this problem. We hope that a proper review of all aspects of the Bighorn Dam will serve as a precedent for similar future projects.

We are continuing to investigate this matter and will forward to you any additional information.

This letter is signed by seven professors from the department, and if hon. members wish their names I shall gladly read them. It underlines the very point I am making. We are allowing projects of this sort to take place in the absence of any surveys to find out what the over-all picture is likely to be in a few years time. It is simple enough. Engineers in our hydro corporations, for example, are given a job to do. They are asked to check as to the possibility of damming a river. They do this, and I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, they do a good job. Next, they turn in an engineering report stating how much the dam will cost, the amount of power it will supply, and so on. They are trained to do this. But they do not take into consideration the various points to which clear reference is made in the letter I have just read.

I say that as Members of Parliament for the Dominion of Canada it is our duty to see that we get the best possible return from the use of our resources—in this particular case, the water resources of the nation. You know, Mr. Speaker, that we have some excellent examples to the contrary in British Columbia; I have mentioned some of them in debate previously. I think it is the utmost stupidity on the part of the federal and provincial government to close their eyes to the need for proper reports being made before taking steps which might allow our resources to get away from us. In British Columbia we have a number of fine hydro projects, but in most instances they were designed and built for one purpose only. The ecological effects behind the dams on the areas affected were never taken into consideration.

In every province of Canada lakes have been flooded without the land first being cleared. I agree that it is necessary for us in this country to have cheap electric power. We build dams in order that cheap power may be supplied to our people. But included in the development costs of any power project must be the cost of studies undertaken to determine the effects on wildlife in the area to be flooded. Ecological factors have been ignored. That is why I suggest that Crown corporations ought to be brought under this legislation. We could ask Crown corporations to lay before us alternatives to projects to be undertaken. Crown corporations would examine the general ecology of an area to be flooded and determine how much it would cost to replace wildlife which might be destroyed.

I can tell you, sir, what has happened in British Columbia. I have spoken both inside and outside this chamber on a number of occasions on what has been happening in British Columbia. We built the High Arrow Dam; yet no ecological studies of the Arrow Lakes, which stretch for 140 miles, were made before building the dam, the result being that between 69 and 90 per cent of the area in which fish spawn has been destroyed.

Mr. Crossman: That is a provincial matter.

Mr. Harding: Yes, it may be a provincial matter but navigable waters come under the jurisdiction of the federal government. If Crown corporations were included we might have some planning and prevent losses of spawning grounds. Questions should be asked. How are the destroyed fish to be replaced? Are you going to build fish hatcheries, or ladders up falls so that fish can climb farther up mountain streams to spawn? Will fish different from those which have been destroyed be introduced into the new lakes with the hope they will spawn? Such questions ought to have been answered by studies.

A few miles south of the Canadian border and close to the town of Creston the United States authorities last year began to build the Libby Dam. The reservoir basin behind the lake will spill 40 miles into Canada. Yet two or three years before the United States authorities began building the dam they ordered an ecological survey of the affected area. They wanted to know what would happen when the area was flooded. I have a report of those studies in my files. The United States authorities knew exactly what had to be done to replace lost spawning grounds and to preserve wildlife. Alternative plans were laid out. We in Canada should expect nothing less from our Crown corporations. Those who benefit from hydroelectric developments ought to insist on such studies.

As we obtain more and more leisure time our people will look to the great outdoors for recreation. The legislators of this nation ought to make sure that our natural resources are passed on to future generations unimpaired. We must not destroy what we have.

In British Columbia a dam is being built on the Columbia River at Mica Creek. They are blocking off a lake 125 miles long; yet the provincial government will not clear all the standing timber from the area. Oh, a small chunk will be cleared so that from the top of the reservoir you will think that a beautiful job has been done. But for centuries that reservoir will be polluted because drifting, rotten trees will spoil the water, and what should be a recreational area and a navigable water system will be ruined. You can see the same sort of thing in Duncan Lake, also known as Bennett's Lake. It is partly in my riding. The condition of that lake is a national disgrace. Most of the land was not cleared before flooding and you can hardly get a rowboat through the upper portion of it because of all the drifting material in the water. Here in this parliament we talk about conserving resources for our people and yet we allow this sort of thing to take place. Here we have a chance to bring Crown corporations under the Navigable Waters Protection Act and prevent such pollution. Even if the federal government must pay for studies to be undertaken, it ought to do so. We ought to preserve our resources and not allow their stupid destruction, as has taken place in scattered areas from the east to the west coasts of Canada.

Accordingly I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg):

> That Bill S-19 be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications for the purpose of reconsidering Clause 4 thereof.

The purpose of reconsidering clause 4 is to allow us to bring federal and provincial Crown corporations under the act.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the hon. members for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) and Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) have expressed sentiments which meet with my wholehearted approval. I had an opportunity to speak on second reading of the bill, and I hoped that the persuasive, gentle and reasonable arguments advanced by all opposition parties would move the government, if anything could, to review its position and bring forward reasoned and sensible changes in this legislation.

To show the nonsensical situation which has developed in Canada may I repeat something I dealt with during a previous stage of this bill when we were considering what were the rights of people under this legislation. Some years ago we were considering the construction of dams in British Columbia. I have special reference, of course, to the dam at Turtle Mountain. I had every reason to believe, from trips I made up the river and from discussions with naturalists and scientists, that a dangerous situation could develop such as has been dealt with in some detail by the hon. member for Kootenay West. I asked the then Secretary of State for External Affairs, who was negotiating with the government of the province of British Columbia in an attempt to secure an arrangement under which this project would go forward, what was going to be done about securing permission under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. I asked the then Minister of Public Works, the hon. Mr. Deschatelets, now a member of the other place, who I thought took a very reasonable and sympathetic approach, to assure me that he would guarantee this matter would be brought under the provisions of the parent legislation, the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

• (4:20 p.m.)

That act provides that people planning construction must file with the appropriate department of government, at that time the Department of Public Works, a projection of what their plans will entail. Notice must be published in the Canada Gazette as well as in newspapers circulated in the area. This would give opportunity to people whose potential rights could be damaged to make objection to the federal government which has sole jurisdiction with regard to navigable waters in this country.

When I asked questions in the house the then Minister of Public Works assured me this was under consideration. I have no doubt in my mind that the minister was quite definite in his belief that this was a project to which the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act applied. I am reinforced in that belief by the fact that collateral projects have been constructed in the same area, one in particular being a temporary bridge across the great Peace River for the passage of personnel and material. This involved the same Crown corporation that was engaged in the construction of the dam, and an application was made under the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act. I may be wrong in that, but certainly it was the same people engaged in the same project. Notice of this project was advertised in the Canada Gazette and the newspapers. Permission was obviously secured because the project was completed. It was constructed and used during the course of the construction period of this dam in British Columbia. This was a situation where the authorities in British Columbia and the federal government had an understanding that it was necessary to secure permission from the federal government to construct this project as envisaged by the terms of the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

Because the ambition of two or three men to complete this project as rapidly as possible was involved, although it would result in bringing about a deterioration in the situation at Hudson Hope, down the Peace River and all over the Mackenzie system, no application was made, there was no advertising in the Canada Gazette, and the matter was allowed to proceed. I think it was shocking that this was done.

The hon. member for Kootenay West has spoken about the results and I want to put something on record. I quote from the January, 1969, edition of Western Fish and Game, page 36. The article was written by Richard Wright, obviously a person concerned as a private citizen about what is happening to the area. He made a personal inspection trip last fall along with some companions. I will not burden the house by reading the whole article but I quote these important words:

> Crossing the Peace west of Hudson's Hope we saw what had been a mighty river reduced to a mere trickle. Sandbars and rocks were high and dry with a small stream running between the massive canyon walls. We learned later that the Alberta fish and game branch were concerned with the effect this lack of water might have on their wildlife and waterfowl, and the Northern Transportation Co.—

Another federal Crown Corporation.

> —blamed the dam for lowering the river levels in the Northwest Territories and consequently damaging several barges. "The mighty Peace has been harnessed", an ad in the local paper said. From where we stood it looked more like it had been destroyed.

Today this work goes on. Water for a reservoir now being accumulated behind the dam will flow north and south up the Rocky Mountain trench some 200 miles. There is a suggestion this may provide recreational facilities, but looking at the photographs which accompany this article we see that construction of the dam is proceeding with huge masses of timber, debris and logs scattered all around. I feel it will be impossible for any recreational value to be derived from this enterprise for many years to come.

Before proposing these amendments the government should have listened to the very reasonable and moderate request made from this side of the house. In the course of a generation many of the people of this country will have moved into the large metropolitan districts. They will have to seek recreation in order to provide a balance for a rational society. In the 40 years I have lived in the north I have seen people come into the north not to exploit but to ravage and assault the north and take away the resources. They have been careless regarding what they left behind. These are benefits which should have been left for the people of the future.

To my mind the Peace River dam is one of the greatest examples of the harm, damage, destruction and deterioration that have been caused by a few men acting regardless of their duty to their country and to the generations who will come after them. For this reason, sir, I have no compunction at all in indicating that I am prepared to support the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to second the amendment moved by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding). I am sure that in the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) was made aware of our discontent that Crown corporations were not included under the provisions of this bill. I am also aware that he may try to substantiate his case by referring to the fact that this would involve a constitutional issue. I respectfully suggest that this matter could be resolved at a later time and the Crown corporations should be included under the provisions of the bill because so far as the constitutional issue is concerned I believe the minister is trying to muddy the waters. I suggest that quite an amount of water could be muddied if the bill is allowed to pass in its present form.

I know that my colleagues from Winnipeg North Centre and Winnipeg North are aware of the situation in Manitoba, and no doubt the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) will speak about it. A real storm has blown up in regard to the action of a Crown corporation in taking it upon itself to construct a dam which adversely affected navigable waters in that province and below the province. The question has been asked in one press article:

> What happens when a Crown corporation floods out a community of nearly 600 Indians and Métis in the name of industrial progress?

This could be used as an analogy in any province of Canada. If we allow situations like this to exist and do nothing about them the House of Commons will be held suspect in the eyes of the people adversely affected.

Various articles have appeared in the press about this situation and I shall refer briefly to a number of them. One of them stated:

> Five university professors presented a brief to the government which cast a wholly different light on the situation. Conservationists, wildlife experts, engineers, ecologists, more professors of various disciplines, and other knowledgeable people began to issue statements.

It is ridiculous that a province should be allowed to implement a program of its own without sending its engineering studies to the federal government so that there may be more than one party involved in the preparation and the planning, particularly when more than one province may be adversely affected. I quote again:

> The report, prepared by the provincial resources department's own experts, documented that Hydro's plan would result in "devastation" to an area equal to 20 per cent of the province's total territory. Its authors warned that about 2,175 square miles of now beautiful lakes, rivers and potential resort areas would be rendered sterile; that all wildlife habitat, and revenue derived from wildlife, would be lost from the area for at least 100 years and that the seaport of Churchill would suffer serious repercussions—

With respect to that one point alone, the adverse effect on the port of Churchill which it is suggested could result from this plan, I believe hon. members would agree that this bill should be sent back to committee for further consideration.

It was also pointed out that various types of wildlife in the area would be affected. It was stated that flooding in the area can bring about a radical change in a huge Canada goose nesting ground. It was also pointed out that the project will eliminate a great chunk of barren ground caribou wintering range in Manitoba.

I could point out many other arguments to prove that the province itself should not have the prime and prior right to construct a dam on any river which would impair the navigable portions of the river. I had thought that the Minister without Portfolio would have an answer prepared in time for the third reading of this bill, but that has not been the case.

We got no answer from the minister and so naturally my colleague from Kootenay West had to present this amendment.

Many experts have pointed out the problems to the provincial authorities, with the result that they are taking a second look to see whether or not the dam in question should be constructed and the water diverted. Even though construction of the dam has started, and it would not be economical to continue the project without ensuring the provision of the added water facilities, we must look at the social consequences to affected communities. In this area I suggest that the federal government has a prime responsibility along with the province to make sure that the matter is looked at in its entirety.

I should like to refer to a brief presented by Professor Edward Kuiper, former chief engineer in the provincial water resources branch and a consultant to Manitoba Hydro in that capacity. He said that no alternatives to the proposed Southern Indian Lake diversion scheme were ever adequately studied by Manitoba Hydro. I suggest that this is a clear indication that such schemes should be studied in their entirety to determine what effect they will have on the communities involved. This was not done in Manitoba. Professor Kuiper's brief added:

> Therefore no one is presently in a position to state that the proposed high-level Southern Indian Lake diversion is better or worse than any of the four alternative diversions.

Again this points up the fact that there should have been further discussions and consultations before any decision was rendered in this case. The people in that area have been very adversely affected. I suggest that the federal government should consider amendments to this legislation whereby such matters will be covered. I am positive that if the federal government does not assume this responsibility the provinces will not assume it either. They are primarily concerned with their own economies because they must consider the long-range economic effects without taking into account all the social consequences.

I heartily support the amendment that has been proposed. Many things can be accomplished in this house if the government is willing to tackle them. In this case I say the government must have the will, and this house as a whole must ensure that this legislation properly protects all those who are adversely affected.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment moved by my colleague from Kootenay West. I specifically do so because of the tremendous problems raised by the plan of Manitoba Hydro, acting for the Manitoba government, to divert the waters of the Nelson River in order to construct a very large hydro project. This government and this parliament are involved and ought to be very concerned about this project because the former government approved the expenditure by the people of Canada of a very large amount of money to help pay for this project.

I have no objection to the development of the Nelson River. This is a tremendously important project that will produce a very large amount of power which can be used by the people of Manitoba and may indeed be sold to the province of Ontario or the province of Saskatchewan. It is expected that the surplus will be sold in the middle west of the United States. However, it is disturbing to say the least that a project of this tremendous scope, which will involve a billion or more dollars, is being proceeded with while the facts about it, if they are known, are known only to the government of Manitoba.

In the past four or five years the government of Manitoba commissioned a number of studies by various expert groups to determine the facts involved in the project. A key part of the whole plan is the diversion of the waters of the Churchill River into the Nelson River in order to provide a more regular flow in the Nelson River where power plants will be constructed. It is quite evident from reports which the newspapers in Winnipeg have been able to obtain that not all the facts in respect of the transfer of water from the one river to the other have been taken into account.

My colleague, the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg), has referred to the effect on the Indians at Southern Indian Lake. This community of 600 Indian and Métis people is probably the only community of its kind in Manitoba, if not in all Canada, where not a single person receives welfare from either the federal or provincial governments and where the breadwinners earn from $3,000 to $6,000 or $8,000 a year. For an Indian or a Métis this is a fantastic income. These 600 people are being told by the hydro authorities that they must move because their community will be under 35 feet of water.

It is true that hydro has offered them alternative sites, but a group of university professors hired by the government of Manitoba has questioned, because of the way in which the area is to be flooded, whether in fact there will remain a viable fishing industry. All these factors were studied by the government or by Manitoba Hydro. Even though public hearings have been held and even though the Indians have hired eminent counsel, to date the government of Manitoba and Manitoba Hydro have categorically refused to make public the studies that were made. If there has even been a better illustration of a kangaroo court I do not know where you would find it because the government, which permitted hearings by its water conservation board into the effects of the project, refuses to give to the Indians or others concerned the documents which it commissioned. It well may be that the government would argue that there are differences of opinion between the experts, but surely it ought not to be the right of any agency, whether federal, provincial or private, to say that although they have the information and all the reports they will decide what they will make public. Surely that type of thing should be ruled out from the start.

As I say, we have an important role to play here because, first, the federal government is providing a substantial part of the money for the Nelson River project and, second, the federal government is the trustee for the Indians. We have always said that the restrictions on Indians by virtue of the Indian Act exist because the Indians are not ready to look after themselves and are not sufficiently well educated or adjusted to live in our modern wage-earning, profit-making society. We say that we, the great white fathers, must protect the Indians from themselves. I notice that the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) is listening. This is the attitude we have taken. I submit that we cannot have it both ways. We cannot take the position taken almost every day by the Indian Affairs Branch that we will decide what is best for the Indians and then take no action when a group of 600 Indians are to be moved forcibly and against their will from the community in which they have lived for many years.

I shall come back to the Indians in a moment, but I wish to make clear that it is not only the Indians affected in respect of whom we have a responsibility. When I was in Winnipeg I was told that if this project goes ahead and if the waters of the Churchill River are diverted into the Nelson River, it is quite likely that the flow of the Churchill River will be cut by as much as 75 per cent. If that happens there will immediately be an effect on the port of Churchill. The minister as a member from Saskatchewan, should have a vital interest in the port of Churchill. Churchill has been having difficulties because of the short season and poor town planning. If 75 per cent of the water of the Churchill River is diverted there will be times of the year at Churchill when there will not be sufficient water to meet the drinking and sanitation needs of the town.

One might ask what the situation will be if the salt water from Hudson Bay should flow up the Churchill River. I do not know and I do not know whether the minister is informed in this regard. It is stated in one of the reports which the government of Manitoba has refused to make public that if the water is diverted the flow of the Thompson River as it passes through the town of Thompson would certainly be very much greater than it would normally be. It is hoped that in ten years time Thompson will be the size of Sudbury. We are told that the Thompson River will rise 20 or more feet, that bridges will have to be rebuilt and that the whole area will be changed. What will happen as a result?

Certainly the federal government has a responsibility and ought to look into this whole situation. Unless the amendment moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Kootenay West, is accepted, we will have no opportunity to do the kind of thing we are suggesting the federal government ought to do. Before a navigable stream is allowed to be changed as a result of the plans of any agency we should make sure that all the information required is made public. This should be done whether a federal or provincial agency is involved. It should also be done even when a private agency proposes the change.

We talk very frequently about our desire that the Indians should learn to speak for themselves so they do not need a white member of the government or the bureaucracy, a social worker, a do-gooder or a magistrate to speak for them. The Indians of Manitoba have taken us at our word. They have probably gone farther than any other group of Indians in the country in creating an organization to speak for them. They are doing so in an increasingly effective manner. I should like to put on record what the president of the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood has said. I quote what Chief David Courchene said, as reported in an article in the Winnipeg Free Press of January 22, 1969:

> The Manitoba Indian Brotherhood president, David Courchene said in a statement Tuesday the brotherhood is "appalled with the arbitrary action taken by the government".

He went on to state:

> —the procedure showed the government's lack of concern for Indian people.
>
> "Such action in the midst of negotiations is a clear and obvious indication of the government's lack of consideration of Indian people. It is also an obvious indication of a lack of good faith for, while inviting participation at hearings . . . decisions have already been made.
> The government obviously subscribes to the 'might is right' philosophy in negotiation. We are sure the people of Manitoba will be as incensed, shocked and appalled at the Manitoba government's denial of basic justice and lack of good faith."

The people of Manitoba are appalled and they expect that the federal government, which as a vital stake in this whole question, will not hide behind what I consider to be the spurious argument that an agreement has been reached and there is nothing it can do about it, or the argument that the Indians are not members of a reserve and therefore are not the responsibility of the federal government.

I hope the government will not hide behind the argument that at this late stage it cannot amend this measure in the way the hon. member for Kootenay West has suggested. I appeal to the government to accept this very moderate and sensible amendment in order that it may have the time and the opportunity to undo what I consider to be a basic injustice to the people of northern Manitoba, be they Indian or white.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I was present during the committee consideration of this bill when the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Richardson) from Manitoba had certain things to say about this measure. I am delighted to see that he is now in his seat.

I anticipated the amendment moved this afternoon by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) who in fact served notice of his intention to do so during the course of the committee's consideration. Let me make it clear, as did our house leader, that we on this side intend to support the amendment.

I find it a little difficult to understand why this amendment is necessary at the third reading stage in view of what the minister said about the bill during the brief discussion which took place in the committee. I do not want to put words into the minister's mouth, but he indicated that he was in favour of such an amendment and wanted to give this matter more consideration. I am sure he would have done so were it not for the fact that the chairman of the committee ruled him out of order in view of the fact the committee was dealing with clause one. In other words, the discussion was just about at an end and the chairman ruled that we could not go back to clause 4 for the purpose of moving an amendment.

Perhaps I could indicate what the minister said during the committee stage. He suggested that the amendment was a very important one which contained constitutional ramifications, and he referred to the federal-provincial conference. He suggested this matter might be another item on the agenda of that conference. The minister suggested to the committee that he was seriously in favour of such an amendment, that the exclusion of Crown corporations under clause 4 of the bill constituted a very serious anomaly and that consequently we could expect to see the bill amended in this form when it came before the house for third reading. May I call it five o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to standing order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Housing—provisions to assist low income Canadians; the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Post Office Department—dispute with Letter Carriers Union—downward rates revision; and the hon. member for Kootenay-West (Mr. Harding)—Rental charges for boxes.

[English]

It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

Is it understood that all the notices of motions preceding No. 33 on the order paper will stand?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And retain their position.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is that agreed by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NOTICES OF MOTIONS

SUGGESTED ABOLITION OF PRIVILEGE OF CROWN AS PREFERRED CREDITOR

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the expediency of introducing a measure providing that the privilege of the Crown in right of Canada as preferred creditor under federal statutes, such as the Excise Tax Act, the Income Tax Act, the Estate Tax Act, and the Bankruptcy Act, be deleted from those statutes so that the Crown in right of Canada be in the same position as an ordinary creditor.

• (5:00 p.m.)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I see that I already have assistance from the other side of the house. I decided to take action, as I indicated earlier, on this matter because of experience in my own law practice in dealing with matters of this nature. I would assume that anyone who has successfully pursued a debtor to judgment, and has seen that work in effect frustrated by the Crown's prior claim, could hardly oppose my motion.

For the benefit of those who are not engaged as lawyers or in any kind of collection work, it might be of interest to note that in the ordinary course of events an individual creditor will write to his debtor and request that payment be made. Invariably this leads to a dispute, so he retains the services of a solicitor. The solicitor then writes the usual letter, gets the usual reply, and files a writ in the court of competent jurisdiction. He then pursues this matter through all stages of the pleadings, takes it to trial, secures a judgment on behalf of his client and then files what is called a writ of fi, fa, or writ of execution, against the judgment debtor which in fact attaches to all the assets of the debtor. Subsequently the solicitor will usually examine the debtor as a judgment debtor in an attempt to realize any assets which he has.

Having gone through all this proceeding and having been paid for it by the client, it is somewhat difficult to go back to the client and say, "You have a judgment, but unfortunately this fellow was behind in his income tax and the government has realized on the one asset that we were able to trace." I am not suggesting in this motion that the Crown should not be considered, I am only suggesting that the Crown should not be put in the position of a preferred creditor.

This matter has been argued in the courts and the right of the Crown has been opposed. It has been opposed by myself on occasion but, I must say, without success. As long ago as 1934 it was decided that the claim of the Crown against a debtor for unpaid taxes is paramount to the claims of all other creditors. Where the Crown has a claim for taxes against an unsecured creditor, the Crown has a prior claim based upon a prerogative right irrespective of any statute.

The Bankruptcy Act provides—this is an area in which some people believe the Crown is not as well taken care of but frankly, I think it is too well taken care of—that the claims of the Crown come after the claims of nine categories of creditors who are preferred to it. So at first sight one could conclude that the Crown is not really privileged. However, this first impression is dispelled when two factors are taken into account. First the total amount of the claims preferred over those of the Crown is in practice not very important because the number of creditors who have priority is limited and also because each claim is restricted by the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act. Second, except for the limited number of creditors considered by the act as deserving of special status, the Crown remains preferred over any other creditors.

Another matter that is difficult to accept and which should be noted is that the Crown in right of Canada has the same rank as the Crown in right of any province. Moreover, the priority established in favour of the Crown under the provisions of section 95 of the Bankruptcy Act extends to its agents. This is the cruellest cut of all. Indeed, there is a principle firmly established by the cases that unless a statute specifically takes away the Crown privileges from the Crown's agent, it stands exactly in the same position as the Crown. Consequently, according to the Government Companies Operation Act Crown corporations are agents of the Crown and, as I have said, enjoy the same privileges as the Crown itself.

I was certain before I came to this house that this matter must have come to the attention of other lawyers who had the honour to sit in this august chamber. My research came up with no less an authority that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), the government house leader. I note specifically in Hansard of May 17, 1967, the remarks of the hon. gentleman, who was at that time a backbencher and not the house leader; however, I think he rates as a pretty fair authority. The President of the Privy Council said at that time:

> The second of the major areas in which I feel that our slowness in law reform has worked prejudice for the individual has been that of the civil law under federal jurisdiction. Here again I should like to pick two examples: The priority over other creditors which the Crown claims for taxes; and, the heavy stick which Crown expropriators swing against small property owners. In respect of the first, a brief review of the federal taxing statutes illustrates what an advantage the treasury claims over other creditors. With regard to income tax and sales tax, for example, the respective laws provide that all taxes, penalties and costs can be claimed by the Crown as a debt due in either the Exchequer Court or other competent court.
> In the case of income tax—

It was my unhappy experience with one of my clients that the income tax people moved in. The hon. member here refers to their moving in as a group of in-laws and hastens to add, quite unlike his own in-laws.

> In the case of income tax, what the Department of National Revenue commonly does is to issue a certificate that the tax has not been paid. That certificate simply is registered in the court as proof that there is a sum due. It is entirely equivalent to the situation of a businessman who has sued and obtained a judgment for a debt. The difference is that the Crown is given the right to skip the ordinary court proceedings and has the amount of the debt set at what it claims, not at what a court has found. This situation works a particular hardship on other businesses in the case of the bankruptcy of a debtor business—
> In another situation, the priority given for government taxes works a particular hardship in the case of the intrepid creditor pursuing the hidden assets of a chronic non-payer. The writ of extent, which is the authority issued by the Exchequer Court to collect the tax debt against property, can be used by the department to claim prior security in hidden assets smoked out by an energetic creditor. The creditor does all the work and the revenuers move in to reap the benefit—

Then he said:

> As between the small businessman and the government, why should the government have all those advantages? Why should not the government be confined to the same rights as any other creditor? I suggest that the respective taxing statutes should be changed to take away the Crown's priority for taxes and put it in the same position as other creditors. Surely the important principle here in connection with bankruptcy or non-payment of debts is who can best afford to bear the loss, the small businessman or the vast resources of the government? The answer is obvious.

The answer was obvious to the minister then, and it is obvious today. Therefore I would ask that my motion be given the unanimous support of this house.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member a question? Does the Crown not have to produce proof that it has a substantial claim in a case of this nature? Does the Crown not have to produce some form of proof that it has a charge under income tax or some other tax?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, this is usually done in the form of a certificate. I tried to make this clear in my address. In the ordinary course of events, an individual pursuing a debtor has to go through the whole course of proceedings, and when this has been done he files a notice. The Crown can then come along and say that his notice is wrong and it has a claim for X number of dollars. The Crown then files a certificate to this effect. This is the extent of its proof. It is almost impossible to upset that kind of certificate.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Cullen) has brought to the attention of the house a very important question. With his usual eloquence he has put before us a number of reasons why the proposal embodied in his notice of motion should be given very serious consideration. While one may be very sympathetic to the proposal, it would seem to me there may be other points of view to be brought forward in this respect: for example, the effect of the adoption of this proposal both on the revenue itself and on the taxpayers, who would possibly have to make up for any sizeable amounts of revenue that might be lost to the Crown if this existing privilege of the Crown were changed.

I think it would be useful therefore to have this notice of motion studied by the appropriate standing committee. Perhaps it would be helpful if I once again brought to the attention of the house what I think is the real purpose of notices of motions of this kind. The rules of parliament provide that members cannot introduce bills which will have the effect of changing the balance of ways and means. In other words, they do not have the right to bring bills before the house involving legislation which can affect taxes or financial statutes.

But in order to give members the opportunity of putting forth their views on matters that would come within the broad definition I have mentioned, the Standing Orders permit members to place on the Order Paper notices of motions in which they state the change they have in mind in a general way so that when the notice of motion comes before the house it can be generally discussed. However, it should be made clear that if such a notice of motion should happen to be adopted formally by the house, it would not actually amend the legislation which the proposal in question is designed to affect. For that matter, if the notice of motion does not formally pass in the time set aside for its consideration under the rules of the house, it does not mean that members of the house are necessarily in opposition to it. Instead it means only that all those who wish to be heard on the question have not had a chance to express their views. So it seems to be useful to place again on the record the real purpose and the true role of notices of motions standing in the names of private members. In this case the hon. member for Sarnia has made good use of the opportunity given to private members to place their views on the record on matters of importance which affect ways and means, which affect financial and taxing legislation and which, under the rules of parliament, cannot be brought forward in the form of formal legislation by private members.

Because, as I suggested at the opening of my remarks, the hon. member has brought forward a proposal which deserves serious consideration, it is now my intention to move, seconded by the hon. member for Chambly (Mr. Pilon):

That the said motion be deemed to have been withdrawn and that the subject matter thereof stand referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pilon: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that on account of the federal-provincial conference and because of the snowstorms all over our big country we adjourn until 8 p.m.?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to agree to the suggestion of the hon. member for Chambly?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being six o'clock this house stands adjourned until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

[Mr. Gray.]

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, UNAUTHORIZED WORKS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt) (for Mr. Hellyer) that Bill S-19, to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act, be read a third time and passed.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, when the debate was adjourned at five o'clock I had endeavoured to review what happened in the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications during the committee stage of the bill. The Minister without Portfolio from Manitoba (Mr. Richardson) who was piloting the legislation through the committee, left the impression that he looked upon the proposed amendment as a very serious one. Were it not for the ruling of the committee chairman the minister would have sought advice from committee members on the amendment, which at that time was moved by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding), the mover of the amendment now before the house. The difficulty was procedural and arose from the fact that the hon. member either was not present in committee during discussion of clause 4 or had omitted to move his amendment to clause 4. There was an understanding in the committee, however, that we would be returning to clause 1 for a general discussion. At the conclusion of the general discussion on clause 1 the hon. member for Kootenay West endeavoured to move the amendment he has placed before the house today. At that time the Minister without Portfolio from Manitoba said, as reported at page 219 of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 12 of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

If it is to be left to me to decide, then I would appreciate the opportunity to have further views of the Committee. I think that we have a very serious difficulty here, as I explained when we talked about this matter last week. It was considered before the amendments were suggested and brought forward for consideration.

He goes on to say:

Can we have your permission to discuss this? I may be out of order here in the face of your ruling—

Then he was interrupted by the committee chairman who ruled that he could not entertain an amendment to clause 4 since clause 4 had already been adopted by the committee. Yet, it was understood by most of us that we were having a general discussion on clause 1.

Later, when replying to a question raised by a committee member when we were discussing procedure and wondering whether we could consider the amendment in committee, the minister said, as reported at page 221 of the evidence of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications for January 27:

Yes. On this point of jurisdiction, yes. This is why I said that I do not know the full feelings of the Committee but I think I am beginning to sense them now. Certainly it will be given every possible consideration.

Then clause 1 was agreed to and the bill was passed in committee. The minister gave an undertaking to the committee, as will be found if one reads page 221 of the evidence. I understood that the minister was taking the matter under advisement and would report to his colleagues in cabinet what he felt were the views of the committee. In that basis, even though the amendment had not been adopted, we allowed the bill to pass the committee stage.

Today the hon. member for Kootenay West has moved a similar amendment and I would be interested to hear the remarks of the Minister without Portfolio from Manitoba, who had the responsibility of piloting this bill through committee. I am sure that his colleague, the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan (Mr. Lang) will be pleased that he does not have the responsibility of answering hon. members' questions. That hon. gentleman has had the responsibility all day of piloting the various stages of bills through the house.

During his speech the hon. member for Kootenay West, the mover of the amendment, said there were serious deficiencies in the legislation which he would endeavour to correct with his amendment. He said that the bill endeavours to regulate and to impose penalties; it regulates what individuals may or may not do in erecting works or obstructions to navigation. He also said, I believe, that the provisions of the bill in their present form would not apply to federal or provincial Crown corporations set up to develop hydro-electric power. These developments have taken place in British Columbia. Indeed, he said that similar problems exist in every province of this country. Most provinces of Canada have provincial Crown corporations set up to develop hydro-electric power. These developments have led to certain works being done near navigable waters. For instance, many rivers have been diverted in the interest of hydroelectric development and as a result navigation of those waters, as defined in this act, has been seriously impeded. Actually, the navigable waters no longer exist.

I submit we should not forget that conservation is important, and this legislation has aspects touching on conservation. It is necessary to protect and conserve our navigable waters.

We are concerned, too, with conservation in its broader aspect, that of preserving our rivers and streams for present and future generations to enjoy. Conservation is an important subject and we are concerned particularly here with the development of hydroelectric installations by Crown corporations. The hon. member for Kootenay West has referred to projects of this kind in British Columbia. I could refer to developments which are taking place in my own province of Newfoundland, and in Labrador. Many rivers have been diverted for the sake of hydroelectric power generation. Rivers have been dammed, impeding navigation on those rivers in the strictest sense in the process. This is what the bill before us sets out to regulate. Yet, we find this surprising anomaly in the provisions before us, one which the minister himself admitted when he was piloting the measure through the committee.

I think there is only one reasonable way of solving this difficulty. The government should accept this amendment because, after all, all it asks is that the bill be referred back to committee. I would point out that we are dealing here with amending legislation, legislation which cannot be considered as being of an urgent nature. If the bill were referred back to committee, the committee could go into these questions in great detail. Then, the minister could fulfil his undertaking to reach, if possible, a consensus among members of the committee, and proceed along more satisfactory lines. Furthermore, this course would enable the government to study the constitutional aspects involved and possibly to consider having the bill referred to the next meeting of resource ministers. Certainly, the bill in its present form makes no sense to us on this side and I am sure it makes no sense to supporters of the government. And if the remarks of the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Richardson) are any indication, I contend it makes no sense to him, either.

I would refer hon. members to the minutes and proceedings of the committee on transport and communications for January 27 when this bill was the subject of clause by clause study. If hon. members, and the minister in particular, wish to approach this matter in a reasonable way I suggest they should accept this amendment. By so doing they would show they were really interested in the subject and that the government has confidence in the work of committees of the house under the new Standing Orders. After all, we are not here merely to rubber stamp committee reports or amending legislation. If this legislation were referred back to the committee there would be an opportunity to seriously consider the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Kootenay West and its far-reaching implications.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does the minister not intend to comment on this amendment? I see the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Richardson) is present, Mr. Speaker, and I think this is his legislation.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): I am certain that all the points which have been raised on the third reading of this bill were fully discussed in committee. They were also considered when the bill was reported back to the house. However, I would be glad once again to state the government's view.

I believe there have been at least two main areas of concern. This afternoon the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) was concerned about the removal of the $5,000 limit. He indicated this would mean that docks and boathouses, whether large or small, would be subject to the requirements of the act. I believe we went into this exhaustively on other occasions, but I should like to emphasize again that only docks and boathouses which obstruct navigation will be affected by this legislation. Under the act as it exists in its present form it would be possible for someone to build a boathouse or a dock costing less than $5,000 in such a way as to obstruct navigation. The purpose of the act is to protect our navigable waters, so it is obviously an improvement to include a provision covering any obstruction to navigation regardless of cost. Surely, this is the answer to the point the hon. member raised.

Mr. Aiken: I am sorry, but I don't follow it.

Mr. Richardson: The hon. member cannot follow it? Well—

Mr. Aiken: Possibly if I were to ask the minister a question it would be fairer to him. Would he accept a question for clarification?

Mr. Richardson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Aiken: The minister has used the phrase "obstruct navigation". He has indicated that if a structure does not obstruct navigation it is not affected by the act. But at what point does a dock, for example, obstruct navigation? Does it depend upon the number of feet it extends into the water? There is no definition in the act.

Mr. Richardson: It is impossible to define on paper or in legislation what constitutes obstruction in every situation. The question must, ultimately, remain one for the judgment of the minister. It cannot be defined in terms of distance in feet. But if there is obstruction to navigation, the structure concerned will be covered by the act and it makes no difference whether it costs less than $5,000 or more.

I believe the most important point with which we have to deal is that put forward by the hon. member for Kootenay West. I was concerned about it in the committee, along with everyone else. The hon. member pointed out this afternoon that the act does not necessarily apply to Crown corporations or to provincial governments. I might mention in passing that in fact most provinces and most Crown corporations have made application under the act. But, having said this, I still know it to be true that in law the provinces are not required to seek approval under the legislation. This is a matter for concern.

I think I should say this. Bill S-19, which we are now considering, does not either strengthen or weaken the act in this respect. The main purpose of this bill is to make certain necessary amendments in the act and it was not thought desirable to introduce major constitutional considerations. This is a relatively minor bill. It did not seem appropriate to get involved with major federal-provincial discussions in relation to a minor bill amending this act. I need not point out, on this day of all days that the federal government and the provinces have a number of matters to discuss. I would agree that at some time in the future this subject should be on the agenda, but I do not believe it is appropriate for the federal government to take unilateral action by suggesting in an amendment to this act that the provinces automatically be required to make application under the act, since the Federal government has not had prior consultations with the provinces. That is the government's position. It is not that we do not agree that consideration should be given to this matter and that the provinces should be consulted.

We should try to find a way to have the provinces and Crown corporations make application under the act, but we should not do so in this bill, particularly without first consulting with the provinces. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that answers successfully and completely the points that have been raised.

Mr. Harding: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the minister would permit a question? Is it not a fact that, even if the amendment were included in this bill, under Section 12 of the act, the federal government could still exempt any Crown corporation or any provincial government?

Mr. Richardson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that would be true.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Richardson) accepted the suggestion that he speak at this stage of the debate. However, I must say there are two matters which were discussed this afternoon and this evening to which he did not make reference. He made a passing reference to some of the discussion which took place in the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, but he did not seem to deal with the point raised by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), namely that in the committee he showed some interest in the amendment that my colleague the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) sought to make. It was suggested this might be dealt with later. I realize it was inadvertent on his part, but the minister said a moment ago this matter was discussed when the bill was reported to the house. I must point out there was no debate at the report stage of this bill. It was passed without debate because there were no amendments at that point. This is the first opportunity there has been to deal with this matter since the committee stage. Someone from the government side should deal more thoroughly with this point. As I read the evidence of the committee's meeting on January 27, the matter appears to have been left in the air. Indeed, it appeared as though the minister thought my friend from Kootenay West had a point which should be seriously considered.

I realize the minister has spoken and I was going to say he cannot speak again, but he can following the vote on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Kootenay West. I hope he will speak again. He can use the time which it takes for the vote to prepare another speech.

I trust the minister will also deal with another matter which was raised this afternoon. As the minister is from Manitoba I thought he would deal with the question of the Indian people at South Indian Lake. It was pointed out this afternoon by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) that there was a distinct relationship between the powers of the federal government over navigable waters and what is happening to the people in that area. I do not need to rehash the points and arguments made this afternoon by my two colleagues, but what bothers all of us in this situation is the buck-passing that takes place. The Manitoba government blames Manitoba Hydro, Manitoba Hydro blames the government and they all blame Ottawa. When we try to find out from Ottawa what is going to be done because it is getting the blame, the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lang) says there has been no request from Manitoba to renegotiate the contract. Meanwhile, these people are having the whole area where they earn their living flooded by the action of the Manitoba Hydro, but it seems impossible to get any statement in the house concerning the matter.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) raised the matter the other night during the course of a late show. It is not good enough for the government to skate around this issue. As I have already said there will be an opportunity for the minister to speak to the third reading motion after the vote on this amendment. I should qualify that of course. If the amendment carries, the minister will not have to speak as the bill will go back to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and the minister can deal with it there. Perhaps it would be a favour to him if this amendment were to carry. He could then deal with it in the more quiet atmosphere of the committee. I hope that will happen, but if it does not then I call upon the Minister without Portfolio, or some other spokesman for the government to speak before the vote is taken on third reading and to deal with these two points, namely the attitude to my hon. friend's amendment regarding Crown corporations and what the government has to say about its responsibility with respect to the Indian people at South Indian Lake?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? Possibly prior to putting the question I might make this observation: The amendment moved by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) appears to me to be a rather novel procedure in the light of our new rules. While I have no hesitation in putting the amendment, I would like to make this reservation. I would like to discuss this procedure with Mr. Speaker.

The question is on the amendment. Is the house ready for the question?

Laing (Vancouver South)

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few more words about his particular amendment. As I look around the house I see the minister in his place, and to his left I see a sign. This may be the last indication by a gasping party hanging on the ropes. I am sure it will be a pleasure to have Tommy Douglas back in the house tomorrow. It is interesting to consider whether the hon. member has the right to advertise in the house, but I am sure it will not matter after tonight.

