THE HOME OF JEFF DAVIS.

THE HOUSE WHERE HE WAS BORN, AND WHERE HE LIVES NOW.

The Ancestral Home at Fairview, Ky. "Beaumont," His Present Home, a Legacy from a Southern Lady—Plains, Live Oaks and Scuppernon Grapes.

Jefferson Davis was born in Todd county, Kentucky. His fellow Kentuckians are proud of it or not, according to the side they were on during the great disagreement. It is a fact not often mentioned that during the greatest struggle in the history of the American republic, the two opposing leaders, Lincoln and Davis, were both natives of Kentucky. Had they said they might have been jolly, rippling, horse-racing, Bourbon-drinking private gentlemen. They would probably have called their favorite animal a "hoss." But they did not remain. When both were very small boys they left their native state—Lincoln to wander north, Davis south, each in search of his destiny, each in after years to take the leading part in that stupendous tragedy whose stage was a continent and its audience the world.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

The two men were very nearly of an age, too, Davis being eight months older than Lincoln. But the history of the boys was very different. Lincoln had no school in the world except his poor, illiterate step-mother. Such education as he had got through the hands of his father, the land of fate was on him, pushing him toward his destiny. Davis parents, on the contrary, were not poor. He went with them to Mississippi at the age of 8. They sent him to an academy, and next to Transylvania college. There he was appointed to a cadetship at West Point. He was graduated in 1828 there, and took part as an officer in the Black Hawk war. For poor Lincoln there was no college and no West Point.

Todd county, where Davis was born, is in the southwest part of Kentucky, adjoining Tennessee. It used to be Christian county. Among its peculiarities is a remarkable memory for names. Some years ago he visited Todd county, where he was born, and he visited and astonished the natives by calling the names of many of them, which he had not met over sixty years. Mr. Davis will be 80 if he lives till June, 1888.

They have ever seen a picture of the house where the ex-president was born. There are those who will be interested to see it, for it, like Davis himself, is a part of American history. It is still standing, a building of the habits of many years ago. A story and a half in front, the roof slopes far down at the back, covering the chimney and the wall of the house is still seen in many Kentucky houses. Indeed, the high ridge of the roof would show a well-carved roof, a smoke house and a pig pen.

The first two-thirds of Mr. Davis' active life was about equally divided between war and politics. In the United States senate he was the leading champion of every disunion and secessionist. In the good old times, undoubtedly, the house where he was born, a double-story house, a group of white-washed log cabins, which were the negro quarters. These cabins are still seen about southern houses, though now they are fast falling into decay. With Mr. Davis's own hands they are a relic of a vanished past of his history.

After the war Mr. Davis spent two years in prison at Fort Mifflin, and was released in 1867. He traveled in Europe several years after his release, and in 1871 returned to live in Mississippi. He has never accepted to have his disabilities removed, has not taken the oath of allegiance to the United States, and is still a man without a country.

BEAUMONT.

He was not a rich man after the war, which ruined his political fortunes. A southern lady, who was one of his most devoted admirers, died about ten years ago and will him a handsome country home and plantation. It is a wide hall, and it is in the shade of live oaks, from which the gray southern moss hangs in graceful, though melancholy, festoons. There is a view of Scuppernon grapes near the mansion. This is a delicate green grape, native to the south. The negroes away here in front of Beaumont and perhaps 300 feet away. But so strong is state rights feeling down here to this day that the people even have it the Gulf of Mexico. They call the waters "Mississippi sound" thereabouts.

On the path from the railway station to the mansion the visitor passes another edifice to the former typical southern home. This is "the cottage." Before the war, when southern gentlemen did not have to work for their living as hard as they do now, "the cottage" was a sort of bachelor's den, sacred to the master of the plantation and gentlemen friends who visited him. It had billiard tables and a wide range of Mississippi poker and drank Kentucky whisky. Sometimes for the negroes were gambled away here in the fashion in which they still melt from sight in the northern chills hereabouts.

THE LATE ANN S. STEPHENS.

Miss, Old and Famous, She Wrote Till Death. The death of Mrs. Ann S. Stephens, the veteran novelist, will recall to many a person now middle aged, the absorbing interest with which, year and year ago, he read "Fashion and Fanning," "The Rejected Wife," "The Gold Brick" and other novels by this same author. Over fifty years ago that industrious pen began to wig, and it has kept at it without intermission ever since till now. Ann Stephens Stephen died at Newport, N. I., Aug. 23, aged 73 years. She wrote more than thirty books in a period of twenty years. These, with a son and daughter, who were

THE HOUSE WHERE HE WAS BORN, AND WHERE HE LIVES NOW.

