Bill on the part of some of his constituents, as well as on the part of a considerable portion of my constituents. This Bill deals with a very important question. It proposes to bar the Richelieu River by a dam at the head of the rapids which are situated between the town of St. John's and Iberville. If the dam is built, the consequences might be very serious to the riparian owners above the dam. They have sent petitions against this measure, which were presented to this House a few days ago by my hon. friend, and some by myself, and those petitions were covered by numerous signatures. It is true that a petition has been presented to Parliament in favor of the passage of this Bill, but I noticed that it was signed only by the promoters of the Bill. Three years ago, I think, an examination was made of the Richelieu River, by order of the Government, and it was then ascertained that there existed between Lake Champlain and St. John's, a distance of about 25 miles, a difference of level of only four inches and a half. Well, every one can easily understand that the least obstruction in that river will raise the water for a long distance upwards. Already, when the waters are high in the early spring, a large tract of land is flooded by the water. It is estimated that between 20,000 and 30,000 acres of good farm land are flooded in this way. In some years the water is higher than in other years, and then the land is flooded until as late as the latter part of June, so that the farmers can only sow their grain in the first days of July, when it is too late to sow anything but buckwheat. They fear that if this company is allowed to dam the river, a portion of their land will remain flooded during a much longer period. They have consequently asked me, and my hon. friend from St. John's, to look after this matter, and to offer, in their name, opposition to this Bill. I now take this opportunity of calling the attention of the Government, and more particularly of the Minister of Public Works, to this question. The object of this Bill is mainly to secure a water power. No doubt the establishment of water powers there would be a public benefit; but, at the same time, as the interests of so many people in regard to lands might be affected by this Bill, those interests ought not to be neglected. Twenty years ago there were weirs at the head of the rapids, and people complained that, at spring floods, they caused the water to remain over their land longer than previously. Those weirs were removed, and since that time the people say the state of things has much improved. Old members of Parliament, and the Minister of Public Works, will remember that, on several occasions, I called the attention of the Government to this subject, upon the complaint of the riparian owners, who still contend that the piers of the railway bridge belonging to the Central Vermont Railway as well as the piers of the wharf built by that company alongside their bridge, prevent to a considerable degree the flow of the water in spring. But when they heard that this newly formed company intended to have a dam erected at the head of the rapids at St. John's, this increased their fears. This Bill is a very important one, and it cannot pass this House without the consent of the Government, but I will not take any steps to-night to prevent the Bill going to some standing committee, I suppose the Private Bills Committee, because I am sure the House is not now prepared to give an opinion upon it as there is a question of engineering involved that will probably decide its fate. As this question can be discussed thoroughly only in committee, I repeat that I will not take any steps against it at this stage, but I again call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to it and to its probable effect.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. My attention was called to this Bill some few days ago, and I was informed that its promoters outside of Parliament had obtained from the Local Legislature of Quebec at its last Session an Act of incorporation, but that the company came here to secure powers they could not obtain from that Legislature, viz., to deal with the waters of the River Richelieu and place a dam across the river. The matter was stated to me by one of the promoters, perhaps the most prominent promoter, and he thought that the objections that were being made to the proposed improvement would not be pressed when the true position of affairs became known. Upon receiving that information I did not go into the details with that gentleman, but I told him that, perhaps, it would be better for his company to get the Bill before this House, and after having it read the second time defer it until next Session when it could be reintroduced. I do not know what the promoters of the Bill will do; but it is not customary for this House to reject a Bill at its second reading when it relates to a matter of this kind, and, therefore, I would suggest to the two hon. members, whose counties will be affected by it, that they adopt the course they seem disposed to adopt, that is to allow the Bill to go to the committee. They will no doubt take care that the engineering difficulties and all other matters are carefully considered, and I am sure the members of the committee will give it all the attention it deserves, because it certainly affects the vested interests of a large number of riparian proprietors in those two counties. Under these circumstances I will not oppose the second reading.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 102), to amend the Act respecting the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway.—(Mr. Bryson.)

Bill (No. 118), respecting the Guelph Junction Railway Company.—(Mr. Innes.)

Bill (No. 124) respecting the Ontario Pacific Railway Company.—(Mr. Rykert.)

Bill (No. 125) to incorporate the Manufacturers' Accident Insurance Company.—(Mr. Small.)

Bill (No. 132) to further amend the Act respecting the Canada Atlantic Railway Company.—(Mr. Perley, Ottawa.)

Bill (No. 133) respecting the Manitoba South-Western Colonisation Railway.—(Mr. Haggart.)

Bill (No. 131) respecting the Nova Scotia Permanent Benefit Building Society and Savings Fund (from the Senate).—(Mr. Tupper.)

Bill (No. 134) to enable the St. Martin's and Upham Railway Company to sell its railway and property.—(Mr. Skinner.)

Bill (No. 128) to enable the Western Canada Loan and Savings Company to extend their business, and for other purposes (from the Senate).—(Mr. McCarthy.)

RELIEF OF MARIE LOUISE NOEL.

Mr. SMALL moved the second reading of Bill (No. 108) for the relief of Marie Louise Noel.

House divided:

YEA:

Messieurs

Armstrong,	Hickey,	Robertson (Hastings),
Bain (Wentworth),	Hudspeth,	Robertson (Shelburne),
Baker,	Jamieson,	Roome,
Bowman,	Lang,	Ross,
Boyle,	Livingston,	Scarth,
Brien,	Macdonald (Sir John),	Semple,
Brown,	Macdonald (Huron),	Shakespeare,
Bryson,	MacDowall,	Shanly,
Burdett,	McCarthy,	Skinner,
Campbell (Kent),	McCulla,	Small,
Cargill,	McDonald (Victoria),	Smith (Ontario),
Charlton,	McDougald (Pictou),	Somerville,
Clayes,	McLellan,	Stevenson,

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Cockburn,
Daly,
Davies,
Davin,
Edwards,
Eisenhauer,
Ellis,
Fisher,
Foster,
Freeman,
Gillmor,
Guillet,
Hale,
Hall,

McMillan (Huron),
McMullen,
McNeil, Mallory,
Mara,
Masson,
Mills (Bothwell), Moffat,
Montague,
O'Brien,
Perley (Ottawa),
Porter,
Putnam,
Reid,

Taylor,
Trow,
Tupper (Pictou),
Tyrwhitt,
Waldie,
Wallace,
Ward,
Watson,
Weldon (St. John),
White (Cardwell),
White (Renfrew),
Wilson (Elgin),
Wilson (Lennox),
Wood, (Brockville).—81.

NAYS:

Messieurs

Amyot, Audet,
Béchar, d,
Bernier,
Bourassa,
Burns,
Cameron,
Casgrain,
Chapleau, Ohisholm,
Choquette,
Colby,
Coughlin,
Coursol, Couture,
Curran,
Dawson,

De St. Georges, Desaulniers,
Dessaint,
Dupont,
Ferguson (Welland), Gauthier,
Gigault,
Girouard,
Godbout,
Grandbois,
Guay, Guilbault,
Holton,
Joncas,
Kenny,
Labrosse,

Landry,
Langelier (Quebec),
Langevin (Sir Hector),
Laurier,
McDougall (Cape Breton),
McGreevy,
McMillan (Vaudreuil),
Perley (Assiniboia), Perry,
Platt,
Robertson (King's, P.E.I.),
Ste. Marie,
Thompson,
Turot,
Wright,
Yeo.—49.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. TROW. The hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Fiset) did not vote.

Mr. FISET. Mr. Speaker, I have undertaken to find a pair for the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Riopel), and not having found one I cannot vote.

Mr. CHARLTON. I notice that the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Ferguson) did not vote.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). At the time the motion was at first read I did not hear my name announced as seconder, but upon its being read the second time I did. I suppose I could have voted, but for that reason I did not vote. If I am obliged to vote now, I will vote nay. I allowed my name to stand as seconder of the motion merely as a matter of courtesy to the member for Toronto (Mr. Small), but if I am allowed to vote I will vote nay.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is allowed to vote.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). Then I will vote nay.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 144) for the relief of John Monteith (from the Senate).—(Mr. O'Brien.)

Bill (No. 143) to enable the Canada Permanent Loan and Savings Company to extend their business and for other purposes (from the Senate).—(Mr. Cockburn.)

SUPREME AND EXCHEQUER ACTS AMENDMENT.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 111) to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, and to make better provision for the trial of claims against the Crown.

(In the Committee.)

On section 15,

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Has the hon. Minister of Justice decided to copy the phraseology of the other Act in this clause?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is just the same as in the other Act with regard to the exclusive jurisdiction.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Do the words exclusive jurisdiction imply that the ordinary provincial courts can be given jurisdiction? My own impression is that we cannot exclude a provincial court from having jurisdiction.

Mr. THOMPSON. I meant to imply by this that, so far as we had power to legislate, we would give exclusive jurisdiction to the Exchequer Court.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Exclusive of any other court created by this Parliament?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes. Of course it does not interfere with provincial legislation at all.

On section 16,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) By this section the hon. gentleman extends the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court very materially. Among the claims against the Crown is included:

"Every claim against the Crown arising out of any death or injury to the person or to property on any public work, resulting from the negligence of any officer or servant of the Crown, while acting within the scope of his duties or employment."

I quite approve of the object of this clause. The House is aware that it has been held by the Supreme Court that no action can be maintained against the Crown for any injury resulting from negligence on the part of the employes of the Intercolonial Railway, and I suppose the object of this clause is to give that which we have contended for several years ought to be given to the subject, namely, the right of action against the Crown if the Crown becomes a common carrier, on the same grounds as actions against ordinary carriers. But I think a clause should be inserted affirming the liability of the Crown. The mode of procedure is given, but no liability is declared, and if it were not declared, by the decision of the Supreme Court no liability would exist.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). As my hon. friend says, there should be some explicit statement in the Bill of what is the liability of the Crown. But I would go further. I think in many cases an action of tort should be allowed against the Crown. It seems to me we ought to put the Crown as a common carrier in the same position as any other common carrier. If we are going to have a procedure which recognises a claim against the Crown for an injury or death on a public work, the liability should be declared, so that the matter should not be left to inference.

Mr. McCARTHY. I quite agree, that it would be a gross hardship for the Crown to carry on business as a common carrier all the way from Quebec to Halifax, without there being any redress for loss or injury to property carried by it. It is not the first time I have expressed that opinion, and I trust that the Minister of Justice will deal with the matter.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It appears to me that we shall require to go a great deal further than this section goes. It relates to procedure, and brings a remedy against the Crown in cases where there is negligence on the part of a person. But suppose there is no negligence on the part of a person, but, as happened on the Prince Edward Island Railway, the road is allowed to get out of repair, and injury to persons or property is the result. If the property were the property of a corporation, the corporation would be liable; and, where the Government undertakes the work of a common carrier, it seems to me that all the obligations which apply to common carriers ought to apply to the Government, and this will be a proper place to provide for a liability of that kind. Of course, where the Government is carrying on business through the agency of private parties, and those private parties are guilty of carelessness or misconduct, the Government ought to be liable for their carelessness or misconduct in the same way as an ordinary employer. But we ought to go further, and make the Government, when performing the work of a private corporation, liable to the same extent and in the same way as those parties would be liable.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In the Province of New Brunswick many cases have occurred in which parties who have been injured have brought actions against the Crown, and the Crown has paid damages, but simply as a matter of favor and not as a matter of right. But I think that if the Government accept the duties and privileges of a common carrier, they ought to bear the burdens of a common carrier, the same as an ordinary individual or corporation; and instead of injured parties being obliged to sue the officials of the Crown, there ought to be an opportunity for them to sue the Crown which is the real offender.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think there is a great deal in the contention that inasmuch as the Crown is doing the business of a common carrier, it should be subject to all the liability of a common carrier. Practically that is the case now, though I admit there is no obligation, and no petition of right would probably lie in many of those cases. But this Bill is not intended to enlarge the remedy of the subject against the Crown. I think any change of that kind ought to come by way of amendment to the Petition of Right Act. Hon. members speak as if the clause related to jurisdiction; but in that respect it is very little more than a transcript of the Official Arbitrators Act, sec. 6, of chap 40, which I will read:

"If any person has any claim for property taken, or for alleged direct or consequential damage to property arising from or connected with the construction, repair, maintenance or working of any public work, or arising out of anything done by the Government of Canada, or arising out of any death, or any injury to person or property on any public work or any claim arising out of or connected with the execution or fulfilment, or on account of deductions made for the non-execution or non-fulfilment of any contract made or entered into on behalf of Her Majesty, such person may give notice, in writing, of such claim, to the Secretary of State, stating the particulars thereof, and how the same has arisen, which notice the Secretary of State shall refer to the head of the Department, with respect to which the claim has so arisen, and thereupon the Minister may, at any time within thirty days after such notice, tender what he considers a fair compensation for the same, with notice that the said claim will be submitted to the decision of the arbitrators, unless the sum so tendered is accepted within ten days after such tender."

That jurisdiction is transferred to the new tribunal. As far as possible, I have been treating this Bill as a Bill relating to procedure, and not dealing with the substantive law.

Mr. WELDON. According to the section the hon. gentleman has quoted, it would be a matter of favor, on the part of the Government, to give compensation.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. WELDON. But, in this case, the court is a final one. It is a judicial tribunal, and there might be a question as to whether there was any option on the part of the Government.

Mr. THOMPSON. A Minister will be enabled to refer to this court any claim made against a Department. Thus, it will enable, for instance, the Minister of Railways or the Minister of Public Works to give redress in that way, that he could not do otherwise, as the subject would have no remedy by petition of right. In respect of these claims which are the subject of reference to arbitrators, and in respect of which there is no legal obligation, though there is the moral obligation after the award has been given, in respect of these claims we preserve precisely the same remedy.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I asked the hon. gentleman the other day when he gave notice that he was about to introduce this Bill, whether it was to establish judicial procedure or a mere enquiry, with the view of leaving with the Government the discretion as to whether payment would take place or not. He said it was to be a judicial tribunal giving judgment in all cases, and not a mere tribunal for the purpose of giving recommendations to the Government. Under this provision, it is not a judicial tribunal but merely a tribunal for the purpose of informing the conscience of the Administration.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman must have misunderstood my last explanation. I intend that the Bill shall provide that, where reference is made by the Minister, the judgment is final, precisely as on a petition of right, and we must pay; but we preserve, as we did in the Arbitration Act, the power to refer claims in respect of which a petition of right would not lie.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When the hon. gentleman does exercise that option, will the judgment be final? There may be something said in favor of preserving the law as it stands, but I am sure he must recollect the number of cases which arose through accidents on the Prince Edward Island Railway, and must admit, from his appreciation of these cases, that the law is not such as would commend itself to his judgment. The judge in one of the cases gave damages to the extent of $30,000, and in others from $2,000 to $5,000, according to the injury sustained in each case. The Crown appealed to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court held the bald doctrine that the Crown was not liable for any negligence on the part of its servants. In other words, the Crown could become a carrier and sell tickets, and if, through the negligence of its officials, a passenger was injured, he had no remedy. The matter was discussed at some length when the Minister of Railways introduced his Bill consolidating railways. The hon. gentleman then intimated it was the intention of the Government to move in the direction of giving a special remedy against the Crown, and when I saw this clause I was satisfied it had a larger scope than my hon. friend claimed for it. I thought it was the intention of the Government to give to a passenger on the Intercolonial Railway or the Prince Edward Island Railway the same right as a passenger has on the Canadian Pacific Railway, namely, if he is injured through the negligence of a servant of the corporation, he has a remedy against the corporation. The Supreme Court applied, in the cases I have mentioned, an old, obsolete, technical rule, that ought not to apply to this country. It is a rule which is unfair to the people of the Maritime Provinces, who are compelled to travel on these Government roads, and who carry their lives in their hands, as no matter what accidents may happen through the negligence of the employés, they have no redress.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think this is a subject which ought to be very fully considered and a remedy applied, but I do not think that can be done in this Bill. In the decision of the Privy Council on a recent petition of right, the principle is distinctly laid down that the Crown is liable for its wrong, when that wrong is a breach of contract.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In this Bill the Minister of Justice has not defined the jurisdiction of the court. He has stated what its original jurisdiction is, and what its concurrent jurisdiction is. It is not merely a Bill providing for a mode of procedure, but also indicating the subjects with which the court may deal.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The Crown has practically admitted its obligation in many of these cases by referring the matter to the judgment of arbitrators. I would suggest that the responsibility be extended to all cases of wrongs committed as well as to breaches of contract.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is an English case, the title of which I cannot call to mind, where the doctrine was laid down that where certain duties devolved on the Department, and that Department entered into contract or arrangement with the subject, it was a suit to obtain remedy, because the contract or arrangement was not one made with the Crown, but with a body created by the Crown.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. McCARTHY. I would point out to the Minister of Justice, that the 19th and 20th clauses of the Bill seem to lay down matters of law. They certainly are no matters of procedure, and, therefore, it would not be at all outside the general lines of the Bill, if my hon. friend would provide for what seems to be conceded by all as right, and that is the liability of the Crown in all cases. As the hon. Minister has stated, the decision of the Supreme Court might not probably be arrived at to-day, because it does appear that when a man buys a ticket there is a contract, which gives jurisdiction under the ordinary petition of right. I remember one case where the Crown were liable, where the liability was admitted, and where the Crown only dealt with the party simply as a matter of grace. It was a case in which a vessel somewhere in the Maritime Provinces—I forget the name of the ship, but it was a valuable ship I know—was injured and sank, by running against a Government dredge which was put in such a position in the harbor that the vessel, without fault on her part, ran against the dredge. There was a hole stove in her, and she sank.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). That was the City of St. John.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes. It appeared that the Government, in order to carry on its business economically, had built this dredge. If it had been built by a contractor, the contractor would have been responsible, but the Crown was not responsible, and the Crown saw fit to deal with it as it sometimes does with persons who suffer loss. There is no use in discussing the matter now, but I will ask the Minister if, before a further stage is taken, he will consider the question and see the principle we are contending for, and introduce an affirmative clause defining the liability of the Crown.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I was the counsel in the case to which the hon. gentleman refers. We sued the captain of the vessel and recovered large damages against him twice, but the Crown refused to accept any liability whatever.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman will see that, according to this section, the limitation is so strong in the concluding words that the court could not entertain the reference made to them, unless direct negligence was proved on the part of a servant. Sometimes injuries are sustained, and you cannot trace them to the negligence of any particular servant. Take the case that we have been talking about, the case of sleepers, where the timbers get actually rotten, you could not trace that. I understand from this section that the court could only entertain the matter if negligence were proved on the part of a servant.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think it would be so restricted as that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Suppose Parliament failed to vote the money and the repairs could not be made, you could not call that the negligence of a servant?

Mr. THOMPSON. I should call that breach of contract.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Suppose the officers of the road had $50,000 voted to repair the road, used that amount prudently and carried out the work efficiently, but it required $100,000 to put the whole road in repair, and an accident occurred because sufficient money was not voted—that could not be put down to the negligence of a servant.

Mr. THOMPSON. I would rely upon the contract contained in my ticket.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I did that, and the Chief Justice and the other judges told me that I had no case.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is a reflection on the court.

On section 17,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Where provincial legislation has been had, it is better that the reference should remain to the Supreme Court instead of to the Court of Exchequer. According to my recollection of the sections governing this matter, they provide that, where there is provincial legislation empowering them to do so, the judges of the Provincial Court may refer a matter to the Supreme Court. It would be better that such a matter should be referred to the full court than to a single judge.

Mr. THOMPSON. The sections which refer to this subject are those which refer to the Court of Appeal, and they provide that any controversy between the Dominion and any Province, or between any two Provinces, may, when the Legislature of any Province has passed an Act to that effect, be referred to the Supreme Court. The Province of Ontario has passed the Act, and the Province of Nova Scotia has passed the Act.

Mr. McCARTHY. But in this case there would be required to be further provincial legislation, because the reference is to the Supreme Court and not to the Exchequer Court. Surely, in a matter which is in dispute between the Dominion and a Province or between two Provinces, it should not go to a single judge, but to the highest court that we have. There would always be an appeal.

Mr. THOMPSON. At present it is tried by one judge at first in the same way.

Mr. McCARTHY. Oh, no. It goes directly to the court.

On section 18,

Mr. AMYOT. By this clause I am afraid the Crown will have the power to bring a man who is sued for a penalty from any part of the Dominion to plead his case in Ottawa. Suppose an action is taken against a man in Prince Edward Island, he may have to come to Ottawa and defend himself.

Mr. THOMPSON. This is giving concurrent jurisdiction, and that is the case now. The provision is merely permissive.

Mr. AMYOT. That is what I object to.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is the present law.

Mr. AMYOT. The present law causes any amount of embarrassment. We have to come to Ottawa, incur many expenses, appoint agents here, and so on. The Crown will have the choice of bringing any man to Ottawa to defend his case. It is rather hard to bring a man from Prince Edward Island to Ottawa because you believe he is subject to a penalty. You bring him to Ottawa, and, if the court is not ready or the case is not ready, he may have to come here three or four times. I know the jurisdiction is concurrent, as the Crown chooses to make it, and they may make the man come here five or ten times, perhaps.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). That is not only in the case of an action by the Crown by penalties, but by an informer. I would also call the attention of the Minister of Justice to sub-section 6, which is very wide.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am going to move an amendment to that. I may say to my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) that the effect of this will be to ameliorate that provision of the law. At present, the courts have concurrent jurisdiction. The Crown can proceed for a penalty either in the Provincial Court or in the Exchequer Court here if it chooses. This is intended to be a migratory court, and it will not follow that, because the proceedings are instituted here, the case will be tried here. On the contrary it is recognised that the judge is to go where it is most convenient; and, as to the Crown bringing proceedings oppressively against a subject, there is always the responsibility of Ministers in Parliament to act as a check.

Mr. AMYOT. Judgment on that will be given only every five years by the people, and many people might suffer during that time.

Mr. THOMPSON. The existence of the responsibility is a check upon the power which a Minister might use oppressively, and I think it has been shown to be a check upon the exercise of that power, although it is a very arbitrary one, to bring all proceedings for penalties here, by the fact that it has not been used in that way. Proceedings have never been taken here unless Ottawa was a convenient place to try the question.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would like the Minister of Justice to state what is covered by this sub-section 6.

Mr. THOMPSON. I intend to move an amendment to that.

Mr. McCARTHY. Before the hon. gentleman makes his amendment, I want to ask whether it is intended to take away the jurisdiction now exercised by the Minister of Agriculture with regard to that.

Mr. THOMPSON. No; but I intend to amend section 6 so as to limit it to cases in which the Attorney General appears.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would ask the hon. gentleman to consider whether it will not be advisable now to take away that jurisdiction? The Minister of Agriculture could tell whether it is a jurisdiction that ought to be exercised by him. A year or two ago, you may remember, Mr. Chairman, I brought in a Bill for the purpose of endeavoring to make some machinery for the trial of these cases before the Minister of Agriculture, and although my Bill was rejected, still there was a promise made by the present Minister of Railways that he would bring down a Bill incorporating the procedure which was in my measure. The hon. Minister, however, in the pressure of other business, has forgotten that promise. Now, there is an opportunity for the transfer from the Executive Department to the Judicial Department of these cases. There can be no good reason whatever why a deputy head—because it is a deputy head, sometimes a mere clerk, who sits beside the Minister of Agriculture and tries these questions—why people's rights should be disposed of in that way without any appeal. Witnesses are not examined upon oath, there is no power to bring witnesses who may know. It seems to me extraordinary, and I would press, therefore, on the Minister of Justice that he would so amend one of these sub-sections as to give jurisdiction, ample and complete, to the new Court of Exchequer.

Mr. POPE. The objection I have to it is this: It was put into the law, when the law was first framed, for the purpose of reaching a decision upon matters of fact which it was supposed the Minister could understand as well as legal gentlemen. These were the questions: Did that man import that thing into the country after the time allowed by law? Or, did he make it in the country as the law required he should do? These were the questions for the Minister to decide. It is very important that a man taking out a patent should have the use of his patent as early as possible. If you keep him two or three years in a court of law, going from one court to another, you destroy the usefulness of that patent. And when I was Minister of Agriculture, when I had a case brought before me, it was supposed that it would be decided quickly, as the only question to be decided was the matter of fact. But as to any other cases under the Patent Act, as to any infringement, or anything of that kind, they go before the courts in the ordinary way, and parties fight them out.

Mr. McCARTHY. What the hon. gentleman just said shows the impropriety, if I may say so, of continuing this jurisdiction. It is important, the Minister of Railways says, to try a question of fact, but this question of fact is tried on the evidence of the witnesses who are not sworn, and it is tried by a tribunal who has no power to compel the attendance of witnesses; so a man, who may be able to clear up the matter, declining to appear, cannot be forced to attend.

Mr. POPE. Amend that.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. Minister promised to amend it sometime ago, but has not done so.

Mr. POPE. You know very well I was not Minister of Agriculture, the next year.

Mr. McCARTHY. But I thought the promise the hon. Minister made bound his successors in office. At all events, I do not like to make an effort again in that direction, after the summary rejection of my feeble efforts to improve that. I would ask the Minister of Justice to consider whether it would not be proper to deal with this matter now? This court sitting here at Ottawa, and expressly charged with all the machinery, and all the facilities of trying questions of this kind, is surely a more proper tribunal than the Minister of Agriculture. Now, as to the matter of delays: my experience, not very great, it is true, is that there is certainly no expedition in the trial of cases before this tribunal.

Mr. THOMPSON. That was not overlooked. But I would ask my hon. friend to allow me to get this court on its feet, without undertaking to revise all the statutes in doing so. The other suggestion was for amending the Petition of Right Act. This would involve a very serious amendment to the Patent Act. I think all this Bill undertakes to deal with is pertinent to the subject of the Exchequer Court. If you will allow me, I will now move these amendments. In subsection a, after the words "in all civil cases," add "relating to the revenue." In subsection b, after the words "in all cases in which it is sought," add the words "at the instance of the Attorney General."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). It seems to me that sub-section b gives enormous power of jurisdiction to this court. There might be a bond in British Columbia or down in Prince Edward Island for a small amount, and you give jurisdiction.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is just a transcript of the present Act.

Mr. AMYOT. If the old law was bad, it is time to change it now.

Mr. THOMPSON. We are changing it by putting this concurrent jurisdiction in the hands of this court.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). It is possible that the civil right might belong to the Crown under local law. Suppose the Federal Government purchase a property under the law of Quebec, an action taking place with respect to it, might be brought before the Exchequer Court, and this provision in the Bill would be an invasion of provincial rights. The only court in which it could be brought would be a court under the law of Canada, whereas it should be under the provincial law.

Mr. THOMPSON. If the Crown acquired a property, I claim we would have the right to decide as to what court should adjudicate on any claim respecting it.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I will state a case. Suppose the Crown purchases a property in Quebec, but the property is not transferred, and the Crown take action against the seller, that must be done before the Exchequer Court under this law.

Mr. POPE.

Mr. THOMPSON. We had the right to settle that point, and the Province of Quebec could not pass any statute limiting our right to say where it should be tried.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). It is a right under the laws of the Province of Quebec.

Mr. McCARTHY. The moment the Crown purchases any property it belongs to the Dominion, and under a clause of the British North America Act we have jurisdiction to make laws respecting it.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). This Parliament has only jurisdiction to constitute courts for the better enforcement of the laws of Canada.

Mr. McCARTHY. The property is purchased; it becomes the property of the Crown; the Crown is represented by the Dominion. That moment this Parliament has power to make laws relating to that property.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No. The hon. gentleman will see there are certain powers given to expropriate property. For all those purposes the property will be under our jurisdiction. There might be circumstances under which we might acquire property by contract or by negotiation, and such property would not be under our jurisdiction.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You purchase a certain quantity of land for a farm. You cannot take that farm from under the control of the Province.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes, you can. Take the experimental farm which the Dominion has expropriated in the county of Carleton. It has ceased to be under the control of the Provincial Legislature and is now under the control of this Parliament.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But that is limited, for we would be compelled to conform to drainage and health laws prescribed by the Province. So it is with respect to all property expropriated under the powers of eminent domain under the British North America Act. Here, for example, is a railway corporation which is authorised to expropriate lands under powers given it by the British North America Act. Can you say they shall not be subject to health regulations with respect to drainage?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am not speaking as to what powers may belong to corporations chartered by this Parliament. My point is this: The moment the Dominion expropriates property, although purchased from individuals and subject to provincial laws, that moment it became subject to laws made by this Parliament, and the Local Legislature cannot make any laws regulating or dealing with the property of the Dominion. So I say that the moment property is acquired in the Province of Quebec or elsewhere by the Dominion, it comes under the laws of this Parliament.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). My difficulty would be removed if the words "under the laws of the Dominion" were added.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Where does the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) find that power in the British North America Act?

Mr. McCARTHY. "The public debt and property." It is in the very first clause, line one. The Provinces cannot tax any buildings owned by the Dominion, any post office buildings or similar buildings, nor can they make any laws relating to them. They could not insist that the Government should drain or do anything, for Dominion property is under the jurisdiction of this Parliament.

Mr. AMYOT. How has the clause been amended?

Mr. THOMPSON. We have added the words "at the instance of the Attorney General." He could only claim as Attorney General that the patent be set aside and the land should be revested in the Crown.

Mr. AMYOT. I said that the words Attorney General apply to the last part but I may be wrong.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The 25th section of the British North America Act says that such properties shall not be subject to taxation.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Langelier) speaks of property which is purchased by the Dominion, and in that case it would be subject to Dominion law.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). My point is that this Parliament has not jurisdiction in the case of such property, but if the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is correct this Parliament might create a court to deal with property held by the Dominion Government.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the hon. gentleman mention the sub-section to which he refers?

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). It is sub-section b.

Mr. THOMPSON. I certainly entertain the view that when property is acquired by the Crown this Parliament is the only Parliament which can deal with it.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). But it does not follow as a consequence that this Parliament can create a court for that purpose.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is involved in it. The Local Legislature cannot create a court to deal with our property; they cannot confer jurisdiction on any court to deal with it; they cannot give any procedure, and it follows that if the Provincial Legislatures cannot, we can, because we have all the power which is not given to the Provinces.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). But all the powers granted are specially mentioned in this particular clause.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman is confining his attention to one particular clause. I do not think that this clause is the only one that will apply, because this is not the creating a court, but rather regulating the procedure in a court.

Mr. DAVIES. It is a new court established by this Act.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is merely a transcript of the present law.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). The point is simply that by the 101st section we can constitute a court for two specific purposes, but we cannot constitute a court under provincial jurisdiction; we must take advantage of the laws of the Provinces.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is probably so under the 101st section, but under the one relating to public debt and property it appears to me that the sole power to legislate lies here.

Mr. McCARTHY. The moment it becomes the property of the Dominion it is subject to Dominion law, and the clause says the court may be established for the better administration of the laws of Canada.

On section 19,

Mr. McCARTHY. I would like to ask the Minister whether all the usual limitations are included here? It appears to me that all the provisos which are necessary to take in a case are not provided for. For instance, a person may have a right to property in reversion, but he may find himself cut off without a remedy. I would suggest that the section of the Limitations Act be provided for in this Bill so as to afford the subject the same protection as in other cases.

Mr. THOMPSON. We had better let the section stand for the present.

On section 20,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think that the limitation should confine the holding of the court to the Province in which the case arises.

Mr. THOMPSON. The object of the clause is to prevent claimants proceeding in two places.

Mr. McCARTHY. The case of the Western Counties Railway illustrates that fact. But this clause would shut out an action against the Crown in such a case.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Western Counties Company were not professing to act under the authority of the Crown.

Mr. McCARTHY. Their defence was that the then Minister of Public Works, the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) gave instructions to Mr. Brydges to take possession. Their only defence was that they were acting under the Crown; the Crown professed to be acting under the statute, but that clause would shut out the remedy against the Crown in the case of the Western Counties Railway.

Mr. THOMPSON. My point is this: that the Western Counties Company was not in a position to justify under the Crown. They were not acting under the authority of the Crown or professing to do so. They set up the defence that they were, and judgment was given against them because they were not.

Mr. McCARTHY. Judgment was not given against them because they were not acting under the authority of the Crown, but because the Crown had no right to give that authority. The statute was passed here in 1874, by which it was intended to transfer the property of the Windsor and Annapolis Railway to the Western Counties Railway Company. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) gave instructions to Brydges, who was then in charge of the Government railway, to take possession of the Windsor and Annapolis line and to put the Western Counties Railway Company in possession, which he did. The court held that the statute did not confer that power, and that the Western Counties Company were trespassers. But this clause would have been an absolute defence to the Crown, and would have prevented the Crown being responsible in that very case.

Mr. THOMPSON. The only result would have been that the petition of right could not have been filed for a few months after it was filed. But I have no objection to striking out the words "or professing to act," as they may lead to ambiguity.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think there ought to be some restriction upon the judge as to naming the place for the trial of a claim. I think it should be within the Province in which the cause of action lies.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think we ought to restrict the venue. This is a mere transcript of the present Act. The judge will, of course, as all judges are bound to do, fix the venue at the most convenient place. There might be a case that was not contested as to the facts at all, and not requiring the judge to go to the Province, but such an amendment would require him to do so.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). He might be limited in cases of fact. While this is a transcript of the old law, the old law related to five judges who had control of the business, and they could regulate it to suit themselves.

Mr. THOMPSON. When we come to section 26, we will deal with trials of issues of fact.

Mr. AMYOT. We might provide that it will be the duty of the judge, as much as possible, to sit in the Province where the cause of action originated.

Mr. THOMPSON. An expression of opinion on the part of Parliament like that would be after all expressing only what is the plain duty of the judge, and a duty always recognised by judges. In all systems of procedure the principle is recognised that the judge must go to the most convenient place of trial, subject, of course, to the rules of the court, which rules are to be laid on the Table and subject to the approval of Parliament.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think this is an illustration of the impropriety of constituting this court of a single judge. If you retained the present Exchequer Court, you might divide the country up into districts, and say in what particular district or circuit an action might arise. But under this an action might arise in British Columbia and be tried in Ottawa.

On section 22,

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). What are to be the rules of evidence in this court?

Mr. AMYOT. If the laws of England change every year, we shall have to follow them. I think we should say what laws of England shall apply to us.

Mr. THOMPSON. The rules now prevail which prevailed before the adoption of the judicature system in England. As they are peculiarly applicable to the Exchequer Court, notwithstanding the adoption of the judicature system in England, those rules still apply to Exchequer cases. We, therefore, simply adopt the present law, which has been prevailing for the last forty or fifty years in Exchequer cases.

Mr. AMYOT. Could we not provide that the practice and procedure of our Superior Courts be followed? This would prevent the application here of the new rules of practice in England.

Mr. THOMPSON. They would not apply here.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In the Circuit Court of the United States, the rules of evidence and procedure are the rules in the State courts of that particular portion of the district where the cases arise. The practice and procedure for the whole circuit is not uniform, and the practitioner is only required to be familiar with the practice of his own State. There might grow up in time a very considerable divergence in practice among the different Provinces in the Dominion. The procedure and practice in Ontario is different from that in British Columbia, and it would be inconvenient to insist on uniformity in practice for a court that extends over the entire Dominion.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman will find that has been done. This is a new section and is intended to preserve the existing practice. There is another section of our Statutes which provides for what the hon. gentleman wants. Chapter 139 of the Revised Statutes has a section relating to evidence, and section 10 in that provides that in all proceedings over which the Parliament of Canada has legislative authority, the laws of evidence in force in the Province in which such proceedings are taken shall apply to such proceedings. It keeps the law of evidence in each Province applicable to proceedings of the Exchequer Court.

On section 24,

Mr. AMYOT. This clause says, "no fiat shall be given." I would suggest that the words "shall be necessary" should be substituted.

Mr. WELDON (St. John).

Mr. THOMPSON. That would change the meaning. The intention is to provide, when the head of a Department refers a claim, there shall be no fiat given on a petition in respect of the said claim. This is to make the one adjudication final.

On section 54,

Mr. THOMPSON. I propose to insert a provision which will enable the head of the Department to use the referees for the purpose of having a claim against the Crown reported upon without going to the court. The provision is as follows:—

"That the head of any department in connection with the administration of which any claim arises may, instead of referring such claim to the court for adjudication thereon, refer the same to one of the official referees for examination and report both as to the matters of fact involved and as to the damages, if any, sustained, and such official referee shall make such examination upon the oath or affirmation of witnesses, and shall report his finding upon the questions of fact, and the amount of damages, if any, sustained, and the principle upon which such amount has been computed."

On section 59,

Mr. THOMPSON. I propose to make the clause read thus: "All matters pending before such official arbitrators when this Act comes into force." I would ask the committee to reconsider section 50 in order to make a verbal amendment as follows: "Any matter pending in the Exchequer Court when this Act comes into force." Section 13 is amended so as to make provision, as we have done in the Estimates, for an assistant reporter.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). There seems to be some contradiction between section 13 as amended, and section 112. Section 13 says, that the Governor in Council may appoint the necessary reporter to report the decisions of the Supreme Court; while section 112 says the decisions of the Supreme Court may, if the Governor in Council so determine, be edited by the registrar of the Supreme Court. I do not see any necessity for having so many people to report the decisions of the Supreme Court.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Now that you have withdrawn the original jurisdiction from the Supreme Court altogether, it seems hardly necessary to duplicate the reporter.

Mr. THOMPSON. There should be an amendment in section 112. The word "edited" should be "published." That is what it is in the present Act.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He is supposed to edit them now, is he not?

Mr. THOMPSON. He edits them to the extent of revising the manuscript and supervising the preparation of the head notes. He takes charge of the accounts for the publication of all the reports.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I understand the reason the assistant reporter was appointed was, that there was some difficulty on account of the difference between the laws of the Province of Quebec and those of the other Provinces. The precis writer was not as familiar with the laws of the other Provinces as he was with the laws of Quebec. I understand now that an assistant reporter, for whose salary a provision has been made this Session, has been appointed. I do not see any necessity now for anybody else but the reporter and his assistant.

Mr. THOMPSON. The reason for the appointment was to enable them to get up with the work, which was a good deal in arrears.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Was not that caused largely by the reporter being a good deal of the time employed in the Exchequer Court?

Mr. THOMPSON. No, he was secretary to the judges; but he was not employed in the Exchequer Court otherwise. I think that ought to be struck out. I do not think the reporter ought to have any other duties than to report. The statute at present contains this provision, that five judges of the court shall constitute a quorum, but in the absence of a judge from illness or any other cause he may hand in his judgment to be delivered by a brother judge. Some doubt has arisen as to whether judgment can be given unless a quorum of judges are present. I, therefore, propose to amend the clause by setting forth that in such cases it shall not be necessary for five judges to be present at the delivery of such judgment.

Mr. TUPPER (Picton). I propose to add the following words to section 24:—

“ And in cases in the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island wherein the sum or value of the matter in dispute amounts to $250 or upwards in which the court of first instance possesses concurrent jurisdiction with a Superior Court.”

At present, in those Provinces, we have no regular Court of Appeal, as the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario possess. We have there County Court jurisdiction and one Supreme or Superior Court. Under the present Supreme Court and Exchequer Court Act no appeal lies for any case originating in the County Courts of those three Provinces, and the Local Legislatures are continually extending the jurisdiction of those County Courts, until, in the Province of Nova Scotia, the County Court decides cases dealing with amounts as high as $400; and we have the anomalous state of affairs that, in those cases in which the Superior and County Courts have jurisdiction, the defendant cannot come to the Supreme Court of Canada, if the case has been tried in the County Court, but an appeal will lie if the case is tried in the Supreme Court in the first instance. In order to prevent any abuse of this privilege of appealing cases from the courts of first instance, they are limited to cases involving an amount of $250. I may mention that I have submitted the amendment to members of the profession from those Provinces, and it has met with their approval.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I am very glad my hon. friend has moved this amendment, because the Local Legislatures are continually increasing the jurisdiction of the County Courts; and in fact in New Brunswick since the Supreme and Exchequer Court Act was passed the jurisdiction of the County Court has been largely extended, and the right of appeal which we had has been practically taken away by the action of the Local Legislature. The proposed amendment is one carrying out the intention of the Supreme Court Act.

Mr. THOMPSON. I want to call the attention of the Committee to a proposed amendment to section 29 of the Revised Statute. It is as follows:—

“ No appeal shall lie under this Act, from any judgment rendered in the Province of Quebec in any action, suit, cause, matter or other judicial proceeding wherein the matter in controversy does not amount to the sum or value of $2,000.”

Now there has been a decision to the effect that the amount in controversy must be ascertained by the amount claimed by the plaintiff, but it had the effect of enabling the plaintiff to say whether the matter should be appealable or not. If his real, bond fide claim was only one thousand dollars, if he claimed two thousand it was appealable, and that has never been remedied by statute. I may take the liberty of saying that the amendment was suggested by one of the judges.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I am quite sure that this amendment will meet with a great deal of opposition in the Province of Quebec. On the first occasion on which this matter came before the Supreme Court, there was a division in the court, a majority of the judges being of opinion that so far as cases from Quebec were concerned, the amount in controversy should be the amount demanded, and not the amount granted by a judgment of a court. Since that time that rule has been followed without interruption in the Supreme Court, with regard to the Province of Quebec. That is the rule which has been adopted by our Court of Appeals, and that is one of the reasons why it was mentioned in the statute constituting the Supreme Court. I am quite sure that the whole bar of Quebec will be opposed to this amendment, as they are accustomed to the law as it now prevails, and as it has prevailed for over thirty years. I may say that we follow the same rule in appeals to the Privy Council.

Mr. THOMPSON. Of course the bar of the Province has not had an opportunity of considering it; and as there is no hurry about the matter it may stand for the present.

Mr. McCARTHY. The amendment which I propose to the 41st section is to extend the time of appealing from 30 to 60 days. I think experience has proved that 30 days is too short a time to permit parties to perfect their security. It does not interfere with section 41, where notice is required; the notice will remain as it is. But in the perfecting of the appeal, and especially in appeals from the outlying Provinces, 30 days has been found to be too short a time. You can appeal to the Privy Council any time within two years, and in England you can appeal from a court to the House of Lords any time within one year. I may state also that 30 days is allowed in Ontario to appeal from a Divisional Court to the Court of Appeal.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I think the time is too short, but, perhaps, putting it at 60 days without leaving any power of execution would be too long. In Quebec, in appealing from the judgment of the Superior Court to the Court of Appeals, a party may take out an appeal any time within a year, but he cannot prevent execution except for 15 days. You might give a longer time, leaving power in the meantime to take out an execution.

Mr. McCARTHY. This does not stay execution at all. The execution may go on, and the appeal may be made within 60 days. There are constant applications made to the courts now to extend the time, and the courts will not do so unless the party proves that he cannot pay within 30 days.

Mr. WELDON. If there is any change made, I should like it to be in the direction of making the time longer.

On schedule B,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he sees his way to amending the 52nd section of the Act which confers concomitant powers on the judges of the Supreme Court, with regard to writs of habeas corpus. There have been some serious cases in which writs have been refused in the lower courts, and the parties come up to the Supreme Court and get a writ from a single judge. I believe that has been found, in practice, not to work well, and I thought the hon. gentleman might have proposed some amendment withdrawing that power.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think that will be found not to work well, and I think it is a mistake to have concurrent power for the judges of the Supreme Court for the issue of writs of habeas corpus, except where the writ is incidental to some case before them. But the power is very seldom exercised, and I understand that the attempt to take it away some years ago was attended with some remonstrances, and I do not propose attempting it now.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The power is now being used extensively under the Scott Act.

Committee rose and reported progress.

MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

That the salary of the Minister of Trade and Commerce be $7,000.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is no provision for the other officers.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Civil Service Act provides for all that. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee of the Whole for consideration with the Bill.

Resolution concurred in, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 7).

EXCHEQUER COURT OF CANADA.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the report of the Committee of the Whole, on resolutions (p. 590) respecting the salaries of the judge and officers of the Exchequer Court of Canada, be now received.

Resolution concurred in, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 111).

CUSTOMS AND INLAND REVENUE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the second reading of Bill (No. 41) respecting the Department of Customs and the Department of Inland Revenue. He said: I do not propose that the House go into Committee of the Whole on the Bill to-night, as there are some amendments to be printed and distributed. I shall take the opportunity of adopting the suggestion of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) of leaving it to the option of the Government to put the two subordinate officers under the Minister of Finance or under the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

CUSTOMS DUTIES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the second reading of Bill (No. 93) to amend the Act respecting the Department of Finance and the Treasury Board. He said: The exact effect of the Bill is, that instead of having the cast iron rule under the present statute appointing certain members of the Government, certain heads of Departments as members of the Treasury Board, the members of the Treasury Board will be appointed by order of the Governor General in Council.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Under this you might have neither the Minister of Finance nor the Minister of Trade and Commerce on the Board.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Governor in Council and the Ministers of Trade and Commerce and Finance will attend to that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That might be, but they are not ex-officio members of the Board.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time; House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should imagine some legal officer in the Government should be on the Board. If we are going to have two of them one or the other should be on ex-officio, and also the Minister of Finance.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The whole of this Bill is on the principle that the Council are the best judges as to who should sit on the Treasury Board.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I take it for granted, as a matter of justice, you will have one, as the questions which come up before the Board have almost always a legal element.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, and therefore we have always of late days the Minister of Justice on the Board.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

FANNY MARGARET RIDDELL RELIEF BILL.

Mr. TUPPER moved the first reading of Bill (No. 145) for the relief of Fanny Margaret Riddell (from the Senate).

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time on a division.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the second reading of Bill (No. 115) to amend the Dominion Elections Act. He said: This Bill, in effect, enacts one of the clauses in the Bill introduced by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), with the addition of constables, who were omitted in the clause suggested by the hon. gentleman.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time; House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this a retrospective Act?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, it is declaratory.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This may have the effect of confirming an election wrongfully carried, if these people had not the right to vote.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no doubt that they have the right to vote, but this is declaratory of that fact.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Suppose the courts should take a different view?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. But they will not take a different view.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They will not after this Bill passes, I presume.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think it is better to put this as a sub-section to section 42 of the Act, which is the clause which disqualifies certain parties, and this would explain that it was not intended to disqualify these people. I propose that the section shall read:

The following shall be read as sub-section c of clause 42 of the Dominion Elections Act:—

"Nothing herein contained shall disqualify or make deputy returning officers, poll clerks and constables, whether appointed by the returning officer or by a deputy returning officer employed in connection with any election, incompetent to vote in any election, and it shall be declared that such persons are and always have been entitled to vote at an election of a member of the House of Commons of Canada."

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) Do you strike out the preamble?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I want to see what the effect is.

Mr. McCARTHY. Just the same. It is the same as the Local Act. It is simply declaratory.

On section 2,

Mr. McCARTHY. Before section 2 is put, I move the amendment of which I have given notice, which is as follows:—

The following is to be read as a sub-section of section 13 of the said Act:—

(a.) That if, in the opinion of the returning officer, the polling districts fixed or defined by the revising officer or revising officers are too large, or for any reason are inconvenient to any considerable number of electors in such polling district, he may fix more than one polling station for such polling district, placing the same in convenient places therein.

The object is to enable the returning officer to have additional polling places if the polling districts are too large. That is the present law in the Province of Ontario. Of course, the risk is that a man may repeat his vote, that he may vote in two places, but that is a risk which occurs every day in towns. In the town in which I have lived for many years, I suppose one-third of the voters can vote in more than one ward, but no practical difficulty arises from that. A man's name may appear in every voters' list in a county, but there is no substantial wrong, because the oath can always be administered, and the man can be made to swear that he has not voted before. In the district of Muskoka, for instance, I know that the polling districts were so large that, in some cases, men had to travel twenty miles to vote. That is a great inconvenience, and this is simply to enact what is now the law in the Province of Ontario. Accompanying that will be the following provision:—

Section 43 of the Act is hereby repealed, and the following is substituted in lieu thereof:—

Each elector shall, subject to the provisions contained in the next following section of this Act, be entitled to vote only at the polling station, or if there be more than one polling station, at one of the polling stations of the polling district, or one of the polling districts upon the list of voters for which his name is entered as such voter, and at no other place, and the deputy returning officer shall secure the admittance of every elector into the polling station, and shall see that he is not impeded or molested at or about the polling station.

Mr. JONES. I think if the hon. gentleman would say that where electors live at more than a certain distance from the polling station, the returning officer shall be obliged to open a poll for them, that would fix it. But in a case like this it appears to me it would be completely in the hands of the returning officer, who might fix the poll at such places, if he was so disposed, as would be very inconvenient to a large number of electors, and practically disfranchise them. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman to name a distance at which the poll should be fixed for any number of people. I know in a county like mine, in the straggling districts, some people have to go 20 or 30 miles to vote, and it might be a great convenience to have a poll fixed for them. This cannot be done under the present Act, because it requires a certain number of electors to be in a certain neighborhood.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not think there is any objection to that. But this is an improvement, because at present there can be only one polling station in the polling district. This is to permit the returning officer to have more than one. It is an amendment in the right direction, and is enlarging the powers of the returning officer.

Mr. JONES. That is in one district, but instead of making the one district, I would make an additional district.

Mr. McCARTHY. But he cannot do that. It is not the electoral district, it is the polling district, with 200 names in it. There may be a polling sub-division which is found to be so large that it is inconvenient for the electors to attend at any one place, no matter where it is, in sparsely settled parts of the country.

Mr. JONES. But then my hon. friend will see that if the district was too large for one polling place, it could easily be divided into three districts.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is what it proposes—two or three.

Mr. JONES. I mean that where any number of electors live at a greater distance than whatever might be decided upon. For instance, in those rural districts, it is not allowed to hire a vehicle and drive the people to the poll. Along our coasts many of our fishermen have not the means of conveyance; they go largely by water, and when they have any considerable distance to go inland, it is difficult to get them to the polls. I think it would meet the case more directly if a certain distance was named which would be more convenient to the people.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He cannot do that.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Speaking for the Muskoka district and other outlying portions of the country in the northern parts of Ontario, this difficulty must necessarily be found because it is impossible for the revising officer, unless he multiplies the number of his polling divisions, and consequently multiplies the expense of everything connected with the Act—it is impossible for him to change the polling divisions so as to meet the convenience of electors in the way in which it can be met by this clause. This clause does not go one bit further than the clause in the Ontario statute which has been in operation for some years. Section 33, chapter 10, Revised Statutes of Ontario, enacts that:

"A returning officer may, in his discretion, grant such additional polling places in any polling sub-division as the extent of the sub-division and remoteness of any body of its voters from the polling place may render necessary."

There can be no objection to it, except, possibly, that suggested by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), of voters repeating their vote. That danger is so very remote, that practically it amounts to nothing in scattered districts; and, practically, in the unorganised townships in Ontario at the present moment, the same difficulty exists in the Ontario elections, because there is no voters' lists; they have never had voters' lists there before; so it is possible for a man to vote anywhere and everywhere. That risk is not increased, but the convenience to the electors is very great. I hope the committee will allow this Act to pass. It will be a great convenience in the Algoma district, and it is not in any sense a party measure.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think this is too important a measure to be dealt with in this hurried fashion. We are here within a week of the closing of the Session, and now the hon. gentleman proposes to introduce very important changes. The old Act provided that polling divisions should be fixed by the returning officer. We discussed the question, and the First Minister decided that it was better that the polling divisions should be fixed by the revising officer, and he conferred the power upon the revising officer. Now, the hon. gentleman proposes to give to the returning officer power to review the revising officer's work, and to undo what he has done. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken tells us how sparse the population is in the districts of Muskoka and Algoma. Well, the sparseness of that population is as well known to the revising officer as it is to the returning officer, and it is much better for the revising officer to have the power, in these exceptional cases, to establish districts with a smaller population than the population named in the Act, where the population is sparse, than that this power should be given to the returning officer. The returning officer is not appointed until the writs are out. He is appointed by the writ, he has no opportunity of considering the wants of the districts of which he is returning officer. But the revising officer knows, he is obliged to go over the ground in order to prepare the voters' lists. He has an opportunity of acquiring the knowledge which the returning officer has not; therefore, it is of consequence, if there is to be an amendment of this sort, that it should authorise the revising officer to do this work, and not the returning officer. The returning officer has not time to make that investigation. It is necessary to know what sub-divisions should be made, and where the polls should be held. The revising officer has time for the consideration of that subject, and if there is to be a change at all, the hon. gentleman should, by his amendment, confer upon the revising officer power to make these alterations in these exceptional cases, instead of upon an officer who has no time to make the necessary enquiry.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The returning officer has to go over the country and fix the polling places himself. That is his duty.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Not at all. If the returning officer does it, there is no opportunity for repeating votes, because a man's name will be in the proper sub-division where the vote is to be polled.

Mr. McCARTHY. Unless he has property in both.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the name will appear in both, unless the revising officer knows that it is the name of the same party, and then it is his duty to allow the party to make a choice.

Mr. McCARTHY. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am satisfied that it is not a fair interpretation of the law to give him an opportunity of putting his name down every time that he is assessed for a separate piece of property.

Mr. McCARTHY. This does not at all interfere with the duties of the revising officer. He has a year before he settles the lists. In order to avoid the expense of printing and other expenditures, he makes a division as large as he can in that sense—large as long as it does not exceed 200 names. Now, the returning officer comes on the ground, and he has to fix the polling station, and it becomes his duty to ascertain where that polling station can be most conveniently placed. Now, if he finds that a polling division is so large that, no matter where he places it, it would be exceedingly inconvenient to a large number of electors, which nobody, I think, except the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) would object to, although it is the law in the Province where all the laws are so wisely made and ably administered by the hon. gentleman's friends there, and never supposed to work badly or improperly—it permits him to multiply these polling places. The only possible objection can be on the ground of expense, because it is absurd to talk about the chance of a voter repeating. That he can do so in every town or village in Ontario is well known; I do not think I exaggerate when I say that twenty-five per cent. of the names appear more than once on the lists.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And those are sworn in every case.

Mr. McCARTHY. And so they can be here. The question is whether you will compel men to travel twenty miles in a difficult country as they had to do in the recent election, or multiply the number of voting places, in the discretion of the returning officer, to meet the difficulty. I am inclined to meet the view of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), who holds that no voter should be compelled to travel more than a certain number of miles to the poll.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It cannot be done.

Mr. McCARTHY. There is surely no objection to going as far as we can for the purpose of accommodating the voter.

Mr. DAWSON. It would be a great improvement on the present system if the returning officer had power to appoint more than one polling place in each polling district. Along with this amendment there should be a further amendment in such a district as I represent. My district is 1,200 miles long, of great width and with numerous islands in it, and the people are, to a certain extent, migratory in winter. They go off into the lumber districts and on different expeditions, and it is very desirable that the voters in that district should have a right to poll their votes in whatever polling district they might be on voting day. In the last election in Algoma one half the votes were not polled, because the people were not at home, and because the polling districts were so large they could not get to the polls. The polling districts in Algoma are as large as an electoral division in the other portions of Ontario. I would, therefore, suggest an amendment that voters should be allowed, as far as regards Algoma, to poll their votes in any part of the district they happen to be in at the time. This might be made exceptional as regards Algoma, for under the General Elections Acts there are special provisions at present for Algoma and Muskoka, so that there would be nothing new in such an arrangement.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. JONES. The hon. gentleman said the suggestion I made could not be carried out. I can point out to him a way in which it can be carried out. It is to make it obligatory on the revising officer when he goes around the country and makes up his list, because of necessity he must travel over the section of country, to arrange that no voter shall have to travel a greater distance than five miles, and he could make up a list to meet the case; whereas under the operation of this Act, in a large district like my own county, the returning officer who may be appointed, probably, and more than probably, never visits the district at all. He receives his writ for the election and takes up the list by the old sections, and he appoints a poll at a certain place. He is not familiar with the locality; he does not know exactly where the bulk of the people live, and he takes the report of other people. But if the revising barrister, who will be familiar with the district, were to arrange his lists in the way I have indicated, it would accommodate a greater number of the electors. But it should not be permissible, it should be obligatory, and then the returning officer would carry out the work which the revising officer had commenced. In my own county the returning officer could not be familiar with the county or district where the people are called on to vote, and could not know under what circumstances the changes of the polling sections might be made. Moreover, there is another objection to this proposal. If, as is often the case, a large proportion of the electors of a certain district live at one end of the district, the returning officer might fix his poll, if he were so disposed—and we have seen in the case of the returning officer for Queen's what returning officers will do—he might fix a polling place at a very inconvenient position, which would practically disfranchise the largest number of people in that section. In my county, when the elections are in winter, it is almost a matter of impossibility to get men to the poll, and, therefore, every assistance should be given them in the way I have pointed out. By the revising barrister having the lists so arranged, he would enable all the electors to poll their votes, and not compel them to travel a distance of over five miles. This would be an improvement on the amendment of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Some simple provision might be made which would be an improvement in a district like Algoma. The amendment I do not think is in the right direction. The revising officer is bound to make himself thoroughly acquainted with the list, and the names of the polling places are printed in the district and put at the head of the list, and are known by the electors. When the poll is fixed by the returning officer the chances are that he will fix it in the most convenient place.

Mr. McCARTHY. The intention is to fix the polling districts in two places and give each deputy returning officer a list, so that the man has a chance. The danger is that a man might vote twice.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the hon. gentleman were not such an old campaigner I would think he was poking fun at the House. If you are going to give in 210 constituencies two polling places in each, there will be at least twenty or thirty persons repeating votes.

Mr. McCARTHY. We have had this matter tried in Local elections for years and without that result: It has been the law for years.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman knows that with some of those districts there are a great number of Indian voters. Their notions of voting, and the propriety of voting, are not exactly the same as those of the white population, and they would be in a large degree at the disposal of those who chose to press them into voting as often as possible. The result of this would be simply to delay, because it would be quite impossible that a single voter would be allowed to vote without being sworn. Then, you have, as the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) said, the case of his constituency, in which a large portion of the voting population are migratory, fishing at one point to-day and camping at another to-morrow. They wander over a territory nearly one thousand miles in extent, and it would be impossible in that case to adopt the hon. gentleman's proposition without serious danger of wrong.

Mr. JONES. I think if the hon. member desires really to amend the law, he will adopt my suggestion and compel the revising barrister to settle the boundaries.

Mr. McCARTHY. We are dealing now with the Dominion Elections Act. The amendment which the hon. gentleman refers to would be an amendment to the Franchise Act, and when it comes up the amendment may be made.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Make it an amendment to that Act.

Mr. McCARTHY. But the revising officer has already fixed the polling districts, and, when an election comes, the difficulty then occurs with the electors, and then the returning officer would step in and correct the difficulty. Of course if the revising officer makes the sub-divisions small enough to be convenient this clause will not apply.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). He cannot make them more than 200 votes.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes, but that may cover a very large territory.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I do not think that such an important change in the law should be made so late in the Session.

Mr. McCARTHY. What difference does it make whether it is late or early?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It is entirely novel to us, and I think it will act very injuriously. In the first place, I feel that it would be very unsafe to put this power in the hands of returning officers.

Mr. McCARTHY. If the hon. gentleman does not desire it in his Province, I am willing to confine it to the districts of Algoma and Muskoka in my own Province. I am satisfied if the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) desires his constituents to travel fifty miles to vote.

Mr. MALLORY. I agree with the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) in thinking that this is too important an amendment to the law for us to discuss and place upon the Statute-book at so late a period of the Session. I cannot see why the hon. gentleman should be in such a wonderful hurry to get this amendment placed on the Statute-book, inasmuch as he, at least, believes that there will be no general election for some time to come, so that I do not think the country would suffer if we left the amendment to another Session, so that we might consider it in a proper manner. I think, Sir, that the revising barrister, so long as we have a revising barrister, is the proper person to define the limits of the polling sub-divisions. He has, in the first place, in order to make up his preliminary lists the assessment roll and all the information he can gather; he is not limited as to the time at his disposal, and he could go fully into the whole subject. He knows, or he ought to know, all the particulars with regard to the boundaries of the various polling sub-divisions, and if, as they exist at present, they are too large, he should have the power of revising them and making them convenient for the electors. In preparing the lists for the final court of revision he has to visit the various municipalities, and to hold courts of revision within them, and, therefore, he should know their boundaries. But we know that in many cases returning officers are appointed who reside outside the riding for which they are appointed, and they are, therefore, not conversant with the boundaries of the polling divisions. In some ridings in Ontario they do not reside in the electoral districts at all; they know nothing about the ridings or the polling sub-divisions which they are supposed to arrange, if this amendment is adopted. In many instances they do not visit the polling divisions at all, but send their clerks to them, while they remain at their own offices. I think this is too important an amendment to the election law to take up at this late hour, when we are asked to expedite the business of the House as rapidly as possible in order to get away next week. Inasmuch as there cannot be any possible haste in regard to this matter, as it is not likely that any number of elections, except a bye-election here and there, will take place for several years, there is no great reason why an amendment to the law should be hurried through at this period of the Session, when we should have plenty of time to consider it.

Mr. McCARTHY. If it is thought advisable, I would ask that the amendment be limited in the way I suggest. I do not desire to force it upon the Maritime Provinces, but I do know that in Algoma and Muskoka they suffer very great inconvenience as the law stands at present; and I should rather think that North Victoria must suffer in the same way. My hon. friend from Manitoba (Mr. Scarth) says that in that Province it would be a great convenience.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the proposition is to apply this provision to two districts in the whole Dominion.

Mr. McCARTHY. To meet your views.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, I expressed no opinion in favor of such a proposition. My proposition was that the districts should be defined by the revising officers. I hold to that opinion; the same opinion was expressed by the Prime Minister himself, but now he seems to have had new light. I would like to know what new light the hon. gentleman has had, to make him see the propriety of conferring this power on the returning officer, when he told us before that it was very important that it should be taken from him, and that the revising officer was the proper party to possess this power. We concurred with him in that view. If it is necessary to confer this power upon anybody—and I admit that it is reasonable, where the population is very sparse, that the extent of territory and not merely numbers should govern—it should be conferred upon the revising barrister, by an amendment to the Franchise Act providing that the revising barrister, in certain cases, should govern himself by the extent of territory rather than by the number of electors. I suppose that the hon. gentleman is assuming that the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson), and the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) are to be unseated, and that there are to be new elections. I think the hon.

gentleman is prejudging the cases of his friends who are sitting beside him. But if there are to be elections there, and if it is necessary to establish more convenient polling divisions, by all means confer on the revising officer the power of revising his work, and of altering and improving the public divisions in the way the hon. gentleman desires. Take the case of Algoma. I venture to say the hon. gentleman who represents that constituency has a good many voters in it, as to whom no white man could tell whether they had voted once, twice or five times.

Mr. DAWSON. Allow me to correct the hon. gentleman. He would have to be an exceedingly active voter if he could go from one to another polling place in one day.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If some of the dusky electors in the hon. gentleman's constituency voted twice, nobody could prosecute them, because nobody could know whether the Indian who voted at poll A was the same Indian who voted at poll B. So I say, if there is to be an amendment, the hon. gentleman had better adhere to the doctrine laid down by the hon. First Minister, and confer this power on the revising officer, and not on the returning officer, who is appointed on the eve of the election and who has no time to do this work properly.

Mr. WATSON. I certainly approve of giving the power to some person to establish more polling booths. In my own county in some cases electors had to travel as far as twenty-five miles to vote, which was a very inconvenient thing in the month of February. I would much rather see that power conferred on the revising officer than the returning officer, because the returning officer has to locate each polling place, and I would not like to see the power placed in his hands of sub-dividing the list, and saying that a certain man should go to one polling place and another man to some other polling place. It would be much better to have the power conferred on the revising officer, so that he could make up the lists to suit the electors. I may say that I have had several communications from electors in different sections of my county, where settlement is sparse, and where the polling booths were inconveniently situated, asking me to endeavor to secure for the revising officer power to locate polling booths in different places in that district, and the revising officer has expressed his willingness, wherever he could place a polling place more conveniently for the electors, he would do it.

Mr. JONES. Some time ago, in reply to my suggestion, the hon. gentleman said that it would come properly under the Franchise Act. If the Government propose to deal with the Franchise Act, will the hon. gentleman say the Government will insert that amendment, making it imperative on the revising officer to divide the district so that the electors shall not have to travel over five miles to reach a poll?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not prepared to say that we will take it into consideration. The hon. gentleman may have his amendment prepared and move it when the Bill comes up.

Mr. JONES. I do not want to occupy the time of the House with that amendment unless it will be passed. I am speaking of this matter with reference to a county like mine, where the people have to travel a long distance to vote. I would suggest to the hon. leader of the Government that if he would incorporate, in any amendment he proposes to make to the Act, the provision that the revising officer visiting a district, should take that into consideration, and locate the polling places that the electors would be within five miles of a polling place, all difficulty would be obviated. I am informed that such a course would be only consistent with the hon. gentleman's action on a previous occasion.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, as he is in charge of the Bill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like the hon. Minister to say if he is disposed to accept an amendment we offer. He takes Algoma and Muskoka out of the general policy, and deals with them in this Act exceptionally. Surely, if he intends that this Act shall apply at bye-elections, he should provide for all bye-elections that may occur.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There seems to be a very considerable opinion in the committee against making the change general. The hon. gentleman proposes to limit the provision to those two counties. We have heard the representatives of those two constituencies, who have no objection to the course proposed. I did not wish to be understood as saying that I would act on the suggestion of the hon. member for Halifax. I merely said I would ask the Minister of Justice to take it into consideration, and I will do so also.

Mr. DAWSON. The hon. member for Halifax said that no voter should have more than five miles to travel to get to a polling station. That argument shows the necessity of making some special provision for Algoma, because if he placed the polling stations in that district so that no voter would have to travel more than five miles, you would require more than a thousand polling stations in that immense district.

Mr. JONES. Then, I suppose my hon. friend from Simcoe will have no objection to include Halifax with Muskoka and Algoma.

Mr. McCARTHY. If it was not for fear of rousing the wrath of the hon. member for St. John, I would be disposed to do so.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think that shows the undesirability of the change at all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This is an instance of that rule of uniformity which the First Minister insisted upon during a period of three months.

Mr. MALLORY. The House is evidently not prepared to deal with this matter as it ought. The hon. member for Marquette states, with reference to this matter, that his constituents have complained to him, and that he has made representations to his revising barrister, who is prepared to do what the hon. member for Marquette asks, if only the law would allow him. This amendment discriminates against the hon. member for Marquette, and in favor of two friends of the Government. If the amendment is a good one, it ought to extend to the whole Dominion, if not, it ought not to be proposed at this late period.

Mr. WATSON. Rather than see the returning officer have this power, I would prefer seeing the Act as it is. In all cases, the returning officer is a partisan, while the revising barrister, as a rule, gives satisfaction. In my county, the revising barrister is Judge Ryan, who gives entire satisfaction. Extended powers ought to be given the revising barrister, such as that of locating the polling districts. In my constituency, the electors in some of the districts had to go 30 miles to poll their votes, and that was in the middle of February. I hope the First Minister will accept the proposal of the hon. member for Halifax when this Bill comes up again.

Mr. JONES. While I prefer this Act should be amended generally, still, to meet the special views of the case, if the hon. gentleman is going to press this amendment, I would move to have the words added "in the electoral districts of Algoma, Muskoka and Halifax."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. After hearing what has been said on both sides, I would suggest to my hon. friend to withdraw the amendment, and when the Bill relating to the Franchise Act is under consideration, to-morrow or Tuesday, the suggestion of my hon. friend can be put into practical shape and considered.

On section 1,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would amend this section by substituting for the words "subject to the reversal on petition," the words "subject to recount or reversal on petition."

Mr. WATSON. It is important better instructions should be given to returning officers, to know who shall be entitled to vote at the different polls. In one particular district in my constituency, where five polls were held, some 66 agents voted. To my mind, that is contrary to the election law, and the returning officer held the same view until within 24 hours of the polling being held. I was in a distant part of the county, but, on arriving home, went to his office and found he had made out some 72 certificates for agents, men coming from Winnipeg to vote in the town of Portage la Prairie. These men did not act as agents, and I believe the returning officer was forced into the position he took by the advice of Winnipeg lawyers, that any man could be appointed an agent and go and vote, provided there were not two men holding agents' certificates in the booth at the same time. If it is the intention of the Government to make this legal, that ought to be distinctly stated. As I understand the Act, only two agents can vote at a poll.

Mr. McCARTHY. I desire to propose an amendment to section 128. It reads at present;

No election shall be declared invalid by reason of non-compliance with the provisions of this Act as to the taking of the poll or the counting of the votes or by reason of any want of qualification in the persons signing a nomination paper received by the returning officer under the provisions of this Act or of any mistake in the use of the forms contained in the schedules of this Act, if it appears to the tribunal having cognisance of the question that the election was conducted in accordance with the principles laid down in this Act, and that such non-compliance or mistake did not affect the result of the election.

I desire to put in, at the suggestion of one of the learned judges, who sent me the amendment, the following words:—

Any irregularity in any of the proceedings preliminary to the polling, or by reason of a failure to hold a poll at any place appointed for holding a poll."

The whole clause is subject to the proviso at the end, that it does not affect the result of the election. This is amending the law exactly as it has been amended in the Local Legislature, owing to a case in which I happened to be concerned. In the East Simcoe case, the returning officer did not open the poll until a few minutes after two o'clock, owing to a snow storm, and at the trial the two learned judges differed. One learned judge thought the election must be set aside in consequence, and the other took an opposite view. In consequence of that, these words which I have read were put into the Local Act. The effect is that no irregularity preliminary to the holding of the poll is to interfere with the election, provided the result of the election is not thereby affected.

Mr. JONES. Suppose a man did not put up his deposit?

Mr. McCARTHY. That would come into the question as to its affecting the result of the election.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This is rather an important amendment, and it might be moved on the third reading and printed in the meantime.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The committee might rise and report progress and sit again.

Amendment negatived, and Bill reported.

SOLICITOR GENERAL.

Mr. THOMPSON moved the second reading of Bill (No. 42) to make provision for the appointment of a Solicitor General.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me rather late in the evening to take up that Bill. There will certainly be a good deal of discussion on that. The hon. gentleman had better take some other measure about which there will be less controversy.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12:45 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 11th June, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Bill (No. 110) respecting the Saskatchewan and Western Railway Company.

ALLOWANCE TO GODEFROI LAVIOLETTE.

Mr. THOMPSON moved the second reading of Bill (No. 138) to provide for the payment of a yearly allowance to Godefroi Laviolette, late warden of the penitentiary of St. Vincent de Paul.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time; House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I ask the Minister of Justice whether he has considered well the precedent which is being established in this? It is true such matters are not likely often to occur, but our practice has been to give a superannuation allowance and a gratuity for the services that may be rendered, and I think, by that mode, we might have the case better than by granting the entire salary for the term of the gentleman's natural life.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have considered that point, and that was really the only difficulty in dealing as liberally as we propose to deal with Mr. Laviolette. I think a gratuity would not meet the case, for the reason that Mr. Laviolette's health is so seriously impaired, there is no probability of his having any lengthened expectation of life, and the mere payment of a gratuity would have left him entirely without any means of support for himself and family.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman has misunderstood me. I said that in somewhat analogous cases our practice had been to grant superannuation allowances, plus a number of years' extra service, and a gratuity. This would, perhaps, have met this case. I mention this, not that I particularly object to conduct like the warden's being specially recognised, but simply because the proposed course creates a precedent.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have endeavored in the preamble to state this is a very special case. It is a precedent that ought not to be followed, except in extreme cases.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think it is not at all in the interest of the country that we should adopt this principle. We now pay about $200,000 a year for the superannuation of civil servants, and we are asked in this case to pay $2,600 a year. If we set this example, the probabilities are we will have this thing repeated year after year. It was quite plain, from the remarks of the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Langelier), that this man was not wholly irresponsible for the troubles that occurred, and I do not think this idea of paying him this enormous sum annually is one that will meet with favor in this country. If a civil servant suffered injury through an honest and earnest defence of his position, and in the discharge of his duty, it would be reasonable to allow him something sufficient to support him annually; but to allow a man who has been in receipt of $2,600 a year for several years, out of which he should have put apart a considerable sum to meet the case of old age and infirmity, a continuance of that annual amount, is a gross injustice to the poor and struggling ratepayers of the Dominion. By following a course such as this, we have run public expenditure up to an enormous sum; we are collecting about $35,000,000 a year for all purposes, and it is likely the amount will be more before the year closes. We should not sanction increased expenditure of this kind in connection with superannuation. Our superannuation system has not certainly been worked in the interests of the country for many years. A great many of our retired civil servants are going around, enjoying the balance of their lives comfortably, and living at the expense of the country. The people cannot afford that; we have the right to investigate such matters as this when they come before Parliament, and I desire to enter my humble protest, both against the continuance of the present system, and the inauguration of a new system whereby individuals are selected, and allowances equal to their salaries granted to them. It is unnecessary that a man should be allowed $2,600 a year for his support. Any man who occupied the position this warden had, should be able to live on half that sum. How many men are there who struggle for a lifetime to gather a competence for the balance of their days, and have not been able to accumulate half that sum; yet we, in the pride of our hearts and of our greatness as a nation, contribute to one man $2,600 a year, in order to keep him in a comfortable position for the balance of his days. I say it is wrong. We have no right to consent to this thing, and, for my part, I am determined to offer my opposition to it at every stage.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 7) respecting the Department of Trade and Commerce. He said: The Bill went through committee before, but we return to it in order to insert the clause fixing the salary of the Minister.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the blank be filled in by $7,000.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUPREME AND EXCHEQUER COURTS ACT.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 111) to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act.

(In the Committee.)

On section 19,

Mr. THOMPSON. It was understood that I should ascertain whether that clause, as drafted, covered all the cases of limitation required. I move the following as a substitute:—

Mr. McMULLEN,

The laws relating to prescription and limitation of actions in force in any Province between subject and subject shall, subject to the provisions of any Act of the Parliament of Canada, apply to any proceeding against the Crown in respect to any cause of action arising in such Province.

Bill reported, and read the third time on a division, and passed.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENTS.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 113) to amend the Dominion Lands Act.

Mr. DAVIN. Before you leave the Chair, I wish to say a few words on the general scope of this Bill, which I think will facilitate our work in committee. I have studied the Bill very carefully, and have come to the conclusion that it would not satisfy the people of the North-West. It fails from the point of justice and from the point of view of policy; and if I make a few remarks that will lead the House on both sides to look into the Bill, I think that we may, in committee, after all, shape such a measure out of it that it will be effective for all desirable purposes. Now, Sir, I lay down two propositions: I say, first, that the Bill fails from the point of justice; and I call the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Interior to the argument on this head, the points in which, although we have met several times, I have not put before him, because they have not struck me on either occasion of our interview. The second homestead was established by the Act passed May 25th, 1883. That clause has been said to be permissive. I will not dwell on the question whether it was permissive or not, because I believe—indeed, I think I can say with authority, from having conversed with the hon. gentleman on the subject—I believe the Minister of Interior would not like to have it supposed that the Government would rest anything whatever on the permissive quality of that clause. But it may be said, in passing, that it would be a perfectly monstrous thing to put a clause in this Bill of a permissive character, as it would strike the eye of a lawyer, but which an agent could use in England, Ireland, Scotland and Germany, and which would enable him to say to the intending immigrant: You can have a second homestead; but when that man came out here, he should be told: You can have a second homestead if the Minister of Interior wishes to give it to you. So I will assume that that clause must be considered to have established the right of any immigrant coming in here, after the passing of the Act on May 25th, 1883, to a second homestead, as soon as he had fulfilled the pre-conditions, viz., that he had made an entry for the homestead and got his patent. Now, Sir, what happened? On June 2nd, 1886, you passed an Act which abolished second homesteads. The second homestead clause was in existence three years and a few days, about the period within which it was absolutely necessary, under the provisions of the Act before it was repealed, to fulfil the conditions which would enable a man to get a second homestead. Therefore, persons who came into this country with what might be called a right to a second homestead, could not get it under the legislation of last year, and the only persons who could get second homesteads are the very persons that went into the country never expecting to get them, prior to the Act of 1883, having no right whatever to them. Looking at the fact that they went into the country before the passing of the Act of 1883, of course, they are not in a position to say, as other men can say, who came in here under the inducements of that Act: We came in here, and when we have performed the pre-conditions, when we have had our homesteads completed, we cannot get a second homestead! It may be said that those who have no title, no moral title, certainly, to a second homestead, can get one, whereas those who had a moral and legal title, prior to the Act of 1886, are deprived of it. I call the attention, especially, of the Minister of Interior to that point, because I think in that respect it clearly fails from the point of view of justice. Every immigrant who came in here in 1884, 1885, and in the spring of 1886, of course expected to be able to get a second homestead. I have letters here from fathers of families, from men of all sorts, who say that they came here expecting to get that second homestead, for the purpose of getting that second homestead. Adopting June 2nd as a hard and fast line, could not fail to create a certain amount of discontent. Men who failed to get their homestead patented felt they had a grievance, and it is to meet that grievance alone that this Bill is proposed. Those persons who came in before the second homestead was established, but who had not got a recommendation for their patent on June 2nd, 1886, could not get the second homestead; but under this Bill they will obtain it. But those are persons who never came into this country with the inducement held out to them that they would get such a homestead. Take the men who have come from England, from Scotland and from Ireland in 1884, 1885, and 1886, believing they would get a second homestead, that being part of the inducement held out to them—they will find themselves left completely out in the cold. The Bill also fails from the point of view of policy. Of course, it is as important, as that it should be just, that this Bill should also be successful and acceptable to the people of the North-West. If it is not acceptable to them and does not satisfy them, there will still be a sense of grievance: and what can fail to make a greater sense of grievance than that the men who came into the country with this allurements before their eyes and this motive playing on their wills, should be deprived of the second homestead, and see men who came into the country before the Act was passed, before the right to a second homestead was established, enjoying a second homestead? Thus, from the point of view of justice, and from the point of view of policy, the Bill, in its present form, will fail. I know it will be said that the second homestead was a bad policy. I grant that it was a bad policy and a mistake; but whose mistake and whose bad policy was it? It was our mistake and our bad policy. It was not the mistake of the Englishman, who, in 1884, on the Downs of Devon, met the emigration agent, and learned from him that in this great liberal land, that in this paradise of the settler, he could get a second homestead if he came here. It was not the mistake of the Scotchman, who, in 1885, met an emigration agent who told him he could get a second homestead if he came here. We are the persons who are responsible for it, and we cannot turn round to these people, when they come here and ask for their second homestead, and say: "Oh, it was a bad policy." The man will reply: "I will keep you to your word." We can, of course, reply that "We are the Parliament, and while all over this country individuals and corporations can be kept to their word, we can, in successive Sessions, repudiate the responsibility undertaken in previous Sessions." So I consider that this Bill—and I have been looking over it since my last conversation with the Minister of the Interior, and I have had the honor of having had many conversations with him—and the more completely I have looked over it the more I am satisfied that it will fail from the point of view of justice and from the point of view of policy. It will not bear powder and shot for a moment when you bring the test of justice to it. I tell the House this: The people of the North-West, if this Bill is passed, will repudiate it. I know their opinions very well—they will utterly repudiate the Bill. So much with respect to the second homestead question. I desire now to touch on another point. There are a number of persons in the North-West who have been there for four years, which have been lean years, in which those who have gone there with their little capital and their courage, have had their capital dissipated, and have nothing but their courage left. I am glad to say their courage still remains strong, and there are this year indications of a bountiful harvest. There you have as fine a class of settlers as ever inhabited any part of the world, who have, in the face of the greatest possible discouragement, in spite of failure after failure of crops, bad year after bad year, in an expensive country to live in, never lost heart or hope, but, toiling on, left their families on their farms, and went into the towns to work, and on the railways to labor; and these men come to this House and say—what? Establish a policy for the future? No, nothing of the kind. They say: "We have been sufferers; do something like justice to us. You cannot possibly put us in the same position we occupied when we came to this country, but do something like justice, in view of the sufferings we have endured." All they ask is this: That their families having lived on the farms, on the homesteads, and in the buildings erected on the farms, and, having cultivated the land, that should be accepted for cultivation purposes, and they should be entitled to their patents. My hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Perley) and myself, have presented, I suppose, some fifty or sixty petitions from every part of the large district of the Assiniboias, praying this House to make the change suggested in the Bill which, with great presumption, I presented to this House in the first week of this Parliament. It was shown to all my friends from the North-West, and some of my friends from Manitoba. One or two of the clauses I inserted at their suggestion; I think there are only four clauses of my own there, and I know this, that the whole Bill met with their approval at the time. How they now feel about it, or what influences may have operated on their minds, I really do not know; but I know this, that I am just as convinced of the need of carrying out the provisions of that Bill as I was when I left my prairie home and when I came from the people amongst whom I live, for whom I plead here, and with whose needs I am acquainted. A short residence in Ottawa has in no way dulled my sense of what they need. I have made these few remarks with the hope of calling the attention of the Minister especially to an argument I had not previously placed before him, and also of calling the attention of the House to the Bill generally, so that when we go into committee we may possibly hope that we may see in this House what, in other days, was seen in Parliaments, what was seen in Parliament in the best days of Parliaments, in the Parliaments with the best and noblest traditions—something like plasticity, something like that capacity for being convinced which the very idea of a Parliament implies, and without which a Parliament is a mockery.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think it would be well that we should now go into committee, and when we come to the particular clause to which this question of second homesteading has relation, we can discuss it. I may say that, while I have listened with great pleasure to the hon. gentleman's speech, I cannot quite say that I am altogether convinced by it. However, we will discuss it when we go into committee.

Mr. SCARTH. I would ask whether members will have the right to suggest other amendments than those in the present Bill,—

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Certainly.

Mr. SCARTH—amendments not referring to the clauses that are in the Bill?

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 3,

Mr. CHARLTON. The provisions of the law with reference to homesteading entry are not, I believe, sufficiently liberal. The object and desire of this House, and of this country, no doubt, Sir, is to secure the rapid settlement of the North-West; and the future of Canada depends very largely upon our success in inducing settlers to go into that country. Now, I believe we have hitherto pursued a policy, with regard to our vast domain of public lands, which is not of a character sufficiently liberal. We have at the south a country which has also a large public domain, and which is seeking to people that public domain with settlers. That country is eminently successful in its efforts. We have been constantly falling behind that country in the race of progress; we have not succeeded, as they have succeeded, in inducing immigrants to people our unoccupied lands. Now, I believe, Mr. Chairman—and I have before urged my view in this respect in this House—that our policy with regard to our public lands in the North-West ought to be, at least, as liberal as the policy of the United States, and I believe, if we adopt a policy not as liberal as that of the United States, we will continue hereafter, as has been the case heretofore, to fail in our efforts to secure the rapid settlement of that country. This clause with regard to homestead settlements proposes to continue the policy hitherto pursued by the Government, that is, to allot certain locations in townships for homestead settlement, and allow homestead settlement on no other location. Now, the practical effect of that, when compared with the United States law, is to place the homestead settler in Canada at a great disadvantage, as compared with the homestead settler in the United States. I do not complain as to the details of the policy—as to the number of years' residence required, as to the time required, or occupation of the entry, as to the conditions with regard to settlement and cultivation. All these, I believe, are proper enough; but I think there is one change which it would be in the interest of this country to make—a change in the direction of the homestead laws of the United States. In that country, wherever public land is situated, it is open either for homestead or purchase; there is no restriction in the one case or the other. The homestead settler can settle on a quarter section outside the railway belt, or upon 80 acres inside the railway belt, wherever he finds land unoccupied. I believe, if we are to induce homestead settlements in the North-West, on a scale commensurate with our desires, we should change our policy and open our public lands, wherever they may be situated, for homestead settlement; wherever lands are open for sale or settlement we should allow homestead settlement upon those lands, instead of locating homesteaders here and there in isolated positions. I think this is one of the radical defects of our law, and I call the attention of the Minister to it, with a sincere desire that he may promote a policy more conducive to the rapid settlement of the North-West than that which has hitherto prevailed. We know that settlement has proceeded slowly; that our policy has been one calculated to scatter settlement. We built the railway, perhaps, too rapidly, and the result is that we have scattered settlements along the line between Winnipeg and the Rocky Mountains, that might better have been concentrated within a limited area. I would suggest, therefore, that the law should be amended. Perhaps it will be an act of presumption on my part to propose such a change, but what we want is a system which would conduce to the rapid homestead settlement of the country; conduce to the sale of land, and the rapid settlement of the country. I propose to alter the third clause so that it shall read as follows:—

Mr. SCARTH.

Every person who is the sole head of a family, and every male who has attained the age of eighteen years, who makes application in the form A in the schedule to this Act, shall be entitled to obtain homestead entry for any quantity of land not exceeding one quarter section of land which is open for sale or settlement—without any restriction whatever as to where he shall make his location.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman has opened up a large question which is not touched in this Bill at all. The question of whether the odd sections should be open for homesteading is one upon which there is reasonable ground for difference of opinion. Recently, in the land grants we have been giving to the railway companies—or to many of them, at any rate—we have adopted the principle of granting alternate townships instead of alternate sections. The motive for that change has been two-fold. In the first place, especially in the southern part, where it was first adopted on what is commonly called the Galt Railway, the land was better fitted for grazing than for ordinary settlement purposes; and the other motive—and I may say the ruling motive with myself—was that, in the alternate townships reserved, every quarter section would be open for homesteading, as the hon. gentleman suggests, and in that way we could secure compact settlement, which is, undoubtedly, a matter of very great importance. But that is not what is referred to in this Bill. Under the law as it stands to-day every person going into that country has a right to enter for a homestead of 160 acres, and for a preemption of 160 acres alongside it. After he has fulfilled his homestead duties by a residence of at least six months in each year, for three years, and reasonable cultivation, he is permitted, within six months after that, to purchase his preemption at the price fixed, whatever that price may be—$2 or $2.50, according to location. Now, in many cases it has been found that homesteaders have abandoned their preemptions. Owing to circumstances which have existed in the North-West during the last three or four years, circumstances which are not in any way due to the land laws, but circumstances over which no Government could have any control, a good many of the farmers do not find themselves in a position to purchase their preemptions, and, as a consequence, they are abandoning them. There is a difference of opinion, even among gentlemen in this House from Manitoba and the North-West, as to whether 160 acres is not sufficient for a homestead, and as to whether we have not made a mistake in allowing preemptions at all. But what I propose in this Bill is that we shall open these preemptions immediately to homesteaders, and to that extent I am going in the direction of the hon. gentleman's suggestion. The chief reason for adopting that principle here is, that I think it is most important, in connection with the settlement of that country, that the homesteaders should be actual residents on their lands, and that the practice should be discouraged, as much as possible, of persons getting possession of land, leaving their families on it, and going elsewhere to work, or, perhaps, getting the work done through someone else, and in that way obtaining possession of 160 acres which they never intend to cultivate. The motive in inserting this clause, in regard to these pre-emptions, is that we may abolish the two principles that have been adopted in former Acts relating to homesteads. The first is the principle adopted in 1884, I think, by which a person living within a radius of two miles, can enter for land, being compelled at the end of three years to put up a habitable house and reside on the land three months before he gets his patent. In the meantime he is away. To my mind, this has not proved, on the whole, a good principle for the settlement of the country. The other plan, which is practically abolished by this measure, is that which we adopted last year, by which a person can enter for a homestead, have five acres broken in the first year, five acres cultivated, and ten more prepared for cultivation the next year, and then, at the end of the second year, become a resident and live on the homestead for three years. The proposal in regard to the abandoned preemptions is that the person shall go at once on the land, become a resident, and thus contribute to the settlement of the country, and to the greater advantage of the settlers already there. This is all that is done here, and it is in the direction the hon. gentleman suggests.

Mr. CHARLTON. As I said before, I do not raise any objection to the details relating to the conditions of settlement on homesteads, which, in the main, meet with my approval. The point which I raise is that there is a fundamental error in our policy with regard to homestead settlement. In place of limiting the locations available for homestead settlement, we should throw open the whole area in the North-West, under Dominion control, for settlers, and let them settle wherever they please, permitting them to take up land, either by homestead entry or by purchase. Our object is to get the land settled, and we should open up to settlement every section we own. In doing this we would liberalise our settlement laws, conforming them to a certain extent to those of the United States, and offer as great inducements to settlers as that country does. We do not offer as great inducements now, and the result is shown in the fact that we do not secure the settlers. The majority of our Canadians who go west settle in Dakota and elsewhere, for the simple reason that they can buy public land cheaper there than they can in the North-West, and they can settle wherever they wish without being hampered in any way. In holding and restricting the land from settlement, as we do, we are not promoting the public interest as we would if we gave it away, provided we could get bona fide settlers upon it. I urge upon the Minister of the Interior the importance of liberalising his policy by permitting the homesteader to settle wherever he chooses, and the purchaser to purchase wherever he can find the land, having no restriction in one case or the other. I am sure that if that policy were adopted, the result would be greatly to the interest of Canada.

Mr. WATSON. I rise to endorse the views of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). I might differ with him a little in one respect, that is, as to the purchaser being allowed to purchase land wherever it is to be found. I believe it would be well to reserve the even-numbered sections for homesteading, but the odd-numbered sections ought to be opened for homesteading. At present the odd-numbered sections are held for sale. I have always objected to that. We have always held that a settler is of more value to the country than the price obtained for the land; and settlement in that country is retarded by so much land being locked up in the hands of speculators. I presented petitions to-day from three municipalities, regarding a corporation that holds thousands of acres on which it pays no taxes. The land was purchased from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and no taxes are paid on it simply because the agreement of sale was not registered. The fact that so much land is held by speculators, without paying taxes, is retarding the settlement of the country. Of course, it will be said that land has to be given away for the construction of railways. Well, I claim that all lands held by the Government, except lands given to aid in the construction of railways, ought to be opened to homesteading. I believe that if that course had been pursued in the past, instead of having a sparsely-settled country we would have a compact settlement within a radius of 200 miles. Another thing that has tended to cause dissatisfaction is that the price of preemptions has been too high. I have no doubt the Minister of the Interior has received a large number of petitions from the North-West, making strong representations that the price of preemptions should be reduced to $1 per acre. For reasons which he has explained, farmers, who took up 320 acres of land, half freehold and half preemption, have found that they were not able to pay $2.50 per acre for their preemptions, and the consequence has been that they had either to lose their preemptions or borrow money to pay for them. They thus involved themselves in debt, and have not been able to recover. The result is that the loan companies to-day are holding large sections of land in that country that have been granted as preemptions as well as homesteads. If preemptions were reduced to $1 per acre, that reduction would encourage settlement, because a large number of homesteaders went into that country, took up their lands during the boom, expecting to be able to pay $2 or $2.50 an acre for preemption; but, unfortunately, the country not having progressed as it should, they find the land is not actually worth the amount they agreed to pay. While we are on the subject, I would refer to two or three minor matters in the interest of the settler. I believe all the timber required by the homesteaders should be allowed to them free of dues, for improving their homesteads, erecting buildings, fencing, &c. I would recommend, also, to the Minister that he should allow settlers throughout all that country to take all the dead and dry timber free of dues, because we have had sad experience of tracts of valuable timber land having been overrun by fires, and the green timber is in a great measure killed by the dead timber with which the ground is covered. I am satisfied that if the dead timber were allowed settlers free of dues, they would take it in preference to green timber and paying dues, and thereby protect the forests. It is of the utmost importance that the forests in Manitoba and the North-West should be protected, not only for the purpose of fuel, but for the effect forests have on the climate. I am pleased to see the Minister makes it statutory that all cancelled homesteads and preemption lands should be allowed as homesteads. The policy of the Government in the past, as a rule, selling those lands or cutting them up in smaller parcels than 160 acres to a homestead, has not tended to promote the settlement of that country. I would like to see the Minister, not only allow a new homesteader to take up a preemption as a homestead, but also to allow the original homesteader to make a second homestead on his preemption, on similar conditions to those set forth in this Bill. It appears to me, by taking that course, no injustice would be done to the Government, and it would only be fair and reasonable to the settler. The settlers of that country have not had the smooth path to travel that some people imagine; they have had a few backsets, as has been said by hon. gentlemen opposite, and it would be a great boon to the early settler of Manitoba to allow him to make a homestead of his preemption on similar conditions to those set forth in this Bill, the preemptions being cancelled. So far as this Bill goes, there is little or no difference between it and giving to the original homesteader the right to homestead his preemption, because, as soon as he is entitled to the patent for his homestead, he can take up his homestead, fail to fulfil the conditions required for his preemption, and he, or some of his friends, can then take up the preemption as a homestead. Instead of compelling him to take that roundabout way, it would be better to allow the original homesteader to make a second homestead of his preemption. Failing this, I would urge that the price of preemptions should be reduced to $1 per acre.

Mr. DALY. I agree with a great deal the last of the previous two speakers has said in reference to the homesteading of odd sections. As far as Manitoba is concerned, there is not much land left for that purpose, owing to the fact that the odd sections have been granted as railway lands or taken up by the Canadian Pacific Railway; but, so far as the North-West Territories are concerned, if the Government would take the matter into consideration, no doubt a large number of odd sections in that country would be opened to homestead entry. I am of opinion, with the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), that the settler in that country is worth more than the $2.50 an acre which the Government may derive from preemption, and I think every settler should be permitted to have a homestead, provided he performs his homestead duties as laid down in the Act. The only thing I see in the previous clause, and the clause we are now discussing of this Bill, which I look upon as not sufficiently liberal, is the fact that we have at least now about three or four different ways of homesteading. As stated by the hon. the Minister, there are three modes in which a homestead can be granted, each imposing different conditions on the homesteaders. When the preemptions are opened for homesteading, it is provided by sub-clause a that certain conditions are to be performed by the person homesteading a preemption. Settlers from the old country are unable to distinguish the difference between making a homestead of a preemption and of a cancelled homestead, or to understand the different entries provided. This is overcome to some extent by sub-clause 2 which provides that when a settler is making application for entry he shall specify which mode he intends to adopt; but, at the same time, great difficulty has been occasioned in the old country by the Department of Agriculture not apparently acting in accordance with the Department of Dominion Lands, and sending immigration literature without having expressed in that literature the latest addition or amendments to the Land Act, so that settlers who come, believing that they can homestead under certain conditions, find the law amended. It is stated in sub-section a that:

"Any person obtaining homestead entry for the land included in such forfeited preemption entry shall be required to perfect his entry by erecting a substantial house."

A substantial house would be looked upon as a frame house. A great many settlers who have lived on their lands from three to six years, find a sod house, or ordinary shanty, quite sufficient for all their purposes; and I think if the Minister insists on this condition, the word "substantial" should be struck out and replaced by "habitable." That is all that is necessary for any person who intends to take up a homestead. I should like to see it laid down, that where a preemption has been abandoned, preference should be given to the son or sons, or to one of the sons of the man who abandoned it. I know of instances where fathers have come out with large families, and were induced to come simply because they had a number of sons whom they wished to see settled near them on lands of their own. Owing to the numerous settlements, their sons have often to go distances of from 12 to 15 miles to get lands, and, I think, if the preference were given to one of the family of a man who has abandoned his preemption, for the first right to homestead that preemption, a great deal more would be done towards promoting settlement than is done by this Bill. It is provided by this that a house must be erected, and that a settler must be on the land during six months in the year, so that every condition of settlement would be fulfilled; and it would be much better the son should have the preference of living beside his father, than that a perfect stranger should come in. I agree with the remarks of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson) with reference to fallen timber. As he has stated, fires have caused great depredation among our timber, and the settlers are removed at great distances from wood. I think, therefore, that, instead of the present timber law being as it is, an amendment should be made providing that settlers may take all the fallen timber they require, provided they take it for their own use. Of course, if there be not some restrictions to the permission to take timber, settlers would take it for the purpose of selling it; but, I think, if they were given permission to take it for their own use, without having to send to the Dominion lands or the timber office at Winnipeg, a great deal of good would result. As to the present mode of homesteading, there is one matter I would like the Minister to consider, and that is this: some two years ago provision was made that all cancelled homesteads could be homesteaded again, but that a person applying could only get 80 acres as a homestead and 80 acres as a preemption. I would ask the Minister to consider that a provision should be made permitting any person who homesteaded 80 acres of such cancelled homestead, to have the whole 160 acres as a homestead, and be refunded the $2.50 an acre preemption he has paid; or, if he has not paid, the preemption of 80 acres should be abandoned entirely as such and be included in locatees homestead. As to the price of preemptions, I think myself that $2.50 is too much, and that the price should be reduced to $1 an acre, and I think the Government would promote settlement better by permitting bond fide settlers to obtain their preemptions at $1 an acre instead of $2.50. I may be permitted to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to this sub-clause a. I think the wording of that will require to be changed. I would like to see the word "substantial" struck out and the word "habitable" put in, and a provision made that it should be within six months from the date of perfecting such homestead entry. The hon. Minister will remember that, by the Act of 1883, a settler is given six months in which to perfect his entry, and I suggest that that clause should be applied to meet the condition of matters set out here.