Let me refer to the record in respect of this particular amendment. It seems to me to be a strange situation when a majority is in favour of an amendment made by the opposition, but that amendment is not accepted.

I happen to be a member of the committee on Transport and Communications, and I have no hesitation in saying that had it considered this amendment by my colleague, the hon. member from Kootenay West (Mr. Harding), it would have been passed. I am sure that the majority of the members of this house will vote against the amendment, and we cannot seriously consider this as being strange.

Let me refer briefly to the fact that of the various subjects brought up for discussion in the committee, one of the most important was referred to by a witness in reply to a question as to whether or not the act applied to the Crown. In answering he said that the Navigable Waters Protection Act did not apply to the Crown, federally or provincially. He indicated that if a province did certain work on a navigable water without seeking the prior approval of the minister, there was no part of this act under which we could compel the province to remove the work or meet the specifications imposed by the federal government.

In view of the federal government's refusal to accept the proposed amendment, we have no alternative but to vote against the bill before us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I must draw his attention to Beauchesne's citation 165(3) and (4) which read as follows:

(3) By moving or seconding an amendment a member, if he utters a few words, actually speaks to the main motion. It is only after the amendment has been put by the Speaker that it is considered a new question.

(4) A member who speaks in seconding an amendment is unable to speak again on the original question after the amendment has been withdrawn or otherwise disposed of.

Again I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but he cannot speak again at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise merely to suggest that the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Richardson) is not prevented from speaking at this point. It was our hope that he would take advantage of the opportunity now to say those things he did not say when he was on his feet before.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Give him time, he is getting up.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I can only wait so long for the Minister without Portfolio to rise. Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I must say I am amazed that the Minister without Portfolio from the province of Manitoba will not avail himself of the opportunity to speak on this subject which has probably received more newspaper coverage in the province of Manitoba than any other matter in recent days.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) has raised this question several times and expressed concern about the consequences of this Nelson River project to the Indians in northern Manitoba. I am sure if he were here he would speak at this time. Since he is not here, and knowing of his concern for the welfare of the Indian people in northern Manitoba, I must state that even though he is a member of the government his sincerity would compel him to rise again and speak to this matter. I hope when I am finished the Minister without Portfolio from Manitoba will endeavour to make a statement. The people of Manitoba have the right to assume that the Liberal government in Ottawa is conniving with the Conservative government in Manitoba to ignore the rights of the native people there.

It may be that the hon. minister is so busy with his cabinet duties he does not have the opportunity to read the reports to which I have referred earlier in Winnipeg newspapers, yet I am sure he is much more closely in touch with the Winnipeg Free Press and the type of things that newspaper expresses than any of the rest of us. Let me refer for a few moments to press reports which have appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press almost every day. Let me read from an article which appeared in this newspaper on December 20:

A group of University of Manitoba professors is urging the provincial government not to grant Manitoba Hydro a licence for the raising of the water level in South Indian Lake—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to inquire whether the hon. member is now speaking to the bill or referring to matters pertaining to the Manitoba provincial government?

Mr. Orlikow: I am surprised that the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay), with his broad experience at the municipal level in the province of Manitoba, is not aware of the fact that this project to which I have referred is affected by this government in two ways.

This government will have to contribute a substantial part of the money to finance this project. If the federal government is to provide the majority of the money, it has the right to look into the terms of the agreement.

Since the plan to divert water from the Churchill River into the Nelson River involves a navigable stream, I suggest that under the provisions of this bill the federal government has a responsibility. The reason my colleague moved the amendment, which the hon. member for St. Boniface obviously voted against, has relation to the fact that this project involves a navigable water in respect of which the federal government has a responsibility. This is typical of what one can expect from government members. When a navigable water for which the federal government has a responsibility is affected by a provincial project, we feel this government has the right to be concerned and insist that the proposal, in fact, be in the interests of the people, including Indians in northern Manitoba, even though the hon. member for St. Boniface may not be concerned. When I am finished, if the hon. member for St. Boniface does not agree with me, I urge him to get up and speak in this house. The people of his constituency would be happy to know that he can speak, and that he does occasionally speak.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Orlikow: If I may proceed, Mr. Speaker, from where I was so rudely interrupted, I refer again to the report in the Winnipeg Free Press which reads:

> A group of University of Manitoba professors is urging the provincial government not to grant Manitoba Hydro a licence for the raising of the water level in South Indian Lake, thereby flooding the homes of more than 500 Indian and Metis people, until all alternatives to the scheme have been fully assessed.

Later in the same news story there is this statement, and the hon. member for St. Boniface should be interested in it:

> Not only would the Indian and Metis homes be flooded, but the water would inundate about 1,100 square miles of forested shoreland—almost three times the area mentioned during a debate on the scheme in the legislature last spring.
> Beautiful rocky shorelines and wide shady beaches in the area would give way to impassable swamps of drowned forests and piled-up debris, a situation which would probably prevail for many decades to come.
> Trapping in the area would be greatly reduced, if not eliminated, while there was a danger, with present spawning grounds being destroyed, that commercial fishing on the lake would no longer be profitable.

Several days later the Winnipeg Free Press made a further report on this question. I quote from the Winnipeg Free Press of January 25:

> The real area of concern, therefore, is not centred on the engineering validity of the project but on the consequences of flooding the natural and human resources in the area and on whether these were taken into proper account before the scheme was approved.

Mr. Lind: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Orlikow: Certainly.

Mr. Lind: Has the hon. member looked into the riparian rights of the Metis along this lake shore?

Mr. Orlikow: I am not a lawyer, and I am not an expert on riparian rights. But one does not have to be an expert in the law to know that the white people of Canada, those like the hon. member, myself and the other members of this house, have a moral responsibility to the native people of northern Manitoba.

Mr. Lind: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member—

Mr. Orlikow: I permitted a question, Mr. Speaker, and when I have finished I will be glad to hear the hon. member.

Mr. Lind: The hon. member has not answered my question, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Kootenay East used to ask the hon. member for York-Humber all the time: What about the riparian rights of these people? I am just asking him whether he has looked into the riparian rights of the Metis around this lake.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I answered the question by saying that I am not an expert on riparian rights, and I do not think one needs to be in order to appreciate this problem. The hon. member laughs. I assume he laughs because he is not very concerned about the problems of the Indians in northern Manitoba.

Mr. Lind: I certainly am concerned about the problems of the Indians, Mr. Speaker, but I would like the hon. member to realize what riparian rights are.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubt as to the relevancy of the hon. member's remarks. I am prepared to give him the benefit of the doubt, but I would appreciate it if he would demonstrate to me how the remarks he is now making relate directly to the bill. If he cannot do this, perhaps he would like to deal specifically with the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Orlikow: As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the bill deals with any works which affect navigable waters. Obviously, if you divert 75 per cent to 80 per cent of the waters of the Churchill River there will not be much left in the way of a navigable stream. Therefore, it seems to me that what I am saying is directly related to the bill.

I know that hon. members opposite want to get on with the business. However, my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), when we were discussing the amendment appealed to the Minister without Portfolio to discuss this matter further, because it is of vital concern to the people of the hon. member's and my own province. The minister did not see fit to deal with this question. I am sorry that I have to take the time of the house, therefore, to deal with this very important matter and thereby preventing the house from proceeding to other business as hon. members opposite would like to do.

If the minister had dealt with the subject, it would not be necessary for me to continue with these remarks. As I was saying, the article in the Winnipeg Free Press reads:

> The real area of concern, therefore, is not centred on the engineering validity of the project but on the consequences of flooding the natural and human resources in the area and on whether these were taken into proper account before the scheme was approved.

That is precisely what we would like to know, namely, whether the federal government looked into this question before it gave approval to the plan, not only its approval in a general way but before it agreed to put hundreds of millions of dollars into this project in northern Manitoba. I am not objecting to the development of hydro power in northern Manitoba. I am just as concerned as every other citizen of the province that we use the resources we have. But I want to be sure, as do the people who are much more knowledgeable and experienced than I in these matters, the professors of the University of Manitoba, that all aspects of this matter have been studied by the government. The professors of the University of Manitoba were asked to study the question and make reports to the government. These reports have been conveniently hidden by the government. I do not know why. I do not know whether the Minister without Portfolio knows. I do not know whether anybody in the federal government knows or has ever thought to ask, but it seems to me that the people of northern Manitoba have a right to know what was in those reports and what the effect on northern Manitoba will be as a result of this tremendous undertaking. The Winnipeg Free Press states further:

> —if the serious loss of natural resources in the area and the cost of relocating people affected by the flooding and providing them with a new, strong economic base is added to the engineering costs of the Manitoba Hydro project, does it still stand up as the only plan which could have been used in the circumstances?

It seems to me that ministers of the Crown have a responsibility to look into this question. Amongst the reports which the Winnipeg Free Press says were tabled with the Manitoba government, and which they have refused to make public so far, is one which the Free Press summarizes as follows:

> The report, made public for the first time yesterday in an exclusive Free Press story, forecasts that the flooding plan would ruin natural and human resources in the Southern Indian Lake area and would also have serious side effects on the northern towns on Churchill and Thompson, and the Indian community at Nelson House.

There are at Nelson House 1,300 Indian people. If you have a serious effect on 1,300 people at Nelson House, plus the 600 at South Indian Lake, you have a total of 2,000 people who may move from a position where they have until now been able to earn their own living. This is not a position, I am sure we would all agree, in which too many of our Indians find themselves because they have to depend to a large extent on welfare provided by the federal government. The Winnipeg Free Press article continues:

> The report says that the proposed flooding would probably mean the end of profitable fishing and trapping industries in the Southern Indian Lake area and would make the new enlarged lake useless for anything other than the water storage reservoir which is planned—
> The report says that because of high water in the Burntwood River after flooding there would be adverse effects on natural resources in the Nelson House area, and that the people may no longer have a satisfactory base for a major part of their existing livelihood—
>
> John Hicks, president of the Churchill Whalers Co-operative Association, said that up until now—

That was January 25.

> —the association had not been "too worried" about the possible effects of a reduced flow in the Churchill River after the diversion scheme on the white whale industry in the river estuary.

But he added: "In view of what this report says I would imagine we would want some clarification from the provincial government on this matter."

The white whale industry at Churchill provides about $16,000 in wages during the summer months to 120 Indians, Metis and Eskimos employees. Mr. Hicks agreed that any injury to the industry would be a bad blow for the people in the area.

I do not want to continue,—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Orlikow: —although I could go on for hours.

• (9:10 p.m.)

It does seem to me that the Minister without Portfolio from Manitoba has a moral responsibility to the people of Manitoba to put on the record what the federal government knows about these very serious charges which have been made by responsible people in Manitoba. These people have been aggravated by the absolute refusal of the government of Manitoba and of Manitoba Hydro to make this information available to anyone who has the ability to study and evaluate it. It seems to me that until the minister does make this information available, we in this group will not believe that the government is prepared to do anything. We certainly cannot vote for the bill as it is as the present time.

Mr. J. G. Lind (Middlesex): May I ask the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) a question? Has the Whalers Association, which the hon. member mentioned, not the right to appeal under the riparian rights rule? Could the hon. member explain that to me?

Mr. Orlikow: I said earlier in answer to a question from the hon. member that I was not an expert on riparian rights. I think the hon. member should communicate with the former member for York-Humber who used to be a Liberal, I do not know whether or not he is one now, and he can get all the information on riparian rights from that former member.

Mr. Lind: Yes, but we used to hear about riparian rights from the former member for Kootenay East.

Mr. Orlikow: He is on the hon. member's side too.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to talk at any length on this bill—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Gleave: Good for you. But there is something at stake here. The flow in the South Saskatchewan River has been lowered so that when two kids put a canoe in the river they cannot even float the canoe down from Saskatoon to Prince Albert. This is part of the same system that the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) is talking about because the South Saskatchewan and the North Saskatchewan flow into the Churchill. What is really being discussed here tonight is whether or not we are concerned about the level of water in navigable rivers.

It is fine to talk about riparian rights, whatever they are. I have some notion about what the hon. member opposite was talking, because at one time I tried to dig a couple of ditches to run some water from one place to another and someone said to me "you haven't got the water rights so you cannot run the water down that ditch". That is what riparian rights are about. Let us not lose sight of the real issue by talking about some technicality. What is at stake here is the fact that two or three years ago the people in the city of Prince Albert and the city of North Battleford found their water unfit to drink. The water was being polluted upstream to such an extent that it was not fit for use. This is what people have been trying to discuss here this afternoon and evening, and this is what members on this side of the house have been hoping would be answered. This is our purpose. I thought it advisable to point out these facts because they represent my point of view on the matter.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question. The minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) was here a few moments ago but I see he has left so perhaps the Minister without Portfolio could answer it. What action, if any, has the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development taken to make arrangements for those Indians who have been dispossessed by the rise of the Peace River created by the Portage Dam and by the present construction on the river north of Manitoba? Does the Indian affairs department look after the rights of the people in this respect, and if so, what have they done?

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are still waiting for an answer from the Minister Without Portfolio.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I have covered all the points several times, but I will be glad to state the government's position once again for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I think the main point that seems to be concerning him and other speakers is the fact that provinces and Crown corporations are not required to make application under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. As I said earlier today, in most cases they do but there have been instances where they have not made application and the law does not require it. The government's position is that this is a minor bill which is making a lot of useful amendments to the act, but the government does not want to make this minor bill into a major constitutional issue. As I said earlier today, there is enough going on today in that field without adding navigable waters. It is my belief that it would be a good idea to require provinces and Crown corporations to make application under this act, and I have said so. However, I do not believe, and this is the government's position, that it would be appropriate to achieve this purpose in Bill S-19 because, as I said, the bill would then become a major issue.

All this bill is doing is tidying up the act. I think we should pass this bill and then, in due course, get down to the other major consideration of federal-provincial relations with regard to navigable waters.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Before the minister sits down would he comment on the situation at South Indian Lake?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the situation at South Indian Lake is a case in point. If Crown corporations and provinces were required to make application under this act, then there would be federal jurisdiction. Since there is no federal jurisdiction, the matter of whether the province had to make application under this act is not open to debate. I do not think this matter can be settled in this bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So the federal government is washing its hands of that situation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT SUBSTITUTING RATE PRESCRIBED BY GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

Hon. Jack Davis (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-151, an act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry on Friday, February 7, 1969, be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? Now?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Davis moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether the minister intends to make a statement at this time? I understood at the committee stage that he was most anxious to discuss an amendment, and that he might give us the benefit of his views now.

Mr. Davis: As the house knows, this bill received second reading, was referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, and is now back in this chamber for third reading. It deals with the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. More particularly, it increases the number of commercial lenders and makes a new provision with respect to interest rates, one which is more realistic in present circumstances. Finally the bill increases the liability of the government as a result of the new financial provisions in the proposed amendments to the act.

I should like to refer, now, to another desirable amendment to the act. This proposed amendment was incorporated in a notice which I sent to the Clerk of the House on February 5, 1969. I also commended it to the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry during the course of its deliberations on Thursday, February 6, as many hon. members present know. The notice I sent to the Clerk of the House of Commons was to the effect that after Bill C-151 had been reported back to this house I would propose under standing order 75 the following motion:

That Bill C-151, an act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, be amended by renumbering clause 2 thereof as subclause (2) of clause 2 and by adding as subclause (1) of clause 2 the following:

2. (1) All that portion of paragraph (d) of subsection (1) of section 3 of the said Act following subparagraph (ii) thereof is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"did not exceed twenty-five thousand dollars;"

As hon. members know, the intent of this amendment would be to raise the maximum individual fisheries loan limit from $10,000 to $25,000. I understand the authorities were concerned about whether or not this amendment constituted an additional charge on the Consolidated Revenue fund, or, alternatively, an increase in the contingent liability of the government. They were concerned, in other words, lest a message of recommendation of the Governor General might be necessary before such an amendment would be in order. I say "might" because I am personally not convinced that this amendment would, if carried, increase the liability of the government over the $20 million covered by this legislation.

There is, however, another and important reservation. I am advised that the proposed amendment is not acceptable on another and altogether different ground for reasons which are only now becoming clear because they relate to the new rules under which this house is operating. I now find that any amendment of the character to which I alluded in the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, or such as I have read into the record, would not be acceptable because the intent of the amendment is sufficiently different from the main provisions of Bill C-151 as to disqualify it. Accordingly, at least in the opinion of the authorities, it cannot be contemplated at any stage after the adoption of the motion for second reading.

I, personally, believe that the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act must be amended in the way suggested, in other words, so as to permit the maximum amount of a loan to be increased from $10,000 to $25,000. I am therefore proposing, with the support of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), to introduce another bill which will contain a single clause to this effect. It will be identical in almost every respect with the bill to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act which was passed in 1965, dealing exclusively with the ceiling on individual loans.

This is an important provision. I believe it must be enacted, and enacted soon. I find that fishermen across the country need loans in excess of $10,000. Indeed, it is debatable whether $25,000 is adequate for their purposes, either for building new boats or for re-equipping existing vessels. I, therefore, undertake to bring in a new bill and, as I have said, I have the assurance of the office of the President of the Privy Council that this will receive top priority. That is my statement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I listened with interest, Mr. Speaker, to the statements made by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis), and I wish to comment briefly on the bill which is presently before the house.

When the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act received Royal Assent on July 11, 1955, the amount of any loan which could be made to an individual fisherman could not exceed $4,000 and under the terms of the loan it was repayable in full over a period of not more than eight years.

The Act was amended on March 20, 1959 to provide broader coverage to individual fishermen, and the term "fisherman" was more clearly defined. The Act was again amended on March 23, 1962, extending the powers granted to the Minister to June, 1965. On June 23, 1965, the legislation was further revised raising the amount of any loan to fishermen from $4,000 to $10,000, and the repayment period was extended from eight years to ten years.

Since the latter change was made we have seen a substantial rise in the cost of living. Inflation has eroded the purchasing power of the dollar and the cost of goods and services to Canadians has been rising constantly. In my opinion, the act has never been fully utilized by our fishermen; only 2,586 loans to a total of $6,168,800 have been made since it was first brought in as long ago as December, 1955. If the present ceiling is retained, the legislation might well be used to even less effect in the future.

It was for this reason I proposed in the committee that the act be amended with specific reference to the amount which might be borrowed and the term set for repayment. I realized that my proposed amendment dealt with the finances of the country. At the same time, the changes I suggested had to do only with loans being made by lending institutions, and since such loans are fully secured, normally by way of mortgages on articles purchased, or liens on the equipment and stock of borrowers, I considered they would not impose any new responsibilities on the government. However, in any event, my amendment was not accepted by the committee.

What do we see happening now with regard to this legislation? There is no proposal to extend the period during which loans have to be repaid. Instead, we are being asked to sign a blank cheque in respect of the rate of interest to be paid by fishermen on loans approved in the future. This represents a vital departure from the provisions of the original act which stated simply that the rate of interest to be charged on the loans was not to exceed 5 per cent per annum, simple interest. We are told, now, that in connection with future loans made under the act fishermen will have to pay a rate of interest to be prescribed by the Governor in Council. That is what the bill says. The rate of interest that is set may well be the same as the rate prescribed under the National Housing Act; or it could be higher. No one knows, except members of the cabinet who will set this rate under order in council. The bill provides, for the guidance of fishermen, that the rate of interest on fishery improvement loans shall be set by the Governor in Council. But this is not what the minister says, Mr. Speaker. He, of course, is privy to discussions in cabinet and he knows what the cabinet proposes to do. Surprisingly, the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) has not seen fit so far to amend this legislation in accordance with his statement at the annual meeting of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union at Vancouver on Saturday, February 1. This is what the minister had to say about interest rates to the fishermen of British Columbia:

You will be able, within the next month or two, to borrow this money from a wide range of commercial sources at a lower interest rate than the rate paid by the biggest corporation in the country. In a month or two you will be able to borrow money at 7½%. This is less than the 8 to 8½% which B.C. Packers has to pay for new money. It is only 1% more than the "cost of money" to the Federal Government itself—to the Government of Canada which will be guaranteeing every loan made under our new federal Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

The interest rate itself is geared to the interest rate paid by the Government of Canada on its long term loans. If Ottawa pays 6% on its new borrowings, then you will be asked to pay 7%. If the federal borrowing rate falls to 5%, then you will pay 6%. If it goes down to 4% then you will pay 5%. The difference is always 1% and the rate under these new loans will go up and down along with the changing cost of money to the Canadian Government in Ottawa.

However, we tried to amend the act; at least, we tried to incorporate the minister's words into the bill. We suggested in the committee that the bill should be amended and that the rate of interest to be charged should be 1 per cent only above what it costs the government to borrow money. We did not receive any support on our effort to have the words of the minister's statement included in the bill. Liberal party supporters seemed more interested in supporting a partisan approach to this matter rather than permitting the official opposition to amend the legislation in keeping with the stated intent of the minister. If it is the government's intention to gear the interest rate on fishery improvement loans to the interest rate paid by the government of Canada on its long term loans, why does it not come out and say so, and spell it out in this legislation? What have you over there to hide from the Canadian fisherman? No wonder the fishermen of Canada to date have looked with obvious mistrust and misgiving at this particular act.

Since the inception of this act, where have the loans been made, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. McGrath: Mostly in British Columbia.

Mr. Crouse: My hon. friend says, in British Columbia. During the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968, a total of 280 loans were made in the total amount of $1,273,924. This total covers all Canada. Since we are concerned with the lack of use of this legislation, I wish to place on the record the number of loans and the amount obtained in each province during the last year.

If we look at the report, as tabled, of the Deputy Minister of Finance—I am referring to the 1967-68 annual report for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968—we see that in British Columbia 147 loans were made for a total amount of $987,905. In Alberta, there were no loans and there is no amount. In Saskatchewan, there were no loans. In Manitoba there was one loan $2,500. In Ontario there were 3 loans for $2,085. For New Brunswick, one of the provinces of Canada with a large and growing fishing industry, there were no loans and there is no amount.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Crouse: In Nova Scotia, there were 46 loans totalling $159,889. In little Prince Edward Island, there were a large number of small loans for lobster boats. The 80 loans there totalled $113,945. The biggest fishing province of all, Newfoundland, has no loans set against it and no amount. I am sure the hon. member from Newfoundland will have something to say about this later.

Mr. McGrath: That shows how interested the government is in the Newfoundland fishing industry.

Mr. Crouse: A total of 280 loans have been made under this legislation for a total amount of $1,273,924. I wonder why this legislation has not met with greater favour among our fishermen? Obviously, our fishermen are a good risk. The report tabled for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, shows that since the inception of the act the government has paid only nine claims amounting to $4,543. What other industry, what other lending institution, can boast such a record? I submit this record shows the strong character of our fishermen. It shows their integrity and desire to adhere to a principle or a set of values. It is evident that once a fisherman assumes a financial responsibility it is not something he takes lightly. It is a burden to be carried and a debt to be repaid, even though sometimes it is repaid at great personal sacrifice—a sacrifice he, his wife and family bear.

These facts must be stressed strongly by the minister and should somehow be recognized in a special release from his department. At the very least, these facts should be recognized by the minister when he moves his amendment. It is his stated objective to amend this legislation at a later stage by bringing in a new bill.

The minister has suggested that the amount which may be borrowed should be increased to $25,000; but he said nothing about increasing the time permitted for the repayment of the loan. As a result we, on this side of the house, are prepared to move a subamendment, if necessary, stipulating that the loan shall be repayable in full, according to the terms thereof, in not more than 15 years. A fisherman will not take this extra time to pay if fishing is good and his earnings are high. The life expectancy of his wooden boat is greater than 15 years. In my view the fisherman ought to be given this extra time if he requires it, in order to meet his payments.

I am pleased the minister has indicated his intention to move a motion at a later date calling for an increase from $10,000 to $25,000 in the amount which can be borrowed. In today's inflated, high cost society, this amount is still not adequate to assist our fishermen in getting established. But even in biblical days, a few loaves and fishes fed the multitude. I suppose it is not necessarily the quantity of material available that matters but the manner in which it is used which is important.

The fisherman will have to work out his own program under the new terms of the loan. We endorse and approve the amendment, even though the minister's methods of promoting the change are rather strange. I say this because this bill received second reading on January 21, 1969. At that time there was no mention in the bill of changing the upper limit of the amount to be borrowed. The measure received second reading and was referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry for clause by clause study. However, in a speech on February 1 in Vancouver the minister had this to say about the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act:

> No doubt you will ask me how you, as an individual fisherman, can hope to own your own boat. I will reply by saying that you should take advantage of our new federal Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. This Act, which has recently been updated, is geared to finance loans of up to $25,000. You can borrow up to 75% of the cost of a new boat, or new gear, or a new shore installation. You can borrow up to $25,000 from any bank, or credit union, or insurance company. And you will be able to borrow this money at a lower rate of interest than is available to anyone else in Canada —anyone that is except the Government of Canada itself.

Let me say at once that we agree with the minister and approve of his suggestion that the loan limit be raised. However, we disagree with the kite-flying methods used by this cabinet when endeavouring to establish government policy. For example, the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans), says we should get out of NATO while the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) tells the nation that NATO is vitally important to the future protection of this country. At the same time the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), says that neither minister was stating government policy. The minister in charge of housing, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), states the 11 per cent sales tax on construction machinery and building materials should be removed in order to speed up housing development in Canada. At the same time the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has told the house that the sales tax will only be removed over his dead body.

These controversies do not aid our regional problems, do not strengthen our national unity and are obviously put forward by the government to keep the country guessing while they procrastinate on policy. This is what the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) has been doing, procrastinating on policy. While the fisherman waits for a definite policy under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, the minister goes kite-flying in British Columbia. While the fishermen on the Atlantic coast wait for a program of subsidies which will enable them to improve their fishing fleet, or wait for an indication from the minister with regard to his over-all policy for fisheries development, all we receive from him in reply to questions concerning policy are negative and evasive answers.

Since the diversification of groundfish production became firmly established on the Atlantic coast, seldom in our history have there been occasions when the fishing industry has been so severely or widely threatened. Only three or four species have enabled the industry to remain solvent. Groundfish are being sold today in many instances for less than the cost of production.

In order to avert still more serious dislocations in fishing activity, which will be most difficult to repair once they have occurred, quick action is needed on the part of federal authorities. Constant losses and tightening credit, plus escalating costs for equipment, plus some of the lowest prices in history for groundfish products, have placed our fishermen and producers on the Atlantic coast in a precarious position. Despite all our effort to have the Minister of Fisheries and the government act on this important matter, to date all we have had from the government is a do-nothing, procrastinating attitude. We need action from this government on Canada's territorial seas and fishing zone limits. This act was passed in 1964 and yet we heard today from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) that discussions and deliberations are still going on with the governments of the United States, France and other countries on this important matter.

The government promised the fishermen during election campaigns in 1962, 1963 and 1964 that this act, when passed, would be implemented by unilateral action. We need action from the government on conservation measures, and this can only be done adequately by calling another conference on the law of the sea. The fisheries industry needs a spokesman at the United Nations to alert other fishing nations to the fact that our resources on our continental shelf are not inexhaustable. When we ask what is being done about this very serious problem, the only reply we receive is that it is under consideration; maybe something will be done next week or next year. When are we going to see something done on these urgent matters?

These are but a few of the urgent matters requiring attention, but I stress them to the Minister of Fisheries and the government in the hope that something will be done. In view of the large area, the large number of fishermen and their families as well as the ancillary industries which are affected by our fisheries, I express the hope this government will take early action to correct some of these problems which are creating serious financial difficulties for the fishing industry of the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I want to make a few brief remarks on this bill, Mr. Speaker. I was frankly amazed when the minister announced at the start of the discussion that he would like this bill to pass and that another amending bill would be introduced. I think this is a sign of sloppy drafting. In my opinion, the legislation should be held up and a completely new draft introduced.

Mr. Davis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I did not propose that any bill be brought in to amend this bill or to deal in fact with any part of this bill. As I understand it, the subject matter of my proposed amendment is outside of this bill and therefore can only be accepted in the form of another bill. This proposal of mine is not one to amend the bill now before the house, but to bring in another bill which fits the rules better and indeed would only be acceptable as a separate bill and not as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. Harding: I thank the minister for his explanation, but I understand the new bill will still amend the same act which his bill is amending. Is that not so?

Does the minister tell us he cannot introduce legislation such as this? My understanding of statutes is that a bill to amend an act can be all-inclusive. In my opinion there is no need for two bills to amend the same act in the same session. However, I will not press the point. I feel, Mr. Speaker, this indicates quite a number of very important issues have been missed. I would like to see an all-inclusive bill introduced.

There is just one point which I should like to leave with the minister in view of his suggestion that another bill might be introduced. He probably has this already in mind. I am happy to hear that the ceiling will be raised. However, I am not sure that $25,000 is the proper amount. In 1965 the amount was raised to $10,000. The minister has suggested this amount should be raised to $25,000 and I am of the opinion it should be higher than that. I agree with the previous speaker that an extension of the repayment time is essential. The hon. member made an excellent presentation in this regard.

A point was brought to my attention in connection with boat insurance. I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, just what the limit is in so far as insurance on fishing vessels is concerned. I recently received a letter from one of my constituents suggesting there should be a sharp increase in the ceiling on boat insurance. There is no doubt values have risen immensely in this particular field and permissible insurance ceilings should rise accordingly. I ask the minister to study this problem, if it is really a problem, facing the industry at large.

That is all I have to say, Mr. Speaker, but I too am very interested in all these bills which affect certain sections of the various industries of Canada. I think we cannot be too careful in making sure that the legislation being put on the statute books is good legislation and deals with values and prices as of 1969.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker I rise only because I would like to take a leaf out of your Honour's book and enter a caveat with respect to some of the points that were made by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis). He said that he had consulted the authorities. That is quite a phrase. Sometimes the authorities are people, sometimes they are books, and there are plenty of both.

I agree with the minister when he says that in order to amend this bill in a way that might involve the expenditure of money not envisaged in the bill as it was first presented, it would be necessary to bring before the house the approval of the Governor General. But when he says that he cannot amend this bill, which is a bill to amend the original act, by adding to it other amendments to the original act I think he had better go back and discuss that with the authorities again. As a matter of fact, I suggest to him that he might be in even greater difficulty bringing in a second bill in the same session amending the original act than he would be by trying to get some amendments incorporated into this bill. It all depends on what he does.

He says that the amendments in his new bill will not be amendments to this bill, that they will be amendments to the original act. But if there is any inconsistency or any conflict I suggest he could be in the same kind of trouble that our friend Jack Pickersgill got into on one occasion. I would remind the minister that there have been occasions when bills that had already been presented and started were amended beyond what was originally intended. It used to be that this meant going beyond the terms of the resolution preceding a bill. We have done away with that, but we still have to consider the intention of the bill as agreed to by the Governor General.

For example, I think of the medicare bill which had written into it a clause having to do with other than medical services. At first, it was argued that this could not be put into the bill because it was not part of the original intention. But when the government finally did do it, it did so by bringing in another recommendation from the Governor General. There was the Canada Pension Plan, and I remember once or twice that Mr. Garson did this kind of thing in the days when he was here. I am sure there are other examples of this, where matters that were germaine to the general subject were brought into the amending bill before the house.

As I say, I think it would be less difficult to amend this bill by adding something else, as long as you get the approval of the Governor General, than it will be to bring in a second bill in the same session amending an act on the statute books. Frankly, I think the suggestion made by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) is the best one. The minister should let this bill stand or ask that it be withdrawn and bring in a completely new bill incorporating the things in this bill that he wants and the other proposals that he would like to make.

I do not raise this as a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the minister did not present his arguments as a point of order but I felt that I for one could not let his remarks go unchallenged as though they were the gospel. As you know, the gospel, can be according to various authorities, and I think this might well have to be looked into.

I would urge the minister to consider asking that this bill be withdrawn, or at least asking that it stand, and that he bring in a completely new bill, so we will have one bill at this session making all the amendments that he wants to make to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to agree with the previous speaker. As I said on an amendment the other day, we are making our way with these new rules and I think once again there has been sloppy work on behalf of the government. Surely, the government has the staff and the facilities to enable these bills to be amended in committee. I would like to thank Hansard for spelling that word "kafuffling" right the other day. This is just more kafuffling.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock by consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There is no agreement.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the minister's remarks on third reading of this bill. We had a fairly wide ranging discussion on the resolution that preceded this bill before the new rules were established. We had a good debate on second reading of the bill, and I understand there was a wide ranging discussion on the bill in the committee.

Since the bill was first introduced, Mr. Speaker, and following remarks that were made regarding the serious problems facing the fishing industry in Canada, more particularly the crisis facing the groundfish industry in eastern Canada, we have seen the government relax its rather rigid attitude. Initially, the minister indicated the government was not going to do anything about the crisis in the groundfishing industry until the end of the present fiscal year, which would be in March. Notwithstanding the fact it had been pointed out to the minister that the crisis was a real one, that fish plants were closing down in the province of Newfoundland, that five plants closed down in the last calendar year, and that there was a danger of other plants closing, the minister did not intend to act until the end of the fiscal year.

However, as a result of the representations made in this house, the minister relaxed his rigid attitude. He has now given us an undertaking that he will be making a statement to the house before February 21, at which time he will be announcing interim and long-term measures designed to cope with the problems facing the groundfish industry in eastern Canada. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the acting government house leader if we are going to descend into the omnibus Criminal Code amendment debate again tomorrow.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the announcement of government business that was made by the house leader on Thursday, February 6, indicates that the omnibus Criminal Code amendments bill will be before the house tomorrow. If that should pass, perhaps we could go back to the bill that was before the house until ten o'clock today. If we deal with that matter then we would take up bills C-155 and C-154.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under standing order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HOUSING—PROVISIONS TO ASSIST LOW INCOME CANADIANS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, ten days ago I quoted the opinion of the Canadian Welfare Council that the report of the Hellyer task force on housing includes no proposals to help the one million Canadians with annual incomes under $5,500. I asked the minister what other proposals he had to provide housing for these people. Tonight, I ask him the same question, or whomever he has delegated to answer.

I am not denying that there are some good proposals in the report but they are proposals that would help the upper income levels of our population. The decision to cold storage public housing and urban renewal is a shocking betrayal of those who most need help, those who cannot possibly provide homes by their own efforts. Up to now the government has discriminated in favour of those best able to provide houses for themselves. What we need now is government discrimination in favour of the lower income half. I refer to the elderly, the single parent families, the great group headed by women with dependant children, employed people whose wages will not allow them to buy a home under any circumstances or even rent one that is not a firetrap, a rat trap, or both. The method of attacking existing public housing projects for their bad features does not provide an excuse for failing to build good, modern ones. In a second brief presented to the task force on November 29 last, the mayor and council of my own city said:

• (10:00 p.m.)

> The city of Vancouver is extremely concerned at any suggestion that the federal government withdraw or in any way limit its involvement in urban renewal schemes. On the contrary, it is the city's view that such involvement must be increased.

While the brief states that there has been a reaction against the concentration of low income and welfare recipients into areas stigmatized as "ghettos", and while admitting that the idea of public housing has not yet been accepted by all communities, nevertheless, the brief suggests:

> —the city feels very strongly that public housing, as presently contemplated, is one way of accommodating those people who are economically unable to provide for their housing needs.

The federal task force has failed the city of Vancouver. It has failed the people of Vancouver, thousands of them, who need housing and cannot get it on their own. It has failed the people of every city across Canada who are in the same miserable dilemma. By seeing only home owners and potential home owners, by raising the N.H.A. mortgage limit to $35,000, by proposing to remove the interest ceiling altogether, the minister has ensured that housing for the upper income half will continue to be the aim of government policy.

The New Democratic party urges the federal government to begin with the needs of the two thirds of Canadian families whose annual incomes are below $7,500. Public housing? Yes. Rent supplements? Yes, if accompanied by a program of rent controls and the enforcement of local housing codes. This, of course, means co-operation with provincial governments. Why not? The task force was composed of a distinguished group of academics with a sprinkling of practical builders and a strong-minded politician. I wish it had taken time to look at the report of the guidelines committee of the Canadian conference on housing held in Toronto last October, which said:

> Canadian housing goals will not be easy to achieve. They require much higher priority within the public economy (federal and provincial) and should be seen to be as socially essential as education. No government is spending according to the priorities this conference insists on.
> As long as government allocations for housing are insufficient, priority within housing budgets should go to helping those with the greatest need—

And those last two words are underlined.

> —including ethnic minorities, regional areas and poverty groups, whether through housing policies or through employment and income policies.

I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that the hard working and comfortable task force has turned this advice upside down. It has provided a blueprint that helps those best able to help themselves.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe all members of this house are genuinely concerned about proper housing for all Canadian people, especially those most in need. This evening, on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), I should like to say that a close and careful reading of the report by the task force on housing and urban development will dispel many fears expressed by the Canadian Welfare Council and others, and will clearly show that there are many recommendations designed to assist Canadians with low incomes.

Such recommendations deal with expanded programs for limited dividend housing; easier down payment requirements; proposed alternatives to present public housing projects; income supplements; easier terms of payment, rental and the acquisition and improvement of existing homes as well as many other recommendations. I am sure the minister, in presenting his proposals to the government based on the report, will incorporate many of these recommendations and that Canadians of low and moderate incomes will be given a wide choice and expanded opportunity for better living accommodation.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—DISPUTE WITH LETTER CARRIERS UNION—DOWNWARD RATES REVISION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, in answer to my question the other day the minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that the answer to that is no.

I will overlook the somewhat presumptuous flippancy of the reply and ask how I could possibly know his answer would be in the negative, having noted some very definite and distinct changes he has made in respect of such things as the five day delivery in rural areas, the imposition of the five day delivery in the rest of the country and having noted the number of quick turns some of his colleagues like the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) have had to make in certain important areas. We are all aware of the increasing protests from publishers of all kinds of important publications in respect of the drastic increase which will soon be imposed upon them.

I was interested in the comment of the leader of the N.D.P. in Ontario. I do not believe in the organ in question and I am reasonably sure I would disagree with most of the information it disseminates. But political parties are essential to a democracy, and they must be able to communicate with the citizenry.

Not long ago two large and important national organizations, even larger than the N.D.P., stated their views and disappointment in this matter. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture on February 3 passed a unanimous resolution on postal rates. This resolution on postal rates asked the government not to implement, as presently worded, Bill C-116 raising postal rates for newspapers and periodicals. The resolution also indicated that the impact of this bill on farm publications would result in increased mailing costs ranging between 230 per cent and 2,000 per cent. It pointed out that the farm press was a vital tool in farm production and management, since it kept farmers informed of technological innovations.

On the same day the Canadian Labour Congress dealt with the same question. Let me read from a Canadian Press release on this matter:

The Canadian Labour Congress has accused the federal government of curtailing freedom of expression by imposing what the C.L.C. terms exorbitant postal rates for non-profit publications.

William Dodge, C.L.C. secretary-treasurer, said yesterday several trade union publications may have to cease publication because of increased postal rates scheduled for April 1.

The article then continues:

Mr. Dodge said the postal rate increase threatens freedom of expression because the printed word is the only effective way a union or a similar organization has of reaching its members. He said the increase would also result in the loss of employment in the printing industry, pulp and paper and related fields.

The article then states:

Mr. Dodge said the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers estimates that its postal bill for its bi-monthly, Canadian Transport, will climb from $1,057 to $29,696. The international association of machinists has estimated that the cost of mailing its weekly, The Machinist, will go up from $9,024 to $99,840.

These increases are absolutely phenomenal and the portents are painful, indeed. We have been told by these people that there is a great danger that Canadian publications will have to bow out and we will find the Canadian unions having to put up with United States publications in their fields. As one of the editors said, it is ironic that after years of fighting for independent Canadian union papers we may lose them now because of measures taken by our own government.

It is a serious thing that so many important groups in our society will have their capacity for communication so drastically curtailed. There is one other aspect involved and that is competition with United States publications which Canadian post offices will still have to carry. This process will not help the minister much in his deficit fighting activity.

I can think of another type of competition; that is competition from government departments. Will the organs of organized labour in Canada be forced out of business by the exorbitant rates? Will the publications of the Department of Labour go through the mails easier?

To take another example, will publications of institutes of international affairs and like groups have to be diminished or curtailed while External Affairs, the journal of the Department of External Affairs, goes out with regularity and ease? One can imagine the amount of critical content on government policy which the department's publication will include! I doubt, indeed, if the minister's speeches on NATO will ever find their way into this slick magazine.