In the good old times, undoubtedly, the house where he was born, a double-story house, a group of white-washed log cabins, which were the negro quarters. These cabins are still seen about southern houses, though now they are fast falling into decay. With Mr. Davis's own hands they are a relic of a vanished past of his history.

After the war Mr. Davis spent two years in prison at Fort Mifflin, and was released in 1867. He traveled in Europe several years after his release, and in 1871 returned to live in Mississippi. He has never accepted to have his disabilities removed, has not taken the oath of allegiance to the United States, and is still a man without a country.

On the path from the railway station to the mansion the visitor passes another edifice to the former typical southern home. This is "the cottage." Before the war, when southern gentlemen did not have to work for their living as hard as they do now, "the cottage" was a sort of bachelor's den, sacred to the master of the plantation and gentlemen friends who visited him. It had billiard tables and a wide range of Mississippi poker and drank Kentucky whisky. Sometimes for the negroes were gambled away here in the fashion in which they still melt from sight in the northern chills hereabouts.

THE LATE ANN S. STEPHENS.

Miss, Old and Famous, She Wrote Till Death. The death of Mrs. Ann S. Stephens, the veteran novelist, will recall to many a person now middle aged, the absorbing interest with which, year and year ago, he read "Fashion and Fanning," "The Rejected Wife," "The Gold Brick" and other novels by this same author. Over fifty years ago that industrious pen began to wig, and it has kept at it without intermission ever since till now. Ann Stephens Stephen died at Newport, N. I., Aug. 23, aged 73 years. She wrote more than thirty books in a period of twenty years. These, with a son and daughter, who were

MAPPING THE BRAIN.

Good Results for Man that Have Come From Visciation.
From New York Times.
A remarkable surgical operation was described at the meeting of the British Medical Association, held on the 13th ult., by Surgeon Horsley of the Bloomsbury National Hospital for the Paralyzed and Deafblind. The patient upon whom the operation had been performed was exhibited by the successful operator. This case is a very interesting one. It shows how great progress has been made recently in brain surgery and in the art of locating the seat of disease at the surface of the brain before the surgeon's instruments are used. It also shows once more and in a striking way how much has been gained for the human race by experiments upon living animals. The patient exhibited by Dr. Horsley was treated for epilepsy. It was decided that his skull should be opened in order that the cause of irritation might be removed. But at what point should the opening be made? Was it possible for the physician to locate accurately the position of the morbid growth before the surgeon should begin his work? A spot on the skull was pointed out, although there were no external indications by which the physician could be guided or assisted. At that spot the skull was opened. There a tumor was found imbedded in the brain substance. This tumor, which had been the cause of irritation having been taken away, the patient ceased to be an epileptic. Before the operation was performed he had been great sufferer and both the frequency and the severity of his fits had been increasing. When he was exhibited at Brighton, one of his most remarkable features had not returned. Two other patients, whose skulls had been opened for the removal of diseased structure or morbid growth, were shown at the same meeting by Dr. Horsley, but in these cases the physician had been assisted in locating the seat of disturbance on the surface of the brain by external marks, caused by injury in one case and by trepanning in the other. The surgeon's treatment of these patients was successful, but for obvious reasons the first case was far more remarkable. In the first case the point at which the skull should be opened was determined solely by the fact that the patient's fits began in the muscles which act upon the left thumb. Knowing this, the attending physician also knew that the region of the brain which excites or governs the movements of these muscles was irritated by something that should be removed. He knew under what part of the skull that part of the brain surface could be found. He pointed out the part of the skull which covered that part of the brain; the surgeon removed the bony covering; the tumor was revealed and taken out. The art of locating accurately in this way the seat of disturbance has been developed by a long series of experiments upon the brains of living animals. It is one of the greatest of the results that have been attained by what is commonly called visciation—a broad term which covers experiments of many kinds, some of which do not even come within a strict definition of the word. By the side of this art of surgery has been developed and improved by means of visciation. Ability to locate the irritating growth and ability to remove it without killing the patient have been obtained alike in great measure by experiments upon living animals. The results are already of great value to mankind.