Mr. DALY.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I will claim the attention of the House on this subject. I generally keep my seat when anything which does not affect the North-West is at stake, but I claim the indulgence of the House for a few moments as this is a matter which affects my country. You have heard the very able speeches of my two legal friends from that country, but they are not farmers, as was stated on a former occasion. I am a farmer; I have always been a farmer, and I am farming now; and, knowing that country as I do, having lived in it four years—I am speaking now of the North-West Territories more particularly, and not of Manitoba—I say that 160 acres is not enough for a farmer in that country. Our great misfortune does not lie in the fact that our land has been too dear, or that the land regulations have been too severe, but that our climate has not been so good this last two or three years as we would desire. We have suffered both from frost and from drought, and the country that we expected would be a great grain-growing country, and that everyone expected they could raise wheat in, to such an extent that they would get rich by it, has proved by experience, by bitter experience to most of those who are there, that that will not do in the North-West, and that it is necessary to adopt a system of mixed farming—that a farmer there must have his cows, and his pigs, and his poultry, and that he must not put all his eggs in one basket. In that country the grass does not grow so abundantly—though it is very luxuriant—and it takes a larger area of land to pasture a cow than it does in other parts of the world, at least in the eastern Provinces. The cow will be much better and much fatter if she gets enough pasture, but it takes more pasture for a cow. I say that 160 acres is not enough for a farm in that country. Less than 320 acres is useless. I would not take 160 acres if you gave it to me. I would rather pay for 320 acres, because my life on 160 acres would be misery and starvation, while with 320 acres I could carry on a system of mixed farming and could manage to live. I think the policy of taking away the preemption from a farmer, because he fails to make his payment at the end of six months, is a bad policy—a policy which will result in ruin to the farmers in the North-West. Of course the case is different in Manitoba. There they have large lakes and more rainfall, and more moisture than we have in the western country, and we require more land because the same quantity of land will not answer the same purpose. I claim that in amending the law, the Government should give us the opportunity to pay for the preemption in an extended time. In the first place, it should be reduced in price. The farmers have suffered and have lost a great deal in the last three years in testing that country. It has been an experiment. There have been two classes, or even three, who have gone to that country. The Government, who went there first, built the railway, and promised us that that land was going to be a land flowing with milk and honey, and that it would give happy homes to millions of people, and they have been disappointed. The farmer who went there with glowing expectations of what he was going to achieve in that country, has also suffered. But who have suffered really? It is not the Government, who are but the guardians of the people's interests, but it is the individual who has gone there and lost his time and his money. There are no more plucky, courageous and intelligent people in the country than the North-West farmers. They are willing to stay there, and to try the matter still further. It astonished me, in going over that country soliciting the votes of these people, to find men with the pluck and courage which they possess; and I think that, if hon. members could visit that country and see the hardships these people have to undergo, they would be willing to give them the land for nothing. I agree with my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson) that it would be much better for the Government, and much better for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself, to give the land for nothing and open up those lands, because the traffic they would get from these men, in bringing in the goods they require and taking out their produce, would more than double the value of the land. I want to come to another point, which is of great importance. We are deficient in rainfall. It is no use going into the history of the country. You all understand that, perhaps, much better than I do, but in the western portion of the Territories we are very deficient in rainfall, and, when you get beyond a certain limit, it is no use going into agriculture, it is only fit for grazing land. As far as Regina it is a good country, but we are deficient in timber, and I propose that the Government should accept from the farmers the payment for their preemptions by tree culture. That would be a benefit, not only to the farmer and to the settlement of that country, but to the whole of Canada, because every man in Canada is interested in the prosperity of the North-West; and while a poor man has not enough to pay for his preemption, he cannot do this sort of thing. That is why hundreds of men are asking for a second homestead, because they cannot pay for their preemption, and they want some land on which to pasture their cattle. They are proposing to take their cattle to the hay sections and to move and change their stock twice a year. I know that people in my district have gone fifty miles in the winter with their cattle, and have returned to their farms in the summer, and are there now. This proves that 160 acres are not enough. I think it is very important that this matter should be seriously dealt with, and I suggest that a very great change be made in the payment of preemptions. The idea of taking a farmer's preemption away from him because he cannot pay for it at the end of six months will be disastrous in that country, and I hope the Government will reconsider that matter. If a farmer who has been four years there, with a preemption to pasture his cattle on, while he has the other quarter-section to cultivate as a farm, cannot find the money to pay for his preemption, what must be the prospect in the future? There is another matter to which I desire to call your attention, My hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) dropped one suggestion which I think he need not. I have come here to discharge my duties honestly and fairly. I have not come to court the favors of the Government more than I ought to do. The Government have not undertaken to force me, nor to direct me in any way. I have acted freely and independently this Session, as I will every Session as long as I am here. I have consulted with the Minister of the Interior, I consulted with him yesterday in company with my hon. associates here, and I think when the hon. member states: "I do not know how we feel now," or "what influence has been brought to bear upon us with reference to this vote," he went a little out of his way to cast reflections upon us, and I am not here to take it from him nor from any other man. I say the Government have not undertaken to force us; I am not under obligation to any of them; I am here to do what is right, regardless of him or any other man, and that is the motive which actuates me in this matter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to enquire of the Minister of the Interior what is the amount chargeable for preemption? Is it still on the old scale—$1 in belt E, $2 in D, and $2.50 in C, or is it a uniform rate of $2.50?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). It is a uniform rate, $2.50 within the railway belt and south of it, and north of that $2.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then I must say that I think there is a great deal of force in what hon. gentlemen from Manitoba and the North-West have been contending for. A fair case has been made out for the reduction of the preemption claim in the case of actual settlers. There is no doubt whatever that, from various causes, the settlers in Manitoba and the North-West have suffered great hardships during the preceding three or four years. In regard to the question as to whether in certain parts of the country the preemption is not too large—as to which I have my doubts, like the Minister of the Interior—having that understanding as to certain parts of the country, I believe that, in view of the fact that the Government, after having made large grants to the various local lines of railway on which $1 per acre was to be paid, have subsequently made a free gift of it to the railway companies, I think the Government might very well consider the propriety of reducing the preemption grant to a reasonable amount, say $1 per acre, as I think was suggested by my hon. friend who has spoken on the subject. I do not think we will be the losers from that in the long run. I may say, what I have seen myself in the case of a very large proportion of the settlers, that it is utterly out of their power to pay $2 or $2.50 for the additional 160 acres. I know there are difficulties, and, therefore, it might be well for the Minister of the Interior to consider them, and possibly within three or four days he might announce what the policy of the Government was upon the question.

Mr. DALY. Although I suggested to the hon. Minister of the Interior to reduce the preemptions to $1 per acre, I do not agree altogether with my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Perley) as to the 320 acres being necessary. It may be so in his own district, but I find that a great many settlers have willingly abandoned their preemptions, because they did not want to work them; but if the Government reduce the price to $1 per acre, then a man who wants the other 160 acres will be able to get it at a reasonable price. But the price of $2.50, as at present, is practically an embargo upon the general run of farmers there obtaining their preemptions. But I am satisfied, with my experience, that a great number of people are satisfied with 160 acres. The extra preemption of 160 has acted in the past as a sort of premium upon improvidence, because a great number of men have mortgaged their farms for the purpose of paying the preemption, and now they have to pay interest upon the extra $400; whereas, if they had not had the preemption it would not have been necessary for them to have borrowed the $400. Therefore, I think, it would be well for the Minister to take this matter seriously into consideration, and to reduce the price of the preemption to $1, and then any person who wants more than 320 acres can get it at a reasonable figure.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I would say, with regard to the suggestion made by my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Daly), that I quite concur in it, and I will substitute the words "habitable house" for the words "substantial house."

The CHAIRMAN. We are on clause 2 yet.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I thought we adopted that long ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman has not declared it, although I did permit hon. gentlemen to stray away from the clause without calling them to order.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I would like to call your attention to the fact that in Committee of the Whole, the discussion is much more restricted in reality, except as to the number of times we can speak, than it is in the House. We go into the committee to consider the clauses one by one. Now, we have been discussing a great many questions—they are very interesting, but certainly the discussion has had no relation whatever to the 2d clause, which I supposed we adopted some time ago. The 2d clause simply requires the homesteader to state under which plan he proposes to make the entry, that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. With regard to the remarks of the Minister of the Interior, I may say that I do not think it would expedite the passage of a Bill were I to call a member to order at every moment he may stray from the exact clause which is under discussion. I think we generally give some latitude—at all events, it has been my habit hitherto not strictly to call an hon. member back to the particular clause under discussion, if he has for a moment overstepped it.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Of course my suggestion was not intended in the slightest degree to restrict the discussion, but I was astonished that we were actually discussing the details of a clause, and suggesting amendments in the wording of a clause, which was not before the committee at all.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought of calling attention to it at the time, but there was only one hon. member who digressed from the clause.

Mr. DALY. I certainly thought we were discussing clause 3.

On section 3,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I would suggest that the word "substantial" be changed to the word "habitable," in the 39th line of the 3rd clause. As to the other suggestion made by my hon. friend, that means that the perfecting of the entry is made by the erection of a house. Now, I think that it is not unreasonable to say that the man who erects the house shall live in it. That is what I propose here. With regard to this question of the dry or fallen timber, that was brought to my notice when I was in the North-West, and we adopted the plan of reducing the charge very materially—I think it is now only ten cents per cord, speaking from memory.

An hon. MEMBER. Fifteen cents.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell)—10 or 15 cents for fallen timber, with a view of inducing settlers to get that fallen timber out for purposes of fuel. When I was in the North-West I discussed the timber question at great length with settlers all over the country, and they all recognised the principle that if fallen timber can be taken for nothing, there will be a great deal of fallen timber. That will be the practical result. It is very easy to make fallen timber. One man goes in and cuts the timber down, and another man goes in and takes it out as fallen timber. So far as dry timber is concerned, with a view of inducing persons to take that out, we reduced the price on it.

Mr. DALY.

Mr. CHARLTON. To what extent?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think it is 15 cents a cord. Then as to the question of cancelled homesteads. The 80 acres as homestead, and the 80 acres as preemption, was the rule for awhile. We have adopted the principle now of treating cancelled homesteads exactly like any other homestead, with this exception: that a person entering for a cancelled homestead is required, of course, to pay for the improvements that are made upon it, the price of which goes either to the Government or to the homesteader, after paying any municipal taxes which may be due. He gets the land exactly on the same terms as the original homesteader, except that he pays any additional inspection fee. We have now found our system of homestead inspection there to be a great advantage to the settler. A person entering for a cancelled homestead pays the additional fee of $10 on entry, as an inspection fee; so that the principle of 80 acres and 80 acres has been abandoned. I may say, further, that these special restrictions with regard to entry upon cancelled homesteads, were the result of strong pressure by the settlers themselves. During the boom period they complained very bitterly; people went round jumping claims, and they urged upon the Government in the strongest way to make it difficult to enter upon a cancelled homestead, so as to lessen, at any rate, the inducements to jump claims. In obedience to that strong demand the Department adopted the plan of charging an extra price for the preemption, the amount being the difference between the ordinary and extra price to be paid in advance at the time of making the entry. In some cases where that land was supposed to be exceptionally good, or where the settler only wanted 160 acres, the settler was made to take 80 acres homestead and 80 acres preemption. As a matter of fact in the United States, within the railway belt, which may be considered as being somewhat analogous to cancelled homesteads with us, because it is held to be a settled district, the settler only gets 80 acres free. We give 160 acres everywhere now. I think that plan is much the better one. As regards the suggestion made with respect to giving the preference to a member of the family, I think that the homesteader has that matter very much in his own hands. He has to abandon the preemption, but his son, brother or friend whom he may desire to have near him makes the entry practically at the same time, so he has really the matter in his own hands. It would never do to insert in an Act of Parliament a preference in favor of certain individuals. With respect to the remarks of the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Perley) as to tree culture, I would say this: There has been a change of Government in the United States recently, and the new Secretary of the Interior, unconcerned by what had been done by his predecessor, has criticised the policy of the Department with very great freedom. If my hon. friend will read the reports recently issued, and especially those portions that refer to the experience of the United States with regard to tree culture, I think he will agree with me that we would act wisely not to follow it, for no greater source of fraud has existed in connection with settlement in the United States than the system of tree culture. That has been the result, as exposed in the recent report of the Secretary of the Interior of the United States. I may say further, that from those reports one gets a very different impression, not only of the law in the United States, but of the administration of the law and the practical results of that administration, from what we had before we obtained the advantage of having an entirely new hand at the broom, if I may use the expression, undeterred by the acts of his predecessor in office.

Mr. DAVIN. I understand that the question of 80 and 80 acres is settled.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. I also understand that the question of cancelled homesteads is also settled.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes; that is settled departmentally.

Mr. DAVIN. I must say that all the evidence which I have had is to the effect that in the country from whence I come no farmer can do with less than 320 acres. Would the Minister of the Interior not find it better to substitute in line nine of sub-clause five of clause three, "twelve" for "six." It would ease the settler very much if he were allowed twelve months instead of six months to make the payment, for the latter is a very short time to give him. He will have considerable difficulty now, even with the prospect of a very abundant harvest this year, for he will have to make up leeway. If the Minister will grant twelve months instead of six, it will be a great advantage.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That would be contrary to our present law. The ordinary homesteader has six months to perfect his entry; we propose to give the settler the same time in this case. I would remind the hon. gentleman that we have adopted the words "habitable house," and, therefore, there should be no difficulty about the matter. A settler can put up a habitable house in one week or two weeks, and after he has made his entry at the land office he should go on the land at once.

Mr. WATSON. I think that as the Minister has made that change with respect to habitable house, it will be necessary to reduce the amount of permanent improvements required on the land before he perfects his entry.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No.

Mr. WATSON. I say, yes; because cultivation of the land is not considered permanent improvements. They have to be in the shape of house or buildings on the land. The amount should be reduced from $2.50 per acre, that is $400 per quarter-section. It should be placed at the very outside at $2, making $320. I feel the Minister should adopt the principle of allowing a homesteader to homestead his preemption as a second homestead. I propose that a homesteader be allowed to make a second homestead on his pre-emption at similar conditions to a person who homesteads any preemption. The hon. gentleman has stated in answer to the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) that any farmer with grown-up sons can take advantage of his family being the first on hand to take a preemption for a homestead. There are, however, very many settlers who would wish to acquire 320 acres in the family who have not sons of age, and they will be deprived of that privilege. I move that the clause be amended so as to provide that a homesteader who is entitled to a patent for his homestead be entitled to enter upon his preemption as a second homestead on similar conditions as provided in this Bill as in the case of a person homesteading a cancelled preemption.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). This simply means giving 320 acres instead of 160. If this amendment were adopted by the committee, I would feel it necessary to withdraw the Bill. I will not discuss the question, because it has been discussed many times previously.

Mr. WATSON. I would regret the withdrawal of the Bill. But the hon. Minister practically admits the point when he says that any man having an original homestead can go to the land office, and when he abandons his preemption any member of the family can take it up. This is unfair; because a large number of settlers cannot avail themselves of the opportunity. This is not giving a homestead of 320 acres, because the homesteader has to fulfil certain duties on his original homestead. When he acquires the patent for the land he can do what he pleases, and the Government have no more control over him. If he sees fit to take up his preemption as a second homestead he has got to reside upon it for three years, and have improvements according to this Bill—permanent improvements to the value of at least $400. I maintain that the settler in that country, who resides on his preemption and puts on $400 worth of permanent improvements, is worth more to the country than the $400 received for the land by the speculator, who holds the land for speculative purposes and does not cultivate it at all.

Mr. DALY. I agree with what has been said by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), with regard to the improvements amounting to $2.50 per acre. Will the Minister seriously consider the question of reducing the value of these improvements? How will he arrive at the permanent improvements? Will he take the cultivated and improved land?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Certainly.

Mr. DALY. I think it would be well to define what these permanent improvements are, but if the Minister will say that the permanent improvements are to include cultivated land, I suppose we will be perfectly satisfied.

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Of course I mean that.

Mr. DALY. It has not been so held before.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). It will require a man to have a good deal of money to go into the country, maintain his family and make improvements to the value of $400 in the time allowed for them. That country is supposed to be the home of poor men, but a man cannot go into that country, to-day, under the present law, with less than a thousand dollars, and remain three years and cultivate the land as he should cultivate it. Many people have not got that much money, and the result is, as has been said before, that they are mortgaging their land; the loan companies are going in and mortgaging the land to help the people out. I think this would be too heavy a tax upon the settler. If a man is living there, if he has built a house and is working away, you are exacting too much when you ask him to plough forty acres and build a house and barn. I quite agree that a less sum should be required.

Mr. DALY. I regret that the Minister says he is going to withdraw the Bill if we force this amendment, because there are certain other conditions in the Bill which I must say I would like to see become law. If the Minister is going to withdraw the Bill, it places us in an awkward position.

Amendment (Mr. Watson) negatived.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Though my idea was that the settler should have a better house than hon. gentlemen think he should have, I am willing to make the amount for improvements $1.50 per acre, instead of $2.50.

Mr. WATSON. I am glad the Minister has adopted the change, because without it there would have been a great deal of trouble. It would be very questionable how much improvement it would mean. This will mean for fences and buildings, I suppose?

Mr. DALY. And cultivation?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did I understand the Minister of the Interior to say that he would take into consideration the question of a reduction of the price of pre-emption?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I have been considering that subject for the last eighteen months, but the longer I consider it the more I am convinced that we should not reduce the price.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think that, although, perhaps, the Minister would not be warranted in reducing the price to $1, he might reduce it to $1.25, which is the price for similar land in the United States.

Mr. WATSON. I hope that if the Minister does not see his way of his own accord, a majority of the House would be in favor of reducing the price of pre-emptions. We now know from the census taken in Manitoba and the North-West that we have not got the population we should have. There are causes for it, and one of them, I believe, is that pre-emptions are too high. The people can get land, as the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) says, south of the boundary, upon more reasonable terms than they can in Manitoba and the North-West. I say that, with all this evidence before us, the Government should make some change in the policy of the past, not only encouraging the settlers to come into that country, but to encourage the settlers who are there. It is unnecessary to repeat what I have stated before, that the settlers in different sections of the country have been disappointed, not only by the unfortunate occurrence of one or two early frosts, but in not having railways. A large number of settlers who went in and took up land, expecting to be able to pay $2.50 per acre for pre-emptions, have been waiting for six or seven years for railway communication which they have not got to-day. I saw a few days ago a resolution passed by the Local Legislature of Manitoba, setting forth the fact that a large number of settlers in the Souris district went in there seven years ago, and have been living there ever since; that they had made little or nothing because they had not railway communication. At that time, as every hon. gentleman knows, it was expected that the Manitoba South-Western would be built there. I might also refer to certain portions of my own county, such as Birtle and Shell River, where the settlers went six or seven or eight years ago. They have lived there ever since, and until a year or two ago received no railway communication. They expected to have railway communication within one or two years after locating; they expected to have the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. BOWELL. How far are the Shell River people from a railway now?

Mr. WATSON. They have it very close, but they spent their substance years ago in living in that country, and they made nothing out of their time and labor.

Mr. BOWELL. I have people in my own constituency who have been there for twenty years, and who are forty miles from a railway now.

Mr. WATSON. That is good enough for your kind of people but not for us.

Mr. BOWELL. I should be sorry to compare them with you.

Mr. WATSON. They were deprived of the accommodation which was promised to them by this Government—promised them by the means adopted by all governments of showing which particular route would be adopted by the railway. I say it would be nothing but fair that these early pioneers should be considered, and should have their pre-emptions at $1 an acre.

Mr. DALY.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No principle is involved in the fourth clause. The principle is in the Act as it stands, and the object is simply to require persons who enter for their lands on either of the plans other than the ordinary homestead, to make a declaration in accordance with that particular plan when they get entry.

Mr. CHARLTON. Now, fix the price of homesteads at $1.25 per acre?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). In the United States they are not $2.25 per acre within 20 miles of a railway; and these are all in the railway belt.

Mr. CHARLTON. This fixes the price of land south of the railway at $2.50, and north of the railway at $2. It is true that lands outside of the railway belts in the United States are $1.25; but the policy of granting lands to railways has ceased in that country, and the great bulk of the public lands of the United States are sold at $1.25 an acre; and I say the Government, in asking for the land double the price that is asked in the United States, are retarding settlement. If they adopted the policy of reducing the price one-half, what they would gain in settlement would more than compensate for what they would lose in the lower price they would get. The great difficulty with our land policy is that it is less liberal than that of the United States, and the consequence is that they get the settlers and we do not. If the hon. Minister of the Interior will take into consideration the proposal to reduce the price of pre-emptions to $1.25 per acre, he will facilitate the settlement of the country.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I need not discuss the question of reducing the price of pre-emptions just now; but my own view is that it is utterly incorrect to say that our land policy is less liberal than that of the United States. If we should put the American law on our Statute-book, the first people to cry out against it would be the representatives from the North-West.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). One important matter that we should consider is the progress of settlement in the North-West Territories. The hon. gentleman knows that it has been very much less than has been anticipated. The recent census shows that we have very many fewer settlers in Manitoba and the North-West Territories than the Government, during the past four or five years, led the House and the country to believe. It matters not how fertile the soil, how healthful the climate, how favorable the country may be for settlement, the fact is that the settlers have not gone there for some reason or other. Of course any rule adopted with regard to the price of the land need not be like the law of the Medes and Persians, unalterable; but, looking at the present condition of things, and at the failure of everything the Government have hitherto done to open up the country, it does seem to me that it is necessary that the further steps suggested by the hon. member for North Norfolk should be taken to reduce the price of the lands. There is no doubt that if such a reduction were made, and facilities were furnished for the continuous settlement of any considerable extent of territory, the Government would be very much more successful than they have hitherto been. According to the statement in the report of the Minister of Agriculture, more than 100,000 who went into that country for the purpose of settlement have not remained there, but have crossed the border since 1881. That means that more than 50 per cent. of those who have gone there have failed to remain. They are not satisfied. They have become settlers on the south side of the line, and they are attracting immigration from the older Provinces of the Dominion. The policy of the Government with regard to the North-West has been a failure. If the Canadian Pacific Railway have cooperated with them, they have been equally unsuccessful. My impression is that the policy of the company in regard to their lands has been extremely illiberal, and that instead of promoting the settlement of the country it has retarded it. Now, we require a new departure not only on the part of the Government, but on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and that is an important fact for the hon. gentleman to bear in mind. He should bear it in mind that the rates and charges upon freights in the North-West Territories are such as to make the settler, even upon his own land, simply a tenant of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. That being the case, the Government, between the rates that have been fixed, and the area of land that has been handed over to the company, have practically made the whole country the possession of that company. It is, therefore, of immense consequence to the Government, and it seems to me of immense consequence to the company, that a more liberal policy should be adopted; and it devolves upon the Government to take the initiative in that policy by reducing the price of the lands. We are not free to say that the lands are worth such a sum, and, therefore, it is reasonable that we should charge that sum. We say, as a matter of fact, that we are not securing settlers; immigrants are not going to the country; and in order to invite them it is necessary that a reduction should take place in the price of the lands. The ordinary amount collected in Customs duties per family is very much greater than the interest on the value of land that would be sold under the preemption regulations which the Government have established. If you take the ordinary contributions in the public revenue of Canada, you will see that the Government would be receiving a very much larger sum, in the form of revenue, if they had a settler on each of these locations, than they would receive if they succeeded in selling the lot at the price now fixed. As a matter of revenue it is, therefore, not in the public interest that a very high price should be fixed on these lands, but what is important is that we should secure settlers; and the policy that has hitherto been pursued, with the view of conciliating the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, has turned away the tide of immigration from that country. The public, both on this side of the Atlantic and on the other, have, in some measure, lost confidence in the country—not in its fertility or in its fitness for settlement, but in its management. Why, Sir, I think it was not more than three years ago that Mr. Dyke, who was acting as the Government agent at Liverpool, informed the Minister of Railways that the number of those who were returning to England by the Allan line of steamers, dissatisfied and discontented, was greater than the number he could succeed in sending out to the North-West. Now, you would not have a greater misfortune happen the country than to have a very considerable number of people leave the country and go back to Europe, and say it has been managed in such a way that it is utterly impossible to live there; that, between the regulations made by the Government and the extortionate charges made by the Canadian Pacific Railway, they might as well starve in the poor-house in England as be stripped of all the fruits of their industry by their settlement in the North-West Territories. I say that that those were the representations made. Hon. gentlemen on that side have, again and again, said that we, on this side, extolled Dakota, Kansas and Texas, and sought to turn immigration from the North-West Territories to that country. Now, that is not the case. What has been done by the policy of the Government is to produce dissatisfaction and discontent amongst the settlers. I am satisfied that if the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Government were to cooperate and adopt a large and liberal policy towards the settlers, the revenues would be more prosperous, and the Canadian Pacific Railway would be very much more largely benefited than by the policy hitherto pursued. It seems to me that the proposition of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) is a reasonable one, and when the Government find that settlers are going in the direction of the North-West Territory, and taking up land there, it is easy for the Government to increase the prices of those lands if they think it expedient to do so. But the most important thing, the thing it is expedient for this country beyond all others to do, is to secure settlers, and in order to do that, the land policy must be such as to commend itself to those who go into the country. Let the Government suit their policy to the settlers, let the settlers be contented, and you will have the best advertisement in favor of settlement and immigration that possibly can be had.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I do not agree with the last speaker. I am satisfied no blame is to be attached to the policy of the Government with reference to land regulations in any respect. If every farmer had as good a crop as he had anticipated, the land policy of the Government would be all right and satisfactory. It is not on account of that policy being wrong, but because of misfortunes, through bad seasons, that I claim the Government should consider the settlers on this occasion.

Mr. CLAYES. It seems to me to be a great mistake on the part of the Government not to listen with an open ear to these gentlemen from the North-West. We should be guided by the experience of the people south of us, in the country lying west of the 100th meridian. It is a region of country so dry that successful agriculture is absolutely impossible, except where they can irrigate the soil. It is a country where the people are very successful in their pastures, but they must have about 10 acres to each animal. In our central and eastern Provinces we are successful, where the land is good, with only one or two acres for each animal. Out there, the cows are starved to death, unless you give an average of 10 acres to a cow. That is the experience of the United States in that country, all the way from the Gulf of Mexico through Texas, the Indian Territory, Kansas, Nebraska and Dakota. In initiating a policy looking to the settlement of the North-West, it strikes me if we make a mistake, we had better make it on the right side. We had better err on the side of generosity than on the side of being small and denying to the people what they deem, as the result of their experience, is essential to the country's prosperity and settlement. The last speaker referred to the fact that the settlement thus far has been unsuccessful. That is the result of some cause, and no one has attempted to point out the cause. It lies, no doubt, somewhere in the fact that the obstacles, taking them as a whole, have been sufficient to induce people to leave the country, who had settled there and been disappointed. The only way, if we cannot find just where the fault lies, is to act in every department, and in every particular, on the principle that the country is absolutely valueless unless we can cover it with thrifty, intelligent, industrious people. Hence, I sincerely hope the Government will take the ground that it is better, if they err at all, to err on the side of extreme generosity, and act in harmony with the wishes of the people in the North-West.

Mr. DALY. I did not think this discussion would take the wide range it has, but since the hon. member for Bothwell has got up, not with the idea of furthering our interest or the suggestion made by hon. gentlemen opposite to give us our preemption at $1 an acre, but for the purpose of having a slap at the Government, I am not going to sit here and quietly hear that gentleman say the land laws of the United States are more liberal than ours. A young man may come to our country and get a homestead entry at 19 years of age, without being asked to forswear his allegiance to his native country and take the oath of allegiance to the Queen. In the United States, he has to be 21 years of age before he can get a homestead entry, and he must then take the oath of allegiance to the President of the United States. He has, further, to put in five years upon the homestead before getting his patent, whereas all we ask of him is to reside on the land six months a year for three years, at the end of which time he goes to a land office and gets out his patent, on the evidence of a couple of his neighbors who swear that he has performed his duties. In the United States, on the contrary, the settler has to publish during five weeks in a newspaper his application for his patent, he has to employ an attorney at a cost at from $35 to $40 for the purpose of getting the patent. I do not want to take up the time of the House, but when an hon. gentleman gets up and says that the land laws of the Dominion are not as liberal as those of the United States, I tell him he states what is not the fact. When the hon. gentleman condemns the land laws of this country, he is condemning his own legislation, because they are based on the legislation of the hon. gentleman when he was Minister of the Interior. It was he who introduced the land law upon which the present law is based, and in which changes have been made for its improvement. As the country advanced, year by year, changes, of course, required to be made in the administration of the land law, and although we have not been as successful as we hoped in settling the country, no blame is to be attached to the Government in reference to their land administration. Their land law is more than liberal, and the fact that the Minister of the Interior is now giving us what we have been asking for, that is to give settlers the right to homestead abandoned preemptions, is an advance in the liberal policy that the hon. gentleman has extended to us ever since he has occupied his present position. However much we regret our country had not advanced as it should, it does not lie in the mouth of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) to attack the land policy of the Government. He speaks of our having lost 100,000 immigrants. I say we have not lost that number, but there is a difference between the immigration return and the census return. When he says young men and others go to the old country and condemn our country, he must know there are men who would never be satisfied in Manitoba, the United States, or anywhere else. There are grumblers everywhere. There are young men coming out here every year. They are very often good fellows, highly educated, but they come out here with the idea that they are going to make a fortune out of farming. They take up their homestead and preemption, and perform their duties, generally in a very perfunctory manner, but still they perform them sufficiently to get their patent; and as soon as they get their patent, they put a mortgage on their homestead and preemption, put the money in their pocket and have a good time, or go back to England, or become members of the Mounted Police. These are the men who go home and condemn our land laws, but the men who come up to Manitoba to make a home for themselves, the farmer and the farm laborer who came out in that way, are succeeding and remaining in the country, and you can find men there who arrived with only four or five dollars in their pocket, and have made a home for themselves and have remained there. I will not allow the remarks of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) to go uncontradicted, when he says that the Government are to blame on account of their land policy.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I made no reference to the land laws of the United States. I made no comparison between the land laws of Canada and the land laws of the United States. The hon. gentleman has made a speech based wholly on his imagination, and not on any observations which I made to the House. I pointed out that the expectations of the Government have not been realised. I pointed out that the expectations they led the country to form have not been realised. I pointed out that the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. DALY.

culture represented the immigration to the North-West Territories and Manitoba as being more than 100,000 beyond what it really was; and I pointed out that if we are to believe that these statistics are at all reliable, more than 100,000 of those he represented as going to the North-West Territories must have crossed the border. When the hon. gentleman says that these people are satisfied, that everything in the North-West is blissful, that everything is excellent, that the laws are more liberal than in any other portion of the world, we may ask what are the people complaining of? Why were these meetings called there? Why do these deputations come down from Manitoba? And how is it that the hon. gentleman, slave as he has been in supporting the Administration, has been himself obliged to vote against the policy of the Government? The hon. gentleman admitted himself that he had given a pledge to his constituents that if he came here he would oppose the policy of the Government on a question which was vital, on a question which in their estimation the whole prosperity and the whole progress of the North-West Territories depend. I addressed myself to the committee as moderately as I could. It did not seem to me that I was engaged in attacking the policy of the Government. I was simply pointing out the fact that there was a very small number of inhabitants in the North-West, country when we were all anxious to have a large population there, and to turn the currents of immigration which flow across the Atlantic into that country, to secure settlement there, and to secure a population which would in some degree share the very large burdens we had ourselves incurred on behalf of that country. I pointed out that the expectations formed by the Government and those which they led the House to form, had not been realised, and that it was necessary that some modification or change should take place in order to secure settlers for that country. It seemed to me that the first step to be taken was the reduction of the price of lands, and that, whether it was a fair valuation or not at the present time, the vast majority of people who are seeking homes in this country are somehow or other under the impression that that country is not so desirable as other portions of this continent which are open for occupation and settlement. That is a condition of things which the Government are bound to face, that is a condition of things which it is perfect folly on our part to ignore, and no speech made by the hon. gentleman or by anyone else, whether on that side of the House or on this, can alter the facts. The hon. gentleman may say the policy of the Government is wise, that it is statesmanlike, that it is far more liberal than the policy adopted to the south, but this fact remains: that the people south of the boundary have succeeded in securing the occupation and settlement of their country and that we have not; and, if they have made a more illiberal policy than we have, let us adopt that illiberal policy. Whether it is liberal or illiberal, wise or unwise, let us adopt a policy which will secure immigration into that country. Our present policy has not had that effect.

Mr. MULOCK. I think it is unfortunate that a mere question of administration such as this should be prejudiced by the introduction in the slightest respect of party considerations. We have a vast estate in the North-West, and it is to the common interest of the country that a wise course should be adopted for the settlement of this estate, without settlement it is no more valuable to the Dominion than a treasure hundreds of feet below the surface of the soil and beyond the reach of man. I admire the energy of my hon. friend and old companion, the member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly), in his desire to look after the interests of the North-West, and I can excuse him if, in his discussion of the interests of the North-West, he should to some extent introduce what struck me as a somewhat unfortunate reference to party politics. I am satisfied that with more experience he will have more control over his arguments, and I exonerate him from any desire to prejudice the cause he is so desirous to promote. I do not desire to uncharitably criticise him when I say that he wandered somewhat from the subject by suggesting that there was some party advantage or disadvantage growing out of it. I have observed, in my brief experience as a member of Parliament, that there is a constant desire on the part of some hon. gentlemen to excuse themselves by pleading that their opponents did equally badly on former occasions. That does not commend itself to my mind as sound argument. We have just gone through a general election, and I think that if a statute of limitations is to be attached to anything, it might well be attached to political shortcomings. It is my desire in my political life, short or long as it may be, to commence with a general election and to hold a government responsible for its actions until the next time of trial arrives. So, while I have had occasion in past times to disagree with the land policy of the Government in the North-West, I want now to help them to form a good policy for the future; I want to aid them as far as I can in settling the North-West with a thrifty people. The North-West will be of no value to the Dominion, it will produce no return for the capital invested in it, in fact it will be a vast source of weakness to the Dominion, unless by a combined policy, the wisdom of Parliament can succeed in populating it with a population that will be a source of strength to us. I hope, therefore, that, in regard to the settlement of the North-West, which is the great hope of the Dominion, all parties will endeavor to bring to bear an unbounded judgment, with the common object in view to arrive at the best and the wisest business policy to settle the North-West in the common interest of us all. I do not profess to be wise enough to make a suggestion in that regard, but it has occurred to me—perhaps I am entirely wrong in it—that the restrictions might rather be directed against alienation than against occupation, or preemption, or pre-occupation. Of course, the Government has to endeavor to guard against the speculative settler, the man who, taking advantage of the regulations, obtains possession, or the right of possession, of land, but does not intend to become a bonâ fide settler. Now, it occurs to me that such a character as that can be detected in his object by provisions not giving him the control of land except for the purpose of encumbering it for improvements, and to give the settler who is in possession, or any person who had the right to land, the full right to charge it by mortgage or otherwise, provided that the money so raised upon it went to the improvement of the land. In that case, whilst he has, to a certain extent, the power of alienation, the land gets the benefit of the alienation of the mortgage, and not the individual. Therefore, I think, that whilst the utmost liberality might be extended towards the persons who take up either small or large quantities of land, the proper place to impose restrictions is against speculative alienation.

Mr. CHARLTON. The member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) and the hon. the Minister of the Interior have distinctly taken the ground that our land policy is of the most liberal character possible, that it is a more liberal policy than that of our great competitor, the United States, in securing immigration. Now, I wish briefly to mention some of the points in which our policy is more illiberal than the policy of the United States; and my object is to endeavor to induce the Government to adopt a policy that will conduce to our own interests by promoting the settlement of our land. The first point in which our policy is more illiberal than that of our neighbors is because we restrict homestead settlements to certain locations, whilst the United States throw open their whole public domain to homestead settlement. The homestead settler can settle upon Government land wherever he pleases. The settlers can go in communities, they can take up whole townships, they can take up any amount of land they may be able to find; and for that reason the policy of the United States is considered by settlers to be vastly more attractive and liberal than our own.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). They can only take up 160 acres.

Mr. CHARLTON. But they can take just as many 160 acres as they can find contiguous to each other, even if they extend over the whole county. Their policy is more liberal than ours, in the second place, because while we charge $2.50 per acre for all the public lands south of the Canadian Pacific Railway, without any reference to their location, without any reference to the question as to whether they may be within the railway belt or not, the United States Government charges $2.50 only for the lands within their railway grants; all lands outside the railway grant, wherever situated, are sold at $1.25 an acre. While we charge for our public lands north of the Pacific Railway, as far north as you may choose to go, $2 per acre, the United States charge $1.25. In one case we charge the settler double the price charged in the United States, and in the other case we charge him 75 cents per acre more. Now, these are the two important points. The Minister of the Interior may point out that in the details of the homestead law, with regard to the number of years the homestead settler shall have in which to perfect title, with regard to the settlement duties, and with regard to various other points, he may claim that in these points our policy is more liberal than that of the United States. But that is a matter that does not have any bearing upon the great question at issue. The point that strikes a settler who is intending to move into a new country, whether in United States or in our North-West, is, first of all, the character of the homestead regulations, and as to where he may get homestead lands. The second point that strikes him is as to the price of the public lands that he may choose to buy. If he finds that he can buy public lands in Dakota or Minnesota, or Montana, or any other part of the United States, at $1.25 an acre, while he would be charged $2.50 in the Canadian North West, evidently he will choose to purchase in the United States, especially when he takes into consideration the additional fact that advantages in that country are greater with regard to markets and prices in general, than they are in the North West; and I say in that case, nine settlers out of ten will choose to pay the $1.25 in place of coming to Canada and paying $2.50 per acre. In this great essential point the policy of the United States is more liberal than ours, and it is for that reason chiefly, as I firmly believe, that we have failed in our endeavors to people the North-West. I think that these considerations ought to have great weight with the Government. If they sincerely desire to settle the North-West they must make our public land policy as liberal as that of the United States, or they must wait until the public lands of the United States are all settled and the population begins to overflow upon ours. I may add—and it is a matter for great regret to find that it is the case, that members from the North-West who come here charged with the duty of looking after the interests of their constituents, drift immediately into a partisan position; and as soon as a position is taken against the policy of the Government with regard to the North-West in any particular, these men will at once commence to denounce the Opposition and assert that the land policy of our Government is all that can be desired, that nothing could be suggested in the shape of reform or amendment to our laws. Now, I quite concur with the sentiment expressed by my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock), that we ought not to approach this subject in a partisan sense, that it is a business matter, and every man in this country is interested in having the North-West settled. Every man is interested in having Canada become great and prosperous, and the question is, by what means, by what laws, shall we arrive at that desired result? I say it is not by the terms that we have hitherto adopted towards intending settlers in that country, when our only competitor for the same settlers offers more liberal terms. For that reason it is the duty of the Government to look at this question in a broad spirit of fairness and liberality, so that the Canadian North-West may offer as great, if not greater, inducements than the United States offer to the same settlers.

Mr. ROSS. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), in comparing our land laws with those of the United States, has omitted to mention a point in which our laws are more favorable than those of the United States, while endeavoring to create the impression they were less favorable, and that is that the public domain in the United States is outside the railway belt, and not all over, as he would lead us to infer. He does not mention that fact. Inside the railway belt the settler cannot take up every section.

Mr. CHARLTON. I mentioned that.

Mr. ROSS. Within the railway belts he can only take up every alternate section. Now, in the State of Dakota to which he refers, the Northern Pacific has a belt 100 miles wide, 50 miles on each side of the railway, and that belt runs across the State of Dakota. And then there is the reserve along the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway. But in Manitoba a settler can take up land wherever he pleases, that is any even-numbered section. In Dakota, he can only take up alternate sections within the railway belt, but once outside those railway belts he can take any section he sees fit. That is one point of difference. But then there are various other points of difference that ought to be mentioned. The most important particular for a settler coming into the country, either in the United States or Canada, is this: Can he get free lands?—the question is not as to the price—but can he get free lands, and can he get those free lands near a railway? Now, in the North-West, he can get free lands right up to the railway by homesteading; whereas, in the United States, he can only get every alternate section, and hence no advantage over our policy; but when he goes outside the railway belt in the United States, then he can take up every section. Then there are various other points in which the land laws in our Territories are much more liberal than they are in the United States, taking them as a whole, as I have pointed out on several occasions. The hon. member for North Norfolk would do well to look at these matters and compare our laws with those of the United States, and read them, and if he does, he cannot but come to the conclusion that our laws are much more liberal in all respects, except the two which he referred to, and one of these is modified, as I have explained, and even these have very little to do with the final result, as I have pointed out. But, Sir, it is not the character of our land laws that has kept back settlers from coming to the North-West. We have had four bad harvests, and we have not had fifty millions of people to fall back upon for immigration; we have not had an immigration machinery that has been in operation for fifty or one hundred years. We may say that we have only just started our immigration agency, and although it has not been upon a large and expensive scale, hon. gentlemen opposite say we should cut it down altogether, and that we should let the people come in whenever they see fit, that we should make no effort whatever to induce people to come into our country. In my opinion, the great fault of the Government, the great defect in their policy, is the very small amount of money expended in bringing immigrants to this country, and in their whole immigration policy. I say that the policy is bad of continually misrepresenting our land laws, and I would bear out the statement of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) in that respect; I think he is perfectly right in feeling annoyed at the statements being continually made on the opposite side of the House, that our land laws are less liberal than those of the United States.

Mr. CHARLTON.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. CHARLTON. When you left the Chair I had risen to make an explanation, and to assume the task of defending the North-West from the aspersions and attacks of its own members. I have no desire to prolong this debate, and I will be very brief in the remarks I intend to address to the committee; and I don't think I need to offer an excuse as there has been no subject under consideration this Session of more importance than this is. No subject could engage the attention of this House possessing greater importance than that as how best to promote the settlement and prosperity of our great Canadian North-West. The task of defending that country I never supposed would fall upon my shoulders, but when I listened this afternoon to the aspersions cast upon it by the members sent by the constituencies of that country to this House, when I heard it stated by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) that there had been four successive failures of harvest in that country; when I heard the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Perley) tell us that the difficulty with that country was not the character of the Government's land policy, but the country failed to settle in consequence of the character of the country itself, and in consequence of frost and drought; when we are told that it took 10 acres to pasture a cow; when the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) also told us that the settlers of that country labored under great disadvantages in consequence of its climate, &c., I feel called upon to say that I consider the course pursued by those hon. members in seeking to justify the Government, in seeking to defend the land policy of the Government, by attributing the failure to settle the North-West, not to their obviously defective policy, but to the faults in the country itself, a most unpatriotic piece of conduct on the part of these gentlemen. We, on this side of the House, have often been assailed as lacking patriotism when we have alluded to any defects in the North-West; but no member on this side of the House has ever given the North-West such a character as it has received to-day from its own representatives. I do not believe those hon. gentlemen have done justice to their country. I passed through the North-West twice last year, and from the time I left Winnipeg, proceeding westward, I was struck by the analogy between the appearance of that country then and the appearance of the great prairies of Illinois and Iowa when I visited them in 1856 when they were in a state of nature. As we passed along, although I saw some alkali land, some sandy lands, and sand dunes, and worthless land, yet my impression was that we have there stretches of hundreds of miles of very fertile country. When I saw the buffalo ranges near Calgary, with broad paths sinking into the sod five or six inches in depth and remaining for years after the buffalo had deserted the country, evidence of the vast herds having pastured on those ranges in years gone by, I was convinced that it was a pastoral country. When I arrived at Calgary the first agricultural fair in the North-West was in progress, and if I had any doubt before as to the agricultural capacity of that country, they were removed by what I saw there. I saw at that fair specimens of grain, of wheat raised at Fort McLeod, at Calgary and as far north as Edmonton—wheat of the very best quality, No. 1 hard wheat, oats weighing forty-eight pounds to the bushel, rye of the very best quality, and peas—and from what I could learn, I believe there is no country where finer peas can be grown; potatoes a foot in length, turnips, beets, cabbages, pumpkins of enormous size, cauliflowers of the finest quality, with heads like masses of snow, one foot or 14 inches across; and celery, all giving indications of agricultural capacity which go to convince, and I was convinced that the North-West was a great agricultural country. Besides delivering a speech there, I had time to talk to some of the old settlers. I met one very interesting old gentleman named Mr. Livingstone, who had been in the country for twenty years, and he did not tell me that he had had four successful failures of his crops, but he told me that out of twenty crops on his ranche near Calgary—

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). We are not speaking of Calgary.

Mr. CHARLTON. We are talking of the whole North-West from Winnipeg to Calgary and from the American boundary to Peace River. Mr. Livingstone told me that out of twenty crops he obtained nineteen good crops. I was particularly interested to know as to whether tame grasses had been tried there, in order to ascertain whether it took really ten acres to pasture one cow. Mr. Livingstone told me he had made the experiment, that two years before he had burnt over forty acres of the prairie and had sown timothy seed and harrowed it in. The first year's growth was not very liberal, but he informed me that last year, the second year, he cut on those 40 acres 85 tons of hay. I judge, therefore, that that country is capable of pasturing more than one cow for ten acres. I saw in the hands of the Rev. Mr. Brick, of Dunvegan, Peace River, specimens of all kinds of grain. I heard that gentleman give an account of that country, and it is evident that as far north as the Peace River valley we have a vast agricultural region with enormous capacity. I believe the North-West from the Red River, to Calgary, to the Rockies, and extending from the American boundary to the Peace River, is a country capable of supporting scores of millions of people. I believe it is to be the heart of Confederation, the backbone of this country, and we want to make it attractive to settlers. I believe we are losing time in allowing the United States to take the settlers, and it is the duty of the Government to see that we offer to those men liberal terms of settlement. We need not haggle with them. I believe in opening the whole country for homestead settlement, as the United States is open for homestead settlement. Bring in the settlers; as to what we should receive for the land, whether $1.25 or $2.50, is a subject not worthy of one moment's consideration. We want the settlers to occupy the country and to increase our revenue from Customs and other sources. We want to approach the consideration of this question not in that miserable partisan spirit that prompted the members from the North-West to justify the Government at any cost and that lead them to lick the hand that applied the rod; we do not want to consider the question in that way, but from a national standpoint in regard to the benefit to be conferred on the country. If we do so we will make our land law and our homestead law as liberal as that of the United States; we will offer our lands as cheap as those of the United States.

One word with respect to the position taken by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) with respect to the comparison that I made between our land laws and land regulations and homestead regulations, and those of the country that is our competitor for settlers. The hon. gentleman sought to misrepresent me—I shall not say intentionally—but what he said was calculated to convey a false impression as to the position I took. He, in effect, said that I denied or concealed the fact that the American Government had made land grants to railways, and that within the railway belt they had not alternate sections to offer. What I said was that the United States Government offered its land, not all the land, but all its land; not the lands granted the railways, not the lands sold to individuals, not land granted to the homesteader, not the land that had been ceded, but that it offered all its land for homestead, not as we do, in 32 allotments of 160 acres in each township, but all its land for homestead wherever situated. I said that outside of their railway grants these lands are offered for sale at $1.25 per acre, while we charge $2.50 per acre south, and $2 per acre north, of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I pointed out that the inducements offered to the settler are greater in the United States than they are here; and as an evidence of the liberal spirit which actuates the American Government, I pointed out that the United States House of Representatives, two or three sessions ago, passed a law that no more public lands should be sold, but that all the public lands of the United States should be reserved for homestead settlement, and not offered for sale at all. That law, which passed the House of Representatives, did not receive the sanction of the Senate, but it shows the liberal spirit manifested in the country towards the settler; and I reiterate what I have said before, that with the lands in the United States, outside the railway belt, offered at one-half the price that we ask for the corresponding land in the North-West, with the whole public domain there thrown open to homestead settlement, while we offer but 32 allotments in each township, the inevitable and natural result must follow; and that result is that while there are nearly half a million people in Dakota, there are only about one-third that number in Manitoba and the North-West Territories. I approached the discussion on this subject—and I offer no excuse for opening it—in the hope that such a course would be taken as will promote the settlement of the North-West, and in doing that we will promote the best interests of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. McDOWALL. Like the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Perley) I have not taken up much of the time of this House, because this is the first time I have addressed it. A challenge has been thrown out in the most direct manner by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, to the members from the North-West Territory, whom he has accused of not attending to their duties and not looking after the interest of their constituents. Upon this question I am at direct issue with the hon. gentleman. I challenge him to point out any time at which I have not looked after the interests of my constituents, and I do not think that he can show that by act or word, or in any other way, I have failed to do so. I think he will find it a very difficult task indeed, to prove that my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Perley) or the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly), has not looked after the interests of his constituents, or that he or any of us have neglected the responsibilities which have been cast upon us. The hon. gentleman says we should consider these questions, and this question particularly, in a cool manner; that we, as members from the North-West, should not consider them from a party standpoint at all. Who is it, I would like to know, that has made me consider these questions from such a standpoint? It was not the Dominion Government, it was not those who support the Dominion Government, but it was hon. gentlemen on that side of the House, who picked out a friend of theirs, and a friend of mine too, I am glad to say, and sent him from Prince Edward Island to contest my constituency against me in the most direct party spirit. I also assumed a party spirit, and I believe I was justified in assuming that spirit, and I believe, also, that I will be able to uphold the responsibility which has been imposed upon me, and to support the Government upon this question. I would like to say, in the first place, that some hon. gentlemen who have spoken regarding the North-West, and who have not been there very much, have overlooked one or two of the causes which are, perhaps, the principal causes that have affected the immigration to that country. The bad seasons as the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) has said, have certainly had a great deal of effect, but the bad seasons have not done everything. I do not believe myself that it is the liberal land laws, or the illiberal land laws of the Government, if you choose to call them so, that have had any effect at all. I believe that the emigrating public in the old country have not got the money to emigrate; and you have decided proof of this statement in the fact that we cannot take up a single newspaper in the old country, of whatever side of politics it may be, but is discussing the question of the Government assisting emigration. When I was in the old country last winter, I was astonished at the number of poor people who came to me and who, when I asked them why they did not emigrate, replied that if the Government would only pay the cost of emigrating they would do it, but that they had no money for that purpose themselves. This matter has become so grave in England that they are there seriously discussing the question whether or not it would be wise to assist emigration to this country. I do not believe it is the land laws at all that have retarded emigration. The bad seasons may have had something to do with it, but I believe the main cause is that the classes in the old country whom we want to get into the North-West have not money enough to emigrate. Times have been bad with them; they have lost or spent their money; they have not had work, and they have no money left to emigrate with. I believe that if times were good, and they had a little money laid by, we should have as good a chance of getting these classes of emigrants as they have in the United States. The hon. member for Montreal West (Sir Donald Smith) said that the immigration into the western States was increasing most rapidly, because they had in the eastern States a very large population to draw upon, while we in Canada have not that population. They had this population to draw upon in the eastern States when they first initiated the emigration to the west, and then they got so many people from the old country to go to the west that very naturally their friends in the old country followed them. I believe the best emigration agents we can have in the North-West are the actual settlers—those who find that they have prosperous and comfortable homes there, in spite of all the dreary pictures drawn of the North-West, and I know that there are many in that condition. I represent a district which has not had the benefit of railway communication, in fact the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway has been of the most indirect good to us; it has done us harm in some ways. We used to grow enough for our own wants in wheat, oats and barley, but wheat was the principal crop. The surplus was exported to Battleford, Fort Pitt and Edmonton, but when the Canadian Pacific was built the cheap rates of freight cut off that market from us, and yet we are still able to make a living. I do not think you can find many places in the Saskatchewan district in which an industrious man cannot make his living. I know that when I was through the country at the time of the elections, all the evidence I found was that it was the best country for poor men to settle in. This evidence was given by farmers who had settled there—not only by natives of the North-West, but men who came from the older Provinces of Canada, and others who came from the old country. The industrious, able, hard working men, the men who are not afraid of work, the men who are not farmers who sit beside the stove, the men who went out and did their work, gave that testimony—that there never was a better country in the world for the poor man. At the same time, in spite of its being a good country for the poor man, it has suffered from bad crops for the last three or four years, but I believe these are exceptional cases. It is well known that when the western States were being settled the people who emigrated there suffered in the same way. When I was in Iowa in 1878, I drove over the whole of the western part of that state. At that time the whole country was suffering from the crops being destroyed by a plague of grasshoppers, but the farmers there said that, even though they did lose a crop for the year, if they had one good crop they could pull through, and I believe that hon. gentlemen will find that when our farmers in the North-West have been able to withstand the bad seasons of four years, as they have done, and if they get a good season this year, as we all expect they will, they will come through all right, and will only want the means of carrying their crops to the markets. I believe you will find that our immigration will increase, and that settlement will go forward rapidly. But we cannot expect immigration to increase to our North-West until it begins to decrease in the western States of America, because they naturally have the first draw on the emigrating public of the Mother Country, and so many have settled in the western States because those states have had many years advance upon us. Our North-West is merely in its infancy compared with the north-western States of America; and if we only got one-fifth, or one-tenth, or an infinitesimal part of the immigration, so long as the immigration to our North-West is proportionately as great as that to the north-western States, it will be a great feather in the cap of Canada. I am a north-wester; I am proud of the north-western people, and I do not shirk my responsibility. I support the Bill of the hon. Minister of the Interior. So far as clause 45 is concerned, I can assure you that second homesteads are the worst things possible for the North-West. At the time of the boom in the North-West, we heard hon. gentlemen on the Opposition side of the House asserting that the Government were giving land to their friends to speculate upon and lock it up from actual settlement. If you wish to create another class of speculators who will lock up the lands, you will permit second homesteads. I think I can prove this from the case of two important and growing towns in the North-West—or I should say one is a city—Winnipeg and Prince Albert, which present two very different aspects. Winnipeg calls itself the great city of the North-West, and it certainly has attained to a very great position, which I hope will grow much stronger and greater. In the immediate vicinity of that city you will find a great deal of land unoccupied. This land was covered by scrip; it was sold to speculators, and it is held by speculators; and this was considered so great a drawback that a company was formed to buy up that land and sell it to settlers, so that it would be cultivated; but, unfortunately, that company came to nothing. The Secretary of the Board of Trade of Winnipeg also sent circulars to everyone who held any of the land in the vicinity of Winnipeg asking him the lowest price he would take for it, the Board of Trade considering it of such importance to have the land occupied that they offered at their own expense to try to get settlers to occupy and cultivate it. Prince Albert also, although not having the advantages of Winnipeg, and although hundreds of miles away from any railway, is a great and thriving town in the midst of a magnificent farming district, and unlike Winnipeg, the farms of the district come right up to the very doors of the town. But supposing you permitted second homestead entries, the settlers, knowing that if the town of Prince Albert becomes the great centre that we who live there believe it will become, their lands will become very valuable, would leave them, with the small improvements they have made, and take up second homesteads at a greater distance from the town. Thus we would have at Prince Albert the same difficulty that Winnipeg has to-day. Instead of thriving farms, well cultivated and well stocked, we would have land lying vacant and barren, simply because another class of speculators had been created. Now, I do not altogether agree with the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) that a very great injury will be done unless this clause 45 is altered to permit a second homestead to everyone who made his entry on the 2nd of June, 1886, instead of on the 2nd of June, 1883. I believe this clause as it stands will satisfy most of the people in the North-West, and I trust that if there should be any case of hardship, every member of this House, on whatever side he sits, will support the hon. Minister of the Interior in meeting such a case. I know that in introducing any new system, we cannot expect to benefit the general public without doing some injury to a few; and if a few are injured in this case, I have no doubt their cases could be provided for by means of an Order in Council. But we ought to oppose the creation of a second class of speculators by means of second homesteads, which would be totally inconsistent with the principle of the Dominion Lands Act. The principle of that Act, as I take it, is that the Dominion Government offer lands to actual settlers who will come into the country and make it their home, and by doing that contribute to the wealth and prosperity of the country. But if in this way you bonus speculators, as it were, by locking up the most valuable lands in the country, I believe you will be committing a great mistake. Now, Sir, I have only one other matter to advert to just now, and that is the statement of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who said he was astonished that the task of defending the North-West was left to him, because the North-West members were seeking to justify the Government, and in so doing were adopting a most unpatriotic course. I must repudiate that statement, and I say the hon. gentleman had a great deal of assurance in making it. We are independent people in the North-West, and I am thoroughly independent here as a representative of those people, and I will maintain my position when I know I am right. I consider that I am perfectly capable of defending the interests of the settlers of the Saskatchewan. I think the Minister of the Interior proposes this land Act for the general benefit of the country; and I believe that we in the North-West, if we are to make our country prosperous, must never forget the interests of the great Dominion at large, of which we are a part; and it can never be for the benefit of the Dominion that land should be locked up as it would be if the amendment proposed were adopted. I believe the settlers in the Saskatchewan district will be able to pay for their lands if they are given time. I do not believe there is a single man there now who could pay for his preemption within six months; but I do not believe the Government will insist on payment within the time if the settler is unable to pay. I believe, too, that the land will be worth $2 an acre; if it is not, it will not be worth 20 cents; but I hope with the growth of settlement there to see it worth $20 an acre instead of 20 cents. The hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said he went west. Where did he go? I never saw him in the Saskatchewan district. There are very few hon. members of this House whom I saw in that district. I think the hon. Minister himself is about the only member of this House who has been there. He says he went to Calgary, and that when there he was astonished at the products of the North-West; and I believe if he had come to Prince Albert he would have been equally astonished. But he did not. I am glad to hear he has changed his tune, because, although I have not been a member of this House very long, still, having my interest in this country, and being a true patriotic Canadian, I have read most carefully and often heard in the galleries above the speeches of hon. members here, and the impression produced on me was that members on this side did not think the North-West was a country worth building a railway through or developing in any way. I am glad to find, therefore, that the hon. gentleman thinks there is something in the North-West, and that it may soon be turned to very great account. I can assure the hon. gentleman that when the North-West receives its full tide of immigration, as I am confident it will, he will find it will become a most important factor in this House, and the North-West being now represented in the House of Commons, the hon. gentleman will find its representatives, from the first day to the last day they are here, able to shoulder the responsibility put upon them, and answer for their constituents themselves, without appealing to gentlemen who have never visited the districts of which they speak.

Mr. McDOWALL.

Mr. TISDALE. I regret very much that hon. gentlemen in this House so frequently refer to the United States, in order to make disparaging assertions with regard to our country. It seems to me that, in the course of these and other debates to which I have listened for the short time I have been in the House, this disposition prevails to too large an extent, and it prevails in a spirit which is not to be found in the United States. It prevails in a spirit of contrasting and fault-finding with our country as distinguished from the United States. If those hon. gentlemen had, as I have, travelled thousands of miles through the territories and the western region of the United States, they would find there is a great deal of fault-finding there with the land laws; but they would find that, as a patriotic people, the instant anybody complains to the detriment of the country, the people unite to put him down. In fact, they have a very summary law there which they deal out to gentlemen who find fault with the country to the extent to which, I regret, hon. gentlemen here find fault with our country—they use what is called the lamp-post law.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TISDALE. I am glad to hear hon. gentlemen opposite approve of that sort of law, judging by the cheers they give. In regard to these land laws, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) is misinformed, or else he has not informed himself sufficiently, when he contrasts, as regards liberality, the regulations of the land laws of the United States with those of the land laws of our North-West. I agree with him this far, that when a much longer experience has prevailed in a country governed by wise laws like the United States, it is a good place from which to draw a parallel. But what is the tendency of the experience of the land laws of the United States? We find the tendency is to greater restriction and not to more liberality in the sense of granting lands to the public. I defy the hon. gentleman to point to a single Act of Congress, passed the last 20 years, certainly during the last 10, and more particularly, the last 5 years, which has not been restrictive in its effect. In the early days, the United States were very liberal, with a view of inducing settlement; they had not only homesteads and preemptions, but, what are called desert acts, and swamp land acts, and timber acts. What has been the result? The House of Congress, at its last session, repealed every one of the laws but the homestead laws, thus restricting in every possible way the granting of lands in excess of 160 acres to any one person. The Senate did not object to the spirit of this measure, but they objected to some of the details, and a joint committee was appointed by the two Houses, and this committee affirmed the principle that it was a mistake, as experience had taught them, to try and promote settlement by granting too many ways of getting lands. If hon. gentlemen opposite will read Sato on the history of the land laws of the United States, they would find that the whole tendency of additional facilities beyond homesteading being given for getting land, has been to bring about what the hon. gentleman, who has just spoken, stated was the case in the North-West. They give facilities to land-grabbers and speculators, who took large portions of the domain and locked them up. The United States are, therefore, moving in the same direction as the Minister of the Interior is to-day, when he is repealing the second homestead. They never, with all their liberality, thought of giving a second homestead and the result of their experience is that a homestead pure and simple of 160 acres is the most anyone should get. There is nothing like personal experience and knowledge. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk of its being a simple thing to get homesteads in the United States. Distance lends enchantment to the view. Let them go and try it. As contrasted with our system of taking two witnesses before a land agent and taking out the patent, there you have to advertise for two or three months, giving the names of three witnesses; and after that you have to go before a court, sometimes 600 miles away, before you can get your title. There you are met by an objecting court, which treats you as a land-grabber, and puts every possible obstruction in your way. A list of printed questions covering three pages of paper is given to the settler to answer, and these questions enter into every detail, even to the number of chickens the settler raises on his farm, the kind of house he has built, and the sort of grain he grows. Under the United States regulations also, the settler has to reside five years on his lands instead of three, as in our case. I say that their experience, and they have had a longer experience than we, is altogether in the direction of abolishing everything but the simple homestead, and restricting settlers to 160 acres. Now, Commissioner Sparks, who is the gentleman at the head of the Department of the Interior in the United States, and who took the lead in this recent agitation, particularly in regard to the reform of these abuses in the United States, speaking of the preemption system in his report of 1885, said:

"The preemption system no longer secures settlements by preemptions. If it did, or could be amended to do so, it would be useless for any good purpose, because supplanted by the more effective homestead law, if a home is the real object designed to be secured. If a home is not the object, the sooner the facility for obtaining land without making a home upon it which is offered by this system is removed from the statutes, the better for the settlement interests of the country and the future of its institutions."

His opinion, founded on a large experience in the important office he holds, is deliberately against preemptions. The Minister of the Interior still allows preemptions. We did allow second homesteading. Why? Largely—I was in the North-West at the time of the agitation—in the interest of speculators. I tell you, Sir, that the entries then made, were made largely with the idea, as subsequent events proved, of getting more land, and not of making homes for men who wanted to go there and work 160 acres. It was not the men who wanted to go there to make homes for themselves and to work 160 acres of land. Look at our own Province. Who are the men who progress? Not the farmers who have too much land, but the farmers who have a sufficiency of land, who work it well and attend to it well, and grow their crops largely by their own efforts and the efforts of their families. So should it be, I think, with pioneers; and, as far as my humble opinion goes, reading up this matter as I have, carefully, travelling, as I have travelled, largely over the western territories of the United States, I believe that the sooner preemptions are abolished in either country, the better for the settlement of the country. One last word. So much about the clamor in regard to the western territories. Come down to the statistics. Contrast our North-West Territories, for the time we have been in there, with any other territories. Make a parallel, and you cannot prove one that has developed faster than our North-West, even with the bad crops. I had relatives who were living in the State of Kansas during the grasshopper plague, not many years ago. At that time, in the city of Kansas, you could get the best houses by paying the taxes, and they only had the grasshopper plague for a short time, as in the North-West they have had bad crops for the last three or four years. But it almost paralysed the city and the State. It was only a passing disaster, as these bad crops have been in the North-West. My hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has never heard me accuse any party of want of loyalty or patriotism, but it is the leaders who are trying to incite their followers, because they see that the Conservative party has so much the best of them. I have stood shoulder to shoulder with the Reformers when occasion arose, and I believe the body of them are willing to turn out to-day, as they always have been in the past, in defence of their country. I regret that party politics should lead to such action as I deplore on the part of their leaders, and I would condemn the same thing if it came from any side. If I live to be in this House long enough—as I think I shall not, for I think it will be long deferred—to see those hon. gentlemen in power, I will stand up and say, as I do now, that, if you do not mislead them, the great body of the people of this country believe in its future, believe in its capacity, believe in our ability to work out in the future what, if we stick to it, we will work out, by the united action of the two parties. If you look at the picture in the reading room of the fathers of Confederation, you will see that they were not made up of one party alone. I take this opportunity, which will probably be the only occasion on which I will trouble the House, to beseech hon. gentlemen on both sides, while criticising, as is right and proper, the actions of the Government, not to be led away from the interests of the country by a party political view. I do not think anyone on that side of the House regrets more than I do that the leader of the Opposition has been so stricken that he cannot continue to lead them, because I believe, as I have said on other occasions, that it is of great advantage to the country and of great advantage to the Government themselves to have a gentleman as leader of the Opposition who is so well able to criticise their actions, and to see that any legislation which their feelings or their prejudices might lead them to bring forward is properly criticised. This great North-West must be the future factor in building up the Confederation, because there is to be the great home for the millions of people whom we are to have if Confederation is to be more than an empty idea, and, therefore, do not send it abroad, do not let the people who are our rivals in inducing immigrants to settle in those Territories, convict us out of our own mouths.

Mr. TISDALE

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is a good wind-up to the speech of the hon. gentleman, and I trust that it will not be without its effect on the members for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) and Lisgar (Mr. Ross). They certainly deserved that chastisement at his hand. It is true that the graceful tribute which he paid to the leader of the Opposition was a worthy one. In discussing questions of this kind, he always did it with the idea of furthering the best interests of the country and from a position apart from partisanship. He could view matters on their merits, and he never felt it incumbent on him, for instance, when a question like this was under discussion, to rush to the defence of the Government to say that everything they did, everything they thought of, everything they ever meant to do, and everything they ever expected or thought of doing was all right. He would look at the question fairly and would make his deductions from facts that are known, and, unlike the gentlemen who are representing that country here, and whom I was sorry to hear speak as they did this evening, he would not attempt to justify all the actions and policy of the Government, if need be, by sacrificing the country itself, as I consider those gentlemen did. We remember a perfectly fair comparison which was made by that hon. gentleman some years ago, but it was denounced by gentlemen on the other side. He was told that that speech would be used by the immigration agents of the United States, that it would be used by them as a lever against this country. What was that speech found to be? Was it found that he had praised that country above his own? Nothing of the kind. But this afternoon we hear from the members for Lisgar and Selkirk—

Mr. LANDERKIN. What about the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. McDowall) ?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Well, he wished to say a good word for his country, if he could not do that without denouncing the Government at the same time. But whose likeness will be put on the immigration pamphlets of the United States now, unless it is the likeness of the member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) and the member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly), who rises and reads a lecture to the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), and why? Because he took their own agricultural statistics, given to us by the Government, which show an exodus of 100,000 people out of this sparse population of Manitoba and the North-West during the last few years. The hon. member does not rise to deny that fact, but he rushes in to say that what the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has stated is incorrect, that the deduction he draws from that statement, that there has been Government mismanagement, is all wrong, that the Government policy is right, that their railway policy is right, that their land policy is right, that the railway rates are all right, but the country is wrong, because they have had four successive frosts; and that is to go abroad. The statement of the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) may go abroad, and those who see it will say it is a great country, because he spoke so well of it, as did the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and as I was glad to hear my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson), who always speaks well of it, state that for ten years he had never known the crops to be frosted in his constituency. He also tells me that, in the constituencies represented by those two hon. gentlemen opposite, they have not had their wheat frosted at all. They do not stand up and deny that statement as to the frost, but they make the broad statement that the reason for the exodus has not been any fault of the Government in their land policy, or their railway policy, or anything else, but because the country will not yield the fruits of the earth, that they are destroyed by frost and drought, and that it is, therefore, not to be wondered at that the people leave it. It is most distressing, it is most disheartening that we should hear such statements from those hon. gentlemen. Glad was I that the hon. the Minister of Finance was not in his seat. Glad was I that the member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) was not in his seat, to have had their feelings harrowed by listening to such statements as these. I have not had the opportunity of being in that country, but I have read about it, and, as the hon. member who last spoke did, I have always maintained that, if we have not a great country in Manitoba and the North-West, we cannot hope to become—as I fondly dream, as a Canadian, we will become—a great people in this country. I have examined everything which I possibly could in relation to that country. I propose at the first moment to make that personal examination of it. I am glad to know that if the remarks of these gentlemen might, perhaps, be true with reference to a certain portion of that country, they are not applicable to the greater portion of it, but that there is a climate, there is a soil there that would induce emigrants from the old country to settle there as readily as in the United States, provided things were equal. But I am of those who believe, of those who express the opinion, that the cause of that exodus—that cannot be denied, without denying the truth of the figures submitted by the Government—the cause of that exodus is not to be found in the fact that that country is unfit for habitation, a country that will not yield the fruits of the earth; but that that exodus has taken place because of governmental mismanagement, because that country has been shut up under the iron grasp of a monopoly, because its land laws have not been as liberal as those of the United States. I charge that exodus, I charge the miserable failure of people that country—not as those hon. gentlemen opposite have done, because we have not a soil and a climate equal to those of the western States—but I charge it upon governmental mismanagement, and I blame hon. gentlemen opposite, who are the representatives of that country in this House, for rushing to the defence of the Government on every occasion, not for speaking in defence of their country, instead of, in order to shield the Government in their mismanagement, saying things with reference to their own country, that I am happy to have heard contradicted by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) and the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). Sir, the hon. gentleman opposite gave a little while ago a single vote against the Government, and I think we were given to understand that he received permission to do it. It does seem as if he had been on the penitent bench doing penance ever since in order to wipe out that act; it does seem as if that permission was to be atoned for and paid for by the most slavish submission to every proposition offered by the Government in reference to every question, and that he will stop at nothing to shield them, even though it be to decry the country that he lives in. But, Sir, I am glad to have heard this statement contradicted by the hon. member for North Norfolk, I am glad to have heard his testimony as to what his eyes saw of the capabilities of that country. And I am always glad to listen to the patriotic sentiments and utterances of that noble defender of that land, that true representative of the North-West, sent here in the person of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson); and I trust he may long be spared to us, and that the time may come when the North-West will send more of those who will speak of her—I do not wish them to speak of her in terms that will not bear criticism, I do not wish them to make statements that are not borne out by facts—but I do wish there were more representatives like the hon. member for Marquette, who would not feel it incumbent upon them on every occasion to justify the acts and the policy of the Government by sacrificing every interest of their country, and denouncing the very soil upon which they live. The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Perley), if I mistake not, seems to have pursued rather a more patriotic line than some of his fellow representatives. He sees the difficulties of the situation. I do not pretend to say whether he is right or not, but he does seem, from his experience and observation, to have detected some cause, other than a bad soil and a bad climate, and the eternal frosts and snows which are assigned by other hon. gentlemen. He thinks it possible that there can be amendments devised to these laws. Take the very report before us now—that is an attempt upon the part of the Minister to remedy what he considers faults in the laws. Why, then, is it not right and proper for us to offer suggestions and amendments without gentlemen opposite rising and springing at the throats of gentlemen on this side for offering them, because, forsooth, they take it for granted that every suggestion that is offered from this side of the House is necessarily made in a partisan spirit? Sir, I have not heard any remarks from gentlemen on this side delivered in the spirit that is imputed to them by hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not think the Minister of the Interior himself could charge that upon us. In the remarks of my hon. friend from Marquette, and of other hon. gentlemen on this side, it seems to me the question has been approached with a desire to find out what evils do exist in that country, and to see if some remedy could not be devised. For, Sir, it is a fact staring us in the face, a fact that we cannot get over, that if the figures given to us by the Agricultural Department are true, there has been a great exodus from that land, an exodus from a land which we wish to see peopled, and in which we all desire to see pouring hundreds of thousands of immigrants. The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Perley) gave another reason. He did not bear so hard upon the country, although he alluded to it, but I think the reason he assigns will not bear investigation, namely, that the people in the old countries are not able to immigrate. Let the hon. gentleman take the report of the Minister of Agriculture, and he will find that he represents them coming by the tens of thousands into this country. So we have the facts before us, not that the people are unable to emigrate, but the Minister of Agriculture tells us that they have emigrated, that they have come into our midst, not 10,000, not 20,000, not 50,000, but over 100,000 a year have come into our midst and settled down amongst us. So that argument will not bear investigation. How is it then that when they do come to us we are unable to retain them?—having a soil and climate equal to other portions of this continent—save and except it be that there must be some fault, some mismanagement on the part of the Government in their dealings with that country. This fact, I think, must be forced home upon the minds of every member of this House, and it well becomes us to approach this question in that light, and not seek to defend the Government at all hazards, instead of trying to ascertain the cause of the evil. I take it as an evidence that there can be improvements made, by the very fact that the Minister has submitted this Bill. Why may we not criticise it and see whether amendments cannot be offered? I trust that the Minister of the Interior will be willing to accept amendments which he believes will tend to retain what population we have there, and draw more to us. Now, I will answer another statement of an hon. gentleman who reflected upon the members of the Opposition, when he said that while sitting in the galleries he had observed that one of the greatest drawbacks to immigration to that country, was the fact that the Opposition had opposed the construction of the railway. Sir, that was not opposed by members of the Opposition, but we only objected to the manner of its construction, and to the monopoly conceded to the company. Sir, we see that to-day that monopoly power that was given to this company, and that was opposed by gentlemen on this side, is bearing the bitter fruit we foretold it would bear; and, I believe, that is one of the great causes of the ills from which that country suffers. I am not alone in that opinion, for if we may believe the reports that reach us from the North-West, almost the whole community in the Province of Manitoba are united in declaring that it is vital to their very existence that this monopoly should be removed, that they are determined to expend their last dollar, almost, if need be, in the construction of a road that will give them relief. Sir, we did not oppose that road as an aid to colonisation, as an aid to settlement, but the contention was against giving the company monopoly powers, against putting a power into their hands, that they are now using with the effect of driving people out of that country. Sir, these are the reasons why we have criticised it, but our criticism of the Government railway policy was not made in hostility to the Government, our criticism of their land policy was not made in hostility to the Government; but we maintain that their entire railway policy and their entire land policy are calculated to produce evil results, and the evil results have followed that we predicted at that time. And it may be beyond our power, perhaps, to remedy all the defects and errors of judgment committed, but I hold that it is our bounden duty to remedy them as far as lies in our power.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not think the committee will expect me to follow the hon. gentleman in the speech just delivered. We are discussing the details of a Bill which all parties, I think, admit so far as its general scope is concerned, will be for the advantage of the settlers in the North-West. That Bill really provides for an extension of the privileges and advantages of settlement to those who wish to go into the country. But I cannot allow the remarks of the hon. gentleman to pass without one word at all events, and that is that his attempt, his feeble attempt, for with all the sound everyone will admit the attempt was feeble, to fix upon the hon. members who represent the North-West and Manitoba an unfriendliness to the constituencies which have sent them here. We have had those subjects discussed in this Parliament for the last eight years. We have heard hon. gentlemen opposite urging their views, and they have heard the friends of the Government and members of the Government urging and defending theirs. We have had the opportunity during the last elections of knowing the sentiment of the people who are most intimately affected as to the rival policies of the two parties and as to the relative interest of the two parties, in that great country; and we find this: that out of the representation of Manitoba and the North-West we have but one hon. gentleman sitting on the opposite benches—and that hon. gentleman was certainly an attentive member of the House, and, if he could be judged simply by his attendance in his place, and without reference to the policy he has pursued, was entitled to consideration at the hands of his constituents—came here, I may say, almost by the skin of his teeth. Now, I ask whether, under these circumstances, we may not fairly ask hon. gentlemen opposite to drop the policy of the last five years. Give to the North-West, if you will do so in its own interest, a rest from the political discussions that have occurred in regard to it. I think nothing has done more harm in the North-West than the constant attempt on the floor of Parliament, and in the press, to create the impression that the settler had a better chance if he went into the United States, both as to the character of the laws under which he would settle and as regards the land upon which he would settle, than if he went into our own North-West. I will not detain the committee by referring to this old discussion, but I think I may fairly say that the hon. gentlemen who, on this side, objected to the tone of the discussion, to the tone of the remarks of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), were perfectly correct in complaining that the tendency of those remarks was to create an impression outside of this House that the land laws of the United States were to the settler generally more liberal than those of our own North-West Territories, and on that account those who wish to settle where the land laws were liberal should go to the United States instead of coming to our own North-West. What I object to in the statements of the hon. gentlemen is, that they have not stated the whole truth. I do not charge them, I have no right to charge them here, with stating what is not true; but I do charge them with this: With concealing facts which, if stated frankly and fairly, would change altogether the current of opinion in relation to the relative merits of the two systems—that of the United States and that of Canada. The member for North Norfolk spoke of the United States giving their lands, their whole lands for homesteading; and when it was pointed out to him by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) that that statement conveyed, at all events, an erroneous impression, he fell back to the hypercritical statement that he meant all its land. But if all its lands excluded the settler from an area of forty miles from a railway on either side, are you not deceiving the people outside as to the advantages which they obtain when they go there? Take the railway running through Dakota—the Northern Pacific. The lands given to that railway are in belts 40 miles on each side of the road. Within that area of 80 miles—an hon. gentleman near me says it is 50 miles on each side; I was under the impression it was 40—within that area on both sides—

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

Mr. CHARLTON. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to correct him with respect to the land grant of the Northern Pacific. The land grant of that company was twenty sections to the mile in the States of Wisconsin, Minnesota and Oregon, and forty sections to the mile in Dakota, Montana and Washington Territory.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Extending outwards on each side? That is 80 miles, and that is precisely what I stated. An hon. member near me stated it was 50 miles on each side, but I said it was 40. Here are 40 miles on each side of the railway, where no man can get an odd section unless he pays the railway company their price for it. There are, therefore, only the even sections. What can he do with the even sections? The settler can only get 160 acres, 80 free, and for the other 80 he has to pay $2.50 an acre, or an average, over the whole, of $1.25, while we in the North-West, right up to the line of our railway, now give the settler 160 acres for the mere office fee of $10. That is the difference between the systems of the two countries, and that fact the hon. gentleman concealed when he made his statement, a concealment which was calculated to create, outside of this House, in the country, a false impression in regard to the position of our North-West. What more? The hon. gentleman forgets that it has been the policy of both parties—and in this I am not criticising, adversely or otherwise, the policy of my predecessors in office—it was a policy of both parties, that we should build branch railways through the country by means of land grants. How was it proposed to be done? The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), when Minister of the Interior, introduced a Bill which had merit in it, although it never became law, but it was an embodiment of the policy of the Government when it was submitted to Parliament. Under that Bill, taking the whole country together, the Government proposed to give an average of 10,000 acres per mile to any colonisation railway company that chose to go through the form of presenting their petition for incorporation by letters patent.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). 6,400 acres for one part, 10,000 for another, 12,000 for another part still further west, making an average of about 10,000 acres per mile. But if the hon. gentleman does not like it, I will admit it was 6,400 acres in one part and 10,000 acres in another part further west.

Mr. MILLS. The statement was, not to exceed a certain amount; that was the maximum.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Does the hon. gentleman mean to insult the intelligence of this committee in this way? The hon. gentleman knows that when the quantity was not to exceed a certain amount, that was the quantity which the Government were ready to give to those companies. They might have given less or more; but the intention of that Act was, that if the colonisation railway companies would build the road they would receive those land grants. Where were we to get the lands? Were they to be odd sections or alternate townships? Then again, did they propose to throw open the whole country for homesteading? No; they never threw open the whole country for homesteading. But what they did was this: They threw it open for sale at $1 per acre, and at such further price as the Government might choose to impose when the railways were built, and increased value was given to the land by the construction of those lines. When hon. gentlemen opposite had an opportunity of controlling the land policy of the country, every settler that went in got no land for nothing; he got the land for $1 an acre, and he paid his dollar down, and was compelled afterwards to pay any price the Government might think the lands were worth after the railway was built, those lands being enhanced in value in consequence of the construction of the railway.

Mr. BOWELL. And they turned off the homesteaders.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes, that was the policy of hon. gentlemen then, and, as my hon. friend says, they actually turned off the homesteaders. But I am not going into the details of the Bill. I am dealing simply with the general question which the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has raised, and which the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) intimates is a patriotic utterance to be accepted by the Parliament of the country and the people of the country, as an evidence that love for their country and its development inspires the hearts of hon. gentlemen opposite and not the hearts of hon. gentlemen on this side. Now, Sir, take the case of the United States to-day, as compared with us. Every settler can get to-day in our country 160 acres of land for nothing; no settler in the United States can get more than 160 acres. There is the difference between the two systems. What is proposed to us to-day by my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), what in point of fact has given rise to this whole discussion, is the proposal that the settler shall not only get the first 160 acres, which exhausts his claim in the United States, but having got it that he shall be permitted to get for nothing 160 acres more. That is the proposal which has given rise to the whole discussion on this subject. We give to the settlers who go in 160 acres of land for nothing; in the United States the settler who goes in can get only that quantity of land, and has to serve five years' apprenticeship, while in our country he serves but three years, and then he has all the difficulties which surround the obtainment of a patent in the United States, while we actually send the homestead inspector to his house, where he can make his settlement declaration, so that he does not need to leave his farm at all in order to get his patent. That is the difference between the two systems. And yet hon. gentlemen talk about the liberality, forsooth, of the American land law. I said earlier in the evening, and I repeat, that if we embodied to-day the American land laws on our Statute-books, and compelled the homesteaders in the North-West to take their lands under those laws, we would have every hon. gentleman from Manitoba and the North-West coming down here next Session with a strong public opinion at their back and demanding—and justly demanding—the repeal of those very laws. And I venture to go further, and to say that we would have every hon. gentleman on the other side of the House backing them up in that demand, and asking that the Government should repeal those laws. No, Sir, our land laws, at any rate, are not responsible for the difficulties that have occurred in the North-West. One of the things which has caused difficulties there is this; that we have had too much politics to the square acre in connection with the North-West. One of the difficulties is this; That in this country where we are comparatively—as compared with the United States—a smaller community, with great interests, it is true; with great possibilities, it is true; with great hopes and aspirations for the future, it is true; but yet with no great questions separating us, these North-West Territories and the interests of the settlers in the North-West Territories have become a factor in our politics, and have been used by hon. gentlemen opposite in the absence of anything better. They thought they could only succeed in securing for themselves the approbation of the public by making it appear that the Government was recreant in its duty to that great North-West country. These discussions, read by people who knew nothing of them, simply warned them that, at any rate, this was not a country to go to, because it was badly governed, its laws badly administered, and the chances of the settlers inferior to what they would be if they went to the United States. In the United States, on the contrary, they have so many great questions, they are so large a community, they have so enormous a population eastward, that they simply make their laws and leave the administration of them to their officers in the North-West; and you never hear—or rarely hear—of the discussion of those laws as a party issue in their politics at all. I would—and I say it most sincerely—that we could consider questions of the development of the North-West Territory, so far as our own land laws are concerned, as the common duty of both the parties in this country, and the fulfilment of our obligations in connection with them as the common heritage of both parties. Surely we can look at that country as one to which we can all put forth our best efforts for its development, because on that development must rest the future prosperity and greatness of the Dominion of Canada. For my own part, although I say it, I think I know as much of the sentiments of the people of the North-West Territory as any gentleman in this House who has not come from these Territories as a representative. I have had the opportunity of meeting them at public assemblies; at the twenty-two public assemblies that I held I discussed with them these lands regulations, discussed with them the cause of the difficulties they met with in the initial settlement of the country, and I have this satisfaction that if you will take the addresses which were presented to me in 1885, if you will take the subjects which were referred to in those addresses, you will find that nearly every one of them has been crystallised into law by this Parliament since, or has been embodied in the regulations of the Department of the Interior. That is the position in which the settlers stand to-day. They are now—let us all reverently thank God for it—they are now apparently on the eve of a magnificent harvest season. The news we are getting from the North-West every day, shows that the conditions upon which success must after all very largely depend—that is, the presence of the moistening rain which is falling in the North-West Territories to-day—are not lacking, and that they ensure them the prospect of good crops for this season. One season of really good crops in the North-West, one season of such crops as I believe the normal condition of that country, with the knowledge of the people as to the best modes of farming in that country, will certainly hereafter produce—one such crop will remove all those so-called and petty grievances, will make the people of the North-West happy and contented, and will bring into that country a stream of immigration which will add largely to its prosperity and add largely to the growth and advantage of the Dominion of Canada as a whole. Sir, these amendments which are in this Bill—simple amendments if you will, but asked for by the people there—it does seem to me might have passed this House without the kind of discussion which has been raised by hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to them. I can only sincerely hope that when the people of the North-West and the people abroad, come to read those discussions they will, at least, read both sides, and feel that after all these jeremiads as to the condition of our land laws and the condition of our settlers, of which we have heard so much from hon. gentlemen opposite, do not represent the true condition of things, but that in no part of God's universe can be found a place where settlers seeking homes for themselves can have better opportunities for securing those homes than they can in the Canadian North-West.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would appear that the minds of the hon. Minister of the Interior and of most of his colleagues, and notably the First Minister, are capable of only two ideas. Make a criticism of anything which those hon. gentlemen bring down here, a criticism which they cannot answer, and you are forthwith charged with being unpatriotic. Point to any act of theirs, no matter how clearly it may be proved that that act has resulted in the worst possible consequences to the people of this country, and they turn round upon you and say: Thanks to returning officers and revising barristers, we have a majority, and, therefore, we are right. Those are the two arguments of the Minister of the Interior, the two arguments of the First Minister, and they are reechoed by their colleagues and their supporters on the back benches. Now, if ever there was a case in which any set of men stood condemned out of their own official records as having grossly mismanaged a noble country—because there I agree with the Minister, and it is the only point in which I agree with him—it is the case as evidenced from the proof given us from the official records laid upon the Table of the House a few months ago, with respect to the results which have attended those hon. gentlemen's so-called efforts to colonise and build up the North-West. Why, Sir, was there ever known a case before in which a Minister of the Crown, on the faith of his own reports, had time and again stated to the House, and time and again stated to the country, from one end to the other, that there were 250,000 people in the North-West three years ago?—was there ever a case known in which, when you come to take a census by head, it was found that a quarter of a million three years ago had shrunk to 118,000 whites? If we take their own records there has been an exodus of 112,000; if we take the statements made by the Ministers themselves, there has been an exodus of well nigh 140,000 from Manitoba and the North-West within the last few years. And with a fact like that staring him in the face, the hon. gentleman dares to lecture the members on this side of the House because they call attention to statements which show conclusively one of two things: either the hon. gentlemen were most grossly deceived, or that they were guilty of the grossest misrepresentation to the people of this country. Let them take their choice; they must admit that the statistics brought down by the Department of Agriculture were grossly fraudulent (for nothing else will account for such a state of things), and deceived them, or else that they themselves deceived the people of this country. Sir, I judge these hon. gentlemen by their fruits—aye, and I judge them by the promises they made. Can they deny, dare they deny, that when the Canadian Pacific Railway scheme was pushed through the House, the First Minister and the Minister of Finance promised us faithfully that we would receive, by 1890, $70,000,000 in cash and in mortgages? Why, Sir, it is on the Hansard; I have the record here, if the hon. gentleman wants it. Can he deny that three years afterwards the hon. gentleman brought down to us a formal statement in detail, certified by the Deputy Minister of the Interior, showing a clear profit of $53,000,000 to be realised by the 1st day of January, 1890—because they were precise; they were particular; they gave dates, and facts, and figures; and I turn to the Public Accounts, and I see to-day a deficit of $1,200,000 on that account. Sir, I am not going to enter into a discussion now of all the details of this Homestead Bill; but I have a word or two to say as to the policy propounded by my hon. friend. I think the hon. gentleman who accused my hon. friend of concealment of facts would have done well to have informed the House that, in a tract of country which in 1877 was not at all likely to be sold for a good many years to come, my hon. friend proposed to give only 6,000 acres, and, moreover, that he did not propose to give those as selected lands. They were to be taken as they came, and the hon. Minister, if he has travelled over that country, must know that there are many portions in which a gift of 10,000 or 12,000 acres per mile not selected, but taken as they come along the line of the railroad, is very far inferior indeed to 5,000 or 6,000 acres in other sections of the country, and that is particularly applicable to the district into which my hon. friend has divided that region. Neither do I think he was quite correct in his remarks as to my hon. friend's measure.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell).

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Did he complain of his policy?
Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, but he did not state it correctly; and the man who found fault with my hon. friend from North Norfolk was doubly bound to be accurate in his criticisms of my hon. friend from Bothwell. Now, Sir, what are the points in discussion between us, which I think the hon. gentleman might better have discussed than to indulge in all this declamation about the unpatriotic conduct of the Opposition in calling attention to facts which no human being can deny or conceal. They were mainly two. My hon. friend pointed out, and with much force and sound argument, that in the present condition of things in the United States, and after Manitoba and the North-West had received, as they unfortunately have, so serious a set-back, you might very well allow the settler to homestead on any Government lands whatever. That was a fair and reasonable proposition—a proposition well worth the attention of the Minister and the House; and my hon. friend was quite right in calling attention to the fact, which the Minister of the Interior did not deny, that this is in substance the policy of the United States. They may not give so large an amount of land as we do, but they allow any homestead settler to take up any of the land of the United States that he can find; and that that is the law has not been denied on either side of the House. The other point raised by myself and some other gentlemen was this: that in view of the extraordinary misfortunes which were stated by members on the other side of the House to have overtaken the people of Manitoba and the North-West, the time had come to reduce the somewhat heavy price about to be exacted from them for preemption grants. Surely, Sir, those were reasonable propositions, involving no want of patriotism; and more than that, they involved no want of consideration for the unfortunate settlers in the North-West. It did not lie in the mouth of the hon. gentleman, nor was it wise on his part to charge the Opposition—who brought forward these facts in a perfectly fair and legitimate spirit—with lack of patriotism, or with degrading the country, because they suggested two amendments, both of which, I venture to say, will find very general acceptance among the people of the North-West, whenever the facts come to be detailed before them. Now, Sir, what I say to the House and the hon. gentleman is this: For once in your lives, if you can, be candid, be fair; admit what is patent to all men, that your policy of colonisation has been a miserable and disastrous failure, and apply yourselves to find a remedy. I say that never has there been a case in which money has been poured out so lavishly, in which so many exertions have been made, both publicly and privately, as have been made by the people of Canada within the last few years to promote the settlement of the North-West. Seldom have such exertions been attended by such disastrous results, and I will tell the hon. gentleman again what the causes have been. I do not believe the failure of settlement is due to any fault in the climate or in the soil of the North-West, I agree with the Minister that it is a fine and a great country; but I say that if you had exerted your utmost ingenuity to devise a means of choking settlement in the North-West, you could have attempted no better way than that most unfortunate checker-board system, by which the difficulties of settlement were intensified in the highest degree. I say you could have taken no better means for choking settlement in the North-West than to load down those unfortunate settlers with the monstrous system of taxation which the hon. gentleman and his colleagues have imposed for robbing them of one-third of their miserable capital, without any rhyme or reason, and in defiance of the plainest dictates of political economy and common sense. There may be some reason for applying this system to the older Provinces of Canada; I am not going to discuss that; but it was simply ruin to the people of the North-West, and they have found it out. And most of all, you have choked settlement, and you continue to choke it, by that outrageous act of tyrannical usurpation by which this Government has,

I believe, illegally deprived the people of Manitoba of their constitutional rights as free men to build roads with their own money, and bound them hand and foot by a monopoly, the like of which has never existed in any civilised country.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There is only one point in the hon. gentleman's speech to which I wish to refer. The hon. gentleman has stated that I have misrepresented the policy of the hon. member for Bothwell. Now, I happen to have that hon. gentleman's Bill. Here is the clause. On reading it he will find that the "checker-board system" is embodied in the Bill, and the quantity is as I stated, 6,400 acres, ten sections of 640 acres each, in the earlier parts, about 8,000 in the second and 12,000 further west:

"26. The Governor in Council may, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of any railway to be constructed under the provisions of this Act, reserve every alternate section of ungranted land by old numbers, to the extent of ten sections per mile, five sections per mile on each side of the line of the railway, exclusive of the sections which under the Dominion Lands Act may have been reserved as school sections or may have been allotted to the Hudson's Bay Company; and for any line or part of a line of railway west of the 102nd meridian of west longitude twelve sections per mile, and for any line of railway connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway and extending into the Peace River District twenty sections per mile."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is what I stated.

Mr. WHITE. The hon. gentleman charged me with having misrepresented the policy of the hon. member for Bothwell.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman said my hon. friend granted 10,000 acres per mile, whereas he had granted 6,000 in the alternate sections, a certain larger quantity in the more remote sections, and a certain still larger quantity in other sections.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is precisely what I said. I said it made an average of nearly 10,000 acres.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is not a fair way of stating it, and as to this checker-board system, the hon. gentleman's statement is quite preposterous. My hon. friend when the country was unknown and very slightly settled, may have introduced such a proposal in his Bill, but there has been proof for the last eight or nine years, which the hon. gentleman's predecessors ought to have been acquainted with, that it has been doing intolerable mischief, and it is no excuse to say that six, seven, or eight years ago such a system was talked of.

Mr. DALY. I am not going to detain the House, but as the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) has alluded to me, it is necessary I should say something in reply. Our hon. friends opposite, at least the hon. member for Bothwell did, charged me with discussing this matter in a partisan spirit. I would ask hon. gentlemen, who was the first to introduce party politics, if it was not the hon. member for Bothwell himself. We were discussing this Bill quietly; I had seconded the motion of the hon. member for Marquette, to permit homesteaders to get their preemptions at a dollar an acre. I never sought to discuss the question from a party standpoint, but the moment the hon. member for Bothwell thought he could have a slap at the Government, he was the first to introduce party politics. At the same time, I do not defend the whole policy of the Government. I have given evidence in this House that I am not in accord with their whole policy, I voted against them the other night, and would vote against them again on the same question. I condemned them then, and will continue to condemn them as long as they maintain their policy of disallowance. It, therefore, does not lie in the mouth of the hon. member for Bothwell to say that I am the slave of party. I am a member of the Conservative party, and I trust that I shall continue so as long as it conducts itself in the manner it has. I am proud to belong to it, I am proud to follow the right hon. gentleman, the First Minister, who has, by the manner in which he has conducted the affairs of the country, so long retained the confidence of the people. No doubt he went out of office in 1873, but he came back in 1878; again, he came back in 1882, and he was returned once more in 1887. That ought to justify me in saying that the people of this country, especially the people of the North-West, must be perfectly satisfied with the manner in which he has generally conducted our affairs. What I particularly wish to draw attention to is that the hon. member for Bothwell sought to charge, by innuendo, and the hon. member for North Norfolk charged by deliberate statement, that the land policy of the Government was one reason why the North-West was not settled as rapidly as it should have been. We had the old story of the exodus of 100,000 people reiterated by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson). It must be a particularly sweet morsel for those hon. gentlemen, that they are so fond of rolling it on their tongues whenever they get a chance, and giving the statement all the circulation they can. But it is not a fact that there was this exodus. I showed by the figures there was not such an exodus.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You did, and you cannot show it.

Mr. DALY. No doubt there is a discrepancy, as I admitted the other night, between the census and the returns of the Department of Agriculture; but that discrepancy is not accounted for in the manner these gentlemen account for it. I say it does not show there was an exodus of 100,000 people from that country. I have tried to show that a great many people who were counted as immigrants came into the country, went to the Rockies and to Vancouver to work on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and then returned home again after their work was through, and a great number of people, counted as immigrants, went out to the North-West during the boom, and have since returned to the east. I stated also, referring to a couple of frosts from which we suffered, that unfortunately we had been subjected to climatic influences which I hoped would not occur again; and I am perfectly satisfied that if our farmers had been farming then in Manitoba as they are farming to-day, the frost would not have affected them. Our system has changed since then. In the first years, our farmers neglected putting in grain as they should, they neglected their fall ploughing and did it in the spring, but they have learned a lesson, and I never saw such an area of ground ready for the crops as we had last fall. Every letter I get from that country says there is every promise of a glorious crop this year, and I reiterate that I am perfectly satisfied as soon as we have in our country the harvest we expect this year, all the agitation will be allayed to a great extent. The hon. member for South Brant charged me with decrying my country and saying the soil would not yield the fruits of the earth. Did I make any statement from which the hon. member could draw such a conclusion? No, Sir, I stand here as a representative of a constituency in Manitoba, and I can tell hon. gentlemen, Manitoba is the finest country under the sun. If the hon. gentleman would come out there, let him come in the early part of the month of August, and I will take him for a drive from the city of Brandon, 32 miles, to Souris city, through a continuous wheat field, the like of which cannot be seen in any other country. So far as the fruitfulness of our soil is concerned, how could I say anything except in its favor. I have seen six winters and six summers in that country, and all we ask is that the men who come to settle there, should come out with the belief that they can get along by working steadily and thoroughly as men have succeeded in the other Provinces. They must now not come out with the expectation that they need only to tickle the soil to draw forth a crop, but they must come determined to do as their fathers have done, live economically, get along slowly, not spend too much on machinery, and not purchase horses where oxen will suit. There would not be in that country the agitation which has taken place, were it not for the fact that many people expected to make a great deal of money more rapidly than the prospects in any country would warrant. I hurl back on the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) his insinuation that I stated our soil would not yield the fruits of the earth. I repeat that if the hon. gentleman will come out there, he will find our soil will yield the fruits of the earth in such a manner that he or any other Canadian will be proud of having such an inheritance. I have never stated in any discussion we have had here, that hon. gentlemen opposite are not loyal or patriotic; but I say that when they rise in their places and grow eloquent over this hundred thousand exodus, they are doing something which they must know is damaging to the country. I state as a fact that we have had those unfortunate frosts, but any evil results were not due to the fault of the climate, rather to the manner in which the people conducted husbandry at the time. All I ask of hon. gentlemen opposite is that they will give us a rest on this question. I do not desire to take up the time of the House further, and I trust, as far as the rest of this question goes, we will not have any more party in it, if the hon. gentlemen do not want it, but it does not lie in their mouths to charge me or anyone else with discussing this from a party point of view after the speech of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). I have a few amendments yet to propose which I hope the Minister of the Interior will accept. But, when I came to the House to-day, I expected that the question of party would not arise in connection with this measure. I do not think, however, that I would be doing my duty to myself or to my constituents if I did not rise and answer the speech of the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson). If the discussion goes further I think I may show that gentleman that I have some experience in the working of the land laws in that country, and that I have some idea of the requirements of the people there. I hope he will have as good a record to show when he goes back to his constituents as I have in regard to this matter.