• (10:10 p.m.)

I am not complaining about the free use of mails for such purposes. A government should be able to communicate with its people, and vice versa. The franking privilege works both ways, and so it should. But a government should not have a monopoly or a near-monopoly on the communication of ideas and information on any aspect of public policy or national interest. Therein lies the danger.

I join the many organizations, groups and individuals who have appealed to us, and I am sure they must be appealing to the minister every day, if not every hour on the hour, to take another look at the ramifications which will stem from the imposition of the legislation and to look at the whole question of the communication of ideas of important groups within this country.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, this question and this type of proposal has been answered on many occasions in the past. I will only refer to the example of the Canadian Labour Congress. They have submitted a brief to the government and will be presenting it later this month. They have made reference to the increase in postal rates. I will then repeat publicly what I have already told Mr. Dodge and others privately: I admit that the increases, on a percentage basis, appear to be and are, in fact, substantial. On the other hand, when one breaks down the increases into a cost per subscription per year, in fact it is very minor indeed.

In a long letter which I wrote to Mr. Dodge with respect to 11 major journals, the editors of which met with me in my office, I stated that in most cases the figure was about 30 cents, 40 cents or 50 cents per annum. An increase of this order for weeklies or bimonthlies would cover the entire increases in the postage rates, as astronomical as they may appear to be when cited in absolute terms by my hon. colleague. In other words, Mr. Speaker, this is all relative. What is not relative is the fact that the Post Office would have operated at a deficit of $130 million this year; that by changing the philosophy of the Post Office and charging those who use its services on the basis of user cost and not on the basis of indirect subsidy by the government, we are accomplishing a great deal.

By far the greatest impact will be felt in the business sector. These are the people who use the mails the most, and they will be paying for it. What do we accomplish if we reduce that deficit from $130 million to about $30 million? The government will have $100 million to spend on other priorities, whether they be in the field of increasing its armed forces, education, regional development, putting satellites into the sky, or any other program.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't forget pensions.

Mr. Kierans: But we will not be faced with subsidizing a service that is of value to the people who use it. Neither the C.L.C. nor the agricultural community have experienced any such increases in 20 years.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding).

POST OFFICE BOXES—RENTALS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I asked the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) whether his department had reviewed the decision which he made last fall to increase Post Office box rentals. His reply was in the negative. I must agree that some of the postal rates on mail, etc. were in need of adjusting. However, I am not only opposed to the increase in the post office box rentals but feel that they should have been eliminated altogether. This Liberal administration talks about a just society. I certainly believe in this concept, but I do not support the fact that nearly every move made by the present administration is in the opposite direction. The increase in post office box rentals is a small but a good example of injustice. One would imagine that within the Post Office Department there would be no discrimination so far as the main services were concerned. This is not so, for we see in our smaller centres and in rural areas a clear cut case of discrimination when charges are made to the local residents for the privilege of having their sorted mail placed in a post office box. In the larger urban areas the mail is delivered to the residences and no extra charge is made for this service.

Mail arrives at their homes free of charge and this service, which the urban areas have and need, is paid for out of the general post office revenues. In the smaller communities, however, there is no delivery to the homes. The residents are forced to go to a central location for their mail. This is both time consuming and costly. In addition, if they wish to obtain their mail after regular post office hours, they must rent a post office box or do without their daily mail. If those living in the urban areas can have a free delivery service to their homes, the least the postal department can do for those in the smaller centres is to give them free use of post office boxes. This would be one way of bringing a greater degree of justice to our mail service.

I understand the Postmaster General's desire to increase the revenues of his department. The former box rentals were discriminatory because the small centres were forced to pay for this service when the larger areas were receiving free delivery. Today, this unjust cost to the residents of the smaller centres has been compounded by the sharp increase in box rentals everywhere. I again protest this increase on behalf of many of my constituents.

I would like to pose several questions for the minister's consideration and, I hope, reply. Is it not cheaper for the post office to put the mail in boxes than to deliver it? The answer obviously is, yes. Then, as one of my constituents put it, why do we have to pay for an inferior postal box service when the home delivery is free? It irks me to see the sharp increase in post office box rentals. We are told the increases must help to pay the cost of operating this facet of postal service. At the same time we know that two U.S. magazines, Time and Reader's Digest, pay only about one third of their total mailing costs.

The Canadian public subsidizes the mailing costs of these publications to the extent of just over $1½ million. In view of this type of subsidization of non-Canadians, I again urge the minister to review his position on post office box rentals and, for a first move, to roll the rents back to the old level finally, he could eliminate these charges to bring a little more justice to those who are forced to use these boxes. Let us make all our moves in the right direction to bring about a just society.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, there are several ways of answering this question. In the first place I would like to point out the fact that there has been no change whatsoever in the rates for the rental of post office boxes since the year 1927.

Obviously, the cost has increased a great deal since then. We are not making any profit on this service; we are indeed losing on it, but we are trying to lose less than we did. The people in small communities where these facilities are available are not being discriminated against. They can get their mail free, just as anyone in a large city or on a rural route. In these small post offices they can get it at a general delivery wicket, and a great many of them choose to do this. On the other hand, in these small communities there are businessmen, professional people, families, who prefer to take advantage of an additional facility. Boxes are therefore made available to them as an additional service. In other words, they have a choice, no matter where they are, of getting mail free on general delivery or of engaging boxes which will enable them to collect mail at any time convenient, and enjoy many other advantages besides.

In other words, the boxes are available at all times, as is the general delivery. Rural route and urban deliveries are made once a day. I think I should repeat once again my reply to the charge, which is always intermingled with whatever valid criticism is made, that we are discriminating in favour of two United States magazines. We are not. The subsidy granted to these magazines is part of what has been granted to the magazine industry. We are not discriminating either against them or in their favour.

I do not know what else there is to be said about this question. We are trying to operate on the basis that those who use our services should pay for them. The less we need to subsidize services for which the government can legitimately charge, the less will be the tax burden on the Canadian people or, alternatively, the more the government will be able to do to satisfy other public needs.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I wish they would do so.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, February 11, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

OIL

REPRESENTATIONS URGING CANADIAN ROUTE FOR PIPE LINE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I would like to ask a question of the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the imminent decision to be made in regard to the billion dollar oil pipe line from northern Alaska and the effect the route could have in connection with the development and transport of Canadian oil from the far north, will the government make immediate and strong representations to the United States government and to the United States Secretary of the Interior to look favourably upon a route down the Mackenzie River, and thus south through Canada to the United States?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the government has been in constant touch with the United States authorities in regard to this whole matter of oil, and of course we are looking forward also to the day when there will be a good supply of Canadian oil from the region of the Arctic. The announcement of the pipe line across Alaska would in no way lead us to discontinue our discussions and our planning about a possible pipe line and other alternative routes for Arctic oil from the region of Alaska and the Canadian north to the eastern and midwestern markets.

Mr. Baldwin: Despite the assurance that the hon. gentleman has given will he, when dealing with this matter in the discussions with the United States authorities, bear in mind the very considerable impact the choice of route could have on our national oil policy and our markets in the United States?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Of course, Mr. Speaker, these are exactly the matters that we have very much in mind and that are the background to our discussions at all times.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the minister. I know he has just taken over this portfolio because the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is ill, but in view of the fact that exports and domestic use of petroleum are down to 40 per cent of our production in western Canada, would he consider making a full statement to this house in the very near future as to the negotiations with the United States as to oil exports, particularly since we are now importing $200 million worth of petroleum more than we are exporting?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to give consideration to the hon. member's suggestion regarding the possibility of making a full statement for the information of him and other hon. members.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct another supplementary to the minister. When he is making this statement will he also give us an indication of whether the government is prepared to consider building a pipe line to Montreal?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to look into that matter for the hon. member.

AIR TRANSPORT

MERGER BETWEEN AIR CANADA AND CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I think I should point out that the applause is not for me. The applause is for parliament, which last night got the good word that Tommy Douglas is coming back.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the assurance he gave me on November 27 last, that before any action was taken by the government with regard to a merger of Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines the matter would be presented to parliament for discussion, can the minister confirm that undertaking and can he say whether there is yet anything to present on this matter?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes; I can confirm the undertaking. There is nothing further to report. It was merely an idea, which is being discussed by interested parties. There has been nothing more formal than that at any time, that I know of.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the undertaking the same one the minister gave in November, that parliament will be consulted before there is a fait accompli?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, that is true. Among other things, legislation I am sure would be required. I think I am correct in saying that no action could possibly take place until there was approval by parliament.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether any discussions have been held between the head of Air Canada, who referred to this matter recently, and the minister about this question.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall all the things we have chatted about privately. They include a wide variety of subject material, so I would not like to say. There might easily have been, but certainly more in a speculative vein than as a basis for concrete action at this time.

TRANSPORTATION

INVOLVEMENT IN URBAN PROGRAM

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Minister of Transport, and it concerns a speech made by the President of the Canadian Transport Commission. Was the president of the commission expressing government policy when he referred to the necessity of the government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is not in order. A question may be asked in respect of ministerial statements, but not statements made by officials of departments or commissions.

Mr. McGrath: Then, Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether it is the intention of the government of Canada to involve itself in the urgent matter of urban transportation.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): If and when any decision is made in this regard it will be made in the usual course. At the present time, as I think was so well expressed today, our responsibilities are already so extensive that they tax the financial resources available to us. I do not think we are really looking for additional ways in which to spend money at this time.

Nevertheless, as I believe was expressed a year ago, there is a matter of concern in areas of research and co-ordination, and there may be a role for the government to play at this time which might be useful to all parties.

Mr. McGrath: Would the minister take the President of the Canadian Transport Commission into his confidence and give him that information?

AIRPORTS

QUEBEC—LOCATION OF INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport?

As discussions are now concluded between the Quebec government and the federal Department of Transport authorities concerning the future site of the international airport, will the minister tell the house soon what site has been chosen?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I must admit I did not know negotiations had ended. If they have, perhaps the hon. gentleman could tell me what the results were.

FINANCE

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT BASEL BANKERS MEETING

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Could the minister answer the question I asked yesterday, which the Secretary of State for External Affairs said he would refer to him. The question was whether Canada was represented at the meeting of western central bankers at Basel, which is reported as having reached an agreement on a plan to combat the flows of speculative funds from one country to another, and did we agree to the plan.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe we were represented at the meeting, but I should like to take the question as notice, until I can consult with the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

EXPO '67

WRITING OFF OF MONTREAL AND QUEBEC INDEBTEDNESS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. On February 5 I asked the minister a question concerning the indebtedness of Expo '67 Corporation to the federal government. The minister has not answered that question.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I believe the question was in respect of the position of the city of Montreal. I inquired about the matter and find that there is no present liability due in this regard. I believe at the end of March or April the deficit becomes due, and settlement will have to be considered.

Mr. Hales: What does the minister intend to do with regard to the indebtedness that was not honoured as of June 30, 1968 by the corporation?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take the question as notice, because I am not aware that the corporation has failed to pay the government of Canada any amount of money.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SEIZURE OF GOODS IMPORTED UNDER JAY TREATY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked a question about the situation which developed at Cornwall, when Indians acting under the Jay treaty brought into Canada certain goods and chattels and had their truck and purchases seized. What is going to be done in this regard? I should like the minister to advise us that these people will be assured that their treaty rights are to be kept sacred, regardless of the law.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the events that took place over the last weekend at the St. Regis Indian reserve were due to the implementation of regulations dealing with the import and export of goods by the Department of National Revenue. In 1956, the Supreme Court of Canada decided on the legal status of the Jay Treaty and, as a result of the problems encountered over the Christmas holidays I reviewed this situation on my own. I hope a public statement can be made on this subject in the near future.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: In view of the fact the Supreme Court did decide that the Jay treaty was not in effect, does the minister not feel that treaties made with Indians should be upheld as a first consideration in assuring good relations with our first citizens, and that action should be taken by parliament to declare that, in so far as the provisions of the Jay treaty are concerned, they are in effect for those Indians to which it directly applied?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the question of the treaties concluded with the first inhabitants of the country is a difficult one. The government intends to comply with past treaties signed by the Crown with the Indians. In the case of the Jay treaty, it is a different matter, because it was not entered into directly by the Canadian Crown and the Indians, since it was signed around 1787, by the governments of the United States and Great Britain.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, is it not a fact that other treaties affecting Indians, particularly those in western Canada, were made before the government of Canada existed, in so far as western Canada was concerned, and are being upheld?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, this is why I said precisely that as a result of those difficulties during the Christmas season, I have personally undertaken to review the situation and I hope to be in a position to make a statement in that connection during the next few weeks.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Indians want action, not statements.

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister of Indian affairs whether, during his review, he will consider the possibility of extending this privilege to all Indians across the country? I should like to buy a new car and a new colour television set. Perhaps some of my friends would like to buy them also.

Inquiries of the Ministry

IMMIGRATION

REFUSAL TO ADMIT ALLEGED DRAFT DODGERS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether an investigation has been instigated by the department in respect of difficulties that occurred at the United States border when United States citizens applied for permission to enter Canada but were turned down on the basis of their being draft dodgers? When will the department be prepared to report to parliament on this important matter?

Mr. Gerard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take the question as notice and refer it to the minister.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

REPORT NOT AVAILABLE FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State I should like to address my question to the minister who is acting for him today. It relates to the third and fourth reports of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. I understand that one of these reports was sent to the printers last October. My question is: Why was at least one of these reports not ready in time for the use of those attending the current federal-provincial conference?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I would be glad to bring this question to my colleague's attention, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

POST OFFICE

ROD SERVICE LIMITED LAY-OFF OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question to the Minister of Transport.

Could he tell us if he did meet or intends to meet the employees of Rod Service Limited who have been fired?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, my officials are in contact with the union of the employees of Rod Service Limited.

[Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo).]

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Postmaster General. In view of the distinct possibility of a work stoppage by the letter carriers, what action is the minister himself planning to avert such a stoppage?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): I do not think there is any distinct possibility, Mr. Speaker.

NATURAL RESOURCES

POSSIBLE DAMAGE AS A RESULT OF OFFSHORE OIL DRILLING

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Perhaps he would like to take it as notice. Has the government made a plan, in co-operation with the provinces concerned, to prevent damage to fish, birds and other natural resources which may be the result of offshore oil drilling?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I would be glad to take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

NATIONAL PARKS

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO DEVELOPMENT

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Is he in a position to advise us today as to the possibility of developing a federal park in the province of Quebec?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, on October 7, 1968 I sent a tentative agreement to the Quebec government and I am still waiting for an answer.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister, as a supplementary question, whether or not he intends to do something to invite Quebec at least to acknowledge receipt of the federal government's proposal?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, they did acknowledge receipt, but they did not say either yes or no. I wish they would give us an affirmative reply, even if it took a few more days.

[English]

HOUSING

URBAN RENEWAL PROGRAM—DISCUSSIONS WITH MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport in his capacity as housing minister. I ask the minister whether he has arranged a meeting with the mayor of London, Ontario, to discuss that city's urban renewal program, which was suspended by the federal government last November.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Not yet, Mr. Speaker. There are three or four cases which are similar in some respects; London is one of them. I hope the government will have a chance to review its policy within a matter of a few days, after which I will immediately get in touch with the mayors of the several municipalities directly concerned and discuss with them the problems of mutual interest.

Mr. McCutcheon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell the house why his officials have told the officials of the city of London that it would take up to three months?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a matter of debate. The supplementary question is argumentative and is not in order.

[Later:]

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the wording of my last question was taken by Your Honour to be argumentative. It certainly was not meant to be. May I ask the question in this way: Will it take three months before a decision can be made on the fate of that project?

Mr. Hellyer: If I had to answer in one word, Mr. Speaker, the word would be no. I expect the decision to be made much more promptly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It will probably take six months.

TASK FORCE—DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES ON RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Is it the intention of the minister to commence discussions with provincial housing representatives concerning the recommendations of the task force; and if so, when does he hope to commence?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Informal discussions will be held in a few days, Mr. Speaker, and we will have an opportunity to discuss all the various aspects of this problem, those which concern the jurisdiction of each level of government, and determine in what ways we can co-operate so as to produce the maximum amount of housing for Canadians at the lowest possible price, in order to get the best value for every taxpayer's dollar being spent.

Mr. Baldwin: Hallelujah!

Mr. Gilbert: Is it the intention of the minister to approach directly the law societies and real estate boards across the country concerning the recommendation as to the high legal fees and real estate charges of these persons?

Mr. Hellyer: I suspect that many of them have read the report, or certainly some parts of it as reported in the newspapers, and I hope that all members of the professions represented here, as well as others, will use their influence to make sure that there is a reaction to the recommendations made, in the interest of getting housing prices down in Canada.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the reference in the report to the high cost of legal feels in respect of housing, would the minister give consideration to eliminating the list of patronage solicitors for the C.M.H.C.?

Mr. Hellyer: One thing I might recommend to my hon. friend is that, since he is from the province of Newfoundland, he might make representations to the bar there, asking them to reduce their exhorbitant and, in my opinion, unconscionable fees in respect of housing.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Why single out Newfoundland?

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Would he indicate to the house if he has the firm intention of implementing his report to start residential construction as soon as possible and thus meet the urgent needs of the population?

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: That is precisely the objective we have in mind, namely to find ways in which all levels of government in Canada as well as the private sector can, by co-operating together, meet the needs of the Canadian people in respect of housing in an even more satisfactory way than has been done in the past.

ALTERNATIVE TO BUILDING MATERIALS TAX

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Can the minister inform the house if he has thought of an alternative to the 11 per cent sales tax, which has been refused by his colleagues in cabinet, to help Canadians who are endeavouring to buy homes?

FISHERIES

SEALS—HUMANE KILLING PROCEDURES

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries with regard to the hunting of seals. Have representations been received by the government from the Canadian Federation of Humane Societies urging that the methods so far employed against sealing cruelty be extended, and specifically that the use of aircraft in the taking of seals be ended?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): I thank the hon. member for his question. Since receiving written notice of it I have had a check made in my office and the answer is that I have not received any submission. I cannot speak for other ministers of the government.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I have a supplementary question. Would the minister give consideration to doing something in regard to improving the killing operations of seals, and in particular to offset the bad image of Canada that is being created in consequence of what was set out by two foreign magazines, one with a circulation of eight million and the other with a circulation of five million, that the Canadian sealing operations are cruel beyond any excuse.

Mr. Davis: The answer to the right hon. gentleman is that the regulations have again been tightened up this year. We are also holding discussions with the Norwegians, Norway being the other principal country involved on the front and outside Canadian jurisdiction in the Atlantic area.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

CLOSING OF RURAL POST OFFICES

Hon. Théogene Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General.

Considering the general dissatisfaction resulting from the closing of several rural post offices, does the minister intend to keep depriving the citizens in the localities concerned of the postal services to which they are entitled?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will agree that several similar questions have already been asked these last few days—at least one identical to his—and I doubt that the same thing should be asked again. If the hon. member believes that the matter is urgent and the case a special one, he could give notice of it and discuss it on the adjournment motion.

[English]

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There can be no supplementary question since the question has not been accepted.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to try again because I think the minister was willing to reply to my question.

Mr. Speaker: This is precisely what I am suggesting to the hon. member and the minister will be all the more pleased to come back to that matter and reply at the time of adjournment.

[Later:]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General.

As expenses are expected to reach about $91,000 for the international bureaux et Berne and Montevideo, does the minister intend to close them?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think that the question is in order.

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MONTREAL—WEAPONS AFFECTED BY BOMB EXPLOSION

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence, Mr. Speaker. Can the hon. gentleman say whether the bomb explosion in Montreal last night had any connection with the security of national defence property, weapons in particular?

Hon. Leo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): The building in question housed technical transport, I think,—something like that. We are investigating the incident. I suppose we shall have to take more stringent measures to protect our property.

INDUSTRY

DEVCO—PRE-RETIREMENT PROGRAM FOR MINERS

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys asked when the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development would be in a position to announce the date on which the pre-retirement program for Cape Breton miners proposed by Devco would go into effect. I took the question as notice in the absence of the minister and undertook to advise the hon. member and the house as to the situation. I am told the date of implementation is now under review by the corporation, and an announcement will be made as quickly as possible.

FINANCE

CUTS IN CAPITAL BUDGET—MEDICARE DEFERMENT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the definite concern expressed by Montreal bond dealers to the minister over the budgeting of $370 million for medicare, which is making it extremely difficult to sell bonds, is the hon. gentleman giving any thought to making further cuts in the government capital budget or to deferring medicare?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for a reply of a general nature, and this type of statement should be made by the minister on motions.

COMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON SATELLITE STUDIES

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): My question is directed to the minister designate for communications. Some time ago the hon. gentleman indicated he wished to study further the McIntosh report on the corporation to develop domestic satellites. Is he yet in a position to tell us when he may be tabling that report and associated documents?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): I shall discuss that question with my colleagues.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Selkirk.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): The last question was mine, too, Mr. Speaker.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INTRODUCTION OF MEASURE RESPECTING INDIAN CLAIMS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): I should like to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether he can tell the house when the pending legislation concerning an Indian claims commission will be brought forward.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I said a couple of weeks ago that it would be brought forward as soon as possible, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

TERMINATION OF MARITIME FREIGHT RATES FREEZE

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): A question for the Minister of Transport to test his newly discovered interest in transport. Has the hon. gentleman had a chance to consider the matter of the expiry of the freeze of maritime freight rates on March 27 and, if so, what is his plan to deal with the situation?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The answer to the first part of the question is, yes. The answer to the second part is that I hope within a very short period of time, perhaps early next month, to be in a position to make an announcement which will receive the enthusiastic support of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Bell: Does the minister not think that before the committee leaves on its maritime trip next Saturday—and we all wish them good luck—it would be good to clear up apprehensions on this point by an announcement some time this week?

Inquiries of the Ministry

FARM MACHINERY

ACTION ON ROYAL COMMISSION SAFETY RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. Some time ago I asked what consideration he would be giving to the report on farm safety arising out of the work of the Royal Commission on Farm Machinery. I was told, then, that time was needed in which to study the report. Has the minister since had time to study it, and is any action proposed in the area of farm safety?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): It is clearly stated on the outside of the report, or of the so-called report, that this is not the opinion of the royal commission which is studying farm machinery problems and related matters, but that it is, in fact, the opinion of one of the research consultants retained by the royal commission. In these circumstances I do not think it would be proper for me to comment on the report one way or the other. It is the opinion of one man, as far as I understand it.

Mr. Gleave: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to accept the reply, that it represents the opinion of one man; but it is the opinion of a researcher well qualified—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): A supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. Having regard to the deep concern expressed by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at its annual meeting in Quebec last weekend in connection with what is said to be a two-price system applied to farm machinery, can the minister say whether the Barber Commission will be dealing with this serious matter?

Mr. Olson: If the hon. member is referring to the price difference between machinery obtained in the United Kingdom and in Canada, I can say that Dr. Barber has indicated he is looking into the allegations which have been made in that connection. However, some preliminary investigation has been made of certain of the claims, and if consideration is given to the question of comparable machinery, comparable attachments and so on, it appears the allegations are somewhat exaggerated.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Would the Minister of Agriculture indicate whether he intends to be guided in any way by the recommendations of the Barber Commission report, since this is a one man commission in the same sense as the report on the farm machinery safety is a one man report?

Mr. Speaker: The question as asked is argumentative. The hon. member is not in order.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board? In view of the assurance the minister gave on January 8 to representatives of retired civil servants that the question of increasing their pensions would be studied by a committee with the hope that a report would be forthcoming in three or four weeks, can the hon. gentleman say whether such a report is yet ready?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask whether the matter is still under serious study?

Mr. Drury: It is, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): I wish to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Will the study in connection with the pensions of superannuated civil servants also include a study of the pensions of retired servicemen from the permanent force?

Mr. Drury: Not directly, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

LEGISLATION TO COMBINE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I should like to address my question to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as leader of the house. Is it necessary for the government to bring forward legislation giving it authority to combine departments of government?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for an interpretation of the law and his question is therefore not in order.

Mr. Hales: May I rephrase it, then? Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation to combine departments?

Hon. D. S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): The government reorganization bill should be coming forward within the next week or so.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board. If that is a fact, will this legislation be introduced before we study the estimates of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I am not sure when the estimates of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce will be considered. The leader of the house has indicated when the legislation will be brought down for consideration.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SESSIONAL INDEMNITY OF MEMBERS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Is it the intention of the minister to set up a committee to study the shocking salaries of members of parliament and their pensions?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to hear the views of the hon. member.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

INQUIRY AS TO WITHDRAWAL OF MEASURE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of his statement in the house last night, is it now the intention of the minister to withdraw Bill C-151, to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

DELAYS IN DELIVERY—CONSIDERATION BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General, in view of the large amount of correspondence that I am sure all members are getting in regard to the delay in delivery of mails of all classes, whether he would consider referring the dispute over postal facilities to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): I see no need to do that, Mr. Speaker. However, if the committee decide to call me and ask for explanations, I would be glad to appear before them.

ESTIMATES

INCREASED EXPENDITURES FOR PROFESSIONAL AND SPECIAL SERVICES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. On February 5, in answer to a question from the hon. member for York South, the President of the Treasury Board indicated that there might be an error in the table attached to the estimates having to do with professional services. He said he would check to see whether there really was an error. Has he made this check, and can he now tell us whether there is an error or that he can now confirm that the figures are correct?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there is no error. I was beginning to say that the hon. member was in error in attributing all these expenditures to professional services. In fact the expenditures relate to service contracts in addition to the so-called professional services; but rather than charge him with error I backtracked.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So it is now clear there is no error in the table?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGED MISREPRESENTATION OF NORTHERN SASKATCHEWAN

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): In the absence of the Secretary of State, I would ask the Acting Prime Minister to communicate with the C.B.C. with a view to securing an apology from that organization for having described northern Saskatchewan as one of the most violent, hate filled areas of North America. When asked for an apology the C.B.C. refused to give it. Would the minister have brought to the attention of the C.B.C. that painting western Canada and its northern areas as something straight out of the stone age, and without law and order, is not in keeping with the Canadian tradition?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to ask the Secretary of State to transmit to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation the request of my right hon. friend.

FISHERIES

DECISION TO ESTABLISH SALT FISH MARKETING BOARD

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Can he inform the house whether a decision has been made to establish a salt fish marketing board?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, that matter is under very active consideration.

Mr. Carter: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the house whether this board will be formed in time to take care of the 1969 catch?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would not expect it to be ready for 1969—perhaps for 1970.

Mr. Carter: A further supplementary question. Would the minister say whether the government is considering setting up an interim arrangement to take care of the 1969 catch?

Mr. Davis: The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If such arrangement is made, will the government take steps to ensure that the fishermen get a fair return for their fish?

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

CONSIDERATION OF PART OF REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the government house leader. Since concurrence in the second report of the standing committee on transport has not been moved, may I ask the government house leader whether he has any procedure in mind for moving forward that part of the report that is not before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, namely claims against the C.N.R. relative to the Great Slave Lake railway?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the entire report is before the Committee on Privileges and Elections therefore it is not possible to follow the hon. member's suggestion.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL CODE

The house resumed from Monday, January 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) for the second reading and reference to the standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of Bill C-150, to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act, and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when I had the privilege of commencing my remarks at the second reading stage of this bill on January 27, I spent the ten minutes or so that remained that evening on a phase of the matter to which I should like to return for a few minutes.

I feel very strongly that in the course of this debate we should not waste any more time on the complaint about our having to vote for or against Bill C-150 as a package, either at the second reading or at the third reading stage. The fact is that we have a new provision in our rules that we have only recently begun to practise and which will come into play fully and effectively with respect to bill C-150. I refer of course to the report stage, at which time any amendments put down by members to any of the clauses of the bill are debatable and subject to a vote.

It is quite clear that there are a number of subjects in this bill which are highly contentious. I need mention only the provisions with respect to abortion, homosexuality, breathalyzer tests and so on. I might also mention—because I will have something to say about this—state lotteries.

It is also quite clear that on each of these contentious issues amendments will be put down for debate at the report stage. The other night I gave notice, notice that I repeat now, that as one who feels that we should not establish in this country state lotteries I have already prepared a report stage amendment to clause 13 of the bill. That amendment will be clear and straightforward. It will not be a package, it will not be obscure; it will be a straightforward amendment on the question of whether or not we shall have state lotteries in Canada. When the vote is called on that amendment there will be no package, no obscurities; it will be a straightforward issue on which members will have to stand up and be counted.

There are members in this house—they are found in any party, but I think in particular of my creditiste friends who are opposed to what the government proposes in regard to abortion. Therefore I imagine one of them will be putting down an amendment to delete clause 18 from Bill C-150. If that is done, then there will be a debate on that question; and with Mr. Speaker in the chair and the bells having been rung, members will be called upon to vote on the straightforward, clear-cut question: Do we want the law on abortion to stay as it is, or do we want the law on abortion to be as proposed in Bill C-150?

I might say that there will be one other amendment in this same area. There will be an amendment to alter clause 18 in the opposite sense, taking the question of abortion right out of the Criminal Code altogether. With that amendment the issue will not be obscure. It will not be a multiple one; it will not be a package. It will be a straightforward vote on that question by itself.

I think also of some of the subjects that are missing from this bill, such as the proposal to abolish corporal punishment and a few others I will name in a moment. Under the provisions of our new rules these can be set down as amendments at the report stage, and we can have a recorded vote on each and every one of these issues. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that no harm is being done to the privileges of parliament, no harm is done to any individual member because the bill to amend the criminal law over a wide range of subjects is one bill so far as second reading is concerned. The plain fact of the matter is that at the report stage we shall have a clear-cut opportunity to vote as we want to vote on each and every one of these issues. Each member will be responsible to his own conscience No one will be able to hide behind the excuse that there is a package. No one will be able to say that he voted against something which he liked because there was something in the bill which he did not like, or vice versa.

Provided hon. members put down the appropriate amendments at the report stage, there will be a clear-cut decision made by the house, and every member's vote on each of these issues—abortion, homosexuality, breathalyzer tests, state lotteries and others—will be recorded by this house. When I made this point the other night an hon. member said, "What about third reading?" On third reading, Mr. Speaker, it works both ways. This is a government bill. If the majority of the members of this house vote to remove the section on abortion or the section on state lotteries, then that is the way the bill will appear at third reading. Although the government may not like it, it will have to vote for or against a package on third reading without those items which the government wanted in the bill. It works both ways.

Third reading is an important vote, in the sense that it is the final one; but I suggest that in terms of parliamentary debate and in terms of members taking their stand the most important phase will be the report stage at which each of these individual items, particularly the contentious ones, will be before us for debate and for a vote. It will be the kind of vote which comes after the bells are rung and all hon. members are here. I hope, Mr. Speaker, the allegation that it is unfair to have all these matters before us in one bill will not be repeated too often.

Most sections of this bill meet with my approval, but there are one or two to which I am strongly opposed. I do not find it uncomfortable or embarrassing to vote for second reading of the bill so that it can be referred to committee and studied. I know that I have the opportunity at the report stage to try to delete those items to which I do not agree, and to try to have amended those sections which I believe could be improved.

Mr. Speaker, I should now like to deal with a few of the subjects which are covered in this bill. The first one I would like to mention is perhaps the most contentious of all, namely the question of abortion, about which many letters have been written. Our parliamentary leader, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), who understandably will be happy to relinquish his role in the next week or so when the new member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands takes his seat, stated the position of most members of our group on the subject of abortion. I would like to put it this way, Mr. Speaker.

When voting on this bill in the House of Commons we will not be voting for or against abortion. What we have to decide, and I commend the government for giving us the opportunity to make this decision, is whether abortion is a crime or a human problem.

What has been wrong is that this human problem has been listed as a crime in the Criminal Code. Most of my colleagues and I take the view that the subject of abortion should be removed from the Criminal Code and recognized for what it really is, a human problem. I believe that women who face this problem should have the opportunity to obtain the best advice possible, whether it be from a religious counsellor, psychologist, social worker or medical practitioner. It is that kind of a problem. A pregnant woman facing the problem of abortion should be able to get advice from those people. She should be able to get it without fear that she herself is committing a crime, and without running the risk of calling upon these advisers also to commit a crime.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that we should get into the 20th century on this issue. We should recognize it not as a crime, but a human problem to be dealt with in the most realistic, straight-forward and humane fashion. The present law on abortion creates and causes a great deal of human suffering. It is not good to have a law which does that. In my view the improvements being made do not go far enough. A great deal of suffering will still be caused to women who need an abortion or desire to have one for reasons which may be good to them. They are still faced with limitations in the Criminal Code. No one is being called upon to agree to an abortion, but I hope, Mr. Speaker, the house will turn down any amendment that would try to delete clause 18 from the bill and put the law back the way it was. I hope we will admit that this is a human and social problem to be dealt with in a humanitarian manner. There should be a sense of compassion for those who face the difficulties which sometimes lead to the necessity or even the desirability of an abortion.

I cannot get over the feeling, Mr. Speaker, that somehow or other our law in this area is a relic of the kind of world in which men have made most of the laws. I do not say that if this House of Commons consisted of 263 women and one man instead of the reverse, as is now the case, that all the women would vote for the proposal which is in Bill C-150. I would not expect them to be unanimous, but I think their approach would be different from ours.

I think there is an element in this law that seems to suggest that men are saying to women, "Well, if you get pregnant, and if you did not want to be, or even if there are reasons why that pregnancy should be terminated, it is too bad, we have made the law." This is not the way to do it. I want to see humanity, compassion and common sense with respect to this important subject and, as I said when I opened my remarks on it, what we are being called upon to vote on in this matter is not for or against abortion. What we are being called upon to vote on is whether in our view abortion is a crime or a human problem. I think it is the latter and believe our law should deal with it in that respect.

As I have already said, Mr. Speaker, from someone in our party, if somebody else does not propose it, there will be an amendment at the report stage suggesting that the improvements in the law be even better than those proposed by the government's bill. As I have also said, I have no doubt that there will also be an amendment to throw out clause 18 altogether. Thus there will be three positions before the parliament of Canada at the report stage: leave the law as it is, make the law a little better as the government proposes, or make it better still. And by our votes, by standing up and being counted, we will make our decision on this matter, and when we are making our decision it will not be mixed up with breathalyzers, lotteries or any of the other things in the bill, legalistic or otherwise.

I would like to suggest the same thing about the proposals to change the law regarding homosexuality which, I believe, are set out in clause 7 of the bill. Here too, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the kind of distinction I have tried to make with respect to abortion applies. Those of us who think we are normal seem to have taken the position across the years that those who are not like us, those who are abnormal, are committing a crime. I just do not think it adds up.

I think what we need to do is to approach this matter with understanding and compassion, with some psychological appreciation of the problem, and I welcome the decision of the government to make a change in this area. I recognize that the whole question of proselytizing is something we have to be concerned about. Maybe there is a case for having something on that aspect in the Criminal Code, and it is there by inference. But at any rate it does seem to me that we should move forward in respect of this matter.

Parenthetically, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say I have been very appreciative of the letters I have received on these two subjects, as well as on others, from many of the churches, both the national bodies and local churches. There is a tendency for some people to assume that the churches will be narrow-minded and traditional, but in the last little while I have had communications from churches as widely varied as the United Church of Canada, the Baptists, the Mennonites, the Lutherans, and the Unitarians. That is quite a broad spectrum of churches. If we got them all together the ecumenical movement would be well on its way.

In the letters I have received I find there has been basically the kind of approach to the problem of abortion and the problem of homosexuality that I have been trying to set out this afternoon. They do not all agree in every little detail. Some of them, and I respect their views, would like to keep abortion in the Criminal Code and to make more precise the authority of the therapeutic abortion committees and so on. These are points that should be considered by the standing committee to which this bill is referred.

But I think it is significant that in the main the churches and the church people who have been thinking about this are saying to us, "Apply reason, apply psychology, apply compassion, apply human understanding to these problems." And if I may, since I have referred to the churches, I would like to congratulate most warmly those who have written to me telling me about the meetings they have held, the study groups they have set up, and the specialists who have discussed these matters with them. This is what we are trying to get these days, participatory democracy, but at any rate, Mr. Speaker, I am sure we will be going along with the serious-minded and thoughtful people in this country if we move in the direction I have suggested, if we treat these two matters not as criminal offences but as human problems deserving the best attention and consideration we can give to them.

Now, sir, I would like to take a minute or two to refer to a number of subjects—and because I see my time is running along I shall do no more than refer to them in the form of headings—that have been mentioned by others in this group, notably by my parliamentary leader, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), and my colleague from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I speak in this context of things that have been left out but which we think ought to be in the Criminal Code amendments.

I refer first to the proposal that corporal punishment should be abolished. We are not living in the dark ages, in the 17th, 18th or 19th century. We are living in the 20th century. Surely corporal punishment should go.

I also think that the code should include a clear statement on the right of persons to counsel. We assume that right exists but it is not protected by law.

Lately a great deal has been said about the desirability of expunging a criminal record where the person who has been found guilty lives for a period of time without any further violation of the law. A few glaring examples have been brought to our attention of persons who have had to suffer double punishment throughout their lives because of some minor infraction that became part of their records.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I think that legislation regarding wire-tapping should have been included in this bill to amend the Criminal Code. Like others in my party I am little surprised, the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury) having produced such an excellent bill dealing with this matter, that his proposals were not incorporated in Bill C-150.

As I understand the new rules, Mr. Speaker, especially the report stage to which I have been referring, we may be able to deal with some of these matters at that time as well. The rules say that at the report stage there can be amendments to delete, to alter, to restore, or to add. Most of the rule changes we made were for the purpose of avoiding duplication and of saving time, but we knew what we were doing when we brought in the report stage. We were not saving time but we were providing a clearcut opportunity for decisions to be taken by parliament on these individual issues. I hope we will avail ourselves of that opportunity at the report stage to deal in the way I have suggested with the items I have listed.

That leaves just one other subject to which I would like to refer for a minute or two. It is the question of state lotteries. Others who have taken part in the debate have said this, so I underline what they have said, that to me it is moving back two or three centuries to think that we can solve any of our problems, whether in terms of getting money into public treasuries or in terms of undergirding welfare programs, health programs, education programs or what have you by resorting to state lotteries.

A great deal has been said about the Irish sweepstakes, but we have never had any suggestions that that country does very well out of its sweepstakes. The idea of sweepstakes has been tried recently in the state of New York and the reports coming from that state already suggest it has been a failure. It has also been tried in our own country, in the city of Montreal, and that city seems to be in greater financial difficulty now than it was before this venture was undertaken. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that state lotteries cannot be operated without giving to the people the notion that this is going to be an easy way of providing for public needs, whether they are welfare, health, education or what have you programs. The money obtained in this way simply will not be sufficient to underwrite these programs. Furthermore lotteries, particularly state lotteries, are really the most regressive form of taxation the mind of man can conceive.

We have enough regressive taxes already from this government across the way. There is the social development tax which is being collected from the people of Canada now even though it is not yet the law of the land. It is a highly regressive tax. It is a tax of 2 per cent payable on the first $6,000 of taxable income but anyone with a taxable income over $6,000 does not pay one cent more. So the result is very regressive. However, when there is an attempt to raise public money by lotteries the people make their contribution not according to ability to pay but according to their dire need and their desperate hope that somehow they may break out of their poverty. The fact is it is the poor who will put the money into state lotteries. As a result they will be caught in a scheme of regressive taxation that is utterly wrong, utterly unscientific and utterly out of line with any economic theory that applies in this country today. So I hope we will make this distinction.

As I said a moment ago, I have been pleased with the letters I have received from a number of churches, both national bodies and local congregations. I have noted with interest their comments on this very subject. The churches write to me to say they do not like gambling at all. They think it caters to the worst in people, that it degrades and cheapens life; but then they say they realize it is unrealistic to try to legislate today against private games of chance or against the fun people have in various kinds of small private lotteries. In other words, the churches are being realistic in admitting there is a point beyond which they or we cannot go.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Having said that, however, the churches come down exactly where I have come down, that is, whatever else we may agree to, let us not make the social and economic mistake of establishing or even permitting state lotteries at the federal, provincial or municipal level. I agree with them and I welcome their support. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), when bringing forward this bill and speaking on the matter, said it was a kind of local option the government had in mind in bringing this forward in the bill in this way. I submit it is more than that. If this bill passes containing the provisions about state lotteries this will be parliamentary approval of the principle of raising money in this way and of the principle of the most retrogressive form of taxation there is. Therefore when I move an amendment at the report stage to clause 13 of the bill to delete the reference to state lotteries, unless the standing committee has already taken it out, I hope my amendment will receive the support of a majority of the members of this house.

