THE SHOPGIRL.

The small number of people aware of the existence of Miss Dorothy Maxwell were divided into two sections—there were those who considered her life most envia-ble, there were others who deemed it high-ly reprehensible. But as Dorothy herself was ignorant alike of envy or condemna-tion, she continued to live in the charming and admirably appointed Georgian house in Kensington and in a pleasant environment created by lavish but intelligent expenditure on the part of the Marquis of Bewdavon. For some years she had been mistress of Belper Lodge, yet her life was extremely dull. Lord Bewdavon was a been way both socially and reditically. busy man, both socially and politically, and a close friend of his father, the aged Duke of Strathwayte—a circumstance so singular that it was a constant source of comment among his contemporaries. Consequently at first he was frequently away from London for weeks together, either filling political or social engagements or staying with his father, who never left the staying with his father, who never left the country, and as Dorothy had no friends and no companions, save the faded widow of a military officer whom Bewdavon had engaged as her chaperon to accompany her to the play when he was otherwise engaged, the comfort and pleasure of her life were marred by its loneliness.

Dorothy had an overwhelming respect for Lord Bewdavon, but she did not loye him. Bewdavon's devotion to politics—a devotion he liad inherited from a long line him. Bewdavon's devotion to pointies—a devotion he liad inherited from a long line of ancestors—gave Dorothy her opportunity, and during his many absences a string of masters occupied her days, hard study her solitary evenings. One day by the merest chance Bewdavon stumbled upon a pile of books dealing with abstruse questions, with history, philosophy and political economy, their margins covered with notes in Dorothy's neat handwriting, a handwriting that bore evidence of the class from which she had sprung.

"How this woman loves me," he said to himself, his eyes growing dim as he turned over volume after volume. At that moment Dorothy entered the room and, seeing the books strewed around him, hesitated. "I have nover penetrated into your sanctum before," he said, pointing to the many evidences of her plodding. "I sincerely wish I had. Have you been wading through all these books to please me?" devotion he liad inherited from a long line prough all these books to please me?"

Dorothy faltered. His immediate conclusion that she had been educating her-self for his sole benefit filled her with a vague irritation.
"I—I wished to understand you better,"
she stammered.

she stammered.

"You have succeeded in making me understand you," he answered, kissing her reverently.

From that day they insensibly drifted into a close friendship, and often as Dorothy sat by Bewdavon, steadily helping him with his many researches and filled with admiration for His marvelous sympathy and broad outlook upon life, she would cry bitterly to herself: "Why cannot I love this man? Why cannot I love not I love this man? Why cannot I love him?" And so the days passed, the woman endeavoring to stifle the impulses of her heart by severe study, the man glorying in her beauty and her intelligence, until the Duke of Strathwayte fell dangerously ill.

"This illness may last for months," said

"This illness may last for months," said Bewdavon as he was leaving Belper Lodge, "and I cannot be away from him. Go abroad, Dorothy, with Mrs. Vane." "How could I help you then?" she asked, a terror of strange places and peoples sud-denly taking possession of her. "There is much I can do for you if I stay here." "But it will do you good. You need a change." he protested

"But it will do you good. You need a change," he protested.
"We will conpromise," she said, smiling. "I will go to Brighton"— "And be thoroughly idle," he concluded, patting her cheek. "You have been working too hard."
At the end of a fortnight Dorothy returned, hurrying the meek Mrs. Vane protestingly from the delights of the hotel turned, hurrying the meek Mrs. Vane protestingly from the delights of the hotel, the victim of a restlessness that left her no peace. Soon after her return to Belper lodge she was one afternoon idly scanning the pages of a magazine when her eye fell upon an illustration of the interior of a large draper's shop. She rose abruptly, filled with a sudden desire for her old lifeto smell the agrial scent of new calico, to see the long line of flaring lights over each counter, to heat the ripping of cloth, the conversation of the tired shopgirls. Mem conversation of the tired shopgirls. Mem-ories of her girlhood surged through her brain as she leaned against the mantel-piece; and an incurable longing to see the great drapery establishment where she had worked took possession of her. She picked up the magazine, and then, with a muf-fled cry, threw it down and ran to her bedroom. The tea gown of diaphanous lace and silk was torn off, and a few mo-ments later. Dorothy slipned out of the lace and silk was torn off, and a few moments later Dorothy slipped out of the house, a sad colored cloak and a thick veil shroughing her figure and face. Hailing a hanson, she was fassing through the glitter of Piccadilly on her way to the Totterham Court road before she realized that she had succumbed to a temptation she had successfully combated for months.

Dismissing the cab some distance below Messus Vandstick's manupoth premises.

Messrs. Yardstick's mammoth premises, she walked slowly past the plate glass windows, filled with the cheapest rubbish that ever the British workingman and his wife were deluded into buying. Dorothy could have told the small crowd of wondering women gathered round the windows, commenting on the cheapness of various "bargains," many secrets had she been so minded, but her eyes were fixed on a large mirror in which she could see the reflection of the assistants serving behind the counter. She was now at the mercy of her emotions, and entering the shop took her place among a row of women who were waiting to be served by a Messrs, Yardstick's mammoth premises en who were waiting to be served by a pale, fired looking girl whose face was lined by overwork, late hours and bad food. Dorothy watched her swift seissers as they ran through the rolls of calico an as they ran through the rolls of called and the rapid movement of her hands with fascinated curiosity. She felt that she was watching herself—the self of years before. So engrossed was she that the familiar, 'What can I do for you, miss?' found her with nothing to say. She looked round help-lessly and then gave a trifling order

While the girl was doing up the parcel she eaned forward, whispering:
"Have you forgotten me, Lizzie? I'm Derothy Maxwell."

Derothy Maxwell."
The parcel dropped from the girl's hands.
"I can't see through your veil," she said. "We thought you were dead."
Dorothy glanced hastily around the shop, where under the flaring gaslights she recognized many faces. She raised her band to her veil, then hesitated.
"Where is John?" she asked.

"John is married," the girl said sullenthe said has set up in husifess for him-

Dorothy clutched at the counter, and for a moment the oppressive smell, the garish lights, the sound of coarse voices be one whirling mass that seen.cd to be one whirling mass that blinded her. "He waited a long time," the girl went

"He waited a long time," the girl went on in a vindictive uncertone, "but he got tired and married last yeer. He used to say some nasty things about you, I can tell you, for going off as you did, with never a word, and you engaged to him too. What are you doing now?" she added, raising her voice. "Still stopping some girl or other from marrying the man she lykes, as you stopped me from marrying John?" Dorothy shook her head help-tessly and, throwing some coins down up-ing John?" Dorothy shook her head help-lessly and, throwing some coins down up-on the counter, walked out of the shop.

Instinctively she turned toward the park, her mind filled with memories of the past, with its hard and ceaseless work, its privations and simple pleasures, and with the part John Gregory had played in that past. So her tender, helpful lover was married, she thought as she crouched on a seat under the dripping trees—mar-ried, and she was forgotten! And she had come to tell him that she had wearied of the luxury of the last four years, that she come to tell him that she had wearied of the luxury of the last four years, that she needed him to be happy and that if he would forgive and forget the wrong she had promised him in the old days. John was married! She smiled bitterly to herself as she thought of her wild desire as she drove to the Tottenham Court road to tell him everything—of the accident in Oxford street that had first brought her under Lord Bewdayon's notice, of his conunder Lord Bewdavon's notice, of his con-stant kindness during her following ill-ness, of the temptation to which,she yield ed because she was always tired and ofter ed because she was always tired and often hungry and of the four years at Belper Lodge—and now here was no need. Stunned and dizzy sie rose to her feet, clearly seeing that she had no one now upon whom to rely to protect her from herself. Her castle of cards had fallen to the ground, the man upon whom she leaned—perhaps foot the ly—to redeem the past had forgotten her, and the agony of her disappointment was supreme.

be shaken off in an hour, and the striking of the neighboring clocks reminded Dor-othy that she must return to dinner; but as her cab bore her through the slippery streets the whirling wheels seemed to re-peat, "As the tree falls so it shall lie." Dorothy shuddered, but still the words rang remorselessly through her brain, following her up the broad staircase at Belper Lodge and into the quiet of her own

Then she faced the situation. She was at least necessary to Lord Bewdavon, and he, to whom she owed so much, should not find her wanting. He loved her, and John had forgotten. Perhaps she deserved that he should forget. But when she was dressing for dinner the pathos of the situation came to her suddenly. "I shall be sentimental for once," she thought. "Tonight I shall wear mourning for my dead love. Tomorrow I shall forget."

Dorothy had reached the first landing on the way to the drawing room when she heard the hall door open and a "Yes, my lord," from the footman in reply to an eager question. The next moment Lord Bewdavon was by side her.

An American at Court.

Formerly such divinity hedged kings and queens that treason was not along in fearing to peep at them. Americans in citizen's dress also were kept at a distance. In The North American Réview Sir William Russell, LL.D., narrates an anecdote in this connection in which Secretary Seward had part:

Seward had part:

Mr. Seward, who had been received with great respect in Russia, came to England and naturally desired to go to court. Howas to be presented at the levee by the United States minister as a senator of the

The gentleman explained that he must have knee breeches, shoes and stockings—that was absolutely necessary. An idea struck Mr. Seward. There was a nice old struck was a the parter of the hotel struck Mr. Seward. There was a nice old man about his size, the porter of the hotel he was staying at, who sat in a box in the hall, and off he drove.

Immense success! The porter had a beautiful new pair of knee breeches and black silk stockings and low shoes. A few dollars for the loan was all that was needed. Mr. Seward was speedily equipped, drove back to the palaee, where he was admitted, and finally had the pleasure of , making his bow in the hotel porter's clothes to her majesty.

Now all that is changed, and American attend European courts in plain evening dress.

About 6 a. m., July 13th .. we left the residence of President C. O. Card in company with Mrs. Card and Mrs. Williams with whom we traveled to Lethbridge, arriving there 6:30 p. m., having halted at the ranch of Mr. McCarty where we rested three hours and were hospitably treated to a delicious

At ten o'clock p. m. we boarded the C. P. R. east bound and after two nights and one day had brought about their varied experiences we ar rived at Winnipeg July the 15th.

The Seland Hotel had been designated as our stopping place: but on enquiry it was found to be impossible to get rooms except in an annex building about one half block from the hotel. Accordingly our first night was spent in a small room in the above mentioned quarters, in which were six other beds similar to the one we occupied, which consisted of a spring mat-tress on the floor, two sheets, two pillows, and a comforter. Price per bed, one dollar.

After breakfast we went to Stobart Sons & Co., where in conver-sation with Mr. Minery we learned cern was, how can we find the boys?

Just, he wever, as we were about to take up a house to house canvass in search of them, what should appear before the door but the shadow of a missionarie's coat closely followed by Brother Merkley with whom we had a hearty shake and then went to the boys room where we found Erother May writing his last months daily journal. Buildings and Grounds, the bridges crossing the Red and Assinaboine rivers, and the principle business houses of the city. In the evening we attended the Theatre after which Brothers May and Merkley had only ten minutes to reach the train on which they were to leave the city. This necessitated a brisk run which was freely indulged irrand the station reached just on time. But the train,—where was it? We looked but in vain. Being a special it had been taken off the night before.

NEW ELEVATORS.

Grain Storage Facilities of the Country to Be Lagely Increased.

Winnipeg, fug. 4.—From all indications 1888 will be the banner elevator building year in the history of the Northwest. There is not an elevator ompany in the city that will not add to its storage facilities along every branch line in the province. Promient among the new elevators will be those erected by the Northern lyator company. Already ten are der construction at the following oints: Oak River, Varcoe, Petty biece, Cypress River, La Salle, Star-buck, Elm Creek, Somerset, Swan Lake, and Union Point. Each of these will have a capacity of 30,000 bushels, and a few others will be erected later on in the season. When the season when the seaso elevators in the province Territories. Besides the five built for the Lake of the Wood Mr. E. J. O'Reilly has about completed an elevator for the Richardson Grain Co. of Kingston, at Sydney, to replace The the one destroyed last winter. Manitoba Grain Co. will also erect a number, and it is understood the Do minion Elevator Co. will add to their liquo storage capacity. Bready Love & boat. storage capacity. Bready Love & Tyron will spend about $5,0000 in erecting elevators at thirteen or fourteen provincial and Territorial points.

Canada's Revenue.

Ottawa, Aug. 3.-The recent an nouncement that the trade of Canada had, during the fiscal year of 1898, increased by $44,00,0000, is followed by a statement of phenomenal increase in the customs revenue for July. Re turns so far received place the receipt $2 436 491 as against $1,386,167 for the corresponding month of 1897 A number of remote outports are yet to be heard from and it is estimated that when all the returns are in the July revenue from customs will $2,60,0000, an incease over July 1897 of $1,213,833. This is to some extent attributable to the rush of importation under the reciprocal tariff from Belgium, Germany and other of the most favored nations, but the general trade expansion, as shown by last years figures, accounts largely for it.

Learned rig in 1815.

In 1815 the royal mews at Charing Cross were standing and on the actual site now occupied by Nelson's column a tong wooden shed was placed, and in it. was the skeleton of a whale of great limensions. Through it the writer walked from end to end.

Opposite stood, as now they stand, spring gardens, where in old times the beaus and balles of the court of Charles II disported themselves. There in a house was located "the learned pig."
Bystanders desirous of seeing its performance stood in a circle, and within a smaller one playing cards were apparently indiscriminately thrown down Onlookers, possibly confederates, name a particular card, and the pig trotted round and placed his snout on the nam ed card without an error.

From that exhibition, the writer, in the same house (he thinks), was taken and introduced to "the Hottentot Venus," an ebony damsel clad in gauzy nus, an eoony damser chad in gauzy garments of the most flimsy kind, who displayed her figure by proudly trav-ersing and circling round the room in which she gave her receptions.

Issuing thence, the writer was taken to the horse guards parade to see the cannon used by the French as a mortar during the siege of Cadiz, 1812. It was on a carriage in a horizontal position, and the writer, lifted by his father, was thrust inside the muzzle, and, struggling somewhat, was, with a little dif-ficulty, extracted from his confined po--London Sketch.

The Girls Blushed Too.

Visitors at the World's fair of 1893 will recall the Indian exhibit or encampment on the shore of the south pond. One of the tents or wigwams was occupied by an athletic and fine looking but somewhat taciturn specimen of young Indian manhood as his own particular home, and while it was open at all proper hours for the inspection of visitors he resented any approach to impertinent curiosity.

A bery of young women dropped into his tent one day before his usual hour for opening it and found him sewing a rent in a blanket.
"See how he blushes," exclaimed one of the visitors. "We have caught him doing squaw's work."

"Why, that's his natural color," gig-gled another. "He always blushes." "Yes, young ladies," said the Indian in perfectly good English, "he blushes for some of the civilized and enlightened white Americans of the nineteenth century."

The visitors, joined him in blushing and shortly afterward went out without further remarks.—Youth's Companion.

The Refined Wife.

A woman cannot be married long ough to render delicacy of behavior and enough to render delicacy of behavior and an exquisite retirement inappropriate or unnecessary. The wife who laughed at the idea of being polite to her own husband had lost the very track of home happiness. ## Where Laces Rule.

When a gala performance is given at the opera at Madrid, the show of lace worn by the ladies of the haute noblesse is truly remarkable, and, though valuable jewelry is also to be seen to a considerable extent, it is the lace mantilla and founces which are most worthy of the admiration of connoisseurs. It is strange that the grace-ful national fashion of wearing mantillas still obtains, but the fact is undoubted.

For two months he was rheumatism. For two months he was unable to work and suffered a great deal from this dread disease. He used several kinds of linfments, but to no avail. Having read in the papers of the wonderful cures effected by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People he decided to try them. He took one box and was surprised at the effect. He took a second and finally a third, when he found that his old enemy was about routed. To a Reporter representative, who called upon him at his residence to find out if the reported cure was correct, Mr. Skea said: "I was greatly surprised at the result of taking a couple of boxes. I suffered feafully, but they made a new man of me, and fixed me right up. I now take them every spring and fall to guard against colds and grip. They are the only thing that does me any good. ### Aunt Marys Timely

Visit.

The other evening Aunt Mary took the electric cars and rode eastward to the house of her niece who a few weeks previously had just commenced house keeping. Without ceremony the old lady entered the house and found her niece in the kitchen looking very de-jected. Aunt—Mary soon discovered that her niece had tried to dye an old cream opera shawl a cardinal red with some poor cheap dye. The result was certainly enough to test the patience and goodness of an angel. A miserable mixed color, half red and brown, was the result of labor. Aunt Mary deeply sympathized with her horror-stricken neice, and advised her in future to use nothing but the Diamond Dyes that had given her such satisfaction and profit for over twenty years. The un-sightly, variegated shawl was then washed in several waters in order to get rid of the horrid colors, and was then put into a bath of Diamond Dye Fast Cardinal Red for Wool. It is now a thing of joy and beauty.

When the Honest Physician

Is called upon to prescribe for a weak, debilitated, nervous and run-down man or woman in the hot weather, he never hesitates to recommend Paine's Celery Compound, that extraordinary and popular medicine. Past years of truly astonishing work in life saving has drawn the attention of the best medical men to Paine's Celery Compound, and they have not been slow in recognizing its powers and vir-tues for the banishment of nervousness, sleeplessness, debility, dyspepsia, rheumatism and all diseases of the kidneys and liver.

Are you seeking health? Are you sighing for freedom from disease and suffering? If you are, use Paines' Celery Compound, a medicine that will give you prompt and cheering results after your long experiences of failures with other medicines.

Thunderstorms

Do not imagine that because a heavy thunderstorm is far away to leeward it is not likely to arise and wet you. Even if the wind is blowing right against the cloud it will come your way all the more surely, for thunderstorms always travel against the wind.

The reason for this is that there is invariably a countercurrent of air above the breeze that you feel close to the earth, and this sky high wind blows in the opposite direction to the one which alone you can detect. Thus the tempest seems to work its way right through the wind's eyes in a very contrary sort of way.

Fog never does this; neither does ordinary rain—at least very seldom—but snow or sleet some time works its way up wind just as the tempest does. Sheet lightning, by the way, is not a distinctive sort of light, but merely the reflection in the sky of a forked flash many miles away. You can tell how far away a tempest is by counting the number of seconds that pass between the flash and the peal. Each second stands for about a mile.—New York Harald Herald.

Gentlemen—I am pleased to testify to the great benefit I have received from the use of Laxa Liver Pills. I was very much constipated and felt great distress after eating.

Your Laxa Liver Pills regulated my stomach and restored my entire system to healthy action. The effect of these pills is most natural and effective, free from any griping or pain. They cause not the least inconvenience. My advice to all who may see this is to try them, for Iknow they are good.

It is stated positively that he is under no restraining order from the war department but that it is left endrely to his own discretion when and how to attack Manila inasmuch as it has been reported from Cavite that he was simply waiting the arrival there of the double turreted monitor, Monadnock, it is presumed this attack will soon follow; if it has not been made already, for according to the calculation of the navy-department the Monadnock is about due now at Cavite. While not quite clear as to General Merritt's purpose in deferring his attack until the vessel arrives, it is the opinion of the military officials that his plan is to plant the two monitors directly within range of the Manila batteries, and, if a demand for surrender is refused, to batter down the defences. ## Fighting in Porto Rico.

New York, Aug. 11.-The Herald has the following from Cape San Juan Porto Rico, dated August 10: There was a two hours fight before daybreak yesterday. Eight hundred Spanjards attempted to retake the lighthouse, which was guarded by Lieut. Atwater, Assistant Engineer Jenkins Ensign Bronson and Gunner Campbell The Spaniards were driven back by shells from the Amphitrite, Cincinnati and Leyden. Refugees report that one hundred Spaniards were killed. William N. Boardman of the Amphitrite was seriously wounded. He was in the lighthouse. The Spanish advance began from Rio Grande, whither the Spaniards retreated after the first lauding of troops at San Juan last week. They marched through Luquillo and pulled down the United States fiag at Fajardo, and repaced it with the Spanish flag. Terrified refugees warned the lighthouse force that the Spanish were coming. There were sixty women and children in the outbuilding of the lighthouse during the fight. The Spaniards opened with a machine gun at a distance of three hundred yards. The Leyden, Ensign Croley commanding, rushed within a hundred yards of the shore and poured one pounders into the Spaniards. Captain Farclay of the Amphitrite used six recorders and the Chemistric institute in the N. Boardman of the Amphitrite was seriously wounded. He was in the pounders into the Spaniards. Captain Barclay of the Amphitrite used six pounders and the Cincinnati five inch guns. The ships landed 250 men during the fight and reinforced the lighthouse. The United States troopers had not gone far when they discovered a party of Spanish engineers who were attempting to destroy allof the bridges spanning the streams. The United States troops at once started towards the Spanish, who fled, and pursued them for miles. The pursuit was, so close that the Spaniards did not succeed in doing any damage to the bridges until they reached a point three miles from Aibonito. Here they were able to halt long enough to blow up a cultvert bridge, after which they continued their flight. The troopers halted at the bridge, which they were ordered to hold. The Spaniards shelled the troopers during the aftermoon, but did no damage. The bridge is being repaired with the greatest difficulty in advance of General Wilson's forces.

Ottawa, Aug. 9.—But for the exist ence of the French treaty, trade preference by Canada would be limited to Great Britain, the British West Indies, and colonies whose tariffs entitle them to the 25 per cent. reduction of the British preferential tariff. Under the French treaty, negotiated by Sir Char-les Tupper and brought into effect by the government of Sir Mackenzie Bowtain articles, enumerated prior to the abrogation of the treaties with Germany and Belgium, these two countries were also entitled to the advantages granted to the French, a circular has just been issued by the department of customs advising collectors that products of Germany and Belgium are not to be entered under the provisions of the French treaty act until otherwise instructed. The elimination of these two countries from the list largely removes the objection to the French treaty, because they are the heaviest exporters to Canada, but the importations from some of the other countries enjoying equal privileges with France

B.C. COVERNMENT THE LION ROARS.

PREMIER TURNER HAS Lord Salisbury Casts His Gauntlet a BEEN DISMISSED.

W. W. B. McInnes May Be Attorney-General.

Victoria, Aug. 9.-Hon. Robert Beaven, who was yesterday called on by the lieutenant-governor to form a government, was this evening joined, apon invitation, by Joe Martin, while C. A. Semlin, also requested to come quickly, will be here to-morrow. Mr. Beaven expects, after consultation with these gentlemen, to be able to announce a complete cabinet on Thursday evening. In the meanwhile Hon. Mr. Turner declines to admit the constitutionality of his dismissal and to-day replied to the lieutenantgovernor's note in these terms, with the intention of complaining to Ottawa. W. W. B. McInnes arrived today from Nanaimo and is be lieved to have been offered the attorney-generalship. Friends of Mr. Turner are urging him to meet Mr. Beaven with a view to coalition with the Semlin following, but he de clines. Mr. Beaven says to-night that his probable course on the completion ell, eleven foreign countries having of his cabinet will be to ask a disfavored nation treaties with Great solution and again appeal to the electrical are entitled to the advantages enjoyed by France. The standing by of the old partics is therefor exactly 19 on each side.

Victoria, Aug. 8.- Surprise amount ing to little less than consternation was expressed by the people of al shades of politics, when the news be came known that Lieutenant ernor McInnes, had sent for Hon. Robt. Beaven, the former leader of the opposition, and requested him to form a government in succession to that of Hon. J. H. Turner. Few accepted the the report as true until Mr. Beaver himself endorsed its reliability, with the further information that he had accepted the task and hoped to be abl accepted the task and hoped to be able to announce his success with the composition of kis cabinet within twenty-iour hours. The surprise of the public at this unexpected turn of events is intensified, when it is remembered that Mr. Beaven sought election as an independent oppolitionist at the recent general elections and was rejected by the electorate of Victoria city, receiving the fewest votes of any of the eight candidates in the running.

Lieut. Gov. McInnes has taken this unusual course, he claims, with precedents in three crises of Quebec politics, holding that the country has not shown its confidence in the Turner administration, while the opposition in the post-election convention were divided between the old leader, Mr. Semlin and "Fighting Joe Martin," and unable to agree upon a captain.

At present the parties stand 19 to 19. Casiar being ceded to Mr. Turner, while 33 of the 38 seats are protested, the politicians now being before the courts.

The natural expectation of the government is that Premise Reavent.

The natural expectation of the gov The natural expectation of the government is that Premier Beaven will call an immediate session of the house for the purpose of testing the strength of his following or request a dissolution of the new house for a second appeal to the people.

HIS HONOR EXPLAINS. HIS HONOR EXPLAINS.

Victoria, Aug. 8.—Liehtenant Governor McInnes has intimated in an interview his reason for his course of action with reject to the government. He says that it appeared to him that the result of the elections did not show sufficient confidence on the part of the people to justify the government in making further expenditures or appointments and that on the 14th of July he notified the pre-14th of July he notified the prothe 14th of July he notified the pre-mier to that effect. The government, however, kept on its course, so this morning his honor asked for the re-signation of the ministry. Since the opposition did not appear to be unit-ed on any leader be had sent for Mr. Beaven will ask for and be granted any immediate discountion. an immediate dissolution.

WILL BEAVEN SUCCEED? Victoria, Aug. 8.—The lieut nant-governor to-day relieved Mr. Turner Victoria, Aug. 8.—The Leut nantgovernor to-day rell-ved Mr. Turner of his position of premier, and entrusted Robert Beaven, who was the defeated candidate in Victoria at the last two general elections, with the formation of a new ministry. No reasons are assigned, but it is generally understood that the governor relognizes the fact that the Turner government lost the conflidence of the country, and of the house at the late elections. Mr. Beaven, in the late elections Mr. Beaven, in the early eighties, was premier, and was previously, for several years, in the Walkem cabinet. Until defeated in 1894, he was leader of the opposition.
It is thought he will fail in forming a government, as he is without following of any kind, while the opposition leaders, with whom Beaven has not been allied since his defeat, will feel they have been ignored. There is much surprise at the action of the governor in calling on Beaven, while in government circles the dismissal of Turner is freely condemued. With a Cassiar seat for the government, as it is believed there will be, the two parties are a tie, nineteen seats each.

Russian Aggression in China and Persia to Be No Longer Tolerated.

New York, Aug. 7 .- Regarding the Anglo-Russian question, the London-correspondent of the Evening Post 'To say that the relations between England and Russia are strained is only to say that they still are as they have been any time these two years past, but to-day the situation is so grave that the only pacific solu tion is for one or the other power to climb down publicly. The trouble is about the contract which the government was about to sign with the Hong Kong and Shanghai bank for a loan to extend the railway to New Chwang, secured on the railway it-self. M. Pavloff, having peremptor-ily forbidden the hypothecation of the ily forbidden the hypothecation of the railway and thus made the loan possible, the British minister, Claude Macdonald, under instructions, cabled by Lord Salisbury on July 22, informed the Yamen that England would "not tolerate any interference or another power as between Her Majesty's subjects and the Chinese government contracts freely entered into with them by the latter and would support the Chinese government in resisting such aggression. Next day the Russian minister repeated with added emphasis his demands and so the matter stands pending the decision of China as to which power she will cast in her lot with. Anyway the momentous fact stands out beyond reach of opinion or recall that in the sight of the whole world, Lord Salisbury has at last thrown down his glove to Russia on behalf of the policy of the "open door." It so happens that the bulk of the trade at stake at New Chwang is American.

To this piece of news should be added two others and the gravity of the situation will be understood. The first is that Russia, has forbidden the Shah of Persia to accept a loan from a British bank, which he was on the point of signing contract with. The second that Russia has assumed the protectorate of Raheita, which will enable her to divide with England the control of the southern entrance to the Eco-Sea. Upon the same subject the London correspondent of the Tribune says There has been considerable discus sion in parliament over the new situation in China, similar to that which arose when Russia vetoed the loan from the British government. This time the complications are caused by Hong Kong and Shanghai bank wishes to make to the Chinese government for a railway between Tientsin and New Chwang, both treaty ports. The Russian minister has been objecting strongly for six weeks, and Lord Salisbury has explained in parliament that England has offered China a guarantee against Russia. It seems entirely clear that Russia is inter fering with British rights, secured by the treaty of Tien-Tsin. The obv ous criticism upon Lord method is that the offer of a guarantee to Peking, which China does not like to accept, is a less direct remedy than a determined remonstrance through the British ambassador at St. Petersburg would be. The fires between London and St. Petersburg may, however, have been hotter than Lord salisbury's critics suppose.

London, Aug. 8.—The Shanghai correspondent of the Mail says: "Russia is now practically in possession of New Chwang, and the "open door" in North China is already shut.

Where is the thrill of last night's fear?
Where is the stain of last night's tear?
Where is the tooth that ached last year?
Gone where the lost pins go to.
For last night's riddle is all made plain,
The sanshine laughs at the long past rair
The tooth that ached hath lost its pain—
That's what our troubles grow to.

We can stand the smart of yesterday; Today's worse ills we can drive away. What was and what is bring no dismays For past and present sorrows, But the burdens that make us groan

The troubles that make us fume and fret,
Are the things that haven't happened yet—

TOM THE BRAT.

There are some people in this world who seem predestined by an unreasonable and uncharitable fate to endure all the kicks, cuffs and contumely allotted to human affairs. That such "luck" is utterly undeserved the victims themselves are ever ready to admit, no matter how streinuously interested friends try to argue with them against such confession.

Such a buffet of fate was Tom Wilson, whose childhood was passed in the village of Charville, O. It was popularly supposed that Peg Wilson was his buttle. At least Peg was chief castigator and tongue lasher extraordinary to his redheaded highness.

But Peg would scarcely admit that Tom

But Peg would scarcely admit that Tom had been born at all, so contemptuous seemed her regard for him, and if there was such an impulse as motherly affection in Peg's rough nature it must have been regarded by her as the holy of holies, as it was nurtured so tenderly that it never found expression through her lips.

It must have been that Tom tried her sorely, for he was an American boy, with all that such designation implies. He had won as many marbles at "keeps" as any boy in the village, and had blacked the eyes of every boy between the depot at the end of the village to the brickyard at the other.

So, drifting along, sustaining many So, drifting along, sustaining many beatings, fighting his way, Tom reached the age of 12, just as the country was electrified with the news of impending war. Tom was like other boys, in that he loved to follow the meanderings of the awkward squad as it drilled upon the village common. In fact, with an old flour barrel and a pair of chair rungs he had become so thoroughly familiar with the beats, rolls, draggs and timings of the cross eyed drummer, who on each succeeding Fourth of draggs and timings of the cross eyed drum-mer, who on each succeeding Fourth of July had delighted to shew how he did it in the Mexican war, and who now drum-med for the new company of home guards, that he, Tom, could march almost as well as any of them.

One day in the summer of 1861 Tom was vigorously beating the long roll upon his faithful flour barrel, when Peg alight-

"Hyar y'ar again, y' redheaded brat, thumpin that ole bar'll I've a notion t' cram y' into et an head y' up! Hyar! Gimme them!"—

"Oh, mam"— But the chair rungs had passed under an old meat ax and were destined to beat

"Now git along outo this. Ef I ketch y'—bh, I wish y' could go t' war an never come back!"

Tom heard it and said nothing. Peg went her way, but somhow the clothespins were harder to hold, the line more kinky and the soot flakes/thicker that day than ever before. Not that there was any reason for it—no, indeed. What had she said that should make a strong woman purpose. Surely it was no harm to wish nervous? Surely it was no harm to wish that freekled imp in Jericho. Besides he couldn't go to war. But what's the use of Still Peg felt "narvous like" for some Still Peg felt "narvous like" for some days, while Tom skill yery little.

The shrill shrile of a fife broke upon the midnight stillness. There was a measured rolling and perfect timing to the snare drum accompaniment, which acquainted the natives with the fact that Major Smith, the cross eyed Mexican veteran, was not handling the ebony sticks. Never did "The Girl I Left Behind Me" sound with a weirder meaning. Never sound with a weirder meaning. Never was there a cheerier drunning. The home guards had offered their services, had received a call and were marching to awake or he'd be crazy. A drum sets him wild. You just ought to''—

But the neighbor knew Peg's garrulous tendency, and the window closed softly, but with some evidence of determination.
Charville slept, awoke and ate his breakfast. So did Peg Wilson. But the bacon and potatoes cooled on the stove hearth and the brat did not appear with his healthy appetite.
Peg became nervous at last and went to his room. Tom was not in sight, but in the center of the floor was the old flour barrel and traced across the head even the limited education of Peg enabled her to decipher the letters in chalk:
"Gone to skulp Jeff Davus!"

limited education of Peg enabled her to decipher the letters in chalk:

"Gone to skulp Jeff Davus!"

So the brat had gone to war, for there was no one in town who could drum so well as he, not even Major Smith. Many neighbors had told her so. Poor Peg! She had much difficulty in swallowing foed that day. She marveled that the fool chickens could strut around contentedly and gulp down corn, a handful at a time. Things were awry and the solar system seemed to move more sluggishly than usual. But the redheaded brat was gone. The struggle of Stone River was one that tried men's souls, even men whose experience in the field had been of the rougher and more dangerous kind. The long roll had sounded for the Third brigade, when Colonel Miller of the Seventy-second, noticing the stripling drummer; "My little man, this is no place for you.

addressed him in the kindliest manner:
"My little man, this is no place for you.
All that you can do has been done. Get to the rear and seek a safe hiding place."
"But I belong to"— "Never mind, you redheaded brat! Get

"Nover mind, you reaneaded brail dee to the rear, I tell you."

The drummer moved sullenly rearward.

Already the Seventy-second was forming for the charge—nay, even worse, for the foe was advancing to the death struggle foe was advancing to the death struggle— not a regiment in gray, but a brigade, on the immediate front of Colonel Miller. It was a wild, flerce, impetuous onslaught. Men fell on either side like wheat before the reaper. Other men filled their places, and the wild wave of war ebbed, flowed, surged and lashed amid the fury of mortal passion.

Down went Sergeant Robinson with the colors. They, the colors, were up again.

waving grandly and deflantly. Corporal Jenkins seized the staff and sprang forward 10, 20 paces, but no more. Like mockery of human hope the flag fluttered helplessly to the ground. Willing hands grabbed at the splintered staff, but death was quicker than mortal energy, and men went down as rapidly as the attempts were made. The foe was suffering even more, but his numbers were greater in that portion of the field.

Colonel Miller leaped to the front with drawn sword, and the flerce struggle for the old flag was hand to hand, eye to eye, heart to heart. Around the brave officer surged the Confederates, flushed by the assurance which a temporary superiority of numbers gives. The colonel was pressed backward, bravely though the color guard fought. A Confederate captain sprang forward, aiming a revolver at Colonel Miller's heart. With a shudder the men fighting about him saw the act and the falling of the pistol's haminer.

But quicker than the captain were another hand and eye. Colonel Miller turned suddenly, fils face burned by the powder from the shot, and beheld the stripling drummer, who, disobeying orders, had followed the very center of the regiment into the fight. Again he turned and beheld the Confederate captain wildly endeavoring to rise from the spot where he had fallen.

This shot not only saved the colonel's life, but it created an important diversion.

ing to rise from the spot where he had fallen.

This shot not only saved the colonel's life, but it created an important diversion. The enemy fought as bravely, but not as enthusiastically, for a daring leader had fallen. Suddenly the tattered flag seemed to spring from the ground and rush right into the Confederate line. Wild was the cheering as the boys followed it, the onslaught being so vigorous that the foe gave back, wavered, retreated, after firing one last volley at the colors.

The old flag seemed to reel and flutter in death agony, settling down like a stricken bird, until it lay silent, rent by shot and bathed in blood upon the field of glory.

"Who bore that flag?" screamed Colonel Miller. "Who's the color bearer?"

None answered him.

"What ails you, men? Are you all dumb? Who's the last color bearer? If he don't get a captain's commission, I'll dumb? Who's the last color beare? It he don't get a captain's commission, I'll resign. Who is he?

"He has his promotion, colonel," answered Sergeant Black, whose powder smoked cheeks already showed suspicious traces and gutters. "His commission's come."

come."

Reverently Colonel Miller approached and lifted the tangled folds of the flag. There was no mistaking the freekled face and red hair of the little man laying there, though death—such a death—had traced there a smile of confidence and content that the should human conceil. tentment that shamed human conceit.

ways carried by the little drummer. Not a cartridge in the cylinder, not one in the belt. Every shot had gone straight at the foe, and the last had saved his colonel's life. They left the flag about him, just as it had fallen, simply detaching the staff. They buried him upon the field. They wrote his epitaph in history simply: "Tom Wilson, Drummer Boy, the Hero of Stone River."

The town of Charville turned out in solid mass to do honor to its dead. There were flowers and speeches and tears. There were recitals and descriptions of noble deeds and great sacrifices. At the dictation of the mayor the entire populace marched to the home of Peg Wilson, where the rough spoken woman, more irritable the rough spoken woman, more irritable than ever, sat beside an old flour barrel alone with her grief. After the visitors had gone poor Peg gazed long and sadly upon the old flour barrel where "Tom the Brat," had learned to drum. Sadly she turned away to take up the duties of a life relieved from the annoyance of the "brat," but somehow it did not suit.

"I wished—no, I said I wished—that he'd go to war an never come back," sobbed Peg, "but why'did God hear an answer it when he knowed I didn't mean it? "Tain't th' drunnmer boy hero I want; 'tain't th' boy 't saved th' colonel's life. I want my Tom—my 'brat!'"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Fierce Fighting in the Trenches --United States Lost Six or Eight Killed and Forty Wounded.

Hong Kong, Aug. 17. -The United States collier Zafiro, from Manila, which arrived here yesterday, is anchored in Jank Bay. She left Ma-nila on the 14th. A typhoon is raging and it is impossible to land the mails, with further details of the battle of Manila. It is learned, how-ever, from a United States officer peace protocol has been signed, and that when Admiral Dewey, on Aug. 6th. demanded the surrender of Ma-nila within forty-eight hours, the spanish commander replied that the insurgents being outside the walls he had no safe place for the women and children, who were in the city, and asked for twenty-four hour's delay. This Admiral Dewey granted. At the expiration of the specified time Admiral Dewey and General Merritt comsulted and decided to postpone the attack. On Aug. 13 the United States squadron formed in line off Manila. The Olympia fired the first shot at the Malate fort. The shots of the United States ships fell short and time was occupied in finding the range. Then the Callao, one of the gunboats captured by Admiral Dewey from the Spaniards, got under the fort and sent in a hot fire. Great destruction was done with the rapid fire guns. The fort falled to reply, but fired on the United States troops that were storming the Spanish that were storming the Spanish trenches. The large United States ships were ordered to cease firing after an hour's work, owing to the failure of the fort to respond.

The fighting in the trenches was most fierce. Fifteen minutes after the Spaniards were driven to the second line of defences, they were forced to retreat to the walled city, where, seeing the uselessness of resistance, they surrendered and soon afterwards a white flag was hoisted over Manila. CARRIED BY STORM.

THE SURRENDER. THE SURRENDER.

The Belgian consul at Manila, M. Andre, boarded the Olympia and returned with a United States lieutenant to the Spanish military governor, who agreed to surrender. Gen. Merritt proceeded to the palace at 3.30 and there found the Spaniards formed in line. The troops surrendered their arms, but the officers were permitted to retain their swords.

THE CASUALTIES.

The United States loss is reported to be six or eight killed and forty wounded. The Spanish loss was considerable, but the exact numbers are not obtainable. The trenches were filled with badly wounded Spaniards.

INSURGENTS CHECKED.

The insurgents were not allowed to take part in the attack upon the city, but were kept in the rear of the United States' lines. In order to prevent bloodshel they were forbidden to enter the city after the surrender, unless they were unarmed.

AUGUSTI'S FLIGHT.

Before the surrender the Spaniards burned the transport Cebu in the Pasig river. It is supposed that Admiral Dewey was unaware of the departure of Governor-General Augus-to. The Zafiro's officers first heard to. The Zahro's officers has heard news of the governor-general's flight on their arrival here. General Augusti's escape is considered to have been prearranged, as he brought with him his family and suite.

Washington, Aug. 16 .- At the outset the military authorities' will be in charge of all administration of affairs in Cuba, Porto Rico and other acquired possessions. The result of the conferences to-day will be made known through the various depart ments. Already steps have between this country and Cuba but the plans now under consideration are likely to take in the question of han-ding of mair inside of Cuba, Porto Rico and other points. A mair steamer will leave New York to-morrow, carrying the first lot of mair for Cuba, which has left New York since the war be-gan. After the conference held this afternoon, M. Thiebaud, of the French embassey, called and was made acafternoon, M. Thiebaud, of the French embassy, called and was made acquainted with the general plans of this government in restoring a cable administration throughout the Spanish West Indies. The French ambassador has also been advised by the state department of its selection of military commission to meet at Haymilitary commission to meet at Havana and San Juan. The names of the commissioners has been awaited and Madrid, as it is the purpose to appoint Spanish commissioners of the same rank as those named by the United States. THE MANILA CABLE.

During the day the government be gan an effort, through diplomatic channels, to re-establish cable comchannels, to re-establish cable communication with Manila. It was believed by officials to-night that the efforts would prove successful, although some days may elapse before the diplomatic representations have born fruit. The cable out of Manila is under the control of a British compant. The line is understood to be cut near Manila, but Admiral Dewey has buoyed the several ends, so that a connection can be restored if the company will permit the line to be operated. Pending the renewal of this cable route, the authorities here remain without direct advices from the reported bombardment and surrender of Manila last Saturday. The

HOSTILITIES BETWEEN SPAIN AND U.S. CEASE.

Washington, Aug. 12.-The peace protocol was signed at 4.23 p. m. Secretary Alger has cabled orders to all military commanders that the protocol of peace has been signed, and to cease hostilities.

Secretary Long has cabled Admiral Sampson and Admiral Dewey and to cease hostilities.

Ambassador Cambon and Secretary Thiebaut drove over to the White House from the French embassy in a heavy driving rain. Contrary to all former visits, they drove all the way to the White House, and alighted in the broad porte cochere. Both were immediately ushered inside, and to the cabinet room, where President Mc-Kinley, Secretary Day, Assistant Secretaries of State Adee and Cridler nad been awaiting them for five minutes. There, in the historic cabinet room, the ceremony of formally agreeing and signing the protocol of peace took place.

THE PEACE PROTOCOL Washington, Aug. 12.-The protocol provides:

1. That Spain will relinquish all claim of sovereignty over and title to Cuba.

2. That Porto Rico and other Spanish islands in the West Indies, and an island in the Ladrones, to be selected by the United States, shall be ceded to the latter.

3. That the United States will occupy and hold the city, bay and harbor of Manila, pending the conclusion of a treaty of peace, which shall determine the control, disposition and government of the Phillippines.

4. That Cuba, Porto Rico and other Spanish islands in the West Indies shall be immediately evacuated and that commissioners, to be appointed within ten days, shall, within thirty days from the signing of this protocol, meet at Havana and San Juan, respectively, to arrange and execute the details of the evacuation.

5. That the United States and 5. That the United States and Spain will each appoint not more than five commissioners to negotiate and conclude a treaty of peace. The commissioners are to meet at Paris not later than the first of October.

6. On the signing of the protocol hostilities will be suspended, and notice to that effect will be given as soon as possible by each government to the commanders of its military and naval forces.

The above is the official statement f the protocol's contents, as pre-ared and given to the press by Secre-try Lay.

The protocol was signed at 4.23 p. m., by the secretary of state, Hon. William R. Day, representing the United States, and M. Cambon, the French ambassador, representing the Spanish government.

PEACE PROCLAMATION.

Washington, Aug. 12.—The president has issued the following proclamation: By the president of the United States of America:

A PROCLAMATION.

Come, shall we say £30 and £10 for the guard?" I shook my head. "No? Fifty, then? I'm prepared to pay handsomely, you see," he added, evi-dently believing my hesitation to be a matter of cupidity.

"No, sir. It's no good. Fifty pounds is £50 to me, goodness only knows, but the thing's impossible. No, it's no use your pressing me. I won't do it, and that's flat," I said, bringing my fist down on the table with an emphatic

He seemed considerably crestfallen at my refusal and walked up and down the room several times, muttering to I caught such expressions as 'confoundedly awkward-must catch that boat—impossible to leave before 12," and then suddenly he seemed to collect himself and apologized.

"Pardon my stupidity, Mr. Robson forgot for the moment. Look here, you're a man of discretion. If you can't do that other little favor for me, at any rate you can hold your tongue." I felt a scrap of paper placed in my hand, and a second later he had opened the door

It happened so quickly that I had no time to say anything. I saw that it was a £10 pound note I held. This, then, was the price of my silence, but I felt far from comfortable about it. Probably you recollect the Kaloczsky series of robberies. At any rate, you must have heard of them at the time. I had—everybody had—and the latest of all was the most daring, a barefaced capture in broad daylight of a lot of bonds and valuable securities on their way to the Bank of England.

Plainly my duty was to inform the au thorities, and speedily, too, if I wished the information to be of any service. I put my hat on straight away and hurried to the nearest police station, and when I had got rid of my tale I breathed again more freely.

day to look over my engine before starting out, I found a defective bolt in one of the rods. It was not a big-thing to repair, but it would take just long enough to prevent us from being ready to work the midday, and so I should not see the arrest of Kaloczsky after all. I guessed that the detectives would be with the train, on the lookout, you see. It was strange I hadn't noticed the flaw when we put the engine away the pre-vious night, but there it was now unmistakably. There was nothing but to report how matters stood to Mr. Welburn, the superintendent, which I did, and another engine was sent into St. Pancras to ntes past 1 when he bustled back into the yard, followed by a dapper little in-dividual carrying a black bag in his hand. The small, ferrety eyes and close cropped hair of the latter gave him a preternatually sharp appearance, and when he spoke his words came so rapidly as to give one the impression that he was talking in a series of jerks. It didn't require much experience in face reading to observe that Mr. Welburn was considerably disturbed by something. I soon learned what it was.

"Is that rod repaired, Robson?" he shouted before he got to where I was working. "How soon can you be ready to feave?"

As it chanced, I had just completed the repair. "Ten minutes, sir. Only want to coal up, and then we're right."

"Off you go and get it then sharp."

He turned to his companion, and I heard him saying: "That's the best I can do for you, and if you can pass the express at Marple so much the better. I should try it." I pricked my ears up at that, you may imagine. What was in the wind now?

"Robson!" I went up to them. "Listen to me. You know what the 12 o'clock is and how she's timed. Well, you've got to overtake her today. This gentleman is a detective from Scotland Yard, and there's a man on that train who has to be caught before he gets to Liverpool, if it's possible to do it. Now, you know what to do. Cover the ground as fast as you can; 1853 can go if you Don't spare her. I'll wire the line to be prepared."

Five minutes later we left the shed on one of the most memorable journeys it has ever been my lot to take. Half past 1! The express, that is to say, had an hour and a half's start, or, deducting stoppages at stations, say 75 minutes. And that, too, in 220 miles, and the train itself booked at something like 50 miles an hour. To be successful, we should have to average more than a mile a minute for the entire distance. I opened the regulator and off we started. It was not possible to attain much speed, of course, until we were well clear of the metropolis, and during that time the detective plied me with questions. I learned something in return also.

"Let's see," he said, "you're the man who gave the information about Ka-loczsky, aren't you? A great pity that you didn't come straight to us. Those police people have made a fine bungle of it: took the thing entirely into their own hands, thinking, I suppose, to have all the credit, and then they let him slip through their fingers. When they got that far, they condescended to let us know; the train, of course, being well on its way to Liverpool by that "Can we do it, do you think?"

"Well, we might and run through the direct line while it stands in the station. Then you could be waiting on the platform at Liverpool when it came I shouted back. "Aye, that's it—that's the thing," he said eagerly. "Try it."

I beckoned Jim to put on more coal Jim was my fireman. But what a task! The express was due at Marple at 4:15, and it was now five minutes to S Eighty minutes for 105 miles, part of it over some of the worst running line on

It was pretty straightforward to Derby, and we fairly flew. I had to go on the front several times for oiling purposes, and at the terrific speed it was no light task. Derby, 3:35! We raced through that station, with its pile of headquarter buildings, with nothing more than a loud shriek of the whistle—probably the first and only time it has been treated with such scan ceremony. Forty minutes for 48 miles! Now for the tug of war. The 1853 class is not considered the best for, the heavy line petween Derby and Manchester rule, but she buckled to the task galgo faster, faster; Jim shoveled away at the coal; the wheels groaned and creak ed; the footplate grew hot to our feet, and the engine swayed from side to side like a drunken man as we flew round the sinuous curves and over the points and crossings. One minute we were in s tunnel and the next emerging just long enough to catch a fleeting glimpse ne Derbyshire dale.

'Shall we do it, do you think?" the detective shouted. I nodded. I was watching the water gauge. The supply was getting low—in fact, we should have to stop at Rowsley to replenish it. He grimaced as I conveyed the intelligence to him, but it was inevitable.

When I got down to the shed next However, we only lost a couple of minutes or so and were soon tearing down the Peak Forest bank. It had been a hard fight, but we had practically won it now, unless some signal check should interpose to snatch the victory almost from our grasp. Luckily there was none With a triumphant crow of the whistle we ran through Marple while the express unloaded barrowfuls of luggage at the platform.

The detective fairly danced with delight. "Robson, my boy, my congratu-lations: Shake hands." I did so, and he left a sovereign in it. When we got to Liverpool, the same ceremony was enacted with Jim, and then he left us to make his arrangements.

It was five minutes past 5, a quarter of an hour before the ordinary train was due. We had done the distance of was due. We had done the distance $20 miles in 3 hours and 35 minutes.

We looked about, but could see nothing of the detective. The express had arrived and been shunted away again empty. Jim went up to a little knot of porters who were standing about, and asked a question of one of them. The man turned round with a loud laugh, and said to his companions: "Blow me if there isn't another at it now. Are you all Kaloczsky mad to-day?"

"Why, what do you mean?" asked

Jim in surprise.

"Well, you're the third. Two fellows came down by the midday from London, and commenced to fly around and ask a "Special engine! Left London at half past 1! What are you talking about? We're the only detectives who left Scotland Yard this morning, and we came by the midday. Kaloczsky was to travel by it, we were told, but he never turned up."

"Kaloczsky himself, by all that's sacred! My man, you've been instrumental in assisting the biggest rogue in England to escape."

He pulled out his watch angrily. "Six o'clock. Yes, he's now on board the New York liner and just half an hour away from Liverpool, and by the time we could get after him it would be useless. Goodby, Mr. Robson, I congratulate you. He's fooled you all around. And so it was. Some time after I got a letter bearing the New York postmark. It ran something after this fashion: all the credit, and then they let him ship through their fingers. When they got that far, they condescended to let us know; the train, of course, being well on its way to Liverpool by that time."

So that was the explanation of my gentleman's presence on the engine. He seemed in a mighty hurry too. We had got fairly out into the country now, and his orders were. "Let her fly." And fly we did. If ever engine traveled well, mine did that day. We did the 60 miles to Sharnbrook summit in a level 60 minutes, including a signal check approaching Luton—the only one, by the big pull up the bank. Side by side with the illicit skin bunting and its resultant trade in skins for tanning there is a genuine demand in Canada for deerskin for garments. "My little boy, aged 7 years and 15 months, was a victim of Scrofula on the face, which all the doctors said was incurable. To tell the truth he was so bad that I could not bear to look at him. At last I tried a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters, and before it was half used he was gaining, and by the time he had three bottles used he was completely cured. I cannot say too much in recommendation of B.B.B. to all who suffer as he did." JOSEPH P. LABELLE, Maniwake P.O., Que.

There can be no question about it. Burdock Blood Bitters has no equal for the cure of Sores and Ulcers of "the most chronic and malignant nature. Through its powerful blood purifying properties, it gets at the source of disease and completely

Should always carry with them a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

The change of food and water to which those who travel are subject, often produces an attack of Diarrhea, which is as unpleasant and discomforting as it may be dangerous. A bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry in your grip is a guarantee of safety. On the first indication of Cramps, Colic, Diarrhea or Dysentery, a few doses will promptly check further advance of these diseases. It is an old, reliable remedy, with over forty years' of cures to its credit, whose merit is recognized everywhere and one that the doctors recommend in preference to all others.

Sold by medicine dealers everywhere at 35c. a bottle. Always insist on the genuine, as many of the imitations are highly dangerous. The change of food and water to which

Ottawa, Aug. 24.—A gross outrage by a United States official, committed on a British subject on Canadian soil, is reported from the St. Clair frontier, and if the facts are as represented the case calls for prompt presented the case calls for prompt action and immediate reparation. A more despotic action could not have been committed by the Khallifa or the Czar than is ascribed to the United States deputy collector of customs, Henry Avery. Thomas Meagher, a resident of Port Lambton on the Canadian side of the St. Clair river, crossed in his steam launch into United States water near the club river, crossed in his steam launch into United States water near the club house at Marshland a few days ago. Avery ordered Meagher into port, but Meagher crossed to his destination on the Canadian side of the river. He was followed by Avery and his assistant, not only to the Canadian side of the river, but upon Canadian soil, where the United States officers attacked and without warrants placed him under arrest. Meagher was tacked and without warrants placed him under arrest. Meagher was taken across the river to Marshland hotel, where he was handcuffed to a bedpost for twenty-four hours with the exception of a brief interval during which Avery paraded his prisoner handcuffed through the hotel grounds to humiliate him and to show his own authority. Atbara, Aug. 22.-The transport column of the Soudan expedition which left Camp Atbara on Aug. 16, marching along the left bank of the Nile to an advanced post at Atbara island, arrived at Metemmeh on Sunday last. The column traversed the formerly prosperous and thickly populated Jaalin country, which is now completely deserted, and covered with the whitening bones and sun dried bodies of the tribes massacred last year. the whitening bones and sun dried by doiles of the tribes massacred last year. Everywhere are evidences of the misery and decay. The skillfully built Dervish huts are deserted and crumbling. Metemmeh itself, a town of 5,000 houses, is now a city of desolation; its houses are in ruins, its alleys blocked with skeletons, and its courtyards putrid with corpses. The few natives seen are disposed to be friendly. The second brigade passed there in boats on their way to the front. The Nite is high: The Sirdar and already recomnditred the river to Shabluka, within fifty miles of the gubbats, a full advance is extended by the middle of September. The heat is trying; but the expedition is in good condition.

Shabluka, which was evacuated by the Dervishes a fortnight ago, is a magnificent position, the river being arrow, with a well built forton each side. Practically the whole force is now encamped at Wadhamid, fifty-five miles from Khartoum. The Sirdar has arrived there, he had a camp at a tzerebaad, but the danger of attack is remote. PEACE COMMISSIONERS.

Spain Notifies the United States of the Appointments.

Washington, Aug. 22.—The state department received a call to-day from M. Thiebaut, secretary of the French embassy, and in charge during the absence of Ambassador Cambon, who bore a notification from the Spanish government of the military commissioners for Cuba and Porto Rico. Under the peace protocol each government was to name its military commissioners within tendays, their meetings to begin within thirty days. The ten days was up to-day, and accordingly Spain gave the official notice of the appointments. They are as follows:

For Cuba—Major-General Gonzales Parrado, Rend Admiral Pastor y Landero, Marquis Montero.

For Porto Rico—Major-General Ortega y Diaz, Commodore of First Rank vallarina y Carracco, Judge Advocate Sanchez del Aguilla y Leon.

The foregoing official list differs from-some of the lists given in pressing many monthly, General Blanco, General Macias and several other prominent Spanish officers. Considerable signification, as it indicates a purpose on the sion, as it indicates a purpose on the lander of the connection with the conference gatherings. The union Jack floats over the main tower of the parliament buildings and the British and United States flags hang over the clock in the council chamber.

cance attaches to the naming of Mar-quis Montero on the Cuban commis-sion, as it indicates a purpose on the part of Spain to go into the future government of Cuba. He is the only commissioner, Spanish or United States, taken from civil life. He is secretary of the treasury of the Cuban autonomous cabinet and all his inter-sets are connected with the governautonomous cabinet and all his interests are connected with the government of Cuba, rather than with the military question of Spanish evacuation of Cuba. He is named, it is believed, in order to carry out Spain's desire to have an understanding as to the future government of the island, he being intimately familiar with questions of the civil administration of Cuba, as secretary of the Cuban treasury, he is also very familiar with questions affecting the Cuban debt.

The grandfather of Miss Stiles was killed on the same crossing several years ago.

Ontario Fruit.

Winnipeg, Aug. 19.—Ontario fruit is commencing to arrive in the city daily. During the week about twenty cars for local dealers have arrived at the warehouses. These consignments include early apples and plums; shipments of Ontario tomatoes are also reaching the local dealers. Ontario fruit is much cheaper this year than last; many districts in that province report good yeilds, and since last season the railway companies have made a gratifying reduction in freight rates, commencing last January. In consequence the freight on a barrel of apples is 40 cents less than one year ago.

CANADA'S BIG DISPLAY.

The Dominion Resources Extensively Shown at Omaha.

In the International Hall at the Mississippi Exposition the largest exhibit is that of the Dominion of Canada. It occupies 5,000 feet of floor space and 6,000 feet of wall space, covered with the best the country can produce. It is an agricultural, mineral, forestry and dairy exhibit combinded.

The location is first-class, taking, in the main entrance to the building H. Myers, commissioner from the Dominion of Canada, is in charge, assisted by W. V. Bennett, the resident Canadian agent, an his daughter, Miss June Bennett. The exhibit is viewed by ninety per cent of the Exposition visitors, a vast proportion of whom are as-tonished by the great showing of the country's resources here made. Wheat that grades "No. 1 hard northern," and is porduced to the amount of thirty-eight to forty-five bushels per acre all through the Dominion is the principal agricultural product shown. Commissioner Myers says the Dominion can supply the breadstuffs for all of the nations of the earth. Not only wheat, but oats, barley, rye, corn and all of the cereals known to the United States grow and flourish in every locality, yielding abundantly. The corn is as yielding abundantly. The corn is as large as that grown further south; the small grain has a lighter color, the ber-

MILITARY EXPERTS.

Those Sent to Watch the War by the cipal European Nations and the Kingdom of Japan.

Principal European Nations and the Kingdom of Japan.

Military experts from the principal European nations, and one from Japan as well, accompanied the American army of invasion to Cuba. It is the custom for other nations to send trained men to observe the conduct of wars, so that their own army may imitate the good points of the combatants and avoid repeating mistakes.

The men who are with General Shafter in Cuba are all men with reputations for their military knowledge. Captain A. H. Lee of the British royal artillery has been with the army for more than a month. He spent several days at Chick amauga before joining Shafter's army. Captain Lee has made many friends among the officers. He has seen service, but he modestly declined to speak of his record when asked for a brief sketch of his military career.

In this respect Captain Lee is much like Captain Sir Bryan Leighton of the cavalry. Captain Lee, has a fight. As he could not come over here as the representative of his government, he came on his own account, and he has been living with the Ninth cavalry as the guest of Colonel Hamilton. He invariably refuses to talk about himself, but his record is a dashing one, and he owns many articles of gold and silver which bear tell-tale inscriptions. One jeweled trinket is inscribed, "Presented by Her Majesty in recognition of his great gallantry at—"

Another reminder of his service is a canvas jacket worn next his skin, which conceals an unhealed wound, received in the African campaign. Captain Leighton has seen service in India and South Africa. He is on furlough from his regiment.

In 1890 he was an attache of the German embassy at Rome, and then he was sent on a scientific expedition into central Africa. He is a graduate of the University at Kiele and has a legal diploma. He also studied at Paris and Berlin. In last February, while attached to the embassy of his government at Washington, he married Mrs. May Stanley Lay, a wealthry widow of Baltimore.

Captain A. Wester of the Swedish army is the military attache to the legation of Sweden and Norway at Washington. He will go through this war as he did through the Turko-Grecian conflict. He has served two years in the Swedish cavalry, two years in the Swedish cavalry, two years in the service. He was with Stanley in Africa. Captain A. Colonel Yernoloff, military attache to the Russian imperial embassy at Washington, is on the general staff of the Russian army. He was formerly of the horse artillery. He represented his government in the Turko-Grecian war, and saw service in the Turko-Russian war of 1877-78. He was at the siege of Plevna. He is a graduate of the military school at St. Petersburg, and has spent seven years as an attache at the legation at London.

Major G. Shiba of the Japanse legation at London is a major of artillery, and was in the field in the Chino-Japanese war, taking part in the battles of Wai-Wai and Port Arthur. He is a graduate of the military college at Tokio.

Lioutenant Joseph Rodier of the Austro-Hungarian legation is a naval officer who holds a commission on the Donau. He has seen service affoat as well as in the diplomatic field, and was on a battleship when the powers blockaded the ports of Greece in 1886. He is a graduate of the Austrian naval school at Fiume.

Pronounced Incurable by Doctors, But Made Strong and Well by Paine's Celery Compound.

WELLS & RICHARDSON CO..

Gentlemen: Having been given up to die some time ago by some of the best doctors of the United States, I came to Canada last autumn terribly ill, and had lost all hope. Suffering agonies from inflammatory rheumatism, I was strongly urged to use Paine's Celery Compound. I gave it a trial as recom-mended, and the first bottle did me so much good I continued with the medi-cine until I had used seven bottles, when I found myself perfectly cured; indeed, I never felt better in all my life than at present.

I used every possible means to tell others of Paines' Celery Compound, and will always recommend it to those troubled with rheumatism.

Yours very truly, WM. MORRISETTE, Roxton Pond, P.Q.

Astronomers generally now admit that the more recent studies of the planets Mercury and Venus tend to confirm Schiaparelli's opinion, advanced some years ago, that both of them turn on their axes once while revolving about the sun. This, however, is a very about the sun. This, however, is a very difficult point to settle with certainty, the reason given for this being, and very plausibly, that the evidence rests upon observation of the exceedingly faint markings upon the disks of the planets, the fact being that very few astronomers have ever seen them at all tronomers have ever seen them at all with distinctness, and only those who have made a most persistent study of them and are favored with vision especially sensitive to such details are com petent to express an opinion as to their correct interpretation. It is argued that if, as held by some, the rotation and revolution periods are the same be a correct opinion, then the climatic conditions of the two planets must be most remarkable. Furthermore, our moon always shows the same face to the earth and no knowledge exists of the hidden part, nor have the supposed inhabitants of that concealed hemi-sphere ever seen the earth. This, howsphere ever seen the earth. This, however, is of no importance to them, as the earth is not the source of light, heat and life on the moon. All parts of the moon are brought under the sun's influence just as all parts of the earth, though the day and night are 14 times as long as on the earth. But how it must be on a planet which has one side only exposed to the sun, astronomers can give no answer.—Exchange. give no answer. -Exchange Murderers May Be "Nice." At daybreak at Sakhalin-you could hardly see daybreak on account of the shutters—one of the ugliest looking women I ever saw crept in with a cur of tea that is always given in Asia very early in the morning, and she was murderess. I went to the little tent outside to have breakfast, and a man came up behind me and reached over my shoulder, and he was a murderer. When we rode out after breakfast, a man with magnificent broad shoulders and splendid face drove, and he was a murderer.

The fact is, strange as it may seem, they (the governor and Russian officers at Sakhalin) have no choice. All the domestics must come domestics must come they have, and if you take a thief he is almost always sure to stay a thief, while a more derer may be a very nice kind of a person. They did that kind of thing among themselves, and I don't want any better men than some of those that were sent there for murder.—Bulletin Americal Society.

Better take a box or two of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and get cured before things become too serious. Here's what Mr. John James, of Caledonia, Ont., has to say about them: "I have had serious heart trouble for four years, caused by excessive use of tobacco. At times my heart would beat very rapidly and then seemed to stop beating only to commence again with unnatural rapidity. "This unhealthy action of my heart caused shortness of breath, weakness and debility. I tried many medicines and spent a great deal of money but could not get any help.

Last November, however, I read of a man, afflicted like myself, being cured by Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I went to Roper's drug store and bought a box. When I had finished taking it I was so much better I bought another box and this completed the cure. My heart has not bothered me since, and I strongly recommend all sufferers from heart and nerve trouble, caused by excessive use of tobacco, to give Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills a fair and faithful trial."

Doan's Kidney Pills.

Throughout the County of Leeds and the Town of Brockville there is no medicine spoken so highly of for all kinds of Kidney Diseases as Doan's Kidney Pills.

As Canada's pioneer kidney pill, introduced by Mr. James Doan, of Kingsville, Ont., in 1885, they stand to-day far superior to all the imitations and substitutes that have been offered the public in their stead.

Mr. R. E. Pitt, the well-known contractor and builder, voices these sentiments when he says, "I have had kidney trouble for years. I had trieft numerous remedies without much relief, and had given up my back as gone for good, but since using Doan's Kidney Pills the result has been marvellous! The pain is all gone. I feel like a new man, and can highly testify to the virtues of Doan's Kidney Pills."

Doan's Kidney Pills are sold by all dealers or sent by mail on receipt of price, 50 cents a box or 3 boxes for $1.25.

The fact is that five years ago the minor sect within the Mormon church which practised polygamy prior to that time, abolished the practice. Not only is polygamy not a principal tenet of their religion, but the practice is unlawful within their church. Again, the Vidette states that the Premier declared that the Bill was "for the purpose of securing to the Mormons the right to the full use of their particular religion". It is perhaps needless to say that the Premier made no such declaration. The Mormons have, without incorporation, in common with Anglicans and Catholics and Baptists and Jews and Hornerites, the right to the full use of their particular religion. The Bill, in fact, had nothing to do with religion. It proposed primarily, and simply, and wholly.

Paris, Sept. 2.—Having died uncondemned, Colonel Henry's remains are entitled to military honors; but his brother will take the body to Pougy, near Chalons, where it will be buried on Saturday, with the strictest privacy. Several officers of the general staff, it is said to night, have asked to be sent to their regiments. General Renouard, the new chief of staff, is understood to have a free hand as is understood to have a free handas to be at liberty to replace all the staff officers, if he thinks fit. It is expected that he will resort to a process of punification. The government's position is most unhappy. Notice of interpellations in the chamber multiply. President Faure is censured for leaving Paris at such a critical moment. Great efforts are being made to get the signatures of a majority of the deputies, which is a necessary preliminary to a convocation of the chamber.

Col. Henry left letters addressed to the minister for war and to General Poisdeffre, in which he protested that he had not realized the gravity of the act which he committed, "solely for the good of the cause."

ZOLA'S ACCUSATION.