Mr. DALY.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We have had a very extraordinary discussion to-night, and especially we have had very extraordinary speeches from the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) and from the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). The hon. member for South Norfolk thinks it very unpatriotic to criticise the policy of the Government and to point out that that policy has in some respects been a failure, when the object of the criticism is for the very purpose of preventing those failures in the future. The hon. gentleman has become wonderfully patriotic. He thinks it is a singular misfortune that any hon. gentleman on this side of the House should tell the truth when stating the truth may not convey very agreeable information. The hon. gentleman has changed his views, no doubt, since the leader of the Government has gone from this side of the House to that. We know very well the discussions which the leader of the Government indulged in, which the whole Tory press of Canada indulged in, and which were so ably supported in this House for two Sessions by the hon. the Minister of Customs. We need only look back at the resolution proposed by those hon. gentlemen in the Session of 1873 to see how they spoke of the country, and it is only necessary to read the speeches which were made in support of that resolution to become conversant with the doleful pictures which were then drawn of the lamentable condition in which the country was found. We were told that no industries flourished in this country except soap kitchens

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). Hear, hear.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Of course it was right and proper to make declarations of that kind at that time, but that statement was utterly at variance with the facts on that occasion; it would be far less at variance with the facts at the present moment. Then we were told in that resolution that there were thousands of people being expatriated from this country for want of employment, that our people were denied employment at home in consequence of the policy of the Administration, that our manufacturing industries were everywhere languishing. We had such pictures drawn of the condition of this country that one would suppose that no country on earth could have been in a more deplorable condition than Canada was at the time that the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was at the head of the Government. These observations were patriotic then, because they were made against a Reform Administration, and were made by hon. gentlemen who are now on that side of the House, but to make any statement of that sort at this time, however true it may be, is a most unpatriotic thing; and we are assured by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) that, if he had his way, it would not be permitted, that, in fact, he would be prepared to mob any man at a public assembly who would say one word against the policy of the Administration, or would say that in any respect that policy has been a failure. A speech of that sort, coming from that hon. gentleman, is quite appropriate, for we know that in old days the party to which the hon. gentleman belonged had a very great repugnance to anything like free speeches or criticism of the party with which he is identified; and so at the present day, although these hon. gentlemen obtained large sums of public money towards a great public enterprise, and although they promised the people of this country that it would add nothing to the public burdens, and that we would realise from the sale of public lands, by the year 1891, $70,000,000 in cash, so that an ample fund would be provided to wipe out the whole of the liabilities which were incurred by the people of this country, we are not at liberty, from the point of view of the hon. member for South Norfolk, to make any criticism of the policy of the Government, or to point out that these great expectations have not in any respect been realised. This afternoon, I pointed out that the immigration into the North-West country was not as much as the Government said it was, that there could be no doubt whatever that the policy of the Administration had been, for some cause or other, a signal failure. Are we to meet here and to shut our eyes to that fact? Is it unpatriotic to call the attention of the Government and the country to the fact that the policy which they have adopted has not succeeded, that the policy which they assured this House and the country would secure the settlement of that country has not secured its settlement? And yet these hon. gentlemen now tell us that to even mention that fact, to allude to it, is a most unpatriotic proceeding. Why, this is our duty here; this is our business. If the policy of the Government has not been what it was promised it would be, surely it is our business to undertake to amend it, and the first condition of amendment is criticism. The hon. gentleman from Selkirk (Mr. Daly) said that I attacked the Administration. I did nothing of the sort; I simply mentioned the fact. I pointed out that, for some reason or other, the North-West country had not been settled; I pointed out that, if the statistics of the Minister of Agriculture were to be relied upon, upwards of 100,000 of the people who went into that country had left it. There can be no doubt about that. He says that he answered that, but he never did. Does he pretend to say that he has given any explanation to the House to show that those people are still there? Why, the census taken by the Government shows that they are not there; and, what is more, the census taken by the Government of the State of Dakota shows that there is a large Canadian population there, a very much larger Canadian population in that single territory than there is in Manitoba and the North-West together. I say that is an unsatisfactory condition of things. The hon. gentleman says that the land regulations in Dakota are less liberal than those in Manitoba. I do not say that he is wrong. I express no opinion upon that. I do not intend to be drawn away from the point we have before us by any declaration one way or the other on that question. But the fact remains that the Canadian people, in spite of these illiberal regulations, if they are illiberal, have preferred to go to Dakota rather than to settle in Manitoba. I say that the people of this Dominion would prefer to settle in Canada rather than in the United States, other things being equal, and they have not settled in Canada; they have gone to the United States, and they are there. What ground does the hon. gentleman give for this, what reason does he assign for their going there? There must have been some reason for their preferring the United States to Canada. The hon. gentleman has told us, if not in this discussion, on a previous occasion, that the railway tariffs are more burdensome in Dakota than they are in the North-West. In spite of these burdensome railway tariffs, and in spite of these illiberal land regulations, the Canadian population are there. Why are they there? The hon. gentleman, if we are to believe him, has given us a reason, that Dakota is a better country than Manitoba. He has told us that the frosts have driven the people out, have discouraged the population in the North-West. The Minister himself has given the unfavorable climate as a reason for the failure of the policy of the Government in securing the settlement of the country. But he says that this year there is a prospect of a good crop; there is a prospect this year of what has never been there before—a good crop; and because there is going to be a good crop this year for the first time, the people are going to be encouraged and settlers are going to flow in there. Why, Sir, who, on this side, ever gave such a representation of the country as these hon. gentlemen have given of Manitoba and the North West Territories?

Mr. DALY. I did not say it was the first good crop we ever had. We have had lots of good crops there. Even last year in the drought, some men had 36 bushels to the acre. I said that was one of the reasons of that country not being settled sooner.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is the only reason the hon. gentleman has given. If the hon. gentleman has any other reason, I will take my seat while he gives it.

Mr. DALY. I told you to-night, and I told the House the other night, that one of the reasons that accounted for the people not being there, according to the returns of the Department of Agriculture, was that a great many were counted as immigrants who went there to work upon the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that they went over the mountains, and that they went back east. A great number of people went there during the boom, temporarily, and they went back again to the east. I admit the exodus, the difference between the two sets of figures, but I do not say that these people all went into Dakota, that the whole 100,000 went into Dakota, as you claim.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman has now given us an explanation. He says these people did not go there to remain permanently, but they went there as railway navvies and speculators. The speculators and navvies have gone, and the 100,000 population, the difference between the census and the Minister's estimate, has disappeared. How came the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches to represent these as permanent settlers? How came the hon. gentlemen to lead this House to suppose that there was some justification for the expenditure that was being incurred?

How came these hon. gentlemen to mislead the country with regard to the actual condition of things? For they did mislead the country, and they sought to convey the impression that there was a large immigration going into that country for the purpose of settling it, and that the large expenditure being incurred was justified by the result.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Does the hon gentleman mean to say that he believes that these were all settlers that went in there?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am calling attention to what the hon. gentleman said. I will answer his enquiry. I say that the Department of Agriculture reported them as settlers; the Government sought to convey the impression to the House and country that they were settlers; and they justified the large expenditure by the result of their policy, pointing to these figures as an evidence of the large number of permanent settlers that had gone into that country.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Would the hon. gentleman answer my question?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says there is a large immigration into the Territories of the United States because there are 50 or 60 millions of people to draw upon. But, Sir, that is not the fact. If I go to Texas, I find a large immigration there; if I go to Kansas I find a large immigration there; I find a large immigration in Dakota and Iowa—there is a large immigration all along the line. Now, I say that Canada, having a population of four millions and a half, ought to furnish to the North-West Territories at least as large a population, supplemented, as it is, by foreign immigration, as the United States furnish to the territory of Dakota alone. But it has not done that. Ten years, fifteen years ago, the population of Dakota and the North-West Territories and Manitoba were about equal. In 1870 the population of Manitoba was taken at 15,000, and the population of Dakota was about the same. To-day the population of Dakota is nearly four times as great as that of Manitoba and the North-West Territories taken together; and the Canadian settlers in Dakota are more numerous than they are in Manitoba and the North-West Territories taken together.

Mr. ROSS. How many Canadians are there in Manitoba and the North-West Territories?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not remember the precise number at the moment. There is certainly not a very large number of foreign immigrants, although these statistics of the Department of Agriculture lead us to believe that a great majority of those who have gone there had been brought into the country by a large expenditure of money.

Mr. McNEILL. Would the hon. gentleman kindly tell us how many Canadians there are in Manitoba?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman can easily find that information for himself by five minutes' labor in the Library. The population of Dakota last year, I think, was something over 400,000.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman said there were more Canadians in Dakota than in our North-West. He said he did not know how many there were in Manitoba, and now he tells us he does not know how many there are in Dakota.

Mr. MILLS. Neither do I, but I remember the result.

Mr. ROSS. There are 33,613 Canadians in Dakota, by the census of 1885. I think there were more Canadians than that in Manitoba and the North-West, and he will agree with me that there is a census.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman has given us the census of 1885.

Mr. ROSS. This is taken from a statement of the Governor of the territory of Dakota,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The information I am giving was obtained from a gentleman who assisted in taking the census, and is connected with the Census Department of Dakota. The census I refer to was taken in 1886.

Mr. ROSS. There was no census in 1886.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I know better. I say, moreover, that the census I mentioned were taken by a gentleman who left Manitoba, and who was employed there, and who gave the number of Canadians in his own district as 1,123 families out of 1,135.

Mr. ROSS. This was sent to me by the Governor of Dakota, not three months ago, as the census of Canadians in Dakota.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then, according to the hon. gentleman's own statement, there are over 35,000 in the territory of Dakota alone. Now, let me remind the committee of the fact that the hon. gentleman who has been Minister of Agriculture, who has made reports as such for several years, has represented the immigration into that country as upwards of 110,000. They have left that country. Where have they gone? Every one knows that the great majority of those who left that country, crossed the border and settled in Dakota.

Mr. McNEILL. No.

Mr. MILLS. I say they have.

Mr. McNEILL. I say they have not.

Mr. MILLS. Well, the hon. gentleman may be able to give the House information to show that they have not. They are, at all events, not found in this country.

Mr. McNEILL. That is not the fact, either.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman knows that, so far as this country is concerned, there was a smaller number of settlers of foreign birth in 1881 than there was in 1871 notwithstanding the extraordinary immigration that is reported by the Department of Agriculture. The census shows that, and yet the hon. Minister would now ask the committee to believe that those people did not go into the United States, but returned to the old Provinces. That is not the case. To revert to the original statement, to which I called the attention of the Minister, that it was high time the Government turned its attention to the causes of the failure of the policy which they have adopted and the necessity for a remedy, I have no question whatever that the policy for the settlement of the North-West has failed, and we should all turn our attention, after the expenditure of $80,000,000 upon that country, to the adoption of a policy that would enable us to reimburse ourselves for the large sum we have invested there.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think I will meet the views of the hon. gentlemen from the North-West and Manitoba, all of whom, notwithstanding the remarks of hon. gentlemen opposite that they are too willing to agree with the views of the Government, have been most persistent in their efforts to have their views, not only in this matter, but in some other matters carried out—at all events I will, to some extent, meet their views by substituting 1887 for 1886 in line 12. I may say there is a class of persons in the North-West, crofters, who came under clause 28 of the old Dominion Lands Act of 1883, by which emigrants were permitted to create charges on their lands. Many of those people will have completed their homestead duties—and they make excellent settlers—but they will not have paid off their liens, as they have not yet been able to do so. Under this clause, as it appears, they will be prevented from obtaining all the advantage that an ordinary settler possesses who pays off his land at once. I propose to meet their case by adding after the word "certificate" the following:

Or any person who has been permitted by section 38 of Dominion Lands Act, 1883, to create a charge on his homestead and had completed his homestead duties on 2nd June, 1887, shall be permitted to make a homestead entry.

Other persons may create a lien the moment they get a patent; these people have created a lien before; and that is all the difference.

Mr. WATSON. I move that a clause be inserted to provide that the price for preemptions in Manitoba and in the North-West shall be reduced to $1 per acre.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I hope the hon. gentleman will not press this amendment. At all events it is no use taking a vote in committee, and if he wishes to divide the House, he can do so on the third reading.

Mr. WATSON. If it is not accepted by the Minister, it is no use pressing it.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I will not accept it for a moment.

Mr. WATSON. I, therefore, do not press it.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). It will be remembered that last year we made provision for companies who desire to promote immigration into this country. They were permitted to make advances to settlers, upon those settlers' lands and upon their homesteads, under certain conditions. Under that law we required, however, that one-half of the money loaned should be devoted to the erection of a building upon the homestead. I find all those advancing money are very strongly opposed to this provision, and as the sense of the House, evidenced in the change already made as to habitable instead of substantial dwelling, would seem to indicate that $300 is more than sufficient to be invested in a building or a homestead, I think the settler should have the advantage given in another direction. I propose to change the clause so as to read that one-half may be devoted for that purpose.

Mr. DAVIN. I beg to move that the following words in clause 6 of section 38 of the Dominion Lands Act be added as sub-clause b:—

In addition to these cases herein provided for by the said Act any person claiming a patent for homestead or for homestead and preemption who has completed three years of residence required by the Act on or before 1st July, 1886, shall be entitled thereto upon proving that he has erected on his homestead a habitable dwelling, and his family has bona fide resided thereon and cultivated the homestead for six months of the three years, as required by clause 38 of the said Act.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I hope the hon. gentleman will not press this amendment. It simply means that a man entering for a homestead with a family has his homestead duties performed by his family, while he goes elsewhere seeking employment. It would be a very great misfortune to adopt this amendment, because the whole principle of our homesteading system is that the man shall become a farmer in the North-West. It would be giving an opportunity for men to take up land and send their families on it for the summer, and at the end of three years obtain a patent, when the whole family would return to town at the end of the time.

Mr. DAVIN. If it is not acceptable to the Minister, it is no use dividing the committee on it, and I will let it drop.

Mr. DALY. I desire to add the following clause:—

All assignments or transfers of a homestead or preemption right or agreement to assign or transfer any homestead or preemption right, or any part thereof, after patent obtained, and all conveyances, mortgages and charges heretofore made, entered into or given, for valuable consideration, before the issue of the patent, shall be valid, and shall be binding to all intents and purposes on the person making or giving the same, and their assigns in cases where the patents are issued to such persons or their assigns, after the making or giving the same; and the homestead or preemption right shall not be forfeited thereby, but this section shall not affect pending suits or actions.

In the Dominion Lands Act of 1879, by section 17, it was provided that all assignments and transfers of homesteads before the issue of the patents, except hereinafter mentioned, shall be null and void. The proviso in that clause read as follows:—

“Provided the person whose homestead may have been recommended for patent by local agent may assign or transfer his right or title, &c.”

So the committee will see that, according to that provision, the recommendation for patents was obtained from the local agent. In 1883 the Dominion Lands Act amending the Act of 1879 was passed, and it provided the form of recommendation for patent, and it also provided that as soon as an applicant obtained a recommendation for patent, signed by the Commissioner of Dominion Lands, he could sell and dispose of it just as he saw fit. Well, hon. gentlemen will understand that, owing to the fact of no form of recommendation being given in the Act of 1879, and owing to the fact of the recommendation for a patent coming from the local agents, a great deal of trouble has arisen in connection with the titles to Dominion lands. For instance, a number of men there gave land for school sites. They took an acre off their homesteads and conveyed it by an agreement for sale, or gave a bond for a deed to the school corporation, and it was registered against the land. Well, when the homesteader came to get his patent, or sought to get a loan upon his land, the solicitor for the mortgagees would find this bond or agreement in the abstract of title, and consequently it would form a cloud on the title, as having been an assignment or transfer made prior to the issue of the patent. All we ask is that an amendment be made applying it to all assignments or transfers or agreements made and entered into prior to the 25th of May, 1883, the date upon which the Act was assented to. I admit that since the Act of 1883, provided the farmer got a certificate of recommendation, and provided also the assignment was made before that date, any person making such an assignment would make it with his eyes open, and he should know that he made it strictly without the law. But I think that when such matters were so loosely done as they were prior to the Act of 1883, some remedial legislation is necessary. Mr. Justice Killam of our Province, in his judgment in the case of Rankin vs. Harris, has held that these assignments were null and void against the parties. In addition to that, a number of men who gave mortgages—the solicitors accepting them and registering them prior to the date of recommendation of patent—are repudiating them now, so that I think it is not too much to ask that a clause should be inserted whereby this state of things can be remedied. Hon. gentlemen will understand that I wish this only to apply to cases where patents have subsequently issued to such persons as made agreements, or to their assigns or any person to whom they have sold.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I hope the hon. gentleman will not press this amendment. It means simply that a number of people lent money to settlers in the North-West contrary to the law, and before the settlers were entitled to effect such loans, and now they want these acts legalised. It has been decided that the liens were improperly imposed; whatever the settler did or knew, the men lending the money knew what the law was, and that the settler had no right to create a lien without a recommendation of patent having been issued. I think it would be dangerous if we should admit that persons, after violating the law, could come to Parliament and get Parliament to sanction their acts. I hope the amendment will not carry.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. SCARTE. There is another clause in the old Act, with regard to loans, which I would like the Minister to take into consideration. At present, persons advancing money to immigrants coming out to the country cannot get a lien until the whole money is advanced. Then the details have to be gone through with, connected with making the advance, the examination of the parties, and so on; after that the borrower may be permitted to give the lien. Now, in the case of an immigrant coming out from the old country, the lender goes on and puts up a house for him, or buys him implements, or cattle, so that the advance sometimes takes six or seven months to complete. Occasionally parties abandon their homesteads, and these homesteads become the property of the parties who have made the advance, subject to certain conditions which are explained in the Dominion Lands Act. Under the present Act, it is impossible to get a lien until these advances have all been made; so that if a party makes an advance and any of those to whom he makes the advance abandon the land in the meantime, he has literally no security at all. I would like to see some such amendment as this: that, in the first place, an agreement can be made between the party lending and the party borrowing; that a lien can be taken for the amount that the lender agrees to lend; that after the whole advance has been made the Minister of the Interior may cause an examination to be made, and if he finds that no advance has been made at all he may cancel the lien; or if he finds that portions of it have been made he may cancel it to the extent of the amount which has not been advanced. I have not drawn the clause, but that would be the effect of it.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I hope the hon. gentleman will be good enough not to press the amendment to-night. If he will draft the amendment and hand it to me, we will look at it and see whether anything can be done in the way he suggests. The general objection I have to it, at first sight—although we may be able to find a way of doing it—is this: that it is contrary to the principle of the law which prevents the settler from giving liens on property, the title of which still remains in the Crown. Now, this is a proposal that a company lending money may say to a settler, we undertake to give you, say $600; we take a lien for the whole amount but we will dole the money out as you require it. Of course, the check will be that the land agent has to examine all those accounts afterwards, before the lien is completed. However, the matter can be looked into before the third reading, which will not take place till Tuesday, and we will see if we can find some way of meeting the hon. gentleman's views.

Bill reported with amendment.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Additional public building, Wellington street,
Ottawa..... $200,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost of the building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The total cost, including the site, heating, furniture, &c., will be $650,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a fine building, but that seems a very large sum. Have any material alterations been made in the contract since it was let?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the same quality of stone to be used all through?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. After a good deal of trouble, and after the contractor offered different samples, the chief architect accepted one sample, which is the stone now used.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where is that particular stone obtained?

Mr. SCARTH.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It comes from New Brunswick—from Newcastle, I think.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it not very expensive to bring it up?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; it was found that the stone could be got at a fair price, and the rates on the Intercolonial Railway and the Grand Trunk for bringing it up there are as low as they could be made.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that this stone has been obtained as cheaply as a stone of equal quality could be got, or of equal quality to that used in the other buildings?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. I found that we could not get stone of equal quality and as pure and regular in the neighborhood, except at a long distance, and I was told that it would cost more than this. Of course the contractor himself, who asked for this stone, saw that it would be in his interest to take it in preference to any other, and, as it happened to be approved of by the chief architect, it was accepted.

Mr. WELDON. Is anything extra allowed him for the purpose of getting this stone?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. WELDON. When the contract was first let, I think the stone was furnished from a quarry in the county of Albert, just about the time the bye-election was held there.

Amount required for construction of Port Arthur Harbor and for Kaministiquia River.....$90,000

Mr. DAWSON. I would like to make a few remarks upon this vote, as I am familiar with the locality and can give some information regarding it. This grant is for dredging the river and improving the harbor at Port Arthur. The breakwater is producing an excellent harbor, and the work is going on admirably and well. The dredging is also going on very satisfactorily. No accident, such as an ice jam, has occurred for many years, and the river is constantly becoming better adapted for shipping purposes. I am happy to say that the rivalry between the two places has long been at an end, both striving together to make one excellent harbor, with street cars and railways connecting them. When the works in both places are completed, there will be an immense harbor there, and it will be more than all required, for the shipping of Lake Superior is destined to be very large indeed. I read a short extract the other night from a very imperfect return which I had found in a newspaper, showing the extent of the traffic of Lake Superior. I have since received all the way from Washington very exact returns of the shipping of Lake Superior passing through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, of which the harbor of Port Arthur will of course get its share. This statement, which will be very valuable for reference, is as follows:—

“COMMERCE ON SAINT MARY'S FALLS CANAL, 1886.

“REPORTS OF LIEUTENANT-COLONEL B. M. POZ, CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

“UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,

“Detroit, Mich., December 29, 1886.

“SIR,—I beg leave to invite special attention to the report of this date upon the commerce of Saint Mary's Falls Canal, and to suggest the propriety of transmitting it to Congress, for use in connection with the question of an appropriation for continuing the enlargement of Saint Mary's Falls Canal, as all the information relating to the commercial statistics in possession of this office is therein tabulated in the most compact form.

“I am, Sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

“G. M. POE,

“Lt. Col. of Engineers, Vol. Brig. Gen., U. S. A.

“THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, U. S. A.

II.
" UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
"Detroit, December 29, 1886.

" SIR,—I have the honor to submit the following report upon the commerce passing the Saint Mary's Falls Canal during the season of 1886, just closed. Statistics for the season are necessarily those of the calendar year.

" The canal was open to navigation 224 days, the first vessel having passed on the 25th of April and the last on the 4th of December, thus making the season 13 days longer than in 1885.

" On the 15th of July 87 vessels were passed through the locks, this being the greatest number in any one day in the history of the canal.

" The average number of vessels passing per day during the month of June was 40; during July, 41 1/2; and during August, 40 1/2 or for the three months a daily average of 40 1/2 vessels. The daily average freight tonnage for the same period was 23,371 tons.

" The largest freight tonnage ever passed in one day was on the 28th of July, 1886, when 63 vessels, carrying 43,442 tons, were locked through.

" From the following comparative statement (table No 1) it will be seen that the registered tonnage passing the canal during the season was 4,219,397 tons, and the freight tonnage 4,527,759 tons. The ratio of increase over the year 18 5 was 39 per cent. in each case.

" The increase in freight tonnage over that of 1885 was 1,271,131 tons, of which 67 per cent. was in the single item of iron ore, although there was an increase in every item of freight except silver ore.

" The same table shows the approximate value of the freight. The same valuations are used as in the corresponding statement for 1885, which, for convenience of reference, is repeated. The aggregate for 1886 is $69,090,071 95, being an increase of 29 per cent. over the aggregate value of 1885.

" For convenient reference Table No. 2 has been prepared, to show the business of the canal from the beginning, and constitutes a most interesting exhibit. The growth of the commerce of the Lake Superior region, and through it that of the great North-West, is very readily traced, not only in quantity, but in the items composing the aggregate.

" I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

" O. M. POE,

" Lt. Col. of Engineers, Bvt. Brig. Gen., U.S.A.

" THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, U. S. A.

STATEMENT of the commerce through Saint Mary's Falls Canal for each calendar year from its opening in 1855.

Table with columns: Year, Sailing vessels, Steamers, Unregistered craft, Total passages, Total lockages, Tonnage (Registered, Actual freight), Passengers, Coal, Flour, Wheat, Grain, other than wheat, Manufactured and pig iron, Salt, Copper, Iron ore, Lumber, M. ft., B. M., Silver ore and bullion, Building stone, Date of opening, Date of closing.

a No record kept until 1864.

b No record kept until 1879.

c No record kept until U. S. assumed control of canal in 1881.

d No record was kept until the United States assumed control of the canal in June, 1881.

e None shipped from Lake Superior until 1870.

f None shipped from Lake Superior until 1867.

An immense increase has occurred in the shipping of Lake Superior in the last few years, until it now amounts to 4,500,000 tons yearly; Port Arthur itself showed half a million tons in one year; and considering these facts, I think breakwaters and canals should be the order of the day up there. If the North-West is to come anything near our expectations, the harbor of Port Arthur will require to be one of great capacity to accommodate all the fleets of Lake Superior.

Mr. LISTER. While considering the item, it may be proper for me to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that a petition has been sent from Point Edward, on the River St. Clair, asking the Government to take steps to remove the sand bar in the river. I would suggest that the work be done immediately, as Point Edward is a very important point, being a terminus of the Grand Trunk, and for the crossing of a large number of boats trading between Chicago and the Point. It is a matter of the greatest importance to the shipping interests of the upper lakes that the work should be done immediately. Last fall, the attention of the hon. the Minister was directed to this, but the natural obstacles were such that the work could not be then undertaken. All that is required is the service of a dredge for a few days, and as the sand bar is getting worse from week to week. I hope the hon. Minister will take steps to have it removed without delay.

Mr. CAMPBELL (Kent). After the dredge has removed the sand bar at Point River, it could go on to the mouth of the River Thames and remove the sand bar there also. Deputations waited on the Government, some time ago, to have that removed, and I believe the Minister of Public Works gave the matter some attention. I assure him it is very necessary this work should be done, and while it will cost but a few days work with the dredge to remove that sand bar, its removal will be of great benefit to that part of the country.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I observe the hon. gentleman is asking for this appropriation of $90,000. It is in part to be applied for the improvement of Port Arthur harbor and in part for the improvement of the Kaministiquia River. I may congratulate hon. gentlemen opposite on the extraordinary revolution their views have undergone with regard to this river. Not many years ago, hours were spent in the discussion for the purpose of showing how useless was the river for all purposes of convenience in navigation. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), who was then First Minister and Minister of Public Works, was charged with acts of folly, and, in the other Chamber, a committee was appointed to enquire into his conduct with reference to making Port William, rather than Port Arthur, the terminus of the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. When hon. gentlemen opposite came into office, they adopted the extraordinary course of advertising for tenders for the construction of a lighthouse at Port Arthur; but they went further in the advertisement, they asked for tenders for the demolition of the lighthouse and the range light at the mouth of the Kaministiquia. So satisfied were they that the policy of the hon. member for East York was wrong, that, not content with taking steps to construct the lighthouse at Port Arthur they insisted on destroying the range light and the lighthouse at the mouth of the Kaministiquia. Hon. gentlemen opposite were then remonstrated with by the municipal council of Port William, which offered, if the Government would retain the range light and the lighthouse at the mouth of the Kaministiquia, to keep up the light there at their own expense, and they did so for some years after the hon. gentlemen opposite came into office. When the Canadian Pacific Railway contract was entered into, and the construction of the road begun, and its management was directed with the view of obtaining public business, the Canadian Pacific Railway entertained somewhat different views from those entertained by the Government, and pointed out this river as a place for shipping. The views of the Government then underwent a revolution; they undertook to improve the entrance at the mouth of the river, and once more assumed control of the range light and lighthouse. The right hon. gentleman gave out, at that time, to the country, that my hon. friend had committed an act of incredible folly in the purchase of the Neebing hotel for the use of public officers at that point, and photographs, and wood engravings, and lithographs of this building were made to do duty in the elections of 1873. I believe the First Minister has visited that point and seen the building, and I suppose he has come to the conclusion that my hon. friend from East York made a good bargain when he purchased it. In all these matters, time has shown that my hon. friend from East York was right in his conclusions and the hon. gentleman wrong, and that the views entertained by the hon. member for East York have since been adopted by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and forced on the Government by that corporation. In this, we have a further vindication of the course pursued by the hon. member for East York, in the appropriation asked for by this vote. The hon. gentleman asks for $90,000, a part of which is to go towards the further improvement of the entrance to the river. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will be able to tell us how this sum is to be divided—how much is to be expended on the Kaministiquia River and how much at Port Arthur.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. About $30,000 will go to the Kaministiquia, and we expect that will complete. The depth of water will be eighteen feet in the centre.

Mr. MILLS. Is the whole sum to be expended in deepening the entrance?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Not only the entrance, but further up as well.

Mr. MILLS. The dredging to be done is clay cutting.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.)

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The silt is not large, and the bottom is good; it is clay.

Mr. DAWSON. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) seems to take a great deal of delight in raking up these old sores about the Kaministiquia.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There are no sores on our side.

Mr. DAWSON. But it is not exactly correct as to fact. When the lights were abandoned on the Kaministiquia, there had been a terrible flood. There was one of those periodic floods which came and silted up the river, so that the lights were of no use except to vessels of very light draught. They were not removed, but were simply left to the people to take charge of, and I think the people of that municipality have a good claim to be paid for the time they did take charge of them, because I do not think it was a very liberal thing to give them up. The hon. gentleman has dwelt on the beauties of the Neebing hotel. It is certainly a beautiful place, high up upon the Kaministiquia, but allow me to tell the hon. gentleman, that those people to whom he has referred, who are now establishing themselves on the Kaministiquia, are not up at the Neebing hotel, but at the mouth of the river, which they consider the best place for building up a town. It is there that the Canadian Pacific Railway have built their elevators; it is there that merchants are going in and putting up stores, and it is there that you see every evidence of a thriving and growing place. The people are now forming a combination to run the street cars into the town of Port Arthur, and they expect to make one town and harbor of the two places. It is very kind of the hon. gentleman to refer to these early stories in reference to these places, and I am sure the people up there will be glad to read his remarks and will be all very much inclined to laugh at them.

Cape Tormentine Harbor, N.B. $100,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is a revote.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What has been done there?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The work is under contract, and the contractors have proceeded slowly, but they have still a year under their contract to complete the work. Therefore I was not in a position to take it out of their hands. I hope they will be able to complete their contract, though they have gone on slowly.

Mr. DAVIES. Will this vote complete their contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Not quite. We will require about $30,000 more, perhaps $40,000 more. The contractors are Messrs. Strachan & Perkins.

Public Buildings, N. S. $19,700

Mr. JONES. What was the contract for the Yarmouth post office?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount of the contract is $17,228.

Mr. JONES. Were there any estimates?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. Then there are the furniture and fittings and the heating and the footpaths, and fencing, the gas and fixtures, these amount to $7,393.

Mr. JONES. What were the extras for the contractor?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I hope there will be none. I try to reduce that as much as possible.

Mr. BORDEN. Has the Minister decided upon the site for the Kentville post office and public building? It is not included in this vote, but it is one of last year's votes.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The site has not been purchased.

Mr. BORDEN. Would the Minister kindly inform me what progress has been made, what was the nature of the report? He sent an officer there, and I would like to know why the site has not been purchased, and what progress has been made?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In regard to these sites, we try to find what will suit the place and the purposes of the Government as to a central place and so on. Sometimes we cannot find a proper place available, or the price is too large, or there are two or three sites in the market, and we try to make the best bargain possible for the interests of the Government. I have no doubt that in this case we have not been able to come to a conclusion. There are several places where we have had negotiations for over a year. This is one of those cases.

Mr. BORDEN. I would ask further what sort of building it is proposed to construct there. What was the estimate?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot state that now, but it is a building in accordance with the population of the place and the business. If it is a large place, with a large business, it requires a large accommodation and we must expend more money. If it is a city like Toronto, Montreal or Halifax, we must have a larger building, and, if it is a small place, we must limit ourselves.

Mr. BORDEN. It is not quite as large as Toronto, but it is an important place. There are three offices there now, the post office, the savings bank and the customs. I suppose it would be intended to provide for those three in the same building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, the intention was to put all the offices together.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I see that there is no provision made for the public building at Lunenburg, for which a vote was taken last year. Early in the Session, I asked the Minister of Public Works whether it was intended to make any provision this Session, and the answer was that it was under consideration. That is two months ago. I ask now whether it has been considered, and whether it is the intention of the Government to make provision for the building in the Supplementary Estimates?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not in a position to answer that now. When the Supplementary Estimates come down the hon. gentleman will see what the action of Council is, but it is not customary to announce that before we bring down the Estimates. As a rule, unless we see our way clear to have a site, we do not ask more money until the site is purchased. If I saw that, in this case, the site could be purchased in a very short time, I would recommend to my colleagues a different course as to the money required to proceed with the work.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I understood that the site was purchased.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Well, perhaps so.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I would like the Minister to explain why the Government thought it important enough to admit that a public building was necessary at the town of Lunenburg last year and voted $4,000, and make no appropriation for it this year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not know whether there will be any in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. KIRK. Was this $4,000 expended?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have a note here that the site was purchased, but no further action was authorised. I do not know whether the title was obtained. When we make arrangements with a party to obtain a lot, and the amount is stated, we refer the whole matter to the Minister of Justice, who employs some one to look after the title. When the title is declared to be good, then a check is issued in favor of the Minister of Justice to pay the amount. In this case I am not in a position to say whether that was done.

Mr. JONES. Perhaps the Minister of Public Works is carrying out the policy announced by the Minister of Marine the other day, when he informed the House that, on the recommendation of a gentleman entirely unconnected with the county, a certain public work was to be commenced in Shelburne county; and as I notice that a gentleman recently made his appearance here, who formerly represented Lunenburg in this House, perhaps he has been sent for to give the hon. gentleman some information on the subject which my hon. friend has brought to his attention to-night, but the hon. gentleman knows that Lunenburg is a very important place, much larger and more important than many other places, not only in Nova Scotia but in other parts of the Dominion, where public works have been constructed, and I think the Government would discharge their responsibility to the public if they would not allow a matter of that kind to interfere with the interests of the public in a matter of so much importance.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Do I understand the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) to say there would be any impropriety in the Government consulting or accepting the advice of a gentleman who represented the county of Lunenburg in this House with great ability, whose zeal in the interests of that county could not be surpassed by any person? I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether, when the Government of which he was a member was in power, they accepted the advice of gentlemen who were opposed to them in this House. The hon. gentleman knows that that was not the case. He knows that they consulted those in whom they had confidence, those in whose advice they could repose confidence, because they were supporters of the Government. The hon. gentleman, therefore, must not sneer at the presence here of the gentleman who so long and so ably represented the county of Lunenburg in this House. All I can say is, if the hon. gentleman who now has the honor of representing that county in this House, is half as zealous, and takes half as much interest in the progress of that county, as Mr. Kaulbach took when in this House, it will be greatly to the advantage of the county, and the county will have nothing to complain of on the part of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. JONES. The hon. gentleman is anxious to know whether the Government of which I was a member sought information and advice from our political opponents. We certainly did not, as the hon. gentleman very well knows. But, at the same time, I think he will search in vain the annals of Parliament, and the Hansard reports of what took place in this House, to find any such announcement ever made by a Minister of the Crown in this House, that, on the recommendation of a person who had contested a county and been defeated, they were going to make an appropriation for a public work in the county which he could not represent. I instanced the improper, the highly improper, answer which the Minister of Marine gave to an enquiry the other night, made by my hon. friend from Shelburne (Mr. Robertson), about a lighthouse in that county, and I said I supposed it was going to be taken as a precedent by the gentleman who, it was freely understood about the corridors of this House, had telegraphed for the late representative of Lunenburg to come here to negotiate, and to get the credit of certain negotiations which the Government felt themselves bound to make under their promise last year, in regard to certain railway subsidies in that county; so that the hon. gentleman who represents that county in this House might not have the credit of having obtained that subsidy during the time he represented that county. Now, while I freely admit that the Government have a perfect right to consult who they like in their own interest. I do claim that the answer given by the Minister of Marine was a highly improper one, which I hope never to hear repeated in this House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can only say that the hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. If he had sat longer in this House, he would have learned that Ministers have been accustomed, again and again, to state the grounds on which they had been led to make an appropriation. They have stated that they received a petition from the county, and they have stated the numbers to that petition, again and again. I say there is no statement that they could make, more proper or more appropriate than that they had done it on the advice of a gentleman who had taken a great interest in the matter, and had brought the subject before the Government, and pressed it upon their notice earnestly, as being greatly in the interest of the county—a gentleman who had gone down from the city of Halifax to contest the county and had polled all but a majority against a gentleman who had long sat in this House, and had long represented this county? And does the hon. gentleman say that he had no right to offer advice, to say that, having had the great honor of being invited to be a candidate in the county, and having polled all but a majority of the county in which he was almost an entire stranger? Why it is absurd to say that a gentleman in that position has not a perfect right to advocate the interests of the people of that county in procuring a work which is desired by them, and is, in his judgment, in the interest of the county. I say he would be failing in his duty, and he would be ungrateful for the support he has received, if he did not use that position, and use the influence he had acquired as a friend of the Government, impressing, in the strongest way he could, the claims of the county. I say it has been constantly done in this House by gentlemen upon both sides when in power—

Mr. JONES. Never.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER—to state the grounds on which they had made an appropriation, and state from whom they had obtained advice.

Mr. JONES. If the hon. gentleman says that it has been customary to regard petitions emanating from people in certain counties, relating to public matters, that would be a perfectly correct proceeding. But in this case they have no such plea; and they are accepting the advice of a gentleman who failed to obtain a majority of the votes of that county, who is not a representative of that county; and, as I said before, the hon. gentleman will search in vain the records of this House to find an answer ever given to an hon. member such as that given by the Minister of Marine the other night.

Mr. LISTER. The Minister of Finance, with his usual positiveness, has made assertions that he is unable to prove. As the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Jones) has said, the answer the Minister of Marine gave here the other night is without precedent in the records of Parliament. He may smile, but I tell him that it was just such an answer as I would have expected him to give. People have a perfect right to petition the Government of the day for any improvement that might be necessary in their counties, but when you come to consider the facts of this case, I say they are simply disgraceful. Major General Laurie was taken down into the county for the purpose of contesting the seat. He was sent down there by the Government; he had never been in the county before; he knows no person in that county. He went down there at the instance of the Minister of Finance, who left his duties in England and came over to this country for the purpose of carrying Nova Scotia in the way that he knows how it was done. Now, Sir, Major General Laurie was sent down there, and he was a stranger in that county. He knows nothing whatever about this lighthouse; he never was on the spot, he never saw it. A gentleman who has had the honor to represent that constituency in this House for four or five years, and has done so creditably, asked for the construction of a lighthouse on that point. After the elections were over, the man sent down there to contest that constituency by the Government, with the money of the Government, is sent for to come up here. The Government knows that the present sitting member (Mr. Robertson) has been petitioned against. They know that the result of the answer made by the Minister will have an effect upon the electors of that county in case another election is brought on; they know it will assist favorably Major General Laurie, and the Minister of Marine rises in this House and makes a statement such as has never been made here before. I can excuse him, as he is young and green in the business, as he has only been in office three or four years.

Mr. JONES,

Mr. FOSTER. What was the statement?

Mr. LISTER. You know what the statement was perfectly well. In seeking to assist Major General Laurie, whoever he may be, he was brought up to Ottawa, he was wined and dined by the Minister of Finance and other hon. gentlemen, and he goes back to the county to tell the people of the county that he has done so much for them in Ottawa, when in fact he has done nothing at all. The answer was a disgraceful one, and the motive and object for which it was made are perfectly obvious to every person, and if another election shall take place it will fail in securing the object which the Minister of Finance and the other Minister had when they made that answer. Mr. Robertson, the member for Shelburne, has represented that constituency with remarkable ability in this House for eight or nine years, and the Minister of Finance by rising and ignoring the sitting member, the gentleman returned by a majority of the electors and the member who put the question, insulted him, he insulted the constituency and it was anything but creditable to the Minister who made that answer.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not rise to enter into any kind of wordy contest with my hon. friend opposite, who is generally good natured. I think, however, it would be well to have stated the whole truth, a thing which I know it is sometimes quite difficult to do.

Mr. LISTER. For whom to do? For me to do? I ask the Minister: does he say I do not tell the truth? Because I will put the question to him outside, if he makes that statement.

Mr. McMULLEN. He dare not say it outside.

Mr. LISTER. I will not permit any one here or elsewhere to make that statement.

Mr. FOSTER. I was proceeding to say that it would be quite as well to state the whole truth. I am quite willing to take any responsibility that attaches to me for the answer I made. The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) and the hon. member who has just sat down, would lead the House to believe that I stated that a light would be given on the recommendation of Major General Laurie. I did not state that. I stated more, and it would be only common honesty to give my whole statement and not part of it. I said the matter was drawn to my attention and recommended by Major General Laurie, and I stated that it had been recommended by my officers who have the examination of those matters, and it was upon those recommendations that I decided to put the light there.

Mr. MILLS. I do not subscribe at all to the doctrine laid down by the Minister of Finance. He would undertake to ignore the representative of the county whenever that representative happens to be a member opposed to the Administration. The hon. gentleman seems to go upon the assumption that the public money is, for the time being, under the control of the Government and is the private property of the Government, and is to form so much patronage placed at their disposal. I contest that position altogether. I maintain that the Government are trustees, not merely for those of their own way of thinking, but for the whole people of the country, and that the only proper exponent of the views of the people in any constituency is the member whom the majority of the electors have returned to Parliament as the exponent of their views. The hon. gentleman has laid down the doctrine that the Government must consult their own friends, that they have confidence only in the judgment of their own friends. The hon. gentleman assumes that no member on this side of the House can form an accurate view of the propriety of any improvement within the constituency he represents, and, therefore, his judgment is not to be relied upon. Yet the hon. gentleman has told my hon. friend that if he was half as attentive to his constituents as was the hon. gentleman who preceded him as the representative of that constituency, it would be well for the constituency. Why, what would be the advantage to the constituency for the hon. gentleman to be attentive or assiduous, if the doctrine laid down by the hon. gentleman is to prevail? What would be the advantage of my hon. friend going to the Minister of Finance and making a recommendation with respect to any public improvement within his constituency, if the Government have not the slightest confidence in any opinion he may express? How is he to prevail with the Minister? For what purpose is he to go and consult the Minister, or advise the Minister with respect to any expenditure with respect to his constituency? I reject the doctrine altogether. It is right for the Government to control the patronage of the country with regard to official appointments. They will appoint, and we will expect them to appoint, public officers when positions become vacant, but with those appointments their patronage ceases. They have no right to undertake to make expenditure in a constituency merely for the purpose of promoting their party interests. It is their business to consult the public good, and I am as much entitled, and my hon. friend is as much entitled to the expenditure of public money, from revenues which our constituents contribute to make up, as much as hon. gentlemen who support the Administration. It is the duty of the Government, it is a duty required of them by their oath of office, to make those public expenditures where the public needs require, regardless of the political complexion of the constituency; and the hon. gentleman when he comes here and lays down the doctrine that because a constituency returns a member in opposition to the Government, that member is not to be heard, that his opinion is to have no weight upon any question affecting the interests of his constituency, he lays down a doctrine for which he can find no support in the constitutional history of the Mother Country.

Mr. BOWELL. Did you act on that principle when you were on this side of the House?

Mr. MILLS. We acted on no other. The hon. gentleman may laugh. Where did the present Government build their post offices and public buildings? Was it in constituencies represented by members supporting the Administration? Did we not lay down the principle that public buildings must be erected in the cities and towns with the largest population, and from which the Government obtained the largest revenue? And did we not loyally adhere to that principle, no matter who represented the constituency in which those buildings were to be erected? The hon. gentleman knows that is the case.

Mr. BOWELL. Give an illustration. I know it is not the case.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MILLS. That was the rule we acted on. What is the rule on which hon. gentlemen opposite act? There is not a town or village, there is not a place where the revenue of the post office would not pay interest on one-tenth of the cost of the building, where a building will not be erected if the constituency is represented by an hon. member supporting the Government, and, if it will serve to strengthen the cause of the Government in that constituency. That has been done. That has been pointed out again and again, and the Minister of Public Works has read to-night a case where an appropriation has been made of $4,000. But so soon as the constituency elected a member opposed to the Administration, the appropriation was dropped and the public work was abandoned. That is the rule upon which hon. gentlemen go, and that is the rule which the Minister of Finance has stood up here to-night and advocated, when he attacked the position taken by my hon. friend the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones.)

Mr. EISENHAUR. The hon. the Minister of Finance says that the late member for Lunenburg represented that constituency so well that, if I represent it half as well, I will represent it very well indeed. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that the county of Lunenburg thought differently. The people of that county thought that Mr. Kaulbach did not represent the county well, and, therefore, they did not send him here at the last election. They saw that while every county to the east and west, to the north and south of it was getting grants from the Government, while large subsidies were given to railways in other parts of the country, the county of Lunenburg got a mere pittance of $4,000. Was Mr. Kaulbach representing the county well? I leave the hon. gentleman to answer. I tell the Government more, that they may refuse to give grants for public buildings in that county, or to vote subsidies for railways, there are matters of much greater importance to our people upon which an election would turn, viz.: the great extravagance of the present Government, their ruinous National Policy, the dissatisfaction existing in the country with the present restricted trade relations, which is hampering our trade with the United States, especially our trade in fish in their markets. These are the issues which would decide an election there at present. And so long as the Government adhere to their present trade policy, and the other questions to which I have referred, I think the county of Lunenburg will continue to send somebody else to represent them, with different views from the late member for the county.

Mr. JONES. I find, on referring to the debate here, that Mr. Gillmor asked the following question for Mr. Robertson:—

"Is it the intention of the Department of Marine to provide in the Estimates this Session for the erection of a harbor light at West Head, Cape Sable Island, Shelburne County, Nova Scotia?"

To which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries made the following reply:—

"A light has been asked for this place, and earnestly pressed by Major Laurie, and upon the favorable report of my officers I have decided to proceed with its construction this year."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BOWELL. Those are the exact words he used.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Laurie knew about as much about the place as I know about the Kaminstiquia River, which was spoken about this evening, and I know nothing about it. He knew nothing about the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. It was not necessary that he should.

Mr. JONES. How could he earnestly press it upon the Government, if he knew nothing about it? How could the hon. gentleman receive such a demand from a gentleman who knew nothing about it? The hon. gentleman says he is not required to know anything about it. Had he no reason for his opinion? Did he have a person to press upon his Department the erection of a lighthouse at a certain spot which he had never visited, and knew nothing about. Why, Sir, it is unworthy of the hon. gentleman to make such a reply. My hon. friend here has referred to this matter with respect to the patronage of the Department. Why, if you look through the administration of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), wherever a public work was required in the interest of the country at large, during that time, it was placed there. Look at the expenses which took place in the county of the Minister of Finance, during that time. Look at the expenses which took place in Colchester.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And in Hastings.

Mr. BOWELL. What took place in Hastings?

Mr. MILLS. A post office.

An hon. MEMBER. What was done in Colchester?

Mr. JONES. A large expenditure of money went on there, from time to time, and the hon. gentleman knows well enough that during the time that he was violently opposing the Minister of Public Works of that day, the Minister was doing everything he could to perfect the system in the county of which the hon. gentleman was not then the representative, but which had a representative in the Parliament opposing the policy of my hon. friend. During the whole administration of that Government they dealt with these matters in the public interest, and not at all with reference to other matters which came up for their consideration. It was done entirely in the public interest, apart from those who represented the particular constituencies.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know that this is a very profitable discussion; but those who have sat in the House for the last fifteen or twenty years, and particularly during the time the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) was Minister of the Interior, could hardly help smiling, could hardly help being, not only amused, but somewhat astonished, to hear the doctrines which he laid down as having been the principles which guided him and his party when they were in power. A few moments ago, when I asked a question as to what the late Minister of Public Works had spent in Hastings, that hon. gentleman had the coolness to say: "A post office." Not a dollar was spent by that Government; the land was bought since the present Government has been in power. The building was erected by the present Government, and the only lighthouse we have in the Bay of Quinté, west of the Narrows, to enable navigators to navigate safely, was put there by the present Government. And still the hon. gentleman has the coolness, in almost every speech he makes, to tell us, presuming that I had forgotten the circumstance, or knew nothing about it, that they erected a public building in Belleville. When I sat on that side of the House a post office became vacant in the gold regions in my county—El Dorado, as it is called—and not a Grit could be found in the neighborhood to fill the office. The Postmaster General kept the appointment back for six, seven or eight months—yes, for nearly a year—for I repeatedly called attention to the matter, when I sat in the place which is occupied at this moment by the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Brien). I asked him: Why have you not filled that office? Could you not get one of your party to take it, while you filled another office, five miles away, on my suggesting the name of a gentleman to whom, I said, he could have no objection, because he was a good Scotch Grit. But I could not get a part of the country served where it was thickly settled, because they could not get one of their own party to fill the office. The principle laid down by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is one so ridiculously absurd that every member of this House must have smiled when the hon. member was proclaiming it. We know that when they were in power every suggestion made by a member of the Conservative party, who were then in opposition, had no more effect than if we had whistled against the wind.

Mr. JONES.

Mr. GILLMOR. Was it right?

Mr. BOWELL. My honest friend from Charlotte, N.B., (Mr. Gillmor) asks me if it was right. If it were right then it is right now. I did not know that you should govern on different principles when you are in power from those on which you ask your opponents to govern the country when they are in power. If you were right, surely, if we follow in your footsteps, we must be right too. Everything in the whole system of government, in connection with patronage, is carried on upon this principle: You consult your friends when anything is to be done in a constituency, and it is the merest hypocrisy to preach or lay down any other doctrine, as being practiced by any political party in this country. I do not know how it may be in the other Provinces, but in my own Province, so far as the patronage of the Local Government is concerned, in the different ridings under the present administration in Ontario, that Government would think no more of applying to the member who represents it in the Local Legislature, if he does not happen to be a supporter of the Government, than they would think of applying to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) himself, or half as much. When the smallest two-penny-half-penny office is to be filled, in such a constituency, they apply to the gentleman who contested the election against the successful candidate, and that gentleman has the patronage of the riding.

Mr. LISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BOWELL. Let my hon. and pugnacious friend from Lambton keep quiet. He comes from my own county, and he has the characteristics of those who come from that county, but he got spoiled when he went to Lambton. If he had remained in Hastings, and his education had been a little different, he would have been in the place that is natural to him, and not where he is. The principle always laid down by hon. gentlemen opposite is the one that was applied in the case of my own election. A candidate was put forward against me, not with any expectation of carrying the riding, but they said: There is no doubt Sir John's Government is going out of power, and Dr. Sutton—who was my opponent, a very respectable man—will have the patronage of the riding. True, Bowell may be elected, but if Blake comes in, if we have anything to get, we will get it through Dr. Sutton. That is the principle upon which you all act.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. BOWELL. We do not desire to hide it. The hon. gentleman says no. I was going to say that I was rather surprised, but I am not. But the hon. gentleman knows as well as I do, and as every member in this House does that all party governments are carried on on that principle.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. BOWELL. When I asked the hon. gentleman to point out where the expenditure of money had taken place in constituencies represented by Conservatives, he failed to do so. He certainly did say Hastings, and instanced the post office. Well, the hon. gentleman who represents East Hastings (Mr. Burdett) will, perhaps, tell him that during the time Mr. Mackenzie was in power he did not lay a brick or a stone to erect any public building there. The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister), speaking of General Laurie, said he was sent to that constituency with the money of the Government. Immediately before that he stated that my hon. friend had made a statement which he could not prove. Now, I should like the hon. gentleman, and I say it in all sincerity, to sustain and substantiate, if he can, the charge he has made. It is very easy to rise and assert that the Government has misappropriated the public funds, because that is what it means; and when the hon. member for Lambton stated that the Government had appropriated the money of the country to send General Laurie to that constituency or anywhere else, except in the performance of his official military duties, he stated that which I venture to say, he is unable to sustain; and it would be just as well, when hon. gentlemen accuse others of making statements which they are unable to prove, that they should be able to prove charges of that kind which they hurl across the House against the Government. I know it is part of their policy to make broad statements and charges such as this, but I ask if it is fair. If the hon. gentleman has any evidence to show that the public funds of the country have been misappropriated in that way, let him produce the evidence, and let the Government take the responsibility and be condemned.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman has thought proper to say that if I had remained in the county of Hastings, I would have been on that side of the House. The county of Hastings is a very good place to be born in, but it is well to leave there early in life, and I did that when I was five years old, and I have no reason to regret either that I did that or that I am now on this side of the House. I say that notwithstanding all the patronage and all the sunshine that they boast of, I would not be on that side of the House supporting the Ministry to day. So far as the patronage is concerned, that is one thing; the expenditures of public money is another thing. Every Government give their offices to their own political friends, and I do not blame this Government for doing that. The hon. gentleman has talked about the Provincial Government appointing their friends to every small office. That is what they ought to do, and that is what they do.

Mr. BOWELL. What I said was that they consulted their political friends as to appointments in the constituency. I did not find any fault with them for that.

Mr. LISTER. There is no wrong in that. They fill their political offices with their friends, and you do the same. But so far as the public money of this country is concerned, that belongs to the whole people of this country, and the Government are simply trustees of that money—not to use it in buying up constituencies and political support, but to expend it as trustees ought to expend it, wholly in the public interest, and wherever public money ought to be expended. But has that been done by this Administration? Can anybody say that that has been the course they have pursued since they have been in power? I say emphatically no. The public records show that the Government have persistently pursued the policy of spending the public money where it would do them most good in procuring political support. We have only to turn over the blue-books of the Department of Public Works, to find that in the little town of Sussex, which has only 500 or 600 inhabitants, no less than $235,000 has been expended in public buildings; and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in addressing a public meeting there, said that if he was returned to power, he would have a ball put in those public buildings. Now, let us see how fairly the public money is expended. I represent a town having a population of 7,000 in a county having a population of 60,000, a place where a daily mail is distributed north, south, east and west, and that contributes annually to the public revenues of this country. It has an inland revenue office, a custom house, a weights and measures office and every other office which the Dominion Government has in places of importance. Yet we never hear a word of the Government erecting public buildings in that town. In the constituency adjoining mine, represented by Mr. Moncrieff, in a place of 4,000 or 5,000 inhabitants, and a place of some importance, the Government put up a building. Perhaps they were justified in doing so; I do not know; but, certainly, if it is necessary to put one there, the necessity is much greater in the town I come from. This is why members are led to expect that unless they support the Government in its good measures and bad measures, unless they stand behind them in everything they do, and become strict party men, they can expect nothing from the Government for their constituencies. I say this is a system of wholesale bribery and corruption, demoralising not only the members of this House, but whole constituencies. You have bought this country wholesale and in detail. The Minister of Finance leaves his office and snug home and $10,000 a year in London, and comes to this country for the purpose of carrying the elections in Nova Scotia. He goes into Nova Scotia and promises them railways by the dozen, I believe, and subsidies to no end. If Nova Scotia gets them, I suppose we will get them in Ontario; but I say that these pre-election promises are made for the purpose of buying support in order to continue themselves in office, much to the disadvantage of the country. We find that men who come here opposed to the Government cannot get from them the commonest measures of justice unless they turn around and support them. But I hope, and I thoroughly believe, there is not a man on this side of the House, come from what Province he may, whose back is not strong enough to stand upon his principles and pledges, and fight the Government on everything that is not in the public interest; and in doing that, I believe his acts will meet with the approbation of his constituents, and will strengthen instead of weakening him in their estimation. I repeat that this system is demoralising not only the members of this House, but the whole electorate of the country, and it has gone to a length that is unprecedented in the history of this country. It is disgraceful to say that an hon. member representing the large majority of a constituency or a county cannot approach the Government with a proposition that is fair and right on its face and expect to have it entertained. He is told, if not in plain words, at least by implication, that if he does not support the Government the Government will not grant the money which is necessary for public works in the interest of the country.

Mr. CAMERON. My hon. friend who has just resumed his seat says that where public money ought to be expended there it should be expended. My experience has been that the present Opposition, when in power, do not practice exactly what my hon. friend now preaches. In 1871, a very important work was undertaken by the Liberal-Conservative Government in the county of Inverness and put under contract. That work was prosecuted with considerable vigor until 1874, when my hon. friends opposite assumed power, and as soon as they did they, at the suggestion of their own friends, discontinued the work. Thus, unfortunately, a large amount which had previously been expended by the previous Government was, to a great extent, frittered away. If they then had practiced what they now preach, that work would have been finished years ago. I am sorry to say that the bad example given by them has been to some extent followed by this Government, and that that work has not been up to this time finished, largely because hon. gentlemen opposite failed to prosecute the work which was under contract when they took office.

Mr. KIRK. I notice there are three items in this sum of $190,000 voted last year and not expended, $4,000 for Lunenburg buildings, $4,000 for Kentville and $8,000 for New Glasgow. Does the hon. Minister intend to expend this, and if he does is it not necessary for him to take a revote?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The fact that these sums are there and not carried over to 1887-88 does not imply that these votes have not been expended. Some of them have been, and the others will stand good until the first of July, and will be carried over, no doubt, until the 1st October, as generally these votes are carried over, so that the Government have time during that period to expend such proportion of these sums as may be required for the work for which they are voted. In New Glasgow the whole amount has been expended, and at Lunenburg the site has been purchased.

Mr. KIRK. If the $4,000 granted for the public building at Lunenburg is not expended and the building not erected, we may take it for granted that it is because the member who represented the county so well for the last four years has recommended the discontinuance of that item, as the Government has stated the fact on the recommendation of that gentleman.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman will allow me to let him draw his own conclusions.

Montague (P.E.I.) Post Office, &c..... $2,000

Mr. ROBERTSON (King's, P.E.I.) Unless the hon. gentleman protects that building in Montague, with a stone wall around it, as it is on a very unsuitable site, the probability is that in a short time it may be destroyed—it being in an elevated place between two very sharp cuttings.

Mr. GILLMOR. I would ask the hon. gentleman if the post office and customs house in St. Stephen is yet occupied?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Do I understand that this Government has actually built a custom house and post-office in the county represented by my hon. friend? I can hardly believe, after what we have heard to-night, that it could be possible.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This will be probably completed at the close of the fiscal year.

Mr. GILLMOR. I feel grateful to the Government for having put up a building at St. Stephen, but they have been remarkably slow. Six years ago the first appropriation was voted, and we have to wait until the close of this fiscal year before this building can be occupied. I have represented that county for a good many years, and I must confess that the Government have treated the county pretty well. Whatever may have been their motive, they have given several appropriations.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not parliamentary to impute motives.

An hon. MEMBER. That is why he does not tell you the truth.

Mr. GILLMOR. When I consider the population of St. Stephen, it is very generous indeed in the Government to erect a public building there. I am very much obliged to them. I wish they had hurried up and got into it before, but they have not neglected the county. I can speak also for the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I do not know at whose suggestion he did it, but I made the claim, and I presented arguments for a fish-way, and there was $2,000 expended on fish-ways in my own parish. Then my friend listened to my wishes and gave us a fog alarm on Big Duck Island, and a lighthouse on the southern end of Grand Manan. I cannot speak for other counties. I have represented Charlotte for thirteen years, and I must confess this Government has done pretty well, considering I have always been in Opposition. At the same time, there is an important question involved now, and it is one we should not make light of. This is the question whether constituencies which differ from the Government are to have their interests disregarded, whether the taxation of the people is to be taken from them and the public interest in that constituency is to be neglected? I hope such are not the principles which animate the Government. As to the patronage, nobody disputes their right to that—no doubt about it,—but I would be sorry to support a Government, I would not support a Government which neglected the public interests of a constituency because the majority did not choose to send a representative to support that Government, and no one will rise and advocate that policy.

Mr. KIRK.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes; the Minister of Customs did.

Mr. BOWELL. No, I did not. I took exactly the same ground as the hon. gentleman takes in regard to patronage. Oh, there is as much truth in your shaking your head as in saying you built the public buildings in Belleville.

Mr. GILLMOR. I know the idea is general that, unless you send a representative to support the Government, you cannot expect an appropriation. I would be very sorry if that is really the intention of Governments which govern this country. I cannot go into the particulars as to the policy of this Government. I do not know anything about it except in regard to the constituency I represent, but I think it is very important that the principle should be well understood. I know the impression has gone abroad, and I think my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries rather gave currency to that idea, if you want to get an appropriation, if you want to be well represented, send a man who will have the ear of the Government, he can get what you want. All they ought to be able to get is the patronage. However, I must give the credit to the Government for having done considerable for my county when I have been steadily in Opposition.

Committee rose and reported the resolutions.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11:55 p. m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 13th June, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 129) respecting the Primitive Methodist Colonisation Company, Limited (from the Senate).—(Mr. Small.)

SPEEDY TRIALS ACT.

Mr. THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 146) to amend the "Speedy Trials Act," chapter 175 of the Revised Statutes. He said: This is merely to make provision for bailing offenders in the Province of Manitoba. The interpretation of the words "County Attorney," or "Clerk of the Peace," does not include the officer in Manitoba who should have such powers.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. MACDOWALL moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 147) to amend the North-West Territories Act. He said: The object of the Bill is to enable all the men in the North-West Territories who are represented in the Dominion House of Commons by the four representatives who were lately elected to represent them here, to have an opportunity of being represented in the Local House of the North-West Council. As the law at present stands, the Lieutenant Governor has the power, when he is assured that there are 1,000 adults living within a district of 1,000 square miles, to erect such district into an electoral district. The result is that there are fourteen such districts throughout the North-West Territories, but a district of 1,000 square miles is infinitesimal in comparison with the extent of country which is without representation. If you got a map of the North-West Territories, and marked off the fourteen electoral districts, they would look like fourteen dots on a sheet of paper like that which I hold in my hand, and it is only those which are represented in the Council of the North-West Territories. The object of this Bill is to give everyone a vote for the Council of the North-West Territories who has a vote for the House of Commons. The North-West members have divided the Territories into nineteen districts on the basis of population, eighteen of which, it is proposed, shall be represented by one member each, and one—that is, the district of Calgary—by two members, on account of its large population. We also propose to reduce the number of nominated members from six to four, and we propose that two of the nominated members shall be retained, Judge Richardson and Col. McLeod, who have grown up with the North-West, who know its varied requirements, and have been, from their legal knowledge, of the greatest assistance to the members of that Council. The Bill proposes that the general election shall take place in September next, and we are anxious that this Bill should go through this Session, as the terms of most of the members of the North-West Council will expire in September next, and that is the best month in which to hold an election. The North-West districts are very large, and it is very expensive to carry on an election there, but in September it is likely to be less expensive than at any other time, while it will agree with the term of those who cease to be members of the Council at that time. We also propose that the term of members elected to the North-West Council should be three years instead of two, and that also because of the expense. It is very harassing to the people of the country and to those who represent them in the North-West Council, to have an election every two years. The expense is great, and the people in the North-West have not enough money to hold an election every two years. We do not ask for a term more than three years, because we believe that with good harvests and with the large immigration that we expect in the North-West, the North-West may have advanced to such a degree that the Council may then be able themselves to propose some scheme for the local government of the North-West. The main object of this Bill is to give a vote to every man for the North-West Council who has a vote for a member of this House, and again I press upon the House the necessity of passing this Bill into law this Session. It is impossible, I know, for a private member to carry it this Session, but I appeal to every member of this House on both sides to give a kind consideration to this Bill. It is not a question into which party politics can be introduced in any way. It simply gives a vote for the Local Parliament to those who possess it now for the Dominion House, and are as much entitled to vote as those who now do vote for the North-West Council. At present, for instance, in township 15, a farmer can vote, but in township 16 he has no vote at all, simply because one is within an electoral district and the other is not. By this Bill the North-West is divided into electoral districts in such a way that every man in any of the three districts of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Assiniboia shall have a vote for a member of the North-West Council. I appeal to the members on this side of the House not to oppose the Bill, but to let it go through, and I appeal to the Government to undertake the charge of the Bill, and to allow it to become law during this Session.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 148) to provide for the improvement and management of the harbor of Sorel.—(Mr. Labelle.)

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 100) respecting the Waterloo and Magog Railway Company.—(Mr. Colby.)

Bill (No. 103) to incorporate the Cobourg, Blairton and Marmora Railway and Mining Company.—(Mr. Guillet.)

Bill (No. 87) to revive and amend the charter of the Quebec and James' Bay Railway Company, and to extend the time for commencing and completing the railway of the said company.—(Mr. Grandbois.)

Bill (No. 99) respecting the Ottawa and Gatineau Valley Railway Company.—(Mr. Wright.)

Bill (No. 104) to incorporate the Canadian Power Company.—(Mr. Hesson.)

Bill (No. 90) to revive the charter of the Quebec Railway Bridge Company, and to amend the same by extending the delay for the commencement and completion of its works, and in other respects.—(Mr. McGreevy.)

Bill (No. 105) to incorporate the Hereford Branch Railway Company.—(Mr. Ives.)

Bill (No. 130) to incorporate the Teeswater and Inverhuron Railway Company.—(Mr. Cargill.)

Bill (No. 120) respecting the New Brunswick Railway Company.—(Mr. Skinner.)

Bill (No. 109) respecting the Manitoba and North-Western Railway Company of Canada.—(Mr. Scarth.)

Bill (No. 61) to amend the Acts incorporating and relating to the British Canadian Loan and Investment Company (Limited).—(Mr. Small.)

Bill (No. 98) to amend the Act incorporating the Anglo-Canadian Bank.—(Mr. Ward.)

Bill (No. 128) to enable the Western Canada Loan and Savings Company to extend their business, and for other purposes (from the Senate).—(Mr. McCarthy.)

Bill (No. 125) to incorporate the Manufacturers' Accident Insurance Company.—(Mr. Small.)

KINCARDINE AND TEESWATER RAILWAY.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 26) to incorporate the Kincardine and Teeswater Railway Company, be concurred in. He said: In asking the House to concur in these amendments I do so at the request of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), but I desire to point out to the House that these amendments are really a mistake which has been made by the Senate in striking out two names of incorporators instead of two others—leaving in the names that should have been struck out, and striking out the names that should have been left in. There is a further mistake made in the Bill, owing to the practice which has unfortunately prevailed a good deal this Session, of moving Bills in the absence of the promoter or the member in charge. It appears this Bill was passed through the Railway Committee in the absence of the hon. member for Simcoe, and it authorises the construction of a railway from Teeswater to Kincardine, through the townships of Kincardine and Culross, but there is another township through which it must pass, and which has been omitted, viz, the township of Kinloss. It would be necessary, to make the Bill of use, that there should be an amendment made authorising the construction of a railway in almost a direct line through the townships of Kincardine, Kinloss and Culross. I suppose, owing to the similarity of the Scotch names, the printer omitted one of them by mistake, and the mistake may be corrected by our agreeing to the amendments of the Senate, and then asking the House for permission to correct the mistake made in the Bill as passed. We have a precedent for introducing a Bill to correct a mistake in an Act already passed in the same Session. I refer to the Ontario Bank Bill, passed in the Session of 1881, when, owing to the length of the Session, it became necessary to make a correction, and the House permitted a Bill to be introduced and read three times in one sitting. After the amendments are concurred in, I will ask permission to introduce a Bill to correct the mistake, and that it be read three times and sent to the Senate.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to what my hon. friend has just said, and in order that the House may not remain under the impression that the error occurred through the fault of the Railway Committee, I would say that the Railway Committee are not at all to blame. I know the hon. gentleman did not intend that any blame should be attached to the Railway Committee, but that inference might be drawn from what he said. The fact is, the Bill was taken up by the committee in the absence of its promoter, the hon. member for North Simcoe, because there was an agent present to follow the Bill, and if an error was committed, it was because the agent did not know better and did not suggest the amendment. I do not see any objection to the course proposed by my hon. friend.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I did not intend to insinuate that there was any fault on the part of the Railway Committee. I said the fault was, in all likelihood, due to the fact of the printer having omitted the word Kinloss.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It would be better to drop the Bill and re-introduce it. It would take no longer time to put it through than to put the amendment through, and it would be more satisfactory to have everything included in the one Bill.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. If you, Mr. Speaker, will go on with the next Order, I will consider the suggestion of my hon. friend.

§SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 143) to enable the Canada Permanent Loan and Savings Company to extend their business, and for other purposes.—(Mr. Cockburn.)

DIVORCE—JOHN MONTEITH RELIEF BILL.

Mr. O'BRIEN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 144) for the relief of John Monteith.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. When another Bill of divorce came before the House the other day, I asked for a division on the second reading in order to take the sense of the House and to show that we were opposed—a number of us, at all events—to the passing of such measures. The vote was taken and it was a decisive one. As I do not suppose that, by calling for a new division of the House, we could obtain a larger vote in proportion than we did at that time, I do not intend to divide the House on any more of these Bills this Session. Of course any other gentleman can do so, but, as far as I am concerned, I do not intend to do anything except to ask that the Bills if carried be so on division.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time on a division.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK.

DIVORCE—FANNY M. RIDDELL RELIEF BILL.

Mr. IVES in the absence of Mr. TUPPER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 145) for the relief of Fanny Margaret Riddell.

Mr. JONES. As I was not in the House when the previous division was taken, I desire to say that, if I had been, I should have voted with the minority.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time on a division.

Mr. IVES. I desire to say that, while I had no objection to moving the second reading of this Bill, because my hon. friend beside me was out of his seat, I do not wish it to be understood that I am in favor of its principles, as I have always objected to the principle of divorce.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I was away from the House the other day when a vote was taken, and I desire to say that I had paired with the Minister of Customs on the Bill.

KINCARDINE AND TEESWATER RAILWAY.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. With reference to the Bill from the Senate, I have considered the matter, and, as the rules of this House are governed by precedent so much, and as there is no precedent for introducing the second time a Bill having the same object as one which has been introduced before, we cannot introduce a Bill again to incorporate the Kincardine and Teeswater Railway Company. I think, therefore, it would be impossible, according to the precedents which govern us, to carry out the suggestion of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills); and we will have to go back and concur in the amendments made by the Senate, and then ask for leave to introduce a Bill amending that.

Amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 26) to incorporate the Kincardine and Teeswater Railway Company, read the first and second times, and concurred in.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 149) to amend the Act of the present Session, to incorporate the Kincardine and Teeswater Railway Company. He said: This Act provides that the first and second sections of the Act of this Session shall be repealed, and that clauses shall be inserted with the proper names, and directing that the said railway shall pass as nearly as possible in a straight line through the townships of Kincardine, Kinloss and Culross.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Every private Bill must be introduced on petition.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It is not necessary to have a petition in a case of this kind. There is a petition for this Bill; there is a petition for the amendments which this Bill provides for. In 1881, when the Bill relating to the Ontario Bank was passed, there was an error in it, and that was corrected in the same way by an Act passed in the same Session to amend it. As a private Bill, it has been petitioned for in the petition which was presented for the original Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first, second and third times, and passed.

Mr. IVES. As we have dispensed with the fee on some grounds of this kind, it might be well to pass a resolution dispensing with the necessity for obtaining concurrence of the Senate.

PROHIBITION OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Jamieson, declaring it expedient to prohibit the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating liquors, except for certain purposes stated, the motion of Mr. Girouard in amendment thereto, and the motion of Mr. Cargill in amendment to the said amendment.

Mr. CASEY. When this debate was adjourned the other night, I was about to speak to it. There are three propositions before the House. The one immediately before us is a proposition to repeal the Scott Act. The next in order of voting is the amendment of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard), to allow beer, wine and cider to be sold under the Scott Act; and the original proposition of my hon. friend from North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson), is, that prohibition shall become law in Canada. In regard to the first proposition on which we shall vote, that of repealing the Scott Act, there are several reasons why I cannot at this time agree to it. The amendment of my hon. friend from East Bruce (Mr. Cargill) states that the Scott Act has been a failure in the counties in which it has been tried. Now, Sir, I am not in a position to pronounce upon that matter. I know how the Scott Act has worked in my own county, I know by report how it has worked in some other counties, but I am not in a position to say that it has been a failure in every county where it has been tried. I think the decision of this point should rest, not with myself, not with any new member, not even with such older members as the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) or the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson), but with the Government of the day. The Canada Temperance Act was a Government measure. Its terms imply that it should be enforced by officials of this Government, and they should be aware whether it has been a success or not in the different counties in which it has been tried. It is for the Minister of Justice, or the Minister of Inland Revenue, under whose Department it more immediately comes, to say whether the Canada Temperance Act has been a success, to say whether the experiment has been sufficiently tried and has failed, or whether it has succeeded, or whether it has been insufficiently tried, and should be tried somewhat longer. There are three courses open to the Government. They may say that this experiment—for it is admittedly an experiment—has been tried sufficiently and has been found a success. In that case it is the duty of the Government to propose a measure of total prohibition. They may say that it has been sufficiently tried and has failed—it is then their duty to propose a repeal of the Canada Temperance Act. They may say that it has been insufficiently tried, that the result of it is uncertain—in which case it is their duty as a Government, and not as individual members of this House, to oppose any interference whatever with the terms or with the operation of that Act. Now, Sir, I represent a Scott Act county, and in regard to that county I cannot say that the Act has been a success so far; I cannot say that the passage or operation of that Act has materially reduced the consumption of liquor in the west riding of Elgin. I know that it has prevented the sale of liquor in some three taverns, I think, so far as my information bears me out. At the same time, to the best of my knowledge, two or three other taverns have been started since the passage of the Act in West Elgin, where it has been in force for a year last May. I have reason to suppose that in all these taverns except the first three I have named liquor is sold, if not as openly as before, at least in considerable quantities. Therefore I cannot pronounce the Scott Act a success in the west riding of Elgin. The same thing is true, so far as my knowledge goes of the city of St. Thomas, which belongs to the east riding of Elgin for Dominion purposes, and to the west riding for local purposes. The Act was carried there by a bare majority—I think 13, and there has never been any public sentiment in St. Thomas in favor of the enforcement of the Scott Act. By public sentiment I mean any overwhelming public sentiment in favor of its enforcement, and in that city liquor is sold, I may say, without concealment, and I believe quite as freely as it was before the passage of the Act. In the west riding of Elgin, which has for some little time back been, for inspection purposes, under the provincial law, included the city of St. Thomas, we have an inspector who is a strong temperance man, a strong prohibitionist, and most zealous in his attempts to enforce the law. Notwithstanding his zeal, notwithstanding his honest endeavors to enforce the Act, ever since St. Thomas has been included in his inspectorate, he has found it impossible to prevent the sale of liquor, although he has obtained a considerable number of convictions. This being the state of things, the question arises, Whose fault is it? It is evidently not the fault of the inspector; he has done his best under the Act as it stands. Whose fault is it if the Scott Act has been a failure in the west riding of Elgin? as I confess it has been. The first consideration towards answering this question must naturally be, Whose duty is it to enforce the Scott Act? We were told during the provincial campaign, last autumn, that it was the duty of the Local Government to enforce the Scott Act. I have always contended, and I contend still, that it is no more the duty of the Local Government to enforce the Scott Act than to enforce, let me say, an Act in regard to the Post Office, the Customs Act, or the Inland Revenue Act. It is the duty, of course, of Provincial Governments to enforce the criminal laws. It is their duty to provide proper tribunals for the trial of cases arising under those laws, and to enforce the sentence of those tribunals. But it has never been contended in connection with any other law, it has never been contended with success in connection with this law, that it was the duty of Provincial Governments to appoint special officers for the enforcement of those laws. It has simply been their duty to provide machinery for carrying out the criminal law of the Dominion. Nobody has ever attempted to throw upon the Provincial Governments the responsibility of enforcing the Customs law, or the Excise law, or the Post Office law. It is equally clear, to my mind, that the responsibility for carrying out the Canada Temperance Act, which is an Act put under the special care of the Department of Inland Revenue, should not fall upon the Local Government, but upon the Federal Government which passed the Act, and whose duty it is to maintain it. If I wished for any confirmation of this position, I would find it in the 101st and 102nd sections of the original Act, which sections, I believe, have not been changed in the revision of the Statutes. I find in section 101 these words:

"A prosecution for any such penalties or punishment may be brought by, or in the name of the Collector of Inland Revenue, within whose official division the offence was committed by or in the name of any person."

Section 102 says:

"It shall be the duty of such collector of Inland Revenue to bring such prosecution whenever he shall have reason to believe any such offence has been committed, and that the prosecution, therefor can be sustained, and would not subject him to any undue measure of responsibility in the premises."

It appears to me from these two sections, that, in the first place, any person can prosecute for an infraction of the Canada Temperance Act; in the second place, it is specially the duty of the collector of Inland Revenue within whose official division the offence was committed, to prosecute any such infraction when he has information that the offence has been committed. The primary responsibility, then, rests with the collectors of Inland Revenue, and with the Department which controls them. I think, therefore, it remains for the Minister of Inland Revenue to explain why it is that he has not seen that his subordinates do their duty, and why it is that he has not directed the collectors of Inland Revenue to enforce the Canada Temperance Act, upon pain of dismissal in case they refuse to act in the premises. It is for the Minister of Inland Revenue, then, primarily, to explain why it is that the Scott Act has not been enforced in counties where it has been adopted. I do not say it has been a failure in all counties. We have been told by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Waldie), that it is enforced in his county; we have been told the same by members from other counties. But we know that in some counties it has not been enforced, and we want the Minister of Inland Revenue to explain why he has not seen to the enforcement of the Act in those counties. I also want the Minister of Justice to tell us why he has not considered the matter, why he has not considered the reports sent in, or which should have been sent in by the collectors of Inland Revenue; why he has not settled in his own mind whether the Scott Act is a success or not, whether it should be perpetuated or given up as a played-out experiment. It is particularly the duty of the Dominion Government to enforce this Act, because they alone can provide the proper machinery for its enforcement. The inspectors appointed by the Provincial Governments cannot, by any possibility, thoroughly enforce this Act; it is absurd to expect them to do so; it is absurd to cast upon them any responsibility for the failure of the Act in any county. They have not the right of search except under certain circumstances. They cannot search a house for liquor, unless information has been duly laid on oath and a writ has been got out against the person whose house they propose to search, following which they can obtain a search warrant and search the house of the person supposed to have sold liquor. It is thus practically impossible to find liquor upon the premises, as when the tavern-keeper or other person receives a notice in the shape of a writ that his premises will be searched he secretes the liquor, and when the inspector comes with a search warrant he fails to find anything. This is a state of things that a Local Government cannot remove. This Government, which assumes to have complete charge of questions of trade and commerce and of the liquor traffic as regards prohibition, at all events, could procure a better enforcement of the Act, could endow their officers, who have been directed to enforce it, with sufficient power, and provide means for carrying out that responsibility which they have deliberately taken on themselves, of enforcing the Scott Act. It is worthy of notice that, although the statutes have been revised since the Canada Temperance Act was passed, the Government have not divested themselves of the responsibility of carrying out the Act, and the sections dealing with that point remain as part of the revised statutes. They sit, as did the Reform Government which preceded them, clothed with the responsibility of enforcing this Act. The only difference is that the Reform Government had no opportunity of enforcing it, for they were defeated after the Session in which the Act was passed, and upon their successors has devolved the duty, as well as the opportunity, of carrying out the Act, which still remains on the Statute-book, and which they have not seen fit to repeal. They are, therefore, responsible to the country for carrying out this law, as much as for carrying out any other law in the statute book. If they and their supporters plead that the law is a failure and cannot be carried out, they are pleading that the Government which the hon. member for East Bruce (Mr. Cargill) supports have been derelict in their duty in not carrying out that law on the statute-book, a law which the Dominion Government have assumed the responsibility of enforcing. Perhaps the Minister of Inland Revenue will be able to show some instances in which his subordinates, his collectors, have endeavored to enforce the Act. I have not heard of such instances myself, and I do not expect to hear of any. If he is able to point to any such instances, in which he and his colleagues even attempted to enforce this Act, no doubt he will submit them. Admitting the failure of the Act in some counties, admitting that the member for East Bruce (Mr. Cargill) is correct, and that it has been a failure in his county, admitting even that the Act is a failure generally—though I do not pronounce any opinion upon that—even if I did not think the Scott Act could be enforced as it stands at present, I would not consider that a reason for repealing the Act. If the Act cannot be enforced, the logical conclusion is that we should strengthen the Act, unless the Government have decided to go back on our opinion, expressed nine years ago and not reversed since, that it was proper to allow counties local option in regard to prohibition, in regard to the sale of liquors—I say that is the logical conclusion, unless they are prepared to advocate the repeal of the Act, that we should improve the Act, and add additional machinery so that it can be enforced. What has been the record of the Government in that respect? They have not been without warnings. Their own supporters, including the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson), a prominent supporter, impressed upon the Government that the Act is not workable as it stands. What have the Government done? Have they chosen to act as a Government upon the matter? No, they have not. They have not chosen to perform their duty and accept the responsibility which rests upon them as a Government, controlling the legislation of this country, either by proposing amendments to, or proposing the repeal of, the Act. They have simply allowed the House to do what it pleased about the Act. On the one occasion when the promoters of amendments to the Act succeeded in passing those amendments through the House, and sending up a Bill to the Senate, materially improving the Act and the chance of its enforcement, what happened? The Senate, the subjects of the Government of the day, most of them the nominees of the Government, rejected those amendments, or, rather, they made such amendments to the Act that this House could not accept them, and it fell through. I, therefore, place the responsibility on the Government, first, for the present inefficient state of that Act; and second, for the fact that in many cases it has been found impossible to enforce it. I will go even further. Supposing I believed—and I do not express any opinion upon this point—that even with all the amendments which the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson), with the assistance of the Dominion Alliance, could suggest, it was found impossible to carry out the Scott Act, I am still not prepared to vote for the repeal of the Act. That Act is admittedly an experiment; it has been deliberately entered on by a large number of counties of the Dominion on the understanding that it would remain in force for three years, during which it would have a fair trial, and there would be a fair opportunity of finding out whether local prohibition could be enforced or not. Having entered upon it with that understanding, having the experiment now in progress in certain counties, I am not prepared, even if convinced that no amendment to the Act would make it a success, to vote for its repeal. When I find that the majority of my constituents, that the majority of the people of the country, whether my constituents or not, believe the Act is a failure and that no amendment will make it a success, then I will be willing and ready to vote for its repeal, because I believe a measure of prohibition which cannot be enforced is much more injurious to the country than a good license law. But in the meantime I wish for my constituents, and for the people of all the counties which have adopted the Scott Act, and for those who have the opportunity to adopt it, the right to avail themselves of the Act which was passed in 1878, and which the Government has not taken the responsibility of repealing. Much the same argument applies to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard). That hon. gentleman proposes to allow the sale of beer, wine and cider, under the Scott Act. There are several objections to the course proposed. In the first place, I believe it would be breaking faith with those counties that have adopted total local prohibition of all intoxicating liquors, for they adopted the Act as it stood on the Statute-book; that it would be breaking faith with those people to say that they should not have that for which they voted, but should have something else. In the second place, I believe that any such provision for the sale of beer, wine, and cider would make the Act practically a nullity. If tavern-keepers get a license to sell wine, beer and cider, under the Scott Act, they would be able to sell many other things on the sly, which we are not asked by the promoter of this amendment to allow them to sell. And, Sir, who is to license them in case we pass the amendment? It has been decided already that this House has not the right to issue licenses to retail wine, beer and cider. The Scott Act itself provides that, in counties where it is adopted, the Local Government has not the power to issue licenses. Who, then, is to license these men who are to sell wine, beer and cider? Who is to appoint inspectors to see that they do not sell anything else than wine, beer and cider? There is no power which can issue licenses, or appoint inspectors to inspect the premises upon which the licenses are issued. And I conclude, therefore, that the effect of carrying the amendment of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) would be to introduce utter anarchy in the liquor trade in Scott Act counties, to allow as many men as pleased to do so to sell without license, and free them from such inspection as would prevent them selling only those things which they are licensed to sell. For these reasons I am compelled to vote against the two amendments to which I have referred. When the experiment of local prohibition has been fully tried to the satisfaction of the country at large, and when the Government sees fit to pronounce an opinion as to its success or non-success, then I will be prepared to consider the question whether I should not vote differently. If the Government, with their information, choose to tell us that it is impossible to enforce this Act, I do not know what effect it would have upon hon. members on this side, who have consistently voted for the Scott Act, and for such improvements to the Scott Act as were found to be necessary. I call on the Government, before the end of this debate, to express an opinion on this subject. It is their duty to do so, and all the more because in the western section of Ontario, at all events, it was currently believed, just prior to the last election, that they had promised the brewers certain things with regard to this Act. I know of one brewer in the city of St. Thomas whose vote was changed at the late election, from an impression he received in conversation with the Minister of Agriculture—(Mr. Carling)—whose views on this subject must be well known to the House—that the Government intended to propose, or, at all events, to support, as a government, an amendment allowing the sale of beer under the Scott Act. The brewer, on that promise, on the impression he received in that conversation—I do not know how fully he understood the Minister—changed his vote from the Reform side to the Conservative side, saying that he could not vote against his bread and butter, that the Government promised to allow him to sell beer in the Scott Act county of Elgin, and that, therefore, he would vote for the Government. Such promises I have heard of from other neighborhoods. I know that the impression was general in the western part of Ontario, during the campaign, that the Government had promised this modification; and all the more for these promises, which were vaguely given, it is incumbent on the Government to say whether they do favor this modification of the Act, or whether they will fulfil the expectations they aroused amongst the brewers of that district. And yet, Sir, though I am compelled to vote against these amendments, I am bound to say that I consider the motion of my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) premature. Although I am not able to say that the Scott Act is, or that prohibition would necessarily be, a failure, I must confess that the experience I have had of the working of that Act is not such as to lead me to believe that the country is ripe for prohibition. I have seen, as a matter of fact, wherever I have been in Scott Act counties, that, unless a very large proportion of the public in those counties were in favor of prohibition, the Scott Act was nothing but a dead letter. This Government, whose duty it is to enforce it, did nothing to enforce it. The Minister of Inland Revenue, whose special duty it is to enforce it, did nothing to enforce it. The Provincial Government of Ontario did ask its officers to assist, as private citizens, in enforcing the Act as far as possible, but their assistance was necessarily unavailing. But I have been yet unable to see that the evasions of the law which are possible under the Canada Temperance Act would be impossible under general prohibition. I have been unable to see that it would be easier to enforce general prohibition than it is to enforce the Canada Temperance Act. When I believe the country is ripe for prohibition, when I believe the great majority of the people of Canada are willing to assist earnestly in enforcing prohibition, I shall be willing to vote for prohibition. Until that time I beg to reserve my opinion on that subject, and to hold that it is not wise to rush into experiments of whose results we are unaware. With regard to this part of the question, I do not know that I could do better than quote some remarks on this subject which were made in my own county in the Local campaign by the leader of this side of the House.

Mr. CASEY.

Some hon. MEMBERS. What is the date?

Mr. CASEY. The date is the 7th of December, 1886. During the local campaign the leader of the Opposition spoke at Aylmer, in the county of Elgin, Ontario, principally in regard to this temperance question. In the course of some preliminary remarks he stated that he was a total abstainer himself and had been so for a number of years, feeling it his duty to be so for its effect on the general public; that he believed that the country would be better off if everybody was a total abstainer, and so on. I need not quote that part of his speech, because I believe every hon. gentleman in this House knows the views of the leader of the Opposition, knows that he is a consistent total abstainer, and that he has strongly urged his friends and the public generally to come to the same views. He speaks of the progress which has been made with regard to total abstinence:

"In this respect great progress has been made—I recognise it thankfully—but much more remains to be done, and if we slacken in this work, and hope to save trouble to ourselves by other and wholesale and involuntary methods, we shall make the greatest mistake conceivable. I think no repressive legislation can be profitable or permanent unless there exists a widely diffused and very strongly felt and earnest public opinion at its back. The tone and quality of this opinion are of as much, or more, consequence than its quantity. It is not from fear of the criminal law that the bulk of the community abstains from crime. The bulk would abstain if there were no criminal law. The conscience of the community would be its law. Laws generally derive their binding effect from this consideration."

And here I must notice the contention of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries the other night, that there is no argument against the Scott Act, on account of its non-enforcement, that there would be no argument against total prohibition, on account of its non-enforcement, any more than there would be against the ordinary criminal law of the country, because there happen to be breaches of that law. I point out to him that prohibition would create a new and artificial crime to which the people of the country are not accustomed; it would make actions which have hitherto been considered legal and proper, criminal actions; and until the vast majority of the people believe that such actions are criminal, no law which makes them nominally criminal can be enforced. It may be said that the law against murder, or burglary, or horse stealing, is broken, and that, therefore, it is no argument against a prohibitory law to say that it is sometimes broken. My answer to that is that when you get as large a majority in the country to believe that it is a crime to steal a horse, to kill a man, or to break into a warehouse, then you will be able to enforce prohibitory laws as well as you are able to enforce laws against stealing, murder or burglary. Until you produce that unanimity of sentiment you cannot enforce such laws fully. Apart from that, it is a mere question of degree; it is a question for every member of this House to consider how great a percentage of enforcement would induce him to vote for a prohibitory law. For myself, I may say that unless I believed it could be enforced in the majority of instances, I think the passage of such a law would be an injury instead of a benefit. But I must return to the speech I have been quoting from. The hon. gentleman continued:

"But for that, though directed against a few only, there would be little of little use. This view has very special application to legislation upon the subject of the general social customs of the people. It follows, then, that it is only this widely diffused and strongly felt public opinion which can be properly crystallised into law, and that premature attempts will be abortive failures. This condition of opinion may exist at various epochs of progress in which, usefully, licenses may be required to sell, under which high license may replace low license, under which restricted license may replace freer license, under which local prohibition may replace high and restricted license, and under which general prohibition may replace local prohibition. But in deciding on the legislation to be at any particular time adopted, we must determine whether the country is at that time ripe for the legislation; whether it is reasonable to conclude that it will be maintained, for else we hurt instead of helping the cause. Now, as to legislative and executive action, I am against the emasculating of the Temperance Act, which I believe to be in contemplation at this hour. I am for the amendment of that Act in those details in which experience has shown defects preventing a fair test of its principles. I believe it is the duty of the Government of the day, finding this law upon the Statute-book, to determine whether it shall be repealed or made effective; and if they do not choose to repeal it they are bound to make it effective, and if they neglect dealing with the case they neglect their plain and obvious duty. I am for a fair and full trial of the Act in the localities in which it is in force, with all the aid that executive action can properly afford."

A little further on he said, in regard to the passage of the Scott Act in different counties:

"I am for or against the submission of the Act in new localities according as there is or is not a fair prospect in the condition of local opinion that it will be reasonably efficacious. It is on this consideration that I myself would vote in case it were submitted in a county in which I had a vote. I am against the submission of the Act as a mere test of public opinion, by a vote as a plebiscite on prohibition, without a firm determination to work it thoroughly if passed."

A little further on, he said:

"I am glad to say that in many places the Scott Act is working fairly, and in some cases the results are hardly known, and in some the results are not favorable. But I notice large numbers of our citizens, good, sober, virtuous, and exemplary, as yet unconvinced as to the duty of total abstinence themselves, and, therefore, unfit to enforce it upon others. I find many supporters of temperance legislation who do not look upon drinking, even in Scott Act counties, as a crime, and who refuse that moral support and help to the enforcement of that law which they give to the general criminal law."

I quite concur in those views. I have seen many people, even some who have voted for the Scott Act in Scott Act counties, who did not assist in its enforcement. He went on:

"Just compare things. Suppose one of us is walking along the street behind a neighbor, a friend or a stranger, and sees his pocket being picked. He would make himself a special police constable at once, would try to prevent the crime, and, if he was big enough, would arrest the criminal. But supposing, in a Scott Act county, we pass an unlicensed house—for they are all unlicensed, no licenses being granted—and see someone going in and getting drink; we turn to the other side; we say nothing about that; we do not propose to enforce the law; we do not give the same support, the same sympathy, the same active investigation in the case of this law as is given in the other case. Now, if that be the condition of the more advanced localities, what is the condition in the other parts of Canada?"

I say, Sir, that is emphatically the condition in the Scott Act county in which I live. No respectable man will there inform on his neighbor for breach of the Scott Act. If that be the case, I do not believe that any respectable man would inform on his neighbor for a breach of a prohibitory law if such were passed, and, for that reason, I see no greater hope of the enforcement of a prohibitory law than of the Scott Act; and as regards the Scott Act, I believe its enforcement depends on further amendments, and on the assistance of this Government, which has not yet been given, and which I do not believe is going to be given. The hon. gentleman a little later in his speech, referring to the conversion of the people to temperance views, said:

Mr. CASEY

"Until progress is made in that, I am not of the opinion that Canada is ripe for prohibition. I do not believe that the law, if carried, would, in the present condition, be useful or permanent. I remember very well the speech made by Sir Leonard Tilley, that veteran champion of temperance—made not very long before he retired from Parliament—in which he declared the result of his experience in his own Province—confirmed by all that he had learned—an opinion which pointed out the absolute necessity, in order that there might be an efficacious and permanent law, for that strong and widely diffused public opinion to which I refer."

And he observes that even the Mail newspaper sustains that opinion. Speaking of a prohibitory law, he said:

"Should the time arrive when I think the law would be useful and permanent, instead of hurtful, I will vote for it, whatever the political results to myself. Until that time comes, I shall vote against it, whatever those results may be. Let me point out to you here that there is a large question involved; there is the question of the reform of the Senate, for just so long as you maintain the Senate as at present constituted and composed, just so long there is an absolute and inseparable barrier to your obtaining prohibitory legislation."

Then he goes on to discuss the financial aspect of the question, the necessity of compensation and other matters. Now, Sir, I believe those views, delivered by the leader of the Opposition party on the eve of an election in which he was deeply interested, were remarkably straightforward, remarkably statesmanlike and remarkably courageous. I have never heard so courageous, so straightforward, and so statesmanlike an utterance on the temperance question, on the part of anyone who could be ranked among the leaders of a party. I quite coincide with the hon. gentleman's views, and I happen to know that the great authorities on temperance coincide with them also. Let me cite, for instance, one of the general superintendents of the Methodist Church, the Rev. Dr. John A. Williams, who was interviewed immediately after this speech was delivered, and who is a strong advocate of temperance. He declared that he coincided with the hon. gentleman's views, and that a great number of the leading temperance men of Ontario approved of them; and in the strongly temperance county which I represent, and other counties in which I have been, I have found the temperance sentiment strongly coincided with the views of my hon. friend and leader on this question. Coinciding with those views, and believing that he has expressed them better and more forcibly than I could myself if I elaborated them any longer, I will merely say that I find it my duty, under the circumstances, to vote against all the three motions before the House; against the repeal of the Scott Act, against any tampering with that Act, as the first amendment proposes, and against prohibition, for which I am not sure as yet that the country is ripe.