When I move that amendment it will not be cluttered, obscure or part of a package. It will stand on its own feet just as will the amendments regarding other contentious subjects. I look forward to the report stage of this bill. At that point we will stand up, we will be counted, and we will take our decision on these various points. I hope the result will be a bill that is even better than it is now. It will be better if it deals with the problems of abortion or homosexuality in human terms, and it will be better than it is now if it deals with such problems as corporal punishment, the right to counsel, the deletion of criminal records and wiretapping which are not contained in the bill. It will also be better than it is now if we take out the retrograde proposal to approve state lotteries. Therefore it will be a pleasure for me to vote for the second reading of this bill so that it can be studied by the committee, but either in the committee or back in the house I hope we will make the kind of improvements I have tried to suggest.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, my purpose in speaking to this bill is to bring to the attention of the house and the country the little things that appear in bills. When we discuss vast subjects, as we did in respect of the house rules, the comment can be made that things are passed that are not even debated. The point I want to bring to the attention of the house is a small one in this bill. It has to do with clause 16 which involves drinking and driving. I wish to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I have no personal interest in this because I do not drive whenever I can avoid driving. We have heard and I am sure will hear many good speeches on the various subjects contained in this bill such as the gun law, weapon law, abortion, homosexuality, lotteries, and others. I should like to point out, however, that most of these subjects have been debated by Canadians over a period of time and in fact we are following, if I might say so, the general trend or feeling. I shall not debate the question whether all these points should be covered in one bill. Of course it should be one bill; there is no other way to deal with them.

But I do wish to bring to the attention of the house and the parliamentary secretary clause 16, the amendment to section 224, which appears at page 36 of the bill. It deals with driving with more than 80 milligrams of alcohol in the blood. That means about .08 per cent. I have been assured that this means two drinks. I am not opposed to this clause but I am saying that it will have a fairly serious effect on the social habits of Canadians. I suggest they may be taken by surprise because up until now the law in the provinces has not been based on the number of milligrams of alcohol in the bloodstream but on the question of drunkenness, impaired driving or driving while under the influence of alcohol. There is a great difference when we establish by law as we are doing here an automatic guilt just because an accused person's blood contains a certain percentage of alcohol. This is a complete change in the law as we have known it up until now. This cannot be denied. Even the Minister of Justice has not denied it.

Under this clause and the preceding clause it is not important whether a person can or cannot tolerate alcohol. If he has had two drinks at lunch, at a wedding or at dinner, he is automatically subject to being indicted for an offence with all the consequences that follow that indictment. It does not mean there must be an indictment, but there could be an indictment. This means there would be a record on one's passport, that no bond of any kind could be obtained for employment and that one could not go across the border to the United States. These are serious consequences when one considers that what is involved is not a question of guilt in the common law sense but is merely the fact that a person has so much alcohol in his blood.

I want to bring to the attention of the house, the minister and the parliamentary secretary that we are dealing with a fairly serious matter. I am not suggesting that I do not support this amendment because it has certainly been argued, if not proven, that a number of motor vehicle accidents are the result of drivers having partaken of alcohol. I do not deny or argue against this, and possibly this is the time to bring in a law to prevent drinking and driving or any combination thereof. What I am saying is that if we are going to do this we had better bring to the attention of the public exactly what it means.

I should like hon. members to consider the change we are making. There is a difference between negligence and criminal intent on the highway and elsewhere because the courts have consistently ruled that when you take your automobile on the highway you can expect certain dangers and that some people may fall asleep at the wheel. You can expect that you may encounter on the highway something other than absolute safety. If we say now that one can expect anything but someone driving who has had two drinks, then that will be the law and I would have no quarrel with it. The minister and the government should consider seriously whether the people really understand what is being done and whether they are willing yet to accept such a law. If this is not the case we will have police forces not too willing to follow the letter of the law. This will result in ineffective enforcement.

It is very important that we stress what 80 milligrams means, and what the law means when it says that the punishment for each subsequent offence is imprisonment for not more than one year and not less than three months. This involves quite a change. People know they should not drive when they have been drinking or they probably will lose their licences, be liable for damages and not be able to obtain insurance, but perhaps they are not yet willing to accept the fact that they might go to jail for three months.

As I have said, social attitudes have changed. People do go to lunch and sometimes have a drink or two. They go to banquets and weddings and they drink. What we are saying now is that if someone has had a drink or two he must not drive. We are not referring to drunk or impaired driving. There is no question that an individual may have a drink or two but not be drunk or unable to drive. With this change it is not necessary to prove that an individual was impaired. All the authorities must do is show that his bloodstream contained .08 per cent alcohol.

We must also consider the other change dealing with the breathalyzer test. If an individual refuses to take a breathalyzer test he is guilty. The minister argues that he is not really guilty of an infraction of this law but is guilty of refusing to take a test. The punishment for refusing to take a breathalyzer test is identical with the punishment on a conviction for drinking and driving. When the punishment is the same for a conviction under the section or refusing to take the test, there is not much rationalization in the argument that it is not really the same offence. If you refuse to incriminate yourself then you are guilty.

At this moment the minister is probably discussing a charter of human or individual rights. One of the sections of that charter is likely to be to the effect that a Canadian need not incriminate himself. How can we possibly justify these two points? If we say in the proposed charter that an individual need not incriminate himself and, on the other hand, that he can be forced to incriminate himself under this law, how can we justify our position? We suggest on the one hand that an individual must take a breathalyzer test unless he has reasonable grounds to refuse. That is a strange attitude to adopt when dealing with police forces and administrators of the law. We cannot very well justify or reconcile these positions.

In discussing this matter the minister said that, after all, it is the same as being forced to be fingerprinted. In some cases an individual may be forced to be fingerprinted but that does not necessarily mean he is guilty of an offence. An individual's fingerprints may be found at the scene of a crime. That individual may well have been there and his fingerprints may be the only ones found, but he still has the opportunity to show that he was not guilty and the Crown must prove that he is guilty beyond any reasonable doubt.

The proposed change states that if an individual has a blood alcohol content of .08 he is guilty of an offence. This is tantamount to suggesting that if your fingerprints happen to be found at the scene of a crime you are guilty without recourse. We must really consider whether we want to go this far.

An hon. Member: And you end up with a criminal record.

[Mr. Otto.]

Mr. Otto: We are trying to have records expunged after a certain period of time; yet we are instituting now the creations of records for drinking and driving. Perhaps this is the time to place an absolute prohibition on drinking and driving, and when I say that I mean even one drink. If that is the case, then perhaps this will be a good law. We must indicate to people that from now on they cannot drive after drinking. We must also consider whether Canadians will understand what the fact is. I have no objection but I think Canadians should be made aware of the situation. They must understand that they will have to change their social habits.

I cannot understand how anyone can possibly justify that a refusal to incriminate oneself is tantamount to being guilty of an indictable offence. I am sure we will hear other arguments in respect of other facets of this bill. My purpose in rising today is merely to bring to the attention of the minister and the government this one provision which I think is not in accord with the general feeling of the public. I certainly think that the proposed changes to section 224 should be removed.

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to delay unduly the passage of this bill or its referral to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs where I am sure it will receive very careful scrutiny, but I do think there are certain observations which can perhaps be more conveniently made at this stage.

In spite of the admonition delivered a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), which I will deal with it in greater detail in a moment, along with many others on this side of the house and on the other side, if they were free to express their opinions, I feel this bill should have been presented in a divided rather than in its present omnibus form. I realize there are parts of the bill which are very good and that it contains amendments to the Criminal Code which are long overdue. But at the same time many other matters could and, I suggest, should have been included in the bill by way of amendment. I suggest that in many respects today our Criminal Code is indeed archaic and is not moulded to or in tune with the times in which we are living. I would like to put on the record just a few of the sections of the Criminal Code which are indeed archaic. For example, section 72 says:

• (3:30 p.m.)

Every one who challenges or attempts by any means to provoke another person to fight a duel, is guilty of an indictable offence—

I do not think we have had very many duels in Canada lately. This is a section that is indeed archaic and could very conveniently be struck out. Another section says:

Every one who for valuable consideration carries on or plays or offers to carry on or to play, or employs any person to carry on or play in a public place or a place to which the public have access, the game of three-card monte—

And so on. When did we last hear of three-card monte being played in Canda? The Fathers of Confederation may have played it, but I am sure it is not played in Canada today. Another section says:

Every one who fraudulently pretends to exercise or to use any kind of witchcraft—

And so on. Is anybody practising witchcraft now?

Mr. Bell: Yes, the government.

Mr. McQuaid: Witchcraft is an offence punishable on summary conviction. These are only some examples. There are many other sections which should be taken out of the Criminal Code because they are meaningless. I suggest that now that we are going to amend the Criminal Code the government should have done a real job and taken out some of the sections which we do not need.

The minister has assured us that such amendments are on the way. I am prepared to accept his assurance in this respect, but at the same time I must express my very sincere hope that the necessary revision of the code will be made just as soon as possible.

Setting aside these considerations for the time being, I would like to return to my contention that the bill should have been presented to us in divisions rather than in its present form. When the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) moved second reading of the bill on Thursday, January 23, he asked this very question:

Why should this bill be split?

Whether he recognized it or not, he then proceeded to answer his own question because he said, as reported on page 4717 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, in introducing this massive bill I am very sensitive of the solemn duty that I have to the law of this country and of the effect that this bill, if adopted by the house, will have on the individual lives and individual human rights of everyone in Canada.

On the same page he said:

The omnibus measure contains matters of deep social significance which, in the course of time, will affect the lives of most of us, perhaps each one of us, in varying degrees.

These words are very true. Therein, I submit, lies the reason why this bill should have been divided. As the minister said, it can affect and possibly will affect the conscience of every member of this house and will at some time or another touch the conscience of all the people of Canada. There are some principles in the bill with which I cannot agree. For that reason I shall be required, I submit, to vote against the whole bill. There are parts of the bill which are extremely good. So far as I am concerned, 95 per cent of the bill is good. I would like to vote for those parts which are good but I cannot—I will answer the argument of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in a moment—vote for the whole bill because it contains clauses with which I cannot agree.

The minister put forth practically the same argument as was put forward today by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He said we will have the chance to vote separately on these issues when the bill reaches the report stage, and at that time it can be considered clause by clause. I agree that in all probability this privilege will be extended to us but I ask, how does that help the situation? When the bill is being studied clause by clause, if there is a clause with which I do not agree I will naturally vote against it. In all probability the clause will carry because the government will have a majority on the Committee and in the house when the bill is being considered at the report stage. Therefore in all probability the clause with which I disagree and against which I shall vote will carry.

The bill will come back to us in omnibus form. What am I expected to do then? What is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre going to do then? Is he going to swallow himself? Is he going to reverse himself then simply because the clause with which he disagrees is still in the bill? The hon. member mentioned the clause dealing with lotteries, and I will take that as an example. He said he cannot go along with it. But even if he votes against it at the report stage it will be included in the bill for which we shall be asked to vote on third reading.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't be too sure.

Mr. McQuaid: If the hon. member wants to vote against that clause, he will have to vote against the whole bill. I am assuming that the amendment he says he will submit will be defeated in committee. I submit this is a reasonable assumption. The bill will then come back to us in its complete form with the lotteries clause of which the hon. member disapproves, and he will be required, as will I and every other hon. member, either to reverse himself and vote for the whole bill or vote against it.

I suggest that this places hon. members on the horns of a dilemma, and this should not be. Every member of this house should have the privilege of making a choice. I suggest, too, that deep down in his heart the Minister of Justice and many other members on the other side realize that what I have said is correct. But, as the minister says, the bill is not his bill. It is identified, he said, with the indelible print of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The Prime Minister is the one who says the bill must not be divided.

Apparently there is not a man on the government benches who dares stand up and say no. Apparently there is not a man on the government benches who has the courage to say that he will follow the dictates of his own conscience irrespective of the representations made to him by the Prime Minister. It appears to me there is not a man on the government benches today who dares go into a cabinet meeting without first hanging his free will with his hat and coat in the cloakroom. There is not a man who dares to go in there and dispute anything the Prime Minister suggests to them as being good. The government and this parliament are being ruled, and as a result are suffering, by the iron hand of the Prime Minister.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre argued the other day that you could not divide a bill such as this into 120 parts. I agree. Certainly you cannot take this bill and divide it into 120 parts, and nobody suggests that you should. But this is a bill—and for all I know it may have been designed this way—which can very conveniently be broken down into parts, as was so ably pointed out a few days ago by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). The bill very conveniently lends itself to the divisions that he outlined: Clauses referring to abortion, clauses referring to homosexuality, clauses referring to lotteries and gambling, and all the remaining clauses. This is a very convenient and more or less natural breakdown of the bill, and there is absolutely no reason why the government should not allow this division to be made. It is a division which would allow every member of the house to vote against what his moral convictions tell him is bad and at the same time to support what he knows is good. It is a division, I suggest, to which every member of this house is entitled, and to refuse it may very correctly be categorized as one of the greatest injustices ever perpetrated by any government against the elected representatives of the people.

The minister said the other day when he introduced the bill that these amendments have been tested by public opinion and have received a popular mandate. At page 4719 of Hansard he is reported as having said:

> We believe it has been tested favourably with the people of Canada and has met the approval of the people in a general election.

The only thing that was tested in the June 25 election was the personality of the Prime Minister, and the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith) and everybody else on the other side of the house know that that is true. There was no national examination of the principles of this bill. From my own experience at least, I never heard homosexuality, lotteries or abortion mentioned during the whole election campaign. We were privileged to have the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in our province during the election campaign, and I am sure that he never raised these issues with the people of our province.

I am quite prepared to suggest that the greater percentage of the electorate of Canada did not even know that these issues could possibly arise, but even if they did I still suggest that that does not give a clear mandate to the other side of the house because I would remind them that more people voted against them on June 25 than voted for them. If it was an election issue, then I suggest that more people said "no, we do not want it" than said "we do want it" because the figures will show that at that election 54.5 per cent of the voters of Canada voted against the government while only 45.5 per cent voted for them. It is true that they were able to secure a sufficient number of seats to form a government, but it is not fair for them to rely on what they term the tremendous vote they received.

I do not propose to deal at this time in any detail with the controversial clauses of the bill. The time to do that is in committee, and I will have more to say there. In my opinion, however, to assume that simply because a person happens to be an adherent of one or another religious belief he is automatically for or against certain of the controversial clauses of this bill is not correct. One must not think of this problem in the terms of Roman Catholics against all others. For example, opposition to abortion is by no means the exclusive preserve of Roman Catholics. The fact is that a growing number of Protestants and Jews are today opposing the widening of the grounds for abortion. For example, just last week the congregation of Metropolitan United in Edmonton passed a resolution urging the government to split the bill. They asked that the government do the very same thing we are asking them to do today—split the bill.

I also suggest that no religious group in this country is trying to force its ideas down the throats of the Canadian people. Those who oppose abortion oppose it because they are convinced that foetal life is human life and that to destroy human life at any stage is deliberate, premeditated, cold-blooded murder. That is the reason we who are opposed to abortion stand opposed. The fact that foetal life is human life and that life begins at conception is not exclusively a theological opinion, although there are some theologians who hold that view. It is also a hard, cold scientific fact which has not yet been successfully disproved. It is acknowledged and concurred in by a publication issued by the government of Canada entitled "The Canadian Mother and Child". I read in that government publication not long ago that when a sperm unites with an ovum a new cell is formed and a new life has begun. This statement is also confirmed by the chairman of the department of biology at the University of San Francisco, Dr. Edward L. Kessel, who has said:

> The scientific evidence shows conclusively that life begins at conception.

The Minister of Justice himself admits that some of the provisions pertain to life itself.

Having satisfied myself about that basic fact, my conscience will not allow me to support any amendment to the law which will make it easier than it now is to take the life of a potential human being. If the life of a mother is in danger, yes, but beyond that I suggest we must not go.

Let me remind hon. members that just as sure as we are sitting here this afternoon the proposed widening of the abortion law if it is allowed, will only be the first step toward the next move of abortion by consent. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre indicated this afternoon that he would like to see all provisions with reference to abortion removed from the code. This is just another way of saying that there should be abortion by consent. I think that is wrong, and I refuse to prostitute my moral convictions to the cause of any political party. That is the reason I say we should have a free vote on this bill, and the government should have allowed it. I also believe the bill should have been divided.

In any case, my main point is that those of us who feel this way in conscience should not be forced to vote against those amendments which we know to be good and believe should be made the law of the country. For example, I go along entirely with the provisions of the bill which deal with the tightening of the law in so far as drunken driving is concerned. We have to stop the slaughter on our highways. If the amendment proposed by the Minister of Justice will have that effect, I want to go along with it. I am in complete agreement with the proposal that there should be tightening of the law regarding guns; I go along with that completely. I am in complete agreement with the suggested amendment whereby witnesses cannot be held indefinitely in jail pending the trial at which they are going to give evidence. These are things that I would like to vote for, but I am not allowed to vote for them because my conscience will not allow me to vote for one or two clauses which I feel to be bad.

I submit that for these reasons the bill should be split. Hon. members who sit on the treasury benches say that the bill will not be split. Yet there is still a hope—at least I hope there is—that the private members who sit on the other side of the house will be able to convince their party, the Minister of Justice, the Prime Minister and his cabinet that this bill should be presented to us in a divided form rather than in its present omnibus form so that I and many more like me who want to vote for many of the provisions which we know to be good can vote for them and at the same time vote against those which we are convinced are bad.

• (3:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this discussion on bill C-150, commonly called the omnibus bill, I would like to make a few very objective remarks, in order to put before the government and the house my opinion on the various amendments to the criminal code contained in the bill.

Several members set forth their views on the bill. The minister voiced his own at length as well as that of the government. Some lawyers put forward their ideas most eloquently. Indeed, I took great interest in reading the speech of a doctor, the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle), and I congratulate him for the great deal of information he gave the house, though on some points other doctors may disagree.

My wife has been calling upon doctors' services for 30 years. During her twelve pregnancies, I always appreciated the doctor's honesty and the great care he took to protect the life inside the mother's womb, while taking all the necessary steps to keep her in good health. I am convinced that our doctors are generally well qualified and conscientious.

One lady has expressed eloquently her ideas, namely the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). I wish to congratulate her for her really dignified remarks, which are a credit to the fair sex.

I was greatly impressed by the seriousness shown by hon. members in the discussion of this bill. We know that there is concern on all sides, but there is also sincerity and good will.

As for myself, I am neither a doctor nor a lawyer, but my responsibility as a father makes me aware of the seriousness of this problem.

If, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) suggested, the government was given a mandate at the last election to get the amendments he introduced passed, it is also clear that the member for Bellechasse, was by the same token given a specific mandate, since at each meeting he held, he drew that question to the attention of the electorate without passion or demagoguery. Like many others, I wish the amendments in the omnibus bill had been introduced separately, which would have left each hon. member free to take a stand according to his conscience and to accept what he deemed acceptable and reject what he deemed unacceptable. The government will certainly answer that we can do it, either at the committee stage or when considering the report of the committee. However, at the stage of the third reading, the bill will stay undivided and, consequently, will be adopted or rejected as a whole, which means that in order to reject what does not seem acceptable we shall have at the same time to reject what would seem to us necessary and useful to society.

I have discussed that problem with the Minister of Justice; I must recognize that he has been very courteous towards me, for which I thank him.

However, in presenting to the house, in one bill, all the amendments he intends to bring to the Criminal Code, the Minister of Justice seems to have been willing to follow tradition. I am told that actually, in 1954, I think, the government followed the same course. It seems to me that when it is a matter of improving something, it would be advisable not to follow tradition. This government likes to be considered as being in the van, because it wants to amend the standing orders of the house, and I agree with that; but the people also want those amendments.

The amendment which the government wishes to effect in section 195(2) of the Criminal Code is of the utmost importance since it is likely to change the meaning of the term "homicide". I have before me a letter dated February 5, 1969, which was sent, with a document, to the hon. member for Bellechasse and, probably, to all other hon. members, by an association of parents. It shows that 13 organizations request exactly what several others requested before me and what I myself and now requesting, that the bill be divided so that we can accept what is acceptable and reject what does not seem acceptable to us. Among those associations are the Société Saint-Jean-Baptiste, a Parents Association, a chapter of the Knights of Columbus, the Catholic Nurses of the Province of Quebec, the Policemen Brotherhood of Montreal and the Federation of Policemen Brotherhoods of the province of Quebec.

One of God's commands is as good in 1969 as it was originally: "Thou shalt not kill." If I understand it correctly, Mr. Speaker, it means that we cannot take the life of our fellow-men. But what is life? It must be something extremely valuable since God, our Maker, made it one of his commands not to deprive our fellow-men of life.

It seems we are assuming that for a human being life only begins the moment a child is born. I cannot possibly accept such an interpretation of the concept of life. I sincerely believe that God alone creates life, but in His infinite wisdom he associates himself to man to carry out his work. Consequently, a man and a woman become procreators in uniting in the conjugal act to fulfil their mission, and providing there is fecundity, in my opinion, the life of a new human being starts there immediately. I believe that things could not be otherwise since, according to God's will, life begets life. First of all, one must be alive and have life to be able to transmit life according to the law of creation. I have here also a document that was prepared by the Association of hospital medical boards in the province of Quebec, in which one can read the following:

The medical board is the body which in each hospital includes all the practising physicians. Lately, as a result of the presentation of the government bill on abortion, the association got in touch with all its members in writing or at meetings to discuss that bill. The directors have considered all the views expressed and they are pleased to give you their conclusions on abortion and that bill.

The physicians of the Quebec hospitals believe that any abortion is a homicide, because the foetus is a human being. In the present state of medicine, the foetus is a living human being and has the right to live as all other human beings. Even from a legal point of view, the foetus is already considered to be a complete human being, since he is entitled to estate rights and the State still considers non-therapeutic abortion as a crime liable to life imprisonment.

Mr. Speaker, Man is able to conceive plans of all kinds, in various areas, but he will never succeed, once dead, to bring himself back to life. In spite of science, of various discoveries, of the power of human intelligence, there has never been a man who could create something, a simple plant, a humble blade of grass. Man can improve it, help it grow faster and better, but never, in spite of all his intelligence, will he be able to create it, to give it life.

Our presence here as human beings, alive and conscious, is not due to our own will, but to the respect and the protective feeling which our parents had for life, in spite of difficulties that confronted them, and of troubles of all kind they had to endure.

• (4:00 p.m.)

The human capital, the inhabitants themselves are the greatest wealth of our country, and this is so true that we may well ask ourselves—and rightly so—what all the other physical riches of our country would be worth if there were nobody to use them.

All things created were made to be used by man, by human beings endowed with life. Our forefathers fought for their lives and their survival and, by doing so, they managed to build up the Canada of today.

Our ancestors laid the groundwork of our country more than 350 years ago. All levels of government have successively passed pieces of legislation aimed at safeguarding the lives and health of the individuals, by every means, because they have realized that the human capital is the true wealth of our country.

Those who lived before us did not always have an easy life. In the light of present day living, our parents accepted their fate at the cost of tremendous sacrifices and under most difficult circumstances.

In fact, it is only necessary to go back twenty years to make comparisons. Some of us have known what living conditions were at that time. As a matter of fact, roads were not cleared in winter time as they are nowadays for automobile traffic.

Besides, a great many parishes did not even have telephone service. It is easy to imagine what were the sufferings endured by women throughout their pregnancy. Yet, there was no question of seeking abortion as it is the case today. As medical knowledge was less advanced, mothers could not as easily ask for medical assistance and they had to endure the discomforts of pregnancy for several long months. Medical science is now capable of giving pregnant women efficient treatments which enable them to fulfil their motherly role with fewer difficulties and worries.

Furthermore, childbirth would then take place at home. Very few women were fortunate enough to have children in hospitals. Nowadays this is a common event as most babies are born in hospitals. Obviously, mothers-to-be have better chances of having the care they need than in the past.

Society spends tremendous amounts of money for the purpose of saving and protecting human life. In universities scientists conduct research to discover ways of healing diseases which might lead man to his death. Society builds hospitals where doctors, nurses and the whole staff dedicate themselves to the care of the sick. And heaven knows to what extent medical science has advanced over the past few years, because Providence endowed man with the necessary intelligence to discover all the means made available to him in order to ensure his conservation.

Men themselves through their governments have always been enacting legislation for the protection of life. It is the function of the police officer, for instance, to watch over the property of man and to ensure the protection of his life.

It is also the duty of those who govern to enforce the laws so as to provide our old people with the financial assistance necessary for their maintenance. The same duty falls upon the civil servants responsible for the administration of welfare pensions, veterans' pensions, disabled persons' pensions and family allowances.

We spend millions for national defence, for the construction of shelters in case of nuclear warfare, therefore with the intention of protecting our lives. We have an instinct of self-preservation but I cannot see why this life which we love, which we cherish and which is beyond our control, should not also be ensured for other human beings.

By the will of God, women perform a task of an incomparable greatness in our human society and therefore humanity owes them a great deal. We all had a mother and although mine is no more, I thank her for maintaining my life in her womb in spite of the sacrifices and inconveniences she likely experienced.

I witnessed the birth of every one of my 12 children and I quickly understood the meaning of the great sigh of relief of the mother as she asked the doctor: "Is my baby alive?" and got a yes in reply.

It is at a doctor's request I am saying all these things, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that life is something of an exceptional value, that cannot be measured and that we must endeavour by all means to preserve it even in the case of those we cannot see with our own eyes but of whose existence we are aware. It is our responsibility to provide them with that opportunity, to enable them to replace us and live their own life on earth.

At a doctor's request, I even witnessed an extremely difficult childbirth and I heard that cry on the part of the desperate mother: "Doctor, save my child first!" That, I believe, unquestionably proves that life is a priceless gift, the value of which only a mother can really understand.

I know there is still nowadays a great number of married women who accept their responsibility as mothers and try by all possible means to preserve the life of their unborn child. Our society should do more in order to help pregnant mothers; thus induced abortions would be less numerous.

We are told that people still have abortions, though illegally. Maybe so. However, in a letter I received from "l'Alliance pour la vie", signed by the president and vice-president of that association, hence by two women, I found the following passage:

> Some hon. members feel, it seems, that the new law on abortion will legalize the act only for serious reasons such as saving the life of the mother. Although this is seldom necessary, it is generally recognized that abortions for such motives are already legal. The changes proposed by the omnibus bill open the door far wider than that.

What does the Medical Association have to say in this regard? This, and I quote:

> It is universally recognized, by all serious obstetricians, that the cases where a therapeutic abortion would really save the life of the mother have become extremely rare and are growing increasingly fewer with scientific progress. On the other hand, an abortion performed to improve the health or the well-being of the mother, or to prevent the birth of a possibly malformed infant, becomes an act of social euthanasia. If a malformed being can be killed in the womb of his mother, why can he not be killed outside of it?

Doctors are speaking here, Mr. Speaker.

I continue:

> However, an abortion performed when the life of the mother is endangered by the pregnancy can be looked upon, in that case, no longer as a measure of euthanasia but as a case of legitimate defence. Legitimate defence does not necessarily mean unjust aggression. However, for an act to be considered as legitimate defence there must be on the one hand some relation between the defensive measure and the aggression and, on the other hand, the offensive act must be the only possible means of defence.

Mr. Speaker, Bill No. C-150 has already been studied by other organizations. A while ago, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) told us that unfortunately there are not very many women in the house; if there were more of them, perhaps the men might think differently.

I was sent a petition signed by 5,000 people. Of course, I did not read all the names one after the other, but I did notice that the vast majority of those who had signed were women. They are petitioning against abortion and homosexuality. I shall deal with it at greater length later.

Bill No. C-150 proposes to legalize abortion for reasons related to protecting the health of the mother. It is left to the discretion of a small abortions committee to pass judgment on the matter. Indeed, the act will allow two doctors, who constitute the majority of a committee of three members, to authorize abortions for such reasons as they choose.

Now, to go back to the letter sent by the Alliance for Life:

In Colorado, California and elsewhere, measures similar to this one have multiplied the number of abortions.

Out of one hundred abortions performed in hospitals, 90 are performed on the ground of "mental health", a rather lax phrase that covers anything and everything. We have been searching the minutes of the parliamentary committee of health and welfare to find out the different meanings of the words "mental health".

If there are more abortions performed in hospitals, this does not mean that there are less criminal abortions. In Great Britain, however liberal the law, the death rate due to criminal abortions is higher than that in Canada.

—as compared to the population ratio.

What is then the reason behind those changes? Clarifying the present law? Actually, adding words impossible to define will not help, in this respect. Will the law answer a pressing medical need? Doctors are the first to admit that there is no such need, as proven by the decreasing rate of postpartum deaths.

Today, that rate is only three deaths for 10,000 live births, that is less than a tenth of the 1940 rate.

The requests for abortion made to physicians are almost invariably for social reasons. Could it be that the changes proposed in the act are a concession to the pressures exerted by a small group of doctors who want to free themselves from any legal limitation?

We are told that a committee of physicians will decide whether, for a particular woman, there really is a sufficient hazard to warrant abortion. But as reported on page 543 of the proceedings of the standing committee on health and welfare in 1968, Dr. Walters said, and I quote:

If one considers the differences in the incidence of suicide throughout the world, one finds that the hospitals with the largest number of abortions are those with the most lenient committees. In a hospital with a yearly turnout of 20,000 deliveries, only a few abortions will take place to save the life of the mother. In another hospital with 10,000 deliveries, the number of abortions will be 40 times greater annually and the difference does not lie in the incidence of those abortions, but in the fact that if a woman is sent to that hospital, it is notorious that she will be able to get an abortion.

If the bill is passed, I anticipate two possible effects. On the one hand, if hospital committees give a narrow interpretation to the words "of the life or health of the mother", very few abortions will be allowed and the problem of illegal abortions will thus remain unchanged. On the other hand, with a somewhat wider definition of health, it will always be possible to allege a reason for finding it dangerous to continue the pregnancy. A law which lends itself to various interpretations and fails to ensure greater justice is incomplete.

In order to alleviate that problem of illegal abortion, it is our responsability to get to the bottom of things. Besides, it is the only way to expose the real causes of this alarming situation which should not exist in a vast and rich country like Canada.

And one of those grounds is connected with housing, especially in our large urban centers. Thanks to our great planning experts in this field, less and less of housing units are being built nowadays that are large enough to accommodate a normal family. They include, as a rule, a small kitchen, two bedrooms, one bath room and a living room. How can it ever be possible for an ordinary couple to house 5 or 6 people under such conditions?

Farmers care more for birds than society for the family. As a matter of fact, birds, especially swallows, build usually their nests in our farm buildings. They are allowed to build them in sufficient numbers and we do not worry about how many offsprings there are in the nests.

As far as children are concerned, they are being more and more ignored by modern society. It is an unfortunate fact and our society has nothing to boast about. But facts must be faced squarely if one is the realize that the situation has reached alarming proportions and often places couples in untenable positions which may be, if we really get to the bottom of things, a cause of abortion.

Another is sometimes the lack of understanding of the immediate family of the pregnant woman and this applies to every level of society, as well as to unwed mothers.

Furthermore, an insufficient income often gives rise to insuperable financial problems, and that situation gets worse from year to year because of the tribute people must pay, through governments, to the dictatorship of money and credit and to the golden calf.

In our ultramodern society, unfortunately, women are exposed to risks of all kinds, and that is another reason why we will have to find some solution, to apply in the first years of schooling on account of the great concentration of pupils at the same place, to what has become a serious problem for young girls. They are not sufficiently protected, unfortunately; school authorities do not watch them closely enough and too often, a number of parents fail in their responsibility to give sexual education to their children.

Magazines, movies, advertisements of all kinds glorify sex. The inevitable results are accidental or unwanted pregnancies, and abortion is then contemplated.

Today, too many people complain about the way young people behave and protest. But do they wonder why? Do they seriously look for the cause? Are young people the ones who produce the vulgar movies that can be seen in theaters or on television, particularly on the national network, and that are such that they corrupt the very young children instead of helping the parents to educate them?

Are the pleasures of the flesh the only real values, since they get such publicity through all possible and impossible means? They are not. Adults are responsible for all the disorder, although attempts are made to blame the young people. Let us first assume our responsibilities as adults, in a mature way, and then we might complain about the way the young behave, if need be.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Faced with so much publicity and calls to all kinds of pleasures, our youth need an extraordinary and truly heroic upbringing to resist. If we were in their situation, we would perhaps be worse.

Having analyzed the few cases I brought forth, it is only natural to try and bring some remedial measures. This is what I would like to do in the few minutes still at my disposal.

Some time ago, the family planning centre made its position known on the legalization of abortion. The solutions suggested by the centre as a result of a study which lasted several months were meant to settle that complex problem as soon as possible. Here is how the members of the team from that centre explained their position, and I quote:

1. We would like to succeed in building up a responsible approach to fertility, so that all pregnancies could have a positive outcome.

2. We shall never consider abortion as a matter of choice, but as an unavoidable solution in some specific cases.

3. The suggestions made are meant above all to decrease the incidence and consequences of abortions that are now being practised.

The centre feels that the problem can only be solved through legislation; indeed, some parallel measures must be provided, such as the establishment of organizations to assist the mother and look after pregnant women. Whether or not she would like to have an abortion, any woman who cannot find elsewhere the necessary care facilities, should be in a position to ask for medical advice during her pregnancy. In addition, the necessary means should be available to alter the conditions which made pregnancy undesirable.

Modern society offers more and more means to release woman from past bondage and poverty. Such means should be made available to every mother during her pregnancy and after her delivery not only to enable her to send to school the child to whom she gave birth but also to provide her with the money needed to satisfy her needs and those of her children. That is where the basic guaranteed income should come in to ensure a decent living to all. It is urgent to take steps along that line before it is too late.

There is no reason for Canada to have a continuing decline in its birthrate. Let us wake up before it is too late. I wonder why the proliferation of human life has become something to be afraid of in a country as widespread as ours.

In His infinite wisdom, God has indeed provided our earth with sufficient resources of all kinds to satisfy the needs of each and everyone of us. We should further direct our efforts towards an equitable distribution of wealth in order to meet the requirements of our families and to secure their normal fulfillment.

Can anyone add inches to this height, even with any kind of treatment imaginable? No one. Why? Because this is beyond our capacities. Let our youth learn more about the greatness and the dignity of motherhood together with the respect and care pregnant women deserve. In so doing, we would realize that life is a precious gift to everybody, even to the unborn baby.

Mr. Speaker, those were the few comments and suggestions I wanted to make before the house concerning this particular subject of life and abortion.

I will deal very briefly with that part of the bill concerning homosexuality in order to offer my comments on the redress of such a deplorable situation.

This aspect of the bill upsets me deeply. It deals with the amendment intended to legalize homosexuality between consenting persons of 21 years of age or over. It is beyond my understanding that it has become necessary to amend the criminal code to permit homosexuality on the grounds that it is practised nevertheless.

To follow up such an argument, we should add that it could become necessary to legalize theft when it is committed by consenting persons over 21 on the grounds that it would be done anyway.

That is nonsense, I might be told. I agree and that is why I cannot accept a similar argument with regard to homosexuality. It is generally recognized that homosexuality is a disease, and sometimes a vice. I believe this is true to a very large degree. That is why I do not think that the appropriate cure is the legalization of such a practice or such a vice.

In order to explain myself, Mr. Speaker, I shall say that a few years ago a terrible disease, tuberculosis, was prevalent in our country, and perhaps more particularly so in the province of Quebec.

Each year, thousands of people died from the disease. What was the reaction? Did the government pass legislation to legalize the disease, on the grounds that it was prevalent? Of course not, but it launched an education campaign, asking the people to co-operate to control it. Indeed, thanks to all kinds of preventive and remedial measures, the ravages of tuberculosis have been reduced to the minimum, so that the number of people suffering from that disease is now very small.

That is the reason why I sincerely believe, Mr. Speaker, that the cure for homosexuality is not legalization but rather recourse to preventive measures such as a skilful and objective information campaign among the public, and to curative methods applying to the victims of that evil.

Effective steps should be taken in jails and penitentiaries so that young people will not be contaminated by professionals in depravity. Parents should also have an opportunity to secure information on that problem, and so to caution their children in time, even in their first years in school.

I have been given a petition signed, as I said earlier, by about 5,000 people, who, as it happens, are against Bill No. C-150. Instead of reading it, I shall ask the house to allow me to table those documents which might be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard.

Finally there is also the amendment aiming to make lotteries legal. In that respect, I believe that as long as our monetary system has not been reformed or adapted to meet the needs of the times, governments will experience more and more serious difficulties. This is why, I believe, the government is now thinking of legalizing lotteries. However, if we had a healthy monetary system, adapted to the needs of our times and making use of the Bank of Canada, such as the one Social Credit is proposing, and which I am told was referred to at the federal-provincial conference, the State would not have to resort to such a system of disguised taxation consisting of lotteries.

As to the amendment regarding driving while intoxicated, I am of the opinion that it is an improvement. Indeed, too many drivers are a real hazard on our roads. Every day, we can read in the paper about injuries and losses of life inflicted all too often by drivers who have been drinking. It is time to cure that plague. Our children are killed, families are broken, owing to the death of the father, of the mother, or of both of them. However refusal to submit to a breathalizer test should not, in my view, be considered as a criminal offence.

In short, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I would have liked a free vote on this bill.

I only have two more sentences, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired, unless it is the wish of the house that he be allowed to continue. I understand he has only one sentence. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for allowing me to continue my remarks.

The government says it was elected to administer and I do not disagree with that. But hon. members were elected to legislate and that is why I would decide in favour of a free vote, without thinking that the government might run the risk of being overthrown. We do not ask for a confidence vote but a free vote, whose only effect would be the passing or the rejection of a bill so important for the future of our country which will continue to develop if we have the wisdom and the courage to assume all our responsibilities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dumont: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) just asked the unanimous consent of the house to table documents and I would like to know whether he was given leave to do so.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In respect of the point of order I might mention that it is not the practice or custom of the house to proceed in this way. If there is unanimous consent there is no way, of course, that the Chair can resist, but I would point out that it is not a custom of the house to follow this procedure.

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been said about the implications of Bill C-150 from the point of view of conscience and morality. This concern is quite justified. Questions of conscience do arise and for some hon. members and many people in the country there has been a need to consider the relationship between criminal law and morality as well as the role of law in our society. We are a pluralistic society containing divergent groups, religious and secular, representing a wide variety of moral views and standards. There are some important moral values shared by all of us or by a very broad majority. We cannot in this house use our legislative authority to express the morality of one group and suppress the freedom of others to give expression to the things they believe are right.

On the other hand, we have the responsibility to prevent the development of our society to a state where one group's or individual's expression will threaten or undermine the values of the rest to the extent that we cannot co-exist in harmony. Our Criminal Code should be such that in addition to maintaining order it permits the safe co-existence and expression of a variety of moral standards. By this test our Criminal Code has served us badly or at least is ready for the revision which is now before the house. In this connection I refer particularly to the abortion legislation.

There are many people in this house and in the country whose moral views are accurately reflected by the law which prevents abortion in any circumstances. These individuals are being asked to support amendments which would permit limited voluntary abortion. In so doing this group is being asked not to surrender its own morality but to surrender its grip on our laws in order to accommodate the beliefs and practices of those of different views.

I respect the views of those who sanctify the new life which is created at conception and who would not under any circumstances condone the termination of such a life. This is a pure faith which has been re-examined and tested by them and has survived. But there are many Canadians whose beliefs and values are different and more complex. All hon. members have received a vast number of submissions on all sides of the question. Because the bill is being supported by many on the ground that the law should not reflect a particular morality, the supporters of the bill often are accused of lack of any morality. Some of the criticism is vicious and small-minded. We have been accused of being Nazi butchers for sanctioning the murder of innocents and of seeking through murder to avoid a serious confrontation with our social evils.

In answer to these charges I should like to elaborate on the morality of the many Canadians whose support for abortion is based on moral grounds. To me the existence or non-existence of human life from the moment of conception is a question of definition and semantics. Surely no moral weight inheres in the label. Whatever it is called its existence demands moral consideration. But personally I am unable to rest the moral question entirely on this fact, important as it is. New life is a moral fact, but there are a number of other factors which to many Canadians also have moral weight. There is old life, that is, the lives, health and welfare of the mother and the existing members of the family.