M. Emile Zola, in his famous "I accuse", letter, published in L'Aurore, which led to his trial and conviction on the charge of libelling military officers, said: "I accuse Lieut. Col. Du Clam of having been the diabolical worker of judicial error, unconsciously, I am ready to believe, and then having defended his nefarious doings for the past three years by most about the control of the past three years by most about the control of the past three years by most about the control of the past three years by most about the control of the past three years by most about the control of the past three years by most about the control of ly, I am ready to believe, and then having defended his nefarious doings for the past three years by most absurd and culpable machinations. I accuse General Mercler—who was minister for war when Dreyfus was tried—of being the accomplice, at least, through weak intelligence, in the greatest inquity of the century. I accuse General Billot—minister for war during the late Dreyfus agitation—of having in his hands the certain proofs of innocence of Dreyfus and of having suppressed them; thus rendering himself guilty of treason against humanity and justice, for a political reason and in order to save the compromised staff. I accuse General Boisson and in order to save the compro-mised staff. I accuse General Bois-deffre—the chief of the general staff— and General Consy—the assistant chief of general staff—of being accom-plices in the same crime, the one through religious animosity, doubt-less; the other perhaps through the "esnight de corns" which makes the 'espirit de corps, which makes the "espirit de corps." which makes the war office a sacred and unassailable ark. I accuse General de Pellieus, and Major Ravary of having made a flagitious investigation whereby I mean an inquiry of most monstrous partiality. I accuse the three experts in hand writing, the men Bellomme, Varinard and Gouard, of having drawn in false and fraudulent reports unup false and fraudulent reports, un-less medical examination shall prove less medical examination shall prove-them to be victims of a disease of sight or judgment. I accuse the officers of the war office of having organized a presc campaign in order to lead pub-lic opinion astray. And I accuse the second court martial of having covered this illegal-ity by order, and of committing in its turn the judicial crime of knowingly acquitting a gullty person.

After a long trial in February last, M. Zola was sentenced to one year's imprisonment and to pay a fine of 300 francs for these alleged libels and M. Pereux, the manager of L'Aurore, was sentenced to four months' imprisonment and to pay 3,000 francs fine.

COL HENRY SUICHDES, Par's. Aug. 31.—10.30 p. m.—Lieut. Col. Henry cut his throat suicide. Lieut. Col. Henry cut his throat with a razor he had concealed in his valise. During the recent Zola trial Henry accused Col. Picquart of falsifying telegrams. A duel followed in which Henry was wounded. The next scene occurred in the chamber of deputies, where Col. Picquart proclaimed the letter a forgery and as a result was arrested, while Henry's villany was rewarded by his being appointed Col. Picquart's successor in the intelligence department. It is now evident that Henry forged the letter with the express object of paralysing Col. Picquart's efforts to exposs Major Count Esterlizzy, and get a revision of the Dreyfus case. The letter was written in bad French, a fact which first led it to be regarded as spurious. It is said that if the cabinet decides upon a revision of the Dreyfus case, M. Cavalgnac, minister of war, will resign.

Boston Chamber of Commerce Favor Closer Relations With Canada.

Boston, Aug. 31.—A special meeting of the Boston chamber of commerce was held here yesterday for the purpose of considering ways and means about closer trade relations with Can-President W. T. Robinson pre sided and after resolutions were adopted to the effect that the chamber reaffirms its position as set forth in the resolutions adopted January 18th, 1898, in favor of heaving and of the arrest of Col. Henry and of his admission, he exclaimed: "This is too terrifying."

Colonel Henry's confession threatens to rekindle the Dreyfus agitation more heatedly than ever and seems likely to shake public confidence in the army. Even La Liberte, a strong anti-Dreyfus organ, says. "It must cause the deepest pain to all honorable men that officers of such standing show such lack of morals." It is reported that at a meeting the minister sadmitted that a revision of the Dreyfus trial was unavoidable and a public announcement that the ministry has decided to initiate such a revision is expected.

London, Sept. 1.—11 p. m.—The war office was relieved this evening by the receipt of a disputch from Cairo explaining the sudden interruption of news from the Soudan, which gave rise to some uneasiness yesterday as to the movements of the AngloEgyptian column, now advancing toward Omdurman, under General Sir Herbert Kitchener. It appears that telegraphic communication was interrupted by the wire beyong Nasri Island, about midway between Metemmich and the sixth cataract of the Nile, having been damaged by a severe storm. Shortly after the arrival of this intelligence, came the following dispatch to the Associated Press from Nasri Island, dated Aug. 30, and forwarded by messenger from the camp at the front of Nasri .

"There have been glimpses of the enemy during the last few days, and the first skirmish took place to-day when an advance guard of cavalry located a large body of the dervishes at a supposed outpost near Kerreri, about eight miles north of Omdurman.

"The enemy showed a disposition to fight, beating war drums and displaying battle bunting. The Montmorency troops emptied a few Dervish saddles and three gunboats steamed up the river in front of the town and shelled the Dervishes' position. The enemy's loss could not be ascertained as the Alleged Conflict of Jurisdiction Be-tween Manitoba and Ontario.

Toronto, Aug. 29.—The A O. U. W. Winnipeg are making application to the Ontario government for permission to insure members and establish lodges in Ontario. Their application is being vigorously opposed by the Ontario order, who expressed their strong disapproval at their last grand lodge meeting of the action of the Winnipeg body in establishing a lodge at Rat Portage. The application will be considered by the attorney general on Sept. 6, when it is expected there will be a vigorous fight, as deputations representing both bodies will be present to press their respective claims. The only manner in which the Manitoba organization can obtain the privileges asked for in Ontario is by showing special reasons why their request should be granted.

JOINT COMMISSION DISCUSSES IN-SHORE FISHERIES.

Captain Cox Will Urge That Sealers Be Indemnified if Pelagic Sealing Be Abolished.

Quebec, Aug. 31.—Capt. John G. Cox, of Victoria, B. C., the official representative ct Canadian seal fishermen, arrived in Quebec this morning present the claims of the sealers British Columbia before the British commissioners, also to act in an advisory capacity to the latter. Capt. Cox will have a formal interview with the British representatives to-morrow and the question of seal fisheries will be taken up by the joint high commission on Friday. An impression has already gone forth that the conhas already gone forth that the conference will likely agree to suspension of pelagic sealing and Capt. Cox, on behalf of the Canadian sealers, is prepared to accept such a decision on condition that the sealers be indemnified for the loss of capital at present actually invested in the industry. There are this season fifty-two vessels owned by British Columbia sealers engaged in sealing fishing, laving a gross registered tonnage of 3,649 tons. Fair estimates place the values of these vessels at $200 per gross ton, giving-a little over $730,000 as the amount of capital invested. Capt. Cox thinks it would be a hardship and an injustice to wipe out this vested interest without a fair indemnity being made. If the United States commissioners are willing to give $700,000 to indemnify the sealers for the loss of their investments they can secure the abolition of pelagic sealing without much time spent in discussion and this vexed question may be settled off hand and for all time. It is probable, however, that the United States will look at it in the light that the matter of indemnity is one which the two governments should share equally, and on some such compromise basis the question is not unlikely to be settled. At any rate pelagic sealing seems probable to be disposed of by the conference on Friday and an official announcement to that effect may be looked for after adjournment on that day. It will be the first definite fruit of the commissioners' labors.

Today the question of the Atlantic inshore fisheries, which occupied the attention of the commissioners yesterday, was again discussed. The subject presents a great variety of intricate features and will probably be again the principal item for consideration tomorrow, after which it will be dropped until the reassembling of the conference.

Although no intimation has been given out by any of the commissioners of the nature of the disposition by far over the fisheries, it is understood to have followed very closely the footprints of negotiations on the same question which took place at Washington in 1885. Now, as then, it is understood, that Canadian representatives propose that fishermen of both countries shall have all the privileges enjoyed during the existence of the fishery seasons under the treaty of Washington of 1871, pending the consideration of a mutual arrangement providing for greater freedom of commercial intercourse between the two countries.

Quebec, Aug. 29.—Sir Wilfrid Lauquebec, Aug. 29.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier arrived from the funeral of his brother at Arthabaskaville just in time to take his seat with the commissioners before adjournment. It is understood the Behring Sea was the question under discussion, but absolutely nothing was given out. It is not considered at all likely that when the conference adjourns on. Friday not considered at all likely that when the conference adjourns on Friday, matters will be far enough advanced to give anything out for publication. Several deputations will be given a hearing by the United States com-sioners during the week. The confer-ence will likely reassemble in Quebec whevever it may meet subsequently.

New York, Aug. 28.—The international conference now being held at Quebec is referred to by Mr. Ford in his letter to the Tribune to-day as follows: Rumors respecting dissensions in the Quebec conference, the secession of Jamaica and other West Indian colonies from the British empire, and a disposition on the part of the United States to propose a game between the Angle-Equations about the Company of the United States to propose a game between the Angle-Equations and a disposition on the part of the United States to propose a game between the Angle-Equations. settled district. A story was sent out from here to Montreal and other places to the effect that one of the commissioners—Mr. Dingley was hinted at — had declared it was useless to discuss the question of reciprocal trade relations with the United States unless Canada drop; el the preferential tariff now given to the Mother Country. There is much inquiry as to the truth of this dispatch. Mr. Dingley disavowed it entirely, remarking that it would have been discourteous on his part to have made such a statement.

A DREADED DISEASE,

More People Are Tortured by the Pangs of Rheumatism Than Any Other Cause—There Is a Cure for It.

n the Advertiser, Hartland, N. B. Mr. Richard Dixon, of Lower Brighton, is one of the most prosperous and best known farmers of Carleton county, In June, 1897, Mr. Dixon was seized with an attack of rheumatism and for six weeks lay abed suffering all the tortures of this terrible disease. He grew so weak that he was unable to turn in bed, and his friends almost despaired of his recovery. At this stage one of his friends, who had been cured of the same disease by the use of Dr. William's Pink Pills, urged Mr. Dixon to give them a trial, which -advice was followed. Almost from the day Mr. Dixon began the use of the pills an im provement was noted. Previously his appetite had almost completely failed and the first sign of returning health was a frequent feeling of hunger. Then the pains began to leave him, and his strength gradually returned and after using about a dozen boxes Mr. Dixon was as well as ever he had been. To a reporter of the Hartland Advertiser, Mr. Dixon said he had no doubt his present health was due entirely to the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and since his recovery he occasionally uses a box to ward off a possible recurrence of the trouble.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure by making new blood and invigorating the nerves , but you must get the genuine, always put up in boxes the wrapper around which bears the full trade mark name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People." In case of doubt send direct to Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and the pills will be mailed post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

Paris Sept. 5.-Following is the text Madame Dreyfus' demand to the minister of justice for a revision of her husband's trial: "I had the honor the month of July to place before you a request, in which I asked you to exercise the right conferred upon you by law, and which is conferred on no one else, to transmit to the court of cassation for reconsideration the judgment rendered against my unfortunate husband in violation of the article of the military cole. I have the onor now, Monsieur le Ministre, again to addr. ss. you a second time, appealing to you because the law which governs such a revision does not permit me directly, and by my own agency, to invoke justice; you, and you alone have the right to effect a revision of a judgment bringing with it condemnation, on the ground of discovery of new facts, tending to establish the innocence of the condemned man, quite distinctly and without reference to or assistance from all the revelations of many months past, which have thrown so much light upon the judicial error of 1894, and which have caused such profound emotion and excitement throughout the country.

"It is not possible that you, above all others, should not be struck by the following facts: First, there is the examination of the bordereau, which was made at the trial of January, this year. The results of this examination or not communicated to to addr as you a second time, appeal-

"It is not possible that you, above all others, should not be struck by the following facts: First, there is the examination of the bordereau which was made at the trial of January, this year. The results of this examination were not communicated to my counsel, the council of war refusing them access to it. But I have certain information, that conclusions drawn from this examination were not the same as at the examination of 1894. There is also, following this exposure, the confession made by one of the principal accusers and witnesses against my husband at his trial, in which he admits that he forged a document; that the minister of war, in his speech to the chamber on July 7 last, declared to be proof positive of the guilt of my husband, though it was written long after his condemnation. This proof, therefore, crumbles, to pieces and destroys the value of depositions which convinced the judges in 1894. Since this partisan to pieces and destroys the value of depositions which convinced the judges in 1894. Since this partisan witness of the culpability of my husband has been convicted of a charge of forgery, under circumstances of which you are fully aware. But, monsieur le ministre, as I have just told you, in case of a revision instituted by law for judicial errors, the right to demand such revision belongs either to the innocent man who ha to demand such revision belong neither to the innocent man who ha to demand such revision belongs neither to the innocent man who has been unjustly condemned, nor to his wife, nor to his children; this right belongs you alone. I now, therefore, morisieur le ministre, beseech you to use, without delay, the rights which are conferred upon you by law which are only conferred upon you both for the annullment and revision of the verdict, which is neither just nor legal."

"I beseech you hear the voice, now almost unanimous, of public opinion, and put an end to the sufferings of an innocent man, who has always been a loyal soldier and who has not ceased, even amid the tortures of an unmerited punishment, to declare his love for the Fatherland and faith in justice being linally done him.

Goodly Fortune.

A lawyer had come all the way from California to pay a $10,000 legacy over to Uncle Jerry Hopefield, who had lived all his life in a little town in Ohio, and after breakfast two or three of us were invited to go along and witness the transfer. When we reached the house, Uncle Jerry was tightening up the heops on the rain barrel, while his wife had gone to see a sick neighbor. They had been fully identified the day before as the proper parties, and now the lawyer said:

"Well, Uncle Jerry, I want to hand you that money and get a receipt and be off this morning."

"I'm kinder busy just now," said the old man as for stopped hammering for a moment.

"Mebbe not, but it looks like rain, and I want to git this bar'l fixed right away. Qun't you come over in about an hour?"

"Look here, man, but did, you ever see $10,000 in all your life?" asked the lawyer as he opened the satchel and displayed a big package of new greenbacks.

"No, I never did," replied Uncle Jerry as he pounded away.

"Did you ever have $1,000 of your own?"

"Lands, no!"

"Never had a hundred all at once, did you?"

Never. Durn that hoop, but it don't

The Matinee.

It was a common thing for actors to accuse Mr. Boucicault of being the originator of the matinee in this country. That is not true. The matinee came from Boston, and it was only a few years ago that it was against the law in Massachusetts to give a theatrical performance on a Saturday night. The managers to get their six performances a week, gave a matinee on Saturday, and it has not been such a great number of years since that law was repealed.—Owen Fawcett in Detroit Free Press.

MESSRS. T. MILBURN & CO., Toronto, Ont.
Gentlemen—I am pleased to testify to the great benefit! I have received from the use of Laxa Liver Fills. I was very much constipated and felt great distress after eating.
Your Laxa Liver Fills regulated my stomach and resucced by renive system to licalthy action. The effect of these pills is most natural and effective, are from any grining or pain.
They cause not the least inconvenience. My advice to all who may see this is to try them, for I know they are good.

tacked by a force of eight European and a hundred Senegalese soldiers, who defeated the Dervishes, killed a hundred and drove the rest in precipitate flight from the town. The Daily Telegraph's correspondent says. "There is no doubt that this is the march and expedition."

The dispatch was sent from Assauan, and the captain interviewed belonged to the steamer Tewfikich, one of the Dervish steamers which surrendered to General Kitchener on its return from Fashoda. The correspondent describes General Kitchener's efforts to prevent the news reaching England. He says: "I wired this identical news a week ago from Omdurman. The Sirdar flatly refused to allow any correspondent to accombany him south of Omdurman, or to go independently. He compelled us to sell our horses and camels, and then told us unless we returned northward forthwith he could not guarantee us transportation. General Kitchener has sent 1,800 Soudanese, 200 men of the Cameron Highlanders, two batteries of Nordenfeld mountain guns, and several Maxims on board the gunboats Sultan and Sheikh. The Sirdar accompanies the force on the steamer Dal. Probably they have already, arrived at Fashoda."

The correspondent says also, detailing an earlier movement, that the gunboat Sultan was sent up the Blue Nile to intercept a Dervish garrison 2,450 strong, coming to reinforce the Khalifa. The gunboat found and engaged the enemy, killing a thousand and driving the remainder back. Ha adds "that it is officially announced that the Khalifa is now surrounded and must be taken alive or dead within a few days"

Madrid, Sept. 12.—Capt. Aunon, minister for marine, received to-day an important dispatch from the Philippines, describing a conflict between the Spanish gunboats and an insurgent flotilla, in which the former successfully prevented an insurgent landing in the Visayas. According to the dispatch the insurgents had five vessels, all of which were sunk. The Spaniaros had no loss; but the telegram asserts that hundreds of the insurgents are believed to have perished.

Madrid. Sept. 12.—The French ambassador at Whishington, M. Cambon, who has been acting for Spain in the peace negotiations, has cabled to the government here that the United States, in reply to the Spanish note protesting against hestilities upon the part of insurgents in Philippine Islands, in spite of the peace protocol, promises to send envoys to induce the Togalos to respect the suspension of hostilities and to prevent vessels leaving Manila with insurgents, having the intention of propagating the insurrection in the other islands.

COLUMBIA'S PLUCK.

Columbia was her name-Columbia Alpin, "I know it's queer," she used to explain, 'Monstrangers, when they're introduced, always stare at me as if I were some sort of foreigner, when I'm not; thank goodness! But it's the name I've got, and I'm going to try to live up to it.' So Columbia was nothing if not pa triotic, and her name, however odd, didn't seem inappropriate. She had little need to deck herself with the national colors which she so persistently flaunted, for na-ture had printed the red, white and blue in dawn tints on her glowing face, and bright stars shone there, too, right out of in dawn tints on her glowing face, and bright stars shone there, too, right out of the blue, to make all absolutely perfect. She was herself our country's fairest, truest emblem.

But patriotism was at a discount in Rustival, or Rustyville, as it was insultingly nicknamed by its hustling neighbors in Newburg, just across the lake, for Rustival was a sour, belated little country town which had aspired to become the local metropolis and hadn't realized its ambition. I remember that when I went there to start a tannery in 1866, the year of the preliminary survey for the Z. V. and W. railroad, it was impossible to get a rod of ground for love or money, so extravagant were the expectations of the villagers. But they had seen the railroad and the country seat and all the other good things which they had accounted their own one by one slip from their grasp and tumble into the lap of their upstart rival. Thus Rustival, dwindling and dingy, continually losing the more alert of its youth and retaining only those whose shallow, rustic conceft found scant encouragement elsewhere, had become the abode of peovish and carping discontent, ripe for disloyalty. The whole country was going to the dogs; that was evident. A glauce at their neglected street, weedy yards and the white paint scaling from a straggling line of houses was proof enough to this mildewed community.

Naturally when the war with Spain broke out there was no enthusiasm. To be sure, Joel Slocum, the local politician, made off to Washington to try for an appointment, but he soon came back and reported a general state of rottenness.

She had just entered the postoffice, where Joel was haranguing, and stood like an animated edition of the "Star Spangled Banner" on the edge of the crowd.

out. She's construction of the state of the thing of her own spirit. The war appealed to them. The element of romance had been sadly lacking in their lives. They organized Soldiers' Aid society, held patriotic meetings and sent flowers and dainties to the boys in blue in the volunteers' camp near Newburg. They also established a boycott against the disloyal youth of their own town, though the young men strenuously insisted that it was just the other way, and the boycott was on the girls. Anyhow there was a great dearth of "parties," and "sparking" was at a standstill.

Then, as an offset to the hated volunteers at Newburg, these brave lads formed

Then, as an offset to the hated volun-teers at Newburg, these brave lads formed a company of "home guards."

"Fer right here's where you're goin to be needed, boys," asseverated Joel, "an purty soon too. Fancy them crazy gals'll haul in some of their striped toggery when once they see the Spaniards marchin into

But when this devoted troop of defend-

But when this devoted troop of defenders paraded the streets the girls scoffed at them openly, and from day to day the bitterfiess grew. Finally, as the Fourth of July drew near, the men unanimously voted that they would have no celebration. "It'd jest be a farce an a humiliation at sich a season as this," Joel assured them, "an you better keep your eyes peeled, boys, fer it's more'n likely them striped petticoats'il be out fer mischief."

And in very truth this blue eyed daughter of Revolutionary rebels and Scotch Covenanters was not the sort of girl to bear an insult tamely, least of all an insult to her flag. And now a personal grievance was added, for some of these thivalrous bumpkins had deemed it a clever joke to break into her garden at night, uprooting the flowers and trampling down the beds, "exactly what a drove of hogs would have done," she cried, with angry tears, when she saw it. And this utterance didn't tend to increase her popularity.

And this utterance dain't tend to increase her popularity.

Following close on the heels of this feat of vandalism, the announcement of the no celebration resolution provoked a blaze of indignation in the Soldiers' Aid society was a fine display of fireworks in "That shows them for just what they are—mean spirited, cowardly traitors," broke forth the warlike president, her cheeks out aming her costume. "I don't wonder they sympathize with the Spaniards, for they aren't one bit civilized, insulting women and sneaking about at night to get revenge. But two can play at that game, I guess, and if the men won't celebrate their own country's Inde-pendence day we'll make a celebration ourselves, girls. I'd like to see them try

So the rest of the afternoon was spent in plotting. Giant crackers and other fireworks were to be secretly procured and set off in various places at the first tap of midnight. The church bell was also to be night. The church belt was also to be rung, as usual, and two strongs armed girls were detailed for this duty. One art-ful damsel undertook to get possession of the Home guards' big drum and beat it, "Only I shall have to make up with Joe a little," she protested, puckering her lips. Others promised to blow horns and conchs, but the great act was to be the firing of the cannon, and this the adventurous Columbia reserved for herself.

lumbia reserved for herself.

"They'd never believe we could do that, but I've watched them lots of tifnes, and I know we can. I wouldn't miss it for anything. I shall want you, Hilda Graham, to help me, and you, Mamie Miller. The three of us can manage it, I'm sure."

This cannon was a rusty relic of the Mexican war, procured from the government for Fourth of July purposes in the days when Rustival esteemed itself a model of patriotism. It was kept housed in an open shed at the top of a slight rise of ground just outside the village.

"We won't try to move it down," said Columbia. "We'd best shoot it off right where it stands."

its shower of particolored sparks, showed him that the aforesaid "striped petti-coats" were abundantly in evidence. A moment later came the roar of the cannon from the hill, jolting the ear and rattling all the window panes with its harsh concussion.

Meanwhile the fair artillery corps were standing in terrific triumph by their fuming gun.
"I thought I was just blown to atoms!"

"Thought I was just blown to atoms: screamed Manie, still dancing about.
"Lucky you didn't stay behind it, Clumby. That was a real cute plea of yours to see it off with a firecracker. See, it's kicked a hole right through the back of the shed!"
"And isn't the smell perfectly awful?"

cried Hilda, sneezing.
"I rather like the smell of gunpowder

"I rather like the swell of gunpowder myself," answered Columbia stoutly, but she, too, choked and sneezed.
"Now for another one!" shouted Mamie.
"Hurry up, Clumby, before anybody comes! But we've hardly any newspaper left for wadding. I'd no idea the old thing would take so much. What will we do?"

"I've seen the boys use grass," replied

Two seen the boys use grass, replied the resourceful captain.

So, with straining arms and heroic disregard of grime, they pulled their heavy ordnance back into position and filled it nearly to the muzzle with armfuls of dewy grass, ramming it home with all their strength.

"Don't be afraid. They always fill it clear up!" panted Columbia, breathless with her exertions. "You didn't forget to put in the powder?"

"Not I," she responded. "That would be a girl trick, wouldn't it?"
At that moment shouts were heard at the foot of the hill. She hastily adjusted the priming and sprang to her feet. A throng of dark, gesticulating figures were pressing up the slope, Joel Slocum at the head of the column.
"You leave alone that cannon!" he bellowed as he cantered toward them like an citement.

The fuse was already sparkling and spitting gushes of fire. She stood in its fitful light, aglow with color. Then the air was rent with a tremendous detonation, and both the cannon and its inclosing shed had vanished.

Slocum was hit full and fair by the huge wad of pulpy grass. Lucky for him he was no nearer! Stained green from head to foot, he lay writhing and raging like a blistered snake.

like a blistered snake.
"She's a-killin folks!" he yelled. "She fired right at us! Tar an feathers is too good fer her!" And the crazed mob took up the cry.

But the girls also had vanished. The two aids had fled in shrieking panic, but as the storm of threats broke upon her Columbia staggered to her feet, groping for support, a little stream of blood trickling from her forchead. "Stand back!" she cried faintly. "Don't you dare touch me!"

"Stand back, you scoundrels!"
"penacing you "Stand back, you scoundreis!"

A clear, strong, menacing voice came like an echo with a reveille of hoof beats from the farther slope of the hill. A young cavalry officer, closely followed by a squad of his men, drew rein beside her. He fifted the girl to the saddle and drew a big revolver.

"Are you badly hurt, sweetheart?" he asked tenderly as they rode away.

"No, Edmund; only a little gash on my temple—just a scratch," she whispered, but she was shuddering uncontrollably.

"Anyhow," he responded, stiffing a soldier's oath, for he was still hot with wrath, "you shall fight no more fights with the craven traitors of Rustival. If you will go to war, Columbia, you shall go with me."—Boston Transcript.

MR. JAS. CROSGREY, OF PORT HOPE, TELLS-AN INTERESTING STORY.

His Right Leg Swollen to Three Times Its Natural Size—Ulcers Followed, and for a Year and a Half D ctora' Treatment Failed to Help Him.

From the Port Hope Time "It was nearly as large as that tele-one pole." These words were sused phone pole." by Mr. Jas. Crosgrey, for eight years a resident of Port Hope, Ont. Mr. Crosgrey is in the employ of Mr. R. K. Scott, who has a feed store on Walton street, and is well and favorably known in town and vicinity. Less than two years ago Mr. Crosgrey was the recip-ient of much sympathy on account of a severe affliction which befel him, de-priving him of the use of his right leg, and from doing any labor except a few odd days work. His recovery was odd days work. His recovery was wrought so suddenly and completely that the Times considered the matter would be of sufficient interest to its readers to obtain an interview with Mr. Crosgrey. In substance Mr. Crosgrey told the following story of his illness —"In April, 1895, I was laid up for seven weeks with typhoid fever, and after I recovered from the fever my right leg began to swell. It was very painful indeed, and in a few weeks it was three times its natural size—nearly where it stands."

At last the night of great events had come, to be signalized by a new revolt against overbearing tyrandy. All Rustival was asleep apparently except Joel Slocum, who uneasily pact his porch and listened at the gate, still bounted by vague apprehensions anent "the a triped petticular of the same result. I suffer ed for nearly five months when I moticed that the swelling began to, decreas." as large as that telephone pole," and he pointed to a stick of timber ten inches crease and I became hopeful of recovery. But the improvement only continued for a short time and then the sequence of particular of the leg above the ankle. These ulcers were right through to the bone and you could all dimensions. Joel rushed out into the street, to be greeted by the hissing rush of a mountain rocket, and the meteoric glare, as it exploded and spilled downward its shower of particolored sparks, showed crease and I became hopeful of recov put that much into them, and Mr. Crosgrey indicated on his thumb an object an inch in length. "For the next year and a half I was treated by four or five doctors but my leg and the ulor five doctors but my corrections of the veins. The doctors pronounced the disease phlebitis or introduced the disease phlebits or introduced the veins. They didn't flamation of the veins. They didn's seem to know what to do for me, how ever, and I despaired of getting well. Mr. Crosgrey's relief came in a strange manner, almost by chance one might say. He tells of it this way:—"I had william Baptist. He heard of my condition and sent word to me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. His reason for recommending them, he stated, was because they had cured him of a serious trouble in both legs, when all else had failed.

less than five weeks the ulcers were completely healed and the swelling in my legs disappeared. The ulcers never returned and my leg is just about as sound as the other one. I know that sound as the other one. I know that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills alone cured me when doctors and all others medi-cines failed and I am willing that the details of my illness and cure be made known." Mr. Crosgrey, who is 41 years of age, is now at work every day. The nature of his work, that of lifting heavy bags of flour and feed, is proof of his complete recovery. He is a life long friend of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and never lets an opportunity pass of speaking a good word for them. The above statement was sworn to before the undersigned at Port Hope, on the 17th day of February, 1898.

MILBURN'S HEART AND NERVE PILLS.

NERVE PILLS.

For the benefit of Canadian mothers, who have daughters who are weak, pale, run down or nervous, Mrs. Belanger, 128 Rideau Street, ottawa, Ontario, made the following statement, so that no one need suffer through ignorance of the right remedy to use: "My daughter suffered very much from heart troubles at times. Often she was so bad that she could not speak, but had to sit and gasp for breath. She was so extremely nervous that her limbs would fairly shake and tremble. Frequently she would have to leave school; and finally she, grew so weak that we were much alarmed about her health. I gave her many remedies, but they did not seem to do her any good.

Then I heard of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and got a box of them, and they have indeed worked wonders with her. I can recommend them very highly as the best remedy I ever heard of for complaints similar to those from which my daughter suffered."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills never fail to do good. They cure palpitation, faintness, dizziness, smothering sensation, weakness, nervousness, sleeplessness, anaemia, female troubles and general debility. Sold by all druggists at 50c. a box or three boxes for $1.25. T. Milbern & Co., Toronto, Ontario.

"Oh, Mr. Frederick!" she gasped, clutching at his arm with her little, trembling white hands, "it seems like fairyland—or—a—a glimpse of heaven!" Frederick Thornton laughed amusedly; to him there was nothing out of the common in the banks of roses, the palms and waving ferns, the dazzling chandeliers, and the unique and brillant costumes of bewitchingly pretty maidens and passe matrons.

"Do not be so sure of that. Doris," he renlied, in a low voice. "What are you thinking of that you gaze so intently at that bank of roses?" he asked, curiously. "I was thinking what a pity it was to cut them from the stem and bring them here, for just a few hours. By to-morrow they will all lie withered and dead against that wall." "What a waste of pity!" he laughed. "They will have served their purpose well—gladdened the eye, delighted the sense. But come; the band is about to strike up a waltz. I hope you have learned to waltz, Doris."

The hour that followed seemed like a dream to poor, pretty little Doris. She

The hour that followed seemed like a dream to poor, pretty little Doris. She could have danced on amid the lights and the music forever and forever. And in the excitement, the revelry, the brilliancy, can it be wondered that time seemed fairly to take wings and whirl away? Doris had been very much abashed at first to see that she was, as usual, the poorest dressed girl in the gay throng; but in the excitement of the lights and music, and in the exuberance of happy youth, she soon forgot it, and was enjoyyouth, she soon forgot it, and was enjoy-ing herself as she had never-enjoyed her-self before.

The eyes of the gentlemen followed her admiringly, and the ladies, in consequence, were exceedingly jealous and envious.

"Who is she?" they asked of each other. But nobody seemed to know.

In all her simpleness and plainness, as in air her simpleness and planness, as is often the case, even amidst that throng of beauties, Doris was acknowledged the belle of the grand ball.

Mrs. Langdon, the hostess, gazed at the pretty young girl in wonder, and at

"Max," she said, leading him aside,
"who is that young girl? How came she here? Who invited her?"
"I did, mother," he responded, promptly. "She is one of the seminary girls.
Miss Doris Brandon is her name, I believe. You remember we sent a card to Miss Courtney. She could not attend. And my old chum there, Frederick Thornton, asked me to send a card to her, and, of course, I complied. Are you

She must be our equal socially—some millionaire's daughter—or Thornton would not be paying so much attention to her. He never takes a step backward in the social scale. a step backward in the social scale, you Mrs. Langdon looked relieved. On returning to the ball-room she observed that young Mr. Thornton and the pretty belle of the ball had disappeared. As we have said, time flew by on gold-wings. Neither Doris nor Frederick noted the fleeting moments. Over and over again Doris told herself how happy she was as she looked into Frederick Thornton's handsome face with glad, shining eyes. In those blissful moments, a woman's heritage of love had come to her, and more than once that evening the thought occurred that her life would be doubly dark and dreary when he left the village. She dared not think of the cold, dark hours when she should see him no more. And like the faint echo of a dream, the words of the

Suddenly he paused abruntly in the Dotis," he said, hurriedly taking out his watch and glareing at it. Great Heaven! was he mad or dream-

He never forgot the deadly, awful despair that came over her face—the ghastly pallor—how the blue eyes darkened with awful fear.

"Oh, Mr. Frederick!" she gasped. "What shall I do?"

"Courage, Doris," he said. "We can make it if you are quick in getting your wraps."

A moment more and they were out in

A moment more and they were out in the starlight together, fairly flying down the white road. He could barely keep pace with the girl's fleet footsteps.

She was out of breath as they reached the steep path that led up the rugged hillside to the seminary, and was obliged to take his arm.

More and more deadly grew her fear as moment after moment slipped by.

Frederick Thornton could hear the quick beating of the girl's heart and the piteous sighs that shook her slender frame.

"Doris, are you crying?" he suddenly could be done distress.

"Doris, are you crying?" he suddenly asked, in deep distress.

Before she could reply, from a church tower near them the hour of eleven rang out, slow, solemn strokes, each one a death knell to Doris.

She fell down on her knees in the path, unable to move a step further, sobbing as he had never heard any sob in his life before. An! the pity of it! His watch was half an hour slow.

He could see the great, heavy iron gate from where he stood. The gate was closed.

Oh, Mr. Frederick! Mr. Frederick! "Oh, Mr. Frederick! Mr. Frederick! what shall I do?" moaned Doris. "Madame will never let me enter her door again. Oh, I am lost! lost! I am homeless, penniless! I will be thrown on the world's mercy, with nowhere to go! It was my only refuge, and now I have lost it! Oh, if I could but die!" Frederick Thornton stood before the kneeling little figure like one petrified.

"I will take all the blame upon myself, Doris," he said, huskily "for assuredly the fault was mine in coaxing you to go. Come, cheer up. All will be well. Come, let us walk boldly up to the gate and ring the bell.

She looked up at him wistfully.

It was a strange, unheard-of request. He bowed wonderingly, and left her, and the door closed after him, shutting him out from her view.

"He married me and he does not love me!" she moaned, wildly, as she sank down shivering on her knees. "I have wrecked his life, for I have parted him from Vivian. That is what he said. Oh, I heard it. But it is not too late to repair what I have done," she panted, as the low dash of the waves caught her ear. "I can set him free at the very altar. I can, and I will. If I have to part from him, I had better die."

And this brings us back, dear reader, to the pitful scene that opens this story.

Miss Arnold's beauty has been described with surprisingly conflicting details, but here is a description which comes straight from her home and ought to be accurate: from her home and ought to be accurate:
"She has a plump, well rounded figure, graceful in motion and not too tall in gracettil in motion and not too tail in stature. She possesses abundant hair of a rich, reddish brown, which she wears sim-ply arranged rolled back from a straight white brow. Her eyes are large and brown, and her complexion faultless." Miss Arnold's skill and taste in gowns

If you do not believe that Miss Arnold is really kissable, a glance at the accompanying picture ought to convince you.

Raw Ants as Delicacies

Raw ants are largely eaten in Mexico. As is known, certain ants are selected by their kindred as storehouses of honey. They are fed with honey until the abdomen speedily becomes smooth and round and so filled with honey that the skin is transparent. These ants are doomed to pass the remainder of their lives as mere oney cells, from which their kindred exact the honey when it is required here are several specimens of these ants in the British museum, with the honey still within their transparent bodies. The Mexicans raid the nests of these ants for the sake of the honey that their bodies contain, and the ants are eaten raw as sweet-meats. They are sold by measure and form an article of commerce.—London

The average attendance at places of worship in England and Wales is computed to be between 10,000,000 and 11, 000,000 persons. There is a place of worship for every 500 individuals, taking the country all through, and a stated minister for every 700. About 80,000 permons are preached every Sunday.

GORDON AND POLYGAMY. No Conversion of Africa Possible if Mo-

nogamy Is Required. A particularly interesting reminiscence A particularly interesting remission of General Gordon was given recently at the Shoreditch town hall by the archbishop of Canterbury, who presided over a meeting convened in the interest of the universities mission to central Africa. Very wersities mission to central Africa. Very shortly before starting for Khartum, in 1884, Gordon came to Dr. Temple to consult him on three problems, the first of which was whether as a mere layman he would be justified in endeavoring to convert the natives and even to baptize them. To that the archbishop answered certainly—every Christian was at liberty alike to preach and to baptize.

Gordon then propounded a plan he had for buying slaves a thousand at a time, drilling them thoroughly, and perhaps making 10 per cent good soldiers, giving freedom ultimately to all, and asked whether slave buying could ever be justifiable. Again the archbishop could reaswhether slave buying could ever be justifiable. Again the archbishop could reasure his scruples and point out that if purchased with a view to giving them liberty the act would be compatible with the highest Christianity. The ultimate difficulty, however, was polygamy, Gordon explaining that a man had rarely less than four wives, as this number sufficed to maintain him, and asking whether Christian tenets could possibly sanction a limited plurality of wives. But on this Dr. Temple admitted he could give no justifying permission whatever, and to establish a pseudo religion without so elementary a principle of morality would be highly reprehensible. "Then," said Gordon, "Africa is a long way from conversion if one wife is made an essential of it."—London Telegraph.

VIGOROUS OLD AGE.

MR. WM. ELLIOTT TELLS HOW TO OBTAIN IT.

He Has Been Subject to Fainting Spells and Cramps—Was Gradually Growing Weaker and Weaker. From the Echo, Plattsville, Ont.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have attained a most enviable reputation in this community. Probably no other medicine has had such a large and inmedicine has had such a large and increasing sale here. The reason is that this medicine cures. Old and young alike are benefitted by its use. Recently we printed an account of a remarkable cure of a well known lady of this place through the agency of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and since publishing that we have heard of another similar eggs. Mr. Wm. Elliott a similar case. Mr. Wm. Elliott, a farmer living near Bright, is a well known figure there. Although an old man he almost daily walks to the vilman he almost daily walks to the vir-lage, a distance of nearly a mile, for his mail. Many years ago he came from Scotland to the farm on which he now lives and cleared it of forest. In conversation with him; he related to an Echo reporter the following: "I am 78 years of age and strong and healthy for an old man. Mine has been a vigorous constitution and up till six years ago I hardly knew what it was to have a day's illness. But then my health began to fail. I became subject to cramps in the stomach. I was treated by doctors, but received no benefit. I gradually grew weaker and as I was past the three score and ten I thought my time had come. Next I took faint-ing fits and often I would have to be carried back to the house entirely help less. The doctors said my trouble was general weakness due to old age and advised me to carry some stimulant with me to use when I felt a faintness coming on, but this I refused to do. I had read in the papers of Dr. William's Pink Pills and thought they would be specially adapted to my case. I tried one box but they did not seem to help me. In fact I thought I felt worse. I decided to continue them, however, and after taking four boxes there was a marked improvement. My strength returned and I was no longer troubled with fainting spells. In six months time with this treatment I gained fifteen pounds, taking in all eight boxes of the Pills. Today I am a well man and I owe my complete recovery to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills." These pills cure not by purging the system as do ordinary medicines, but by enriching the blood and strengthening the nerves. They cure rheamatism, sciatica, locomotor ataxia, paralysis, heart troubles, erysipelas and all forms of weakness. Ladies will find them an unrivalled medicine for all ailments peculiar to the sex; restoring health and vigor, and bringing a rosy glow to pale and sallow cheeks. There is no other medicine "just as good." See that the full name, Dr. Williams Pink Pills for Pale People, is on every package you buy. If your dealer does not have them, they will be sent post paid at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., or Schenectady. New York.

trouble for four years, caused by excessive use of tobacco. At times my heart would beat very rapidly and then seemed to stop beating only to sommence again with unnatural rapidity. "This unhealthy action of my heart caused shortness of breath, weakness and debility. I tried many medicines and spent a great deal of money but could not get any help.

Insat November, however, I read of a man, afflicted like myself, being cured by Milburn's Heart and Nerve Fills. I went to Roper's drug store and bought a box. When I had finished taking it I was so much better I bought another box and this completed the cure. My heart has not bothered me since, and I strongly recommend all sufferers from heart and nerve trouble, caused by excessive use of tobacco, to give Milburn's Heart and Nerve Fills a fair and faithful trial."

Kidney Trouble FOR YEARS.

Nothing did Mr. R. E. Pitt any good until he got Doan's Kidney Pills. Throughout the County of Leeds and the Town of Brockville there is no medicine spoken so highly of for all kinds of Kidney Diseases as Doan's Kidney Pills. As Canada's pioneer kidney pill, introduced by Mr. James Doan, of Kingsville, Ont., in 1885, they stand to-day far superior to all the imitations and substitutes that have been offered the public in their stead. Mr. R. E. Pitt, the well-known contractor and builder, voices these sentiments when he says, "I have had kidney trouble for years. I had tried numerous remedies without much relief, and had given up my back as gone for good, but since using Doan's Kidney Pills the result has been marvellous! The pain is all gone. I feel like a new man, and can highly testify to the virtues of Doan's Kidney Pills."

Doan's Kidney Pills are sold by all dealers or sent by mail on receipt of price, 50 cents a box or 3 boxes for $1.25. The Doan Kidney Pill Co., Toronto Ont.

MORMONISM

Chambersburg, Pa., Oct, 1.—An important conference of Mormon the progress of the propoganda which the Latter Day Saints have been making in the Eastern States began in this county to-day.

Fifty elders and missionaries were present who have been work ing all over the Eastern States and who are in charge of Elder A. P. Kessler, Brooklyn, N. Y., President of the Eastern States Mission.

Their reports all claimed steady progress and many hundreds of converts, especially among the poorer classes in the large cities.

Fight With a Mountain Lion.

Vancouver, Oct. 4.—John Hanley is in a dying condition from a fight with a mountain lion at Harrison, a few miles from Vancouver. His dog treed the lion. Hanley shot it in the face and the brute sprang on him, smashing his gun and gashing him in a frightful manner. His faithful dog seized the lion by the leg. The lion turned on the dog, and was devouring it when in that condition battered its brains out, only to fall senseless, where he was found dazed and sorely wounded beside his faithful dead dog some hours after.

The decision also declares that the estate of Jay Gould was not appraised ten millions in excess of its actual value, as was contended by the executors of the dead railroad king. The case is one of the most important decided by the court in many months. It has been at issue for years and in its disposition a precedent has been established which for the future will have great weight in the determination of ises arising under the taxation of transfers.

Basis of Settlement Arrived At.

Quebec, Oct. 4.-A basis of settle nent between Canada and the United States has been arrived at in the matter of the Behring Sea and Atlantic inland fisheries. A report setting forth the conditons was presented to the commission today by chairmen of commit-tees on these subjects, John W. Foster and Sir Louis Davies.

It's provisions are not definitely known, but it is believed the Canadian commissioners have decided to prohibit pelagic sealing on the payment of the indemnity to actual sealers by the United States. CHAPTER IV.—REPENTING AT LEISURE.

The clock in the church tower struck the mid-night hour in slow, measured strokes, and Doris struggled up from her knees with a wild, panting cry, sobbing

"When he returns he must not find me here."

Then in her bridal robes. without one

Then in her brital rooes, without one backward glance, she stole from the vestry out into the cold, moonlit night. The terrible revelation, as they turned away from the very altar, that her bridegroom had not married her for love, had almost turned poor Doris's brain; and her one mad thought was to set him free rough, by scaling rost in the dark, cold her one mad thought was to set him free again, by seeking rest in the dark, cold water, and end it all.

Hurrying down the path, without one glance behind at the dimly-lighted old church, and the coach with the restless white horse standing before its door, she reached the brink of the bay, tipped by the golden, arrowy light of the stars. The tide was coming in. The water was rising higher and higher each moment, with the wavering moon-track across it. with the wavering moon-track across it It would soon reach the rock where sh

It would soon reach the rock where she stood, and sweep her away.

"No one cares what becomes of me," sobbed Doris, piteously. "What have I done that I should be so miserable and friendless? Life would have been so different if Frederick could only have loved me. Oh, it is so cruel, cruel! Heaven forgive me!" she cried. "I am so lonely, so desolute!"

nely, so desolate!'
''Doris!'' "Doris!"
The sound of her own name startled her so she would have fallen backward from the rock on which she was standing, down into the seething water below, if a strong arm had not been put out hurriedly and caught her; and, turning her white, terrified face, Doris found herself confronted by Frederick Thornton.

"Doris!" he repeated, in amazement, "what are you doing here? You requested me to leave you halt an hour by yourself in the vestry. I came down to the bay to while away the time. How is it that I find you here?"

As he spoke he looked keenly, curiously into the fair, young face, which was flushing and paling so piteously.

He was quick to notice the great

He was quick to notice the great change in her—how she shrank from his outstretched hand, and how her eyes drooped before his steady gaze. In a flash it occurred to Dorls that he

In a liash it occurred to boris that he had not been to the vestry, and he had not read the note she had left there addressed to him. So he did not know what had brought her to the dark, restless waters of the bay; and, standing face to face with him, she could not tell him. to face with him, she could not tell him.
"This is the height of imprudence, little Doris," he said, taking her hand, and drawing it through his arm. "Surely, Doris, you do not repent our hasty marriage, do you?" he asked suddenly; and he was great troubled and dismayed to see her nod her curly head and burst into tears.
"What is done cannot be undone, Doris," he said, gravely. "There is nothing for it now but to make the best of ing for it now but to make the best of it. I will tell you my plans for the future when we get into the coach. Put on your wraps quickly. We must eatch the 1.20 train, and we have quite a long ride before us."

He had spoken so gently, so kindly to her, a great, throbbing hope suddesprang to life in Doris's heart. He narried her without love; but perhaps in the time to come, she might win that love, if she did not part from him at th very altar.

She had written that fatal letter on

She had written that fatal letter on the impulse of the moment, and now, on the impulse of the moment, she hurried to the vestry again, caught it up and destroyed it.

Five minutes later they were in the coach, whirling rapidly away to catch the Baltimore express. Doris stole many a shy glance at the stern, pale, handsome face beside her by the light of the carriage lamp.

Eivdently he had forgotten that he said he had much to say to her, for they said he had much to say to her, for they reached the depot without his having spoken a word.

Doris watched the handsome face with wistful eyes, too timid to break in upon his thoughts his thoughts.

They took their places in the palace coach, but the train had gone some little distance before Frederick Thornton turned to Doris, or even seemed to remember her presence.

"I never remember to have found time pass so slowly in my life," he said, impatiently.

There was no answer, and he turned the life of the product of

There was no answer, and he turned quickly toward his little bride, wondering at her silence, her gravity. Her face was quite pale; her lips were white and pressed firmly together; and there were tears shining on the long, curling lashes. In her heart was a sense of desolation words cannot describe. When the train stopped at different stations people wondered at the beautiful, white, girlish face, so young, so lovely, and yet so sad, that looked from the window so wistfully.

that looked from the window so wistfully.

Like all young girls, Doris had had rosy day-dreams of what her weddingday would be like, and of her lover who would clasp her in his arms when they left the altar, murmuring: "My darling, my own now, my wife." Ah, how different was the reality—terribly different!

She looked at Frederick Thornton sitting beside her so cold, haughty and stern. Ah, how handsome he was; how strange it seemed to her that this handsome man was—her husband; her husland who had married her within the hour, yet whose heart was as far from hand who had married her whom each hour, yet whose heart was as far from her as the earth from the sky. Her lips quivered, her eyes grew dim with tears; the sadness, the spathos of that face, might have touched a heart of stone. He either did not or would not see it. He either did not or would not see it. He was looking impatiently past her—out of the window. The impulse was strong to turn to him and seb out:—

"My husband, love me a little; I am young, I am lonely and desolate; love me a little. Hold my hands in yours; we are going out in the great, cruel world that I have alway dreaded so much. Say something to comfort me."

Then she hesitated. What if he should look at her contemptuously or tu haughtily away? No, she must not spe to him; she must not sue for the affection withheld from her; she had pride enough for that.

"You do not ask where we are going, Dorls," he said at last. "Have you no curiosity to know?"

"I have been walting for you to tell me," she answered, simply.

"I intend taking you to my home, where my mother and sisters are, but you could not go—like that. We will stop over in Baltimore long enough to purchase a suitable wardrobe for you."

He never forgot the startled eyes she raised to his face, eyes shining with tears.

"Home-where your mother and your sisters are!" she repeated in alarm.
"Why not, Doris?" he asked. "You do not seem to favor the idea."

not seem to favor the idea."
"They would not like me; they would hate me!" she cried, vehemently. "They would see at once that I have not been used to anything, and that you are far, oh, so far above me. I should be awkward and ill at ease before them; I should not know what to do, what to say, or how to say it. I, who have been a poor, little, dependent nobody all my life, know nothing of your world and its ways, and you would be ashamed of me. You would repent marrying me, and I should die," she moaned, under her should die," she moaned, under her breath.

"My mother and sisters are by no means formidable persons," he said, frowning slightly. "They are well-bred, a trifle haughty perhaps (all save one of them), dainty and refined. They are ladies whom it will be a pleasure for you to meet."

Tell me more of them," said Doris, faintly, her courage sinking lower and lower at every word he uttered. Oh! how she dreaded to meet his relatives!

she dreaded to meet his relatives!
"I will begin with my mother,," he said, "and sketch really faithful portraits for you: She has more pride and dignity, we think, than any other member of the family. She is tall and stately; her eyes are clear, cold and gray. She is the very embodiment of the term, a well-bred, haughty lear."

ed, haughty lady."
"And your sisters—are they like your other?" faltered Doris, still more

"I have three sisters," he responded.
"Isabel, the eldest, is very like mother in face and manner; Gwendolin is called the blonde beauty of the family, and Beatrix, or Trixy, as we always call her—well, I can hardly find words to tell you what she is like. She is, I must confess, a great cross to my dignified mother. She is sixteen, and the romp, the temboy, the mischelvous sprite of the family. She has very expressive eyes, brown and sparkling, but she can never be what is called good-looking, for her hair is positively red. My father is a stately gentleman, bound up in his business cares. What I am you can see for "I have three sisters," he responded. ness cares. What I am you can see for yourself. I think I have given you a fair picture of the inmates of Thornton Villa, as our home is called."

As Doris listened the presentiment grew stronger and stronger that every one in this stately home would be antag onistic to herself.

"And your mother being what she is, "And your mother being what she is, so haughty and proud, wished you to marry some one like herself, no doubt," said Doris, in a low voice.
"Yes," replied Frederick Thornton huskily. "My mother wished me to marry Vivian Courtney," and he uttered a doer girth.

a deep sigh.

Dorls crept closer to him, looking breathlesly up into his face with her great, blue, shining eyes.

"Tell me—if it had not been for me—for taking me to the fatal ball, which ended so fatefully—tell me, would you a deep sigh.

He was too honorable and straightforward to deceive her. He bowed his head.

'It would have been so, Doris,' answered, huskily.

"You loved her so well," she whispered below her breath, her face growing paler and paler; but he did not notice

'Yes," he replied, but added, hastily;

"why talk of that now? It is all over between Vivian and me." "I have come between you and the girl you loved," breathed Doris. he cried "Let me forget it if I can," he cried out sharply. "Don't torture me by reminding me of what might have been."

minding me of what might have been."

Then he relapsed into silence again, and his face, half averted from her, grew sterner, colder and prouder than ever. He did not notice how wistful was the fair young face turned to him. He was ill at ease; he had found the wedding journey decidedly irksome; he longed to be away from her; and thus two hours dragged wearlly by, and the palace coach with its ill-mated bride palace coach with its ill-mated bride and groom, whirled on through the darkness. She clinched her little hand; she tried to still the beating of her heart. He was solicitous for her comfort, he was attentive to her wants, but she noticed after that allusion which awakened his re-membrance of Vivian, his lost love, that he spoke to her only when civility dictated that he should speak; and when he did address her he never looked at her.

From her heart she longed to be back with Madame Delmar again. Ah! was ever a bride so lonely before? Did any young girl ever meet such a strange as this? Sitting there by her young hus-band's side, so cruelly, bitterly unhappy, on her wedding journey, the words of an old poem came to her, filling her eyes

"Like some divided river, Your ways and mine will be, To drift apart forever— Forever till the sea."

Payn as an Anecdotist.
Payn was superlative as an anecdotist.
Good stories seemed to have a natural instinct for resorting to him. Often as I used to see him I always thought myself defrauded if I did not come away with some fresh, and amusing narrative. On such occasions my family found me out and used to reproach me if I did not bring back some telling anecdote. It must clearly be my own fault. I was certainly not

He was fond of the litera-ture in which such harvests are to be reaped, and "crammed," if I may say so, for his work conscientiously, though more, it seemed, from spontaneous delight in it than from deliberate purpose. And, then, the charm of his talk and his hearty sothan from epintaneous delight in it than from deliberate purpose. And, then, the charm of his talk and his hearty sociability made it a duty for every one to help him and to repay him as far as possible in kind. The man bursting with a good story found a special pleasure in pouring it into so responsiye an ear, and Payn became a perpetually flowing fountain of delightful talk.—Leslie Stephen in Good Words. FALL WHEAT.

Encouraged by the success of this year's experiments several farmers in central Alberta are adopting the plan of sowing their wheat in the fall. While fall wheat would probably not succeed in all seasons it is affirmed by those who have tried it that on the average it would prove more profitable than spring sown grain, as owing to the early start it obtains from the moisture of the melting snows it is almost sure to ripen before frost overtakes it.—Calgary Herald.

"The first objection that wil

probably be raised is the climate: that the cold is very severe at times cannot be denied, but after the ex-perience derived from eight winters' residence I can truthfully state that I do not consider the winter by any means unpleasant on the whole; the air is so dry that the chilly dampness of the English climate is quite missing, and the houses being warmed on a different plan, are incomparably more comoctable in temperature than I nglish homes in winter, no matter what the weather may be outside The winter days are usually bright and sunshiny, with a blue sky overhead, and an ordinary tweed suit is quite warm enough for walking out in. CHAPTER V.-THE DESERTED BRIDE.

When they reached Baltimore they drove straight to the hotel, and then, for the first time, it seemed to Doris, her husband spoke kindly to her. He said:—
"You look very tired. I should advise you to get some rest. I always find a cigar and the morning air most refreshing after a journey. We stay here a week," he went on, as he placed a roll of bills in her hand. "That will give you plenty of time. In make your necessions."

Too restless to sleep, Doris passed the long hours which followed sitting at the window, gazing at the throng of pedestrians that passed to and fro across the way.

The afternoon commenced to wane the sun set, and darkness enfolded the city. Still Doris sat by the window, patiently watching for Frederick Thernton's return. How little she dreamed of the suns that would rise and set ere she o'clock dinner.

"I shall not go down until my husband comes," said Doris, timidly. "He must be here shortly."

The long evening wore away; eleven o'clock sounded from an adjacent belfry; and weary with long watching, Doris' curly head dropped slowly, and, sitting in her char by the window, she fell into a troubled sleep.

The sun was shining into the room when Doris opened her eyes the next

She was not used to shopping, yet it was marvelous to see the good taste she showed in the selection of a handsome, stylish traveling dress and one or two other costumes.

They were ordered to the hotel at once, and counting out the contents of her purse, Doris found she had a little over twenty dollars left.

Afriving at the hotel again, Doris pro-

"Ah, will he never, never come?" she cried out in vague terror, clutching her little hands over her heart, and pacing restlessly up and down the floor.

A dozen times she had stretched her hand out towards the bell rope. She must send some one in search of him. Perhaps that was what he was waiting for.

Poor, innocent little Doris! She knew Poor, innocent little Doris! She knew so little of life and the great, cruel world. In answer to her summons and to her query, "If he would be so kind as to find her husband," Mr. Thornton, and tell him she wiished to see him?" "Are you strong enough to bear a great shock?" asked the man, almost hating himself for the words he was about to speak.

Once before in his varied experinece of hotel life he had been obliged to speak the same words to a fair young wife, and, without a moan, without a cry, she had thrown up her white hands and fallen dead at his feet.

Doris rose slowly to her feet, and stood before him with cheeks as pale as a snowdrop and eyes wildly dilated.

"You—you have something to tell me!" she gaped. "In the name of mercy, I implore you to speak quickly. A reader, the strange stroke of fate which tore these two asunder. Arrest your judgment of our handsome nero until you have heard his defence.

True, he did not love this young bride whom he had been fairly forced by an unkind fate into wedding, and he left the hotel crying out silently to himself that she had wrecked his life, and made the thought of the future as bitter as death; still, for all that, it would never have occurred to him to desert her. He was too honorable to even contemplate such an action.

Deeply engrossed in his own thoughts, he walked rapidly down the crowded thoroughfare, paying little heed to what was transpiring around him. Suddenly he heard a great shout, a cry from the people around him.

He had barely time to raise his head, and in an instant he comprehended; but have a set on the safe a bressy.

He had barely time to raise his head, and in an instant he comprehended; but he was too late to save himself. A horse, dashing over the crossing, had taken fright at a painted balloon in the hand of a little child. In a flash the driver was hurled from his seat; the maddened animal wheeled about with one wild plunge, and ere Frederick Thornton could take one backward step a greation hoof was planted just above his temple.

More dead than alive he was taken to the nearest hospital. He had sustained a terrible fracture of the skull, the consult-ing doctor found. His life hung by a single thread. If he lived, his reason might be partially restored — never wholly, unless by a violent shock which might cost him his life, and it might be many a long day before he would waken to a realization of what was transpiring about him.

As is often the case, this was one of the many accidents in which city life abounds, which never found its way into the daily papers.

HIGH DIVING ELK.

The Camera Catches One of Its Most

In conversation the other day, Will J Barnes of Sloux City, Iowa, said: Some people have an eccentric hobby, others have a hobby that appeals to the general run of beings as sensible and proper. Whatever you may call my hobby, it is one that has taken complete n of me, and I am proud of the sensation it causes. My hobby is my sensation it causes. My hobby is my diving elks, which I claim to be the most wonderful animals in the world. But then perhaps I am prejudiced in their favor, as I educated them and taught them the tricks that are a constant source of wonder and admiration to my friends.

was prompted to train the elk

I was prompted to train the elk because I heard it so frequently stated that it was the dullest animal living. The fact that the undertaking seemed to e one almost impossible to carry through successfully gave additional zest to the task I set for myself, which was to train a team of elks to do the most remarkable thing I could think of that was compatible with the nature of the animal.

I procured two young elks and began experimenting with them at once. I soon discovered that the elks were smart enough to outwit, me on several occasions.

My first step was to break them to anything with them.

I succeeded finally, however, in getting them thoroughly broken into a very utter indifference as to what height they jumped from while in training. In fact, the first dive they ever made was from a high bank into the Sioux River, on which occasion I went with them.

I fixed a short chute on the river bank at first and coaxed them to go into it up about five feet high and jump into the water from that height. After a few months of patient work I got them to run up the chute of their own free will and jump off into the water. As it was the only place from which they could get into the water they began to think it great sport to jump from that height. Then I began to raise the platform, and as the weather was getting too cold in Iowa for comfortable training in the river I took my elks south to New Orleans and kept them in constant training all winter. them in constant training all winter throne of England he may have to go there on a crutch.

If the Prince of Wales ever ascends the hrone of England he may have to go there on a crutch.

From the magnificent country home of Baron Rothschild at Waddesdon comes the news that the Prince, while going down to breakfast by the west stairway, slipped and fell on his knee cap, severely fracturing that part of his person to the extent that he may be obliged to compose himself for a time and give up all the pleasures which have been mapped out for him during the next three months.

It was a great misfortune to His Royal Highness, who up to the present accident has gone through a life of pleasure without suffering many of its discomforts. In the midst of the excitement that followed, Dr. Shaw, the village physician, was summonel, and with the aid of a professional nurse, the Prince was given all possible attention and relief. But the injured patella persisted in doveloping an inflammation that induced a considerable swelling. Dr. Shaw gave positive instructions that the Prince should take a long jest at any cost, and give up the fulfilment of his many actual engagements.

An injury to the patella, or knee cap, notwithstanding the skill of the best surgoons of the world, often leaves its imprint during life, so that free use of the limb is not infrequently out of the world.

And then again, the Prince of Wales, notwithstanding his vigorous constitu-tion and robust health, is nearing three score years, and an injury that he could have overcome twenty years ago may cling to him to-day with a distressing

A fracture of the knee cap, while not necessarily dangerous, requires immediate attention and the most careful nursing, and especially so in the Prince, owing to his advance great difficulty will be to keep him under sufficient restraint to permit the fracture to mend. The bone of an elderly person does not knit as readily as in a young person, and the affected parts seldom mend readily.

It will also make a great difference if the fracture is compound, as in that case it will require an operation, which is always attended with more or less danger

WHICH HAS MADE A WONDERFUL REPUTATION THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

A CANADIAN MEDICINE.

Every Cure Published Is Investigated by a Responsible Newspaper — The Advertiser Has Looked Into and Gives Below the Particulars of One of These Cures.

rom the Advertiser, Hartland, N. B. The Advertiser has come across still another instance of the remarkable cur ative powers of the famous Canadian remedy, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Mr. William Tedlie, of Lower Brighton, a prominent lumberman and farmer, came every near be ing a cripple from rheumatism, the dread disease so prevalent along the St. John River. Mr. Tedlie is now 65 years of age. Five years ago he was taken with the first symptoms of rheumatism—over exposure, the stream drives and the general hard life of the lumberman proved the way for the lumberman, paved the way for the lodgement of the excruciating disease. The symptoms first manifest were pains through the legs, arms and hands. Gradually conditions grew worse. At intervals there would be an abatement of the malady, but for months each year he was very nearly helpless. The pain was so agonizing that sleep was out of the question, and to work was impossible. The afflicted man had so often read of the wonderful efficacy of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in cases similar to his own, that he resolved to try them. He says, however, that he was not hopeful of receiving much benefit, as he had tried many medicines with-out any good result following. He be-gan the use of the Pills and by the time a couple of boxes were used he found they were helping him. Thus encouraged he continued the use of the medicine and gradually the pains and soreness left him, he was able to sleep soundly, and enjoyed an excellent ap In fact after using Dr. William's Pink Pills for less than two months Mr. Tedlie says he found himself in the best of health. He is now a warm friend of this great medicine and urges similar sufferers not to experiment with other medicines' but at begin the use of Dr. Williams Pink Pills.

Rheumatism, sciatica, neuralgia, partial paralysis, locomotor ataxia, nervus headache, nervous prostration, and disease depending upon humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc., all disappear before a fair treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They give a healthy glow to pale and sallow complexions. Sold by all dealers and post paid at 50c. a box or six boxes for $2.50 by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brock-ville, Ont. How to Use Corn Plasters.

Dr. Alsnel, writing on the treatment of corns, mentions a tip communicated to of corns, mentions a tip communicated to him by a layman concerning corn plasters. Instead of applying them whole, as purchased, the advice is to cut the plaster in two across the centre, and then to apply the two sections around the base of the corn. This method afforded relief at once, and in six months the corns were got rid of. The two sections can be fitted around the base of the corn accurately and tightly in a way that is accurately and tightly in a way that is impossible when dealing with a ring

"I have great pleasure in giving my experience of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. For about ten years I was troubled with throbbing and fluttering of the heart. I tried five doctors and several remedies but none of them did me much good. Lately I heard of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and bought two boxes. Before I started using them I could not do my house work and gave myself up to die, as I thought I would never be cured. Now I feel really splendid since taking the pills, do my work, enjoy my meals and feel as if there was something in life worth living for."

NOT A CANDIDATE.

In another column of today's RECORD is an election notice from Mr. C. A. Magrath, M. L. A.

It was with much regret that we learned of Mr. Magrath's decision in the matter. Ever since his selection as representative of the Electoral District of Lethbridge in the Leglislative Assembly of the North west Territories he has had the entire confidence and respect of is now a great attraction his constituents.

Naturally the question now arises "Who will be our next representative?

The 4th Legislative Assembly promises to be one of great importance, Many questions will be decided upon and the future welfare of Alberta in a great measure selections, and some new will depend upon legislation of the 4th Assembly.

Alberta is entitled to be made a Province, and our representative should work with this end in view, Work is progressing rapidly on the Lee's Creek bridge.

Standa work with this end in view.
We need government assistance in the matter of irrigation enterprises, and we should have railroad connection with the Great Northern.

No candidate is entitled to election without these planks in his platform.

MORMONISM.

A couple of missionaries of the church of "Latter Day Saints" better known as "Mormons" held a meeting in the Creamery Hall, on Sunday night, commencing about 8 o'clock. There was a good attendance, principally men, there being enly three of the fair per present. The leader opened by singing a hymn which was new to the audience. The singing, of which he had all himself, demonstrated the fact that he requires considerable cultivation before that part of the service will be of any spiritual benefit to a Carberry audience. Taking the Bible he then went on to expound some of the be-liefs peculiar to the sect he repreasked and answered. It was advised to stick to the Guides till they were exhaused. Then the privilege of taking up the "Life of Christ" was clief to the Son and the Holy Spirit er, God the Son and the Holy Spirit I am asked by the Editor of the Young Woman's Journal, and also by Pres. Elmina Taylor, why our Societies do not have the Three, and that the form of God was like ours, for God had maken was like ours, for God had made us in his own likenes therefore he must be like us, that men had talk-ed with God face to face and that God had eaten food just like men, that he had parts and passions and could be moved by love or hate. consequently it was impossible for Him to be present everywhere.

After talking briefly on "Faith' a subject which he ought to study a little further he launched out bold-ly into the stormy controversial sea of Baptism, boldly stating that baptism was essential to Salvation, and the protest mode of leasting. a little further he launched out boldand the proper mode of baptism was immersion. The testament was and thoroughly ransacked for evidence, the Fathers were brought from their graves to bear testimony, and the Greek, Babtidso settled the matter beyond all dispute. The Roman Catholics, Episcopalians, Methodists, Presbyterians and all others except Baptists and Latter Day Saints must spend eternity in hat place one cannot contemplate was asked. ## A HORRIBLE MURDER.

A GALICIAN AND HIS FOUR CHILD-REN HACKED TO DEATH.

The Crime Was Committed While They Slept-The Mother is Suspected.

Dominion City, Man., Oct. 16.-7.30 p. m.—The Galician settlement about twenty-five miles east of here was tire Galician family were chopped to pieces with an axe. The victims include four children and their father. Most horrible of all is the fact that the mother is suspected of having committed the inhuman crime. The man and his children were found deag in his house by a neighbor who chanced to visit the place. The mother is missing. The weapon used was an axe and the The weapon used was an axe and the man's head was almost severed from the body. The bodies of the children were more or less mutilated. When the crime was committed is no known, but it was within the lest twenty-four hours. The coroper and two constables started for Stuartburn with the man and will had not lived happily together and that they had frequent and violent quarrels.