Mr. LISTER. I ask the indulgence of the House for just a few moments while I make a few observations on the several propositions now before the House. The county of Lambton adopted what was called the Scott Act, the Temperance Act of 1878, by a majority of something like 2,800. My constituency forms a portion of that county, and I feel I would not be discharging the duty I owe my constituents, if I were to give a silent vote on this occasion. I shall not enter into a discussion of the evils of intemperance, but shall consider simply the question as to whether this House should repeal the Scott Act or not. The propositions before the House are three in number: first, that of my hon. friend for North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson), that this country is now ripe for prohibition; second, the proposition of the hon.

member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard), that it is expedient that in those counties in which the Scott Act has been adopted, a clause permitting light wines and beer to be sold should be added to the Temperance Act of 1878; and, lastly, the proposition of my hon. friend for East Bruce (Mr. Cargill), that the Scott Act should be entirely repealed. Now, I am opposed altogether to the two last propositions. I say it would be unfair and improper for this House to repeal the Scott Act given to the people in 1878. We know that the temperance movement in this country, prior to 1864, induced this Parliament, in obedience to the wishes of a large portion of the community, to pass an Act known as the Dunkin Act. We know from experience the difficulties which were met in enforcing the provisions of that Act; we know that its provisions and its machinery were so cumbrous it was impossible to enforce the Act. We know that from that time to 1878, there was a general agitation on the part of the temperance portion of the community to ask this House to pass legislation which would have the effect of more perfectly carrying out their views; we know that in Ontario, in obedience to the wishes of the people, this Parliament passed, in 1878, what is known as the Temperance Act of 1878, which gave to the people of the several counties of this Dominion the right to decide whether total prohibition should exist in each county or not. In other words, it gave the people the right to local option. It is well known that no great efforts were made to carry into effect the provisions of that Act until a very recent period, and we know that during the last few years, a great temperance wave has passed over this country. During the past two or three years, some 26 or 27 counties of Ontario alone have adopted that Act; yet before the country has had an opportunity of fairly and properly testing the Act, it is now proposed that it be repealed, and the wishes of the people be utterly disregarded. I protest against any such action. That Act has been adopted by 26 or 27 municipal counties in Ontario, and is in force in 50 or 60 counties in the Dominion, and I repeat, before the people have had an opportunity of deciding whether that Act can be properly worked or not, we should not countenance any proposition to repeal it altogether. I, for one, have faith in the experience and the wishes of the majority of the people; and until the majority of the people in those counties have pronounced against the Act, it is our bounden duty to keep it on the Statute-book and enforce it if possible. The Act should first have a fair trial, and if the temperance sentiment of the country should then decide that it is not efficient, and, not being efficient, is demoralising to the community, they will have an opportunity of expressing their wishes. Then, and not before, should this House legislate on that portion of the subject. I am, therefore, opposed to the repeal of the Temperance Act of 1878. I say, if the amendment of the hon. member for East Bruce were to prevail here, it would emasculate or utterly destroy the Act. There would be nothing left, and the Act might just as well be repealed. As to the question of total prohibition, the proposition is that it is expedient we should prohibit the manufacture, importation and consumption of intoxicating liquors. I say that we have every reason to believe that the resolution moved by my hon. friend for North Lanark truly expresses the opinion of the majority of the people. The reasons in favor of this opinion are much stronger than those against it. In Ontario the Scott Act has been carried in a large number of counties, in Prince Edward Island I believe every county has carried it; in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, I believe it has been carried in almost every county. Therefore, so far as we can learn, the resolution of the hon. member for North Lanark is in accord with the will of the majority of the people, and that being so, I feel that it ought to receive the support of this House. As to the duty of enforcing the Scott Act, it is alleged by those who are opposed to the Act that it is not enforced, that it is demoralising to the community, inasmuch as it causes a great amount of perjury, and inasmuch as the law is constantly evaded without the persons guilty being punished. I admit that these causes do, to a great extent, demoralise a community, but I say there ought to be no more difficulty in enforcing the observance of that law than enforcing the provisions of any other criminal law on the Statute-book. If an effort is made honestly to enforce the Act, it can be enforced. A very great question has been raised as to whose duty it is to enforce the Act. I have always maintained that the duty was cast upon the Dominion Government, just as the duty is cast upon it of enforcing the Customs and Inland Revenue Acts or any other of the Statutes which it is plainly the duty of the Dominion Government to enforce. The Government has thoroughly disregarded its duty. It has made no effort whatever to enforce the provisions of the Scott Act, but has sought to throw the responsibility on the Local Administrations. So far as the Province of Ontario is concerned, it is a matter of congratulation that that Province, while not bound to enforce the provisions of the Act, while declaring that there was no responsibility for them in this respect, have assumed that responsibility, and have, to a very great extent, enforced the provisions of the law. This is a question upon which every hon. gentleman has a right to take whatever views he thinks proper. I do not think that because the leader of the Opposition expressed himself in one sense on this question, he was strictly correct, and that I am obliged to think as he did. On the contrary, I take an entirely different view, and I think this Parliament, as a representative body, if it is satisfied that the majority of the people are in favor of prohibitory legislation, should give effect to that opinion. Believing that, I will support the resolution and oppose the amendments.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat argued that there was no reason why the provisions of the Scott Act should not be enforced as well as those of any other criminal law. I take issue with him there. There must be a public sentiment in favor of a measure, which backs up and strengthens and supports the officers who enforce the law. The absence of that sentiment in the community is the very defect which causes the bad working of the Scott Act. Every speaker who has addressed the House has admitted that the Scott Act is not a success. I submit that, if it is not, we have to a large extent the unrestrained sale of liquor in this country; and, as I prefer that we should revert to a license law rather than that we should have an unrestrained sale of liquor such as takes place in the majority of the Scott Act counties, I must support the proposition which will bring these counties under the license law. No words have been uttered in reference to prohibition more true than those which were uttered by the leader of the Opposition, to which the member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) referred. It is reasonable to hold that public sentiment must be educated up to the point not only of the reception but of the enforcement of a law, and the illustration given by the leader of the Opposition was very apt. If you are going along the street and observe a violation of the ordinary criminal law of the land, whether a case of larceny or of any other crime punishable by imprisonment, you will do all in your power to assist the officers of the law; but if you or any other member of this House, no matter how strong an advocate he may be of the Scott Act, observes a violation of that Act, he turns his head and hurries away home in order that he may not be brought up as a witness to punish the violator of the law. As long as the public sentiment is in that condition, so long will temperance legislation be a failure. It may be asked, how long are we to wait until public sentiment is ripe for prohibition? I think we must wait until public sentiment is educated by the influence of the clergy, the influence of home teaching, and the influence of the educational institutions of our land. The progress made by temperance in the last twenty or twenty-five years has been great. It has been the truest kind of progress, gradually developing in the mind of the people the feeling that drunkenness is an evil, as it is, and that it is, to some extent, a crime; at all events, as far as the individual and his family are concerned. That feeling was ripening, being backed up by moral suasion, but the advocates of temperance, by endeavoring to take the remedy out of the hands of those who have moulded public sentiment up to that point, and to compel the officers of the law to do what public sentiment will not uphold them in doing, will bring about the worst results. I say that, inasmuch as in the majority of cases where the Scott Act is in force, the result has been the unrestrained sale of liquor, I must support this amendment. I support it notwithstanding the fact that I voted against the amendments on a previous occasion, because then I felt that the people should have a trial of the Scott Act before it should be taken away from them. They have had this trial, they have had it in my own county, and, as far as my observation goes, I firmly believe that the vast majority of those who supported the Scott Act at that time are to-day strongly in favor of its repeal. Those who are in favor of its repeal are those who see that the provisions of the Act are violated in every part of the county where it was adopted by a large majority, and they have no remedy except to come to this House and ask for the repeal of the Act. Hon. members say that we have no right to take from the people that which is within their own power. If they had the power to repeal that which they had the power to adopt, it might be another thing, but they cannot repeal it until the end of three years and on that ground I support the amendment. At the last assizes held in Brockville before Mr. Justice Rose, who is a strong temperance man, and advocate of temperance reform, strongly pronounced himself against the Scott Act, saying, what to my mind is very clear, that if you declare that that is a crime in one county while along the borders of that county in another county it is not a crime, it is utterly impossible to enforce any such law. We are brought face to face with the question whether, by repealing this Act or by adopting the amendment of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard), we should return to the system of license legislation, or should go on from bad to worse, finding as we do, that liquor is now sold in every place where it was sold before the adoption of this Act. I prefer to see us revert to license legislation. I do not desire to take up the time of the House, and in these few remarks I have given the House the reasons why I shall vote for the amendments.

Mr. MASSON. In reference to the original motion of the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson), I am satisfied that the views expressed by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), and also the quotation which he read from the speech delivered by the late leader of the Opposition, must commend themselves to the House in regard to total prohibition. It must be clear to every one who has travelled through any of the counties where the Scott Act is now in force, that this country is not ripe for total prohibition. It is often argued by those who are in favor of total prohibition, and of the Scott Act, and of temperance measures generally, that an expression of opinion has been given by the votes which have been polled in favor of the Scott Act, that in a large number of counties the Scott Act has been passed, and that by large majorities. It is often contended on the other side that a majority of the votes were not polled in those counties, and, although a majority of the votes polled are in favor of the Act, the total vote is not expressed. I do not myself give much weight to that argument, because if that were applied it might be said that a great many hon. members of this House were not representing a majority of their constituents. I submit, however, that the expression of the vote given on the Scott Act is by no means evidence that the country is ripe for total prohibition. It is rather what has taken place since this Act has come into force, what has been the result as to the enforcement of the Act, what success has attended its operation, that has to be considered. Although the Act is not in force in the county in which I live, yet we had the Dunkin Act there, and that was an entire and complete failure, so complete that the leading temperance people asked to have it repealed; and although the Scott Act is not in force in my county, it is in force in every county adjoining mine, and I have had an opportunity of travelling through all these counties, I can speak of it from my personal observation, and I say that the Canada Temperance Act is an entire failure. I do not think that, in any of the counties I have been in, I have seen any difference, in appearance at any rate, in the way in which liquor is bought and sold from the condition of affairs where they have the license system. Then I submit that the open failure of the law in that respect is conclusive evidence that public opinion is not in accord with the spirit of that Act, I would not ask that the majority of the people should be willing and ready to lay information against transgressors of that Act in order to prove that public opinion was in accord with it, but I would ask that those who are the strong advocates of it, like the hon. gentleman for North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson), the strong temperance advocates who speak throughout the country should not be ashamed or afraid of public opinion, and when they see breaches of the Act committed, that they should have the manliness and courage to lay information before the proper parties, and courageously attend and give their evidence against the violators of the law. Whenever the Act reaches that stage, whenever we find through this country, I do not say a majority of the people, but a reasonably large number of men, who are willing to face public opinion and take that stand, then, I say, we shall have some evidence that the Act is in accord with public opinion. Therefore, so far as the original motion of my hon. friend from North Lanark is concerned, I must say that it does not meet my approval. But, on the other hand, when I consider what will be the effects of the two amendments, I must say that they also fall far short of what I consider proper legislation. When the temperance people asked this House for total prohibition, we gave them this optional measure; and now, were that option taken away from them they would say they had not had a proper opportunity of testing it. The question has been asked whether the responsibility of enforcing this law should rest upon this Government or upon the Local Governments; and between the two we see that very little action has been taken by either Government. But what would the temperance people of Ontario say if, after they have obliged the Local Government to take action, and to provide the machinery, as it were, for enforcing this Act, we were to step in and say: We will repeal it; we will not allow it to be enforced by the machinery which the Local Government has provided. Therefore I say that such legislation would be vicious in its character and demoralising in its effect. But what I say in reference to the total repeal of the Act may be said also in reference to the introduction of what is commonly known as the wine and beer clause. I do not think it would have the effect, as some hon. gentlemen contend, of totally wiping out the Act, because I believe that a limited license might be enforced as well as a complete license; but it would have the effect that where people have voted under the Scott Act for prohibition in any county, it would allow the sale of wine and beer against the will of the majority who has adopted that Act. It is for these reasons that while I cannot support the original motion, neither can I support either of the amendments.

Mr. Wood (Brockville).

Mr. BÉCHARD. I wish to explain to the House the position which I assume with regard to the original motion and the two amendments. I do hope that the main resolution, which has given rise to this debate, and which, if adopted, would form the basis of a coercion Bill, will not receive the assent of this House. Temperance is a virtue, and, in my humble judgment, like all other virtues, its practice may be better promoted and encouraged by moral suasion than by coercion. I do not consider that the great mass of the people are so addicted to drunkenness that we ought to declare that there is no other remedy than a resort to total prohibition, nor do I believe that the practice of any virtue can be promoted by Act of Parliament. Let the friends of temperance preach it, let the ministers of the different Christian religions preach temperance to their people, and let the friends of temperance form associations to encourage those who abuse liquors to join them, and they will receive the sympathies of every respectable man in the community, because those are laudable actions. But when you attempt to legislate upon this question, and to prohibit the manufacture and importation of liquor into this country, I say that you interfere with the individual liberty of every man, and you have no more right to dictate to me what I shall drink than what I shall eat. Sir, I can speak for my own county, and I think I can speak for the whole Province of Quebec—at least for the rural districts, if not for the large cities—and I hold that throughout the whole Province drunkenness is not so general as to justify the enactment of prohibitory legislation. I represent a county composed of sober men, and I am not prepared to say here by my vote that they are a band of drunkards, who need to be restrained by coercive legislation. My county is composed of sober men, and, with very few exceptions, they all take a small glass, or what we call the social glass, but I say emphatically and truly that cases of drunkenness in my county are exceedingly rare. Cases may happen on certain occasions, but very seldom, and the very people who fall into that weakness, by accident, are the first ones to regret it the next day. It is well known that a great progress in temperance has been going on in society for a number of years. To-day, it is a disgrace in the eyes of the public for anyone to be intoxicated. The people in my county, and I think it is so throughout the Province of Quebec, drink mostly beer, and a man must drink half a gallon of beer before he can get drunk. I do not see any great objection to drinking beer; so I say that there has been a constant progress going on in a moral sense, and I think it will be better to leave that matter alone, let that progress continue as it will continue in the natural course of things, instead of endeavoring to hasten it unduly by the pressure of a prohibitory law. A prohibitory law might harm the cause of temperance, because it might indispose what I believe to be the majority of the people against those who profess to be its friends. I do not believe the majority of the people are in favor of prohibition. It is said, however, that the people are ripe for it. But, if so, why has not the Scott Act been adopted in more counties than have adopted it? Only a small proportion of the counties in the Dominion have adopted the Act, and this fact does not show that the majority of the people are in favor of a prohibitory law. The majority of the members of this House might favor such a law, but that would not necessarily prove that the people were in favor of it. A proposition has been submitted to repeal the Scott Act, or in other words, a proposition that would involve the repeal of the Scott Act. I am opposed to that amendment. I think that Act was passed as a concession to the temperance people of this country, and should not be repealed. I repeat that that Act was given to the temperance people as a concession, and they should be satisfied with it until the people of the country at large have manifestly exhibited their wishes in favor of a prohibitory law by petitions sent to this House in a manner so as to convince the House that they want such a measure. But I do not believe the people of this country desire such a law; on the contrary, a large majority of the people are opposed to such an enactment. The State of Maine has been quoted, and the House is aware that a prohibitory law has existed there for the last thirty years. But everything has not been said about the State of Maine. There drug store-keepers are licensed to sell liquor on certain conditions. If, however, you go there you will find that they sell to every one who wants liquor. The only difference, therefore, is that the druggist sells at very high prices and is able to acquire a fortune in a shorter time than elsewhere. Go to Vermont and observe the state of things there. I went there last year with a party of excursionists. I had not been in the hotel more than a half an hour when a person came to me and said in a whisper: "There is more than ice water to be had here." I went round to another part of the house, and off the vestibule there was a large room completely filled with barrels and bottles containing liquor of all kinds. I went to two places in Vermont, and I found the same state of things at every place. These facts show that a prohibitory law does not prevent the sale of liquor, it may limit it perhaps; but it certainly affords the means for druggists and others to make comfortable fortunes in a short time. I will conclude my remarks as I commenced them. I think temperance is a virtue, and that the best means to inculcate, promote and encourage that practice is moral suasion. It is, of course, said that drunkenness is a vice, and that means should be resorted to for prohibiting it. We have the ordinary laws of the country, which deal with any kind of disorder. But some people would like to remove what they call the cause of drunkenness—to remove all alcoholic liquors. Those people should not forget that there are other vices prevailing in the community, perhaps of a worse character than drunkenness, and prevailing on a large scale. But I suppose that, if they should propose to remove the cause, they would not find it an easy task. The ordinary laws of the country, which have been passed to prevent and repress disorder, should undoubtedly be put in force, and, if the laws are not sufficiently stringent, they should be made more strict in order to be effective; but do not expect to make the people sober by Act of Parliament.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to offer some remarks on the motion moved by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson), as I do not desire to record a silent vote on this very important question. The question of prohibition is one which has been discussed in the country at considerable length, and I think it is but right that this House should give an expression of opinion upon that issue. I am sorry to say that the Scott Act has not given entire satisfaction in the county from which I come, but as the people have the power in their own hands, and if they are so disposed, can rescind the Act at the expiration of three years, I do not think it would be wise on my part to vote for the repeal of the Act; and I question the wisdom of any hon. member of this House, coming from a constituency where the Scott Act is in force, voting in favor of rescinding that Act. If the Act itself did not provide for its being rescinded by the vote of the people, I might possibly, under circumstances such as exist at the present time in my own county, be induced to vote for its being rescinded. I notice that the county council of my county, who have just adjourned a day or two ago, passed a resolution in favor of rescinding the Scott Act, by a vote of 21 to 16; but as the municipal elections last year were not held on the question of temperance, or on the Scott Act, I cannot allow myself to be guided in this matter by the expression of our county council. When a majority of the people express their views in favor of the Scott Act, I felt it my duty to follow the course indicated by my constituency, or else resign. I am sorry to admit that the Act has not given entire satisfaction. There are many reasons why it has not been entirely satisfactory. In the first place, it is very hard to get a man who is disposed to go around the country and take the necessary steps in order to secure prosecutions. There are very few who are willing to give evidence which will enable a police magistrate to impose fines, and I should be glad indeed to see some amended provisions to the Scott Act. I believe it is wrong that the hotel-keeper should be the only party fined. I know that in sections where the Scott Act is in force there are many men who voted for that measure, but who, I have no doubt, will afterwards go to the hotel-keepers and try to induce them to break the law. That is a deplorable condition of things, and I think the Act should be amended so that fines should be imposed on the man who buys the liquor as well as on the man who sells it, for I believe such an amendment would deter a great many of such people from buying liquor, and thereby inducing hotel-keepers to break the law. But my reason for voting for prohibition is simply this, that I do not believe we can ever rid ourselves of the abuse of spirituous liquors as long as we sanction its manufacture and importation. If it is an evil that we really want to get rid of, I do not believe we can get rid of it by the system of local option we have at the present moment. I do not believe the Scott Act is going to accomplish what we expected it would accomplish, and I should like to see the people of the Dominion permitted by a plebiscite to dispose of the whole question of whether they are prepared for prohibition or not. I think the people are the proper parties to apply to in such a matter, and it is for them to say whether they are prepared for prohibition or not. I do not think any system of prohibition will ever be brought into force in this country unless the people declare in favor of prohibition, and I am willing to give them an opportunity of doing so. I would prefer prohibition to the Scott Act, simply because I think the Scott Act has not accomplished what was expected, but in the meantime I cannot bring myself to vote for the repeal of the Scott Act, in face of my constituency having adopted it. I notice that the hon. gentleman who brought in the resolution gave notice, as early as the 23rd of April, of an amendment to the Scott Act, but that Bill has never been read yet. I think if he was honestly sincere in bringing in that amendment he should have had it at a more advanced stage than it is in now, at this period of the Session. There are some provisions of that amendment which I think are very good, and some which are objectionable; but I think it is our duty, as long as the people are in favor of the Scott Act, to give every facility to enforce it. The Scott Act works better in some municipalities than it does in others, but just because it may not work so well in my own county as it may in others, I have no desire to deprive other counties of its provisions. In those counties where it has been the means of doing good and suppressing the use of intoxicating liquors, it has undoubtedly been an advantage, but if we voted here to repeal it we would be depriving the people of those counties of the advantages they have secured under the Act. I should like to have heard the leader of the Government say something on this important question. I think it is a question which deserves, at least, some expression of opinion from the leader of the Government. We have heard some views expressed by the temperance member of the Cabinet, but at the same time we all fully understand the position he occupies in the Cabinet—that he speaks only for himself. He is not the leader of the Government, and, consequently, his opinions and views are only the opinions and views of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and not of the Cabinet. I would like to hear the leader of the Government give the House some explanations as to the position the Government occupies on this question. I hope they will not divide up into twos and threes, the same as they did on some other questions in this House. I do consider this a very important question; it is one which the people of this country have taken up, and it has no doubt received very careful consideration at the hands of a large circle of the people of this Dominion. But when a question reaches that point which shows that the people of the country are sincerely anxious with regard to it, when the several religious denominations have taken it up, and the several important bodies which are advocating temperance measures in this country are taking it up, I think in such a case the leader of the Government should express some opinion as to the course of the Government upon it. I expected that the leader of the Government would have spoken to-day, after the question had been called three times, when I expected every moment that the members would be brought in to record their votes, but though the leader of the Government was in the House he did not rise to express his views. I hope we will have the advantage of his advice. I am sure the people are looking forward to his expressing an opinion on this question, and I feel sure that they will not be satisfied without his getting up and manfully expressing his views on this important question. Now, I do not wish to detain this House any further. I desired to give the reasons why I shall vote as I intend to do. I shall undoubtedly vote for the motion of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) in favor of prohibition, believing that it is much better than the Scott Act, and believing that we shall never accomplish what we expect to accomplish unless we get prohibition. I shall not vote to repeal the Scott Act, simply because my county has not done so. When my county votes to repeal the Scott Act, it will be time enough for me to alter my views on that question and vote against the Scott Act, but not till then.

MR. McMULLEN.

MR. McNEILL. If we have not had the benefit of the views of the right hon. leader of the Government on this question, we have had, at all events, the next best thing: we have had the benefit of the views of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) the present leader of the Opposition. I had not intended to say anything on this question, and, as it is, I shall not occupy the time of the House more than a very few moments; but, in the present condition of things, I do not feel that I can give a silent vote on this subject. In the first place, I feel that it is almost incumbent upon me to say a word or two in defence of some statements made by my hon. friend from the east riding of Bruce (Mr. Cargill). My hon. friend has given the House, in a very practical, and, I think, very interesting way, the benefit of facts in regard to this matter which he could himself vouch for as having fallen under his own observation; and I do venture to say that if there be any one thing more than another in connection with this question which we in this House and the public require, it is reliable, well-authenticated facts, and that is what my hon. friend from East Bruce gave us. My hon. friend told us that he had been a strong advocate of the Scott Act. He gave us his reasons for that, and he gave us the reasons why he had come to the conclusion that in advocating the Scott Act he had made a mistake, and why he now asked this House to repeal that Act. Those, I think, were valuable statements on the part of my hon. friend; but scarcely had he resumed his seat when my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries rose in his place and poured a regular broadside into my hon. friend from East Bruce. We know very well that the Minister of Fisheries and those who agree with him in his views on this question have been heretofore the principal exponents of facts in connection with this matter in this House, and we know that the hon. Minister of Fisheries does not like to have poachers upon his preserves. I for my part do not blame him for that, as I believe most true Canadians will say so, that so long as he pegs away at the poachers, may his shadow never grow less. But I confess that when I heard some of the blood-curdling threats hurled across the floor of the House by an hon. member a little pugilistic in his proclivities, and coming from a constituency that we were told, on the authority of the hon. Minister of Customs, was a rather combative and pugilistic constituency—when I heard those threats hurled across the House at my hon. friend, I began to be afraid that peace with honor, in so far as it concerned those important matters which were under the charge of my friend, was beginning to look a little fishy. At all events, I thought those of us who looked towards my hon. friend for a supply of fry for our inland waters might soon find ourselves in a considerable stew. At least, it would seem that all the fat was in the fire. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do think that a more unfortunate ending of our dispute with our neighbors to the south, with reference to our fisheries, could scarcely be imagined than that my hon. friend the Minister of Fisheries should fall a victim to the vengeance of hon. gentlemen opposite. In fact, I think he will bear me out in the statement that so impressed was I with his danger, that I suggested to him at the time the advisability of his having a body-guard provided for his defence. We all know that hon. gentlemen opposite have been making a dead set at my hon. friend for some time past; but I most sincerely hope, for the sake of our fry, for the sake of our fish, and for the sake of our fame, that they will not press their persecution to such a tragical conclusion as seemed to be threatened the other night; for if the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite on the fishery question is the assassination of the hon. Minister of Fisheries, I venture to say that the people of the Dominion will not altogether approve of their policy. But while I approve very much indeed of my hon. friend protecting the premises under his control from poachers, I do not at all believe in his pouring broadsides into friendly fishermen in the prosecution of their daily calling. My hon. friend from East Bruce had, in the course of his researches with reference to the Canada Temperance Act, fished for us some very interesting and important facts; but no sooner were those facts in place before the House than the hon. Minister of Fisheries began to carp at them. I think this was really rather two hard upon my hon. friend. My hon. friend had told us very frankly that before the establishment of a tavern in the village of Cargill he had not been troubled with drunkenness in that village, and he has told us further that after the population of the village of Cargill had so increased that it was necessary to provide a place of public refreshment, he was troubled with drunkenness among his people. Thereupon my hon. friend the Minister of Fisheries seized upon this statement, and proceeded to argue that this was the most absolute proof that my hon. friend from East Bruce should be more than ever a supporter of the Scott Act, because, he said, so long as there was no opportunity for drinking there was no drinking, but so soon as the opportunity for drinking was afforded, drunkenness commenced. Well, that is just what I understood to be the very reason which influenced my hon. friend in supporting the Scott Act in the first instance. I do not think that it is a proposition that requires very much argument to establish, that where there is no opportunity for drinking, no drinking will take place. That, I think, is a pretty plain proposition. But what my hon. friend from East Bruce (Mr. Cargill) said was this, that after the Scott Act had been introduced, he found, very much to his surprise, that the opportunities for drinking had not been removed; that drinking still continued in spite of and in defiance of the law of the land, and that the condition of Bruce county, after the introduction of the Scott Act, was worse than its condition in respect of drinking before the introduction of the Act. He went further, and said that the introduction of the Scott Act had not decreased, but, on the contrary, had very much increased the opportunities for drinking. Well, then, an hon. gentleman opposite started up, and said that the reason why the Scott Act had not been successful in the east riding of Bruce, was because the people of that riding being largely German and of German extraction, were not in sympathy with the Act. Now, I believe that is very likely to be the case. I believe that unless there be an overwhelming majority of the people in any district in which the Act is introduced, in sympathy with the Act, and not only in sympathy, but enthusiastically in sympathy with it, the Act can never be enforced. Then comes the question: If you have such a majority of the people in sympathy, and enthusiastically in sympathy with the Act, in any given locality, is there any need in that locality for the Act at all? But the hon. gentleman who, on the opposite side of the House, attacked my hon. friend from East Bruce, went further, and said my hon. friend had no right to speak with regard to the county of Bruce, but only with regard to that riding which he himself represented. I venture to inform the hon. gentleman that in that statement he is altogether mistaken, for my hon. friend is very frequently in the north riding of Bruce, and has a good opportunity of judging the action of the Scott Act in that riding. I can substantiate what he said with regard to the effect of that Act in the north riding of Bruce itself. I do not think it comes altogether in very good taste from an hon. member of this House to call in question a statement as to fact of another hon. member, who is in a position to judge more accurately as to the facts than is the hon. gentleman who criticises his utterances. So far as I am concerned, I feel it to be my duty on this occasion to say distinctly that the simple, unadulterated, unexaggerated truth is that, so far as the county of Bruce is concerned, the Scott Act has been an utter and lamentable failure. I entirely endorse what my hon. friend has said in reference to that matter. Whether the appointing of a police magistrate or of other officers might have the effect of making that Act more effective, I am not prepared to say, but I am prepared to say that for so far, and carried out as it has been, the Act is a complete dead letter in the county of Bruce. It is even worse. I may just instance the village of Wiarton, near which I live myself. In that village there were, before the passing of the Scott Act, some four or five places where intoxicating liquor could be purchased, but only last winter I was informed by several people, on whose statement I could thoroughly rely, and some of whom had been supporters of the Act, that there were now, not four or five, but over twenty places where intoxicating liquor is sold in the village of Wiarton. Notwithstanding this, I am unable to support the resolution of my hon. friend or any of the motions at present before the House—either the main motion itself or either of the motions in amendment; and for this reason: because those resolutions, if we give effect to them, will interfere with the right which we have declared that the people possess in reference to these matters, the right, namely, that the people should be consulted directly as to legislation of this sort. This House has come to the conclusion that it is a somewhat serious thing to decree what the people shall be precluded from eating or drinking; and this House has, for years passed, proceeded upon the principle that it shall be left to the people themselves, to decide, by direct vote, whether or not they will have further restrictive legislation with reference to the selling of intoxicating liquor. Now, it may be very well open to question whether that course was a wise course or not; but, so long as the principle has been accepted, so long as it has been acted upon for many years, and so long as the people have taken advantage largely of the powers thus conferred upon them, I cannot see my way, by supporting this main resolution, to take from the people that right which we have said they ought to possess, and thus run the risk of forcing upon the people prohibitive legislation against their will. For precisely the same reason, I cannot support the amendment of my hon. friend, which would repeal the Act which the people have themselves adopted by virtue of this very same right that we have conferred upon them, and upon which, in my own county, they will have an opportunity of voting in the course of this year, and upon which, I believe, in every county in the Province of Ontario in which the Act is in force, the people will have an opportunity of voting next year. So far as the proposition of my hon. friend for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) is concerned, proceeding upon the same principle, I am prepared to treat it just as I would treat the resolution as to prohibition. I am prepared to support a motion, leaving that question as to light wines and beer to be decided by direct vote of the people, and I am prepared to support a resolution leaving the question of prohibition to be decided upon by a direct vote of the people. This, so far as my light goes, is the only logical position we can assume, situated as we are, with reference to this question, unless we are prepared to take from the people that liberty in reference to these matters which we have conferred upon them, and, so far as I am concerned, I do not see my way to doing that.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). The Scott Act was adopted by the large majority of 1,600 in the county of Huron. I agree with the principle that the people should be in strong sympathy with the Act before they carry it out, and the vote cast by the ratepayers of the county of Huron showed they were in strong sympathy with the Act. There is, however, another necessity, and unless that other necessity is fulfilled, it is utterly impossible for the Act to be enforced. And that is that all the officials who should be appointed to carry out the Act should be strongly in sympathy with it. One reason why I have risen is to show that the officials we had in the county of Huron were not in sympathy with the Act, but were opposed to its being carried out. At the time the Scott Act came into force in the county of Huron, there was a Bill brought into the Senate called the Wine and Beer License Act. It was passed by the Senate, was sent to this Chamber, was amended here, was sent back to the Senate, was sent back to the House of Commons, and back to the Senate again. The people in the county of Huron felt that as long as this matter was not determined, the Scott Act was a dead letter and could not be carried out. At the June meeting of the county council a motion was carried asking the warden and clerk to memorialise the Lieutenant Governor to appoint a police magistrate for the county of Huron, provided that the wine and beer clauses were not passed. But the warden was so bitterly opposed to the Scott Act that he put his veto upon that action of the county council of Huron and did not send the requisition to the Lieutenant Governor. In fact, he did everything possible to prevent the Scott Act being enforced in the county of Huron. He was also one of the commissioners appointed to carry out the Act, and twelve months ago a deputation of the Scott Act people went before the county council and asked them to appoint a police magistrate. Two of the commissioners and the inspector for the west riding of Huron appeared also before the county council in opposition to the appointment of a police magistrate. A discussion took place which showed that in five of the first cases which were taken to the inspector for him to accept an information, he refused to take an information or to have anything to do with the cases; private individuals took those five cases up and lodged the information before an ordinary justice of the peace; the cases were tried, and out of the five cases three convictions were secured. This showed that the officials in office in the county of Huron were not in sympathy with the Act, and were determined, as far as their action went, to make it a failure. I have no doubt that the action taken by them in that county was taken by the officials generally under the McCarthy Act and under the Scott Act where it was passed. This is one of the reasons why the Scott Act has not been successful in the county of Huron. For the first two months after it became the law of the land, you could go into almost any hotel in the county of Huron and could not get intoxicating liquor until it was found out that the officials winked at the violation of the law. The Scott Act has never had a fair opportunity, and it is only at the present time being put into proper working since the Local Government has taken it in hand to enforce; and in two of the ridings of Huron it is as well enforced as any law which is on the Statute-book. The people give the Scott Act a strong support. The people wish to have an opportunity to fully try it, and I say, without fear of successful contradiction—or at least this is my belief—that the Government which rules in this House of Commons has done everything possible to make that Act a dead letter by appointing officials all over the country who were not in sympathy with that Act. No Government that appoints officials who are opposed to any Act does justice to the people of any country over which they preside. With reference to the amendment in regard to wine and beer, the action of the county council of Huron, in instructing the warden and clerk to memorialise the Lieutenant Governor in the event of that provision not becoming law, shows that they believe that, if such a law was enacted, the Scott Act would be a dead letter. So I believe, and therefore, I cannot vote for that amendment to the main motion. With respect to prohibition, a great many throughout the length and breadth of the land believe that, if the Scott Act is passed in two or three counties, and there is one county in the centre in which it is not passed, it cannot be enforced, as the county in which it does not exist can make it a dead letter in the others. Some say that prohibition is an infringement of private right. We cannot live in a civilised community without certain private rights being infringed upon. In an uncivilised state, a man roams over the length and breadth of the land at pleasure, but in a civilised community he cannot trespass upon his neighbor's land. In a civilised community you cannot indecently expose your person without violating the laws of the land, and it becomes the duty of the Government—

Mr. McNEILL.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Hon. gentlemen may laugh, but I will make this observation, that they pass laws to punish those who do not properly support their wives and families, those who become drunk and disorderly, and, if it is right for the Government to pass such laws, as it certainly is, it cannot be beyond their duty to pass a law to prevent that which causes men to violate such laws more than all other causes put together. As to infringing upon private rights, a Government has a right to enact such provisions against members of a community as the moral sense of the the best members of the community wish to place upon themselves. I have never met a single individual who said he was sorry that he had not drunk more liquor or had not caused the community to drink more liquor to demoralise themselves; but, when men get more advanced in life, and take a backward view of their actions, there is not a well constituted mind in the country but considers that he has a duty to perform to the country of his adoption or birth, and that is to do everything he can to forward the morality and the industry of the people; and I say that there is no element which does so much to cause idleness and to do away with the fruits of industry as intoxicating liquor. As to the amount of revenue which we receive from intoxicating liquors—$6,000,000 will cover the whole amount, I think—the question is often asked what will Canada do as far as revenue is concerned if we pass a prohibitory law. Well, at the present time, as I understand, the drink bill of Canada is about $27,000,000. Some put it as high as $33,000,000. Provided that amount of money was not spent upon liquor, a great amount of it would go to purchase dutiable goods, which would be of more benefit to the community, and the money invested in that traffic would be invested in lines of trade not so injurious to the country as the liquor traffic. Taking all that into consideration, I cannot but vote for the main motion of the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson), considering that, when I do that, I vote for a measure in the interests of the people of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am not at a loss how to vote in this case. We have three distinct propositions before the House. The first is a motion of the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) in favor of prohibition; the next is the amendment to the Scott Act by allowing the sale of wine and beer in Scott Act counties; the third is an amendment to repeal the Scott Act altogether. Now, with regard to the amendment to the amendment, I, for one, cannot support it. The people in these constituencies have voted for that measure, and they have a right to a fair trial of it, besides I do not believe it is in the interest of those opposed to prohibitory law that this Act should be repealed. Why, Sir, if you repeal it now, you put the most powerful weapon possible in the hands of those who are in favor of the Act, because you would give them a chance to say truly that the Act never had a fair trial, that if they had had more time they could have made it a success. Having adopted this Act, I think they have a right to a fair trial to see whether they can make it successful or not. I am one of those who look upon the Scott Act as a mere tentative measure, merely an experiment, in order to see whether the country is ready for prohibition, and I believe that the ultimate object of those who support the Scott Act, is the total prohibition of the traffic. Then with regard to the amendment itself, which is to allow the sale of wine and beer, I take the same objection to it. People have adopted the Scott Act pure and simple, they have adopted it as it stands on the Statute-book, and we have no right to step in now and mutilate it, and change it from what it was when they adopted it. On one hand we have been told that the Scott Act is a success, on the other hand we have heard it was not a success, that it is a total failure. The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) for whose judgment and intelligence I have the most profound respect, says that it is just as easy to carry out the Scott Act as it is to carry out any other penal law. Now, I submit that reason and fact are both opposed to that ground. There is no parallel between the two cases, there is no resemblance between them. In the case of offences against the criminal law, such for example, as violations of the law against theft, violations of the law against murders, or against perjury, and so on, the universal common feeling of the community is in favor of those laws. Even the criminal standing at the bar to receive sentence for stealing, never for a moment thinks of questioning the justice of the law under which he has been condemned. But with reference to a prohibitory law, the case is entirely different. Let me draw the attention of the House for a moment to the elements of society which you have to take into account in estimating the results of a law of that description and its chances of success. First of all, there is a pretty large section of the community who are what we call teetotalers from principle, men who, on principle, abstain from the use of intoxicating drinks altogether, and who are anxious to have their friends and neighbors do the same thing. Now, I submit, that if a large majority of the community were of that opinion and practice, it would be a very simple matter to carry out a prohibitory law, and, if the great mass of the people were of that practice, a prohibitory law would not be needed, the people would be a law to themselves. But, unfortunately for the law, that class is not by any means in the majority. I speak advisedly, judging from my own observation and from information, when I say that those who abstain strictly from the use of intoxicating liquor, and who can be depended upon to help carry out a law of that description, are not by any means in a majority, and how is it with the rest of the community? You have behind them a very large class of good, honest people, who believe it is no harm to take a little intoxicating liquor, but who will vote for a prohibitory law simply because they have some friends, some acquaintances, or, it may be, members of their own family, about whom they are anxious; and above all they want to be on the right side of a moral question. All these men will vote for a prohibitory law, but they vote to prohibit other people, not themselves. They have no intention of prohibiting themselves; they intend to take a drink, if they desire to do so, when they can get it; and I am a little afraid that sometimes, when the law has been passed, some of them do not scruple to violate it in order to get a drink. You cannot expect any very strenuous support of a prohibitory law from that class of people. Then you have a further large class who do not believe in prohibitory legislation at all. They hold that it is an infringement of their rights as individuals to dictate to them what they shall drink or what they shall not drink; and when you endeavor to carry out the law you have the active and energetic opposition of all this class. And then, super-added to these, you have a large class whose property has been depreciated or, perhaps, ruined by the introduction of the law; whose occupation has been taken away from them, and who have been nearly ruined by it; and you have their active opposition and their bitter enmity to contend with in carrying out a law of that description. When you take these elements into consideration, you can see at once that there is no parallel between a prohibitory law and other penal laws. Now, Sir, so far as regards the motion before the House, I must say that I cannot support it in its present shape. I say, and I state it advisedly, that I believe that it would perpetrate a great injustice to a large, respectable and deserving portion of the community, and I hold that any prohibitory measure, to be of any use, must be total, it must suppress the manufacture and sale of the traffic in intoxicating drinks. And I submit that we cannot do that without interfering with private property, without ruining them in their property and business, and before you do that you must provide some means for a fair compensation for the injury you have done them. That is the ground I take, and no measure that does not provide for that, can I in justice support. Why, Sir, how stands the matter? For ages, ever since we have had a popular government at all, we have been telling these men that this is a legitimate traffic, we have been telling them, by our legislation, that if they choose to invest their money in that form of property, and to pay a certain revenue to the Government, they would be allowed to pursue that traffic unmolested. Have we any right to turn round now and confiscate their property that we have encouraged them to invest in? So, Sir, I cannot vote for any measure to destroy their property without giving adequate compensation. I know that it is objected, that sometimes the same thing is done by limiting the number of those who are allowed to sell, but I submit that is not done in this House. That is a matter of municipal legislation; the municipalities have a right to do it, but this House has no right to legislate in that direction, and we are not obliged to be guided in our legislation by these municipalities. If they do what is wrong, that is no reason why this House should follow their example. Again, with regard to the observation made that those engaged in the trade are not entitled to compensation because of the evils inflicted on society; I have heard it stated on many platforms that those men had done wrong to society and are not entitled to compensation. I submit that you can never make an act right by doing a wrong, you never can rectify a wrong by doing another. Those men have been encouraged to invest their means in that business by the legislation of ages past, and we have no right to come down upon them now and confiscate their property. Look at the immense sums invested in the manufacture of intoxicating liquor throughout this country. Men have invested all their means, they may be in debt; if you pass a law of that kind you destroy totally the value of their plant, you reduce the value of their buildings to a minimum, because in most cases they are not fit for anything else. Then in regard to the retail traffic, by hotel-keepers for instance. I know cases where men, encouraged by the laws of the country, have invested in valuable property, have paid a part of the amount and are in debt for the rest. If Parliament passes a prohibitory law without granting compensation it will destroy their interest in that capital and make beggars of them. Have we a right to do that? I say we have not. It is said that those men have had sufficient warning. I reply that the warning has been the other way. It is over thirty years since the first attempt was made to pass prohibitory legislation, and although those years have rolled away, yet only one state, the State of Maine, has made anything like a success of the attempt at total prohibition, and they have not succeeded in it, because I have been told by the best and strongest authority that it is not a complete success even there. The experience is that legislation has been all the other way, as going to show that the business is likely to be permanent. I have said that a measure of that kind was unjust for it would deprive men of their property without giving any compensation, and it is a measure for which I cannot vote. I believe in the good old rule, and I believe in the authority of him who laid down the rule that: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." I believe we, as legislators, are bound by that rule; I believe it is our duty to legislate in accordance with it, and believing such to be the case I cannot support such injustice as would be perpetrated by a measure such as that proposed, unless the remedy is also provided.

Mr. PORTER. I will not detain the House at any length by the remarks I am about to offer; but I desire to say that this debate has developed at least one or two points that are quite distinct and clear. One of those points is, that several hon. gentlemen opposite rose specially for the purpose of finding fault with the Government for their action in regard to the temperance question and the Scott Act. The principal point which could be discovered in some of the speeches was an intentional desire to find fault with the Government for their action in this matter. The hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) even travelled out of his way to assail the Government for acts for which the Government were not at all responsible. He told the House that the Scott Act was neutralised in its action, was weakened in its effect by the acts of certain officials of that county, officials with whom the Dominion Government had nothing at all to do. I wish to ask that hon. gentleman what the Dominion Government had to do with the appointment of the warden of Huron, with the appointment of magistrates and police and license inspectors?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I would ask the hon gentleman—

Several hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. McMILLAN. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. ARMSTRONG.

Several hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. McMILLAN. I say that the inspector of West Huron was appointed by the Government—he was the inspector under the Scott Act.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is not a point of order.

Mr. McMILLAN. I want to make an explanation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. PORTER. The Dominion Government had nothing to do with his appointment. Hon. gentlemen opposite attempt to make political capital out of every subject discussed in this House. I protest against such a course. This question is a great national question, and should be discussed as such. It is one to which we should give our best attention; and why cannot hon. gentlemen, for a single moment, forget their partisanship and discuss it on its own merits? I will not endeavor to discuss the nature of the principles involved in the resolution of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson). I think, from the speeches delivered, it is manifest that hon. members, with very few exceptions, assent to the principle involved in it, that is that total abstinence would be best for all. The other question before us is as to the advisability of the present House enacting some prohibitory legislation that would prevent the manufacture, importation and sale of liquor, so that it might not be used as a beverage in this country at all; and it is to that point I will very shortly direct the attention of the House, and give the reasons for the vote I am about to give. On this question hon. gentlemen have put forward two distinct propositions; the first is that this Parliament has a right to enact the law; the second proposition is that this is a good law. I will say this much, that it would certainly be a good law if the circumstances of the case were such as to warrant it. A good law is one which not only contains a great and a right principle in itself, but is one which commands the concurrent testimony and support of all the people. If the principle which may be created into a law does not fulfil those conditions, then we as legislators of this great Dominion should consider and weigh very clearly and closely the reasons that should animate us in our actions, and we should also consider how we should vote upon such an important matter. The first proposition I grant. I believe total abstinence is best for all men; I believe the nation would be greatly advanced in its moral and material welfare if total abstinence were practiced by all men. I believe still further, that the time is rapidly coming when that principle will prevail and that practice will be common, and when a law such as that proposed would scarcely be any more necessary than any other law on the Statute-book, simply to punish a few that offend against the many. But as to the other proposition, would it be wise in us to pass a law which had not the concurrent testimony and support from outside of the whole of the people? That proposition has been denied in the House by the testimony of almost every member who has spoken. Scarcely a single member has risen to speak on this subject but he has distinctly told the House that partial prohibition is a failure. Some have said that this arose from one thing, some that it arose from another and some that the fault is due to the Government. Some say the Government is the cause of it; others say that it is owing to the indifference of the people in supporting the law, but if there is one thing clearer than another, if there is one thing proved more distinctly than another, it is that this local option, this partial prohibition, is undoubtedly a failure. If that be the case, then how can the best friends of temperance ask us to enact a measure which will include the whole Dominion? But it is said that the number of voters who have cast their ballots in favor of this Act is so large, is so much superior in every county to those who have voted against it, that this is a certain, and perfect, and unmistakable proof that the people are in favor of the Act. It is said that out of twenty-six men, sixteen have voted for the law, and ten have voted against it. I contend that that is not a sufficient measure of support to warrant any Government in passing a law which shall make it obligatory on all, because, out of these sixteen men, how many have, perhaps, voted—not that they have been convinced, as the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has said—that it is wrong to take a glass of liquor; not that they have been convinced that a glass of wine or beer would be injurious to themselves, but that out of their sympathy, out of their feelings of humanity, they have voted in this manner for the benefit of others. Well, that is an intelligible motive and one that does them credit. But here is where an error creeps in, for it is said that these people believe that what is good for others is not good for themselves, and, therefore, that they are not sincere; that they wish others to restrain while they do not restrain themselves. And I contend that this respectable minority of ten out of twenty-six is sufficiently large to cause any Government of a free country to pause before they should apply the whips and scourges of the law to make that minority obey. There is no doubt that we are passing away, certainly, from the principles and actions of a free Government, because we are making but a very small majority, in a most material matter, rule over a very distinct and considerable minority. I think also that it is true, Sir, that this measure would be better observed if the means which were taken to obtain the sixteen out of the twenty-six were still carried on. How has the temperance cause been advanced heretofore? It has been advanced by the principles of moral suasion. How have those who are now total abstainers and supporters of a prohibitory law been made so? Has it been by legal enactment? By the coercion of the law? No; it has been by moral suasion, by their observation and conviction, by the education of the press, the pulpit and the platform; and I contend that, if these measures are still persevered in and these means still used, the same results will follow; and not only so, but that an increased measure of success will certainly follow, and that which we all desire, the total abstinence of our people, will be the sure and inevitable consequence. But, suppose the Government proposed to coerce this minority, what would be the consequence? Allow me to state what was said to me by a certain gentleman in the town of Clinton, a man who is well known for his temperance advocacy and his strong, consistent temperance principles, a member of the Methodist Church. In the Local election for South Huron there were two candidates, one of whom was known to be a temperance candidate, a most consistent advocate of temperance principles all his life, a member of the Church, and a respectable member of society, while the other candidate was not known as a temperance advocate. The gentleman who was a temperance man was brought out clearly and distinctly as a temperance candidate, and what was the result of that election? The result was that his opponent had three times the majority against him that was polled by the candidate at the previous election. We were talking about this, and the gentleman to whom I have referred, said: "I am sorry indeed that this has occurred, because it will undoubtedly put back the cause of temperance in this county for twenty years." Let me say further, that if the Government were to attempt the coercion of such a respectable minority by this majority, the consequences to temperance, sobriety and the observance of the law in every place, would be most fatal and disastrous. With reference to the Scott Act, the repeal of the Scott Act, and the advocacy of wine and beer licenses, I desire to say what has been said by other gentlemen in this House that the Scott Act being in force in the county, part of which I have the honor to represent, I would not consider that I was doing my duty if I took from the people the power which the law has placed in their hands. They have the right to repeal it if they do not desire it to remain in force, and in this case, if the sentiment of the people is not in favor of the law, then they may by their own action repeal it. Still further, I regard the Scott Act as tentative and educational. I believe it is an experiment; I believe it has an educational effect, and that if the people still continue to discuss and debate with reference to the Scott Act, and all the concomitants of that measure, it will have a most beneficial effect on the public mind; and will hasten that day which I hope to see, when all men will voluntarily abstain from intoxicating liquors. I shall, therefore, vote against the repeal of the Scott Act, and I shall also, most decidedly, vote against the granting of licenses for the sale of wine and beer.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I desire to say a few words on this question—

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I desire to make an explanation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend might surely be permitted to make an explanation, but if there is any objection I will move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). When I spoke of the warden he was an officer—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has a right to make a personal explanation, and I think the House will not refuse him that right. But I warn him to restrict his remarks simply to an explanation, and not to enter upon any general discussion of the matter before the House.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I wish only to explain that the warden was the license commissioner appointed by this Government, and that he was one of a deputation that came before the council, after he ceased to be warden, to prevent, as far as possible, the council from appointing a police magistrate. I said that the inspector came before the council to do everything he could to prevent them from appointing a police magistrate, and he refused to take an information on five different cases when brought before him, and when those cases were taken before a private magistrate, who took the information, he secured three convictions. I said that they were officials of this Government at that time.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I shall follow the usual line adopted by hon. members, by promising not to make a long speech on this subject, simply because the most of us desire to be at our homes this hot weather, and I think we should not be kept here any longer than is absolutely necessary. Still, notwithstanding this desire which animates myself, in common with other members, I cannot see this vote taken on this important question without, at all events, giving a reason for the way in which I shall vote myself. I will commence by laying down this proposition: that I believe that if a resolution were to be proposed this evening to this effect: Resolved, that intemperance or drunkenness is an evil, I do not believe there is a single individual in this House who would vote against that. At all events, we have not heard one, except a few "noes" that we heard when the hon. member for Queen's, N.S. (Mr. Freeman) was speaking the other afternoon of the evils of intemperance. Now, if we lay that down as a premise, I will endeavor to give my reasons for the vote I shall give upon the question now before us. The first is the amendment to the amendment. In effect, it is, shall the Scott Act be repealed? Some have this evening, and the other afternoon, given as a reason why they think the Scott Act should be repealed, simply that it does not work. I doubt very much whether, in all those counties throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion where the people resolved that the Scott Act should be tried, the Act was enforced to the fullest extent, or to any great extent at all. I speak what I know; I speak from my experience in the county I have the honor to represent, the county of Annapolis. That county passed the Scott Act with a large majority very shortly after it became law. Perhaps the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Patterson) will say that because that majority consisted of only about two-thirds of the voters in the county, it could not be taken as an expression of the will of the people of that county. I differ from that view entirely. If that proposition is true, then I say that the hon. gentlemen who are in the House of Commons to-day, are not the men who should be here to represent their respective counties. I have not looked into the matter thoroughly, but I am quite convinced that very few of the members of this House received the majority of the votes in their respective constituencies. Even in the cases of those who have large majorities running up to 1,200 or 1,300, I doubt very much whether they have the majority of the votes of the electors in their counties. Therefore, I say that where large majorities were rolled up on the Scott Act, they did of necessity speak the mind of the people; and in the county of Annapolis the mind of the people was expressed very decidedly and emphatically in favor of the Scott Act. As soon as the Scott Act came into operation, it was enforced; there were fines here, there and everywhere, against rum sellers. To be sure, they had a great deal of trouble in prosecuting the liquor dealers, but they did prosecute them; they did fine them; they did shut up their shops. I remember the time when I could count 21 small rum shops in the town of Annapolis. To-day, go there and you can hardly find four, and those four, if they are selling at all, are selling in the back corners of their premises, into which they have been driven. And since I left my county, I hear that the Scott Act is being enforced as it never was before, and that even some of those four shops are now shut up, so that the Scott Act has, in effect, cornered the liquor traffic in the county of Annapolis. It went even so far in that county that the municipal council took it up. The last election of the municipal councillors was run, to a large extent, on the question, whether the rum sellers should be prosecuted or not, and whether an inspector should be appointed to prosecute them; and the very first resolution passed in the council after the election was that the money of the county should be used to an unlimited extent to prosecute the rum sellers in the county. In point of fact, they are determined to crush out rum selling and rum drinking in that county. Now, in the face of those facts, will any one say that there is not a single county in this Dominion where the Scott Act has not been a success? And when I say that of the county of Annapolis, I can also say it, to a great degree, of the county of Queen's, and I think also of the counties of Shelburne and Yarmouth. Hon. gentlemen from Ontario and Quebec pay a high compliment to the counties of Nova Scotia, and especially to the county I have the honor to represent, when they say: Don't give us prohibition because the people are not educated up to it. I say the people of Annapolis are educated up to prohibition; they are ready for prohibition; they are ready at any time to take the extended hand of any and all the counties of the Dominion of Canada that will go in for prohibition. Now, upon these facts, I shall not vote to repeal the Scott Act. I say the Scott Act is the larger portion of the wedge of prohibition, and it has been driven in, at all events, in the county of Annapolis; and for these reasons I shall hold up both hands, if that be possible, against the repeal of the Scott Act. Well, shall I vote in favor of the amendment to allow light wines, ale, and porter to be sold and imported within this Dominion and at the same time vote for prohibition of everything intoxicating except them? I say no, and for this reason:

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis).

Suppose, the dyke builders of Holland were to build a great dyke to keep out the waters that come in and flood their low lands and carry away their houses, and they left one little spot where the waters could just creep in, which afterwards became a hole, and at last a larger hole until the whole dyke was swept away, and the waters flowed over the lands the same as before. Now, then if the dyke of prohibition is to be put up, and a little hole is left in it through which ales and light wines can come in, there will not be many years before whiskey, rum, gin, and everything that has alcohol in it, will be swept over this country the same as before. I know that in the county in which I live, especially in the town of Annapolis, the effect of allowing the sale of light wines and beer would be, that little beer shops would crop up at every corner, with curtains in their windows, and behind those curtains men would go and get their whiskey, and gin, and rum, and brandy, precisely in the same way as they would if they were sold under licenses; and instead of having a peaceful town at night, instead of our female friends being able to go through the streets unmolested and unimportuned, you would have drunken rowdies on the streets, and females insulted in the twilight, if not in broad daylight. I believe that would be the effect in all the country towns throughout the Dominion of Canada. Now, shall I vote for prohibition? Most assuredly I shall. I shall vote for prohibiting the sale and importation of spirituous liquors in this fair Dominion of ours. Some say, oh, no; that would be an insult to our freedom. I ask hon. gentlemen what is freedom? I hold that the greatest freedom lies in restraint. Our greatest physical freedom lies in the restraint of our physical nature, just as we have the greatest freedom in the laws under which we live. Therefore, if these laws are beneficial, if they are good, if they are for the extermination of an evil, and this rum drinking is an evil, we can boast of being free, so far as that is concerned. People will say this depends on moral suasion; they say, use moral force, let the missionaries go out into this heathen land and endeavor to stem the tide of intemperance, and that will be all that is necessary. But I tell you, Sir, take away the temperance laws, and the missionaries, the teachers, the moral suasion people will have a contract on their hands that will last for years before they will have the temperance sentiment up to the standard it has attained to-day. I shall vote against the amendment and in favor of prohibition on this occasion.

Mr. LAVERGNE. Although this question has been thoroughly discussed, I do not wish to give a silent vote on this occasion. I may begin by saying that I will be happy to vote in favor of prohibition. In the constituency I have the honor to represent there are two counties, each of which has adopted the Scott Act, although in those counties the English speaking vote is only about one-fourth the entire vote. In the county of Drummond the Scott Act has been carried by a majority of over 1,000, and in Arthabaska, the population of which is almost entirely French Canadian, the Scott Act has been carried by a majority of about 1,500, so that judging from this the French Canadians are in favor of prohibition. I am sure that if the Act were put to the vote in the whole Province of Quebec, it would be carried by a large majority. I have made a small calculation, which, of course, is only an approximate one, of the economy that would be affected by the abolition of the liquor traffic in Drummond and Arthabaska. We have about a dozen taverns in those counties, each of which must give to its proprietor a yearly profit of about $1,200, and the total profit may be accounted for by a total sale of liquor to the extent of $50,000. That will give you an idea of the economy that could be effected in those two counties by the entire suppression of this traffic. Of course, I cannot say that the Act is in full operation, but we are fighting against these twelve tavern keepers with every prospect of success, for the mass of the people are ready to submit to the Act as they showed by the vast majority with which they carried it. We, therefore, expect in a short time to carry the day against these men, who apparently think they cannot make a living except by selling whiskey, and will then effect the economy I have mentioned. Besides this saving there is a saving of time and health, and there are advantages in other respects which I need not enumerate. As an instance of the evil consequences of drinking I might mention that not more than four years ago a murder was committed near Arthabaska, in which all the actors and even the witnesses were more or less under the influence of liquor. What were the consequences? A young man 32 years of age was killed, another man was sent to penitentiary for life, another for ten years, two others were sent to gaol, and, after some months of detention, succeeded in getting bailed, and finally cleared out to the States to escape trial. I need not, however, attempt to enumerate any of the evil results of drinking, because these evil results are admitted by everybody, and we only differ in regard to the means to be taken to guard against this scourge. People have argued that we cannot by law prevent the drinking of intoxicating liquor; but I say if we are to argue this, we might as well conclude that we cannot succeed in preventing any crime by law. It is undoubted, however, that we can, by law, restrict crime to a considerable extent, and to say that it is no use trying to help ourselves by legislation against this evil of drinking is equivalent to saying that there is no use in our trying, by legislation, to prevent the commission of any crime. It has been proposed, in amendment to the main motion, that we should allow the consumption of beer and wine. I am entirely opposed to that. Beer and wine would be as bad, if not worse, than are ardent spirits, because they would be mixed with whiskey, and a more poisonous compound would thus be obtained than is the whiskey pure itself. The proposal to repeal the Scott Act is, I consider, very unfair to those counties which have voted for the Act, and which have a remedy in the law itself, if they wish to repeal it. That would be taking away from them their acquired rights. For these reasons, I am opposed to the amendments, and will vote for the main motion.

Mr. BERGIN. It is not often that I ask the indulgence of this House. It is very seldom that I trespass upon its patience, and I must ask the hon. gentlemen to-night to grant me indulgence while I say what I feel it is necessary for me to say on this question. The resolution moved by the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) is not a question of prohibition, pure and simple. The very wording of the resolution shows that it would be impossible in this country to prohibit the manufacture of liquor. The resolution calls for the prohibition of the manufacture of ardent spirits, except for sacramental, medicinal, mechanical and scientific purposes. If we are to have prohibition, if we are to have a measure sufficient to prevent the manufacture and sale of ardent spirits, that measure must be one of total prohibition. If we permit their manufacture to any extent, and for any purpose, we are aiding to defeat the purpose for which this resolution has been proposed. Moreover, prohibition, as has been said by several hon. gentlemen, is an interference with the private rights of individuals. Now, I myself, on principle, am a prohibitionist, I believe in it to the fullest extent, even to the extent of interfering with the rights of individuals, but I cannot support the resolution for the reason that prohibition cannot be enforced in this country. We cannot with propriety place upon the Statute-book a law which cannot be enforced. We must not place ourselves in the position that the people of this country will treat the laws which we enact here with contempt and set them at defiance. We cannot afford to bring about such a state of demoralisation in the community as the enactment of a law which could not be enforced would bring about. Let the hon. gentlemen who propose prohibition reflect for a moment on the long line of frontier that we have, and on the millions of acres of forest and swamp that we have in this country, and they will see that it would be impossible to enforce prohibition. At this moment, in Scott Act counties, there are thousands of private stills, and there are hundreds of farmers in this country who, to-day, in defiance of the law, manufacture and drink their own beer. We who live in counties where the Scott Act has been adopted, know what the effect of the introduction of that Act has been. I was as strongly in favor of the Scott Act as any man in the community. I realised, as strongly as any gentleman who has spoken upon this subject, the evils of intemperance, and I felt it was my duty to make the attempt to try what virtue there was in the Scott Act; and, although I was more than eight hundred miles away from home forty-eight hours before the day of the vote being taken upon that Act, and although I knew it was likely to be injurious to my own business, I returned to vote for that measure. And what is the result? The result is that drunkenness, which was comparatively unknown in my county and in the town in which I live, to-day is everywhere. We never knew what drunkenness was until the enactment of the Scott Act. We had in the town in which I lived twelve licensed hotel-keepers previous to the introduction of the Act, and every man of them—to their honor be it said—was a sober man. No man ever knew one of them to have been drunk. But, to-day, we not only have not twelve respectable hotels, but we have from 100 to 150 unlicensed places dealing out poison morning, noon, and night, Sabbath day and week day. That has been the result of the Scott Act in the community in which I live. Every effort has been made to secure the enforcement of the law. We have an honest and able police magistrate, who has given every care and attention to the trial of the cases brought before him. He is as anxious for the enforcement of the Act as any man can be, but he has been met with an amount of evasion—not to call it perjury—on behalf of those who have been prosecuted before him, which prevented him from securing convictions in many cases. We were told by a gentleman a moment ago, whose zeal I think far outran his discretion, that, in order to enforce the Scott Act, we must have men who are entirely in sympathy with it. Has it come to this, that no man must be placed upon the bench in this country to officiate as a judge unless his prejudices are so strong that he must, rightly or wrongly, secure a conviction in every case that is brought before him? This is what has so injured the cause of temperance in this country—the excessive zeal on the part of those who have supported it. I maintain that, if temperance had been as temperately advocated as it has been intemperately, we would not be in the position to-day that we are, discussing these amendments and this resolution of my hon. friend from Lanark. It was pointed out by several members, during this discussion, that the proper method of making men sober was not by the enactment of coercion laws, but by educating the people through the press, through the pulpit and from the platform. If you do not educate people properly, if you do not bring them up in the fear of God, if you do not teach them to obey their parents, if you do not show them good example, you cannot expect to make them good men, good Christians, sober citizens. I heard with great surprise the Minister of Marine say, the other night, that the enactment of these laws toughened the moral fibre of the youth of this country. I think he knows little, except theoretically, of the manner in which the Scott Act acts in this country. Does he mean to tell me that it toughens the moral fibre of a child, that it makes its mind healthy, to see its father come home drunk every night, to see the mother giving drink to the child, and asking the father to give it another sup? It was bad enough in the old days, when the father went to the tavern and staggered in late at night or in the early morning, and got to bed without being seen by his child, but gave no mortifying, no terrible example; but now the liquor is brought home by him in the jug, he calls in his neighbors, they sit down and drink till they become all drunk. They give it to the daughter, to the son, to the mother, and to the little child, and we know that example preaches louder than precept, and the example set every day to these young children is not calculated to improve their moral fibre, or to make them healthy members of society. We are reproved who say that, instead of passing prohibitory laws, we should endeavor to ameliorate the condition of society. Let me say that, under proper instructions through the press and from the pulpit, before the enactment of the Scott Act, temperance principles were spreading widely and taking deep root. When men offended against society, you, Mr. Speaker, and older men in this House, can remember when it was not considered a crime, but, on the contrary, something to be proud of that a man could punish his bottle or two; and in fact, a comparatively few years ago, he was not looked upon as a very good fellow unless he drank until he was laid under the table. But, under moral suasion, as it is termed, under good example and the advice of the pulpit and the press, temperance did progress and advance until men were ashamed to be seen drunk, and society showed these men that society had the power to punish, and did punish, drunkenness. Men, through shame, gave up drink, who, under the oppression of an Act like the Scott Act, will continue to drink. We who know something of human nature, men like myself, who are thrown into contact with men of all classes of society, from the highest to the very lowest, know that there is what the Americans call a certain amount of cussedness in human nature which will make men rebel against restrictive laws, who will listen to persuasion and will be guided by reason, who when you attempt to coerce them will rebel and refuse to be guided by you. The experience of the Scott Act in every county I believe, except the county of Annapolis, has been such as it has been in my county, such as it has been described by everybody except the gentleman representing the county of Annapolis (Mr. Mills); and when I listened to him I could not help feeling that he must have had in that county gentlemen like those the member for Huron (Mr. McMillan) desired to have in his county, men who rightly or wrongly would punish everyone who came before them, men who could not see anything good or reasonable except according to their own views and prejudices. I have been a temperance man for nearly twenty years; I have used my influence, such as it was, as far as it laid in my power to use it, and I had large means of exercising my influence in that way; and I find that the greater portion of our work has been undone by a little over two years of Scott Act legislation. It is for this reason that I oppose, as I do oppose, the resolution of my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Jamieson). I am a firm believer that, if prohibition could be enacted, it would be for the interests of the community, but, by prohibition, I mean the absolute prohibition of the manufacture, or sale, or importation of liquor. But I know, as this resolution of my hon. friend from Lanark shows, that it is impossible to prevent its manufacture, nor can its importation be prevented. When we look at our thousands of miles of frontier, on both sides of which men are engaged in the manufacture and sale of liquor, when we look at the narrow line which divides us, across which immense quantities of liquor can be brought, and which would be brought over if it were not dearer on the other side than it is here, we must recognize the fact that it is impossible to prevent its importation. Now, if we legalise its manufacture, we know that the tendency of human nature is such that the amount we permit to be manufactured will be largely exceeded; and we know, also, if we attempt to curb the passions, and tastes, and appetites of men, as this law would do, we will raise a sort of rebellion amongst the people, and they will set the law at defiance. If we cannot prevent excess of drinking by moral suasion, by properly administered license laws, we must fail to put an end to it by enacting laws such as proposed by the resolution of my hon. friend. It is in human nature to rebel against every law of that kind. We know that from the child up, it is in human nature to gratify an appetite, if it be possible to do so; as it is with a child so it is with a man, and the experience of all such legislation, the wide world over, in ages past, has been that where laws like this are enacted, the people will defy them and set themselves at work to evade them. Why should we make such an attempt, when we have at hand means which are quite adequate to bring about the results which we desire? We know that not half a century ago it was the custom for men to drink until he was the best fellow who last fell under the table. But, Sir, under the influence of better teachings, under the influence of the Christian Church, under the influence of the press, under the influence of men who devoted themselves to the suppression of drunkenness, by exposing its sin and its consequences, a change has been brought about such as a prohibitory law could not have effected. Men are ashamed to be seen now, lying grovelling drunk under the table; men are ashamed to be seen now, staggering home from a dinner party, or from a ball. But it was not so a few years ago; and that change has been brought about by moral suasion. Why not let us stick to that? Why not let us endeavor, within the law, to restrict the use of liquor? We cannot entirely prohibit it, but we can restrict it and bring it, as experience has proved, within such limits as to make the use and the abuse of liquor very small in comparison with what it was a few years ago. The high license law, enacted in many of the States south of us, has been proved to have had a remarkably good effect. All parties seem to desire the success of the law. But with this sort of prohibitory law which we have now denominated the Scott Act, we have really no assistance in carrying it out. No man is willing to be an informer. People do not like to go to the courts and state that their neighbors were drunk at such a time; but enact a high license law, as they have in many of the States, and then you make it the interest of the men who pay a high license to be the administrators of the law. It is their interest to keep the sale of intoxicating liquors in their own hands; and, in order that they may derive as much benefit as possible from the license fees that they pay, they will keep a sharp look-out for violators of the law, and bring them before the police magistrate, that they may be punished. I believe the experience of the United States, where high licenses have been adopted, has proven that drunkenness has been brought in those States to a minimum. In this country, on the contrary, from the experience we have had of the Scott Act during the last few years, it has offered a premium to drunkenness; so far from lessening the vice, we have increased it fifty fold. Why, Sir, instead of ten or twelve licensed houses in the town in which I live, there are not less than 100 or 130 places where liquor is sold, as they say, on the sly. Now, is it well that society should be demoralised in that way? Is it well that the community should be corrupted in that way? Is it well that the old and the young, the male and the female, should be taught to evade and violate the law as is now being done in the Province of Ontario? I believe, Sir, that there is not a single county in Ontario where the Scott Act is in force, in which it can be honestly stated that the law has been successful. It astonishes me more than anything else in connection with this question of temperance and of total abstinence, that the men whose whole heart and soul seem to have been given to the promotion of temperance, should be so blind to the results as they appear to be in the matter of the Scott Act. If they test the condition of the country as regards the consumption of liquor, during the past few years, in which the Scott Act has been enforced, if they compare its condition now, with its condition three years, or six years, or ten years previously, they cannot but admit that the Scott Act has not been a success, but that, on the contrary, in every county where it has been enacted, the consumption of liquor has increased, and drunkenness has increased likewise. That has been the experience almost everywhere, except in the county from which my hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Mills) comes, where he says that the Act has worked wonders. Well, Mr. Speaker, it may be so. I do not say that it is not so, but the men of his county must be made of different material to the men of Ontario. There is in every man a spirit of rebellion against that which he believes interferes with his just rights, and there is a feeling in almost every man that as long as he does not drink to excess, to an excess, at all events, that leads him to violate the law, he has a right to drink. And there are thousands and tens of thousands in this country who believe that. We had from one of the advocates of this repressive legislation here to-night, the admission that a large number of those who voted for the Scott Act voted for it because they wished to make their brethren sober, although they retained for themselves the privilege of getting drunk. There are a great many such moral reformers as those in every community, men who are willing that their neighbors should drink cold water, while they themselves have the privilege of drinking whiskey and water. Those moral reformers do no good to the cause which they espouse, but like all over-zealous people they do a great deal of harm. They go far beyond what the circumstances warrant or the facts will justify, and although it may be that through the execution of most oppressive laws we may be able to put an end to open drinking, we cannot possibly put an end to private drinking. Why, the motion of my hon. friend is not a motion which, if he gives it careful consideration, he can say is one calculated to bring about the entire prohibition of the use of intoxicating liquors. You know, Mr. Speaker, that if you allow the manufacture of liquor for any purpose, there are men who will get it for some other purpose. It is not possible that you can permit the manufacture of liquor for any purpose in this country without it being taken advantage of for some other purpose; and when we consider that we have three thousand miles of frontier, that we have thousands and even millions of square acres of bush lands and swamps, and when we have, let me say the natural cussedness of the people, men who will have it if it can be got by hook or by crook, we cannot expect to put an end to drunkenness by legislation such as this. In every swamp in every Scott Act county, and in very many cellars, large quantities of a great deal better whiskey is manufactured there than you can buy in any of the stores or taverns. Is it well to educate the people to violate the law. Is it well to have a law of such a character that a great portion of the time, a large amount of the energy, and a great amount of the intelligence of the people is devoted to the violation of the law? It is not well that the law should be held in that sort of estimation by the people. I came, at very great expense and very great inconvenience, from a city where I happened to be at the time the Scott Act was about to be submitted to the people of my county, to vote for that Act. I must confess I had no great faith in the result of the Scott Act, I had no great belief that it would be to the advantage of the people of the county; but I felt that not having had a high license law attempted in our section of the country, that it would be well, at all events, to give the people who earnestly and honestly believed that the Scott Act would have a good effect, that it would lessen drunkenness, the opportunity of having it enacted. The Scott Act was carried in our county, and a more signal failure of an Act could not have taken place than that which occurred in regard to the Scott Act in those three counties, Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry. Everywhere the law is openly violated. Hotel-keepers do not think of closing their bars, and it is impossible to secure a conviction. We have an able, upright and honest police magistrate, but the conviction secured is a rare one. Why? Because the whole community is in arms against the law. By hook or by crook it is almost impossible to get a conviction; and is that a desirable state of things, that men should live in open violation of the law, that the law cannot be enforced? On the contrary, is it not humiliating and demoralising? When we contrast the happy state of our population, before the introduction of that Act, with the hourly, daily and nightly violations of the present law, we cannot but view with regret, and aye with sorrow, the day upon which we cast our votes in support of that law, and we long for the time when we shall have a law under which we can punish drunkenness, a law that we can enforce. It is not so now. It never will be so I know, so long as we have the present Scott Act in our county. Under the old law we did succeed, every day, in obtaining conviction against men who violated the law, either by selling after license hours or by selling to females or to minors, but now the securing of a conviction is the exception and not the rule. I believe, in common with the majority of the people in the county in which I live, that the enactment of a high license law would be productive of great benefit and would be enforced. How can it be expected that you can take a union of counties, like that in which I live, and enforce an Act like the Scott Act, when you have to the north counties in which there are license laws, to the east and west counties in which liquor is permitted to be sold, and to the south a long line of frontier where liquor is not only sold but manufactured, and from which it is smuggled across into this country. Why, it is a moral impossibility to enforce a prohibitory law in counties under such circumstances. There is no difficulty in obtaining liquor, in bringing it in morning, noon and night; and now, instead of having a high holiday once in a while during the late hours of the night in a by-way tavern, it is the rule in hundreds of houses, and I do not think anything has contributed more to the drunkenness in the community in which I live than the enactment of the Scott Act, which has caused every man who was in the habit of taking his glass, and taking it temperately, and many men who never took it or had it in their houses before, to bring it there, and the example they set to their wives, sons and daughters, is not beneficial. If the benefit to be derived from the Canada Temperance Act are to be measured by the results, we must admit that it was a sad day for the counties in which it was enacted, a sad day on which it was carried. I can speak for my county that the consumption of spirits or liquor, the amount of drunkenness in it, has increased ten, aye twenty fold, and it has had this other bad effect: it has caused the people to lose respect for the law. It has taught men to look upon it as almost a holy thing to evade the law and set it at defiance. Now, this is not a desirable state in which to put any community. On the contrary, we ought to endeavor to make our citizens law-abiding citizens. We should teach them respect for the law; we should never impose upon them a law which they will bend their every energy to break. There is no half-way house in this temperance legislation. If, Sir, you could prohibit its manufacture and sale for drinking purposes, you must prohibit its manufacture and sale for mechanical and all other purposes. If we let the unholy thing within our boundaries, there are men and women, and children, too, who will obtain it, who will drink it until they get drunk.

Mr. BERGIN.

There is no half-way house. Such a measure as that proposed by my hon. friend, much credit as it may do his heart, is not a measure which can be enforced. It allows liquor to be manufactured for mechanical and other purposes. Why, Sir, once let it in and they will obtain it for every purpose. We know that it is now manufactured in large quantities; it is smuggled in in large quantities, and it is sold in large quantities under the very eye of the law. We know that men, as determined as the gentleman who introduced this resolution, are almost every day seeking the aid of the officers of the law to bring before the police magistrates offenders against the law, but we know that every day they fail to secure convictions. Is this a desirable state of society? Is it desirable to bring the law so into contempt that every man in the community feels that he can set it at defiance, for the purpose of his own self-gratification? Is it well to have liquor banished from the saloons and hotels, or consumed under certain well defined conditions, to have it brought into the households, so that the wife and children shall be told by the man, when he sits down to take his liquor, that it is a good thing, and that they should take a little; or, as a man said the other night, when his little one ran to his knee, I must give the child a sup." And what he gave to the child he gave to his wife and he took himself, and he had the neighbors in, and I know that they had a grand carouse. The consequence was that next night they went to a neighbor's house. And these are among the results, the necessary results, of the enactment of this restrictive legislation. People will rebel against sumptuary law, and experience in our counties has gone to show that drinking has increased ten fold since the introduction of the Scott Act; the one vote of my life that I regret more than all others is the vote that I gave for the enactment of the Scott Act.

Mr. FREEMAN. I will occupy the time of the House for only a few moments, and in commencing my remarks I lay down this proposition: that the speakers, as a whole, have quite misunderstood this question. They have placed it in an entirely wrong position. They say that they made a concession to the temperance people in giving them the Scott Act. I deny that proposition entirely, Sir. They did nothing of the sort. They passed a law in accordance with the advanced opinion of the people of this Dominion. That is what they did. They made no concessions to the temperance people, and we hold that, to-day, the temperance sentiment of the people of this Dominion is quite as far advanced on the temperance question as it was in 1878, to say the very least. But I go further, and say that the temperance sentiment has advanced very largely since 1878, and although we admit that the Scott Act has not destroyed the sale of liquors, we say that it was never expected that it would. It was never contended that it would entirely destroy the sale of liquor. We agree, to some extent, with the gentlemen who have spoken in that direction, and when I say "we" I mean the people of this Dominion—a majority of the people of this Dominion. We say to this Parliament: We find that this law which you gave us in 1878—this law which you gave the people—has done a great deal for us; it has done a great deal in staying the people who rebel against all law, and we come now to ask you to give us a better law, a law which will entirely restrain them, a law which will destroy the manufacture of liquor. Now, we say that at the very bottom of this question, at the very core of it, lies the manufacture of strong drink; and that while the Government allow the manufacture of drink, and give us laws to punish those who drink the liquor which they allow to be manufactured, they are inconsistent, and we say to this Parliament: Be consistent now. We say that while you allow the sale of liquor to be punished you are not consistent in making money out of the manufacture of it. That is our position, and we have no reason to combat the assertion that the Scott Act has failed. What is the Scott Act any more than any other law you write on the Statute-book. They say the Scott Act has failed. The Scott Act will, like any other law, be harmless, it will be a dead letter, if the people do not use it and put it in operation. The hon. members who have spoken here seem to think that the obligation lies on the temperance people to enforce the law. Since the discussion the other evening, it has been admitted alike by the opponents of temperance reform and the advocates of temperance in this House, that the consumption of liquor is an evil, and a great evil. We say then, if it is an evil, as they admit it to be, every man is bound to assist the temperance men in enforcing the laws to prohibit the sale of this liquor, and to go further and help us to prohibit its manufacture. Now, with regard to the question of the Scott Act being a failure, I contend that it is not a failure. Here is a record that I have obtained within the last few days. Nova Scotia has eighteen counties and one city, of which thirteen counties have adopted the Act, and they adopted it by very large majorities. Now, Sir, I say that to-day we cannot get one of those counties to declare, by any reasonable number of its people, that it wishes to have the Scott Act repealed. Have you a petition before this House from any number of men in Nova Scotia telling you that they wish the Scott Act repealed? You have not; and I go further than that: You cannot get an honest-souled, hearty temperance man in the Province of Nova Scotia to tell you so. I will defend that statement anywhere. Nova Scotia has eighteen counties and four cities, of which thirteen counties have adopted the Act. New Brunswick has fourteen counties and four cities, of which ten counties and two cities have adopted the Act. Where is the New Brunswick man who wants that Act repealed? And I tell you that those who voted for it before are ready to vote for it again. Then, you have in Manitoba five counties and one city, of which two counties have adopted the Act; and Prince Edward Island you have three counties and one city, all of which have adopted the Act. Has Prince Edward Island sent in petitions here that she wishes the Scott Act repealed? I do not think you have any. Then let us come to Ontario, and I was delighted when I saw this record from Ontario. Ontario has 38 counties and unions of counties, and 10 cities, of which 25 counties and 2 cities have adopted the Act, and in 5 counties and 3 cities agitation has been started in its favor. I was surprised to find that so many counties of Ontario had adopted the Scott Act, because from what hon. gentlemen from Ontario said in this House, I concluded that Ontario was all drunk. One hon. gentleman says that in his county, under the license law, they used to have a conviction every day, and I concluded that it was a pretty drunken county. I thought all the counties in Ontario were like that, but I find that is not the case. From what we have heard we would suppose that there was not a county in Ontario that wished to continue the Scott Act. I have an article which has been published lately in a paper. I will tell you what paper it is if you wish to know; it is the Oshawa Vindicator; is it good for anything? That paper says:

Mr. BERGIN.

"The county gaol at Whitby is empty for the first time since it was built. There is not a single prisoner confined within its gloomy walls, nor has there been since last Friday. The fact is a significant one, following as it does so closely the coming into force of the Scott Act in this county. Some may claim that it is purely accidental and will not occur again. That may possibly be the case, but still the fact is there and it cannot be gainsaid. The Scott Act people would not be doing justice to themselves were they to let such an opportunity slip of proving their contentions. They claimed that the passing of the Act would decrease crime. In less than two months crime has been reduced and the gaol is free of prisoners for the first time since it was opened. It is to be hoped that this state of things will continue and that it will be an exception to the general rule to find a prisoner confined in the county gaol."

Now, I venture to say that if we could get Scott Act men from every one of those counties here, you would find that they would give us the other side of the question, and they would contradict the testimony which has been adduced here. Here is another thing you must remember: that the Scott Act is put on its trial before its enemies. With regard to those gentlemen who speak against the Scott Act, I will venture the assertion that they are not teetotallers—at heart, they are not friends of the reform; and they contend that the Act is condemned. I contend that it is not condemned. Would you call any man condemned, fairly and honestly, who was brought before a court and tried by a jury all pledged against him, all opponents of his? I am sure you would not. No man in this Dominion would tolerate such a thing; and that is exactly the position in which we stand with reference to the Scott Act. I say it is unfair, and it is not the way in which to judge the Scott Act. Now, I want to answer my hon. friend from Cornwall (Mr. Bergin). He begins by telling us that he is a temperance man of twenty years' standing. He approves of the way in which public opinion has been brought up to the present time. He says it has been done by moral suasion—by the efforts of the pulpit, the platform and the press; he has helped, at a great sacrifice to himself, to bring public opinion up to its present position; and then he turns round and condemns the hon. Minister of Marine, who has been a steady worker in the temperance cause for the last 20 or 30 years, on the platform and in the press, and never has a word been said against him as a steady, honest teetotaller; and yet this hon. member condemns him as not being a co-worker with him. I conclude that the hon. gentleman has never worked in that direction then, and it is utterly impossible for me to arrive at any other conclusion. Suppose an hon. member on the other side, opposed to the present Government, after he had been condemning the right hon. leader of this Government and his policy for the last 20 years, should then turn round and say, I am a true supporter of that policy, what would we think of him? Now, the hon. gentleman tells us that the hon. Minister of Marine is not a true friend of the temperance cause, but that he is, and that if we will follow him, he will lead us on to victory. Then he tells us that the Scott Act is destructive of the peace of families; that it causes the sale of liquor; that it breaks down the moral fibre of men, women and children. Why, the gentleman is dreaming; he is certainly under a delusion. Let us appeal to common sense. Go into any house you like where the father and mother drink liquor and give it to their children. You destroy the liquor and peace is restored to the house; introduce temperance there and you have peace and prosperity. The hon. member for Cornwall says no, give them the liquor and peace and prosperity prevails; introduce the Scott Act and peace is destroyed. That is extraordinary logic. What is the Scott Act? It is an Act which gives the people in the counties where it is adopted power to prohibit the sale and the manufacture of intoxicating liquor. Now, the hon. gentleman says he is in favor of prohibition, and yet he declares that the Scott Act, which gives entire prohibition where it is adopted, is the worst law that was ever put in the Statute-book. He is certainly a very logical gentleman. Hon. gentlemen may think this a question to make merry over, but let me tell them, in all seriousness, that it is a serious question. To-day in this Dominion, hundreds of women are crying to heaven for relief, hundreds of children are houseless and homeless, because of this liquor traffic. If hon. gentlemen would only look in at some of those abodes of misery, they would, if they have not hearts of steel, be moved with compassion for those poor people. Are we sincere or not when, through our Speaker, we ask our Creator that our legislation should tend to the good of this Dominion? If we are, we will not disregard the appeals of the widows and the fatherless, and the distressed people who are suffering from the misery of this evil, this intoxicating drink, and who will hold this assembly accountable for its legislation to-night? I say that to-night many a father will lay his head on his pillow with sorrow, because of the destruction that has come to his boy through liquor. I have now in my mind a dozen men who went out in their youth promising lads, fitted to adorn any position, and who, to-day, through this terrible traffic, are miserable men, with ruined prospects, destroyed happiness, and corrupted morals. But this hon. gentleman tells us that he is a temperance man. He is the most extraordinary temperance man I ever heard of. He says he has been for years laboring for the temperance cause. Let me tell you, Sir, I have been for thirty years laboring for that cause; for thirty years alcoholic liquor has not passed my lips in any shape, except, perhaps, as medicine, for I have been at times ill, and cannot vouch for what my physician gave me. I have expended time, energy and money, and made enemies for myself, in the temperance cause. To-day I hold this Scott Act to be an excellent Act for the forwarding of temperance reform. I have not turned my back against it, as the hon. gentleman has. I have seen a great many hypocrites in the temperance cause. Hon. gentlemen laugh; I wonder are there any hypocrites in political parties. I have seen temperance men who have put their politics before their temperance principles, and these men you will find to-day all over the Dominion amongst all orders, in the church as well as elsewhere. I hope the day will come when all men will be honest and true, but that day I am afraid is a long way off. But the temperance cause is one thing and men's dishonesty and hypocrisy is another thing. The hon. gentleman said he was ashamed of the vote he gave for the Scott Act. Let that be made known in the little back slums where they sell liquor, tell it in the grog shops, and they will rejoice over it and look upon that hon. gentleman as their friend; but let him bring that record on paper to a temperance lodge and ask permission to enter, and they will say to him: march, you have no business here; that is not the record of a temperance man. Let the hon. gentleman boast as he will, there are standards by which we judge each other. We judge a man, first by his words and then by his actions, but when a man comes up boldly and tells us that he is an honest temperance advocate, and then that he feels towards the temperance cause as the hon. gentleman says he does, we must conclude there is something wrong. Now he says, carry on your temperance reform by the methods you have used to bring it up to its present position. We are doing that. We are promoting it by every means at our command. The chief temperance promoters are not among the wealthy; they are not among the millionaires. We find them largely among the poor, hard, horny-handed working men of this country; we find them among the men who are the bone and sinew of the country, who work hard for their money, and cannot plank down their hundreds and thousands and tens of thousands as those millionaires can, those who are pledged to oppose us. We have these strong men, these powerful men, these men who have made money, who have taken the hard earnings of the people and have them rolled up in their bank stock, and can put down as much money as they like to promote their liquor traffic—we have these men to fight; we have to meet the money of these men, and we are not able to enforce this Scott Act as we would if we had the means to do it; and for that reason the Scott Act in many counties has not been as successful as it would otherwise have been. And we are promoting it by the pulpit. Take the religious denominations; take the general assemblies of all the religious denominations; where will you find one which is not supporting us in this great cause? The religious press supports us too. I think you cannot find a religious newspaper in the Dominion which is not in part, or in whole, supporting us. I will not say anything about the press generally. I refrain from that. We have arrived at a point when we believe that the law will materially help us. That is our position. We invoked the law in 1878. It has done us a power of good, and it will do us more good; but we come here and say, go further and give us a prohibitory law. If Parliament considers that the time has not come for a prohibitory law, we must submit to its decision; but let me tell the House that our course is onward and upward. I may not live to see it, but many men in this House will live to see prohibition passed, notwithstanding all these croakers, these false temperance men, these men who come and say they are teetotalers and temperance men, when we are not in a position to bring evidence to prove the contrary. Notwithstanding all these, we will carry prohibition in this Dominion, and the debate in this House to-day will be one of the grandest things to promote the temperance cause that has occurred within the last five years. The temperance people will see how the vote stands here. They will look to see the men who represent them, and there will be a general skaking amongst the dry bones, and I believe the day is not far distant when we will have a prohibitory law in this Dominion. I would be the last to desire a prohibitory law if it had not the good sense and the sentiment of the people behind it. Our opponents call us fanatics. Are we fanatics? Take the men in Britain and on this continent—the philanthropists, the eminent men in the church, on the bench and at the bar, who are promoting the temperance reform, and I think you will admit we are not fairly open to the charge of fanaticism. We express the sentiment of the country, and that sentiment is in favor of a prohibitory law. The people will have it; they are asking for it to-day; and however much our opponents may laugh and enjoy what they regard as fun, and however much they may be astonished that a few men will stand up and speak to them on this question in earnest, however much they may be astonished to find a few men who are really in earnest, the time is not distant when they will find, not a few, but many men here who will advocate the cause with more earnestness and with more ability than I can pretend to do.

Mr. JAMIESON. I have no doubt the House is impatient for a vote upon this question, but I pray the indulgence of the House for a very short reply. Had it not been that two amendments have been moved to the resolution, I would not again have troubled the House, but, as these amendments are very important, I think it is only proper that I should have a few words to say in reference to them. I am very glad to observe that there is a general consensus of opinion in this House in regard to the traffic in intoxicating liquors, that the majority of the House are of opinion that the traffic is a wrong one, and that they agree in the opinion that it is right to prohibit the traffic if we can bring it about in accord with the general sentiment of the country. This discussion reminds me of a story of a countryman of my own, or rather of my father, who was very ill and expected that he was going to die. He gathered his friends around him and gave them directions with regard to his burial. He had been twice married, and both his wives were dead. He asked that he should be buried between his two wives, but with a slight cant towards Biddy. I think most of the gentlemen who have spoken have a slight cant towards wine and beer, or towards whiskey. I am glad, however, that the suggestion I made at the outset, that we should have somewhat of a general discussion on the question, has been acted upon by the members of this House. I was very much surprised to find one hon. member—I refer to the member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) who is not now in his seat—who objects to my resolution on the ground that it does not go far enough. I can say to that hon. gentleman that, if, after these amendments are voted down, as I have no doubt they will be, he will move a stronger resolution on the question, I will withdraw mine in favor of his. I believe, however, that my resolution is quite strong enough. I am not aware that any prohibitionist in Canada advocates the total prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. Our proposition is that intoxicating liquors as beverages are not only useless but hurtful to the people of the country, and, while we are prepared to allow the manufacture and importation of intoxicating liquors for certain purposes, such as sacramental, medicinal and scientific purposes, we propose that for all other purposes, or as beverages, they should be prohibited altogether. We propose—and the resolution seems to have been misunderstood by my hon. friend—that any manufacture, sale or importation which might be allowed should be conducted under the superintendence of the Government through specially appointed officers, so that it would be impossible, unless with the connivance of the Government or the officers of the Government, to have the liquor sold for any purpose except the purposes which are specified in this resolution. Now, I lay it down as a proposition that the first thing we have to consider in the matter is, are we right? Is the prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating liquors right? If that traffic produces such evils as it has been declared to produce by members of this House, then I say the time has come when we ought to suppress it. For 200 years every civilised country in the world has endeavored to regulate the traffic, but it refuses to be regulated; and now we propose to prohibit it. It has been said that you cannot make men sober by Act of Parliament. In reply to that I would quote the proposition which was laid down by one of England's greatest statesmen, the right hon. Mr. Gladstone, who said that it was the duty of Parliament to legislate so as to make it easy for men to do right and difficult for them to do wrong. I also lay it down as a proposition that if one class of people in the community have a right to prevent another class of people from doing wrong, then they certainly have a right to prohibit the liquor traffic. It has been said that we have got to educate people. Now there seems to be this distinction between gentlemen who have spoken in opposition to the resolution, and those who have spoken in support of it. Those who support the resolution contend that there are two agencies that may be used for the purpose of promoting the cause of temperance, namely, moral suasion and legal compulsion. Those who oppose the resolution simply say that we ought to content ourselves with moral suasion, and not resort to legal compulsion. Now, the advocates of temperance and prohibition are not opposed to moral suasion. They do not underrate the benefit of moral suasion and of good example. They say that they are even better than legal compulsion. But they claim that hand in hand with moral suasion and good example, we require the strong arm of the law in order to put down the traffic in strong drink. Now, without going over again the argument in favor of prohibition, I will just say for the benefit of certain hon. gentlemen who are very vehement against this resolution, that it is not many weeks ago when they were just as vehement in advocating the enforcement of laws in the Emerald Isle which are distasteful to the majority of the people there; and if it is right to coerce people in one case into obedience to the law, it must be right in another case. I believe in educating people. I believe in enacting good laws, and in educating people up to obedience to those laws. Now, let me say a word or two with reference to the two amendments. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard), proposes to allow the sale of wine and beer in Scott Act counties. But it seems that matters in those counties are bad enough already, according to the statements which have been made by some hon. gentlemen who represent that in Scott Act counties a very serious state of demoralisation exists. Well, Sir, it is a most remarkable fact that since the advent of the Scott Act a great many people who formerly had five senses, now have only four, they have entirely lost the sense of taste. But if that be the case now, when men have to discriminate between ginger pop and ginger beer, and the stronger kinds of liquor, what will it be when distinction is merely between the different kinds of alcohol, such as wine, and beer, and gin, and the stronger brands of liquor? Instead of having five senses they will only have three, because they will not only have lost the sense of taste but the sense of smell also. Now, I look upon it as a monstrous proposition that we should introduce wine and beer into those counties which have adopted the Canada Temperance Act, in face of the compact which has been entered into between the people and this Parliament that this Act should remain intact on the Statute-book. Yet that is what my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier proposes to do. After the people in 68 counties and cities in this Dominion have adopted the law, he proposes to engraft upon it a principle which is destructive of the law itself. I cannot understand how any gentleman occupying a seat in this House, having sufficient intelligence to find his way into this Parliament, can advocate such a proposition as that. It is a direct insult to the people of this Dominion, and I do not believe their representatives here would entertain such a principle for an instant. Why, Sir, I consider that the amendment of the hon. member for East Bruce (Mr. Cargill), although I do not concur in the reasons which he gave, is a more reasonable one than the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. But what is the meaning of the amendment of the hon. member for East Bruce? Not only that the Act shall be destroyed, but, that after a majority of the people in a large number of constituencies have adopted it, it shall be repealed in those constituencies without consulting the people. Why, Sir, it is one of the first principles of constitutional law, that the same power that enacts a law shall alone repeal it. Every lawyer in this House knows that, and yet the hon. gentleman proposes that the people of this country are not to be consulted, but that this Parliament shall repeal the law which the people themselves have adopted. I say the proposition is a wrong one. If this law is as unpopular as some hon. gentlemen would have us believe, the people have the matter entirely in their own hands. I speak advisedly when I say that there is not a single county in the Dominion where the Scott Act has been adopted in which the people, during the next twelve months, will not have an opportunity of repealing this law if they think proper to do so, and if they are not satisfied with its operations. I am not aware that there is such a widespread dissatisfaction with the law as some hon. gentlemen would lead the House to believe. I tell this House that although that Act has been adopted in 68 counties and cities in this Dominion, in not one single instance has it been repealed by the people. That does not indicate a widespread dissatisfaction as regards the law. But if there is dissatisfaction, I lay down as a reasonable proposition that the authority which put the law in force ought to be the authority by which the law should be abrogated. I trust that the good sense of this House will dispose, in a very summary way, of the two amendments that have been moved. I think the propositions embodied therein are wrong from beginning to end, and I trust the members of this House will view the matter in that light, and by their votes so decide, for, in my judgment, the amendments should never have been proposed to the resolution which I have submitted. So far as the main resolution is concerned, all we ask is a conscientious expression of the opinion of hon. members. It is quite true that members differ in opinion on this question; it is quite true that many of my own constituents are opposed to me on this question. I am not quite sure I represent a very large proportion of my constituents by the position I am taking on that question; but I told the people of my county when I went back for reelection that, if I could not hold a seat in Parliament without sacrificing my temperance views, I preferred to be a private citizen, and the people sent me back here, and I am endeavoring to represent them to the best of my judgment. I must not, however, forget the fact that many honest, good men in my own county differ from me on this question; but I feel I have a duty to perform while I occupy a seat in this House, and I am endeavoring to discharge that duty to-night whilst I am advocating the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors.