My Treasures.
The flowers I planted in the bush of spring
Have budded, blossomed, and withered long ago.
The grass my lavish fingers used to throw
Long since was reaped for other's garlands.
Yet I am rich and my treasure's dearth
My gold is where the rainbow touches earth.
My wealth is molten of full many an ore,
Dug from the sacred caverns of the past;
Stored where the sun's bright light is cast;
Piled in the promise land that lies before;
All hid just where the rainbow touches earth,
And memory, faith, and hope its guardians are.
As holding love's strong hand I make my way,
Knowing I near a little every day,
The one sure goal where, passing o'er the bar,
I find, in all the glow of second birth,
My treasures, where the rainbow touches earth,
—All the Four Seasons.

BESIDE TILDEN'S GRAVE

THE PICTUREQUE BURIAL AT NEW LEBANON, N. Y.

The Great Democrat Sleeps Amid Ancestors in the Country Ground—A White-Draped Catafalque His Latest Portrait—Grammarcy Pa. At New Lebanon, Columbia county, the mortal remains of Samuel Jones were buried, Saturday, Aug. 7. There, little country hamlet, his life started, 72-two years ago. When it had waded the body and taken its flight to unresisting, the clay mold it had inhabited given back to the same kindly earth.

The portrait in the illustration is a photograph taken only weeks before Tilden died. It is a picture of a man of fine physique and of a face that has been marked by the years. There was a certain air of nobility about him, and it was not without his consent that his portrait was taken. It was a portrait of a man who had lived a life of public service and who had been a prominent figure in the political life of his country.

The president attended Mr. Tilden's funeral and stood with bowed head in the coffin of the great master Democrat. The funeral was held in the city of New York, and the president's presence was a mark of respect for the man who had served his country so well.

Many famous men have died in the city of New York, and their remains have been buried in various places. But the burial of Mr. Tilden was a special occasion, and the president's presence was a mark of respect for the man who had served his country so well.

The Tilden burial plot is of beautiful design. Probably Mr. Tilden's wish was that his remains should be buried in a place that was fitting to his high station in life.

It is a peaceful country great thoughts of the Sage of Grayland. In his old days, rather than the pretentious ceremonies of New York, his family were Presbyterian. Graystone is a beautiful country, and the burial of Mr. Tilden in that place was a fitting end to his life.

HANDSOME MRS. CLE... Among the minor social circles of the city, Mrs. Cle is a well-known figure. She is a woman of high social standing and is known for her elegant tastes and her generous nature.

The portrait in the illustration is from a photograph taken only a few weeks before Mr. Tilden died.

Among the minor social topics are Mrs. Cleveland's photographs. Whereas it was a deadly sin to make a picture of her before she came to New York, now it seems that she cannot have too many.

The president's wife has recently had two photographs taken in all manner of poses and dresses.

The lucky photographer was Bell, of Washington. He wished his distinguished subject to go to his own gallery, because he could do better justice to her there, but Gro-

Another handsome picture among the host of photographs is one taken in a black dress. Whichever she may do in the society season, it appears that the president's new wife has not yet caught the mania for very low-necked dresses.

THE GALATHEA

THE ENGLISH CUTTER YACHT THAT COMES TO CAPTURE THE CUP.

Designer Expects She Will Fill His Ambition by Proving That Britain's Not Only Rules the Wave but is Mistress of the Sea.

From all that has been said on this side of the Atlantic about J. Beaver Webb, the designer of the English yacht Genesta and Galathea, one would have imagined him to be a bearded and grizzly old man, who had spent his whole life among tar ropes and canvas.

But in reality he is a type of a sporting gentleman. He is a neat, and so confident in his own judgment of sea racing and sea races, just in the way we will find young men giving their time and talents to the development of the turf and horseflesh.

Mr. Webb has had the honor to be a youth of developing a type of yacht racing in the world, one that would capture the international challenge cup, known as the America's cup.

Meeting him the other day in his sumptuous office, in Wall street, New York, he said: "Yes, I am satisfied with the Galathea. She did not show her best work last season, owing to the lack of a proper crew, but with the continuous drilling they have had during the previous season, we expect to show you some fast sailing, and if the Galathea carries the cup home with her, you may say 'throwing a sick with his fingers' to the cup forever."

Mr. Webb has come here as agent for the English manufacturer of corrugated steel boiler fittings, which business he recently performed to enter free of duty.

Mr. Webb is an extremely modest man. He would not give any of his life to the press. But on being suggested that he did not look like an Englishman he said: "No, I'm an Irishman, but do not say anything about that."

For thirty years or more the jolly Britisher has been making yachting a scientific study, the result being the Galathea, a cutter type of yacht, and with it the opportunity of recovering the America's cup.