DISCOVERY: OF THE CRIME.

Dominion City, Oct. 17.—1 a. m.—

The reply of the Turkin government and release from the vacuation of the Jaland of Crete has been handed to the ambassadors. Turkey accepts the terms proposed but expresses a wish for certain modifications.

Advices received at the war department at Washington indicate that the evacuation of Cuba by the Spanish forces is proceeding satisfactorily and smoothly, the threatened trouble at Manzanillo has blown over and the Spaniards have yielded up control to the Americans.

Dominion City, Oct. 17.-1 a. m.-The Free Press correspondent has just returned from the scene of the murder. The name of the murdered man is Wasyl Bocenko, a Galician, about forty years of age. The four dead children are two boys and two girls, ranging from three to ten years. The many who discovered the murder is accompanied by a purse of $1.000. The man who discovered the murder is also a Galician neighbor of Bocehko's, who went to his house on Saturday about 2 o'clock. He knocked, but getting no reply opened the door and

The sight which met his eyes was horrifying. The dead todies of Bocelko and his four children were hacked and bruised in a frightful manner. The floor and walls were spattered and covered with blood, looking like, a slaughter house. The man ran to a Canadian heighbor, living on the same section, name! Bill Craig, and finding there & Galician named Wachna, the three of them returned to Bocehko's house. Bocehko was lying on his side on the floor; one arm was under his head, the head being about two-thirds severed from the body. The bodies of the children were all in bed lying face downward. The, weapon used was a hand axe which lay on the floor beside Bocehko's body. The wounds are all in the backs of the heads, except the man's, each head receiving several blows with the sharp edge of the axe. One child had also a gash in the face. It is probable the children were all A GHASTLY SPECTACLE.

The one who had the gash in the face probably was not stunned by the first blow and turning over received the next on the face. the face. The man was no doubt killed first. He was barefooted and had apparently been in bed also.

SCENE OF THE MURDER.

The house in which the butchery occurred is on the northeast quarter of section two, township three, range five east. Two Englishmen live on the same section viz., Thomas Pott, a man with a larges family, and a butcher named Bill Craig. The house consists of one room, about twelve by fourteen, built of poles and white mud, with a thatched roof. The bodies were cold when found. The man was on Friday night, so that the murders must have been committed that night. Bosehko and his wife were supposed to be not on good terms, and it is said Bosehko had offered a Canadian neighbor a dollar if he would find a situation for his wife, so as to get her away from home.

THE WIFE FOUND. Nothing was heard of the woman un-tile-to-day, when she was found to be at a neighbor's house, about a quar-ter of a mile away. Naturally suspi-cion falls on her, but she has not been

TWO MEN SUSPECTED.

It is rumored that two men are suspected, but the constables are very reticent, and will say nothing on the subject. No arrests have been made. Bocehko came out only this summer, his house being hardly completed yet.

THE FIRST REPORT. Wachna, the man who was at Bill Craig's and went to the murdered man's house with him, is a resident metrpreter in the employ of the local government. Immediately on discovering the murder Wachna wrote a letter to J.W.Yeo, magistrate at Stuartburn and sent Bill Craig to deliver it. The letter reads as follows:

"Wasyl Bocchko, N. E. of 2, 3, 5, was murdered this day. Her children, four, all dead. (Signed) J. L. Wachna.'

Mr. Yeo immediately drove to town when the man who was at Bill Craig to deliver it. The police outpost at Grand Rapids hot re-open until commencement of navigation in the spring. Sergt. Anderson, Const. Duchesnay and special Const. Rowland, returned to all dead. (signed) J. L. Wachna."

Mr. Yeo immediately drove, to town and wired the facts to the local government and the coroner, Dr. Elkin. The latter went out to the scene of the murder with Mr. Yeo and a constable, and viewed the bodies. An in—at Stuartburn.

AN INSANE BOY

AN INSANE BOY.

A Galician boy has recently gone crazy and is being sent to the asylum to-morrow. He is not supposed to be in any way connected with the murder.

Great excitement prevails here and about the neighboring country. No-thing else is talked of. The people gathered in groups after service at the different churches to discuss the INDIANS SUSPECTED.

INDIANS SUSPECTIED.

A report is prevalent but cannot be confirmed, that Bocehko had considerable money in the house, which is missing, and Indians are suspected of committing the murder to get to get the money. The magistrate and constables will say nothing on the subject. The weather to-day is cold with a drizzling rain falling at intervals.

Some men are truthful at all timesexcept when their wives ask for money.

mused Vivian. "I wonder if the note was delivered to you which I left with one of the girls."

"I wish I could answer 'sau, Vivian, but, alas! I cannot. It is of singht consequence, however, now that it is past, and I am with you again," he answered, lightly. "But, tell me, Vivian," he went on in a lower tone, "are you still of the same opinion that I must not ask your father for you yet? You are cruel to me, Vivian; how can I wait?"

"What are we to do, Frederick?" she answered, raising her great, dark velvety eyes to his eager face. "Both papa and mamma declare I am by far too young to give one thought to love or lovers."

"You do not think so, Vivian?" he asked, quickly.

"No," she confessed, shyly, adding, laughingly: "It is rather a difficult position—that of an only child. If my father and mother had five or six daughters, they would not think so much of me."

"No wonder your parents look askance at your lovers, Vivian. No, they do not want to part with you. They treat our love for each other lightly, declaring you are only a child of seventeen, and that it is simply ridiculous asking the hand of a school girl in marriage. Still I do not despair, Vivian. I am sure all will come out right in the end. When they see, despite all our trials and rebuffs, we are true and steadfast to each other, they must be touched—they must be pleased—and consent to give you to me. Heaven intended us for each other, they must be touched—they must be pleased—and consent to give you to me. Heaven intended us for each other, when the seed the parent to Frederick Thornton and Gerald Marston head them trivals and when the bulls, we are true and stead—they must be pleased—and consent to give you to me. Heaven intended us for each other, Vivian; have I not loved you all my life?"

"Yes," she assented, eagerly, "from childhood, Frederick."
"And I will love you, and only you, Vivian, until the day I die," he whispered, covering the little white hand he held with passionate kisses. "If I could not win you, life, would never held one hour's hapiness for me."

Further conversation was interrupted by the entrance of his sister, Trixy, and he had barely time to add:—

"Do you notice how pale Vivian has grown" she asked, keenly watching her son's handsome, indolent face. "Worrying over your illness did that Frederick."

"Dear little Vivian." he murmured. "Dear little Vivian," he murmured, gaing dreamils off toward the white sails skimming up and down the river.
"The dream of my life would be realized if I could see you safely married to her, my boy," his mother went on, gently. "Forgive me, but I often entertain strange doubts and fears over your future. "I was much afraid you had some other love-affair on hand," she said, in a low voice. "You know you are heir to a million; many people know that, and unscrupulous young women might set traps for you. You are romantic by nature, easily influenced and persuaded. I have always had a strange presentiment over your future. It will be the happiest day of my life when I see Vivian your bride."

"And that you shall see as soon as I can win her consent," he replied, gallantly, raising his hat.

"Will you not welcome me, Vivian?" he exclaimed, eagerly "One word from you will go nearer-thy heart than whole volumes of warmest greeting any one else could speak."

"You know how glad I am to see you, Frederick," she replied, in a low voice, disengaging herself from his clinging arms.

"Think no more about it, Vivian" he exclaimed, persistently detaining the little white hand in his clasp. "The pleasure of being with you again, and to hear you say you have missed me, amply atones for it all."

"How strange it is that you should have completely lost all remembrance of what transpired from the moment you stepped off the train at Beech Grove," mused Vivian. "I wonder if the note was delivered to you which I left with one of the girls."

"I wish I could answer you Vivian" the muttered.

The Size of the Sea

Here are a few facts about the sea for your scrapbook: The Pacific covers 68,000,000, the Atlantic 30,000,000 and the Indian Ocean, Arctic and Antarctic 42,000,000 square

To stow away the contents of the Pacific it would be necessary to fill a tank one mile long, one mile wide and one mile mile long, one mile wide and one mile deep every day for 440 years. Put in figures, the Pacific holds in weight 948,000,000,000,000,000,000 tons. It would take about 1,000,000 years for all its water to pass over the falls of Niagara.

The average depth of the Atlantic is not quite three miles. Its waters weigh 325,000,000,000,000,000 tons, and a tank to contain it would have each of its six sides.

contain it would have each of its six sides 430 miles long. The figures of the other oceans are in the same startling proportions. It would take all the sea water in the world about 2,000,000 years to flow over Niagara. A tauk to hold it all would have to measure nearly 1,000 miles along each of its sides.

To the visitor from the shore who sees its working (on an English ship) for the first time the rule of the starboard side—to give it a name—has as odd appearance. One does not know why everybody swarms over to port when a certain cap with gold on the peak emerges through a hatchway It may even be unpleasantly enforced. Thus it chanced once to me to be a guest in the gunroom mess of a ship which was out for target practice.

I was walking with the paymaster, both of us void of any intention of offense, on the sacred starboard side, when a midshipthe sacred starpoard side, when a midship-man came up with a message from the captain, who was on deck, though not on the quarter deck, that we must confine oursolves to the port There was a plentiful lack of humor on the part of that officer, and no sufficiency of politeness, but rules there must be, or else a man-of-war would speedily become a regular built privateer.

Removing Rust From Iron The accumulation of rust on iron articles is so annoying that any simple process of removing it will be received with great satisfaction by a large number of persons. The following directions are given: Attach a piece of ordinary zinc to the articles and then let them lie in water to which a little sulphuric acid is added. They should be left im-mersed for several days or a week, until the rust has entirely disappeared, the time depending on how deeply they were rusted. If there is much rust, a little sulphuric acid should be added occasionally. The essential part of the process is that the zinc must be in good electrical contact with the iron. A good way is to twist an iron wire tightly around the object and connect this with the zinc, for which a remnant of a battery zinc is suitable, as it has a binding

Besides the simplicity of this process. itself is not attacked in the least as long as the zinc is in good electrical contact with it. Delicate pieces of mechanism which have become badly rusted can be cleaned by wrapping a galvanized wire around them instead of the zinc, in which case the acid should not be too strong. When the rust is all cut off, the articles will appear dark gray or black. They must then be thoroughly washed and oiled. It is well to warm them slightly when dry so that the oil may the more easily sink into the surface Where there are sharp edges and fine work this process is said to be eminently satisfactory .- New York Ledger.

The epaulets hadn't arrived when the day for trying on occurred, and our fitter told Grant, adding that he was sorry, but that he would have to come in Then Grant made a remark which showed his great good sense, one of his predominant characteristics. There must be somebody here, ' he said, 'who is about my build. Just put the coat on him and fit the epaulets that way.' And so it was done."—New York Times.

The late Mr. Davis, the biggest bookmaker of his time in England, probably laid the largest bet ever recorded when he wagered $500,000 to $5,000 against three horses owned by a Mr. Clark and entered in the Derby of 1896.

There is also a bet recorded of $450,-000 to $150,000, the big amount being laid by Lord Glasgow and the smaller by Lord George Bentinck, who lost. In 1885 a young lordling bet $15,000 to $150 that St. Simon, a very celebrated race horse, would win a race in which but one other animal was to start. St. Simon was so hot a favorite that 100 to 1 was laid on his chance, such odds, of course, being very unusual and meaning that there is hardly any betting being done. That lord, however, actually bet his $15,000 against a bookmaker's $150 as coolly as if he had been accepting and not laying tremendous odds. St. Simon won in a can-

A Finished Rebuke.

Hon. George Russell, in his "Recollections and Collections," tells the following story of Jewett, the famous master of Balliol college:

"The scene was the master's own dining room, and the moment that the guests began a most outrageous conversation. Every one sat flabbergasted. The master winced with annoyance, and then, bending down the table toward the offender, said in his shrillest tone, 'Shall we continue this conversation in the drawing room?' and rose from his It was really a stroke of genius thus both to terminate and to rebuke the impropriety without violating the decorum due from host to guest."

Only a stern sense of duty induced Mr. Gladstone in his seventy-seventh Mr. Gladstone in his seven, year to endeavor to bring about the pasaid when he appealed to the country, "or be hunted out of public life."
"What do you think of Mr. Gladstone now?" asked a Liberal M. P. of Mr. Healy at the close of Mr. Gladstone's speech introducing home rule. "I think," replied Mr. Healy, "that he has elected to be crucified for Ireland." -Birmingham (England) Post.

The Age of Niagara

The truth of the adage about constant dripping wearing away a stone is strik-ingly illustrated in the fact that the Niagara river has been 36,000 years cutting its channel 200 feet deep, 2,000 feet wide and 7 miles long through solid rock. Evidence is conclusive that the falls were formerly at Queenstone, seven miles below the present situation. It has been proved that they have not receded more than one foot a year for the last half a century.

ART IN PAPER MONEY

THE DELICATE WORK DONE BY UNCLE SAM'S ARTISTS.

Care and Caution That Prevail In the Bureau of Engraving and Printing-The Paper That Is Used For All Government Issues-A Complicated Process.

The making of the artistic green and black notes is more complicated than might be imagined from a casual glance at their "gracefully lined surface. The lengthy process is most unique and interesting, and a visit to the bureau of engaging and a printing in Weshington graving and printing in Washington, where it may be seen, is a very entertaining one. There is a great deal of work accomplished here, as this bureau issues the government bonds, legal tenders, silver a work of the state of the second secon accomplished here, as this bureau issues the government bonds, legal tenders, silver certificates, bank notes and internal revenue and postage stamps. The largest face value of any issue is a registered bond of $50,000 and the smallest a l cent stamp. All of the engravers are specialists in their particular department, and the delicate figures and intricate designs of their work are often marvels of artistic skill. Portraits of living persons are never put on the notes, and all the figures, vignettes, borders, etc., are engraved separately before they they are put on the plates.

The engravers sit, each one below a window, with a screen of ground glass around them, and another of white linen above their heads. Their work is so fine and delicate that the greatest precision and care are required, and the room in which they work is not open to visitors. First the engraver works out his design of face or figure, and after transferring it by hand to a plate of soft steel the plate is hardened and a soft steel roller takes the impression from it. After this roll is chilled another impression is taken upon another steel plate, and after this latter has been hardened it is ready for use.

The geometric lathe which makes the borders is so complete and wonderful a plece of mechanism as to seem almost borders is so complete and wonderful a piece of mechanism as to seem almost alive. The graceful lines for the borders, backs and other conventional designs seen on the notes are made by this machine, if indeed it may be called one. After a cal-culation the machinery is set in motion by steam power, the tiny diamond and steel points begin their work, and the re-sult of this mathematical calculation shows on the small section of steel an intricate border of the undulating, circular lines, with their strange effect of light and shade. This lathe work is one of the surest guards against counterfeiting, for bit of work represents an abstruse

In the engraving room are two large vaults, in which are kept all the plates, rolls and other implements, the position of rolls and other implements, the position of head of the department being a very important and trustworthy one, as it is one of the few offices where great confidence is placed in the honesty of one man.

The paper for all the issues is manufactured at Dalton, Mass., under the supervision of government officials, and that used for the bank notes, silver certificates, etc., is sent cut in sheets large enough to contain four notes. In appearance it is like any other very heavy linen paper, except that it has two perpendicular lines of short, uneven silk threads running through it.

On being received it is taken with the On being received it is taken with the blue and white papers for the internal revenue and postage stamps (both water marked) to the "wetting department," as it is called, where it is counted and re-counted, and a receipt given for it. Then it is put between wet cloths, and pressed, being shifted about every six hours to in-sure each sheet an equal amount of mois-ture. This process lasts about three days; then, after another counting, it is delivered to the printer, who must give a receipt for the sheets given him. At the end of the day he returns another check, stating the quantity received, the number of notes he has printed and the blank or spoiled sheets to be returned.

The printing room is a scene of great activity, with its many presses and workers. Here the paper is again moistened by applying it to a wet board, then it is laid applying it to a wet board, then it is land on a steel plate that has been carefully prepared with the firk, which also is made on the premises. There are two workers at each press, usually a man and a woman. The man fills the plate with ink from a roller, then wipes it off and finally, after dusting his hands with chalk, he gives it a last polishing. Then, after wetting the a last polishing. Then, after wetting the paper, the woman lays it on the plate, the press is applied, and behold the clear, clean back of the notes, which must be carefully examined before they leave the printer's hands. This process is repeated each time. The press is a self registering one, and the employees are allowed to spoil a certain percentage of their work, but if they exceed it their labor is deducted.

Then the notes are sent down stairs, and Then the notes are sent down stars, and for 12 hours are subject to great heat in an airtight room. In the room adjoining they are again examined, assorted and sent back to receive their "face value" from the plates prepared, showing the denomination and the facsimiles of the sig-

Then comes the "wet count," as it is called, and after being dried the notes are put in a solution of sizing, which gives a greater durability to the paper. After this short process they are again sent to the numbering room, where the edges are trimmed, and the number is put on by a trimmed, and the number is put on by a machine whose every revolution automatically throws the figures one digit higher. In this room they are given the last count and are then sent to the treasury department, where the red seal of the United States treasury is affixed and the single sheet cut into four notes.

Near this room is a great vault with a double time lock, where all the work, no matter what its stage of development, is, sent for the night. It must all be in and all the accounts must balance or no one is all the accounts must balance or no one is allowed to leave the building. The supply in this vault is always a little in advance of the demand of the treasury, and once in there is no getting it out, except on the requisition of the chief of the division. One man is never allowed alone in the vault. There must always be two or more in at the same time.—Philadelphia Times.

AN ENGINEER'S STORY.

SUFFERED THE PANGS OF RHEUMA.

s Reduced in Weight From 180 to 130 Pounds—His Friends Feared That Re-covery Was Impossible—Now Ac-tively Attending to His Duties. From the Midland Free Press.

Alexander McKenzie is one of the well known residents of Brookholm, Ont., where he has lived for many years. A few years ago it was thought that an early grave would be his; on the contrary, however, he is now stout and strong, and the story of his recovery is on the lips of almost all the cit izens of that burgh. The writer, while visiting in the village, could not fail to hear of his recovery, and with the reporter's proverbial nose for news decided to put to the proof the gossip of the village. The reporter visited Mr. Mc village. The reporter visited Mr. Mc-Kenzie's home and was introduced to Mrs. McKenzie. Enquiry elicited the information that Mr. McKenzie was not at home; but when informed as to his mission the lady freely consented to tell the reporter of her husband's case. Her story runs like this: "Mr. McKenzie is 40 years of age, an engin-eer by profession, and is now on a boat on the lakes. About five years ago he began to feel twinges of rheumatism in different parts of his body and limbs. For a time he did not think much of it, but it gradually got worse antil the pain was such that he was unable to work, and could not get rest at nights. I would have to get up two or three times of a night." said Mrs. McKenzie to try and relieve this intense suffering. Of course he consulted a physician who pronounced his trouble but because he thought he knew.—Chisciatic rheumatism. The doctor did what he could for him, but without giving any permanent relief. went on for several years sometimes he would be some better and try to work, and be as bad as ever. He was pulled down from being a stout man of 180 pounds to about 130. And was so thin and miserable that all who knew him thought it would be only a matter of a short time until he would be in his grave. For four years did he thus drag along a miserable existence, until in the beginning of 1897 some one recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Tired of medi cine, with some reluctance he procured a box and gave them a trial. Almost a box and gave them a trial. Almost at once a change was percetible and as he kept on taking them, the improve ment continued, and he was soon able to be about. By the time he had taken about a dozen boxes he was free from the slib test twinge of rheum, sm, and as stout and strong as he had been before his affliction. So great is his faith in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills that when he left home recently to go up the lake for the summer, he took three boxes with him as a preventive against a possible recurrence of the trouble. Mrs. McKenzie was quite willing that this story should be made pulbic, and believes that she owes her husband's life to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

Rheumatism, sciatica, neuralgia, artial paralysis, locomotor ataxia, partial nervous headache, nervous prostration, and diseases depending upon humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc., all disappear befere a fair treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They give a healthy glow to pale and sallow complexions. Sold by all dealers and post paid at 50c a box or six boxes for $2.50 by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont. Do not be persuaded to take some substitute.

Mr. Asbury Peppers.

"Oh, yes," said the medical student parder. "I have read of several cases boarder. where rheumatism shifted from the limbs to the heart.'

"I know a still stranger case," said Asbury Peppers. "I know a young man who had a broken finger, and when they would not let him enlist he was heartbroken."-Cincinnati Enquirer.

"My poor child," said the housekeeper, soothingly, "that is a horrible prayer to fall from the lips of one so young. Be brave and strong; look your trouble in the face calmly, and pray God for strength to bear it. You are not the first young wife who has been cruelly abandoned by the man she loved and trusted the man who at the altar young to the man who, at the altar, vowed to love, cherish and protect her while life

"I loved him so!" "moaned Doris.
"Oh, heaven help me to bear it, or I must die. Where shall I turn, where shall I go?"

"I would advise you to go back to your mother," said the housekeeper.
"She could comfort you best."

"I have no mother," sobbed Doris. "I am alone in the great, cruel world."
"You must have friends," said the housekeeper.

Doris shook her golden head.

"Not one on earth," she sobbed.

The good housekeeper looked at the fair young girl in wonder.

No friend!—not one on the wide earth!

It was almost incredible.

It was almost incredible.

"Are you sure the marriage you believe in so fully was a legal one?" asked Mrs. Lane, in perplexity. "A man who deserts a young girl deliberately in this fashion is capable of any villainy."

Doris raised her great, childish blue

Doris raised her great, childish blue eyes to her face.
"I am sure it was legal," she answered. "I remember he was very particular that it should be so. Oh, how can I think he has willfully, deliberately deserted me! Some day he will return here for me. I feel sure of it; I feel it in my heart. I cannot live without him, any more than the flowers could live without the sunshine. Oh, he must return to me!"

me!"
How the next day passed Doris could never remember. It seemed as though the torture of a lifetime was crowded into it. Then it suddehly dawned upon her she must leave the hotel. She could not remain there forever. There was but one has she knew of to go to, and that was back to Madame Delmar's seminary.

Ab what a decolate ride back it was

Ah, what a desolate ride back it was to Beech Grove! The train whirled past beautiful stretches of country, thrifty villages and peaceful homes, but Doris looked out of the windows without seeing. It was dusk when the train stopped at the creation. the station.

path, all unmindful of the bitter storm. Her wedding-ring fell from her finger in the long grass by the wayside, but she did not heed its loss.

Stealing in through the great arched gate-way, she made her way around to the western wing of the building. This had been set apart for Madame Delmar's use during vacation.

The crimson hangings were looped back, and a bright flood of light shone back, and a bright flood of light shone out through the darkness like a beacon light. Noiselessly Doris approached the window and peered into the room. Ah, what a contrast to the cheerfulness within was the driving, pitiless storm without. Drawing the rose vines aside, Doris pressed her white face still closer to the pane. ack, and a bright flood of light shone o the pane.

At the table, engaged on some trifling fancy work, sat Madame Delmar, and near her stood her brother John, a plain, sturdy farmer, whom madame was always particular to ignore in public. John's farm adjoined the seminary grounds on the left, and the awkward bachelor brother made is home in the western wing of the seminary; but few of madame's dainty, aristocratic pupils ever knew this, or even dreamed of the existence of such a person.

On this particular evening madame

On this particular evening madame and her brother John were discussing Doris's sudden disappearance of a few days before. Ah, how plainly every word was heard by the little figure crouching out there in the pitiful storm!

"I can't think where the child could thought we were doing our clear duty by little Doris in providing her such a good here. I miss the child so!"

"Don't make an old fool of yourself, John Delmar!" exclaimed his sister.

John Delmar!" exclaimed his sister, energetically. (She never wasted any of the little elegancies of speech or grammar upon plain, nonest John.) "It was mar upon plain, nonest John.) "It was that miserable girl's own fault if she was not happy here. She was always too fond of decking herself out in finery, to look nicer than my pupils, and they rich men's daughters, every one of em. And as to missing her the Lord knows I am glad to be rid of her!" she added with spiteful emphasis.

A twig snapped beneath the window, and—was it only their fancy?—a white face, framed in tangled, golden, wet hair, peered wistfully into the room from among the climbing red roses. A moment later a shadow crept across the threshold, and a voice, faltering piteously, broke

"Oh, madame! I have come back to u! Oh, pity and forgive! If you seeld you! Oh, pity and forgive! If you scold me I shall fall down and die at your

"I am no spirit, madame!" sobbed Doris, advancing toward the center of the room, near where the horror-stricken woman stood. "I'm your unhappy ward, Doric!"

"So you are really Doris in the flesh!" retorted the irate madame, her rising anger taking the place of her momentary fright. "Where have you been for the anger taking the place of her momentary fright. "Where have you been for the last two days? I want to know where you have been, I say. Your dress is bedraggled with mud. We would be disgraced for life if any one hereabouts saw you. I ask you again, Dorls Brandon, what's the meaning of all this?"
"I—I cannot tell you, madame!" sighed Dorls, bitterly. "Only be kind to me and forget that I ever went away."
"Do you hear that miserable girl? Do you hear her, John?" cried madame, furiously exasperated. "This is the creature you would waste your pity on! She thoroughly; depend upon that, ungrateful girl."

I shall investigate this matter thoroughly; depend upon that, ungrateful girl."

"You may kill me, if you choose, madame," sighed poor Dorls, with a gasping, tearless sob, as she sank down off the floor in a little, dark heap, "but I will not—oh, I cannot reveal to you the dark secret of the past two days,"

"Is there a lover at the bottom of it?" cried madame, shrilly, fairly shricking the words in the girl's startled ear, "Answer me? Has love anything to do with this disgraceful affair?"

"No. No one loves me," muttered Dorls, faintly. "My poor heart is bruised so sorely. Oh, no, no; God never intended any one to love me!" she added, wearily.

"You cannot deceive me. There's a lover at the bottom of it," declared madame, suspiciously. "It's just such pink and white baby faces as yours that make all the mischief in the world. You cannot remain under this roof till you make a clean breast of it."

For the last time I say, clear this mystery up straightway, or go."
"Oh, how can I tell her? How dare I tell her," thought Doris, wildly, "that I am a victim to love's cruel curse—that he whom I wedded and trusted so blindly, deceived me more cruelly than death;

With a bitter cry, Doris sank on her knees at madame's feet, her beautiful, tangled, golden hair falling in reckless tangled, golden hair falling in reckless abandon about her like a golden veil, her lovely young face white with fear.

Poor child! She might have known better by past experience than to appeal to John Delmar, when his sister "laid down the law," as he called it.

"It is night now, madame. You will at least let me stay under the shelter of your roof until morning. Listen to the terrific storm, hear how it thunders, and see the blinding lightning. Oh, madame, I am so afraid of the darkness and the terrible storm. In the morning I will go quietly away, and you shall never look upon my face again; and I shall always remember that you did not drive, me out into the fury of the bitter night."

Madame's cutting, sarcastic laugh answered her.

"Afraid of the storm and the darkness!" she sneered, maliciously. "You were the fact of the storm and the darkness!" she sneered, maliciously. "You were the storm and the darkness!" she sneered, maliciously. "You were the storm and the darkness!" she sneered, maliciously. "You were the storm and the darkness!" she sneered, maliciously. Madame Delmar never forgot the wild startled cry that broke from Doris's lips.

"Madame," she sobbed, struggling up from her knees, and turning to the woman who had shown her so little mercy in the hour of her bitterest need, "you have not been kind. You have driven me forth into the cold, bitter world to live or to die as Ged sees fit; but I forgive you. Some day you may world to live or to the as God sees fit; but I forgive you. Some day you may regret this action. When any one men-tions the name of Doris, the unhappy waif fate thrust upon your hands, and who has been unwittingly such a cross to you, it is my prayer that you will always try to think of me kindly and at my best."

Without another word, Doris turned and fled out into the darkness of the night. In the distance she could hear the plaintive murmur of the waves as they beat against the shore.

It is related of him that on one occasion, after patient investigation of facts, he decided that he had not sufficient knowledge to pronounce on the case before him. There was in his presence a pert courtier, one of those men who take long to learn that wisdom and impudence are not closely related.

"Pray, do you expect that the calibh to pay you for ignorance?" he asked, is to pay you for ignorance?" hoping to place the judge at a disad-

"I do not," was the mild reply. "The caliph pays me—and pays me well—for what I do know. Were he to attempt to pay me for what I do not know the treasures of his empire would not suffice. ''-Youth's Companion.

"A Worcester man," says the Worcester Gazette, "who makes frequent trips to Europe fell in with a fascinating stranger the last time he was across.

The stranger, who may be designated as Ferguson because that does not sound at all like his real name, was an American, his manners were those of gentleman, and he seemed to be well supplied with money and to know a great many people worth knowing. In conversation with the Worcester man one day Ferguson said: 'Worcester is a charming city, and I have some very dear friends there. I presume you know Colonel E. J. Russell? He is an old and highly esteemed friend, to whom I am deeply indebted for many favors.'

"When the Worcester man returned home, he met Colonel Russell one day and in course of conversation remarked that he had met a man in Europe who said that he was an old friend. Colonel Russell thought for a moment, and then he replied: 'Oh, yes, I remember Ferguson very well! I ought to, for he lived with me for seven years once. It was when I was warden of the state prison at Charlestown, and I will say that Ferguson was one of the quietest and best behaved prisoners that I ever

But such a passicnate burst of grief is the soonest over. She did not cry out for heaven to wreak its vengeance on this handsome young husband, who had deserted her at the altar, as it were, as many another might have done.

"I will learn to forget him," she cried, raising her white face to the dark sky. "I will cast him out of my poor, shattered heart, as he cast me out of his, without one regret. CARDSTON, N. W. T.

SHOULD HAVE BEEN A BOY

A Pathetic Story From the "Recollections" of Elizabeth Cady Stanton.

A pathetic little story comes from the "Recollections" of Elizabeth Cady Stanton. She says that when her brother died she climbed upon her father's knee, wondering what could be said or done to fill the empty place in his heart. "Oh, my daughter," he sighed, "I wish you were a boy!"

All that day and far into the night I pondered the problem of boyhood. I thought the chief thing to be done to equal boys was to be learned and courageous, so I decided to study Greek and learn to

As soon as I was dressed I hurried to our good pastor, the Rev. Simon Hosack, who was always early at work in his gar-who was always early at work in his garden.

"Doctor," said I, "which do you like best, boys or girls?"

"Why, girls, to be sure! I wouldn't give you for all the boys in Christendom."

"My father," said I, "prefers boys. He wishes I were one, and I intend to be as like one as possible. I am going to ride on horseback and study Greek. Will you give me a Greek lesson sow, doctor? I will begin without delay."

"Yes, child," he said, throwing down his hoe. "Come into my library, and we will begin without delay."

I kept up my lossons at the parsonage and made rapid progress. I surprised even my teacher, who thought me capable of doing anything. I learned to drive and to leap a fence and ditch on horseback. I taxed every power, hoping some day to hear my father say: "Well, a girl is as good as a boy, after all."

But he never said it.

I began to study Latin, Greek and mathematics with a class of boys in the academy, many of whom were much older than I. Two prizes were offered in Greek, I strove for one and took the second.

'Now,' said I, "my father will be satisfied with me."

I rushed breathless into his office, laid my prize, a new Greek Testament, on the table and exclaimed:

"There! I got it!"

He took up the book and asked me some questions. Then he kissed me on the forehead and exclaimed, with a sigh:

"Ah, you should have been a boy!"

No "Sights" Allowed

No "Sights" Allowed.

One of the first things I did the morning after my arrival at Gibraltar, says Professor Simon Newcomb in The Atlantic, was to choose a convenient point on one of the stone parapets for "taking the sun," in order to test the running of my chronometer. I had some suspicion as to the result, but was willing to be amused. A sentinel speedily informed me that no sights were allowed to be taken on the fortification. I told him I was not taking sights on the fortification, but on the sun. But he was inexorable. The rule was that no sights of any sort could be taken without a permit. I soon learned from Mr. Sprague, the American consul, who the proper officer was to issue the permit, which I was assured would be granted without the slightest difficulty.

The consul presented me to the military governor of the place, General Sir Fenwick Williams of Kars. He was a man whom it was very interesting to meet.

whom it was very interesting to meet. There was no need of troubling him with such a detail as that of a permit to take such a detail as that of a permit to take sights, but the consul ventured to relate my experience of the morning. He took the information in a way which showed that England in making him a general had lost a first class diplomatist. Instead of treating the matter seriously, he professed to be greatly amused and said it reminded him of the case of an old lady in Punch who had to pass a surveyor in the street behind a theodolite. "Please, sir. don't shoot till I get past," she begged.

Delirium Tremens

The familiar symptoms of delirium tremens, known as "snakes," have been made the subject of study with some in teresting results. It appears that what have been supposed to be hallucinations have a certain sort of evidence in fact. Certain blood vessels in the eyes become congested and assume a dark color. These, when they appear on the retina, which is ordinarily transparent, suggest to the nervous and overwrought patient the presence of some moving, living creature. Imagination of course increases the nervousness, and finally the mind becomes so disordered that the form of an offensive creature is suggested. As these fancies grow by what they feed on, it is easy to see how creeping and crawling things may fill the soul of the victim with the most horrible sensations. — New York Ledger.

What Becomes of Them?

The announcement that 2,000,000 glass eyes are manufactured every year in Germany alone has set the London Lancet and other authorities speculating on what becomes of them all. Is it possible that there are 2,000,000 one eyed men in the civilized world, with the other eye only last a year? It is only one eyed men, as The Lancet reminds us, who use glass eyes. Nobody ever heard of a man who was totally blind indulging in this forlorn vanity. On reflection, however, The Lancet comes to the conclusion that glass eyes probably include eyes for stuffed beasts, eyes for waxworks and eyes for dolls and no doubt this is the explanation. The announcement that 2,000,000 glas

TWO SHARK STORIES

Horrible Encounters Under the Water With Man Eating Monsters.

"One of the most horrible predicaments a diver was ever placed in," said Mr. Sully, the famous Newport diver, "must have been that of one of whom I once heard who had to investigate a wreck that had carried to the bottom with her a number of cattle. When he blew off the hatches, the bodies floated up, and with a rush a school of hungry sharks attacked them. They were all around the diver, fighting and struggling, and he was in mortal terror lest his air pipe should be bitten in two in the midst of the fearful struggle that was going on. At length, unable to bear the suspense any longer, he signaled to be drawn up, notwithstanding that he would have to pass through the thick of the fierce monsters. In his passage to the surface he brushed close past the sharks, and one of them made a vicious grab at him. It missed his arm, but caught his fingers, and his hand was badly mangled. Perhaps, however, he was glad to get off as cheaply as he did.

When Bismarck was Prussian elegate to the federal diet at Frankfort, be took apartments in the house of a patrician who held the Prussians in great repugnance, and when Bismarck applied to him to have a bell fixed up in his servant's room, he answered that if Bismarck wanted a bell he must get it fixed himself. A few days later a loud report of firearms was heard to proceed from the delegate's room. The landlord rushed up to his lodger's apartments, and, bursting into Bismarck's study, found him seated at his desk before a great pile of documents calmly smoking his pipe. There was a pistol lying on the table, still smoking at the barrel.

"For the love of heaven, what has hap pened?" asked the frightened landlord. "Nothing, nothing," answered Bismarck quietly, "Don't disturb yourself. I was only calling my servant. It is a very harmless signal, to which you will have to accustom yourself, for no doubt I shall want oftentimes to use it again.' The bell was fixed up next day

In the township of Sarawak, Grey county, there is probably no better known or respected farmer than Thos. Gawley, of East Linton P. O. Learn-ing that his nephew, a young lad now about ten years of age, had been cured about ten years of age, had been check of a disease of his leg, which threat-ened not only the loss of the limb, but also of the life of the little fellow, a reporter of the Times made enquiry and we are convinced that the wonde working powers of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People have not ex-hausted themselves. Meeting Mr. Gaw-ley in one of the drug stores of the town, he was asked if the reported cure was a fact. His face lighted up with a smile as he said, "Indeed it is, sir. was afraid we were going to lose the lad, but he is now as well as ever, hearty and strong." Asked for particulars, Mr. Gawley did the most nat ural thing in the world, referred the re porter to his wife, who in telling the case said:—"In the month of September, 1897, my nephew, Chester Gawley, who lives with us, became afflicted with a severe pain in his left leg. In a few lays the limb became badly swollen days the and painful, and the family physician was called in. The case was a perplexing one, but it was decided after a few days to lance the leg. This was done, but the wound inflicted would not heal up, but became a running sore. The little fellow soon was reduced to almost a skeleton. This continued through the winter months, and we thought he would never get off his bed again. In April two of the best physicians of Owen Sound operated on the leg for disease of the bone, resorting to scraping the bone. In spite of this treatment the wound continued to run, and we were in despair. In August a friend residing in Manitou, Manitoba, advised

The diver had in his hand a small sharp saw, and, fearing that the shark would make short work of him, he seized one of its fins and plunged his saw deep into its body.

"Then a terrible struggle began. In the confined space the shark could not get at the diver without shaking off the hold that the latter had got, and the latter, seeing that his only hope was to retain his hold, clung on desperately, all the time driving his saw time after time into the body of the maddened sea tiger. Hallett had contrived to make a signal, and just as his senses were leaving him he felt himself rising. When the bell was draged out of the water, man and shark rolled out blood, and in this way drive disease from the system. A fair trial will con-vince the most skeptical. Sold only dlework, at 5 o'clock tea, if tea it could be called, awaiting hosts and guests. The first course of this elaborate regale consisted of home cured ham, that incomparable Suffolk ham pickled in spice, and harvest beer—harvest beer, itself clear as sherry and twice as strong—was drunk with this dish. Next came the strongest of tea and the richest of cream with rusks, also a Suffolk specialty, and cakes equally unrivaled. The tea things removed, hot water and spirit decanter would be brought out, pipes smoked, thereby apparently digestion being restored. Seldom did any one seem the worse for such prolonged eating and drinking.—"Reminiscences of Bentham Edwards."

The Heart and Nerves are Often Affected and Cause Prostration of the Entire System.

A Kingston Lady Testifies to Her Experience in the Use of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

People who suffer from any disease or disorder of the heart nervous system, such as Palpitation, Skip Beats, Smothering or Sinking Sensations, Sleeplessness, Weakness, Pain in the Head, etc., cannot afford to waste time trying various remedies, which have nothing more to back up their claims than the bold assertions of their proprietors.

These diseases are too serious to permit of your experimenting with untried remedies. When you buy Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, you know you have behind them the testimony of thousands of Canadians who have been cured by their use. One of these is Mrs. A. W. Irish, 92 Queen Street, Kingston, Ont., who writes as follows:

"I have suffered for some years with a smothering sensation caused by heart disease. The severity of the pains in my heart caused me much suffering. I was also very nervous, and my whole system was run down and debilitated.

"Hearing of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills being a specific for these troubles, I thought I would try them, and therefore got a box at McLeod's Drug Store.

"They afforded me great relief, having."

Store.

"They afforded me great relief, having toned up my system and removed the distressing symptoms from which I suffered. I can heartily recommend these wonderful pills to all sufferers from heart trouble."

Sores Healed.

Nothing like B.B.B. for healing sores and ulcers, no matter how large or how chronic they may be. B. B. applied externally and taken internally according to directions will soon effect a cure. It sends rich, pure blood to the part, so that healthy flesh soon takes the place of the decaying tissue.

"I had been troubled with sore fingers and sore toes around the nails. The salve I was using did not help me and I was getting worse. I was advised to try Burdock Blood Bitters, and after using nearly two bottles my sores all healed up. I Burdock consider B.B.B. a wonderful blood Blood purifier." ENOCH Blood G. She had scurcely proceeded a dozen rods ere she saw a phaeton, drawn by two mettlesome ponies, rapidly approaching her. One fleeting glance at the young girl reclining among the cushions, and she recognized her at once. It was Vivian Courtney, dashing, piquant, dazzling Vivian, in pink mull—her dark beauty enhanced by the crimson, lace-edged umbrella she carried, and the coquettish pink plumes which waved from her dainty straw hat that rested on her dark curls.

Little Doris's glance lingered but a moment on Vivian's proud face, then turned to the gentleman handling the reins. Every drop of blood seemed suddenly to leave her heart. The very air seemed to stifle her, and the light of the sun to grow dark around her; the gentleman was Frederick Thornton—her bushand!

His dark, handsome face was bent eagerly toward his companion, with a rapt look of love and admiration in his passionate, eloquent eyes that made poor little Doris almost faint to witness it "A remarkably fine-looking couple," she heard the gentleman remark. And in answer to the lady's question if he knew them he geplied: "There are very few New Yorkers who do not. She is the daughter of a wealthy gentleman who lives somewhere in the suburbs. She's only a school-girl as yet. Home just now on a yacation from boarding-school. I only a scholor from boarding-school, I understand. Her companion is Banker Thornton's son. I had it from his own lips yesterday that the rumor floating about is perfectly true. He is soon to marry Miss Courtney."

marry Miss Courtney."
Without pausing to hear another word, Doris turned like one who had been dealt a sudden death-blow, and fled precipitately down the street. There was a small park at the end of it, which she entered, and flinging herself down on one of the benches, sobbed as though her heart would break. Then she dashed the pearly tear-drops from her blue eyes, and anyshed aloud, and the sound of that laughed aloud, and the sound of that wild laughter startled her wild laughter startled her.

"He is soon to marry Miss Courtney!
That is what the gentleman said!" she cried, putting the shining hair back from her flushed, tear-stained face. "For one little minute I almost believed it. It is utterly impossible, absurd! Why, he could not marry ker, for he is married to me. No one else has a right by his side."

She wondered if she should have called out to him. All her pride rose up and answered, "No!"

answered, "No!"
"What do other wives do when their husbands forsake them?" she muttered, below her breath. "I have heard of such below her breath. "I have heard of such things, but I never quite believed a husband who took the trouble to marry a young girl would heartlessly, deliberately desert her. I never dreamed that would be my fate. I never thought what those wives did. Oh! if,I had a mother to go to—a sister to sympathize with me. It is more bitter than death to be all alone in the cold, cruel world."

Sitting there, listening to the falling.

Sitting there, listening to the falling, Sitting there, listening to the failing, splashing water of, the fountain, the thought occurred to her again as to wast she should do—where she should go. She could not sit in the park much longer—already the policeman patroling the grounds was commencing to eye her sharply. She might walk through the crowded streets until night set in—hufsharply. She might walk through the crowded streets until night set in—but where could she go after that? She was quite too dazed to think. Slowly she arose and moved toward the entrance

For long hours Doris paced the streets of New York until the dusk began to gather and the great electric lights were lighted. At length the strength of her limbs seemed to fail her; glancing up, she found herself standing before the entrance of the same park in which she had sat that morning.

She tried to reach the bench by the fountain the standard of the standard of the same park in which she had sat that morning.

It would be a deed of mercy to take her home with me and mercy to take her home with me and let Ellen attend to her." And without further ado Doris was conveyed across the way to the patrolman's humble home. When Doris ovened her eyes she found herself lying on a chintz covered setted and a kind, motherly face bending ove her, and the look of puzzled wonde deepened in Doris's pansy blue eyes. Your frien will be greatly worried over you, I fear "Friends!" repeated Doris, drearly.

I have no friends here; not one."
"Where are you stopping?" asked the patrolman's wife, gently.

"I am a stranger in the city; I just came here," answered Doris.
"Did you come to New York to 2nd work, poor child?" asked the "ona".
Doris raised her eyes to the plain. "I—I have had a great trouble," she

"Are you going out to try to find work, my dear?" asked the good woman, wistfully.

wistfully.

"Yes," said Doris, bravely.

"Then I should advise you to buy a thick veil for yourself the first thing you did. I say it only in kindness. Beauty like yours is a dangerous and fatal gift often to a young girl. You will remember my words when you are older. They will come back to you many a time through life. I would advise you to get a veil at once to hide, such a face as that from the gaze of men. A pretty face often brings misery when its owner is unprotected and innocent, as you appear to be."

The next day he did not go to busi ness quite as early as usual and was found by an astonished chambermaid doing something to the gas in the liter ary gentleman's room, and after he had decamped she was quite sure she heard a chuckle from his own quarters.

That night Jones was unusually gay at supper and retired early to his room. So did the aspiring author. The dyspeptic young man arrived, and soon the prance of the gifted feet and the drone of the gifted voice were heard upon the evening breezes.

On and on they went, till the clock struck 10. CAUSE OF RHEUMATISM.

HOW THE DISEASE IS DEVELOPED AND CAN BE AVOIDED.

r Years This Trouble Baffled Physicians' Skill-Now Understood and Easily Cured -The Re-ult of Scientific Research.

From the Advance, Kemptville, On There is a popular idea that rheu matism is caused by exposure to cold, that some localities are infected with it more than others. Scientists say that such conditions frequently promote disease, but from the fact that more than he seemed, but the question this ailment runs in certain families, it is shown to be hereditary, and conse quenty a disease of the blood.

Frequently an individual in whose family rheumatism has not occurred, develops the disease, and when diagnosis of the case is made, it is generally found that the ailment is due to a derangement of the blood.

One such sufferer who has been cured is Capt. D. W. Becket, who lives in the township of Oxford, Grenville County. Capt Becket is the owner of 275 acres, and lives in a beautiful farm home on the banks of the Rideau, some three miles from Kemptville. In addition to being a thrifty farmer, Mr Becket has taken an enthusiastic interest in our volunteer force, and has graduated from the military college at Toronto with a first class certificate, which entitled him to the rank of Major. To a reporter of the Kemptville Advance, Capt. Becket made the following statement:—"Four years ago I was taken suddenly with rheumatism in both by elbows and thigh joints. The pain at times was something terrible. I took ing up there's no room for the ballog medicine and doctored for over six months, but continued to grow worse and worse. My arms from the elbow joints to the tips of the fingers became numb and had a prickly sensation, and I was unable to do any work; in fact I could not lift my hand to my head.
The pain I suffered in my hips was also Meeks—Let us come to an agreement of some kind and put it in black and almost unbearable and my legs were almost unbearable and my legs were nearly as useless as my arms. I feel satisfied there is no other medicine could have wrought such a speedy cure, and I can truthfully say I met the enemy and defeated him through the aid of Dr. Williams' Pihk Pills.

Williams' Pink Pills are a specific for all diseases arising from an impoverished condition of the blood or a shattered condition of the nervous forces, such as St. Vitus dance, locomotor ataxia, rheumatism, paralysis, sciatica, the after effects of la grippe, loss of appetite, headache, dizziness chronic erysipelas, scrofula, etc. They are also a specific for the troubles peculiar to the female system, correcting irregularities, suppressions and all forms of female weakness, building anew the blood and restoring the glow of health to pale and shallow cheeks. #### Elderberry Pie.

Elderberry Pies.

Elderberry pies may be made so that they are hardly distinguishable from blueberry. The following is an excellent recipe: Scald the berries thoroughly and turn off the water. To one heaping teacupful of fruit add one teacupful of granulated sugar, butter the size of a wainut, a tablespoonful of vinegar (or lemon juice) and one egg. Bake with two crusts.

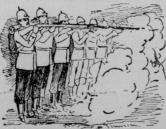

These pies may be made in the winter with canned elderberries which are put up by first scalding the berries, turning off the water, adding more water and heating ready for the cans. No sugar is required.—Josephine Detmar in Good Housekeeping.

Tells how Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills Conquer Disease.

Like the conquering armies of Britain, which are marching to victory in every quarter of the globe, Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are everywhere triumphing oversickness, weakness and suffering.

Mr. David Walsh, of Carleton Place,
Ont., a man who has served with distinction and credit in the British army, and is now an employee of the C. P.
Railway, says, "While in the army I got broken down, and my nervous system was completely shattered.

"I was much troubled with liver complaint, loss of appetite, etc. My rest became broken and was disturbed by vivid dreams. This had been going on for 14 years, although I took a great many remedies to escape from the troubles which afflicted me.

"However, I got no relief until I started to take Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, which I used together with Laxa-Liyer Pills, and now after having used a few boxes, I am better than I have been for years. My nerves are restored to full force and vigor, I cat and sleep well, and my entire system has been toned and strengthened."

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

W. D. Popham, Talbot St., St. Thomas, Ont., says: "I have for a long time had serious back and kidney trouble. My back was so stiff and painful that when I sat down I had to have something to assist me to get up. #### Justifiable Indignation

One evening John Scott (Lord Eldon) had been sipping rather too freely of the convivial bowl with a friend in Edinburgh, and upon emerging into the air his intellect became considerably confused. Not being able to distinguish objects with any degree of certainty he felt himself quite capable of losing his way to his own home. While in this perplexity he saw someone coming toward him whom he asked, "D'ye ken whaur John Scott bides?"
"Whaur's the use of your speering that question? You're John Scott himsel'."
"I ken that," answered John indignantly, "but it's no himsel' that's wanted—it's his house."

It will be better for those who are Alberta. to remain any length of time when we are sent to a new town as there is no work here in line of tracting, is no work here in line of tracting, Brandon having been canvassed from house to house three different times and our tracts presented. This work was done principally by Elders Hansen, Leavitt, Baxter and Stewart. Elder Leavitt and myself canvassed the greater part of town last March and April for the third time, and since then Elders Williams, Jensen and Ellison have taken a turn, so that now none can say they had no chance to read our tracts or converse with us upon the Gospel. On Oct. 21st J. G. Stewart and myself left Brandon and walked to Wanawsa, a distance of 30 miles.
Oct. 24th we were joined by Elders.
J. J. Head and Alex. Leishman.
Elder Head and myself went by rail to Belmont (21 miles) in which town we visited every house leaving town we visited every house leaving tracts and had a few good gospel conversations. We were refused the use of the School House, Halls, Churches and every-place where the people could gather. We were abused by several of the people but felt to say as Christ did "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." We called on the Ministers they do." We called on the Ministers at their homes, but were not received in a very Christ like Spirit. However, we bore our testimony to them that if they were not willing to listen to the teachings of humble Mormon Elders now they would be glad to before they reached that Happy Home prepared for those who are willing to listen to and live the Gospel of Christ.

We enjoyed ourselves very much and found several people who were glad to see us and asked us back again. One lady was so pleased with the way we explained the Gospel that tears ran down her cheeks and she gave us a fewdimes. I know there will be many honest hearted people embrace the Gospel in the course of time and I pray God that he will hasten the day when darkness will be taken from the earth and man will be able to see his true standing before his Maker.

London, Nov. 8.—The Standard says editorially this morning: "We can see no alternative. Spain must accept as inevitable the loss of the Philippines. No doubt the United States will assume a heavy and serious responsibility, but it augurs well for the future that the public men of America appreciate and are ready to meet it. England will watch the experiment with every wish for a favorable issue."

DEFECTIVE TRANSPORTS.
Halifax, Nov. 7.—Lord Seymour, commander-in-chief of the forces in British North America, created a sensation on Saturday night, when he announced that the military transport service in Halifax was defective. He was surprised to learn that the facilities for the transportation of troops in case of trouble arising were of the meanest character in this respect. The imperial authorities have sadly neglected Halifax, and those supplied by the imperial authorities are little better than worthless. The reason the war-acips Pelican and Cordelia were loaded with ammunition and dispatched from Halifax is this. About this time of year the British and French vessels on the Newfoundland coast, on the fisheries protection service, retire, but the Frenchmea have remained on the Newfoundland coast, and in case of hostilities arising, the Cordelia and Pelican can slip across from Sydney to Newfoundland, at short rotice. The British war vessels will also keep a watch on the Frenchmen coaling at Sydney in case of trouble.

SENSATIONAL REPORE. DEFECTIVE TRANSPORTS. SENSATIONAL REPORT.

St. John's, Nild., Nov. 7.—The Brit-ish government telegraphed the colonial minister to-day asking the colonial minister to-day asking the number, tonnage, and capacity of steamers available at this port to convey coal from Sydney for the use of British warships. The cruisers Cordelia and Pellean will be held at Sydney to capture St. Pierre and protect St. John's in the event of war being cleared. The cruisers are also instructed to break the French cable between St. Pierre and Brest, France.

Le Gauleis Hopes for the Best.

London, Nov. 9.—The Times says this morning: "Whatever may be the result of the elections in the United States, the administration has gone too far to retreat on the Philippine question. The American reply may perhaps modify the original proposals but there is no doubt the main demand will be pressed to a successful conclusion. It is impossible not to feel sympathy with Spain, and we trust that, on the financial side, the conclusion. It is impossible not to feel sympathy with Spain, and we trust that, on the financial side, the Americans will show themselves generous toward a fallen enemy." After expressing satisfaction that "future misunderstanding will be avoided by the immediate adoption of a solution which was ultimately inevitable." the Times says: "We trust that America has learned to appreciate the fact that commercial restitution and imperial expansion do not thrive together. But it must be confessed that our sympathy with the Americans in their new course saffers a great strain by such blunders as the order for the regulation of trade at Porto Rico, which reads as if borrowed from the British navigation acts which the Americans found so oppressive." Paris, Nov. 8.—Le Gaulois, this morning, referring to to-day's sitting of the peace commission, says it will in ne way modify the Spanish-American situation, "as the American commissioners have orders to await further instructions from Washington." Le Gaulois them slays those instructions will depend upon the results of the elections, which, the paper mentionel thinks, will be favorable to the Republicans, adding: "The American government will eventually recognize that pecuniary compensation is due to Spain for the evacuation of the Philippine islands, and the negotiations will continue and be brought to a satisfactory conclusion in a friendly spirit."

The editorial concludes by expressing the opinion that the new policy and the promising economic situation will prevent a recurrence of any acute currency crisis.

Cincinnati, O., Nov. 8.—The grand ury of Kenton county, Ky., sitting in Covington, Ky., today returned indictments against fifty-three of the leading fire insurance companies of the United States, Canada and England. The indictments charged that the companies have formed an unlawful pool to prevent free competition among all insurance companies and their agents doing business in Covington, and thus extert a greater premium rate, than otherwise would have to be paid.

Washington, Nov. 4.—A complete transformation of the geography of Central America, occurred on Novem. ber 1, by the birth of a new republic, the United States of Central America, and the disappearance of the republics of Nicaragna, Salvador and Honduras, except as states of the new union.

Senor Corea, charge d'affaires of these republics during their transition stage, has received detailed informa-tion of the changes effected, and the form of government of the new republic. As indicating the dignity and importance of the United States of Central America, Mr. Corea points out it has a poulation of about 2,000,000, and area of about 110,000 square miles, a great stretch of sea coast on the Atlan-tic and Pacific and the site of the Nicaragua canal through which commerce lic began on June 20, 1895, when the three presidents, Zelaya, of Nicaragua; Gutierez, of Salvador, and Bonilla, of Honduras, formed the treaty of Amapala. This provide for union on the foreign affairs of the three countries, and created a diet which directed these foreign affairs. On August 27 last a constitution for the new republic was finally drawn up and signed with due

HAPTER X-PRAYER ANSWERED. CHAPTER X—PRATER ANSWERED.

Dori, drew back with a little startled cry. The handsome, dark-eyedestranger she had first encountered in the notion store was standing before her, bowing most profoundly, as she stepped out of the employment agency, discouraged and sick at heart.

"I beg your pardon, Miss," he said, respectfully lifting his hat. "I was standing in the doorway of the agency a moment since, and could not help hearing all that rassed between the manager-ing all that passed between the manageress and yourself. I am in search of some trustworthy young lady to fill a position recently and unexpectedly vacated. You are in search of a situation; suppose you try the one I have to offer."

try the one I have to offer."

Poor little Doris stood dumb and transfixed with joy before him. Surely God must have heard the prayer that had just gone up to heaven to direct her to some way by which sher could earn her daily bread.

It never occurred to her guileless, un-her daily bread.

It never occurred to her guileless, unsophisticated heart to mistrust him. She implicitly believed God had sent him in answer to her prayer. That this was simply an excuse to speak to her she had never once dreamed. She had not come to that knowledge of the world which teaches that men's lips often speak one thing and their hearts another.

teaches that men's lips often speak one thing and their hearts another.

She never suspected there was anything unusual in this procedure, or that the handsome stranger would not have asked the same question of any other young girl whom he chanced to meet on the steps of the employment, burgan. the steps of the employment bureau.

Doris clasped her tiny white hands supplicatingly before her as she replied, with trembling eagerness, straight from the depths of her heart:—

"I think God must have sent you to me, sir, for I was just praying that I might find some position at once. I.—I do not know very much—but I should try, oh! so hard to please you, sir, if you would only trust me with the position.
I am so glad you met me instead of some one else. I did not know which way to turn. I am a stranger la New York." the depths of her heart:

"Any one could readily see that," he answered, with a light laugh, that somehow jarred harshly upon Doris.
"What is the position, sir?" she asked, timidly.

"As clerk in a retail dry goods store up town," he answered. "Remain just where you are until I summon a cab," he said, turning away. "I won't be

He had barely stepped to the edge of the pavement ere the manageress of the agency, with a white, anxious face, called My child," she said, leaning over her desk, "would you mind telling me what that gentleman was saying to you? My motive for asking you you shall know In a few brief words Doris related the conversation verbatim.

"I thought as much," replied the manageress, her face dark with anger.
"Would to heaven we could find a law to would to leaven we could not a law to punish such wretches. That man is a well-known roue; a greater rascal does not walk the streets of New York. Young girls should never speak to strangers," she went on, as she gazed at the lovely young face. "Many a trap is strangers," she went on, as she gazed at the lovely young face. "Many a trap is set for the feet of the innocent and unwary in a great, wicked city like New York. You must leave here at once," she said, thoughtfully, "before he comes back, and remember—I give you my best advice when way, fee from that man as though he were accursed. He is not a man for you to know or trust. I almost ask it as a prayer—for your sake, mind." ask it as a prayer—for your sake, mind."
"I will," replied Doris, sobbing out her gratitude.

"I think I will break from our general rule, in this one instance, and help you to a situation, child."

you to a situation, child."

As she spoke she hurrically wrote down the addresses of three or four ladies whose names were on her books, in want of a governess for children.

"I sincerely hope you will be successful with some one of these," she said, handing the card to Design ful with some one

A moment later, dazed and bewildered Doris found herself on the street again. She had scarcely proceeded half a block ere she found herself face to face with the handsome stranger again.

"Where now, my pretty one? Where are you going, I say?" he asked, laying a detaining hand on her arm. "You did not wait for me to return."

For one moment Doris's heart almost ceased beating as she gazed up into the dark, angry face, lit up by the bold black eyes that were regarding her so intently.
"I--I have changed my mind," she said, desperately, as she shook off the touch of that white hand from her arm; "I do not want the position."
"Some one has been putting nonsense into your head!" he exclaimed, angrily.
"I won't he trilled with in this

Come!"
"Sir!" cried Doris, haughtily, "how dare you speak so to me? I am young, but I am no coward, sir!" she retorted, spiritedly. "You cannot compel me, and you have no right to urge me to accept a situation I do not wish. Let go my arm instantly and let me pass!" she panted.

"Dear me!" he cried, "what a little whirlwind! By George, now, whenever a man tells me women loss their beauty when they are thoroughly angry, that man and I will have a subject to argue on worthy of the eloquence of a polifician."

In a flash Doris flew past him, harry ing down the thoroughfare like a panting, storm-driven swallow. The thrilling event which had just transpired had, at least, taught her a severe lesson; she must have nothing to say to strangers.

"There seems to be so little faith that can be placed in any one in this world," she sobbed, drawing her thick yell closer over her tear-stained face.

Doris read the three names on the

"Applying for position of governess? Ah, yes you're the fifth one this morning so far," said the footman. "You will step this way to my lady's boudoir."

Doris followed him through the hall, with its crimson velvet carpets and handsome chairs, up the broad staircase where the flowers and statues gave the place an aspect of fairyland. She saw before her a long, broad corridor, where hung some superb pictures. The man drew aside a heavy velvet curtain, and she was in Mrs. Longworth's boudoir, in the presence of that lady herself.

"Miss Brandon, who wishes to apply for the governess's position," announced the footman.

Doris stepped timidly forward, her face flushing under the sharp scrutiny of the keen, cold gray eyes bent upon her.

"Really," said Mrs. Longworth, indicating a seat with a haughty wave of her jeweled hand. "Can it be possible you are applying for my situation?"

Doris modestly answered:—

"Yes, madame."

Doris modestly answered:

"Yes, madame."

"You'are so young to teach my child scarcely more than a child yourself."

"I am seventeen," replied Doris, in a weet voice ow sweet voice.

"What are your accomplishments, young lady? I suppose you have a thorough knowledge of the languages, music, drawing, etc. I should like to hear you read. Ah, here is a French novel, and in French. This will do."

Doris took up the book, and her clear, well-modulated accents rather pleased the lady.

"I have but one child—a little daugh ter," she said; "and as she is destined to be more than ordinarily plain-looking I should like her to be clever and accom-plished. Will you read me a little Italian?

Then you may sit down at the piano and play a few bars of something." And Doris read again, the sweet, soft Italian falling like clear notes from her lips. Doris confessed to not being very well accomplished in music.

"That will do. And now about the remoneration expected. Taking into consideration the fact that I shall have to pay expensive masters for the branches which you are deficient. I thought of offering you one hundred dollars a year."

Less—much less—than she paid to the humblest servant in her house. The cook would have laughed at such a sum; the housemaids have indignantly the footmen have considered insulted at such an offer; but Doris, ignorant of all this, thought it a magnificent sum, indeed.

"A hundred dollars a vear!" she re-

Mrs. Longworth, whose conscience was not quite dead, thought she was reproaching her.

"We would begin with that," she said improved under

"If I found my child improved under your care, I would increase it. Can you come to me soon?"

"At once, if you would like," replied Doris, gratefully.

"There remains only one thing, and that is references. Of course, having come from the bureau, you have good ones."

"I have none," replied Doris, simply.

"I have no one to whom I could refer."

"In that case," replied Mrs. Longworth, "please consider our interview ended; and I shall not fail to express my indignation to the manager of the bureau for having dared to send me a person who had no reference to offer. Good morning." And with a cold bow, she turned to her book, as though to intimate she had nothing further to say.

There was a burning—flush on Doris's face as she passed out of the elegant mansion.

'I must not lose heart, ' she said to

"I must not lose heart,' she said to herself. "I will try Mrs. Heath next."

Again Doris found herself mounting the steps of a magnifleent mansion in the fashionable portion of the city.

Mrs. Heath looked up in wonder at the fair young girl ushered into her presence. Briefly Doris stated her errand "I may as well state, in the first place, that I have no references to offer," thought Doris; and she acted on the impulse of the moment.

In a moment she recovered herself and stepped forward.

"I am Mrs. Dorchester," she said, in a voice that was thoroughly refined and musical—"what can I do for you?"

voice—"that you have a very beautiful face?" No one ever told me so before," said

Doris, honestly. "Yet even were that the case, that fact could give me no plea 'No pleasure," repeated the lady; and to whom God has been so good—you do not prize it."

"No," said Doris.
"Then you are not vain," reptied Mrs. Dorchester, looking pleased. "If you came to me, I should want you to dress exceedingly plain— severely, strictly plain. I should want all that beautiful golden hair brushed tightly back from your face, and done up in a small knot at the back of your head. You would not like that."

I should like you to clasp my hands, and soothe me with gentle words, much as you would a tired child. I am very lonely. I would want you to cheer me."

"I would do my best," replied Doris, wondering greatly what manner of woman this was, who, surrounded by every luxury that the heart could desire, appeared so sad and lonely in all this splendor.

As if reading her very thoughts, the lady went on, sharply:—
"I do not care much for society. I have found it fickle and unstable. I have a horror of being courted and flattered for my wealth. I might have been happier had I been poor like you. My money will not buy me that which I crave above everything else in this world. If I had a beautiful face I might win my heart's desire," she went on, wistfully, terrs filling her eyes, and her bosom heaving convulsively. Suddenly a thought seemed to flit through Mrs. Dorchester's brain. Rising hurriedly, she crossed to the mantel and took from it a cabinet photograph, which was inclosed in a closed velvet case.

"This is my husband's portrait," she said, opening the case and handing it to Doris. "Although he married me—a plain woman—he is a great beauty-wor-shiper," she said, eyeing Doris keenly as she spoke.

One glance at the pictured face, and Doris turned pale and Doris turned pale and red by turns, almost falling to the floor in a deep swoon. The pictured face, smiling up at her from the crimson velvet frame, was the dark, handsome, wicked face of the stranger who had accosted her on the agency steps.

Before Doris could utter the cry of Before Doris could utter the cry of astonishment and dismay that rose to her lips, there was the sound of approaching footsteps, the door was thrown open, and handsome, dashing Lawrence Dorchester, the merchant prince, stood on the threshold. No more embarrassing situation could be imagined. Mrs. Dorchester drew her-self up with a proud, stately air. She grew white to the lips.

It pained her to the very heart's core to have the secret sorrow of her life thus rudely laid bare before this young stran-

I shall be pleased to see you installed in my house."

With a very elaborate bow to both, he quitted the room, smiling to Dorls as he closed the door.

"My husband does not mean anything by his flowery manner of speech," said Mrs. Dorchester, forcing a painful smile to her white, trembling lips. And Doris saw the effort she made to control herself. Then, after a pause, the unhappy lady looked up at her.

"I am very sorry," she said, "very sorry; but you are too young. I—I need some one older than you. I cannot engage you."

Extraordinary Drinks.

Of the many extraordinary drinks regularly consumed the blood of live horses may perhaps be considered the most so. Marco Polo and Carpini were the first to tell the world of the practice of the Tartars and Mongols opening the vein in their horses' necks, taking a drink and closing the wound again. As far as can be seen this has been the practice from time immemorial.

There is a wine habitually consumed in China which is made from the flesh of lambs reduced to paste with milk or bruised into pulp with rice and then fermented. It is exceptionally strong and nutritious and powerfully stim-ulating to the physical organism.

The Laplanders drink a great deal of smoked snow water, and one of the national drinks of the Tonquinese is arrack flavored with chickens' blood. The list would scarcely be complete without mention of absinthe, which may be called the national spirituous drink of France. The principal export from Catania is snow, in which a most lucrative trade is carried on in Malta and parts of southern Italy. It is collected during the winter in hollows in the mountains and covered with ashes to prevent its thawing. It is brought down in pan-niers on mules to the coast at night. The revenue derived from this source is immense and renders the Prince of Paterno one of the richest men in Sicily Snow is the universal luxury from the highest to the lowest rank and is sold at the rate of 4 cents for 30 ounces. The poorest cobbler there would rather deprive himself of his dinner than of his glass of "aqua gelata."