Mr. FREEMAN.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Cargill (p. 851) to the amendment:

YEAS:

Messieurs

Amyot,	Daoust,	Mitchell,
Baker,	Davis,	Patterson (Essex),
Bergin,	Desaulniers,	Pope,
Burns,	Guilbault,	Roome,
Cargill,	Haggart,	Skinner,
Carling,	Hickey,	Small,
Caron (Sir Adolphe),	Kenny,	Smith (Ontario),
Chisholm,	Labelle,	Stevenson,
Choquette,	Labrosse,	Tyrwhitt,
Costigan,	Macdonald (Sir John),	Ward,
Coughlin,	McDowall,	Weldon (St. John),
Couture,	McGreery,	Wood (Brockville).—38.
Curran,	Madill,

NAYS:

Messieurs

Armstrong,	Freeman,	Montplaisir,
Andet,	Gaudet,	Mulock,
Bain (Soulanges),	Gauthier,	O'Brien,
Bain (Wentworth),	Geoffrion,	Paterson (Brant),
Baird,	Gigault,	Perley (Assiniboia),
Barron,	Gillmor,	Perley (Ottawa),
Béchar,	Girouard,	Perry,
Bergeron,	Godbout,	Platt,
Bernier,	Gordon,	Porter,
Borden,	Grandbois,	Préfontaine,
Bourassa,	Guay,	Purcell,
Bowell,	Guillet,	Putnam,
Boyle,	Hale,	Reid,
Brien,	Hall,	Robertson (Hastings),
Brown,	Hesson,	Robertson (King's, P.E.I.),
Bryson,	Holton,	Robertson (Shelburne),
Cameron,	Innes,	Ross,
Campbell (Kent),	Ives,	Royal,
Carpenter,	Jamieson,	St. Marie,
Cartwright (Sir Rich'd),	Joncas,	Scarth,
Casey,	Jones,	Scriver,
Casgrain,	Kirk,	Semple,
Charlton,	Kirkpatrick,	Shakespeare,
Cimon,	Landry,	Somerville,
Clayes,	Lang,	Sproule,
Cockburn,	Langelier (Quebec),	Taylor,
Colby,	Langevin (Sir Hector),	Temple,
Cook,	Laurier,	Thérien,
Coulombe,	Lavergne,	Thompson,
Daly,	Livingston,	Tisdale,
Davies,	Lovitt,	Trow,
Davin,	Macdonald (Huron),	Tupper (Pictou),
Dawson,	McOulla,	Turcot,
Denison,	McDonald (Victoria),	Waldie,
De St. Georges,	McDougald (Pictou),	Wallace,
Desjardins,	McIntyre,	Watson,
Dessaint,	McKay,	Weldon (Albert),
Doyon,	McLellan,	Welsh,
Duchesnay,	McMillan (Huron),	White (Cardwell),
Dupont,	McMillan (Vaudreuil),	White (Renfrew),
Edgar,	McMullen,	Wilmot,
Edwards,	McNeill,	Wilson (Argenteuil),
Eisenhauer,	Mallory,	Wilson (Elgin),
Ellis,	Mara,	Wilson (Lennox),
Ferguson (Leeds & Gren),	Masson,	Wood (Westmoreland)
Fiset,	Mills (Annapolis),	Wright,
Fisher,	Mills (Bothwell),	Yeo.—145.
Flynn,	Moncreiff,
Foster,	Montague,

Amendment to the amendment negatived.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Girouard (p. 846):

YEAS :

Messieurs

Bain (Soulanges),	Denison,	Livingston,
Baker,	Desaulniers,	Macdonald (Sir John),
Bergeron,	Desjardins,	MacDowall,
Cargill,	Dupont,	McGreery,
Carling,	Fiset,	McMillan (Vaudreuil),
Caron (Sir Adolphe),	Gauthier,	Mitchell,
Chisholm,	Girouard,	Montplaisir,
Choquette,	Grandbois,	Patterson (Essex),
Cockburn,	Guay,	Pope,
Costigan,	Guilbault,	Robertson (Hastings),
Coughlin,	Haggart,	Small,
Coulombe,	Hall,	Thérien,
Couture,	Kenny,	Ward,
Curran,	Labelle,	Weldon (St. John),
Daoust,	Labrosse,	Wood (Brockville).—47.
Davis,	Langevin (Sir Hector),

NAYS :

Messieurs

Amyot,	Geoffrion,	Perley (Ottawa),
Armstrong,	Gigault,	Perry,
Audet,	Gilmor,	Platt,
Bain (Wentworth),	Godbout,	Porter,
Baird,	Gordon,	Préfontaine,
Barron,	Guillet,	Purcell,
Bécharé,	Hale,	Putnam,
Bergin,	Hesson,	Reid,
Bernier,	Hickey,	Robertson (King, P. E. I.)
Borden,	Holton,	Robertson (Shelburne),
Bourassa,	Innes,	Roome,
Bowell,	Ives,	Ross,
Boyle,	Jamieson,	Royal,
Brien,	Joncas,	Ste. Marie,
Brown,	Jones,	Scarth,
Bryson,	Kirk,	Scriver,
Burns,	Kirkpatrick,	Semple,
Cameron,	Landry,	Shakespeare,
Campbell (Kent),	Lang,	Skinner,
Carpenter,	Langelier (Quebec),	Smith (Ontario),
Cartwright (Sir Richard),	Laurier,	Somerville,
Casey,	Laverge,	Sproule,
Casgrain,	Lovitt,	Stevenson,
Charlton,	Macdonald (Huron),	Taylor,
Cimon,	McCulla,	Temple,
Clayes,	McDonald (Victoria),	Thompson,
Colby,	McDougald (Pictou),	Tisdale,
Cook,	McIntyre,	Trow,
Daly,	McKay,	Tupper (Pictou),
Davies,	McLellan,	Turcot,
Davin,	McMillan (Huron),	Tyrwhitt,
Dawson,	McMullen,	Waldie,
De St. Georges,	McNeill,	Wallace,
Deessaint,	Madill,	Watson,
Doyon,	Mallory,	Weldon (Albert),
Duchesnay,	Mara,	Welsh,
Edgar,	Masson,	White (Uardwell),
Edwards,	Mills (Annapolis),	White (Renfrew),
Eisenhauer,	Mills (Bothwell),	Wilmet,
Ellis,	Moncreiff,	Wilson (Argenteuil),
Ferguson (Leeds & Gren),	Montague,	Wilson (Elgin),
Fisher,	Mulock,	Wilson (Lennox),
Flynn,	O'Brien,	Wood (Westmoreland)
Foster,	Paterson (Brant),	Wright,
Freeman,	Perley (Assiniboia),	Yeo.—136.
Gaudet,

Amendment negatived.

Mr. SPROULE. I beg to move in amendment :

That all the words after "That" be struck out of the main motion and the following substituted:—In the opinion of this House, when it is found expedient to prohibit the sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquors, it shall be accompanied by a reasonable measure of compensation to those who invested their money in the trade under the sanction of the law.

In moving this amendment I do so because it is in harmony with a principle known to be correct in all civilised nations. When, in the interests of society, a man's property is either destroyed or taken from him, it is always recognised that he should be compensated for it. In this case, as in all others, I claim that the principle is a sound one. If it is found to be for the general good of the people that a railway should be forced through a certain section of country, no matter from whom the property is taken, it is only taken after that party received a fair compensation for his property. If it is in the general interests that a canal should run through the country, and a man's property is destroyed or expropriated, it is only done after the principle is carried out and the parties have been compensated. There are vested rights involved that must be considered. It is said and held by some persons that there are no vested rights in the case under consideration, because the licenses are only permissive and are granted from year to year. But a license is granted on the understanding that if the restrictions thrown around the traffic by the law are complied with, that party at the end of the year will have the right to expect a renewal of license.

Mr. JAMIESON.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh, vote.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. I shall be obliged to name some of the hon. gentlemen, because I think I can point out with safety who is making that noise.

Mr. SPROULE. I have listened patiently and attentively to all that has been said on this subject. Its importance is the only excuse I offer for the remarks I am about to make, but in presenting them I have the same right to do so as any hon. member in this House. Vested rights have grown up under this traffic, and they should be considered. If there are those who believe this is not the case, let them look at the assessment rolls of Toronto, London, Prescott and other points; look at the establishments of Gooderham & Worts, of Labbatt, and of firms at London, and Windsor, and consider the amount of assessable property there represented. Let hon. gentlemen consider the number of men employed in that line of business; the number of cattle bought from farmers and fattened for foreign markets by virtue of this trade, and they will be convinced that there are vested rights in this trade. If we find in the interest of humanity it is necessary to pass a law for the destruction of this trade, then in common fairness Parliament is bound to adopt the principle acknowledged to be correct by all civilised nations, and grant compensation to those parties for the destruction or depreciation in the value of their property. I only ask attention while I explain the principle acted on. We take the abolition of slavery in the United States. The North forced on the South the abolition of slavery, as it is proposed prohibition shall be forced on the people of this country to-day. But has it ever been acknowledged by the men of the South, who had their property destroyed, that the principle was a sound and correct one? The supreme contempt engendered for law and authority was such that they do not find the people of the South are agreed to accept the law forced on them, and to assist in carrying it out by healthy sentiment and obedience to the law, such as they would have manifested had there been compensation given for the destruction of their property. When England had to deal with the same evil she acted in harmony with the principle I have enunciated, and the liberation of slaves was followed by compensation made by the Government to its owners. Why, because no injustice was wished to be done to the parties, and hence no sympathy was created for them, but if it was acknowledged that slavery should be abolished, and that the slaveholders should be compensated for the destruction of their property, then I say the community in general was prepared to support that law. There is another reason why I am in favor of this amendment. It is because I think that if the arguments which hon. gentlemen have adduced, in telling us that our penitentiaries and gaols are filled, by reason of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, if the number of commitments from that cause is so proportionately large, compared with the whole number, that it is clearly evident a large percentage of the crime in the country is brought about as a result of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, then if all that amount of expense is brought upon the nation by this unfortunate trade, we should be willing, in the interests of the economy of the nation, to give at least a portion of our revenue for one year to buy out that trade, and do away with it altogether; because the result of this expenditure for one year will be a saving for all time to come, if the arguments of hon. gentlemen are correct and sound. I support it on another ground, and that is because it takes away a grievance from those parties who think they have a right to complain when a law like this is passed. These people, so long as they have a grievance, can get their friends to sympathise with them and to support their views; when you take away their property by the sweeping confiscation of the law, these men, having a grievance, will attract sympathisers to their side, and there will not be that healthy sentiment in the community which is required for the proper support of the law, because it will be held by those who are oppressed by that law, and by their friends throughout the country, that a great injustice has been done them. Therefore, I think that, if from no other motive, we should support this amendment in the interest of temperance. By so doing we will create behind the law a moral sentiment which will be strong and unanimous; we will take away all opposition to the law, and no sympathy will be created for those who abhor and condemn the law, because they consider its existence a grievance to themselves, and, therefore, endeavor to bring it into disrepute. The general consensus of opinion will be against those who violate the law and in favor of those who are ready to sustain it. I hold to the view upon this question which was expressed by an eminent divine a short time ago, that the country may be virtually looked upon as partners in this trade. We give to these men a right to go into the trade, and, as one of the partners in that trade, what do we allow them? We allow them the right to manufacture and to invest their money in this business, in consideration of their giving us back a portion of the profits of that trade. They give a portion back to us and to the country, but just as soon as they have invested their money in that trade, as soon as we acknowledge the validity and the legality of it, and the right of these men to engage in it, as soon as they have built it up under the sanction, and provisions, and regulations of law, and we have received from them a part of the profits as an acknowledgment of our interest in the trade, then we suddenly pass a law which destroys the value of the capital invested, destroys the trade itself, and leave upon their hands the plant, which is rendered worthless by virtue of the act of prohibition we pass. Is that fair to the other side of the partnership—to the men who have engaged in the trade and invested their money in it, under the sanction, provisions, and regulations of the law? What will be the result if we carry out the principle of prohibition without compensation to those parties? In the first place we will leave behind a rankling feeling in the breasts of these men, a feeling that they are aggrieved, and a feeling of contempt for the law, which is the strongest reason why the law will not be supported. Why is it so hard to secure convictions in Scott Act counties against those men who are engaged in the trade? It is because when they find that the business, upon which they have to depend for their own support and the support of their families, is taken away from them without giving them anything in return, they have nothing but contempt for the law and for the authorities who are trying to enforce the law. Why do we find the authorities under this law so weakened in the country to-day, that it is almost impossible to secure a conviction for infraction of the law? It is because the opinion is held by a great many people in the country that a grievance exists, and that they have the strongest grounds for opposing the law, and, therefore, they attempt, in every way that is possible to be devised by the ingenuity of man, to evade this law and the provisions of this law. It is for these reasons that I favor the amendment which I am about to move. I am myself in favor of total prohibition. I believe it would be in the interest of the nation, but while believing that, I am not in harmony with those who think that the time has arrived for the passage of a prohibitory liquor law in this country. It is true that we have the verdict of the people in sixty-eight counties and cities of this country by carrying the Scott Act, and that if we accept that we should believe that the time is ripe for prohibition. But the influences by which that verdict has been secured are rather misleading than otherwise, and it is felt that it is not bond fide evidence that there is a reasonably large majority of the people who are prepared to support the sentiment of that law and are prepared to support that law if it is passed. I leave out of consideration the fact of the large revenue coming from that trade to-day; but I say that if ever we expect this law to be carried out successfully, it will only be done after we have given a fair measure of justice to those parties whose property has been destroyed or depreciated by this law. I ask on behalf of those parties; I ask on behalf of the great interests at stake in this matter; I ask on behalf of prohibition itself that this principle should be adopted by this House, or that it should be supported as strongly as hon. gentlemen are disposed to support it, and then when we get the verdict of the representatives of the people we will know what the strength of this sentiment is. Then, no matter whether prohibition is accomplished in this country early or late, it is sure to succeed if carried out in conformity with the principle of the amendment which I have put in your hands.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I submit that this motion has no relevancy to the main motion. The hon. gentleman might as well declare that when we have war with Russia, it will be necessary to compensate anyone who sustains loss in the contest.

Mr. SPEAKER. The amendment bears on the same subject matter as the main motion, and although it may be a very vague resolution, the House may pass as many resolutions as it likes. I know nothing in the rules which prevents it.

Mr. LAURIER. If it were a rider I could understand it, but if this is carried it becomes the main motion.

Mr. FISHER. If your ruling, Mr. Speaker, is that this amendment is in order, I should like to say a few words. I remember that a few years ago a very similar motion to this one was made in this House, as a substantive motion, at a time when prohibition was not being discussed, and at that time I took the ground which I take to-night, that it would not be wise or right for us definitely to declare beforehand that we should do a certain thing in the event of prohibition being adopted in this country. I contend that to declare here to-night that, in the event of adopting prohibition, we should give compensation to the industries that would be injured by prohibition, we should be giving a direct incentive to the people of this country to embark their capital in those industries, to increase them in our midst, and thereby to create greater difficulties in the way of bringing about a measure which I believe to be in the interest of the great mass of the people of this country. If, to-day, there are industries which are going to be hurt by prohibition, we have the proof coming from those industries themselves that the measure of local prohibition which we have had in this country has hurt those industries, and has decreased the quantity of liquor consumed in the country. If, therefore, we wish to bring about prohibition, desiring as we do to diminish the liquor traffic in our midst, our object is certainly not to give encouragement to those industries to increase the traffic, or to ask from us better compensation than they would be entiled to if when we do have prohibition we consider it right to give them compensation. I am not going to discuss the abstract question of the right of compensation, because I do not believe that this is the proper occasion on which to discuss that question, which I believe is a detail of a prohibitory law. To-night we are discussing the broad principle of prohibition; we are asking this Parliament, not to give us a law in detail, but simply to declare that it is expedient, in the interest of the people of this country, that prohibition should be adopted and become the law of the land; and when the Parliament of Canada has decided that it shall give prohibition to the people of this country, then will be the time to discuss the question whether compensation is just or not, what measure of compensation shall be given, if any, or whether compensation shall be absolutely refused. As I say, I am not going to enter into the merits of this question; I am not going to discuss whether the liquor dealers or only the liquor makers should be compensated, or whether that great body of people who have for generations past been injured by the liquor traffic should be compensated for the injury they have sustained. There are two sides to this question, if not more; but I am not to-night going to advocate one side or the other, because I do not believe this is the proper occasion on which this question should be discussed. I, therefore, move in amendment to the amendment, seconded by Mr. Scriver:

That all the words of the amendment be struck out, and the following be added to the main motion, at the end thereof:—The question of compensation being a detail of prohibition, the right time to discuss it is when the details of a prohibitory measure are before the House.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. I wish to ask if that motion is in order. It does not seem to be at all pertinent to the main motion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The proposition is that the words of this motion be added to the motion, and it is pertinent to the main motion, I think.

Mr. CASEY. I regret to have to differ from my hon. friend with whom I agree on most matters, and with whom I think I agree on the main principle involved in the question before the House. I differ from him as to whether compensation is a detail of the principle of prohibition, or a part of the principle of prohibition. For my part I do not think it is a detail; I believe it is a part of the principle. In voting against the motion of my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) as I said I would, I do not vote against the principle of prohibition; I merely vote that the country is not now ripe for prohibition; but neither now or later, I shall not, unless I become a different man from what I am, vote for prohibition unless it is accompanied by a reasonable measure of compensation. The liquor business has hitherto been as legal a business as any other in the country; and when we remember the precedent that the British Government set by compensating the owners of slaves, when she saw fit to abolish slavery in the West India Islands, I think we cannot honestly declare ourselves in favor of prohibition without compensating those who will lose money by the passage of such a measure. Consequently, feeling that this is a matter of principle and not of detail, I shall be obliged to vote against the amendment of my hon. friend.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Fisher (above).

YEAS :

Messieurs

Amyot,	Edwards,	Mills (Annapolis),
Audet,	Eisenhauer,	Mills (Bothwell),
Bain (Wentworth),	Ellis,	Mitchell,
Baird,	Fiset,	Mulock,
Barron,	Fisher,	Paterson (Brant)
Béchar,	Foster,	Perry,
Bergeron,	Gauthier,	Platt,
Bernier,	Goeffrion,	Préfontaine,
Borden,	Gigault,	Parcell,

Mr. FISHER.

Bourassa,	Gillmor,	Putnam,
Boyle,	Guay,	Robertson (King's, P E I),
Brien,	Hale,	Robertson (Shelburne),
Cameron,	Holton,	Robillard,
Campbell (Kent),	Innes,	Ste. Marie,
Cartwright (Sir Ric'd),	Jamieson,	Scriver,
Casgrain,	Jones,	Semple,
Charlton,	Kirk,	Somerville,
Choquette,	Labelle,	Thompson,
Cimon,	Landry,	Trow,
Clayes,	Lang,	Turcot,
Colby,	Langelier (Montmor'y),	Waldie,
Cook,	Langelier (Quebec),	Watson,
Couture,	Laurier,	Weldon (Albert),
Davies,	Lavergne,	Welsh,
De St. Georges,	Lovitt,	Wilmot,
Desaulniers,	Macdonald (Huron),	Wilson (Elgin),
Dessaint,	McIntyre,	Wilson (Lennox),
Doyon,	McMillan (Huron),	Wood (Westmoreland),
Duchesnay,	McMullen,	Wright,
Dupont,	Mallory,	Yeo.—91.
Edgar,

NAYS :

Messieurs

Armstrong,	Guillet,	Patterson (Essex),
Bain (Soulanges),	Haggart,	Perley (Assiniboia),
Bergin,	Hall,	Perley (Ottawa),
Bowell,	Hesson,	Pope,
Brown,	Hickey,	Porter,
Bryson,	Ives,	Riopel,
Burns,	Kenny,	Robertson (Hastings),
Cargill,	Kirkpatrick,	Roome,
Carling,	Labrosse,	Ross,
Carpenter,	Langevin (Sir Hector),	Scarth,
Caron (Sir Adolphe),	Livingston,	Shakespeare,
Casey,	Macdonald (Sir John),	Skinner,
Chisholm,	MacDowall,	Small,
Cockburn,	McCulla,	Smith (Ontario),
Costigan,	McDonald (Victoria),	Sproule,
Coughlin,	McDougald (Picton),	Stevenson,
Coulombe,	McDougall (C. Breton),	Taylor,
Carran,	McGreevy,	Temple,
Daly,	McKay,	Thérien,
Daoust,	McLellan,	Tisdale,
Davin,	McMillan (Vaudreuil),	Tupper (Picton),
Davis,	McNeill,	Tyrwhitt,
Dawson,	Madill,	Vanasse,
Denison,	Mara,	Wallace,
Desjardins,	Masson,	Weldon (St. John),
Ferguson (Leeds & Gren)	Moncreiff,	White (Cardwell),
Girouard,	Montague,	White (Renfrew),
Gordon,	Montplaisir,	Wilson (Argenteuil),
Grandbois,	O'Brien,	Wood (Brockville).—88.
Guilbault,

Amendment agreed to.

House divided on motion of Mr. Jamieson, (p. 842,) as amended.

YEAS :

Messieurs

Bain (Wentworth),	Hale,	Purcell,
Baird,	Holton,	Putnam,
Barron,	Innes,	Robertson (King's, P E I),
Borden,	Jamieson,	Robertson (Shelburne),
Bourassa,	Kirk,	Roome,
Boyle,	Landry,	Scriver,
Brien,	Lang,	Semple,
Bryson,	Lavergne,	Shakespeare,
Campbell (Kent),	Lovitt,	Smith (Ontario),
Charlton,	Macdonald (Huron),	Somerville,
Cimon,	McIntyre,	Stevenson,
Clayes,	McMillan (Huron),	Taylor,
Colby,	McMullen,	Turcot,
Cook,	Madill,	Waldie,
Couture,	Mallory,	Watson,
Davies,	Mills (Annapolis),	Weldon (Albert),
De St. Georges,	Moncreiff,	Welsh,
Edgar,	Mulock,	White (Renfrew),
Edwards,	Paterson (Brant),	Wilmot,
Eisenhauer,	Perley (Assiniboia),	Wilson (Lennox),
Fisher,	Perry,	Wood (Westmoreland),
Foster,	Platt,	Wright,
Freeman,	Porter,	Yeo.—70.
Gillmor,

NAYS :

Messieurs

Amyot,	Ellis,	Mara,
Audet,	Ferguson (Leeds & Gren)	Masson,
Bain (Soulanges),	Fiset,	Mills (Bothwell),

Baker,
Béchar, d,
Bergeron,
Bergin, Bernier,
Bowell,
Brown,
Burns,
Cameron,
Cargill, Carling,
Carpenter,
Caron (Sir Adolphe),
Cartwright (Sir Ric'd),
Casey,
Casgrain,
Chisholm,
Choquette,
Cockburn,
Costigan,
Coughlin,
Coulombe,
Curran,
Daly,
Daoust,
Davies,
Davis,
Dawson,
Denison,
Desaulniers,
Desjardins,
Dessaint,
Doyon,
Duchesnay,
Dupont,

Gauthier,
Geoffrion,
Gigault,
Girouard,
Gordon,
Grandbois,
Guay, Guilbault,
Guillet,
Haggart,
Hall,
Hesson,
Hickey,
Ives,
Jones,
Kenny,
Kirkpatrick,
Labelle,
Labrosse,
Langelier (Montmor'ncy),
Langelier (Quebec),
Langevin (Sir Hector),
Laurier,
Livingston,
Macdonald (Sir John),
MacDowall, McCulla,
McDougald (Pictou),
McDougall (O. Breton),
McGreevy,
McKay,
McLellan,
McMillan (Vaudreuil),
McNeill,

Mitchell,
Montague,
Montplaisir,
O'Brien,
Patterson (Essex),
Perley (Ottawa),
Pope,
Préfontaine,
Reid,
Rinfret,
Riopol,
Robertson (Hastings),
Robillard,
Ross,
St. Marie,
Scarth, Skinner,
Small,
Sproule,
Temple,
Thérien,
Thompson,
Tisdale,
Trow,
Tupper (Pictou),
Tyrwhitt,
Vanasse,
Wallace,
Ward,
Weldon (St. John),
White (Cardwell),
Wilson (Argenteuil),
Wilson (Elgin),
Wood (Brockville).--113.

Motion negatived.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Government might be disposed to inform the House, seeing it has declared in favor of the Canada Temperance Act, whether they intend proposing any amendment to that Act this Session, and whether they are prepared to hand over the revenues derived from fines to the Local Governments of the different Provinces, with the view of a more efficient enforcement of the Act.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You will agree, Sir, this question is altogether irregular. If the hon. gentleman will put a notice upon the paper, he will get an answer. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before the motion is put permit me to express the hope, which, I trust, will not be deemed irregular or out of place, that on a question of such importance as the question whether a sum of money, that may be estimated anywhere from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000, is to be paid by the people of this country as compensation for putting down the liquor traffic, the Government before we meet again, may have agreed on some policy. I notice there was great divergence of opinion among their ranks, and I think that, at any rate, whatever else may be said as to some of their motions, this is one in which the Government should know their own minds. I trust they will reach some conclusion on that question which involves if carried, and it was nearly carried, questions of the very highest magnitude, which we ought to discuss before separating.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government are quite aware of their responsibilities, and do not require any advice from the hon. gentleman as to how they should discharge them.

Mr. MITCHELL. That may be, but I do think that a question of that character which involves from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000 ought not to come before the House in that shape. The Government ought, before they allow a vote of that kind to be taken, to declare their policy in order that the country may know what it may have to expect.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We will be able to discuss the question of compensation and how the revenues should go on the Estimates to-morrow.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In the meantime, perhaps the hon. gentleman will say what he proposes to take up to-morrow.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will take what is on the Order Paper.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12:55 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 14th June, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ROYAL VICTORIA HOSPITAL.

Mr. CURRAN moved first reading of Bill (No. 150) to incorporate the Royal Victoria Hospital (from the Senate).

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second times.

PRINTING COMMITTEE'S REPORT—PARLIAMENTARY STATIONERY.

Mr. BERGIN moved the adoption of the third and fourth reports of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not think this report should be adopted now. There is a recommendation in the report which is in contradiction to the statute of last year, a portion of which the committee asks to be repealed. I think there is a great inconvenience in that. I do not like to go into details now, but a great deal of abuse may be introduced by a change of the law passed last year. I do not see that the law which was passed cannot be applied with a due regard to the comfort and the demands of both Houses of Parliament. The clause it is intended to repeal is the one which says that the stationery shall be supplied for both Houses of Parliament upon the demand of the clerk or of the committee charged with that matter—of those who are, in fact, dealing with the business of the members. It is not right for me to speak of what has been done in another House, but I know that something has crept in there which should be repressed, and which the law of last Session was intended to repress. At present, I only say this. I could not take the responsibility of asking the House to reject the report of the committee, but, certainly, an attempt is made which is a step not in the right direction.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). I understand that the motion of the hon. gentleman embraces the resolutions which the committee report as recommendations to the House, and I quite concur with the remarks of the Secretary of State that it is better to let the stationery be supplied on the responsibility of those to whom we are to look in this matter, and not to leave it to each House of Parliament. There has been a good deal of extravagance under the old system, and no one knew whom to blame for that. Now, there is a check provided which I think should be maintained. While this subject is under consideration, I wish to call the attention of the House to the manner in which the Sessional Papers are indexed. This is a matter of no small importance. I have found it almost an impossibility to ascertain from the index where any particular document is to be found. I think that it appears that every human ingenuity has been exercised to devise a system of indexing which no ordinary mind can possibly understand. I cannot understand why the index system of our Sessional Papers cannot be plain and simple, so that it will afford, as was intended, an indication of where the documents in those papers can be found. I am sure I am but voicing the opinion of a large number of members of the House, when I say that index is very unsatisfactory. I think it could be improved, and I take this opportunity of bringing the matter to the attention of those who are more or less responsible for the preparation of the index.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask the Secretary of State whether the staff of officers that are required now in the House to distribute the stationery and other supplies amongst the members, will not still be required; whether there will not be two different sets of officers to pay instead of one, whether the expenditure will not exceed the saving, and whether there will not be, possibly, an inconvenience in not having the stationery under the control of the House? I dare say the Government, in bringing down this proposition, have considered the whole subject with care, and I think, before they ask the House to make the change, and to depart from the view of the Printing Committee, they ought to give very substantial reasons. Now, we have not that information before the House; we have only a recommendation by the Committee on Printing, which, I suppose, is made after very full discussion and consideration of the subject; and we have a wholly different one made by the Secretary of State.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps, at the present time, the best plan is to adopt the report except this clause, and let that be considered another time.

Mr. BERGIN. One object the committee had in view was to meet the contingency, that unless there was some change, the supply of stationery for the next year could not be obtained in time. The time has now arrived when the supply of stationery for the use of the House for the next year should be ordered, and as the printing establishment has not been commenced, we thought something should be done now. We have no objection to allow the rest of the report to be adopted without that clause, because it is necessary that it should be adopted in order to obtain our supply of paper.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend is under a misapprehension. The printing establishment is not working now, but the Stationery Office is established, and the machinery is quite complete. As I said last year, I now repeat, that the time has now come to order the supply of stationery for next year for the House. What I said was this: Give your orders, say what you require; and we know very well that by giving definite orders in this way, we would prevent the repetition of abuses that have occurred. What we require in respect to papers and other articles, will be bought and supplied, and will be bought on better terms and with more economy by the Stationery Office, than when ordered in small quantities by each House. That is what I said last year, and I think it is quite reasonable. I believe that the Joint Committee would not have made that part of the report if it had been left only to the will and good sense of the members of this House.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is the increase of salary to be adopted on that recommendation?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. How is it to be when the paper is to be ordered? Is each individual member to give the order to the Stationery Office?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, no.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is to be done? We have not the information necessary, it seems to me, to justify the House in expressing an opinion on the report, and we are called upon to express a different opinion by the Secretary of State.

Mr. DAVIES.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have already stated that the members of the House will give their orders to the Stationery Office, saying what quantities they require, and the Stationery Office is only the purchaser for both Houses.

Mr. SPEAKER. Carried.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do we understand the report is carried without that clause? I speak of the clause recommending an increase of the salaries of the several officials mentioned in it?—because if the recommendation is not adopted, I would like to know whether there would be any necessity of increasing the salaries.

Reports concurred in, except that portion of the Third Report relating to stationery.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER presented Messages from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Messages, as follows:—

LANSDOWNE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion, for the year ending 30th June, 1887; and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

OTTAWA, 13th June, 1887.

LANSDOWNE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion, for the year ending 30th June, 1888; and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

OTTAWA, 13th June, 1887.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that His Excellency's Messages, with Estimates, be referred to Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

QUEBEC GRAVING DOCK.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

Resolved, That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to advance to the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec, the sum of $160,000, to enable them to complete the graving dock in the harbor of Quebec, and also a further sum of $1,100,000 to enable them to complete the improvements in the said harbor; such sums to be raised and advanced in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as moneys have heretofore been raised and advanced for the like purposes.

He said: I beg to say I have the assent of the Governor General to this motion.

Mr. LAURIER. May I ask the Minister of Finance to place before the House the application made by the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec for this sum, and also the report as to the application made last year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will place on the Table of the House all information required in this matter.

Motion agreed to.

CROWN PAYMENTS FOR COMPENSATION OR COSTS.

Mr. THOMPSON moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

That any moneys payable by the Crown for compensation or costs under "The Expropriation Act," may be paid out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved:

That for the remainder of the Session, Government Orders have precedence on Wednesdays, after Routine Proceedings and introduction of Bills.

Mr. MILLS. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether he will consent to have Order 39 of Private Bills (Bill No. 40, further to amend the Canada Temperance Act—Mr. Jamieson) placed among Government Orders, or at all events made the First Order of the day for Wednesday. The hon. gentleman will understand very well, after the very decided declaration of the House last night in favor of the principle of local option with respect to temperance, and as it has been stated by the temperance people over and over again that the measure as it now stands is in some respects defective, and this measure of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) is intended to remove those defects and amend the Act—I desire to enquire whether the Government will, if they take Wednesday from private members, allow that Bill to be taken up and dealt with by the House. The hon. gentleman will see that unless this is done, there will be no possibility of reaching it if the Government is allowed to take Wednesday.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think at this period of the Session I can definitely agree to interrupt Government measures by taking any of the Public Bills out of their order. I hope, as we have now Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, we may make so much progress, then, perhaps I may be able to do that. I have no desire to prevent the discussion of the measure; but, I think, we must press the Government business until we get on considerably further.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman knows that his view was that this measure is one of such importance, that it ought to be dealt with by the Government. I think the hon. gentleman voted that way on one occasion. I can show him in the Journals of the House that such was the view he expressed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman had positive proof by the voting yesterday that this cannot be made a Government measure.

Mr. FISHER. I regret that the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill is not present this afternoon, for if he had been present I would not have taken upon myself to say anything on the subject. But as seconder of the motion I must regret exceedingly that the Government, by taking the only day for the rest of the Session on which this motion could be reached, should practically prevent our having an opportunity of discussing it and passing it through this House. I would draw the attention of the leader of the Government to the fact that two Sessions ago this Bill, or one identical with it, was passed by this House, and it was only in consequence of the unfortunate obstruction of the Senate that it did not become law. But after the overwhelming vote last night in favor of the retention of the Canada Temperance Act, every one who has at heart the interests of the community, and especially those hon. gentlemen who last night drew such vivid pictures of the state of lawlessness, as they put it, that prevailed in Scott Act counties, ought to be in favor of such a measure as would tend to put an end to that state of lawlessness. I may say from experience, and from knowledge of the question from the temperance point of view, that unless some such measure is passed by Parliament, the reproach which is to-day cast upon the Canada Temperance Act will become more and more strong. I say this from the temperance standpoint. I say it because I am certain this is in consequence of certain small defects which this Parliament can remove, and which I believe Parliament would remove if it were given the opportunity by the passage of the Bill.

120

I regret extremely that we cannot have an opportunity to pass this Bill, and I urge very strongly on the Government that we should be afforded an opportunity to do so. What the hon. Premier has just stated, I am afraid will not come about. I am afraid that if Government business is very rapidly pushed forward, the only result will be that the House will prorogue more quickly than it otherwise would, and no measure such as this will be allowed to stand in the way of prorogation. If the order was arranged so that this Bill was made the First Order on Wednesday, the House would accept the motion, and the Bill will be passed very rapidly so as not materially to interfere with the Government business.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is surely not serious in thinking that the Government would ask for Wednesday and then hand it over for the discussion of any one measure. That Bill will take one day and perhaps many days.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think so; a year ago it took only a portion of a day.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If there was a general demand on the part of the House we might give next Monday to it.

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. gentleman will move that this Bill stands the First Order of the day on Monday next I shall be very glad, indeed.

Mr. IVES. I should like to ask the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) how this Order was allowed to stand on two different occasions when it was reached in the ordinary course. The hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) did not seem in a great hurry with respect to the Bill. It has been called on two different occasions to my knowledge, and the answer has been, "stand," and yet the hon. gentleman now comes here with a rush to have the Bill taken up. It appears very much as if it were a continuation of the effort to make political capital out of it by trying to put the Government and members of this side of the House in the position of throwing obstructions in the way of reaching the Bill. It was reached three weeks ago in the ordinary course, but the sponsor of the Bill said "stand." But now, when the House is very anxious to finish public business and prorogue, the hon. gentleman is very anxious that a special day should be set apart for this Bill.

Mr. FISHER. In reply to the hon. gentleman I desire to say that I was not present, on one occasion, when the Bill was asked to stand.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The whole list will be called.

Motion agreed to.

CONTROLLERS OF CUSTOMS AND INLAND REVENUE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that, on Wednesday next, the House resolve itself into Committee to consider a resolution:

That it is expedient that the salaries of the Controllers of Customs and Inland Revenue, respectively, be fixed at five thousand dollars per annum.

Motion agreed to.

CHANGES IN CUSTOMS LAWS.

Mr. CURRAN asked, Is it the intention of the Government, during the present Session, to effect any change in the Customs laws, in the direction suggested by the members of the Board of Trade of Montreal, at an interview with the Minister of Customs, in January last?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government have had the question of amendments to the Customs Act under consideration, but, as the subject is of so much importance, and considering the desire of members to have Parliament prorogued at as early a day as possible, it has been thought best to defer action until the next Session of Parliament, thus giving full time to consider the whole subject during the recess.

WAYS AND MEANS—MONTREAL COTTON CO.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Before you leave the Chair I desire to bring to the attention of the House a matter which I think requires some explanation from the Minister of Customs, which, I have no doubt, he will be glad to afford. I allude to the irregularities with reference to the Montreal Cotton Company, to which I referred some time ago, and upon which I offered a motion to the House. The Minister of Customs then said that, as soon as the matter was in such a position that he could bring the papers down, he would not only be willing but glad to do so, and on the 7th of the month he brought down a return. I have looked over that return, and it seems to me that there are questions involved in it, as to the administration of the Department, which will, perhaps, warrant the House in giving the matter a little consideration. You, Sir, will agree with me, and I have no doubt the Minister of Customs will agree with me, that in the administration of the Customs laws there should be one law for all; that the rule which prevails with reference to one party should prevail with reference to the other party. It would almost seem to me as if a course had been pursued in this case somewhat different to what has been pursued in other cases. As I do not desire to be tedious, I would summarise the statements made in this return, in order to be brief, only that, perhaps, I should not in that way do the subject justice, and the Minister might think I had not correctly stated the facts, or made the right deductions from them. I think, therefore, it is better, as it is not a long document, that I should read it, so that the House may be in possession of the facts. I will first refer as to how the matter came under the notice of the Minister of Customs. It came before him by a letter from the special agent's branch, Montreal, dated 15th April, 1887; and it is addressed to J. Johnson, Commissioner of Customs, Ottawa, Ont.:

"I have the honor to report that on the 4th instant, I received information under oath, to the effect that the manager of the Montreal Cotton Company was in the habit of importing from the United States certain dutiable dyes and chemicals for use in the mills of that company, which are situated at Valleyfield, Que., and entering such dyes and chemicals free by means of false invoices especially prepared by the exporter in the United States, at the request of said manager, whose name is William Wilson.

"Amongst other things specifically sworn to are, that on or about 25th June, 1886, the said William Wilson, in his capacity as manager of the Montreal Cotton Company, ordered from F. H. Maddocks, a broker in dye stuffs and chemicals, of 38 Kilby street, Boston—10 barrels extract hypernic, 10 barrels extract sumac, and 10 barrels nitrate of iron—all of which are dutiable at 20 per cent.; and that the said goods, by the order of Wilson, were invoiced and shipped by Maddocks as 20 barrels extract of logwood and 10 barrels iron liquor, both of which are free of duty under the tariff. That the extract hypernic, extract sumac, and nitrate of iron were falsely entered as above described at Customs with the intent and for the purpose of defrauding the Customs revenue of the Dominion of Canada.

"That on or about the 20th September, 1886, a chemist of the Montreal Cotton Company at Valleyfield, by instructions of Wilson, the manager of the company, ordered from Henry A. Gould & Co., manufacturers of dye stuffs, 17 Pearl street, Boston, 200 barrels brown dye, upon which there is an import duty of 20 per cent., to be invoiced and shipped as jet black dye, which is free of duty.

"That a considerable portion of the brown dye was invoiced, shipped and entered at Customs as jet black dye with the intent and for the purpose of defrauding the Customs of the Dominion of Canada.

"The information goes on to state that extract of hypernic, fustic, sumac, hematein, &c., all liable to duty, were imported under the general name of extract logwood, in barrels so branded, but marked in addition with an initial letter intended to designate the true contents, for the convenience of the manager of the mill, and that a card would be found in the store-room adjoining the laboratory whereon, written in blue pencil, was the following, viz.:—"L," Logwood; "B," Sumac; "F," Fustic; "H," Hematein; "Hy," Hypernic, or similar signs or letters; and that the value of the goods ordered during the year 1886, and falsely invoiced and entered, amounted to upwards of $14,000.

"Investigation at the company's mill at Valleyfield proves the information as to the ordering and entering of the goods under a wrong description to be correct; and in the order book at the mill, under date of 28th October, 1885, is found an order to F. H. Maddocks, referred to above, for 50 barrels hematein, to be invoiced "extract logwood," and marked "H." The said goods were shipped as directed by the Boston Dyewood and Chemical Company, under invoice to the Montreal Cotton Company, by order of the said Maddocks, the broker, under date of November the 5th, 1885, and entered at Lacolle, per entry No. 132, on 10th November, 1885, free of duty. (See entry and invoice annexed.)

"Also an order to H. A. Gould & Co., Boston, 2nd August, 1886, for 10 barrels of cutch (a prepared dye) to be shipped via Canada Atlantic Railway, with three invoices to be invoiced as "jet black dye," the said ten barrels were shipped as directed under invoice to Montreal Cotton Co., dated 4th August, 1886, and entered at Lacolle free of duty per entry No. 97, on the 10th August, 1886. (See entry and invoice annexed.)

"Again an order to H. A. Gould & Co., Boston, 8th October, 1886, for 200 barrels brown dye, to be marked in invoice as "jet black dye." At least 75 barrels of the above order were entered free of duty at Lacolle, that is to say, 25 barrels, per entry 180, 21st October, 1886; 25 barrels, per entry 234, 11th December, 1886; 25 barrels, per entry 274, 27th January, 1887. (See invoices and entries annexed.)

"Mr. Wilson, the manager, on being questioned at the mill, admitted that orders had been given to shippers to invoice the goods referred to as extract of logwood, with a designating letter, and as jet black dye, respectively; and that a card, as alleged, had formerly been posted in the laboratory store-room. He claimed to be under the impression that as the bases of the articles were free in some cases and used for similar purposes as free dyes in others, all should be free, and invoices and entries should be made accordingly.

"I called upon Mr. A. F. Gault, president of the Company, and explained the circumstances to him, and informed that gentleman that I was under the impression that their manager at Valleyfield was defrauding both the revenue and the company. Mr. Gault told me that he thought I was wrong in my impression, and that he had a short time previous, owing to a dispute between the manager and chemist, learned that certain articles had been entered under a wrong description, from a strict interpretation of the wording of the tariff, but that such wrong entering was not previously known to him, and was at once stopped. Mr. Gault gave me a letter to Mr. J. W. Howard, the secretary and treasurer of the company, with directions to afford me every facility to carry on the investigation.

"On examination of the books of the company, I at once found that my impression that the duty money accruing upon the goods entered free, but which should have paid duty, had been paid to Mr. Wilson, and not paid over to the Customs, was erroneous.

"I also found that the 10 bbls. of iron liquor and 20 barrels extract of logwood entered at Lacolle per entry No. 68, on 20th July, 1886, free, were in reality 10 barrels nitrate of iron, 10 barrels extract sumac and 10 extract hypernic, as alleged in the deposition referred to in the early part of this report, and that the barrels were marked with designating letters as alleged (see invoice and entry annexed), and observed price of alleged "extract logwood" "E" in said invoice.

"It appears from invoices and entries herewith that the use of the term "extract logwood" and designating letters to secure free entry of dutiable goods, commenced with an invoice from the Boston Dyewood and Chemical Company, dated Boston, 28th September, 1885, attached to Lacolle entry No. 138 of that year, and that brown dye ceased to be entered as jet black dye, with Lacolle entry No. 299, 26th February, 1887, and that duty was paid upon fustic and hypernic previous to September 1885, so that the wrong entering may be considered as having taken place between those dates.

"The total value of goods covered by attached invoices entered at Lacolle, in regard to which any wrong entering has been practiced, amounts to $6,937.15, but it is stated by the informer that a much larger amount is liable to forfeiture.

"As no goods have been seized, all wrongly imported having, it is supposed, gone into consumption, I could take no other course than to report the matter for the action of the Department.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
"JAMES T. WOLFF,
"Special Agent."

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
"JAMES T. WOLFF,
"Special Agent."

In this way the matter was brought to the attention of the Minister of Customs. I do not find that any action of the Government was taken in the way of communications until subsequent to the receipt of letters from the Valleyfield Company.

Mr. BOWELL. Is there not another report, subsequently, from Mr. Grose?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Yes, but the point I am making now is, that I have failed to perceive that any communication was had with the manager or the directors of this company by the Department at Ottawa, prior to the receipt of letters from the Montreal Company; and I think the House might be put in possession of the communications that passed between the Customs Department and the Montreal Cotton Company, which, I suppose, must have passed before they wrote their letter. Next in order is the following:—

"MONTREAL COTTON COMPANY,
"VALLEYFIELD, P.Q., 26th April, 1887.

"Hon. MACKENZIE BOWELL,
"Minister of Customs, Ottawa.

"DEAR SIR,—Under instructions from our president, I have the honor to enclose the company's cheque for _____ in payment of duties.

"I am, yours obediently,
"WM. WILSON,
"Pro Montreal Cotton Co."

I next find the following letter:—

"THE MONTREAL COTTON CO.,
"MONTREAL, 28th April, 1887.

"Hon. Mackenzie Bowell,
"Minister of Customs, Ottawa.

SIR,—The president has instructed me to inform you in connection with the cheque of this company for eighteen hundred and twenty-four dollars and seventy-two cents, enclosed to you in Mr. Wilson's letter of the 26th current, that, on a careful reexamination of the original statement of imported dye stuffs submitted to you, which it appears was made up very hurriedly owing to pressure of time by reason of the mails to Valleyfield being unavoidably delayed, he regrets to find that certain items which should have been included therein, were inadvertently omitted.

"An amended statement was, therefore, ordered to be prepared by the manager, and upon the figures shown after such amendment being made, the amount of duty, eighteen hundred and twenty-four dollars and seventy-two cents, is based.

"The statement as it now stands is believed to be correct in every particular.

"I am, Sir,
"Your most obedient servant,
"J. W. HOWARD,
"Secretary-Treasurer."

Then there is a memorandum of the same date:

"THE MONTREAL COTTON CO.,
"Montreal, April 28th, 1887.

"Memorandum.—If the figures of the cheque, $1,824.72, have not been inscribed in Mr. Wilson's letter of 26th April, 1887, in the space therein provided, will you kindly have them inserted.

"Your obedient servant,
"J. W. HOWARD,
"Sec.-Treas."

"The Hon. the Minister of Customs, Ottawa."

That is a point on which I should like a little information, how it was that they sent a cheque to the Department in blank, and then in a memorandum asked the Department to fill up the blank? The Minister will have observed that allusion is made in this letter to an original statement that was submitted to him. That original statement I have not been able to find in the papers, and it seems to be important that it should be before us, as well as the correspondence which, I think, must have left the Customs Department at Ottawa, to bring forth the letters of the 26th and the 28th of April. Then I think the next correspondence is on 30th April, as follows:—

"1275 of 1887. "OTTAWA, 30th April, 1887.

"J. A. GROSE, Esq,
"Special Customs Officers, Montreal, Que.

"SIR,—I am directed by the hon. the Minister of Customs to send to you in Mr. Wolff's absence file above noted re the entries made by the Montreal Cotton Company under false names, of certain dye stuffs subject to duty, and to instruct you to make a full and careful investigation into the matter and to report thereon, upon the statements made in the secretary-treasurer's letter of the 28th inst., which seems to indicate that a statement was made up by the manager of the company showing the extent of the fraudulent entries, but which statement was not enclosed. Your early and careful attention to this matter is required.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
"W. G. PARMELEE,
"Assistant Commissioner."

It would appear from that letter that the amended statement referred to in the secretary-treasurer's letter of the 28th April, had not been forwarded to the Department, so that that letter to Special Agent Grose, which I have just read, seems to have brought this reply from him:

"MONTREAL, May 18th, 1887.

"J. JOHNSON, Esq,
"Commissioner of Customs,
"Ottawa, Ont.

"SIR,—I have the honor to return herewith file No. 1275 re certain dye stuffs imported by the Montreal Cotton Co.

"I now attach the statement of the secretary-treasurer, Mr. J. W. Howard, which is made mention of in his letter of 28th April, 1887. I have gone through this statement carefully, and compared it with both Lacolle and Montreal entries, and find it correct. You will notice by Mr. Special Agent Wolff's report that he gives a total value of goods entered at Lacolle as $6,997.15. In justice to the company I may add that they called my attention to the 77 barrels of logwood, A, B, and C, purchased from F. X. Maddocks, of Boston, the value of which is $3,219.85, as per invoice and entries attached, and which should have paid 20 per cent. duty, but was entered at the port of Montreal free. This makes a total value of goods wrongly entered $9,173.75, all of which were entered at Lacolle, with the exception of the 77 barrels of which I have already made mention.

"I have the honor to be, &c.,
"JOHN A. GROSE,
"Special Officer."

Now, I would desire to call the attention of the Minister of Customs to the fact that the two amounts mentioned here, $6,997.15 and $3,219.85—the first being the amount according to Mr. Wolff's report, and the second, the amount they themselves brought to the notice of the Department—make a total of $10,217 instead of $9,173.75. I am at a loss to understand how the special agent can certify that he went over these accounts and found them all correct, when he gives Mr. Wolff's figures as correct and those of the company's as correct, and makes them add $9,173. However, that is the letter. He sends up a statement that they had omitted to send, which I find among the papers, and its total is, he says, $9,173.75. 20 per cent. upon that would come to more than $1,824.72, which is the amount of the company's check, but I have checked the figures over, and find the addition of their figures in their statement gives $50 more than the amount. Taking that off, it would leave $9,173.75, the duty upon which of 20 per cent. would amount to the amount of the cheque, $1,824.72. Now, it would appear from this return that there were frauds practiced upon the Department. They are so termed, and I think it would be difficult to call them by any other name. It is recited that goods were deliberately ordered, that the orders were sent to parties for certain articles, and that they were to be invoiced as other articles, the names under which they were invoiced being goods free of duty. In addition to putting the wrong articles in their entries, they were to mark initial letters on the different packages, so that the manager of the mill would be able to know what the article was that he received. That was practiced apparently for two years, as far as the discovery has been made, and the value of the goods is placed at $9,173.75. The manager admitted to Mr. Wolff that such was the case, and the president, Mr. Gault, admitted that, through a dispute between two of the officers, it had come to his knowledge, and he had stopped it. The point that seems to be rather strange is that, in a case like that, where the frauds are plain and palpable, and where they are admitted by the Government officers, the Government should accept a cheque for the payment of duty, and thus apparently close the case. If such be the rule of the Department, if that be the way these matters are managed, of course the officials have only followed the rule; but, if I remember rightly some transactions that took place in the Customs Department during last season, other parties were not treated in this way. There were cases in which the parties stock was seized, and fines and penalties imposed on them. I know of many cases myself in which the entries had been made, I believe, in good faith, by importers who had presented, not fraudulent, but correct invoices, and in which the goods had been seized simply because, though the invoice was correct and the goods purchased at the invoice prices, it was alleged that they were entered at undervaluation; and the ground for this allegation was that the goods were sold at higher prices in the market than the prices at which they were bought. In some cases the Customs Department have fined heavily parties in circumstances like these, and in other similar cases the Department has absolutely forfeited the goods. What I want to know is whether one rule is to prevail for one party and another for another party. I would like to know what explanation is to be had with reference to this matter. Perhaps some explanation can be given by the Minister, and I think it is desirable, in the public interest, that he should be able to explain this matter, as a feeling of uneasiness will be produced in the minds of the people if they should have reason to suspect that there was one law applied by the Customs Department for the punishment of false entries in one case, and another law applied in another case. All that I have before me is that this company sent a cheque to the Department, and that the special agent of the Department says the company's statement is correct and their cheque covers the amount of the duty. This happened on the 18th of May, 1887, and on the 7th of June, the Minister brings down the statement to the House. There is another thing that requires explanation, and that is the two letters subsequently sent to the Minister of Customs:

"The Hon. MACKENZIE BOWELL,
"Minister of Customs, Ottawa.

"SIR,—I am instructed by my board to enclose you the accompanying resolutions passed at its to-day's meeting, and to which due attention will be given.

"I am further instructed to request that you will kindly afford the company the necessary time to make the intended investigation.

"I have the honor to be, &c,

"For the Montreal Cotton Co.,

"J. W. HOWARD,

"Secretary-Treasurer.

"MONTREAL, 3rd May, 1887."

"Resolutions passed at the board meeting of the company held at its office:

"Resolved, That this board learns with surprise and regret that the Customs Department charges irregularities in connection with the entries of certain dyes at Lacolle.

"That this board was wholly ignorant of such irregularities; that the directors severally shall, in the most formal possible way, put on record their complete ignorance of the transactions complained of, and that the president make an enquiry into the details of the whole matter, and place the information he may obtain before this board at its next meeting.

"J. W. HOWARD,

"Secretary-Treasurer.

"MONTREAL, 3rd May, 1887."

To what do they allude in this letter of 3rd May? I find no letter of the Department to their officers subsequent to that letter of 30th April and the reply thereto of the special agent. Why, on the 3rd May does the treasurer of the company ask the Government kindly to afford the company the necessary time to make the intended investigation. What investigation? What are we to understand by these words:

"That this board learns with surprise and regret that the Customs Department charges irregularities in connection with the entries of certain dyes at Lacolle."

When Mr. Wolff, on 15th April, says that he called upon Mr. Gault, the president of the company, and explained the circumstances and so on. I cannot turn to that at this moment, but I think I read that the President stated that he learned through a dispute that there had been irregularities, and that had to be put a stop to. Yet, on 3rd May, they declare:

"That the board was wholly ignorant of any such irregularities; that the directors severally shall, in the most formal possible way, put on record their complete ignorance of the transactions complained of; and that the president make an enquiry into the details of the whole matter, and place the information he may obtain before this board at its next meeting."

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

I am at a loss to understand why that resolution of 3rd May was passed, as well as some statements which are made in it, when I find that in the statement that was sent, dated 27th April, and the letter of 28th April, it is said that the amended statement is correct and true, and covers all the amount. Why, then, should a further investigation have been held, and at whose instance is it being held? It will be remembered that, on the 2nd May, the day before the last resolution was adopted by the company, I called the attention of the Minister to the subject under a notice of motion which I had at that time, when I moved for:

"Copies of all reports made to the Customs Department by any of its officers or special agents concerning irregularities committed by the Montreal Cotton Company; also, copies of all correspondence between the Department of Customs and any of its officers or special agents, and copies of all correspondence between the said Department or its officers or special agents and the manager or directors of said company in regard to such irregularities.

"Mr. BOWELL. It would be highly inconvenient at the present moment to bring down the papers moved by the hon. gentleman, for the reason that the matter is still under investigation. I may mention, however, for the information of the hon. gentleman and the information of the House, that one of the directors of that company wrote me the other day, stating that other irregularities had been discovered, and that he would see that a full report was made of all the facts, and I returned the report to the special officer, to which the hon. gentleman has called attention, to Montreal, in order that a further investigation might take place, so that the Department might be in a position to come to a proper decision on the whole case."

Now, it will be observed there, that the Minister said on the 2nd of May, that one of the directors wrote him that other irregularities had been discovered. He must have written him, of course, prior to the 2nd of May, and yet on the 3rd of May this resolution is passed by the board:

"That the board was wholly ignorant of any such irregularities and the directors shall, in the most formal possible way, put on record their complete ignorance of the transactions complained of, &c."

It seems to me that that report of the director to the Minister should be given to us, but I have failed to find it in the papers.

Mr. BOWELL. What is that?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The report of the director who reported, as the hon. Minister stated, that other irregularities were discovered.

Mr. BOWELL. Perhaps, if the word "report" is used there, I must have meant a letter. I got no formal report on the subject.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Well, that letter is not with the papers brought down, as far as I have discovered, and I think it would be important that that letter should be produced.

Mr. BOWELL. If any importance is attached to it, I will try to find it. I am sure that is simply the contents of it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I have simply mentioned this matter. I will not take up any more time—I cannot, because I must hear the explanation of the hon. the Minister of Customs, which, I trust, will be explanatory; and, perhaps, by the time we reach the Customs items in the Estimates, he may have an opportunity of bringing down the correspondence and the other documents which seem to me to be material to this question, when we can further investigate it. The point to which I call the attention of the Minister now, is this, on which I would like to have his explanation, in reference to the settlement that appeared to have been made with this company. It is a case of fraud, not one of mistake, not one of entering goods under value, having a correct invoice, and yet being seized, as I have known them to be seized, the invoice being honest and the price paid according to the invoice. I have known the goods in such a case as that to be seized and forfeited, and fines imposed in addition, while in this case the entries were fraudulently made. It is a case where goods were deliberately ordered—I want so and so; that is at a rate of 20 per cent. duty, but your invoice is under another name, which is admitted free of duty, and put a mark on the barrels by which I will know what it is when it comes. That appears to have been the case, and that was going on for two years. It has not been attempted to deny it, and it cannot be denied, yet the Minister, apparently, has accepted payment of the duty, $1,824, in full of all this.

Mr. BOWELL. You will not find anything in the correspondence to prove that statement.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I find this. I find that the amount of the cheque is there. Of course it will be for the Minister to say that he is still further investigating that matter, but there is no further report of it. I call his attention to this. When I brought this up, he said he was not in a position to give the information at once, but he said:

"I have no doubt that, before the House rises, I will be in a position to give the whole facts in connection with the case to which the hon. gentleman has called the attention of the House, and also the decision of the Department upon it. I trust that with this information the hon. gentleman will withdraw his motion, at least for the present.

"Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then I understand the Minister to say that he will submit to the House, as soon as he can, the information I ask for.

"Mr. BOWELL. Yes, just as soon as I am put in a position to enable me to come to a decision on the merits of the case."

There he states that he will not bring his report down until he will be in a position to come to a decision on the merits of the case. He has brought the report down. Therefore, I take it for granted that he is in a position to come to a decision on the merits of the case; and the only decision, as far as the papers show, that he has come to is that he has accepted the company's cheque for $1,824, which is the amount of the duty payable on the goods which were falsely entered and which they were able to trace. I drew my deduction from that remark of the hon. Minister, and if I have not made a fair deduction, I shall be pleased to hear his explanation. I need not say to you, Mr. Speaker, or to the Minister of Customs, that there is nothing of personal malice in my motive. I do not know the gentlemen who are interested or anything about this matter, except that I have felt more than once—and after listening to the defence of the Minister of Customs, without desiring to press him unduly—it has been borne in on my mind that the decisions of the Department of Customs have not been uniform. I impute no motives, but I maintain that there should be one law and one rule for dealing with these cases. It is not fair in my judgment, as I understand it, pending the explanation the Minister may give, that, in certain cases of which I have a clear remembrance, goods have been taken by the Customs Department and forfeited and sold, and in other cases heavy penalties have been levied, not for fraudulent entries but for entries which were made in good faith on invoices which were bond fide invoices and on statements which were sworn to, but the goods were sold at a lower price than they could be obtained for elsewhere. When that was the case I find from the report brought down that another party made designedly a statement to defraud the Customs revenue by ordering goods that they wanted, and giving specific directions to have them called another thing in the invoice, and a cheque is accepted for the amount of duty that is found to accrue upon them, without even adding the interest. I think there ought to be some explanation with reference to that, and it would be well for the Minister to say what rule does govern, and whether a strict uniform rule is to be applied to all. I thought it desirable to bring this point before the Minister at the present time, from the fact that he has on the paper a notice of a Bill to amend the Customs Act, and without pronouncing myself one way or another on the question now, I think it is a fair subject for discussion whether the Minister should not divest himself of the arbitrary power he has at present, and that in matters of false entries, fraudulent entries, entries of under-valuation, mistaken entries, and all disputes which may arise, he should not divest himself of the power he now holds.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think my hon. friend will find, with reference to the Customs Act, that the Minister did divest himself of this power. That was one of the things that I objected to when the Act was being amended. You recollect that I fought a whole night over that, and the Minister said he would divest himself of it. But the Act is imperative that the fines shall be imposed and paid. The hon. gentleman's point, to be well taken, should not be against imposing the fines the law imposes, but only that the Minister should divest himself of any discretionary power.

Mr. BOWELL. That is if the hon. gentleman has stated the case correctly.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think the Minister will give me credit for having stated what I believe to be correct, and made the deductions which I drew from statements which he made in the House, from the fact that he said that he did not desire to bring down the papers until he was in a position to come to a decision on the merits of the case. He has brought down the report, and we have the information given to the House that he has not imposed any fines or penalties. But the fact remains that his special agent reports that he found everything correct, as he said in the statement. But the point I wish to bring out was this: if there is not to be a uniform system to be applied with reference to all by the Customs Department, there will be a demand for some other tribunal before which these cases should go, and in which an equal justice would be meted out to all. I think from all the information that the Minister has submitted to the House, this is a case in which he has dealt with these parties in a manner very much different from that in which he dealt with other parties, I think, even in the same city, no longer than one year ago. I will not say any more at present, but I presume I shall be permitted to reply to the Minister if he states anything that calls for a reply from me.

Mr. BOWELL. If constant repetition of one or two ideas in about an hour's speech would impress the importance of this subject on any one's mind, I think it ought to be tolerably well ground into me on this occasion. The two ideas suggested by my hon. friend, are: first, that there is an administration of the law for one party, and a different administration for another party, and, in order to impress me with that idea, the hon. gentleman has repeated it just five times. The second was, that goods have been seized and sold for under-valuation repeatedly, and in some cases confiscated, while there was no intent of fraud on the part of the importer who brought the goods into the country; that goods have been seized under those circumstances, where probably there was no fraud intended, and the penalty imposed by the law has been collected, that may be quite true. But there has been no case of confiscation of goods imported under such circumstances, where the party has not positively refused to comply with the provisions of the law. I have nothing further to say in reference to that point, because I do not desire to enter into the discussion of that question as fully as I would like to, and probably if we live long enough, we will discuss what amendments may be proposed to the Customs law when they are brought before the House. But I have this to say, that this is the first time during my occupancy of the position as Minister of Customs, that I have ever brought papers before the House until the whole question was decided; and from what has resulted from laying these papers before the House on this occasion, I think I should be quite right, both in the interest of the parties, and in the interests of the country, to refuse to bring any more papers before the House in the half-settled state in which the present case is. If the hon. gentleman had studied the Customs law he would know that no matter how criminal a party may be, or how far he has violated the law, he has a certain time in which to put in his defence. I am quite sure that the hon. gentleman, with his ideas of fairness, will not find fault with the administration of the Department or with myself if, at the instance of their solicitors, I gave the parties time to put in a defence before I came to a decision and made a report to the Council as to the final disposition of the seizure. He must know, also, that my time has been fully occupied during the Session, in connection with my colleagues, in reference to matters pertaining to the general administration of the country, and more particularly in reference to the Estimates and Tariff, that I have not had so much time as I would have liked to have given to the consideration of this question. I may just as well tell the hon. gentleman that it is only yesterday that I received a number of affidavits from the president and directors of the company in relation to this very case, and I then gave orders to have them copied in order that I might lay them before the House along with the papers which are already before us; and until the defence was fully before me, it was impossible for me to come to any final decision as to what penalty would be imposed upon this company for having, through their manager, violated the Customs Act. Now, I can tell my hon. friend that that cheque was signed and sent. It was signed in blank, but I paid no attention to it. I handed it to the Commissioner with instructions not to fill in any blank or to have anything to do with it. He had no communication, directly or indirectly, with Mr. Howard (I think that is the name), the treasurer, in reference to that cheque. But upon receipt of that cheque and the letter accompanying it, in which attention was called, if my recollection serves me right, to further discrepancies they had discovered. I then decided to return the papers to Mr. Grose, Mr. Wolff not being in the country, in order to make a still further investigation and to report. No money has been accepted from the company in settlement of the fraud; for such, I think, I may fairly call it. No intimation has been given to the company that that cheque or any other amount would be received in consideration of what was due, either in the way of duties or as penalties. The hon. gentleman says he would like to understand why the company has taken such and such action. I am totally unable to tell him the reason. I have no knowledge of what induced them to call their board meeting, further than, perhaps, they wished to try and clear themselves. I made no suggestion, and no suggestion was made to my knowledge, from the Department, in reference to this matter. They acted solely upon their own responsibility. I desire to add that, when my officer came to me and told me this fraud had been going on, I said to him: "Be sure you are correct, and the moment you have evidence to substantiate the charges you have made, go to the president of the company and ask him to exhibit his books, in order that you may verify, if possible, the information which has been given to you. From my knowledge of Mr. Andrew Gault and those with whom he is associated, I am quite convinced he will not hesitate to lay the books before you, unless they were parties to the fraud." I could not bring myself to believe that gentlemen of their character, such men as Andrew Gault, Mr. J. K. Ward, Mr. Senator Thibaudeau and others of that class would lend themselves to the fraud, which had evidently been committed by the manager of their company.

Mr. BOWELL,

My surmises were quite correct. As soon as Mr. Gault's attention was called to it he laid the books before the special officer, Mr. Wolff, upon which he based his report. The statement made by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) that it was a clear case of fraud, I do not deny, on the contrary, I am fully in accord with him; and just as soon as I have time to fully consider this question I shall be prepared to give my decision as the head of the Department. Should I give such a decision as has been intimated by the hon. gentleman, thereby administering the law in a manner so lenient to them while it has been rigidly enforced against others, then I will admit that the hon. gentleman will be quite correct in his insinuations that I was dealing out one measure of justice to one firm and another measure of justice to another firm. I have endeavored so far as the administration of this very unpopular branch of this Government is concerned, where the parties have been discovered as committing a fraud or parties in their employment, where they have shown every disposition to lay all the facts before the Department and the Government, to treat them as such men ought to be treated. I have, on the contrary, given instructions that where obstacles are thrown in the way by the destruction of the books or other means adopted in order to hide iniquities perpetrated by them, that the officers should take more energetic measures in order to arrive at the truth. The hon. gentleman has said that there is correspondence that has not been laid before the House. I know of no correspondence, except the letter to which he has referred, and in which he called my attention to the fact that other discrepancies have been discovered. The hon. gentleman has spoken of an original statement or an original communication. There is no such original statement, in writing, as that to which he has referred, and I can only account for the reference to it, from the fact that Mr. Gault, the manager, and one or two of those interested in the company—I forget all the names—came and had a personal interview with me, in which they placed a statement, orally, before me. It was not in writing. I can only imagine that the original statements referred to in that letter must have been that interview, which never was committed to paper. Now, as I have said, I received affidavits yesterday from Mr. Andrew Gault, Mr. J. K. Ward, Mr. Senator Thibaudeau, and I think from two or three others declaring that they had no knowledge that this fraud had been committed. They also ask at the same time, either by their attorney or by letter, I am not sure which, that I would give them sufficient time to have another personal interview and allow them to make personal explanations in regard to this matter. These facts I think will be held to justify the Customs Department in not coming to a decision as to the penalties which to be imposed until the parties, whom we have reason to believe were innocent, so far as they were individually concerned, have had an opportunity in the fullest possible manner of making an explanation. I do not think it is necessary for me to prolong this discussion. I have already pointed out to the House that no cheque has been accepted in payment of any sums. The cheque, I believe, is still in the hands of the Department, and is very likely to be found in the vaults in the custody of the commissioner, to whom I handed it. There has been no acceptance of that cheque, either in payment for duties or in liquidation of any penalties that may hereafter be imposed. In short, the Department has not come to any decision as to what penalties they will impose, whether they will acquit those people, whether they will accept the duties imposed, or whether they will act under the clause of the law which confiscates the full amount of the $10,000 the duty paid, value of the goods falsely entered, or whether we will follow the manager for having made those improper entries.

As soon as time will permit and as soon as those parties have had the fullest possible opportunity of making explanation, which they have asked and which I certainly will grant, I will make decision, and I think it will meet the approval of the House if not of the hon. gentleman who has brought this question under its notice. The law will be administered in the case of these wealthy and prominent men and their manager, in the same manner as it has been administered against others. Had Mr. Gault refused, as has been done by others, to place the books in the hands of the officer when asked, in order to verify or to prove false the information which had been given, then a seizure would have been made at once. But from the standing of those men, and the wealth we knew they possessed, I did not deem it necessary to stop work at their mills, because I knew any moment a decision was given they would be able to pay whatever penalty we imposed, or they would intimate that they dissented from the decision and would be prepared to go into the Exchequer Court and fight it. I hope, I do not know, that I will be able before the House rises to give a decision, as the hon. gentleman has asked; but this I can assure him—I am following his example by repeating it three times—that no settlement has been made, that not one dollar has been accepted from them further than the retention of the cheque, and I am not sure but that I said to Mr. Johnson that he might just as well send it back, or keep it, as he pleased, until the matter is disposed of—but nothing has been done in the way of final settlement, as the hon. member for Brant would lead the House to believe. I may have stated at the time that I would not lay the papers before the House until I was able to come to a decision; but am not sure as to the exact words. My hon. friend beside me says: "I think it is a great pity you have brought them down," but from the frequent enquiries made I was anxious that the House should be placed in possession of the facts as soon as they came into my possession.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I have no hesitation in accepting the Minister's statements when he tells us that that is so. Of course, I unhesitatingly accept his statement, but I trust he will not blame me for having unduly, as he thinks, made a charge against him.

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I was under the impression that we had all the papers we would get. I read the Minister's remark before I acted upon it, and he was so positive at the time I made my motion that it would not do to bring it down until the matter was investigated, that I asked if he would bring it down without motion, and he was kind enough to say he would.

Mr. BOWELL. I promise you never to do it again.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). When I asked the hon. gentleman about the matter his reply was: Just as soon as I am in a position to come to a decision upon the merits of the case it will be brought down. On 7th June, when I presented the matter, I took it for granted—as I think I might fairly do—that the whole case was before us, that the matter was closed, and I spoke of course in that sense, as I think I was warranted in doing, as I could not come to any other conclusion. However, I understand the Minister to say that he made a mistake in bringing it down before the matter was closed, and I certainly cannot find fault with him because he was rather evincing a desire to oblige me, or any gentleman making a motion, and, therefore, I would not press that point against him. The Minister now states that while his answer would seem to give an impression that the matter was closed, still he holds the case open for adjudication. That will, of course, prevent anything further from being said until we have the Minister's decision with reference to the matter, when I have no doubt he will feel that it is incumbent upon him—as he says he does—to hold that there is only one way of treating those people. Of course he knows that I have seen him on several occasions, when I have thought that his judgment was rather harsh, and as it seems to me from the papers in this case that his conduct differed entirely from his action in other cases, I thought I would bring the matter before the House.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad that this matter has been brought up in the House, because there has been a great deal of comment in the press with regard to this particular seizure; and inasmuch as men of high standing in the commercial and manufacturing world have been connected with it, it has created an unpleasant impression, which I think the discussion of to-day, and the explanation of the Minister will tend to remove. The gentlemen connected with the Montreal Cotton Company are men of the highest standing in the commercial centre of Montreal. I feel satisfied that none of them would be guilty of any attempt to defraud the revenue or commit an act which would do injustice to the revenue, and I am very glad indeed to have heard the explanation which the Minister has given. I am also glad that the matter is not closed, as it appeared to be by the statements as originally made by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson), that the Minister is still prosecuting enquiries with regard to it, because it is of great importance that he should carry out the rules of his Department with equal severity in all cases. I think that his Department has executed its decrees with great severity, and in some cases, as I thought, unjustly. The Minister in the exercise of his duty undoubtedly thought otherwise, but he knows that I have stated to him both privately and in this House, that I thought his decisions were unduly severe. However, as he says this is a clear case of fraud, I trust he will—and I know he will—pursue the same course as he has pursued in other cases, and will see that all parties are treated alike, and thus continue to command the confidence of the mercantile community.

Mr. JONES. The debate on the motion of my hon. friend was perhaps more important than would appear at first sight, because it relates to the administration of the Customs Department in Montreal, which has been the subject of complaint—and I may say of very general complaint—for a long time, so far as Halifax merchants are concerned. As I may not have a more opportune time to do so, I would remind the hon. gentleman of certain circumstances which took place some time ago at the port of Halifax, for the purpose of contrasting them with what took place at the port of Montreal. I do not mean to cast any reflection upon the administration of the hon. gentleman at the head of the Customs Department. I think that if he were made fully aware of all the circumstances he would carry out in a fair and impartial manner the laws of his Department. The complaint I have to make is that he has been too prone to rely on the reports of his subordinates, and that, while the strongest evidence has from time to time been submitted to him regarding the mal-administration of affairs in Montreal, the hon. gentleman has not been willing to accept that evidence, as it should have been accepted, considering the sources from which it was derived. Now, with regard to certain matters at the port of Montreal, there have been complaints for a long time in connection with certain branches of trade. I may say that one gentleman in Halifax told me not long ago that he could import, and did import, and would continue to import, all his agricultural implements from the United States for Halifax, via Montreal, and pay the freight over the Intercolonial Railway, because they were entered at Montreal by the agents of the company, or the parties interested there, at so much lower rates than they could be entered at Halifax, that he could pay the freight over the Intercolonial Railway all the way to Halifax, and save considerable money by the transaction. I have brought this matter to the notice of the Department publicly; I mentioned it to Mr. Bremner, whom the Government appointed in connection with the sugar branch of the Department some years ago, and he promised me that he would investigate the matter. The gentleman to whom I have referred is one of the largest importers of agricultural implements in Halifax. I may mention that another party approached me in Halifax on the same subject. He was a large upholsterer, and he told me that he paid the duty on certain articles, I am not sure whether they were from England or the United States and that after paying the duty he was visited by a person in the same trade from Montreal, who offered him the same goods at very much less than he could afford to sell them for. On making a comparison with the Montreal merchant he found that while these articles had to be entered in Halifax for $26 they were entered at Montreal at, I think, only $16.

Mr. BOWELL. What kind of goods did you say?

Mr. JONES. The man is an upholsterer, and I can give you his name. He informed me that while these goods were entered in Montreal at $16, or possibly at $18 or $19, I think it was, the Customs in Halifax, under orders from the Department, put them at $26 for entry there. The hon. gentleman will see that in these few instances—and I can give him others how unfairly the merchants of Montreal have had advantages over the merchants in other cities in the Dominion. I might also mention the case of a book and stationery concern in Halifax, the proprietor of which told me the same thing—that he could import certain articles from England, by way of Montreal, and carry them to Halifax by the Intercolonial Railway, and save money by the transaction. Another party, who is in the wine trade, thought it paid him better to get his wines via Montreal, because they were entered there by the agents of these foreign houses at so much lower a rate than at Halifax, that he could afford to send them over the Intercolonial Railway to Halifax and save money. Now, there are four cases, in different branches, to which I direct the attention of the hon. Minister of Customs, as I have on previous occasions directed the attention of the gentleman who was appointed by him to look into that subject.

Mr. BOWELL. Did he do so?

Mr. JONES. He told me he would.

Mr. BOWELL. I ask you if he did look into it?

Mr. JONES. I do not know.

Mr. BOWELL. Because I know Mr. Bremner is very thorough if he takes hold of anything.

Mr. JONES. He is very thorough, and I will do the Government the credit of saying that they appointed an excellent officer when they appointed Mr. Bremner. The Government are aware that for three or four years complaints were constantly made of the rates at which sugar was entered at the port of Montreal. It was well known to everyone in the trade that the refiners at Montreal were paying from 20 to 25 cents per 100 lbs. less on their sugar than the merchants of Halifax were paying on sugar coming from the same place at the same time. Mr. Bremner visited Montreal, and after the closest investigation, put on public record his opinion that the refiners of Montreal were getting their sugars there at from 20 to 25 cents per 100 lbs. less than the importers at Halifax; and I think the Minister of Customs has arrived at the conclusion that Mr. Bremner was strictly correct. I can give an illustration in my own case of the way in which this Government have carried out the laws in this respect. I do not wish to bring up my own business further than to illustrate this point. I happen to be an importer, and some three years ago I brought large cargoes of sugar from the island of Jamaica. At the same time there were arriving cargoes of sugar from the island of Jamaica, shipped at the same time by the same house, consigned to Halifax to be shipped over the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. When the cargoes shipped on account of my firm arrived at Halifax, they were entered according to the duty properly attached to them. When the cargoes which were intended for Montreal arrived, they were entered at the same value as the cargoes imported on Halifax account. However, those cargoes were forwarded to Montreal, and in some way or other—I do not mean to insinuate in what way—such an influence was brought to bear on the Government or on the Minister of Customs that those cargoes were entered at Montreal at a difference of $1,500 less duty than the cargoes which we had received at Halifax at the same time. And during the few months that those importations took place, according to a statement which I rendered to the hon. gentleman, the firm to which I belong, independent of the refinery at Halifax, which was a very large importer, and of the other importers at Halifax—paid $7,000 more duty on sugars than we would have been called on to pay had those sugars been sent to Montreal. I think that ought to show the hon. gentleman how unfairly the Customs office at Montreal has been managed during several years. It is true that has been changed, and we are now adopting the polariscopic test. But I repeat that the moneys which were paid by the refiners and merchants of Halifax during the two or three years that those irregularities occurred in Montreal, should be returned to the merchants and refiners of Halifax, or the refiners of Montreal should be called on to account for the difference. I am bound to say that here my regard for the judgment of the hon. Minister in these matters must terminate. The hon. gentleman during the debate of 1884, in reply to Mr. Vail, laid down the principle for the imposition of the duties on sugar, in those words:

Mr. JONES,

“Only when the refiner purchases sugars upon a guarantee of a certain strength, when it exceeds that strength, they pay a proportionate advance on the value ad valorem. When the test is made by the polariscope, if it is found that the sugar does not come up to the standard, then of course the value of the invoice would have to be decreased in order to obtain the correct ad valorem value of the sugar.”

Now, that is the principle laid down by the hon. Minister of Customs in this House, and that was the principle on which he had acted with regard to the Montreal refiners during the whole of those previous years; that is to say, when a cargo was purchased free-on-board, and guaranteed to test at a certain saccharine strength, but did not come up to the standard at which it was charged in the invoice, then the Government reduced the valuation, and the ad valorem duty applied to the lower value. That had been going on in Montreal for years, and it was only by the merest accident, when the hon. gentleman made this statement in Parliament, that this matter was brought to light. Then it was that the refiners and merchants of Halifax made an application to the hon. gentleman for a refund of duties under similar circumstances, and claimed that they should be placed in exactly as favorable a position as the merchants and refiners of the larger city of Montreal. I addressed a letter to the hon. gentleman, and he referred the matter to his Department. His Department took exactly the opposite view from that laid down by the hon. gentleman in the House. The Department, under letter of 9th, November signed by J. S. Carmen, Assistant Commissioner, says, in reference to this point:

“As the Department did not consider it had any power to regard such tests or to accept a post entry based thereon. The question was submitted to the Hon. the Treasury Board for decision, and, as a result of such reference, a letter was written to the collector at Montreal, from which port the claim emanated, intimating that it had not been decided to accept a post entry in the case. There were also several claims presented which, from the correspondence and documents attached, seem to imply that they were made in consequence of polarisation test lower than called for by contract. This brought up the same question again, and the Department submitted it to the Treasury Board, the board returned the claim to the Department for more definite information, when further correspondence was, therefore, had with the parties."

That is what I wish to bring to the notice of the House. It seems they refused the application of parties in Montreal, but they get out of it in this way:

"When further correspondence was, therefore, had with the parties, and affidavits produced, setting forth in express terms, that the inferiority referred to was not founded on the polarisation.

"The claims were then re-submitted to the Treasury Board, and allowed on the ground of deficiency in quality, as proven under the requirements of sec. 11 of the Tariff Act."

Now, is it possible to imagine that any Department could have submitted to the public such an excuse as this for applying a lower rate of duty on an article like sugar? They say it is on account of the deficiency in quality. That deficiency in quality could exist only on account of the loss of saccharine strength of the sugar not being up to the saccharine test. Therefore, when they found themselves in this position with regard to Montreal, which they had been treating in a different manner all along, they resorted to other means by which they might meet the views of the importers or refiners in Montreal. When they found that we had taken up the Minister of Customs according to his interpretation of the Act in Parliament, and were applying for the same reduction there as had been made for a long time in Montreal, then the Department goes back, and says it was not on the ground of inferiority of the polariscopic test, but on account of the general depreciation in quality. Hon. gentlemen, who are aware of anything in relation to the value of sugar at all, must be aware of this one great fact: that it is only in regard to its strength as an article of commerce that it could be considered as inferior at all. Its color was not affecting it in any way. It was only on account of the strength of the article.

Mr. BOWELL. The color under the law, as it then stood, would affect the value of sugar for duty.

Mr. JONES. The color affected all other sugars, and not this number more than any other.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say it did. I spoke of sugar generally.

Mr. JONES. Of course; the hon. gentleman is aware that the tariff imposed a different duty on sugar between 9 and 13.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman will admit that No. 9 sugar might be bought at one price to-day and at another to-morrow. It might be at one price at 10 o'clock to-day, and at 3 o'clock, through fluctuations of the market, it might be lower, so that it would be affected thereby in imposing an ad valorem duty.

Mr. JONES. The hon. gentleman knows very well that such fluctuations never took place.

Mr. BOWELL. From invoices placed before me and the Department, I know that that is a fact, or there was fraud committed in making the invoices.

Mr. JONES. There has been fraud, and that is what I complain of. The hon. gentleman has acted without due enquiry.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is not correct. He cannot mention a single case he ever brought before me, in which I did not make the fullest enquiry. If I came to an incorrect conclusion, that is another thing; but in every case the enquiry was made.

Mr. JONES. So much the worse for the hon. gentleman's judgment. I was disposed to believe the hon. gentleman had been guided by the officers of his Department.

Mr. BOWELL. So I was.

Mr. JONES. But the hon. gentleman tells me he has investigated this subject.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not. I said I caused an enquiry to be made, and formed my judgment on the report made to me.

Mr. JONES. The hon. gentleman has arrived at a decision on this question which does little credit to his judgment or to the administration of his Department. When the hon. gentleman has complaints like these brought before him by his own friends, Mr. Bremmer, one of the most active workers of the Conservative party in Halifax,—

Mr. BOWELL. What has that to do with it? I would take your complaint as soon as that of a friend of my own, and a man who would not administer an office like mine on that principle should not be there.

Mr. JONES. There is this difference: The hon. gentleman would have taken my complaint, but he would not attend to it.

Mr. BOWELL. I did attend to it.

Mr. JONES. He would attend to the complaints of his friends.

Mr. BOWELL. You said I did not. You had better stick to your text.

Mr. JONES. The hon. gentleman had this question brought before him for years, and he was aware, or ought to have been aware—and if not aware, he is not fit to be the head of his Department—of it, because it was brought to him by people actively connected with the trade; it was brought to him by the refinery in Halifax. I say that the failure of the refinery in Halifax was due to the fact that they were compelled, during three or four years, to pay 20 cents more per 100 lbs. for sugar than their rivals in the city of Montreal were. This matter was brought to the attention of the Minister by the directors of the refinery and the friends of the Government. I do not wish to introduce my own affairs here, and I only brought this up as an illustration; but I say the Department has been administered in Montreal, for four or five years, in a loose and improper manner, without due regard to the public interest. I have given sufficient evidence upon the various branches of the subject to prove to the satisfaction of every hon. member here that these articles were continued, year after year, to be entered in the city of Montreal at much lower rates than they were in the Lower Provinces. I know of one case of a cargo of sugar sold by a merchant in Halifax, that was tested over No. 13, which made it pay a higher rate of duty. It was bought by a Montreal merchant as being over 13, with a high rate of duty, and taken in Montreal where it was said, in excuse, that it was accidentally resampled in Montreal. And what did they do. Why they made almost every hogshead of that sugar under No. 13, and the Montreal purchaser had the benefit of 50 cents per 100 pounds more than he expected when he bought the sugar. That is an instance in case, where a cargo of sugar was sampled in Halifax, handled by the Customs authorities there, then sent to Montreal, where its classification was reversed, and the merchant in Montreal had the benefit of 50 cents which the Government was cheated out of, because the sugar had been properly and honestly tested, examined, and classified in Halifax. Now, our merchants in Halifax do not complain of being called upon to comply strictly with the law; but what we do complain of is that the law is not carried out in the same strict manner in Montreal as it is in Halifax, and that has been going on for years. The hon. gentleman who preceded me bears out my statement, and adds that it is going on to-day. This I cannot positively, of my own knowledge, assert, but I have very good reasons for assuming that what has been going on for so long, despite the representations made to the Department, may possibly be continued, to the great detriment of honest traders over other parts of the Dominion, and to the discredit of the administration of the Department. Because, when the hon. gentleman had these representations made to him on reliable authority, he should have examined them at once. More than that, I know that the hon. gentleman is aware that all the representations made to him, in regard to the Montreal refineries, and the lower duties which they were paying when we were paying higher duties, are correct. I have reason to know, from a very good source, that he is aware that the representations made from the refiners and by Mr. Bremner at that time were literally correct. It is desirable, therefore, that this matter should be thoroughly cleared up. Of course, if I had been a friend of the Government, I might possibly have had returned to me the $7,000 which was improperly taken from my firm, when they made me pay higher duties than were being paid in other parts of the Dominion. I always thought I was entitled to it, and I still think that, when sugars are admitted at one point at a certain valuation, that should apply all over the Dominion. Now, this matter has reached a point at which it is necessary for us to look at another aspect of the case. We know very well, or we have reason to believe, that, if this large cotton factory in Montreal had been in the position which some of the merchants in the Maritime Provinces have been in, they might have been treated in the same way as they have been treated. We have seen itinerating revenue officers visiting the small towns in Nova Scotia. We have seen, and it is on the records of Parliament, that they have been trying to suborn evidence, to obtain evidence, to corrupt men in the employment of merchants in Boston and obtain evidence against their employers and against merchants in Nova Scotia. They would go from one place to another. They would go into a shop and say "show me your accounts," or, "show me this or that, and I fine you $500 or $1,000." I am not aware of my own knowledge whether that money is paid to these men at that moment, or is paid to the Department subsequently, but I believe they get half the fines so imposed, or a large portion of them. I contend that these revenue officers who visit the various parts of the Dominion in order to see that the revenue laws are properly carried out, should make a report to the Department at once when they discover that they are being violated, should seize the goods, and let the Government take the responsibility of dealing with the matter. It is unfair to other merchants, it is an improper way of administering the Department, to allow one of the subordinates to go into a country shop and say: "You have been guilty of importing goods at so much below the value; pay me $300 or $400, and I will say no more about it." That is not the proper way of doing business. I desire to see the Customs laws as long as they exist, obnoxious as they have been made by this Administration, carried out in one part of the Dominion as well as in the other, but I deprecate the system which allows the Minister of Customs to send his people into a shop and impose a fine and then do nothing more. If these people have violated the Act, let them be punished, let them be dealt with by the Department, which ought to take the responsibility of dealing with them; but do not permit the officers of the Department in these smaller localities to select one or two men who are generally opposed to the Administration. I do not make that as a charge against the Administration, but I am informed that those who are opposed to the Government receive more frequent visits than those who are favorable to them, and this leads to the suspicion in reference to the Government that they are doing this for partisan motives. If they send into every shop in the country and see that the importers comply with the Act, I am quite willing that they should do so, and that those who violate the Act should be fined; but they should not be dealt with in that way by a subordinate of the Department, but should be reported to the Department, and the Department should take the responsibility of carrying out the law. I have taken this opportunity of bringing this matter to the attention of the House and to the attention of the Minister of Customs in the hope that he may accept information and advice which, in the past, he has so steadily refused to accept, even when coming from sources from which he should have accepted it. I think he will find, in the future that it will redound to his credit, and to the credit and advantage of the country, if such information as is placed before him from reliable sources should be dealt with by the Department in a prompt, energetic and efficient manner.

Mr. Jones,

Mr. BOWELL. I do not propose to follow the hon. gentleman through his remarks, but I wish to state in the most distinct manner that the statement he has made in regard to his own case, and especially when he said I was well aware of these inequalities in the administration of the law as to merchants in Halifax and Montreal being charged different rates of duty, has not a scintilla of truth in it, either directly or indirectly. I know of no such cases as those to which he has referred into which I have not made immediate investigation when my attention has been called to them. That I have not been able to come to the same conclusion as the hon. gentleman in regard to his own case, as to the remission of the duties which he considered he ought not to have paid, I do not deny; and, further, I do not deny that inequalities have existed in regard to goods being entered at a lower value in one port than in another. We constantly have such cases brought before us, and we are constantly engaged in investigating them; and we are condemned frequently in the most energetic manner because we endeavor to enforce the law in regard to the question of values. But, as long as we have from 100 to 200 ports, and about 1,000 Customs officers whose duty it is to decide values upon these articles, so long will these inequalities exist. The hon. gentleman was in an Administration in which he knows the same difficulties existed as exist now. He knows that my predecessor did all he could to effect a uniformity in prices. He knows also that it was utterly impossible to achieve that, and that it will be impossible just so long as we have people who try to defraud the revenue, and so many officers who have different opinions as to the value of articles. This is incident to Customs laws, as my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) stated upon one occasion that the fact of having a high protective duty is an incentive to that kind of fraud. We all know that, and experience has proved it. Looking over the Customs laws which have existed for two hundred years, which I have been doing, because I expected that this question would be discussed, I find that the same provisions for the prevention of similar frauds existed under George III and William IV, and which we are trying to prevent now. It is the same in regard to every crime. Laws have been enacted to prevent crime of all kinds, but I suppose that murder will continue as long as the world lasts, and stealing will continue; and, as long as there is a duty imposed upon goods, so long will there be men who will try to defraud the revenue. As to the sweeping charges which the hon. gentleman has made, that I have overlooked complaints made by one party and not by another, he contradicted himself. He said that I disregarded the report made to me by the most ardent supporter and the hardest worker in Nova Scotia, Mr. Bremner, in reference to sugar matters. I find in some cases that, just like my hon. friend, they never looked beyond the interests of Halifax; as an example, if I had not put my foot down, and refused positively to accede to the demands made by merchants of Halifax in reference to testing the strength of sugar, we would have had complaints of the same discrepancies existing to day that we have had in the past. When the Board of Trade and the Chamber of Commerce—I do not know whether my hon. friend had anything to do with it or not—were protesting against the scheme I had inaugurated with a view of endeavoring, as far as possible, to have uniformity in the testing of sugars, when they urged over and over again in that I was doing an improper act in interfering with the entries of goods in Halifax, I told them distinctly that since I had been in the Department, complaints had been made so often from Halifax as to the amendment of the law, particularly in regard to sugar in Montreal, that I had determined, no matter what the consequences might be, to test for at least one year the scheme that I had adopted of having every consignment of sugar in this Dominion tested in the city of Ottawa, under our own eyes, where the testers could not be reached by any one, and could not possibly know whether the sugar they were testing belonged to the firm of Jones & Co., of Halifax, or to the Messrs. Redpath, of Montreal. I am glad to know that those who protested in the strongest way against the policy I was carrying out, acknowledged to-day that they are satisfied with it, so far as I can hear from our sugar inspector, and that though hundreds and hundreds of tests have taken place, there have been but one or two cases—and I have the number in my desk—that have been returned for a re-test, showing, at least in that regard, that the principle laid down and the policy adopted by the Government in the Customs Department had proved successful. I am satisfied that if every thing could be brought under the direct administration of the Department, it is very likely the same good results would follow. I can only say to my hon. friend that I am not infallible, and if I have erred in judgment it has been from the reports which have been placed before me, and which I had every reason to believe were correct. I took the trouble, in the case referred to, to send our special officers, who could have no possible interest in any decision, to investigate these points to which the hon. member for Halifax has called attention, and their reports are on record. But oh, he says, you should have investigated them yourself. But could any Minister do more than I did in order to endeavor, at least, to come to a correct conclusion upon the facts which were placed before me? Did he, when he occupied a seat on this side of the House, and complaint was made to him in reference to the administration of the Department over which he presided so efficiently during the short time that he administered the Militia Department—when he received a complaint from Halifax or London, or any other part of the country, did he go and investigate it personally, or did he refer it to his responsible officers from whom he had a right to expect correct reports? But, he says it is an evidence of want of knowledge on the part of the heads of the Department, and an evidence of the incapacity of the Minister, that he has not gone to every part of this country to investigate personally the complaints made by the hundreds and thousands every year, I might almost say every month. Why, there is scarcely a seizure made from an anchor to a needle that is not brought before our Department. Does he expect, does the House expect, that the Minister presiding over a Department could visit every port and investigate every two-penny half penny charge that is made, or to go and investigate these questions in any other manner than has been done by myself and my predecessors, that is, to get reports from reliable officers and to act upon them? That I have done, and as long as I have the confidence of my colleagues and the House, I shall endeavor to carry out and administer in the same manner the affairs of the Department over which I have presided for eight or nine years. I am sure those who know what the Customs Department is, know well the difficulties that present themselves in administering a law so complex in its character, with a tariff such as ours, and I am gratified to know that (if the House will excuse me for saying it), so few complaints have been made; and I have had more complaints from my political friends than I have had from my political opponents in the administration of my Department.

Mr. JONES. The Minister says he has been studying up the Customs laws for the last 200 years; I would like him to pay a little more attention to the Customs laws of the last four or five years.

Mr. BOWELL. So I have, and have had great trouble with the provisions of the law passed when you were in power.

Mr. JONES. These old Customs laws may be interesting as relics of ancient history and antiquity, but what we have to do is with the Customs laws of the present time. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman says that he changed the laws with regard to the polariscope tests on sugar.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We are not in committee. I must ask the hon. gentleman to allow us to remain twenty minutes in committee, to do necessary business, and the hon. gentleman can continue the discussion in committee.

Mr. JONES. I shall have something to say when we go into committee.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs to take a note and inform us, when his own departmental vote is under consideration, what amounts of money have been paid to these special officers in the way of profits on seizures during the last two or three years.

Mr. BOWELL. I have got them already.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee on Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have asked the House to go back into Committee of Ways and Means for the purpose of dealing with a few remaining items, and also making some slight alterations in the resolutions that have already been before the Committee. The first is:

Resolved. That it is expedient further to amend Schedules A and C of Chapter 33, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, intitled: 'An Act respecting the Duties of Customs,' by repealing the following items in Schedule A, viz.: Numbers 43, 48, 82, 105, 116, 121, 124, 132, 204, 231, 235, 236, 250, 290, 291, 292, 293, 310, 319, 380, 381 and 474; and the following items in Schedule C, viz.: Numbers 551, 667, 693 and 805; and also to amend Schedule E of said Act by repealing item No. 817 in said Schedule; and making other provisions in lieu thereof as follows:—

That will all be explained by the subsequent resolutions. Schedule A, brass in bars and bolts, drawn, plain and fancy tubing, 10 per cent. ad valorem. The change made is to strike out the word "seamless" before the word "drawn" making no change in "seamless drawn tubing," but reducing other drawn tubing (not seamless) from 30 to 10 per cent. It is to change the items in the old tariff which were not interfered with before, and is made for the purpose of reducing the duty on an article that is not made in the country, and to avoid the difficulty in classification as to seamless tubing. Cocoa matting 30 per cent. ad valorem. This is an increase of 25 per cent. with a view to encourage an industry which has been established in Canada. The imports last year were $4,055; duty collected $1,013.75.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The additional duty will be about $200.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will not be very large. I do not imagine we will receive any more revenue, if as much as before.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is a kind of article which is cheap and wholesome to use. It does not appear expedient to tax it more heavily.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think it will increase the price, but it will protect the home industry.

Combs for dress and toilet of all kinds, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Item 116 of old tariff, 25 per cent. Increase of 5 per cent. Imports, $74,719; duty, $18,684.85. I do not consider this change will increase the cost.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman does not expect to live in the country, and, therefore, he does not consider how those duties will bear on the country at large.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I see the point raised by the hon. gentleman.

Bed comforters, or cotton bed quilts, not including woven quilts or counterpanes, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Item 121 of old tariff, 27½ per cent. Increase, 7½ per cent. The change is necessary, as printed cottons (raw material) have been increased from 27½ per cent. to 32½ per cent. Imports, $4,961; value, $6,897; duty, $1,895.78. The duty is equalised between the raw material and the finished product.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is equalised with a vengeance; 5 per cent. is added to the raw material and 7½ to the finished article. What proportion does the raw material bear to the finished article? For it seems to me that this is increased doubly or trebly if the raw material bears the usual proportion to the finished article.

Nail plate of iron or steel sixteen gauge and thicker, $13 per ton.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is item 250 of old tariff —25 per cent. The change is to make the duty uniform at $13 a ton, instead $14 a ton for nail plate of iron (item 40 of Bill) and $12 a ton for nail plate of steel (item 43 of Bill).

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the increase?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not an increase; one variety is reduced from $14 to $13 and another is increased from $12 to $13. It is to produce uniformity.

Marble in blocks from the quarry in the rough or sawn on two sides only, and not specially shapen, containing 15 cubic feet or over, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Item 693 of old tariff, free. Increase, 10 per cent.; imports, $1,202.

And such blocks containing less than 15 cubic feet, 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Item 290 of old tariff, 10 per cent. Increase 5 per cent. Imports, $4,687; duty, $468.70.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is consistent from the cradle to the tomb, because most of those articles are for tombstone purposes.

Marble slabs sawn on not more than two sides, 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Item 291 of old tariff, 10 per cent. Increase of five per cent., for reasons before stated. Imports, $41,970; duty, $4,197.

Marble blocks and slabs sawn on more than two sides 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Item 292 of old tariff, 20 per cent.; increase 5 per cent., for reasons before stated. Imports, $46,739; duty, $9,351.92.

Finished marble and all manufactures of marble not elsewhere specified, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Item 293 of old tariff, 30 per cent. Increase of 5 per cent., for reasons before stated. Imports, $23,154; duty, $6,952.55.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Linseed, or flaxseed oil, raw or boiled, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Item 310 of old tariff, 25 per cent. Increase of 5 per cent., to promote cultivation of flax. Imports, $371,045; 926,927 gallons; duty, $92,761.32.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That will be $50,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There will not be a very large increase, but it will promote the manufacture in the country. There is no difficulty in raising any quantity of flax in Canada, and oil might as well be manufactured in this country as imported.

Opium (drug) $1 per lb.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Item 319 of old tariff, 20 per cent.; new duty equal to about 30 per cent. Imports 75,853 lbs.; value, $248,728; duty, $49,745.60.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman knows, and no one knows better, that this is a tax on an article which, although abused, is also a valuable article in the materia medica, and it appears to me it is a very objectionable tax, in so far as regards the use of the article by physicians. I have not the least objection at taxation being placed at the highest possible point, in so far as it is used in other ways.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The present rate is about 80 cents per pound, and it is proposed to raise it to $1. If the hon. gentleman will make a calculation he will find that it will be a very small tax on a sufficient quantity of opium to put a person to sleep.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). What is the object of the proposed change? We certainly have no means of manufacturing opium in this country.

Mr. HICKEY. We have so many substances in addition to opium now for like purposes that I consider this tax is very well placed.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I am glad to hear from the assistant Minister of Finance. I would like, however, to know from the Minister of Finance himself the object of this increase, and as to his motive in increasing the duty on that article.

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to occupy the position of assistant Minister of Finance in this respect, I would say that I do not think the hon. gentleman was fair or courteous in the remarks he made in regard to the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey). I am not aware that any member on this side of the House has not just as good a right to give his opinion on any particular question that may be before the House, whether it be in defence of the Government or otherwise, as hon. gentlemen on the other side have to make adverse criticisms upon the actions of the Government. I may state that the reason for the change is simply this: that in British Columbia in particular, where a large proportion of the opium is imported by the Chinese, there has been so much under valuation that it does not amount to very much more than eighty cents per pound; and from reports we have received from that section of the Dominion, we deem it better, in order to arrive at something like the correct duty, to make it $1. There is $5 a pound on the manufactured article, to which the hon. gentleman referred.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I certainly do not think that the rebuke I have received from the Minister of Customs was called for. I think I was in my place when I asked the Minister the question I did ask him. I supposed that the question would be answered by the responsible Minister, and although I have no objection to a private member answering a question, yet when I ask a question of the Minister I certainly think it is his duty to answer it.