Second, there is the value representing the quality of life. What will the child's physical condition be? What will his mental condition be? How will he be received by his family? Is there a family to receive him? Many people in Canada go so far as to believe a child born in this country should have the right to be born, loved and wanted by his family. It is no answer to say that the fault for an inhospitable environment for a child lies with the society and not with the child. That fact is small consolation to its victims.

The abortion section does not go as far as would be required to accommodate the moral considerations I have described. Abortions are to be permitted only when there is danger to the health of the mother, but it permits to a greater extent the expression of the moral values to which I have referred. For this reason I support it. May I add that I would not favour absolutely unlimited abortion as was proposed, I believe, by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I believe this might encourage the act of abortion as a simple birth control technique. This would ignore entirely the value represented by the life which exists from conception.

Under the bill complex and expensive machinery is set up for the determination of cases in which abortion is to be permitted. There are no estimates of what it would cost an applicant to obtain permission for an abortion, but in California, for example, where there is a simple similar procedure, apart from the cost of the operation itself it costs between $600 and $800 to take advantage of the procedure to obtain permission. In order not to discriminate between the rich and poor I would hope that the terms of medicare might be enlarged to cover the cost of this examination. It will, of course, cover the cost of any abortion which may be authorized.

The other provision of the bill which touches upon morality and about which I should like to speak for a moment is the amendment dealing with gross indecency. There are few Canadians who would believe that laws exist governing voluntary private sexual conduct between a husband and wife or between unmarried couples of the opposite sex. Fewer still would believe that there have been convictions under this section as recently as 1966. Surely conduct, given this context, is a matter of taste and not of morality, and any element of gross indecency is entirely in the eye of the beholder.

I should like to turn briefly to the question of homosexuality. This is a form of sexual perversion which arouses a sense of horror in most normal people. But many Canadians feel an equal sense of horror about the present treatment of homosexuals in this country. For example, our government has been holding in prison under an indeterminate or life sentence, confirmed by the Supreme Court of Canada, one Everett George Klippert, who was a resident of the Northwest territories. Mr. Klippert's only crime or criminal conduct was the commission of homosexual acts in private by consent and without violence with male adults. For this he may spend the rest of his life in prison. Some Canadians believe that Mr. Klippert will spend eternity in hell. That may well be, but that is not the concern of this house.

We are here to define crimes and in connection with homosexual acts we should bear several important factors in mind: that sexual preference is not a matter of free choice but rather the result of complex factors relating to a person's background and upbringing, none of them a matter of choice to the individual; that in many cases redirection of a person's sexual preference is possible, and that in any event the problem does not threaten our social order and should be taken away from judges and jailers and given to doctors and psychologists. Jail is not an acceptable solution to the serious problem of homosexuality. For these reasons I support the proposed amendment or the introduction of section 149A.

I should like to observe in conclusion that Bill C-150, which is a very substantial document making hundreds of changes in the law, does not of itself complete the job of making our criminal law truly just. Congratulations are in order to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for the advance which this bill represents, but I hope that we may shortly have another bill, equally considered and perhaps equally weighty, providing many other things for humane treatment of drug addicts, a realistic law condemning the use of marijuana, further reductions in the use of penitentiary sentences as punishment, the abolishment of jailer's rights to torture persons by whipping and clear laws preventing cruelty to laboratory animals under any circumstances.

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that not often in the House of Commons does an opposition member rise to speak entirely in support of a government proposal. However, I can hardly avoid doing so today for reasons I hope to explain very quickly. I intend to refer to three of the government's proposals to amend the Criminal Code. I have in mind those relating to harassing telephone calls, cruelty to animals, and particularly the government's proposals regarding drinking and driving and the breathalyzer test. Inasmuch as each of these proposals has been advanced for several years by myself, hon. members will see that it is very difficult for me to do otherwise today than support the government which is now bringing them forward, and to urge all hon. members to do likewise.

Let me refer first to the proposal to create a new offence under the Criminal Code to cover harassing telephone calls. As was stated in the minister's explanatory notes of December 9 on this point, what is intended is that the ingredient of the offence shall be the making of, or causing to be made, repeated telephone calls to a person with the intent of harassment. Many persons have at one time or another been subject to this type of harassment, and it is hoped that the amendment will reduce, if not eradicate, this type of behaviour. On that same point, in my Bill C-95, to amend the Criminal Code—harassing telephone communications—I said in part in my explanatory notes:

The purpose of this bill is to amend section 315 of the Criminal Code so as to provide for the punishment of everyone who, with intent to harass or torment another person, repeatedly contacts such person by means of telephone communications.

I am certainly right behind the government's proposal to change the provisions of the Criminal Code in this regard.

The second issue to which I wish to refer briefly is the government's proposed amendment in respect of cruelty to animals. The minister's departmental explanatory notes of a few weeks ago contained the following:

The most significant change in the law relating to cruelty to animals is a provision that will enable the court that convicts a person of cruelty to animals to make an order prohibiting that person from keeping a domestic animal or bird during any period not exceeding two years from the date of the conviction.

The court will be entitled to make such an order if the person convicted has been previously convicted of cruelty to animals and it will be an offence for a person against whom such an order is made to keep an animal in contravention of the order. The order of prohibition will, of course, be in addition to any fine or imprisonment or both that may be awarded by the court for the offence of cruelty. An amendment of this nature has been recommended by the humane societies.

The humane society of Canada, the S.P.C.A., and the animal welfare group, along with others interested in this matter, have for years urged the government to take this step. If this amendment passes, as I hope it will, it will result in a great improvement in the condition of many animals which have been subjected to cruelty by their owners. I also support this amendment wholeheartedly because of my Bill C-69, of some years standing, to amend the Criminal Code, which has similar provisions regarding cruelty to animals.

The third point I wish to deal with in supporting the government's proposal to amend the Criminal Code at this time has reference to the subject of drinking and driving. The minister stated in his explanatory notes:

As the very thorough Grand Rapids study of the role of the drinking driver in traffic accidents showed, the probability of accident involvement increases rapidly at blood alcohol levels over 0.08 per cent—an accident involved driver in this class is almost twice as frequently involved in a fatal or serious accident as the non-drinking driver. It has therefore become apparent that the legislation must set a blood alcohol level which the hard facts of death and destruction demand. The present bill therefore reduces from .10 to 0.08 the level above which it will be an offence to drive. This level was recommended by the Canadian Bar Association and by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs—

This is the level established in the British Road Safety Act of 1967, following the recommendation of the British Medical Association. I think we are probably all familiar with the very substantial reduction in death and destruction which has followed the enactment of the British legislation and the enforcement of the breathalyzer test in that country. It is estimated that the legislation saved 1,000 lives in its first year of operation.

In this area the government has gone a very long way along the line I advocated in my private member's bill in 1967. I refer to Bill C-21, an act to amend the Criminal Code, which also spelled out .08 per cent alcohol in the bloodstream as being the level of impairment above which a person should not drive. Bill C-21 was sent to the justice and legal affairs committee for consideration, and many sessions of that committee were held at which we heard expert witnesses testify. We had 13 meetings extending from April to November of 1966, I believe. The result was a unanimous report by that committee recommending the very steps which the government is now proposing.

I hope to conclude my remarks prior to private members' hour so I will not quote at length from the report of the justice and legal affairs committee setting out their reasons for supporting the type of legislation the administration is now bringing forward. In brief, the report states:

It is the opinion of your committee, having heard these witnesses and examined documents in detail dealing with breath tests in various countries for impaired driving, that such tests are an accurate method of determining blood alcohol levels.

The committee's report was unanimous. It continues:

In respect to the civil rights questions involved, your committee was much in the position of the Canadian Bar Association who, in evidence presented to the committee on November 1, 1966, stated:

"What concerned us greatly was reconciling the civil liberties, and traditional rights of an accused with this legislation and we thought that by saying that this would be made compulsory ... speaking from the Criminal Code point of view ... we would not deprive the citizen of a fundamental right. Whether a man is asked to breathe into a policeman's face when he is arrested or into a machine, which will be more accurate than the policeman's impression, to determine whether he has alcohol in his system or not, we feel does not really create such a tremendous attempt to waive the rights of a citizen that it should not be adopted."

This was on the basis of including in the legislation many safeguards to protect civil liberties and the rights of the accused person.

We heard in the committee on justice and legal affairs argument that the degree of impairment varies to such an extent between individuals that no standard level of blood alcohol could fairly be set for all. We also heard argument that, just as there exists in law a set speed limit beyond which a driver may not drive, regardless of individual driving skills, so should there be a set alcohol level. The recommendations of the justice and legal affairs committee dovetail exactly with those now put forward by the government.

Before resuming my seat, Mr. Speaker, I would urge all hon. members to support that part of the proposed amendments to the Criminal Code so that in Canada, as in other countries, lives can be saved. We could save possibly 20 lives a week in Canada and millions of dollars in the destruction of property. What we need is freedom not for drinking drivers but from drinking drivers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin)—National Parks—Quebec—creation of parks in the province; the hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather)—Post Office Department—effect of increased rates on trade papers publication; the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert)—Housing—possibility of referring task force report to committee.

It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills.

PUBLIC BILLS

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO ELIMINATE FINE PRINT CLAUSES IN INSURANCE POLICIES, CONTRACTS OR DEEDS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey) moved that Bill C-19, to amend the Criminal Code (fine print clauses), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill is designed to protect the Canadian consumer in an area where he or she is pretty vulnerable. My hope is that the bill will not be talked out, although no doubt it will be, and that it will be referred for further study to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Let me say at the outset that I do not pretend that the bill is a perfect or complete answer to a problem which confronts many consumers, but I know there is a real problem in this area. I think the bill may provide raw material for further consideration in detail by the new Department of Consumer Affairs. I quote from the explanatory notes of the bill:

The object of this bill is to eliminate the practice whereby insurance companies, commercial corporations and individuals embody in insurance policies, contracts or deeds, fine print clauses excluding their liability under certain circumstances.

It is desirable that payment exclusions or exclusion of responsibility be listed plain and clear in the body of insurance policies, contracts and deeds.

Very briefly, the mechanics of the bill are to amend section 328 of the Criminal Code by inserting immediately after that section the following section:

328A. (1) Everyone who, with intent to mislead, prints or causes to print in small typographical character in the body of an insurance policy, contract, deed or other document issued by him or under his authority, clauses concerning payment exclusions or exclusion of responsibility is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars or to a term of imprisonment not exceeding three months or to both fine and imprisonment.

(2) In this section, the expression "small typographical character" means a typographical character that is substantially smaller than the one used in the body of the printed matter of the document.

When this bill was considered earlier—I think it was last year—some hon. members made suggestions for its improvement. I believe that several of the suggestions have very practical merit. As I say, I do not think the bill as it stands is all that good, but I think it is good enough to have suggestions made about it and to be referred for detailed study to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. One suggestion was made by the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford), who said in part:

I am in sympathy with the spirit of the bill which is in line with the various pieces of consumer legislation and the truth in lending type of legislation which we are considering.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Would the hon. member not think that a better approach would be that adopted by the Liberal party in B.C. and put into the form of legislation many years ago—namely that exclusion clauses be printed in large red type as opposed to black type, thereby making them stand out.

I must say that I agree with that suggestion.

Another good point, I thought, was made by the then hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska who said:

In order to cover the evil and protect the public it should not be necessary that the offender print (as the bill states) or cause to print the document in question. It would appear to be easier to prove that the company has issued a document than to show that it has printed it.

On reflection I think that this suggestion, also from the government side of the house, has a great deal of merit. In any event I would be very happy to see the subject matter of this bill, which is in line with the general consumer and corporate affairs legislation with which the government is increasingly more concerned, referred to the committee which is set up specifically to deal with these affairs. What I have brought forward and presented is by no means perfect. Perhaps it does not meet exactly what I seek to have met, but the problem is there and I would consider it to be logical for the house to send it on to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is customary and certainly appropriate in this instance to compliment the hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather) on introducing a bill of this nature. I know too that the hon. member introduced a bill, namely Bill C-11, on May 11, 1967, which was debated on second reading on October 27, 1967—and here the hon. member was not quite correct in his dates. I find that this bill is worded exactly as was the bill introduced by him previously. The hon. member said at that time:

If legislation of this type were adopted—not necessarily this particular bill—it would ease the troubles and exasperations of a great many Canadian consumers, people who should read but perhaps find difficulty in reading the fine print which has been plaguing so many ordinary buyers of goods and services.

Not having been successful the first time round, I would have thought the hon. member would change the wording of his present bill or the type of bill to give better effect to the kind of remedy which he is seeking on behalf of the Canadian public.

A further reading of the hon. member's comments at that time indicates that he used an exaggerated situation in order to illustrate the detrimental effect of the fine print which is not very often read by the general public. This being the second time the hon. member has introduced the bill, I think he would have been better advised to point out the kinds of things in the fine print which he is seeking to protect the people against and to come forward with specific examples where fraud, as he calls it, has been perpetrated. An exaggeration of a situation may be quite humorous but it is hardly effective in proving a point. Today, however, the hon. member has not provided us with even an isolated instance of the kind of situation against which he is endeavouring to protect the public. A series of court cases where the insured have suffered grievous loss should have been mentioned so that hon. members would be in a position to determine if in fact abuses have been caused by the misuse of fine print.

Certainly I am convinced that the government has a place in protecting the public in regard to most purchases of goods and services which people make, if not in fact all purchases of goods and services. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is but one good example of the manner in which the federal government has sought to cope with the responsiblity of protecting the purchasing public.

The hon. member has seen fit to ignore all the cogent arguments presented against his bill on the last occasion when it was clearly outlined that this was an area of provincial responsibility. Provincial governments from coast to coast have passed legislation to protect the purchaser of insurance policies from any fraud being perpetrated as a result of the small print sections of the policy. Careful licensing of agents, regulations outlining the manner in which an insurance policy must be drawn and definitive sections which give the correct meaning to words in policies are only a few of the ways in which provincial governments have given effect to legislation with sanctions.

As in most professions, there is an organization bent on stricter controls for its own representatives. I refer specifically to the Canadian Federation of Insurance Agents and Brokers Association. Although I am somewhat critical of the hon. member's approach to this situation, I think it should be clearly understood that it is only through the highlighting of this kind of legislation that the general public and the insurance companies and agents can be made aware of the fact that the government is on its toes and is watching for any misuse of power or opportunity by agents or companies. I think it is safe to say that insurance companies are now seeking daily to elevate the calibre of men selling their particular policies because in this way they build the kind of reputation which sells insurance. Speaking for myself, it has always been my approach when purchasing insurance, to find, first of all, an agent whom I can trust and then to deal almost exclusively with him in his particular field of insurance.

It is extremely easy to get behind the facade of newspaper, radio and television advertising and find the kind of policy and the kind of protection that one wishes. It has clearly come to the attention of the insurance companies that it is in their best interests and in the interests of successful enterprise that they find the kind of individual to sell their policies whom the general public trusts and respects for the information he is able to give them. I think it is safe to say that an examination of the agents in the million dollar sales club and those who have been honoured by their companies helps to give the general public a larger measure of confidence in the agents with whom they must deal. However, I agree with the hon. member that unfortunately some agents, as in any profession, are quite prepared to take advantage of the sometimes all too gullible public, and it is in this area that legislation can be most effective.

As indicated earlier, the hon. member's bill serves to bring to the attention of the agent who might attempt to perpetrate a fraud that the government is looking into this field. Legislation of the kind we have before us is also a general reminder to the public that they too should be careful when purchasing insurance, but they should also be aware of the fact that insurance companies and agents are carefully controlled in and by the provinces.

If the hon. member's bill became law I wonder whether it would provide a practical benefit to the policyholder. If a policyholder suffers under the present scheme of things as a result of a fraud perpetrated against him, he has a complete remedy in the civil courts. Speaking as a lawyer, I think it is safe to say that it is much easier to establish a civil fraud than one which results in a criminal conviction. Under the present legislation the policyholder is protected by provincial insurance acts, and in addition has a remedy in the civil courts. This is not to suggest that the provincial legislation, to use the hon. member's words, is the be all and end all on the subject, but surely this is where the responsibility lies and where the changes must be made.

Although I compliment the hon. member for the objectives he hopes to achieve through the introduction of this bill, I think it is incumbent upon me to say that I am opposed to this approach for the reasons I have outlined. As I have said, it is a matter solely within the competence of the provincial legislatures, and there are civil remedies available to the policyholder which provide the policyholder with a much more practical and beneficial solution to his problem. Possibly of lesser importance but certainly warranting consideration, the hon. member has failed to list specific examples of the frauds he indicates are being perpetrated against individual policyholders by insurance companies and their agents. I suggest there is adequate legislation and there are adequate remedies available to policyholders and that the proposed legislation in no way enhances the policyholder's position.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of the previous speaker, especially to the reasons for which the mover of the bill would like it to be referred to the committee on justice and legal affairs.

What surprises me more about my friends of the New Democratic party is that countless bills mostly inspired by the common law are put to the house. Indeed, the bill before us is another example of the difficulties my friends of the New Democratic party often have in distinguishing between what comes strictly under common law and what falls within the jurisdiction of the federal government. Of course, I realize that in Quebec we are used to making that distinction.

The spirit in which the bill is brought forward may be praiseworthy; however, I think that unfortunately the federal government is not competent to legislate in that field. I understand that the hon. member presented a similar bill in 1967; after being discussed for one hour, in October of the same year, it was killed for the reasons I have just mentioned.

I am afraid that the same thing will happen to the hon. member's new bill, and I wonder why he wants to come back with a bill such as this when primarily for jurisdictional reasons the department is not prepared to consider it.

Moreover, the hon. member should recognize that for several years, and more so this year, the Minister of Justice has been ready to refer for study to the justice and legal affairs committee all matters pertaining to a thorough modernization of each section of the Criminal Code. However, this is a matter which, in my opinion, does not come under the Criminal Code, or federal jurisdiction.

Of course, we would have liked to hear the hon. member give us some more specific examples to back up his contentions. In his bill, he refers more specifically to insurance contracts. Well, this matter comes under both commercial and civil law. This is good. As you know, every province has some insurance legislation and I can assure you that such contracts come under provincial legislation and not under any federal legislation.

In view of all this, Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member persists in introducing this kind of bill. Of course he has a right to, but I think that basically these bills simply give hon. members who wish to do so an opportunity to discuss all kinds of subjects, including the one just mentioned by the hon. member, during private members' hour.

Therefore, I am sorry that the subject matter of this bill cannot be refered to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which has now a tremendous backlog of work.

The hon. member is aware that soon the omnibus bill will be sent to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, as well as the bill on the Expropriation Act and the subject matter of some other bills introduced by members of the N.D.P. and the Liberal party. I mean the bill on wire-tapping. However, this committee is already overworked and I cannot see how it will be able to study the hon. member's bill.

I feel sorry not to be able to please the hon. member more and I am going to give someone else a chance as I must.

Mr. Paul-M. Gervais (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I am glad my turn has come to comment upon this bill, but unfortunately I cannot agree with it altogether.

As has been pointed out, there is some good in the legislation. However, what I realize, first, is that the hon. member who sponsors this bill would like to increase the volume of information. Instead of having clauses in small print as he says, we should have a bigger print, which would result in a more voluminous document and the alleged victim, who would have been deceived by reading that document too quickly, would be in the same position as if he had been deceived owing to the fact that, for instance, the insurance policy was in small print.

Besides, in the province of Quebec, any adult, that is to say anyone over 21, cannot claim injury. Voidance of a burdensome contract is allowed only in the case of persons under 21, provided the persons involved can prove that they have suffered injury.

In the present case, if a person over 21 accepts the conditions of a contract, I fail to see how, in all justice, the proposer of the contract can be accused of false representations or the equivalent of a criminal act.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Bill C-19 says and I quote:

—with intent to mislead—

Under those circumstances, I feel that the act already covers those cases. If a person is the victime of fraud as a result of pretence, or of a proposal or representations for obtaining credit or money under false pretences, because the wording is doubtful or misleading, one can always have recourse to the criminal code.

We are dealing here with a matter of common law and I consider that the text, as worded, will not protect adequately the person who would later on claim to be the victim of fraud as a result of high pressure salesmanship.

Indeed, this happens every day. Because people read a document or a proposal too rapidly, because they read a document after listening to a salesman, is no reason why they should later claim to have been swindled.

We are dealing here with specific situations where an adult could establish that he had no clue as to what he was doing and that he was conned into signing such a document or proposal.

In the present case, the text is written, the person is an adult and supposed to be able to read in this day and age. Under those circumstances, I do not feel that legislation intended to incriminate a salesman would be adequate to achieve the results intended by the hon. member.

Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I regret that I cannot be in favour of referring this bill to the Committee on justice and legal affairs however fair, on the whole, its purpose may be.

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to comment on bill C-19 which is now under consideration.

I wish first to congratulate the hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather) for wanting to amend the criminal code with regard to the fine print used in the body of insurance policies and the like.

If the bill were passed, it would render "guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a fine or to a term of imprisonment or to both fine and imprisonment everyone who, with intent to mislead, prints or causes to print in small typographical characters in the body of an insurance policy, contract, deed or other document...clauses concerning payment exclusions or exclusion of responsibility."

May I, first of all, suggest to the hon. member that we do not have, in this country, any evidence of people in the insurance field using fine print to escape the responsibilities involved in their various contracts.

There is another point I wish to bring to the attention of the hon. member. What he wishes to have included in the criminal code is already largely provided for under the Insurance Act of 1964.

At a time when discussions are going on at the federal-provincial conference, I think we should remember that the bill under consideration comes for the main part under provincial jurisdiction. Actually, the province is empowered, under the civil code, to grant adequate protection to anyone who might be misled as a result of clauses laid in fine print.

I am not quite sure, therefore, that it would be wise at this moment to include in the criminal code an amendment aimed at restricting or infringing upon provincial responsibilities. I would rather suggest requiring that all clauses be printed in the same type.

Moreover we could require certain important stipulations to be underlined in colour.

Those two solutions, Mr. Speaker, would certainly not minimize the importance of reading or having the person read, before signing the document, all paragraphs included in such contracts.

The fact remains, however, that many persons in good faith do not read all the clauses included in a contract, whether they are in fine or large print, in red or black ink. In fact, people sign without making sure that the clauses are really contentious.

Those suggestions could surely be included in a recommendation to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ron Basford). It could contain not only the contracts mentioned in the clause of the bill under consideration, but all contracts with fine print clauses, other than insurance companies' contracts and even the contracts from insurance companies.

I should like to refer especially here to the companies that send canvassing agents in private homes and which in many cases might be liable to a breach of trust on account of their financial unsoundness or even guilty in some cases of a failure to incorporate, by not giving their customers the permanent right to take legal action, precisely because certain clauses relieve those companies from their responsibilities.

Therefore I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that there is in the civil code a provision covering damages in case of fraud. That is why I believe it would be preferable to let provincial authorities keep on protecting the subscribers of those various documents, under existing legislation.

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois): Mr. Speaker, when reading the bill moved by the hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather), I fully realize the motives which might have led him to present such a measure, but I wonder whether that would really solve the problem.

I do not wish to deal with the legal aspect of Bill C-19. Some of my colleagues have said earlier that it would come under civil law. I do not dispute their opinion. However, I wonder whether, in an attempt to protect an insurance policy-holder or the signer of the contract, with an amendment to the Criminal Code dealing in particular with the fine print clauses, we would really achieve the purpose intended by the sponsor of this bill.

I am a general insurance broker and I do not think that any member could convince me that insurance policy-holders take even the trouble to read the big print in the policies. In fact, when a claim is to be filed, they get in touch with their insurance agent and tell him: "Am I covered?" At that time they trust the person who assumed a certain responsibility by suggesting a contract appropriate to their needs at the time of the purchase of the policy.

More and more, nowadays, we want to protect the citizen. I fully agree with that. We talk about protecting the consumer; a certain warranty is required with regard to products and prices. We also want to protect the potential borrower by making it a requirement for finance companies to indicate the rate of interest in the contract.

This bill deals with the fine print clauses.

Mr. Speaker, on looking over general insurance policies, it is noted that some clauses are in fine print. However, the fine print clauses included in a general insurance policy always deal with statutory conditions similar in all contracts and this I approve of.

I agree with the principle of the bill, but I do not accept the amendment contained in clause 328*a*) of the Criminal Code. In fact, if an amendment is adopted in order to prevent abuse, it implies that such an abuse exists, that it is customary for insurance companies, notaries and lawyers to insert fine print clauses in the wording of contracts with the intent of misleading. They would include such riders in insurance policies by way of explaining that whatever has been said in three pages does not apply in one situation or another. It is inferred that in so doing companies have fraudulous intents.

Mr. Speaker, Canadian insurance companies are operating under federal or provincial charters. They must comply with standards established by governments on the financial level and with regard to responsibility. Besides, such companies are members of associations. In the case of general insurance, they are members of the Canadian Underwriters Association or of the Conférence des compagnies indépendantes de la province de Québec. Some companies are not members of these associations, but they are subjected to a most important factor which is competition. At the present time, general insurance policies and especially life insurance policies are governed by this factor which leads to identical clauses that are verbatim in statutory conditions and correspond to one another.

I do agree that the government should pass legislation and that we should take time to protect the citizen. In my opinion, measures like this one are out-of-date, and all the more so since we have other priorities. I do not see what we could get, especially the citizens we want to protect, by referring that small piece of legislation to a committee which has to deal with much more important matters.

I would have been more disposed to support the hon. member for Surrey if he had proposed, in a notice of motion, that the federal government ask the Superintendent of Insurance to inquire into the fixing of insurance rates which are identical and become more and more comparative. That would be good if it came from a competition which would tend to lower the rates of general insurance. I cannot speak of life-insurance, as I am not a specialist. Those rates go on increasing and they are not competitive, as they are always increased by common consent.

I would agree with the hon. member if, at a given time, competition were to force an insurance company to reduce its rates, and that the next year, another would like to get the same clients even if rates were similar.

But that is not exactly what takes place today. Personally, I wonder especially when I look at the increases in automobile insurance rates and the decisions taken by the companies, without consulting their agents, and even worse, without consulting national and provincial associations of underwriters which secure the services of experts and would like insurance companies to consult them more.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to stray any farther from the subject of the bill, but I wanted nevertheless to raise the matter of insurance rates, because maybe one day, even as a representative of an insurance company, I shall dare question the method used by insurance companies to set their rates.

Coming back to Bill C-19, I mentioned a moment ago that policy holders do not bother to read the clauses in their policy. As far as I am concerned, I do not believe that the bill before us gives any protection to policy holders precisely because, since they do not read their policies, do not examine them at one time or another, they do not try to find out the content of the clauses in fine or large print. The only thing in which they are interested is to know the amount of protection they are getting.

Being a specialist in general insurance, I do not meet any difficulties whatsoever with fire, public liability or automobile insurance policies. However, the same as anybody else, I am at a loss to find out what kind of a life-insurance policy is covering my family, because we have to consult the tables and it is almost impossible to figure out exactly what would be left to our beneficiaries.

I would suggest to insurance companies—and this is a mere suggestion with no direct relation to the bill—to append a one-page summary of the policy, in order to set forth in plain terms for their clients what is meant exactly by the wording of the contract.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have covered all the aspects I wanted to talk about regarding the proposed legislation, and I try in vain to find a good reason to support the request for reference to the committee. As I find none, I cannot help but oppose it and I hope the house will vote against the hon. member's motion.

[English]

Mr. Mather: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question? Having in mind the fact that all hon. members who have spoken so far have been from the government side and all have expressed in some degree sympathy with the general aim of the bill, I would suggest the subject matter be referred to an appropriate committee. Would he not agree this is a logical step to take? There is still another 20 minutes during which members could speak, but the government benches are getting a little slim in regard to speakers.

Mr. Laniel: Was that question addressed to me? I can speak another five minutes if you wish. I have sympathy with your intention but I disagree with the request to adopt this bill because I do not think it will solve any problem. If a clause were inserted in the bill which would force policyholders in Canada to read their policies, possibly this would make sense. But they do not read their policies.

I know this. Every time there is a fire or a car accident, or even take the case of a man who pushes his wife off the porch, people will phone the insurance agent and ask, "Am I protected or not"? When the reply is, "You are not protected," it is simple to understand the reaction. Usually it is, "You told me I was because you told me I was protected for everything." Then, the insurance agent has to explain that an insurance policy does not give unlimited protection. Does the hon. member want me to explain this with respect to a contract covering a fire insurance policy?

Mr. Mather: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like the hon. member to answer my question. Since he agrees with the principle of the bill but quarrels with the details, does he not think it appropriate that we refer it to a standing committee? I am sure I am helping out the government side by interjecting these questions.

Mr. Laniel: I will give you an example. You have a fire insurance policy that gives you some supplementary protection in the—

Mr. Mather: You are not answering my question.

Mr. Laniel: No, but I have to give the grounds for my argument. I think I shall give my explanation in French, which might be easier.

[Translation]

When one buys a fire insurance policy, in addition to coverage against fire, a certain protection is provided against tornadoes, hail, lightning, explosions, water leaks. The contract shows in an additional clause that this protection against water leaks is restricted. In fact, it only applies to water leaks caused by a defect in the plumbing or heating systems or when they occur at ground level, when the building is occupied. In addition, a policy provides protection, not in the fine print but in the main clause. It deals afterwards with restrictions. As for the automobile insurance policies which include a clause granting an overall protection, when giving explanations to the holder, the company has to state: You are covered in all kinds of circumstances, except these.

Then, it is said that an all-in policy excludes some things that are covered by other clauses of the contract. Besides, in the contract, statutory conditions prevail. Indeed, it is written that impaired driving causes the contract to be cancelled. All kinds of similar clauses are to be found in every contract.

In reply to the question directed to me earlier, I must simply say that fine print clauses are found in every contract, and as insurance policy holders do not even bother to read the first clauses of such contracts they will never read the small ones and they will never try to understand them.

All contracts—whether it be life insurance contracts, fire insurance contracts, responsibility insurance contracts or legal contracts—are drafted by lawyers and this confuses everybody because no ordinary citizen can understand them.

Then why should these clauses be in large print if nobody understands them. They are drafted by lawyers in such complicated terms that the ordinary citizen finds it difficult to know exactly what they mean.

For my part, I consider that the bill before the house achieves no practical end. The standing orders have been changed in order to make our parliamentary institution more effective. Referring such a bill to the committee, having the committee waste time on it—because personally I do not believe the bill is useful to anyone—will not improve the debates in the house nor, above all, make hon. members more efficient.

[English]

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, on several occasions in the past I have found myself in the position in which some members on the government now find themselves, that is, talking a bill to death. I should say now that I do not rise for that purpose and I shall take up only a few minutes time.

As long as I can recall, two of the warnings that people have been given at the time of their initiation into business have been, "Don't take any wooden nickels," and "Be sure you read the fine print." I do not think that any legislation we would pass would change this situation. In other words, people have always known that insurance policies have clauses written into them in very fine print and that if they do not choose to read them they do so at their own risk.

[Mr. Laniel.]

Without quibbling, I do not think that the wording of the hon. member's bill goes far enough. I think that the words "substantially smaller" are not strong enough. Everybody understands that the main clauses of a contract are written in large print, particularly the clauses that look good, and the other clauses are written in substantially smaller print. For that reason, I do not think the wording in the bill goes far enough.

However, Mr. Speaker, the bill might be worth considering in a committee, particularly if one could substitute words prohibiting print so small that it could not be read. There are some contracts written that way and I think the public should be protected from them. To that extent, I agree with the purpose of the bill.

From a practical viewpoint, I do not think that the bill would make one iota of change with respect to protection for the public. But for the purpose of drawing the attention of the public to the fact that they must read the fine print in contracts, and for the purpose of drawing the attention of the public to instances where people have been misled because they did not read the fine print, or could not read it, I suggest that the bill should be referred to a committee. It might be a lesson in public education. Witnesses might be brought forward who could forcefully draw attention to the fact that people must read the fine print in contracts. On balance, I support the hon. member's suggestion that the bill be sent to a committee for study, but only to the limited extent that I think it might have some educational value for the public generally.

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, it is quite apparent that the objective of this bill is meritorious. There is no doubt that honesty, fair disclosure and complete independence of communication from one person to another are some of the goals of a just and fair society. However, section 328A (1) states:

> Everyone who, with intent to mislead, prints or causes to print—

I question the fact that the words "with intent to mislead" are not qualified in any way. It does not say, for instance, that if there is a difference in the size of the print or that if there is a different sized print that this is prima facie evidence of an intent to mislead. What I am trying to get at is no standard is set up to establish the intent to mislead. Therefore, the Crown would have a virtually impossible task, I submit, in proving the mens rea, because the statute itself sets up a supposed mens rea or guilty mind. The Crown has the burden of proving not only that the print is in a different size but also has the burden of proving that the person who caused the printing to be done or who did the printing had a guilty mind.

I suggest that under this bill an accused would only have to say he had no intention to mislead and was clearly unaware of any possibility of that result. If he did that, every single case could be dismissed unless the Crown were able to show the accused had an evil intent. I submit it is impossible for anyone to read inside the person's mind if he says he did not intend the act.

Mr. Aiken: Read the fine print.

Mr. Gibson: That is my point. If the section said that having fine print is prima facie evidence of intent to deceive, then there would be an onus on the accused to explain. If this onus were included, the situation would be different.

Under these circumstances, however, I submit the statute leaves hanging in the air the mental element in the crime. Dealing with the topic on a broader basis, I submit this is basically insurance law. It is broad in scope. If the wording is "contract, deed or other document issued by him" it could include anything. It could be a parking ticket, a receipt from a theatre, or anything.

An hon. Member: Hansard.

Mr. Gibson: Or even Hansard. It is far too all embracing to be embodied in the criminal law of this country. I submit that in the civil aspect fraud and misrepresentation are adequately dealt with as a provincial right under the laws of the provinces. Fraud or intentional misrepresentation is fertile ground for provincial legislation as a basis for civil actions. I believe this bill might well lead to a lot of witch hunting and a good deal of costly and useless litigation could be brought before magistrates who have more important things to do than hear cases of the type referred to in this particular section.

Certainly, the subject matter has merit. I submit the member should recommend it to his provincial legislature so that it might get on with the job. The Ontario legislature has brought in a number of laws in this field. So, in bringing forward the bill I believe the hon. member has meritorious motives and should be commended for thinking along these lines.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gibson: However, there are many ways in which this bill could be circumvented. For instance, if the entire contract were printed in tiny print throughout it might achieve the goal set by one who intends to mislead. In respect of a land deed, we would be dealing with the province. In the province there is a registry office, a land office and legislation dealing with deeds. Therefore, I believe this would be more effectively dealt with by the provinces. In my province of Ontario, the laws in respect of land, deeds and instruments are specialized and are examined frequently. The hon. Mr. McRuer in dealing with the matter of civil liberties I believe reviewed this topic with some distinction. I am not intending to pat my own province of Ontario on the back. I am sure the province of Nova Scotia and all the other provinces have adequately dealt with this matter.

If we should make a universal provision such as this dealing with contracts per se we would run into a good many difficulties from one region to another which we did not anticipate. Problems would arise which had not been foreseen and parliament would regret having made such a move. Therefore, I believe the true intent and spirit in this matter lies within the purview and responsibility of the provincial legislatures.

In dealing with the penalty clause, I submit the penalty is not appropriate. The offence is stated to be an indictable offence. However, the punishment suggested is less than it is in the case of a summary conviction offence as found in section 694 of the Criminal Code.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's contribution is most interesting. Does the house wish to hear the hon. member beyond six o'clock?

Mr. Laniel: En français.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that there is not unanimous consent, it being six o'clock I now leave the Chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL CODE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) for the second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of Bill C-150, to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff Act and the National Defence Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to have again the opportunity of addressing the hon. members who represent the people of our country in order to deal with Bill C-150, one of the more important than the others, name-view of the fact that it involves judicial reforms of major importance.

Since I feel that the hon. members who spoke before me have dealt adequately with the reforms proposed in this bill, I shall therefore deal at some length in my remarks with four parts of the bill which seem to me more important than the others, namely: the new form which this government wants to give the legislation on lotteries, the reform with regard to the use of firing arms, the breathalizer test and finally abortion. I shall deal mainly with this last subject which I consider most important since it involves a major human right, the right to live.

To begin with, I do not object to the setting up of lotteries, either at the federal, provincial or individual level and I approve the changes and limitations with regard to the ceiling or the limit, as well as the consequential changes with regard to the value of prizes. In fact, I believe that it could become an economical means for gathering funds for the benefit of various organizations, while this means would recognize the freedom of anyone to contribute, which is not the case with compulsory taxes.

However, I should like to recommend to this government a closer control on the issuance of licences in order to avoid any abuse on the part of the holders. I think that the issuance of licences could lead to too much freedom. In fact, if these licences issued by the Attorneys general of the provinces were not subject to close scrutiny these lotteries could become a sort of public robbery organized under false pretences, because the winners could be designated in advance.

Therefore, I think this is makeshift legislation until the government has the courage to shoulder its responsibilities as a legislator and compels the Bank of Canada to grant the necessary credit to the people in order to provide for the requirements of the Canadians.

On the matter of reforms governing the use of firearms and the granting of permits, I think this measure has been awaited for a long time. It is a happy solution that the superior court of criminal jurisdiction has, at the request of the Attorney General, been empowered to issue warrants whereby it is authorized to confiscate any firearm, offensive weapon, explosive or ammunition. Furthermore, the maximum penalty of two years imprisonment for neglectful use of hunting weapons or others, seems important and necessary to me for minimum public security. Finally, I fully approve adding other items to the list of prohibited weapons as well as the restricted authorization of certain weapons in the proposed amendment.

I am in full agreement with the proposed measures and amendments concerning the breathalizer tests. In fact, I believe that all automobile drivers should be compelled to undergo this test on request, or be charged with a legal offence. It has been a long expressed hope that such an offence be considered when the tolerable quantity of alcohol in the blood has been exceeded, considering the number of accidents that have been caused by the excessive use of alcohol.

On the subject of Bill C-150, Mr. Speaker, I think it is necessary for us to ponder our views on the matter of abortion as each one of us must be free to think about it and vote according to his conscience.

May I be allowed to remind the hon. members of the summary of section 237 and the amendment proposed to it—amendment introduced on December 19, 1968—so as to state more clearly the essential parts of the problem for the benefit of the Canadian people for I believe that the Canadian people we represent here should be kept well informed.

According to this bill, a qualified medical practitioner who would procure the miscarriage of a female person and a female person who would permit a qualified medical practitioner, in an accredited hospital, to procure her own miscarriage, would not in the circumstances be affected by the amendment. They would therefore not be guilty of the indictable offences as decreed in section 237 of the Criminal Code. If before the use of those means, the therapeutic abortion committee for that accredited hospital where the abortion has taken place, has by certificate in writing stated that in its opinion the continuation of the pregnancy would or would be likely to endanger the mother's life or health, the medical practitioners will be protected. Such an amendment thus limits the scope of certain offences: Everyone who, with intent to procure the miscarriage of a female person, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for life and every female person who, being pregnant, uses any means with intent to procure her own miscarriage is also guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years.

Mr. Speaker, I am dead set against any present or future widening of those ideas, because of the high regard our nation should have for such an opinion.

Medical officers in the province of Quebec are standing pat. We should trust serious and conscientious doctors, specialists in that field; their opinion should carry weight, since they have to perform abortions and the problem concerns them more than anybody else. On January 22 last, the Association of medical officers of the hospitals in the province of Quebec sent me the following message:

Recently, following the introduction of the government bill on abortion, this Association consulted all its members either by letter or during meetings held to discuss the bill.

The Quebec hospital doctors believe that any abortion is a homicide, since the foetus is a human being. According to modern medical science, the foetus is a living human being that has the right to live as well as all other human beings.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Even before the courts, the foetus is already considered as a full-fledged human being since he is entitled to inherit and since the State still feels justified in considering the non-therapeutical abortion as a criminal offence liable to life imprisonment.

Any responsible obstetrician will readily admit that the cases where therapeutical abortion would really save the life of the mother have become extremely rare and tend to decrease with the progress of science.

On the other hand, abortion practised for the sake of improving the health or well-being of the mother or preventing the possible birth of a deformed being tends to become a measure of social euthanasia. If a deformed being can be killed while still in his mother's womb why could not this be done when he is out of the womb?