It is extensively used in hospitals and a scarcity of it would be considered almost as great a misfortune as a famine and would occasion popular tumult. To guard against such accidents the government at Naples has made the providing of it a monopoly, the contractors being required to give security to the amount of 60,000 ducats, which sum is forfeited if it can be proved that for one hour the supply has not been equal to the demand.

The Savage and the Birdcage

A gentleman who went out with Stanley to Africa took with him a number of birdcages, in which he hoped to oring back some specimens of the rarer birds of the interior. Owing to the death of his carriers he was obliged to throw away the birdcages with a number of other articles. These were seized by the natives in great glee, though they did not know what to do with them, but they eventually decided that the small circular cages were a kind of headgear, and, knocking off the bottom, the chiefs strutted about in them with evident pride. FENLON FARMER TELLS OF HIS REMARKABLE CURE.

t Regular Intervals He Was Subject to Fits, and Doctors Told Him the Trouble Was In-curable—Now Free From the Malady. rom the wardner, Lindsay, Ont. Mr. Robert McGee, of the 9th concession of Fenlon, Victoria county, says in speaking of his cure from this terrible malady:—"I am 35 years of age and live on the old homestead where I was born and have lived always since, and where my own little family were born. This part of Fenlon is known as McGe's Settlement, there are so many of that name living in the vicinity. Never in my life did I know what a day's sickness was until March, 1895, when without any known cause and without any warning I was stricken down with an epileptic fit. It came on in the night, causing great consternation in the household, as my wife, who never saw anything of the kind before, thought it was my end; as for myself I neither felt nor knew anything that was going on about me. After coming out of the convulsion, which they tell me usually lasted from fifteen to thirty minutes, I would fall into a heavy sleep from which I would awake with a dull, heavy feeling, and all the muscles of my body would be sore. This would pass away and in a day or two after the attack I would be able to attend to my farm work, but strange to say every four months after as regular as a clock I would be seized with a fit, which always came on in the night. Variou doctors and specialists were consulted and I took several different medicines but without effecting a cure. Several doctors said the disease was incurable. I read of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in the newspapers and was advised by friends who had experienced enres from other seemingly incurable ailments, to try them. In November 1896 I commenced and kept on taking them regularly for a year. The dreaded period passed and passed again and again without a repetition of my trouble, and I felt that I was at last released from this terrible malady. I am now in the best of health, and I attribute my cure to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. In conversation with Mrs. McGee she said that her husband's trouble was the cause of most seriously affecting her nerves and general health, as she was always living in dread, and could never enjoy a night's rest. Doris understood perfectly why the unhappy lady had changed her mind so suddenly. She was but an innocent child, yet she was rapidly learning many of life's hard lessons.

"I am sorry," said Doris, gently.

"You would not have been in peace here," signed the lady. "I—I—was mad, i think, not to have thought of this before. I am sorry I have detained vou dood morning, child. I wish you well."

Doris quitted the grand mansion that held so much splendid misery, feeling as though one of the gates of life had been closed behind her.

She must try again and again: it was nseless to give up. She knew very well that she must find work or—starve.

She wondered, vaguely, why the manageress of the agency had sent her to the very house of the man against whom she had warned her.

It had been a mistake. While speaking of him the manageresh had unintentionally jotted down that address.

There was but one remaining place to go to, and, wearily enough, Doris wended her way there.

Out in the corridor Miss Isabel's voice could be heard, shrilly giving orders that the girl must shring giving orders that the gir must be taken from the drawing-room down to the servants' hall, without delay.

Frederick's mother wanted a companion. Dare she—the forsaken bride, the injured young wife—go to her? The very thought almost took her breath away, and bewildered her. Her head was in a whirl; her heart beat so loud and so fast, she was sure the lady must hear it.

Doris's every nerve thrilled as she listened. A sudden idea flashed through her brain—Why should she not go to Lamartine? If he could disguise her in perfect safety, she would dare to enter her husband's home.

Different characters yield to different emptations. The temptation to enter the home of Frederick's mother—look upon the face of the husband who had so ruthlessly deserted her, almost at the very altar—was so sweet, so subtle, she could not resist it, for, heaven help her, in spite of all, she loved her handsome some behavior of the country of the c young husband still.

Loved him with a bitter yearning that would never pass away; Loved him with a ceaseless passion that would never know decay."

Yes, she would go to Lamartine. It must have been fate that caused the maid at Mrs. Vane's to utter those words to her.

She found the place with but little she found the place with but fitted difficulty. It was noon hour, and Monsieur's parlors were for the time deserted.

Doris entered timidly, and a moment later the dapper little "artist," as he chose to call himself, appeared.

"You wish to see me, madame?" he said, "In what can I be of service to you?"

"I want—a disguise," she answered,
"so complete—so perfect—I could not be

"I see a way to meet your wishes, madame," he said aloud, "but it will be a sad pity to change such a face—for any reason; still, if you desire it to be done, I shall comply, of course."

"I want it done," said Doris.

He gave her a hand basin containing a dark, clear liquid and a sponge, and bade her sponge her face lightly with the mixture; and though she had come there purposely for the disguise, now that she was on the point of acquiring it, her whole soul rose in rebellion against it.

"Three drops of this, put into cold water will, at any time, remove the stain. Bathe your face well with the sponge."

She obeyed him shrinkingly.
Then, indicating another seat before a table covered with tollet articles and innumerable labeled bottles, he bade her unbind her lovely golden curls.

For quite half an hour he busied himself over the long, shining tresses. Then he asked her to look in the glass. Doris looked, and sat staring in wonder at the strange face the mirror reflected. She would never have recognized her own self. She saw a dark-brown face, dark arched eyebrows and lashes, a low fore-head half revealed, half concealed by a mass of dark, wavy hair.

"I am sorry. You are a little too in experienced, I fear," she said, kindly. "I am sorry, but I cannot engage you." Tears sprang to Doris's pretty blue eyes, and that quite distressed the gentle, tender-hearted lady. She arose quickly to depart.

"Stay a moment, 'my good girl,' said Mrs. Vane, laying a kindly hand on her arm "Perhaps I can put you in the way of obtaining a good position. Now that I think of it, I remember Mrs. Thornton, the banker's wife, wants a companion. I will give you a note to her."

Suddenly from around the corner of the building sprang a large, ferocious blood-hound, and at his beels was a tall slip of a girl, in a fluttering white dress, her red, tangled hair flying in the breeze, her cheeks glowing, and her eyes bright with the excitement.

CHAPTER XIII.

*I hope I have not done an impradent thing in engaging this young girl," thought Mrs. Thornton, laying down her book, and gazing thoughtfully out of the window. "There seems something strange about her—something I cannot quite comprehend. If ever there was a tragedy in a human face, there is one written in hers.'

written in hers."

Then she dismissed the subject from her thoughts. She had sent for Doris to come to her boudoir as soon as she felt herself sufficiently rested; and in a short time Doris returned to her.

It was quite noticeable to Mrs. Thornton how strange and ill at ease Miss Carlisle was in ner presence.

"I must set her at ease," she thought.
"Dear me, this shyness is most uncom-

So she talked easily and kindly to Doris, until the white, startled face grew calm and still.

'You shall write some letters for me after luncheon, Miss Carlisle," she said.
"The first, and by far the most important of them all, is to my son. He left home only this morning to be gone a nome only this morning to be gone a fortnight, and it almost seems to me that he has been gone a week." In all her life, Doris never experienced more conflicting emotions than when she wrote that letter which Frederick's mother dictated.

The white hands trembled so over the words "My darling Frederick," that she could scarcely hold the pen; but with a great effort she controlled herself, know-regarding her curiously.

"Your hand trembles, Miss Cardse," she said, frowning. "Are you of a nervous temperament? I have a horror of

"I am not nervous," replied Doris, in a low voice. "Oh, I hope I have not anoyed you. I—I was anxious to write the letter as nicely as I could."

"One should always take the greatest "One should always take the greatest pains with every duty one has to perform," said Mrs. Thornton. "Well, now that you have fairly commenced, go on to say the house seems more than lonely to me without him; that I shall expect him home sooner than a fortnight, if he can adjust matters satisfactorily.
"Say that the ball which we had arranged to take place on the 20th of this month, we shall set for the eighteenth. And last-and by far the most, pleasant heart, is coming to spend a few days at the villa. That will bring him home quickly, if anything can."

Of course, it was only her fancy, but Mrs. Thornton quite imagined that she heard a little, gasping cry. The dark head bent lower over the white page. She could not see Miss Carlisle's face.

"Heaven help me! how can I write that!" thought Doris, crushing back the bitter tears that threatened to fall from her long lashes and blot the page. "Oh, God! how can I, his wife—who love him so—write those words!"

so-write those words!"

She had not thought of facing such bitter heart pangs as this, when she entered her husband's home in disguise, accepting the position of companion to accepting the position of companion to his haughty mother.

"You write slowly, Miss Carlisle," said Mrs. Thornton, frowning impatiently. "You heard what I dictated last, did you not? The sentence was, Miss Courtney, his flancee, is to spend a few days with us."

Making a desperate effort at self-control, Doris penned the words, and they seemed to dance in a blood-red mist before her eyes. She longed, with a bitter longing she could hardly repress, to cryout:

out:—
"Vivian Courtney can never marry your son, cold, proud lady, for he is already wedded, and to me."
What would Mrs. Thornton have said had she known that this young 'i'l sitting so quietly by her side was aer idolized son's young wife—bride to her brillant handsome young heir—whom she liant, handsome young heir-whom she loved as she-loved no one else on earth, and who had been parted from her bride-groom at the very altar, as it were.

At last the letter was finished, sealed and directed. Doris could have bent her and directed. Doris could have been her head and kissed the envelope, for she knew it would rest in his hands; those dear, strong, white hands, that had thrilled her heart to the very core as they had clasped hers on that memorable wedding night, as she stood with him, o cold and awed and frightened, before the altar.
"The rest of the letters can remain until after luncheon. Doris had not heard the remark; she was thinking how fortunate it was that Frederick Thornton had never seen her

Mrs. Thornton was just about to speak again, when she was interrupted by the sudden entrance of Isabel and Gwendolin Doris raised her eyes in breathless anxtety to see what Frederick's sisters were-like. Cold and proud, like their haughty mother. She saw that at a glance; but despite this, her heart gave a strange thrill as Isabel Thornton glanced toward her with eyes so startlingly like her languidly.

Both young ladies bowed coldly to Doris, then seemed to ignore her presence completely. Doris rose to leave the room. "You need not go," said Mrs. Thornton; and Doris resumed her seat. Their whole conversation was about the coming ball, and about their brother.

"I shall be so glad to see Frederick settled in life at last," murmured his mother. "I have always been in great fear lest he should fall in love with some graphs a polyedy with a pretty face—and he is so very impulsive."

"I believe, even in that case, you would have forgiven him, mamma," laughed Gwendolin, lightly: "you idoldisown him in the moment I heard of such an act of folly. He should never inherit one dollar of the Thornton estate. I would rather see him lying dead at my feet than married beneath him."

"You are pleased with Vivian," smiled Gwendolin.
"The desire of my heart will be gratified when my son marries Vivian Courtney," replied her mother. "She is beautiful, an heiress to a million in her own right, and is a lady by birth and education. She is in every way fitted to become Frederick's bride. Why should I not be pleased?"

come Frederick's bride. Why should I not be pleased?"
Doris's heart turned cold as she listured. Every word cut her heart like the thrust of a dagger. She could have cried aloud as the words fell, clear, distinct and cruel, from those cold, proud lips. She had treasured the wild hope in her poor, hungry heart that she might be able by a world of patience and endurance to win her way at last to Frederick's mother's heart; now she saw how futile had been that wild fancy. It could never be done—never while the sun shone or the grass grew. How little hope there was for her, after all.

Her bowed head dropped lower and lower. Mrs. Thornton noticed it.

"You look tired, Miss Carlisle," she said. "Perhaps you would like to walk out into the grounds; the air is refreshing."

Doris gladly availed herself of the cpportunity.

Out in the solitude of the grounds, when quite shut out from the view of the open windows by the interlacing trees, Doris threw up her white arms with a bitter cry to heaven:—

"Oh, I can never endure it!" she cried. "It would drive me mad!—yes, mad. I thought I was stronger, but, no, my heart is breaking. After I have looked upon Frederick's false, handsome face I will go quietly away."

The words had scarcely died away on her lips ere she beheld a sight which made her catch her breath with a startled cry.

A young girl in a white mull dress A young gir in a waite muit dress, carrying a white parasol in her hand edged with Oriental lace, came swiftly up the path. It was Vivian Courtney.
Would Vivian recognize fier, despite the dark, disguising stain on her fair force and coulded her?

rounded the fountain.

Nearer, nearer Vivian approached, eyeing intently the slender, girlish figure standing by the fountain. There was something strangely familiar about her, yet, looking into the dark face, Vivian did not recognize her.

With quick steps she passed Doris by and went on to the house.

"I am safe!" mutfered Doris, drawing her breath hard. "She does not know

She looked after Vivian, the graceful, haughty beauty, the belle of the seminary in that other life which seemed so far behind her, whom Frederick Thorn-far behind her, whom Frederick Thornton loved.

Young, an heiress, the idel of both parents' and lover's heart—ah, what more had life to offer her? So much had been given to Vivian, while to her had been given—nothing. She asked herself why God had distributed His gifts so unfairly. Even the love that would have crowned her life and made this poor earth a heaven to her, had been taken from her-and given to Vivian, the beauty.

And, standing there in the red glow of the sanlight, the words of the poet came to her:—

"No one could tell, for nobody knew, Why love was made to gladden a few; Aid hearts that would forever be true Go lone and starved the whole way through."

through."

"But for her he might have loved me," sobbed Doris, and the pangs of jealousy, more bitter to endure than death, swept through the girl's heart.

Slowly she walked back to the house, and up to Mrs. Thornton's boudole; that lady was in the best of spirits.

"I am gald you are here. Miss Carilsle," she said. "I want you to go to the apartments that have been set apart for Miss Courtney's use, and see that they are in readiness for her. See that fresh flowers are put in the vases, and this portrait of my son Frederick placed on the mantel."

CHAPTER XIV-LIFE IS TOO HARD TO BEAR.

Poor Doris! Despite the fact that she believed her young husband had willfully and deliberately deserted her, she still loved him with a wonderful, noble love; there was something half divine in its intensity. Only a noble girl could be capable of such a love. The fire of passion does not touch ignoble souls; they are incapable of it.

During the next few days of Vivian's stay at Thornton Villa Doris avoided her as much as possible. A bitter pang of jealousy shot through her heart that show could neither subdue nor control, as her eye rested upon her rival. It seemed to Doris that Vivian was growing more beautiful each day. It was little wonder that Frederick Thornton loved her. Gay, piquant Vivian could count lovers by the

Mrs Thornton drew herself up to her fullest height.

Castllian Cuisine.

Oil and pepper are the two things that especially characterize the Castilian misine. One of the favorite dishes in Juba is "tasajo," which is simply dried meat, cooked with tomatoes, red pep-pers and onions. "Tripa a la Andaluza" is another preparation frequently seen. As the name indicates, the basis is boiled tripe, which is cooked with beans and potatoes, and always served with the small red Spanish sausage known as Butafarra Catalina." A similar rausage, only black, is known as "Butafarra Astoriana."

"Chile con carne," which everybody eats, is nothing more than a thick stew of beef (carne) and beans seasoned with dischiles. Spanish "tortillas" are corn cakes flavored with red peppers, and differ from the Mexican tortilla in that the latter, when properly made, are rolled in chopped vegetables. A salad a la Espanola is prepared of lettuce and celery, with a few sliced tomatoes and peppers. Served with French dressing it is very good.

The Spanish soups are as a rule a little too heavy for the American taste, which runs more toward the consomme. They are thick decoctions, full of vege-tables, and look frightfully greasy Soup, however, does not have the important role among the Spaniards that it plays in French domestic economy, and is an article of secondary importance. The dishes named are pretty apt to appear ere long on home menus, and it is interesting to know in advance what they are composed of .- New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Books Rather Than Food.

Success gives an interesting anecdote teld by Agassiz of his visit when a young man to the great German nat-uralist, Professor Lorenz Oken.

The professor received his guest with warm enthusiasm, but apparent embarrassment. - He showed his visitor the laboratory and the students at work, also his cabinet, and lastly his splendid library of books pertaining to zoological science, a collection worth some $7,000, and well deserving the glow of pride which the owner manifested as he expiated on its excellence. The dinner hour came, and then the embarrassment of the great German reached its maximum point. "M. Agassiz," he said, with perturbation, "to gather and keep up this library exacts the utmost hus bandry of my pecuniary means. To accomplish this I allow myself no luxury whatever. Hence my table is restricted to the plainest fare. Thrice a week our table boasts of meat, the other days we have only potatoes and salt. I very much regret that your visit has occurred upon a potato day." And so the splendid Switzer and the great German, with his students, dined together on potatoes' and salt. And what must those students have enjoyed in the conversation of those remarkable men! .

Going Without Sleen

It is an interesting question to studious people how long a man can go long a man can go without sleep. A physician asserts that no healthy man can overwork because eventually nature will compel him to fall asleep at his task. A journalist re cently claimed to have worked 72 hours without sleeping. Humboldt said that when a young man he required only two hours sleep each night, but that in his old age he found he really needed as many as three or four. Victims subjected to the Chinese torture of being kept centinually awake die on or before example, however, is that of one of the saints, who is related to have lived 19 years without sleep and to have remained standing a large portion of that time. -San Francisco Argonaut.

and the Butcher's Kindness Only Be-came a Boomerang.

Perhaps the story of the entire incident will relieve the strained relations now existing between the parties in in-terest. They are a certain down town merchant, his wife and his butcher, all prosperous and highly respected personages, the merchant and the butcher being decidedly chummy until of late.

One frenoon recently the butcher's wagon sopped in front of the merchant's residence on Second avenue, the chains strandered on second avenue, the driver proceeding to carry in a big fat turkey, a pair of ducks, a leg of mutton and a whole sirloin of pork.

"Some mistake," said the woman of the house as her attention was called to the wholesale stock piled up on the kitchen table.

'No, it's all right, mum. The boss told me to leave 'em and say nothin. Number's on the basket, and he spoke to me perticaler 'bout these goods

"Oh, he did? Told you to leave them and say nothing, did he? Well, you just pack those things out to your wa again, take them, every one, back and tell the butcher that we don't run a hotel or boarding house; that when we want things we'll order them, and that it will probably be a long while before we'll again want anything from him. 'Just leave them!' The impertinence

All this was faithfully reported, the butcher was so mad that he forgot and cut the bone out of the next order before weighing it, and he and the mer-chant have not spoken since. The truth is that it was the merchant's birthday when the things were sent, they being a slight token of the butcher's esteem. He had incidentally learned of what in many families is a festival occasion, but neither the merchant nor his wife so much as remembered that it was his birthday. - Detroit Free Press.

Answered by the Parrot.

A parrot owned by an Arch street physician gave signs of possessing "almost human intelligence" the other night. A party of young folks were on the lawn and were spending an hour in guessing riddles. Finally a young lady asked, "Why does a dog turn around twice before he lies down?"

Before anybody could answer the parrot croaked, "One good turn deserves another."—Philadelphia Call.

CURED OF PALPITATION OF THE HEART AND SMOTHERING SPELLS BY MILBURN'S HEART AND NERVE PILLS.

Mrs. D. E. Lasalle, Canal Street, Dunnville, Ont., whose husband keeps a jewellery store, and is one of the best known and most progressive citizens of Dunnville, Ont., gives the following description of her recent experience in the use of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills: "I took Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills for weak nerves, dizziness, palpitation of the heart, smothering spells at night and sleeplessness. Before I used them I could not get restful sleep, and my nerves were often so unstrung that I would start in alarm at the least noise, and easily worried.

would start in alarm at the least noise, and easily worried.

"Last February I commenced taking this valuable medicine, and it proved the right remedy for my weak and shattered nervous system. Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills restored my nerves to a strong and healthy condition, gave regular and normal action of the heart.

"I sleep well now, and am better in every way, and I recommend them heartily to all who suffer as I did."

DURING A HOLIDAY RAMBLE HE VISITS THE OLD HOMESTEAD. He Found Changes That Astonished Him One of Which Deserves the Widest Publication for the Benefit It May Prove to Others.

From the Leader and Recorder, Toronto Junction. The editor of the Leader and Record-The editor of the Leader and Recorder, during a recent holiday trip through the counties of York, Peel, Dufferin Under the circumstances, no farmer er, during a recent holicity through the counties of York, Peel, Dufferin and Grey, spent a few days at the old parental flomestead, where he was born and spent many happy years. The old homestead is in the township of Euphrasia, Grey county, about one and a half miles south of the village of Heathcote, and about ten miles from the town of Meaford. It is occupied by the writer's youngest brother, George J. Fawcett. The latter was the picture of health, and remembering that when he came from Detroit, where he had been living for several years, and took possession of the shomestead, he was in such feeble health that his life was despaired of, the writer suggested that the bracing climate of the northern regions must be the best medicine in the world for a external constitution. The reply must be the best medicine in the world for a shattered constitution. The reply made contained statements so remark able that we consider it a pleasure

Change of air was finally recommended and he removed with his family to the county of Grey. A slight change for the better was noticable at first, but he soon relapsed into the old condition and again sought help from the leading doctors of the district in he read in the papers from time to time and laughed at what he termed time and laughed at what he termed the "miracles" wrought by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. He had no faith in such remedies, and it was only when the physicians told him that they could do no more for him that, like the drowning man who catches at a straw, he would try a box of the pills. CHRISTMAS EXCURSIONS.

The C. P. R. Will Start Running Then on December 5th.

The Canadian Pacific railway are ac vertising their twelfth annual excursions to the east, commencing on the 5th December and continuing during month. Judging by the inquirie which are teing received there is likely to be a greater number take advantage of them than in any previous year For accommodation of the excursion ists, twenty new tourist cars and ter new first-class cars, all vestibuled, are being sent form the shops at Perth and Montreal. These cars will be run through to Toronto, Montreal and east, so that a passenger need not leave the car from the time of starting on the journey from the west until this destination is reached, and as the cars are supplied with every requisite found in modern house the time is passed with all possible comfort.

Special arrangements are also being made to old country passengers, a tourist car leaving Winnipeg every Sunday morning for St. John, where connection is made with the mail steamer which sails immediately on arrival of the C. P. R. train. Karl K. Albert, general agent for the Victor safes, is introducing a small household safe, which costs only $12. Those needing safes could not do bette than get a Victor safe, which is as good as any made and cheaper than any where else in Canada.

Here's a pointer for the boys and girls who take up school life this winter-your teacher is your best friend. Whatever they ask you to do, try to do it promptly and cheerfully. Going to school is business for you just the same as a regular trade is business for the old folks, and if you neglect your business now, where and how will you finish your life work? Think of these things, boys and girls.

A thoughtful writer says when you see a youth who will do any sort of work, no matter how mental it may be, rather than be idle, you can make up your mind that he amounts to something. The young man who would starve before he would do anything beneath what he conceives to be his dignity, is not made of the right kind of stuff to cut much of a figure in life. All honest toil is honorable. There is nothing so morally degrading as that aversion to manual labor which is usually a combination of laziness and bad conduct.

Walt Mason, the humorous editor of the Up-To-Date Farmer, presents this wail: I save and slave in Utah and other places. and slave and save to pile up pal-try dimes; all day I sit here grind-ing prose, all night I'm grinding rhymes: I dig and delve and feed the hogs, and milk 400 cows, and a credit to the town. wrestle in the wintry wind with idiotic sows; I gather eggs and sell old junk and sweat from spring till fall; and when I have some dimes saved up, the coal man gets them I wear old clothes and last year's hats, and eat skimmed milk and pone; six days a week I dine on soup made from the same old bone; I'm smoking mullen weed cigars; my soul is filled with gall; for when I have some dimes saved up, the coal man gets them all.

"No! no!" murmured Doris, striving to hide her intense excitement and piteous confusion. "The room is so warm!"
"And I think it extremely cold for this season of the year," replied Mrs. Thornton, impatiently.

Doris never knew how the left the room. The ceiling, the floor, the cold, proud face of Frederick's haughty ladymother, seemed to whirl around her. She remembered nothing until she found herself in the broad corridor. self in the broad corridor.

remembered nothing until she found her, self in the broad corridor.

She could not go to Vivian's room yet. She must sit down and try to collect her scattered senses—try to still the trembling that had seized her.

Frederick was coming home. In a few short hours he would be there, and beneath his mother's roof he would meet the poor, helpless little bride he had so cruelly deserted almost at the very altar. Yet her disguise was so perfect he would not recognize her; Vivian had not.

"I am growing dazed, as Mrs. Thornton says," she murmured. "I had almost forgotten to deliver her message."

Still trembling pitifully, she moved on down the corridor, and standing at the western window, she saw Isabel Thornton and Vivian. She walked up to them like one in a dream.

like one in a dream.

Vivian turned her head haughtly, and looked at the slim, dark figure who had stopped beside her, in surprise. Evidently she was not pleased with this inter-ruption of the conversation she was hav-ing with Isabel. Then poor Doris made the first fatal mistake of her life.

"Frederick is coming here," she said.
"He will be here this evening."

The sound of her own voice seemed so hoarse and unnatural Peris could never Isabel Thornton gazed at her in aston-ishment, not unmixed with dismay. The familiar way in which her mother's paid companion spoke of her brother Freder-ick amazed her.

In that instant Doris saw her almost fatal mistake, and hastened to repair the great error.

"These were your mother's words," she said, shrinking back confusedly. "I repeated her message in her own words." And turning away before Isabel Thorn ton could find her voice, she field like a startled doe down the corridor again.

"A droll creature." laughed Isabel.

"A droll creature," laughed Isabel, turning to her companion. "There seems to be something so mysterious and strange about her."

myself," returned Vivian, with a merry laugh.

"She reminds me of some one whom I have seen; but I cannot think who, to save my life. She is pretty, too, with a strange, weird sort of gypsyish beauty. I never remember seeing before such deep blue eyes, with such a brune complexion and jetty hair. Do you know the fancy comes to me that I have seen that girl before?"

"She is hardly worth, discussing, my

That afternoon, an hour later, Doris

That afternoon, an hour later, Doris suddenly encountered Vivian at the door of her room, as she was passing by.

"I was just wishing that I could see you," said Visian. "I have a little favor to ask of you. Would you mind coming into my room and helping me a little with my toilet? I—I wish to look particularly nice this afternoon."

A fierce, bitter pang shot through Doris's jealous heart. She knew but too well why Vivian Courtney desired to look so particularly nice on this eventful evening; it was because Frederick Thornton was expected home.

Silently she followed Vivian into her room, half a dozen of the beauty's prettiest dresses were lying across the bed; she had evidently been inspecting them.

"Not one of them seems to please me to-day," declared Vlivan. "I would like you to exercise your good taste by judging for me. Do you think this cream lace, with great clusters of deep-red passion roses at the belt, would be most becoming? or do you fancy I would look best in that rose-pink mull? or the Nilegreen silk, with the white lace, on the back of that chair by the window?"

"There seems to be little choice between the three, Miss Vivian," said the three, Miss Vivian," said Doris, in a hard, constrained voice.

"I think the cream lace will be more attractive," said Vivian, reflectively." "Will you kindly assist me a little with the looping on the left side—it has come

Doris bowed her head and took up the Doris bowed her head and took up the dress. Ah, how beautiful Vivian would look in it she well knew. How admiringly the eyes of Frederick Thornton would rest on her—she would wear it to be attractive to him—and the thought was bitter as death to Doris.

How radiant Vivian looked when she stood before the mirror dressed! The cream lace dress, which showed every line of her exquisitely slender, graceful figure to the fullest advantage; the round white arms, bare to the cibows, were enterled by ruby bands that sparkled like coals of fire, whichever way she turned; a necklace of rubles encircled her fair, white throat, and a dazzling butterfly, with gold and ruby wings, caught back her jetty curls. Her cheeks were flushed, and her dark eyes glowed.

'You have a wonderful tact for arrang one's toilet, Miss Carlise,' said Viv-critically surveying the effect in the mirror, and smiling pleasedly—"you have miss d your vocation, I think. You ought to have been a lady's maid instead of a companion."

Doris recoiled quickly.

"No, no," she answered, huskily. "I could not accept a penny from you. I want nothing at your hands. Nothing."

And she hurriedly quitted the room

And she narriedly quitted the room ere Vivian could reply.

"Was there ever such an odd, strange little creature?" murmured the heiress.

"Yet, there is something about her that quite fascinates me in site of myself." She went down to the drawing-room to join Isabel and Gwendolin, and thought no more of the little companion with the brune face and dark hair.

Meanwhile, Doris was in her own room, solbing as though her heart would

CHAPTER XV .- A TORTURED HEART.

Frederick was coming home. In a few hours from now she should see him.

The idea seemed almost more than she could grasp. What would he say when he found her there? That question began to assume a terrible form to poor Doris. Would there be a scene?

She knelt there, in the red glow of the sundight twing in yain to drive the terrible form.

sunlight, trying in vain to drive the terrible doubts and fears away. Perhaps it was some faint foreshadowing of the sorrow to come that made her tremble as she knelt there—the thrilli of that strange tragedy which was to cross her

And with a slow, hesitating step, Doris went.

"I want you to read to me, Miss Carlisle," she said. "I never remembered an afternoen to pass so slowly."

Mechanically, Doris picked up the book. The lines on the page scemed to waver before her eyes. The dusk crept up, and the stars came out. Long since one of the little maids had entered and lighted the chandelier. Still Doris read on. It was better than talking. Doris felt that she should go mad if Mrs. Thornton were to talk to her about Frederick and Vivian—her favorite subject.

Suddenly there was a sound of carriage wheels stopping before the porch, and the next moment voices were heard in the lower hall.

"My son has arrived," said Mrs. Thornton.

"My son has arrived," said Mrs. Thornton.

Doris spoke no word. Here face grew pale as marble, even under the brune tint. She could count the great, gasping heart throbs. She clung with cold, trembling hands to the table lest she should fall, praying, with white lips and shadowed eyes, that she might not die when her eyes fell upon his face.

Some minutes passed—how many Doris never knew. Then came the sound of footsteps that Doris knew so well. She pressed her hand on her heart, for its wild beating frightened her as each step fell on her ear. She could have cried aloud in agony with the terrible tension of her nerves; but her white lips could form no sound.

The next minute he had entered the room. Handsome, laughing Frederick Thornton stood before her. She never understood why the sight did not kill her. Why, when her eyes rested upon him, she did not fall dead.

Oh, how kindly he greeted his mother, laughing heartily when she told him the days he had spent away from her seemed like so many months. form no sound.

like so many months.

How strange it was that he could laugh, Doris thought when the sin of breaking a heurt lay at his door.

Doris shrank back among the shadows

Doris shrank back among the shadows of the heavy silken curtains, but Mrs. Thornton spoke her name and Doris rose. "Fredërick, my son, this is my companion, Miss 'Carlisle," she heard his mother say; what else was uttered Doris never knew.

Frederick Thornton looked carelessly in the direction she indicated. He saw a smail, slim, dark-faced little creature, who seemed to be trembling with confuwho seemed to be trembling with confusion, he thought. His eyes rested on her only an instant. Then with a low bow he turned away.

Doris stood rooted to the stot. Silent. motionless all the tragedy and passion of her love shining in her face, her arms fell helplessly to her side. She could not have moved to have saved her life. She had expected, despite the change in her, that he, the handsome young husband, who had wedded her, would recognize her; that he would cry out either in anger or emotion. But no; he turned away, knowing her not. Oh, the pity of it!—the cruel pity of it!

She remembered how they had parted

She remembered how they had parted

in the sunny hotel parlor.
"I shall be back within an hour," he had said, as he tossed the well-filled purse into her lap to remainsh her ward-robe; then, with a smile and a nod without a farewell kiss, he had turned and walked out of the room, leaving her to her fate.

so her rate.

She remembered the horrible nights and the days that had followed—how she nearly went mad with watching for him and calling wildly, upon him to come back to her.

and calling wildly, upon him to come back to her.

And she remembered the crowning blow of all—when the good old house-keeper had taken her in her armstatempting to soothe her as though she had been a little child, as she whispered the pitiful words in her ear:—

"Do not grieve and weep for him, child; in my opinion he is not worth a tear. He will never come back; he has deserted you."

"I shall remember your kindness in assisting me," said Vivian, loftily, "and to-morrow I will look over my wardrobe and see if I can pick up something for you, Miss Carisle; you are very clever—very."

"Do not trouble yourself, I beg of you," said Doris, stifily. "I would accept nothing—nothing whatever from your hands."

A sudden thought seemed to strike the petted young heiress.

"Perhaps you would not be averse to "Perhaps you would not be averse to" knew nothing; and thus fate continued to play at cross-purposes with these two. It was to end in a tragedy so pitful that the angels would weep for Doris, the helpless child-bride whose young life had all gone wrong.

In the evening the ladies assembled in In the evening the ladies assembled in the drawing-room, where Frederick and his father awaited them. Doris would have given much to absent herself, but Mrs. Thornton insisted that she should be present. There seemed no loophole of be present. There seemed no loophole of escape for her.

Frederick and Vivian were standing by one of the lace-draped windows as she entered; his handsome face bent over her, and he was talking to her in so low a tone Doris could not eatch the words a tone Doris could not eatch the words he uttered.

What was he saying to her that brought that lovely flush to Vivian's cheeks and the bright light to her eyes? Was he complimenting her on her beauty? Was he, who was bound to another by every tie that heaven holds sacred—daring to speak to her of—love?

The banker and his wife watched

How she wished that she had never come to this stately, cold, proud home. It was too late to undo it now. She must live through it, let it be what it might. Oh, if heaven would help her! The only wish just at that moment in her heart was, that she could turn her face to the wall and dle—die, even though he would be there in a few short hours, and the desire of her heart—to look once more on his face—be granted.

She would like to kneel, with the portraiff clasped close to her heart, by her white bed and diethere.

It mattered little to her what they would think or say when they came and found her dead.

Frederick would hear of it. And perhaps he would come and look upon her face, understand it all, and recognize her and feel sorry; and, in his sorrow bend and kiss her death-cold lips. He would know she died because she could not live without him.

All unconscious of this intense scru-tiny, Doris still sat watching the two, standing by the moonlit window.

"How beautiful Vivian is!" thought Doris, sick at heart. "No wonder he re-grets that on the impulse of the moment he married me instead of Vivian, the beauty. Ah, who could resist her? Was she not the very queen of love?"

WAITING FOR DEATH.

some of General (Reely's Awful Ex-periences In the Arctic.

periences in the Arctic.

"The new year of 1884 was only 19 days old when death came for the first time," writes General A. W. Greely in The Ladies' Home Journal, telling the awful experiences of his arctis exploring party at Cape Sabine. "For 90 days we had all lived and kept together, but death was inevitable. Its coming was sure to some, if not to all. Our only wonder was it had not come sooner. Only the day before was our comrade at work. We said little. Only one man so far forgot that he was a soldier as to make the faintest sign.

"But the nearness of the end touched us all. Speech became lower, actions gentler, determined faces grew softer, and concillation was the spirit of the hour. Who would go next? was the question written on each face. Not a man ventured to say to his fellow, 'This is the end.' How that eternal question, always so unanswerable, to his fellow. 'This is the end.' How that eternal question, always so unanswerable, seemed to be even more of a mystery to us! The Easter sun had hardly set before the second fell before death. A day after, and the third succumbed. Then the fourth. One by one they were dropping at our side. The fifth followed quickly to solve the problem of futurity. Then the sixth comrade passed.

And now we felt that we were all awaiting the summons, one by one. We server.

ing the summons, one by one. We serree-ly looked at each other. Doubt and wretchedness were allied against us. But the fortunes of war sometimes change at the most critical moment. Strive and do, do and strive until death, were the mot-tos of our hunters, and one day nearly 500 pounds of bear and seal meat came just as all food had almost failed. Oh, the joy which that meat brought to us! Who,can tell but those in that hut? Some-thing to cat—something to keep life!"

BERLIN'S DRUG STORES.

Ourious Names Bestowed by Apothecaries on Their Shops.

The German drug store is always a mystery to the American when he first becomes one of its customers. It is not nearly so comprehensive as the American institution of the same kind. The apotheinstitution of the same kind. The apothe-cary's department, which is only one fea-ture of the American drug store, is an in-dependent establishment in Germany and is devoted to the filling of prescriptions and the duties of the apothecary. The "droguerie," quite a separate place, pro-vides half the articles customarily found berg in the drug store. It is to the drahere in the drug store. It is to the dro-gueric that one must go for soap, tooth-brushes, drugs in the pure and all of the articles tot dealt in by the apothecary. The division may be a convenient one aft-er the mysteries have been mastered, but er the mysteries have been mastered, but it is confusing at first.

Another peculiarity of the apothecarles is that most of them have names displayed. That custom dates from the carliest days of their history. The old names of the shops have survived to some extent, although the purely fantastic names have given place to others better suited to the commercial exigencies of modern times. ommercial exigencies of modern times The city today possesses 164 shops of apothecaries, and many have adopted names taken from the street, square or region in which they are situated. There are 56 of these, and 19 are known only by the names of their proprietors. Nineteen are named after birds, the eagle having ten named in its honor. There are all sorts of eagles among these ten—black, red and white. Other names include wild animals, mythological names, such as Minerva and Flora, and royal titles like Friedrich and Augusta Victoria. Most curious are those called after famous historical personages, such as Arminius, Roland and Siegfried.—Exchange.

"Let's hear it," said his friend, for it was a blessing to have him stop playing.

"Well, it was this way: I was spending my vacation at my music teacher's house in the Adirondacks. One day after practicing some hours on the same piece that you heard me playing now my teacher came to my room and suggested that there was a nice place to practice in the barn, and by doing 50 I would oblige her and her mother, who was sick in the adjacent room. Well, of course, I felt somewhat hurt, but was not going to lose my daily practice and went to the barn. I got into the hayloft and began to play. In about half an hour I was surrounded by rats that squealed and cut up all sorts of capers. I often heard of animals being charmed by music, but nothing could make me believe it until now.

"Well, do you know, I never was so happy in my life, to think that all my time was not wasted in trying to be a musician? I always like rats since then, and I was tempted to trap my harn audience for future use. I was pleased to see that I had at last charmed some one with my music. I felt like catching them all and bringing them home for future encouragement."—New York Tribune.

If it is Weak or Irregular don't Hesi-tate to Start the use of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills at once.

With a strong, steady, regular pulse we may expect vigorous health.

With a weak, irregular, intermittent pulse we can tell at once the vitality is low—that Dizzyand Faint Spells, Smothering and Sinking Sensations and similar conditions are bound to ensue.

By their action in strengthening the heart, toning the nerves and enriching the blood, Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills relieve and cure all those distressing conditions just enumerated.

Mrs. B. Croft, residing on Waterloo Street, St. John, N. B., says:

"For some time past I have suffered from pallor, weakness and nervous prostration, I had palpitation and irregular beating of the heart so severe as to cause me great alarm. I was treated by physicians, but got no permanent relief.

A NOVA SCOTIA FARMER

TELLS HOW HE WAS CURED OF SALT RHEUM.

I have read from week to week in your paper, testimonials from those who have been cured through using Dr. Wil-liams' Pink Pills, and as I have experienced much benefit from the use of that medicine, I believe it my duty to let others know they can be relieved from a very painful malady. I am now 75 years of age, and am at the present time, and in fact ever since I took a course of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills about two years ago, have been enjoying excellent health. Before that time I had been ailing for some months, finally I was attacked with salt rheum, which came out mostly on my hands. It was not long after its first appearance before I was unable to do any work at all with my hands. I resorted to all the domestic cures I could hear of, but the disease kept on its course, getting worse and worse, until the palms of my hands and my fingers were a mass of cracks, open sores and hideous scabs. I then got medicine from the doctor, which I used for several weeks, with no coming more and more crippled with the disease. My general health, too, at this time was poor and I got discouraged altogether, believing there was no help for the terrible complaint that was gradually spreading over my hands and up mywrists towards my arms. It hap-pened one day in conversation with an equaintance that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were mentioned in connection Minard's Liniment the Lumperman's Priand with some other case in the neighborhood, and it was suggested that I try them for salt rheum. I had not much faith in the trial, but concluded to get a box and see what good they might do. To my great delight, after using the box I found an improvement in the condition of my hands, and I got six boxes more. I did not use all these, for before they were gone the disease—had vanished and my hands were as sound as ever. The new skin came on as smooth and fresh as if nothing had been the matter. I took no other medicine while using the pills and the whole My praise of the cure is due to them. general health was also greatly benefitted by their use and I attended to my work with more energy and in better spirits than I had done for a number of years. Women have suffered much and will suffer again; they have endured the pangs of death with a smile; they have listened to words which were their death listened to words which were their death warrant, and have answered with a bright laugh; they have stood still, firm and undismayed, while the sharpest sword has pierced their hearts; but perhaps no woman ever suffered more keenly than Doris as she sat watching Frederick Thornton and Vivian. She saw him offer Vivian his arm, and together they stepped from the long French window out on the porch, and down into the rose garden beyond.

How tenderly he had drawn the light scarf over Vivian's shoulders, fearful lest the night wind should blow upon her too roughly.

the night wind should blow upon her too roughly.

Oh, how Doris longed to follow them!—follow and confront them in the path. crying out! "He is mine! Do not take him from me! You have every blessing the world holds dear, while I have only him! I am alone in the world but for him! Send him from you! Do not smile upon him! And heaven may let his estranged heart drift back to me. I alone have the right to his love!"

She rose from her seat with that wild, rash Intention; then she remembered where she was.

where she was.

"What is the matter, Miss Carlisle?" said Frederick's mother. "There is a look in your eyes which startles me. Are you tired?"

"Yes," replied Doris, faintly.

"Then you had better retire to your own room," said Mrs. Thornton.

Doris gladly availed herself of this permission. Her window looked out on the rose garden and the fountain. She could watch them unobserved. When she reached her room and stole breathlessly to the window, she found they were not there. They must have passed to some other portion of the grounds.

Poor Doris stood by the window, her hands closely locked together, the bitter tears falling from her eyes. She had had her heart's desire. She had looked upon Frederick Thornton's face again. She had borne the almost intolerable restraint of her disguise, and had dared enter his home. She had believed that looking upon his face just once more would still home. She had believed that looking upon his face just once more would still and calm the fever that was burning her heart away. She believed after that the terrible pain of longing would die away. Instead of that it was redoubled; it was intensified a thousand times. That first glance at her husband's handsome, laughing face had roused her love into full and active life again.

She had said to herself she would look

She would tell him the cruel rumors that they were circulating—that beautiful Vivian was his sweetheart, and that he was soon to marry her—and beg him to refute those stories, for it could never be true while she, his wife, lived. He had deserted her, it was true, but for all that she was his wedded wife. No act of man's could ever part the two whom God himself had joined together by the solemn ties of marriage. She would tell him that.

solemn ties of marriage. She would tell him that.

The long hours dragged themselves slowly by as she sat at the moonlit window. At length the house was still. Darkness wrapped it in a mantle of gloom. The midnight hour sounded from some far-off belfry.

Doris rose to her feet, glided to her chamber door, and softly opened it, stepping out into the corridor.

"May heaven help me!" she moaned, "This action is the turning point of my life."

Then she walked swiftly down the dark corridor without one glance behind

Stealthily as a shadow Doris flitted out into the dimly lighted corridor. Her face flushed, her hands burned, her heart beat wildly, her brain seemed on fire. She must know the truth. She could bear sorrow and this cruel despair go longer. She must know the worst.

Her slippered feet made no sound on the thick, velvet carpet as she hurried along. Suddenly a hand was laid on her shoulder, and the voice of Beatrix Thornton exclaimed in astonishment:—
"Why, Miss Carlisle, what are you dotted by the state of re so late?"

And as she spoke, Trixy threw open the library door before which they stood and a flood of light streamed out upon Doris's white, startled face.

Trixy's question had been so abrupt it almost took her breath away; but she recovered something like composure almost the next moment, however.

"I was restless; I could not sleep; so; came down to the library for a book," she faltered. She did not add that she knew it was Frederick Thornton's cus tom to spend long hours here after the family had recired, and she expected to find him here to-night. "That is my case exactly," laughed Trixy. "Come in, and I will help you select a good book."

select a good book."

Trembling with suppressed excitement, Doris followed her into the library, casting her eyes eagerly about the room as she crossed the threshold. She saw that he whom she was in search of was not there.

"You should not sit up reading and loose your beauty sleep to-night, above all other nights, for to-morrow night is our ball, you know. Some of the handsomest young gentlemen in New York will be present. Take care some of them do not carry away your heart, Miss Carlisle. If I were a handsome young man, instead of a girl, I should fall straightway in love with you. Why, what are you blushing so for?" cried Trixy. "Don't you like to talk about love and lovers?"

"No." replied Doris, in a low, distressed voice, tears filling her deep blue eyes. "If you please, Trixy. I'd rather not talk of such things."

"You are certainly an odd girl," laughed Trixy, heartily. "Why, do you know, all the handsome young gentlemen hereabouts have fallen deeply in love with you, and have just been besleging both Isabet and Gwendolin for an introduction to you? Frey gray of the sieging both Tsaber and Gwentonin in an introduction to you? Every one takes you for a guest of the house, instead of mamma's companion."

No laughing rejonder came from Doris's lips. There was an anxious look in her eyes. Ah! this, then, accounted for the growing coldness with which the two sisters greeted her.

"You do not seem enough interested to even ask who they are" said Trixy, disappointedly.

How little she knew that the girl's heart and soul were bound up in her own handsome brother Frederick.

Ah, how poor Doris's heart longed for sympathy and consolation. Oh, if she only dared tell Beatrix Thornton the great hidden sorrow that seemed eating her heart away! She felt that she must unburden her heart to some one, or it must surely break.

"Trixy," she said, faintly, locking and unlocking her little hands nervously, "I could never love any one in this and unlocking her little hands nervously, "I could never love any one in this world again. I loved once. It was the sweetest, yet the most bitter experience of my life. The one who vowed always to love me, cruelly cast me from him. Yet I love him still with all my heart. Do not talk to me of love or lovers, Trixy. I cannot bear it. The world will never hold but one face for me; and that is the face of him who is lost to me forever."

"Oh, how delightfully romantic!"

cried Beatrix. "I said to myself over and

"I do wish I could help you in some way," said Beatrix, thoughtfully. "I'd give the world to set the matter straight for you. What's his name and where does he live?"

does he live?"
"I cannot tell you," faltered Doris, catching her breath with a little dry sob.
"Oh, dear! Then I do not see how I can help you," cried Trixy.
"You cannot," replied Doris. "Only keep my secret for me."
"I will," answered Beatrix, earnestly.
And as they parted Trixy resolved in

And as they parted Trixy resolved in her own mind to bring this truant lover her own mind to bring this truant lover back to Doris; but the first and most im-portant step was to discover his name. While she stood in the doorway of the library, by a sudden impulse Doris turned and glided back to her side. "Every one is so cold and cruel to me. I think I should die, if I were to lose your friendship, Beatrix," she said, rentingly.

"You will never die, then, if you wait for that event to transpire," laughed Trixy, "When I like a person I like them for all time. I never could pretend a friendship I did not feel. Why the first friendship I did not feel. Why the first moment I saw you I felt strangely at-tracted toward you; I could not tell why." She wondered why Doris caught her hands in her own and bissed them pas-sionately, while burning tears fell from her eyes.

you will not lose your faith in me."
Oh, how hollow and unnatural the sweet, voice sounded! "There are pitiful secrets in many lives," she went on, "that drive those who are forced to keep them,

In after years Beatrix Thornton, in recalling that incident, never forgot the haunted look of despair that crossed poor, hapless Doris's face as the words broke from her lips in a piteous cry.

"I will see Frederick to-morrow," thought Doris, as she hurried back to her own room.

thought Doris, as she hurried back to her own room.

But when the morrow came there was so much going on at the villa she could find no opportunity. A dozen times or more Frederick Thornton passed the slight girlish figure with the dark face and the haunting blue eyes, with a careless nod, a smile, or a pleasant word. He did not look closely at her, or he would have observed that she clutched her little hands tightly over her heart, and swayed slightly from side to side, as though she were about to faint.

With her heart in a whirl, Doris stole down the broad stairway to the corridor below, where she would have a good view of the ball-room beyond, being herself unseen. How her heart throbbed and her face flushed as she listened to the music, as she took up her position behind a marble Clytie which stood behind a pedestal of blush-red roses. The grand ball room, the reception room, the drawing rooms and parlors were thronged with a gay and brilliant assemblage. Ah, what a picture it made! — beautiful faces.

agy and brilliant assemblage. Ah, what a picture it made! — beautiful faces, flashing jewels, the gleam of satin and silks, tall men and fair-faced women! How the light fell on them! how the warm, perfumed air stirred gently as they passed!

Suddenly the air seemed to stifle Doris. Passing so near her that she could have put out her hand and touched them from her place of concealment, she beheld Frederick Thornton and Vivian—Vivian radiant in white lace and blush roses, leaning upon his arm. He was escorting her to the ball room.

"You will remember, Vivian," she heard him say, as he bent his dark, handsome head nearer the beauty, "you are to save most of the waltzes for me; promise me beforehand."

"That would be unfair," she declared.

I should be tempted to take you from him."

The next instant there was a loud crash. The marble Clytie had fallen from the pedestal to the floor; the crimson roses that had been twined about it were scattered in all directions, and amid the debris of roses lay a young girl.

'Why, it is Miss Carlisle, your mother's companion!" cried Vivian, in dismay. 'Look, she has fainted."

"Step into the drawing-room while I take her up to mother's apartments," he said to Vivian: and without waiting to summon a servant, he raised the slight figure in his strong arms and bore her rapidly up the broad stairway.

Then for the first time—in the bright glowing light of the chandeliers—he looked curiously down into the dark, dimpled face lying against his arm—looked—then came to a sudden halt, a cold perspiration starting out in great beads on his forchead.

THE GIRL I LEFT BEHIND.

They sat in their tent at the close of day
In confiding state of mind
And talked in a confidential way
Of the girlies they left behind.
The light of the stars in the realms above.
Those gems of the arching skies,
Was not as soft as the light of love
That glowed in the warriors' eyes
As each one told of the beauties rare
Of his own particular maiden fair.

"My girl," said Tom, "is a pretty queen And true as the tempered steel, Has the lovellest eyes that wereever seen She's a stunner from head to heel. "Twas in a letter I asked her hand In a passionate sort of way, An eloquent declaration, and Her answer just came today, She says she loves me and will be glad To share the life of her soldier lad."

"My darling is worth her weight in gold!

"My darling is worth her weight in gold
Said Jack, with a love drawn tear.
"There isn't an angel above could hold
Her own with the little dear!
That last sweet night when we kisse
goodby
She promised to be my wife.
To love me faithful and true till I Got back from my solder life,
And her letters tell me in every line
She's mine forever, and only mine."

"And I." said Harry, "have won a girl Who is waiting for me at home—
The sweetest and prettiest maiden pearl'Neath heaven's o'erhanging dome;
She wears my ring on her lovely hand,
In my heart is her image divine.
But tell me the names of your dear ones

HEART PAINS

A Kingston Lady Testifies to Her Experience in the Use of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

People who suffer from any disease or disorder of the heart nervous system, such as Palpitation, Skip Beats, Smother-ing or Sinking Sensations, Sleeplessness, Weakness, Pain in the Head, etc., canweakness, rain in the Head, etc., cannot afford to waste time trying various remedies, which have nothing more to back up their claims than the bold assertions of their proprietors.

These diseases are too serious to per-

These diseases are too serious to permit of your experimenting with untried remedies. When you buy Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, you know you have behind them the testimony of thousands of Canadians who have been cured by their use. One of these is Mrs. A. W. Irish, 92 Queen Street, Kingston, Ont., who writes as follows:

"I have suffered for some years with a smothering sensation caused by heart disease. The severity of the pains in my heart caused me much suffering. I was also very nervous, and my whole system was run down and debilitated.

"Hearing of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills being a specific for these troubles, I thought I would try them, and therefore got a box at McLeod's Drug therefore got a box at McLeod's Drug Store.

A TROUBLE THAT CAUSES ITS VICTIMS MUCH INCONVENIENCE.

The many cases brought to his notice of residents in this vicinity being cured from physical disorders through the agency of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, have created in the mind of the Acadien representative a sincere, belief in the ealing powers of this remedy. Yet withal he was a little incredulous the withal he was a little incredulous the other day when told of a young man who had been cured of a very serious and deplorable disease by the use of only some two boxes of these little miracle workers. It seemed impossible that such a remarkable healing could be wrought even by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in such short order. Accordingly be were occurred of a strong cordingly he was possessed of a strong desire to investigate. Mr. Winfred Schofield, of Gaspereau, was the address given us by our informant, and were not long in hunting him up. We found Mr. Schofield to be a bright yonug man of about twenty years of gence. His air of candor and straight-forwardness dispelled any doubts we may have had. In a very few words he stated to us his case. "Two years ago," he said, "I was taken with an attack of St. Vitus Dance. Sometimes when at work I found that my fingers would all at once straighten out and I would be compelled to drop anything I was holding. One day I was using an axe when seized with one of these attacks. The axe slipped from my mands and in falling that the straight are straightforward. ing struck my foot and gave it a nasty cut. After that you can depend upon it I left axes alone, and it was not long before I had to give up using any kind of tool. My complaint rapidly grew worse and I was soon unfitted for any sort of work. Everything possible was tried by my in order to get relief, but I alone I owe my cure.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills create new blood, build up the nerves, and thus drive disease from the system. In hundreds of cases they have cured after all other medicines have failed, thus establishing the claim that they are a marvel among the triumphs of modern medical science. The genuine Pink Pills are sold only in boxes, bearing the ful trademark "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People." Protect yourself from imposition by refusing any pill that does not bear the registered trade mark around the box. If in doubt send direct to Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and they will be mailed to you post paid at 50c a box, or six boxes for $2.50.

Henry of Navarre was killed when he had almost healed the differwhich subsequently rent not only France, but Europe, and William the Silent also fell when he was on the point of uniting the Netherland provinces into a compact barrier against the encroachments of Spain.

In English history Lord Clive died at the moment when he was the one man who could have saved the American solonies and kept the Anger-Saxon race united, but there is the case of Mira-beau. He was literally the one man in France who could have averted the horrors of the revolution, saved and re formed the monarchy and so spared Europe the murderous career of Napol and all the devastation it brought. If he had lived ten or even five years longer, the history not only of France, but of Europe and the world, would have been different. It is in fact suffi-cient to say that he would have made both Robespierre and Napoleon impossible.—Strand Magazine.

CONSUMPTION.

What a Well-Known Medical Journal Says About the King of Disease.

"This is essentially an age of scientific progress, Science and invention go hand in "hand. Thanks to a distinguished chemist "consumption is robbed of its terrors, deprived "of its destructiveness, and this insidious discease can first be a lieved and then cured. "But to accomplish a cure that is final and "effective there must be constant persistency "in treatment and right living. The sufferer "must take the right medical relief, rightly administered. By the labor, skill and research "of an eminent chemist, T. A. Slocum, consumption can be both relieved and cured."—Medical Tribune.

Loving Cup Proprieties.

I have not seen any loving cup passed that is true to its name. The loving cup originated as a matter of precaution in olden times, when apparent friends had an unpleasant method of killing a friend who was a rival while he was drinking. So an immense heavy cup was made with a heavy cover. The method of using it can still be witnessed at banquets at the

The person receiving it stands and turns to his neighbor, who also rises and takes the cover with both hands. The first person then raises the heavy cup to his lips with both hands, and, having sipped of the contents, holds it while the friend at his side replaces the cover and takes the cup, repeating the same process in turn with his next neighbor. Thus, both hands being occupied, there is no possibility of one friend stabbing another

In our time the custom has degener ated, and the cover, as a rule, disappeared. Nevertheless if both hands were ccupied that would not prevent tongues from wagging later, and words are sometimes sharper than swords.—Philadelphia Times.

Smoking In Kores In Korea all men and women smoke. They begin early. The pipe is a brass bowl, with a reed stem four feet long and a brass, amber or glass mouthpiece. Accidents often occur from persons fall ing with a long pipe in the mouth, the stem of which is driven down the throat through the cheek or into the palate. During the "reform period," after the Japan-China war, long pipes were for-bidden to the common people, and they turned to cigarettes, which have be-come rooted in the popular affection. Native cigarettes, which are of poor quality, sell for 1 cent gold for 20. Little cigars of cigarette size sell for 14 cents gold per 100.

American eigarettes are used exclusively in the palace, and thousands of them are smoked there. This makes them popular with the upper classes, and the consumption of them is very great. The best of them cost 1 gold each. The import duty on cigars and cigarettes is 20 per cent ad valorem; but, in spite of this, the American manfacturers are gradually coming into control of the market.—Chicago Times-

A Good Spurgeon Story.

Here is a story about Spurgeon. He once passed a stonemason who, after each stroke of his hammer, cursed and ewore. Mr. Spurgeon laid his hand on his shoulder and, looking kindly at him, said: "You are an adept at swearing. Can you also pray?"

With another oath he replied, "Not Holding up 5 shillings, Mr. Spurgeon said if he would promise never to pray he would give him that. "That is easily earned," said the man, with a fresh oath, and put it in his pocket. When Spurgeon left, the man began to feel a little queer. When he went home, his wife asked him what ailed him, and he told her. "It is Judas' money!" said the man, and on a sudden impulse he threw it into the fire. The wife found it and took it out The man took it back to Spurgeon, who conversed long with him, warning him, and at length was the means of saving him. He became an attached member of his flock.

CHAPTER XVII.-THE PANGS OF JEALOUSY.

JEALOUSY.

Frederick Thornton gazed with painful intensity into the girl's beautiful face.

"Just such a face has haunted me in my dreams," he muttered, hoarsely. "I have a dim recollection of having seen such a face before, but where I cannot imagine. Since that accident, which nearly cost me my life, there seem to be strange leaks in my brain.

"It must be only fancy that I have seen this girl before. How strangely my heart thrilled as I touched her hand, like an electric shock. She is a beautiful little creature. If my heart were not already Vivian's, I—I should be in danger of losing it. My mother's young companion is certainly charming."

He laid his lovely burden down upon the velvet divan in his mother's boudoir, and rang the bell for one of the servants. "Miss Carlisle has fainted, Patty," he said to the maid who soon made her ap-

"Miss Carlisle has fainted, Patty," he said to the maid who soon made her appearance in answer to his summons. "I will leave her in your charge."

He had scarcely closed the door behind him ere Doris's blue eyes fluttered open.

"Leave me, Patty," she cried, as she raised her eyes to the anxious face bending over her. "You can do nothing for me. Nothing."

And when she was left alone she

And when she was left alone, she turned her face to the wall with moans piteous to hear.

It never occurred to her to inquire how she came there.

She quite believed one of the servants had brought her here, when they found

The sweet, joyous strains of the dance The sweet, joyous strains of the dance music and gay laughter floated up to her as she lay there, with her face buried in the pillow. Should she lie there in such wretched abandon while Vivian, the beauty, and Frederick danced and laughed the hours away so gayly down below in the rose-embowered ball-room? No, no; she could not. It would drive her mad.

No, no; she could not be mad.
Silently Doris rose from the divan and crept down into the corridor again. As she passed the conservatory, glancing in, she saw the two for whom she was searching standing by the fountain.
"Should she turn away, or walk in and face them?" Doris asked herself.
She could not; she would not bear it.

and face them?' Doris asked herself.
She could not; she would not shear it.
She was deadly sick and faint with the bitterest pain of jealousy that could burn or stab a human heart. She 'could not endure to see Frederick Thornton bend his handsome head over Vivian.
Hé was hers—her husband—not Vivian's, It was hard and cruel. Her face flushed hotly, and her lips quivered.

She felt that she must cry out to them, that she must say:—

Should she cross over to Vivian's side, and cry out, bitterly:—

"He is not yours! Do not look at him or smile at him! Cease to try to win him! He is mine, not yours! He can never be yours, for he has married me!"

The impulse was so strong to utter the words that Doris bit her lips until the pain became insupportable.

She saw on the face of her lovely rival a look Vivian's face had never worn before. What was he saying to her that brought those blushes to her cheeks and the glad, swift smile into her dazzling dark eyes? Daris he—who was not free to woo and win Vivian—dare he breathe to her one word of love?

Doris knew that she ought to go; that woo and win Vivian—dare he breathe to her one word of love?

Doris knew that she ought to go; that it was an intrusion on her part to remain, but she could not tear herself away. The blood was boiling in her yetns, her heart was beating fart.

At that moment a waltz struck up again, and with a smile Frederick drew Vivian's little gloved hand through his arm and led her back to the ball-room by another door.

And Doris crept close to a branching magnolia near the entrance and watched them. Vivian seemed to float through the mazes of the graceful waltz like a veritable fairy.

Doris did not take her eyes from her husband and Vivian, her beautiful rival, no matter in what part of the ball-room they happened to be.

She saw Frederick hold close to his heart his fair partner, and it seemed to distorted imagination that he more closely than the occasion

At last—oh! deliverance from torture -the music ceased; the waltz was over, Frederick offered Vivian his arm then, and they promended around the room.

"I should go away from here," muttered Doris, as she watched them. "Ah!
my curse is that I love him. I could not live away from him. I love him with the bitterest love—a more cruel than hate."

While she stood there Mrs. Thornton approached. She saw Doris and stopped short. The pallor on the girl's face

"You do not look well, Miss Carlisle," she said, gently. "Had you not better go into the grounds and walk awhile in the cool air, or go up to your room and rest? I shall not need you any more to-night;

Then Mrs. Thornton caught sight of her son and Vivian. She turned to Dorls with a pleused smile. "What a handsome couple they make," she said—"my son and Vivian—do they not, Miss Carlisle?"

Doris tried to murmur some answer, but her voice died away on her white

"The dearest wish of my heart will be

"The dearest wish of my heart will be gratified when I see them married," Mrs. Thornton went on.

A sudden impulse, an irresistible, mad longing, urged her to turn to Frederick's mother, and say: "He can never marry that proud beauty; he is already married. I'am his wife." But this was neither the time nor the place for such revelation.

Without waiting for Doris to reply, Mrs. Thornton moved on and Doris research.

Without waiting for Doris to reply,
Mrs. Thornton moved on, and Doris resumed her patient watch again.

Some one had claimed Vivian for a quadrille, and Doris noticed with bitter pain that Frederick did not attempt to seek another partner. He stood quite alone where she had left him. Of what was he thinking that he looked so dreamily at the programme he held! Was he thinking of that other ball, and the young girl whe had accompanied him there to her bitter cost? Was he thinking of the pitiful sequel that had followed on the heels of it? Doris imagined he was, and again that old perplexing question recurred to her: Why had he wedded her, if he meant to desert her? Would any one, looking into his dark, handsome face, believe he could be guilty of so cruelly deserting the bride he had married, almost at the very altar? She remembered the words of the great poet, who has said:—

"That one may smile, and smile, and le heart he had broken, the young life he had blasted?

"If he could have but loved her, how different life might have been for her," she told herself. "He does not love me; he cares only for Vivian," she murmured. "If I died to-morrow," she cried, with a bitter moan, "who would grieve for me? Not drederick Thornton. If he heard I was dead, it ywould be a great relief to him. He could look up calmly, and say: 'She is out of my_way forever.' If he did not say it, that is the thought that would flit through his mind.

"God forgive me! I do not want to be wicked, but I think heaven has laid a great curse upon my life. I am cursed by fate. I was so lonely, my childhood and girlhood were so unhappy; my one prayer to heaven was to send me some one who would love me. I had no gentle mother, no loving sister, no kind father—no kindred on the great, wide, cruel earth. I was so desolate I craved love—only love—and it has been denied me. What is there left to live for? He will never, never love me!"

As she watched, she saw Frederick

As she watched, she saw Frederick cross to where Vivian sat, and bend over her a moment. Then she rose, took his arm, and together they passed out of the ball-room into the moonlit, rose-bor-the ball-room into the moonit, rose-bal-dered terrace.

The poor wretched young wife stood motionless beside the crimson clove car-nations, her hands pressed tightly over her heart. Should she follow them or not?

The temptation was more than she could resist. Silently as a shadow Doris stole after them, gaining the terrace by another door. They had wandered down the beach-walk to the river's brink. Doris could see the glimmer of Vivian's white dress through the trees as the patches of moonlight fell upon it. There was such a deep silence among the trees. white dress through the trees as the patches of moonlight fell upon it. There was such a deep silence among the trees, as she went swiftly along, that it seemed to Doris that they were waiting, silent, motionless, for the pitful "seeme which was to follow. Sometimes the low, musical laughter of Vivian reached her, and then the rich ring of her husband's voice would sound cheerily through the still, white starlight; and all the time she, his wife, was slowly threading her way after him like the shadow of fate. Doris had a dim idea that what she was doing was a wrong, undignified, ungenerous action; but her great, hopeless, pitiful love, and the cruel smart of jealousy, more bitter to bear than the pangs of death, outweighed every other feeling.

"I shall see for myself whether it is true or not that he is Vivian's lover, that he contemplates marrying her."

She had a faint remembrance of reading once of a man who had applied to the law to free him from his wife. What the cause was she did not recollect; and it seemed strange to Doris, at the time, the law to ree aim rook in swite. What the cause was she did not recollect; and it seemed strange to Doris, at the time, that the law freed him; that the law of man could set at defiance the law of God, that those joined together in hold wedlock should never be put asunder.

Had Frederick Thornton availed himself of the property of the property of the property of the country of the property of t

Had Frederick Thornton availed himself of any such means to free himself from her that he might wed Vivian, whom he loved?

"If it is so, let me hear it from his own lips," she murmured, hoarsely; better that he should slay her with the truth at once than that she should die by this most slow and cruel torture.

Silently Doris drew near the two standing on the sands together, all unconscious of her presence, and the tragedy which was to follow. Only a group of trees separate her from them, but Doris crept still closer, with bated breath and a heart of fire.

CHAPTER XVIII.-DORIS AND FREDERICK MEET.

Nearer, still nearer, crept the little dark figure to the two who stood by the river's brink, gazing far out on the moonlit waves. What were they saying? Was Frederick telling his beautiful companion the story of that other ball, and the fatal marriage that had resulted from it?