Mr. HICKEY. I was not assuming any prerogative of the Minister of Finance in saying the few words I did say. The Minister of Finance would be quite able to answer any question the hon. gentleman might put to him. I thought it was my privilege to say what I did say, and I do not think it was becoming on the part of the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson) to reply to me as he did.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. For my own part I may say that I will only be too grateful to hon. gentlemen on both sides for any assistance they may give me.

Plates, roofing slate, black or blue, 80 cents per square. Red, green, and other colors, $1 per square; in each case when split or dressed only.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is item 380 of old tariff. There is no change in the duty, but the words "in each case when split or dressed only," are added for better definition. The imports were black or blue, 49 squares; value $249; duty, $39.60. Red, green, &c., 277 squares; value, $1,553; duty, $277.46.

Slates of all kinds, and manufactures of, not elsewhere specified, 1 cent per square foot, and 35 per cent ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is item 381 of the old tariff, 25 per cent. There is an increase of 1 cent per square foot, making the new duty equal to say 30 or 35 per cent. Imports, $6,146; duty, $1,536.50.

Clothing, ready made, and wearing apparel, of every description including cloth caps and horse clothing, shaped, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca goat, or other like animals, made up by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, not otherwise provided for, 10 cents per pound and 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is item 474 of old tariff reenacted, omitting the words "socks and stockings," and also omitting the words "except knit goods," and putting in the words "not otherwise provided for." There is no change in the duty.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would suggest that the Minister of Customs should distribute to the members as soon as possible, and to the public at large, the complete scale of the tariff, as it will not appear in the Act, unless we alter our usual plan.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, it will appear in the Bill to-morrow in complete form, and that is one reason why I am so anxious to put the resolutions through.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This gives the mercantile classes and others very little opportunity for making remonstrance or suggestions.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think the changes are mostly the result of suggestions and remonstrances.

Socks and stockings of cotton, wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca goat other like animals, 10 cents per lb. and 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Cotton hosiery is 30 per cent. under item 132 of the old tariff; woollen hosiery is 10 cents per lb., and 35 per cent. under item 474 of the old tariff. The new duty is equal to about 35 per cent. average.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It will be a great deal more than 35 per cent. on some portions,

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, on the cheaper classes it will be more.

Chopping axes, $2 a dozen and 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The duty is equal to 35 per cent. on a value of $8 a dozen. This is the duty proposed by the resolutions as first brought down.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is rather hard on the lumbermen.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Oh, no.

Hay knives, and four, five and six pronged forks of all kinds, $2 per dozen and 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is the same duty as was proposed by original resolutions. Hay knives, value, $7 to $13 a dozen; average, $10 a dozen; duty, 40 per cent. Forks, value, $5 to $9 a dozen; average, $7 a dozen; duty, 50 per cent.

Garden rakes, 5 cents each and 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. These are made to pay the same duty as two and three pronged forks and hoes, under item 122 of the Bill. Steel garden rakes, valued at from $4 to $6 a dozen, average duty 37 per cent.

Shovels and spades, and shovels and spade blanks, $1 per dozen and 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Under item 125 of the Bill they are $1 a dozen and 20 per cent. The increase of 5 per cent. ad valorem makes the duty equal to 37 per cent., on a value of $10 a dozen.

Iron and steel wire, galvanised or not 15 gauge and coarser, not elsewhere specified, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is to take the place of item 38 of the Bill. The definition is the same as item 220 of the old tariff. The old duty was 25 per cent.—there is the same duty under the item 38 of Bill. This change makes an increase of 5 per cent.

Leather, sole, a specific duty of half a cent per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The duty on sole leather, by item 79 of the Bill, is 3 cents per pound. The duty on sole leather by the old tariff (item 275) was 15 per cent. The addition of $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound is equal to an addition of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. to $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.—making the new tariff duty equal to, say, $16\frac{1}{2}$ or $17\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

Clay tobacco pipes, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The old duty was 30 per cent. as earthenware. I presume that no hon. gentleman who indulges in the luxury of smoking will object to this slight increase.

Tinsmiths' tools and harness makers' and saddlers' hardware, including curry combs, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. These articles are made to pay the same duty as builders' hardware, &c., under item 69 of the Bill. The old duty was 30 per cent; increase 59 per cent.

Harness and saddlery of every description, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Item 204 of old tariff was 30 per cent., so there is an increase of 5 per cent., as saddlery hardware has been increased to that extent.

All chromos, chromotypes, oleographs and other cards, pictures or artistic works of similar kinds produced by any process other than hand painting or drawing, and being for business or advertising purposes, or not printed or stamped on paper, card-board or other material, 6 cents per pound and 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Under item 43 of old tariff, some of these articles paid 25 per cent.; others paid 20 per cent., as pictures. There has been much difficulty in distinguishing many of these articles from advertising matter of the same kind, and cards were frequently trimmed with silk which should pay 30 per cent. They are all now made to pay the same duty as "advertising pictures," &c.

Tubes not welded, nor more than $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches in diameter, of rolled steel, 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is the same duty as on boiler tubes. No increase.

Swedish rolled iron nail rods, under a half inch in diameter, for manufacture of horse-shoe nails, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The old duty was 17½ per cent. Horse shoe nails are 35 per cent. by the Bill, so that this is a reduction on them of 15 per cent.

Lap-welded iron tubing, threaded and coupled or not, one and one-quarter inches in diameter and over, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that my hon. friend from East Lambton brought my attention very forcibly to the fact that the duty on this tubing provided for in the Bill, would greatly increase the charge on the tubes used for artesian wells in Petrolia; and after looking carefully into the matter, I make this alteration for the purpose of meeting that case. The duty under item 230 of the old tariff was 15 per cent. for "not threaded." "Threaded" paid 20 per cent. as unenumerated. I, therefore, bring it back to the same position that it was in the old tariff.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That cannot be made in the country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No. I found that that was the case and that, therefore, the duty was going to largely increase the cost of these artesian wells.

SCHEDULE C.

The undermentioned items shall be free of duty:
Books, educational, imported exclusively by and for the use of schools for the deaf and dumb and blind.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is the same as before, with the exception that we add the words "and blind," placing them on the same footing as the deaf and dumb.

Wire of iron or steel, galvanised or tinned, number sixteen gauge or smaller.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This item is simply reenacted, changing the "fifteen" to "sixteen," so as to avoid confusion.

Rolled rods of steel under half an inch in diameter or under half an inch square, when imported by knob or lock manufacturers, or cutlery, for use exclusively in such manufactures in their own factories.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is the same concession as to other manufacturers, as the material is not made in Canada.

SCHEDULE E.

Spruce and elm logs, $1 per M. feet, board measure.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is item 817 of the old tariff. Elm logs are made to pay on export duty of $1 per M. as well as spruce logs.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether that duty applies immediately to logs cut under contracts made this year, because I know of cases in which many millions are involved?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That point is worthy of consideration, and when the Bill comes up I will thank my hon. friend to remind me of it. It is also proposed, when in committee on the Bill, to make the following amendments to resolutions already passed, viz:—

Strike out the word "composition" and insert the word "or" between the words "ivory" and "horn."

This places the "composition buttons" under item 9 at 25 per cent.

Strike out the word "four" in the first line and insert the word "eight;" also strike out the word "ten" in the fourth line and insert the word "five."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The effect is to place flasks and phials of less capacity than 8 ounces, at 30 per cent. under item 27. It is also a reduction in duty from 10 cents a dozen to 5 cents.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Glass—Strike out the word "four" and insert the word "eight."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is necessary in consequence of the change made in item 25 of the Bill.

Strike out the words "fourteen dollars" and insert in lieu thereof "thirteen dollars."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is a reduction in duty on boiler or other plate iron.

Strike out the words "boiler or bridge" before "plate."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is to make the item clear.

Substitute the following for item 45 of the Bill:—

(a.) Rolled iron or steel angles, channels, structural shapes, and special sections, weighing less than 25 pounds per lineal yard, not elsewhere specified, half a cent. per pound and ten 10 cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This makes the duty, instead of $16 a ton, to range from $13 to $16 a ton.

(b.) Rolled iron or steel beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, structural shapes and special sections, weighing not less than 25 pounds per lineal yard, 12½ per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This makes the average duty from $3 to $5 a ton, instead of $16 a ton.

(c.) Rolled iron or steel beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, eyebar blanks made by the Kloman process, together with all other structural shapes of rolled iron or steel, including rolled iron or steel bridge plate not less than ¾ of an inch thick nor less than 15 inches wide, when imported by manufacturers of bridges for use exclusively in the manufacture of iron and steel bridges, 12½ per cent. ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No change in the duty. This is to make the definition clearer.

Strike out the words "or flues or stays."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. These words are not required and leaving them in would have a tendency to lead to confusion.

Strike out the words "or steel" and the words "one and one-half cent per pound" and insert after the word "pipes" the words "six-tenths of one cent per pound and 30 per cent. ad valorem."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is a reduction in duty. On inch pipe the duty at the new rate would be about 20 per cent. less than at 1½ cents per lb., as it was before.

Add after word "under" in line 2 the words "and so in proportion for all greater lengths."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is to make the meaning clearer.

Strike out item 96 and also item 345 in section 5 of Bill repealed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This leaves item 345 of the tariff in force, parts of pianos 25 per cent.

Strike out the words "hay knives."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The effect of this is to make hay knives $2 a dozen and 20 per cent. under item 17 of the new resolutions.

Add after item 134 the following:—

"As regards items 132, 133 and 134, the half-penny sterling shall be computed as the equivalent of a cent and larger sums in sterling money shall be computed at the same ratio."

Add at end of the item the words "including the following articles when imported by the said Government or through any of the Departments thereof for the use of the Canadian Militia:—arms, military clothing, musical instruments for bands, military stores and munitions of war."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That puts the Militia Department on the same footing as before, giving the same advantages as the army and navy enjoy. It was left out by a clerical error.

This item to be changed to read as follows:—"Brick, fire, for use exclusively in processes of manufactures."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER That is to meet the objection raised by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson), who was anxious that certain manufacturers who were not in the item before, should have the advantage of the reduction.

Section 4 relating to packages is to be struck out.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The whole package clause is to be struck out, and the law on that subject stands as it did before.

Sec. 5. Words "Section eight of the said Act and" to be struck out and the items in Schedules A and C repealed by the resolutions are to be inserted.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Item 32 of the Resolutions (relating to spruce and elm logs—item 817 of old tariff) is to be added to section 3 of the Bill, which must be amended as rendered necessary by the addition of this item.

Sec. 6. To be passed as it stands.

Sec. 7. Present section to be struck out and the following substituted: "Provided, however, that all goods actually purchased on or before the said thirteenth day of May, at any place out of Canada, for importation into Canada, on evidence to the satisfaction of the Minister of Customs of the purchase having been so made, and all goods in warehouse in Canada on such day may be entered for duty at the rate of duty in force immediately before said day; but the provisions of this section shall cease to have force and effect on the first day of July in the present year, excepting that goods from the United Kingdom or any British possession carried by way of Cape Horn may be entered in British Columbia under the provisions aforesaid until the first day of October in the present year."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to substitute November.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Minister will expect some discussion on that in the Bill.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There will be the fullest opportunity given for discussion on the Bill.

Resolution read the first time and second time.

The Committee rose and reported.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUPPLY—WINTER PORT OF C. P. R.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Before we go into Supply, there is a matter to which I would like to call the attention of the House for a few minutes. I had a notice of motion on the paper calling for documents with regard to the question of making the city of St. John, N.B., the terminal winter port of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but which I was unable to press. I feel this is a matter of too great importance to my constituency not to bring it before the House. In 1884 I had the honor of proposing a resolution declaring that, so long as the amount then advanced to the Canadian Pacific Railway should remain unpaid, it should not be applied to the obtaining of an ocean terminus in any other than Canadian territory. That resolution was voted down, and no such condition was imposed on the granting of a loan to that company. Again, in 1885, I had the honor, when the Government proposed advancing another loan to that company, to renew my motion, which was again voted down by the majority of the House. What we claimed was that what was done to carry out the policy of the Government in the west should be done in the east. We claim that by the bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway, the road was to be built throughout on Canadian soil, that we were to have a railway from ocean to ocean which should terminate, both east and west, at a Canadian port. So far as the burden imposed upon us by the immense amounts expended in the west was concerned, we looked forward to having a return in the east as soon as the road was completed and connections made. Of course, the Intercolonial Railway had been built years ago, but, so far as the section of New Brunswick, which I have the honor to represent is concerned, that railway is practically useless. There was a treaty made many years ago between the British Government and the United States in which we were unjustly dealt with, in which New Brunswick was robbed of a large portion of her territory, and the State of Maine interposed, as a wedge, between our Province and the other Provinces. Therefore, when the Intercolonial Railway was built, it had to be built in such a manner that it was of very little benefit to the portion of New Brunswick in which I am particularly concerned. I am not going into the question whether it was properly built or not, but, having been built as it was, we claimed that we should have some shorter means of communication with the Canadian Provinces. In justice to the Government, I must say that a few years ago, when the Railway Department was under the control of the hon. the Minister of Finance, provision was made for a short line, which line is now being proceeded with, and will bring, when completed, our city and the western portion of New Brunswick in connection with the great system of western railways. But this is not all we asked for. We felt that, in addition to that, we had the right to have some attention paid to us, St. John being the nearest seaport in Canadian territory to the great railway centre and business mart of the Dominion, the city of Montreal. Last fall, to our astonishment, we discovered that the Government were advertising for tenders for an ocean mail service to commence on the 1st April, 1888, in which the port of St. John was entirely ignored. That advertisement called for tenders for an ocean mail service from Great Britain to Canada, carrying mails from Liverpool to Halifax and thence to Portland, or such other port as the Postmaster General might direct. Portland was then clearly named as the terminal point. The Minister of Marine, in a speech he delivered at St. John during the election campaign, stated that the option of the Postmaster General with regard to Portland, or to any other port he chose, was inserted in the advertisement with the understanding that it covered the port of St. John. While that may or may not be so, it seemed to the people of New Brunswick that that placed us in an unfair position, considering the position in which we stood towards the Dominion. We considered that, seeing that our Province had borne its share of the burden incurred in the development of the North-West and the construction of the Pacific Railway, our port should receive the first consideration, and that Portland or any other port in the United States should not have the benefit, but that the trade from the west should go to ports in the Dominion. In consequence of that advertisement meetings were held in the Province of New Brunswick—in the city of St. John, in the county of York, in the county of Westmoreland—and for the nonce all party feeling was laid aside and we united on a common platform, and sent a delegation to Ottawa to lay the claim of the port of St. John before the Government. That delegation was composed of myself and the gentlemen who were then associated with me in the representation of the city and county of St. John, both of whom at that time were supporters of the present Government. We came to Ottawa, and succeeded in our representation so far that this advertisement was withdrawn and another advertisement was issued in which St. John was made a terminal point. It was not only the city of St. John, but the different counties in the Province, such as York, King's and Westmoreland, in which meetings were held, and but one feeling prevailed, that the claims of the Province should not be ignored. As I have said, we united irrespective of party. My hon. friend opposite, the member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns), stood on the same platform with myself and others who differed with him politically. On that point we were a unit, and the result of our representations to the Government was the withdrawal of that advertisement and the insertion of a new one, making St. John one of the terminal points. So far we have nothing to complain of; our wishes were met in that respect, but I fear that beyond that nothing has been done. I do not want to detain the House longer than necessary, but I desire to call the attention of the Government to the great importance of this question to the Province of New Brunswick, and, in the present position of the city of St. John, it is a matter of vital importance. Perhaps no part of the Dominion has suffered more severely at the hand of Providence than the unfortunate constituency which I have the honor to represent. Ten years ago our whole city was laid in ashes, and I and others in common with me found our homes and our places of business destroyed, and a blow was given to us greater than almost any city in any part of the world has suffered from. Our people have struggled and are struggling to retrieve the great misfortune which befell them on that occasion, but misfortune seemed to follow us. We had financial misfortunes, and this year, when we have scarcely recovered from the result of the fire, we found a great portion of our Province devastated by the heavy floods and freshets. Therefore, in bringing this matter forward and alluding to these circumstances, I think I produce a great claim upon the Government and people of Canada in view of our misfortune, and am entitled specially to urge our claim to being the winter port and one of the terminal points of the ocean service between Canada and Great Britain. A great deal has been said heretofore about the difficulty of access to the port of St. John. I am not going to enter into that question further than to call attention to the statistics which are clearly set out in a pamphlet which has been issued by the Board of Trade of St. John. Those statistics, which have been sent, I believe, to every member of this House, show clearly that the ideas which had gone abroad as to the dangers of the navigation of the Bay of Fundy, exist entirely in imagination, that, in comparison with other portions of the ocean, our bay affords great safety; and when people talk about the danger of navigation between Halifax and St. John, it should be remarked that such danger, if there be any, is on a common course between Halifax and Portland, and Halifax and St. John. I recollect that twenty-seven years ago I saw the steamships of the Allan line lie in the harbor of St. John. At that time they came to Portland for the mails, but Portland had no cargo for them. There was nothing at Portland to fill those steamships except the mails, and so they came to St. John for their cargo and went back to Portland for their mails. As we are now in connection, and are soon to be brought into close connection, with Montreal by winter railways, we claim that we should be thought of, and, while we do not wish to rival Halifax or interfere with her claims, we, in common with Halifax should be one of the terminal points in regard to the ocean mail service between Great Britain and Canada. During the election campaign, the Minister of Marine undertook to say that the motion which I put forward was simply a motion to block the Canadian Pacific Railway. Such was not my intention. I believed then that it was my duty to bring that matter forward, and I believe I was joined in that by many of the people from the other Provinces, and that I echoed the feeling and sentiments of the people of our Province, that, while granting these large aids to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and while expending so much money to bring the west into connection with Montreal, the Maritime Provinces should also be considered, and, as British Columbia should be the outlet of the Dominion on the west, the Maritime Provinces should be the outlet on the east. On that occasion the Minister of Marine said that he believed it was the will and wish of the Canadian Pacific

Mr. WELDON (St. John).

Railway to make the ocean outlet of the railway at a port in the Maritime Provinces. I hope and trust he was fully authorised to make that statement, but I fear that efforts are being made to divert that trade and send it to outlets in the neighboring republic instead of to the Maritime Provinces. To enable that to be done, I think we have a right to call upon the Government to give assistance towards subsidising a line of steamships to carry the mails, and I believe they will be delivered more speedily at Halifax or St. John than at any other port of the Dominion. I hope they will give such a subsidy as will carry out what they have pledged to do, according to the statements of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, so that we may have a line of steamships between St. John and Halifax on this side, and Liverpool on the other. During the election campaign the Board of Trade in the city of St. John addressed a circular to the different candidates with regard to their views on this subject, and I can say that every candidate, without exception, pledged himself to this course. To a circular from the Board of Trade, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, on 14th February, replied as follows, after acknowledging the receipt of the circular:—

"In reply, I beg to state that, inasmuch as the Government has already decided to call for tenders for a line of ocean mail steamers to run, starting from Liverpool to Canada, touching at Halifax, and thence to St. John as a terminal port, and return, and, as advertisements therefor have been issued since 2nd November, I consider that the question of St. John being the terminal winter port for the Canadian mail steamers, is practically settled. I have no reason to believe that any change will be made from the decision already arrived at. As one who cheerfully contributed to the settlement already reached, I shall certainly oppose any attempt to change it, by whomsoever it may be made."

I looked, of course, with great expectations and hope from a statement made by a Minister of the Crown, and I trust that he, in common with the other representatives of the Province of New Brunswick, will endeavor to prevail upon his colleagues to carry to the full extent the admitted claim of the city of St. John. Again, in a meeting in the city of Portland, in my own constituency, on the 14th February, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries stated:

"Before the delegation from the city of St. John started for Ottawa, the Government had withdrawn the advertisement for tenders. I further tell you that there are gentlemen in St. John who received telegrams from myself, stating the advertisement had been withdrawn for amendment. Notwithstanding this, the delegation very properly proceeded to Ottawa, and laid their case before the Postmaster General. This they were perfectly justified in doing, as they were entrusted with an important mission by the people of St. John. They proceeded to Ottawa, laid their case before the Postmaster General in presence of Sir Hector Langevin and myself, and we then presented the claims of St. John before the whole Cabinet, when the Government, without a dissenting voice, declared that the demand from St. John being reasonable, should be acceded to. The optional clause naming Portland as a port of call was eliminated, and it was ordered that in the new advertisements for tenders the steamers to carry the mails between Great Britain and Canada should leave Liverpool, come to Halifax, and make St. John their terminal point. I am here as a member of the Government to tell you that this decision was arrived at without a single dissenting voice being raised against the demands of the city of St. John. I also am prepared to say to you that this solemn promise of the Government will be carried out."

I trust these were no mere election speeches for the purpose of influencing the electors of St. John, but that the promise of the Minister, both in reply to the circular of the Board of Trade, and in his address to the electors of St. John, will be honorably carried out by the Government. We claim now something tangible. We were led into Confederation by the belief that we were to be the Liverpool of the new Confederation, that the great centres of trade between Canada and England would be the cities of St. John and Halifax. How far time has worked out those promises, must be evident to every person. Instead of those promises being fulfilled, we are being drained of our resources which are going from the east to the west, and we feel that we are in such a position that we are justified in coming here and asking that those promises shall be faithfully and honorably carried out, and that the Government will establish an ocean mail service by means of such subsidies as will enable it to come to those ports, I say that unless something of this kind is done, unless we see that justice is meted out to us, unless these direct promises are fulfilled, I, for one, will not answer for the feeling which may be created in our Province. There is no disguising the fact that there is great dissatisfaction with the position in which we are placed in consequence of Confederation; and if we are still to be deluded by false hopes, by false promises, if we are still to be put off by being told that certain events are going to happen, when we find that the very reverse of those events does happen, if the pledges put forth on the authority of a Minister of the Crown are not to be carried out, and if the trade of the Canadian Pacific Railway is to be diverted from us, to foreign ports, if our ocean and lake steamers, subsidised by the Canadian Government, are to enter ports belonging to a foreign flag, I do not know what may be the result. We have heard no uncertain sound in Nova Scotia with regard to their position in the Union, and I say here that, unless something is done to remove the dissatisfaction and restore us to our former prosperity, which we enjoyed prior to Confederation, I believe that before long you will find the people of New Brunswick following the people of Nova Scotia in demanding separation from the Confederation.

Mr. ELLIS. It is not necessary to repeat anything that has just been said by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon). But I would like to call the attention of the House to another statement made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. In addition to his letter to the Board of Trade and his speech at Portland, at a meeting held in the Mechanics' Institute in St. John, the Minister, in presence of his friends and the public, made a statement to the same effect. He said:

"St. John is now fixed upon, as far as the Government can do it, as one of the winter ports of Canada on this side of the Atlantic."

We have as yet seen no evidence that any effort is being made, at any rate as concerns St. John, to carry out that pledge, or to make any preparation for fulfilling that promise. But I wish especially to remind the Minister of Public Works of a visit that he made to the city of St. John some years ago. He was taken over the harbor with a large number of his friends, and was taken around the city, and was shown all the principal points in the harbor where it was believed improvements were desirable and would be made by the Government. At the end of that programme, another one was entered upon at one of the public places of the city, where the Minister met a great many friends. On that occasion he made a very excellent speech in, which he described the pangs of sorrow that he felt on leaving the city of St. John, and he spoke so pleasantly of his visit, and of the excellence of the harbor, praising even the reefs and shoals over which he had been carried in safety, and he was so delighted with his experience, that his speech almost ran to music in describing it. He promised to carry away such recollections of his visit as would sooner or later issue in something practical being done for the city. That was five or six years ago, and we have not yet seen any evidence of the intention to carry out his promise. I regretted very much when the Estimates came down to find that there was nothing in them for the harbor of St. John, although the Minister has had several occasions to carry out his promise. Now, if there was anything in these promises made by the Government, it is time that the Minister of Public Works bestirred himself and did something in the direction which he indicated in that splendid speech to which we all listened with so much gratification on the occasion I refer to. I would like to know from the Minister if he can hold out to us any hope that these promises will be at any time in the future fulfilled? I observe in a letter, which was really intended for the public, written by a gentleman who is not in this House but is in Parliament, that if certain things were done in this House, the construction of works in the harbor of St. John might possibly be taken up. I do not know how far he was authorised, or to what extent he had a right to speak; but I would like to know from the Minister of Public Works what assurance he can give this House that he will follow up the promise made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and start the necessary works in order to prepare the harbor of St. John for an Atlantic terminus.

Mr. BURNS. It is quite true that I stood on the same platform with the two hon. gentlemen who have just spoken. It is quite true that I entirely concurred in the sentiment at that time expressed, that nothing should be done to place St. John at a disadvantage with regard to the Atlantic mail service. It is also quite true that I agreed with those hon. gentlemen, and with other gentlemen belonging to the same political party as myself, in deprecating the idea that a port in any foreign country should be in a measure subsidised, or that a line of steamers having a port in a foreign country as its terminus should be subsidised by the Government of Canada. At that time arguments were offered to show the capability of the port of St. John, and that the trade of St. John quite warranted the Government in taking that harbor into consideration. It was instanced, as was said by the senior member for St. John, that many years ago when the Allan line had its terminus at Portland the vessels could not obtain cargoes there but came to St. John in order to fill up. Unlike those hon. gentlemen, I have faith that the promise made by the Government immediately after that meeting, or by a member of that Government, will be carried out. I have evidence of the intention to carry out that promise in the fact that the advertisements issued at the time were withdrawn, and others were substituted making St. John as well as Halifax a port of call for the line of mail steamers. Tenders called for by that advertisement are not due till about the fourth of next month, and I think it will be seen, at all events I hope so, that everything said at that time with respect to that matter, every promise made will be carried out. I have faith that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will in every way redeem those promises, and not only he but his colleagues, will assent to the proposal that St. John should receive attention, and should be a port of call for the line of mail steamers. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that the harbor of St. John is a magnificent harbor, that it is not inferior in many respects, and those most important respects, to any harbor in the Dominion. But I think something is needed in order to prepare the harbor for the trade of which it is surely to be the outlet. It has been suggested that the harbor should be placed in commission, and if I am not incorrectly informed, intimation has been given to parties interested that the Government will be prepared to promote that commission by, perhaps, doing what has been done elsewhere, advancing a sum of money in order to place that harbor in a proper condition as an outlet for the trade that will go there. We know that the Short Line Railway is now in course of construction, and that, in every reasonable probability, within a year or so, it will be completed; and it behooves the people of St. John to bestir themselves and take such action as will be necessary to put that port into a desirable state for the accommodation of the trade that is sure to fall into its lap. I repeat, that it is the duty of the people of St. John to bestir themselves. I believe the Government will bestir themselves, and do everything they promised to do for that port. I say again, I have more faith and confidence in the promises of the Government than those hon. gentlemen have; and I think they should be satisfied with the action taken, and reserve anything in the way of censure until such time as they find the Government fail to redeem the promises made by one of its members.

Mr. JONES. This question of mail communication is one of very great interest at the present time. I am glad to notice in the Budget Speech of the Finance Minister that he said :

"Tenders have been invited by the Postmaster General for rapid steam service across the Atlantic in order to utilise our great transcontinental highway, for we think the time has come when in the interests of the Dominion as fast and as good a service should exist between France and England and Canada as is to be found between either Germany, France, England or New York. If by any means we can succeed in establishing such a line of rapid steamers on the Atlantic we will not only make this a great transcontinental highway and rapidly develop our trade on the Pacific, but I believe we will be able to deliver the mails in Boston and New York, certainly in Chicago and all western cities, a very considerable time before they could be delivered through any other channel.

It will appear from that that the Government contemplate inviting tenders for a very fast mail service. I have no doubt that the Government, in taking this step, have considered the responsibility of their action and the subsidy that will be involved. Hon. gentlemen are aware that the question of a very fast line of steamers is merely a question of dollars and cents. Those large steamers travelling 18 or 20 miles an hour going to the United States can only be run at a certain season of the year to any advantage, and then only run at a very heavy cost. Therefore, I think the question will naturally come up, whether this Dominion is prepared to pay such a large subsidy for mail service as would enable the Government to obtain the same class of steamers as now run between New York and Liverpool. I do not want for one moment to undervalue the advantages of fast mail communication ; but I believe we may reach a point at which our service can be sufficiently satisfactory for the wants of our people under a more moderate expenditure of the public money. I think if the Government were to confine their aspirations to something like the Parisian or Vancouver, steamers of 15 knots, they will be able to secure the service of such steamers between the two countries at a very moderate outlay. But the moment they go beyond that speed, they must be prepared, as a matter of fact, for a very large increase in the amount to be given for mail service across the Atlantic. There is another point which, no doubt the Government have kept in view, and that is that the northern route, which those steamers coming into Canada have to take, is naturally a more intricate route, and one of a more boisterous character than the route which takes steamers to American ports, and a steamer, no matter how fast she may be, cannot at all times avail herself of her power when approaching our coast in a fog, or for a large portion of the year amongst the icebergs. There is another question in regard to which the hon. gentleman I think will hardly be borne out in his estimate, although I notice he did not lay down very positively that we could profitably deliver the mails in New York and Boston by our route as quickly as they could be carried by any other route—that is, I presume, by any other route. Now, the hon. gentleman will remember that the distance from New York to Halifax—assuming that the mails for New York were landed at Halifax in the winter time—would only take a steamer, of a character such as is contemplated, I presume, about thirty hours; and I presume that under hardly any circumstances could the mail trains possibly accomplish the distance between Halifax and New York in much less time. Therefore, taking into consideration the fact that steamers approaching our coasts at the usual season would have the necessary delays attending their being put out of their course, with all my desire to see Halifax a permanent depot for the landing of the mails both in the winter and summer time, if that were practicable, I think the hon. gentleman will see that these elements are likely to come in, and that they would naturally interfere with his calculations. However, I do not wish to say one word against the scheme if it can be accomplished. I thought it was only right to remind the hon. gentleman that if the Government entertained the view of having a very fast mail service, anything approaching 18 or 19 miles on the Atlantic, between Halifax and Liverpool, or the St. Lawrence or Liverpool, it can only be secured at a very large increase in our present subsidy; and whether it is worth our while to increase the subsidy to any large extent to obtain one or two days' increased speed, is just a question for the Government and Parliament to decide. For my part I am disposed to think that steamers of 15 knots an hour on our northern routes, steamers which are ordinarily comfortable, are quite as good as under existing conditions we can afford. I think that from the experience of these large ships that run between New York and Liverpool, where many of them are laid up in the winter time, ships which consume as much as 300 to 350 tons of coal per day, it is manifest that the Government cannot expect to enter into any contract, unless they were prepared to give a much larger subsidy than they have been paying the Allan line.

Mr. BURNS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment, as I do not wish to take up the time of the House in answering his observations, so extremely anxious are we to get on with the Estimates. I crossed in the North German Lloyds steamer Trair. We made 412 miles a day and the consumption of coal was 125 tons a day.

Mr. JONES. I am quite well aware that with the late improvements, with triple expansion engines, the consumption of coal has been materially decreased. But I was speaking of the New York steamers, with compound engines, upon which the consumption of coal is 300 tons and over. However, I merely mentioned that as an illustration of the difficulty of getting a very fast mail service. If the Government could get a very fast mail service without largely increasing the subsidy, it would be a very desirable object to attain, and we would all cheerfully acquiesce. But whether it is worth while to increase that subsidy to a large extent for the purpose of getting an increase of one or two days in the time, is a point upon which I think there will naturally be considerable difference of opinion.

Mr. SKINNER. Owing to a remark made by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns), I wish to say a few words upon this question of the harbor of St. John. It will be remembered by members of Parliament who held seats here some years ago that an Act was passed whereby the harbor of St. John could be put in commission, but the Act only provides for taking the public property of the harbor. Well, the harbor of St. John has private property fronting upon it as well as public property, and of course persons owning private property feel that if the Government of the country become interested in the public property, and at the same time have control of the harbor, they will, in a business sense, endeavor to influence business towards their own property, and the owners of private property will not stand equally with the Government with regard to obtaining business. If the intention of the Government had been manifested in the direction of taking the entire property of the harbor, the whole people of St. John would have gladly come to the front and assisted in having the harbor put in commission, and they would have worked in harmony with the Government on that point. But the Government has not seen its way clear to do that much, and that is an element of difficulty in getting the owners of the private properties on the harbor to meet the others and put the harbor in commission. I hope the time is not far distant when the Government of the Dominion will see their way clear to meet the people of St. John on this point, and obtain the whole property and control the entire operations of the harbor, and so bring about the result which is mutually desired. I wish to say also that it is a point continually made against us in the press, and wherever political speeches are delivered, and in Parliament as well, that nothing can be done with the harbor of St. John by the Government until it is put in commission. Well, the harbor of Halifax is not in commission, but there never has been the same difficulty in getting things done in the harbor of Halifax that there has been with reference to the harbor of St. John. The people naturally feel, therefore, that as the same friendliness is not manifested by the Parliament and Government of the Dominion towards the harbor of St. John when it is not in commission, as they have manifested towards the harbor of Halifax, they will not have that necessary care taken of them after it goes into commission, and, therefore, they have moved slowly upon that point—not because they lack enterprise or anything of that kind, but because they have looked at it as a purely business matter. For my own part, as far as my own influence goes, as one of the members representing St. John, if the Government would not go to the length of taking the entire property, I would be of opinion that it would be better to put the harbor in commission, even if they only take the public property. However, I cannot expect my views to be carried out as against the views of so many others, and I only state my views and say that I will be only too glad, so far as I can, to impress on Parliament, and on the Government as well, that it is the duty of the Government of the country, under the system in which the harbors are administered and the public finances of the country carried on, that they should come forward and take the entire property of this harbor and administer it as they do other harbors, that is, by commission. I may say that St. John does not come here craving favors, or anything of that kind. They come before the country as a matter of right; and I am not prepared to go even as far as my colleague has gone and say that if justice is not done we will seek to go out of the Union. I tell this Parliament the Province of New Brunswick is loyal to this Union; it always has been so, and it comes forward now simply asking for justice, and it will continue to ask for justice. The people of that Province do not come from the classes who are inclined to anything like rebellion. They are the descendants of the old loyalists who came not only to my part of the country but to many parts of western Canada as well. What we ask for is justice. We have stood by the Union. A large portion of our Province has not had the same faith in the National Policy, as it is called, that other portions of the Dominion have had; but it has stood to a large extent loyal to that policy. Our people have been taught to believe, from the press, the platform, and from Parliament as well, that the great National Policy included not only the trade policy, but the opening up of the North-West, and the building of the railroad to carry the entire trade as far as possible over Canadian soil from the Pacific to the Atlantic. Standing upon these propositions, the city of St. John, not only in its individual but in its corporate capacity, says to-night, through its representatives in Parliament, carry out that policy; do us justice; and whether you do it or not, we stand demanding justice, and we believe the time will come when we shall get it.

Mr. KENNY. I desire to say one word only. My hon. friend the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) finds fault, as usual, with the Government; but, in this instance, it is because the Government desire to establish an efficient, complete, first-class transatlantic steam service between Canada and Great Britain. He thinks we should be satisfied with an inferior service. I do not believe that is the opinion of the people of Canada; and my hon. friend would be one of the first men in this House to find fault with the Government if they advertised for anything but a first-class ocean service. As regards the feeling of the community which we both have the honor to represent, I say the people of Halifax expect the Government to provide a first-class service.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Public Buildings, N.B. $18,150

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The vote of $3,000 for the Bathurst post office, custom house, &c., is to complete the work.

Mr. WELDON. Is the vote of $9,000 for Dorchester penitentiary to complete the wing?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No. There is a balance on the contract of $4,500; then there is furniture, stone dressing, and so on. We have a balance of $8,800 in our hands, which, with this $9,000, will cover those expenses.

Mr. WELDON. Is the contract for the new wing completed?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. There is another vote of $10,000 in the Supplementary Estimates which will be for the wing.

Mr. WELDON. What was the amount of the contract for the wing?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount of Duffy's contract was $44,500.

Mr. WELDON. Has he not a large claim for extras?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There was a claim, but not a very large one. That has been settled.

Public buildings, Quebec..... $125,175

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does this $10,000 complete the Coaticook post office?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). What is the total estimated cost of that building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. About $16,000 or $17,000.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). What is this $4,000 for Grosse Isle Quarantine Station intended for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is made up of a number of small works, repairs, and so on. There are 28 different items.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Are they for the wharf or the buildings?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is a balance on the contract of $470; then there is painting, shingling, repairs to the brick oven in the bakery, repairs to the police quarters, and so on. If we touched the wharf, we should require to build a new wharf that the steamships might come inside of; but the Government did not think they could ask Parliament this year for a vote for that purpose.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I do not complain of that, but the amount of $4,000 for repairs only, seems to be a large sum. I do not see how it could be possible to spend that sum for repairs on all the buildings.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It includes everything outside of the buildings. There are various small sums which very soon make up the amount.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). The amount seems to me very large for these buildings, as they are all frame buildings.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is the reason the repairs cost so much. If they were in brick or stone it would not cost so much to repair them.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Is the Government going to ask for tenders for these repairs?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I hope the hon. gentleman will take his workmen in the county.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will take good men.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). What is the total cost of the buildings?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. About $29,000, including heating, fencing, &c.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost of the Montreal armouries?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $122,000. $19,500 are required to complete them. Item Montreal post office, $5,000, covers a number of items including the removal of a defective lead dome, lighting, clothes presses and other repairs.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do you give per annum for the electric lighting the Montreal post office, and where do you get it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We made an arrangement last year with the Gazette Printing Company, whose office is in the rear of the Post Office. They have the necessary apparatus and furnish the light. I gave the hon. gentleman last year the amount we paid, and it has not been increased. It is less than gas costs us. I have a report from my officer who says it serves the purpose very well indeed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there not an electric light company in Montreal.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There was an electric light company at the time; but the terms at which we obtained the light from the Gazette building are better than we could obtain it ourselves, because we would have had to get all the apparatus and we had not the space for it in the building.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did you invite tenders?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; we asked the company whether they would let us have our light and their machine, and the officer in my Department, who is an expert in matters of that kind, said the price was less than we could get the light by gas or from the electric light company.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I am very much surprised this contract was given to a newspaper office, because there is a very large company in Montreal, the Royal Electric Light Company, which not only supplies the city of Montreal with electric light, but manufactures plant and materials for other electric light companies in other cities. The Quebec and Lévis Electric Light Company, in Quebec, have been supplied by this Montreal Company. The very portion of Montreal where the post office is situated is lighted by it. I would like to know how the prices paid for lighting the post office compare with those paid by private citizens or corporations. There are two kinds of light, the incandescent light and the arc light. Which of them is used in the post office?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will give more details on concurrence. The light is the same as we have here, the Edison light, as the arc light is only suited for large halls or for outdoors.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have you the contract for a number of years?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. For five or six years, but we can stop it when we choose.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). If it is the Edison light that is used, I am the more surprised that a contract should have been made with a newspaper office, because I saw an advertisement a few weeks ago of the agent of Edison Light Company in Montreal, notifying the public that any one using the Edison or any other incandescent light would be prosecuted according to law for infringement of the company's patent. I, therefore, do not see how the Government can use the Edison light without having made an arrangement with the company.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That may be, and we will have to run the risk now.

Mr. LAURIER. Do I understand the Government has a contract with the Gazette office to supply them with light?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, from their printing company which is exactly in rear of the post office.

Mr. LAURIER. Do they supply light to the Government and light to the public at large?

Mr. MULOCK. Do I understand the Minister of Public Works to say a contract was entered into extending over a number of years.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, four or five years. I said so last year.

Mr. MULOCK. And the contract was entered into without any invitation for tenders.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. I think it was a transaction which ought not, for two very good reasons, to have been entered into. In the first place, it was obtaining a certain public service without adopting the wholesome rule of inviting competition, and it was specially incumbent upon the Government to invite competition in this particular case, considering the relations between the Government and the company which is supplying the light. The Minister may laugh. That is the way in which they dispose of all matters now. If they have no arguments, they laugh.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have a right to laugh, have I not?

Mr. MULOCK. They have a right to laugh, but the objection is that one of the members of the Government is interested in this company, unless he has ceased to be interested in it. We have had over and over again to protest against the Government giving patronage, directly or indirectly, to themselves. Do we not know what this Government did a short time ago in the case of the Gazette company, when they gave them patronage to the extent of thousands and thousands of dollars at fabulous and unfair prices—fourteen times the proper amount, as my hon. friend from Quebec (Mr. Langelier) says—and who knows but that they are doing something of the same kind in this case? As trustees of the public money, it is the duty of the Government to have no dealings with themselves, directly or indirectly, whereby there is any trading or bartering whatever. They are engaged as trustees to administer the trust reposed in them, and they have no right to have contracts with themselves. The Minister of Public Works, in fact all the members of the Government, seem to think it is a perfectly proper thing for the Government to occupy this two-fold position: of being guardians of the public Treasury and dipping into the public Treasury, or allowing their colleagues to have dealings with the public Treasury. This protest has been offered over and over again in this Parliament, and before this Parliament, and as long as these transactions last I hope these protests will be raised. In this case, I say it is an indecent thing, the features of the case show that it was highly improper for the Government to issue a contract conferring benefits on one member of the Government without inviting public competition. In this regard, I consider that they have been guilty of a breach of the public trust.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister said a moment ago that the electric light which is charged for here would cost somewhat less than gas. Did he include the cost of the fittings in that statement, the cost of fitting up the building for the electric light?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I understood from my engineer last year that it was so. As to what the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) says, I understood that when my colleague the Minister of the Interior became a Minister of the Crown he ceased to have any connection with the Gazette Printing Company, so that portion of the argument must fall down.

Mr. MULOCK. Not quite. It would if I could admit the facts, but I do not admit the facts.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The word "indecent," which was used by the hon. gentleman just now, was considered improper when it was used on this side of the House, but he thinks he can use it on his side without impropriety. As I told the member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier), I will give him the comparison between the cost of the two modes of lighting.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman lay a copy of this contract on the Table? As we do not know when concurrence will be taken, perhaps he will do it to-morrow.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. Last year the matter was laid before Parliament, and Parliament assented to it, and it is therefore not surprising that we have continued to act upon it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You will bring the contract and lay it on the Table.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, I will make a note of it.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister of Public Works says that when the Minister of the Interior, who, I am sorry to see, is not in his place, took the position of a Minister of the Crown, he ceased to be interested in the Montreal Gazette, and so could not be a party to that contract. When the Minister of the Interior was addressing the electors of my constituency, and I charged him, and those associated with him, with receiving $25,311 directly and indirectly, and amongst other things, through being connected with the Montreal Gazette, he, in the presence of the audience he was then addressing, admitted that he was still a member of the corporation of the Montreal Gazette, and said that he did not know that it was any sin for a Minister of the Crown to receive money from the Government of which he was a member, for work performed by a company in which he was a corporator. I have, therefore, the word of the Minister of the Interior that he is still interested in the Montreal Gazette. I think it is highly desirable that the Government should keep themselves clear of any charge of playing into the hands of their own friends, by asking tenders for anything like this matter which is before the House. If any confidence is reposed in any Minister of the Crown, I believe it is as largely shared by the Minister of Public Works as by any other member of the Government, at the same time, I believe it is desirable in his own case and in his own interest, as well as in that of the Government, to see that in all such cases tenders are asked for, and the lowest tender accepted when it is otherwise acceptable. It would relieve the Government of a share of odium which will certainly rest upon them if they let contracts of this sort one to the other. The Minister of Public Works said that the cost of the electric light would be as low as that of gas in the Montreal post office. In order to satisfy the committee on that point, we should have before us the cost of putting in the fittings for the electric light, so that we could judge whether the statement is fully borne out by the figures. I hope in the future that contracts of this kind will be let by tender, and that no Minister of the Crown will let a contract to another at the public expense.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). What is this amount of $4,500 for the Quebec custom house required for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is for the connection of the water service in the building with the city water works, also the plumbing in the building, which is rotten or destroyed and has to be replaced, and then there are general repairs, painting, cleaning and the superintendence, making $5,000. We ask for, $4,500.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I would like to know whether the Government are going to accept the proposal made by the corporation of Quebec in regard to the water-works. Negotiations have been going on for a long time with a view to supply the buildings from the aqueduct, and at last an offer was made at a very low figure to supply all the Government buildings, the Custom house, the post office and all the Dominion buildings in the city of Quebec. I do not know whether this last proposal of the corporation has been accepted by the Government. I think it is in the neighborhood of $1,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount was considered excessive at first, and that is the reason of the delay. We tried to make an arrangement with the city water works, and the water of the city is introduced into the examining warehouse for, I think, something like $300. But I think the city required more than that for the Custom house, and as we considered it excessive, we declined the proposition. We were disposed to pay a reasonable amount, but not an excessive one. However, I think the negotiations that have been going on will end in an arrangement being made between the city water works and the Public Works Department.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). The demand was at first much larger than that, and was based on the rates charged to the citizens of Quebec; then there was a large reduction. The Minister knows that the rates charged to private citizens is 1.½ cents on a dollar of rental. Taking the estimated rental of the Government buildings, the amount charged should have been much larger than that. But as it was supposed that the consumption of water would be less than in a private establishment, the last demand made by the corporation was reduced to $1,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Quebec drill hall, $1,750. That is to complete the building itself. We will do the additional works by degrees.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Dominion buildings, Quebec, $1,500. I see by the Public Accounts of last year that a large amount has been expended on so-called Government buildings. Is it proposed to expend any more money on those buildings?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There was a lease of a number of years, and we considered that this should be done because it was a condition of the lease. Quebec immigration building, $25,000. This is to complete. There was a building completed two or three years ago on the break-water, and this is a building on the Louise Basin. Rivière du Loup public buildings, $10,000. The total cost is about the same as that of the one I mentioned a little while ago, $16,000 or $17,000. They are all on the same plan. The public building at St. Jérôme, $10,000, is on the same plan as the other buildings and will cost the same amount,

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that St. Jérôme is not a county town. I have no desire to find fault with the erection of post offices where they are required, but I live in a town of 2,500 population, where we need a post office badly. There are three towns in my riding, with a population of over 2,000. We have been pressing for the erection of post offices, and the reply has been by the members of the Government that they would not erect post offices anywhere except in the county towns. I find they have departed from that course in the case of St. Jérôme, and if so, our people will be justified in pressing for post office accommodation. St. Jérôme has only a population of 2,000, and if it is to have a post office, I do not see why other towns of the same population, and even greater, should not have the same favor.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The information I have about it is this: St. Jérôme, inclusive of the parish, has a population of 8,000. It is the commercial centre of a large section of country, comprising the parishes of St. Jean Baptiste, Ste. Anne, Ste. Adèle, Ste. Marguerite, and a number of others, containing altogether a population of 20,000. It is the centre of a great colonisation movement, and a railway runs from the town into the interior.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I can corroborate the statement of the Minister that it is a very important centre. It has two railways, and is the headquarters of the colonisation movement going on in the Ottawa Valley. But that does not remedy the injustice of which my hon. friend has complained.

Mr. McMULLEN. In my county there are two towns with three railways running through them, and the town in which I live two railways are running through it, and if you include the township, you would have a population of 10,000. Strong representations have been made to the Department to get better post office accommodation in this place, for the Government have no post offices there except that which belongs to the party who happens to be the postmaster for the time being. If the Government is going to depart from the policy of confining the erection of post offices to county towns, I shall certainly urge upon my friends, or rather my opponents, to press upon the Government to carry out this rule as far as the three towns in my riding are concerned.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. (Translation.) I do not at all object to the vote of $10,000 granted for the public buildings at St. Jérôme. I know that it is a pretty large centre, and the moment the principle shall have been established that in the Province of Quebec public buildings are to be constructed in such a place as that, we may, perhaps, run a chance to have some in other towns. I will mention, as an instance, the town of Longueuil, which is the chief town of the county of Chambly, and which, certainly, has a population more numerous than that of St. Jérôme. I presume that if it is the intention to carry out this idea, a sum at least equal to this amount granted to St. Jérôme will be put in the Estimates next year to construct public buildings in the town of Longueuil in order that that town may be put on an equal footing with the town of St. Jérôme.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Is it a Conservative town?

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. (Translation.) The population is pretty well divided, but there is a majority against the Government. Still the Government is obliged to treat everybody in the same manner. During twenty years the town of Longueuil and the county of Chambly have given the Government their honest and hearty support, and as long as this thriving town has not been rewarded during these twenty years, it seems to me that the time has come to give it its reward. I must now add a few words with regard to the way in which the town of Longueuil is treated with reference to postal service. We are not only without a public building or post office, but we have not even a proper building to receive people who go after their mail. Suffice it to say that the place wherein the post office is kept is a small room about 15 feet square, and during winter or in bad weather during the other seasons, people who, after service on Sunday, flock in large numbers to the post office are obliged to stay out-doors waiting for their turn, the building being too small to hold them all. Besides—perhaps this is not the proper time to mention this fact which does not concern the Department of the Minister of Public Works, but rather comes under that of the Postmaster General—I will say that, with regard to the management, the post office at Longueuil is in a deplorable state. The postmaster does not know how to read fluently; it is his brother who does the work, and wonderful though it may be it is nevertheless a real fact that they have not a good pair of eyes between the two. The most extraordinary things have occurred at this post office. Letters, for instance, which were addressed to the "Longueuil Water Works" were delivered to John Lewis and vice versa. Representations were made to the Government, but for one reason or another, perhaps, because this postmaster was a good friend of the Government he was continued in office. I really believe it is scandalous to see such a thing, and that had the Government been correctly informed of this state of things a remedy would have been applied. I now point out that fact because that opportunity is offered, and I hope that, in a near future, if not for the sake of the member for that county, at least for the sake of the intelligent population of the county, and for the protection of the interests of that part of the county, the Government will manage to give us public buildings. If they cannot manage to give us these buildings immediately, that is to say next year, at least let them give a sufficient salary to a competent postmaster, so that this postmaster may procure a proper place to keep the post office; and, if it is intended to keep the same postmaster, it would be a good plan to give him a professor to teach him how to read.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN,

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) I have taken notes of the remarks of the hon. member, and I will communicate them to my colleagues. I suppose the hon. gentleman is not very anxious that we should give this man a professor.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE. I would prefer a new postmaster.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). The item for the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary for tools, appears to be very large.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is the ordinary vote.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Then it is worse than if it had been an extraordinary vote. What are the convicts constructing with those tools?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This amount is to finish certain buildings, to provide tools, to furnish harness, fuel, light, and the ordinary items.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). The stone used is within three hundred yards of the penitentiary, and is on Government property. We have, therefore, nothing to pay for the quarrying. The item for tools seems large enough to serve all the penitentiaries.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is to finish one of the buildings, alterations and repairs, tools, fuel, light, harness, machinery, water supply, apparatus, three new steam boilers to heat the whole building by steam.

Mr. LAURIER. Who is the deputy warden now?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot inform you, as that is not within my Department.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) Before we pass on to the item concerning the Province of Ontario, I desire to call the attention of the Government to a fact which is of most vital importance to my county, and especially the parish of Crane Island and the town of Montmagny. Perhaps I ought to have made these remarks with regard to the item concerning Grosse Isle, but the thing passed unperceived by me. The Government passed a contract with Captain Baker for carrying the Quebec mail and passengers to Grosse Isle, I would desire that the Government could induce the contractor to go as far as Crane Island which is only three miles distant from Grosse Isle and to return to Quebec, stopping at the wharf at St. Thomas on his return trip. We have a splendid basin, and, besides, the Government have built at great cost two wharves, that is to say, one at Crane Island and the other at St. Thomas. These two wharves are of no use for the present, but I believe they would be very useful if the Government could induce the contractors to go to these places once or twice a week to take the passengers who wish to go to the city and to carry the farm produce to Quebec. I am well aware that the contractor does not receive a sufficient price, at least from the information I have received, to incur this additional expense, but it seems to me that the Government ought not to begrudge a few hundred dollars more to induce the contractor to go to these two places in order to make his services more useful to the county. At the present time he goes twice a week to Grosse Isle and returns to Quebec immediately. The people from Crane Island who wish to go to Quebec must go to Berthier and take the regular boat to Quebec, which makes a distance of three leagues to travel besides crossing the river. It seems to me that if the Government gave a few hundred dollars more to Captain Baker he would be very glad to go to Crane Island and to St. Thomas, which would be of great advantage to these places, and the wharves which have been constructed there would be of some use. I do not see why the Government who have spent over $30,000 would refuse to give a few hundred dollars in order that we may utilise these wharves to a certain extent; and I do not see any means of utilising them except by inducing the owner of the boat which is plying between Quebec and Grosse Isle to go to these stations to take the passengers and produce and to transport them to Quebec. I think that this would be to the advantage of the county of Montmagny and even of the neighboring county, the county of L'Islet. People would come to Montmagny, where twice a week they could take that boat and go to Quebec. At the present time the boat has no other interest than to go to Grosse Isle and very often she makes her trip for nothing. I believe that in the interest of Quebec it would be far better if the Government spent a few hundred dollars more to secure the service which I have mentioned and in this manner the wharves which we have would be of some use to the county. The parish of Crane Island is Conservative and the town of Montmagny has also been Conservative. It is true it has changed colors this year but it might change again. However, apart from political consideration, in the interest of the county of Montmagny and of the neighboring county, I believe that the Government ought to take upon themselves to make these changes, or to communicate with Captain Baker on this subject, and I know that by giving him a few hundred dollars more the line would be established and we would profit by it. Now I call the attention of the Government to what I have said with regard to the post office in the town of Montmagny. All that has been said by the hon. member for Chambly (Mr. Préfontaine) with regard to the post office at Longueuil may apply to the town of Montmagny. The hon. Minister told me the other day that he would pay us a visit in the course of the summer. I believe that when he will have seen for himself the kind of post office we have—we are a little better off than at Longueuil, our postmaster knows how to read and write and he has the use of his two eyes—but when he will have seen the building in which the post office is kept, I am sure that he will not hesitate a moment in granting us a sufficient amount for the construction of a new post office. As regards the boat between Quebec and Grosse Isle, I believe the Government, in the interest of the navigation of the county of Montmagny, ought not to hesitate one moment in giving us a few hundred dollars to establish these communications.

Public Buildings, Ontario. $183,000

Mr. COOK. I observe an amount of $4,500 for the Barrie post office. There appears no sum in the Estimates for a post office at Orillia. Is it the intention of the Government to erect a post office there this year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not in a position to answer that question now. I could not say what the Government might be disposed to do in that direction, and, therefore, the hon. gentleman will excuse me if I do not answer him now.

Mr. COOK. But the Supplementary Estimates are all down, and there is no amount in them for this purpose. Therefore, the work cannot be gone on with this year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. COOK. I understand that the First Minister, and a gentleman who accompanied him during the election campaign, held a meeting in Orillia, and also visited the post office, and the First Minister said it was not adequate to the requirements of the town. He pictured to the people that the town would soon become a city, and he promised—I do not know whether directly or indirectly—that the time was not far distant when the subject of building a fine post office there would receive the consideration of the Government. I should like some explanation in that direction. I am sorry the First Minister is not present, and is not able to say what excuse he will give with respect to the promise he made to the people of that constituency.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have no doubt that if the First Minister made a promise he will keep it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I hope the Minister of Public Works will take the case of Orillia into consideration, as it is entitled to a new post office a great deal more than many other towns that have obtained new buildings.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is it proposed to do with the amount of $17,000 asked for Kingston penitentiary?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is made up of a number of items, including material for general repairs to buildings, tools for quarrying, materials of several kinds, harness, reservoir for the storage of 60,000 gallons of water for fire protection, for farm buildings and for irrigation purposes, and a number of small items.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems a very large amount without there being a definite purpose in regard to its expenditure. As to the gas works operated at Kingston, the Government are on the high road to a serious lawsuit. The nuisance from those gas works is becoming a serious one to residents in the neighborhood, and I have no doubt whatever that, unless some arrangement can be made to put a stop to it, there will be quite a number of lawsuits entered against the Government, and unless the law for the Government is different from that for private individuals, heavy damages will be incurred. The properties there are valuable, and they will be seriously injured if the nuisance is not stopped.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have taken a note of the matter, and I thank the hon. gentleman for having called my attention to it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am pretty certain that some correspondence has gone on with the Department of Justice as to the matter, and if the hon. gentleman will ascertain from that Department what the decision of the Government is, and what steps they propose to take, I shall be glad to have the information on concurrence.

Mr. BARRON. With regard to the vote of $10,000 for Lindsay post office, Custom house, &c., I would ask, in the absence of the hon. member for South Victoria (Mr. Hudspeth), how much of that $10,000 is to be employed in the purchase of the site, and how much for the building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $4,000 is for the site, and any portion of the $10,000 over that will be applied towards the building.

Mr. BARRON. Then not more than $6,000 is to be expended on the building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Whatever the balance of the $10,000 amounts to will go towards the building, which will cost about $15,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am surprised to hear the hon. gentleman say that the Government paid $4,000 for the site. I would like to know how they arrived at that amount, and how much land will be occupied?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $4,000 is the amount which has been put in the Estimates for similar purposes for a number of years. When the lot costs only $2,000, the balance remains there to be employed for the building, with any additional vote that Parliament may give. The amount for the lot depends altogether upon the locality. Sometimes it costs only $2,500; in other cases $3,000, $3,500, or $4,000 is paid.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has the Government yet selected a site for the post office?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; a site has been purchased. It is lot No. 5, east side of John street, purchased from W. S. Wilson, and — White, for $3,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the quantity of land?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think I can give you the exact quantity. It is an ordinary lot I suppose—about 70 by 100 or little more.

Mr. BARRON. I am sorry I misunderstood the hon. gentleman before. Does he say that only $3,000 was paid for the lot?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. BARRON. Then I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken, as I happen to be one of the members of the church who had to do with the sale of the property, and we understood that $4,000 was the price. I was anxious, therefore, to know what balance would be expended on the building.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I stated just now that the building would cost $16,000, and the lot according to my note has cost $3,000.

Mr. O'BRIEN. In the case of the Barrie post office, the town was required to provide the site. How is it that the same rule is not applied in both cases?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In certain cases the towns wish to have a special location where the building to be erected would cost more than if we selected another lot, and in such a case we say to the town: Give us a lot, and what otherwise we would have paid for the lot will be added to the building, if its location is such that the officers can report favorably upon it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost of the London Custom house?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount of the contract is $34,300.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You appear to require about $56,000?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, there is an addition to the building. The total expenditure on the new extension up to the 31st December, 1886, was $26,000. The estimated expenditure from the 1st January to the 1st July this year is $14,125. Then, what is required now will be $22,000, which will be the total probable cost, with what we have expended.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What will the London Infantry School cost altogether?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The total probable cost of the building, including the heating, drainage, &c., will be $129,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does that include a gymnasium? I think it would be desirable, in most of the new buildings of this kind, to provide a gymnasium for training the men. It keeps them out of mischief and does them good in various ways.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have not been informed as to that, but I think there is none provided for at London.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have you bought the land for the Napanee post office and Custom house?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think so. The lot is No. 5 on the east side of John street, and it was purchased from a man named W. S. Wilson, I think.

Mr. BOWELL. Not the member?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What will be the cost of the building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It will be about the same as the others—about $16,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice by the Auditor General's report that it cost us $844.80 to drain the Orangeville post office last year. I cannot understand how it should cost that much money, as the post office stands on the side of a hill, and it would be quite easy to drain it into the creek.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As far as I can recollect, it was because we had to pay a share of the drainage of the street; otherwise we could not have had a proper drain for the building; and we thought it would be better at once to pay $200 or $300 more in order to have the building properly drained.

Mr. McMULLEN. I quite admit that it is desirable to have something permanent, but anyone acquainted with the place knows that the post office is situated in the fully-peopled portion of the town, and if everybody there contributed their proportion to that drain, it must be a very large and expensive one. I would like to have a little more information about this.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have given the hon. gentleman the reason, and if he wants more information, if he will be kind enough to make a note of it and give it to me, I will try and let him have it on concurrence.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before going any further with this vote, I wish to say that I have looked carefully over these Estimates and the Supplementary Estimates, and I do not see that the hon. gentleman, for whom I have very great respect, has paid that attention which I expected to my request that he should build a wharf in the parish of Neguac, in the county of Northumberland. Will he tell me what portion of the Estimates I can find that item in? Perhaps the hon. gentleman will take a note of it. Does the hon. gentleman hear me?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am taking a note of it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Are the custom house and post office in the town of Peterborough on the same site?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No. This vote of $17,000 stands under the same title as it did in the first instance; but, as I explained last year and the previous year, the building that has been erected there is the post office. Another lot was purchased for a custom house, near the market place; so we do not ask any money for that this year.

Mr. LANDERKIN. From whom was it purchased?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. From Mr. Taylor, I think.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has the custom house been erected in Peterborough?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is for the post office. The other will come afterwards.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is it customary to put the post office and the custom house together, or to put them apart?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Sometimes we put them together, sometimes we do not.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the cause of their being put apart in this particular case?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The town is already a large one and is extending, and I was informed that the place where we were putting up the post office was a very proper site, because it would be of service both to Peterborough and to the village of Ashburnham, which is separated from Peterborough by a river and a bridge, whilst the custom house and the inland revenue office would be better situated in the business portion of the town.

Mr. MALLORY. I would like to ask if the site of the Trenton public building has been purchased, and, if so, from whom?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, the site has been purchased. It is on the corner of Dundas and Albert streets, 100 feet by 75 feet, from G. R. Murphy, on the 1st of February, for $4,878.

Mr. MALLORY. I would like to ask the hon. Minister who the parties were who valued this property in Trenton, or if it was valued by any expert; or was it simply a matter of private contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The way these purchases take place is this: When the people hear that we want to purchase, offers are made to us of different properties, and we send an officer from our Department to examine and report upon the different lots, looking at the location, the surroundings, the facility of construction, the ease of access and so on. All these things we consider, and the properties being offered we know exactly what has to be paid. Sometimes we find that the price is excessive, and then we make an offer, and if the offer is refused, we do not take the property, but buy another lot.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask what has been done with the $8,000 voted last year for the Prescott post office. Has the work been begun yet?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No. The intention is very shortly to buy a lot in the town, and then proceed with the erection of the building.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Has any portion of the vote of last year been expended?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; but we expect that that may be expended say up to the 1st of October, and then we will go on with the balance.

Mr. MALLORY. Were other lots offered the Government for this purpose, and were they examined and valued?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say what other lots were offered; it is not customary to give the list. But this was considered the best lot, and that was why it was purchased.

Mr. MALLORY. Is this the price set upon it by the officers of the Department?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, $4,878. The price was higher than that, but this was the price my officer thought would cover the value of the lot. Therefore, it was so arranged between the Department and the owner of the property.

Mr. MALLORY. I am informed on good authority that the lot was not worth anything like that value.

Mr. BOWELL. The price paid was precisely the price paid by Mr. Smith, whom the hon. gentleman, no doubt, knows very well, for a lot two or three lots further down the street, and this is a corner lot. The Minister refused to give any more per foot than was given by a private party for a lot further down, on which he built a wholesale warehouse.

Mr. MALLORY. That does not affect the information I have.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know the information the hon. gentleman may have. I speak from personal knowledge, and the hon. gentleman may accept or reject my statement, as he pleases.

Mr. MALLORY. What is the cost proposed to be?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The same as the others, about $16,000.

Mr. MALLORY. I care about as much for what the hon. Minister of Customs says as he does for what I say. I am here to discharge my duty for my constituents, and I think it is my duty to draw the attention of the Government and the House to these matters, and will do so whether it suits the hon. gentleman or not.

Mr. MITCHELL. Having been an old friend of the Minister of Customs, I do not like to see him take a course that is likely to protract the Session. Every consideration has been shown on this side, but if the hon. Minister will show as much petulance as he has shown to-night he will only succeed in delaying business.

Mr. BOWELL. I am very much obliged for the hon. gentleman's lecture and will try to profit by it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am sure the hon. member for Northumberland speaks with reason, for I recollect I had to make concessions to get items through.

Public Buildings, North-West Territories$15,600

Mr. McMULLEN. Who is the inspector of public buildings in the North-West Territories just now?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. At Winnipeg, Mr. Donald Smith; at Regina, Mr. Henderson; at Battleford, a gentleman whose name I forget; at Prince Albert, it is a clerk of the works we had at Winnipeg that we sent up there.

Public Buildings, British Columbia.....$60,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I thought that the British Columbia penitentiary was finished a considerable time ago. I think this expenditure of $60,000 very large, considering the expenditure of last year. What is the penitentiary going to cost altogether?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The building will cost $367,000 when completed. We have expended $218,000 on it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That appears to be an enormous sum of money for the service of so small a Province, and the number of convicts expected to be immured in that penitentiary. I see the number of convicts in British Columbia is not estimated to exceed 150. $367,000 is a very large sum to spend on the erection of the requisite buildings.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. When the ex-Minister of Justice visited British Columbia, he found that the building was in a very bad state. The floor was rotten, and the building was very small, so much so that the convicts had to be put two in a cell, and a number of them were sleeping in the passages. It was not safe, and we had to undertake a large extension. Then the building having been erected previously on a hill side, we had to make large works outside to cut the water from the upper portion of the land, and thus make the building habitable. These things have cost a great deal of money, and of course we had to complete them.

Mr. DAVIES. How does the expenditure on that penitentiary compare with the expenditure on the Dorchester penitentiary.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The expenditure on the Dorchester penitentiary, without the $9,000 asked for this year, amounts to $411,000.

Mr. DAVIES. That is a penitentiary for the three Provinces, and this one will cost as much for the little Province of British Columbia.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The work is not complete at Dorchester.

Public Buildings, repairs, furniture, heating, &c... $415,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What is this for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is for all the buildings throughout the Dominion except three or four in the large cities for which we have special votes.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does this include Rideau Hall?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It includes Rideau Hall.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that Rideau Hall cost us last year for repairs $26,280.40. I think the expenses connected with Rideau Hall require some attention at the hands of this committee. Last year we had a clerk of works employed there at $90 a month. He draws $1,080 as a salary, and last year he drew for extra time $36, and for street car tickets $25.15. I think it is not usual, when a man goes to work in the morning and returns at night, that he should be paid for his street car tickets to go and return. It is certainly not the custom with manufacturers and others, and the practice should not be adopted in our case. I notice also that we paid the chief carpenter $183.50, travelling with the Governor General—that is Mr. Reed. He got $819.36 as a salary for 331 days, and there are only 365 days in the year, and for the balance of the year he got $183.50 for travelling with the Governor General. For carpenters and laborers in and around Rideau Hall, we paid $10,066.13. For charwomen, we paid $2,077.62. For crockery and flower pots, we paid $192.13. For grates, stoves and hardware, we paid $816.03. For paper and painting, we paid in one item $673.03 to William Howe, and in another place we paid for paper and painting $2,011.81. We bought nine water baskets—I do not know what they are used for—at $5 a piece, that is $45. We bought 380 yards of carpet, at $1.40 a yard, and 206½ yards, at $1, making $739.32 in all. We bought 10 dozen damask napkins, at $40 a dozen, that is about $4 a piece, making $400. We employed a man to do mowing at Rideau Hall, and, according to the way in which it came out in the examination before the Public Accounts Committee, he cut about fifteen tons of hay, and we paid $65 for cutting and raking, besides the hands it required to take it in. I say it is time that some change should be made in the manner in which these affairs at Rideau Hall are conducted. Adding up the whole sum paid last year in connection with Rideau Hall, I find that it actually cost us a fraction over $72 a day the whole time, not including the Governor General's salary, to keep up that establishment. It is time to make some change. I do not suppose it will be possible to make any change during the incumbency of the gentleman who now occupies the position of Governor General, but I suggest that the Government should lead anyone who occupies that position, after the worthy gentleman who now holds it goes out of office, to understand that he must find all the necessaries out of the very liberal salary which he receives. If he wants a flower garden, let him hire men and make his flower garden for himself. If he wants a vegetable garden, let him do the same. We find him the ground, and I think that is all the people of this country should be required to do. The present system is absurd. I find that last year we paid $74.50 for garden seeds. That would produce vegetables enough for a regiment, not to speak of the Governor General and his attendants. I believe the people of this country will insist that some change shall be made in connection with the public expense at Rideau Hall. Paying a Governor General $50,000 a year and giving him a residence which costs $72 a day to keep in repair, and keeping up a flower garden, and a conservatory, and a vegetable garden, and mowing hay and supplying pasture for cattle, and all this kind of thing—it is unreasonable, and it is absurd that the people should continue to countenance and sustain the Government to carry on this matter in the way in which it is now carried on. I think it my duty to call the attention of the committee to it, and I hope the Minister of Public Works, under whose guidance this is conducted, will see that it is his duty to urge upon the Government to inaugurate a different system after the term of the present Governor has expired, and to lead whoever is to occupy the position afterwards to understand that he will have to grow his own vegetables at his own expense, and that he will have to buy his own napkins at $4 a piece, if he wants them, and we will give him the privilege of taking them with him when he leaves the country and goes home, as a relic of the high position he occupied in Canada, I do not think it is right that the people of this country should be asked to continue this expense.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Harbors and Rivers, Nova Scotia $76,950

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Cow Bay, $11,500. How much has been spent on Cow Bay altogether?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Cow Bay has been a very expensive cow—$150,000 altogether. There is a breakwater, and it is the only harbor the people have in that section. I have never been there myself, but I understand it is a very important shipping place.

Mr. JONES. The work at Cow Bay is a very valuable public work. It was built by private individuals in the first place, under grants from the Local Government, but under the Administration of Mr. Mackenzie it was purchased by the Government from the owners. It is a very large work, and is absolutely necessary for the protection of the trade in that part of Cape Breton. A considerable amount is realised from it by tolls and wharfages. I do not think there is another appropriation in the Estimates that is more in the interests of commerce than this.

Mr. KIRK. Where is Blue Rock, for which you have an appropriation of $3,500?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is in the county of Antigonish.

Mr. JONES. Digby, $40,000—was that under recommendation from the engineers? Have they reported on that work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The old pier was destroyed by accident in a storm, and we made some repairs last year, to serve until we could get an additional vote. This is to build a pier on the other side of the bay, at a point where, I understand, the railway company wish to build a pier, at a place called the Racket. It is considered to be the best place, and will cost less money than if it were built where the old pier was.

Mr. JONES. That work is likely to be necessary for the accommodation of steamers between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. They have no other means of landing, or communicating with the shore, unless by this pier. It is rather an expensive work, however. Laurencetown, $1,200—has the hon. gentleman any estimates of this work? Will that finish it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, it is to complete. I think some of these works are in the county of Antigonish.

Harbors and Rivers, Prince Edward Island..... $3,000

Mr. EISENHAUER. I see an item of $600 to complete the breakwater at Petite Rivière, in the county of Lunenburg. I wish to inform the Minister that where that breakwater has been located, unless a further sum of money is expended, this breakwater will be altogether useless.

Mr. PERRY. With regard to repairs to breakwaters, piers, &c., acquired from Local Government, Prince Edward Island, $2,000—I desire to inform the Minister of Public Works that this sum is very far from being sufficient for the requirements. That means exactly to allow the piers, breakwaters and wharves which this Government have taken off the hands of the Government of Prince Edward Island, to go to ruin and fall to the ground, as they left the wharf at West Point to break down altogether. The people of West Point live twenty-five miles from railway accommodation, and this wharf is the only point which they can use for shipping. It was built some years ago by the Local Government, and when commissioners were appointed to report upon which wharves the Government of Canada should take over, this was one of them. I find the wharf has been allowed to go down altogether, and the people have now no accommodation for shipping, and no means of tapping the Intercolonial Railway at Shediac and Richibucto. This is not a fair way of dealing with the people of the island. I say the sum of $2,000 placed in these Estimates to repair over twenty wharves and piers which the Government of Canada have taken over from the Government of Prince Edward Island, is a mere insult, it is not going to put a patch upon one of these wharves; and unless the Minister brings down in the Supplementary Estimates a necessary sum, it means that they will all fall down to the ground. I am aware that the people of Prince Edward Island are paying, under this year's increase of the tariff, about $100,000 a year in addition to the large amount of other taxes which they have had to pay into the Dominion Treasury; and I say they are very far from getting an equivalent to the amount they are called upon to contribute to the general revenue of Canada. I am surprised, I am astonished, to know that the Government will ask this House to vote the paltry sum of $2,000 for the repair of all these public works in Prince Edward Island. It would have been far better if these piers had been left in the hands of the Local Government, because then they would have been taken care of, and we would have had the use of them, but since the Dominion Government have taken possession of them, they are allowed to go to ruin. I contend the Local Government has no power to build these wharves over again. They would have to obtain a license from the Federal Government to build wharves or public works. I say that is not a fair way to treat the people of the island.

Mr. WELSH. I also think the sum of $2,000 will go a very short way to repair these wharves. I brought the question to the notice of the Minister of Public Works the other day, and I see that he has granted in the Supplementary Estimates for two wharves and piers at Vernon River and Pinette, the sum of $1,075. It will require all that sum to put them in fair order. If $1,000 is required for two wharves, how far will $2,000 go in repairing twenty wharves? It is a very small sum, and will not be sufficient to carry out the work. On previous occasions I have spoken of the harbor at Pinette, and I am very anxious that the dredge, after it has completed the work at Tignish, should be sent to that harbor, and also to Wood Island. I see that $1,000 is in the Estimates for the repair of the pier there. There is a breakwater there, and at present the harbor is perfectly useless on account of the amount of sediment which has washed in, no vessel being able to enter it. That breakwater must be dredged. If the Minister will make a note of these points and attend to them I shall be satisfied. I hope the wharves and piers will be generously attended, because in Prince Edward Island we are isolated and shut out from the rest of the Dominion for five months of the year, and we should obtain more consideration on that account. Some hon. members have spoken with respect to winter ports and ocean communication; we do not put in any claim for ocean communication, but we claim that the terms of Confederation should be fully carried out. I observe an item of $20,000 in the Estimates for repairs to the Northern Light. It will take that sum to place the boat in an efficient state to perform the service during the coming winter. I want to know where is the amount in the Estimates of $150,000 or $200,000 to build a new boat for another year.

The CHAIRMAN. I would suggest to the hon. member to bring these points up on their appropriate items.

Mr. WELSH. We are working by the job and not by the day. The Minister of Marine has said the matter was under the consideration of the Government, both as to the building of a new boat and the repairing of the Northern Light. The people of Prince Edward Island want to understand fairly and squarely if the Northern Light is all they are going to get. I want to know.

Harbors and Rivers, New Brunswick..... $22,000

Mr. ELLIS. I should like to enquire with respect to the breakwater at Negro Point? $17,000 were spent last year, about $53,000 for the year now running, and $10,000 are asked for the current year. $35,000 were in the Estimates of this year, the year running, and a Governor General's warrant was issued for $18,000. The breakwater has been finished apparently for some time.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman probably forgets that after the work was nearly completed, or had been completed, a storm came and destroyed a large portion of the outer end of the pier. We had, therefore, to incur a large expenditure to repair that portion, and we are now placing large stones in order to protect the pier, as we have done elsewhere. We have followed this course in the Lower Provinces especially in order to protect the timber from being destroyed by worms, and also to save the works to some extent from the effect of storms. We have found that this kind of work is much more desirable than the ordinary work.

Mr. ELLIS. Has the Department any idea that the breakwater will stand?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The information I have is that the work as completed will stand. Of course, it is like many other works; a very serious storm might damage it again; but we hope by the new mode of dealing with this breakwater it will be able to resist very serious storms.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Will this complete the work? Is it under contract now?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $10,000 will cover it. The hon. gentleman will see there is in the Supplementary Estimates for 1886-87 an amount of $18,000.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The work is under contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is under contract.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Who are the contractors?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The contract for repairing the breakwater amounted to $96,000. The contractors were Steve, Duffy & Steve. They began in 1881 or 1882.

Mr. ELLIS. What has the breakwater cost up to this time?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Up to the 31st December last, $408,000.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What are these works on the River St. John?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They are for the improvement of the river—for tow-paths, &c.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Where is this work on the Upper Salmon River?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is in Albert county.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What is this ballast wharf at Dalhousie?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The vessels that came through there were in the habit of throwing their ballast into the harbor, which was being gradually destroyed, and this is for the protection of the harbor.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Is any revenue derived from it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These works, when completed, are under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. They generally put tolls on them and some revenue is derived in that way.

Harbors and Rivers, Quebec $32,000

Mr. LAURIER. Where is this work at Barachois de Malbaie?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In the county of Gaspé.

Mr. LAURIER. What kind of work is it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is to clear the harbor, and this $500 is applied to the removal of a large rock and some boulders in Barachois de Malbaie, a work recommended by the chief engineer.

Mr. LAURIER. What is this work at Beauport?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is a small wharf on the River Beauport, for the accommodation of the traffic in stone, &c. The work at Chicoutimi is for piers there, and the work at Etang du Nord is to complete the harbor on the Magdalen Islands. The work at Isle Perrot is for a pier which was ordered last year and is now under contract. It will cost, I think, about $6,000.

Mr. LAURIER. Is it on the St. Anne side or the Vaudreuil side?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is at a point about a mile and a-half below the parish church; a place selected by the engineer. Other parties, I think from the county of Beauharnois, wanted it on the other side, but though that might have accommodated them, yet, as this work was for Isle Perrot, this was the place recommended. The vote for Rivière Lièvre is for a lock, in order that vessels may be able to come as near as possible to the foot of the rapids.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN,

Harbors and Rivers, Ontario.....$78,000

Mr. CASEY. Is there not some mistake about this vote for Belleville harbor?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, I think not. This $7,000 is to meet the share of the Government for altering the channel for a distance of 4,500 feet long, 250 to 300 feet wide, and 8 to 10 feet deep. It was recommended by the chief engineer.

Repairs and improvements—Harbors and Rivers,
Manitoba..... $2,000

Mr. WATSON. Where is it intended to spend this money?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is no special destination for this. It is only for a number of small works, for which we may not be without a vote, and may not be obliged every time to get a Governor's warrant. We must have a margin in case of emergency.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not suppose anyone would object to a reasonable vote for the service of Manitoba; but $2,000 is so small a sum for river and harbor improvements, that it would seem an almost useless expenditure. A vote like that seems like throwing money away.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. My chief engineer says that it is for improvements and repairs not specially provided for in the Estimates, on account of their being so small in each case. The amount is small, but if the experience of the year shows that we need a little more, we shall have to ask for an increase next year.

Harbors and Rivers, British Columbia..... $15,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What sort of work does the hon. gentleman intend to do on the Fraser river with this vote of $10,000?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is to continue the work of closing the south branch of the Fraser river at its junction with the north branch, with the object of carrying the whole volume of the water through the new channel, for the purpose of scouring it or even increasing its present depth.

Dredging..... $142,700

Mr. CASEY. I hope the hon. Minister will see his way to obtaining the dredging plant in Canada. I remember some years ago that a little dredging plant was obtained from the United States, and I had reason to know afterwards, from seeing the performance of certain Canadian made dredges in the port of Quebec, that Canadian dredging plant can be got quite as good as that from the United States. Perhaps the hon. Minister knows whether he intends to obtain this dredging plant in Canada.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will not resume that discussion. The hon. gentleman knows that, in the previous discussion, I showed that we had reason to do what we did at the time. But in this case the intention is to acquire any such plant in the country.

Mr. PLATT. I would like to ask the Minister if any dredges have been lost by being wrecked or burned during the last four or five years.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Any that have been wrecked have been again put afloat. There may have been one that we put aside because it was old, but the others we have fixed up.

Mr. PLATT. There is a dredge missing somewhere, because I remember the hon. Minister, while on a visit to Pictou some five or six years ago, telling us that there was a dredge to be sent to that harbor—that it was in fact then on its way. It has not arrived yet.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to ask if this vote of $20,700 for new dredging plant includes any for Manitoba?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; we have a dredge there, and we are now buying a tug, which I think is all that will be required.

Mr. WATSON. What is the size of the tug, and from whom has it been purchased?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If it has been bought, it was bought only last week. As to its dimensions, I think the hon. gentleman knows them as well as I do.

Mr. WATSON. I do happen to know a little about this tug, and that is the reason I want to have these questions answered. I am informed that a tug has been purchased on Lake Winnipeg for dredging purposes on Lake Manitoba and I would like to ask the Minister if he can tell me the price that has been paid for that particular tug?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The tug will cost altogether $3,300 or $3,400. The property is that of Messrs Johnson Fredrickson & Walker, of Selkirk. She was built in 1878, at St. Catharines, Ont., by John Doty, of Toronto. Her length over all is 60 feet, her main width is 10 feet 3 inches, her depth of hold is 4 feet 2 inches; her total gross tonnage is 69 tons.

Mr. WATSON. I submit that the Minister might have made a better selection of a tug than the one he purchased on Lake Winnipeg. There is a tug which has been in the use of the Government for the last two years on Lake Manitoba for handling the dredge and barges. I believe that no fault was found with that tug; and I am informed that it was offered to the Government for less money than the Government are paying for the other tug. The tug on Lake Manitoba will be totally worthless to the owner, for the simple reason that it was built for towing logs, and the owner of the tug has been deprived of the opportunity of getting timber. I submit that the Government should have purchased that tug, being a better one than the one they are about to purchase, and being right on the ground. I am informed the one they are about to buy is smaller than the one on Lake Manitoba, which was specially built for shallow water, having 50 horse power, and drawing 4 feet of water. Were any tenders asked?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; none were called for because there were only two that would suit. If this tug is smaller than the other, that was exactly why it was purchased. We want a smaller tug, and the Government engineer, Mr. Gouin, reported this tug would suit.

Mr. WATSON. It is unfair to the proprietor of the tug on Lake Manitoba not to have purchased it, and it was unfair not to give him timber limits so that he could work his tug. I am not aware that the Government engineer found any fault with the tug when it was in use during the last two years.

Mr. EISENHAUER. It seems to me that the amount allowed for harbors in Nova Scotia is altogether out of proportion compared with that allowed the western Provinces. In this connection, I might refer to the harbor of Lunenburg which is now styled the Gloucester of the Dominion. Its fishing fleet now reaches about 100 sail, for which the harbor accommodation is altogether incomplete, so that during a storm the vessels at anchor get foul at each other. I would, therefore, impress upon the Minister to send the dredge down there to deepen the harbor.

Mr. WELSH. I would ask the hon. the Minister to send the dredge, when it is done working where it is now, to the harbor of Pinette and Wood Island. The Government have laid out a very large sum of money in building a breakwater at Wood Island, which expenditure would be useless until the harbor is dredged.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We act upon the reports of the engineer of the different harbors where dredging is required, and we have to select the places where dredging is most necessary. No doubt the place the hon. gentleman speaks of will be among those laid before me and the chief engineer when the selection requires to be made.

Mr. DAVIES. What engineer would be sent to Prince Edward Island? I would like to call upon him and give him some assistance.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think it is Mr. Egan; he may go this year or I may go myself.

Mr. DAVIES. If the hon. gentleman goes himself, he will see the necessity of dredging where my hon. friend has pointed out. If he does not come himself—

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will send the engineer.

Mr. DAVIES. If the hon. gentleman does not come himself, I hope he will take the statement of my hon. friend.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I never refuse to take the statement of a member of Parliament.

Mr. WELSH. If the hon. gentleman will send the engineer to one of the representatives of the district, I will devote a day or two to pointing out the wants of the harbor. If the hon. gentleman should send him to a man who knows nothing about harbors, he will get limited information. I hope the hon. gentleman will consult the interests of the country by giving the engineer instructions to call upon the representative of the district.

Mr. KIRK. I should like to enquire of the Minister what proportion of this $30,000 he expects to expend in the different Provinces—what proportion, for instance, he will expend in Nova Scotia?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot state that. It depends on the work to be done. This vote is for the three Provinces. If I find that in any one Province the work requires more attention than in another, I must do it.

Mr. KIRK. Then this $30,000 may be all expended in one Province or in one harbor?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Do not make it an extreme case.

Mr. KIRK. I would suggest to the Minister the necessity of doing something in the county of Guysborough. Take the River St. Mary's, for instance. The people of that district have petitioned many times to have some dredging done. The Government have acknowledged the necessity of doing the work by the fact that they sent a dredge there once, but it was the wrong sort of a dredge, and it was taken away in consequence. They have never paid any attention to that place since, and the people are pressing for it. There is an absolute necessity for some dredging on St. Mary's River. Then there is Larry's River. That was partially dredged some years ago but there is more necessity for dredging now, and I hope the Minister will not overlook these two places this year.

Mr. WATSON. Where is it proposed to expend the amount of $10,000 in Manitoba this year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot state now. As in the other Provinces, when reports are made as to where the dredging is most required, the vote will be used for that purpose.

Mr. WATSON. I would ask what has been the result of the report on surveys between Selkirk and Winnipeg on the Red River. Last year, $750 were spent on that. Is it the intention of the Government to do anything this year on the Red River, especially in regard to St. Andrew's Rapids?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I wish the hon. gentleman had given me notice of this, as there is nothing in the Estimates to call my attention to it. If he will give me a note, I will give him the information to-morrow.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. gentleman must remember this, as a deputation visited Ottawa last Session asking for it, and it was expected that this year an item would be put in the Estimates to have the St. Andrew's Rapids dredged, so as to afford navigation between these points. It is a matter of great importance to the people along the shore of Lake Winnipeg and to those operating timber limits.

Telegraphs$20,000

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is this line between Battleford and Edmonton still under the control of the Government?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, these lines in the North-West are. I did my best to get the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to assume them, but they refused. I have no doubt that one of these railways going north, from Calgary to Edmonton for instance, will make arrangements to make connection with the other telegraphs.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Was not this line to be taken over under the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, they took those in British Columbia, but not this one. During the war, it was found that the line which went from Battleford to Edmonton was very often down because the poles were rotten, having been put in a swampy country, and it was thought better to set them from Battleford to Fort Pitt, then to Victoria, and then to Edmonton or St. Albert.

Miscellaneous Public Works..... $36,000

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How is the amount of $1,000 used for the National Art Gallery? Is it used to buy pictures?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, we have not enough money for that. This vote is to pay the salary of the keeper and the charwoman and a young boy to take messages. Once we purchased a couple of Canadian paintings. There was one sent to the exhibition in London, and it was thought much of. That was, I think, "The Schoolmistress," who explains to the trustees that she has not enough salary. It was considered a very good picture and we bought it, but as a rule we have only just enough to pay the expenses.

Experimental Farms, buildings, fencing, &c.$80,000

Mr. FISHER. I should like the Minister to state what are the buildings and fencing he proposes to put up on the experimental farm.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The statement I have here is that this $30,000 are to these purposes: Central farm station, $50,000; Maritime Provinces, $6,000; Manitoba, $6,000; North-West Territories, $6,000; British Columbia, $6,000. The contingencies make up the balance. The additional that will be required another year is $50,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. How is it that the hon. gentleman has entirely overlooked the section of country from which I come? I suppose it is because I am out of favor with this administration. I would like some of the money that is being so liberally expended in other portions of the Dominion, to be expended in Miramichi.

Mr. WATSON.

Mr. CARLING. It is the intention of the Government to establish an experimental farm in the Maritime Provinces—one for the three Provinces.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it the intention to establish it in Miramichi, county of Northumberland?

Mr. CARLING. No place has yet been decided upon. No choice will be made until the money has been voted.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is customary, before the money is voted, for Ministers to give information as to where they intend to spend that money. I have just heard of a trip—through the press controlled by the hon. gentleman—that on a very recent occasion, a number of gentlemen went out by invitation to inspect the experimental farm near this city. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if, before locating an experimental farm in the Maritime Provinces, he would inspect some of the farms which we claim are suitable for such a purpose in the county which I have the honor to represent. I do not expect much justice from this Administration. I have not had it lately. I have been entirely ignored, and they do not ask my advice. But I expect, before we get through these Estimates, that I will get some consideration from this Government, and if I do not, they will hear from me.

Mr. FISHER. I would like the Minister of Public Works to tell us whether there are any details with regard to these estimates of $50,000 to expend on the agricultural farm?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The details are those: Fencing, $4,000; farm building and barns, $3,000; building for museum, $20,000; houses for other purposes, $14,000. The total expenses of the central farm, as provided for in this estimate, is $50,000.

Mr. FISHER. Is this additional $36,000 to be laid out on the branch farm, or on the central farm?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I understand on both.

Mr. FISHER. Then $50,000 will not complete the expenditure on the central farm?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The estimate, I think, is $50,000 altogether, of which $36,000 is to be expended on the other stations.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope the Minister will take into consideration the claims I have put forward in relation to my county, and if he will visit the county I have the honor to represent, I am sure he will receive a very cordial reception.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman may be sure that it will be taken into serious consideration, but the selection of the site must be made by my hon. friend.

Mr. AMYOT. In relation to the wharf at St. Michel, in the county of Bellechasse, the Government would do well to pay some attention to it. I understand that the position I occupy in this House does not give me much strength with the Government, but in the interest of the people of my county, it is of urgent necessity that this wharf should be repaired. If this wharf was destroyed it would cost the Government many thousands of dollars to build another one. As to keeping a wharf in good order, that is a matter of public interest, and ought to be outside of politics. Whatever may be the position of my county politically speaking, the Government should not forget the interests of navigation. If it was destroyed, perhaps the Government would have to expend $50,000 to build another one. It is very useful in case of storm, and prevents many ships from being destroyed. It is useful to many counties, but it has been built by one parish alone.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will consider what the hon. gentleman says, and see if we can do anything to that wharf. I think the wharf was repaired last year and the year before, and I thought it was now in tolerably good condition. If we had to build a new wharf we would not build it exactly in that spot.

Mr. FISHER. I am glad to find that in this item some definite estimate has been made with regard to the expenditure upon the agricultural farm. I was a good deal disappointed on a former occasion when the Minister of Agriculture made some statements in regard to his estimates of the expenditure, both annual and capital, in relation to that farm, because it seemed to me these estimates were really very much guess work, and were not based on exact information. I confess that my idea on that head has been rather confirmed by what I have since found out in regard to the expenditure on this farm. I find that we have already expended, by vote of last year, $30,000, by Governor General's Warrants, between the two Sessions of Parliament, $25,000, making $55,000. I find in the original estimates of this year, $40,000 were charged to that farm. I understood the Minister of Agriculture to state that of that $90,000, about $30,000 was to be spent for branch stations, which would leave $60,000 to be spent this year upon the central experimental station. Now, I presumed that that $50,000 was going to include the expenses for carrying on the farm for the current year, as well as what actual outlay there might be in the improvement of the farm. I, therefore, estimate from the knowledge I have of the way it is being carried on, that probably there would be about $10,000 spent for carrying on this farm, and that would leave $50,000 to be spent upon the farm. This is to be charged to capital account, and with the items I have already alluded to, would bring the expenditure up to $105,000. Then we find that the Minister of Public Works proposes to spend this year about $50,000 in buildings and fences on the central farm. That brings the expenditure altogether up to $155,000, or within $5,000 of the amount which the Minister of Agriculture stated that the farm would cost when completed for experimental work. At first sight this appears to be within the mark and the Minister of Agriculture to have been successful in bringing it within his estimate. Since I have been over that farm, as I have been very thoroughly within the last few days, I do not consider the estimate of the Minister of Agriculture as at all probable to be sufficient. I took an opportunity of walking over the farm and making a thorough examination of its state, and I was much surprised to find that a large proportion of it is at present in a state wholly unfit for cultivation or for any experimental purposes. I find out of 466 acres, the rear portion, 150 or 175 acres, is to-day absolutely useless for any agricultural purpose, and it will require a very large outlay to make it in any way fit for even regular agricultural purposes, still less for any careful or accurate experiment. I spoke, on a former occasion, about the expense connected with buying a farm, and when we come to examine the property as I did, I felt myself fully confirmed in the judgment I expressed in regard to the high price which had been paid for that piece of land. I found that out of 465 acres a very large proportion, over one-third, is not to-day worth anything for agricultural purposes. The front portion of the farm, that portion which is in a fairly good agricultural state, I am prepared to say is good and capable of being made a good experimental station; the quality of the land, on the whole, is very fair, its state to-day is very fair to form the basis of a experimental station, and the situation of the farm in connection with the city is satisfactory and such as could be properly chosen for an experimental farm. But I consider that the portion to which I have alluded and to which I have taken no exception could be fairly paid for per acre at the rate for the whole quantity. I would not grumble at that price being paid for that portion; but the other portion is practically worthless for an experimental station, and as it has been said by some hon. gentlemen and by some persons in the neighborhood that the farm is a good investment for speculative purposes, I would recommend the Minister of Agriculture to draw a line across the farm a little way back and leave the back portion untouched until he was able to sell it to outside parties. If so, it might be useful for speculative purposes; but a very large portion of the back part can never be used successfully for agricultural experiments. In connection with the price of the farm when properly ready for experiment, I may say that the back portion will cost over $100 an acre to be laid out on it before it can be used for ordinary agricultural purposes for which farms should be used and are useful for. Taking 150 acres alone—and I believe there is considerably more—that would require an expenditure of at least $15,000 to be put upon it before a large proportion of it can be used for any purpose in connection with experimental stations. Those prices alone without any future expenditure on buildings or on what we might fairly charge to capital, expenditures on implements, stock and things of that kind, the experiment of this agricultural farm will cost according to what figures we have, to commence with, leaving no margin for any increase, $170,000 instead of $160,000. That is leaving no margin for future increases or for anything in the shape of implements, stock or expenditure on the front part of the farm. I regret exceedingly that a good deal of work has been entered upon almost without any definite system. My own knowledge of agriculture leads me to believe that one of the very first things absolutely necessary in dealing with a large piece of land for careful and accurate cultivation, is to have it thoroughly drained. I do not profess or presume to be an authority on drainage; but it happens that when I went to examine the farm I was accompanied by a farmer from Ontario, an honorable gentleman representing one of the ridings of Huron, who is well known to-day as an authority on farming matters, specially in connection with drainage. In speaking thus I gave his opinion, because he does not happen to be present, otherwise I would not venture to quote him. His opinion was that the very first thing necessary was to lay out a careful system of drainage for the whole land. It is land that requires drainage before any experiment can be carried out on it. The management has commenced to do certain drainage here, there and everywhere, without apparently any system.

Mr. CARLING. That is not correct.

Mr. FISHER. If there is any system it is impossible to find it on looking at the works. More than that, on enquiry we could not find that a surveyor had been over it and marked out an accurate system of drainage or side drains.

Mr. CARLING. What time were you there?

Mr. FISHER. About a week ago yesterday.

Mr. CARLING. For one day or half a day?

Mr. FISHER. For half a day.

Mr. CARLING. In that time you would not be able to go over the farm.

Mr. FISHER. I walked pretty nearly over the whole farm. I confess a very large portion of the back of it you are not able to walk over dry shod, for it is absolutely in a state of swamp and I did not care to go through it. I walked over the improved portion and went to the highest part where you can look over the whole surface. There is not, except by the pond in front of the farm, any part over which I did not cast my eye. I walked over the farm in such a way as to ascertain the character of the soil, the lay of the land and the necessity of that drainage to which I have alluded. I was informed by some of those working there—some were digging drains—and I asked them where the outlets were to be, through which the water was to be conducted.

Mr. CARLING. Would it not have been better to ask Professor Saunders.

Mr. FISHER. Unfortunately Mr. Saunders was not there, and I am speaking of what came under my personal observation.