However, abortion practised when the life of the mother is endangered by pregnancy may be considered as a case of self-defence rather than as an act of euthanasia. Legitimate defence does not necessarily mean unfair aggression. To consider the matter in terms of legitimate defence, however, would require, on the one hand, some balance between of act of defence and the act of aggression and, on the other hand, the aggressive act should be the only means of defence. As a matter of fact, according to any doctor, specific medical indications requiring the foetus to be killed in order to save the mother's life are very seldom found. Since the case is so infrequent, one may well wonder if there is anything to justify a law allowing such a thing.

Of all cases of murder, abortion seems to be the one where the state should act with the utmost vigor. Indeed, its duty is to see that the rights of every citizen are respected. Of course, the more the frustrated citizen appears unable to protect his own life and rights, the more the state should be concerned. If the law is really intended to protect the weak, who more than the child in his mother's womb can claim the right to be protected by the state? This protection should be in proportion to his weakness. The similitude with the recent abolition of the death penalty is something that we should have in mind when we think of this bill.

Wherever it is accepted, therapeutic abortion is practised, according to official statistics, much more for very contentious psychiatric reasons—and with equally contentious results—than to save the mother's life.

In fact, the proposed legislation on abortion forces us to ask ourselves whether we are willing to accept certain forms of murder in our society.

Because of the abuses this measure may lead to, the Quebec Hospital Medical Board Association opposes the legalizing of therapeutic abortion in those cases which are solely motivated by the health or the well-being of the mother. In addition, the Association opposes formally the present government bill C-195 on abortion, as proposed, for the following reasons:

Although we feel that the doctors who authorized the few therapeutic abortions which have taken place are certainly not criminals, and the doctors agreed unanimously on this, we believe that the proposed measure will multiply illicit abortions. By legalizing therapeutic abortions in those cases where pregnancy may endanger the life or the health of the mother, the government gives the impression that any personal motivation can procure abortion. Requests for abortions will therefore increase. However, according to medical standards, the therapeutic abortion committees will have to refuse the majority of requests as unjustified, which will lead the patients to find other means to achieve their end. According to the current Canadian concensus, there is real danger in associating what is legal with what is morally acceptable.

Psychiatric indications motivating abortions are refused by the majority of doctors and psychiatrists, although a few psychiatrists find limited indications in them. An abortion often has bad effects on a woman and induces in her feelings of guilt and hostility. One must wonder whether by alleviating one problem we are not creating another.

After an inquiry, we can claim that the number of therapeutic abortions, in the hospitals of the province, is at this time very low and nil in most cases. Owing to the very restricted number of medical instructions, the enactment of this bill would but increase to a very small extent the number of therapeutic abortions, but only applications for abortion with their dilemma will be more numerous.

The medical abortion committees mentioned in the bill should exist only in hospitals where there is a sufficient number of doctors and consultants in each specialty so that the decision might result from a fair assessment free of any subjectivity.

During our inquiry, we could see that most of the medical boards and boards of directors of the hospitals of the province of Quebec officially and formally objected to the establishment of these medical abortion committees, in their own hospitals. Because of the professional ethics and the constant orientation of their profession, hospital doctors are very reluctant to be on such committees and moreover they will not make any medical abortion of their own.

It is to be noted that this bill does not take into account the religious and moral beliefs of a multitude of hospital doctors who are afraid to be subjected to legal proceedings for not performing what they consider as a murder not in keeping with their professional ethics. Do not doctors unceasingly work to protect their patients against death?

In view of these considerations, the Quebec Hospital Medical Board Association is still of the opinion that the federal government tried to deal with this problem by means of a quick bill which seems to solve everything but which in fact makes more serious the problem of illegal abortion.

The Association is of the opinion that this problem should be considered from a medical point of view and finds it necessary to take up the question of abortion only after scientific studies in depth of the whole question of abortion, sterilization and contraception, before any other proposal is introduced by the government.

In my opinion, only a Royal Commission could study this question adequately.

That is the concern and the anguish expressed by the Quebec medical profession about this bill for legalization of therapeutic abortion.

Mr. Speaker, I also speak on behalf of the Canadian bishops about this amendment brought forward by this government. According to the views expressed by the Canadian bishops, the liberalization of legal abortion, far from decreasing illegal abortions, would only increase their numbers. The Bishops base their contentions on the experience of several countries which have already enacted legislation such as the proposed bill. I quote:

With legislation which depreciates, by the very exemptions it allows, the right to life of the foetus, one would promote the development of loose morals which fail to consider abortion as a real crime.

Moreover, they remind us that the legislator should not underestimate the educational value of the law, because it is an obvious fact that men are prone to consider as morally right that which is permitted by law.

• (8:20 p.m.)

The Catholic bishops appeal to the conscience of all, and especially of doctors, lawyers, politicians and all those who are in public life and mold public opinion, to study that question carefully.

Taking my stand on the serious considerations of the Quebec doctors and the Canadien bishops, I request that be withdrawn from the omnibus bill that part of the bill aiming at amending section 237 of the Criminal Code on therapeutic abortion. The problem of abortion is too big with consequences, in my opinion, to appear with homesexuality, lotteries, driving while intoxicated and a few other minor offences within an omnibus bill which might rouse little opposition in parliament. The bill on abortion should get from parliament the same treatment given major problems like finance, education, etc., and he referred solemnly to a royal commission.

Mr. Speaker, I join with the Canadian bishops to propose a programme to which the state must devote its energies, in order to promote respect for human life at every stage of its development, through education and legislation which itself must reflect that respect, and not by presenting a bill like the one we are discussing, a too simple solution to a very serious and very complex problem.

That programme would include a serious study of the frequency of clandestine abortions and on the means to prevent them. Moreover, it would include also active research and the implementation of a programme of assistance to married or unmarried mothers exposed to difficulties because of our present economic and social system.

I appeal again to your understanding and your sense of values, the most important of which is certainly the protection of human life. During the debates on the abolition of capital punishment, you will remember that Canada had persisted in respecting liberty, having regard to life and death, in order to protect those fundamental human rights.

The two reasons for exemption from the application of the law punishing abortion, namely the risk of death for the mother and the threat to her health, could have in legislation, disastrous consequences, I think, for the whole Canadian nation, if they are given basically the same value or the same importance.

In my opinion, the first motive, the danger of death for the mother, is certainly the most serious and the most justifiable. Therefore, the Canadian episcopate does not make it a moral duty for the catholic citizen and legislator to fight against any extension of the legislation in that sense for the reason that scientific progress in the medical world reduces this practice to extremely rare cases.

But with regard to abortion for reasons of physical and mental health, the Canadian episcopate maintains its strictness and condemns any attempt for its legalization. An abortion committee would have the exclusive right to judge the matter; such a legislation would result in the worse abuses and would greatly jeopardize the common good. In fact, the law would allow two doctors, the number which constitutes the majority within a committee of three members, to authorize abortions for the reasons of their choice.

We would be very credulous to believe that we can pass an act which would enable abortion to come out in the open, without increasing the number of foetal deaths. During a CTV program on December 27 last, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) confirmed our apprehension that abortion committees would make the law themselves.

He asserted that the word "health" would not be interpreted by courts of justice, but by the various therapeutic abortion committees. In other words, the decision of those committees would, in his opinion, override the law.

On February 7, 1968, Doctor Henry Fitzgibbon, of Penticton, in British Columbia, wrote to the health and welfare committee as follows:

> As has been said many times at the hearing of the above-mentioned case, there is no valid medical reason for terminating pregnancy.
> The requests for abortion made to doctors are invariably based on social grounds.

One can also find scientific facts in a book entitled: "The Canadian Mother and Her Child", published by the government of Canada. On page 24, it is said:

> When one of the spermatozoa and the ovule meet and unite, a new life begins.

This assertion is supported by Dr. Edward L. Lessel, Director of the Department of Biology at the University of San Francisco. I am quoting:

> Scientific findings prove unequivocally that life begins at the time of conception.

He adds:

> The rapid rate of development . . . shows us human life in its most intense stage of activity.

Therefore, it is clear that it is not only a potential life, as some would like to believe, but a real life which is recognized by the criminal code in section 209 dealing with the death of an unborn child.

To legalize therapeutic abortion on grounds of physical or mental health would alter the moral standards of an entire nation. The lack of public morality in this connection can lead a country to its downfall and its death.

Should Canada become as Poland, where 30,000 Swedish women go each year to get an abortion? A member of a parliamantary committee humourously said once to the delegates of the Canadian Medical Association, and I quote:

> Canada had never seen such a large group of well-meaning criminal abortionists.

Could he truly repeat that tomorrow? I hope not.

The Universal Declaration on Human Rights passed by the General Assembly of the United Nations states that:

> Each human being has an inherent right to life.

And the Declaration on the rights of the child asserts that children are entitled to some protection before and after birth. The legalization of abortion obtained for those various reasons would be as if Canada was repudiating the principles which it approved at the General Assembly.

Personally, I have proven, even if I am young, that I have confidence in life and in Canada, because I have ten children.

We do not believe, my wife and I, that having ten children occasions tremendous work or that it is a heavy task. We have confidence in the present gouvernment; we have confidence in the future and we find it is better to say that we have done something for the nation than that we should have done something.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is necessary to be positive and to do what we preach.

In concluding my remarks, I ask again that that part of the proposed legislation on abortion be taken out of the omnibus bill and referred to a Royal Commission of investigation. We would then act as responsible citizens faced with a problem big with consequences for the future generations. I base this request on the serious considerations of doctors of the province of Quebec and those of the Canadian bishops. I leave for the consideration of hon. members everything that has been set forth.

• (8:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I know what I want to say on this bill. Whether I can say it to the understanding of hon. members or not is another question.

I understand, sir, that according to the new rules we do not debate the principle of the bill on second reading; the question before the house is, rather, whether or not the bill should be referred to the appropriate committee for further study. I have a few remarks to make on Bill C-150 and I hope I can keep them in this context. First, I want it to be remembered that we on this side of the house did try to introduce an amendment to the effect that the committee be instructed to bring in separate reports on several clauses of this bill. I do not recall whether this amendment was defeated or ruled out of order; in any case, it does not matter much.

I would have refrained from making any speech on second reading had that amendment gone through. As matters presently stand, one member, at least, has referred to second reading as "taking the bill on a little trip". Mr. Speaker, this bill will not go on a little trip with the help of my vote. I shall vote against it on second reading, third reading and any subsequent readings. I take this position because I see no reason why portions of this bill should not be considered separately, and members on the other side have produced no arguments to induce me to change that view.

I would remind hon. members that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), when introducing this legislation, virtually disclaimed any responsibility for the measure. Indeed, he was almost apologetic when he presented the bill to the house. He told us specifically that it was the Prime Minister's bill, and I do not doubt he repeated that three or four times—he repeated everything else he said three or four times. So, this bill is not going to take any little trip with the support of my vote, and I take this stand because along with thousands of other Canadians I want to see the measure split up.

[Mr. Beaudoin.]

I would remind hon. members that I do not take up their time by speaking merely for the sake of speaking. I am very careful about that. I speak only on matters I feel strongly about. Included in Bill C-150 are provisions in respect of several matters which touch our consciences. I may not be as able to express what I mean as are some of our legal friends; what I am trying to say is that these questions affect something deep down inside of us. I do not speak as a Catholic, or as a Protestant, or as a Liberal, or as a Tory, or as a lawyer, or as a doctor or anything else. Nothing like that. I speak as an ordinary human being who happens to be a Member of Parliament. We on this side have a free vote on this measure—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peddle: It has been decided that we on this side can vote absolutely freely according to our consciences. But there are 264 representatives of Canada in this house and when a majority of them are not permitted to vote freely on certain matters which affect their consciences, matters which affect convictions held deep in their own being, whether they are Catholics or Protestants, when there is a rule of government which forces them to vote as a block without regard to conscience or anything else, I think that is an insult to the Canadian people and to this parliament which represents them.

We should bear in mind that in a vast country like Canada there are all kinds of people—Catholics, Protestants, Jews and adherents of many other beliefs. For the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to seek to impose his particular belief upon members of this house when matters of conscience are concerned is, in my view, as I say, an insult to parliament, an insult to Canada, and something we cannot tolerate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peddle: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) made a very pragmatic speech this afternoon. He did not say anything about abortion. He told us he wanted the provision relating to lotteries removed. How unfeeling can one be, Mr. Speaker? I am not speaking now, either against the motion or in favour of the motion. I am simply saying that if the Prime Minister cannot come to this house recognizing that on these matters each member has the right to vote according to his conscience, there is something gravely amiss.

Refusal to divide this bill is like saying: you can have ice cream only if you eat your spinach. I suggest that 75 per cent of this bill is ice cream and the other 25 per cent is spinach. But we are grown up people, or at least I hope we are. We have been elected to come here and represent the people of Canada and I trust we are sufficiently grown up to be allowed to vote on these matters without compulsion, perhaps according to the way in which we have been brought up in the world. I am not saying my view is not affected by the fact that I am a Catholic. I do not intend to say that. But I do say the house should be allowed to vote on this matter free from the ties of party discipline or anything else.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that last year an amendment to abolish capital punishment came up for consideration. At that time the leader of the Liberal party in his wisdom allowed a free vote.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, but they all voted for it.

Mr. Peddle: I don't care. The fact remains it was a free vote. And in this particular instance we are also dealing with human life, and I suggest the issue should similarly be determined on the basis of a free vote. I said at the outset that I did not intend to become emotional, and I do not. However, I feel that this bill is sufficient reason for any member of the house to become emotional. After all, are we considered to be idiots? The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) does not represent the conscience of the country; it is the 264 members who are elected to this place to represent the country who represent the conscience of this country. It is their vote that should decide. The Prime Minister should not try to impose his personal opinion on the people of Canada, because we in the opposition represent quite a number of the people of Canada.

• (8:40 p.m.)

I would call the attention of the house to the remarks made by the Prime Minister only yesterday at the opening of the constitutional conference. He said that the job of the new Fathers of Confederation was to change and to improve Canada; that over the years they have worked with patience, tolerance and foresight. Canada, said the Prime Minister, is the product of understanding, not conflict.

I should like to ask whether the type of legislation that is now before this parliament is consistent with the views of a man who does not want conflict. Is it consistent with his view that there is a problem of national unity? In my opinion, from what I have seen since coming to this house, although some members of the house preach national unity they are more concerned with spreading the seeds of discord and disunity. Legislation of this sort, introduced at this particular stage of our history, is evidence of this fact. This legislation is not concerned with fostering unity but more with spreading discord and disunity.

I have already identified myself as a Catholic, and I will go further and say this: Speaking personally, and as a Catholic, I say that for the Prime Minister to go to Rome, then return to Canada and suggest we establish diplomatic relations with the Vatican is both mischievous and irresponsible. It is but one other example of this spreading of discord in Canada. I have seen so many examples of this kind since I have been in parliament that, in the words of the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), I wonder just what kind of government this is that insists upon assaulting the sensibilities of the Canadian people.

It seems to me that this government is involving itself in some weird kind of experiment with the Canadian people, and they are pushing as far as they can to see what happens. I am not seeking headlines. If I were, I would be standing up every day in this house and trying to get them. What I am concerned with is what is happening in this nation and in this parliament. Our Prime Minister and his government preach national unity and a just society. Although I have been here but a short time, I have seen no indication of any real concern for national unity. As I say, what I have seen is more an indication of concern for breaking up national unity. Every sign points in that direction.

I am not one of the Prime Minister's intellectuals, and God help me, I am glad I am not. I do not profess to be an intellectual. My basic conception is one of bread and butter—or if you want, meat and potatoes. I think that solves most of the problems of Canada.

I have listened to hon. members speak on this bill this evening, and one hon. member talked about drinking and driving. While I agree with what he said, in view of all the other matters dealt with in this bill I am surprised he confined his remarks to drinking and driving. Everybody knows that there will be almost 100 per cent agreement in this house on the question of drinking and driving. That is not a matter of contention. Matters that we feel should be separated in this bill are those of abortion, homosexuality and lotteries.

Let me try and point out how ludicrous this bill is. Apparently it is an offence to commit any act outside Canada which would be an indictable offence if committed in Canada. The bill deals with forged passports, firearms, buggery, bestiality, gross indecency, gambling, horse racing, lotteries, abortion, homosexuality, drunken driving, breathalyzer tests, unlawfully possessing instruments for breaking into a coin operated device, unlawful possession of an automatic master key, theft from a post office, false advertising, harassment by telephone.

Then to round it off, the bill deals with cruelty to animals and provides that any person who is found guilty of cruelty to animals will not be permitted to own another pet for a period of years. That provision is in a bill that deals with the snuffing out of human life at the early stages of conception. This is the essence of irony. The bill also goes on to deal with counterfeit money, attempted rape, attempted murder—

An hon. Member: Athlete's foot.

Mr. Peddle: Everything else except athlete's foot.

As I said, I am not a lawyer, I am not a doctor or a professional man, and perhaps I cannot see the meat of all the clauses. But one thing I can see clearly and which I cannot understand is that this government is obsessed and preoccupied with including in this potpourri, this bag of tricks, matters that affect so deeply the consciences and inner beings of the Canadian people. If the government is hell bent on assaulting our sensibilities, then why does it not say so? That is what worries me, and I do not have the answer yet.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) spoke this afternoon and I was disappointed to hear him say that we should not speak too often about dividing this bill. He is not here tonight and I hope he will not be offended that I have spoken if he reads my remarks in Hansard tomorrow. But having made this comment, the hon. member proceeded to launch himself into a 20 or 30 minute speech about how he felt about this bill. If he felt that time should not be wasted on the aspect I am dealing with, then why in the name of heaven did he go on to waste another 20 minutes of parliament's time—his own words—to make his views known when they could just as well be presented at a later stage? It is ridiculous. I cannot accept that statement, least of all from a man who has been in parliament for 30, 40, 50 or 60 years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Peddle: I referred, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) as being sharp. I say this because normally when he is speaking I am asleep, but today I happened to listen.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Apparently the hon. member didn't listen today, either.

Mr. Peddle: The hon. member has suggested that abortion be removed from the Criminal Code and recognized as a social problem.

An hon. Member: The public voted for it.

Mr. Peddle: The public did not vote for it. This is a contention of the government, Mr. Speaker, that they have a mandate for the changes in this bill. The government knows that Newfoundland has been a bulwark of Liberalism for the past 20 years but only one Liberal was elected in that province in the last election. These Criminal Code amendments were a major factor in the failure of the Liberals to elect more members.

An hon. Member: Go and ask Sullivan.

Mr. Peddle: I admire the courage of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Sullivan). Hon. members opposite are not all Protestants; they are not all Liberals and they are not all one sex.

An hon. Member: Oh, yes we are!

Mr. Peddle: There are four distinct categories of members in this house. They are cabinet ministers; parliamentary secretaries; those who want to be parliamentary secretaries and those who want to be cabinet ministers. Thank God our party does not have that problem at the moment. Those are commendable political ambitions, Mr. Speaker, but if they are jeopardized by a Prime Minister or government forcing members to vote en bloc on a matter that affects their individual conscience, then I feel that is wrong. This is exactly what will happen on this vote.

When the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggests that abortion be removed from the Criminal Code, does he also suggest that murder be removed from the Criminal Code? There are many women who would be justified in murdering their husbands and to be fair about it, many husbands would be justified in murdering their wives. Does the hon. member suggest that it is all right for a person to take a shotgun and get rid of a marriage partner?

An hon. Member: Some would like to.

Mr. Peddle: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre supports the relatively unimportant portions of this bill. I do not believe in gambling, but I am broadminded enough to agree that gambling should be the subject of a free vote in this house which is more than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, I am proposing a free and separate vote on—

Mr. Peddle: I do not know what the hon. member is saying. I cannot hear him. If he is seeking information, he need not ask me because I have been here only six months and he has been here 50 years.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not yet, but I hope to be.

Mr. Peddle: The hon. member suggests his righteous party will not approve of gambling. He mentioned participatory democracy. I suggest participatory democracy means that 264 members can have a free vote in this house on an issue which affects their conscience, upbringing and way of life. The hon. member stated that the approval of lotteries would be a retrograde step. He did not say the approval of abortions would be a retrograde step, he claimed that would be a step in tune with modern society. The intellectuals feel this is all right, and therefore it is all right with his party. I condemn it, Mr. Speaker, without a full investigation and I will do so on second and third reading.

Some hon. member mentioned this evening that the government had a mandate. I say the fact is the previous bill died on the order paper. There was little or no mention of it during the last election campaign. It was not an issue.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I know that many hon. members wish to take part in the debate, as I gather from whispers and interventions. I can assure the hon. members that they will have the opportunity to make their contribution later on.

I ask the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle) to go on with his statement.

[English]

Mr. Peddle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for suppressing that attempted intervention. While you have prevented hon. members from pursuing their line of torment you have not deprived me of the right to reply. The people of Newfoundland have always been noted for their perspective and the vote they registered in the last election was an indication they felt something was radically wrong.

I wish to remind hon. members that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) does not represent the conscience of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peddle: I am speaking as an individual Member of Parliament, Mr. Speaker, and not as a Catholic, Protestant, Tory or Liberal. I am prepared to state my views for the record and let my constituents make their choice in the next election as to whether or not they agree with these views. This is just exactly the way I feel and I say this because I know that in a house such as this, with members from all different parts of Canada and of all different religious groups, they cannot all possibly be of one mind.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Before I conclude I wish to repeat what I said earlier, that regardless of party affiliation or anything else I will vote against this bill in its present form. I will do so not because I agree or disagree with anything in it but simply because I feel the majority of the Canadian public think the bill should be separated into its various parts. For that reason I feel compelled to vote against it, even though I know 95 per cent of this legislation is good.

I welcome this legislation but I feel badly that I am being placed in a position by the government where I cannot vote for it. I honestly feel badly about this. I appeal to hon. members, as the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) did this afternoon; I appeal to their sense of decency, something which overcomes eveything else, and to their sense of being human beings. I know that a majority of the members feel the bill should be separated into parts. I believe those who feel this way should stand up and say so, regardless of party discipline or anything else.

The people of Canada feel this way. Members here represent the decent people of Canada. I can think of no better way of closing my remarks than to use the concluding remarks of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) when he said:

> Of course we must differentiate between the spiritual and the temporal. Therefore, this bill should be separated and divided so that all changes can be fairly decided upon according to the consciences of members of parliament and the people of this nation.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable reluctance that I rise to speak on this question. I am compelled to do so only because of the government's refusal to separate the controversial and conscience binding parts of the bill. There is no doubt that the refusal was deliberate and part of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) plan to force members to vote for those aspects of this Bill which are a direct attack on the conscience of members.

In all fairness, sir, I must agree with my colleague and friend, the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle) and other hon. members, that this is a disgrace to the Canadian public. It is an insult to the Canadian nation that a bill of this consequence, a bill that affects so much the consciences, the religious and maybe the non-religious beliefs of the Canadian people, should be presented as a package deal.

There are some of us in this house, and I would suggest many thousands of Canadians across this great country of ours, who are against homosexuality on principle, and who regard human life as sacred, even that of a child before it is born. I noted with regret that those who defended that point of view were described by some of the pundits and interpreters of events in this chamber as belonging to another age, as belonging to the era before the floods. There was a time when to argue in favour of these things was to be called a non-conformist. In this age of liberal enlightenment to argue against them is at the risk of being called a non-conformist.

While all of us have our religious or non-religious beliefs, I wish to deal with these particular parts of the bill not exclusively from the point of view of morals but from the aspect of their social consequences. I do this not through moral cowardice or lack of conviction, because I do not think that those who favour these devices will be impressed with the moral argument, but I hope they will at least consider the social consequences.

[Mr. Peddle.]

I start from the position that those things which are harmful to society must be regarded with suspicion and must be placed under certain restrictions. A government which relaxes the regulations and curbs on drugs, that makes divorce easier, that permits abortion and homosexuality, is in the process of remaking our society. The question which we must ask is, in whose image and likeness?

The government by this legislation permits homosexual acts in private between two consenting adults—no more than two. Apparently, for some reason, if there are more than two it becomes illegal. One wonders at the government's strange delicacy. In effect it is confirming by legislation the old saying, with which most of us agreed at some time or another, that three's a crowd. It is nice to know that the members of the government subscribe to that age old theory and that they know where to draw the line.

I think it must be agreed, Mr. Speaker, that homosexuality is basically a psychological aberration. Some persons feel that because a lot of people do something that makes it natural and acceptable. I might remind the house that a lot of people take drugs nowadays—I think the modern term is that they are taking pot—and so it is automatically all right according to that theory. Homosexuality is gaining adherents, and so it cannot be unnatural. That philosophy is of course the traditional symptom of decay. When numbers make something right then we are on the way to something, but it is not Christian democracy.

Let us examine the consequences of this thinking. If homosexuality were practised on a widespread scale society would break down. If it were universally practised, the human race in a matter of time would become extinct. Obviously, therefore, it cannot be said to be conducive to social progress. If one does not believe in social order and progress, then of course one would welcome the destruction or even the suicide of society. But, Mr. Speaker, my constituents in St. John's West did not send me to Ottawa to participate in the undermining of our social order.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what of the homosexual? He commands our sympathy in the same way that any human with some aberration commands our sympathy. But one of the salient features about homosexuality and the real reason for its being anti-social is the compulsion to convert, to induce others into its practice. In those nations where homosexuality has raged unchecked conversion has been a major characteristic, to the point where generations of those unable to make a free choice have been compelled into unnatural practices.

This, of course, is not what we are legislating. What we are legislating is a kind of well mannered, sedate, controlled Canadian type of vice. Therefore, I am forced to vote against this bill because of the unavoidable conversion feature of this practice and because, while the bill does nothing to promote this aspect of the practice, it does nothing to control it. The bill gives legal recognition to a practice that basically is anti-social. If I voted for the bill, it would mean that I am condoning that which I feel if carried out on an unrestricted basis would destroy the way of life we have painfully built up over the centuries.

Now, I should like to deal briefly with the section dealing with abortion. I say that those who adhere to the sacredness of human life will not require a great deal of convincing on this point. I am sure in recent weeks we have all received a vast amount of material from various church leaders and other groups dealing with the abortion section of this bill.

I was particularly interested in figures I received that were taken from the World Almanac of 1968. These were supplied by the World Health Organization. These figures give the number of suicides per year per 100,000 women. In the age group 25 to 44 in countries where abortion is allowed the figures in respect of suicide are as follows: In Japan 19.7 per cent, in Hungary 13.4 per cent, and in Sweden 13.1 per cent. In the non-abortion countries the suicide figures are these: Belgium, 5.9 per cent, Canada 5.2 per cent and Italy 2.9 per cent. I ask in God's name how any member of this house in all conscience can support this bill and ignore these facts. How can we ignore the fact that countries with permissive abortion laws invariably have a higher rate of suicide for women of child bearing years than non-abortion countries?

About a week or ten days ago a member on the opposite side of the house used the argument that when a girl is raped she should be entitled to have an abortion. In my opinion this is a matter of conscience because the social consequences of applying that philosophy are a matter of public concern. A person who has been raped has suffered a violation of personal rights. But I ask you, sir, and members of this house what are the rights of the unborn child? Are we to assume that the unborn child possesses no rights because it has been conceived in violation. Once life is present, how can it be argued that because of social convenience or possible embarrassment it is right to destroy it. We must ask ourselves, are only duly conceived and wanted children to have a right to live. If someone wants a child, it can live; if it is not wanted, it must be denied the right to live, it must die. What kind of society would we build on principles of that kind?

I think we must act to remove the stigma from unwanted children conceived out of wedlock. But are we to do it by destroying them? If we accept the position that it is all right to destroy a child before birth, why not after birth? Are we to create a panel of doctors that will take on the appearance of executioners? On what grounds can they refuse an abortion; on what grounds can they grant to an unwanted unborn child the right to be born? I would suggest that once you have stipulated a number of conditions whereby a child can be destroyed before birth you can be sure those conditions will be met when it is a question of avoiding embarrassment or convenience.

I know I will be accused in terms of all the cliches of the new enlightenment because those people seem to think some great new learning entered the world with the flood. However, human experiences through the ages have shown us that when barriers are removed upon certain areas of human conduct and anti-social acts, the result is simply the speedy undermining and destruction of the entire social structure. We are watching this happen today before our very eyes and the government by this very legislation is aiding and abetting it.

I am completely at a loss to understand why this government that has preached a just society and equal rights would refuse to allow this bill to come before the house other than as a package deal. I say, not as a member of any religious denomination but as a father of a reasonably large family, that I am completely at a loss to understand why the government would impose this vote upon the members of their party without giving those members an opportunity to vote as their consciences dictate. My God, we are not mounting a machine; this is not a machine in respect of which you can just press a button and wait for results. This is a government that has been elected by the Canadian people. I have been elected by a substantial majority of the people in my riding to come here to express my thoughts and feelings as I see fit. I am alarmed and disgusted at the action of the Prime Minister and members of his cabinet in not allowing their colleagues on the government side, on the Liberal benches, to exercise that right.

As much as I would like to see our leader become prime minister, as much as I would like to see our party form the government and as much as they deserve to form the government, I am glad I am not part of a government in which I would be forced to vote against my conscience and vote against everything which I have been taught is wrong, unjust and unchristian. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if hon. members opposite start wearing beards it is because they do not have the guts to shave in the morning. I thank God that my colleagues and I will be able to shave in the mornings because we have had the right to exercise our prerogatives and vote as our consciences dictate. I make no bones about the fact that I am proud that I will be voting against this bill on second and third reading. I hope members opposite will come to life, realize that they are individuals; that they are Christians; that they are people and realize that to their constituents they have grave responsibility.

I hope that members will vote, not as the so-called leaders of the just society dictate, but as their own consciences dictate. If they do, I am sure they will vote against this bill. As I said before, if they vote on this basis they will be able to sleep at night and shave in the morning with the realization that they have done what they are supposed to do; that is act as men and not as robots.

In closing, I would urge my fellow members opposite to give very serious thought to this matter and not be persuaded or enticed to vote against their consciences because the party whip is on. Rather, they should stand up like men and vote as their consciences dictate. If they do that, I have no doubt or fear that they will vote against this bill.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, during the last few minutes I have been interested in listening to several members from the newest province of Canada, and I should like now to welcome them to this generation and the twentieth century. I really thought that Joey Smallwood was about as backward a man as one could meet and I confirmed this opinion when I was with the woodworkers' association. I found that he was not interested in the people of the other provinces and had not heard of them. He wanted to decide what wages were to be paid and under what working conditions. If he is to the left of some of the representatives we now have from that province, God pity them in that province because of the development which will take place in the next 20 or 30 years.

An hon. Member: Smallwood didn't think much of you either.

Mr. Peters: I am sure he didn't, and I am very fortunate that I was elected to parliament because I would probably have ended up in jail in Newfoundland as a result of being diametrically opposed to everything I heard him say about that particular part of the country. I suggest that even those who have spoken for the dinosaur class would be willing to admit that if another part of the country had a different climate and different development, that climate and development would not necessarily fit in their category. Surely, they can be broad minded enough to allow the rest of the country to develop in a reasonable manner.

The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau), during the drafting of the changes to the Criminal Code introduced by Bill C-185, was able to present to the country the thing he considered would lead to a just society. The expression was first used in a political sense by another millionaire, Governor Rockefeller. It was not used during an election campaign but following the 1966 election when he advised the civil servants and the members of the establishment to develop this expression "the just society". It may be that as a result of wealth, benevolence will flow in various directions. If that was the cause, then I support the reasoning and the effects.

Changes to the Criminal Code are long overdue. Before the Prime Minister, the former Minister of Justice, takes credit for this change he would be well advised to have a look at a number of private members' bills which have been on the order paper since I was elected. I remember when abortion was first mentioned in a private members' bill. The sponsor of that particular bill took it upon himself to accept the abuse that flowed following the introduction of this particularly unpopular subject. I can take some small credit for the introduction of a bill of a similar nature. This involved divorce legislation, and was far ahead of its time.

It was also my good fortune to participate in the deliberations of this house over a number of years when we finally brought divorce legislation into a social atmosphere. This allowed the government to pass a bill which was more progressive than the one I proposed.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I submit that the hon. member has strayed from the subject matter of this bill. Surely, he is not discussing anything of relevance to this bill.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry for new members who have not yet had the opportunity of learning the rules. Given enough time they will sooner or later learn these rules, providing they keep trying. In any event, appreciate the interest of the hon. member.

The point is that individual members of parliament should be given a great deal of credit for introducing legislation which has not been popular and sometimes dangerous. When I presented the bill to which I referred I showed it to members of the press in order to get some comment. This bill proposed amendments to sections 147 and 149 of the Criminal Code having to do with buggery, bestiality and gross indecency. I suggest this was the forerunner of the amendments which later related to the homosexual sections we are now considering.

The provisions of my proposed amendments would have had the effect of not applying sections 147 and 149 to acts committed in a place other than a public place by one person with another person, each being 21 years or more of age or married and who consented to the commission of the act. There was considerable comment about this amendment.

At about the same time I became associated with a number of religious leaders, and because of my experience at that time I am shocked by some of the comments of hon. members who think they know something about religion. This organization in Ottawa was representative of the Catholic church, the United Church, the Anglican church, a number of homosexuals, several doctors and psychiatrists. At that time the organization was known as the Canadian Council of Religion and the Homosexual.

These religious leaders were interested in these people because they were aware of the fact that in Ottawa homosexuals make up more than 10 per cent of the population. They realized they were losing members of their congregation every week, and as religious leaders they were unable to assist these people who were obviously in need of some kind of help. I was only one of many individuals who joined this organization. I did so because I believed that homosexuality was abnormal and that these people required help.

I think I can safely say that I came from an environment in which men were men, and women were glad of it. I might say I spent most of my life reminding them of it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: And we were glad that they were glad of it. We believed that homosexuality was abnormal and that it was something these individuals had no control over, but something in respect of which they could use help. I was joined in this feeling by many people of the religious community who were aware that many people in the community faced this problem.

Many members of parliament have said they could not accept this amendment because their faith would not allow them to do so. I suggest many of them have not considered their faith since they were 13 years of age. I have heard some arguments about divorce, and I asked the late Mr. Favreau how many letters he received after we passed the divorce legislation. Do you know how many adverse letters he received? He received absolutely none. Why? Because the people concerned with theology are up to date in theology. It is not the theology we learned as little boys; it is the theology of today, and as the times change even theology and churches change. If members of parliament go to church once in a while they will find there has been change in this respect and there is no longer a dog-in-the-manger attitude all the time.

This matter of homosexuality affects all members of parliament. We remember an unfortunate case not too long ago that affected one of our members. What happened? I do not know what he did, and I do not even care. He put himself in a position where he was subject to blackmail, the abuse of the courts and the abuse of politicians, and he is no longer with us. I do not know what the background of this case was.

I expected when I joined this organization that we would be able to sit down with psychiatrists, doctors and others familiar with this situation and find there was an easy cure perhaps we could give somebody a shot of hormones and change that person from one sex to another. I thought this would be a simple proposition. I have found it is not a simple proposition.

I have read that the deciding factor is quite often one which occurs while the child is in the womb; the mother's mental attitude is affected. This may or may not be the case; I am not in a position to argue. In most cases I think these people do not like what they are. It is time society did something to prevent their being blackmailed and being subjected to the other fears they now have. It is time society provided them with the right to live their own life, provided they do not hurt someone else.

While in this organization I also learned that all the homosexuals and lesbians with whom I came in contact were agreed that they were opposed to those who corrupted the young. They are not interested in the business of prostitution and disliked it as much as you and I when it concerned the young. They are not interested in spreading their affliction, if you can call it that. They are interested in making it possible for them to live as near a normal life as possible. I think society has an obligation to allow them to do that.

We have heard that in Ottawa there are some departments in which this practice has had an effect on those who did not belong to a particular cult. The story is that you did not get a promotion in that case. I have also heard these people say that they have all the smart people in the world, all the rich people in the world, and one day they will be in control. I do not expect this will happen, but I do not think we should build a society that hounds a person for something that he cannot control. Surely any member who is broad minded at all will agree that the most society should demand from an individual is that he should conform to the rules of society or should not hurt society by his non-conformity. If what he does hurts anybody else, that is, if the other person does not consent, then there should be a provision covering that in the law.

In the bill that I presented I included the provision that one should be 21 years of age or more before he or she would fall under the provisions of the Criminal Code in this respect. Most people when talking about this matter consider that you really have to go back to the Bible to understand the problem. You read in Revelations the things you are not supposed to do, the women you are not supposed to marry and the relationships you are not supposed to have. You look in our Criminal Code and see that almost all the ecclesiastical prohibitions are included in our law. I have not read them for some time. Some of them may have had reason behind them, and some not. But it seems to me that this provision with regard to homosexuals should also include married persons under the age of 21.

Hon. members may not have studied the subject and be aware that many of the things commonly done heterosexually between married people are not within the ambit of the Criminal Code at the present time. If these things are done in the back seat of a car, they can constitute an offence whether or not the person is married or whether he or she is under the age of 21.

Mr. Woolliams: The back seat of a car is a public place.

Mr. Peters: It may be considered to be a private place, but I suggest an amendment should be included to cover married couples if one is under 21 years of age. Many sections of the Criminal Code are very worth while. I have had a great many complaints from my constituents, and I am more interested in those complaints than in the form letters received from constituents of other members.

I now refer to the gun legislation. It is interesting, when considering the gun legislation, to remind ourselves that some of its implications are the result of our exposure to United States propaganda. United States leaders have been assassinated in recent years and on these occasions there has always been a hue and cry in that country to take away guns from the American public. On the other hand, the Americans have always said they have the right to bear arms. We, in Canada, believe we have the right to bear arms. The Americans believe they have this right. Their thinking in this respect stems in part from their frontier days, and some from the movies about frontier days rather than present day circumstances. It is interesting to compare two questionnaires put out, one in my riding and another in a southern Ontario riding represented by one of my colleagues. The questionnaire in my area referred to the restriction on rifles, shotguns, the use of revolvers and revolver clubs. My constituents were opposed to almost any restriction; yet in the constituency of my colleague from southern Ontario the people said all these things should be restricted.

This points up the very important idea as to whether there should be different legislation in different areas. In my area of northern Ontario, if you want to go hunting on Sunday you can do so. The law in northern Ontario does not say you can go hunting on Sunday, but in practice a fine is not levied for hunting on this day. This has always been the case. In northern Ontario you can apply to the provincial authority for a permit to carry a sidearm. You have to carry it publicly. You were given a letter, not a permit, saying you could carry it. This letter was given by the Department of Lands and Forests. In other areas, this right is not granted, and to this extent there is a difference between various areas of the country.

If you carry a gun in Toronto, it is thought that you have the gun because you perhaps want to shoot your neighbour. The only reason you can carry a gun in Toronto is for the purposes of defence. But in northern Ontario you can carry a gun to go hunting; and there are rifle practices, turkey shoots and all the other things connected with the sporting use of guns. The motivation of people is important in this respect.

I am pleased to note that in an editorial even the revolver clubs are pointing out that the government has paid some attention to this difference and has modified the legislation to the point that they think it is not bad legislation. They have pointed out to me, and I think they are right, that the registered revolvers in the country are not the guns used for criminal purposes.

A gun in my area which is worth $85 when registered, in Montreal is worth $200 if it is unregistered. They do not want registered guns. They may steal a registered gun and if it is used once it has to be discarded because it can be traced. I am told that the underworld seldom uses a gun that is registered, even those that are stolen in hold-ups. So, the laws we now have do not appear to have failed. For this reason, I think we should not pass legislation that is more restrictive than is necessary. I would also like to point that it is necessary to provide regulations concerning new guns and new types of weapons, but I would strongly urge that discretion be used and some restraint be applied in doing this. We do not subscribe to the belief held in some other places that guns should be used for the defence of citizens rather than for the purpose for which they are often used now, that is for sport.

The other matter which I should like to deal with is the matter of abortion. I am surprised at these people who say they are religious, who have some church background and who speak about the taking of life in the act of abortion. I wonder how many of them have been to a church service for a foetus. So far as I know, no church will bury a foetus that is under seven months of development. Such a foetus is not considered to be living, it is burnt in an incinerator. It does not have to be buried, and a death certificate does not have to be issued for it, unless it is in the province of Newfoundland. I am sure there are certain things that members do not know concerning this business. One of them is that according to the legal profession half a million abortions a year are performed in Canada which has a population of 20 million. Half of these 20 million people must be under child bearing age, which brings it down to 10 million. I presume that only women have children, so this brings it down to five million. This is a pretty significant proportion.