Was he saying that, on the impulse of the moment, he had encumbered himself with a wife he did not love? No, no; he had not told her yet; for, crouching there in the dense shadow, she heard Vivian

"There seems to be some secret you are trying to keep back from me, Frederick. You are changed of late; how, or why, I cannot tell. Sometimes, when I am talking to you, you do not hear me. Where are your thoughts—of whom are you thinking? I ask myself. If I thought you cared for any one else. Frederick. you cared for any one else, Frederick,

The sentence never was finished. Frederick Thornton bent his dark, 'handsome face with a light, happy, careless laugh.

"My dear Vivian," he cried, "Is it possible you are growing jealous?" In the next instant he had changed his light, bantering tone. "It is all your light, bantering tone. "It is all your imagination about the change in me, as you call it. When you see me distrait, it you call it. When you see me distrait, it is when I am trying to recall some vague thought that seems to have escaped it mind, and which is ever cluding my memory. As for caring for any one else—ah, no, Vivian, you are my first and only love. I have never cared for any one but you. I have never held any one else's hands clasped in mine as I am holding you'rs now. I have never breathed one word—nay—never given one thought to another."

Was it a moan from human lips that

Was it a moan from human lips that was t a moan from human lips that startled them, or only the wind sighing through the trees, dying away in a low wail over the water? The words Doris had heard had driven her mad. Oh, God, how could be utter words as false as these? How dared he? It was a wonder that the rod of the angels did not strike. that the rod of the angels did not strike that the rod of the angels did not strike him dead.

With a bitter cry Doris sprang from her place of concealment and confronted him. There was a shrick from Vivian, and a cry of surprise from Frederick.

"Miss Carlisle!" they both echoed in a breath. 'No-not-Miss Carlisle!" Doris panted, with the most broken-hearted cry that ever fell from human lips—"not Miss Carlisle, but Doris Thornton, the wretched, unhappy wife of this man who dares to speak to you of love, Vivian Courtney:—the unhappy brids whom Frederick Thornton wedded, and then deserted at the very altar almost!"

Another shriek fell from Vivian's lips. Frederick Thornton stood still in the path like one turned to stone. Speech and action seemed suddenly to have left him. He could not have moved a muscle, uttered one word if his life had depended upon it; the shock he had received was so terrible—so appalling.

"It is false! Who are you who dare utter such words? Why do you not deny it, Frederick?" screamed Vivian, turning to hum, and eagerly scanning hip hale, handsome face in the white, columonlight.

"Because he dare not, hi the presence of God and the listening angels who

"Because he dare not, it is the presence of God and the listening angels who witnessed our marriage," replied Doris, solemnly, lifting her white right hand to the star-gemmed heavens, and answering Vivian's last question first. "As to who I am, your woman's penetration might have told you that I am the unpart will whose well where well where the star will be the star will when the star will be the star will when the star will be the star will when the star will be star will be the star will be the star will be the star will be

The Mystery of the flazor.

It is a matter of common experience that a razor left for awhile unused becomes blunt. A writer in Chambers' Journal says that rust caused by the moisture in the atmosphere is quite enough to account for this. Shearers, for instance, who have to use partie ularly sharp instruments, never set their shears till just before using. What is not so generally known is that a ra-zor which will not cut will become sharper sometimes by being left aside for some time. The only explanation of this is that the electrical properties of the metal in the edge become changed.

A "wire edge" is commonly put on a tool by amateurs. The steel turns and folds back on itself. It is owing to the edge being made too long and thin, or the metal being too soft. The only cure for a wire edge is to break off the bent portion and grind and set again.

'A knife that cuts butter when it is hot' (and under no other circumstances) we sometimes meet with. We have been going into the reasons of things, been going into the reasons of things, and the reason of this is easily explain-ed. Heat expands metal, and in propor-tion to the amount of metal which is heated. There is more metal in the breadth of a blade than in its thickness, and the former, therefore, is expanded immensely more than the latter. In other words, the wedgelike shape is lengthened, and the tool becomes "sharp,

HUSBAND AND WIFE

The Pathetic Story of a Tragedy o

Many years ago I read a pathetic story, which is constantly recalled to mind as the duties of this compilation compel me to read the records of past years and reperuse the long closed letters of my beloved and live over again the happy days when we were all in all to each other. I do not remember all the details of the incident which so impressed are but the

when we were all in all to each other. I do not remember all the details of the incident which so impressed me, but the chief facts were these:

A married couple were crossing one of the great glaciers of the Alpine regions, when a fatal accident occurred. The husbard fell down one of the hugo crevasses which abound on all glaciers—the rope broke, and the depth of the chasm was so great that no help could be rendered, nor could the body be recovered. Over the wife's anguish at her loss we must draw the veil of silence. Forty years afterward saw her, with the guide who had accompanied them at the time of the accident, staying at the nearest hotel at the foot of the glacier, waiting for the sea of ice to give up its dead, for by the well known law of glacier progression the form of her long lost husband might be expected to appear, expelled from the mouth of the torrent about that date. Patiently and with unfailing constancy they watched and waited, and their hopes were at last rewarded.

One day the body was released from its

One day the body was released from its prison in the ice, and the wife looked again on the features of him who had been so long parted from her. But the pathos of the story lay in the fact that she was then an old woman, while the newly res-cued body was that of quite a young and robust man, so faithfully had the crystal casket preserved the jewel which it held so long. The 40 years had left no wrin-kles on that marble brow. Time's with-ering fingers could not touch him in that tomb, and so for a few brief moments the aged lady saw the husband of her youth as he was in the days which were gone forever. — C. H. Spurgeon's "Autobiog

TO WEAR NEXT THE SKIN.

Comparative Merits of Several Mate rials From a Hygienic Standpoint.

What are the comparative merits of sill What are the comparative merits of silk and flannel for wear next the skin? Some say flannel in winter, but not in warm summer weather. Flannel, we are told, is apt to engender the cruption known as "prickly heat." Nevertheless it is probably a question of the personal constitution. In any case, those who wear flannel in winter should be careful about leaving it off in summer, as it prevents chills. The nonconductor of heat in clothing is chiefly the air in its pores, and a thick, chiefly the air in its pores, and a thick, heavy clothing is not necessarily so warm as a light but porous vestment which in-closes a layer of air in its tissues. This last protects the body against cold in winter and heat in summer ter and heat in summer.

Perspiration, by evaporating the liquid of the body, tends to cool it and counteract the heating effect of sunshine, but if it is excessive a chill may ensue, for instance, by suddenly going into a cool place, and flaunel tends to prevent this result, by abserbing the perspiration as in a reservoir, and checking the excessive action of the skin. A thin cloth would not act as a regulator, and it is probable that many escape colds or worse by wearing flaunel and woolen undervests. Recent experiments of M. Leo Vignon, a well known chemist of Lyons, however, show that silk is oven more absorbent of water that silk is even more absorbent of water than flarnel.

He fi.7s, in fact, that 100 grains of cotton, flannel and silk absorb respectively 495,561 and 571 grains of water in the same time.

same time.

The "specific heat" or quantity of heat required by a body to raise its temperature one degree, which makes a body feel warm or cool to the touch, has also to be considered in this connection, and here flannel especially old flannel, is preferable to silk, which is more sensitive to variations of temperature. Wool is therefore recom-mendable to those who are weak or sensitive to changes of temperature, but porous or spongy silk is also good.—London Globe

Fascinating Power of Snakes.

Fascinating Power of Snakes.

Dr. A. J. Harrison, chairman of the.

Bristol and Clifton Zoological society, read some observations on the so called fascination of snakes before the recent meeting of the British association. His observations had extended over many years, he said, and he had come to the conclusion—confirmed by others—that there was no fascination experised by snakes was no fascination exercised by snakes over their prey. Ducks, hens, rabbits and rats placed in the cagos of snakes on feed played about, hepped on the snakes, peck-ed at them and showed no signs of fascination or alarm even when they saw their colleagues swallowed or crushed to death. Much of the popular belief about shakes— their size and their powers of fascination—was due to the myths of ancient history and poetle literature. The largest snake now in existence, or that probably eyer ex-isted, was only 25 feet-long.—London Times.

A TROUBLE THAT CAUSES ITS VICTIME

Winfred Schofield, of Gaspereau. N. S., Tells How He Obtained a Speedy and Permanent Cure.

ST. VITUS DANCE.

From the Acadlen, Wolfville, N. S. The many cases brought to his notice of residents in this vicinity being cured from physical disorders through the agency of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, have created in the mind of the Acadier representative a sincere belief in the healing powers of this remedy. Ye withal he was a little incredulous the other day when told of a young man Captain Charles E. Clark, the former bommander of the Oregon, is visiting his brother, Lloyd Clark, at St. Joseph, Mich., and is reported to be much improved in miracle workers. It seemed impossible miracle workers. It seemed impossible that such a remarkable healing could be wrought even by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in such short order. Accordingly he was possessed of a strong desire to investigate. Mr. Winfred Schofield, of Gaspereau, was the address given us by our informant, and were not long in hunting him up. We found Mr. Schofield to be a bright young man of about twenty years of age and of more than ordinary intelliage and of more than ordinary intelligence. His air of candor and straightforwardness dispelled any doubts we may have had. In a very few words he stated to us his case. "Two years ago," he said, "I was taken with an attack of St. Vitus Dance. Sometimes when at work I found that my flurary would all work I found that my fingers would all at once straighten out and I would be compelled to drop anything I was hold-ing. One day I was using an axe when seized with one of these attacks. The axe slipped from my mands and in falling struck my foot and gave it a nasty cut. After that you can depend upon it I left axes alone, and it was not long before I had to give up using any kind of tool. My complaint rapidly grew worse and I was soon unfitted for any sort of work. Everything possible was tried by my in order to get relief, but I got no better. At last one day a neighbor of mine, Mr. Fred Fielding, who had been cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, advised me to give them a trial, offering to pay for them himself if they did not help me. As it turned out he was safe enough in making the offer. I followed his advice, but had scarcely begun to use them when I began to feel very much better. After using two boxes I was perfectly cured and have never been troubled with the complaint since. I am confident that to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills alone I owe my cure.

Inopportune Deaths!

Julius Cæsar was assassinated when he had almost completed the task of consolidating the administration and dominion of the Roman empire, and his death opened the way to that despotism and corruption which ultimately undid his work. Henry of Navarre was killed when he had almost healed the differ-ences between Catholic and Protestant, which subsequently rent not only France, but Europe, and William the Silent alse fell when he was on the point of uniting the Netherland provinces into a compact barrier against the encroachments of Spain.

In English history Lord Clive died at the moment when he was the one man who could have saved the American who could have saved the Anger-Saxon race noted, but there is the case of Mira-beau. He was literally the one man in France who could have averted the horformed the monarchy and so spared Europe the murderous career of Napoleon and all the devastation it brought. If he had lived ten or even five years longer, the history not only of France, but of Europe and the world, would have been different. It is in fact sufficient to say that he would have made both Robespierre and Napoleon impossible. - Strand Magazine.

Some one played a mean joke on a Chicago detective. He was sent to a house where lived a girl who was much given to practicing on the piano. He met the girl and asked her what she knew about "the affair." "I don't understand," she replied. "Why, you see," rejoined the detective, "we got a tip from the boarding house next door that somebody here has been murdering Wagner, and the authorities have sent me here to follow up the case."—Chicago Journal.

Smoking In Korea. In Korea all men and women smoke. They begin early. The pipe is a brass bowl, with a reed stem four feet long and a brass, amber or glass mouthpiec Accidents often occur from persons fall ing with a long pipe in the mouth, the stem of which is driven down the throat through the cheek or into the palate. During the "reform period," after the Japan-China war, long pipes were for-bidden to the common people, and they turned to cigarettes, which have be-come rooted in the popular affection. Native cigarettes, which are of poor quality, sell for 1 cent gold for 20. Lit-the cigarettes, each for 20. Lither the cigar of cigarette sign sell for 14 tle cigars of cigarette size sell for 14 cents gold per 100.

American cigarettes are used exclusively in the palace, and thousands of them are smoked there. This makes them popular with the upper classes, and the consumption of them is very great. The best of them cost 1 cent gold each. The import duty on cigars and cigarettes is 20 per cent ad valorem; but, in spite of this, the American manfacturers are galadually coming into control of the market.—Chicago Times-

A Good Spurgeon Story.

Here is a story about Spurgeon. He once passed a stonemason who, after each stroke of his hammer, cursed and his shoulder and, looking kindly at him, said: "You are an adept at swearing. Can you also pray?" With another cath he replied, "Not he would give him that.

"That is easily earned," said the man, with a fresh oath, and put it in his pocket. When Spurgeon left, the man began to feel a little queer. When he went home, his wife asked him what ailed him, and he told her. "It is Judas' money!" said the man, and on a sudden impulse he threw it into the fire. The wife found it and took it out and discovered who had given it to him.

The man took it back to Spurgeon, who conversed long with him, warning him, and at length was the means of saving him. He became an attached member of his flock.

In a few brief words Doris had panted In a few brief words Doris had panted out her pitful story of her meeting with Prederick that day, and of the pleasant meetings and rambles through the summer wood that followed. How he had persuaded her to steal out of the seminary and go to the grand ball, and the illustrated hasty marriage that had resulted from it. How he had taken her to Baltimore and leaving her at the hotel, had from it. How he had taken her to Baltimore, and leaving her at the hotel, had then and there heartlessly deserted her. Of her search for a situation as companion; and of the temptation to enter her hasband's home and look once more upon his face that had tempted her to aliguise herself and come to his mother. As he listened, like a shock the past seturned to Frederick Thornton. He told to speak, but the words died away of his lips, making no sound. The veins atpod out like cords on his forehead, and great drops of perspiration stood out in stood out like cords on his forehead, and great drops of perspiration stood out in neavy beads on his white face.

Like a flash he remembered all now;

—the marriage; leaving Doris, his young bride, at the hotel, and sauntering out into the street to smoke a cigar while ahe rested; and the accident which had followed that had nearly cost him his life, and which, when he recovered, had left such a strange blank in his mind as the some event or events that had hat ranto some event or events that had tran-notred just prior to it, which he had ever since leen vainly endoavoring to call to mind. "It if true, Vivian," he murmured, hoars by; and it almost seemed to him another voice had spoken, it seemed so strange and unnatural. "I married her, strange and unnatural. "I married her, as she says. She is my wife."

He tried to say more, but the words refused to leave his lips. He was like a man bewildered—stunned by a swift, terpible, unexpected blow.

"I see it all now," screamed Vivian, with a wild, eldritch, shrill laugh that made both of their listeners' blood turn cold, "It was a daring scheme for a busband—a most daring plot to win my love from me by stealth," she went on, with stinging sarcasm "I should never have intrusted my note to you. A beggar like yourself—a nameless nobody—a waif on Madame Delmar's charity— I might have known would manoeuvre for swealthy husband, just as you have might have known would manoeuvre for wealthy husband, just as you have done."

She sprang nearer to Doris, white with wrath, her eyes blazing as they rested on the girl who had come between ther and Frederick Thornton's love.

"Let it be one bitter drop of disappointment in your cup of triumph to know that the man you have so cunningly entrapped does not nor never will fove you, for his heart is mine. Do you hear, Doris Brandon? His heart is mine!"

Her eyes glittered, her cheeks and lips

Her eyes glittered, her cheeks and lips
fillshed scarlet with excitement.
Frederick Thornton's presence alone sayed her from raising her clenched, jewelled hand and striking Doris down at her feet.

Frederick Thornton himself seemed inpable of action. To him Doris turned, off Vivian's scathing accusations.

"Frederick," she cried out, "oh, believe me, all that she accuses me of is faise—all terribly false I—I—would have died sooner than—than try to entrap you into—marrying me."

she might remain and hear all that was to be said. But he did not; and with a derisive, sneering laugh, she gathered up her silken skirts in her dainty hand and fairly flew up the rose-bordered path the house, and up to Mrs. Thornton boudoir, to tell her the horrible story.

It was the most awkward momen Frederick Thornton's life when he found himself standing alone face to face with

He meant to tell her that he had nev willfully deserted her, and of the fright ful accident which had stricken him down, separating him in so strange a manner from his watching, waiting bride, when she had ceased speaking. First, he must hear what she had to say

Oh, Mr. Thornton-Frederick!" she faltered, piteously, "you must believ that I never—never—thought of marry that I never—never—bledght of marrying you ten minutes before you spoke of it—proposed it, or I shall die here at your feet, or go mad with very shame. I thought you wished me to marry you—oh, heaven pity met—I thought you wished me to marry you because you loved me just as dearly as I had learned to love you; ye, I believed that with all my heart."

The words she had uttered had fallen The words she had uttered had fallen upon Frederick Thornton like a thunderbolt; they were a startling revelation to him. He looked into the beautiful, childish face aghast. Doris loved him!—Doris whom he had married in a moment of impulse, to save her from being cast adult on the cold, pitless world, sahe feared so much.

The had considered her but a beautiful, willful, capricious child. He was amazed to hear from her lips that revelation she had nttered in her intense excitement—she loved him.

"Oh, if you had but left me to die at the hall," she moaned, "for it was then that my heart went out to you. Oh, if I had but known you did not love me, I would have died sooner than have gone to the altar with you. I never thought that lips could breathe vows the heart was far from feeling. Heaven forgive you for pledging yourself at the altar to love me, when you knew it was false—all false, for your heart was as far from mine as the sky is from the earth. You loved another."

"Doris, poor little Doris, listen to me!" he cried, eagerly; but she held up that little hand again enjoining silence.

"Those solemn vows bind us to each other until the death of one sets the other free. I am going to give you back your freedom which you bartered away. I will not spoil your life and Vivian's." She turned and attempted to pass him, but he put out his hand and caught the

GIRL.

The whole affair had been so sudder, the shock which had followed Doris's startling revelation so terrible, that for an instant Frederick Thornton was dazed and in that instant, the little figure had eluded his grasp, and with the fleetness of a tempest-tossed swallow, flew down the path that led to the river.

"Doris!" he called out, sharply.

"Come back! What would you do?"

Only a heart-broken sob floated back to him.

The words she had uttered came to his memory with awful horror:—
"Only death could break the bonds that bind you to me, Mr. Thornton. I will not come between you and Vivian.

will not come between you and Vivian. I am going to set you free."
Surely poor, beautiful little Doris did not intend to court death in the dark, rapid river. The thought brought him to his senses as nothing else could have done, and with fleet footsteps he followed that flying figure, calling upon her to Stop.

But if Doris heard those passionate cries she did not heed them. Pausing an instant on the brink of the moonlit

"It was all a cruel mistake," she murmured, with gasping sobs. "He did not love me. It was Vivian whom he loved. love me. It was Vivian whom he loved. He hates me because I came between them and parted them, and I couldn't bear that. I must die und set him free.

Poor Doris! Her great sorrow had driven her mad 'with despair. With a quivering, piteous cry that pierced Frederick Thornton's heart like an arrow, as it floated back to him, little Doris flung herself from the rock on which she stood, down into the curling waves; and in an instant they closed over her head.

The next moment Frederick Thornton reached the spot. He stood there as if Poor Doris. Tair young bride he had wedded, and from whom the hand of fate had parted him, almost at the very altar, in so strange a manner, lying cold in death, and for his sake. She had not given him time to tell her how strangely fate had been playing at crosspurposes with them. She believed he had willfully, cruelly deserted her, and it was this that had driven her to her doom. She had sought death cre the startling truth could be revealed to her. Oh, the pity, the horror, and the cruel shame of it:

"Help! help!" he cried, hoarsely, wildly rushing up the broad, marble porch two steps at a time. To the serv-ants, who rushed out in answer to their young master's wild cries, he explained in a few gasping words what had hap-

There was a piteous quiver in the sweet, childish voice, and the soft blue, appealing eyes raised to Frederick Thornon's pale, disturbed, handsome face were drowned in tears. Ho would have interrupted her, but she held up her hand with a quick gesture.

"Hear me out," she cried. "I have cally a few words more to say, but they must be said to you alone. Frederick. I could not speak before bee."

Vivian expected that Frederick would put out his hand to her, crying out that she might remain and hear all that was the bestid. But he did not; and with a darker seemed.

I here would be no question of saving her now, they told him. Suddenly a light, quick step came hurriedly down the path. He knew before he raised his white, haggard, pain-drawn face that it was Vivian.

"Have you learned what has happened, Vivian?" he asked. "Poor Doris has fluing herself into the river. I was powerless to save her, for she never rose again. The chances are, if Vivian had not the chances are, in vivian had not given utterance to her real sentiments, the whole course of her after life would have been different. A slight incident, a word, a look, have often been known to turn the mightiest love into abhorrence. Love comes to the heart swiftly, and it may take wing just as swiftly, and is often but a transient guest. But, feeling so sure of Frederick's love, Vivian went

"Yes, I am glad Doris has made away "Yes, I am glad Doris has made away with herself. How we would have hated her if she had lived to spoil our lives. Vivian took a step backward, and looked at his pale, angry face.

heart when her unexpected taking off awakened it into life."

She had put the idea into his head, and he caught at the thought with strange eagerness. Was the great pain at his heart the quivering, mighty throb of love? He covered his face with his hands with a deep groan.

The consciousness of the truth came home to Frederick Thornton too late. He loved little Dorls, the pretty, trembling young bride whom he had wedded, and from whom fate had parted him so strangely.

AGAINST VACCINATION.

Mr. Tebb Will Try to Duplicate Mere His Victory In England.

Mr. William Tebb, founder of the Antivaccination League of England, having succeeded in securing a revision of the compulsory vaccination law in Great Brit-ain, is now in this country for the purpose of starting a similar campaign.

Mr. Tebb is anything but a physical giant, and his personal appearance gives no indication of the personance which marked the fight he matte for years against what he considered a violation of personal liberty as well as a direct interference with a constant analysis. For nearly 30 years he labored with tongue and pen to have set aside the provisions of the law which compelled all English parents to have their children vaccinated, and on Aug. 13 he saw his labors crowned with success, for on that day the queen signed the measure allowing consciprations, parents to make a decident of the success. day the queen signed the measure allowing conscientious parents to make a declaration of objection to vaccination before a magistrate and thus free themselves from what they consider persecution. This victory was not won without a mighty struggle and a vast outlay of money and energy. It is estimated that the antivaccinists spent $5,000,000 in the cause. During the antivaccination agitation Mr. Tebb circled the earth several times seeking information to aid him in the fight. For 24 years he devoted a considerable part of his time to traveling in Great Britain, the various states of Europe, America and the English colonies to inquire into the methods and results of vaccination. The amount of information he acquired on the subject was enormous, and he spread it broadcast by means of public lectures and letters to the press.

In an address before a scientific body in Paris M. Berthelot said millions of frances re wasted every year in pouring learning into sieves.

"According to the educational method in vogue," said Berthelot, "most of the education goes in at one ear and out at the other without leaving any other impression than mental disgust for further education. What educators need to do is to cast aside at once that iniquitous institution called weekly examination," which compels the pupil to cram, cram, cram.

'In its place should be established a system of interesting each pupil's mind in particular studies by pointing cut to him how he individually has a permanent interest in pursuing them and then giving the pupil plenty of leisure to think over what has been told him.

what has been told him.

"There are entirely too many subjects being taught," says Berthelot in conclusion. "Reduce the number of subjects of study, shorten the hours, and if we are to have examinations let them be as brief and, as far apart as possible."

AN ODD MONUMENT.

White Marble Lighthouse Which Stands In a Cemetery. Some odd conceits have been given form in the making of monuments, but probably the only light-house monument in the world has The state of cemetery. It is a full sized lightnouse, not a min-iature, and it stands on a base of white Italian mar-ble 25 feet in circumference. O a representation of waves, just as if the shaft stood out at sea. Around the base is strewn white sea sand, and the idea is further carried out by having a real signal light burning in the tower. This unique monument has been erected to the memory of the late Dr. T. W. Wilson MENT.

From the ground to the apex the height is some 23 feet. The gas main has been laid to it from a distance of about 400 yards. The light is 40 candle power and will be kept burning all the year round. The light is so powerful that mica will have to give place to glass.

Over two years were required to build the monument, and 75 tons of marble were used. The total cost of the lighthouse was over $10,000, while the gas will cost about $100 per year.

Nervousness, Sleeplessness—who could be restored to the full enjoyment of perfect health by a few boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

There can be no question about the efficacy of this remedy. Thousands of women, havefound it do all that is claimed for it. Here is the testimony of Mrs. Gillen, Wesley Street, Moncton, N.B.

"Before taking Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills I used to suffer untold agony from violent headaches, irregular action of the heart, together with pains or spasms in various parts of my body.

"Sometimes I felt so weak that I was unable to look after my domestic duties. However, I had to endure this worry and trouble, because all the remedies I tried failed to give me relief, until happily I heard of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I had only been taking them a short time when I felt greatly benefited." This encouraged me to continue their use until a complete cure was effected.

"I have not been troubled with a headache since taking these pills. They increased my appetite, invigorated my entire system, and gave me back my old time strength and vigor."

Take a Laxa-Liver Pill before retiring. 'Twill work while you sleep without a grip or gripe, and make you feel better in the morning. Price 25c. Sold by all druggists.

Winfred Schofield, of Gaspereau. N. S., Telle How He Obtained a Speedy and Permanent Cure.

rom the Acadien, Wolfville, N. S. The many cases brought to his notice of residents in this vicinity being cared from physical disorders through the agency of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, have created in the mind of the Acc representative a sincere belief in the healing powers of this remedy. Yet withal he was a little incredulous the other day when told of a young man who had been cured of a very serious and deplorable disease by the use of only some two boxes of these little miracle workers. It seemed impossible that such a remarkable healing could be wrought even by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in such short order. Accordingly he was possessed of a strong desire to investigate. Mr. Winfred Schofield, of Gaspereau, was the address given us by our informant, and were not long in hunting him up. We found Mr. Schofield to be a bright young man of about twenty years of age and of more than ordinary intelli-gence. His air of candor and straight forwardness dispelled any doubts we may have had. In a very few words he stated to us his case. "Two years ago," he said, "I was taken with an attack of St. Vitus Dance. Sometimes when at work I found that my fingers would all at once straighten out and I would be compelled to drop anything I was holding. One day I was using an axe when seized with one of these attacks. The axe slipped from my nands and in falling struck my foot and gave it a nasty cut. After that you can depend upon it I left axes alone, and it was not long before I had to give up using any kind of tool. My complaint rapidly grew worse and I was soon unfitted for any sort of work. Everything possible was tried by my in order to get relief, but I got no better. At last one day a neighbor of mine, Mr. Fred Fielding who had been cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, advised me to give them a trial, offering to pay for them himself if they did not help me. As it turned out he was safe enough in mak-ing the offer. I followed his advice. Asit but had scarcely begun to use them when I began to feel very much better. After using two boxes I was perfectly cured and have never been troubled with the complaint since. I am confi-dent that to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills alone I owe my cure.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills create new blood, build up the nerves, and thus drive disease from the system. In hun-dreds of cases they have cured after all other medicines have failed, thus estabdishing the claim that they are a marvel among the triumphs of modern medical science. A Stockholm newspaper tells a story about Bismarck, for which an aged Swedish lady is the authority. Nearly 60 years ago, when a girl, she went to Berlin, where she expected to meet a cousin, then studying at the university there. This cousin appeared and proved to be a fascinating youth. For several days he was a constant escort and a charming companion. It was only when she was on the even of departure that he made the explanation: "You see, my dear cousin, I am not your cousin. My friend, your cousin, is so very busy preparing for an examination that he has asked me to take his place. My name is Otto vor. Bismarck." In 1886, when the lady made her next visit to Berlin, she called on the chancellor. to Berlin, she called on the chancellor, who remarked: "I have to thank you that I once succeeded in seeing the Berlin mu-seums. ## HUMAN NATURE.

When some people are not hungry, they are sleepy.

So many people become silly in try-ing to be funny.

After a case is lost a client does as much talking as his attorney. A man never knows how well posted his wife is on church affairs until she entertains her minister at supper.

A woman likes a man to remember what ache she had last the same as he likes her to remember how he likes his coffee.

As people grow older they begin to throw all the clothes they take off at night across their beds to keep their feet

When some people gossip, they regard their indignation at the wickedness going on in the world as a sort of reform

The Age of an Oyster. It is just as easy to tell the age of an cyster by looking at its shell as it is to ascertain the age of a horse by examining its teeth, or a tree by inspecting the circles revealed by the ax or saw when it is laid low. When the oyster is 6 months old, it is as big as a dime; when I year old, it will cover a silver half dollar, and when 2 years old, will be about the circumference of a silver

The oyster, unlike the crab, is not obliged to seek new quarters or build a new house every time he grows appresiably. The extensions that he puts on his house are clearly marked by a well defined ridge.

Oysters are esteemed to be at their best when between 4 and 5 years of age, and the planters endeavor to protect the beds for that length of time. Conscienbeds for that length of time. Conscientious oyster men—that is, men who are not inclined to kill the goose that lays the golden egg—always return to the bed oysters that are too young, but in case a patriarch is brought up, over these shall the tides of trye 8 to 12 whose shell the tides of from 8 to 12 winters and summers have ebbed and flowed, he is sent to market, where he is put at the bottom of the heap and sold with his younger and more luscious companions.—Pearson's Weekly.

There are spots in the ocean where the water is five miles deep. If it is true that the pressure of water on any body in the water is one pound to the square inch for every two feet of the depth anything at the bottom of one of the "five-nile-holes" would have a pressure about it of 13,200 pounds to every square inch. There is nothing of human manufacture that would resit a puch a pressure.

The last execution at Tyburn.

The last execution at Tyburn took place on Friday, Nov. 7, 1783, in the person of John Austin, convicted on the preceding Saturday of robbing John Spicer and cutting and wounding him in a cruel manner. In Walford's "Old and New London" it is erroneously said that "the last criminal executed here was one Ryland, who was hung (sic) for forgery in 1783." William Ryland was executed on Aug. 29, two months before the date of Austin's conviction, and many a poor wretch made the fatal pilgrimage to Tyburn in the in-

Brandon is a pretty little place containing about 5000 inhabitants, situated on the south side of the letter to the Record and have thought of that promise many times but have been so busy that I really could not find time to do so before.

I am favorably impressed with the people here so far as my short acquaintance permits me to form an opinion. They are intelligent and industrious. They appear to have much reverence for God and Winnipeg without any stops making the journey in about 42 hrs. I remained there a day or so and then came back here.

Brandon is a pretty little place containing about 5000 inhabitants, and no mistake in Manitoba and the Territories. The principal causes of the growth have been the rise in the price of wheat and beef, railway construction in British Columbia and the opening of new markets there as a result of the mineral development, the new energy displayed by the Immigration Department, and, last, but not least, the reduction of the tariff and the lowering of railway rates as part to act of the Cardston Public same size in an hour than will be seen here in a day. THE FILIPINO CABINET HAS JUST RESIGNED.

Filipinos Congress Adjourned -- Aguinaldo's Movements -Christmas Among the Troops.

Manila, Dec. 26.-The so-called congress of the revolutionary government of the Filipinos, which has been in session for some time at Malolos, has unexpectedly adjourned, owing to the difficulty of formulating a constitution. The cabinet of President Aguinaldo, appointed at Bacoor on July 15, last and named in the Bacoor proclamation issued that day, has resigned. General Aguinaldo, who had been at Malolos, came from there to Santa Anna, a suburb of Manila. He then visited Paterno, and now, it is reported, he has gone to Cavite Vieja. The old town of Cavite. Reliable advices say that while he was at Paterno he was indefatigable in his efforts to overcome the policy of the militant factions which is hostile to the United States. It is probable that his influence will avail to avert trouble. Manila, Dec. 26.—Christmas was generally observed among the United States troops here with special religious services by Protestants and Catholics alike. The services for the Colorado and Pennsylvania regiments were conducted by Chaplain Harris. General Aguinaldo, who had been

United States Troops and Craiser Baltimore Sent to Iloilo.

Washington, Dec. 26 .- The admin-Washington, Dec. 26.— The administration has taken steps to safeguard United States interests at Ilolo, in the island of Panay, one of the Philippine archipelago, and a military and naval expedition is now on its way there from Manila. Cable advices were received here to-day from General Otis, commanding the military forces in the Philippines, and Admiral Dewey, commanding the maval forces there, showing that they are acting in concert in the matter. General Otis reported that he had dispatched two regiments and a batare acting in concert in the matter. General Otls reported that he and dispatched two regiments and a battery of artillery to Hollo on army transports and Admiral Dewey notified the navy department that the cruiser Baltimore had sailed. From Manila for the same place, It is explained that these officers are acting upon their own discretion in the matter, and that no official advices have been received here to indicate that there is any unusual lawlessness at Hollo. Several days ago it was reported, by way of Madrid, that the Spanish forces in Hollo had been attacked by the insurgents and had action them back with heavy loss, one time they can be made with heavy loss. our time back with heavy loss, attended in the confirmation. The United States expedition is more in the nature of a precaution but will take active measures for the suppression of lawlessness in case the condition of affairs requires it.

New York, Dec. 27.—A dispatch to the Herald from Paris says: The duel with swords between Max Regis, mayor of Algiera, and M. L'pic, one of the editors of the Les Droits De L'Homme, took place at 5 o'clock this morning at Hueaux. Max Regis attacked his op-ponent with fury and M. Lepic de-fended himself with energy. Six rounds were fought and then the two combat ants were so played out that the duel had to be brought to an end.

The mighty thrill that had stirred his pulses as he saw her kneeling, with her golden head bowed, on the cold, hard stones outside of the closed gates, crying out she would rather die than face the pitiless world—the mighty thrill that had stirred his pulses and bade him care for her—instead of pity, as he thought it then, was love. Love, too, that had prompted him to follow her tonight down to the river, to give his life, if need be, to save her. Love that bemoaned her loss, and cried out to him that his life was ruined and blade.

not live without him, and had died, too, believing he had willfully deserted her. Ah! If she had but known just how that terrible affair came about.

Again Vivian broke in upon his perturbed thoughts.

"You do not speak! You do not attempt to deny it!" she cried, shrllly. "I believe you did love the girl, or you would never, never have asked her to marry you that night of the ball; and if that be true, I glory in the fact that you are parted from her—that she is dead!"

Great heaven! how the cruel words smote him! and in that moment he loathed Vivian more intensely than he loathed Vivian more intensely than he loathed Vivian more intensely than he had ever loved her.

"As the case now stands, Vivian," he said, coldly, "I release you from your engagement, realizing under what circumstances it was made."
"But supposing I do not wish to be released,," she said, slowly.
"We can never be anything to cach other in the future," he answered, firmly. "All is over between us, Vivian; we must part forever."

the startling story Vivian related so incoherently to her can better be imagined than described.

She sought out her son at once. He was still pacing to and fro under the beeches in the garden.

"Frederick," she whispered approaching him, and taking his cold hands in her own, "you must not give way to grief like this. Under the circumstances, you are blameless." That accident, and the delirious fever which followed it, completely obliterated all knowledge of your waiting bride from your mind. The fault lay with Doris herself. When she came here, why did she not tell me all, instead of creeping into the house by stealth, and in disguise? Or why did she not confront you, and demand to know why yet descreted her? Then matters caved have been righted."

"She was so young, mother, she did not know what to do under the complicated circumstances. She believed, of course, that I was false to her," he groaned.

"You married this girl on the spur of the moment, my boy, even at the time you did not love her—you loved Vivian. She was puzzled by the strange look that crossed his face, leaving it paler

Every effort was made to find poor
Doris's body, but to no avail.

If she lay beneath the water, the sunlit waves kept their own secret well. The disappearance of Mrs. Thornton's companion created no excitement whatever.
No one missed her, no one took any interest to know what had become of her; and thus days lengthened into weary months. At last society was beginning to wonder why the marriage between Vivian Courtney, the heiress, and Fred-erick Thornton, the banker's son, did not take place.

Since the night of the ball many had noticed a sudden and growing coldness

No one knew that, seeing Vivian in her true light—on that fatal night she had boldly declared her hatred of poor, hapless little Doris—the last remnant of hapless little Doris—the last remnant of Frederick Thornton's love for her had been turned in a loatning.

He no longer The loatning.

He no longer The loatning was loaded it. Whole hours he spent by the deep, dark, treacherous water, his face buried in his hands, groaming aloud. It was too late now for vain regrets. His heart had gone out to poor little Doris too late.

No one knew how he mourned in secret for the bride he had lost so strangely.

strangely.

To Vivian Courtney this strange re vulsion on the part of her lover was maddening. In visin she tried to woo him back to his allegiance; but the golden spell of love was broken. He shrank from her. The dead coals of the old love were never again to be re-kindled in his heart.

Yet Vivian Courtney would not be discouraged. Even to herself she would not admit the alarming truth that Frederick Thornton's heart had grown cold to her. One afternoon matters came to a crisis.

with me, I'rederick," she said. "I have something to say to you."

Very reluctantly he complied, rather dreading a tete-a-tete with the willful beauty, and a shade of annoyance crossed his face which she was not slow in perceiving. For some distance they rode in silence—a silence broken only by the twittering of the bids in the trees overhead, or the drowsy hum of the bees amid the sweet pink clover.

At length the silence became irksome to Vivian. She clutched the reins tightly with her little, white, ungloved hands; and looking down he noticed that she still wore his engagement ring.

She saw the glance, and a deep flush, followed by a quick pailor, spread over her face.

followed by a quick panor, spread over her face.

"Frederick," she said, in a low, vibrating voice, "it is about this ring I wish to speak to you. Do you still mean what you said on the night of the ball?" It hurt her pride cruelly to utter those words, but she must know. Her love—her whole future—was at stake. He tried to overcome his embarrassment at the question, but it was a fail-

are. He looked greatly distressed. He ure. He looked greatly distressed. He was a thorough gentleman in word and deed. How could be tell her that his heart had changed toward her since the evening she had expressed herself so freely in regard to poor little Doris's death? How he hated the ungracious words he must speak; yet it must be done. He must speak plainly to her. The words he must utter: "I have ceased to love you," seemed to him most unmanly; yet the sooner they understood each other the better it would be for them both.

In the gentlest words he could com-

In the gentlest words he could comand, he told her that the engagement they had entered into should never have existed, owing to the fact that at that time, he was not free to woo and win any young girl's heart, and he begged her to remember the accident which had befallen him, followed by brain fever,which had obliterated from his mind all knowledge of his bride, who awaited all knowledge of his bride, who awaited his return.

"No, no, Vivian," he went on, "do not consider your promise binding, for I do not. You are as free as air."

The words died away on his lips as he saw the marble white pallor of the girl's face. Her eyes glowed like purple fires, and her breast heaved convulsively.

"You have no heart, or you would not break with me!" she sobbed. "All the world will know that I am a victim to the fickleness of a man's love!" she cried "You did love me once, Frederick," she went on, pathetically, "and you would have been mine but for that girl who came between us, and I hate her for it; yes, hate her in her grave, for I believe in one mad moment, as she stood before you, pleading her cause that night, your love turned from me to her. Is it not so?" she panted.

He was too honorable to deny the truth, and he bowed his head in assent.

Again Vivian laid aside her pride, and turned to him.

"Is it too late, now that she is dead,

"Is it too late, now that she is dead, to care—for me—ngain?" she faltered.

He could not help feeling touched with pity and distress for the humiliation it must have cost this proud girl to speak such words as these.

"If you ever marry I—I shall despise the woman who wins your love," she cried, bitterly; "I will be her cruelest enemy, and yours, till the day I die." "Calm yourself, Vivian," he answered, gently, taking her burning hands in his; "I shall never marry—never."

"You will wreck your life and mine for a foolish vagary," she cried, bitterly.

"Doris is dead—why can you not forget her, Frederick?" she cried, with a spasm of pain in her voice. "Pause and think before you give up such a deathless love

He shook his head with a sad gesture.

"Shall we turn back?" she asked, in a cold, constrained voice, that sounded cold, constrained voice, that sounded scarcely human.

"Yes," he answered, gently.

Not a word was uttered during that long drive homeward. Vivian's face was white as death, but with a firm hand she held the reins.

Before alighting from the vehicle, he held out his hand to her:—

"We can at least be friends, Vivian," he said, appealingly.

Vivian Courtney never saw the green, waving fields, the white, pobbled road, and the daisy-starred meadows as she drove slowly homeward. Vivian was in a whirt of emotion; she was trying to picture what life would be without-him. "Oh my love!" she sobbed, "will you never care for me? Shall I wait for you all my life long? Shali I call, and hear but the echo of my own voice? Shall I love you year after year, and be no nearer

She vowed that she would win his love—or no other woman should—that her beauty, and the gifts nature had lavished upon her, should all be used for lavished upon her, should all be used for this one purpose. Even as she had had undying love, so she would have undy-ing patience. She would never weary; she would bear all his coldness with gentleness, but she would win him in the end; it might be long years, but she would win his love, or no other woman should.

Over and over she repeated those words vehemently to herself, until that one idea was the one purpose of her life. The next day society was considerably shocked by the announcement that the engagement between handsome Frederick Thornton and Vivian Courtney, the beautiful heiress, was broken.

Vivian's father heard the report confirmed by his daughter's lips, with a face white with rage.

firmed by his daughter's lips, with a face white with rage.

"He has gone too far with this matter to draw back now. Vivian," he cried. "He must—he shall live up to every letter of his agreement, or he will answer to me, your father, for it."

In all her life Vivian had never seen her father so terribly moved, or worked up into such a terrible passion.

Vivian drove up to the villa in her village-cart and called for Frederick.

"I should like you to ride a little way with me, Frederick," she said. "I have something to say to you."

Very reluctantly he complied, rather ing his arm in the wildest alarm.
"I am going to see that he marries you this very day, according to contract—or gives me satisfaction!" he thundered.

CHAPTER XXI.-DISOWNED.

We must now return to Doris and the fatal moment in which she plunged mad-ly from the rocks down into the swirling water below.

The contact with the water brought Doris to her senses and the realization that she had no right to take the life God had given her. When she rose to the surface, it was in the dark, dense shadows of the willows that fringed the hank.

At length consciousness, returned to her. For a moment she was stunned, bewildered. Then the low wash of the river as it laved the banks brought a remembrance of what had transpired to her and how she came to be lying there.

Doris struggled to her feet and stood irresolute for a mom nt in the path rresolute for a mom nt in the path. Where should she go? Which way should where should she go? which way should she turn? "It does not matter much," she murmured, and again she turned her white, despairing face to the great city. "Cast adrift again on the streets of New York," she moaned. "Ah! well, I

The light broke, the sun rose, and another day was begun in the bustling city of New York, toward which poor, beautiful, hapless Doris, the child of fate, had turned her steps.

The same sun which had crossed the zenith was shining just then upon a strange scene which was transpiring in the far-off village of Beech Grove on the Chesapeake.

"As we draw near the seminary gates, my heart beats so tumultuously, I almost fear it will break, Hulbert," she said, smiling through her tears.

"Joy never kills, my dear Dora," he refiled. "Calm yourself, darling."

"How can you talk of being calm, Hulbert," she cried, "when I have been looking forward to this moment for nearly eighteen years? It has haunted me in my dreams, been ever present in my waking hours. ## The Startling Incident That Ended

"I can't tell any story of big sums staked and lost, nor of any great hands made on freak draws, but I can tell you a true story of why I haven't touched a card in the past 14 years, and why, if I should live to be as old as Methusaleh, I will never play again," said Mr. George O Summers. "You often hear men say they are going to quit, but they never do." I took no vow, made no promise to abstain, but ever since a certain evening in the year. 1884 card playing bas had no charm for me.
"A party of us had gathered in a for me.

"A party of us had gathered in a friend's room, and the expectation was that it would be a long session, for most of us were poker flends and, win or lose, would stay till the game broke up. In the crowd was a delicate young fellow, and it happened that along about 3 o'clock a. m. he was a couple of hundred dollars winner. We had started in at 6 the previous evening, and it was evident that nine ner. We had started in at 6 the previous evening, and it was evident that nine hours of play had tired him completely out; but, being dead game, he didn't want to quit, especially as he was ahead. Seeing he was undergoing punishment, I suggested that it was time to quit. A vigorous protest at once came from the losers.

"But our friend here is fagged out, I said, and as it is almost day we can adjourn and resume another time." Then the others appealed to the young fellow, and with great cheerfulness he answered: 'Yes, I'm willing to play on as long as I can sit in my chair. In fact, I'm willing to agree to play till somebody drops dead.
"He meant it as a jest, but scarcely had he uttered the words than I saw him turn ghastly pale. His head fell forward, and before any one could reach out to catch him he had fallen to the floor insensible. The whole party was for a moment overcome with terror, and then we set to work to revive him. He had only fainted from to revive him. He had only fainted from to revive him. He had only fainted from weakness, and yet the incident was so tragic in its nature that I could not have been more impressed by it if he had actu-ally dropped dead. And that is why all the fascination of poker completely left

Peace Presents Opportunities No Less

The sharp October air had brough the crimson to the leaves and had brought back to the city again the fair maid that Algernon George Towne had paid court to on Valentine's day ere she had flown to Old Point, there to preen her wings for northern flight when summer had come.

He had permitted her to be in town for two days before he called upon her.
"Ah, Mr. Towne!" she uttered and twittered when he appeared before her.

"Really, I am delighted to see you."

"Thank you," he said, with a wild beating at his heart. "What is a delight to you is an ecstasy, a rhapsody, known and most progressive citizens of Dunnville, Ont., gives the following description of her recent experience in the use of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills:

"I took Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills for weak nerves, dizziness, palpitation of the heart, smothering spells at night and sleeplessness. Before I used them I could not get restful sleep, and my nerves were often so unstrung that I would start in alarm at the least noise, and easily worried.

"Last February I commenced taking this valueble medicine, and it proved the right remedy for my weak and shattered nervous system. Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills restored my nerves to a strong and healthy condition, gave regular and normal action of the heart.

A BIG STORM.

THE IRISH CHANNEL SWEPT BY 'A HOWLING GALE.

Many Wrecks Reported-Paris Flooded by the Bursting of a Main Sewer.

London, Jan. 2.-A fearful gale is sweeping the Irish Channel, and the seas are terrific. The Holyhead harbor is full of shipping, and some of the vessels have dragged their anchors and gone ashore. There are numerous wrecks along the coast. At midnight, says a dispatch from Holyead, the storm continues to rage. The Holyhead lifeboat has rescued the crew of three small vessels.

Paris, Jan. 2.—The heavy rains of the past thirty-six hours burst the main sewer at Bievres, five miles south of Versailles to-day, causing a landof versames to day, the new works of the Orleans Railway terminus. The workmen fortunately escaped, but their carts suddenly disappeared under six feet of water, while the engine and foundations collapsed. Much alarm is feit throughout Paris this evening, because the disaster reveals the overflow of the subterranean river Bievre, an affluent of the Seine. In the Avenue De l'Opera the water has risen to the level of the pavement, and it is feared that the foundations of the exposition buildings are endangered. The gale has caused much damage in Paris, destroying palisadings and fragile structures. slide and flooding the new works of

MR. DINGLEY IMPROVING.

Washington, Jan. 2. - The slight improvement in the condition of Representative Dingley, of Maine, noted this morning, continued during the day and to-night his family are hepeday and to-night his family are hepe-ful that the change for the better is permanent. The fever has been elightly reduced and the pulse is a little stronger. One of the attending physicians said to-night he believed the patient now had a chance to re-cover. His condition, however, re-mains critical.

A Dying Kace.

Vancouver, Jan. 2. Just as some people say the North American Indians are a doomed race so in Australia they declare that the aboriginals are fast disappearing off the face of the earth. Latest census returns show how quickly the Blacks are falling off. There are 3,230 full bloods, and 3,661 half castes, and each represents a total decrease for this nast year of 194, of which only two represents the decrease in half castes, the full bloods being fewer by 192. Deaths of the latter exceed the births by 67, while the half castes show 105 more births than deaths, the total births being, full bloods, 77, half castes, 160, respectively. Comparing the figures with those for the year a882, when the first census was taken, the return showed that there we ethen 6,540 full bloods as against 3,230 now, while the half castes have increase of 206 of the first name I and an average annual decrease of 206 of the first name I and an average annual increase of 80 half castes. A court martial was held at Sydney recently to inquire into the grounding of H. M. S. Mildra at New Hebrides. The accused were Captain Leah. T. J. Olcham, who was acting as navigating efficer at the time of the actient. Accraing to the evidence it appears that the Mildra was anchored off Man I-land and when the anothor was tripped a strong current carried her on to a reel before there was bloods, and 3,661 half castes, and ed off Mar Island and when the anonon-was tripped a strong current car-ried her on to a reel before there was sufficient sterrige way on. The find-ing of the court was that Captain Leah be reprimanded and that Lieut. Oldhim be acquitted.

"Now, after all these years, death has dissolved these bonds which bound us to secrecy, and we can acknowledge the marriage which was solemnized eighteen years ago at last."

marriage which was solemnized eighteen years ago at last."

"And, hurrying here, we find the old nurse passed away two months ago," sighed Mrs. Brandon. "That is why her letters ceased to come. But we will speak no more of the sad topic. What a joyful future we will have, Hulbert. We will take our daughter to our beautiful home, and surround her with every luxury wealth can purchase and love lavish upon her. How well we shall love her to make up for these long years of enforced separation. Little Doris will be quite an helress, too—heiress to a milquite an helress, too—heiress to a million. Hulbert Brandon pressed his wife's hand. At that moment the carriage turned an abrupt curve in the steep road, and the towers and gables of the grim stone building, with the gilt letters, "Madame Delmar's Seminary," burst upon their view.

The lady trembled with agitation as Madame Delmar walked down the stairs with a feeling of curiosity.

'Why did they not send up their cards?' she wondered.

Opening the door and entering with a stately mien, she found herself in the presence of her visitors.

She took in at a glance the clegance and quality of the lady's apparel—the diamonds that sparkled like suns, that depended from her shell-like ears and on her dainty white hands. Madame Delmar saw that the gentleman was stately and of commanding presence—evidently a therough gentleman, and wealthy.

The wife was looking into madame's face, her own face turning from red to

They both saw Madame Delmar's face

They both saw Madame Delmar's face turn from red to white, then deepen into a dull gray. How could she tell thems. How dare she face them and tell them that, less than two months ago, she had driven the poor, homeless, friendless girl from her door—driven her forth in the storm and darkness of the terrible night, to live or to die, as God saw fit? Closed her doors against poor, helpless, hapless Doris, and forced her to face the cruel world? She had the grace face the cruel world? She had the grad to feel ashamed. A terrible fear seized her as to the punishment that might be inflicted upon her when they discovered what she had done.

Warring and tyrannizing over a helpless, lone girl was one thing, and answer ing to a stern, outraged father for thos offences was quite another matter offences was quite another matter.
Words seemed to die on her lips.
"You do not answer, madame," cried

"You do not answer, madame," cried; Hulbert Frandon, springing forward. "Is Doris ill? Has anything hefallen our child? For the love of heaven, speak, I implore you! See, my wife is almost fainting with anxiety!"

"I—I suppose I must speak sooner or later," faltered madame, huskily, hiding, her ghastly face in her shaking fands."
"The and be prepared for a hitter blow."

"Try and be prepared for a bitter blow."

Mrs. Brandon reeled and fell backward, unconscious in her husband's arms. Thus she was saved from hearing, the cruel falsehood that fell so glibly from Madame Delmar's lips.

"In heaven's name speak!' cried Mr.
Brandon, hoarsely. "Suspense is killing me_I cannot endure it. What of Doris?"
"She is not here. She is gone!" mut-

"She left the seminar, two months ago, stole away at midnight under the cover of darkness. She eloped with some one. Whom, or where they met or went, I know not. That is all I can tell you. I am sorry for you, sir. I always loved Doris, dear—sweet little Doris."

"Oh, my God! my God!" groaned the unhappy father, "have we returned for this! It will kill my poor wife. It would be better if the girl had died in her infancy. From this hour I disown her. Henceforth I have ne daughter. I will not search for her. Let the girl follow the path she has chosen."

CHAPTER XXII .- AN ADVENTURE.

Madame Delmar, the dignified principal of the young ladies' seminary, felt considerably perturbed at the strange turn affairs were taking. After her visitors had taken their leave she quickly sought her brother and told him the whole story.

sought her brother and told him the whole story.

"If the girl had been here they might have settled a handsome annuity on me for life for providing for her," she groaned. "Yes, by sending her away I have lost a little fortune. Was there ever such an unlucky contretemps?"

"It serves you right, I should say," replied John Delman, "for turnings poor little Doris away from home in the bitter storm that night."

"Who would have supposed, after all little Doris away from home in the bitter storm that night."

"Who would have supposed, after all these long years, her parents would have claimed her, and that the creature I had aways looked upon as a dependent and a burden—born to be my especial cross—was, in reality, a millionaire's daughter, heiress to a-million of money? Oh, dear, if I had but known that! I would give the world to find Doris again, the poor, dear gir!! 1—I—am afraid I was a little too harsh with her, John. I never meant to turn her from our door out into the cold world that stormy night. I only meant to frighten her into explaining where she had been. I never thought she would take me at my word and go. Oh, dear! of learn if I could but find her."

"You can never tell when you are entertaining an angel unawares," said John, bluntly. "The poor child had a hard enough life of it here. She was a girl of spirit. I wonder little Doris did not rebel long before; you were so cross, so cruel, with the child."

"I meant only to discipline the girl properly," faltered madame, her florid face flushed guiltily. "One must be very strict to keep up the reputation of a fashionable seminary for young laddes."

"There ought to be a line drawn somewhere between severity and strictness," declared John, emphatically.

declared John, emphatically.

"Would you really care to see little Doris again?" he asked, abruptly, eying madame curiously.

She started to her fect, forgetting her usual calm demeanor, her face turning from white to red in her great excitement.

"Do you know where she is, John?"
she asked, quickly. "There is something you are trying to keep back from me—something you are trying to hide from me," she declared. "I see it in your face."

It is fortunate that I do know where "It is fortunate that I do know where she is, that I may restore her to her parents," answered John Delmar, gravely.

Madame Delmar was too astonished—too amazed—for words. She listened like one dumbfounded while her brother related that pitiful story of how he had followed poor little Doris out into the storm, begging her to return, and how she had persistently refused.

"Madame has turned me from her door," she sobbed, "and never again will I willingly cross her threshold." And, finding all remonstrance useless, how he had at length given Doris a letter to the Granvilles in New York, and she had gone on there.

"I shall go to New York at once and fotch her back," declared madame; and, without delay, she put her decision into

Meanwhile, Mr. Brandon and his heart-sick wife had returned to their elegant villa, on the banks of the St. Lawrence. But, from the hour in which they turned from Madame Delmar's seminary, Mrs. Brandon had grown rapidly ill—a brain fever had resulted from the horrible shock, and the deep, keen, bitselfield. laughter from the seminary while she was on her way to claim her, after long

The bereaved father asked God to pardon him for the rash vow he had uttered against his fair young daughter in the bitter anger of the moment.

He made strenuous efforts to find her; still it was all to no purpose; if the earth had epened and swallowed her, she could not have been more completely lost to the world. And, lying on her sick bad, the poor mother turned her face to the wall, refusing to be comforted.

Mr. Brandon was in despair.

Mr. Brandon was in despair. He quite believed they would never be able to find Doris; but he never expressed

He was picked un in a fatal condition, and was barely able to make his will in favor of his long lost and missing daughter Doris before death and missing daughter Doris before death claimed him. Then it was discovered that the gentleman, known as plain Mr. Hulbert Brandon, was, in reality, Hulbert Brandon Fielding, son of the late Lord Fielding, of Loam Abbey, England. Dr. Lancaster, of New York city, was named executor of the will. It was well the doctor knew the sad history of Lord Fielding's son; how he had returned with his wife, after long years of absence, to find his child, and the hard experi-

"Of course, I will do my best to find tiss Fielding, the missing helress," said the doctor, thoughtfully, as he stroked leisurely down Broadway one morhing, "but I fear very much it will be a ratient work of years."

"It would be very fortunate if the young girl is modest and well-manner-ed," said the doctor's wife to her husband one day, "and more fortunate still if our son Karl would fall in love with her."

"Heaven forbid!" groaned the doctor.

"By all I can learn of her history from Madame Delmar, the very estimable principal of the seminary where shapassed her early life, she is a regular tartar, quite a barbarian, in fact, and she capped the climax by willfully eloping with some one from boarding-school No doubt it is some shiftless vagabone whom the girl has fallen in love with and married."

and married."

"She is heiress to a million!" sighed the doctor's wife, "and I should have liked our Karl to marry an heiress."

"There's time enough yet," declared the doctor. "He is only twenty-four now. Men would be better off if they did not marry until thirty."

Meanwhile, fate had destined long since that the doctor's handsome son and Doris should meet. In explaining how it occurred, we must go back to Doris, and that night on which she had left Thornton Villa forever turning her face toward the crowded streets of New York.

Hour after hour Doris traversed the sunlit streets sick at heart, and discouraged, as many a young girl has been before her. Suddenly a thought struck

Doris remembered the address, but it was so far up town that she would have to take a car to reach it.

As she stepped upon the platform the car gave a sudden lurch forward, precipitating Doris to the crosswalk. The greatiron wheel would have passed over the tiny foot that fell within a hair's breadth of it, and crushed it, if it had not been for the timely assistance of a young man, fortunately close at hand, who sprang forward as in an instant of time, that seemed an eternity to the horror-stricken, paralyzed spectators, and succeeded in rescuing the lovely young girl from her perilous position. perilous position.

And he called a passing cab as he spoke, and despite Dories incoherent protestations, lifted her in his strong arms_as easily as though she were a little child, placed her on the soft cushion, and took his seat beside her.

"Now, if you will give the driver your number, please," he said, "we will soon have you with your friends."

"I—I tried to explain 'hefore, but, sir, you would not listen," sobbed Doris, in the keenest of embarrassment. "I—I am a stranger in New York. I have no relatives, no friends here. BETTER THAN MEDICINE.

An Experience That Nerved One Woman to Cheat Death.

The experience of those who have enraged in hospitals is happily not with the tragedy of human suffering alone. Where are times when they get glimpses of the comedy of life and when laughter holding comedy of life and when laughter holding both his sides takes the place of gloom and sorrow. A woman had been brought to the hospital in a very weak state. We could do nothing for her. She seemed to have lost all hold on life and gradually got worse and worse. The husband, who had often been to see her, and who was kindness itself to her, was sent for to take the last sad leave.

Well, old woman," the man began, slouching up to the bed with an apologetic air which he had never worn before, "you're got to go this time. The young woman (pointing to me) says there ain't no hope. You have been a good wife to me, and I shan't force you."

When the late John Morrissey saw a "bad man," a gambler who had threatened to shoot him on sight, standing at the bar of the Grand Union in Saratoga, he walked up to the bar quite close to him, poured out a tumbler of ice water, drank it and walked out without once looking at the man. "In a case of that kind," said John in the hoarse whisper peculiar to him, "I always think it best to come straight to the front."

So it was with Bismarck, and John was a bit of a Bismarck in his way, while the prince in his younger days was gifted with tremendous physique and a readiness to "box without the muffle," He gave a fearful, threshing once in a Barlin beer fearful, threshing once in a Barlin beer "box without the mulle." Cranbrook, B. C., Dec. 24.-The Crow's Nest Railway, now opened for freight and passenger traffic, has ushered in a "growing time" for the Territories and southern British Columbia. Coming from the east it is reached by Medicine Hat to Lethbridge, the initial point. Medicine Hat, a smart town of 1,800 ing ready in other ways for the rush. Over 4,000 head of cattle and 6,000 sheep have been shipped this year from the Medicine Hat district, which extends to Stair on the west and Walsh on the east: and a considerable German colony has been founded at Josephsburg in the Cypress Hills. Lethbridge is also "booming." The Galt colliery is demand in Manitoba and Montana having increased. The Mormon Colony. By June there will be a Mormon population at Cardston and its off-shoots of 2,560 souls. To tell the truth, the Centile settler is not fond of the Mormons. Like those of Israel who sealed the covenant, tal length from north to south of the Mormons have "entered into a curse and into an oath to walk in God's law," as they understand it, 100,100 square miles and make up their minds "not to It is more particular give our daughters unto the people of the land, nor take their daughters for our sons." That they do of the land, nor take their daughters for our sons." That they do not intermarry with the Gentlles is not regarded as a grievance by the Gentiles. Mr. Card, Mr. J. W. Taylor. Mr. Snow and the other Mormon leaders generally, are highly intelligent men, but the rank and file appear dull by comparison with the hustling Gentile settler. It is difficult to ascertain from the average Mormon layman just what his creed is. If you ply him with questions he dodges, like the charcoal burner who was being beckled by the devil in the French story, by saying that he believes exactly what the church believes.

However we need it as an assurance fund, and are trying to gain this needful advantage as fast as our strength will allow without contracting with that cruel master debt.

Our climate will rank well with that of Cache valley, Utah, but not so dry in summer with but little, snow in the winter. In fact, we swagons at least eleven months in the year. We can never depend upon the sleighing only a few days at a time, for the "Chinook" winds melt the snow every few days during the winter. Our summers are not unusually warm, for we are often visited by the breezes froin the great Pacific ocean, which not only modify the heat in summer, but the elements in winter to that extent that our etild spells are objected to a spell of the country abounds with coal that crops out of the ground in many places.

CHAPTER XXIII. - THE MISSING HEIRESS.

"No, no," repeated Doris, vehemently,
"I cannot accept any favor from a stranger's hands. It would not be right."

Fate decreed that it should be otherwise, however; for at that moment overcome by the pain of the swollen ankle, Doris suddenly fell backward against the cushions in a deep swoon.

Mr. Lancaster immediately gave the order to No.— West Twenty-third street.
This was a fashionable up-town boardinghouse, and to the landlady, Mrs. Morgan,
Dr. Lancaster's son was well known.

She was sitting at the window when the coach stopped before her door. She looked with amazement as the door of the vehicle was suddenly flung open, and Mr. Lancaster stepped to the pavement bearing the unconscious figure of a young girl in his arms. What could it possibly mean? She admitted him herself.

In a few brief words, as he laid his unconscious burden down upon the sofa, Karl told Mrs. Morgan how he had met the lovely young stranger, and rescued her from being crippled for life—but that the violent fall to the pavement had injured her ankle, however.

With Mrs. Morgan's assistance, the swollen ankle was soon attended to.
It was not as bad as he had at first supposed; still it would necessitate the fair patient's keeping her room for a fortwicht at least night at least.

"And you want me to keep her here until she is able to be about?" asked Mrs. Morgan, dubiously. "I would do anything in the world for you or your family, Karl, for your father's skill saved my child's life once—I never forget that; but I feel a little reluctant about taking in this stranger. You should have taken her to the hospital."

Karl could not bear the thought, somehow. night at least.

how.
"She is so fair, so fragile and delicate,

t seems a pity to send her there.'

While they had been speaking, Mrs.

Morgan had been vigorously applying Mergan had been vigorously applying cold water, to which a few drops of ammonia had been added, to the patient's face to revive her from her protracted swoon. Her face, hands and hair were bathed and rubbed briskly to start the circulation of blood, when lo! a strange thing happened under the strong action of the ammonia.

The dark stain commenced to quickly disappear from both face and hair.

of the ammonia.

The dark stain commenced to quickly disappear from both face and hair.

Mrs. Morgan called Karl to her side with a cry of dismay.

"Look, Mr. Lancaster!" she cried.

"The girl is disguised! She is fair as a lily—not dark!"

Karl's amazement was certainly as great as her own. They looked at each other in silence and dismay.

"There is some dark mystery here, depend upon it," declared Mrs. Morgan, emphatically. "No young woman who lives an honest, straightforward life has anything to conceal. This girl may be a thief, an impostor, or worse. I am sorry I took her in. I shall never know a moment's peace, with watching her night and day, while she is under this roof. She must be taken away."

"I cannot bring suyself to believe that there is anything wrong about her," declared Karl, impulsively. "I really cannot."

Mrs. Morgan looked at him sharply.

Mrs. Morgan looked at him sharply.
"I should say her pretty face has bewitched you, Mr. Lancaster."
She little dreamed how near the truth

these words were.

"As I said before, out of the house she goes to morrow, Mr. Karl. I am sorry for her; but I cannot have her here. She must be taken to the hospi-"I will call to-morrow, then, and se not be moved. A high fever set in, and her condition was quite alarming. In a week's time, however, the fever had abated, and the danger was past. But in those few days Karl had been

And in these days Karl had learned to love the beautiful stranger with all the ardor of his nature. She was his first and only love—and first love is the sweetest dream of life.

At the end of the week, again Mrs.

Morgan insisted upon having the lovely

At the end of the week, again Mrs. Morgan insisted upon having the lovely young stranger removed.

Though weak, Doris was conscious. She had refused to divulge her name to Mrs. Morgan, saying simply, "Call me Doris; only that. More I cannot tell you. I am very unhappy. No young girl has suffered more than I have in this world, and more unjustly." world, and more unjustly.

One day, when Karl called, he found Doris's eyes heavy with unshed tears, and he felt then that Mrs. Morgan must have spoken to Doris about wanting ner apartment.

"I am going to leave you to-day, Mr. Lancaster," she said, holding out a mite of a slim, white hand to him. "You have been very kind to me. I shall never forget what you have done for me. I can never repay you for it, save by my most heartfelt gratitude."

"But where are you going?" he asked, earnestly. "You are too weak and ill to face the world. What will you do?"

"I do not know," responded Doris, drearily.

In a moment handsome, impulsive Karl was beside her.

In a moment handsome, impulsive Karl was beside her.

"Let me tell you what to do," he cried, eagerly. "Marry me. I love you. When I first looked upon your face I said to myself: She, and no other, shall be my bride if I can win her. Our acquaintance has not been long, still, it has been long enough for me to know. If I lost you, life would not be worth the living. Yes, I love you with all the deep, earnest affection of a heart that has never throbbed with love for any woman before. Marry me, and let me take you to my father's home, and present you to him and to my mother as my cherished bride. My life will be devoted to you. You shall never know one wish unfulfilled."

"Stop! stop!" gasped Doris, incoher ently, as she endeavored to check the torrent of his impassioned words. "Do not, I pray you, speak so to me. It can never be. I—I am sorry, for you have een so kind to me. While I am mest rateful to you, I repeat that I can ever, never marry you."

The young man started to his feet, The young man started to his feet, dropped the little hand he held, and looked at her. Never had she appeared so fatally lovely to him, as in this moment in which she told him she never could be his.

"Tell me," he cried, approaching a step nearer to her, his face paliag, "is my cause hopeless?" Do you love any one else?"