Mr. HESSON. Scores of others have been there.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member for Perth can reply to me if he wishes, after I am done, but in the meantime I intend to go on with my statement. As I was saying, one of the first necessities on a farm where drainage is required, is to lay out a careful and accurate system, and not a spade should be put in the ground, not a shovelful of earth should be turned out towards the completion of that drainage, without an accurate, elaborate and careful system having been adopted. I say positively that the work being done to day in the drainage of that farm, is not being done in the fulfilment of any such plan for the drainage of the whole farm, and that the result will be that a large portion of the work will be thrown away, and will have to be done over again, when an accurate system of drainage is being laid down and carried out. I have a few words more to say with regard to the estimates which the Minister gave us. I understood him to say that the annual expenses of the central farm and the four branch farms would be about $35,000. I have taken up the report of Professor Saunders, as to the way in which the experimental farms were to be organised, and I find that certain officials are to be employed. I have made enquiry with regard to the salaries of those officials and I find that the director is to have $4,000 a year. The assistants, according to the general statement of Professor Saunders, are to receive $1,200 a year apiece, and I do not believe that competent men of more or less scientific attainments can be procured at anything less. That gives $8,400. An accountant, I suppose, will be required, to keep the books and look after the financial affairs of this very large establishment, and I put him at $1,000. Putting everything at the lowest estimate which I possibly believe the work can be done for, I say that ten ordinary laboring men will be required to conduct the work of the farm, and putting them at the low wages of $250 a year, we have the sum of $2,500, leaving out of account such men as the head gardener, who would certainly be required in careful horticultural experiments, and leaving out also two or three laborers of a better class than those who could be procured at the price I have stated. Then I take the four branch stations and I put the directors at $1,500, and I do not believe the Minister has been able to get them at anything less. I see that those four branch stations are to have four assistant directors, and I put their salaries at $1,200 each, the same as on the central farm. I estimate three hands on each of these farms, which is a low estimate, because they are intended to be farms of from 200 to 600 acres; and if they are carried on properly, as a government farm ought to be carried on, three hands cannot work them. But I give the Minister the benefit of the count, to make the amount as low as possible. I find that altogether $29,700 will be required, simply for salaries and labor, without making any estimate whatever for ordinary expenses, for implements or seed, or artificial fertilisers, or any of the ordinary expenses of a farm, which, we know, in the case of a government farm, will amount to a much higher sum than they would under ordinary circumstances. Taking those expenses at what they might be taken at, in the case of an ordinary man making his living by farming, the Minister's estimate of $35,000 will go nowhere near covering the annual expenditure. I regret to find that the estimates of the Minister are, as I believe, mere guesses at what he hopes may be brought about. I do not consider that such an estimate of expenditure ought to be put before Parliament, and I believe, when a serious increase to our charges such as this is proposed, we should be furnished with all the details, either known or estimated, so that when questions are asked or criticism is vouchsafed the whole scheme can be put before Parliament, and it can be shown that the estimates are based on well ascertained premises. I have ventured to make these remarks because I am interested in this scheme, and I am sincerely desirous that it should be pushed through to a successful conclusion. I believe it is in the interests of agriculture that some means by which experiments can be made and put before the country should be established by the Dominion Government, and it is because I am desirous of seeing this scheme successfully carried out, and carried out so that we may get full value for the money we expend, so that the farmers may be benefited by the expenditure which will chiefly fall upon them, that I am drawing the attention of the House and of the Minister to these matters. I say that he should make a careful estimate of what he is going to do before he puts his hand to the work, otherwise, I regret to believe that this new venture will involve us in an expenditure which we cannot at present estimate, and that before long this work will bring discredit on the very class for whose benefit it has been instituted, as well as discredit upon those who have undertaken the work.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. CARLING. My hon. friend seems desirous of finding fault with the estimates which have been made with regard to the central farm and farm stations, and particularly desirous of criticising and finding fault. I am glad the hon. gentleman has visited the farm, and I should be very glad indeed if other members would pay it a visit and see it for themselves. I think if they do so they will find that the farm is a very suitable one, and one which is well adapted for experimental purposes for the Dominion of Canada. I have not undertaken this matter without thorough enquiry and examination; for, in addition to Professor Saunders, who is a man in whose judgment everyone who knows him will have very great confidence, I employed an expert, a gentleman who has been valuator for the Huron and Erie Loan Society, and has examined the different farms which that society are taking as security for loans in the Province of Ontario as well as other parts of Canada. They spent a week in examining the farm of 460 acres; and the men who were with them took their spades and dug down into every ten acres on the farm. I think what they say about that farm has more value than what has been said by the hon. gentleman; and if the House will allow me, I will read the report of Professor Saunders and Mr. Barclay, the gentleman whom I employed as an expert, which was made to me after they had visited several farms in the neighborhood:—

"While inspecting the many farms which had been offered to the Government for sale, we examined also some other sites in the immediate neighborhood of Ottawa. Among these there was one which impressed us very favorably at the outset, on account of the beauty of its location and its nearness to the city. This property comprises about 400 acres in all, known as lots I, K, and lot L on Concession B, and consists of four separate farms and several smaller detached pieces owned in greater part by Messrs. Booth, Warnock, Stackpole, and to the Fellows estate. It is situated in the township of Nepean, about two and a half miles from the public buildings, fronts on the Rideau River road, and occupies a commanding position overlooking the city of Ottawa. We have carefully inspected these properties, examined the soil and sub-soil at different points on each lot, and find these lands to be possessed of most of those special characteristics which would, in our opinion, be needed in a central experimental farm. On the larger portion of the land referred to, there is a deep, dark, sandy loam, with a sandy sub-soil of good quality, becoming lighter in spots on the higher knolls; there is also a large area of clay loam and some heavier clay, both of the latter with a clay sub-soil. There are a few large trees at different points on this property, and a very pretty grove on one side of it near the canal—farther than this there is no original forest. There are, however, about seventy acres of second growth timber in all, on the rear end of three of the lots, and about forty acres of this land is wet and swampy, but it is so situated as to admit of easy and thorough drainage. On this lower land we found a variety of soils, including muck, peat, clay and sandy loam which, when cleared and drained, would form pasture land of excellent quality. There is a field on the front and another along the northern boundary, on which there is some surface stone and an occasional outcrop of rock covering, in all about fifteen acres, most of which might be made fit for cultivation by removal of the surface stone, or otherwise used for experiments in forest tree planting or for pasture. The buildings on the farms are chiefly frame, and are of comparatively little value. There are good gravel roads approaching the property, and also on two sides of it, and all the front portion slopes nicely towards the city. A branch of the St. Lawrence and Ottawa Railway runs across the lower part of the front field, in which a switch or station could be conveniently located. The south-eastern side is bounded by the Rideau Canal. We are of opinion that this farm is well adapted for the purposes of a central experimental farm station; that it includes within its area a much larger proportion of the required conditions than any other property we have seen, and agree in recommending that this site be selected for the purpose named."

That is the report of these gentlemen, made after they had spent a week in examining the farm; and the hon. gentleman who has just been there two or three hours, comes to this House and condemns the land, and says there are 150 or 200 acres in it that are unfit for cultivation. I have been very careful in making my estimates. I stated a few nights ago in the House that the total capital expenditure on the farm would be $160,000, and I feel satisfied that it will not exceed that amount. I stated that the capital expenditure on the experimental stations in the Maritime Provinces, and in Manitoba and the North-West, and British Columbia, would each cost something like $35,000; I stated that the total cost of the experimental farm and the stations, when completed, would not exceed $300,000 in all; and I stated that the annual expenditure would be from $35,000 to $10,000. Now, I think, it is hardly fair for the hon. gentleman to find fault with this site, and to criticise the estimates as he has done. They are not mere guess work with me at all. They have been gone over very carefully by Professor Saunders and by the officers in the Department, and I am satisfied that the farms, the buildings, the implements and stock required to commence operation will not exceed in cost the sums I have named. We expect to have some returns from the farms which we have not estimated at all, and if there are any more expenditures, we expect that the returns will meet them.

Mr. FISHER. What sort of returns do you expect?

Mr. CARLING. We expect to produce grain, fruit and stock, which, it is quite likely, we shall sell. As to the salaries which are to be given to the officers on the experimental farms, I may say that the officer at Guelph receives $2,000 a year and a house, and is supplied with everything that is used on the farm, with all living expenses, including servants, &c., which really amounts to much more than the salary we are paying Professor Saunders.

Mr. FISHER. You are paying Professor Saunders $4,000 a year?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. FISHER. What do you estimate you have to give to the assistants?

Mr. CARLING. $1,200 a year each for an agriculturist, a horticulturist, a chemist, a botanist, and an entomologist. I have carefully gone over these estimates, and they are not haphazard ones. The hon. gentleman has stated that there is no plan or survey of this farm, and that we are working according to no system. The hon. gentleman must understand that we only got full possession of the farm this spring and a most thorough survey has been made. We did get something over 100 acres late last fall, but we were not able to do anything until the early part of May. We have done some surface draining; we have sent men to dig ditches in the lower part of the farm, and I am glad to say that most of the water has been entirely removed; and if the hon. gentleman will go there next week and look at the lower part of the farm, I think he will be able to inspect it without wetting his feet. I have had it from Professor Saunders and from other agriculturists who know what they are saying, that some of that land is the best land on the farm. On the whole, I am satisfied that we have selected one of the best sites that could have been had in this or any other part of Canada.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to correct the Minister on one or two points. I understood him to say that I condemned this farm unequivocally. I would draw his attention to the fact that I said that the front portion of the farm I considered a good portion, that the situation, being near Ottawa, was satisfactory, and when I condemned the back portion I stated what is its present condition. Without a further outlay of $100 an acre, it would not be in proper condition for the purpose required.

Mr. CARLING. Did the hon. gentleman give an estimate? I have an estimate from parties that $25 an acre would do for the removal of stumps and stones and complete the surface drainage.

Mr. FISHER. I have done the same kind of work, and have seen a great deal of it done. I give that as my estimate, and am willing to abide by what I say. I believe the Minister's estimate is too low, and that we will find him next Session asking his thousands of dollars to put the work through; if not, I am willing to stand corrected and to be proved by my statements to have been a false prophet. But if I should prove to be correct, as I am convinced I will, the hon. gentleman can give me the credit of knowing something about the subject. I am glad the hon. gentleman confirmed my estimates as to salaries and other charges; and from this I draw the conclusion that, as estimates, my figures were thoroughly correct. Of course, I am not possessed of the knowledge the hon. the Minister has, and I have made no comparative calculation, but I find my figures about the same as those of the hon. the Minister himself. He expects to have returns from the farm. I do not believe there will be any return. I believe that any animals he raises will cost him more than he will get for them, and that is one of the reasons why he should not have such a large area of land; 450 acres is too large to be used in experiments. If the hon. gentleman intends to raise grain or hay for sale, and to sell cattle, he will be entering into competition with the agriculturist, and he will be doing a work that is not justified by this report of Mr. Saunders, or by the experience of other authorities. It is not advisable that the Government should enter into ordinary agricultural operations, and undertake to raise agricultural products for sale. What they should do is purely experimental work, and such work could be done perfectly on one-half the present farm. I was told by a gentleman who, I believe, is an authority, that the Government could not get the front half without getting the back half.

Mr. CARLING. That is not the fact. We were anxious to get more if we could.

Mr. FISHER. I had hoped there was a loop-hole of excuse for the hon. gentleman, but I find there is not. Had there been the excuse I have stated, I was going to urge on him the advisability of leaving the back part of the farm in the state it is until he could sell it again, as the expenditure on it, I claim, will be very heavy and the results not at all commensurate.

Mr. CARLING. I am glad to get the hon. gentleman's advice, but I can assure him I have had the advice of numbers of agriculturists as experienced as he. I have consulted the best agriculturists and the most experienced farmers with regard to the course we have taken. The hon. gentleman is perfectly in order in criticising the Estimates, but I wish to assure him that I have not done this blindfolded, but have taken every precaution.

The hon. gentleman made a statement about drainage and about expense. I would ask him if he made an estimate of the cost of ditching and under-draining the farm?

Mr. FISHER. I stated I did not consider myself at all an authority on drainage matters.

Mr. CARLING. I understood the hon. gentleman to say it would cost $100 per acre to put the farm in good condition. I am told by people who understand agriculture, and who understand draining and the clearing of farms, that $25 per acre, or $10,000 or $12,000 in all, will be sufficient to put it in first-class condition, cleared and ditched; those parts which require thorough under-draining may cost somewhat more. With regard to the size of the small farm, we may want to produce seed grain and distribute that, either free or at a small charge, to different parts of the Dominion. If we grow wheat, barley, oats, we want land. We do not want to confine ourselves to ten or twelve acres, but may want to raise 100, 500, 1,000 bushels of wheat for distribution in different parts of the country. We are experimenting in fruits, and to grow the different sorts of fruit it requires land. If we have stock it will require pasturage; it will require hay, oats and food of different kinds. I think the hon. gentleman will see that when the farm is in thorough working order, instead of having too much land we will have too little.

Mail subsidies and steamship subventions..... $196,300

Mr. DAVIES. Is the hon. gentleman, the Minister of Finance, in possession of information which justifies him in continuing the service between Pictou and the Magdalen Islands?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES. I am led to believe there is no result commensurate with the expenditure.

Mr. WELSH. Is this subsidy to a line of steamers to run between Franco and Quebec of $50,000 for commercial purposes or for steam service?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. For commercial purposes.

Mr. WELSH. I object to large sums of money being granted to steamers for commercial purposes. Steamers are plenty, and wherever there is employment for them they can be had. Every harbor is crowded with steamers and ships. This is handicapping private enterprise. How can any private individual do business in competition with a line subsidised out of the pockets of the people. It is a bad principle. If it was to carry mails or passengers, I would say it is all right, but, if it is only for commercial purposes, I object altogether to giving subsidies and handicapping the shipping, and I think the members of the Government ought to look at this and view it in the proper spirit. What room is there for private enterprise? They are handicapped. How can a man contend against a subsidised line? It is a bad policy.

Mr. ELLIS. I agree with the hon. gentleman, so far as this trade is concerned. There is in fact no trade at all. The Province of Nova Scotia and the Province of New Brunswick are the only Provinces which, to any extent, export the produce of this country to France, and the total amount of the exports from Quebec to France last year was $26,000. Why should the merchant vessels of this country be handicapped by subsidies given to steamers in a case like this? No doubt the wooden steamer will go down fast enough, but it is not fair that those who are engaged in that line of business should be pushed to the wall quicker than they otherwise would be by a subsidy granted to a foreign line. If there was a trade one would not object to it, but the whole of this proposal to subsidise a line between Quebec and France is purely sentimental. The whole of our imports last year from France might have been carried in one steamer. They only amounted to about one million and a-half, and I do not see what benefit this subsidy is going to be.

Mr. CARLING.

The CHAIRMAN. Carried.

Mr. MITCHELL. Not quite. Not yet. I want a little information on this. I want to know first whether there is a line of steamers running between Quebec and France?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. What line is it?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is a contract entered into between an eminent French firm at Havre, the Messieurs Bossière, who are large ship-builders and ship-owners. Attempts have been made before to establish this line of steam communication between Canada and France, and those attempts have not been successful. These parties came forward, and they were the first who had abundant means who proposed to establish that line, and they said that, if we were prepared to enter into the contract, they would put their vessels on the route. One is now on the way from France here, and others will follow.

Mr. MITCHELL. How long does the contract run for?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. For five years, but the Government are in a position to terminate it at the end of two years if they desire to establish a line of faster steamers between France, England and Canada.

Mr. MITCHELL. Of course, if the contract is entered into, we have simply to carry it out, but I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. member for the city of St. John (Mr. Ellis) that the objects of the vote will not compensate us for the amount of money we pay. I also agree with the hon. gentleman from Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Welsh), that, if this provision is purely for trade purposes, it is not very desirable to subsidise steamers which may interfere with the legitimate business of the people of our own country. There is another thing to which I desire to call attention. An annual subsidy was given in former years for the section of the country which I have the honor to represent, and that has been wiped out. That is in accordance with the treatment I have had from this Administration. They have cut out everything in which the county which I represent was interested, and I notice in the last item of this class of votes that a vote of $7,500 which was supposed to be based on the subsidy of $1,500 a voyage, for five voyages of steamers from a port in New Brunswick and in Prince Edward Island to Great Britain and continental ports, is cut out. I do not know whether that is because the member for Northumberland—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will explain that when we reach it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I want to discuss it on this item. If the port of Quebec, St. John or Halifax is to get a vote, I want to know why the vote for the port I represent is to be cut out? If the principle is laid down which has been defined by the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Welsh), that private enterprise ought not to have to compete against subsidised steamships, I can understand this, and I have no objection to the vote being omitted; but if you subsidise a line to run from Quebec, Halifax, St. John or Montreal for pure purposes of trade, then I think it is an injustice to the port which I represent to strike that out.

Mr. WELSH. I want to point out to the Minister of Finance that the principle of the Government, as I understand it, is to encourage home industries. That is an admitted platform of the Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. WELSH. Now, I want to ask if you are aware that the French Government subsidise their boats, give them so much a ton and so much a mile for every mile they run. Those boats get a subsidy for every mile they travel and for every ton they measure. Then, on this side, you subsidise these people out of our taxes, and how are you protecting our industries? You are ruining our industries. When I objected to the grant of $7,500 to a steamer to run to Prince Edward Island simply for commercial purposes, I objected on principle. I still object. I object to subsidies being paid out of the pockets of the tax-payers of this Dominion for simply commercial purposes. There is enterprise enough in the people of this Dominion, and there is enterprise enough in the shipping of the world, to enable us to export anything we have to export at the lowest rates of freight which have been known since the world was made. You can get vessels to come in and carry your grain away for 4 pence a bushel to any port in Europe. What is the use of subsidising steamers for commercial purposes when we know that there are thousands of steamers seeking employment in every port of the world. I ask the Government to look at the position. They are going back on their principle. They are not protecting home industries; they are ruining home industries; and I say, as far as commerce is concerned, let there be some room for private enterprise.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no disposition on the part of the Government either to discourage home industry or to interfere with private enterprise, and this vote does neither. It is proposed with a view to establish trade, and there is no mode by which we can foster home industry better than by extending the trade between our own country and other countries. I confess that this vote is to a certain extent experimental. It is not being tried for the first time. Parliament, Session after Session, has ratified this vote. Effort after effort has been made to establish this line, and I had every reason to suppose that this was sanctioned by both sides of the House, as it has been sanctioned by both sides. Consequently the vote being here, and parties being prepared to take it up, a contract was entered into. We can terminate that contract at the end of two years if we desire, but if the contract proves to be advantageous, it can be continued for five years. If it should not be productive of good results, if it should prove that that trade cannot be established, if business cannot be provided sufficient to warrant the expenditure, having made the experiment fairly, it will be dropped. Had the hon. gentleman from Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Welsh) established, by his enterprise, a line between Canada and France, this would not have been proposed. If at any moment I found that the hon. gentleman or any other capitalists in this country were prepared without public aid to perform this service, we would be prepared to drop this subsidy; but there is such a thing as fostering an enterprise of this kind until it develops such a trade as to enable it to stand upon its own feet. It is only an experiment, and if the experiment fails, as the experiment did fail in the case where a subsidy was given to the line which ran from the county of Northumberland and touched at Prince Edward Island, it will be dropped. The experiment of the subsidy that was given to the line that ran from the county of Northumberland and touched at Prince Edward Island, failed. The hon. gentleman, holding, I suppose, views very different from those he has expressed to-night, succeeded in inducing Parliament to try this experiment. It was tried, it failed, and it has been abandoned. So, I say, that if this experiment should fail to accomplish sufficient results, it will be abandoned. But there are many cases in which an infant enterprise is fostered in the first instance by a subsidy, in a short time it becomes productive and develops such a trade that it can stand alone, and the country gets the benefit of it. There is no disposition to use a dollar of public money in a subsidy for any purpose provided private enterprise is found sufficient. I am a little astonished at the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Welsh), who has been supporting a subsidy from this Government to interfere with private enterprise in establishing a line of steamships between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. Why does he do that? Why does he not oppose this $10,000 that is paid by the Dominion of Canada to sustain that steam communication? Why does not he ask us to leave that to private enterprise? It is a short distance, and there is a great deal of communication between the two points. The hon. gentleman knows this vote is asked for the purpose of maintaining a communication, and of enabling mails, passengers and business to be carried on between the island and the mainland. I think the experiment is worth being tried, and if it does not succeed it will be abandoned.

Mr. WELSH. The hon. gentleman asks why I do not oppose a subsidy for steamers between Charlottetown and Picou, and Summerside and Shediac, connecting with the railway service and also carrying the mails. Will you get any steamers to carry the mails for nothing? Let the hon. gentleman look at the position in which he has placed himself. When I first got up I spoke of commercial purposes alone, but I said I would go in for a subsidy for carrying mails and passengers, but if the hon. gentleman should propose to leave to private enterprise the encouragement of trade between these two points I would be better satisfied. But they will have their own rates for freight. We have not got our own charges, we have to run at their rates. When we granted $7,500 to a boat running between Northumberland and Miramichi, calling at Prince Edward Island, it did a great injury, for a bogus company was got up and ruined half of New Brunswick. No man can deny that. It was called a great fraud in the country. Now, I want to know what this line is going to develop? What have we to send from Quebec to France that you cannot get 50 vessels to offer for every one you want? What kind of boats are they? We have heard nothing about their build, nothing about their character. I would like to know some of these things.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think if the Government have entered into a contract for a period of five years, that contract ought to have been laid upon the Table, and the authority of Parliament ought to have been obtained for it. An annual vote is one thing, and a vote for a term of five years, involving a quarter of a million, is another matter.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will lay the contract upon the Table.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think in all cases where the faith of the country is pledged for a number of years, the special sanction of Parliament ought to be sought. The vote we now pass is, on the fact of its being merely a yearly vote; but after the explanation given by the hon. gentleman, it means certainly $100,000, and possibly $250,000.

Mr. MALLORY. I think the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Welsh) is quite justifiable in bringing this matter up. I think that not only does it interfere with private rights, with those who are engaged in the shipping industry, and handicapping some of our own ship-owners, but we must consider it in the light of our great National Policy and our system of taxation. Our Customs taxation in this country has thus far prevented any profitable trade being developed between those countries, and now this subsidy is asked to aid a line of steamships to develop trade between them. Now the Minister of Finance asks us, after having placed the taxes so high upon those commodities which are proposed to be exchanged between these two countries, as virtually to shut them out—he asks us to tax ourselves indirectly again in order that we may establish this very trade that we have shut out by our high taxation. I maintain that the principle is a wrong one. If they want to establish a profitable trade between these two countries let them reduce the Customs taxation to such an extent as that a legitimate and profitable trade will spring up between these two countries, instead of fostering a hot-bed plant, as we are now asked to do.

Mr. MITCHELL. I want to set the Minister right on two points. He says this is the first experiment to establish trade between the St. Lawrence and France. Probably in his absence from this country, he has forgotten the facts. A subsidy was given for a line of steamers between France, Montreal and Brazil, and between Brazil, Montreal and France. Well, Sir, the thing proved a total failure, and collapsed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That was a different project altogether.

Mr. MITCHELL. I admit it was a different project, but it was a project to open up trade between France and Canada, like this one, and it failed. I hold that this is money thrown away. If the Government have entered into a contract for five years, I say the contract should have been laid before the House. We should have had an opportunity of considering it before the Government pledged the faith of the country for five years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will find that the contract is subject to the approval of Parliament.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then before Parliament is asked to vote this money, that contract should be laid upon the Table, that we may see it and let Parliament pass upon it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will be laid upon the Table.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then I think he ought not to press this vote until Parliament has had an opportunity of seeing the contract. But there is another thing. He says the vote to which I referred, and which has been dropped out of this estimate of the ordinary votes, has proved a total failure. I have yet to learn that it proved a total failure. It is true that the member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Welsh) condemned it. That was because it was competing with his own shipping interest, and it may be wrong to subsidise vessels to compete with private trading enterprises. But why should one port, and that one of the leading ports of the Province, be dropped out of the list. There are lines from a great many different ports, St. John, Yarmouth, Port Mulgrave and others. There is a subsidy granted between Canada, Antwerp or Germany, $24,000; also between Canada and Germany, $24,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Have you not supported those votes year after year?

Mr. MITCHELL. I have not supported them year after year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Did you oppose them?

Mr. MITCHELL. I tolerated them; but I oppose them now, if you want to know it. I say it is time that we reviewed our positions in regard to these subsidies. In view of the enormous debt being rolled up, millions a year, it is time we should pause and reflect. And if we are to have a single port, a port which I represent, dropped from the list, I think it is high time we should pause and consider the subsidies, and obtain explanations before we vote them. I do not think we should vote them without receiving further information. The contract under which the Government have incurred this liability should be laid on the Table, and we should have an opportunity to consider whether we should affirm or cancel that contract.

Mr MALLORY.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). I trust the hon. gentleman will consider the propriety of the proposal made by my hon. friend.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have stated that I will lay the contract on the Table, and the hon. gentleman knows there will be an opportunity on concurrence of dealing with this just as readily as now, and at this late period of the Session it is inadvisable to have two discussions. I will lay it on the Table to-morrow, and on concurrence the hon. gentleman, if he wishes to take the responsibility of interfering with this vote, or the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, will have an opportunity of moving and learning the sentiment of the House upon the subject.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). The hon. gentleman is not very reasonable in asking the committee to pass the vote, and afterwards bring down the contract, when he says the subject can be raised on concurrence. There is no time to discuss questions on concurrence. From the little experience I have had, I know that votes are carried unanimously on concurrence, and that a man who rises to discuss a vote is scarcely tolerated.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman ought to know that concurrence is the only effective way of dealing with a vote. Does he mean to say that the vote of this committee would be a satisfactory mode of dealing with this item. It would not. It is with the Speaker in the Chair that substantial objections are made. I said I will produce a copy of the contract to-morrow, and if the hon. gentleman will take the responsibility of making a motion on concurrence, the sense of the House will be taken on the subject, and it will then be disposed of.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). I am sorry to hear the remarks of the hon. gentleman. He is well aware that it is in Committee of Supply that this matter can be properly discussed. We cannot discuss them now because the contract is not before us.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have said what the contract is.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). On concurrence a member has only the opportunity of speaking once. The matter cannot be discussed as in committee, when information can be elicited. The request of my hon. friend is an extremely reasonable one.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say it would be a reasonable one if the vote were introduced by me for the first time, but this is a vote taken year after year, and it is one which the hon. gentleman himself has supported.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no ground for taking the objection. I have stated distinctly that a copy of the contract will be laid on the Table; it is not a new thing. It was passed without question last Session. Under these circumstances I say there is no ground for objecting to the passing of the vote now, in the way in which it has been passed year after year, when an opportunity will be had on concurrence, with the contract on the Table, of dealing with the matter with the Speaker in the Chair, which is the only way in which it can be disposed of.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am extremely surprised at the attitude of the hon. gentleman. He says it has been passed by the Committee year after year. Everybody knows that the probability is that no division has been taken on the votes year after year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will, perhaps, allow me to tell him that a contract was made.

Mr. MITCHELL. When?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Two years ago, when the work was undertaken to be performed.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is the first time I have ever heard of it, and the contract was never laid before this House. The hon. gentleman has read my hon. friend a lecture because he had chosen to criticise public measures, and it has been intimated that we have not the right to do so, because they were passed in former years; and yet the Government now tell us for the first time that a contract is made, and still ask us to pass the vote, although they have not chosen to bring down the contract. The hon. gentleman has promised to bring down the contract in this case to-morrow; let the vote stand till to-morrow, until we have had an opportunity of examining the contract. The hon. gentleman says that concurrence is the right time to consider this subject. I say it is not the right time, and that the proper time is when the House is in Committee, when we have free discussion and we are able, time after time, to meet the objections put forward from the Government benches. We have a right, and it is our duty, to discuss the subjects, and I say it is only reasonable that the vote should stand until the contract has been laid on the Table and we are able to judge whether it is a prudent and judicious contract or not, and I can tell the hon. gentleman that this is the first time I ever heard of the contract being made. I have asked explanations with respect to those two votes of $24,000 each. Are we going to squander money in this way when the public necessities demand the utmost economy? I say the hon. gentleman should not ask at this hour of the morning, in the absence of the information which the Committee has a right to expect, to pass this vote and tell us that to-morrow he will bring down the contract.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will allow this item to stand.

Subsidy for steamers between Liverpool and London or both and St. John, N. B. and Halifax, N. S. $25,000

Mr. KIRK. This item stands in the same relation as the other one, and the same objection can be urged against it. I agree with all that has been said by those who have spoken in regard to the subsidies paid for steamers to do the work that should be done by private enterprise. I think this item should also be allowed to stand.

Mr. KENNY. I am thoroughly in sympathy with my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) as regards the great depression which exists to-day in our shipping. As a ship-owner, I can say that the great depression which exists in the Lower Provinces is mainly due to the fact that our shipping is so unremunerative; but I think our duty here is to facilitate in every way our export trade, and we cannot accomplish that unless by means of steam. I regret to have to say that sail as a competitor with steam has now no chance on the ocean; I regret it because I am a sailing-ship-owner myself. But we must do all we possibly can to cultivate our export trade, for the more we increase our exports, the more we cheapen the articles of export to those who consume them at home. We cannot develop a large export without regularity of shipment, and that can only be attained by the use of steam. I think it is certainly in the interest of the whole Dominion, and especially in the interests of the Lower Provinces, that this vote should be retained.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would ask the Government for some information, as to whether there is a contract, whether there is a line of boats running, because the House at present has no information, and I think we ought to have it.

Mr. KENNY. Steamers have been running for about two years.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like the Government to give the information.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman should accept information from whatever source it comes, but whenever an hon. member rises to give him information he objects.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am willing to get any information which the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) can give me, but I think we have a right to expect that a member of the Government, who proposes to commit us to this vote, should give us information as to whether this line is running, whether a contract has been entered into, with what company, and how often the boats run?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried, carried.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is not carried. I ask for that information.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried, carried.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask for that information, and it has a right to be given.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not expect when I brought down this estimate—the hon. gentleman knows that I have not been in the country for some time—and I did not think it was necessary for me to arm myself with all the minute details of a subject on which the hon. gentleman is the last man who should be ignorant. He professes to be a representative of the Province of New Brunswick; he knows that this matter was brought down to the House years ago by my predecessor, Sir Leonard Tilley; he knows that he strenuously urged this vote for New Brunswick, that it was adopted, and that the estimate has been voted year after year. If it had been a new service I would have been prepared to give the fullest explanation, but absent from the country as I have been, I did not expect from a gentleman who professes to represent New Brunswick that he would attack a vote which was specially urged upon the House for the purpose of promoting trade between the port of St. John and the Mother Country.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman has chosen now to read me a little lecture, but I tell the hon. gentleman that while I do represent a constituency in New Brunswick, I am not a representative of St. John, —

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL—and I was not aware that a line of steamers runs from St. John, and receives this subsidy. I asked for information which I have a right to ask for, as a representative of the people, when money is being voted; and it is the duty of the Government to be prepared with that information, when they ask this House to pass this vote. The hon. gentleman thinks I should be the last to oppose the vote.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not opposing the vote, and I will not allow him to put words in my mouth.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. But I want information about it—that is what I want—I have the right to get it, and I shall oppose the vote until I do get it. The hon. gentleman refers to Sir Leonard Tilley having put this motion on the paper. Sir, there are many things that Sir Leonard Tilley put on the paper that I did not approve of, and I say that with all due respect to that gentleman. In relation to this vote, if it is a proper vote, it is one upon which information should be given; and I want to see what the result of this expenditure of public money has been for this line of boats between the ports of St. John and Halifax and Liverpool, and the other ports of England. I think we have a right to this information, and the hon. gentleman is not going to bluff me down by putting words in my mouth that I do not approve of.

Mr. LOVITT. The junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) speaks about taking out goods and bringing back goods on this line. I would like to ask what goods they take out. Does not the largest part of their cargoes consist of deals—subsidised vessels carrying deals.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think this was a vote in which the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) took so much interest.

Mr. MITCHELL. And which you cut off.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And which he induced this House to carry; and we are to understand that the public policy which animates the hon. member for Northumberland is not what is good for Canada or Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, but what suits his own little nook in the particular county he represents. It has come down to that. The hon. gentleman professes to have been a leading public man in this country—

Mr. MITCHELL. Did I?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is a leading public man in this country.

Mr. MITCHELL. Thank you.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has specially concerned himself with the Maritime Provinces; he has been an able representative of the interests of the Maritime Provinces, and yet he undertakes after one o'clock in the morning, to obstruct me in carrying through a vote for St. John, New Brunswick, and Halifax, on the ground that he had been sitting and voting this money year after year without knowing what was done with it, or what expenditure was being made. Did he never hear of the Furness line of steamers being put on between St. John and Halifax, and performing this service? Why, the hon. gentleman, as a great journalist, as a man whose special duty is to know what is going on in the country, especially with regard to important sections of the Dominion, like Halifax and St. John, ought not to be required to be told by me what service these boats are performing. I am glad the hon. gentleman attacks this vote from the Maritime Provinces from that side of the House. I am glad he is not sitting on this side to attack the interests of the Maritime Provinces, and the consideration which is being given to promote trade and business between the ports of St. John, New Brunswick, and other parts of the world. The hon. gentleman threatened obstruction in a defiant manner—that he would block and obstruct these estimates and weary people out, who ought to have an opportunity of going to their beds—he threatens to adopt such tactics as those for the purpose of simply delaying the progress of public business, and why? Because the Government have tried the experiment of establishing a line of boats. I suppose over-persuaded by the hon. gentleman, who brought a man here and used his influence to induce the Government to try this experiment, and failed. And, as has been said here, not only did the scheme fail, but the man whom the hon. gentleman induced the Government to aid in establishing it has also failed, and under these circumstances the service which was found to be useless was abandoned. And, forsooth, because this is the case, the hon. gentleman is going to wreak his vengeance not upon me—though he may give me a little trouble—but on the Province from which he comes, and of which he has been a representative in this House.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is not the first time that I have heard the bullying, and blustering, and overbearing conduct of the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, we may as well call a spade a spade. The hon. gentleman has got the wrong customer to deal with when he attacks me in that way. I have done as much for New Brunswick as it has been in my power to do, and he cannot put on me that I am endeavoring to obstruct what is in their interest.
Mr. MITCHELL.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You are doing it now.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not doing it now, and you are stating what is not strictly correct.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MITCHELL. How is that for order. You are stating what is not strictly correct. I say I can appeal to New Brunswick as you can appeal to Nova Scotia, that you have always looked after her interests, and looked after them well, and at the expense of the rest of the country. This very year, the hon. gentleman, by the great influence he has been able to impress the Government of the country with, has obtained for his Province a tariff which is purely a Nova Scotia tariff, at the expense of the Province I represent. He attacks me because I find that a port that I represent is omitted from the Estimate, which annually got a subsidy in former years when I supported the Administration. I do not oppose the vote, but I have the courage of my convictions to tell the Government of which he is a member that they are wrong. The hon. gentleman is in error if he charges that I am opposing the interests of New Brunswick. Sir, I am looking after the interests of New Brunswick. But what has that got to do with this question? He says I ought to be the last man not to know that there was a Furness line. I did know it, but it was my duty to have the particulars, and it is my duty to come down and give us the particulars—what service it is rendering the country, who owns the line, and who is going to get our money? That is the information the hon. gentleman should give us, and the information that I want to get. The hon. gentleman further charges against me that at this late hour of the evening I chose to obstruct, as he is pleased to call it, the public business of the country, because I wanted to know why a vote applicable to my county was cut out. I tell the hon. gentleman I do not obstruct it. I have sought information and I want information; I have a right to get information and I will get it if I can, notwithstanding that the hon. gentleman, from his high and exalted position, which he has attained by the aid of men who sit around him, and by the aid of myself among them, tries to put me down; and if he thinks he can do that he has waked up the wrong passenger. I do not alone oppose this vote because a vote has been cut out of my county, but I think we have a right to get information which we have not got.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have given the hon. gentleman the information. I told him that the Furness line of steamers, which have been carrying on communication for years between St. John and Halifax and Liverpool—

Mr. MITCHELL. How many are there?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Enough to perform the service very efficiently.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, we ought to know about it, and we have no right to be bullied, and overpowered, and brow-beat because the hon. gentleman happens to occupy a distinguished and exalted position in this country.

Mr. LOVITT. I have asked what kind of goods these steamers take from St. John? I want the information, so I would ask the hon. member for St. John; perhaps he can give it.

An hon. MEMBER. Deals.

Mr. KENNY. I do not want the Committee to adjourn under any such impression. These vessels carry a large amount of grain from Halifax. I cannot give the figures, because I do not deal in figures unless I have them correct—ly. But I did not expect that there would be any hostility or objection to such a vote as this, and, therefore, I did not obtain the information, but I know that they carry grain, and that the trade is developing rapidly.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I believe that two of the steamers run between Halifax and St. John. In one respect they are a great convenience in bringing London goods to Halifax and St. John. In going back they carry the ordinary cargoes, taking the best trade they can get.

Mr. MITCHELL. It looks very much as if this Administration should take the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) into the Cabinet, because he is the only man who can give us any information on these votes.

Subsidy to steamer between Campbellton and Gaspé, $12,500

Mr. MITCHELL. Can the hon. gentleman give us any information about that steamer?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The information is contained in the item.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is mighty little contained in the item except that the money is voted.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is voted year after year.

For steam communication from Port Mulgrave, at the terminus of the Eastern Extension Railway to East Bay, Cape Breton. $6,000

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like to know where East Bay is?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You had better read the item.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the least you could do is to answer me civilly and give me the information.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I beg to inform the hon. member for Northumberland that Cape Breton is an island lying near Nova Scotia and separated from it by the Strait of Canso.

Mr. MITCHELL. We know that on a celebrated historical occasion there was a great deal of goose cackling, and hon. gentlemen's clapping of hands may lead to the same thing. But the hon. gentleman, in informing me that Cape Breton is an island is giving me fiddler's news. What I asked was where East Bay was?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. After passing through the canal you come to Sydney, and then you come to East Bay.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the hon. gentleman had given me that information in a civil manner, as it is his duty to do, he would have got on faster.

For steam communication from Halifax to Murray Harbor and Charlottetown. $3,000

Mr. WELSH. I am very sorry there has been any hard words about this matter. I do not speak of this as a party question at all; I spoke of it in the interest of the country, and I think I spoke reasonably enough when I said the Government were giving money away to injure our own industries. I abstained from speaking on any one of the votes belonging to any other part of the Dominion than Prince Edward Island. I want the Minister of Finance to look at this. The Government say that their policy will make all the Government railroads pay—the Intercolonial Railway, the railway from Halifax to Pictou and the Prince Edward Island Railway. They have a railroad on Prince Edward Island. They carry their freights at low rates by those railways, and by their through rates they can get them carried by any sailing vessel or by any other means of carriage. Yet the Government are absolutely injuring themselves by subsidising a line by water from Halifax to Charlottetown, to oppose their railway communication. Here is a steamer running from Halifax to Charlottetown to carry freight in opposition to the Government railroad. I call the attention of the Government to this.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will make a note of it, and see if the item cannot be struck out next year.

Mr. DAVIES. Will the hon. gentleman also take a note of the necessity for having the vessel inspected. The vessel's name is the M. A. Starn. She will be the coffin of some people before long.

Mr. KENNY. I regret that no provision has been made for the subsidising of a line of steamers for carrying mails, passengers, and freight between Halifax and the West Indies. The Finance Minister will remember that for the last thirty years we have had a line of steamers plying between Halifax, Bermuda and the West Indies. Unfortunately for Halifax and the trade of Nova Scotia, these steamers were withdrawn about twelve months ago, and recently the Dominion Government advertised for tenders for this service. I am informed that tenders were received, and I expected that some provision would have been made for that service in the Estimates this year. I regret no such provision has been made, and I am sure the disappointment I feel will be experienced by my constituents, and, especially, the people of Halifax. This is not simply a local or a sectional question, but one which concerns the trade of the whole Dominion. I admit the hardy fishermen of Nova Scotia are more interested in it than any other class of our community. At the same time, I press the matter on the consideration of the Government, not from a local or sectional standpoint, but because I believe such a line would be of advantage to the whole country.

Mr. CAMPBELL (Kent). I am glad the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) has brought this matter up and pressed it on the attention of the Government. It was a great omission on the part of the Government not to have brought down in the Estimates a subsidy for a line of steamers from Halifax to the West India Islands. The trade we might have between Canada and the West Indies is shown in the very interesting report presented to this House by Mr. Wylde, the commissioner appointed by the Government. It shows that the trade which would grow up between Canada and the West Indies, if there were a regular line of steamers, would be simply tremendous. The immense quantity of flour, wheat, pork, and fish which they use are the very things we have to sell, and the reason this trade has not grown up is simply that there has been no regular line of steamers between these points. It is folly to talk of subsidising a line of steamers running between Canada and the old country, France, England or Germany, when there is an immense quantity of boats now that are anxiously waiting for grain cargoes, and the moment a man has a quantity ready to ship, there are a dozen vessels ready to charter, at very low rates, and it seems wrong to subsidise steamers to carry such produce as that. I hope this matter between Canada and the West Indies is one the Government will take up, as it is very important, and instead of granting nearly $200,000 to subsidising steamers running here and there, we should encourage our West Indies trade, the most important of all.

Mr. JONES. When my colleague speaks on matters connected with the trade of the country with which he is familiar, his opinions, outside of this House as well as inside, are received with every respect; but when the hon. gentleman speaks on a subject with which he is not familiar, then shall I endeavor to show upon what grounds I differ with the conclusions at which he arrives. He has said that the citizens of Halifax would be much disappointed if the Government would not bring down a subsidy for a mail steamer,

The hon. gentleman is in no way connected, directly or indirectly, with that business, and if he had desired to place information fairly before the House, he should have informed them that every merchant in the trade in Nova Scotia has signed documents to the Government remonstrating against any appropriations for such purpose. The hon. gentleman should have informed this House that, for a certain time, there was a steamer running to the Island of Jamaica but those who were familiar with the trade found the result of that steamer interfering with the trade was just this: that carrying perishable articles like fish, which is our chief article of export, it had the effect of keeping down the price of fish always in the West India market; that is to say, in a market like Porto Rico, where we ship 150,000 to 160,000 quintals of fish a year, a steamer would require to take about 8,000 or 9,000 quintals of fish every trip, of two trips per month. The hon. gentleman is not aware, and he cannot be expected to be aware, of the fact that the arrival of such a quantity of fish, which is necessarily an article of a perishable character, in the West Indies, would cause the price to go down at least $1 a quintal, but my hon. friends who, like myself, have been engaged in that trade for the last forty years, are aware of that fact. I say deliberately that, if the Government had desired to inflict a blow on the fishing interests of Nova Scotia, they could not more decidedly injure that great industry than by establishing a line of steamers to take out their products in that way. We shipped about 750,000 quintals of fish to the West Indies during the year. We have the whole control of that market now. We have no competitors now. We have none from the United States. We only have competitors from the Island of Newfoundland. So, at present, it may be observed that that trade is fully and thoroughly developed. There were 410 clearances from the Province of Nova Scotia for the last year, up to the time at which I left home. Those were in small quantities, and were distributed over the various islands, were distributed to suit the wants of the different islands. It is a trade which has grown up, and the islands have grown familiar with it; three or four or five cargoes may go to one island and be distributed at different ports without sensibly affecting the prices, but, if all those were to go to one port, the result would be to lower the price, as I have indicated, a dollar a quintal. Not only has it the effect of lowering the price, but of keeping it down, because, no matter what the condition of the market may be, when the steamers are known to be close at hand, if the market is bare, the people will not purchase because they will say that the steamer will arrive in a few days, and that will prevent a rise in the market. Thus the price cannot advance, but at present, with the element of uncertainty which is necessarily connected with an enterprise of that kind carried on by sailing vessels, the moment the market is bare, the fact is cabled to Halifax, to Lunenburg and to Lockeport, and there arises a competition for our fish, and these people who buy it have to pay a higher price for it. This is not a new question. It has been discussed in Halifax for some time, and it has been discussed by people who were not in any way interested in the trade itself. It is only outsiders who were interested in getting steamers subsidised, who have been about this House for some time lobbying, in order to get a subsidy for their steamers, but there is not a merchant in Halifax who has been in business for forty years, as I have, who will not condemn the appropriation. The hon. gentleman could get a petition signed for any purpose the Government chose, but it would be a misappropriation of Government money, notwithstanding that. I was told in Halifax some time ago that some years before I had voted for an appropriation to assist in building up this trade. At that time the Cunard boat was running to St. Thomas and Bermuda. We had no intercourse with them, and were not aware of the injurious effects of a steamer running with a large cargo. Subsequently, it was changed to Jamaica, and at that moment we found the injurious effect of the whole thing, because it reduced the price of fish in the West Indies, and, therefore, in our own markets. Therefore, we were glad when the subsidy was withdrawn by the British Government. The hon. gentleman behind me referred to a commissioner who was recently sent to the West Indies to obtain information regarding that trade. If that hon. gentleman had been aware of the nature of that report, we would have placed very little reliance in it. Will the House believe that in that report, in regard to the business with which the hon. gentleman is connected, the flour business, they say that their flour could not be introduced, because in the West Indies they will not have northern flour; they have always taken it from New York where it has been made out of southern wheat, from an old idea, I do not know whether it is right or wrong, that flour should be made from wheat raised in a southern country. But would the hon. gentleman believe that that report, upon which no doubt he has based his calculation, with reference to the value of his own article in the West Indies, is based altogether on false premises.

Mr. JONES.

Mr. KENNY. I do not know that.

Mr. JONES. The hon. gentleman who stands up here as the pretended representative of that class is not in a position to represent that class, and I say, with all deference, that he really does not know what he has been talking about. Is he aware of the currency which prevails in those islands? Is he aware that, when they gave him sales from Porto Rico, they had to allow 22 per cent. discount? Was he aware that when he was reading those reports of the sales in Cuba, it was necessary to take from 10 to 15 per cent. off? There was not a single point in that report of Mr. Wyld that would give a correct statement of the value of the article at that place. I did not intend to go into this subject at this length, and only desired to answer my hon. friend who seems called upon to-night to champion a trade in which he is not at all interested. If I were to bring before the House of Commons anything connected with the dry goods, my hon. friend, as a leading merchant, would doubtless inform me that I knew very little about it, and he would be quite correct. If I were to lecture the hon. gentleman in reference to a business with which he has been connected all his life, he would question me, and I should not be able to give an answer. This question was brought before the Board of Trade in Halifax, and a gentleman proposed that the Government should be asked to give a subsidy, but he could not get a seconder for his resolution; but since I left there a short time ago, they had another meeting called without any information being given—

Mr. KENNY. Oh.

Mr. JONES. I say yes—without any information being given to the public, and at that meeting only one merchant interested in the trade was present. It was principally composed of brokers, and men who were not representative men in any capacity. There were not over four or five men at that meeting whose opinions were worth anything in a matter of this kind, and these men passed a resolution calling upon the Government to give a subsidy. As I knew all these gentlemen intimately, and knew the motives which influenced them, I was satisfied they were not even representative men, like my hon. colleague, who was a leading merchant in the county. They were not merchants at all, and were in no way interested in foreign trade. There is another way in which this would be an injury to fishing vessels engaged in the West Indies trade. The moment the fish are caught they are brought to the shore and made during the rest of the season. Then those vessels turn around with their captains, crews, and the amount invested in this industry, and they go into the West Indian trade for the rest of the year. These men are employed in carrying out a business which they themselves have created, and the hon. gentleman wants to wipe their trade all out by putting on the steamers. Then these vessels bring back cargoes of salt, which is the one great article of necessity for the fishing interest. Now, if they did not bring back this salt as a return cargo, without any expense to the owner of the vessels, what would be the result? Why, they might, and I dare say my hon. friend has that in view, be compelled to bring back salt at a high rate of freight to Halifax, and the fishermen would have to pay 50 per cent. more for their salt. My hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) who is engaged in that trade, perhaps, to a larger extent than almost any other man in Nova Scotia, will bear me out in that view. It would be a fatal blow to everything connected with that great industry. Then again our fishermen require to consume a large quantity of molasses. How is that going to be brought back from the West Indies? The hon. gentleman is not familiar enough with the trade to be able to know that molasses is not brought back from the West Indies in these steamers; they cannot put a number of tiers, one on top of another in the hold, because the bottom tier would give out before they reached home, and a large quantity of the molasses would be destroyed. But they are brought back in small quantities, two or three hundred puncheons at a time, and in that way a fair exchange is made, and business is kept up, and is being constantly developed. And the hon. gentleman now asks Parliament to take the public money, to which the ship-owners and the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces contribute a portion, and run a rival line of steamers against an interest in which we ourselves are concerned. It only arises from the hon. gentleman's want of information on the subject. He may have that smattering of information which I may have of the dry goods business, but it will be nothing more than a superficial knowledge after all. It is just that knowledge that any man may pick up of a business without being familiar with its details. I say these articles are necessarily of a perishable nature. A few years ago the town of Annapolis made great efforts to send their apples to the London market in large quantities by steamer. On one occasion they sent a cargo of 10,000 to 15,000 barrels to the London market, the largest market in the world, and what was the result? The result was, that such a large quantity of a perishable article arriving there at once, had the effect of putting down the price two or three shillings a barrel; the farmers and fruit growers of the western part of Nova Scotia came to the conclusion that it was better for them to send their apples down to Halifax and ship them by the Furness line, by the Anchor line, by the Dominion or the Allan line, sending on two, or three, or four thousand barrels a week, and distributing them in different ports. Therefore, this shipment, with the exception, I believe, of one or two cargoes of 8,000 or 9,000 barrels, has been carried from Annapolis since then, for the most part in small quantities, just as we distribute our fish through the West Indies. A vessel goes to one port, and, if it does not suit her to sell there, she goes on to another port or island. But a steamer going to one port must land there, because she cannot visit one after another. The ports of the island are too small, and the steamer cannot reach them, and, consequently, the expense that would fall upon the removal of these cargoes from one port to another, would fall on the value of the fish itself. Of course, I pardon the hon. gentleman, because it arises entirely from his want of information on the subject, but he will see, in a matter of so much importance, that this is a peculiarity of the trade which can only be thoroughly understood by those who have been long in that business, and the hon. gentleman will see that if the Government were to step in, and, by a subsidy, put a line of steamers between Nova Scotia and the West Indies, they would be inflicting a fatal blow upon the large fishing industry of the Lower Provinces. They tried it once before with some other steamers. They tried it to Brazil and it failed. They ran just as long as they had a subsidy, but when that failed the steamer could not run, because there was no return cargo. These steamers go from New York, as the hon. gentleman mentioned, and they take cargoes of goods, carry them all through the different islands down to St. Domingo, and there they take them out at a much lower rate because they can get the articles cheaper. It would cost as much to send the flour of my hon. friend to Halifax, as it would to send a barrel from New York to the West Indies. Therefore, a steamer would have to carry that flour for nothing from Halifax to the West Indies, to be in the same position that it would be in carrying it from New York to the West Indies. Therefore, my hon. friend will see there is an insuperable objection against a line of steamers such as he proposes. If the Government were disposed to give a subsidy large enough to pay all the expenses, then a steamer could run. The hon. gentleman is not aware, perhaps, that return cargoes, are only procured in certain ports of the West Indies. Vessels that go from New York go to the large ports, Havana or Kingston, and bring back a cargo composed of everything that is produced in a tropical country. Everything that is produced in a tropical country finds a market in the United States. They send there rum, logwood, pimento, coffee and sugar, and beyond all other things their fruit. Cargo after cargo of fruit is shipped from the West Indies to the United States. It is nothing uncommon to see half a dozen cargoes of bananas, fifteen or twenty thousand bunches each, arrive in New York in one day. What would be the result of five thousand or two thousand bunches arriving in Halifax? They would be thrown over the wharf in one week, for they would spoil. Unfortunately, it is one of the peculiarities of our position, that we have no market for the products of the tropics—only a market for their sugar when it can be obtained there, and that is only during a certain portion of the year. The steamers will, therefore, have to depend entirely upon the subsidy which the Government give them, and not on any legitimate business either one way or the other. While they will be an injury to every industry, they will take from the taxpayers of the country that subsidy which will alone maintain them. Therefore, I for one, and every West India merchant in Nova Scotia, the men who have developed that trade, the men who understand that trade, who have been in that business for forty or fifty years, the men who supply the fishermen—the fishermen and everything connected with that great interest, which is the greatest we have to rely upon, will rejoice indeed to know that the Government have not made an appropriation for what I will call an unnecessary object.

Mr. KENNY. This is a great night for Halifax. The astounding announcement has been made by the senior member for Halifax that all the world is laboring under some great delusion, that it is absurd to suppose that steam is any longer to be the motive power by sea, and he has made this announcement in the Parliament of Canada in solemn conclave assembled. So says the senior member for Halifax, because he has told us that the West India trade, and if he desired to be logical he must apply his argument to every branch of our commerce, cannot be carried on by steam. How is it to be carried on? Is it to be carried on by vessels propelled by electricity, or by some new motive power never heard of? No, but by schooners and brigantines in the good old fashioned way of fifty or a hundred years ago, the same as was used by our grandfathers and great-grandfathers. We know that the British people are quite contented to pay a line of steamers to transport their mails, passengers and freight to the West Indies. We know, at least I believe, that France subsidises a line of steamers from that country to the West Indies. We know there are several lines plying from the ports of the United States to the West Indies, doing a large and increasing trade.

Mr. JONES. Without any subsidy.

Mr. KENNY. Without any subsidy to-day, although they had a subsidy when they started.

Mr. JONES. Never.

Mr. KENNY. Some of them had. The trade is done by steamers; yet it is reserved for the senior member for Halifax to tell all those people and all those nations that it is all folly, that they are laboring under a great delusion; and, therefore, I think so wonderful a discovery warrants me in saying that this is a great night for Halifax. My hon. friend says that I am not interested in the business, because I do not happen to be a West India merchant. I tell him that I am interested in every branch of commerce in which my fellow-citizens are interested, and I do not pretend to say that my criticism of commerce is limited to one branch in which I happen to be personally engaged. The hon. gentleman has truly said, in his reply to some remarks made on this side of the House that the West India business is a very important business. Its importance was recognised by the Provinces of Canada even before Confederation in 1866. But in looking at this question of steam communication between Canada and the West Indies historically, I find one of the most interesting episodes of it is to be found in Hansard of 1876, when this question about trade relations—mind you, our steam relations—was brought to the notice of this House at that time.

Mr. JONES. I gave you that.

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman was not interrupted during his observations, and I hope he will not interrupt.

Mr. KENNY. Allow me to give it to the Committee. Hon. gentleman will hardly believe when I read this speech, and after listening to the speech which the hon. gentleman has to-night addressed to the committee, that the Mr. Jones who spoke in 1876 is the same gentleman who spoke to-night. The hon. gentleman was then pleased to say:

"I am very glad that the resolution of my hon. friend from South Waterloo has elicited such favorable opinions from the hon. members of this House."

I must explain that the resolution of the hon. member for South Waterloo was in favor of steam communication between Canada and the West Indies. Mr. Jones continued:

"It is a question in which the people of the Maritime Provinces are not alone interested, but the people of the whole Dominion."

That is a statesmanlike view of it—

"I am satisfied myself that at the present moment there is no question which so much interests the manufactures of the Dominion, as the establishment of a large and continuous trade with the West Indies, British and foreign. I am persuaded that we have many articles in Canada for which the people of the west would be good customers; such as beef, pork, flour, lumber and other such produce. If we desire to build up trade between the two countries, it must be by the exchange of such produce with such West Indian products as can be utilised here either for manufacture or direct consumption."

The hon. gentleman then refers to the sugar duty. He says:

"There is nothing at the present time which so much tends to hinder a satisfactory or successful line of commerce between the tropics and the Dominion, as the unsatisfactory position of the sugar duties. Until they are adjusted or placed on a basis that will more fairly represent the value of the raw material, as compared with that of the refined article, it is out of the question that any line of trade can be successfully undertaken. The House must understand that it is only for a very short time that returns can be obtained from the West Indies, and it is, therefore, of the greatest possible importance that, during the six or seven months, we should have such a demand in our market for the raw material from the West Indies as would furnish traffic between the two countries. We have plenty of produce to supply them and build up a satisfactory trade with them, if the sugar duties were adjusted on a proper basis, so that we could bring back that article as return cargo."

Mr. KENNY.

Which they are doing to-day—

"With regard to our communication with the islands at present, my hon. friend fell into a mistake when he said it was not well conducted; it is done by the Cunard line, and everybody knows the Cunard line is very well managed. Of course there are other channels for communication with the West Indies—besides cable communication—but I do not look upon this question so much from a mail point of view as from a trade standpoint. I believe at the present moment, when the manufacturers of the Dominion are looking for customers for the articles which they produce, nothing would so much tend to relieve them as foreign trade; and if we can successfully establish such a trade with a country like the West Indies, and bring back a return trade, it is our best policy."

When hon. gentlemen contrast these utterances of 1876 with the utterances with which the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) has been pleased to favor the House during the present Session, they will hardly recognise that it is the same gentleman. In fact, I should find it difficult to understand the difference myself if the hon. gentleman had not given me an explanation. He has been pleased to say in the speech which I quoted on a previous occasion, that he occupies a disagreeable position in this House, and I presume it is difficult for him, with all his abilities, to make an agreeable speech so long as he occupies a disagreeable position in this House. It may be due to the different experience which the hon. gentleman has had in addressing the House from that side or from this; that is for him to explain. Now, the hon. gentleman has been pleased to refer, in very complimentary terms, to the way in which the Cunard service was performed. Hon. gentlemen will remember that the whole discussion was with reference to the steam service between the West Indies and Canada, and I have, for the information the House, to call their attention at a very remarkable document which appeared in Halifax newspapers only a few months ago, and which was sent from Halifax and addressed to the Lords of the Admiralty. Its existence was not known, and its discovery was—I cannot say exactly accidental—but rather remarkable. It was addressed to the right hon. the Lords of the Admiralty, and it reads as follows:—

"To the Right Honorables the Lords of the Admiralty:

"MAY IT PLEASE YOUR LORDSHIPS:

"We, the undersigned merchants, ship-owners and other inhabitants of the city of Halifax and Nova Scotia, fearing the possibility of any renewal of the lately expired contract"

The very contract of which he spoke so favorably in 1876—

"for the conveyance of the monthly mails between the city and the Island of Jamaica by steamer via Bermuda, respectfully beg to draw your attention to the following facts:

"That there now exists opportunities for postal steamer communication with Jamaica by way of the United States"

Mr. HESSON. He is going that way every day.

Mr. KENNY—

"at least twice a week, and within nine days; and that to pay for an additional monthly communication of this nature, is of no possible convenience whatever.

"That any subsidy so paid is nothing less than a subsidy in another form for merchandise traffic; and, by heavily handicapping legitimate traders, is a serious interference with private enterprises.

"That your petitioners have large amounts invested in the carrying trade between the two countries, which has been most injuriously affected by undue competition with a subsidised company; and they, therefore, pray that your lordships will not sanction the renewal of the recently expired contract, or the making of a new one.

"And, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray."

Now let us examine this document a minute. The hon. gentleman says that we must not have steam communication between Canada and the West Indies, because we can send our mails by way of the United States. Now suppose any member of the Imperial Parliament were to get up in his place and oppose a subsidy to the West Indian Royal Mail line, on the plea that the mails could be sent by way of the United States, or any other foreign country, what influence or effect would such an argument have in the Imperial Parliament? It would have none, and I imagine that such an argument will have very little effect here. Does my hon. friend not know that the passengers and freight would follow the mails, and that, consequently, our whole trade would pass to a foreign country?

Mr. HESSON. That is where he wants it to go.

Mr. KENNY. Now, Sir, according to this document we must not have a line of steamers, because they would interfere with the merchandise traffic, and heavily handicap legitimate traders. I wish the House to remember that these steamers were built by Mr. William Cunard, especially for that trade. They were legitimate traders, they enjoyed a subsidy for thirty years, and still the hon. gentleman does not hesitate to handicap Mr. Cunard, by using such influence as he could bring to bear on the Imperial Government, to prevent the renewal of the subsidy to the Cunard line of steamers. I regret to say that the petition was successful, and that the steamers are now idle in Halifax. I do not say that that fact is solely due to that petition, but I say that that was the prayer of the petition, and that the steamers are now idle.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who signed the petition?

Mr. KENNY. As regards the petition itself, the hon. senior member for Halifax, if he were so disposed, could give us the history of it. It was signed by gentlemen in the West India trade, in Halifax and other parts of Nova Scotia, and forwarded to London. I may say that I was asked to sign that petition, but I refused to do so on the ground that I might, with as much propriety or justice, have petitioned this Legislature to withdraw the subsidy from the transatlantic line of mail steamers, because those mail steamers subsidised between Canada and Europe carried freight, and thus interfered with my sailing ships. Now, such an argument as that would, I think, be considered a very selfish argument, and would not have very much influence here. In fact, my hon. friend knows that we are competing with other nations that conduct their business by steam; he knows that our greatest rivals in the trade are the Americans, and that our trade is actually drifting by way of New York. In 1876, when he addressed us, he seemed to have a great deal of sympathy with the manufacturers of Canada. He told us that there were many products that we could export from this country, and the hon. member for Kent has forcibly brought that matter under our notice this evening. Is not the manufacturing power of this country ten times greater to-day—I think I am within the limit—ten times greater to-day than it was in 1876? If that is the case, our export trade is of infinitely more consequence now than in 1876, and, as I said this afternoon, nothing is more important than that we should exercise every ingenuity, and consider carefully every scheme, and obtain every help we can from the Government to develop our export trade. How are we to benefit our Canadian fishermen, and manufacturers, and merchants, and compete in the West India markets with Americans who carry their goods by steamers, unless we, too, have steamers? We all know that to-day, to ensure commercial success, regularity and expedition are most important, and that regularity and expedition can only be attained by the use of steam. It would really seem as if my hon. friend had very much changed his opinion since he spoke in this House in 1876, when he was so careful of the manufacturers of this Dominion. He does not seem to have the same regard for them to-day as he had in those days. He said that, possibly, I might be influenced by the fact that my larger ships would be able to carry more salt from the West Indies if the steamers were put on. Suppose I were to say to him, in reply to a remark like that, that if I am influenced by my large ships, he may be influenced by his small vessels, and that his sole desire may be to help his small vessels. It does not matter who suffers—whether Mr. Cunard, who has more invested in those steamers than my hon. friend has in sailing vessels, and who is entitled to equal consideration, may suffer. It does not matter who may suffer or how much they may suffer, so long as my hon. friend's schooners do not suffer. That would be about the style of his argument. My hon. friend says that steamers cannot reach the West India market from Halifax. Well, if steamers can reach the West India markets from the United States, I do not see why they cannot reach them from Halifax.

Mr. JONES. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. KENNY. I took down my hon. friend's words—steamers cannot reach the West India markets from Halifax.

Mr. JONES. I do not know what you took down, but I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. KENNY. I wish to be accurate; I do not wish to misrepresent what my hon. friend said, but I understood him to say that the West India trade could not be conducted from Halifax by steamers.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. KENNY. Well, is it not very strange that the West India trade can be conducted from New York by steamers, and yet it cannot be conducted from Halifax by steamers? The hon. gentleman says we cannot carry our flour to the West Indies, because our flour is not suitable. That is a matter of much interest, and I had an opportunity of meeting recently one of the largest millers in this country, who told me he had shipped a large amount of flour to the Bermudas, and that he could compete successfully there with the American millers. If our millers can compete with the American millers successfully there, I do not see why they cannot do the same in the West Indies market; and I believe they have energy and enterprise sufficient to gain a portion of that trade. Now, the hon. gentleman says that the West India trade must be conducted by sailing vessels, because it has been conducted in that way for so many years. We all remember when the trade of our great inland rivers and lakes was conducted by sailing vessels; but is that any reason why we should go back to that system to-day? Our coasting trade is conducted by steamers. We are subsidising steamers to go in every direction; and why do we do so? To extend our trade; for if we do not extend it, we shall lose the trade we have, because we are competing with other people who are using steam. On land we will not go back to the old stage coach, notwithstanding the romance connected with that mode of travel. Neither are we prepared to go back to the sailing ships at sea. In fact, I contend that we must have steam if we hope to compete successfully with other nations who carry on business by means of steamers, and even with steamers we shall have a very keen competition for the West India business. We must be prepared, not only to meet it with articles suitable for those markets, but we must be prepared to keep them supplied regularly with our goods; and that regularity can only be obtained by the use of steam. It must be self-evident that sailing vessels to-day cannot compete with steamers, and I say it very regretfully, because I am as much interested in sailing ships as almost any person in the Maritime Provinces. If my hon. friend advocated a line of steamers in 1876, I say every reason that existed in 1876 exists in 1887 as regards our manufacturers, with still greater force. Therefore, if it was in the interest of the public to subsidise a line of steamers in 1876, it is equally or more so in 1887. Therefore, I say that the senior member for Halifax must have been all right in 1876 and all wrong in 1887. My hon. friend has been pleased to refer, in not very complimentary terms, to what I consider a very valuable report of the commissioner who was sent to the West Indies—a report which I will not at this late hour take up the time of the House by referring to at any great length, or by giving any of the useful statistics it contains. But it is a very useful document, and if hon. gentlemen have not had time to read it, I would advise them to do so at an early date. The fact alone that the United States export something like 1,500,000 barrels of flour to countries south of them, warrants us in saying that there is a large development there for our products. As my hon. friend said in 1876, we have ample products to supply them. All we want are the facilities for intercourse, and those we can only have by means of steam. My hon. friend stated truly that the gentlemen who are engaged in the West India trade, and of whom I desire to speak with every respect, signed this document with him. That, of course, is true; but he must not tell us that nobody else has any knowledge of the resources or capabilities of Halifax or Nova Scotia. I contend that there are no people in Nova Scotia so much interested in the development of that steam trade as the fishermen of Nova Scotia, and it is especially in their interest that I urge it, as my hon. friend on the other side urged it in 1876, when he had the fishermen's interests so much at heart, when he was prepared to do so much for them, which he is not ready to do to-day. After my hon. friend has advocated steam, in 1876, then I am sure I am warranted in following the admirable example he then set. I say, it is in the interest of the Nova Scotia fishermen, that a line of steamers should be plying between Canada and the West Indies. I do not speak from a sectional standpoint on this subject, it is one in which all the country is interested. Our greatest rivals are the Americans, who conduct their business by steam; and unless we do the same we shall lose what remains to us of our West Indies business. I have a number of statistics which I have compiled, but I feel I have detained the House sufficiently already at this late hour of the sitting.

Mr. JONES. I do not wish to bring this question before the House at another stage, and, therefore, shall briefly reply to the hon. gentleman. If anything were required to show the truth of the position I took, I have it in the argument from the speech of the hon. gentleman. I stated he was dealing superficially with a question of which he had no practical knowledge. I spoke respectfully of his position as a merchant in his own line, and I stated that if I were to offer an opinion in any matter connected with the dry goods trade, that hon. gentleman would say I was speaking on a subject I knew, practically, nothing about. He referred to my speech delivered in 1876. I referred to that speech myself, and gave my reasons, but the hon. gentleman did not know that the whole condition of affairs has changed since then. Our manufactures were then comparatively cheap, but to-day we cannot send them to the West Indies to compete with the manufactures of England.

Mr. KENNY. Does the hon. gentleman say that cotton and woollen goods are dearer now than they were in 1876?

Mr. JONES. I tell the hon. gentleman that we have to compete with goods there, on which we have to put a duty of 35 to 40 per cent. to keep them out of our own market. With regard to the sugar duties, they have been so arranged that our West India trade is practically killed. The hon. gentleman should know, and he does know, if he would only give the information, that the consumption of the West India sugar has been falling off every year, and that our refineries, which used to consume 60 or 70 per cent. in the old days, now only use one-third, and the difference is due to the fact that we use beet-root sugar which is forced into our market by the high bounty system of Germany.

Mr. MITCHELL. And on these subsidised steamers too.

Mr. JONES. Yes, on these subsidised steamers. If they wish to benefit the West India trade, they would put a heavy duty on beet-root sugar. The hon. gentleman said he was satisfied with the Cunard line. The hon. gentleman did not know, and he does not appear to know now, that the Cunard line ran only to Bermuda and St. Thomas, and not to the fish market at all; it did not in any way compete with us. The hon. gentleman is only displaying his ignorance again in speaking on a subject of which he knows nothing. He says the Americans are forcing our trade, and that they are our natural competitors. Again he displays his lamentable ignorance. I wonder he would stand up in this House, and venture to risk the high reputation which he properly enjoys in his own community, by expressing an opinion on a subject with which he is not at all familiar. We have no competitors in the West Indies for our fish trade; there is hardly a quintal of American fish sent there at all. I would invite the hon. gentleman to get some information to lay before the House, to which business men will pay some deference, before he proceeds again to discuss this question. The hon. gentleman asks what would be thought in England of allowing mails to go through a foreign country? What did the English Government do with regard to their mails to Bermuda? Did the English Government not discontinue the subsidy and send all their mails via New York to Bermuda? If England can send her important documents to Bermuda, connected with her military and naval depot there, surely the Dominion can allow its correspondence to go by the same route, but, perhaps, the hon. gentleman is not aware of that circumstance either. The hon. gentleman charges me with stating that the trade must be conducted in sailing vessels. I said it had been conducted by sailing vessels, and it must be conducted by sailing vessels to be successful. He referred to the petition which was sent to England on that subject, and said I could tell all about it. Well, I can tell this House that I signed it, and that every merchant in Nova Scotia connected with that great industry signed it. We sent to England and received this reply:

Mr. KENNY.

"I am directed by my Lords to acquaint you that my Lords have no intention of renewing the service in question."

Mr. KENNY. The petition was successful.

Mr. JONES. The treaty had expired, and the hon. gentleman in his anxiety to put me in a false position during the late political campaign, undertook to distribute, under cover with his own circular, a forged document.

Mr. KENNY. I did not.

Mr. JONES. I repeat, with the responsibility attached to a statement in this House, that the hon. gentleman distributed, throughout the late election campaign, with circulars signed by himself and his colleague, a forged document which I will read; and on the only opportunity I had of meeting my hon. friend during that campaign—for he took very good care to avoid meeting me, and I wished to avoid all quarrels, because we had been personal friends, and I desire to continue on friendly relations with him—was on one occasion when he met me, and I drew his attention to this forged circular. I appealed to him as an old friend, as a merchant in Halifax, as a man of high standing, to take the earliest opportunity of disavowing all complicity with such a foul, disgraceful transaction. I thought the hon. gentleman would have thanked me for having given him so early an opportunity of disavowing all complicity with such an outrageous proceeding, but so far was he under the control of his political friends, that he did not do himself that justice he was bound to do. It did not injure me, but I thought that if I had been in the hon. gentleman's position, if my committee had distributed a forged document with my circular, and my hon. friend had brought that to my notice, I would take the opportunity of saying that I entirely disapproved of such a transaction. The hon. gentleman, however, would not take such a course. Here is the document. The hon. gentleman read you to-night the true document, but he did not read the forged document which he distributed with his own circular:—

“May it please your Lordships:—I, the undersigned merchant, ship-owner and inhabitant of the city of Halifax and Nova Scotia, fearing the possibility of any renewal of the expiring contract for the conveyance of the mails between this city and the British Isles by steamer.”

Now, remember, that, in the memo. which he read to you, the words were, “fearing the possibility of any renewal of the lately expired contract.” That was the memorial which we addressed to the British Government with reference to this subsidy, but the hon. gentleman, in his desire to put me in a false position, in conjunction with his friends altered this and put my name to it fearing the possibility of any renewal of the expiring contract.

“And they, therefore, pray that your Lordships will not sanction the renewal of the present expiring contract, or the making of a new one.”

I should never have brought this up had not the hon. gentleman taken the unfair means of attempting to misrepresent me before the House and the country. I have always fought him in a fair and open manner, and he will do me the justice to say that, during the campaign, I never descended to disseminate a forged document respecting him. I hold him as responsible for that as if he had written it himself, because, when it was brought home to him, when he did not expect me to be present, he did not express his disavowal of the position in which his friends had placed him, I hope without his knowledge, and I believe without his knowledge, for I do not believe for a moment that the hon. gentleman would have taken such a course as that. But the position which he took on this question was, as I stated from the commencement, a position in regard to a question about which he knew nothing. There are always people looking for Government subsidies, there are always some hangers-on who look for Government patronage or pap, in order to make a living. They cannot get a living any other way, and, looking at the community in Halifax which is connected with this large industry throughout Nova Scotia, I believe this country would accept the opinions deliberately given by every merchant interested in that trade in preference to an argument from the hon. gentleman who was never in the business, who was not an outfitter, or a purchaser, or a shipper, and was not connected directly or indirectly with any branch of the subject. I appeal to gentlemen who are here whether it is not probable and reasonable that the men who are brought up to the business, and are familiar with every branch of the subject, are more likely to understand it than the hon. gentleman, who knows nothing about it at all. He pretends to speak for the fishermen. What does he know about the fishermen? He was never brought into connection with them in his life, in their daily transactions, such as my hon. friends near me and myself and other West India merchants have been. I cannot say that I have been an outfitter, but I have been a purchaser all my life, and those who signed this document have been outfitting. Who is to be the best judge as to the fishermen, a man who has known nothing about the matter or men who are familiar with the market, have watched all the changes, and from day to day, and week to week, have purchased and forwarded the fish to the places where the consumption warranted it. It is an insult to common sense, and the hon. gentleman must not take such a liberty with reasonable men, and in this Parliament, to deliver his ipse dixit—

Mr. DENISON. I ask whether this debate is in order or not. It seems to be that it is not? I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The language used may be a little strong.

Mr. DENISON. The question is whether we are discussing the Halifax election or not?

Mr. JONES. No one can regret these discussions more than I do. You will find that I have never been the aggressor in any discussion in this House, but when I am assailed, I feel it my duty to defend myself, and, when the hon. gentleman referred to a business that he knew I was connected with, felt bound to stand up as a representative merchant to defend myself and my friends in regard to that matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is that I rise and report the resolution, and the observations are quite pertinent to that.

Mr. JONES. I felt compelled to defend myself in the mode in which I have to-night. I regret it the more because I have had to express strong language with regard to a gentleman with whom I have been intimately and socially connected all my life, and I think I have deserved more from that gentleman than the treatment I have received from him since we have been in this Parliament. I have never, directly or indirectly, made any reference to that gentleman except in a parliamentary sense. He has tried, on the other hand, to put me in a false position several times, and to-night he has crowned his action by a reference to the commercial interests of which I am a representative and he is not. If he claims to be a representative of the cotton interest of this country, I yield to him at once. I know nothing about it. If he claims to be the exponent of the dry goods business, I yield to my hon. friend at once. I know nothing about it. But he must not take such a liberty in my presence, or in the presence of merchants who surround me here to-night, as to imagine that he will be accepted as an authority on subjects in regard to which in his whole life he has had no training. It is not for the advantage of Parliament, or to the credit of the hon. gentleman himself, to attempt to mislead or influence public opinion upon a matter upon which he can have no reliable knowledge. I do not wish further to continue what to me has been a very unpleasant discussion. It is not of my seeking, and, so far as this matter is concerned, I stand up as a representative of the fishing interests of Nova Scotia, and I repeat that if the Government were to give a subsidy and a steamer were to run, it would be a loss of from $300,000 to $400,000 a year to the fishermen of Nova Scotia. The merchants would not lose it, but the fishermen would lose it, and they would be so much the worse in consequence of it. Does the hon. gentleman sympathise with the fishermen? What does he know about them? He has never been brought into contact with them in his business career, and on that ground, as well as on all the details of the measure to which I have briefly referred, the people of Nova Scotia, the fishermen, and the people of Halifax county, will not be disposed to accept the words of the hon. gentleman which have been spoken here to-night.

Mr. KENNY. On previous occasions the hon. senior member for Halifax has reminded me, as he has reminded the member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper), that we, as young members of the House, were not justified in questioning his statements, or the manner in which he referred to hon. gentlemen opposite to him. Now, I am disposed to pay all that deference to that hon. gentleman to which the important position he occupies in this House entitles him, but I would remind him that, if he imposes upon the position which his age entitles him to occupy, it would be well for him to acquire some of the virtues that become the aged and to be more careful in his statements, more accurate in his facts, and more charitable in his language. He has stated that I have been the aggressor in differences that have arisen between us in this House. Did the hon. gentleman imagine I was sent here never to contradict any statements he might make as regards my constituents, as regards—

Mr. MITCHELL. What is that you are saying? I would like to have the hon. gentleman repeat what he said.

Mr. BOWELL. I said nothing to you.

Mr. MITCHELL. I heard the hon. gentlemen use the term "blackguards."

Mr. BOWELL. I did not apply the word blackguard to the hon. gentleman nor to any one else.

Mr. MITCHELL. Did you utter the word blackguard?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not propose to be dictated to by you, nor by any one else. I will not answer you.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is grossly unfair for the hon. gentleman to interrupt a discussion in this way.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the hon. gentleman from Halifax go on.

Mr. MITCHELL. Excuse me. I heard the word blackguard uttered, and I now ask the Minister of Customs whether he uttered it or not. If he says he did not, I accept his statement; if he says he did, let him tell to whom he applied it.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say it to you, nor did I say it to any other hon. gentleman; and I do not propose to be bull ragged by you.

The CHAIRMAN. I would just say that if the hon. gentleman heard it, he overheard it. I think it was not addressed to anybody, but it was a mere interjection of his own to himself, not addressed to anybody. I heard the remark, but it was not addressed to anybody.

Mr. MITCHELL. I rise to a question of order. Did you hear the term blackguard uttered by the hon. gentleman? I put it to you as Chairman, now?

The CHAIRMAN. Whatever I may have heard was not addressed to any person in this Chamber, I believe.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am asking to whom it was addressed.

The CHAIRMAN. I think this thing has gone far enough.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not going to be put down unfairly. I say I heard the word blackguard uttered by the Minister of Customs. I want to know to whom he applied it.

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman will proceed with his speech.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman, I call for a decision in this matter.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You will hear some other word uttered directly, if you do not obey the Chair.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not afraid of you, anyway, not a bit of it. None of your bullying or threatening will put me down now. I want you to understand that.

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. member for Halifax has the floor.

Mr. KENNY. I must ask the hon. member for Northumberland to allow me to go on. I do not wish to delay the House. This controversy has assumed a personal turn, which is very much to be regretted indeed. My hon. friend the senior member for Halifax, has said that I have been the aggressor in any differences which have occurred between us since I entered this House. Now, Sir, I say that is not the case. I never spoke in this House until I had to reply to some challenge which the hon. member had made as regards the elections in Halifax, and the position which I occupy here; and those are almost the only occasions on which I trespassed on the time of this House. I felt when I came here, inexperienced as I was in public matters, bounced so suddenly upon the political stage as I had been, that it would ill-become me to force myself upon the notice of this House. And when the hon. gentleman got up here, and, relying upon his knowledge of parliamentary form, and upon the position which he occupies in this House, aspersed my position and the circumstances under which I was sent here, I felt that, as a man, I was bound to make my statement of the facts before the House, that it was due, not only to myself but to my constituents, to the citizens of Halifax, for I am proud to say that although the hon. gentleman polled 60 more votes than I did in the constituency we represent, yet in the city of Halifax, the metropolis of our Province, I polled more votes than he did, although I was almost an entire stranger, politically, to the people of that constituency.

Mr. KENNY.

Mr. JONES. Railway votes.

An hon. MEMBER. Civil servants.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Jones was not interrupted in his observations, I hope no other interruptions will be thrown across the House.

Mr. KENNY. Am I not right, have I not the liberty as a member of this House, as a business man, to speak to any matter in which my fellow-citizens and the people of Nova Scotia are especially interested? Why, Sir, I should never have come here if my tongue was to be tied, because in expressing my opinions my views might conflict with the views of any other hon. gentleman in this House. Therefore, I have not one word to retract that I have said in reference to the West India trade of Halifax. I believe that while I may not represent the wishes and the views of gentlemen who are engaged personally in the trade, I believe that I represent the interests of the fishermen of Nova Scotia, and a majority of the people of that Province. Now, the hon. gentleman says that I distributed with our election circular, a document which he was pleased to call a fraud—

Mr. JONES. That is true.

An hon. MEMBER. A forgery.

Mr. KENNY—or a forgery, and subsequently in his remarks he stated that my friends had placed the document in these envelopes, and he subsequently said that he thought I knew nothing about it.

Mr. JONES. Yes, I hope so, most undoubtedly.

Mr. KENNY. As regards the first statement, it is entirely inaccurate. I wish to give it such a parliamentary denial as is possible for me to give; because my desire is here not only to adhere to the rules of this House, but to the courtesies of debate, and I give the most positive and emphatic denial that it is possible for one man to give to the statement of another. Now, Sir, in regard to the circumstances under which that document was first brought to my notice. The senior member for Halifax produced from an envelope the document to which he has referred. I never saw it until he produced the circular signed by Mr. Stairs, my colleague in the candidature, and myself. I told the hon. gentleman then what I had stated when I first went into the contest, that I would be responsible for what I uttered, and for what was written over my own signature, and for that only. That was the answer I gave him, and I told him then that I was responsible for the circular which bore my own signature, and I refused to be responsible for anything else. It may have suited anybody on the other side to place these two documents in one envelope and try to do me an injury. It is a strange thing that, in my subsequent enquiries, I found there were few such envelopes in the city of Halifax. Now, I wish to give that statement of the senior member for Halifax, in my own untutored way, my own inexperienced way, as far as parliamentary etiquette will allow, I wish to give it the most emphatic and positive denial. The hon. gentleman, when he made that statement here to-night, had previously met my denial of it. Why, Sir, he accuses me of being the aggressor in any differences that may have arisen between us here. I appeal to the first word I uttered in this House if I did not then express the desire I entertained, and which I have always entertained, and I stated then to the House, that in the Province from which I came we never allowed political differences to interfere with personal relations. I stated that in the House, and yet the hon. gentleman rose here and accused me, a young member, unknown in this House, that I had introduced a Bill here by agreement with the Government, when his own parliamentary experience must have told him that such a thing was utterly unknown and practically impossible. And yet he accused me of having done so; and although I denied it he has never yet withdrawn his statement. As regards strong language, I appeal to the hon. gentlemen who have listened to my remarks on this West India business. I asked the Minister of Finance a question because I would not have another opportunity of doing so during the Session; I asked the question because it was one in which my constituents take a great interest, one in which the senior member for Halifax himself had stated—as I quoted in his speech in 1876—was one in which the people of Canada were largely interested. It suited that hon. gentleman to make that speech in 1876, when the condition of things were exactly similar to that of 1887, yet it suits him to make a different speech to-day; and because I assert my liberty here to speak upon this public question, as I think and believe, he attacks me in a way in which I have heard no hon. member attacked in this House since I entered it. The hon. gentleman has referred to this petition. Had I not a perfect right to bring it here? Was it not a public document? Had it not done a positive injury to the trade of Halifax? Was it not an advantage to our commerce to have those steamers to which reference was made? They were subsidised by the Imperial Government? They involved no tax on the Dominion Government, no tax on the Province of Nova Scotia, no tax on the city of Halifax. The Imperial Government paid the subsidy, and we had the benefit of the use of those steamers for the transportation of our mails, passengers and freight. Such an arrangement, I say, was a palpable advantage to the trade of Canada, and the hon. gentleman's success has been a positive injury to that trade, and especially to the city of Halifax, where those vessels distributed annually $90,000 a year, and it aimed a severe blow at the prestige of our port at the very time we were claiming for it the position of the winter port of Canada. At the very time we were claiming that position it was assailed by the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman has proclaimed in other places, when this matter was brought before him and his fellow-citizens, that he is a merchant first. My doctrine—it is not for me to tell the hon. gentleman what he is to do—but my doctrine is that when a gentleman is sent here to represent a constituency that its interests should be his first consideration, and that is his solemn duty, irrespective of his own investments, whether they are in schooners or ships, West India goods or dry goods. That is my doctrine. Whether the hon. gentleman has carried it out himself or not I leave hon. gentlemen who have listened to this discussion to draw their own conclusion from what they have heard. I regret that this debate should have assumed this very unpleasant turn. I refuse to be held responsible for it, and I can only say that in expressing myself as I did on this West India question—while I do not claim to be an expert on it—I considered that it was my duty as representing Halifax, as the representative of one of the constituencies in the Maritime Provinces, to express those opinions, because I believed the views I entertained were the views of the great majority of the people of the Lower Provinces.

Mr. JONES. With respect to this document to which the hon. gentleman gives such an emphatic denial—

Mr. KENNY. Denial of what?

Mr. JONES. Denial of your knowledge.

Mr. KENNY. I simply said here to-night what I told the hon. gentleman when I met him in Halifax.

Mr. JONES. When I met the hon. gentleman I was handed, from various sources at that meeting, circulars which had been addressed to them, circulars of the hon. gentleman and Mr. Stairs, and with those circulars was the forged document to which I have referred. At the close of the meeting I said to my friend: "Kenny, do you know anything about that? I will do you the justice to say I believe you do not, and that I believe you will thank me for giving you the opportunity to disavow all complicity or knowledge with respect to it." The hon. gentleman, instead of emphatically asserting there that he not only disavowed it but disproved it, gave the answer he has given to-night. I am only responsible for what I put above my own signature and say to the public. The position was this: that this document was circulated with the circulars of the hon. gentleman all over Halifax, and he never disavowed it.

Mr. KENNY. That is not correct.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have been asked a very important question, and, notwithstanding the lateness of the hour I must take the advantage to briefly enter into it. I am sure the House will sympathise with one statement made by the senior member for Halifax, and that is that this has been a very painful discussion. I am reminded of a circumstance which occurred some time ago in Nova Scotia. When Sir Brenton Haliburton was president of the Legislative Council, a gentleman who sometimes made very long-winded speeches without very much in them, concluded a three hours speech by saying that it was very painful to have delayed their honors at such great length, and Sir Brenton said that if it was any consolation for the hon. gentleman to know it, he could assure him that he was not the solitary sufferer. I can assure the senior member for Halifax that, however painful this debate may have been to him, he has not been a solitary sufferer. I will say, without entering into the discussion between those two hon. gentlemen, that the speech of the senior member is one he would not have made in the city of Halifax where both he and the junior member are equally well known. I will say to the hon. gentleman that, high as may be his position as a fish merchant in Halifax, it will be a proud day for him if he should ever attain the position which the junior member occupies in that commercial community, and he will have reached a standing to which he might look forward with ambition, and which he is a long way from reaching at the present moment. I would not have said that but for the overweening terms of reproach that the hon. gentleman again and again has addressed to his colleague for the city and county of Halifax here to-night, language that no position he has ever attained in this House would warrant him in using to a gentleman, whose character commercially, socially and personally, and in every way that constitutes an hon. gentleman, would warrant him in applying to his colleague. I will not say more than that, because I do not wish to enter into this discussion; but I will say this, that the reason why I attach greater importance to the views and sentiments of the junior member than I do to those of the senior member on this very important question,—

An hon. MEMBER. Because he supports you.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER—is that one of those hon. gentlemen who stand here is avowedly and admittedly an interested party. He tells you that he is unwilling that the subsidy shall be given to a line of steam communication between Canada and the West Indies, that he is unwilling that that should be done, because he says it strikes at his own interests ; that he has a few schooners engaged in the fish trade, and he thinks he can make more money out of his schooners and his fish trade—

Mr. JONES. I didn't say anything of the kind.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman didn't say anything of the kind? Why, Sir, his whole argument was that he understands his business, that that my hon. friend does not ; that he is in a position to speak about the matter and that my hon. friend is not. What does that mean? Does it not mean that you are interested, that you have schooners engaged in the trade? The hon. gentleman knows that his whole speech has but that meaning, and he must not shelter himself behind a mere play of words. Sir, how many times in the course of this evening, did the hon. gentleman address the House with endless and tiresome iteration—how many times has he insulted the good sense of this House by saying that he knows all about this subject, and that my hon. friend the junior member for Halifax, his colleague, knows nothing about it? If the hon. gentleman said that once he said it twenty times, and once would certainly have been sufficient against good taste; once would certainly be sufficiently a violation of the language which hon. gentlemen in his position use towards one another; once was enough, and yet, over and over again did he assume a position that he has no warrant to take in this House, by anything he has ever done inside this House or out of it. Now, Sir, I will tell the hon. gentleman that that is one reason that I attach so little value to his utterances. The moment that a man tells me that his own interests are entirely bound up in a project, I assume that I must allow a certain amount of consideration for the extent to which he may become blinded. Now, Sir the junior member for Halifax stands in this position: he occupies a position second to no man in Halifax, or in the Province of Nova Scotia, as a merchant and as a man of high standing.

Mr. JONES. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A man of high character and standing, who deservedly enjoys the confidence of all classes of the community.

Mr. JONES. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As a merchant and a commercial man of high standing and character, that hon. gentleman has again and again been told, representing as he does that great metropolitan constituency as much as the hon. gentleman on the other side, he has again and again been told that he has no right to speak, that his opinions are of no value, because he is ignorant of the subject and unqualified to offer an opinion. That is not the language by which the hon. gentleman will ever advance his own position, or detract from the position of my hon. friend behind me. I say, Sir, he has sneered at my hon. friend behind me and at the Board of Trade of the city of Halifax, of which he is a member, the Board of Trade with which he is in constant association from Monday morning till Saturday night, whose opinion he has again and again brought to bear on the Government of the country, in relation to important questions—for it was only the other night that he stood up and gave the decision of the Board of Trade, on a question touching the business of Halifax, and demanded that the Government and the House should show the highest respect and confidence in the decision which the Board of Trade had arrived at. Why, Sir, has the hon. gentleman brought us here the authoritative dicta of the Board of Trade of the city of Halifax, if they are the contemptible, insignificant, unworthy body he has represented them here to-night—a body undeserving of the respect or confidence of anybody; a body whose opinions are as the idle wind; a body who should be treated, not merely with perfect unconcern but with perfect contempt by this House. But, Sir, much as the hon. gentleman sneers at my hon. friend behind me, contemptuously as he sneers at the Board of Trade of the city of Halifax, there was one man he treated worse than either, one man that he treated with greater contempt, one man upon whom he inflicted a deeper injury than he did either upon my hon. friend or the Board of Trade of the city of Halifax—and that man was himself. The hon. gentleman stood up here and gave us an exhibition of what we might expect from the hon. gentleman; but there was not a sneer he uttered that struck more deeply or incisively upon anybody, than it did upon the speech which he himself had delivered in this House. Why, in 1876, when he stood, not in the cold shades of Opposition, but when he was clothed with the authority of a member of the Administration, when he stood on this side of the House—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend was not a member of the Government in 1876.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not a member but a supporter of the Government of that day, of which he was afterwards a member; and I do not forget that either. I do not forget that that which he told that Government was a vital matter, with reference to the restoration of the West India trade, that that policy which he told the Government was worth four millions of dollars per annum to the Province of Nova Scotia, that that policy which he demanded from that Government, was refused by that Government, and when they refused it he kissed the hand that smote him, and went into that Government and became one of their colleagues. But it was not for that that I rose to address the Committee, but to remind the hon. gentleman that in all his sneers and attacks on the Board of Trade of Halifax, and on my hon. friend the junior member for that city, there was nothing that did not pass by like the idle wind, compared with the manner in which he assaulted his own declarations as a public man on the floor of this House. Then, Sir, he was in favor of a line of steam communication; then, he supported warmly the motion made by Mr. Young to establish a line of steam communication between Canada and the West Indies; then, he declared that it was of the greatest importance to Halifax and the Province of Nova Scotia, as well as to all the manufacturing industries of Canada, that this line of steam communication should be adopted in order to save and maintain that trade, which he declared was worth four millions per annum to this country. Then, Sir, the Canard steamers, which he now sneers at and treats with such contempt, he held up as a line managed in the interests of the country, and performing valuable work for this country. Now, Sir, I say there is no assault the hon. gentleman has made on anybody in this House, or out of it, half as effective as the assault with which in 1837 he has demolished the member for Halifax of 1876, and the statements he then made in this House. I have given the hon. gentleman the reason why I do not attach that weight and importance to his statements that I should be disposed otherwise to attach to them. I may say that the Government, concurring in every word that fell from the hon. member for Kent, who showed, just as the hon. member for Halifax in 1876 showed, the value that this line of steam communication would be to this country—I accept the statements of the hon. member for Kent as sound, and as entirely endorsing the views of the hon. member for Halifax of 1876, and of the junior member for Halifax of 1887. I say that this concurrent testimony satisfies me that the hon. gentleman was then alive to the true interests of the country—that with his friends in power, when he was not in a position to obstruct anything which was put forward by the Government in the interests of this country—I say that I take his cooler judgment then, when he was supporting the Government in power and supporting the proposition made by that Government for the purpose of establishing this line of steam communication. The hon. gentleman says, and says truly, that Nova Scotia has, to a large extent, the fish trade with the West India Islands, certainly with Cuba and Porto Rico. But he knows right well that the trade which the United States now monopolises is a trade that is worthy of the attention of this country, and one that we would fail in what we owe to the country, if we did not attempt to obtain in accordance with the opinion the hon. gentleman held in 1876, when he spoke from this side of the House. The flour trade is one that Canada could take, and it is an enormous trade. The trade in potatoes with those islands is a most valuable and important trade that Canada ought to be able to take. I say that in flour, potatoes and lumber, three most important staples, Canada is well adapted to furnish better than the United States is to-day. In lumber and potatoes we are in a position to more than compete with them. We export lumber to the United States and pay a heavy duty on it, and we export potatoes to the United States in the face of a heavy duty; so that in regard to those articles, and in regard to flour, we have only to adopt proper methods to extend the trade of Canada enormously with those islands. Then, there are all the other articles which attracted the attention of the hon. gentleman in 1876, the products of the manufacturing industries of Canada, which can be expanded to an almost indefinite extent. I may be asked, if these are my views, why there is not a vote here to establish this service? I may say that the Government are quite satisfied that it is in the interest of Canada that this steam service should be established; but the Committee will remember when, on a previous occasion, I stated the position we were in with regard to Spain, I stated that I expected, at an early day, that this Government would be represented at Madrid, and that we would enter into negotiations with the Spanish Government to trade with Cuba and Porto Rico on such terms as would certainly put us on, at least, an even keel with the United States; and the abstention of the Government from bringing down a vote for establishing this steam communication now may be useful to us in conducting those negotiations. I say the Government are fully alive to the importance of this trade to Canada. We are prepared to do everything we can to extend our trade, and I believe we shall be able to extend it to a very large extent with the West India Islands, both British and foreign, and that at an early day in the future we shall be able to ask the House, with greater confidence than we can now, for a vote that will put this trade with the West India Islands on a very satisfactory basis.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 3:20 a. m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 15th June, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PONTIAC AND PACIFIC JUNCTION RAILWAY CO.

Mr. BRYSON moved that Bill (No. 102) respecting the Pontiac and Pacific Junction Railway Company, be placed among the private Bills on the Orders of this day, for consideration in Committee of the Whole, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I object to that motion, as it is contrary to rule No. 22. I object to the Bill being placed on the Order Paper for to-day.

Mr. SPEAKER. If there is any objection, of course the rule cannot be suspended. It will have to go till to-morrow.

CANADA ATLANTIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Mr. TUPPER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 151) for granting certain powers to the Canada Atlantic Steamship Company (Limited), and that the 51st and 49th rules of this House be suspended as regards this Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. TUPPER moved the second reading of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 152) to amend the General Inspection Act.

Mr. JONES. Will the hon gentleman be kind enough to explain the scope of the proposed change?

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is a short Bill, the object of which is to amend the Inspection Act, in so far as the inspection and grading of flour is concerned. It is only introduced at the special request of the Chamber of Commerce of Montreal, backed up by the commercial bodies of Toronto, Quebec and other cities. It was understood that, as it was the general desire to close the Session at an early date, this Bill should stand over; but a very important delegation came to Ottawa and convinced the Government that the measure should be passed through. It was, accordingly, agreed that the Bill should be passed through even at this late stage of the Session.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and the second times.

FISH TRAPS.

Mr. PERRY asked, How many applications to set fish traps along the coast of Prince Edward Island have been made to the Department of Marine and Fisheries from 1878 up to date? How many have been granted, and how many have been refused? The date of each license, the amount paid yearly by each party obtaining licenses, and the date of refusal of granting licenses?

Mr. FOSTER. The only written application received at the Fisheries Department, from 1878 to the present date, for permission to fish with trap nets along the coast, was from Mr. James H. Myrick, of Tignish. Only one license was granted to J. H. Myrick, from 1879 to 1885; fee $40 per annum. This license was not renewed in 1886 and 1887.

CAP A LA CORNEILLE BOOMS.

Mr. CHOQUETTE asked, Who was entrusted with the execution of the work done at the booms at Cap à la Corneille, on the River St. Maurice? What has been the cost of the said work? Had tenders been called for in relation thereto?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The person who has been charged with these works is a gentleman whose name is F. E. Norton. These works have cost $7,945. No tenders were asked for, owing to the fact that the work was done at the usual rates.

COLONISATION COMPANIES.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, How many colonisation companies are there in active existence in the North-West Territory, and what names are they known by? What income is derived from the same by the Government?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There are eighteen companies—I said the other day there were nineteen, but I find there are eighteen—in existence. They are: The Fertile Belt Colonisation Company, the Temperance Colonisation Company, the Primitive Methodist Colonisation Company, the Farmers' North-West Land and Colonisation Company, the Dominion Lands Colonisation Company, the Montreal and Western Land Company, the Touchwood-Qu'Appelle Colonisation Company, Alexander Scott and Timothy Hay, the York Farmers' Colonisation Company, the Qu'Appelle Land Company, P. V. Valin, the Edmonton and Saskatchewan Land Company of Canada, Patrick Purcell, the Saskatchewan Land and Homestead Company, J. C. Morrow, J. W. G. Armitage and John Beattie, Shell River Colonisation Company, W. B. Vahey and J. Wilkinson, James Armstrong and John J. Cook. There is no revenue derived from those companies.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, How many colonisation companies have ceased to carry on business in the North-West Territory? When did they cease? By what names were they known?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The Government have agreed to sever their contract with the following companies: Qu'Appelle and Longlake Land Company, the Fertile Belt and Western Colonisation Company, H. W. Christian Meyer, Ferguson, Blackburn and others, including H. B. Smith, Prince Albert Colonisation Company, Wm. Sharples, Scotch Ontario and Manitoba Land Company.

SETTLEMENT IN NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, What steps do the Government propose taking in order to encourage settlement in the North-West Territory, and continue the work so beneficially inaugurated by the Government in 1874?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). This is hardly a question that should be put. The steps taken by the Government are embodied in the regulations of the Department, and in the Acts passed by this House, and we consider they will prove superior to those measures previously in force.