Mr. Woolliams: Who is going to take care of the babies? Can you answer that?

Mr. Peters: I do not know who is going to take care of them but someone mentioned shotguns being used to blow the husbands' heads off. Some of these women who are having abortions may find that some members of parliament are so violently opposed to it that there may be a few husbands' heads blown off. This raises an interesting situation. So far as I am concerned, there are three stages in this proposition. To my knowledge, doctors consider that an abortion is performed only up to the third month of pregnancy. After the end of the third month of pregnancy they are called miscarriages and following the seventh month it is a birth, either a still birth or a live birth. This involves a simple D and C operation. It can be done in any doctor's office without anaesthetic in a matter of four or five minutes.

Several years ago on a radio program for the C.B.C. I interviewed a doctor who performed abortions. He told me he did a large number of abortions in Montreal, and indicated that in the 100 that he did a week he had only one or two problems over a period of several years. He also told me something else that was very interesting. When I asked him why he had not been caught, he said that at that time he charged around $500 for an abortion but it depended on how much money the person seemed to have. He also told me that

25 per cent of his cases were sent to him by the welfare agencies in Montreal without charge. This was the price for protection in Montreal. This man, who had been trained in another country, believed that there was nothing wrong with performing abortions. In most cases he fitted the person with a pessary and told her not to come back. He was not interested in seeing her again. He believed he was doing a job for the young people. If we are not going to provide birth control pills in our high schools and in some of our public schools to all female students then we had better consider—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. We will suspend the sitting until the lights come back.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if it would meet the wishes of the house to call it ten o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. Since it is approximately ten o'clock and due to the circumstances, the house is adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

QUEBEC BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 816—Mr. Caouette:

1. On what date did construction of the Quebec Bridge begin?
2. What was the original cost of this bridge?
3. What amount of interest has been paid to date?
4. What balance remains to be paid?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport):

1. Construction of the first bridge began in the late 1800's. In 1907 a part of the bridge under construction collapsed. Subsequently, on April 9, 1910, a contract was awarded by the Federal Government for construction of the substructure of a new bridge. Erection of the superstructure began in 1913 and proceeded until a further mishap on September 11, 1916. Work was then immediately commenced on a new span and the bridge was opened for regular rail traffic on December 3, 1917. Construction of the bridge was finally completed and accepted by the government on August 21, 1918.

2. Total investment carried in accounts of Canadian Government Railways as shown in Public Accounts of Canada: $21,706,664.49.

THOMAS GLENN JOLLEY—STATUS ON ADMISSION

Question No. 909—Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West):

1. Was Thomas Glenn Jolley, aged 24, a citizen of the United States of America admitted into Canada during the year 1967, under what circumstances and what status was he given?

Questions

2. Were the Canadian immigration authorities advised that Jolley voluntarily surrendered his U.S. citizenship in May 1967 while living in Toronto and, if so, was his status in Canada thereby changed?

3. Did Thomas Glenn Jolley subsequently leave Canada to return to his native United States of America, and, if so, on what date?

4. Have the Canadian immigration authorities been advised that Jolley has been ordered by the U.S. immigration service to leave the United States voluntarily within 90 days or be deported, and do they consider that Jolley is readmissible to Canada?

5. Has the government formulated any policy of accepting U.S. draft dodgers who renounce their U.S. citizenship while living in Canada and granting them certificates of identity or a special status of landed immigrant while they remain in Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Thomas Glenn Jolley was admitted to Canada as a landed immigrant on May 3, 1967.

2. The Department of Manpower and Immigration has not received notification of Mr. Jolley's renunciation of United States citizenship.

3. Since no exit controls are maintained by Canada, no information is available concerning Mr. Jolley's departure from this country.

4. No request has been received from the United States authorities to allow Mr. Jolley's return to Canada. Until such time as a request might be received and all of the circumstances known, it is not possible to determine whether Mr. Jolley would be readmissible to Canada.

5. The Canadian Immigration Act and Regulations contain no reference to an individual's military draft status and consequently this is not a factor in determining admissibility to Canada. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has informed me that the policy of his Department with regard to the issuance of Canadian Certificates of Identity to persons in this position is at present under review.

EDUCATION SUPPORT BRANCH

Question No. 919—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

Two officials of the Secretary of State department were appointed in early 1966 to assist in this responsibility. Following a competition for a "Coordinator of Federal Activities in Higher Education", Mr. Robin Ross, of the University of Toronto, received a one-year appointment in September, 1966. Further recruitment of staff followed.

(b) 14 positions for the fiscal year 1968-69; (c) R. D. Mitchener, E. G. Finley, Z. Kay, G. Gagnon, E. A. L. Fisher, G. Strain, B. Marsh, E. A. Chitty, M. L. Thibert, C. M. T. Lacroix.

3. The initial broad objective of the branch was to assist in co-ordination of federal policies of education support and research support to universities and other relevant educational institutions and agencies in Canada. In this connection, the branch is presently concerned with: (i) administering Part II of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, 1967, and its regulations, relating to assistance to the provinces in meeting rising costs of post-secondary education; (ii) establishing liaison machinery with other interested federal departments and agencies; (iii) developing a research facility and an information repository relating to Canadian education; and to the activities of the federal government in financial and other forms of federal support of Canadian education, to the extent that such activities affect the general federal budget; and (iv) making direct grants to individuals and agencies in the interests of the general development of Canadian education.

4. With reference to points (i) to (iv) in 3 above: (i) liaison work with provincial education departments and agencies, post-secondary education institutions and associations; (ii) chairing, or representing the department at, committee and other meetings relating to education and research support; (iii) in addition to answering numerous requests for information, undertaking publication of results of a survey of 1966-67 and 1967-68 on federal expenditures for research and education (Report No. 1, on "Federal Expenditures on Research in the Academic Community", should be distributed in February; a second report on federal expenditures, on post-secondary education for these two fiscal years, is in the final stage of preparation). (iv) the main grants to date have been for a study on accessibility to higher education sponsored by the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada; and a study of university costs jointly sponsored by the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, the Canadian Association of University Business Officers, and the Canadian Association of University Business Officers, and the Canadian Association of University Teachers.

5. The branch as such is not expected to publish reports.

1. Why were facilities of the C.B.C. moved from Cole's Island, near Sackville, New Brunswick, to Dover, New Brunswick?

2. Did the transfer of these facilities require the transfer of employees to Moncton, N.B., and, if so, how many?

3. Was rental space required in Moncton, N.B., and if so, from whom was the space rented, what was the square footage of space, what is the annual rental in dollars and for what term will the lease run?

4. What was the cost to the C.B.C. for the transfer of facilities to Dover, N.B., and has the move in question been completed?

5. 2. No.

3. Yes. The lessor is La Société L'Assomption, the area is 1,120 sq. ft., and the term of the lease is May 1, 1968 to December 3, 1969. It has not been customary to require the C.B.C. to disclose financial details of individual contractual arrangements.

4. The move has been completed and the 50,000-watt CBA transmitter is now operational at Upper Dover. The project cost was $434,650.

5. The C.B.C.'s international shortwave transmitting facilities will remain at Sackville. In accordance with recommendations of the Fowler Committee, a subsequent Parliamentary Committee and the White Paper on Broadcasting, the C.B.C. is planning to augment these facilities over a period of about three years by five new transmitters and 30 antennas at an estimated cost of $9,720,000. This will improve northern and armed forces shortwave coverage and is an attempt to raise C.B.C.'s international shortwave service to a level comparable with service provided by other nations of Canada's stature.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. According to R.C.M.P. figures—checked by number of innoculations—there are 9,500 Malamute Huskies in the Northwest Territories.

At present these regulations are enforced by the provinces on vehicles operating interprovincially.

Orders for Returns

INTERPROVINCIAL TRUCKING SAFETY—BRAKING

Question No. 1,306—Mr. Mather:

What action is being taken at the federal level to ensure safety in performance of interprovincially operated trucks and buses, such as braking performance of commercial vehicles, brake tubing and hose connections, coupling devices and towing methods?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Following discussions with the provinces the federal government is presently considering legislation for the enforcement of safety standards for new motor vehicles, including trucks, and parts manufactured in, or imported into Canada.

The provinces are enforcing safety regulations on trucks and buses operating intra-provincially and extra-provincially. These regulations include safety requirements for braking systems.

HEIGHT OF REAR BUMPERS

Question No. 1,324—Mr. Noble:

Would the government take the necessary action to require all trucks to be equipped with rear bumpers, low enough to prevent cars from going underneath them in a rear-end collision?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The federal government is now considering legislation to enforce safety standards for motor vehicles, including trucks, and parts manufactured in, or imported into Canada. A standard for rear bumper under-ride guards for trucks is now being developed by the United States Department of Transportation. A similar standard would likely be included in safety regulations adopted under the proposed federal legislation for new motor vehicles.

I might ask at the same time about my own question, No. 851, which has been on the order paper since November 22.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will make inquiries to ascertain the status of these questions.

Mr. Speaker: I gather that the remaining questions stand.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the member's notice of motion requesting the tabling of the said report, I must inform the house that this report contains matters confidential to the department, therefore I regret that it cannot be tabled, and under the circumstances I would ask the hon. member whether he will consent to withdrawing the motion.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars to obtain reports and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member asking that the motion be transferred for debate?

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I am trying to explain why.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is transferred for debate.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RECOGNITION BY CANADA OF SOVEREIGNTY BY MAINLAND CHINA OVER NATIONALIST CHINA

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the discussions between Ottawa and Peking as projected is it a basis of any exchange of ambassadors, that the Government of Canada recognize the claim that Peking has sovereignty over Taiwan?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am sure this question will arise during the discussions, but I do not think any useful purpose would be served by commenting on it at the present time.

Mr. Baldwin: Perhaps I could approach this from another direction. Will the minister say that in respect of any such exchange of ambassadors the government will refuse to recognize the claim of Peking to sovereignty over Taiwan and the people thereof?

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much that the Canadian government would recognize or challenge the sovereignty of Peking over Formosa. This is a matter of dispute. When we recognize other countries, we do not necessarily recognize all their territorial claims or challenge them.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister about the undertaking given in March of 1968 by the present Prime Minister, and also his undertaking during the election campaign, that refusal by communist China to permit the continuance of diplomatic relations between Canada and Taiwan would be the end of the proposal to recognize communist China?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the government's policy with respect to the recognition of China has been expressed by the Prime Minister and myself in recent days. That is our policy, and if it varies in any respect from what has been said previously, it varies. But the position at the present time is as I have expressed it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One other question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister state that a solemn undertaking given by ministers is to be broken in this flagrant manner?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he can assure the house that the negotiations aimed at establishing diplomatic relations with communist China will not have any adverse effects on our relations with mainland China.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as I have said on a number of occasions, I do not think it would be possible to recognize two governments of China. Therefore, if we do recognize Peking, of course it will affect our relations with the Nationalist government, which claims jurisdiction over the same area.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Has the minister received from the government of the United States or of other allied countries representations running counter to the position taken by the Canadian government concerning the recognition of communist China?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we have received from a number of countries comments both favourable and unfavourable to the action that we are proposing to take.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Could the minister say he has received notes against the idea from the American government?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the nature of the representations from the United States was revealed in a public statement which they have issued.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It relates specifically to the governments of Japan, Australia and Thailand. Has the Canadian government been in consultation with the governments of those or any other countries of southeast Asia?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I have said to the house on a number of occasions, we were very careful to have prior consultations with all friendly countries, including those mentioned by the hon. gentleman, before I made my announcement last Monday.

DRUGS

LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE REPAYMENT OF OVERCHARGES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. It relates to a question I put to the Prime Minister last Friday concerning substantial payments that drug companies in the United States are making back to people that they overcharged, and whether or not Canada would be doing something like this. The Prime Minister said on Friday that he would take the question as notice. I have been waiting each day since for some other minister, perhaps the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to deal with it. Has an answer been prepared; and if so, does any minister have it?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I really could not say, Mr. Speaker, because this particular matter has not been brought to my attention. But I would be glad to pass my hon. friend's representations along to the Prime Minister's office.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAMBERT (BELLECHASSE)—OFFICIAL REPORT—TABLING OF PETITION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I do not know if it is in order, but I rely on your knowledge as well as on your kindness to teach me how to behave in this house, according to the Rules.

In the speech I delivered yesterday, I am quoted, at page 5386 of the French Hansard, as saying unpleasant things about doctors. It is an error in transcription because instead of "médecins" (doctors), they make me say "méchants" (wicked people). I would not like doctors to think that I call them wicked people. Therefore, I request that the appropriate rectification be made.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I had requested that a petition including 5,000 names be attached as an appendix to Hansard. I understand that unanimous consent was required but I thought I had it, since nobody raised any objection.

Anyhow, Mr. Speaker, I repeat my request, if it is in order. In any case, I will comply with your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: With regard to the first point raised by the hon. member, it is usual to make corrections to the official report on motions, when the changes are significant.

As far as the second point is concerned, I must say that is it is not the practice of the house to append to the official report private documents as the one mentioned yesterday by the hon. member, and it is evidently for that reason that it has not been possible to agree to his suggestion to the effect that the 5,000 signatures be appended to yesterday's Hansard.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, am I permitted to make a remark?

In my opinion, this is not a private document, it is a petition sent to the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may, if he wants, discuss this point of order with the Chair, but the decision was taken after due consideration, I can assure him, and he cannot refer to it again now that it has been made.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MONTREAL—PROTECTION AGAINST BOMB DAMAGE

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence arising from the answer given yesterday concerning bombings at armouries in Montreal. The minister said that steps had been taken to protect the property of the government of Canada. In view of the second bombing last night which damaged both public and private property, will the minister say whether the government regards the steps taken for the protection of property to be adequate and satisfactory.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think it has to be noted first of all that the second bombing, like the first one, actually took place outside the building. I think we can say that the most stringent measures we have taken must have had some effect, because the second bomb was discovered by the security guard who went inside to call the police. Unfortunately the bomb exploded before the police arrived. We are co-operating fully with the Montreal police in order to enforce security as much as possible.

EDUCATION

INQUIRY INTO VIOLENCE AT SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS UNIVERSITY

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice, I direct my question to the Solicitor General.

Has the Department of Justice instituted or will it institute an inquiry regarding the violence which erupted yesterday at the Sir George Williams University, and, if so, will the minister make a statement in this regard today or tomorrow?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt if this question comes under the administrative responsibility of the minister, but perhaps I should allow him to answer it.

[English]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much whether this is a matter for the federal authority. I would think it is rather for the local enforcement authorities in the area concerned. However, because of the seriousness of the situation I will look into the question further, and have an answer brought forward either by the Minister of Justice or myself.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My question is for the Minister of Transport in the absence of the Prime Minister, and it relates to events at Sir George Williams University. In view of the massive commitment of federal funds, the heavy damage to public property and the dangerous civil disorder, is it the intention of the government to institute with provincial authorities a judicial inquiry into the causes and events leading up to this shocking manifestation?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The Solicitor General has already said he will look into the matter, and I am sure he will report to his colleagues if he feels that any federal action is warranted in the circumstances.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): In view of the growing and concerted movement to disrupt and damage university life, is it the intention of the federal government to continue making a massive federal contribution to secondary education, with no questions asked, or will the government take action to come to grips—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

STUDENT LOANS

CURTAILMENT OF GRANTS TO FOREIGN STUDENTS ENGAGED IN DISORDERLY ACTS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether consultations have been held with other ministers involved, such as the Secretary of State for External Affairs, where this pertains to the participation of foreign students, and the Minister of Finance, from the point of view of limiting loans to students who participate in this sort of activity.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is already a question outstanding from the hon.

member for Oxford, that I have promised to answer and which has a bearing on the question asked today.

Foreign students who study in Canada under technical assistance programs administered by the Canadian International Development Agency are required to sign undertakings in which they agree, in part, to abide by the rules of the universities or other institutions in which they study, and to refrain from engaging in political activities. It is also made clear that their training awards may be withdrawn at any time, for sufficient cause, as determined by the government of Canada.

If a student who is receiving such an award were to become involved in a breach of the peace, bloodshed or other act of disorder, we would expect to receive an official complaint from his university, or the local law enforcement authorities. Each such complaint would be examined in order to determine the appropriate action to be taken, in light of the particular circumstances of the case.

The Canadian International Development Agency has no record of receiving any such complaint from a university or law enforcement authority.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): A supplementary question relating not only to foreign students but to all students. Is the Minister of Finance giving consideration to withdrawing or withholding student loans from any student who participates in campus riots?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): This would be a matter for the provincial authorities who administer the loans. The government of Canada guarantees the loans and pays the interest but the loans are granted by the provincial authorities.

EXPO '67

WRITING OFF OF MONTREAL AND QUEBEC INDEBTEDNESS

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): May I take this opportunity to reply to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Wellington with respect to Expo notes? The notes of Expo '67 Corporation which matured on June 30, 1968, are still recorded as liabilities due to guarantors. They will be dealt with as part of the arrangements for the winding up of Expo. These arrangements are not yet finalized, so I am not yet in a position to state what action will be taken.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT BASEL BANKERS MEETING

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): On Monday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Calgary Centre asked a question concerning recycling, and the meeting which was held at Basel last weekend. As I stated, Canada was represented at the meeting of western central bankers held on that occasion. The Governor of the Bank of Canada was present. Canada agreed to a reply to be made by the central bank governors to the chairman of the ministers and governors of the group of ten, Herr Schiller, in connection with paragraph 8 of the communiqué issued by the ministers and governors at Bonn on November 22, 1968.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Does Canada's agreement to this plan involve any commitment or pledge of Canada's foreign exchange?

Mr. Benson: The governors of the central banks were asked to look into the question of recycling. They have made a report to Herr Schiller, who is chairman of the group of ten, it will be considered by the group of ten before action is taken. In the interim there is no liability whatever on Canada's part.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance?

As Mr. Campbell, who is president of the Sun Life Company, has said that several countries have resorted to creating money to compensate for their lack of funds, does the minister intend to use the Bank of Canada to create money in our country?

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion, this question should be placed on the order paper.

[English]

TRANSPORT

DISCRIMINATORY REDUCTIONS IN EXPRESS ASSOCIATION RATES

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister undertake to investigate recent rate reductions by the Express Transport Association in western Canada which appear to discriminate against Regina and Saskatoon?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that his question be placed on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DRUGS

REQUIREMENT TO SHOW INGREDIENTS IN MEDICATION

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that a St. Catharines boy is dead after inhaling vapour from a medication for colds the ingredients of which are unknown, and in view of the fact that the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act does not require manufacturers to publish the medical ingredients of such products, will the minister look into the matter of an amendment to the act to require the manufacturers to do so?

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the food and drug directorate is at the present time investigating this matter. The results of this investigation will undoubtedly enable the minister to give the hon. member a more complete answer.

ESTATE TAX ACT

CONSULTATION WITH PREMIERS BEFORE PROCEEDING FURTHER WITH MEASURE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask the Minister of Finance a question, but he ran out when he realized it. I see however that he is now returning. I should like to ask him whether, as a result of the conversations his government has had with the provincial premiers, he can now advise the house if any decision has been made by him or by his government to consult with the provinces before proceeding any further with the estate tax measure?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, if I might just complete my answer—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. minister may not do so without leave of the Chair, and the Chair has already recognized the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

[Later:]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to make my answer more complete.

[Mr. Speaker.]

When I answered the question put by the hon. member for Calgary North, I simply said no. What I should have said was no, there were no requests for further consultations from the provincial finance ministers.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to get into an argument over this, but let me ask the minister this. Whether there has been a request, or there has not, would the minister consider approaching the provinces to see if they do consent to his estate tax measure as it affects property and civil rights?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the estate tax was introduced before the ministers of finance meeting in December. At that time I indicated that I would be glad to discuss the matter with any finance ministers who were interested. I received representations from one province, which I answered before we proceeded with the bill.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary question. Could the minister tell the house whether he has had a complaint from the province of Alberta, that his department is taxing the refund of estate tax that is made by the province?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, this is incorrect. I have not had a complaint, but I have heard such rumours. As I say, this is of course incorrect.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Finance. It is reported that income tax officials are taxing estate tax refunds as income. Would the minister kindly check on this and let us know formally in the house?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should direct his question to the Chair. In any event he has made a representation to the minister.

THE BUDGET

REQUEST FOR PRESENTATION IN SPRING

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the discussions over the last few days, can the minister now indicate whether or not it is any more certain, or likely, that a budget will be presented some time this spring?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not ruled out the presentation of a budget. There is no date presently in mind as to when a budget will be presented.

IMMIGRATION

APPLICATION FOR ADMISSION BY JEWS IN IRAQ

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether there have been any applications made for admission to Canada by Jews in Iraq and, if so, whether the government is giving sympathetic consideration to granting early admission of these people who in their own interests have to leave their own country?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that that question might have been more appropriately addressed to the minister of immigration, but in any event tomorrow my colleague the minister of immigration and myself will be meeting with the Canadian Jewish Congress and others to talk about how best we can help. I cannot answer specifically the question asked by the right hon. gentleman, because it would not be information that came across my desk in the ordinary course of events.

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS ACT

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION DEALING WITH CRIMINAL RECORDS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In view of the shortage of items on the order paper, is it the intention of the minister to bring forward legislation dealing with amendments to the Juvenile Delinquents Act? If not, when may we expect this legislation?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there is no change in the date that I gave in my previous answer. It is highly improbable that it will be introduced in this session.

Mr. Gilbert: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that the former solicitor general brought forth legislation that had received cabinet approval with regard to the expunction of criminal records, when can we expect legislation dealing with this matter?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated previously, a great deal of attention is being given at the moment to this subject and to preparing legislation, which incidentally involves records that are primarily in the custody of the municipalities and the provinces. The subject is getting very active attention at the moment. I cannot give the precise date, but I would not expect legislation on this subject in this session.

DRUGS

MACE—TESTS TO REVEAL POSSIBLE DANGERS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. My question is related to the question I asked on February 5 regarding the chemical Mace. At that time the minister said he would take my question under consideration. I was wondering whether that has been done and if the parliamentary secretary is in a position to reply to that question.

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I cannot give the hon. member a satisfactory answer, but I will again bring his question to the attention of the minister.

[English]

Mr. Saltsman: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to direct it to the Solicitor General and it is in connection with the same subject, the use of the chemical Mace. May I ask the Solicitor General whether consideration is being given to authorizing use of the chemical Mace by the R.C.M.P.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

HALIBUT—EFFECT OF RUSSIAN TRAWLER OPERATIONS

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Is the Department of Fisheries at present conducting studies to determine the effect of Russian trawling on the supply of halibut, ocean perch and other groundfish off the coast of British Columbia?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that that question is one of urgency. If it is, the minister might like to reply.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Fisheries has carried out studies of this nature, and others are under way.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRANSPORT

CONSTRUCTION OF NORTHUMBERLAND CAUSEWAY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether, in the wake of the eloquent appeal of the Premier of Prince Edward Island, consideration is being given to finishing the Northumberland causeway?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is finished all right.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

REQUEST FOR SURVEY OF TRAIN ACCOMMODATION

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the recent downgrading of the Canadian Pacific Railway passenger train "The Canadian" by the removal of a day coach and the Vancouver-Montreal sleeper, would the minister initiate an investigation into whether or not there is adequate space for the travelling public across the nation?

Mr. Speaker: The question should be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

GUIDANCE IN PRESENTATION OF "FESTIVAL" SERIES

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State who, according to the schedule, is supposed to be here. In view of public criticism of some of the programs on the C.B.C. "Festival" series, and particularly in view of cancellation of some proposed programs on that series, is the minister prepared to offer guidance in this respect to the C.B.C.?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State is attending the constitutional conference, but I will be glad to have this question brought to his attention.

AIR TRANSPORT

WINNIPEG, MAN.—RECOGNITION IN SETTING FARES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Transport. What progress is the government making in the matter of securing recognition of Winnipeg as an international gateway with respect to air line fares?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that the question as asked is very general in nature, and I have some doubt whether it can be accepted in this form.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Dix heures.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—WITHHOLDING OF FUNDS UNTIL COMPLETION OF REVIEW

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, before you call orders of the day might I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence and ask him whether he has had a chance to look into the question that he took as notice a few days ago, as to whether or not Canada was proceeding with capital expenditures on Canadian defence bases for NATO in Europe while the present review is still under way. The minister said last week that he would look into this matter.

Hon. Leo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not think we were planning any construction. I should have thought that construction, under these conditions, would be a contribution to infrastructure, something we undertake normally. However I will look with pleasure into the specific aspect of the hon. member's question.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT SUBSTITUTING RATE PRESCRIBED BY GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

The House resumed from Monday, February 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Davis (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-151, to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, be read a third time and passed.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned at ten o'clock on Monday I had begun speaking about the serious problems facing the fishing industry of Canada and, more particularly, facing that industry in eastern Canada. I repeat, we look forward with eager anticipation to the statement the minister has promised to make before February 21. He promised to say what the government intends to do on an interim, short and long term basis to cope with the serious difficulties facing the groundfish industry and the fishing industry of eastern Canada generally.

Since the crisis came to a head last fall the minister has consulted experts and his own colleagues in cabinet, and met trade representatives and representatives of the Newfoundland government. I am sure he consulted many times the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Jamieson) who is, I am glad to say, in his seat. Because the minister has had all these consultations and meetings, we expect him to make a worth-while statement.

Perhaps the Minister of Defence Production did not actually mean what he said last Friday in St. John's, when he suggested his colleagues from Newfoundland were all talk and no action. I hope he did not mean those words; I hope they just slipped out; otherwise we may take it he is pointing an accusing finger at his own government. Surely he was suggesting, if he meant those words, that the government of which he is a member is discriminating against those constituencies and provinces which did not support the government in the last election. Perhaps he meant that members of parliament from constituencies which did not support the government ought to go home, because they are wasting their time. Because if his words are to be taken seriously, the implication is that the Liberal caucus is running the country, and that we are governed by edicts of cabinet. Personally, I do not think the minister really ment what he said when he was so critical of his Newfoundland colleagues.

Of course, we hope the minister is aware of the problems facing the Newfoundland fishing industry. We hope the Minister of Defence Production has enough influence with his colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, to make sure that the Minister of Fisheries makes his statement before February 21. The Minister of Defence Production knows how serious is the problem of our fishing industry; and there is no need to treat that problem in a partisan way.

The fact is that although the total catch for 1968 was 60 million pounds over the 1967 catch, the landed value of that catch was lower by $500,000. Therein lies the problem, and therein is the crisis facing the industry. We have all heard the story of closed fish plants, and fish plants that are contemplating having to close. In my constituency alone last year two fish plants were forced to close. At the last minute the provincial government has had to step in to avert the closing of four more plants. Is it any wonder we look forward with anticipation to the minister's statement and count the days until he makes it?

Since the minister comes from British Columbia I can well understand his enthusiasm for the bill. He knows his province has taken a great deal of advantage of this legislation. Fishermen of his province have been awarded the lion's share of all loans made under this legislation. He also knows that Newfoundland, the country's most important fishing province, for reasons still unknown to us, has not been able to take advantage of this legislation. In the last two years of the operation of the act no loans were made in Newfoundland and in New Brunswick, and only a few were made in Nova Scotia. Hardly any were made in Quebec. There must be a reason for this. There must be a reason why fishermen of British Columbia can qualify for loans under this legislation while fishermen from Newfoundland and New Brunswick cannot. Before debate finishes I hope the minister will give us the reason. We have a right to expect him to tell the house what steps he and his department propose to take to encourage the fishermen of Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Quebec to take better advantage of this legislation.

Is it any wonder we cannot get excited about the minister's proposed amendment, which would increase the maximum loan from $10,000 to $25,000? It is a matter of indifference to us whether you can borrow up to $10,000 or $25,000—but I expect it is very important for British Columbia fishermen. I suspect that is why the minister tried to introduce this amendment. I believe he has had representations from members of the fishing industry of his province in this regard—and more power to them. If they can take advantage of this legislation, we are all in favour of that. All we say is, there must be something wrong with the bill if it cannot be applied to the fishermen of Newfoundland; that there must be something wrong with its present form if it cannot be applied to the province of New Brunswick, and that there must be something wrong with the legislation if the fishermen of the Gaspé do not seem to be able to take advantage of it. I hope the minister will deal with these things before the debate closes. I hope he will make some reference to them because we have a right to know. We should not legislate for only one part of the country in this regard. This is an important industry which is practically nationwide.

• (2:50 p.m.)

The fishermen of Newfoundland are just as anxious to take advantage of this federal legislation as the fishermen of British Columbia. Could the trouble be with the approved lenders? If that is the case why doesn't the department talk to approved lenders and encourage them to make loans to fishermen? Whatever the trouble, Mr. Speaker, the legislation in its present form is of no use to us.

On second reading the minister said that perhaps the reason this legislation was not being used was because fishermen in Newfoundland were taking advantage of provincial legislation. The best advice I can get is that the provincial legislation is of no particular value right now because no loans are being made under it.

I am sorry to see the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Jamieson) has left the chamber. I had hoped that he would take part in this debate instead of being content just to speak to the Liberal party in Newfoundland. I hope he will have something meaningful to say about this bill before the debate ends.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal briefly with a portion of the minister's statement on third reading. It is to be found at page 5353 of Hansard. It is a most extraordinary statement, and many of us are baffled as to why it had to be made in the first place. I quote briefly from it:

> This proposed amendment was incorporated in a notice which I sent to the Clerk of the House on February 5, 1969. I also commended it to the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry during the course of its deliberations on Thursday, February 6, as many hon. members present know. The notice I sent to the Clerk of the House of Commons was to the effect that after Bill C-151 had been reported back to this house I would propose under Standing Order 75 the following motion—

Then he went on to read his amendment. You will note, Mr. Speaker, that his amendment went to the Clerk of the House on February 5. It is also interesting to note that the minister said he commended the amendment to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry on Thursday, February 6. Yet five or six days prior to that the minister, referring to Bill C-151 in a speech to the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union in Vancouver, on February 1, said, and I think this is worth putting in Hansard:

> You can borrow up to $25,000 from any bank, or credit union, or insurance company. And you will be able to borrow this money at a lower rate of interest—

A little earlier on he said:

> This act, which has recently been up-dated, is geared to finance loans of up to $25,000.

He did not say that this was proposed, or that it was planned. He said, "is geared to finance loans of up to $25,000." Yet when he spoke there was no amendment before the house.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I believe the document to which the hon. member is referring is prefaced with the statement "notes for an address" to be given at the annual meeting of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union in Vancouver. These were notes, and I actually used terms which were appropriate to the circumstances. I said the legislation was under consideration. Certainly the fishermen there were very well aware of it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether this is a question of privilege. In any event the hon. member who has the floor should be allowed to continue his speech.

Mr. McGrath: All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that this is the speech which was circulated by the minister's office with the minister's approval after he made the speech, and if he had any corrections to make to it he could have called it in or sent the corrections out. To the best of my knowledge no such corrections were made and consequently we must accept this document as an accurate report of what he said in his speech.

I point out that the minister commended the amendment to the standing committee on Thursday, February 6, six days after he made his speech in Vancouver, six days after he referred to the amendment, and six days after he referred to it in such a way as to indicate that this bill had already been passed. I point out to the minister that the bill is still before this house, that it is not yet legislation, that it is not yet law nor will it be until it has received third reading in this house, until it has passed all stages in the other place and receives Royal Assent.

Notwithstanding the fact that the government has a majority in this house I submit that we are not here to rubber stamp legislation at the whim of the government, nor are we here to act as trained seals at the whim of the government. It strikes me as utterly incredible that the minister did not know on February 1 that his proposed amendment was out of order. On the contrary, he spoke at that time as if the amendment raising the limit to $25,000 had not only been accepted but passed by parliament. Where were the law officers of the Crown at that time? Where were the minister's own officials? Where were the minister's cabinet colleagues?

Did the minister not ask for advice on the amendment? Surely he must have consulted with somebody between the time he introduced the resolution in the house on September 16 and second reading of the bill on January 21, and his first public reference to increasing the limit to $25,000 on February 1 when he spoke in Vancouver?

Surely during all that time he must have discussed it with somebody, or could it be that the minister in his characteristically self-assured manner discussed it with no one, consulted no one? In any event, from the time this legislation was introduced in this house on Friday, December 20, right up until the time of second reading, right up to the time of the committee study on February 6, during all that time it seems that the minister not once checked with his colleagues in cabinet, for example with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), or with the law officers of the Crown to see if his amendment was in order. I think it is fair to say that we only got some action on this following the minister's speech in Vancouver on February 1. I think that the minister owes the house an explanation as to his conduct on this whole matter. If the minister is at fault let him get up in this house and say so.

In my view he will have to make a better explanation of the situation than the statement he made in the house on Monday night. The minister owes us an explanation before he can expect us to consent to third reading of the bill. We all know that the house is finding its way through the new rules. We all know, and greatly respect, the difficulties of Your Honour in this regard. Yet it would appear to me that the simple way out of this embarrassing situation would be for the minister to ask for unanimous consent to proceed with his amendment or withdraw the bill. However, he elected not to do so. Obviously, he had some doubt concerning the course of action he was taking because he raised the doubt himself. What did the minister have to say about this? I think it is worth referring to his speech of Monday night in which he mentioned this matter. He said, as recorded at page 5354 of Hansard:

> There is, however, another and important reservation. I am advised that the proposed amendment is not acceptable on another and altogether different ground for reasons which are only now becoming clear because they relate to the new rules—

Then, the minister goes on to say:

> I now find that any amendment of the character to which I alluded in the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, or such as I have read into the record, would not be acceptable because the intent of the amendment is sufficiently different from the main provisions of Bill C-151—

Apparently, the minister now is setting himself up as an authority on the new rules because he did not say who gave him this advice. The minister states that the intent of the amendment is sufficiently different from the main provisions of Bill C-151 as to disqualify it under our new rules. Yet, in my view, Bill C-151 is amending legislation; it contains an amendment to a statute that is already on the statute books. It would appear that the new rules would permit an additional amendment to be made to the same bill.

It would seem to me also that it would be reasonable for the minister to ask for unanimous consent to withdraw the bill, then bring it back with a new amendment. But for reasons which we find difficult to understand, he has not done so. What difference would one more amendment make? Is the minister afraid that in doing this he might expose the fact he made a serious error? Everybody makes mistakes. Even the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) makes mistakes, as does his colleague the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis). The minister is not infallible. All he had to do was admit that he made a mistake, a colossal boner, and then withdraw the bill. But rather, he insists on proceeding with the introduction of a new bill. He will take up the time of the house with another bill, whereas he could have saved the time of the house by withdrawing this bill and then introducing it in new form. In so doing, he would have been assured of the co-operation of all members of the house in the interest of expedition and saving time.

Mr. Perrault: Nonsense.

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) is eloquent in interjecting from that position in which he is most eloquent.

In any event, we sincerely hope the minister will reconsider the ridiculous position he is in before this debate concludes; that he will withdraw the bill and bring it back with the new amendments included so that the house can get on with its business. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we on this side of the house will give him our full co-operation in seeing to it that the bill is expeditiously passed through the house. That is the least the minister can do. Certainly before this debate concludes, he owes the house an explanation.

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the debate on this particular bill with considerable surprise. Members on the other side of the house tell us, first, this bill only applies to British Columbia, and then they criticize it because of this fact. I wonder whether they have forgotten that the province of British Columbia does not set aside the same funds for fishermen as are set aside for the fishermen in the maritime provinces. I have no desire at this time to tell the maritime members, particularly the Newfoundland members, about the provincial schemes which exist in their provinces; but I believe it is well worth pointing out that the British Columbia fishermen are forced to borrow money from the commercial lending institutions. This may or may not be the case in the maritime provinces. I think these provincial lending agencies are able to take care of the needs of the fishermen in the maritime provinces and therefore it is not necessary for them to go to the commercial market as is the case in respect of so many of my constituents in British Columbia.

The figures given by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), as well as by the previous speaker, indicate that only a few fishermen in the maritimes are making use of this money. I think they should realize that the reason for this lies right in their own provinces. They should find out exactly what is going on in the fishing industry in their provinces before they give misinformation to the members here.

This bill is a relatively simple one, and has one objection. The minister made clear to hon. members in the house, before the fisheries committee, and outside the house, his intention to bring in another amending bill which would raise the upper limits on the amount of money which could be borrowed under this particular guarantee, but that is not in this bill. It is perfectly clear that in this bill we are raising the rate of interest in order to allow more money to become available to the west coast fishermen, and fishermen elsewhere in Canada, if they cannot borrow money from the provincial agencies.

I think the suggestion of hon. members opposite that this bill be withdrawn and another amendment be included, to make an omnibus bill, is absurd. I think they should get together with some of their colleagues who are anxious to break up other bills such as bill C-150 which they suggest are omnibus bills. Here, there is a very good reason for two bills. If there is any criticism of the minister, it can only be that he is too eager to assist the fishermen and bring forward good amendments to the legislation. There is no question that if we follow the suggestions of the opposition members on this matter and withdraw this bill we will delay the date at which private money will become available for the fishermen. It is perfectly clear that the objective of the opposition is to hold up this bill. It is perfectly clear that their objective is to prevent more money getting into the hands of the fishermen, so that they can outfit boats for the summer.

Mr. McGrath: Nonsense.

Mr. Anderson: In my opinion, this is a disgrace.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member in his remarks suggested we were deliberately trying to hold up this legislation in order to prevent the fishermen taking advantage of it. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is imputing motives and the hon. member should withdraw those remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. As hon. members know, it is not a practice of this house to impute motives. It would appear to me however that we are really more in an area of debate than privilege and I would suggest we hear the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson).

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I think that what the hon. member just said was said in a flagrant disregard for the rules of the house. He can, I suggest, state what the effect of holding up this legislation might be, but that is not what he stated. He stated that the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and other members in the opposition were holding this up for a certain purpose. I think he ought to withdraw what he said, because it was completely improper.

Mr. Crouse: I, too, wish to speak to the point of order. The hon. member served on the fisheries committee and he has been made aware of our efforts to expedite this legislation and our efforts to put into the legislation the very words the minister uttered during his speech on the west coast. We were barred from this action because of the fact we are not on that side of the house. It is not factually correct for the hon. member to impute this motive to members of our party. We have, during every stage of the deliberations on this bill, endeavoured to expedite it in accordance with the minister's stated purpose. I ask the hon. member to withdraw his remarks.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Speaker, there is another point of order. I believe you had made the ruling that there was no question of privilege or point of order and the debate should proceed. Secondly, —

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East originally rose on a question of privilege. My understanding was that the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) rose on a point of order. My remarks dealt with the original question of privilege. I suggest that it is probably in the interests of the house and fishermen generally that we hear the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson).

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I was not trying to impute anything—

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not exactly sure of the disposition you have made of my point of order. My specific point of order was that the hon. member was in breach of the rules of the house. I do not rise easily on this sort of thing, but he did just that. I did not understand Your Honour's ruling. If it is that the hon. member did not breach the rules of the house, I want that stated because I intend to make an appeal.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. My remarks on the question of privilege or the point made by the hon. member for St. John's East were intended to agree that it is not a practice of this house to impute motives. It was not my impression that this was what the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich had done. If he did so, I did not understand that. I was interrupted for a moment during that period of the debate. I am sure the hon. member, like other members, will observe the practices of the house. If he has done what has been intimated, he might like to withdraw his remarks.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly quite happy to withdraw any suggestion of motivation. I will put the hon. members remarks down to ignorance on the part of members on the other side. I certainly think the member who rose on this particular question of privilege or point of order—

Mr. Aiken: Don't be so stupid. This is a point of order.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Don't you be so stupid.

Mr. Aiken: Keep your eyes open, and see what is going on.

Mr. Anderson: The hon. member who spoke earlier suggested, in fact, what would happen as a result of the withdrawal of this bill. He referred to the withdrawal of this important piece of legislation for the fishermen of Canada, and he stated something to the effect that what would happen—

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Anderson: —would be a delay in the implementation of this measure to the detriment—

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I did not say what the hon. member has just suggested. I stated that it is clear he has the right to comment on the remarks of the hon. member for St. John's East. I can make no objection to that. He can call him anything he likes, but he cannot do what he did; that is to suggest that the purpose of the objections raised by that hon. member was to adversely affect the fishermen involved.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, as I have already stated, I am quite willing to withdraw any imputation that may have been made as far as the purpose is concerned, but the hon. member stated flatly sir, that the withdrawal of this bill would delay the implementation of this legislation, at a time when fishermen could have obtained more money under this legislation.