'Yes," she said, simply, "I love an-

"Yes," she said, simply, "I love another, and love as hopelessly as you love me. For that reason my heart aches with the keenest sympathy for you. You must learn to forget me, Mr. Lancaster." "It will be hard for me," he said, gently. "I have learned to love you so well. If you were to ask me for my life at this moment I would give it to you; and if you ever want a friend, remember my words. I will give my life to serve you"

"Thank you," she faltered. "If the time should come when I want you, I shall not forget."

"You will, at least, give me your full name?" he said, sadly. "It is cruel to know you only as Doris."

"Then know me as Doris Brandon," she murmured.

The name had a strangely familiar sound to it, but he was too much perturbed just then to think of it.

"If I knew you were going to home

His father was in the library, Kar paused on the threshold as his father called his name.

"Still poring over those papers, father?"

"Still poring over those papers, father?" he asked, as he drew up a chair to the table. "I have advised you, in my opinion, the only way to find this long-lost heiress, Miss Fielding, is to advertise in all the leading papers for information concerning her."

"Many an adventuress, tempted by so magnificent a fortune, might respond," declared the doctor. 'No; I prefer to go about it in a more methodical way, by tracing Miss Fielding, or Miss Brandon—Miss Doris Brandon, the name she was called three by—from the school she—"

In a flash Karl Lancaster had sprung

In a flash Karl Lancaster had sprung to his feet.
"Doris Brandon!" he gasped. "Great heaven! am I mad, or do I dream?" In an instant he had selzed his hat and rushed from the house.

Dr. Lancaster stared after his son's rapidly vanishing form in the greatest astonishment.

"I cannot think what is getting over the bear of late." he mused the boy of late," he mused. "Now, why should he start off in that abrupt fashion?"

Meanwhile Karl had hailed a passing

Meanwhile Karl had hailed a passing coupe and sprang into it.

The man whipped up his horses, and the vehicle fairly flew down the avenue, but to the impatient young man it seemed to fairly creep along.

"Doris Brandon!" he cried, hoarsely.
"Heaven! how strange it is that thename did not strike me as the one by which Mr. Hulbert Brandon Fielding's long-lost heiress was known by, while at long-lost heiress was known by while at boarding-school! And her face! Ah! there could be no mistaking the lovely childish face, framed in its rings of soft golden curls, so like the face of Mr. Brandon's wife, only younger, sweeter,

There remained no doubt in his mind but what Doris was the long-lost heiress for whom his father was searching so

A moment later the coach drew up in front of Mrs. Morgan's -boarding-house.

In a flash Karl was up the steps, and the vigorous peal of the bell brought the landlady herself to the door.

"What! Is it you back so soon again, Mr. Lancaster?" she said, looking curiously into the flushed, eager, handsome face.

"Yes!" he answered, impetuously. "I "You are too late, Mr. Lancaster," she replied. "Doris is gone. She left the house about twenty minutes ago. Gone! The word smote him like a blow. Gone! He could scarcely believe he had heard aright.

CHAPTER XXIV.-THE GYPSY

GIRL.

Since the night of the sad tragedy Frederick Thornton was a changed man He grew morose and silent, spending his shut up in the library, or whole s by the river bank, gazing thought time shut up in the library, or whole hours by the river bank, gazing thoughtfully, and with bitter regret, on the sunlit water, beneath which he believed Doris lay in all her sweet, young beauty. The discovery of Vivlan's true disposition, beneath that mask of smiles, had been a severe shock to him; his whole soul revolted at the thought of marrying her revy.

He concluded to leave home for awhile And seek such solace as a life of travel would bring him, and forget, as far as he could, the sweet, fair face of the lovely young bride whom he had won only to lose on their bridal day.

One morning, coming down to breakfast a little earlier than usual, Mrs.

Thornton saw her son standing buried

"Mother," he called, wheeling suddenly about, "will you see that a few necessary articles are packed up in my valise with as little delay as possible? I am going away for a few months."

Mrs. Thornton trembled. This was an annocked-for procedure. In vain she pleaded, coaxed and argued with her handsome son. He was inexorable.

"But Vivian!" she said. "Your going will break her heart."

A scornful smile curled his cynical lips. He was just about to reply: "You are mistaken there, mother; she, has no neart," but he checked the impetuous

His mother had scarcely quitted the morning-room ere he saw a small lad approaching the house in a hesitating manner. Frederick drew back the heavy lace curtain, and called to the boy.

"I want to see Mr. Frederick Thornton," said the lad. "Can you tell me where I can find him, sir?"
"Right here, my boy. I am Frederick Thornton. What can I do for you?"
"I am to place this letter in your hand, sir, and wait for a reply," he said, touching his cap. "The gentleman who gave it to me is pacing up and down the ravine yonder, waiting for the

"I will not keep you waiting long,"

It was brief, to the point, and read as follows:—

"Mr. Frederick Thornton—Sir: The announcement of the dissolution of the engagement of marriage which has existed between my daughter Vivian and yourself has just reached me. You have annulled that bond coolly and deliberate ly, it seems, without just cause or provocation (as there is no barrier between you and Vivian), exposing her to the comment of the whole social world by this outrageous conduct. I, as her father and protector, demand that the marriage shall go on. She must be your wife ere the sun sets, or I shall demand, on your the sun sets, or I shall demand, on your refusal to comply with so perfectly reasonable a request, the only satisfaction one gentleman can accord another—a duel. And within the hour in the deep ravine that skirts the cliff down thoroad, there I await your answer. Will you marry Vivian, or shall the duel go COLONEL COURTNEY."

on? — COLONEL COURTNEY."

Not a muscle of Frederick Thornton's face changed. A stern expression crept into the grave, dark eyes and around his mouth. He knew that the colonel was perfectly well aware of the conditions under which that engagement with Vivian was contracted; that, owing to that fatal accident, all memory of a bride waiting for him, or all trace of her presence, had been obliterated completely from his mind. In all truth and honor, he had believed himself free to woo and win the old soldier's daughter.

had believed himself free to woo and win the old soldier's daughter.

It was quite true, since Doris's death (as he believed her to be dead), no barrier rose between himself and Vivian, save his own inclination

He was too honorable to wed Vivian without love, and love her he did not. He had no heart to offer her. His heart was buried in poor little Doris's grave.

He would not be coerced into marrying Vivian. He would be true to poor little Doris's memory while his life lasted.

He tore a leaf from his memorandum book and penciled the following words upon it:—

upon it:

"Let the duel go on. I will be upon the ground at the appointed time. "FREDERICK THORNTON."

This he hastily tolded up and handed to the lad, who quickly disappeared with the fatal message.

Five—ten—minutes passed. Frederick Thornton still stood by the window, motionless, gazing out into the brilliant sunshine; then he turned away with a sigh, and set about making his preparations for the coming event. The time was short, but he completed his business arrangements, and wrote out the direct

The whole carth looked so peaceful, so tions for the distribution of his effects. The whole earth looked so peaceful, so smiling, under the light of the summer's sun, that poor Frederick told himself it would be hard, indeed, to leave it.

Mrs. Thornton never forgot how pale her handsome son looked as he came into the room, took her in his arms and kissed her, saying that he was going to stroll down the road a little way, the morning was so fine.

Was it instinct, a forewarning of some dread calamity, that caused his mother to follow him to the porch, refusing to be comforted?

"I don't feel right about your going

"Nonsense, mother. I will come back to you in an hour's time, if my life is spared," he said, with stiff, white lips. Would to heaven she could have under-stood how fatally true those words were. He tore himself from how He tore himself from her clinging

Perk and Quirk were walking along the crowded street, feeling very toward themselves and the rest of hu manity. Just as they reached the mid die of a crossing one of those aggravat ing individuals who walk one way and look another stepped directly in front of a cable car which was rounding the corner. Of course the car had no fender on it. Nearly everybody in the vicinity yelled, and naturally the bewildered

Big Men and Big Noses.

Cyrano de Bergerac is remembered because of his large nose. Few know that he was a poet, and fewer still know his poetry. The nose is a conspicuous feature of history. The length of Cleopatra's is said to have figured in Roman politics, and a scandal grew out of it which ended in the ruin and death of Antony and the establishment of an empire which lasted a thousand years. Napoleon would not promote a man who had not a large nose. He himself was well favored in this respect. Cæsar was "the hook nosed Roman."

All American statesmen have been noted for this feature. Old men tell of our own Benton, who used to shake his nose like an elephant's proboscis when he got excited. It seems to be the law that all great men have great noses. but let no one think that the converse of this is true, that all men who have great noses are great men. Such a con clusion would lead to confusion and needless pain and disappointment.-St Louis Post-Dispatch.

Evening Dress In Kansas City.

The dress suit is the most democratic raiment in the world. It meets the re quirements of good form, whether it was made six years ago or last month Attired in evening costume, whether the swallowtails are long or short, narrow or wide, all men look, practically speaking, alike, whether they are wage earners or millionaires. The dress suit levels all distinctions and illustrates the potentiality of a correct style. The young man who has made a good selection in his rented broadcloth serenely greets his wealthy rival who has paid for his London clothes a price like $250. How the fame of this world grows small when wrapped in a swallowtail coat among many others of the same cut! When the dress suit becomes the regular evening calling and theater dress for Kansas City men, as it should poor chaps will profit by it a full cubit of serenity and self respect -Kansas City Star.

Our ways of showing respect to the dead would surely be past the compre-hension of the Martians or of anybody else whom custom has not blinded to the absurdity of some of the things wa do. For example, a funeral procession afternoon recently, and in the train recognized the carriage of a woman know. A little surprised at her presence, I glanced at the carriage win dows, but the shades were down. I pictured her within, so overcome with grief at her friend's death that she could not bear the curious eyes of chance passers. That same afternoon I met her coming out of a theater-gay, rosy, laughing. She had been to the matinee, while her empty carriage, in token of her sorrow, followed her dead friend to the grave.

A THRILLING EXPERIENCE.

STORY TOLD BY A WELL-KNOWN

Rheumatic and Neuralgic Pains -- Wold Prefer Death to Undergoing Such Suf-fering Again.

From the Post, Lindsay, Cnt.

Tit is not the lot of but a limited number of people to enjoy the confidence of such an exceedingly large circle of friends and comrades as doe Capt. John A. Brokenshire, who wa recently interviewed by a Post reporte at the home of his parents at Rosedale, a pretty hamlet situated at the head of Balsam river in Victoria county, where reached the three-score years and ten. has held the position of lockmaster for the past twenty-two years. Capt. Brokenshire, the subject of this article is 34 years of age, is well-known and highly respected throughout many of the leading cities and towns of Ontario, where, during his seven years service in Salvation Army work he has come in contact with a large number of people. He has been stationed at Toronto, Montreal, Peterboro, Ottawa, Morrisburg and minor places, and at one time was a member of a travelling S. A. string band. The following is Capt. Brokenshire's own statement:—
"I had been slightly troubled with rheumatic pains for several years, and had to give up the Army work on different occasions on account of my trouble. When stationed in Morrisburg, four years ago, I became com-pletely unfitted for work, as I suffered terrib'y with pains in the back of my neck, down my shoulders and arms and through my body. In fact I had pains of a stinging muscular nature from the back of my head to my toes. I could not bend my head forward if I got the whole of Canada to do so, and when in bed the only slight rest I got was with a large pillow under my shoulder, this letting my head hang backwards. I could not get up, but had to roll or twist myself out of bed as my spine seemed to be affected. My medical adviser pronounced my trouble neuralgia and rheumatism combined which he said had gone through my whole system. He prescribed for me but the medicine gave me no relief.
tried various other remedies but they ere of no avail. Believing my cas to be hopeless I determined to start for my home in Rosedale, but the jarring of the train caused such terrible agony I was compelled to abandon the trip at Peterboro, where I was laid up for three weeks, when I finally made a herculeau effort and reached home. As my mother says, "I looked like an old man of 90 years of age when she saw mo struggling with the aid of two heavy canes to walk from the carriage to the house." At home I received every possible attention and all the treatments that kind friends suggested, but I was constantly going from bad to worse. In January, 1896, after many months of untold agony, I determined to try Dr. Williams' Pink Plils, having read so much in the newspapers of the great

An old clergyman who had held a cure in the depths of the country for the greater part of his life had occasion to consult his bishop on a certain matter, and, in answer to his letter, re-ceived an invitation to sleep the night at the palace. For 40 or 50 years he had practically led the life of a recluse, and it was after many cogitations that he decided to take the journey to the other end of the diocese, where the bishop lived. He arrived just in time for 5 o'clock tea, a meal to which he was a complete stranger.

After tea the bishop asked him to ac company him to evensong. When they returned to the house, the bishop, remarking that it was quite time they went up stairs, lit a candle and showed his guest to his room. It was then just 7 o'clock, and, though the old clergyman thought it was rather early to re-tire, still, admiring the bishop for such simple habits, he prepared for bed. He had just put out the light and lain down to sleep, wishing he had drunk a little more tea, when a booming noise rang through the house and smote upon his ear.

Quick as thought he sprang from his bed and, shouting "Fire!" at the top of his voice, rushed out on to the landing just in time to meet the bishop, with a lady on his arm, going down to dinner. The sequel to the story has never been divulged.—Cornbill Magazine.

INCALCULABLE GOOD.

AN EXPRESSION OF FAITH.

Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills have done me an incalculable amount of good. I think they are the best, surest and quickest acting cure for nervousness, unhealthy action of the heart, insomnia or sleeplessness, anemia or impoverished blood loss of appetite, general debility and ill-hearth. For nine years, before I commenced taking Dr. Ward's Blood and nerve Pills, my heart was weak and in an unhealthy state. Its action was so much impaired that I could not walk across the street without suffering great distress, my heart fluttering and beating so rapidly that I could scarcely breathe, causing faintness, loss of strength, and leaving my nerves all unstrung. My sleep was very much disturbed, I had no appetite and there was little strength or vitality in my blood; I was always excessively, nervous. Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills have my blood; I was always exceptions nervous.

I have now taken three boxes of Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills and since taking them I have not been away from my business an hour. Before taking these pills it was a frequent occurrence for me to be away from business. As a result of taking Dr. Ward's Pills my heart is perfectly healthy and strong and gives me no distress or trouble whatever. They removed all nerve trouble made my nerves strong and gave me healthy sleep. These removed all nerve trouble, made my nerves strong and gave me healthy sleep. These pills also made my blood rich and strong and gave me a healthy appetite. Dr. Ward's Pills have given me perfect health, restoring my lost strength, in place of continual ill-health, weakness, heart trouble and nervousness. In justice I cannot speak too highly of this wonderful medicine. Signed, Miss N. Millward, Walton St., Port Hope, Ont.

How green the sloping hillside looked, dotted here and there with brilliant wild flowers and spreading beech trees. The river danced in the sunlight beyond and its musle sounded like a dirge in his ears.

Toward the right of the stream the greensward was dotted here and there with gypsy tents; swarthy men and maidens making the air ring with their with the contraction of the stream of the st maidens making the air ring with their rollicksome songs. Quite apart from the rest, and directly in the path before Frederick, a young girl sat. A tambourine, decked with bright, gay ribbons, lay on the grass beside her, and her gaudy, picturesque dress, her long dark hair, and bright, black, glancing eyes betokened her race.

A gay, dashing song broke from her crimson lips, and Frederick Thornton stopped short in the path, his arms folded across his chest, his head drooping upon his breast, and listened.

The gypsy girl raised her eyes suddenly, and saw the stranger standing in the chiesy-studded path.

She bounded to her feet with the agility of a graceful young gazelle, and coursessed.

She bounded to her feet with the agility of a graceful young gazelle, and courtesied low before him.

"Have you come to us to have your fortune told, handsome youth?" she asked, raising her dark, lustrous eyes to his face. "I can tell you all the mysteries that lie in the future, and the dark shadows that have gathered in the back ground of the past."

Although he knew better, Frederick stood for a moment irresolute. At any other time in life he would have scorned the proffered offer; but now, when life the profered offer; but now, when life and death hung in the balance, a feverish unrest possessed him to hear what she would tell him.

Long and earnestly, the gypsy girl gazed into the palm of the white, shapely hand she held in her own small dusk

"You are unhappy in your love," she said, slowly.

Frederick Thornton laughed a mirth-Frederick Thornton laughed a mirthless, reckless laugh but a strange, brooding shadow crept into his eyes, and a flush rose to his pale, handsome face, which told the crafty maiden that her shaft had struck home, as it usually did.
"Do you see a long life or a speedy death for me?" he questioned, curiously.
And although he spoke carelessly, his lips whitened perceptibly.
"Death," she said, in a whisper.
"Let it come—I have courted it," returned Frederick, impatiently. "I have mothing to live for, any how."

Although he spoke brayely, he could

Although he spoke bravely, he could realize how hard it was to die in the spring time of youth; to bid farewell to the green earth and fair, smilling heavens; to be rushed, all unprepared—where? He could hear no more. Hurriedly tossing a handful of bright silver coin into her lar he moved on.

Into her lap he moved on.

For some minutes the gypsy girl stood staring after the tall, manly figure hurrying so rapidly away.

"Cap" it be that he is the one they are waiting for down in the glen?" she muttered, under her breath. "He is hand-come as a prince. They must not fadtered, under her breath. "He is handsome as a prince. They must not fight the due! I heard them talking about."

Swiftly as a shadow the gypsy girl glided after him.

"Where are you going, Zetta?" cried a gruff voice in the girl's ear, and a heavy hand was laid on her shoulder; and looking up she saw her father standing before her.

"Let me go," she cried, struggling to free herself from his grasp. "Let me go like a storm-driven swallow down the path. Would she be too late to carry out her daring plan to stop the duel, if one was intended? Ten minutes! Many a life has been jeopardized and lost in one half of that time. As she reached the summit of the hill she gave a piercing cry. Ah, she was too late! She had heard no sound of shot or sabre, yet a group of men were gathered around a prostrate figure lying prone on its face upon the ground.

CHAPTER XXV.—COLD, LOVELESS AND DREARY.

For one instant Karl Lancaster stood quite still like one stricken dumb. Poris was gone! Gone! How the words smote

He turned abruptly away and flung open the door. Mrs. Morgan was at his side in an instant, laying a detaining hand on his arm.

"What are you about to do, Mr. Lancaster?" she cried, anxiously.

"I am going to search for her until I find her," answered Karl, hoarsely. "I will search the whole world over for her, if needs be." And with these words he rushed from the room and out of the bourse.

"The poor fellow has gone clear daft," sighed Mrs. Morgan. "It was well that sent the girl away before he returned sent the girl away before he returned. Why, he would actually marry that girl if he could find her. And, oh! what a stormy scene there would be under the old dector's roof! I am sure his father would disinhe it him on the spot. He would never forgive him for making a mesalliance. Never!" Meanwhile Karl Lancaster, with his heart on fire and his brain in a whirl, was threading his way swiftly along the

He remem-red Doris had been on ner way to an aphoyment agency on that day the acci-nt had occurred which had so nearly groven fatal. What more natural or probable than that she had bent her steps in that direction now? He remembered the number, and lost no time in maxing his way there at once. And the first person whom his eyes rested upon as he opened the door was Doris herself.

She started in surprise as she saw hin What! had he followed her there! And What! had he followed her there! And, like Mrs. Morgan, she was struck by the strange pallor of his face.

"Doris—Miss Brandon!" he said, coming up to her and eatching one of the little white hands that lay so idly in her lap. "Thank God, I have found you!

"I have much that is of the greatest importance to say to you, Doris," he went on, "but I cannot speak here."

The reception-room beyond was almost deserted at this hour of the day. Karl pointed toward it.

deserted at this hour of the day. Karl pointed toward it.
"Come there with me, Doris," he said; "I have that to tell you which will sound more like the pages of romance than reality; but it only serves to illustrate the old adage that truth is indeed stranger than fiction."

Doris shrank back from him, with the memory of that scene, in which he had madly declared his love for her, beseeching her to marry him, rushing over her mind.

mind.

Had he followed her to repeat that scene? she wondered.

Karl saw her hesitancy, and read her thoughts and dread aright.

"It is not of myself I wish to speak—not one word," he said, flushing deeply. "That which I have to say concerns you, and you alone. Doris. Come!"

In wonder and dismay, Doris followed him to the reception-room beyond. He placed a chair for her, and stood leaning against the maatel, seemingly in no hurry to begin.

Doris sat twisting her little white hands nervously together, wondering what new calamity was about to befall her now.

"It was fate that led you to me,
"It was fate that led you to me, hour since—did the astumathy revelation occur to me that the young girl fathad drifted across my path, and the losheiress my father was searching for, were one and the same. Allow me to be the first, Miss Fielding, to congratulate you upon the good fortune that has befallen you."

The beautiful, dreamy, blue eyes were expanded in the greatest amazement.

expanded in the greatest amazement.
All the color had faded from the fair young face, leaving it pair than the petals of a waite hig. He believed she had not comprehended what he had said, and he repeated:

"You are an heiress, Miss Fielding—heiress to a million of dollars in your own right, which my father, as your guardian, is to hold in trust for you un-

"Oh, Mr. Lancaster, do you really believe it?" cried Doris, breathlessly. "Is there no mistake? Surely there must be. Fate has been so unkind to me all my life it must be playing some trick on me now," she declared.

"If you are the Doris Brandon who has lived with Madame Delmar up to a short time ago, there can be no possible mistake."

Doris surang to her feet, trembling and dreary. I should not know what to do with money."

"After you have seen a little more of the world, you won't say that," smiled Karl. "Why, ladies know how to make money fairly fly. I am not surprised at your agitation. A disclosure such as I have made to you would turn almost any young lady's head. No wonder you are bewildered. Perhaps no young girl ever had more cause. Fut you must hear proshad more cause. But you must bear pros perity as you have borne adversity. From this time out your whole life will be changed. Your future will be brilliant for, with wealth and beauty combined life is full of gooden promise."

A dizzling smile parted the girl's beautiful crimson lips, and the color surged back to the sweet young face in a burning tide. In her great excitement she forget what Karl was saying to her She did not hear one word. Dories thoughts had drifted back to Frederick Thornton, and her heart was crying

"Oh, Frederick," she mcaned out is the bitterness of her own heart, "what would all the wealth in the world be worth to me without your love?"

Doris offered no resistance when Karl proposed that she should accompany him home at once.

Dr. Lancaster was more than amazed when, a little later, a cab stopped before when, a little later, a cab stopped before his palatial residence, and from it stepped his son, leading by the hand a young girl, plainly dressed, almost to shabbi-ness has with with a face as gloriously beau ness, but with a face as gloriously beau tiful as an angel's. It had been the one secret fear of his life that some day his son might marry on the impulse of the moment, attracted by the pretty face of some lovely work ing-girl chance might throw in his way And he meant that this handsome of his should marry an heitess, or no marry at all. Like his wife, he had the secret hope that the hirrss, Miss Fielding, might be found, and that she and his son might be mutually attracted to ward each other.

His brow grew dark and stormy as the quick footsteps drew near the library.

As the door opened he rose to his fest coldly confronting the two who stood on the threshold.

He expected to hear the words:

"Father, bid us welcome. I have brought-gou home a daughter. Welcome my bride, father."

my bride, fathef."
Instead, his son stepped foward, leading the pretty, timid, shrinking young girl by the hand, saying, hurriedly:—
"Father, behold Miss Doris Brandon Fielding! I have discovered the long-lost helress—at last! Bid her welcome, father."

"Her face—in which the resemblance to both is so strongly marked—might answer that question—even if I did not," laughed Karl, and in a few brief words he explained to his father, and his mother also, who had been summoned, the story of his meeting with Doris. Then there was no lack of warmth in the doctor's hearty greeting.

"Why, it sounds just like a romance, my dear," declared Mrs. Lancaster, taking the loyely young orphan in her arms my dear," declared Mrs. Lancaster, taking the lovely young orphan in her arms and kissing her delightedly. "Welcome—a thousand times welcome—Doris! You will permit me to call you that, will you not? It does sound so cold and fermal to say Miss Fielding, and you are to be one of the family, for at least a year yet, dear, until my husband's guardianship of you expires."

of you expires."
"Call me Doris, by all means," the girl replied. "I should like that best, is girl replied. -1 am afraid I can rever get used to being addressed as Miss Fielding; ever now, I am afraid I shall wake up and fine all this but a dream," said Doris, pite ously.

CHAPTER XXVI.-DORIS IN LUX URY.

The sudden change from earning he own living to the luxury in which Doris found herself, would have dazzled almost any young girl older and wiser than Doris, and she wondered how she had ever lived through that cold, dark past—that desolate past, which was left behind her forevermore.

Mrs. Lancaster made all possible haste in attending to Doris's wardrobe, "You must discard that blue merino dress of yours at once, my dear. The neighbors would never forget it if they saw you in that "declared the lady." So the next fortnight was spent in daily excursions to the dry goods empori-ums and establishments or the leading radiant little ligure which her intror reflected, robed in shimmering silk—in whose tiny, shell-like ears, and on whose small white hands costly diamonds glittered like stars, was the same Doris who had sobbed herself to sleep, many and mary a night, with Madame Delmar's cruel, taunting words ringing in her

Doris could scarcely realize that the radiant little figure which her mirror re

"You are a miserable, dependent creature; you ought to be thankful for a crust of bread, and a roof to cover your head—content with my cast-off dressor and that you have been given any education whatever."

Now all the world was changed for Doris. She was courted, netted and flat-

"I am proud of you, Doris," said Mrs. Doris.

Lancaster, complacently, one day. "You Lancaster, complacently, one day. Your beauty will create quite a commotion in society; you will turn the heads of all the marriageable young fellows. Young girls of your age generally have some ideal hero-pictured in their minds. But when your Prince Charming come along you must not be in a hurry t marry. A year or so will be plenty of time for that."

"I shall never marry," said Doris, pal-

"I shall never marry," said Doris, paling to the very lips, and a look of keen distress in her dark blue eyes. "Please do not mention marriage to me again, Mrs. Lancaster. I shall never marry." "Fie, fie, my dear. No one but old maids whom nobody wants, or some creature who has been crossed in love, ever make such a remark as that. It sounds ridiculous on the lips of a pretty girl. You cannot rule your own heart, "I can searcely believe that I, Doris Brandon, whom the world has used so cruelly, am indeed an heiress," she cried, pushing back the rings of golden curls from her flushed face in a bewildered sort of way. "I am only a poor dependent, whom nobody has ever care for," she went on piteously. "I have never had any money." I am unused to wealth and luxury. My life has been hard, lone and dreary. I should not know what to do with money." yourself, 'Can never be happy without him,' and it will end as it should—in a

A Brutal Conductor.

New York, Jan. 15.—Wilton P. Marchbank, of Green Point, L.I., was killed at Second avenue and Thirtyfourth street last night, in a fight with Michael McGowan, a conductor on a Thirty-fourth street station. A police man, who witnessed the fight and arrested McGowan, says he saw the con ductor push the man off the car and de liberately kick him in the neck. This statement is corroborated by severa others. An ambulance surgeon from Bellevue found that the man's neck had been broken and that he had died almost instantly. McGowan states that he had to put him off the car, and Marchbank, he says, fell to the ment, striking his chin and was killed by this blow.

"The Wind in the Trees," by Katherine THE DRUNKEN MAN

And the Mystery of How He Steers Clear of Danger.

"Drunken men, of course, do fall down cellarways and that sort of thing," said Mr Nozzleby "We read about it occasionally in the papers, but still such mishaps are comparatively rare. Men seem to stagger up to the very verge of such about half past 20'clock between lying on places and then sheer off in safety Prob ably everybody that has lived in a city has at one time or another followed some drunken man with his eye and seen him as he pursued his zigzag course along the sidewalk, lurch up to and fairly lean over the top step of some basement stairs, seen him still leaning, as though he must in evitably topple over and go smashing down to the bottom, only to observe him finally sway back, away from the steps to start again on his devious course and bring up a moment later on the curbstone hanging in the same manner and in the same danger of falling now into the

But he doesn't fall, and one wonder what preserves him He staggers on his way and stumbles sometimes, but recov ers himself and never quite goes down Again he skims smooth and straight along ers himself and never quite goes down Again he skims smooth and straight along the very edge of some danger spot but keeps right on into safety. And so he pur sues his crooked and dangerous way with a dip or a dive now and then that brings the heart into the mouth of some passerby who chances upon him suddenly and at times it seems as though he must go times it seems as though he must go down, but something keeps him up and down, but something keeps him up and some instince apparently independent of himself, turns him back from the brink With such glimmering of sense as he has left, if he has any he struggles hard to keep up. He may not realize it himself but instinct makes known to him that if once he goes down he can t get up.

"Pursuing a straight course, you soon come up with and pass the staggerer going crisscross, steering out perhaps as you pass to avoid collision with him "-New York Sun.

parishes are of enormous extent, and it is a common thing for one old priest to have charge of three or four remote churches Early in the morning at distant points the congregation puts out upon the fiord, and nothing is more picturesque than at the close of the voyage to see the little flotilla of red brown sails collecting to-ward the point of worship. When service is held but once in three or four weeks, a short sermon would defraud the congregation—I sat out one of 50 minutes the other day in a great bare church that was all a-flutter with the enormous white head-dresses (or skout) of peasant women. This sermon seemed lengthy yet it was only an incident in the service, which lasted four hours. After three of them, however, a stranger may slip out and will have done wisely if he brings some sandwiches with him to eat under the birch trees by with him to eat under the birch trees by the shore. The churches in these sectuded havens, where never a tourist comes, are marvelously large. Behind the church, if we stroll about, we see a crowd of carriols, and many plump white ponies eating their heads off, the mothers with their loals be-side them. These people think nothing of coming 30 miles to service, by sea or land, and throughout the interminable office they preserve an earnest and hushed de-corum.—North American Review

A BRITISH SOLDIER

Tells how Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills Conquer Disease.

Like the conquering armies of Britain, which are marching to victory in every quarter of the globe, Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are everywhere triumphing oversickness, weakness and suffering. Mr. David Walsh, of Carleton Place, Ont, a man who has served with distinction and credit in the British army, and is now an employee of the C. P. Railway, says, "While in the army I got broken down, and mv nervous system was completely shattered.

"I was much troubled with liver complaint, loss of appetite, etc. My rest became broken and was distu-bed by vivid dreams. This had been going on for 14 years, although I took a great many remedies to escape from the troubles which afflicted me.

"However, I got no relief until I started to take Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, which I used together with Laxa-Liver Pills, and-now after having used a few boxes, I am better than I have been for years. My nerves are restored to full force and vigor, I eat and sleep well, and my entire system has been toned and strengthened."

THE EXPERIENCE OF A LADY WHO HAD GIVEN UP HOPE.

Tortured With Pains in the Stomach for Four Years—Doctors and Hospital Treat-ment Failed to Help Her—In Her Ex-tremity Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Restored Her to Health.

From the Pembroke Observer. Wherever man is to be found there also, side by side with him, is disease also, side by side with him, is disease and suffering. Those who have devoted their lives to the alleviation of the suffering and bodily weakness of human organization are surely benefactors of their kind, and deserve the praise of all mankind. For special honors in this line may be pointed out the discoverer of that wonderful remedy, Dr. Wiliams' Pink Pills for Pale Péople. Recently the case of Mrs. People. Recently the case of Mrs. Maggie Brunette, of Chichester, Que., came prominently under the notice of the Observer reporter. He felt it to be nis duty, on hearing of Mrs. Brunette's restoration from prostrate illuess to health, to interview the lady and record her experience for the benefit of others who may need the healing influences of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, Mrs. Brunette's f rm house was found to be very comfortable and even elegant, located near the base of an immense hill, an outguard of the Laurentian Mountains. The reporter was warmly welcomed and Mrs. Brunette said she was very glad to have an opportunity to testify to the great benefit Dr. Williams' Pink Pills had conferred upon her. She is 42 years of age now. Her husband, the late Chas. Brunette, died 14 years ago, and after his death she worked very hard for some years, with the result that she became completely run down, so much so that, although quite tall, she weighed only about 90 pounds. After taking the slightest food she felt such distress that she was compelled to lie down for hours, being so weak that she was unable to sit up. At last she thought she must have been attacked by cancer of the stomach, so violent were he pains that constantly harassed her. 'he consulted the best physicians and pent more than a hundred dollars in treatment and medicine, in addition to which she spent nine weeks in the hos-pital at Pembroke. But withal she was ill four years and despaired of ever being well. Finally she decided to being well. give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial, and accordingly she procured six boxes. Although they benefited her almost from the time she began taking them, she kept on taking the pills until she had taken sixteen boxes, and then felt hat she was completely cured, the pills accomplishing in three months what four years of producal treatment had failed to do. From that time, nearly three years ago, Mrs. Brunette has been in good health, needing no medicine. "You can see," said Mrs. Brunette, as the reporter was departing, "that I am in perfect health, I attend to all my household work and the dairy and nonstead work and the dairy and coultry, and have a large number of cows to milk. I never fail to say a good word for Dr. Williams' Pink Pillswhen I have an opportunity, for they lid wonderful things for me." GENTLEMEN,—I have for a long time needed something to make blood and build up my system. My blood was watery and thin, lacking strength and vitality. Last January a friend said:—"Why not try Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills? They will supply the oxygen your blood needs and give you health and strength." I told him I was very skeptical as to any benefit that could be derived from any proprietary medicine and had no faith in them. There the matter rested until four months ago, when reading so much about what Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills have done for so many people with imwhat Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills have done for so many people with impoverished blood, I concluded to give them a trial. I have taken four boxes and my unbelief so far as Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills are concerned has been entirely removed. They are a splendid blood builder and strength restorer, and an invaluable medicine for weak, enervated people. This has been my experience, they having given me st.ength of body and strong healthy blood.

But Doris shook her curly head with a dreary sigh.

That night Dr. Lancaster and his wife beld quite a lengthy debate in their own Field quite a lengthy debate in their own apartments in reference to Doris, and, as usual, the determined little lady carried the point.

"Doris is pretty, and is graceful as a wild flower is graceful, I grant—but she lacks the culture that fits one for society, declared Mrs. Lancaster, energetically, "and it must be attended to with out delay." Her education in music and the higher branches has been saily neg; locted. We must engage competent persons to remedy this defect at once."

And so they settled the matter. Doris was an ant numl, and progressed won-was an apt pupil, and progressed won-derfully with her studies. There was one insentive above all others that urged Doris on in her desire to fit herself for the social world that lay before her—she the social world that lay before her—she would be sure to meet Frederick Theenton there; that was the beginning and the end, the goal of her ambition.

She told herself she must see him just once; then she would be willing to shut since; then she would be willing to shift herself away from the gay world forever after that one hour of triumph.

No timid young girl likes to discuss those vague, sweet heart-thoughts to a matter of fact old lady, and Doris shrank from even mentioning that pitiful, bro-ken love-dream to practical Mrs. Lan-ken love-dream to practical Mrs. Laneaster.

Hemembering Madame Delmar had dechared Doris had eloped from the seminary, Mrs. Lancaster broached very carefully whether or not Doris had ever had a lover, and how she happened to leave the seminary to seek a position of governess in New York.

"I will speak of this matter just once," Doris replied, with a little sob in her voice. "I do not like to think of it. It is like opening an old wound. Madame Belmar turned me from the seminary doer, because she was tired of keeping the penulless girl—who was dependent, on her bounty—under her roof longer, I was forced to go out into the world
And as for a lover—ah, Mrs. Lancaster, I had no lover. No one loved me; no
ope."

The time came at last when Miss Fielding, Doctor Lancaster's lovely ward, was finally launched upon the tidal wave of society. As Mrs. Lancaster had foreof society. As Mrs. Lancaster had foreseen, she created quite a furore Receptions, parties, balls, followed each other in rapid succession, and pretty Doris was queen of them all. Yet she always came home with the same piteous pain in her lovely, childish eyes. It had been another evening lost out of her life, for she had not met Frederick Thornton.

Believing her dead, had he married Vivian and taken her abroad? From the moment this idea occurred to her, Doris had, a feverish desire to go abroad.

An opportunity soon presented itself.

An opportunity soon presented itself.
Dr. Lancaster received a letter one day, urging his immediate presence in London, and it was arranged that his wife and Doris should accompany him on this

The next steamer brought Karl.
"I though father might need me, perhaps," he said; but his mother knew better. She was sure Doris's bright eyes had been the magnet.

As time rolled on, Mrs. Lancaster began to grow anxious over her son; his deep adoring love for Doris was so marked, while she, in return, gave him only a sister's kindly friendship—nothing

All in vain pretty young girls gazed at the tall, handsome, fair-haired young American; he had no eyes for them; his whole thought, night and day, was of Deris—only of her.

"My patient love, my great devotion, sust win love in return. I can wait for it," he told himself over and over again. Three long years passed, and it seemed to Karl Lancaster he was further than ever from Doris's love. If ever a woman hand been born without a heart, or it had turned to marble in her breast, that man was Doris. The three years spent abroad had done much for Doris; it had expanded her from the bud of girlhood into the bloom of perfect womanhood. She had been protty as the child of seventeen. At twenty, taller by almost half a head, she had grown into the full, dazzling beauty of perfect womanhood. Snitors sought her hand, laying love, pe and fortune at her feet; but to one and all she gave the same gracious an-

"I thank you for the kind compliment you pay me in asking me to be your wife. I am sorry you love me. I shall never marry—never."
When Mrs. Lancaster saw Doris dis-miss one lover after another, a strange

"She must really like Karl, I am be-ginning to believe," she told herself. She did not know that long since her handsome son had declared his love for handsome son had declared his love for Doris, only to be kindly but firmly refused. He was true to his promise. He never breathed one word of love to her; yet Dor's could read it in his face, if she spoke one kind word to him, in the wistful expression of his eyes as they followed her about, and the trembling of his hand as it clasped hers in greeting.

"I am sorry for poor Karl!" she often murmured, when she was alone with her thoughts. "I, of all others in the world, know how to pity a person who loves one who cannot return that love. He is so patient, so kind; I am sorry for him—so sorry. Poor Karl!"

Leaving Doris for a little while, we must return to Frederick Thornton, and to that critical moment when he turned from the narrow path into the open glade, where Mr. Courtney awaited him, in company with the gentlemen who had been selected to act as seconds in the suel which was to take place.

the had barely reached the opening ere strange sight burst upon his view. carcely a rod from where he stood riv-

"Had foul play been done here? It so, he of all others would be suspected," Frederick told himself.

But he was no coward. Boldly he made his way up to the group standing around his prostrate foe.

They made way for him.

"There will be no duel, Mr. Thornton," explained one of the colonel's friends. "It seems that Colonel Courtney worked himself into such a passion of fury that he has been attacked by a very severe apoplectic stroke. We are about to Deep and sincere was the regret Frederick felt for the colonel's affliction.

"I should never have aimed my revolver at him, gentlemen," he said. "I had intended to fire into the air."

As the duel was thus far pr ctically abandoned, Frederick retraced his steps homeward.

"Never speak to me of love again, nother," he answered, huskily, "My heart is buried in little Doris' grave.'

CHAPTER XXVII.-DORIS AND FREDERICK MEET AGAIN.

For three long and weary years Fred-crick Thornton traveled incessantly; but his great effort to forget Doris was all in vain. The sweet, dimpled, girlish face was between him and the sunshine—filled his thoughts—made his life one long regret.

"How strange it was," he often told-himself, "that he had discovered his love for poor, pretty Doris in the very hour that he had lost her so cruelly!"

Three years had made little change in Frederick Thornton. He was the same handsome Frederick as of old; all save the gay, laughing sparkle in the dark, expressive eyes. That had died out of them forever, leaving them thoughtful and gloomy, with a look of brooding melancholy in them that never left them. Pretty young girls sighed and smiled

Pretty young girls sighed and smiled at the handsome American in vain. He seemed to be oblivious to the charms of fair women, or else marble-hearted, they often declared.

After three years of incessant traveling, fate brought him, one sunlit June morning, to the little village of Kent, lying among the Kentish hills. He was delighted to find there was a party of Americans stopping at the villa across the way. Strolling out upon the piazza-of the hostelry, the first person whom his eyes rested upon was his old college chum. Karl Laneaster. often declared.

"Well, by all that's wonderful, if it isn't Fred Thornton!" exclaimed Karf, cheerily, as he wrung his old friend's hand in the greatest delight. "This is, indeed, a surprise. Where in the world did you drop from?".

'I came up from London for a few eks' quiet," exclaimed Frederick, add-; "I return to New York at the end

The deuce you do!" exclaimed Karl, pulsively. "Do you think I shall conimpulsively. "Do you think I shall coasent to lose my old chum so easily? No, indeed! You will make a valuable acquisition to our little party."

"Who is there among your party?" inquired Frederick.

quired Frederick.
"Only my mother and father, father's ward—Miss Fielding—and myself." We have just got rid of two noble lords and an earl who persisted in following us that from places. about from place to place, having been smitten with father's ward; but finding facir suit useless, one by one gave up in despair, and went his way." Frederick smiled.

You must come over and dine with us to-day, and I will present you to Miss Fielding; but I warn you beforehand, do not attempt to fall in love with her."
"No doubt you have hopes in that direction," smiled Thornton. "But you need not fear a rival in me. I have goten over being a beauty worshiper. I always a rold women, when I can."

"I hope you are not going to turn out a cynical woman hater," declared Karl. "That would never do. Never!

a cynical woman hater," declared Karl.
"That would never do. Never!

"I shall expect you to dine vith us to-day, and I shall not take 'No' for an answer," said Karl again, at parting.

"In that case, it would be useless to give any other answer than one in the affirmative." smiled Frederick; "so I shall probably put in an appearance some time during the afternoon. Kindly remember me to your father and mother."

After a little the friends parted, Karl going toward the villa, and Frederick Thornton strolling leisurely down the flower-strewn path that led toward the river that lay smiling beyond. How long he stood there, in a dreamy reverie, on the primrose bordered bank he never knew. He was aroused at length by the sound of hurried footsteps, and turning knew. He was aroused at length of sound of hurried footsteps, and turning his head slightly, a sight met his view that he never forget until his dying day. From an abrupt curve in the path—seemingly from out of the very heart of a thicket of roses—stepped a young girl, a tall, slim, lovely creature, graceful as a fawn, with a face so radiantly lovely in its fair, dimpled, girlish beauty as to almost take his breath away at the first fatal glance. Surely the summer sunlight had never fallen upon a fairer picture than this beautiful, golden-haired young girl had never fallen upon a fairer picture than this beautiful, golden-haired young girl.

She was hurrying along so swiftly, she did not perceive the tall, handsome stranger leaning against the trunk of a tree, gazing at her so intently.

She passed so near Frederick, he could have put out his hand and touched her dress; and suddenly, in that instant, a passing, sportive breeze caught the broad sun-hat that was tilted down over her curls, lifted it from her head, and hurled it directly at Frederick Thornton's feet.

Quickly he stooped to recover it.

"Permit me," he said, extending the hat by its blue ribbon with one hand, and raising his own with a courteous bow with the other.

The young girl started back with a low cry of terror, and looked into his face, clutching one hand tightly over her heaft. As the reader has already imagined, it was Doris.

After three long years she stood face to face with Frederick Thornton again. And she saw, too, that he did not recog-nzie her, so great was the change in her. nzie ner, so great was the change in ner, Ah, it was little wonder he did not, be-lieving Doris to be lying cold in her grave on the other side of the blue, roll-ing Atlantic. He heard the low, gasping cry, and saw the blanching of the lovely

"Lbeg a thousand pardons if I have startled you," he said, eagerly. "I fancied you must have seen me standing here as you came down the path."

Doris received the hat from his hand with a little person how. She could not alarmed Mrs. Lancaster when she returned to the villa.

"Why, what is the matter, my dear Doris?" she exclaimed, in dismay.
"Really, you look as though you had seen a ghost." Before Doris could reply she went on quickly: "I want you to look your best this evening, Doris dear, for Karl brings an old friend to dine with us—a Mr. Thornton. He was a great friend of Karl's at college. I have known his family intimately for years."

"You will have to excuse me this "You will have to excuse me this evening, Mrs. Lameaster," pleaded Doris. "I have the most severe headache I have ever had in all my life."

Looking into the flushed face and unnautrally brilliant eyes, who could doubt Still Doris lingered.

How she longed to ask if Vivian was with him, but pride forbade. Of course, believing himself free, he had married

Vivian long since.

Frederick Thornton had stood gazing after that slim, girlish figure with the strangest sensation at his heart that he had ever experienced. "Pshaw!" he muttered, impatiently,

"Pshaw!" he muttered, impatiently, striking a match on the sole of his boot, and proceeding to light a cigar. "Somehow the features of that young girl's face remind me.strangely of poor little Doris. Perhaps Doris would have grown into just such a superb creature if she had lived. Can that be Miss Fielding, I wonder?" he mused.

He presented himself punctually at the villa. The doctor and his good wife, and Karl, welcomed him cordially; but the face he longed to see (if, indeed, the pretty young girl he had met was Miss Fielding) was not there.
"I am sorry Miss Fielding has a headache, and cannot be presented to you,"

According to gossip, which is the control of the control o when a harum-scarum youth and trav elling about, he made a wager that he would marry the first woman he met on landing in England. Accordingly, at Portsea, in 1849, he married Miss Elizabeth Virginia Newan, daughter of a landport pilot. Within a few months she gave birth t a son, whose paternity her husband de ied. The couple from that time lived apart, the wife dying in 1871. The child, who now calls himself Viscount Hinton, and claims the succession, has long been living on the streets of London as an organ grinder; his pretensions were always sternly repudiated by the deceased earl. About six weeks after t. e. death of his first wife Lord Poulette married Miss Emma Sonphia Johnson, who died in 1876, without issue surviving. In 1879 he married Miss Rosa de Melville, Mr. Alfred Hugh De Mil daughter of ville, and their son is generally recognized as the rightful heir. The long standing quarrel between the late Earl Poulette and the organ grinding viscount has furnished the material for many a London sensation. Only a month ago the claimant to the succession issued an appeal to the public to take a philanthropic interest in the condition of the poor among whom he has lived and earns his own living.

Alaska Birl Reported.

Washington, Jan. 23.—The Carter bill, relating to the government of Alaska, was favorably reported to the house today. It preserves the general plan of the senate bill, but makes numerous changes. An important amendment provides that "whenever practicable the secretary of the interior shall require that all children between the ages of 6 and 15 years shall attend public or private schools, where the in-struction shall be in English, at least three months in each year." Another amendment gives a term of the United Another States district court at Skagway in August each year. Other conditions give appointment of notaries to the governor, increases the governor's salary from $4,000 to $5,000, and decreases the judge's salary from $6,000

Colonial Commission Appointed. Washington, Jan. 23.—The secretary of war has completed the organization of a colonial commission to undertake the administration here in Washington of all matters of detail respecting the government of the territories acquired during the war or occupied by the United States forces. The personnel of the commission will be General Robert P. Kennedy, Bellefontaine, Ohio; Curtis Guild, of Massachusetts, and George W. Watkins, of Grand Rapids, Mich. This commission will deal with Mich. This commission will deal with the bestowal of franchises and concessions, the distribution of monies to be spent in public improvements and all England carries about 38 per cent. of the sea-borne merchandise of the world.

With fall came the "fattening time" war. for the hogs. They were then brought in from the distant fields, where they had passed the summer, and put in a pen by the side of the road. And, al-though within ten feet of the soldiers as they marched by, they were never seen, for the pen was completely covered by the winter's wood pile, except at the back, where there was a board fence through whose cracks the corn was thrown in. Whenever the passing advance guard told us that an army Whenever the passing was approaching the hogs were hur riedly fed, so that the army might go by while they were taking the dinner nap and thus not reveal their presence by an escaped grunt or squeal Fortunately the house was situated in a narrow valley, where the opportuni ties for bushwhacking were so great that the soldiers did not tarry long enough to search suspected wood piles

On one occasion we thought the hogs doomed. A wagon broke down near the and the soldier went to the wood pile for a pole to be used in mend ing the break. Luckily he found a stick to his liking without tearing the pile to pieces. This suggested that some nice straight pieces be always left conven jently near for such an emergency, in case it should occur again.

The following story was told by Ma appeared for the defendant in a trial by jury and put on the witness stand a boy from whose testimony be expected to gain a great deal. To the confusion of the attorney, the story told by the boy was greatly to the detriment of the defendant, and the attorney set to work to show that the boy was "worthless."

What is your occupation?" he asked "I work on my father's farm," the witness replied.
"You don't do much but sit around.

do you?"
"Well, I help my father." "But you're worthless, aren't you?" was the attorney's decisive question.

"I don't know whether I am or not." retorted the witness warmly. Then the attorney took another tack "Your father's a worthless man, isn't he?

"Well, he works about the farm." The attorney here fastened an eye hich gleamed with triumph on the jury and nailed the boy with a glance from the other and said, "Isn't it true that your father doesn't do enough work to prevent his being called worthless?"

The boy had chafed under these un pleasant questions, and, summoning his courage, he said loudly: "If you want to know so bad whether my father's worthless, ask him. There he is on the jury. "-Indianapolis Journal.

The Marrying Age.

At what age do people marry? The most popular time for a woman to get married is from her twenty-first to her twenty-fifth year inclusive. More than one-half of the women who marry at all marry in these five years of their life, and another quarter marry between the ages of 20 and 25, and not more than a third between the ages of 25 and 30. The average age of marrying is just over 26 for women and just under 28 for men. These figures include remarriages. For spinsters only the average age is 25, and for ba helors 26 1/2.

It is a noticeable fact that in the last ten years the average age of marrying has, for men and women alike, gone up half a year. Taking the complete quarters ending on the last days of March, June, September and December respectively, the December quarter is most prolific in marriages, and the spring and summer quarters come next, about equal. with the March quarter a long way behind. - New York Home Journal

"Poi" Cocktails.

Every visitor to Hawaii is expected to become acquainted with "poi," the Kanaka's staff of life. The taste for this national dish is undoubtedly acquired, and even after many trials of-ten fails to come at all. This thick, pastelike mixture is made from the taro plant (Colocasia antiquorum), from which originates the "poi" cocktail. In name it is quite as deceiving as the "oyster" cocktail, and those desiring it merely for the name are sadly disappointed on finding that the only liq-nid it contains is milk.

The "poi" cocktail is prepared by diluting the paste with milk, then add ing sugar or salt and serving ice cold. This drink is found very beneficial to dyspentics and those recovering from fever. - Leslie's Weekly.

NO MORE CHICKENS.

This Butcher Handles Meat, but No Live Stock, Thank You.

One market day not, long ago a cer-tain butcher who has a stall in the West Side market bouse sold a lot of meat to a woman, who immediately turned about and requested that he keep ber baskets and bundles for a bit, while went out on some other business.

Now, one of those baskets contained four respectable and much excited lowls, very much alive and very much disgusted with their present surroundings, and the bute rather doubtfully. butcher looked at them

But his customer gave him little time to decide. "They're all tied up," he announced and then flounced away into the crowd, leaving the batcher and her squawking property far behind. She had shoved the basket well under the stall, and the butcher could not see it, but he felt a trifle nervous all the same. He was used to handling eatasame. He was used to handling eata-bles, but not in such a perfect state of nature as this.

Pretty soon he saw a woman advancing slowly toward him, eying the ground with more interest and amuse-ment than he thought necessary or

'What are you looking at?" he demanded, rather tartly.

The woman looked up and smiled. 'I'm looking at a chicken, " she said. The butcher started, said something ander his breath and then looked too. There was one of those chickens scut-tling up the street as fast as it could go, while the others—ah, where were they? They had vanished every one, and the basket was empty save for four little useless loops of twine from which the clever fowls had wriggled out.

Well, there were exciting times around that neighborhood for the next few seconds, and a certain respectable butcher was seen flying about in a most unrespectable way after certain lively fowls, but at last all were captured, se curely tied this time and packed safely away just as their smiling owner re-turned to claim them. It is not recorded what the butcher told her, but it is known through all the market now that that certain man will in the future utterly and entirely refuse to store the live stock of his lady enstomers, no matter how enticing said ladies may be.

GRIPPE EPIDEMIC

AGAIN SWEEPING OVER CANADA WITH UNUSAL VIRULENCE.

The Most Violent Attack Since 1890. Leaving Behind a Host of After Effects That Make Life Miserable — Prompt and Effective Means Should Be Taken to Strengthe the System.

La grippe, now sweeping over thi country in one of its periodic epi-demics, is one of the most treacherous and difficult diseases with which medical science has to cope. It is in its after effects that it is particularly disastrous, and these assume many forms, prominent among which may be mentioned heart weakness, bronchial and lung troubles, nervous prostration, alternate chills and fever, a feeling of constant lassitude and an indisposition to either mental or physical exertion. Often the sufferer does not recover from the after effects of la grippe for months, and in cases of previously enfeebled constitutions and among those of advanced age, the number of cases terminating fatally is appalling.

Even after a mild attack of la grippe it is imperative that the system should be thoroughly toned up, the nerves strengthened and the blood enriched. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the only medicine that can be depended upon for promptness and thoroughness in this emergency. These pills are a true blood feeder, bringing to the vital fluid the constituents that give it richness, redness and strength, thus driving out diesase and acting as a tonic and bracer to the whole system.

Mr. Harry Dagg, a well known farmer living near Ninga, bears testimony to the great value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in removing the after effects of la grippe. The disease left him a victim to cold chills, violent headaches, dizziness and severe palpitation of the heart. Mr. Dagg says:—"I finally went to Boissevain and consulted a doctor by the severe that the transle was tor who stated that the trouble was likely to develop into consumption. I was under his care for about three months, but was gradually growing weaker and unable to do any work. At this stage one of my neighbors advised me to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial, and as my case was critical I de-termined to give them a fair trial, and purchased a dozen boxes. Before the third was used there was good evidence that they were helping me, and before the dozen boxes were used I was as strong and vigorous as I had ever been, and I can heartily recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for the manifold troubles that follow an attack of la grippe.

If you have suffered from an attack of la grippe procure a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills at once, and they will put you right. Insist upon getting the genuine, as imitations never cured anyone. If your dealer does not keep them, send direct to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and they will be mailed postpaid, at 50c a box or six boxes for $2.50.

New York is to put rubber tires on her fire engines. We may get to that in Chicago in time, but we will have to begin by putting down the asphalt pavements that are necessary as the first feature of such an improvement.

A FACE LIKE CHALK.

A very bad attack of the Grippe one year ago last winter left my system in a very weak state and my nervous system completely unstrung. After getting over the dangerous stage of the disease I naturally expected to gain strength, but unfortunately, did not do so. On the contrary, my blood became weaker. I daily lost strength and vitality, and my nervous system became so weak thattuwas a constant source of suffering bott day and night. I lost appetite, the sigh of food nauseated me, the weak state o my system caused shortness of breati and unnatural action of the heart, such as fluttering and violent palpitation, an my face was like chalk. I was in the condition and constantly getting weaks when I began taking Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills. I had read the book they distributed and their advertisemen in the papers, and thought, "Well, have taken so much medicine withous benefit it is useless to spend any momoney. However, I finally made up mind. ## WAKE

The people here in Cardston should arouse themselves at once and petition the Government to establish an immigration building in our town. That such a building is going to be erected in our part of the district, there is little or no doubt. Some wide awake parties living over on the St. Mary's near the Custom House are working like troopers to induce the Commission of Immigration to erect the pro-posed building at or near the Customs House. If the people here do not at once take a hand in the matter in all probability the immigration hall will be built on St. Mary's

We ask the Overseer to call a meeting of the townspeople, and at said meeting a committee should be appointed to draft some resolitions. ## TWENTY ARE INJURED over Thirty Spectators Were Precipitated to the Ice Below-Several Ladies Injured.

Sadbury, Ont., Jan. 31.-At a hockey match here on Monday night the rink gallery was crowded with men, women and young people, every available inch along the railing in front being occupicd-principally by ladies, and others packed in close behind them. About 9.45, when the excitoment was at its the puck having been thrown at the Mattawa goal, immediately be-low the gallery, and the Sudbury players coming down with a rush, a sound was heard at the centre of the railing as of the breaking of timber. was instantly followed by total darkness (the electric light wire being proken), and a crash as nearly the whole railing and over thirty persons fell over to the ice below and on the heads of those beneath, among whom were Messrs. D. Balkie, Chas. La-marche, W. P. Martin, Dr. Struthers, F. Cochrane, Dr Mulligan, W. C. Kil-patrick, Dr. Arthur, Vm. McCracken, M. Munns, A. Quesnell, J. A. Orr and

Nearly all these were either struck by the railing or by some of those who fell over, and doubtless were the means of saving the lives of several by breaking their fall. There was deep silence for a few moments, which was broken by the moans of the injured and the woices of those calling for lights.
When the lanters were brought several were found lying unconscious. They were at once carried to the waiting rooms, the drug store nearby, and to their homes. Many of those below were knocked down by the raising striking them, or some one falling on them; in fact there were very few who escaped injury of some kind, either cuts or bruises. It was certainly a miracle that no one was killed, or the injuries even more serious than they are.

A Literary Coincidence.

Plagiarism is a literary crime the freely, especially where a very eminen ries seem to be responsible for much that in an outburst of indignant emo tion we would lay to plagiarism. This however, can hardly explain the follow ing, which can merely be called a remarkable coincidence. We have never beard that the genial autocrat, Oliver Wendell Holmes, was ever accused of stealing from Whittier, nor do we eve remember that any one has said that the Quaker poet borrowed from the phy sician. Nor do the circumstances of the present case raise either issue. We picked up the other day at a sec ond hand bookstore a copy of The At lantic Monthly of January, 1870 In it we found that the two eminent poets above mentioned while writing on total ly different themes gave two lines that are strikingly alike. Mr Whittier's 1 "Never by lover my lips be kissed, and Dr. Holmes wrote, "Lips that lover has never kissed." It is rather an e traordinary coincidence, as we have said curiously and scientifically mystically the doctor must have explain ed it all if his attention were ever call ed to it!-New York Times.

Of course, he was Vivian's husband long since, and could, therefore, be nothing to her now —less than nothing—and quite uncon-sciously her face grew cold, hard and haughty with superb scorn as he gazed at her.

At that moment Karl entered the drawing-room, and Doris took the opportunity to escape from his presence instantly.

Frederick Thornton looked after Miss Fielding in wonder not unmixed with pique. Why did this lovely young girl take such an aversion to him at first pique. Why did this lovely young girl take such an aversion to him at first sight? Why did she avoid him so persistently? he asked himself, vexedly. He could not understand, yet, despite this knowledge, he seemed drawn as by a magnet each day to the villa.

CHAPTER XXVIII -- A SHADOW

That one glance at the dark, hand some face of Frederick Thornton awak

some face of Frederick Thornton awak ened all the old bitter-sweet memorles in Doirs's heart again.

She tried to avoid him, but from that hour Frederick Thornton followed Doris about like a shadow.

One evening they met at a grand ball. Doris had heard them say he would not be there. Therefore she much surprised to see him standing by her side.

"Are you engaged for the next waltz, Miss Fielding?" he nsked, taking the pearl and gold tablet from her hand.

Doris drew back, her lovely ace palling. Even her lips lost their color. Waltz with him! Ah, no! She could not.

How could she feel his breath upon her cheek, the clasp of his strong arm around her, and know that he was another's—that he had lost her forevermore?

"I should prefer dancing any other "I should prefer dancing any other than a waltz with you, Mr. Thornton," she said. He certainly felt piqued. Any other young lady in that grand, glitter-ing ball room would have been pleased to have waltzed with him, he well knew.

to have waltzed with him, he well knew. "May I put my name down for the next quadrille, then?" he asked, with charming grace; and as Doris could find no reasonable excuse for refusing him, she bowed a cold assent.

To her horror, she found it was, after all, a waltz-quadrille. She could not escaped from him when they were out on the floor together. She was obliged to go through the dance with him. Yet Frederick Thornton could not help but notice how she shrank from the touch of his hand and the clasp of his arm.

And again he asked himself in the deepest wonder, why had this young girl deepest wonder, why had this young girl taken such an aversion to him.

That one waltz quadrille undid the work of years. Doris had thought that she had schooled her heart against him; she had schooled her heart against film; but love was not to be disciplined thus easily. She realized that the Doris of twenty loved handsome Frederick Thornon a thousand times more deeply than the Doris of seventeen had done. That was childish, beautiful love; this was the full, passionate strength of a woman's love—the love that blesses or curses by the beauty.

From that hour Frederick Thornton From that hour Fraderick Indication followde Doris about like a shadow. He took great care to place himself in every set with her. If she strolled out on the balcony, on looking up she was sure to find him near her. If she scated herself at the plano in the grand drawing-room, she would find him at her side, ready to turn the pursic for her.

she would find him at her side, ready to turn the music for her.

She curled her crimson lips in the deepest scorn as she looked at him. He had been untrue to the memory of poor hapless Doris. Now he would be untrue in another's smiles, she told herself.
"Why was Vivian not with him?" she wondered. Then she remembered it was not unusual for gentlemen to go abroad without their wives. No doubt Vivian had not chosen to come. There was one who looked on with

There was one who looked on with darkening brow as Frederick Thornton hovered at Doris's side; one who turned away as though the sight were bitter pain to him, although he had noticed Doris did not encourage these attentions. Karl Lancaster could not endure the thought of Doris smiling upon another. A sudden coldness sprang up between the two young men, and Kerl was pleased when his father announced his intention of returning home.

A fortnight later, the Lancasters took up their summer quarters at the Ocean Beach Hotel, Newport, and Doris was at once proclaimed the beauty and belle of the season. To Doris's dismay, Frederick

Again he sought and improved every opportunity of cultivating beautiful hiss Fielding's acquaintance. There was a certain dash of romance about it, owing to the fact the girl seemed to detest and

Mrs. Lancaster watched young Mr.

Thornton's persistent wooing with anxiety for her own son's sake. Once she attempted to discover the state of Doris's heart by close questioning in regard to her ardent admirer, but Doris turned such a pale, pained face toward her that she cried out in alarm.

"Do not mention Frederick Thornton's here to the bing" she said in a name to me. I hate him," she said, in a quick, stified voice; and before Mrs. Lancaster could recover from the astonishment of witnessing this vehement outburst of passion from the usually quiet Doris, the girl had quitted the room.

Doris, the girl had quitted the room. That day a strange, reckless resolve came to Doris. She would cease avoiding Frederick Thornton so. She would learn to control herself better than this, that the sound of his voice, the touch of his hand, the glance of his eyes agitated her so. It almost seemed to Doris that the whole world must read her secret. She loved him!

That afternoon, when Frederick Thorn That afternoon, when Frederick Thornton joined a group of young girls on the sea shore, among whom was Doris, he noticed with a thrill of pleasure that she did not turn and walk abruptly away as usual; and he flattered himself that the willful beauty, who had taken such an aversion to him, was beginning to look upon him more kindly.

The group of chattering young girls made way for him. He flung himself down on the white beach at Doris's feet; but the graceful, golden head, after a

"I think Miss Fielding was quite right in hesitating to trust the water to-day; there is danger in its woolng. Do you see how high the breakers dash on the shore. I have been told hat it betoken a swift, treacherous undercurrent."

"Oh, how cruel of you to say that. Mr. Thornton!" pouted the little brup ette, who was quite an expert swimmer among the breakers and longed to show her dexterity in battling with the hugs waves. "Of course your opinion will decide Miss Fielding, and my eloquent arguing of an hour's duration has been all in vain."

"I think not," returned Doris, very quietly. "I have made up my mind to go into the surf with you."

The little brunette looked delighted; Frederick Thornton looked as he felt—

Doris crested her beautiful golden head, looking down at him with cold, proud eyes. She would have gone now, even if death itself stared her in the face, just to show him how lightly she valued his opinion.

"Why do you take so much interest in "Why do you take so much interest in

With a haughty toss of her golden, curly head, Doris picked up her book and lace sunshade, and walked away.

Frederick looked thoughtfully out over

Frederick looked thoughtfully out over the water. In that moment his mind had flown back to the hapless girl-bride who had found death in the cold, cruel waves. The impulse came to him to follow Miss Fielding, and tell her the story of poor, hapless little Doris. It was strange that, in the presence of this beautiful girl, whom he had learned to love so passionately, his mind always went back to poor little Doris, who had loved him so well; little Doris, who had loved him so well;
Miss Fielding, in some vague way, reminded him so much, at times, of Doris, although Miss Fielding was a beauty and belle, surrounded by wealth, luxury and admirers; and little Doris was only a timid school-girl, whose girlish heart he had won unknowingly.

His heart almost stood still. He recognized the fore host one, upon whose golden head the sunlight fell; it was Miss Fielding.

Doris heard him, and the words, inspired her with new life. She held out her white arms to him with a wild, piteous cry, and then a huge wave dashed over her, completely concealing

Doris in his arms. But reaching the shore was no easy task. The great waves beat him back, and his herculean efforts seemed to prove futile, as, sure as fate, he realized they were drifting out to sea. He saw the life-boat that was put out, but could it reach them? Could his strength last that long? He was strong and sinewy, yet it was no light task to hold that heavy burden with his left arm, striking boldly out with the right. All this occurred to the girl who clung to him in pale bravery.

"Leave me, Frederick," she gasped, piteously. "It will be all you can do to save yourself."

"Why not? It is all you can do. The life-boat can never reach vs."
"I'll never leave you while I have life! You would be swept down in a minute. We will live or die together!" he cried, holding her tast, and battling heroically with the mad waves.
"Go!—leave me to my fate!" she panted, wildly. "Go—for my sake, Frederick—because I—love—you!"
And with those words she fell back in his arms in a dead faint.

Perhaps it was those words that imbued him with new life, and buoyed him up until the life-boat reached him. Five minutes later, amid lusty cheers and glad cries of women, Frederick Thornton laid Doris down on the white sand among the motley throng that had assembled there. From that hour hand-some Frederick Thornton was the hero and idol of the belles of Newport.

life.

It was evening; the chandellers were lighted, throwing a soft, mellow light over the marble halls and vast parlors, and out upon the stretch of beach beyond, lying so white in the clear, bright starlight.

Doris saw him out on the veranda, pacing to and fro, smoking a cigar. Silently she crossed the veranda and stood before him, like a vision in her clinging dress of soft, fleecy white.

"I am come to thank you for what you have done for me, Mr. Thornton," she said, with an unconscious flutter in her voice, extending both her hands. "I thank you so much words will not express my indebtedness. Why did you do it? It might have cost you your own life. Oh, why did you do so much tor me, Oh, why did you do so much for me, Mr. Thornton?"

He took both her trembling hands.
"We will walk down on the beach together, and I will tell you why," he nswered.

How smooth the treacherous, smiling sea looked under the brilliant starlight. How clear the silver moon looked, coyly hiding her sweet face behind the soft, white clouds, like a blushing bride be-hind her white veil. What a glamor there was over land and sea as they waked silently along under the mellow moon-beaus, listening to the world and and shearty along under the melow moon-beams, listening to the musical murmur of the sighing waves. Suddenly Frederick Thornton stood still, looking down into the lovely face, his hand involunt-rily closing and hold-ing prisoner the little trembling one that ing prisoner the house lay on his arm.

"You asked me why I risked my life to save yours. I will answer you now. It was because I love you with all the strength of my heart, with all the strength of my heart, with all the strength of my soul. Without you, life would be a blank; with you, it would be a paracise. I love you with the mighti-est love man ever felt for woman—a love that would brave all the dangers of earth and sea to win you. You told me out on the water that you—''

The sentence never was finished. Doris turned upon him like a flash.

Don Carlos is a familiar figure among the campos, calles and canals of Venice, says Charles King Wood, a Philadelphia camerist, in The Press of that city.

Every afternoon about 4 o'clock, be the day fair or foul, his commanding form, accompanied by his young wife, the Princess of Rohan, may be seen crossing the Plazza or threading the busy Merceria, he walking with great manly strides and she pitter-patter with they steps, clinging to his arm as if trying to "keep up."

At the Fenlee (the great Venetian theatre opened only upon special occasions), the night after Christmas the "Boheme of Puccini" was sung for the first time in Venice, and all society was there.

Don Carlos and his wife often during the evening sat hand in hand in the most affectionate manner, evidently entirely oblivious to other eyes.

The Preteneer has been magnanimous in sparing poor Spain a revolution and civil strife at this, for him, most opportune hour, with the United States besetting her from without, the riots within. It is confidently stated by Carlists that their lealer is both prepared and able at any moment to place himself upon the throne of his fathers.

Partial Paralysis Accompanied by Fainting Fi s Follow -Doctors Fail to Bring Relief-Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Restore Health.

Brookholm, a suburb of Owen Sound, is fairly vibrating with interest in the wonderful cures effected in that place by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills A newspaper man of Toronto, spending some time in the vicinity, was directed to a house on a hill overlooking Owen Sound's beautiful bay, and was told that there he would learn something about a cure effected by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The hill was climbed and it is to Mr. J. F. Goodfellow, the genial owner and occupant of that pleasant home, that he is indebted for the following facts:—"My wife owes her good measure of health today to Dr. Williams, Pills III and Mr. Good. Williams' Pink Pills." said Mr. Good-fellow "On the 12th of July, 1895, Mrs Goodfellow went on an excursion to Collingwood by boat and came home with a severe cold, which developed into a partial or slight attack of paralysis in the left side and limb. In addition, at times she would be seized with a dizziness which often resulted in sudden and severe falls. The paralysis made her unable to lift any weight with her left hand. She called in medical aid and for some months followed the advice and took the medicines prescribed. But it was only money wasted as she did not get any better. As Mrs. Goodfellow has three children and her husband to care for it was a deep trouble to the family for her to be so afflicted. For eight months these dizzy spells and the paralysis continued. Then some friend asked her to try a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills To please the friend she consented to purchase a few boxes. When these had been taken she fest decidedly better. The fainting spells came less frequent, her strength returned to her side and arm and she was deilghted with the arm and she was delighted with the result. After taking about six boxes, and feeling quite well again, she discontinued the use of the pills for a time, but later felt some of the old symptoms returning. She again procured a supply and recommenced their use, and was overjoyed to find that these valuable little pellets again gave relief. She little pellets again gave relief. She continued taking them until she felt that she must certainly be over the effects of the trouble when she again ceased to take the pills. That is over a year and a half ago, and only once or twice since has she had any slight symptoms of the old trouble, and then a few doses of the pills would give full relief. Mrs. Goodfellow is decidedly of "Your love!" she panted. "Heaven help the woman who believes in it. It is as false and cruel as death itself. Hush! Not another word. I will not hear it. Never speak to me again. I would put the whole world between us if I could. In daring to speak to me of love, you have cancelled the debt of gratitude I owed you."

In daring to speak to me of love, you have cancelled the debt of gratitude I owed you."

Before Frederick Thornton could find his voice to reply, she had fied. He found himself standing alone, lost in a maze of bewilderment on the beach.

"Am I mad, or do I dream?" he cried, hearsely. "My love—an insult! What can she mean?"

Then suddenly a strange light seemed to break in upon him. He was Banker Thornton's son, and heir to a million at his father's death; but in his own right at present he had but a moderate allowance, while Miss Fielding was already an heiress in her own right.

"Did she think I meant to woo and win her for the sake of her wealth?"

Anger and wounded pride came to his rescue, blunting the sting of her stormy words. If there was one class of men he had always detested above others it was fortune-hunters. And the thought that he should be classed as one of those despicable creatures cut to his heart like the sharp thrust of a dagger.

The next morning the deplorable news was circulated among the young ladies that Mr. Thornton had left the hotel the night before.

"Oh, how provoking!" they chorused that Mr. Thornton had left the hotel the night before.

"Oh, how provoking!" they chorused in a breath. "And the season at its height, too. How we shall miss him at the hops! He was a charming gallant. How provoking that the attraction was not strong enough to keep him here to the end of the season."

And more than one glance was maliciously turned toward Doris.

Doris turned quietly to the pretty blonde who had made the remark.

"Perhaps he went because the attraction elsewhere was strongest—as it should be in his case. I believe Mr. Thornton to—be—married."

"Married!" echoed the little group, in amazement. "Surely that cannot be, Miss Fielding. What reason have you for thinking so, and who is the lady?"

"Some three years ago he was betathed to Miss Vivian Courtney. He

"Some three years ago he was betrothed to Miss Vivian Courtney. He loved her—and I have every reason to believe—married her," returned Doris, in a low, faint voice.
"Indeed you are mistaken," declared one of the group, briskly. "Ho was en

A year later, after waiting in vain for her handsome lover to return and make up their quarrel, pretty, dark-eyed Vivian married a wealthy sea captain for his gold. They had anything but a happy life of it, and at last he died, and his young widow is spending the money as fast as she can. I read in one of the society journals she was expected here this season. No doubt she has heard that her old lover is here, and is following him up. And, learning was expected here this season. As doubte she has heard that her old lover is here, and is following him up. And, learning that handsome Frederick Thornton has taken French leave, taking to himself the friendly warning to 'beware of vidders.' A wise man knows better than te encourage them."

Doris listened like one turned suddenly to stone. The long porch with its groups of promeanders, the white beach and the long stretch of restless sea beyond, seemed to whirl around her. Ah, heaven! had she heard aright, or was this a cruel mockery of the senses? Vivian and Frederick had parted—three—years—ago? Ah, surely it could not have been! They loved each other too well for that. And believing himself free to woo and win Vivian, what had come between them?

Could it be that his conscience had smitten him when he came face to face that night with the poor child-bride whom he had married only to desert, and did remorse overcome him with the knowledge she had sought death to set him free?

And was it heaven's retribution upon

And was it heaven's retribution upon him, she wondered, that he should meet her again, and knowing her not—she was so change in name, face and fortune—fall desperately in love with her?. That he did love her now, she could not doubt! Had he not periled his life for hers? Was there ever stronger test of love then that?

away—on, cruel, cruel!

And yet, the spirit of that other Doris And yet, the spirit of that other Doris called out to her for vengeance! He must suffer as she had suffered. He must feel, pang for pang, the cruel torture of unrequited love, such as she had felt in the horr or of that never-to-be forgotten hour when kindly suangers, pitying her youth and her friendlessness, had broken the heart-rending truth to her —that he had forsaken her.

CHAPTER XXX .- PARTED AGA N.

"When I forget the past, then I will forgive him—never until then." Doris thought, bitterly.

She tried to take up the old life again,

She tried to take up the old life again, tried to be as happy as she was before Frederick Thornton crossed her path for the second time. But it was a task beyond her accomplishment. A voice was forever crying out to her:

"You have won his love at last. Why did you break his heart and your own too, by sending him away from you?"

"The thought that noor, hapless Doris."

The thought that poor, hapless Doris of the past was avenged brought her no comfort. Should she write to him and recall him? He was still her husband; yes, her husband! Her heart gave a great, sudden thrill at the thought.

"No, no, she would not recall him.
Her pride rebelled against this. He "No, no, she would not recall him. Her pride rebelled against this. He should not have gone away so hastily. The following week, among the new arrivals, came the charming young widow, Vivian Carsdale. That evening, for the first time since that cruel event, which had happened three long years before, Vivian and Doris met again, face to face. Vivian turned a ghastly white, even under her plentiful supply of pearl rouge.

"Who is that young girl?" she cried, incoherently, turning to one of the ladies standing near, and indicating Doris.

"That? Why, I is Fielding—the belle Newport!" ret ned her companion. of Newport! 'ret ned her companion, gazing admiringly after Doris's tall, slim, graceful figure. 'Wby, how white you look, Mrs. Carsdale! What can be the matter? You look as if you had seen ghost."

"I almost imagine I have," retorted

"I almost imagine I have," retorted Vivian, turning abruptly away.
"Was there ever a face so like" muttered Vivian, when she found herself alone in her own boundor. "If I did not know that Doris was sleeping under the waves, I should say that the girl is Doris, older, and grown taller, with the same features, yet a thousand times more beautful."

She took great case to place herself.

Doris, older, and grown taller. With the same features, yet a thousand times more beautful."

She took great care to place herself near Doris the next day, where she could listen to her voice, observe every play of those mobile features; and again it struck Vivian as to how like this girl's voice was to that of Doris.

In that same hour these two, whose paths had crossed each other so strangely, were presented to each other.

"You remind me so strangely of one whom I used to know," said Vivian, sweetly, "that, do you know, I am almost lost in wonder sometimes, the similarity is so striking."

She was watching Doris narrowly, and saw the flash and the look of confusion that crossed her lovely face.

The more Vivian talked to Miss Fielding, the more a certain wild idea that had taken possession of her became strengthened in her mind.

Very ingeniously Vivian led the conversation around to education.

"Where were you educated, Miss Fielding?" she asked, suddenly.

And almost instantly, without stopping to think, Doris had uttered the fatal words that sprang to her lips:—

"At Madame Delmar's seminary, Beech Grove, Maryland."

Vivian uttered a little stifling scream. All her doubts now verged into assurances. With lightning-like rapidity, she turned upon the shrinking girl before her. No change of appearance, nothing in this world, could have veiled Doris's identity from the rival who had hated her with such a bitter hatred three long years ago

"I know you. You cannot deceive years ago

"I know you. You cannot deceive me," she cried, shrilly. "You are Doris Brandon, the girl who stole my lover from me, because I trusted you to deliver a letter to him. You are not dead, then.
You have risen from the grave to come between us again. Now that I think of it, the body supposed to have been drowned was never found. Why are you here sailing under false colors? Miss Fielding, indeed! You shall be denounced as an impostor before to-morrow's sun as an impostor before to-morrow's sun rises."

Like a whirlwind, she turned and left Doris standing sounned, dazed, bewildered, on the sunlit veranda. Like one suddenly stricken blind, she slowly groped asked herself, with a great gasping sob. Had it been such a terrible sin, when-

"Mad from life's history, Glad to death's mystery," in a frantic moment she had flung herself into the water?

She knew how bitterly such an action would be condemned—that the verdict of the world would be—No matter how hard she had found life, she should have hard she had found life, she should have taken up her cross with patience and resignation.

This, then, was what Vivian meant and more, having been saved from a watery grave, she should have let that fact become known. What if, believing her dead, Frederick Thornton had married again? He would have been innocent of all wrong intent before the Great White Throne, and she—yes, she—would have to answer for it before an offended God. She could see now that it had been God. She could see now that it had been all wrong, keeping the fact that she lived from her husband.

That he did not love her was no ex-

That he did not love her was no ex-cuse. She saw it all now in quite a differ-ent light from what she had ever thought of it before.

What a sensation there would be on the morrow, when Vivian revealed all.

All the world would know that she was forwhen bride, that the man she had All the world would know that she was a forsaken bride; that the man she had married had deserted her at the very altar almost. And they would say, too, that, in after years, when the child-bride (whom he had married so hastily, repenting of the rash deed even while the solemn marriage service was being uttered) was changed beyond recognition, she threw herself in his way under an assumed name, won his love, and trampled it under her feet. This had been her plan of vengeance, and a most ignoble vengeance it had been.

"Yes, they would say all that to me!"

"Yes, they would say all that to me!" moaned Doris, "and I could never endure that."

Sooner or later the story would reach Frederick Thornton's ears, and, oh, how shocked he would be. "Better that he should hear this from

"Better that he should hear this from me than from the lips of a stranger," muttered Doris, pacing excitedly up and down her room, wringing her little white jeweled hands, then pressing them tightly over her throbbing heart. "Yes, yes, I will write to him, confessing all; then I will go away so far he can never find me."

find me.

find me."

Seating herself before her writingdesk, with trembling hand and face as white as death, she began her letter to Frederic. Thornton.

It was a long, closely-written letter, blotted with heavy, splashing tears.

In it, she went back to the fatal night when she followed him and Vivian through the grounds of the villa, and had suddenly sprung out before them, throwing off her disguise, crying out that she, his mother's companion, was the bride he had wedded, only to cruelly desert.

desert.

And how, in the intense excitement of him, the moment, she had turned from him, without waiting to hear one word of defence, if he had any to make for such an action, and had flung herself head-long into the waves. How she had been saved from death, and had made her way to the great, cruel city of New York, where the accident befell her from which Karl Lancaster was instrumental in rescuing her.

She al o told him of the great discovery that had ensued—that she, the poor little dependent, who had suffered all the pangs of poverty, was an heir ss—the daughter of Hulbert Brandon Fielding, an English milord. She told how the impulse to confess

She told how the impulse to coniess who she was had been strong upon her when, after an absence of three long years, she had suddenly met him abroad that day. And how, seeing he did not recognize her, because she had changed recognize her, because she had changed so greatly during the length of time that had intervened, she had made up her mind never to reveal her identity, come what might. She then told of her subsequent discovered they have the heart of the sands trans. Without the heart of the subsequent discovered the sands trans.

She then told of her subsequent discovery that he had parted from Vivian forever on that fatal night three years ago; and of Vivian's arrival at the hotel, and how she had recognized her, declaring that on the morrow the whole world should know her story.

"I could never endure that," she wrote, piteously, "and so I am going away—going so far that no one who has ever looked upon my face will ever behold me again.

With hands as cold as death Doris scaled her letter, addressed it, and took it down to the mail box in the office. "Now," she said, as she stood again in her own room, "nothing is left for me to do but go quietly away, secretly and alone. When Vivian tills her story, they will not find me here."

According to a letter received from a Victorian now at Washington, the representative of the sealers, Capt. J. G. The business will then be at an end as far as Canada is concerned and the Dominion government, it is understood, will be asked to prosecute any vessel coming in with skins.

After the Battle.

Washington, Feb. 7.-The important washington, Feb. 7.—The important mews in Washington today was the ratification of the peace treaty, and the receipt of the lists of casualties from General Otis. Prompted by General Otis' promise of last night to send along the list of casualties at the earnest possible moment, the friends of the soldiers at Manila besieged the war department today by telegram and word of mouth for information from the scene of the battle in the Philippines. Waste of time and thought."

Vivian Carsdale heard of Doris's departure with a strange smile on her lips. She, and she alone, understood her sudden flight. She did not make known poor Doris' story as she had threatened to do. She had merely meant to frighten the girl into acknowledging her identity. Now that her rival was vanquished, she could afford to hold her peace.

There was great disappointment among the young ladies over Doris's sudden departure, for she was a general favorite, and this piqued Vivian exceedingly.

Very adroitly—she set herself to the task of unraveling what seemed to her a wonderful mystery—as to how poor, dependent Doris had become a great heirses, and was known as Miss Fielding. Little by little she drew from Mrs. Lancaster the story of her son Karl's adventure and his romantic meeting with Doris, and their discovery subsection that hostilities in the Philippines. The list was long in coming, a fact explained by the cutting of the wires along the United State front, which prevented early reports from the division commanders. In the meantime came a short cablegram from Admiral Dewey that caused some temporary commotion by creating the impression that hostilities had been renewed by the insurgents. Up to the close of office hours, however, nothing had come from General Otis to confirm this inference, him touched upon other matters entirely, so it was assumed there was no foundation in fact for apprehension.

LOST IN THE MOUNTAINS.

When This Happens, You Keep Cool

In the first place, one should carry a general idea in one's head of the main streams, nountains and gulches. In a new or strange country this knowledge should be obtained at once On the first day out be obtained at once On the first day out of a new camp keep on high ground as much as possible; look back frequently, so that the country will not appear strange when you turn back, and do not try to burden your mind with too many small

Always carry a compass, as there is no way of telling the points of the compass by means of bark or branches that can be relied upon. Remember the direction is which your camp is, and then if you get really lost, sit down, build a fire and make a big smoke. This is supposing that you have compauions, as no greenhorn should be alone in camp. They will look you up the next day, and it is better to sit by a fire and take it easy than it is to you up the next day, and it is better to sit by a fire and take it easy than it is to run all over the country. Every year men are lost in the mountains who, if they had kept cool and sat down and made a smoke, would have been in camp by noon the next day. Instead of this they lose their heads, travel clear out of the vicinity of the camp, and sometimes suffer terribly or die of starvation before being found.—Forest and Stream Forest and Stream

Two leading teetotal lights of the "lang toun" of Kirkealdy were returning home one night after attending a highly successful temperance meeting, when they managed to get spilled out of their trap, receiving some damage. A local editor, after giving full details of the accident, added with grin humar. Fortunate bath generals with grim humor. "Fortunately toth gen-tlemen were sober at the time." The veil-ed suggestion that they were not custom-arily sober greatly irritated the temperate couple, and a strong letter was written to the editor demanding an apology The apology duly appeared It ran "Messra —— and —— demand an apology for our having stated that at the time of their accident they were both sober We have pleasure in withdrawing our observation."

CARDSTON, N. W. T.

The God of Murderers.

In a certain mountain village called Laituk, on the northwest frontier of Burma, is a sacred pool, in which is said to live a nat—i. e., a demon—called Shearpanlai, who is the guardian spirit of murderers.

When a murder is committed any where in these hills, the water of this pool is reported to turn blood red. Now, when this happens it is a warning sign to the villagers, who are the wardens of the pool, to be on their guard lest the murderer, whoever he may be and from whatever village he may come, unobserved, succeed in reaching the pool, for the Chin law or custom is that if a murderer manages to elude the "avengers of blood" (who are usually some near blood relations of victim) and the vigilance of the guardians of the pool and succeeds in gaining it and washes his hands in its blood red water, which, as soon as this occurs, resumes its usual appearance, testifying that the god of murder is apguiltiness and is thereafter a free man, and no one may henceforth molest him.

On the other hand, if he were overtaken by his pursuers or were he pre-vented by the village guardians from reaching the well he would speedily pay the penalty of his crime with his life.— London Answers.

On another occasion—it was in $898 Eugen Wolf, the well known traveler and writer, came on a visit to the prince after having passed through Rome and having had an audience with the pope "The pope asked me where I was going to on leaving Rome. I told him that I was going back home to Germany and was going back nome to Germany and that my first object would be to pay my respects to Prince Bismarck, who had hitberto always received me. The pope thereupon said: 'Il Principe di Bismarck! Do not forget to greet him from me.' So, when I arrived at Eriedrichsruh, I told the prince that I had greetings from Rome to deliver to him.

'Oh, indeed!' said Bismarck. suppose you have paid a visit to the pope. How fares the health of the holy father? I must tell you that I always got on very well indeed with him. Cause Lifelong Suffering. A Case that is Causing Talk.

A Case that is Gausing Talk.

When a lad about eight years of age I fell into a cellar a distance of ten feet, striking on my head, and causing concussion of the brain. I was taken to a London, Eng., Hospital, the first seven days not recovering consciousness. I am now 35 years old and from the time of my accident until I began taking Dr. Ward's Pills five months ago I had been subject to fainting spells, never being more than two weeks without an attack of fainting. As I grew older these spells became more frequent, lasted longer, and left me with less vitality. I was weak, had no strength or stamina, always very low-spirited and down-hearted; imagined that every thing and every person was going against me, and life only had a dark side for me. My appetite was poor most of the time, but I am now happy to say that, since taking Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills, I have only had one fainting spell, shortly atter I began taking them, so I have no hesitation in saying that Dr. Ward's Pills cured me. Before taking these pills I always looked for a fainting spell not more than two weeks apart; now, I would be greatly surprised at a recurrence of these spells. Life is now bright—the constant, morbid, down-hearted feeling is gone, being replaced by a contented, hopeful feeling. I feel like working. My appetite is good, and in every respect I have experienced the health and strength restoring properties of Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills. They certainly have proved a great blessing to me. ### FILIPINO VERSION.

CABLES RECEIVED BY THE FILL-PINO JUNTA.

U. S. Soldiers Provoked the Attack-Only 7,000 Natives Engaged-Slaughter of the Ygorotes.

London, Feb. 13.—The European Filipino junta received today a long elegram from Agoncillo, the agent of Aguinaldo, dated from Montreal and declaring that he left Washington in consequence of a telegram received on February 4, from Aguinaldo, urging him to cable the Malolos government the result of the vote of the United States senate on the peace treaty.
Aguinaldo, it appears, added: the most urgent importance that we should at once be acquainted with the should at once be acquainted with the decision, as we are negotiating with General Otis, and the vote will vitally affect the negotiations." Agoncillo further declares that, as he is closely shadowed by United States authorities, to dispatch this telegram has been im possible, and he therefore proceeded to British territory. The agent of Aguin-aldo again expressed his conviction that the outbreak was "provoked by Americans, for this very purpose." The telegram concludes: "The Filipinos telegram coucludes: were anxious to maintain friendship with the Americans, and had formally decided never to be the aggressors."
Several dispatches have also been received here from Filipinos' sources, dated from Manila, via Hong Kong, and giving the rebel version of the outbreak of hostilities. A Filipinos dispatch dated from Manila on February 7, says: On Sunday a force of United States seldiers attacked simultaneously Caloocan and Santa Mesa. Two United States warships were off Malante, and a smaller gunboat was in the Passig river, to protect the United States

The ships destroyed all the villages between the shore and the Passig river within an area between Malate Para-neque, San Pedro and Mocati. Singalon, establishing proceeded to themselves on the river dam. They tore up a mile of the rails of the Caloccan-Malolos line, and cut the telegraph in order to stop communication with Agninaldo. The Filipino forces engaged numbered only 7,000 men, including 1,000 Ygorotes, acting upon in structions from Malolos. The Filipinos remained strictly on the defensive, and finally retired in good order, without any loss of arms or ammunition. Two old Krupps of an obsolete pattern, mounted on the fortress of San Antonio, were captured. The fighting was very stubborn, and lasted continuously from Saturday to Tuesday. General indignation has been occasioned by the treachery of the Americans' sur-prise. The Filipinos believe that the Yankee administration is only favored by a minority of Americans, and only abstain from taking the offensive in order to show their gratitude to the United States nation for helping them to get rid of Spanish rule. Hence they will only fight when attacked, and their future action depends upon the d cision the United States. ### MIDNICHT BLAZE

THE MANITOBA HOTEL IS COM-PLETELY WIPED OUT.

No Lives Lost-Loss on Building is Over $500,000-A Toronto Firm Loses $60.000.

Winnipeg, Man., Feb. 8 .- With the thermometer registering at about 40 below and a trisk breeze blowing over the city, Winnipeg has witnessed another conflagration which outrivalled the one of a year ago. The beautiful Hotel Manitoba, erected at a cost of half a million doilars, and all its effects are now a complete loss. The Northern Pacific depot is in conjunction with the hotel, and it, too, is lost. The hotel was owned by the Northern Pacific

At five minutes after twelve last night, Fred E. Hanson, chief clerk in the Manitoba hotel, awoke and remarked to his room mate, Mr. Joseph Carter, that he thought he smelled Less than two hours afterward the Manitoba hotel, by all odds the hotel between Montreal and the Pacific coast, and probably one of the best con ducted on the American continent, was Mr. Hanson had no sooner beome thoroughly awakened than the whole hotel was alarmed by the sudden ringing of the electric bells. He and his room mate dressed themselves instantly, and not knowing of the extent of the fire at that time, descended immediately to the ground floor, with two or three hundred others, who were, like themselves, awakened by the alarm.

At one o'clock it was still a problem as to how much of the immense struc ture could be saved, and still excited individuals were feverishly removing salvage from what they, as it hap pened, believed rightly, was a doomed building. Curlers from all parts of Manitoba, from St. Paul, Duluth and from Lindsay, were everywhere scat-tered through the crowds, clad in most picturesque dishabille. One gentlemanrom St. Paul had no coat or hat; a econd had no overcoat, and a third unfrom St. Paul had no coat or fortunate was seen going around in pyjamas slippers and a night shirt. This gentleman subsequently abled, by the kindness of friends, to ado to his scanty wardrobe a pair of rubber and a raccoon coat.

At twenty minutes after one o'clock the flames broke through the roof of the east wing, and to those on the outside the scene was wierdly grand. The flames shot out into the cold, frosty air as though eager to mount still higher, and at the same time they insidiously worked towards the west, on the pro tection of which depended the saving of even a remnant of the hotel. As soon as this became known those, who hoping to the last, had kept their effects piled in heaps in the rotunda, abandoned all hope and a wild retress was at once commenced. Elderly gentlemen were seen running briskly along with cheap lithographs in their hands, while valuable bundles were left uneded in the general confusion.

Every one was now ordered to leave the hotel, and the magnificent spectacle of $500,000 going up in smoke was viewed by a throng of at least two thousand spectators, who braved forty degrees below zero to witness so un usual a sight.

HOW THE FIRE STARTED.

The fire broke out in the dining room, catching a light from a spark from the large open fireplace at the east end of that wing. It spread rapidly and by the time the firemen reached the spot it had broken into the bed rooms above the dining room and or the third floor. At this stage the presence of the fire was indicated in the rotunda and main corridor by steam with but little smoke. Soon, however a reflection of flame could be seen or the white snow-covered roof of the N ing an a 'ew well directed streams of water oou drove the flames back, and in a few minutes where flames had been a moment before smoking blackness only remained.

The building destroyed was acknowledged by travellers to be one of the finest in Canada. It was erected in 1891 under the supervision of Mr. John Woodman, C. E., Messrs. Rourke & Cass, of this city, were the contractors. Its frontage was 216 feet on Main street and 212 feet on water street. The architect was Mr. C. E. Joy of St. Paul, and it was formally opened with a grand ball on January 1, 1892. The otel was built and owned by the Northern Pacific Railway company. was a seven story building, with ac-commodation for over 300 guests. It was built of St. Louis pressed brick.

This shock of coming face to face with Doris whom she believed to be dead, had whom she believed to be dead, had been a great and terrible blow to her, and she had realized, with this living barrier between them, that Frederick was indeed lost to her forever. Yet it was with a feeling of intense satisfaction she had realized that owing to the great and surprising change in Doris, he had failed to recognize her. I was no wonder.

The Doris he had known in the pas The Doris he had known in the past was but a timid slip of a school-girl; the Miss Fielding he had met in later years was a society belle and a beauty.

What strange fate had brought them together again, and parted them more widely than before?

"This is the second time that girl has come between me and Frederick Thornton's love!" groaned Vivian, desperately, as she paced the floor of her room excitedly.

No need of anxiety; Doris must return soon, for her supply of pocket money, which she had taken with her, would not last forever. Buoyed up with this hope, they waited patiently; but not so much as a line, revealing Doris's whereabouts, reached them.

But let us follow Doris's letter written that night to Frederick Thornton,

"It looks like Miss Fielding's writing," he cried, quickly turning over the page. "Why, it is from Miss Fielding," he muttered, catching his breath hard.

Like a man in a dazed, bewildered dream, Frederick Thornton read the startling letter through from beginning to end. What was it this letter told him? Was he mad or dreaming? Doris, his little, neglected bride, whom he had mournel as dead, and Miss Felding were one and the same! Oh, impossible! There was some terrible mistake!

Again and again he read the letter through. Yes, here it was, in black and white, as plain as written words could make it, every incident brought up and lucidly explained. Great drops of perspiration stood out on his face, and his

Had he been blind that he had not noticed her great resemblance to the young bride from whom fate had parted him so strangely in that bitter past?

The revelation was wenderful to him. He would lose no time in hurrying back to Newport to see Doris, and explain to her that which she had not given him time to explain on that fatal riven him time to explain on that fatal

How he would kneel at her feet, and tell her how he had mourned the young bride whom he had lost so cruelly mourned for her, refusing to be comforted; and how the first sight of her face, which had reminded him so strangely of Doris, had thrilled anew the heart he had believed dead.

Despite her coldness and aversion (and heaven knows, under the cruel mistake she was laboring under, he well knew she had reason to abhor him, increase though he had been of nocent though he had been of thought of deserting his poor little bride), he believed she still loved him.

Through his brain flashed the desperate cry that had fallen from her lips when they had faced death together in the mad surf:—

No, no! It would be better to go on and see her in person. No telegram could tell one-half of what he had to say to her. tell one-half of what he had to say to her.
But one eastward-bound express stopped at the little village where he was staying, and that was at six in the evening. It was not yet noon. How should he pass the intervening hours? Frederick Thornton asked himself.

One heart in that quiet village was flery and restless enough as the hours rolled by. One man paced its streets with impatience, because the warm day would not go more quickly. He counted the hours. There were still two to pass; then the train would arrive.

And, in a few brief words, he told Karl all, finishing by putting Doris's letter in his hand.

Karl Lancaster's amazement can bet-

"Heaven help you to bear what I must teil you, Frederick," srid Karl; "but you must bear it bravely like a

"The hours flew by unheaded, and to make a long story short, we returned to the seminary just in time to see the heavy gates closed in our faces.
"I shall never forget the polgnant grief of poor little Doris," said Frederick huskilly; "how she wept, laying he pretty face down against the cold stones, and wringing her little white hands, declarit; that madame would turn he away from the institute on the morrow for what she had done—just as sure as fate. And, oh, how pitcously the poor child cried out that she could never—never face the great cold, cruel world, and she wished she had died before she ever consented to go to the ball.

Like one dazed, he paced up and down the streets. The sun or moon might be shining; the earth be green or brown beneath his feet; the trees be bare or full of leaf. He knew nothing, saw nothing, understood nothing but this:—

and she wished she had died before she ever consented to go to the ball.

"I said, 'Little Doris, it was all my fault. With me rests the responsibility of the affair. You shall not be thrown on the mercy of the cold world. There is one way of preventing it, and that is to marry me. Doris.'

He was going to see Doris again—ns beautiful, peerless Doris, that had blossomed from such a frail bud into such a magnificent flower—and claim her as his wife.

Men and women and children looked curiously at him as he passed along with his handsome, absorbed fago. They were nothing to him—the whole world was nothing—for he was going back to claim his beautiful young bride.

The two hours must be lived through somehot.

At last the lenged-for whistle of the incoming train from afar of fell upon his ear.

"Thank heaven!" muttered Frederick "This has been the lengest day! have ever experienced in my life."

"I we took the midnight train for Baltimore, arriving there late the next toremon. And now! am coming to the most pittiful part of my story, Mrs. Lancaster. The Boy Gatling.

Mr. Richard Gatling, the inventor of the famous gun which bears his name was a dabbler in schene at the ago of 12 At that time his father was puzzling over a machine for sowing cotton seats, but, try as much as he would, he not perfect it, and at last, in a fit of de spair, he called in young Richard to his aid. The lad listened attentively to the details of the proposed invention, fully grasped the difficulties, shut himself up in a room to think, and in a little while suggested a way out of them. This was eagerly adopted by the elder Gatling, with the result that the machine was perfected and became a great success.

Dangers of Laughter.

It is surprising to learn from the highest medical authority in England that laughter may be injurious.

Laughter in itself, says the British Medical Journal, cannot very well kill but it may do harm. Hysterical girl and boys with kindred nervous affect tions are often given to immoderat laughter, which tends to increase nerv ous exhaustion.

Dr. Feilchenfeld relates an instructive case in which a little girl suffere from very definite cardiae symptom after immoderate laughter. The patien was 13 years old and had previousl been free from any sign of heart dis ease. After laughing cn and off to nearly an hour with some companion she suddenly felt stabbing pains in the ing, followed by cardiac dyspoca, ver; well marked. Feilchenfeld believes tha the cardiac disease directly resulted from immoderate laughing.

LA GRIPPE'S VICTIMS.

THE A-TER EFFECTS MORE DANGER-OUS THAN THE DISEASE.

A Well Known Quebec Farmer Suffered Un-told Misery for Three Years Before He Found Kellef.

The epidemic of la grippe which has swept over Canada like a scourge this winter, has left thousands of weak and despairing sufferers in all parts of the land. Grippe is a treacherous disease. You think you are cured, yet the slight-est cold brings on a relapse. Its vic-tims are left in a weakened condition and fall an easy prey to its manifold complications. The blood is left impure and impoverished; the nerves shat-tered, and heart trouble and nervous prostration are too often the result.

The following statement made by Mr. Daniel Clossey, a well-known farmer near West Brome, Que., indicates the ravages made by the after effects of this scourge. Mr. Clossey says:—
"Some five years ago I had an attack of la krippe. The carling second." la grippe. The earlier symptoms passed away yet I continued to fail in health, and suffered intense pain in my bead. I was subject to attacks of dizzi ness, and unless I would grasp something would fall. I gradually grew so weak as to be unable to do my work. My legs and feet were as cold as ice even in the summer months. If I attempted the least exertion my heart would beat violently. For three years I was in this helpless condition, and although during that time I was attended by three different doctors, their treatment produced not the slightest benefit. At this time I read the statement of one who had suffered from similar trouble, who was cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I decided to try them. The result was simply marvelous. A dozen boxes did what three years of expensive medical treatment failed to accomplish—restored me to full health and vigor, and I am glad to make this statement for the benefit it may bring to others After an attack of la grippe Dr Williams' Pink Pills is the only medicine that can promptly restore you to health. They drive every trace of the poisonous germs from the system, build up and enrich the blood and strengthen the nerves. A Kingston Lady Testifles to Her Experience in the Use of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

People who suffer from any disease or disorder of the heart nervous system, such as Palpitation, Skip Beats, Smothering or Sinking Sensations, Sleeplessness, Weakness, Pain in the Head, etc., cannot afford to waste time trying various remedies, which have nothing more to back up their claims than the bold assertions of their proprietors.

These diseases are too serious to permit of your experimenting with untried remedies. When you buy Miburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, you know you have behind them the testimony of thousands of Canadians who have been cured by their use. One of these is Mrs. A. W. Irish, 92 Queen Street, Kingston, Ont., who writes as follows:

"I have suffered for some years with a smothering sensation caused by heart disease. The severity of the pains in my heart caused me much suffering. I was also very nervous, and my whole system was run down and debilitated.

"Hearing of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills being a specific for these troubles, I thought I wouldtry them, and herefore got a box at McLeod's Drug store.

"Hush, mother!" warned Trixy, in a whisper, "Don't break the startling news to him too soon."

CHAPTER XXXIII.-THE HAND OF FATE.

When Doris fled precipitately from the hotel, she took the first outgoing train, needing not, caring net, in which direction she went.

tion she went.

Long hours passed by, and on through the sunlight whirled the New York express. Deris sat at the window, gazing fixedly out at the changing landscape, yet seeing nothing. It was like one long dream to her. She could hardly collect her thoughts. She could hardly realize what had happened, or where she was going. Her brain whirled. Her eyes burned so that she could hardly close taem. Her thoughts were all fancied and unreal.

More than one passenger stood still to look curiously at the white, beautiful face, with the v.gue and frightened eyes. "Cab," Miss?" repeated the "Take you to any part of the city."

Doris tried to answer him. What was, this strange, deathly sensation that was this strange, deathly sensation that was stealing over her? The man's voice seemed far off and indistinct. Dense darkness shut out his face from her view. She threw p her hands with a little cry, and staggered forward, and would have fallen to the platform if the man had not caught her in his arms just in times.

It was one of the railroad officials who responded. What followed immediately after, Doris never knew. Long week afterward she awoke to consciousness i the hospital to which she had been taken, nameless, friendless, sick unto death, nameless, friendless, sick unto death, nameless, friendless, sick unto death, utterly desolate—she, the petted $\frac{\partial}{2}\text{ the caressed darling of wealth and luxury.} She looked up in wonder at the kindly Riot in a Chicago Theatre.

Chicago, Feb. 20.-A riot in which 2,000 men, women and children took part occurred this afternoon at the Star theatre at the corner of Sedgwick and Davidson streets, and before the police arrived, the interior of the theatre had been badly damaged. Scenery which was to have been used in the presena-tion of the play had been tied up by legal proceedings, and after the audience had waited until 4.30 p. m. for the curtain to go up, many began to clamor for the return of their money. They were refused at the box-office, and two minutes afterwards chairs were broken in pieces and hurled at the stage, chandeliers were broken, carets were torn up, and the theatre and sidewalk outside was one mass of fight ing, yelling humanity. The clanging of the patrol wagon bells scattered the crowd in a hurry, however. Later in the afternoon the money was refunded to those who presented their coupons.

Devices by Which They Are Wooed

From the Unwary.

The steamship hands of the ocean liners The stearnship hands of the ocean liners have a systematic game for drawing tips from the pockets of unsuspecting passengers that rivals anything ever perpetrated by the most expert hotel employees. The game is called "sea draughts" or "sea checkers," and consist of a number of clever "moves" well known to every sailor, steward, cabin boy and deckhand.

Source of the Niger.

An English officer thus describes the tiny source of the mighty river Niger: "Cutting our way through the undergrowth, we crept and clambered down the slippery slopes till we reached the bottom and came to a moss covered rock from which a tiny spring issues and has made a pool below The foliage at this spot is green, most luxuriant and beautiful, and as one looks on the birthplace of the Nigor it is easy to imagine oneself at a dripping well in some wood in England."

FASHION AND FABRIC.

The new jet and cut steel embroideries are quaint and elaborate in design, and the work on new, velvet or satin is very beautifully executed.

The new weaves of lustrous corded silks that are in such high vogue this season share with satin the honor of making special gowns of ceremony.

More and more svelt and clinging, if this be possible, grow the dress shirts, trunces, princess robes and long p plum and tabler effects on the front and sides of the gown.

Very handsome ball dresses are this season made of chenille dotted net over satin, trimmed with very fluffy plaited ruffles of chiffon bordered with tiny lines of che-nille the color of the dot in the net.

INCALCULABLE GOOD.

AN EXPRESSION OF FAITH.

Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills have done me an incalculable amount of good. I think they are the best, surest and quickest acting cure for nervousness, unhealthy action of the heart, insomnia or sleeplessness, anemia or impoverished blood, loss of appetite, general debility and ill-health. For nine years, before I commenced taking Dr. Ward's Blood and nerve Pills, my heart was weak and in an unhealthy state. Its action was so much impaired that I could not walk across the street without suffering great distress, my heart fluttering and beating so rapidly that I could scarcely breathe, causing faintness, loss of strength, and leaving my nerves all unstrung. My sleep was very much disturbed, I had no appetite and there was little strength or vitality in my blood; I was always excessively nervous. Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills have

I have now taken three boxes of Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills and since taking them I have not been away from my business an hour. Before taking these pills it was a frequent occurrence for me to be away from business. As a result of taking Dr. Ward's Pills my heart is perfectly healthy and strong and gives me no distress or trouble whatever. They removed all nerve trouble. made my nerves strong and gave me healthy sleep. These pills also made my blood rich and strong and gave me a healthy appetite. Dr. Ward's Pills have given me perfect health, restoring my lost strength, in place of continual ill-health, weakness, heart trouble and nervousness. In justice I cannot speak too highly of this wonderful medicine. Signed, Miss N. Millward, Walton St., Port Hope, Ont.

"With gratitude I can testify to the wonderful curative powers of Burdock Blood Bitters. Eight years ago our little son, Freddy, was afflicted with salt rheum and was in a dreadful condition. His legs, from the soles of his feet to his body, were entirely raw, and ran a bloody water, which appeared to burn and itch until he was often in great agony.

"After trying several remedies, we resolved to give B.R. B. a trial.

"You can imagine with what delight and gratitude we saw our boy entirely cured after using one bottle and part of the second. We pave him the remainder of the second bottle, and from that time till the present he has never had a sign of salt rheum or a sick day. ### DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS.

No one can be healthy with the kidneys in a diseased or disordered state. The poisonous Uric Acid which it is their duty to filter out of the blood, is carried into the system and produces Rheumatism, Headaches, Backaches and hundreds of ills and aliments.

Any one who has the slightest suspicion that the kidneys are not acting right.

Any one who has the slightest suspicion that the kidneys are not acting right should take Doan's Kidney Fills. They are the most effective kidney remedy known. Mr. Conrad Beyer, at E. K. Snyder's Shoe Store, Berlin, Ont., bears this out when he says:

"Anyone suffering with kidney troubles cannot do better than take Doan's Kidney Fills, for they cured my wife who has been afflicted with pain in the back and other kidney troubles for a long time. They have helped a great many of my acquaintances in this town, and I must say they are the medicine that reach the kidneys with the best effects."

ON RANCHING IN ALBERTA.

To interfere with this instinct is disastrous. A fence across the line of drift will in bad weather give sufficient cause for a large percentage of mortality. Fences necessarily disappeared under pressure of the local conditions, and upon the unfenced leaseholds carrie showed so fine a disregard for owner's rights that the attempt to assert them was abandoned. The herds were allowed to mix and a system of public ranges supplemented by a periodic system of collecting and sorting cattle evolved itself by a mere force of circumstances. In 1894 the leases already issued were formally cancelled. By a compromise with the lease holders the purchase was permitted of a percentage of the land at a low price. and the low result has been the establishment of the industry on the present basis of relatively small private homesteads and widely extended system of commonage for grazing purposes. Thus, as a direct result of climate, the industry has assumed in Canada from the beginning a shape very different from that originally contemplated. In Austalia the pastoral system is built on the individual possession of extensive the common use of land and water.

It should perhaps be added that, while this is the theory, some of the best of the public ranges in the Calgary district have as a matter of fact come to be regarded as the grazing grounds of certain well-known ranches: and, as the grazing capacity of a given stretch of country is not unlimited, the intrusion this kind. at certain points of new herds in large numbers might very possibly he resented as and offense against the established amenities of neighborly usage. Goodas is the water supply over the ground already occupied a very large development of the industry must raise the question of the artificial irrigation of immense areas stretching eastwards from the favored districts. These areas lack only a wider distribution of water supply to render them equally valuable with those already used for grazing purposes. According to the statistics of the land department there exist in this neighborhood 63,000,000 acres of grass land, which under irrigation would become suitable for agriculture. The natural water supply is such as to furnish the means of irrigation at a low cost to about 60,000,000 acres, and the distribution as shown by the surveys would permit of the irrigation of this proportion of onethe work entailed by the necessity of collecting and sorting them of collecting and sorting them that on ine-tenths at fairly regular intervals. The object aimed at by the advocates of irrigation is that the distribution of watershould be so governed as to give to every of the work entailed by the necessity of collecting and sorting them in dollars and cents. ALL WAS QUIET UP TILL NOON YESTERDAY.

Another Virulent Anti-American Decree Has Been Issued by the Filipines-Officials are Anxious.

Zanila, Feb. 27.—11.15 a. m.—Except for an occasional volley and some individual firing from the jungle near Caloocan along the river, and in the vicinity of San Pedro Macati, all was quiet along the entire line last night. The enemy's sharpshooters at Caloocan continue to annoy the American soldiers in daytime, but the Americans no longer pay much attention to them, reserving their fire until the rebels appear in the open in sufficient force to justify a volley or an occasional shell. New York, Feb. 27.—A Washington dispatch of the Herald says: "With the arrival of the German cruiser Kaiser in Augusta at Manila and the reports of filibustering expeditions from Japan in the interests of Aguinaldo, there is a well-defined suspicion in the public mind here that the "political reasons," of Admiral Dewey for desiring the Ore gon must be interpreted in the broadest sense that her presence is desired as much for the moral effect in preventing foreign interference as in bringing the insurgents to terms.

The anxiety of officials has reached such a point that there is no turther doubt that Rear Admiral Dewey askel to submit an explanation. The meeting of foreign consuls yesterday, followed by Admiral Dewey's request for the Oregon, is regarded as highly significbut in the official dispatches there is no connection of the two incidents and in fact the authorities declare they have not been advised that the foreign

Paul Julius de Reuter, baron of the Duchy of Saxe-Coburg and Gothsa, director and founder of Reuter's Telegram company, was born at Cassel Hesse-Nassau, on July 21, 1816. From 1849, as the various telegraph lines were opened, Baron De Reuter worked them into his great news agency and in 1851, when the cable was laid between England and France, he transferred his chief office to Lordon. Previous to this there were no telegrams in London

In 1865 the baron converted his business into a limited liability company and remained managing director until Baren De Reuter was remarkably vigorous and active, considering his age. Until recently he walked five miles every day. For years past he has not taken an active part in the busi-ness of the Reuter': Telegram company, of which his son, Herbert de Reuter,

CHAPTER XXXIV.—FREDERICK THORNTON'S WIFE.

"How foolish I am to be so agitated at the name—Frederick," thought Dorls, recovering her composure by a violent effort. "Of course there is more than one 'Frederick' in the world."

Ah, how she loved the handsome young husband whom she was, even then helding from.

By a great effort Doris collected her by a great close to loss consecutive and the old nurse was saying:

"Are you ill, child? Why, you are as white as a ghost."

"No, I am not ill?" replied Doris; "it was only a suiden pain at my heart. Pray go on: I am listening to your story."

And the old nurse did go on with the strange revelation that was to cange the current of two lives.

"As I was saying," she continued, "the whole family of the rich banker was very grateful for the excellent care I had taken of handsome Mr. Freder.ck, I had taken of handsome Mr. Freder.ck, and I grew to know them well—so well that when I was transferred from Baltimore to the New York hospital, I stopped a week at their beautiful home.

"And it was then that I heard the tragic story that has darkened poor Mr. Frederick's life ever since the hour of that fatal sickness."

Dorts was beginning to feel strangely interested in the marrative. She could not

"Yes, you told that before," said Doris, impatient at the repetition. "Upon that hangs the tragedy which followed," answered the nurse, wiping a tear from her eyes with her long white followed.

Poor Mr. Frederick went back to his home, and his mother and sisters and his old sweetheart, who was visiting there, gave the idol of the family a royal welcome. It was almost like having him back from the grave—he had been so near the borders of eternity.

"This sweetheart was a pretty, darkeyed girl, who thought a heap of Master Frederick, and the great fuss she made over his return flattered his vanity, of course. He never knew before quite how much she cared for him.

"When he asked her to marry him and she consented, nothing could have pleased his family more.

"The day was set for the wedding, the bride's trousseau was ordered, the invitations for the grand we dding was a sign. tions for the grand wedding were given out, and the day set for the marriage was fast drawing near. "Then, sundenly, and without warn-

A great gasp broke from Doris's white lips; but the old nurse, not heeding it, went on, slowly:—
"The young girl claimed him, crying out that she had tracked him down at last—the young husband who had mar-ried her, and had deserted her almost at the very altar."

Again that horrible gasp broke from Again that horrible gasp broke from Doris's lips, and was unnoticed. Doris tried to speak, to cry out, but the words died away in her throat. The room, the green trees outside the window, and the face of the old nurse, seemed whirling around her; and through it all, as if shricked out, trumpet-tongued, upon the still air, she could hear every word that was uttered. was uttered.

"Then, in a flash—that which Mr. Frederick had tried so hard all in vain to recall when he recovered from his dangerous illness, came back to him. And it struck him dumb with horor.

And it struck him dumb with horror.

"It was quite true. He had married the lovely young girl, bringing her to Baltimore on their wedding trip; and stepping out to get a cigar, the terrible accident had occurred which lain him un for large reaches." up for long weeks in the hospital. And, ob, the pity of it! Think of it!—picture it! When he had recovered, it was with a strange blank in his mind. He had forgotten the existence of the fair young bride he had brought to Baltimore—for got his marriage and all connected with it. And it was all the more pitiful, be-cause it had been a secret one. Even his relatives knew nothing of it.

"Before he could find voice, in his horror, grief and amazement, to explain this to the young bride who believed herself so cruelly deserted, and had tracked him down, fluding him about to wel another, she had fled, and—"
The rest of the sentence never finished. With the wildest cry that e was heard. Doris sprang from the couch, and sank down in a dead faint at the old nurse's feet. In an instant she had raised the slim, gir ish figure in her strong arms, and daid her on the coura again. "Dear me! who would have thought the story would have affected her so!"

she muttered, brushing back the lovely, clinging golden curls from the marble white face. "I only meant to draw her thoughts away from her own troubles. I am afraid this will give the poor child a

She lost no time in administering restratives, and soon the lovely blue eyes flared open, and they rested on the old nurse's face; there was a gleam so strangely bright in them that Mrs. Linwood, the old nurse, was quite frightened

"Listen, nurse;" she cried, vehemently.
"I am that most unhappy bride who wedded Frederick Thornton, secretly and came with him to Baltimode, and who had every reason to believe that he had wijfully deserted me."

"You!" cried the old nurse in the

"You!" cried the old nurse in the greatest amazement.
"Yes, I," repeated Doris, sobbing as though her heart would break. "It must have been the hand of fate that led me to you, nurse, and prompted you to reveal to me Frederick Thornton's story. And oh! the joy of knowing he never meant to be false to me! Oh, nurse, nurse, those words have made me wei!" Mrs. Linwood almost believed it as she looked at the girl's beautiful flushed face, and her eyes bright as stars.

Long and earnestly the old nurse and Doris talked the matter over; and Doris told her all of her pitiful story from beginning to end.

"Nay, nay; do not let false modesty stand between you now," she counseled.

"You are his lawfully wadded wife; and

CHAPTER XXXV.-DORIS GOES TO FREDERICK S HOME.

It has often been said that "Love works wonders." This was especially true in Doris's case. From that moment her rapid convalescence was most won-derful. In a week's time she was able to undertake the short journey to Thornton Villa.

'How strange it seems-going back to "How strange it seems—going dock to my—my—husband, after being so strange-ly parted from him three long years ago;" said Doris, elinging to her com-panion's arm, half laughing, half sobb-ing, as the coach rolled swiftly along the and that led out into the shady

Oh, how joyously the birds warbled, looking at the lovely face in the carriage looking at the lovely face in the carriage that whirled by with their bright little eyes, as much as to say: "We know where you are going; we hope you will have a reyal welcome." Even the flowers seemed to nod gaily to Dorls from the roadside as she passed them.

"Every mile brings me nearer to my love," murmured Dorls, as she counted the mile-stones.

And yet, when the great turrets and towers of Thornton Villa loomed up in the distance before her, she grasped her companion's arm with nervous dread.

"I am coming to Frederick's home unfavited," she breathed, softly, "I won er if his mother and sisters will be glad or sorry when they see me!"

or sorry when they see me!"

Then she remembered under what wilely different auspices she had crossed that threshold before. She blushed to rethat threshold before. She blushed to remember it—in disguise, and as his mother's hald companion. Now her fortunes were strangely reversed. She was heiress to a million now; a courted, petted society belie—a cifferent personage, indeed, from the little nobody, the poor little dependent whom Mrs. Thornton would have considered no match for her handsome, elegant son.

"Of course they will be glad to see you, my dear," acclared the old nurse, warmly. "They know but too well how Mr. Frederick has mourned and grieved after you."

Trembling with excitement, she still clung to the old nurse's arm as the carriage swept up the long curved drive to

"Then it really must be our poor brother Frederick whom Vivian has caught in her toils," declared Trixy, despairingly.

"He does not write much like a happy lover," said Isabel, languidly. "There is certainly a tone of despondency running through his letters."

"Ah, mamma, you have almost forgotten to-day is Thuesday," said Trixy.

A moment later there was the sound

"No, ma'am, no; I cannot allow you and this lady to pass on to the drawing and the lady to pass on the drawing the state of room without being announced. My lady

"But I will pass on without being announced!" declared Nurse Linwood, emphatically. "Ars. Thornton will never consider it presumption on my part, be "Orders are orders, Mrs. Linwood," answered the man, sturilly, "All the ladies of the faimly are in the drawingroom, and perhaps they might not like to be intruded upon by your forcing your way into their presence. I ask you again to wait here until I see whether they will see you and this young woman or

CHAPTER XXXVI.-AT LAST.

There had not been so n uch rejoicing at Thornton Villa for years as there was during the hoar that followed Doris's

Thoraton and her daughters, that the namous beauty and heiress of whom they had heard so much, was indeed Doris—Frederick's bride. Oh, if you had but made a confidant

"Oh, if you had but thate a communi-of, me and told me all, how different everything would have been," cried Trixy, laughing and crying in a breath as she threw her arms around Doris's neck, giving her a real old-fashioned, girlish hug.

"You are here just in time for Gwen-dalin's marriage," Trixy went on eager-dolin's marriage, 'Trixy went on eagerly; "and a very brilliant i.ea has occurred to me in connection with it. We will have a double marriage. You shall be married over again to Frederick, and be married over again to Frederick, and that will be your real wedding day. I will not hear a word on the subject in the way of objection," declared Trixy. "I must have my way about this. "You will have barely time to rest an hour before luncheon," Trixy went on, gayly. "Remember who is coming at seven. And when he finds his darling Doris is here—beneath this roof—he will not wait an instant until he sees you.

These lovers are always impatient creaters. These lovers are always impatient crea tures. Great goodness! how you are blushing, Doris. But there! I must run away.

"Oh, dear! every one's love affair "Oh, dear! every one's love affair turns out happy but mine," murmured Trixy, with a little, halt-suppressed sob. "Gwendolin and her lover are to marry. Doris and Frederick are to be hapty at last. While Karl Lancaster, the young man I care for—Oh, dear, want a little goose I am for earing for a young man who does not dream of caring for me. But he does not know it and never shall. There's a great deal of consulation in There's a great deal of consolation in that."

It was a very happy six o'clock dinner they sat down to; but Doris could not eat a morsel. But no one pretended to notice it. She was glad to e-cape to her room. She quite fancied they must hear the tumultuous throbbings of her heart as the han is of the ebony and bronze clock on the mantle traveled slowly very slowly-toward the hour of seven.

Doris opened the door all in a flutter.

Doris opened the door all in a flutter. Had Frederick come, and was Trixy bringing a message from him? But, no. There stood Trixy, with a pretty white mull dress, half smothered in lace flounces and knots of blue ribbon, on her arm. "I'm going to convert you, in no time at all, into a veritable Cinderella, my dear Doris," she cried. "As your trunks are not here wet; you must accept the loan of one of my dresses for this once. I want you to look ever so pretty in 'somebody's' eyes. And I know that somebody will think you perfectly charming in this."

Doris, happy tears smaing in her blue eyes.

"Don't mention it, or you will confuse me," deslared Trixy, laconically. "Come sow, Doris. You haven't much time to spare, I can tell you. See, it wants a marter to seven now."

"I do not think there is any need for agitation, my dear boy," she said. "You must go into the conservatory and search for Doris, and take my word for it, you will find her; if not there, she will probably be in the rose-garden beyond, waiting for you."

Frederick Thornton needed no second

Frederick Thornton needed no second bidding: in a flash he had gone from the room, and was hurrying toward the conservatory. He stood in the midst of the nodding blooms, glaneing around him with eager, impatient scrutiny, calling, softly, "Doris! Doris!" But no slight form pushed aside the green leaves and sprang into his outstretched arms.

"She is not here?" he said to himself.

"She is not here," he said to himself.

Then he went on into the rose-garden beyond.

CARDSTON, N. W. T.

Only Two Men Know the Trick. There is one expert in Philadelph'a who, it is safe to say, stands entirely thone in his specialty. He is James Toughill, who has charge of the piling of coin bags at the subtreasury. Not only does he have charge of the piling of the bags, but he does it all himself, for there is a secret connected with this work that is known to only one man in the country besides the Philadelphia expert.

It does not seem at first glance to be very difficult task, but those who have fried it and failed can be counted by aundreds, while the first man to do the work properly without a knowledge of the secret having been imparted to him is yet to be named. Not so many years ago there was only one person in the ago there was only one person in the country who could do the work. Where he obtained his exclusive knowledge no one knows. On a trip to Philadelphia he met Toughill and the two became fast As a mark of his esteem the original expert taught Toughill the art of piling up money securely, and that is as far as the knowledge has been ex-

The work consists of piling up bags containing 1,000 silver dollars each as high as the vault will permit. When built by the experts this silver wall is as solid and substantial as if built of bricks and mortar, and it is well this is so. If one of these walls should be constructed on wrong principles it would surely fall, and a fall usually means serious injury to some one. Many men have been hurt in attempting to learn the art, and now Toughill and his friend, who is in the west, occupy the field alone.—Philadelphia Record.

In Extremis.

Late one night a clergyman was called out to minister to an old man-a worker upon the adjacent railway—who was supposed to be dying. The summons was brought by another old man, the elder brother of the stricken one. While he was bustling about, making preparations for departure, the clergyman forgot momentarily the social status of his visitor and asked, "Is he in extremis?'

The old man was not going to be beaten. "Aye, he's right in, your reverence." After a pause he added as a elincher: "Clean in, poor chap. Right up to the neck, sir."—Cornhill Maga-

GENTLEMEN,—I have for a long time needed something to make blood and build up my system. My blood was watery and thin, lacking strength and vitality. Last January a friend said:—"Why not try Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills? They will supply the oxygen your blood needs and give you health and strength." I told him I was very skeptical as to any benefit that could be derived from any proprietary medicine and had no faith in them. There the matter rested until four months are, when reading-are medicine. months ago, when reading so much about what Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills what Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills have done for so many people with impoverished blood, I concluded to give them a trial. I have taken four boxes and my unbelief so far as Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills are concerned has been entirely removed. They are a splendid blood buil-ler and strength restorer, and an invaluable medicine for weak, enervated people. This has been my experience, they having given me strength of body and strong healthy blood.

Business Partnership of Matrimony The time to begin to learn from eac The time to begin to learn from each other is when people are first married, when life is still a playground to them and when romantic love condones what in later years might seem nagging or carping criticism. We are all creatures of habit. It we get used to the business partnership of matrimony in our youth, it becomes second nature and not a hardship nor a disillusionment. If people would take time to understand each other and to cultivate mutual confidence, how much easier marto understand each other and to cultivate mutual confidence, how much easier married life would become—in fact, all life! To be sure, we only hear of the unhappy marriages, while great numbers of good are ulodding on together silently and happly. Egyptian Burials.

It has hitherto been supposed that in Egypt the practice of embalming the bodies of the dead and forming them into mummies was the most ancient method of sepulture, but Professor Flinders Petrie, the well known Egyptologist, has by recent excavations thrown quite a new light upon this question of the ancient method of disposing of the dead. At Deshasheh, a place about 50 miles south of Cairo, he has discovered a series of tombs, in the coffins of which he has found complete skeletons from which the flesh has been carefully dissected, evidently previous tulty. He was, when found, placed on to burial. The coffins are of admirable workmanship, are made of sycamore (ears were entertained for his recovery workmanship, are made of sycamore and are in perfect preservation not withstanding their 5,000 years' burial in the sand. It remains to be proved by further excavations whether the mutilation in him freely to deaden the pain, and tion of the bodies was performed as a ceremonial rite or whether this removal of flesh from the bones points to canni-balism on the part of the ancient people. -Chambers' Journal.

"I never thought of that, I'm sure."
"And if it had not been for Vivian's coming to Newport, and discovering my identity, I should never have been so desperate as to write that letter to you revealing the truth that I was Doris, whom you mourned as dead."
"By George!—pray pardon the expression—but that's true, too, Doris. After all, we do owe a great deal to Vivian."
Great was Vivian's consternation to find that Frederick and his bride were on the same steamer with her, but with the natural polish society gives to the woman of the world she smothered her chagrin, and stepped forward, greeting woman of the world see shiothered her chagrin, and stepped forward, greeting Doris gracefully. Vivian avoided them as much as possible on that trip going over, but that, too, was quite a bl ssing in disguise. What need had a happy bride and groom for the presence of a third party to interrupt their tender love-making?

When the steam, r landed on the other side they lost sight of Vivian. Not long afterward they read of her marriage to a duke. The society papers often spoke of her after that—of her dresses, hir diamonds, and her cold, proud beauty. She gained for herself the title of "the beautful liciele." "Treat every one kindly, and you will never come amiss," replied John. "Are you intending to accept the check?"

"I suppose I must," sobbed madame; 'but I shall try to repay Doris some day."

Ten years have passed since then; but Ten years have passed since then; but it does not seem to have added a day to Doris's appearance, except to expand the girl into a most gloriously beautiful woman. She is the same Doris as of yore, only her eyes are a deeper blue, the sweet mouth a little more resolute, and her hair has taken on a deeper and more golden sheen, and is done up now in a coil more becoming to a wife than the fluffy, golden curis waving about the pretty, dimpled face when we first introduced her to our readers as a school-girl.

THE NIGHT CLERK'S STORY. A FACE LIKE CHALK.

A FACE LIKE CHALK.

A very bad attack of the Grippe one year ago last winter left my system in a very weak state and my nervous system completely unstrung. After getting over the dangerous stage of the disease I naturally expected to gain strength, but, unfortunately, did not do so. On the contrary, my blood became weaker. I daily lost strength and vitality, and my nervous system became so weak that it was a constant source of suffering both day and night. I lost appetite, the sight of food nauseated me, the weak state of my system caused shortness of breath and unnatural action of the heart, such as fluttering and violent palpitation, and my face was like chalk. I was in this condition and constantly getting weaker when I began taking Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills. I had read the books they distributed and their advertisements in the papers, and thought, "Well, I have taken so much medicine without benefit it is useless to spend any more money. However, I finally made up my mind. It is a forlorn hope; I can but try. If I am not benefited I will not be hurt. So I bought one box and received great benefit therefrom, so continued their use, and to-day am a well man in consequence; my blood is strong, my face has the ruddy hue of health, my appetite has geturned, I sleep well, I have not the slightest in dications of nervousness or heart trouble, and from a sick, weak, nervous man Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills have transformed me in six weeks to full health and strength." #### PAINS IN THE BACK

Are Usually the Result of Imperfect Working of the Kidneys-These Can Only be Restored to Their Normal Conditi n by a Fair Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Mr. Albert Mintie, of Woodstock, Ont., now engaged in the insurance business, is well known in that city and surrounding country. Some three years ago Mr. Mintie was living at South River, Parry Sound District, and while there was attacked with severe pains in the back. At first be paid but little attention to them, thinking that the trouble would pass away, but as it did not be consulted a local physician, and was told that his kidneys were affected. Medicine was prescribed, but beyond a trifling alleviation of the pain thad no effect. In addition to the pain in the back Mr. Mintie was troubled with headaches and a feeling of lassitude. He was forced to quit work, and while in this condition, weak and despondent, he decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. He purchased a half dozen boxes and was not disappointed with the result. Before they were all used Mr. Mintie was feeling almost as well as ever he had done. The pain in the back had almost disap peared, the headaches were gone, and e felt greatly improved in strength. I'wo more boxes completed the cure, and he returned to work hale and hearty as ever. Mr. Mintie asserts that hearty as ever. Mr. Mintie asserts that his return to health is due entirely to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and he still occasionally uses a box if he feels in any way "out of sorts."

The kidneys, like other organs of the oody, are dependent upon rich, red blood and strong nerves for healthy action, and it is because Dr. Williams ink Pills supply these conditions that hey cure kidney troubles, as well as other ills which have their origin in watery blood, or a shattered nervous system. ### Permanent Cure of Salt Rheum.

The permanent cure after permanent cure that is being published week by week has placed Burdock Blood Bitters far above all other remedies in the estimation of the sick and suffering.

Even the severest and most chronic diseases that other remedies fail to relieve yield to the blood purifying, blood enriching properties of B.B.B.

Salt Rheum or Eczema-that most stubborn of skin diseases, which causes such torture and is so difficult to cure with ordinary remedies-cannot withstand B. B. B.'s healing, soothing power.

The case of Mrs. Jas. Sanderson, Emerson, Man., shows how effective B.B.B. is in curing Salt Rheum at its worst, and curing it to stay cured.

This is what she wrote:

"Burdock Blood Bitters cured me of a bad attack of Salt Rheum three years ago. It was so severe that my finger nails came off. I can truly say that I know of no more valuable medicine in the world than B.B'B. It cured me completely and permanently, as I have neverhad a touch of Salt Rheum since."

A G. T. R. COLLISION.

A TORONTO LADY AMONG THE INJURED.

A Westbound Passenger and an East. bound Freight Meet-The Switch Was Probably Tampered With.

Granger, Ind., March 11. - Two Grand Trunk engines collided here last night as a result of which the following persons were injured:

Downey, engineer, badly hurt.
James Elliott, of Erie, Pa., thought to be fatally hurt.

Mrs. Fred W. Emslie, of Toronto,

Ont., injuries probably fatal. Henderson, laborer, stealing a ride, fatally hurt. Lynch, fireman, serious.

The collision occurred near the intersection of the Grand Trunk and the Big Four tracks. A westbound passenger and an eastbound freight met on the Grand Trunk, the freight met on the Grand Trunk, the freight having a signat to sidetrack. The switch was thrown, but seems to have been tampered with, and at this juncture the rear brakes refused to operate and the collision followed. A score of passengers were bruised somewhat, but only those named above were seriously wounded.

The samoan Situation.

Chicago, March 10.—A special to the Chronicle from Honolulu, via San Francisco, says, concerning the Samoan situation, a startling report was given out by an officer of the cruiser Philadelphia to a friend here just prior to the sailing of the flag-ship for Apia.

just prior to the sailing of the flag-ship for Apla.

According to the officer, Admiral Kautz is instructed to uphold all of the recent decisions of Chief Justice Chambers respecting the election of the king in Saumoa, and matters growing out of it. Hz is to co-oper-ate at once with the American and British consuls and declare Malieota Tanus rightful and legal king. Maileota will be placed in authority under the protection of American and British marines. Mataafa, who also has now a military assendancy, will be called marines. Mataafa, who also has how a military ascendancy, will be called upon to surrender. Should he refuse to do so Admiral Kautz is instructed to "proceed, by force if necessary to establish the authority of the duly elected king, Malietoa Tanus."