Mr. McGrath: He did not say that. That is not true.

Mr. Aiken: Once again, I did not say anything of the sort.

Mr. Anderson: Let me refer to what the other speaker said. I will accept your words, but I have grave doubts—

Mr. McGrath: Address the chair.

Mr. Anderson: Let me refer to the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), who said he was eager to expedite this piece of legislation. The hon. member sitting behind him talked about a delay as a result of withdrawing this bill from the house at this time. Here is obviously another rift in the policy of the opposition in respect of this bill. Personally, I find it difficult to understand why members take this attitude because if we withdraw this bill we will delay approval of this excellent amendment.

The hon. member for South Shore said he was very keen to expedite this bill, yet the hon. member for St. John's East stated he would like this bill withdrawn. I cannot think of anything more contradictory than those two statements coming from hon. members from the same area of Canada. They have taken diametrically opposed positions in respect of what should be done about this bill.

Mr. Crouse: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, it was only yesterday that I asked the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) whether he intended to withdraw the bill in view of the confusion that had been created by his statement on the west coast. It was our purpose to have the bill withdrawn and re-introduced. This action is necessary as a result of the bumbling and inefficiency of the minister himself.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, we now have the hon. member for South Shore and the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka confusing the issue as to what they actually said a moment ago. I simply state that this bill is a good bill; it embodies a good objective. I find it strange that the hon. member for South Shore is endeavouring to object to a bill which is designed to make more money available to fishermen who wish to borrow from commercial lending institutions.

As far as the other aspect goes regarding the upper limit on the amount that can be borrowed, the minister has stated that he is determined to bring in another amendment as soon as possible to cover this situation. I fail to see why we should hold up one good measure in order to get another. I think we should go ahead with this provision and put it into the act. This will put more money in the hands of the fishermen. Very shortly, we will be able to bring another bill before the house which will raise the upper limit on the amount that can be borrowed under the terms of the act.

I do not think there is anything very difficult about this bill. Hon. members opposite from the maritimes, I think, are confusing the matter when they continue to talk about this bill not applying in that area. The reason is perfectly obvious. The provinces have funds available at a very low rate of interest—lower than commercial rates—which fishermen are making use of in that area. If, as has been suggested, the provinces are no longer going to make this money available, certainly the fishermen of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and other provinces in the east can make use of this act by borrowing money from commercial lending institutions, just as the fishermen of British Columbia have done for many years. This bill does not apply exclusively to British Columbia; it is applicable to the whole of Canada. If these fishermen find that another source of money has dried up there is no reason in the world for them not using the provisions of this act to obtain money from other lending institutions.

I think everything is fairly clear as to what will be available under the provisions of this bill. The bill deals only with the rate of interest. It should be perfectly easy for hon. members of the opposition, who are present—and they are few—to resolve their own differences of opinion. However, they would be more constructive if they made suggestions for improvements. Such suggestions would be more acceptable than the statements they have made today.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I cannot let this bill go by without making at least a few brief comments. It is similar to some of the agricultural bills with which we dealt earlier this session, in that it provides more capital funds for the fishing industry but at a higher rate of interest. At the time the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) introduced his bills, I tried to point out that the problem of many farmers was not the need of a larger infusion of capital into the industry but a need for operating funds. We were not very successful in getting the Minister of Agriculture to accept our argument in this respect.

The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) has introduced a similar bill. I admit that the fisheries industry can probably use larger amounts of capital and can take advantage of increased capital that is made available to it, but I suspect that this industry also needs an increased operating fund in order to pay the higher interest rate to be charged, if nothing else. It may well be that with an increased source of capital, the fishing industry could operate more efficiently and afford to pay increased interest rates.

Since I came to this house last fall I have noticed that there has been a deliberate—perhaps I should not impute motives to the government—but there has been a consistent, at least, approach to solving problems in this way. When any industry has a problem, the government says: Let us lend it some money. We have not been considering the operating problems of the industries concerned.

I do not know whether the minister is allowed to discuss the matter at this stage, but I would like to register a protest in this respect. I do not think that all the problems of industries can be solved by merely lending more money. Serious consideration must be given to the income aspect of these industries.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, the remarks of my hon. friend opposite a moment ago, and the confusion that arose therefrom, could very well have been avoided if the bill under discussion had been properly drafted and presented.

Mr. McGrath: He is not even in his seat.

Mr. Carter: Obviously, this bill has been sloppily drafted. The minister's speech in Vancouver on February 1, wherein he made certain statements which almost completely contradict the intent of the bill, is an indication that confusion still reigns in the Liberal government. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the speeches made on this bill and do not mind confessing that I am becoming more frustrated each day. I must confess, too, that I find it extremely difficult to reconcile the contents of this bill with the statement of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) in Vancouver on February 1.

As my colleague the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has already pointed out, in the course of the speech the minister made in Vancouver on February 1 he stated the following when referring to this bill, Bill C-151:

> This act which has recently been updated is geared to finance loans up to $25,000.

In the same speech he said that fishermen would be able to borrow this amount of money at a lower rate of interest than is available to anyone else in Canada, that is, anyone other than the government of Canada itself. The minister went on to say that the interest rate would be geared to the interest rate paid by the government of Canada on its long term loans. If Ottawa paid 6 per cent, the fishermen would be asked to pay 7 per cent. If the interest rate on federal borrowings falls to 5 per cent, the rate charged under this act will be 1 per cent higher. The difference will be 1 per cent above the interest rate paid by the federal government on its borrowings. That is what the minister said in Vancouver, but I do not see any reference to this formula in the bill before us.

Mr. McGrath: The minister is showing his usual contempt for parliament.

Mr. Carter: I do not see in this bill any reference to lifting the ceiling on the amount to be lent. The minister has suggested that the ceiling will be lifted from $10,000 to $25,000. Therefore, I do not think that we on this side of the house can be accused of trying to hold up the bill when we ask that there be included in it those things the minister has stated. We have no desire whatever to make a liar of the Minister of Fisheries.

An hon. Member: You will not be able to, either.

Mr. Carter: The minister made a statement in Vancouver, and it is our great desire to see put into practice those things which he mentioned. We presume that what the minister said was correct and that he was speaking in his capacity as Minister of Fisheries. The minister said fishermen will be able to borrow $25,000 and the interest rate will be just 1 per cent above that paid by the government of Canada on its borrowings. We expect this principle to be included in this legislation. We expect that legislation will be drafted and put before the house to encompass the minister's suggestion and recommendations.

The minister made another interesting remark, namely, that the provisions of this act will be similar to those with regard to loans made under the National Housing Act, whereby people can borrow money with which to buy or build a new home. This is poor consolation to me, and I suppose to fishermen generally, certainly those on the east coast. I presume this measure also applies to fishermen on the west coast. I say this because the ceiling on the interest rate has been lifted from 5 per cent to an amount to be designated by the Governor in Council.

I believe that on loans under the National Housing Act, the interest rate is now 9⅝ per cent. Surely, we do not expect fishermen to pay an interest rate of 9⅝ per cent on loans made under this legislation. I hope the minister will clarify this point, because I am sure it is a matter of great concern to prospective borrowers from this fund.

In my opinion there are two areas of inconsistency in the legislation as far as the Minister of Fisheries is concerned. One is that there is no provision to increase the ceiling on loans made under the act from the present amount of $10,000. The second is that there is no provision in the bill whereby the government will set the interest rate to be charged on money borrowed under the legislation at 1 per cent higher than that which the government pays for its borrowings, although this was suggested by the Minister of Fisheries in his address in Vancouver on February 1.

I must say, in all fairness, that I do not think the minister deliberately tried to mislead the house. At least, I hope not. I would not like to think he would deliberately say one thing here and another thing for the benefit of his friends and the fishermen of British Columbia. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister will clarify this point when he closes the debate.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I am quite happy for the fishermen of British Columbia, who are obviously in a position to avail themselves of these loans. But as far as the east coast is concerned, particularly my province of Newfoundland, this bill is simply another empty gesture on the part of this government. So far as the fishermen of the east coast, and particularly of Newfoundland, are concerned this legislation does nothing for them. In my opinion this is a cruel bill to the average Newfoundland fisherman because it tantalizes him with a prospect of something without holding out any hope of achieving it under existing conditions. Legislation such as this, carrying as it does the authority and prestige of the federal government, is nothing more than an open invitation to our east coast fishermen to plunge into debt over their heads. As I have said before, what the east coast fishermen need is not legislation such as this but legislation which would help them tackle the root of the problems that beset this industry as well as their own social problems.

Before we can honestly extend loan facilities to the people of my province, I think we must first bring them up to a position where they can usefully employ these loans. The government should devote its attention to assisting our east coast fishermen to improve their methods of operations, their fishing techniques and their means of marketing. What we need most is legislation that would assist our east coast fishermen and help to bring them into the twentieth century.

Since this parliament convened in September, my colleagues and I have, on numerous occasions, brought to the attention of the government and of the Minister of Fisheries in particular the desperate need for immediate assistance if we are to stave off the complete collapse of the Newfoundland fishing industry. We have repeatedly impressed on the government the importance of that industry to the economic life of the east coast of Canada, and in particular of Newfoundland, where almost one quarter of our population derives a living from that source, either directly or indirectly.

Despite what the previous speaker said a moment ago, I think that the uselessness of the present legislation in so far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned has been pointed out in a report that has been tabled for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968 dealing with loans made under this legislation. In British Columbia 147 loans were made totalling almost $1 million, and I say more power to them if they can avail themselves of these loans and find a way to repay them. In Nova Scotia six loans were made, totalling a little over $150,000. In Prince Edward Island a number of small loans were made which totalled a little over $100,000. However, Newfoundland—the biggest fishing area in Canada and certainly a province whose economy is affected by the fishing industry more than any other province of Canada—did not receive one loan during that period. Indeed, since the inception of this legislation, out of a total of 2,586 loans totalling a little over $6 million, Newfoundland has received 18 loans which amounted to $23,000.

I ask you in all sincerity what further proof this government needs that this legislation is nothing more than a farce. It is completely useless and does nothing but make a real mockery of the fishing industry and the fishing problems on the east coast, and particularly in Newfoundland.

My colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) made reference to the fact that all the people of Newfoundland, as well as those on the east coast, are anxiously awaiting a promised statement from the Minister of Fisheries wherein we hope he will outline the government's plan to assist the east coast fishing industry. I think the minister announced in this house that a statement will be forthcoming within a week or two. I can tell him now that in our opinion it is a very important announcement. We hope that the statement will not be delayed much longer, because many people are awaiting it. I do not wish to overdramatize the seriousness of the situation that exists on the east coast and in Newfoundland, but I would say that the future of the fishing industry in my province—and I presume the same situation exists in the other east coast provinces—is hanging in the balance.

If this government elects to ignore or to turn a deaf ear to our pleas, in my opinion the entire fishing industry in Newfoundland will collapse. You can imagine what a terrible indictment of the Canadian nation, and particularly of the present government, this will be. Unless this government comes forward with a worthwhile and practical plan to revitalize the fishing industry on the east coast and in Newfoundland, unless they come forward with a plan that will give our people a chance to attain the status of first class citizens, unless they can be given a chance to earn a decent living for themselves and their families and be able to stand tall and walk straight as first class Canadians, I suggest that the union between our two countries which was consumated on April 1, 1949 will be judged as a terrible mistake. I sincerely hope that this will not happen.

I made reference, as did my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East, to a speech that was made by the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Jamieson) at a certain ball in St. John's. In Newfoundland we have learned not to take too seriously speeches made at these Liberal balls, especially by the Minister of Defence Production, but I hope he will clarify the remark which he made that the six Newfoundland members of the house were doing a lot of talking and getting little done. I hope he will indicate to the house, to us and to our people, that he is not expressing the feelings of his colleagues in cabinet; that they do not intend to penalize our constituents because they had the good sense to vote the way they did on June 25. Ordinarily, a statement such as the one made by the minister would worry me somewhat but, as I said, one does not take too seriously statements made in Newfoundland by certain people. However, I would like the minister to say something to the effect that he is not expressing the feelings of his cabinet colleagues and that they do not intend to penalize our people because they voted the way they did on June 25.

I will expect the minister, when he sums up at the end of the debate, to explain why he would say one thing in British Columbia and another thing in this chamber in connection with the bill we are now discussing. I hope, also, that he will make the statement which he promised to make with regard to the government's plan to assist fishermen on the east coast. I cannot tell you how important that is, Mr. Speaker. The economic life of our province depends on the fisheries and on the assistance which may be forthcoming from the federal government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I see the minister rising. I would point out that the hon. gentleman has already spoken on third reading and, according to our rules, he has no right to reply at this stage. But if the house is prepared to give unanimous consent—

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like to answer several of the questions which have been raised by hon. members, particularly by those on the other side of the house. Words like "useless", "a farce", and "a mockery" have been applied not only to the bill before the house but also to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act itself.

It is true that the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act will only help fishermen who are quite capable of fishing commercially, operating economically and surviving without a substantial subsidy. It does not provide a subsidy to anyone. It makes it easier for ordinary commercial establishments such as banks, credit unions and trust companies to lend money to viable fisheries operations. It is aimed at individual fishermen. It does not make loans available to companies. Since the act came into effect in 1955, roughly 2,400 fishermen have seen fit to take advantage of it because they were able to get loans on better terms and under better conditions than they could in any other way.

It has been pointed out that the large majority of these loans has been made to fishermen on Canada's west coast. This is mainly due to the fact that there is no provincial loans board in British Columbia providing money at lower rates than are available under the federal act. It is also due to the fact that the fishermen on the west coast are not as heavily subsidized as are fishermen on the east coast.

The amendments proposed in Bill C-151 were outlined by me in Vancouver. I said to the fishermen in Vancouver that they would be able, within the next month or two, to borrow money through a wide range of commercial sources at lower interest rates than those paid by the largest corporations in the country. In a month or two they would be able to borrow at 7½ per cent, which is less than the 8 per cent to 8½ per cent which B.C. Packers have to pay for new money and only one per cent more than the cost of money to the federal government itself, which will be guaranteeing every loan made under the amended Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

This is what the act does. This is what the people of Canada are doing collectively. By lending their credit, they make loans available at lower rates of interest than would otherwise be charged. This is the main advantage of obtaining a loan under the act.

If a fisherman is operating in the Atlantic region he would be well advised to go to the provincial government, to one of the fisheries loans boards there which provide money at rates of interest which vary all the way from zero in the case of Quebec to a maximum of 6½ per cent. These rates are less than those which will be charged in the near future when Bill C-151 becomes effective.

The provincial governments are able, through their lending agencies in the Atlantic area, to make loans available at preferable interest rates partly because of assistance they receive from the federal government. For example, Newfoundland gets, I believe, more than 60 per cent of its revenue directly from the federal government so, at its discretion, it can make loans available at lower interest rates to fishermen if it chooses. This is something each province should be free to do. In the case of the maritime provinces and Quebec, all are recipients of equalization grants from the federal government. They choose to do this sort of thing, but in my view it is not what the federal government should be doing, discriminating, in one part of Canada as opposed to another. I believe we should pass laws in this chamber which apply uniformly across the country and which bear equally on all Canadians. Then, through equalization grants and other broad arrangements we can give provinces the opportunity to do what they like in their own areas. The existence of special provincial arrangements is the main reason why fishermen in the Atlantic region have not taken advantage of the act to the same extent as have fishermen on the west coast.

I have undertaken to introduce another bill dealing with different clauses in the basic act as soon as I possibly can. This bill will certainly deal with the maximum amount of the loan available to an individual fisherman. I understand that once Bill C-151 has been passed by this house in principle on second reading it is no longer possible to make an amendment on the report stage or on third reading with respect to matters which fall outside the specific clauses of the measure. Those clauses did not include the provision in the basic act which dealt with ceilings.

Mr. McGrath: Would the minister not agree that this could have been done by unanimous consent? We are dealing with new rules and we are just feeling our way.

Mr. Davis: I am not expert on the rules. I sought advice from the proper authorities and they told me it was not possible. I accepted that advice. If I had not done so, and if I had attempted to bring in an amendment of the sort to which the hon. member has referred, I am sure I would have been ruled out of order by Mr. Speaker. So I am trying to do the right thing and bring in a bill incorporating important and advantageous changes in the act as soon as possible; I am committed personally to bringing in another bill which will include the clause dealing with the ceiling on individual loans.

I do not see there is anything to be gained by delaying the passage of this bill. At least, money will be available at rates of interest acceptable to the commercial establishments involved and money will begin to flow again. That much, at least, will be accomplished. In Newfoundland and the maritimes a wider range of institutions will be involved.

If money is available at better rates and on better terms from the provincial institutions, that is all to the good. But I think my department must take an initiative itself by publicizing the availability of loans under the federal act. The Department of Fisheries must itself endeavour to make the existence of this privilege known; it must make use of the fisheries officers, who are scattered across the country, to pass this information along.

I think this covers the questions which have been raised since I made my initial statement on third reading, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crouse: Would the minister permit a question? In view of the time limits imposed on members of parliament in discussing legislation, may I ask the minister whether there is any valid reason for not incorporating the higher ceiling in this bill when it was prepared for presentation to the house. It seems to me that this would have been a much better course to follow, instead of making two bites at the one cherry.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Davis: The hon. member does have a good point. He did say, however, that I prepared the legislation. I did not prepare it; it was prepared some considerable time ago in the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson).

I now think we should make some other changes in the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. As a result of bringing this bill before the house and discussing the particular clause which I referred to the authorities we have improved our position in the government's timetable.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house would the minister consider a further question. Would he tell the house what steps his department proposes to take to make the provisions of the bill applicable, or more acceptable if you like, to the provinces of Newfoundland and New Brunswick? I should like the minister to comment on this. It appears to me that it is the approved lenders who are at fault in that they discourage this kind of lending to fishermen. Perhaps some initiative could be taken to encourage approved lenders to make loans under this act. After all, it is a very serious matter that the province of Newfoundland cannot avail itself of this legislation, and I am wondering what the minister's department is going to do about it.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the fault lies partly with the government in that we have not publicized this legislation enough. Perhaps it also lies to a greater extent with the commercial lending institutions. For example, I understand that in Newfoundland there are not that many branch banks generally scattered throughout the province in the way that they are, for example, in British Columbia. So that as a result of limiting the legislation to banks only there are insufficient bank managers or facilities available in Newfoundland, to publicize and grant loans.

However, there is no hiding the fact that basically these are commercial rates of interest. The only difference between normal commercial rates and these rates is that these have the backing of the people of Canada, which does effectively reduce the rate to fishermen. But it does not reduce it to the degree it would have to be reduced under current circumstances to be of real interest to many fishermen in Newfoundland. I do not pretend that this particular act, especially in present times of high interest rates, will do a great deal for the fishermen in Newfoundland, because it will not.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

AGRICULTURE

COMPENSATION FOR CONTAMINATION BY PESTICIDE RESIDUE—REPORT STAGE

The house proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-155, to provide compensation to farmers whose agricultural products are contaminated by pesticide residue, and to provide for appeals from compensation awards, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar) moved:

That clause 9(1) of the said bill be deleted and that the following be substituted therefor:

"9(1) Every person who, or whose employee or agent, violates any provision of this act is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction."

He said: Mr. Speaker, speaking in support of this amendment may I say that I think the penalty proposed here is more severe than is required. Clause 9(1)(a) provides that any person who violates any provision of the act has committed an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years. I suggest that paragraph (b) provides adequate enforcement of the law.

In this day and age I do not think we should provide under this type of bill that a person be put in jail for two years, be branded as a criminal, photographed and fingerprinted, as would be the case under paragraph (a). During the committee sittings I asked why a penalty of this severity was incorporated in the bill. I could quote the answers from the evidence, but I do not think that is necessary. In general, the reply was that two years was the minimum term on an indictable offence. Another answer I received, and which I thought was quite irrelevant, was that incarceration would be in a federal penitentiary, not a provincial jail. I got the impression that this sort of provision was standard form in this type of legislation, but this does not seem to me a sufficient answer.

In our discussions of the omnibus bill, we are carefully considering punishment and conviction and trying to relate the punishment to the behaviours and motives of the person who falls afoul of the law. In the bill we are considering this afternoon—actually we are considering two bills, C-155 and another bill to come before us—we are considering measures that even a few years ago would not have been necessary. However, they are required now because we are using pesticides in agriculture.

These pesticides are widely used in city and urban communities to control such ordinary insects as mosquitos and house flies. In the process of controlling them, there is the danger that people might use products they should not use, or use them inadvisedly. In addition, it is possible that manufacturers or distributors may release products inadvisedly. I doubt that anybody, whether he be user or manufacturer, would use or manufacture any product that he thought would damage the community at large or be hazardous to people in the vicinity. Under the spur of a profit motive, of course, a manufacturer will try to put out a product which will bring him a profit and which will be accepted in volume by the community at large. This is the sort of thing we are dealing with under this bill. I find it altogether unreasonable that farmers, manufacturers and distributors should be dealt with on the same basis as those who have committed assault, or robbed others.

A point was raised to this effect: an inspector might be abused while carrying out his duties under the act. From my interpretation of the information Mr. Newman gave the standing committee, an inspector who is assaulted or who suffers any injury has available to him his remedy in law. I confess I am at a disadvantage in presenting my argument since I have no training in law. All the same, my arguments are based on common sense. I do not think we ought to contemplate including in the provisions of this bill the punishment the government has included in it. In our society, unfortunately, we have to control individuals to a much greater extent than was necessary some years ago. It may be necessary in future to impose severe punishments on those contravening the provisions of the bill. I do not know that it will be necessary, but neither does anyone else. At present I am in this position. Nothing that was said in committee or elsewhere convinced me that it is necessary to proceed against an offender under this bill by way of indictment and punish him by imposing a penalty of two years imprisonment. In Saskatchewan, we have had for a long time a number of weed control acts. I know, from personal observation, that when people were proceeded against for allowing obnoxious weeds to grow on their property it was touch and go whether they were guilty of anything other than—to use the vernacular—stumbling around and being incompetent.

I think those who will be proceeded against under this act may fall within that category. Certainly, I do not think any hon. member would wish to see a farmer, manufacturer or distributor charged with an indictable offence, photographed and fingerprinted. I, therefore, submit that hon. members ought to support the amendment. If in future the government feels it necessary to introduce a provision allowing for harsh punishment, well and good. But until then, let us take the punishment provision out of the bill.

On January 28, as reported in Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Agriculture at page 373, Mr. Newman, who is listed as a legal adviser, said:

> I believe that the provisions of the Identification of Criminals Act would come into effect and that the police would have the right to have the accused photographed and fingerprinted because he was charged with an indictable offence.

This is taking the matter too far. Farmers should not be so treated. We were told it was unlikely that such action would be taken. If that is so, why have the punishment provision in the bill? At page 381 of the same committee report the deputy minister, Mr. Williams, is reported as saying:

> My understanding is that after this act is passed he will solely have this act, because he has no rights under any other act.

I will not labour the point, because it is fairly simple and easy to understand. The minister and the government have the right to bring new provisions before the house; but we are dealing with pesticides here and we ought to make certain that the rights of the individual are not impaired. We should not fall back on procedures reserved for other offences. It must be remembered that we are trying to control the use of chemicals and before considering this punishment we ought to consider what methods we might adopt to persuade individuals not to infringe the provisions of this bill. Civil action might be contemplated. If someone disobeys the law, then his product ought to be seized, perhaps. Controls might be imposed on products manufactured in plants. Similar steps might be taken with regard to farmers. But do not approach manufacturers, farmers or distributors on the basis that if they disobey this law they are criminals and should be punished.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak for a few moments to the amendment put forward by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. Hon. members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition are prepared to support his amendment.

I wish to speak about the workings of the committee that dealt with this measure and to say why it ought not to have been necessary to bring this amendment before the house at this time. We are operating under the new rules, Mr. Speaker, and at present we are dealing with one of the first pieces of legislation brought before the Standing Committee on Agriculture to be dealt with in accordance with the new rules. In that committee we were favoured, as in the past, by presentations of witnesses from the Department of Agriculture. They were called before the committee and answered all questions put to them by committee members about the matter being considered at that time. In fairness, we must pay special tribute to those officers of the department, not only for the concise and intelligent manner in which they answered all questions, but also for their patience in trying to assist us in every possible way to get at the root of the matter before us.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks with regard to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and the part he played in the proceedings, even though there is no definite provision in the new rules that a minister must be in attendance at committee hearings. Over the past number of years it has been a bone of contention with members of standing committees that usually a minister appeared to make an official statement, then left and his departmental officials had the responsibility for the rest of the proceedings. These officials were unable to answer questions on policy and were compelled to stay strictly within the terms of the legislation or the departmental estimates, as the case might have been. We in the opposition have always felt this placed an unfair burden on the departmental officials. We were agreeably surprised to find that whenever it was possible, the Minister of Agriculture was inclined to appear before our committee, answer all questions directed to him, and speak on behalf of the government that he represents and the department that he has the honour to head.

Having said that, I would like to deal with the actual activity of the committee itself. I do not feel that it is necessary for an amendment of this type to appear before the House of Commons during discussion of the bill at the report stage. I cast no reflection on the hon. member who brought in the amendment. As a matter of fact, I commend him for his action, but if the standing committees of the house are to perform the duties that are expected of them then we should be able to solve differences of opinion in regard to the legislation before us within the committees. We should be able to introduce amendments, arrive at a consensus, so that the report to the house would deal with the very best piece of legislation a committee is able to provide for the citizens of the country.

Why was it necessary for this amendment to come before the house? In my opinion, it is the result of the partisan approach of government members to legislation in committees. I say this in a kindly way because I am sure all committee members are anxious to do the best job they can for the people they represent, for the country as a whole, and for their parties. I note that perhaps a lot of the difficulty in this instance was due to the fact that many government members on the committee were not old members of the house—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, and I am anxious to allow him as much leeway as possible in view of the fact that we are operating under new rules. I am sure the house would be interested in his comments, but it is a rule of the house that a member when speaking on an amendment should restrict his remarks to the amendment itself. I do not want to be unnecessarily harsh in the application of this rule, but I would ask the hon. member to come to the exact point before the house as quickly as possible.

Mr. Danforth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Your point is very well taken. I am sure I will have an opportunity on third reading of the bill to enlarge upon my contention in this regard. But, Mr. Speaker, I must contend that had the committee proceeded with its work in the fashion that every member expected, it would not have been necessary for us to deal with this amendment at this time. But since we were unable to proceed with the amendment in committee we, in this party must support the amendment at this stage. As the hon. member who preceded me so ably pointed out, it was not the intention of the government officials who drafted this bill, and I do not believe it was the government's intention, to make it mandatory that anyone breaking the provisions of this bill with respect to the use of chemicals in the production of agricultural products be charged with an indictable offence.

The use of pesticides and insecticides is bound to extend as new chemicals and preparations are discovered. There will be different methods used to apply pesticides and insecticides. This field of work will grow and grow. There will be many new methods used to apply chemicals. More and more individuals will be involved. Manufacturing processes will become more extensive. Applicator machines will grow in size and complication. By its very nature, this whole industry is bound to increase in size and complexity.

Although provision is made for the use of discretion with respect to launching criminal or civil actions, we think the indictable offence aspect should be eliminated from the bill. We believe that the summary conviction approach can provide the necessary protection that we all seek through this particular measure.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) is the same one that was moved in committee and defeated. I do not challenge his right to move it now, or to give notice that he would move it. However, I think the explanations that were given in committee should have persuaded him that many of the remarks he made in committee, and indeed many that he made in the house, this afternoon, were completely irrelevant to the bill.

The offences that could be created under Bill C-155 have nothing to do with the way that a farmer applies pesticides to his crops. That is dealt with in another bill. Of course, the bill provides that in order to claim compensation the farmer must have used the pesticides in accordance with the recommendations on the label, and that sort of thing. The argument that under the terms of this bill a farmer could be charged with an indictable offence because of having inadvertently misused chemicals is simply not valid.

I had thought that was made clear to the hon. member and members of the committee when we were before the committee. However, the reason for including this provision in the bill, as is the case in respect of federal statutes of a similar nature is that we feel it is desirable that there exist an option to try offences by summary conviction or by indictment. If the proposed amendment should pass, it would be possible to proceed only by way of a summary conviction for an offence under this bill. As the hon. member knows, the maximum penalty fur such an offence is limited by the Criminal Code to six months' imprisonment or a fine of $500 or both. In the case of corporations an increased fine would be possible but only to the extent of $1,500.

We feel that certain offences might occur which would warrant proceeding by way of indictment. This procedure would carry a potentially greater penalty than would be available under the provisions of the Criminal Code in respect of summary conviction. It should be noted that offences under this bill might include those similar in nature, as I said, to fraud and false pretences. Under the Criminal Code, such an offence in most cases would be punishable on indictment. The fact that an offence under this bill might also be dealt with in the Criminal Code does not affect inclusion of the provisions in the legislation to make the legislation as much as possible self-contained. These provisions specifically cover situations in which the Criminal Code might or might not apply.

It should also be noted that in a procedure by indictment an accused has the benefit of electing trial by jury, which of course he would not have under this bill if the amendment of the hon. member were accepted. Further, the maximum penalty of two years in respect of an indictable offence is the lowest maximum that is available under the Criminal Code. In other words, the lowest maximum is what is being provided for an indictable offence. So, when the hon. gentleman makes the plea that we would be subjecting farmers who inadvertently misuse chemicals to a penalty of two years in jail, he is simply not stating the facts of the case. I hope hon. members will take that into consideration.

I also think we should be clear on what the purpose of clause 9 is. The purpose is to provide what is required in all acts; that is, the offences and penalties. We certainly are not attempting to substitute this legislation for the duty of the court, which is to hear the evidence and pass a reasonable, fair and just sentence in line with the evidence that may be presented to it. I think it is perhaps presumptuous of the hon. member to suggest he can predict in advance what all the evidence and circumstances will be surrounding an offence and decide now that no one will be guilty of fraud or misrepresentation which may be deserving of a penalty of more than six months. Surely, we have more confidence in our courts than that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is the house ready for the question on the amendment in respect of clause 9(1)? Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the amendment please say, yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those opposed please say, nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before you call in the members may I draw to your attention Standing Order 75(11) which suggests that if there are two amendments to the same bill to be voted on at the report stage the votes could be held at the same time. In view of the fact that the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) has another amendment to this bill, I think it will probably meet the wishes of the house if this vote were deferred to ascertain whether it is necessary to have a division on that amendment as well.

The Acting Spaeker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I apologize to the house. Pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 75 the recorded division on the amendment now being considered stands deferred until all amendments proposed to this bill have been considered.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar) moved:

That Clause 13(3) of the said bill be deleted.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my purpose in moving this amendment again is to give the individual or company the full protection of the law. Clause 13(3) says:

The decision of the Assessor on any appeal brought pursuant to this Part is final and conclusive and not subject to appeal to or review by any court.

I do not think a bill that has within it the provisions this one has should deny to an individual or a company the right to go to a court of law if such individual or company should be dissatisfied with their treatment. I think, necessarily in this society, we do control the actions of individuals; we do say to them, as can be said to them under this bill, that there is certain pollution on their property or that certain things have happened as a result of the use of pesticides and therefore the Department of Agriculture can move in and do certain things. Then, there is provision for compensation to the individual or company for the action the government has found it necessary to take. This bill does not state the rate of compensation which must be paid to the individual. During the course of the committee hearings I suggested the rate of compensation should be set; that is, that a certain minimum percentage should be established as a guide to the Department of Agriculture and as a protection to the farmer or company. It would not necessarily always be a farmer involved in this provision.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Under the act the farmer would immediately be entitled to a certain amount, but the amount decided upon would not be subject to appeal. Those responsible for guiding the committee suggested an appeal could not be allowed. They suggested the government should reserve unto itself the right by order in council to set the amount of compensation. Having reserved this right, the government has said in the final clause of the bill that it will not permit an individual or a company to go to court if the amount of compensation is felt to be unfair. We should not deny the right of an individual to his day in court. The right of appeal is a protection for an individual who feels he has been aggrieved or has not received justice.

Even in an act such as this, which in essence involves a civil procedure, we should not prevent an individual seeking recourse if he feels he has been wrongly used. In a complex society like this we must take action to control the individual and the company. At the same time, we should be careful not to limit their rights to obtain the kind of treatment they deserve as citizens.

If a rate of compensation were set this would make a difference, but I do not think the difference would be sufficient to deny an appeal procedure. I assume that an assessor would be appointed from the bench to hear appeals against decisions which had been made by the Department of Agriculture. We should not deny individuals the right to appeal such decisions to a court.

Individuals are bound by the rate of compensation set by the Department of Agriculture. I do not think it would happen, but it is conceivable that a compensation rate might be too low. In that event, through an appeal procedure, it might be found that the compensation was too low. Under this measure there would be no recourse even though it was obvious that the compensation was lower than that anticipated by this measure.

For these reasons, I think this proposed section should be deleted from the act. We should leave an individual or a company with the right enjoyed by other Canadians, that is, to appear before a court of law to settle a grievance or obtain justice.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): In speaking on this amendment let me assure the house that we in the official opposition will support the amendment referred to by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. We are of the opinion that this matter could have been decided at the committee stage. It is unfortunate that we in the opposition must, in every instance, make a final appeal to the house when we have what we consider to be a very good proposition to put forward.

The minister stated previously that the conditions embodied in many of these clauses can be found in many other legislative measures and that these are merely repetitions of regulations which have been in existence throughout the years. It is for this reason, among others, that we wish to see changes made, because we are not dealing with the past, but the future.

We can foresee drastic changes in the agricultural industry and allied industries. In the years ahead of us the operations of these industries will advance. Certainly, agricultural operations are very different today. The fact this bill is before us indicates that the government is aware of the drastic changes which have taken place already. We cannot accept the minister's contention that because these conditions exist in other legislative measures, they should be incorporated in this bill.

I agree with the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat that there should be a right of appeal in respect of conditions laid down or judgments rendered. We are not talking about a judgment of the court, but merely the decision of an appointed assessor. I am not suggesting such decisions will be unfair, but surely it is unnecessarily drastic to write into the bill that such a decision by an assessor is binding and that an individual or company will have no further recourse.

Surely, in this new and just society we are supposed to be creating government members should be anxious to support this right of appeal to an individual or a corporation which felt it had been aggrieved because compensation was not adequate. While this type of clause may be written into other measures, the fact that it curtails the right of appeal from the judgment of an assessor should indicate to hon. members that something is wrong. We are preventing by legislation this recourse in respect of decisions of this type.

We are entering an entirely new field of endeavour. The agricultural and chemical industries will undergo extensive changes in the future. The best we can accomplish by this legislation may prove to be wrong in a matter of months rather than years. I entreat members of the government to look favourably on the contention by opposition members that there should be a right of appeal.

In dealing with bills of this nature I am gravely concerned because there seems to be no avenue of appeal in respect of mandatory decisions taken by individuals, groups or government departments. This is indeed unjust and a practice which should be discouraged rather than encouraged.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) for implying that the government is looking to the future in proposing this legislation. It should be drawn to his attention and to the attention of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) that prior to the introduction of this act there was no provision at all under which compensation could be provided to a farmer who suffered a loss as a result of the use of pesticides. Furthermore, while some compensation is paid under other measures, there is no appeal at all against the decision of the department, or the minister, if you like. Whatever is decided, there is at present no appeal against that decision. We are now providing for an appeal to an assessor. It seems to me that both hon. gentlemen missed the point completely in that they did not refer to clause 11 of the bill, which provides:

> The Governor in Council may, from among the judges of the Exchequer Court of Canada and the superior courts of the provinces, appoint an assessor and such number of deputy assessors as he considers necessary to hear and determine appeals from compensation awards made under this act or under any other act to which this part is made applicable, and, subject to the provisions of this act, may prescribe their jurisdiction.

I think I should draw that clause to the attention of the house. Therefore, the assessors will be members of the Exchequer Court of Canada or the superior courts of the provinces. Surely, the hon. gentlemen missed the point completely when they said an appeal will not be heard by people who are competent in the courts, because this is the place from which the assessors will come. This is provided for in clause 11. As a matter of policy, we feel that inasmuch as appeals are to be heard by superior court judges—

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I would like to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) has risen to ask a question.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to point out, if I may, that in my speech I did say an appeal would be heard by a judge.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order.

Mr. Olson: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of policy we feel that inasmuch as appeals are to be heard by a superior court judge appointed as an assessor to hear matters within very clearly defined and limited terms of reference, his decision should be final and conclusive to prevent the prolonging of proceedings.

What we are talking about here in so far as appeals are concerned is the rate of compensation. The maximum and the minimum will be set by order in council, not by the department. The appeal would be to an assessor who would be a judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada or of the superior courts of the provinces. These judges will hear appeals with regard to the amount of the assessment within the minimum and maximum set by order in council. I think it would be superfluous to have further appeals from decisions of these judges because, as I have said, they will be taken from the superior courts.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Call in the members.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Gleave), which was negatived on the following division:

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved:

That Bill C-155, to provide compensation to farmers whose agricultural products are contaminated by pesticide residue, and to provide for appeals from compensation awards, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture on Wednesday, January 29, 1969 be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? Next sitting of the house.

AGRICULTURE

PREVENTION OF INTRODUCTION OR SPREAD OF PLANT PESTS—REPORT STAGE

The house proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-154, to prevent the introduction or spreading of pests injurious to plants, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar) moved:

That clause 11 of the said bill be amended by deleting from line 12 the words "or a justice".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I move the deletion of these particular words from the bill mainly because I was unable to get real clarification in the committee of what is involved here. I asked whether "justice" referred to a justice of the peace, and from the information I was given I understood it did refer to a justice of the peace.

I fail to see, in the circumstances in which we in Canada are living, why an information laid under this act should come before a justice of the peace for hearing. Clause 11 provides that:

A complaint or information in respect of an offence under this act may be heard, tried or determined by a magistrate or a justice if the accused is resident or carrying on business within his territorial jurisdiction, although the matter of the complaint or information did not arise in that territorial jurisdiction.

I want to point out to the house the scope of this matter. In a recent issue of Country Guide it is pointed out that there are five counties in the province of Ontario which restrict movement of certain farm products and agricultural materials from one area to another. It is necessary to control the movement of such materials because they might carry the residues of certain plant pests.

In view of the wide application of this provision, I think that any person who is charged and tried under this act should appear before a competent justice or magistrate. I think the act should be crystal clear in stating that no individual should be brought for trial before a justice of the peace, who may or may not have a knowledge of the law. If we were back in the horse and buggy days when there might have been a problem connected with appearing before a fully trained and competent judge, then I could see the reason for this provision. The information I have is that in the province of Saskatchewan alone there are well over 500 justices of the peace. There is one in the market town in which I live. At the same time there is a circuit judge or magistrate who periodically comes to the town so that offenders against the law can be brought before him.

The reason I move the amendment is that I think offenders under this act should be brought before such a judge, and that the act should clearly say so. At the moment, it does not. If I may quote from the proceedings of the committee on January 28, as reported at page 426, the counsel for the Department of Agriculture said:

Mr. Chairman, there seems to have been a problem in the construction of clause 11. By using the words "magistrate or justice" it would seem that this would give jurisdiction to a justice to hear a charge laid under a clause of this bill or the regulations.

If that is so, then the question becomes one of definition: who is a justice? In asking that question in the committee I was given the clear understanding that a justice could be a justice of the peace, and as I say such a justice is not necessarily informed in the law. The report goes on:

It is possible—

The report says "Is it possible" but it must be "It is possible".

—that if the accused elects to have his case heard by a higher tribunal, the higher tribunal would have jurisdiction, but that would only be in the cases where there was procedure by way of indictment.

• (5:20 p.m.)

As I said previously, I am not trained in the law, but I think this matter ought to be clarified. Where any person is charged under the provisions of the bill we ought to make certain that he is dealt with by a properly constituted court of law, by people competent to hear the charge against him. The person charged ought to be informed of his rights. If a person who is brought before a justice of the peace suffers a miscarriage of justice for one reason or another, he must appeal to a higher court at added cost. I do not think many will be charged under the provisions of this bill. If they are, it will be because they have acted inadvisedly rather than criminally. I say again, before passing this bill we must make certain that a charge against an individual or a company is brought in a properly constituted court of law in Canada. I need say no more. That was the purpose in moving my amendment.