It is be indeed there will be a struggle, Mataafa is brave, he has the endorsement of and will be supported by Germany. It is not believed that Admiral Kautz will attempt to follow him farther than his present stronghold, some six miles from Apia. In which case American sailors would not be endangered except from bushwhackers. But Mataafa himself may be the aggressor.

British audget.

British rudget.

New York, March 11.—The London correspondent of the Tribune writes: "Unless all signs fail, there will be important debates on official problems after the chancellor of the exchequer lays his budget be ore the commons. One of these signs is the ominous warning from Sir Michael Hicks-Beach that the balance of revenue and expenditure may be on the wrong side and measures may be required for meeting a considerable deficit. Another straw which shows the direction of the wind is Mr. Morley's protest against the alarming increase of national expenditures. The most remarkable incitation, however, of the stransition stage in mational finance is the candor of the leading English journal in recommending the re-mposition of duties which were abolished as the perfmanent fiscal policy of the United Kingdom. That great organ of English opinion has been publishing a series of important articles by an expert on finances of the last twenty years and th's week it virtually adopts his conclusion that the time has come for reconsidering and revising the entire system of taxation in a boid and comprehensive way."

Navigation at Montreal.

Montreal March 11.—The grain merchants of Montreal are already looking forward to the opening of navigation. It seems, however, now pretty certain that the canals will not be opened until May 1 or after. Last year the canals were opened about the middle of April and grain was able to middle of April and grain was able to middle of April and grain was able to load some of the first boats, but this year the burges will not be able to get into port until May 5th or 6th. Steamers will leave Grent Eritain for Montreal about April 15th, arriving here about April 25th, so there may be ten days tetween the arrival of the ships and the avent of the grain laden barge unless the date of the opening is advanced.

DISBANDED IMMUNES FIRE FROM A TRAIN ON PASSERS BY.

Citizens Fired a Volley Into a Train Which Awed the Negroes and Injured a Train Hand.

Atlanta, Ga., March 9 .- The Tenth Immunes (negroes). Colonel Jones, who vere mustered out at Macon yesteray, began to show their ill-temper as soon as the train bearing them home began to move out of Macon. Producing revolvers and other arms which they in some way managed to keep with them they began firing from the windows, bullets flew in every direction as the train sped on and passersby were compelled to seek safety. Luckily only one person was shot at Macon. Will Goodyear, a 16 year old white boy, whose arm was fractured by a ball. As the train passed the various stations on the year old white boy, whose arm was fractured by a ball. As the train passed the various stations on the road the rioting was renewed, shots being fired from the train at the people on the platforms to see the train go by.

At Griffin, Ga., where the first section of the train stopped, about 2.30 p.m. occurred the most serious trauble of the day. The regiment came over the Central of Georgia railroad in three sections. When the train stopped at Griffin the negroes, who by this time had filled up on whiskey, began firing their pistols and yelling like Indians. Over 200 shots were fired and the police were powerless to resist. The city was at the mercy of the negroes, who kept up a fusilade of shots until the train carried them beyond the city limits.

When this train came to a transtill the aggress saw 200 heavily armed men, who comman led them to keep quiet. The negroes were awed and with a few exceptions were as decile as lambs. To those fractious, cracked heads were administered.

When the train pulled out from the depot the negroes thought they were out of the reach of the citizens and they began fring at houses. At the first shot a volley was poured into the train by the citizens and militia. Geo Agee, a trainman, was fatally shot in the ablomen and one negro slively wounded. For a long time prior to taking Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills my nerve ystem was greatly deranged and I was terribly nervous, so much so that in my business (Linesman of the Kingston Electric Light Co.,) my extreme nervousness naturally made the following of my business extremely hazardoue. Before taking Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills my kidneys had been affected for some time. I had constant soreness and stiffnese across my loins and the small of my back.' My appetite was variable and very poor. I also suffered greatly with constant headaches. I am glad to be able to inform you that Dr. Ward's Pills completely cured me of all the above ailments and made me a well man. I have found no medicine like Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills, although I have tried many different kinds. They acted quickly and effectually on my nerve system, making my nerves strong and removing all indications of nervousness. These valuable pills also removed all kidney and back trouble and restored to me a healthy vigorous appetite. I have had no headache since five months ago and feel justified in saying that they are a wonderful remedy. They not only me a heatiny agorous appetite. I have had no headache since five months ago and feel justified in saying that they are a wonderful remedy. They not only removed nervousness, but gave me healthy kidneys, removed all soreness and stiffness from my back and loins, cured me of headache and gave me a good appetite, consequently I am highly pleased. I know of no medicine that equals Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve P'lls for nervousness, chronic headache, sore kidneys and back and loss of appetite. America has produced many women who have exhibited those qualities of heroism in public and private life which entitle them to a place of honor on the rolls of fame. Some have been so honored. Others fame. Some have been so honored. Others—doubtless the greater number of true heroinos—have gone to their graves, if not unwept, at least unsung. But of those whom the public has recognized as worthy a place and name in history there are so many with so varied claims that no philosopher or historian is able to select the half score destined to live the longest in the messories of mankind. The attempt to make such a selection is an interesting but hopeless task, for the trump of fame is an instrument of many stops, and much is an instrument of many stops, and much depends upon the Plutarch or Boswell who blows it. #### Swimming Soldiers.

In the Dutch army a man must be able to swim as well as to fight. Moreover, if he is in the cavalry, he must have a horse which will take a river as easily as a hunter takes a fence. Swimming maneuvers are part of the regular drill there. Collarshib canyas boats, manned by a few are part of the regular drill there. Collapsible canvas boats, manned by a few oarsmen, lead the horses so that they do not attempt to land on stone quays and other difficult points. The men swim across with their horses and on them. They do it in swimming costume and in all the accouterments of war. There are few nautical emergencies for which the Dutch army is not prepared. Some of the officers have even reached such a degree of proficiency that not only their horses and kits cross the river with them, but their pet dogs sit upon their shoulders and are borne over, almost without wetting.

DISEASE OF THE SPINE

A Malady That Makes Life Almost Unbearable-A Nova Scotia Lady Tells How to Cure It.

Mrs. Frank Minard, of Milton, N.S. is a lady who possesses the confidence of a large circle of friends. Mrs. Minard has been a sufferer from spinal disease and attendant complications, and to a reporter she recently gave the particulars of her cure. She said: "As a result of the trouble I suffered terribly. At times the pain would be confined to my back, and at other times it seemed to affect every nerve in my body, from the top of my head to my toes. As a result I was reduced greatly in strength, and was unable to stand upon my feet long enough to attend to my household work. When doing any kind of work which required a standing position I had to provide myself with a high chair as a means of support. The medicine which the doctor prescribed for me did not seem to afford me more than temporary relief from the pain, and I was gradually growing weaker and weaker. Finally the doctor suggested that I should use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and acting on his advice I began to take them. I had only used a few boxes when the agony I had suffered for months began to abate, and I began to regain my strength. I continued using the pills for a short time longer, and was again in full possession of my health and strength, and able to do my household work. I have never enjoyed better health than I am doing

During 1888, 288 applications for 36.152,764 of insurance were received. Omitting the declined and deferred applications, the actual issue of the year was 1649 policies for 55.45,319. This amount is an advance upon the business of the past two years.

The total business in force at 31st December last was 875,256,241 of assurances, under nearly $5.40 policies, upon over 25.00 lives. The payments of the policyholders amounted to about $1,300,000.

The sum of $225,000 was set aside as a special provision towards a higher reserve basis, to which the lower rates of interest now obtainable makes it a prudent lock forward. After making he provision for the reserve upon policies and all other liabilities, there is left a surplus over all habilities amounting to $1,818,747.

The new business during the year was in excess of that of the previous year. Such a result speaks well for the public confidences had been observed to the company occupies.

Mr. Ramsay pointed out that it is possible to injure a Life office by giving it too much new business, obtained at too great cost. He pointed out that there is too geat a disposition for comp nies o congratulate themselves upon a big new business and being in an apparently presperous condition, when, as a matter of fact their reserve may be inadequate, funds badly invested, expense of management ruinous, and profits infinitesmal. The big new business is lot so much a matter of merit as a matter of price. Mr. Ramsey also pointed out that there are already hidications that companies that have been unduly expanded and differently conducted from the Canada Life, are suffering the effects of their different course, and that the great companies whose enormous growth makes them apparently of the most progressive and prosperous character, are just the seeking of the profits which they have been able to give their policy before, and Mr. Ramsey invited the present to compare that with the corresponding ratio of any other campaid to go their different course, and bear of the profits which they have been able to give their policy before, and Mr. Ramsey invited the present to compare that with the corresponding ratio of any other campaid doing business in Canada, pointing out that "Mr. Ramsey invited the profits which they have been able to give their policy helders, whose advantage and security should fee our first an injustice to our other policy anciers, whose advantage and security should be our first-care."

President Ramsey also called attention to the continued decline in the rate of interest obtains able on satisfactory investments, and looking to the fact that a life assurunce company's obligations are based upon an assumption of interest to be obtained during very long periods, upvosy iffty years, it is a matter or prudent regard to the solidity and safety of the company should prepare to still further strengthen the reserves upon policies. With that in view, a sum of $25,000 has been set aside as a special fund towards a higher valuation standard. The wisdom and prudence of this course will commend itself to all interested in the company.

The Vice-President, Mr. F. W. Gates, seconded the adoption of the report, which was unanimously carried. By a vote of 13°3 shares to 354, it was resolved that it would be in the interests of the company that its chief place of business shoul hereafter be in the city of Toward of the company that its chief place of the company that its chief place of the company that the city of Toward of the company that its chief place of the company that its chief place of the company that the city of Toward of the company that its chief place of the company that the city of Toward of the company that t

I will not attempt to tell you the joy and satisfaction of that meeting after an absence of about 14 years. It was good to see them again, but, oh! how changed the old folks are. They look worn out and stricken with years almost ready for the grave which Our Father knows will soon dome.

I have had many interesting gospel conversations with my relatives and they seem deeply interested, I take pleasure in reading to them a little book by Ben E. Rich, it is very convincing and all truth, and would be of great benefit to many at home if they would read it. I feel thankful for the privilege of bearing my testimony to the truthfulness of the gospil of Christ, and I thank God for His spirit which has helped me to answer their many questions and that they are so interested. A brother-th-law of mine had read some of our tracts and he took them to a Hight school which he attends for the purpose of study-ing the Bible. He read the tracts his way down to where he supposed

A NEW YORK FIRE.

SO FAR AS KNOWN 14 TO 15 PER-SONS BURNED.

The Fire Spread Rapidly-Firemen Almost Helpless-List of the Dead and Injured.

York. March 17.-Flames which originated from the igniting of a lace curtain, burst forth from the second floor of the Windsor hotel at 47th street and Fifth avenue, shortly after 3 o'clock this afternoon, just as the St. Patrick's day parade was passing the building, and in a few passing the building, and in a few moments they had leaped up to the roof and enveloped the entire Fifth avenue and 47th street fronts of the hoter Ten minutes later the flames were roaring through the interior of the hotel and all means of escape by way of stairways and elevators were cut off and there was the wildest scene of excitement within and with out the building.

The most complete list or casualties at the Windsor hotel fire shows that fourteen persons were killed and possibly fifteen, wi hout attempting to speculate on the bodies in the ruins. Forty persons are missing. Fifty-two are in the list of injured whose maines are in the list of injured whose wher abouts—are known. Three fire engines and a hundred policemen remained all night about the turning building. These engines poured six large streams of water on the flames, which would start up at intervals in spite of the firemen. Little explosions occurred frequently from escaping gas, the popes having been smashed all over the lower part of the building, the only portion that was left. Citizens were kept a block away from the ruins, as pieces of the walls were falling now and then and there was danger that the wall at the back of the building and that on the 46th street side might fid, at any time. A bit of the wan on 46th street side tapered to a point and still held two chlameys in piace. It will be pulled down during the day. The wall on the rear side, seven stories high, was still standing but it looked as though it might fall with the first still buceze.

The wall on the 47th street side was about two stories high, was still standing to fifth avenue about two stories high, and that in front of lifth avenue about two same. whereabouts are known.

The wall on the 47th street side was about two stories high and that in front of Flith avenue about the same hight. The walls had breaks in them and their jagged tops heightened to the hideous appearance of the ruins behind them which smoked and steamed and emitted a bad stench. Fifth avenue and 46th and 47th streets were impassable. They were filled with debris and in many instances the flagstones had been troken by the great crash of stone and brick.

set to work off the 3-void street side tearing down the threatening wall. Edward Killen, a milkman, said today that he saw the inception of the fire. He was, watching the St. Patrick's day parade when he saw a curtain take fire. He ran into the hotel and tried to send in an alarm by means of the hotel automatic box, but it would not work. Then he ran into the street, sending in an alarm there, and returned to the hotel. He said that a corporal and a private of the Astor battery ran in with him. They found the fire burning up through the shaft. He and the other two men got down the hotel fire hose and played streams on the main stairway, which had caught fire and which they flooded with water. Their eforts were unavailing and had to give it up when the flames came up to it up when the flames came up to them.

France Now Prepared.

Paris, March 18.-In the chamber of deputies yesterday, during the debate on the navai estimates, M. Lockroy sketched the government programme and gave a curious insight into the unpreparedness of the navy during the recent Angio-French erisis. Lockroy said he regarded the defence of the maritime frontier quite as important as the decence of the Yosges irontier and that while France desires peace an, would carnestly strive sires peace an. would carnestly strive to preserve it, a strong navy must be

The minister of marine then processed to research a number of starting inters relating to the condition of the French arsenals at a critical juncture in the relations between France and Great Britain some months ago. He quoted from a letter written by Gen. DesBortes last year, declaring that "not one of our naval bases is able to fulfil the functions for making a defence to save the honor of the French armies. To-day, however, our coast celences are so much improved that we can speak of the conditions of nine mouths ago as of the distant past. The difficuity at that time was an almost absolute lack of men. At our principal ports only that time was a ralmost absolute lack of men. At our principal ports only one-third of the batteries could be manned on the first day of the mobilization, and most of the shells had no fuses." M. Lockroy declared he would never hold back the truth from the chamber. These facts have been obtained after paintly linguities, but chamber. A women stood here—a coarse, stout woman, with arms akimbo.

"Where 'ave you been, idle vagrant that you are!" she cried loudly, as the girl crept down the ladder.

"In the barn," Alice answered.

"In the barn, indeed! I'll have that door locked—that I will, or else I'll know the reason why. Do you think I've got nothing to do but keen you in food.

Alice stood silent as the augry woman scolded on; her small hands were also well institut together, a 1900 look clasped tightly together, a faute look was on her pale face.

"What do you want me for?" she

"What, are you frightened?" said
Mrs. Martha Brown with an angry

"It is, so dark," murmured the girl,

"Give me-the basket," she said suddenly. "Any message?"
"No; unless you ask Mrs, Grey when she wants the next lot of eggs. Now den't stay long; there's the boy's support to get, and I'm worked to death."

Alice turned away without a word, She pulled her thin cotton jacket close round her supple young figure, for the autumn night struck chilly, and stepped to the lane.

Her thoughts were a tangled mass as she hurried along; anger and wearines of spirit, as her mind turned to her aunt whose care she had lived ever since she could remember; disappoint ment at leaving the beautiful story in her book, and fright of the dark, lonely path which grew greater at every step

Although grown out of her childhood, she still lived in a world of fairies, evil spirits, and phantoms. As she stole through the dusk, with her pale face peeping from beneath the mass of golden curls, her small hand clutching the basket as if for support, she looked almost a fairy herself-strange frail flower to belong to s coarse and common a woman as the farmer's wife she called aunt.

there is no escape."

He glanced round in the agony of his mind, and a sudden thought seemed to come to him; he moved to her so rapidly that Alice shrank back.

"Do not shrink from me," he muttered passionately; "but speak to me. Let me know the worst at once. Were you before her she saw two men, one utter-ing faint cries, while the other's arms were wound round him, grasping him till he sauk to the ground and lay

Her basket slipped from her arm—she had no power to stop it—and tell with a crash, causing the man who was stooping over the body to start, utter a loud curse, then stride towards her.

She had only time to catch a fleeting glimpse of a dark face, with cruel eyes, hot with anger, a torn collar, and marks of blood on his cheek, to hear his low Eurried words, 'A girl, by all that's ex-ecrable!" and she lost all remembrance, her eyes closed, her head dropped, and she fell into his arms in a swoon. "Good," muttered the man as he place ed her gently on the ground; know nothing, as for you, poor fool," moving back to the prostrate form of the man, "you have served my purpose - revenge for which I have waited so long has come at last. Ah, you move."

He bent over the man and listened to mattered words from between the

He glanced round, and stole through the hedge. In a few seconds, a curious sound might have reached the ears of ne two silent forms, but they were dim. The man emerged again, he was dragging something with difficulty; it was a

So, Bru:e Gardyne, your revenge is complete He stole gently away, and gradually the form of the man he had called Roy Darrell moved from the ground, with trembling hands he raised his weak body to a kneeling position, then let his eyes, dazed with faintness and horror, wander round.

They rested on the figure of Alice with wonder and scarce comprehension; then they moved slowly on till they rest-ed on the dead man, and with a shudder of horror he covered his face with his hands and groaned aloud.

"It is no dream; it is the horrible truth! Oh. Eustace, my friend, my almost brother, dead, and by my hand!"

She was recovering.

She helped herself to rise by the nid of the tree, then learned against it, faint and weak, to try and think.

Her basket lay unheeded at her feet.

She seemed yet to be living in a hideous nightmare, till looking round, her eyes fell on the kneeling man and the dead She uttered a faint shriek, and in on-other moment Roy Darrell was standing before her, glaring into her face.

He grasped her hand.
"What?" he demand "What?" he demanded huskily. He would know the truth.

For a moment a flash of joy went through his mind. This girl might have seen the fatal blow struck, the hand that took the life of his friend Eustace. She might have seen that phantom third form that haunted his memory.

"I saw you struggling with that man," Alice said, speaking almost with dif ficulty; "your arms were round him; you threw him to the ground. Then you came to me, you said something to me, and I don't remember what else. must have fainted."

The man released her arm with a groan. He moved with slow steps to the dead body.

"Eustace," he said in tones of acute agony, "my friend—forgive me. God have mercy! I was mad—mad with your words. You tried me so bitterly— but I would give all that I hold dear to listen to them from your lips again, for then you would live; now"—he rose slowly, still gazing at the dead man.

"Now, you will never speak again—you are dead—and I have killed you!"—he drew back and leaned against a tree then started suddenly—"and they will trace this back to me, and I shall be hanged as a common murderer! A forgive your son!

Alice stood in silence.

It was night-time now; the moon had risen, and was shining down in silver rays on the strange scene.

The girl forgot everything in the flood of pity that came over her as watched the remorse of the man.

"I swear it." Alice said, meeting his eyes bravely; "few people would come this way by night," she added sortly, touched by the misery in his face. "They fear the path too much."

"But you?"
"It was sent on a message to the housekeeper at the Castle."
"Ah! Do they know you are coming?"
Alice shook her head.

"I think not." "I think not."

Roy Darrell stood immovable, his face blanched with the burden of his sorrow. Cold perspiration trickled down his hargard cheeks. Watching him thus, the memory of that other face that had been before her just as she fainted came to Alice. "You are not dark," she said almost involuntarly.

He turned. "What do you mean?" he gasped hur-

A ray of moonlight touched him glinting his warm brown hair and golden moustache.

Alice looked at him steadfastiy; she was growing faint and ill with the horthe scene, but she forced herself

Roy Darrell was kneeling by the body of his dead friend; and the girl who had promised to become his wife, pushed bravely on-on to face the long dream to face the wrath of her aunt; on to sit and watch till morning came, bringing work for her slender hand and gentle heart in its golden sunbeam.

The Prohibition Question. Montreal, March 14.—The Quebec provincial executive of the Dominion Alliance yesterday considered the re fusal of the government to introduce a prohibitory measure, and adopted a prohibitory measure, and adopted the following resolutions:

"That the Quebee provincial executive of the Dominion Alliance has learned with deep regret the decision of Premier Laurier to refuse to grant the mandate of the Canadian people as expressed in the recent pleb'ssite, to prohibite the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating liquors. The interpretation put by the premier upon the plebiscite is, we consider, manifestly erroneous. Therefore, resolved, that we recommend the council of the alliance to secure the introduction in parliament of a resolution declaring in favor of prohibition, and endeavor to secure a vote which shall be free from political party influence, and if parliament accepts such a resolution and it is carried, the government may be asked to introduce such legislation. We declare it to be the purpose of this alliance and the duty of temperance elector to use every legal means available to defeat any member voting against such a resolution, and elect any who shall vote in its favor; that temperance electors should take immediate sters to interview. and elect any who shall vote in its fa-vor: that temperance electors should take immediate steps to interview their federal representatives and secure their promise to support a prohibitory resolution during the pres-ent session. THE DEMON, DYSPEPSIA.—In oldern time it was a popular belief that demons moved invisibly through the ambient air, seeking to enter into men and trouble them. At the present day the demon, dyspepsia, is at large in the same way, seeking habitation in those who, by careless or unwise living invite him. And once he enters a man it is difficult to dislodge him. He that finds himself so possessed should know that a valiant riend to do battle for him with the onseen foe is Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, which are ever ready for the trial.

The man in the street car affirmed that it was a true story, but the Cleveland Leader does not vouch for it, although giving it in the narrator's own words:

Ones an Interesting Community.

In the forests of Saxony, Germany, are thousands of thatched huts in which dwell the makers of the celebrated "French" dolls. Not many years ago a traveler riding through these noble forests might have seen drying in the sun before the queer houses thousands upon thousands—whole acres—of doll heads. That was in the day of "composition" heads, but now the doll heads are manufactured of bisque in the factories of Dresden and other cities, whither the peasant dollmakers trudge each Saturday with big baskers piled full of beautiful new dolls, taking back to their pitifully poor homes the blank heads, wigs, kids for the bodies, hands and feet and other parts to be used in the next week's work.

A MAGIC PILL.—Dyspensia is a for vith which men are constantly grappling out cannot exterminate. Subdued, and o all appearances vanquished in one, it does its appearance in another direction. In many the digestive apparatus is delicate as the mechanism of a watcher a scientific instrument in which even the breath of air will make a variation. With such persons disorders of the stomach ensue from the most trivial causes and cause much suffering. To these Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are recommended as mild and sure.

A poet is cross with me because I decline firmly to read his manuscripts and advise him as to the desirableness of taking to verse with all his young energy. Other poets may take a statistical view of their case. Let them consider the estimated population of the globe. How many of them have justified their conduct in being poets? At this hour is there one such being anywhere? Suppose, for the sake of argument, that there are six. How many millions to one is it against the success of the neophyte? But, if versify he must, let him send his work to all the editors. If they think his poems worth printing (and paying for), then let him make friends with certain young critics, who will strumentalists blow his trumpet before him. But do not let him bother busy old men, who, by reason of their age, are no longer good judges .- Andrew Lang in Long. man's Magazine.

Why It Was Named Rubber.

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS.

A recent report from a British consul in one of the Central American states In one of the Central American states gives the following as the origin of the name rubber, as applied to caoutehous: An English artist discovered in 1770 that the new gum was admirably adapted for rubbing out peneil marks. He wrote a paper on the subject and informed his contemporaries that a cubic inch of this substance, costing only 3 shillings, would last for years. It was used for no other purpose in England than effacing lead eneil marks for about half a century pencil marks for about half a century after this discovery; hence the name "rub-

After the introduction of the raw m After the introduction of the raw material and the scientific description of the plant by Frenchmen it was first manufactured into waterproof clothing in France toward the end of the eighteenth century. Later on the firm of McJatsch of Manchester greatly improved on the French idea and manufactured waterproofs on a large scale, and "mackintosh" is the name by which waterproofs have been known since that time.—Philadelphia Record.

Early Accidents Cause Lifelong Suffering.

A Case that is Causing Talk. When a lad about eight years of age I fell into a cellar a distance of ten feet, striking on my head, and causing concussion of the brain. I was taken to a London, Eng., Hospital, the first seven days not recovering consciousness. I am now 35 years old and from the time of my accident until I began taking Dr. Ward's Pills five months ago I had been subject to fainting spells, never being more than two weeks without an attack of fainting. As I grew older these spells became more frequent, lasted longer, and left me with less vitality. I was weak; had no strength or stamina, always very low-spirited and down-hearted; imagined that every thing and every person was going against me, and life only had a dark side for me. My appetite was poor most of the time, but I am now happy to say that, since taking Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills, I have only had one fainting spell, shortly after When a lad about eight years of age I am now happy to say that, since taking Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills, I have only had one fainting speil, shortly after I began taking them, so I have no hesitation in saying that Dr. Ward's Pills cured me. Before taking these pills I always looked for a fainting speil not more than two weeks apart; now, I would be greatly surprised at a recurrence of these speils. Life is now bright—the constant, morbid, down-hearted feeling is gone, being replaced by a contented, hopeful feeling. I feel like working. My appetite is good, and in every respect I have experienced the health and strength restoring properties of Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills. They certainly have proved a great blessing to me. Yours truly, (Signed), Thomas Stanton, Brighton, Ont.

There never was, and never will be, a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in a sound unanulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and trength by the influence which Quinine exerts on Nature's own restoratives. It elieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a dispasse, and, by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses throubout the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame, and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally temand increased substance—result, in proved appetite. Northrop & Lyman of Foronto, have given to the public their uperior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, gauged by the opinion of scientists, his wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. A Quebec Farmer Tells How He Was Restored From Almost Hopeless Suffering to Complete Health.

Mr. Wm. Goodard, a welf-known farmer, living near Knowlton, Que., says:—"A few years ago my health gave way and I was completely prostrated. The least exertion would use me up and make it difficult for me to breathe. I suffered from headaches, and had no appetite, and fell off in weight until I was reduced to 130 pounds. Finally I grew so bad that I was forced to keep my bed, and remained there for several months. I was under the care of a doctor, but he did not seem to help me. One day a friend urged me to try Dr. Williams Pink Pills, and I procured two boxes

When I had finished them I could not see much improvement and would have stopped taking them but for the urging of my friend, who said that in my condition I could not expect to see immediate results. I continued taking the pills, and by the time I had taken a couple more boxes there was no doubt that they were helping me, and it needed no further persuasion to induce me to continue them. In the course of a few months I not only regained health, but increased in weight fifty These results certainly justify the faith I have in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I strongly urge those who are weak and broken down to give them a tion for years, tried all the pills and purgatives you ever heard or read of, without getting any more relief than the one dose of the medicine afforded.

Then you were left worse than before, bowels bound harder than ever, the constipation aggravated instead of cured. All the miseries of constipation—Headache, Sick Stomach, Biliousness, Pimples, Eruptions, Blood Humors, Blotches, Piles, and a thousand and one other ills crowded back on you again with redoubled severity.

Wouldn't you consider it a blessing to be cured of your consider it a blessing to all the suffering you have endured would never come again? Burdock Blood Bitters can cure you—cure so that the cure will be permanent.

That's where it differs from all other remedies. It makes a thorough renovation of the whole intestinal tract, tones the bowel wall, acts on the liver and stomach, and causes all the digestive and secretory organs to so work harmoniously and perform their functions properly and perfectly that constipation, with all its ettendant sickness, suffering and ill health, become a thing of the past.

Miss Arabella Jolie, living at 99 Carrière Street, Montreal, Que., bears out all we say in regard to the efficacy of Burdock Blood Bitters in curing constipation permanently. This is her statement:

Wolsey was right at home in the best part of the play, the drafted Dutchman with the unpronounceable cognomen, "Schneidlebecker."
He was the life of the play, and one could not even look at him without experiencing an awakening of the risibilities. W. W Sheffield, the young Unionist, had a part suitable to him in every res-pect, and he looked the lover. R. Ramsbottom must have surprised his friends in his fine representation of Philip Bradley, especially when disguised as an old man, the most difficult character to assume in dramatic art. Personally, how-ever, we think his fort is comedy. W. H. Steed as Fred Ainsley handfed his part with his usual histri-onic talent. E. H. Bolderson was perfectly natural as Major General Banks, and no wonder when the character struck so near home. His make-up left nothing to be desired. W. H. Wardle carried the part of the Colonel all right. D. C. Merriett as Officer Mulgarry Mour was as funny as a bushel of monkeys, and "be garry" he looked as ugly as any bloody Irishman,— with his red hair and whiskers. Wm. Lamb did tolerably well as Clay, "the gemman of color." Mrs. Wolsey was quite motherly as Mrs. Waterman, and in the scene with Maud Bradley, caused some people in the audience to place their don. handkerchiefs to their eyes. Miss Dora Hinman acted with her usual grace and tact in the part of Maud Bradley. Miss Susie Wood not only sang sweetly but played.

OXFORD BEATEN BY FOUR BOAT LENGTHS.

Fifty-Sixth Annual Aquatic Contest-Cambridge Won for the First Time in Ten Years.

Putney, Eng., March 25.—The filty sixth annual boat race between crews representing the universities of Oxford and Cambridge was rowed to-day over the usual course from Putney to Mortlake, a distance of about four and one-quarter miles and was won by (a bridge for the first time in ten years. The official was twenty-one minutes four seconds.

Cambridge now has 24 out of the 56 races rowed to her credit. The light blues were the favorites in betting, the odds being 11 to 4 on Cambridge, though this was regarded as extravagant.

Thence Cambridge continued her position rowing a fine steady stroke, while Oxford splashed badiy and was evidently distressed.

When the light blues reached Barnes bridge, three miles, four furlongs and thirty yards from the start they were four lengths ahead and the race was practically over for the dark blues of Oxford were going to pieces and rowing anyhow. The Cambridge crew finished strong, four lengths ahead of Oxford. Two of the Oxford crew fainted as the boat crossed the line.

Lady Darrell did not seem to notice it: she laughed slightly.

The man hesitated.

speak to you alone Valerie rose.

"I will go into the next room," she said, and swept away.

"Now, Miles," said Lady Darrell quietly, though a vague sense of coming ill seemed to have fallen on her.

"My lady, I have bad news to tell you. I came straight to you, for I thought it host?"

"Go on," said the lady quickly, as he hesitated. "My lady, this morning on my way through the woods, I found-I found Captain Rivers lying on the ground; at

A broken sob came from the next room, it fell unheeded on Lady Darrell's ears; she had risen and grasping her chair with her sl white hands for support.

"Dead," she repeated blankly: "Eustace Rivers dead!" "There had evidently been a scuffle it was out of the ordinary path, on the way to Madman's Drift. Poor Captain "Saddle a horse and ride to Nestley. You must fetch the police. We must find the murderer."

The words dropped like agony from the white lips.

"Shall I summon Lord Roy?" said Miles eagerly, seeing the agitation on the worn face opposite. "I would not go to him first, for I know how much he loved Captain Rivers, and knew the blow would fall so heavily. Forgive me, my lady; you are always so brave! I forgot you were a woman. I ought to have gone to his lordship."

"The blow has fallen heavily indeed." whispered the white lips; then rousing herself with an effort, Lady Darrell passed her handkerchief over her face.

"You are right, Miles, to come to me, and I thank you with all my heart. I—I will tell Lord Roy." 1—I will tell Lord Roy."

She put out one of her slender hands, and the keeper took it within his own brown, hard ones with reverence and "It is at my cottage, my lady."

"Good, leave it there. Wait an instant: I will write a note."
She moved to the bell and rang it, then stood with her hands locked together as silent as a marble statue till the butler came.

Miles gazed at her in admiration. He knew what an agony of shame and pain was in that breaking heart, yet no cry came from the lips, no womanly weak-ness was betrayed in face or limb. "They went away together," she whispered, a crimson wave of color dyeing her gentle face—"together in anger now Eustace lies dead, and Roy, my angel, my prince, my son Roy! No. Oh. God, keep the thought from my mind, or I shall go mad! Let me think clearly They were angry; they may have parted friends. Eustace may have met his death alone. Oh, God, pray that it may be so! #### Rat Prognosticators.

The old superstition, which has grown into an adage, that rats desert a ship, which is no longer seaworthy, is still an article of faith with the fresh water sailors of the great lakes. Sundry well authenticated instances seem to justify this belief. Here is one. The Vernon was a three master which did a tramp business. Built in Buffalo in 1850, she was for many years regarded as one of the best craft on the lakes. Late in the fall, about 15 years ago she unloaded a cargo of grain in Buffalo, and reloaded with package freight for Chicago. She was about to sail one rough November night. Just before the lines were let off one of the seamen saw a rat run over the hawsers to the wharf. In a moment another was seen. The seamen called others of the crew to see the unusual sight. Between 50 and 75 rats poured out of the ship and took e along the wharf. The crew refused to sail, but the captain was obstinate, shipped a fresh crew and sailed forthwith. The ship was lost with all hands. - Household Words

But the moment that he is to write not from present inpulse but from preordained deliberation his pow-ers fail him, and I believe that there are times when he could not pen the commonest notes. The testimony is positive and concurrent that the article releves physical pain, cures lameness, checks a cough, is an excellent reneedy for pains and rhen matte complaints, and it has no nauseating or other unpleasant effect when taken internally.

Hard Work.

Boys, do not shun hard work. Go at it, rejoice in it. It is a blessir g to you. And understand us. By real nard work we do not mean study, or sticking closely to keeping books, keeping store or teaching school, or any of the professional pursuits. These are all honorable and when followed closely exhaust the nervous energy and make men tired too. But pursuits. These are all honorable and when followed closely exhaust the nervous energy and make men tired too. But by hard work we mean work that requires a great deal of muscular force, such as chopping, rolling logs, quarrying rock, doing carpenter work, laying brick, carrying the hod, and working in the forges, furnaces, rolling mills, mines and car shops. This kind of work develops muscular strength, the power of physical endurance, grit, courage and good health. Said an old man, now up in the eighties, to me a year ago, "When I was lifteen years old I was a weak, spindly kind of a boy, and went into a black-smith shop, learned the trade, worked at it eighteen years, and forged out a contitution worth a million dollars." He has ever since been a healthy, vigorous man, and old as he is, still walks the streets, pert, cheerful and straight as an Indian's arrow.

Hard work is good medicine for boys, and especially for young men.

We beg to call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills in this paper. The firm have also placed on the market Dr. Ward's Liver Pills, which have already proved to be a most excel-lent family medicine as a cure for constipation, dyspe,sia, biliousness, etc. They are sold at 25c per vial, or 5 for $1, or mailed on receipt of price by the Dr. Ward Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

A Suicide Machine.

A Suicide Machine.

Had the gentle art of advertising flourished-in India during the early sixties, the dead walls and fences of that country would have undoubtedly borne the legend: "Decapitation made casy; or, every man his own headsman," for it is said that a machine existed then, constructed solely for the use of would-be suicides, whereby they could cut off their own heads. It was in the shape of a half moon, with a sharp edge, and was fastened at the back of the neck, chains being attached to the ends. The man who donned this instrument of death put his feet in the chains, gave a sharp jerk downward, and thus severed his head from his body.

There never was, and never will be, a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in a sound unanulterated state, a remedy for ma. y and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on Nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and, by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vicor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses throught the veries, strengthening the healthy parts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses throuhout the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame, and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, gauged by the opinion of scientists, this wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

In spite of the fact that the manufacturers of Great Britain have for years offered $10,000 to anyone who could devise a means of using spiders' webs for weaving silk, no one could solve the difficulty till! M. Cachot, a Frenchman, stepped into the arena. He has discovered the process by which a silk finer and softer than any we have dreamed of may be made from the web of the common spider. He designed a machine with diminutive bobbins kept constantly revolving. The end of the web is caught when a spider begins to weave and attached to the bobbin. As the spider pulls to get away the web is wound on the bobbin. Then the spider is petted and fed until it is ready to weave another web. M. Cachot has advertised for spiders web. M. Cachot has advertised for spiders and says he will buy all supplied. Natur-ally, women will be hard to find who will work in his factory.

INCALCULABLE GOOD.

AN EXPRESSION OF FAITH.

Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills have done me an incalculable amount of good. I think they are the best, surest and quickest acting cure for nervousness, unhealthy action of the heart, insomnia or unhealthy action of the heart, insomnia or sheeplessness, anemia or impoverished blood, loss of appetite, general debility and ill-health. For nine years, before I commenced taking Dr. Ward's Blood and nerve Pills, my heart was weak and in an unhealthy state. Its action was so much impaired that I could not walk across the street without suffering great distress, my heart fluttering and beating so rapidly that I could scarcely breathe, causing faintness, loss of strength, and leaving my nerves all unstrung. My sleep was very much disturbed, I had no appetite and there was little strength or vitality in my blood; I was always excessively nervous.

I have now taken three boxes of nervous.

I have now taken three boxes of Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills and sirce taking them I have not been away from my business an hour. Before taking these pills it was a frequent occurrence for me to be away from business. As a result of taking Dr. Ward's Pills my heart is perfectly healthy and strong and gives me no distress or trouble whatever. They removed all nerve trouble, made my nerves removed all nerve trouble, made my nerves strong and gave me healthy sleep. These pills also made my blood rich and strong and gave me a healthy appetite. Dr. Ward's Pills have given me perfect health, restoring my lost strength, in place of continual ill-health, weakness, heart trouble and nervousness. In justice I cannot speak too highly of this wonderful medicine. Signed, Miss N. Millward, Walton St., Port Hope, Ont.

"'Ark, the 'Erald Angels Sing."

Two turns brought me from the crowded highway along which cab and omnibus were speeding toward Lon-don's center of attraction to the quiet street in which fire and food awaited me. As I made the second turn I saw. through the murk of a mid-December evening, three figures pressed close against the area railings—surely my own area railings. And through the murk came in a treble bawl the sound of "Peace on earth, good 'ill ter men."

GREAT THINGS FROM LITTLE CAUSES GROW.—It takes very little to deange the stomach. The cause may be slight, a cold, something eaten or drunk, anxiety, worry, or some other simple cause. But if precautions be not taken, this simple cause may have most serious consequences. Many a chronically debilitated constitution today owes its destruction to simple causes not dealt with in time. Keep the digestive apparatus in healthy condition and all will be well. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are better than any other for the purpose.

Spring.

'Twill purify the system-Give you strength and energy.

Very few people escape the enervating influence of spring weather. There is a dullness, drowsiness and inaptitude for work on account of the whole system being clogged up with impurities accumulated during the winter months. The liver is sluggish, the bowels inclined to be constipated, the blood impure, and the entire organism is in need of a thorough cleansing.

Of all "Spring Medicines," Burdock Blood Bitters is the best.

It stimulates the sluggish liver to activity, improves the appetite, acts on the bowels and kidneys, purifies and enriches the blood, removes all poisonous products, and imparts new life and vigor to those who are weak and debilitated.

7 Big Mr. Wm. J. Hepburn writes Boils. from Centralia, Ont.: "I can sincerely say that Burdock Blood Bitters is the best spring medicine on the market. Last spring my blood got out of order, and I had seven or eight good sized boils come out on my body, and the one on my leg was much larger than an egg. I got a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters, and inside of six days, when only half the bottle was taken, there wasn't a boil to be seen. I have recommended B.B.B. to different people in our village, and all derived benefit from it. I wish B.B. every success, as it is indeed a great medicine for the blood."

B.B.B. is a highly concentrated vegetable compound—teaspoonful doses—add water yourself.

The Bridge of Lions.

The largest bridge in existence is not. as one would imagine, the work of some famous English or French engineer. This bridge, comparatively little known, was constructed long ago, in China, in the reign of the Emperor Keing Long.
It is situated near to Sangang and the Yellow sea, and measures not less than eight miles and a half.

The Bridge of Lions, as it is called, is supported by 800 immense arches and its foundation is 21 meters under water. Oz each pile of this wonderful bridge is a marble statue of a lion, three times larger, than life size. The coup d'œil of these 300 enormous lions, each one supporting an arch, is stupendous in its magnificance

HOW TO GET STRONG.

Nature Should Be Assisted to Throw off the Poisons That Accumulate in the System During the Winter Months.

Thousands of people not really ill reaire a tonic at this season. Close con mement in badly ventilated houses shops and school-rooms during the win ter months makes people feel depressed, tanguid and "out of sorts." Nature must be assisted in throwing off the poison that has accumulated in the system during these months, eise people fall an easy prey to disease. A onic is needed and Dr. William's Pink Pills for Pale People is the greatest tonic medicine in the world. These pills make rich, red blood; strengthen tired nerves, and make dull, listless men, women and children feel bright, active and strong.

Mr. John Siddons, London, Ont. says: "I can speak most favorably of the virtue of Dr. Williams' Pink Pilk. They prove invaluable in strengthening and toning up the system when debilitated. Having used them for some time past, I can speak most favorably of their beneficial results. As an invigorator of the constitution they are all they claim to be."

But you must get the genuine Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Imitations never cured anyone, and there are numerous pink colored imita-tions against which the public is cautioned. The genuine are sold only in boxes, the wrapper around which bears the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People." If your dealer does not keep them send to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and they will be mailed post paid at 50c a box or six boxes for $2.50.

MISS A. M. MACHAR. ("FIDELIS"). KINGSTON.

Our Canada, etrong, fair and free,

Whose sceptre stretches far,
Whose hills look down on either sea,
And front the polar star;
Not for thy greatness—hardly known
Wide plains, or mountains grand, But as we claim thee for our own, We love our native land.

God bless our mighty forest land
Of mountain, lake and river:
Thy loyal sons from strand to strand
Sing, "Canada Forever."

Wrapped in thy dazzling robe of snow, We crown thee when the south winds blow

"Our Lady of the Flowers!"
We love thy rainbow-tinted skies—
The glamour of thy Spring— For us thine Autumn's gorgeous dyes, For us thy song-birds sing.

God bless our fair Canadian land. Of mountain, lake, and river; Thy loyal sons from strand to strand Sing, "Canada Forever."

For us thy brooding Summer wakes
The corn-fields' waving gold, The quiet pastures, azure lakes, For us their treasures hold; To us each hill and dale is dear, Each rock and stream and glen Thy scattered homes of kindly cheef.

Thy busy haunts of men. God bless our own Canadian land Of mountain, lake and river; Thy loyal sons from strand to strand Sing, "Canada Forever."

Our sires their old traditions brought. Their lives of faithful toil.

For home and liberty they fought, On our Canadian soil. Quebéc to us is sacred still,

Nor less is Lundy's Lane— Long May a loyal people sil The land they fought to gain. God bless our 6wn Cahadian land Of mountain, lake and river:

Thy loyal sons from strand to strand Sing, "Canada Forevr." Saxon and Celt and Norman we Each race its memory keeps; Yet o'er us all from sea to sea One Red Cross Banner sweeps.

MORMONS IN UTAH.

The following letter was published in the Manitoba Free Press of 8th. April.

"During the past few weeks there has been written and published in all parts of the country many articles on the subject of polygamy among the Latter-day Saints or Mormons. For some time I have felt it my duty to give the world a few facts on this subject. As I am not, nor ever have been a "Mormon," I feel that I can do so in a fair and unbiassed manner. Having resided here among this people the past four years, I have learned, by close observation and study, much of the teaching and practices of this

Neither of them ever knows when he is beaten. There is no enterprise oo big for them to undertake. Why shouldn't Canadians be equally sure of themselves? We get on wherever we go, why should n't we stay at home and do better?

I maintain that efficient as our schools and colleges are, the training and schooling Canadians get does not tend to make our boys and girls eager for the work the country has to offer the majority. We forget that we cannot supply clerical situations, professional openings and mercantile enterprises for such positions, and that the great physical riches of the country lie largely idle for the want of laborers. The decision of the cabinet in granting a commutation to the boy and allow-ing the law to take its course in the case of the other two Indians, and Henderson had not arrived until after the date appointed for their execu-tion and, therefore, Judge Dugas had them respited until August 2nd next. It is not expected that either of them will be living at that time. This is will be living at that time. This is the third respite. The first respite was for one day because of the execution going to take place on Ash Wednesday. When the next day arrived the legal objections were such that a respite was granted until March and now a further respite is given. Henderson is dying of consumption.

THE AUDITOR OVER-RULED.

The auditor-general's annual report was presented to parliament last night. There is considerable corres-pondence between the auditor and the pondence between the auditor and the justice department over the payment of an account of $350 to Archibald & Howell, Winnipeg, for their services in connection with the commission for the investigation of Manitoba penitentiary. In the opinion of the auditor it ought to have been a personal matter between the warden and the lawyers, but the end of it all was that the auditor's objections were over-ruled by the treasury board and that the auditor's objections were over-ruled by the treasury board and a cheque issued to Archibald & Howell for the amount. The auditor also objected to the payment of $10 per day to Joseph Pope, R. N. Newing, W. S. Parmelee and W. F. King at the Quebcc conference, instead of their outlay as per account rendered but after some correspondence on ed but after some correspondence on the subject the amount to each was allowed by the treasury board, the allowed by the treasury board, the auditor's objections being over-ruled. prising Darrell Castle estate, was a young girl.

She wore a dress of soft grey made very simple, fitting her young body to perfection with its clinging rolds; her hair of pale gold was gathered in a large knot at the back of her small well-shaped head.

Her skin was pure white, like the lily on the narcissus in its waxen purity; her eyes, framed with heavy long dark koshes, shone like great histrous grey stars in their ivory setting.

She had a book open on her knee, yet it did not seem to attract her much; her gaze was bent out of the window across the country seene, at the moving trees scattering their shrivelled brown leaves at every soft gust.

scattering their shrive-led brown leaves at every soft gust.

It was Margaret, Lady Darrelt.

A sigh escaped her lips as she sat silent, but she did not move. The room seemed to strike the behelder as gloomy and lonely; even the firelight faded to light up its solitude.

The furniture and hangings were rich, but their tone was sombre, and sp ke of a bygone fashion. The girl alone was young and fresh; she looked strangely beautiful in her dark setting. The door opened and a maid entered

She knew how cruel was the woman opposite, and how powerless she was to fight her. The shame which sometimes overcame her fell on her heart now like a heavy weight.

She saw herself as Valerie thought her—a vulgar, common girl, the relative of people who were bought out of the village, out of the home they had lived in for years, so that their presence should not shock the eyes of the Castle, nor recall how low its master had sunk in mating with one of their number.

The tidings were communicated to Alice in the most ceremonious manner, but the fact that now she was a countess and moreover, entire mistress of the Castle, did not appear to touch her. QUEER ANIMAL AGREEMENTS.

Unlike Creatures That Get Along Very Well In Common Quarters.

An intimate connection subsisting between different animals is known as commensalism, commensals being creatures which may be said to sit at the same table, which may be said to sit at the same table, but which do not prey upon one another. Of late years naturalists have become acquainted with numerous examples of this form of animal partnership. In one of the Chicken islands, off the New Zealand soast, a curious lizard known as the tuatara and certain species of the petrels were found inhabiting the same burrows, apparently on the best of terms. In rare cases the burrow, which consists of as pas sage two or three jet long, ending in a chamber a foot and a half long, one foot broad and six inches high, is the work of broad and six inches high, is the work of the bird. As a rule, however, the lizard is the excavator. Each builds its nest on opposite sides of the chamber, the lizard almost invariably choosing the left and the petrel the right side. The lizard feeds partly on worms and beetles and partly on the remnants of fishes brought to their common table by the petrel, both animals being thus benefited by the partnership. This is probably more than can be said of the prairie dog, whose underground home is frequently shared by the rattlesnake and the burrowing owl. These were at one time supposed to form a "happy family," but considerable doubt has been cast on the point by the discovery of young on the point by the discovery of young prairie dogs in the stomach of the rattle-snake, which seems to indicate that com-mensalism in this particular case has been a one sided affair so far as the benefits were concerned.

It is among marine animals, however, that the most striking examples of commensalism have been observed. A feeble fish called the remora owes its success in He to the powerful alliances it forms. One of its fins has been transformed into a sucker placed right on top of its head, by means of which it attaches itself firmly by means of which it attaches itself firmly to any passing shark, whale or even ship, no doubt mistaking the latter for some huge sea monster. By these it is transported without any exertion on its own rurr over great distances, meanwhile picking up such food as may come in its way.

Several small fishes have been found, also, to habitually lodge in the mouth cavity of a Brazillan catilsh, sharing such food as the latter succeeds in capturing.

food as the latter succeeds in capturing.

The enemies of the smaller fishes are so numerous that it is only by retreating to places inaccessible to their foes that they have a chance of survival. A favorite have a chance of survival. A favorite shelter for many small fishes is the round disk of the larger sea jellies, the stinging properties of which probably cause them to be avoided by the other denizens of the deep. As many as 20 fishes have been counted swimming within the fringed margin of one of these pulsating umbrellas. The sea cucumbers are another lowly group of marine forms which afford shelter to fishes.

Other instances might be given, such as that of the little pea crab, found in mus-sels and other bivalve shells, which in re-turn for the protection given them by the molluskan shell gives its host a share of Alimentary Value of Fish.

Alimentary Value of Fish.

The alimentary value of fish is indisputable. It is wholesome and nutritions and in its wide range of quality and flavor affords gratification to the coarsest as well as the most refined pulate. Moreover, in primary cost it is the cheapest of flesh foods and should, therefore, be the universal aliment, everywhere a staple dish upon the family board. To most, however, it is substantially a luyary. In many locations of the control of the cont it is substantially a luxury. In many localities it is not obtained fresh, and so falls into public distributions. But even where presented in acceptable condition the accommodation is usually effected with difcommodation is usually effected with difficulty and expense, involving a corresponding limitation of sale.

Thus it is that the consumer is dissatisfied, the dealer is not content, and the producer, the poor fisherman, rightly bewails his lot, for he profits least. It can be truthfully said that there is no branch of civilized effort wherein the producer receives so small a proportion of the ultimate or consumer's price as does the toiler of the sea for the unchanged product of his labor.

Surveying a field of battle, the Duke of Wellington could detect almost at a glance the weak points in, the disposition of the forces, and when the weakness was on his own side he promptly and resolutely caused it to be made strong. An English magazine tells this story of him which ought to be true:

One day, when some small visitors happened to be in the nursery at Strathfield-sage, he walked up to the top of the house and found the youngsters at tea. He gazed grimly around as if the room were a field of battle and noticed that there was no jam on the table.

WAS NERVY.

And That's Why He Got a Cheap

The longer I live the more convinced am I that it is just as fortunate to be born with presence of mind as to be born with presence of wealth, though it isn't always quite so handy in an emergency. I know, for example, a young man in the town, whose ready wit and a carefully cultivated habit of woman. "that so many people lose their enthusiasm about keeping an autograph cafe one day at luncheon time and or-dered roast duck. The duck was a good sized fowl, and the young man ate just about half of it. The bill was $1.

"Good heavens!" exclaimed the young man. "A dollar for a duck!

'That's the price," said the waiter, pointing out the thing on the bill of

"Ah," said the young man, "that's for a whole duck. I've eaten only half of that one. The attendant looked puzzled. The young man called the head waiter.

"See here," said he. "Isn't this a European plan cafe? Isn't a man expected to pay for just what he eats?"

"Yes, sir," said the head waiter.
"Well," the young man went on. "this waiter wants to charge me $1 for a whole duck, when I've eaten only half a duck. It's absurd. You might just as well have an American plan place and be done with it.

"But you ordered duck?" remarked the head waiter.

The young man appeared to relent. "I'll tell you what I'll do," he said.
"I'm disposed to deal fairly with you, even if you have been trying to gouge me, and this is what I'll do. I'll pay you right now for the half duck I have eaten. That's perfectly fair and square, and I'll do more. You just put away that other half there, and I'll come in that other half there, and I'll come in this evening and eat it. Then I'll pay you for it, but I don't propose to pay for any half duck that I haven't had. When I've eaten it I'll pay for it, and I won't pay for it till then. That's fair, isn't it?"

The head waiter had arrived at the stage when he couldn't have told a half duck from a quertered humming bird. He gasped acquiescence. The young man stalked out. An untouched half duck still remains at that cafe to be served C. O. D. to a young man who cometh not, and the head waiter hasn't quite figured it out yet.—Washington Post.

"You see," he exclaimed apologetically, "I can't really appreciate poetry. I get so busy keeping time to the lines with my feet that I forget to look out for the sense. And when my curiosity gets aroused concerning the sense I forget to keep time. So I may as well con-fess that it's rather wasted. It might just as well have been done in prose."
"But you surely cannot fail to appre

"The nights shall be filled with music, and the Shall fold up their tents like the Arabs and silently steal away?"

The colonel looked thoughtful. Then he exclaimed: "No; those lines are all right. They show great knowledge of human nature. I have traveled in the east, and I know all about Arabs. And his character is suggested in that stanza with great delicacy and, at the same time, with accuracy. An Arab will steal any-thing. You may argue and entreat, and he may apologize and promise, but it von't make any difference. He will go right ahead in his old custom and keep stealing away."—Washington Star.

AN END TO BILIOUS HEADACHE—Billousness which is caused by excessive bile in the stomach, has a marked effect upon the nerves, and often manifests itself by severe headache. This it me most distressing headache one cail have. There are headaches from cold, from fever and from other causes, but the most excruciation of all is the billou headache. ### READ THE PROOF!

GENTLEMEN,—I have for a long time needed something to make blood and build up my system. My blood was watery and thin, lacking strength and vitality. Last January a friend said:—"Why not try Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills? They will supply the oxygen your blood needs and give you health and strength." I told him I was very skeptical as to any benefit that could be derived from any proprietary medicine and had no faith in them. There the matter rested until four months ago, when reading so much about what Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills have done for so many people with imporerished blood, I concluded to give them a trial. I have taken four boxes and my unbelief so far as Dr. Ward's Blood and Nerve Pills are concerned has been entirely removed. They are a splendid blood builder and strength restorer, and an invaluable medicine for weak, enervated people. This has been my experience, they having given me strength of body and strong healthy blood.

I. B. Taylor, a Member of the Staff of the House of Commons, Died in His 70th Year.

Ottawa, April 16 -The Dominion government has disallowed an ordinance regarding the legal profession in the Yukon, and has passed another amending the same. The ordiance disallowed, provided that a barrister or advocate had to practice six months in the office of a legal firm in the Yukon be ore he was entitled to be admitted to practice in the courts. There were certain fees to be paid in addition to the producing of evidence that the applicant was a member of the profession in one of the provinces of Canada or the Northwest Territories. In addition to the ordinance being cast, the principal part, preventing a barrister from tracking before being six months in the Yukon, has been struck out.

CHAPTER V.

Alice awoke early the next morning. She had indeed slept but little. Her wounded pride and aching heart proved veritable thorns in her pillow.

She was haunted all night by the vision of Roy's fair, handsome face bending over Valerie's head, gazing into her eyes with an eternity of love. She did not like Valerie, yet she was

"It is I who keep them apart. What can I do-what can I do?" was the thought that raged in her mind, and to this she could find no answer.

She rose and took her bath, then robed herself in her simple grey gown, and wrapping a mantle round her, for the morning was chilly, she left her apartments and stole through the silencorridor to the gardens and grounds.

Through the two months that had elapsed since the strange and terrible pisode that had changed her whole life to sode that had changed her whole he, the girl had lived entirely alone. She gave herself up to study, and books, and for recreation walked a while in the park, till she knew every nook and corner by heart.

No thought of pride or joy that she was part owner of this proud estate came to her mind as she passed through the avenues of leafless trees, and caught glimpses of the Castle, standing like a grey sentinel in the background. Instead, she wished now, day and night, for something that should free her from her husband, and take away the shame her husband, and take away the sname that hung over her.

She walked on quietly. The wind was sighing in the trees, sounding mournful and weird to the easy.

At last she reached a spot she frequented most. It was thickly wood-drawn area were though autumn was ed, and even now, though autumn was at hand, the leaves were scarcely It was quiet and secluded, and Alice loved it.

She flung herself down on an old She heeded not the chill wind or the mournful rustle of the trees, but after she had sat some time, she became con-scious of the approach of some person or persons—and roused herself to listen.

The voices came on the air.
"I tell you, Paul, I can do no more; I have nothing-nothing now but few jewels, and you know I must keep them, even if they were worth much.

which they are not."
"Can't you ask the old lady?" spoke the deep tones of a man. "Impossible—utterly impossible, Paul."

"Then the devil knows what is to become of me, Valerie."

Alice grew uncomfortable, she did not care to listen to more, yet disliked even still greater to rise and discover herself to Valerie.

She was surprised, and a little alummed, but thought it wiser to sit still and perhaps the speakers would pass.

"You know," went on the man surlily
"you know how I am situated. I consented to wait while you came here, but time has gone, and now it is two months, and you have done nothing for me."

"What? Love," said Valerie quietly.

The man laughed again.
"Pooh and bah!, You, Valerie Ross, stayed by love. No, no, my sister; some other tale-not that."

"It is the truth, nevertheless," broke in Valerie's voice, broken, harsh and agitated. "I loved Eustace Rivers. gitated. "I loved Eustace Rivers.

"If I had known it I should have ended it pretty soon," he said quietly.
"When I came to the Castle," said Valerie, "you thought I did so to please you. It was to follow Eustace. I had grown jealous, he was altering to me. Lady Darrell had written often pressing me for a visit, so I embraced the opportunity. Roy did at once what you prophesied he would—fell in love with me, but I was blind to it then. I cared only for Eustace. All my life was for him. Roy haunted my footsteps, yet I gave him no encouragement. Then Eustace and I quarrelled. I pressed for our marriage, he again, and a coolness arose between the two men over me. I know not how, but—God forgive me—I believe now Eustace maligned me to his friend, and that Roy in his love for me resented the affront. But let that pass. I shall never know the truth now. The day before the murder Roy sought me, beg-ged for my love; he asked no questions, but gave me two days to consider. I wanted no time, I was bound to Eustace for ever. Then—then came his death, and my eyes were opened. I was no longer a fool; I knew that what I had thought love was a pastime to him—that I had thrown my hear best before the feet of one unworthy. The Infinitesimal. There is another universe which is equally beyond the human understanding. It is the universe of the infinitesimal, no less wonderful and superfying than the infinite is stupendous. Scientists-have told us of the atoms and molecules of which they say material things are composed, so small that although instruments have been perfected to bring into view remote stars, nothing has as yet been devised to make visible these infinitesimal bodies. Were a drop of water, finitesimal bodies. Were a drop of water, say they, magnified to the size of the earth, one of the molecules therein would say they, magnified to the size of the carth, one of the molecules therein would appear of the magnitude of an ordinary apple. Whirling about in their universe these numberless things are miniature what the stars and planets are in their magnitude. What they are and how they act no one has seen. Some of their forces have been made evident, that is all. The mind is at sea when it attempts to think of particles and spaces and forces so minute. Everything else appears gigantic and enormous and man himself is a titan. His words are as thunder and his walking as the quaking of the earth; his thoughts are beyond conception and his motives as the stirring of unknown winds. He is a being of dignity and consequence and what he does must affect countless small universes. He directs great forces and controls them, making them do his bidding. His work is wonderful and on a scale of grandeur that to the beings of the smaller creation must be tremendous. And in this there is the lesson of man's importance and dignity. He is great and mighty and his ideals must comport with his place in creation. The smallest things must engage his attention and care, for the least important of them is of great consequence. Every detail of his character must be kept clear, every word be sympathetic and careful, every act be free from harm and full of help to his fellows.

FOR THE OVERWORKED.—What are the causes of despondency and melancholy? A disordered liver is one cause and a prime one. A disordered liver means a disordered stomach, and a disordered stomach means disturbance of the nervous system. This brings the whole body into subjection and the victim feels sick all over. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a recognized remedy in this state and relief will follow their use.

One of the pleasant ways of kindergarten teachers is to read a story or poem and have the children draw a picture illustrating it. "The other day," said a kindergarten teacher, "I read my little folks the famous poem of 'Little Boy Blue,' which begins.

"'He's under the haycock! said Min-nie."—Harper's Bazar.

The London humane societies are agitating against tortolse shell ornaments because of the torture the animals are subjected to in depriving them of the shell. They are first semiboiled over a red ember fire until the flesh that secures the shell to the body is softened. The animal is then shelled clean, and, though the suffering must be intense, one rurely dies, but in a few months grows another shell, of which few months grows another shell, of which he is deprived in the same manner. The largest of the shells are obtained in the is-lands near Ceylon and are a large part of the industry of the natives.

There never was, and never will be, a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the ger us of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in a sound, unadulterated stare, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convolescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on Nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping sprits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and, by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, beling stimulated, courses throughout the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame, and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northrop and Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, gauged by the opinion of selentiss, this wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. SOMETHING MORE THAN A PURGATIVE—To purge is the only effect of many pills now on the market. Parme lee's Vegetable Pills are more than a purgative. #### B.B.B. Makes

The Best Rich Remedy for Spring Weather Red Blood.

The Blood is the very essence of life. As it courses through the system it carries with it, if pure and rich, nutrition to every cell in the body. If impure, it spreads disease. If thin and watery, it fails to nourish, hence we have weakness, debility and decay. It is the wonderful power B.B.B. has in purifying impure blood, making thin, watery blood rich and red, that is at the bottom of its marvellous success in curing disease.

Those who are pale, thin, weak, troubled with blotches, pimples or eruptions of any kind should take B.B.B.

GERMANY IN SAMOA.

GERMANY CLAIMS TO HAVE BEEN INSULTED BY BRITAIN.

Marquard Was Arrested by Captain Sturdee, of H. M. S. Porpoise and Imprisoned.

Perlin, April 23-The Lokal Anzelger to-day publishes two letters from Samoa, dated March 23, one is from a special correspondent at Apia, Herr Marquardt, a prominent German resident of Apia, who under Tamasese was military instructor, and lately under Mataafa and the provisional government, was a justice of the peace until he resigned on the de parture of Dr. Raffell, the German president of the municipal government

According to Herr Marquard's letter, it seems it was he, and not Herr Hufnagel, who was arrested by Capt. Sturdes, commander of the British warship Porpoise, as bearing arms against British sailors. He says he was taken on board the Porpoise where he claims he was grossly insulted by Capt. Sturdee, and after fourteen hours captivity, during which no proof against him was advanced, he was transferred to the German warship Falke, with the condition that he did not leave her. Herr Hufnagel asserts that his property was stolen and destroyed by the Tanus hosts, and millions worth of other German property likewise destroyed. The writer asks who will pay the damages. coldly of his wife.

Spring blood is usually bad blood. It is weak and watery. It is frequently diseased and impure. It is the kind of blood which does not properly sustain the heart, the lungs, the kidneys, the liver, the stomach and the nerves. It is the kind of blood that invites the entrance of such diseases as consumption, catarrh, heart affections, nervous prostration, complicated ailments of the stomach, liver and kidneys, and diseases peculiar to women.

Almost everybody feels the ill-effects of bad blood in the spring. By means of headaches, backaches, sleeplessness, irritability and nervousness, the languid, exhausted body cries out for help-such help as can best be supplied by Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food, because it supplies the very elements that make the blood pure, rich, and healthy:

A LOST SILVER MINE.

The Man That Owned It Died With

About half a century ago a rich silver yein was found on the copper range south of Houghton, and the silver ex-citement throughout Houghton county was at fever heat. Everybody had the craze, but there was only one man who knew the whereabouts of the vein. the time above mentioned a trapper and hunter named Draper brought into Houghton a number of very rich silver specimens, but where they came from he never told, and the secret always remained a secret with him. He was known to be making his home in the vicinity of Penn mine, on the south range, with the Indians, who were very numerous in this part of the country.

It was not a great while after Draper made this trip to Houghton that he got into trouble with the Indians, shot one of them and escaped from the country He returned some years later, and. taking a partner, went into the woods again. The two remained there, coming to town for provisions from time to time and bringing as much silver in nuggets as they could carry. When the war broke out. Draper's partner enlisted in the first company that left Houghton and was killed in the battle of Bull Run. SHY AIRS HIS VIEWS ON SAVINGS IN STITUTIONS

Tells of the Trouble One Made For a Friend of His, and How He Finally Ventured to Open an Account Ir

Bank accounts are skittish things Why. I know a fellow who had a bank account, and then he hadn't. He put something like umpty s'teen and six dollars in the grasping hand of a receiving teller. He was given a checkbook. He checked and checked on that account until he finally received official notice from a deputy sheriff that the account en drawn down to a vacuum My friend insisted on checking on the vacuum, and now he is checked for a brief stay in the state institute for gentlemen who forget that all deeds should be good and not bad.

I have a bank account. I went into the savings institution at the corner of Blank and —— streets with money in my pocket and my hand on it. I approached the receiving teller.

"I'm Shy," I said in the nature of an introduction.

"Then you do not want to around here," he responded. "We don't want any galoots coming in here that can't pay their way. We're shy enough ourselves. Why, the officers have not raised a salary in years, and what with coal bills and pork accounts we are always shy

TWO FAMOUS FRENCH CORPS.

A Contest of Nerve Between the

A famous corps, says a writer in Chums, is that of the French zouaves, whose picturesque uniform, consisting of baggy red trousers, short, blue braided jacket, gaiters and close fitting cap (a soft of fez) has been seen in many great battles. The zouaves gained their richest laurels during the Crimean war, at which time the corps, although supposed only to consist of Frenchmen, had attracted to its ranks many young men of other nations—English, Scotch, Irish, Germans and Italians. Many of these, no doubt, were soldiers of fortune, anxious to serve in a body the fame of which was worldwide.

But France was not to enjoy the monopolaric Zouaves and the Chasseurs.

But France was not to enjoy the monop-But France was not to enjoy the monopoly of a zounve corps, for some ten years later, when the American civil war broke out, two bodies of American zounves were formed, one by the Federals, the other by the Confederates. They were uniformed much after the French style and gained a great reputation for dash and courage. This was particularly the case with the Confederate zounves, who were known as the Louisiana Tigers.

the Louisiana Tigers.

When the French zouaves were serving in Africa, they had one day to perform a long and terrible march in the blistering sun. The chasseurs a pied, a corps of famous marchers, were with them, but the relative of both covers were very to sink soldiers of both corps were ready to sink with hunger, thirst and exhaustion. Toward evening they arrived at a town, and the colonel of the chasseurs appealed to his men to enter the place in a style worthy of French soldiers.

worthy of French soldiers.

The men responded bravely, and with bugles sounding they marched in with a light, springy step, looking as little as possible like men who were half dead with fatigue. This was too much for the zouaves. They had suffered, if possible worse than the chasseurs, but at the command of their colonel they braced themselves up and, although ready to drop, entered the town on the run, swinging their muskets round their heads, that being an evolution of the zouave drill. They had "gone one better" than the chasseurs.