PROTECTION OF FISHERIES.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Whether any instructions, written or verbal, other than those contained in the correspondence recently laid on the Table, were given to the commanders of fisheries protection vessels in 1886? If so, what were they?

Mr. FOSTER. Confidential instructions, other than those contained in the fishery papers, &c., were issued through the commanders of the fishery protection cruisers in 1886. If these were to be made public they would cease to be confidential.

REPRESENTATION OF QUEEN'S COUNTY, N.B.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Have the Government had any communication, written or otherwise, with Mr. Baird, of Queen's county, N.B., as to his resignation, as promised in his explanation given to this House of his being here in the place of Mr. King?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government have had no communication, written or otherwise, with Mr. Baird as to his resignation.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

HARBORS AND BREAKWATERS.

Mr. CURRAN, in the absence of Sir DONALD SMITH, asked, 1st. What is the aggregate of the moneys that have been voted by Parliament during the term of years since Confederation down to the present time, exclusive of revotes, but including the Estimates for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1888, for expenditure on harbors and breakwaters, improvements in rivers, dredging operations, including cost of and repairs to dredges? 2nd. What part of this expenditure was on the harbor of Montreal and on the ship-channel between Montreal and Quebec?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to the first portion of this question, I would say that a long time would have to be occupied to give an answer, and a large number of papers would have to be examined. I, therefore, in the statement I have obtained give the amount expended instead of the amount voted. The following are the amounts:—Harbors and breakwaters: Expended to 30th June, 1886, $7,173,841; estimates for 1886-87, $338,556; estimates for 1887-88, $237,450; total, $7,749,847. Improvements of rivers: Expended to 30th June, 1886, $1,326,530; estimates for 1886-87, $142,200; for 1887-88, $71,200; total, $1,539,930. Dredges, construction: Expended to 30th June, 1886, $472,662; estimates for 1886-87, $17,000; 1887-88, $20,700; total, $510,362. Dredges, maintenance and repairs, $137,340; estimates for 1886-87, $32,000; estimates for 1887-88, $32,000, making a total of $201,340 08. For dredging, included in harbors and rivers, the amount of the estimates for 1886-87 was $90,000; for 1887-88, $90,000; total, $180,000. The total amount expended to the 30th June, 1886, was $9,110,374.76; the total estimates for 1886-87, $619,756; the total estimates for 1887-88, $451,350, making a grand total of $10,181,480.76. In answer to the other part of the hon. gentleman's question, I would say that none of the above amounts was expended or voted for the Montreal harbor, or the deepening of the river St. Lawrence between Quebec and Montreal, but $2,530,504.10 was advanced, up to the 8th of June instant, out of the $2,680,000 authorized by special Acts of Parliament, the Harbor Commissioners repaying the same at the rate of one per cent. sinking fund, and four and five per cent. interest.

SUMS PAID T. J. WATTERS AS SEIZING OFFICER.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT asked, What sums have been paid to T. J. Watters as seizing officer, since 30th June, 1886, and what sums as informer? And what further amounts are now claimed in either capacity?

Mr. BOWELL. The following sums have been paid by the Customs Department to Mr. T. J. Watters, since the 30th June, 1886, as seizing officer's share: $373.40; $235.70; $3,997.33; $1,433.70; making a total of $6,040.13. No payments have been made that officer as informer. How much of the above sum was paid by him to those from whom he received information we have no knowledge, as we never make enquiry as to who the informers are. No further amounts of which we have any knowledge are now claimed by that officer in respect of seizures.

STATION IN NOTRE DAME DU SACRE-CŒUR.

Mr. Fiset asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to build a depot or station, on the line of the Intercolonial Railway, in the Parish of Notre Dame du Sacré-Cœur? If such is their intention, when do the Government propose to commence the building of this station?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not the intention of the Government to build a depot, this summer, at that place?

WHARF AT ST. ROCH AND STE. LOUISE, L'ISLET.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to assist the municipalities of St. Roch and Ste. Louise, in the county of L'Islet, in repairing the damage caused to their wharf by the storm of November, 1884?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not the intention of the Government to make the repairs which are asked for. This wharf is not a Government wharf and we have not been informed that these repairs were needed.

WHARF AT STE. ANNE DE LA POCATIÈRE.

Mr. DESSAINT asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to repair the wharf at Ste. Anne de la Pocatière, in the county of Kamouraska, and to complete the wharf this year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If there are repairs to be made they will be made at this wharf as they are made at other wharves. As to completing the wharf this year, I cannot give a definite answer to that question in the way it is put.

DISMISSAL OF PAUL BÉLANGER AND GABRIEL CARON.

Mr. DESSAINT asked, For what reasons were Paul Bélanger and Gabriel Caron, both employés on the Inter-colonial Railway at the Rivière du Loup station, dismissed? Did these employés demand an enquiry to clear themselves? If they did so, why was such an investigation refused them?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Messrs. Bélanger and Caron were dismissed for neglect of duty. It is not known whether they demanded an enquiry here in the office, but, at all events, an investigation took place, and their dismissal was the result.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN LUNENBURG.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne), in the absence of Mr. EISENHAUER, asked, From whom was the site for a public building in the town of Lunenburg purchased? What was the amount paid for the site? How much land is contained in same? Has the amount been paid for the land, and when, and has the deed passed to Her Majesty?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The site for the public building at Lunenburg was purchased from Messrs. Creighton for $3,900. The size of the lot is 120 by 80 feet, or 9,500 square feet. A cheque for the amount was sent to the Department of Justice on the 13th of May last, but a deed has not been given.

POSTMASTER AT ST. LUCE STATION.

Mr. Fiset asked, Whether the Government have ordered an enquiry in the matter of the charges brought in this House against A. Laberge, postmaster at St. Luce Station? If they have done so, what is the result of the investigation?

Mr. McLELAN. No charges have been transmitted to the Department against that postmaster.

WAR CLAIMS PAID AND REJECTED BY THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. HOLTON asked, Have any claims recommended for payment by the War Claims Commission been rejected by the Government? If so, what were the claims so rejected, their amounts, and the reasons for refusing their payment?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In answer to the hon. gentleman, I beg to refer him to report No. 153 of the War Claims Commission:—F. N. Gisborne, Superintendent of Telegraph Service, for extra services of the following persons: Sub-agent Voulindeburg claimed $50; recommended, $18. Sub-agent Anderson claimed $50; recommended, $18. Agent Molloy claimed $150; recommended, $61.50. Repairer McFarlane claimed $100; recommended, $41. Repairer Latimer claimed $100; recommended, $41. Chief operator Richardson claimed $150; recommended, $82. District Superintendent Gisborne claimed $200; recommended, $92.25. Total claimed, $800; less off, $416.25; amount paid, $353.75. I would also refer the hon. gentleman to report No. 163 of the War Claims Commission: Lieutenant-Colonel Peebles, superintendent of stores and paymaster at Winnipeg; difference between his pay of $41.66 per month, and $4.87 per day, the pay of his rank, 321 days to 30th September, 1886, $1,229; recommended, $1,123.50; off $105.50. I would also refer him to report No. 175 of the War Claims Commission, 857: Sergeant Alfred Codd, for attending sick and wounded of the North-West field force, remaining at Winnipeg hospital from 27th November, 1885, to 29th December, 1886, 306 days at $1.65, $504.95; recommended, $198.90; off, $306.05. The reasons for the action taken by the Department are to be found in the report.

THE SURGEON GENERAL.

Mr. HOLTON asked, Does Colonel Bergin retain the position of Surgeon General in the active militia? If so, what is his salary, and what are his duties?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Colonel Bergin is gazetted Surgeon General, and retains his position in the active militia. He has no duties to perform, and not under pay.

REJECTED WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. HOLTON asked, Have any claims which were rejected by the War Claims Commission since been paid? If so, what were the claims so paid, their nature and amounts, and the reasons of the Government for their payment?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. War Commission Report 96, John Balsillie, for pay as chief accountant, employed by Mr. Bedson, late chief transport officer in the North-West with the general officer commanding, $516; disbursements and hotel expenses, $46.20; stationery, $13.95; and two months' rent of office, $50. The claim was rejected by the Commission for want of sufficient proof that the work had been performed, and has since been paid on a certificate from Mr. Bedson, giving full details of the said work. War Commission Report 96, H. Newell, assistant accountant, $105, ditto. War Commission Report 427, J. H. E. Secretan, for pay for services as assistant chief transport officer with the general officer commanding, for the month of September, 1885, $255. This claim was rejected by the Commission, as they were not satisfied that he was employed during that month, and has since been paid on the certificate of the general officer commanding that he was then employed in the service of the Government.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—THE ONDERDONK CONTRACT.

Mr. CHISHOLM asked, Whether the Onderdonk contract—the section between Kamloops and Port Moody, British Columbia, has been conveyed to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and if so, when, and on what terms?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The section between Kamloops and Port Moody has been handed over to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, under the terms and conditions of the contract set out in the Act incorporating that company.

RANGE LIGHTS AT MIMINEGASH, P.E.I.

Mr. PERRY asked, Is there a keeper appointed for the range lights at Miminegash, Prince Edward Island? If so, who is he?

Mr. FOSTER. No permanent keeper has yet been appointed. There is some question about rearranging the range lights. If the lights are lighted before that is done, they will be put in charge of a temporary man.

DEBLOIS POST OFFICE, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. PERRY asked, Were tenders asked for, for carrying mails from DeBlois Station to the post office at DeBlois Road, Prince Edward Island? If so, to whom has the contract been given, and for what amount?

Mr. McLELAN. It is understood that the Post Office Inspector at Charlottetown has asked for tenders for carrying these mails, but the contract has not been assigned.

Mr. PERRY asked, Upon whose recommendation was the postmaster of DeBlois Road, Prince Edward Island, appointed?

Mr. McLELAN. He was appointed on the responsibility of the Post Office Department.

ST. ANDREW'S RAPIDS, RED RIVER.

Mr. WATSON asked, Has the Government completed surveys of St. Andrew's Rapids, on Red River, in the Province of Manitoba? If so, what is the estimated cost of proposed improvements, and is it the intention of the Government to place a sum in the Estimates and go on with the improvements this year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The chief engineer says the plans have been received, but too late to be considered this Session. Those plans are simply plans of the river. What have to be prepared are plans of such works as may be required to overcome the St. Andrew's Rapids by the construction of locks and dams, involving an expenditure of at least half a million dollars, and, therefore, requiring time for consideration.

THE COMMAND OF "C" BATTERY.

Mr. AMOYT asked, Whether Lieut.-Col. Grey, of the Toronto Field Battery, has been appointed to the command of "C" Battery of the Canadian Regiment of Artillery, and whether it is the intention of the Government to appoint him?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Lieut.-Col. Grey has not been appointed to the command of "C" Battery. Lieut.-Col. Holmes was appointed to that position by General Order, dated the 10th of August, 1883, under authority of an Order in Council passed on the 9th of July, 1883.

CLAIM OF DR. J. MORIN.

Mr. AMYOT asked, Whether the Government intend to pay to Dr. J. Morin, of St. Charles, Bellechasse, the amount of his claim for medical attendance on Odilon Fournier, a brakeman on the Intercolonial Railway, wounded at St. Charles, aforesaid, when engaged in the discharge of his duty as such brakeman, on the 28th March, 1885, the said attendance having lasted up to 8th June, 1885? If not, what amount do the Government intend to pay him, and when will such payment be made?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That claim is being considered.

CANADIAN HORSES WORKING IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. GILLMOR asked, Is the Government aware that the United States Government have stopped allowing Canadian horses passing into the States in bond to perform temporary work? That parties taking their horses from Canada for temporary work must enter them and pay the duties? In cases where horses are so entered and the duties paid in the United States, will the Government allow those horses to return to Canada without demanding that duties shall be paid upon them?

Mr. BOWELL. The Government are aware that a circular has been issued by the Treasury Department at Washington, depriving Canadians of the privilege they formerly enjoyed of taking their horses and implements into the United States for temporary employment. I desire to inform the hon. gentleman that the most liberal regulations will be made in order to assist our own people in obtaining employment in that way.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LUNENBURG.

Mr. EISENHAUER asked, Whether the Government, in accordance with the reply given to the question asked regarding a grant for a public building at Lunenburg, have considered the matter, and whether, in view of the numerous signed petition recently presented from the people of Lunenburg regarding the same, the Government has decided to provide for a building this Session?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not the intention of the Government to provide for a building this Session.

PROPOSALS TO PURCHASE THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. CHOQUETTE asked, Whether proposals have been made to the Government, by any persons or companies, for the purchase of the Intercolonial Railway? If so, who are the said persons or companies; and have the Government considered the said proposals?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Several conversations have taken place with parties desiring, or professing to desire, to purchase the Intercolonial Railway, and a memorandum or paper will be put in. But no results have arisen from these, and the Government now has before it this incomplete proposition.

PENETANGUISHENE HARBOR.

Mr. O'BRIEN asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to place a sum in the Estimates for the improvement of the harbor at Penetanguishene?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I may say that interviews have taken place between deputations from the people of Penetanguishene and the Minister of Public Works, about improvements there; but I must wait until some proposal is made, as it was supposed would be made, by the town to my Department, before I can submit the matter to my colleagues.

REVISING OFFICER AT L'ASSOMPTION.

Mr. GAUTHIER asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to appoint, at an early day, a revising officer for the electoral district of L'Assomption, in place of Pierre Blouin, Esq., deceased?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. In due time.

84TH ST. HYACINTHE BATTALION.

Mr. BÉCHARD, in the absence of Mr. BERNIER, asked, Why has the 84th St. Hyacinthe Battalion only five companies, when six is the regulation? Has Captain Duhaime, of No. 3 Company of 84th St. Hyacinthe Battalion resigned, and when was his resignation received at the Department? Has Lieutenant Valcourt, of No. 3 Company, been recommended for promotion to the command of said Company, and if so, why is he not gazetted? Why has the 84th Battalion no junior major? Has any person been recommended for junior majority of the 84th? If so, why is he not gazetted? Has Lieut.-Col. B. F. Campbell, commanding 84th Battalion, recommended to the Deputy Adjutant General of the Sixth Military District, any person for the position of junior major of the 84th Battalion? Has Lieut.-Col. B. F. Campbell, commanding 84th Battalion made any request to the Deputy Adjutant-General of his district, since two years, to be allowed to raise his battalion, to the full strength of six companies? Has Lieut.-Col. B. F. Campbell, commanding 84th Battalion, complained at any time since two years of the neglect to gazette recommendations he made for promotion of officers, as well as for the appointment of officers to said battalion? Is General Sir Frederick Middleton aware of the complaint made by Lieutenant-Colonel B. F. Campbell, commanding 84th Battalion? If so, what is being done?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. (Translation.) In answer to the questions put by the hon. member I have the honor to say:—1. The 84th Battalion is still on the list of the active militia as having six companies. 2. The resignation of Captain Duhaime of No. 3 Company was received at the office of the Adjutant General on the 5th of February, 1886. 3. Lieutenant Valcourt is the officer who comes immediately for promotion in No. 3 Company. The list of recommendations and the resignation of Captain Duhaime have been sent to the Deputy Adjutant-General of District No. 6, Lieutenant Colonel Harwood, on the 12th of February, 1886, to obtain the transfer of the arms of the company. These papers have not come back to Ottawa, and that is the reason why nothing has been published so far. We have written to the Deputy Adjutant-General on the 11th June, 1887. 4. When a battalion is entitled to this junior major it belongs to the officer commanding to recommend a qualified and proper person for that position. 5. Yes; and Milton McDonald has been recommended. 6. He is not an officer; he has no qualification certificate. This appointment would be an injustice towards all the other captains. 7. Yes; I have answered that in the fifth answer. 8. The battalion is complete, having six companies. However, of these companies numbers five and six are not effective. 9. The delay arises from the fact that the recommendations were not such as could be carried out. 10. Yes; we have communicated about this matter with the Deputy Adjutant General of that district.

YORK VILLAGE—GRAND RIVER.

Mr. MONTAGUE asked, Is it the intention of the Government to have an enquiry made by properly qualified persons into the necessity and desirability of constructing the public work at York village, upon the Grand River, for which assistance is asked, and which the Municipal Council of the county have already passed upon, as per resolution of the council forwarded to the Government; and when will the enquiry take place?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is the intention of the Government to have enquiry made, and that soon.

DISTRIBUTION OF HANSARD TO MUNICIPALITIES.

Mr. TURCOT asked, Would the Government be disposed to order that a copy of Hansard be sent every year to any municipality asking for it, so that it might be placed in the municipal archives and be accessible to the public?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not the intention of the Government.

TELEGRAPH SERVICE—ASHCROFT AND BARKERVILLE.

Mr. REID asked, What arrangements were made whereby the telegraphic service between Ashcroft and Barkerville are performed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company? Does the Government retain any control over the said line in respect to the proper and efficient service thereof?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Arrangement has been made with the Canadian Pacific Railway, that the district superintendent, Mr. Wilson, late Government telegraphic superintendent in British Columbia, will maintain in good repair and efficiently operate the line between Ashcroft and Barkerville, the Government to pay the actual expense, to be credited with the receipts from the line, such agreement to terminate at any time at the option of the Government.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS ANNUITY.

Mr. COOK asked, How have the moneys, £1,200 annuity, payable to the Chippewa Indians under surrender October 1st, 1818, been applied?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The moneys referred to in the above question are at the credit of the Chippewa Indians who made the surrender on October the 17th, 1818, (not on October the 1st), and the amount is distributed among them semi-annually.

SALES OF INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. COOK asked, How have the moneys arising from the sales of the Indian lands on Georgian Bay, Lakes Couchiching, Huron and Simcoe, been applied, and also the moneys arising from the sales of the Coldwater Reserve?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The moneys arising from the sales of the Indian lands on Georgian Bay, Lakes Couchiching, Huron and Simcoe, as well as the moneys arising from the sale of the Coldwater Reserve, have gone to the credit of the capital funds of the Chippewa Indians, and the interest thereon is distributed among them semi-annually.

TIMBER CUT ON INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. COOK asked, What compensation do the Government intend to allow the Indians of Christian Island, for the timber cut by licensees of the Crown on their lands on the eastern shore of Georgian Bay, running northward from the Penetanguishene purchase up to Moose Point?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The question of compensation, if any, to be allowed the Indians of Christian Island on the above account, will be a matter for settlement when the Commissioners meet for the purpose of settling claims against the old Province of Canada.

PENETANGUISHENE PURCHASE.

Mr. COOK asked, What compensation do the Government intend to allow the Indians of Christian Island, for the lands comprised in what is known as the Penetanguishene purchase, which the Indians allege was never surrendered by the tribe to the Government but by vagabond Indians who held no authority to execute the deed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Crown purchased from the Indians, in the year 1795, the lands above referred to, for £101 currency paid in hand to them, The Indians now allege that those who undertook to negotiate with the Government for the sale of the property in question had no authority to do so, or to execute a deed of surrender of the same. At this late date it is most difficult to arrive at the facts in respect to this matter. It is only recently that any doubt has been thrown on the bond fides of the parties who executed the surrender. The compensation, if any, to be allowed the Indians, should their claim be substantiated by sufficient evidence, would have to be arranged by the Commissioners for the adjustment of claims against the old Province of Canada.

CLAIM OF DANIEL CHOUINARD.

Mr. Fiset asked, What are the reasons which have induced the Government to defer, up to this date, the payment to Mr. Daniel Chouinard of the amount awarded to him by the Official Arbitrators for damages caused to his property by the passing of the Intercolonial Railway?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The evidence which was adduced to establish this claim was so contradictory that I am told, in one case, no damage could possibly have occurred to the parties, unless water would run up hill, so the Minister has deferred deciding in favor of Mr. Chouinard.

CAUGHNAWAGA INDIAN RESERVE.

Mr. DOYON asked, When was Mr. Walbank appointed to survey the Indian Reserve of Caughnawaga, and at whose request? What is the precise nature of the work entrusted to Mr. Walbank? What sums have been already paid to Mr. Walbank, and how much remains to be paid to him? What is the object of Mr. Walbank's operations, and what action do the Government intend to take in the matter? When will the work be completed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the spring of 1882 Mr. McLea Walbank, P.L.S., was appointed to sub-divide by survey the Indian reserve at Caughnawaga, on his own application for the work. He had a letter of introduction from the Hon. Peter Mitchell, and was recommended by the Hon. J. C. Aikins. The nature of the work entrusted to Mr. Walbank comprised, in the first place, the preliminary survey of all of the various undefined plots of land claimed, and in part cultivated, by different members of the Iroquois band, which was a work of very great difficulty, and occupied considerable time, and in the second place, a subsequent sub-division by the regular lines of survey of the reserve into lots containing 30 acres each; also, the investigation of the individual claims to the lands. The amount already paid Mr. Walbank, on account of this survey, is $16,000. It is impossible to say exactly what farther amount will be required to complete the survey, but it is not expected that very much more expenditure will be incurred, as the sub-division of the land will probably be completed this season. The object of Mr. Walbank's operations is to enable the Department to determine what quantity of land each Indian head of a family on the reserve, and male person of 21 years and over, is entitled to, and to distribute the land among them. As soon as the survey has been completed location tickets will be prepared and issued to each locatee. As already stated, it is expected that the survey will be completed this season.

THE LATE MR. CAMPBELL (RENFREW).

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is my painful duty to call the attention of the House to the loss which has been sustained by the recent death of Mr. Campbell, the member for South Renfrew, which took place yesterday. Hon. gentlemen who have been in this House with the late Mr. Campbell do not require to be told that, although, having entered the House at a somewhat advanced period in life, he did not take any very active share in the debates, he was a man who was noted for his unassuming and retiring character, and also for his devotion to his duties as a member of this House. Unfortunately, this Session has been marked by an unusual number of deaths, and, although in Mr. Campbell's case it was not so unexpected as in the case of the other gentlemen whose loss we had to deplore—the hon. members for Digby (Mr. Campbell) and Restigouche (Mr. Moffat)—still, those of us who met Mr. Campbell in the early part of this Session were very far, indeed, from expecting that we should be called upon to deplore his loss at this period of the Session. Mr. Campbell, I believe, for a great many years was very extensively engaged in mercantile operations. In his own section of the country he always sustained a very high character for probity and honor, and he has left behind him a gap which will be hard to fill in his family and among those who were acquainted with him in that part of the country. I am sure the whole House will sympathise with his family in the loss they have sustained, and will also join in the regret at one of our number having been so suddenly removed from amongst us.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can sincerely join in the regret which has been expressed by the hon. gentleman in regard to the loss of our departed friend, Mr. Campbell. Although he was not politically in sympathy with us on this side, everyone of us who had the privilege of knowing him respected and esteemed him, and looked upon him with more than cold regard for his kindly genial manner, his evident sincerity of purpose, and his gentlemanlike, unobtrusive demeanor, which won all parties. I can assure the hon. gentleman who has made these very proper remarks that we on this side thoroughly appreciated Mr. Campbell's qualities, that we liked to see that kindly face, though it was on the other side of the House, and that we deeply regret his loss.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Coming from the county one riding of which was represented by the hon. gentleman who has been referred to by the First Minister and the member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright), it may not be out of place for me to say a word or two on this subject. I have known Mr. Campbell for a great many years, and what the hon. member for South Huron has said, as to his character for probity and honor, I endorse to the fullest possible extent. Mr. Campbell had the highest character for probity and honor in the locality in which he lived, and, although, as the hon. the leader of the Government has stated, I was politically opposed to him, I had learned, having been more closely drawn to him since he came into the House in 1882 than I was previously, to respect that gentleman for the honesty of his opinions; and I can only say that I regret sincerely the circumstances which have called upon us to mourn his loss.

QUEBEC SHIP LABORERS.

Mr. AMYOT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the Government if they have come to a decision in reference to the Bill which I presented respecting the ship laborers; whether they will take it under their charge and secure its passing, as it is a matter which is very urgent for Quebec.

Mr. THOMPSON. That subject is being considered, and I will be able to confer with the hon. gentleman later in the day.

COMMERCE WITH FRANCE.

Mr. AMYOT. I would also ask when the Ministers are going to produce the papers respecting commerce with France. I understood from the Secretary of State the other day that they were all ready and would be produced at once. They have not yet been produced, and we are anxiously waiting for them, in order to get them printed so that the public may benefit by them.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The return to the Address will be made by the Department of Finance, and I am perfectly sure that permission will be given and the papers will be brought down. The papers are ready, but the order must come from the Department of Finance.

Mr. AMYOT. The Minister of Finance is here—

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I can answer for him.

Mr. AMYOT,—and perhaps he will state when they will be brought down.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD laid on the Table certain returns.

Mr. AMYOT. I think I am entitled to an answer. I want to know when these papers will be produced. This House ordered, in 1885, that they should be produced. They are all ready. We are told they will be produced right off. The Government have not, in fifteen days, brought them down. I ask when they will be produced, and I think I am entitled to an answer. The interests I speak about are important enough. If there is any obstacle to the production, let us know it, let the country know it.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend is really not reasonable. I told him I would see the Minister of Finance. The order will be given, and the papers will be produced to-morrow.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENTS.

On the Order for consideration of Bill (No. 113) to amend the Dominion Lands Act.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). It will be remembered that just before the committee rose on Friday night, my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Scarth), I think it was, objected to that clause under which people and companies assisting immigrants coming into this country, made advances. His complaint was that they were practically compelled, in order to secure themselves, to take a separate lien for every small advance they might make. He asked for a provision that would facilitate the operation of the law, and the intention of the Government in framing it. I, therefore, ask for the discharge of this Order, and that we go back into committee for the purpose of asking that the following provision may be added to clause 7:

Provided always, that it shall be competent for the persons or company proposing to make such advances to take at once an acknowledgment from the settler for the full amount of the charge proposed to be made, but such acknowledgment shall only operate as a charge upon the homestead to the extent that it may be certified by the local agent upon presentation to him of vouchers or other satisfactory evidence that the advances for which a charge is proposed to be created, have actually been made to the settler.

Hon. gentlemen will remember that as it is now, the local agent is really the umpire who decides whether the charge ought to lie against the land or not.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does the hon. gentleman intend that shall apply only to future transactions.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then you make no provision for anything that has been done in the past?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No.

Motion agreed to, Bill considered in Committee and reported.

On the second reading of the amendments,

Mr. SCARTH. Before these amendments are concurred in, I desire to say a few words. I have not troubled the House with speeches, and I don't propose to speak at any length to-day. But I desire to say something on the matters that have been under discussion during the progress of this Bill. Sir, it has been my privilege, before and since the introduction of railways into Manitoba, to travel through every constituency in Manitoba and the North West, and, therefore, I have some knowledge of that country. It has also been my privilege, after having become thoroughly acquainted with the country, to take trips to England and to advise my friends there, and the agriculturists who were not doing well there, to come to our country and accept from us a free gift each of 160 acres of the excellent farming land we have to offer. Therefore, I have some right to say a few words on the matters which have been under discussion. Hon. gentlemen opposite in discussing these matters, have attacked the land policy, the railway policy, the National Policy and the immigration policy of the Government. They have asserted that the progress of Manitoba and the North-West has not been satisfactory; they have asserted that an exodus of over 100,000 settlers has taken place within the last five years; they have asserted that immigration is not coming into that country satisfactorily, and they lay the blame for all this upon the Government. Now, Sir, I assert that the progress of Manitoba has been satisfactory. What is the state of affairs? In 1881 the population of Manitoba was 62,000, in 1886 it was 108,000, an increase in five years of 46,000, or 74 per cent. I think, Sir, that is a very good showing. Hon. gentlemen opposite have compared the increase in our population with the increase in population of the contiguous States of the Union. I say, Sir, this is a most unfair comparison. When the prairie country of the North-West States was opened for settlement, Manitoba was locked in the embrace of the Hudson Bay Company. Settlers were pouring into the North-West States when Manitoba was comparatively unknown. It is a hard task to turn the stream of immigration, but that was the task that had to be undertaken with regard to Manitoba. Further, the North-West States had a home population of 50,000,000 to draw from, when Canada had only a home population of 5,000,000 to draw from. As to the exodus, hon. gentlemen opposite know as well as we do that there has been no exodus from Manitoba or the North-West in the proper sense of that word. They know as well as we do that the immigration returns of the Agricultural Department include the navvies who built the railway, include the "boom" speculators, thousands of sportsmen and sightseers, and I believe I am not wrong in saying that it will be found they include a large proportion of the members of the British Association as being settled in Manitoba now. Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are taking advantage of what they know to be a mistake of the Department of Agriculture, to circulate throughout the length and breadth of the world what they know to be wrong, that over one-half of the population of Manitoba have left it within the last five years, either on account of their disgust with the country or their dissatisfaction with the laws that prevailed there. Although I say that the immigration has been satisfactory, that certainly it has not been unsatisfactory, I do not mean to say that we did not expect a much larger immigration than has taken place. But are the Government to blame for our disappointment? I say they are not. Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House accuse the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) and the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) of being unpatriotic because they have ascribed the loss of immigration to the repeated bad seasons we have had. Is that unpatriotic? I can state from personal experience, that what those hon. gentlemen say is perfectly correct. I have been the means, fortunately, of bringing in some hundreds of families to that country from Great Britain, and I have never yet heard of one of them advising any of his friends in the old country not to follow him for any reason connected with land laws or immigration laws or railway laws or the National Policy of the country. They were disappointed when they first came to this country, because after their advent they had a succession of bad seasons, and they wisely wrote to their friends at home not to follow them until they had thoroughly tested the country for themselves and were satisfied with it. Nor in Great Britain, which I have visited several times with a view to bringing out immigrants, did I on any occasion meet with any person who objected to come to this country on account of our land laws or from any discontent with fear of the policy of the Government. But I met everywhere I went, the stories of American agents, and everywhere I heard of them saying that the country was one unfit to live in. When in the Hebrides, those very crofters, with whose coming out, I had something to do, were informed through American agents that the scorching heat of summer and the intense cold of winter made our country uninhabitable. They were informed by those gentlemen that this country was so full of wild beasts, that it would be impossible to leave their children out of doors, and that they would also be in danger of their own lives night and day from Indians. I found those statements circulated everywhere. But those stories are not now being believed, because the crofters who have settled in the North-West—and they are an excellent class of settlers—are now themselves succeeding so well that they are urging their fellow countrymen to follow them. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will read extracts from two of the many letters which have been sent by these men to their friends to the whole country, and they have been translated from the Gaelic into English for my benefit. One man, who has got under cultivation about 100 acres, writes in this way:

"In the first place I have to tell you that my family and myself are in good health at the present time. The reason why I delayed writing you was because I desired to give you an account of this wild country, as it was represented to be ere we came to it, full of wild beasts, &c. If such were here it appears that they fled on our arrival, for they never troubled us day or night. Dear friend, I am sorry to hear and read in newspapers from the old country of the belief they still entertain concerning this place."

Here are a few words to which I desire to direct the attention of hon. members on both sides of the House, as showing how a little word may do harm to the country when it will take a great many words to do good:

"I understand very well how that happens, because they are willing to give more credit to one letter that gives a bad account rather than twelve that give a pretty good account of the place."

"I have reason to thank God for the day or night he moved my heart to come here, even though the old country were as good as when I left it. * * * Although each and every year would not yield us a good crop, yet I find no reason to despair, for this is but a new country that may change for the better before long. It is altogether a good place for stock. Another thing you can understand is that when men who come here with neither silver nor gold can prosper so, what may not those who come with their thousands do, and could get all their requirements with their own money. * * * I know the condition of every family who came from Benbecula. There are not more than two or three in whose houses I have not been, and I know they have a pretty good living for the time they have been here."

Here is a letter from another crofter, a settler with a large family, who has done remarkably well since he came to the country. He writes:

"In the first place, I have to tell you that we are all happy in this new country, and we have great reason to be so in several ways. In the first place, we have schools and churches, and these were two things we were missing very much during our first year in this country. Now, as regards the country, we have no reason to complain. Thank God, we are in good health, and, although the weather proved unfavorable to our crops during the last three years, we hope that this year it will prove otherwise. But you need not picture to yourself the poverty of the people here as in comparison with that of the poor of the old world country, for here people have reaped enough, even during the bad season years, to keep them in food during the year, and I believe that those among you who have the best lands in Scotland will not reap enough to keep them in food for half a year, and, in that way, I consider the country far ahead in that itself."

"And although you would hear people giving a bad account of this country, don't believe them, for everyone who is industrious here he is well off."

"DONALD MACDONALD."

Mr. SCARTL

So much for the effect which the policy of the Government has had in retarding immigration. But the policy of the Government and those questions which have been discussed here, were discussed in Manitoba very thoroughly during the recent election. What was the result? In Manitoba and the North-West Territories, out of nine constituencies, eight members were returned to support the Government; one of them by acclamation, six by large majorities, and in the constituency which I have the honor to represent, the Reformers did not dare to bring out a man, but they arrayed themselves behind an Independent who had promised to give the Government a fair support. But I must admit that on one phase of the railway question the people of Manitoba are almost a unit against the Government policy: I refer to the policy of disallowance. Had I not considered that the Government had under their favorable consideration some scheme for meeting the wishes of the people of Manitoba, I would never have been a candidate for Winnipeg. It was not in extremity, as stated by the Minister of Finance, that the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) and myself gave the pledges we did to our constituents; it was only because, as I have said, I believed the Government were considering some plan for meeting the wishes of the people of Manitoba. I resent the allusion the Minister of Finance made to my hon. friend and myself; I resent the appeal he made from us to the independent feeling of hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House; I resent it as a reflection on my hon. friend and myself, and I state that our actions and our feelings are as independent as those either of the Minister himself or of those hon. gentlemen to whom he appealed. We kept our pledges. We did everything to get the disallowance policy changed. We were voted down by one of the largest majorities given this Session, and in that majority there was a considerable sprinkling of hon. gentlemen who usually vote against the Government. But although I voted against the Government on the question of disallowance, I am not prepared to admit that it is in the interest of Manitoba and the North-West that the Government should be put out of power and that the Reformers should take their places. I have confidence that the able statesman at the head of affairs here will devise some solution of the present vexed question, some solution favorable alike to the Dominion and the Province of Manitoba. Sir, in spite of all drawbacks that the country has had from recent bad seasons, and from the unfortunate rebellion which took place there, I have every faith in its future. I have travelled, Sir, from the boundary to the North Saskatchewan, from Emerson to Calgary, from Lethbridge to Edmonton; since 1880 I have travelled year after year through that great country, and I have had an opportunity of seeing its steady and rapid progress, and I feel certain, Sir, that it will continue to progress in the future. From 1880 to 1883 the crops were good and the country advanced rapidly. From 1883 until now, we have had unfortunate seasons and late crops, but notwithstanding all that, Mr. Speaker, the country has continued to advance steadily. I have seen the grain product of that country increase from 200,000 bushels in 1880, to 4,000,000 bushels in 1886; I have since that same year, seen southern Manitoba, in which I had the pleasure of meeting the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) in 1880—I have seen southern Manitoba grow from a sparsely settled district to a comparatively well peopled district, having railway facilities of every description. The same thing may be said—and almost doubly said—of the beautiful grain-growing country from which the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) comes. The history of his county has been a history of wonderful progress. Winnipeg, Sir, which I have the honor to represent, and which, in 1880, had only 7,000 people, has to-day, seven years afterwards, a population of 22,000, and the progress of Winnipeg is only commencing. And what, Sir, about Brandon, from which my hon. friend the member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) comes? Sir, in 1881, I saw Brandon when it was composed of only one tent, and to-day, five years afterwards, it is a town with 2,000 inhabitants, exporting in one year 800,000 bushels of grain. And what shall be said of those towns which had really no existence so short a time ago as 1881? What shall be said of Verden, Elkhorn, Deloraine, Morden, Moosomin, Regina and Calgary? Why, Sir, all these are now thriving towns and villages, with every evidence of a settled country behind them, a country with good farms, rich fields and fast increasing herds. The crop reports now coming from Manitoba and the North-West are most encouraging. I believe, from all I can hear, that we are going to have an excellent harvest. I trust, Sir, that the days of depression have passed away, that there is now about to recur a succession of seasons such as we used to have, and that years of plenty and peace are now upon us. I have a firm belief in the future of that country. I believe that, ere many years are over, the members of the Opposition, as well as the members supporting the Government—Canada and the Empire as well—will glory in a progressive and prosperous North-West.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is, perhaps, unfortunate that a discussion of the policy of the Government in the North-West should be opened up again, but, certainly this side of the House is not responsible for that course being taken. I cannot allow the remarks of my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Scarth) to pass entirely unnoticed. That hon. gentleman, I think, Sir, has made a very lame attempt to justify his position, as a supporter of the Government, and at the same time to condemn that Government for not having given to the North-West what he says he expected them to give; and he informs us at the same time that had he not believed the Government would have given a measure of justice to the North-West, he himself would not have been a candidate in Winnipeg. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman is unquestionably right when he informs the House that some measure of dissatisfaction does exist in the North-West, in relation to the railway policy of the Government. There is no doubt a measure of dissatisfaction existing in the North-West so great, that the hon. gentleman finds it necessary to attempt to carry water on both shoulders. He must stand well with his constituents, and he must stand up here and condemn the Government with bated breath, and in a qualified sense, for not giving the North-West what it demands, and he must at the same time inform his constituents that he does not deem it proper to vote against the Government except on this one question—that is, he will not use his influence in such a way as to render it effectual with the Government. That is the position of all the members from the North-West, except one—the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson). These gentlemen come here to this House representing a vast region which feels itself very seriously aggrieved by the policy of the Government with regard to a matter of the greatest importance to themselves. Their constituents have, so far as we can judge, given the most unequivocal expression to their sentiments and demands with reference to this matter. They are represented in this House by gentlemen who, in my opinion, fail to discharge their duty to their constituents, because they continue to support the Government; they are the most reliable class of supporters of the Government—the very Government that denies to their constituents what is considered in the North-West a most essential matter in their behalf. Sir, if the eight members in this House from the North-West and Manitoba, supporting the Government of the day, were earnest and honest in their attempts to give to the North-West such a railway law as the North-West demands—if they were earnest in their desires to compel the Government to cease its disallowance policy, they have the means in their hands to do it. Let those gentlemen array themselves against the Government; let those eight members say to the Government: We must have justice for our constituents; you must recede from the position you occupy on the disallowance question, or we will recede from our support, and they would secure what they demand and what their constituents desire. But in failing to do that they demonstrate to this House and to the country that there is no sincerity in their professions, that they do not mean what they are talking about. To come here and demand that the Government should do justice to the North-West, and, at the same time, support that Government in every measure it places before Parliament, and merely refrain from casting a vote in favor of the policy of the Government on that one question, is not the way to secure from the Government what is demanded. These gentlemen have too much intelligence to tell this House that they are honest and determined in the position they take, that the North-West shall have justice. It is nothing of the kind; it is a shallow pretence on their part that they are attempting to secure from the Government that which their constituents demand. I can assure them that if they were in earnest, if they were to array themselves against the Government, and say to the Government: We will vote against you on every measure until you do us justice, the Government would recede from its position.

Now, the hon. gentleman in the course of his remarks made one or two statements that I think it would have been as politic—if he had had regard to the interests of his friends—to have said nothing about. He accuses us of taking advantage of a mistake made in the statistics issued by the Department of Agriculture. Now, does the hon. gentleman pretend to throw discredit on the statistics furnished the country by that Department? Is the charge to be made by a supporter of the Government from that side of the House that the statistics furnished by one of the Departments of this Government are unreliable and misleading? Well, I think, perhaps, it is true, but I hardly expected to find that charge made by an hon. member supporting the Government. In answer to the enquiry: Are the Government to blame for the failure to settle the North-West more rapidly, are they to blame for the lack of prosperity that exists in that country, he says: No. He asks: Is there dissatisfaction in the North-West with the land policy of the Government? Is there dissatisfaction with the railway policy of the Government? Is there dissatisfaction with the National Policy as affects the North-West? And he answers: No.

Mr. SCARTH. I rise to correct the hon. gentleman. He has stated what I did not say. I did not say that there was no dissatisfaction with the railway policy of the Government.

Mr. CHARLTON. Very well, I am glad to hear that the hon. gentleman himself is not so blind to the condition of sentiment in the North-West as to make the assertion that there is no dissatisfaction in that country with the railway policy of the Government. Will the hon. gentleman say that there is no dissatisfaction in the North-West with the National Policy?

Mr. SCARTH. Yes, I say so.

Mr. CHARLTON. Well, the little knowledge I have of the North-West, after having been in that country and mingled with the people in Winnipeg, Portage la Prairie, Brandon, Calgary and other points, convinces me that there is great dissatisfaction with the National Policy; that it is one of the great weights that rest on the people of that country; one of the great drags on its progress; one of the grievances the people have against this Government. I heard that on every hand. I heard that the duty of 35 per cent. imposed on agricultural implements bore most heavily on the people. I heard also that the burden was not measured by the duty of 35 per cent., but that the people were obliged to enter goods at very much more than their actual cost. I was informed of one case where a steam threshing machine, costing $700, had to be entered at $1,200, and that the duty of 35 per cent. had to be paid on the larger amount. I heard that instances of this kind were numerous—that in fact it was rarely the case that the importer of any implement from the United States was allowed to enter it at its cost, the result being that the real duty imposed on those implements amounts to from 40 to 50 per cent. There is great dissatisfaction in the North-West with the National Policy. There is, as the hon. gentleman admits, great dissatisfaction with the railway laws, there is also great dissatisfaction with the land laws; and the Government, since 1882, have administered those laws in such a way as not to promote the interests of the country. Their colonisation scheme, their former scheme of dividing the country into railway belts and asking $5, $4, $3, $2 or $1 per acre for them according to their location, their present policy of asking double as much for lands as the United States Government does, and restricting homestead entries while the United States affords unlimited facilities for homesteading—all these things are creating dissatisfaction in the North-West. No man, who is conversant with the facts, can stand up here and say that there is not deep-seated dissatisfaction among the people of the North-West, and that the land laws, the railway laws, the National Policy, and the general policy of this Government as it pertains to the North-West—

Mr. SCARTH. How came they to return eight members out of the nine?

Mr. CHARLTON. I will tell the hon. gentlemen how I account for it. $125,000 worth of seed grain would have some influence.

Mr. DALY. What has that to do with me?

Mr. CHARLTON. The Gerrymander Act, unlimited boodle.—

Mr. DALY. There is no boodle, and you know it.

Mr. CHARLTON. The help of the revising officer.

Mr. DALY. No, Sir.

Mr. CHARLTON. No man will say that this Government stands here to-day by the expression of the free, unfettered will of the people. It stands here by virtue of the Gerrymander Act, the Franchise Act, boodle, and all the means that this Government know so well how to use to keep themselves in power, open voting in the North West, and every form of intimidation they could use to thwart the public sentiment has been used in that country; and we have to-day in this House, as the hon. gentleman assures us, eight members who will not vote for the interests of their constituents, eight members who will basely surrender the interests of their constituents, eight members who will lick the hand that applies the rod to their constituents, eight members who are incapable of using their independence here, and who, under the thin veil of opposing the Government on one measure—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

The Acting SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman is going too far.

Some hon. MEMBERS. What is the point of order?

Mr. IVES. The point of order is this: that the hon. member has no right to say that there are eight members of this House who will not vote in the interest of their constituents.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is no point of order to be taken against that. The hon. gentleman is not imputing a motive; he is stating a fact, and a patent fact.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman states that there are eight members in this House who have not the honesty to vote in the interest of their constituents. He has no right to impute any such motive.

Mr. MULOCK. This is the first time, in my limited experience, that I have observed the Speaker of the House take the point of order himself. There was no point of order taken until Mr. Speaker himself rose.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I beg your pardon.

Mr. MULOCK. I beg your pardon. There was an unseemly noise from a number of hon. gentlemen.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair.

Mr. MULOCK. I have a right to discuss this point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair.

The Acting SPEAKER. I would say this in answer to the hon. gentleman: I think, representing the Speaker, that I have a perfect right here, if the hon. gentleman is out of order, to state so, even if my attention was not called to it; but my attention was called to it by different gentlemen on this side of the House. The point of order, as I understood it, though it was not pointed out, was this: I was following the hon. gentleman, and I understood him to say, speaking of eight hon. members of this House, that they were not independent in this House. I did think that was out of order. As to the point of order taken by the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), I would be disposed to decide against it, because I think it perfectly proper for a gentleman to express an opinion that other gentlemen in their votes do not represent the interests of their constituents, because that is a matter of opinion.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Mr. Speaker, I think—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am going to speak to the question of order.

An hon. MEMBER. It has been decided.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But hon. gentlemen do not know. I believe that, on many occasions, we have had motions for the issue of writs for the election of members in place of men who occupied seats on the floor of this House, on the ground that they were not independent, and that in consequence of their not being independent their relations to the Government—

Mr. IVES. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is discussing a question of order that has already been decided.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I beg to say that this is the first time in the history of this House that saying that a member is not independent of the Administration is declared to be out of order. I think such a declaration may be made in regard to any member. I think we may say that an hon. gentleman on that side of the House has such relations with the Government that he is not in a position to vote against them, and not being in such a position he is dependent on the Administration; and such a statement is not in violation of any rule of Parliament. On the contrary, it is strictly in accordance with parliamentary usage to make such a charge if there be any evidence for making it; and it does seem to me that it would be a very serious interference with the freedom of debate if an hon. member were not at liberty to make such a statement. I have heard the First Minister again and again charge hon. gentlemen who were supporting the Administration that preceded his with being a mechanical majority.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That may be.

Mr. MILLS. With being a servile majority.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; mechanical majority, I admit.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman has gone so far as to declare he would not move for the appointing of a committee because he could not expect to get justice at the hands of such committee. I submit that any such ruling as that made by the hon. gentleman would convert parliamentary proceedings into a farce.

Mr. MULOCK. I think there is one point that ought to be well cleared up. Whenever a point of order is raised in this House, hon. members should, before judgment is delivered by the Speaker, have the right to discuss the point of order. That right was not accorded to me in regard to the point of order lately raised. Out of respect to the acting Speaker, and bearing in mind that he was only temporarily occupying the Chair, I at once yielded to his desire to deliver judgment before hearing argument, but there is such a disposition on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to make the Speaker decide before hon. members have the time to discuss the points raised, that the Speaker should now declare whether, before his decision is given, we have not the right to discuss points of order raised, and not be, as on this occasion, in an unparliamentary, I might say rude, manner, cried down by hon. gentlemen opposite. I remember, on a former occasion, the same difficulty occurring when the then Speaker was in the Chair. I am not saying that on this occasion the blame should attach to the gentleman who occupied the Chair, but I say blame should attach to hon. gentlemen on the Government side who took advantage of his inexperience to gag legitimate and fair discussion of a point of order.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I desire to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that there was no disposition on the part of anybody to prevent discussion of the point of order before the ruling of the Chair. It was after the Speaker had given his decision.

Mr. MULOCK. No, it was not.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). And that was the ground upon which the hon. gentleman was called to order. As to the suggestion of motives or anything of that kind, that is entirely unworthy of the hon. gentleman. We thought, and we may have been wrong, that the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) was going farther than would have been permitted this Session, in his manner of referring to certain hon. members, and we simply called the Speaker's attention to it, and asked for his ruling.

Mr. MULOCK. May I explain?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is nothing before the Chair.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. At any rate, there is a motion to adjourn before the Chair. It certainly would be expedient and desirable that, in questions of order, the opinion of members of this House should be heard. Now, we are all disposed to respect the ruling of the Speaker, and I am glad to say, for my part, that you, Mr. Speaker, if I may be pardoned for saying so, have, I think, displayed a very proper spirit in endeavoring to keep the debate in good order, although that has sometimes brought you into collision with hon. gentlemen on both sides. I think it is expedient, also, that the Speaker should be allowed a reasonable time to decide on points in dispute, and that cannot be obtained without his hearing members on both sides. That was not done in the case of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton).

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. According to the English practice, it rests very much with the Speaker whether discussion should be allowed or not. If a point of order is raised, he has the right to decide at once, without hearing argument, if he has no doubt as to the ruling he should give. There is, of course, the ultimate result of appeal to the House, but that has never been invoked in England in modern times. If the Speaker is satisfied as to the ruling he should give, he may decide at once. If he has the slightest doubt, he will not only express the doubt, but will seek the assistance of the House and endeavor to get the opinions of older members who are authorities in such matters. I was not present when the question arose, and did not hear the language objected to, but I heard the decision of the Speaker. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) rose after that, and I heard cries of order raised because there was objection taken to the hon. gentleman's speaking when the question, so far as the Speaker could dispose of it, was disposed of.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Before the hon. gentleman came in, the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) was addressing the Chair on the subject, and the temporary Speaker rose and gave a decision before the hon. gentleman had an opportunity of making his observations.

Mr. LANDRY. I think there is a mistake about that. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) rose to speak on a point of order on which I had already given a decision, as I understood it; but another question of order, in the meantime, had been raised by the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) on a point of order, and when I found there was no discussion on it I decided against the point raised. The point on which I had already decided was the one on which I understood the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) was speaking.

Mr. MULOCK. I had the floor when the House called on the Speaker, and was addressing the Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. The duty of the Speaker is to maintain dignity and decorum in the debates, and whenever an expression which he deems an improper one is used in the debate, it is his duty to call on the hon. member who made use of the objectionable expression to withdraw it. He need not allow any debate in this case, because if he did, it would only have the effect of creating more disorder and acrimony, and making the offence worse. When a question of procedure, however, is raised, it is his duty to call for the opinion of hon. gentlemen who are experienced in parliamentary practice. It would not be, however, consistent with the dignity of the House to follow such a course when the question that arises is a mere question of decorum in debate.

Mr. CHARLTON. I must express regret for having caused this debate on the point of order, and if I have erred against the rules of decorum which should prevail in this House, I did so unintentionally, and regret having done so. I can say most cordially, Mr. Speaker, that your efforts in the position you fill so honorably have always been in the direction of maintaining good order, and that you have put forth your efforts in a spirit of impartiality. While, perhaps, different opinions may exist in some cases upon points of order, the House will always feel disposed to second your efforts. I repeat that if I have said anything which is at all offensive, or which can reasonably be considered as offensive to any member of this House, it is a matter of regret to me. I feel, however, very strongly that the conduct and the attitude of the Government supporters from Manitoba and the North West is not one that is consistent with their professions of opposition to the Government policy of disallowance, and I assert, what I said before, that, if these gentlemen were sincerely desirous of exercising influence upon the Government, and were acting with a single eye to the interests of their constituents, they would inform the Government that they must withdraw their support until their demand is acceded to; but, to support the Government, except upon the one particular measure that the Government is sure of a majority upon, is—I do not know whether I am entitled to say that it is evidence of political insincerity in their action, but it certainly is not calculated to promote the interests of the North-West or the influence upon the Government which eight members of this House, banded together, could exert if they desired to secure what the North-West claims to be its right, to build railways with its own money for its own purposes. They can, without doubt, secure that concession by arraying themselves against the Government. A difference of sixteen votes on a division would be such a serious matter to the Government that they would not deliberate long before they would desist from their disallowance policy, if those eight members from Manitoba and the North West would insist upon it. I say to them, and I say to their constituents, if my voice will reach so far, that the power is in the hands of those gentlemen to secure what their constituents want, but, if they continue to support the Government on every other question, the Government will be deaf to their demands and will not grant what they ask. I was sorry to see the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Scarth) decrying the country from which he comes, and telling us here, where the language which is uttered goes to the whole world, that the cause of the trouble, the reason why that country is not settled up more rapidly, is not that the policy of the Government is at fault, but that they have had no good harvests since 1883.

Mr. SCARTH. I did not say so. I said they had not had the abundant harvests they had had formerly.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think the exact language that he used was that they had failures in the crops since 1883.

Mr. SCARTH. No, I said they had had partial failures. I said that they had produced 4,000,000 bushels in 1886, as compared with 200,000 bushels in 1880.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman may say that now—

Mr. SCARTH. It is the hon. gentleman who is misrepresenting me. That is the position of it.

Mr. CHARLTON. I will not call on the hon. member to withdraw his words, though I think I am entitled to do so. He distinctly stated that the trouble was that they had had failures in their harvests since 1883. I think, if I were a member for that county or a resident there, that I would act in a more patriotic manner, because I do not believe that the normal condition of things in the North-West is a failure of harvests. I believe that it is a great and a rich country with marvellous agricultural resources, and I should be the last to stand up here, knowing that every word I uttered would be reported in the Hansard, and represent that the country had suffered agricultural disasters in four successive years, and that the consequence was seen in the paucity of settlement, in the small ratio of progress, and in the fact that the country was almost at a standstill. I hope we shall hear less of this from the members for the North-West. The members upon this side of the House have often been taken to task for alleged unpatriotic utterances; but I have never heard, on this side of the House, any statement made in regard to the North-West which is so damaging in its character, in regard to the future of that country, as the statements which have been made to-day, and which have been made previous to this date by members from the North-West in regard to the country which they represent. I think they had better give us the good features of the country, and cease this attempt to justify the Government by denying that its policy has been wrong, and by accounting for the difficulty by other causes than the real causes. Let us not hear any more about the causes of the trouble being frost, and drought, and failures of harvest, leaving the impression that that country is unfit to be the habitation of civilised men.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) who has just sat down has, this evening, taken up the same key as on former occasions. Before I had the honor of a seat in this House, I heard him from the gallery, and, whenever anything concerning the North-West was in debate, he and his colleagues in this House have posed as the praisers of the United States and the runners down of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. DAVIN. I say yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. I rise to a point of order. I call upon the hon. gentleman to withdraw his statement, or to substantiate it by the records.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not think—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not catch the eye of the hon. gentleman, and I would like him to tell me what his point of order is.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman stated that he had listened to myself and other hon. members on this side of the House in past years from the gallery, and that the uniform burden of our song was to decry the North-West, to laud the United States, and to advise settlement in the United States.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. SCARTH. Try to tell the truth.

Mr. DAVIN. I will put myself in order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Has the hon. gentleman concluded his statement?

Mr. CHARLTON. I may not have used the exact words, which were used by the hon. member—

Mr. SCARTH. You do not usually do it.

Mr. CHARLTON. My point was that he should substantiate his statement by reference to the reports.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not see that there is any question of order. What the hon. gentleman asserts may not be sustained in point of fact by argument or by the public records, but I do not see that there is any question of order.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. member is like a man put on the triangle who cries out before the lash is applied. I have said very little at present to him, but, if there is a man in this House who must have a great deal of courage—I will not say effrontery, because that, perhaps, would be unparliamentary—to accuse eight men, who are as independent as any men who ever sat in this House, of basely and tamely submitting to a Government, and not having the honesty to vote in the interests of their constituents—if there is a man who ought not to have dared to make that statement, it is the hon. member opposite to me. Ten years ago, he stated in the House, in a moment of honesty, his real opinions in regard to a great question in which this country became deeply interested. His leader on that occasion, the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), would not take up his views. What did he do? Did he do what he asks the eight members from Manitoba and the North West to do, cross the House and support my right hon. friend? Not at all. He remained silent—silent? No, indeed he did not, but he went and advocated principles diametrically opposed to the principles which he held, and for ten years, and even now,

“ His honor rooted in dishonor stood,
And faith unfaithful kept him falsely true.”

So that, if there is a man living who ought not to have dared to accuse those eight gentlemen of basely and tamely submitting to a Government, it was he. Why, only the other night, when I happened to advocate the cause of the North-West here, the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) got up and paid me the perilous attention of his compliments, and said I had spoken as if I were independent of the Government. In regard to any question affecting the North-West, as everybody knows, I believe that the eight gentlemen are free, as I certainly am free to express my opinions here whether they are in exact accord with the Government or not. But let me say this, Mr. Speaker, of the right hon. gentleman whom I have the honor to follow, that he does not require a slavish following from those who happen to support him.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You will find that out.

Mr. DAVIN. Before I had a seat in this House I differed from the Government, and when the Conservative papers attacked me for differing from the Government, the right hon. gentleman, to his honor be it said, wrote up to me saying: "Don't mind what they say; express the views of the people around you. It would be a very unfortunate thing, indeed, if you were to echo Ottawa." Sir, that is a leader a man may be proud to follow. With reference to this question, I did not speak the other night, because I did not wish to delay the House. But, as regards the sentiment in the North-West, I may say that I have lived there for five years, and I have communicated with the farmers. My hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Perley) will bear me out in stating that farmer after farmer, although many of them have had difficulties, if you speak to them on political questions and as to the relative bearing of both parties in the North-West—many of these farmers having been in the North-West for eight or ten years—they will reply to you: For God's sake never let that Grit Government come back again to steep us in misery as it steeped us before. A number of my old constituents held a meeting and sent a telegram to me the other day. Many of them are against disallowance, but you may be precious certain, bad as they may feel about disallowance, they would feel far worse about a Grit Government. They may dislike disallowance, but they would hate like poison to have a Grit Government, because they suffered from it before, and they know very well what its bungling policy would be.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether every one of his constituents has not gone into that country since the Grit Government went out?

Mr. DAVIN. I shall answer the interruption of the hon. member for Bothwell. I like to be interrupted by the hon. member for Bothwell. He is an agreeable gentleman, I believe, if we really and thoroughly understood him. But he always reminds me of what Horace Walpole said of Dr. Johnson, that he was an agreeable fellow at bottom, but a disagreeable fellow at top. So, Sir, taking a piercing glance into the bottom of him, I am rather pleased than otherwise that he interrupts me. Now, I will answer his question. A great majority of my constituents went into the North-West since the Grit Government ceased to be in power, but a large portion of my constituents, and of the constituents of my hon. friend from East Assiniboia, were in Manitoba under the Grit Government. They know what the dealing of the Grit Government was with Manitoba, and above all they know what was the dealing of the hon. D. M. They know what the dealing of the hon. member for Bothwell was with the North-West and Manitoba, and their inclination is to echo: "No. D. M." They do not want anything more like that. All I can tell the House is that although there may be trouble amongst the people of the North-West, although many of them have a certain restlessness that belongs to western people, and a certain independence of mind that belongs to our broad prairies, nevertheless, speak to them of the political issue, and although in small details they may differ from the Government, their two strongest sentiments are: First, devoted loyalty to the hon. gentleman who leads the Government. Another sentiment that they hold strongly is, that the late Government, the Government that the right hon. gentleman beat, the Government that, after coming into power with an overwhelming majority, in five years not only dissipated that majority, but lost complete hold of the country, and so completely mismanaged affairs, and so completely exhibited themselves to the country as a jejune and barren party, that the country spewed them out of its mouth; they hold strongly, Sir, that it would be a national calamity if that Government should ever come back to power. There is another sentiment, a feeling of fear lest the North-West, or any portion of it, should ever again come under that sinister rule. So I think I have answered the interruption of my hon. friend. Now, Sir, I wish to call the attention of the House, during three minutes of serious discussion—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. I understand those cheers. I have had experience of the politeness that has been dealt out to us from the other side. I have had also to be polite. But I want now to deal with the question that has been raised by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). He lays down a proposition that I will discuss if the House will bear with me, as it will probably interest some members of the House. The question is not often discussed in the newspapers, and I propose to discuss it very briefly here. I refer to the relation of a party man to his party. The hon. member for North Norfolk lays down, by implication, the proposition that if a member differs in one detail from his party, although he may be at one with the party on every other principle, although he may believe in their whole programme in other respects, although he may have the utmost confidence in the leader of the party, although he may believe that it is the greatest need of the country that that man and his colleagues should be in power, nevertheless, if he differs in one detail, he has got to vote against the Government, and he has to "array" — to use the expressive and picturesque language of the hon. member for North Norfolk—he has to "array" himself against the Government on every conceivable question. So that in order to be an honest man on one question he has to be a dishonest man on twenty questions. That is certainly most admirable from the point of view of logic. I met the hon. member, in 1882, on many a platform, and he was a pleasant opponent, too, in North Norfolk. We went from platform to platform, and we fought the battle there. I know he is a great man at figures. I know his methods. I know how clever and how subtle he is. And he is very logical, but sometimes his logic goes lame—like Jacob, it has been touched in a weak sinew and it goes lame. His logic is that in order to be honest a man who differs from a government on one question has to vote against it on every other question, that is to say, he has to vote against his conscience on about twenty or thirty questions in order to get himself right before the forum of conscience. Why, Sir, the logic is absurd. Now, let us pass from the logic to the policy. Suppose the hon. member for Winnipeg—I know it is so—has the greatest possible confidence in the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government, but suppose he has no confidence whatever in the hon. member for North Norfolk, who would certainly be in any Government that would supplant the present Government. Suppose he has no confidence in the hon. D. M. Suppose he has no confidence in the man who, I am sorry to say, is not in his place in this House, a man for whom I have great respect, and whom one may respect without believing in him as a statesman. Under these circumstances, what would be thought of the hon. member for Winnipeg, what would be thought of his loyalty to the country at large, and of his loyalty to his constituents, if, because he differs from the Government on details of administration, he should try to put out the Government which he believes to be efficient, which have proved themselves capable in a hundred deeds, who have shown themselves to be a statesmanlike Government and who are led by a right hon. gentleman of whom I may say that, if the acts of statesmen were rewarded as are the acts of soldiers, his breast would be covered with stars. Are you going to say that the hon. member for Winnipeg, under these circumstances, because he differs with the Government on that one question, should at once try to put that Government out? Now, Sir, I will take the House into my confidence, and I will tell them what I did. When I came down here I was, in principle, opposed to disallowance—

An hon. MEMBER. Tell all.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, I will tell you everything I can; there is nothing in my breast that I need not show. Mr. Speaker, when I came here, when I found the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) was about to make disallowance a question of want of confidence, I said to my friends, some of whom sympathised with me, if it comes to a question of want of confidence in the Government, it is all perfect nonsense, you must vote for the Government. Why? With the Government supported by a powerful majority, nothing could be effected except to present your nice conscientious views on the question of disallowance. So that I lay down this proposition, that when a party man differs on a detail from his party, such as this matter is, the proper thing for him to do, if he agrees with the party in its general programme, is to support his party, to keep his party in power so that it may carry out a beneficent general policy, and for the time being allow that small side issue to rest. I have long ago thought that question out, and it is a very delicate and nice question. It is a very different thing if the difference occurs on a large question. When the honorable knight was Finance Minister, and when, on account of his peculiar way of managing the finances of this country, the country was running down hill, when it was impossible to get him or his leader to give way, because there was no plasticity in that Government, no give whatever in them, they stood as rigid as if made of cast iron, and they said with such convictions as they had they would govern the country, though those convictions were not formed by ordinary reasoning applying itself to the facts of life but as though they had been taken in and they did not know how to assimilate them—when that was the case it would have been a very proper and right course for the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) to have, in his own language, arrayed himself against his party. It would have been a right thing for him, on such a large question, to have come out from among them, and to have fought them and even beaten them, because it would have been a good thing for the country if he had defeated them. There was not a time in the history of those five years, when it would not have been a happy thing for the country if the Government had been beaten. I do not want to occupy the time of the House, but I could show, if it were necessary, that millions of dollars would have been saved to the country if the defeat which overtook that incompetent Government in 1878 had been anticipated by a couple of years. It would have been one of the greatest blessings that ever befell this country. But I believe it was providential to allow the country to have five years of such benighted rule, in order that when a good Government came into power the people would know how to appreciate it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. We have had considerable discussion about the North-West, and we have heard imputations from that side of the House cast on members on this side, and hurled back with scorn as they deserved to be, when hon. gentlemen opposite make accusations against hon. members on this side with respect to the North-West. I have had a seat in this House a good many years. I have not heard hon. members on this side decry their country or any portion of it; but I remember a gentleman saying that he remembered, in the gallery, hon. gentlemen on this side of the House denouncing this country. I enquired what year that occurred. He said that it was 1878. I said: "The Tories sat on this side of the House at that time." And the matter was then explained to him. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) seems to think it was a misfortune to the country when the Government of Mr. Mackenzie came into power. But the Mackenzie Government never started a revolt in the North-West, which was what all the boodlers there wanted in order that they might make money. The Mackenzie Government maintained peace and order, not only in the North-West but in every part of Canada. When I find such reference made to the venerable statesman whose record is well known in this country, and whose record is one of which any man might feel proud—when I see a whippersnapper like this endeavor to impugn the character of Mr. Mackenzie in this House, it makes me boil.

Mr. DAVIN.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What other name is he deserving of? Here is a gentleman trying to cast a stigma on the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie whose government was a credit to him and this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a point of order. I ask whether an honorable gentleman has a right to refer to an hon. member as a whippersnapper.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. As that expression appears to be not approved by some hon. members, I beg to withdraw it. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), who comes from the North-West, I believe the Pile of Bones is his constituency, has addressed the House. He has an organ there, and I have it before me. I believe it is a subsidised organ, and that this Government has paid him liberally for advocating their interests in this great paper. I will read some of the articles in it:

"Regina has held a meeting for the purpose of assisting Mr. Davin with his several Bills pertaining to the North-West. Medicine Hat should also take a step in this direction."

That is a very delicate hint.

"Since we have a representative in the House and one who is strongly advocating North-West interests, we should lend him all the assistance and encouragement that is in our power."

That is an editorial.

Mr. DAVIN. I rise to order. The hon. gentleman is reading something as having been written for my paper, whereas it is not in my paper in the strict sense of the word, but it is quoted into my paper. My paper never originated it, and when I saw it quoted there I was very angry about it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That is all very well. The portion I quoted from—

Mr. SPEAKER. I should like the hon. gentleman to remember that the question before the House is whether the amendment to the Land Bill shall be read a second time. As time is very precious, I may mention that while the hon. gentleman's remarks may be in order he should be able to state how his present argument has any bearing on the question now before the House.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I was coming to Mr. Davin's Land Bill, and there is some information in it which may enable us to come to a correct conclusion and may, perhaps enable the Minister of the Interior to engraft on his own Bill, some provisions of that Bill. The paper goes on to say :

"Mr. Davin is doing more than all the other North-West members combined, and it is the duty of his constituents to lend him a helping hand."

This is among the editorial notes in the Regina Leader—

Mr. DAVIN. I again rise to order. The hon. gentleman states what is not the case. He says that is a note in that newspaper. It is quoted there, and he ought to have stated it, and it is quoted from the Medicine Hat Times.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

An hon. MEMBER. The hon. gentleman is quite in order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Take your licking like a man—I believe that is your own expression—

"The people in eastern Canada didn't know the North-West Territories were any more than a name, but they know it now, and that through Mr. Davin. If Mr. Davin does not succeed in the passing of his Bills, he will at least wake up the old sleep heads of the east to the fact that the people up this way are to be heard. Give him a lift. He is Conservative, but that makes no difference, or should not, to liberal-minded business men."

Now I notice in the Winnipeg Sun that "Mr. Davin shirked the vote on the disallowance question."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh; no, no.

Mr. LANDERKIN. And I notice in the Winnipeg Free Press that "Davin evidently shirked the vote."

Mr. MITCHELL. Oh, surely not.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, question.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Now, I think that when the hon. gentleman, a new member of this House, gets up and impugns the character of a man like the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) who led the Government, and led it well for five years, he does that which ill-becomes him. And I do not think that he boasts just as big a heart as an Irishman should boast, when he impugns a man who is sick, one who has worn out his life in the service of his country.

Mr. DAVIN. Read that; read that.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Sit down.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read, read.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Mr. Speaker, I have read enough of that sort of trash, and I do not wonder at your calling me to order for reading out of this paper. Now, I have noticed, during the discussion of this Bill, some of the strong evidences of loyalty which are spoken of by hon. gentlemen on the other side. Well, do you know, whenever they begin to talk about their loyalty it makes me wonder. It makes me feel as if there was a good reason for their doing so, ever since they burned the Parliament House at Montreal; ever since that time they prate everlastingly about their loyalty. The hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins) said the First Minister had begun his career at the burning of the Parliament buildings at Montreal. This is what was said by one of the hon. gentleman's own supporters, and he added that his sun would go down at another burning. You will all remember how history repeated itself—how the Tory party met at the Champ de Mars and passed annexation resolutions, and now on every occasion when they get up, in order to try to wipe away the stain of those things, they prate about their loyalty and about the disloyalty of hon. gentlemen on this side. Why, we could well afford to dare and listen to such talk. There never was a Liberal of this country tainted with disloyalty. Everybody knows that it is not necessary for us to get up on every stump in this country, and every time we speak in the House, and say, like hon. gentlemen opposite, that they are loyal. Of course their loyalty is suspected; those who are not possessed of any great amount of virtue themselves are the ones who are everlastingly boasting of their virtue. When we see further evidence coming down, the burning of the Parliament House, the annexation manifesto, and coming down to later periods, when they betrayed the Governor General of this country, and proved disloyal to the constitution of the limited monarchy by which we are ruled, by traitorously betraying the Governor General of this country, and when we heard them state in this House that, if British connection had to suffer by certain parts of their creed and policy, then they said with that ever-gushing loyalty of theirs: So much the worse for British connection. They will carry out their policy whether it is loyal or disloyal, and their policy and aim is to keep their party in power. Speaking of the North-West, they refused to give the ballot to the people of the North-West, and it is well known that the North-West is populated largely by officials of the Government. If they took away the Government officials from the North-West, if they took away everybody who got seed wheat in that country, the hon. gentleman's majority would dwindle down to nothing; the hon. gentleman knows it well. But the Government did not allow them to exercise the ballot in the North-West, as the people do in other parts of the Dominion, and why? I say—if it is parliamentary to say it—that it is a cool attempt to snatch from the people of the North-West the liberties that they should enjoy—an attempt to coerce the people, by refusing them the ballot which is possessed in other parts of the Dominion. And, why did they do so? It was because they knew too well that if they had not refused the ballot to these people, the burning eloquence of my hon. friend would not be heard in this House. They knew that if they did not have an open vote in that country, he could say to the office holders there: If you do not sustain the Government then off goes your head. Now, I did not intend to take up the time of the House, but I say that if this discussion has not been a very profitable one, if the time of the House has been wasted, the Government should disallow their supporters on that side and prevent them from rising up, after a debate is passed, and trying to make speeches to bolster up positions which they knew, when the Bill was before the House, were untenable and against the best interests of the people they represent. Now, at the ninth hour, after the Bill has passed, after the Government has been sustained on that question, they get up and try to bolster their position—a position which is illogical and not very much to their credit.

Mr. DAVIN. I rise to a personal explanation, and if I am out of order, I will, if necessary, put myself in order by moving the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. MITCHELL. Get some one else to do it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I have no objections to allowing him to speak. I will give him every opportunity of putting himself right.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman has made a statement that my paper contained certain articles which he read. I may tell the House that those remarks were taken entirely from the Medicine Hat Times. When I saw them quoted in my paper I thought they showed, on the part of the editor, a great want of judgment and—

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Are they true?

Mr. DAVIN,—and I telegraphed at once the following:—

"SIR,—The paragraph from the Medicine Hat Times, quoted in the Leader last week, is unjust to Messrs. Perley, Davis and McDowall—

An hon. MEMBER. Why didn't you include the Manitoba members?

Mr. DAVIN. He had spoken about the North-West members, and I did not identify the Manitoba members with it, or the same remarks would have applied.

"all have taken the greatest interest in North-West legislation and have pressed North-West interests and the Bills before Parliament with equal zeal and effect.

"NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN."

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. WATSON. I will only occupy the time of the House for a short time. I was not surprised to hear the member for Winnipeg getting up and making a speech on disallowance, even at this late stage. I had hoped, and his constituents at Winnipeg had hoped, that at the time that question was before the House the hon. gentleman would have risen in his place and used his influence to induce the Government to abandon that policy in this House. But it appears that the hon. gentleman could not muster up enough courage then to say one word against the Government, although he had pledged himself to vote against them on that question of disallowance. I had referred to the fact that the hon. member for Winnipeg had informed the electors of that city that he was in communication with the right hon. leader of the Government, and had received cipher telegrams from him to the effect that the policy of disallowance would be discontinued. I will read what I stated at the time. I was explaining what I would like to explain to-night if there were time. I could explain why it is that there are eight members from Manitoba and the North-West here supporting the Government, and only one supporting the Opposition. It would take some time to do it, but I could give reasons which would satisfy a majority of the members of this House that it was not by a fair expression of opinion on the part of the people of Manitoba and the North-West that eight members were elected to support the Administration. At that time I was explaining why the hon. member for Winnipeg was elected to this House. I said:

"We had him stating in Winnipeg that he was in correspondence with the right hon. gentleman, and was receiving cipher telegrams which he stated to be to the effect that the policy of disallowance was to be discontinued."

That is what I stated. The hon. member then rose and said:

"I rise to a point of order. I never made any such statement as the hon. member for Marquette has alleged."

Now, the hon. gentleman rises to day in all his dignity, and says that he does not wish to have the Finance Minister apologise for his vote—that he had pledged himself to his constituents to oppose the Government on their policy of disallowance, and he does not thank the Minister of Finance for apologising for the vote he was forced into giving. I do not wonder at the hon. gentleman's doing this, because his constituents, the Conservatives of the city of Winnipeg, have actually threatened to ask him to resign his seat as their representative, because of the position he has placed himself in on that question. I was surprised to hear the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) talk in the way he did about disallowance, and about what he has done and would do for the country, when he admits that a large number of his constituents are in favor of the policy of disallowance, and in fact he pledged himself in his address to the electors that he would oppose the Government on that policy. But what did he do? Why, he shirked the vote; he was not in the House when it was taken; and he has not explained why he was not in the House on that particular day. It appears to me that those gentlemen are ready to sacrifice their country for the sake of party. They talk about this disallowance question as a trifling question. It is a question which is to day so exciting the people of Manitoba that their Local Legislature has voted $1,000,000 for the purpose of building a railway to the boundary line.

An hon. MEMBER. That is what he calls a detail.
Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. WATSON. Well, it is such a detail that I would take this opportunity of informing hon. gentlemen opposite that if the people of Manitoba are interfered with in what they consider their just rights, there will be serious consequences.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Take care.

Mr. WATSON. The First Minister says take care, but what I am stating here, I am stating on my responsibility as a member of this House, and as a good citizen of Canada; and if the people of Manitoba are exercising what we believe to be a constitutional right, I have a right to make this statement. The people of Manitoba have expressed themselves in that way through the press, and through the Local Legislature, and I am perfectly safe in making that statement here to-day. I am not speaking only for my own county; I am speaking for the city of Winnipeg, and for the whole of Manitoba and the North-West, when I make that statement. The hon. member for Winnipeg has made reference to other parts of the policy of this Government, and to the effect that they have had on that Province. He says the people are perfectly satisfied with the tariff policy. I will not take time to enumerate the different articles which I might enumerate to show that that policy is not in the interest of Manitoba. Ours is not a manufacturing Province, and has no interest in a high protective tariff. The Local Legislature, some two years ago, appointed a committee to enquire into the working of the tariff in that Province; and that committee reported to the Legislature that the tariff bore excessively heavy on the settlers of the Province. That fact should suffice to answer the statement of the hon. gentleman. It is not necessary for me to take up the time of the House in referring to matters which were referred to by some hon. gentlemen opposite to-day, and which were discussed on a previous occasion. I am glad to see that the hon. member for Winnipeg has mustered up enough courage, though several weeks after he should have spoken, to express his opinion in the House on the question of disallowance.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 79) to consolidate and amend the Acts relating to the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway and Steamship Company, and to change the name thereof.—(Mr. Scarth.)

Bill (No. 117) respecting the Western Counties Railway Company.—(Mr. Mills, Annapolis.)

Bill (No. 118) respecting the Guelph Junction Railway Company.—(Mr. Innes.)

Bill (No. 124) respecting the Ontario Pacific Railway Company.—(Mr. Rykert.)

Bill (No. 132) further to amend to Act incorporating the Canada Atlantic Railway Company.—(Mr. Perley, Ottawa.)

Bill (No. 133) respecting the Manitoba South-Western Colonisation Railway Company.—(Mr. Haggart.)

Bill (No. 134) to enable the St. Martin's and Upham Railway Company to sell its Railway Property.—(Mr. Skinner.)

Bill (No. 129) respecting the Primitive Methodist Colonisation Company.—(Mr. Wallace.)

Bill (No. 108) for the relief of Marie Louise Noel (on a division).—(Mr. Small.)

Bill (No. 144) for the relief of John Monteith (on a division).—(Mr. O'Brien.)

Bill (145) for the relief of Fanny Margaret Riddell (on a division).—(Mr. Tupper.)

DIVORCE—RELIEF OF SUSAN ASH.

Mr. SMALL moved the second reading of Bill (No. 135) for the relief of Susan Ash (from the Senate).

Mr. THOMPSON. The Bill which is now before the House is a Divorce Bill which has been sent down from the Senate, and I suppose the House is aware that it raises some nice constitutional questions which are somewhat new, new at all events in the discussion of Bills of Divorce. So far as I am personally concerned, I intend, as regards this Bill, to adhere to the practice I have pursued ever since I have had the honor of a seat in this House and vote against this Bill, because I believe divorce, whether by judicial decree or by statute, should not be granted. I am aware, however, that the legal questions that have been raised in connection with this Bill, and the procedure which is involved in the granting of the prayer of the petition, somewhat affect the regularity of the proceedings of Parliament, and establish a very important precedent as regards future applications of the same kind, and I have a duty to discharge to the House which is altogether disconnected with my personal views on the question of divorce. I recognise it to be my duty to state to the House, so far as I am able to form an opinion on the subject, how the application would be regarded if the subject was one now for judicial enquiry. For I understand the principle on which Bills of this kind have proceeded, ever since this practice has been established, is this: that they will be granted on the same evidence and under the same circumstances as applications would be granted before a judicial tribunal in the Mother Country which had jurisdiction over such a subject. The House is aware, I presume, from previous discussions on questions of this kind, that before 1858 in England there was no tribunal which had jurisdiction to grant a divorce. Offences against the marriage relation were subjects of ecclesiastical enquiry, and divorces from bed and board, as it is commonly called, of course, were then granted, but ecclesiastical courts had no jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage tie. In 1858 the court of divorce and matrimonial causes was established in England, and power was given to that tribunal, in certain cases and for certain specified reasons, to grant a dissolution of the marriage tie, and by the Judicature Act that jurisdiction has now become vested in the High Court of Justice and is administered in what is known as the Probate Division. I propose in the discharge of my duty this evening, with regard to giving an opinion on this subject, to state to the House what my view is as to the right of the petitioner under the circumstances detailed in the evidence in support of her petition, if she were an applicant to the Probate Division of the High Court of Justice in England instead of an applicant to the Parliament of Canada for the relief which she now seeks. I am bound to say to the House, notwithstanding the disposition which I have to resist by my vote a Bill of this description, that I am forced to a conclusion that under the facts detailed in the evidence here she would be entitled to a decree dissolving the marriage tie under the procedure which obtains in England and under the principles which have been administered since 1858, first in the Court of Divorce and Matrimonial causes, and, subsequently, in the High Court of Justice.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do you say she would be or she would not be entitled?

Mr. THOMPSON. I say she would be entitled. I will state briefly what the facts of the case are as I understand them from the evidence which has been sent here from the Senate, and I will mention, as briefly as possible, the principles which it appears to me would guide a judicial tribunal in coming to a decision on such a question. It appears that Susan Ash was married in the city of Kingston, Ont., on 24th March, 1868. It is not material, I suppose, to the legal question which arises, but I may state the fact incidentally, that she was then a very young person of the age of only sixteen, and that the person whom she married, and who was named Manton, was a person very much her senior. She seems to have left her home somewhat peculiarly, her mother having died and her father having married subsequently, and it seemed to have been the desire of her parents that she should make an early marriage, and the marriage was very hastily made, and, as I have said, at the age of sixteen. She went to live with her husband in Kingston, and remained with him five or six weeks. She left her home with his consent, and went to visit her father in the city of Montreal. On her return to her husband, at the expiration of five or six weeks, she found that he had given up the business in which he was engaged, had sold off his stock in trade, had sold his furniture, had parted with his house and gone to board. He provided her, however, with board for a short time. But it is alleged on behalf of the petitioner, and not denied, that he was from that time forward addicted to most intemperate habits, which resulted in her believing that it was impossible for her to continue to live with him. She states that, as time progressed, his habits of indulgence increased, until she was unable to live with him any longer. She then went to live with her father, in the city of Montreal, and lived there until his death, which took place in 1878. It appears that she left her husband in Kingston, in consequence of these habits, in consequence of his ill-treatment of her and his indulgence in drink, but she left him against his will. The next circumstance which transpires in the evidence is that, in the year 1874—the marriage having taken place in 1868—her husband, Manton, married a person named Hatch in the town of Stirling, Ont., on the 3rd of September, 1874; and the parties to the second marriage, that is, Manton and his second wife, removed at once to the city of Boston, remained there living as husband and wife, and had a family. It appears that, between the time that his wife left him in Kingston and went to live with her father in Montreal, Manton obtained a divorce from the present petitioner in the State of Massachusetts. He appears to have gone there and applied for a divorce on the ground that she had deserted his home. That is the only plea upon which he obtained a divorce, and the case which the petitioner now presents, and on which she founds her application for this Bill is this: she says the second marriage of her husband was a bigamous marriage, not justified by the divorce of Massachusetts, and the question, I take it, which Parliament has to consider, before giving assent to this Bill is whether it will recognise the divorce obtained in the State of Massachusetts as a complete dissolution of the marriage which had taken place in Canada. Now, Sir, in the first place, I admit that it is not the most material element for consideration that the marriage took place in Canada, because, if the parties subsequently became domiciled in another country, they submitted themselves and their marital status altogether to the laws and tribunals of the country in which they went to live; and what I contend is most important in this case is this principle: that before any tribunal can alter the marriage status and dissolve a marriage of the person who applies for that relief—in this case Manton, who obtained the divorce in the State of Massachusetts—must have been domiciled in the State of Massachusetts, in order to entitle him to that relief, in order to give validity to a divorce obtained in Massachusetts, and in order to entitle the divorce in Massachusetts to any recognition here. That principle, I take it, is thoroughly established in English law, by a long series of decisions, and by text-writers who treat of divorce. It is most important that it should be fully observed, because, to depart from that principle would enable persons collusively, and in bad faith, to go from one country to another, merely for the purpose of obtaining a divorce; and, having obtained a divorce in a foreign country, to set that divorce up against their lawful husbands or wives in this country, and to contract what our law would only consider a bigamous marriage here upon their return. Now, the question arises as to whether it appears in this case that there was any jurisdiction, on the part of the court in Massachusetts, to give Manton a divorce against his wife? As I have said that ought to be decided, in my opinion, by the question whether he was, when he applied for that divorce in Massachusetts, domiciled there. If he went on a temporary visit to Boston, or if—which would be still worse—he went merely for the purpose of applying for a divorce there, I have no hesitation in giving my opinion that his decree so obtained in the United States would be entirely nugatory here, and would not be recognised in any court under the British system of jurisprudence. When we look at the evidence which has been sent from the Senate, we find the bald facts as I have stated them to the House: first, the marriage at Kingston; second, the divorce obtained in Massachusetts, and third, the marriage contracted here in Stirling with the second wife. There is no evidence whatever in the case, to show that at the time he obtained the divorce in the State of Massachusetts he was domiciled there, or was ever there at all, in fact, until after the second marriage was contracted, or was then otherwise than as a citizen of Canada. If such be the case, the result would be that the second marriage in Stirling, would be a bigamous marriage, and Susan Ash, his first wife, would have, in a judicial tribunal, a fair right to a divorce, on the ground that he had committed bigamy and the other offences upon which divorces here are founded. Now, the only evidence that I find to show that he was domiciled in Massachusetts is simply the recital in the decree for the divorce, calling him “of Boston,” and I submit to the House, on the authorities that I will present, as briefly as I can, in order to lead the House to a clear understanding of my view, that that statement is no evidence—is nothing more than it professes to be, namely, a simple assertion that, at the time he made his application in Massachusetts he was there; not an evidence of any kind that he had a domicile there. And when I am speaking of a domicile, I am not speaking of a domicile in any technical sense. I would accept any evidence whatever which would lead the House to the conclusion that he was there in good faith, for the purpose of taking up his residence—for the purpose of making his home; for, as some of the authorities put it, it is not necessary that there should be a domicile in a technical sense, that it is enough that the matrimonial home of the parties was in the place at which the court undertook to exercise jurisdiction. But, as I have said, there is absolutely no evidence that his home was there, that he was resident there, that he was there for anything but the temporary purpose of obtaining the divorce; and there is the presumption to the contrary from the fact of his having been married in Kingston and of his having contracted the second marriage in Stirling, and the only clear evidence that he made his home in Massachusetts at all is the evidence that he went there to live after he contracted his second marriage. Now, upon that subject, I would cite to the House one or two authorities, because I know that it is a matter which has engaged the attention of my brethren of the legal profession in the House, and involves, as I have said, important principles as regards the future action of the House on Bills of this description. The authority of an eminent text writer, as regards the effect of domicile upon an application for divorce, is contained in a few words; I am referring to the standard work of Dicey on Domicile. He says:

Mr. THOMPSON.

“1st. The Divorce Court has under exceptional circumstances jurisdiction to dissolve a marriage where the parties are, or where one of them is, at the commencement of the proceedings for the divorce resident, though not domiciled in England.

And I would emphasise here, what I have already stated, that in speaking of the necessity for domicile in the place where the application for divorce is made, I am not using the word domicile in a technical sense, nor in any other sense than that of the real home or residence, as distinguished from a mere presence in the place where the tribunals undertake to exercise jurisdiction. Then, he says:

“2nd. The Divorce Court has jurisdiction to dissolve a marriage between parties not domiciled in England at the time of the proceedings for divorce where the defendant has appeared and not under protest.”

In this case Susan Ash did not appear in the court in Massachusetts, and, therefore, did nothing to bring herself within that second provision by submitting herself in any sense to the jurisdiction of the Massachusetts court.

“3rd. The Divorce Court has jurisdiction to dissolve an English marriage between English subjects on the petition of a wife who is resident, though not domiciled, in England.”

That latter point I will refer to again hereafter, because it is necessary to establish it on behalf of this petitioner, before she can have any right to come to this Parliament for relief. Now, Sir, the subject, as I have said, has been very fully considered in a long series of decisions. In the first place there is a decision of three very eminent judges, in 1878, in the case of Niboyet vs. Niboyet, decided in the Probate Division of the High Court of Justice, and afterwards in the Court of Appeal in England; and that decision goes the farthest of any modern English case in support of the recognition of the power of a tribunal to give a divorce without something in the nature of domicile. The circumstances were these: The parties had been married at Gibraltar. They were French, and they were living in England only because the husband was there in the diplomatic service as a representative of France. He was, as a member of the diplomatic service, fully resident in England, although by the technical principle of constitutional law a diplomatic officer retains his original domicile and belongs to his own country, even though he goes abroad in foreign service. Therefore, the husband was legally and technically domiciled in his own country, in France, but he was really and in good faith resident in England; and it was held that England, although not the domicile of the parties in the technical sense, was their matrimonial home—their residence, and that this gave the court jurisdiction there. In support of that proposition, I might mention that when this case was subsequently reviewed in the House of Lords, in the case of Harvey vs. Farnie, in VIII Appeal Cases, it was upheld on the ground that England, although not the domicile of both parties, was the bonâ fide residence of both parties. In this case, it cannot be said, from anything the evidence contains, that Massachusetts was the bonâ fide home, or in any sense the home of either of the parties. It does not appear to have been even the home of the husband. Now, there is a dissentient opinion in that case of Niboyet vs. Niboyet, delivered by Lord Justice Brett, which has been almost universally accepted as the better opinion of the two opinions which were pronounced; and that opinion goes so far as to uphold the rule that there must be something more than a bonâ fide residence in the country to whose tribunal the application for divorce has been made—that there must be, in the fullest sense the domicile of the parties there. But I would cite one passage from the judgment of Lord Justice James, who was one of the majority of the court, and who took the narrower view that the jurisdiction of the English tribunal could be upheld on the ground that England was merely the residence of the parties, for the purpose of showing that in his view it was necessary, in order to give the court jurisdiction, that there must be even something more than the mere technical domicile. It is necessary, he holds, that the real residence, the “matrimonial home” as it was called, of the parties be within the state which undertakes to exercise the jurisdiction. Lord Justice James says, at page 6 :

"If I were asked to define, and it were necessary to define, what in the particular case of matrimonial infidelity constitutes a matter matrimonial in England at the time when the Act was passed, I should define it to be a case of infidelity where the matrimonial home was in England."

And here I say, applying that decision, to give the courts of Massachusetts jurisdiction, it should have been the place where the matrimonial home was :

"The matrimonial home, in which the offended husband ought to be no longer bound to entertain the unchaste wife, or in which the chaste and offended wife ought to be no longer bound to share the bed and board of the polluted husband—the matrimonial home, the purity of which was under the watch and award of the Church there."

Further on, at page 8, he says :

"In the first place, it appears to me to be a violation of every principle, to make the dissolubility of a marriage depend on the mere will and pleasure of the husband, and domicile is entirely a matter of his will and pleasure. It would be very desirable, no doubt, that a judicial decree of dissolution of a marriage affecting the status of husband and wife, a decree in rem, should be, if possible, recognised by the courts of every other country, according to the principles in international comity. But is such a result possible? Would any French court recognise the dissolution of a French marriage, because the French husband had been minded to establish his domicile in England?"

I am citing that for the purpose of showing that even the majority of that court decided that it was sufficient that the matrimonial home should be in England, although technically the domicile was not there. This required something more—that there should be not merely domicile in England, but bonâ fide residence there in order to give the English courts jurisdiction. At page 13, I will cite a passage from the dissentient judge, Lord Justice Brett. I can cite it with the more confidence, because the text-writer, to whom I have referred, has distinctly affirmed that this was the better opinion of the three, that the others were opposed to well established dicta, if not to principles, and because, when the case subsequently came to be reviewed in a later case, in 1882, to which I may call the attention of the House, the Law Lords were exceedingly careful to avoid directly affirming the extensive principle that even the matrimonial home was sufficient in order to give a court jurisdiction. Brett, L. J., says :

"The jurisdiction of a country exercised, whether by legislation or by its courts, over the personal status of the subjects of another country who are merely present in it, or are merely sojourning in it, or are merely cited to it"—

And this man cannot be said to have been anything more than merely present in the State of Massachusetts, according to the evidence.—

"is not admitted by the country of which such people are subjects, or by other foreign countries."

Now, these people were the subjects of Canada. This man was merely present—I am giving his case the best of the evidence—in Massachusetts. The woman was only cited there and was never present, and Brett says such presence "is not admitted by the country of which such people are subjects or by other foreign countries as sufficient to give jurisdiction." If, therefore, the courts of any country should assume, by a decree of divorce, or any other decree referring to the status of a married person, to alter the status of a foreigner not domiciled in that country, the decree would not be considered as binding by the courts of another country. According to this authority, the decree of the court of Massachusetts is not a decree which would be recognised by another country without stronger proof than we have here of the court having jurisdiction over the persons, through the husband being there domiciled, in the technical sense of the term. The case came up for the consideration of the House of Lords, in 1882, in the somewhat celebrated case of Harvey vs Farnie. In that case the decision was briefly this :

"The English courts will recognise as valid the decision of a competent foreign Christian tribunal dissolving the marriage between a domiciled native in the country where such tribunal has jurisdiction, and an English woman, when the decree of divorce is not impeached by any species of collusion, or fraud. And this, although the marriage may have been solemnised in England, and may have been dissolved for a cause which would not have been sufficient to obtain a divorce in England."

Applying the text of that decision to this particular case, it would amount to this, that the Canadian courts, or, in this instance, the Canadian Parliament "will recognise as valid the decision of a competent foreign Christian tribunal (such as the court of Massachusetts), dissolving the marriage between a domiciled native in the country where such tribunal has jurisdiction." That is to say, if we had divorce courts, they would, as would the courts of England, recognise in this particular instance a divorce granted in Massachusetts, although not for a cause which would justify a divorce in our country or in England, provided it was made on the application of a citizen in Massachusetts, domiciled there, and not under any other circumstances. I will not detain the House by reading more passages in this decision. All through it is based on the principle, that, although the divorce was not, in that case, made in England, it was recognised in England, because it was made in Scotland in relation to a Scottish subject, a person domiciled there. There must be one of two things, to express it a little more fully than did the text which I cited at the outset. There must be a domicile in Massachusetts to make this divorce recognisable here, or there must be evidence that the home, the residence, as distinguished from the mere presence of the person, was in the State of Massachusetts, at the time the divorce was applied for by him. Against the case of the petitioner, this principle is set up: that the domicile of the wife is always the domicile of the husband; and that if we can find anything in this case to show that the husband was domiciled in the State of Massachusetts, then we must conclude that the court has jurisdiction there, not only over him, but over her. I answered, in the first place, by anticipation, that there is no evidence he was ever domiciled in Massachusetts or even residing there; there is no evidence that he was more than merely present there, in the sense in which these authorities say mere presence is not enough to give them jurisdiction. In Pitt vs. Pitt, of House of Lords cases, page 640, there is a distinct dictum by the Lord Chancellor, that, as regards the rights of the wife, they are not prejudiced by the principle of the law that the domicile of the husband is that of his wife. The general principle of the law that the husband's domicile is that of his wife, is founded, in the first place, on the general rule that the husband and wife are one, and, in the second place, on the general principle which recognises the Christian duty of the wife to take up her residence with her husband. But the House will understand that a case which presents features such as this case does, which presents the feature of the husband ill-treating his wife, compelling her absence from his home, and then his going abroad, in bad faith and in violation of his marriage duty, to seek a home elsewhere, is not the ordinary case of a husband taking up his home in a foreign State for the purpose of making his residence there, in good faith. The Lord Chancellor said in the case of Pitt vs. Pitt :

"If it had been necessary to arrive at a different conclusion as to the fact of his domicile, I should still have had the greatest possible difficulty in holding that the domicile of the husband was, in a case of this kind, to be regarded in law as the domicile of the wife, by construction or by attraction, so as to compel the wife to follow the husband, and to become subject, for the purpose of the divorce, to the jurisdiction of the tribunal of any country in which the husband might choose, even for that purpose alone, to fix and to declare that he intended to acquire an absolute domicile."

Lord Kingsdown, in the course of the same case, said: it is true, that he did not entertain the doubts which the Lord Chancellor did; but, in the latter case of Harvey vs. Farnie, decided in 1882, and which I cited a few moments ago, it is distinctly laid down, in the course of the decision, that the wife does not, by the principle that the husband and wife are one, or by reason of the law of duty which compels her to live with her husband, forfeit the rights which she has to assert against him, when he is acting in violation of his marriage duties. Now, the question arises whether she, by virtue of the principle that there must be a domicile and a bona fide residence within the jurisdiction of the tribunals to which the party seeking the divorce applies, must not show she has a domicile in this country, now that she is applying for a divorce by Parliament. I think that she has a domicile here, and has a right to apply for a divorce here, according to the principles recognised by the English authorities. It is true, her husband now is fully domiciled in the United States. Immediately after the second marriage he went there to live with his second wife, and they have a family in the State of Massachusetts; where, I presume, he now lives. It cannot be said that, when he was living in a bigamous state, as I have shown he was, if I am right in the proposition which I have already laid down, her domicile must still follow his, and that she is bound to go to the State of Massachusetts and to live with a person who has contracted a bigamous marriage according to the laws of this country. And the American law, as well as the English law, and the law of this country, shows that her domicile is that of the country of which she is a citizen, in such a case. A very distinguished authority, Bishop, in volume 2, section 125, lays down these propositions, which establish, I think, that the wife has a right to come to the tribunals of this country in which divorce is dealt with, and to apply for this divorce:

"The general rule is familiar that marriage creates a unity of the parties which gives them one domicile, that the husband has the authority to determine where it shall be, and that consequently the wife's follows his and his does not change with hers. But this rule, like any other ought to be and commonly is, limited by the reasons on which it rests; as for example, a wife may, in proper circumstances—as where she is abandoned, or acquires a settlement separate from her husband. So, where married parties are living under a judicial separation, or divorced from bed and board, the domicile of the wife does not follow the husband's. Now, when the law authorises a suit between a husband and his wife for divorce, and makes the jurisdiction over it depend among other things upon domicile, there is an irresistible implication that, if she needs a separate domicile to give effect to her rights, or if his case requires her to have one to make his effectual, the law has conferred it on her. And, in addition to this argument, we have the proposition already appearing, that the reason why her domicile follows his is not now in operation; and, as the reason has ceased, so should its consequence. It would not be necessary to regard the wife's separate domicile complete for every purpose; but it is a quasi domicile for the special purpose of divorce. More minutely, and in other aspects of the question, if a husband commits an offence entitling a wife to a divorce, she not only is discharged thereby immediately, and without judicial sentence, from her duty to dwell with him, but she must abandon him, or the cohabitation will be condonation, barring her of the remedy. In other words, she must establish a domicile of her own, separate from his, though it may, or not, be in the same judicial locality with his. Then the law, which required this of her, cannot turn round and say it is not hers. Moreover, the reason for making his domicile hers has ceased. The courts may well, and they do, decline to accept this result on a collateral issue, but in principle it is imperative in the divorce suit."

Then, at section 127, he says:

"If the parties are living in different States, and the statutes of the husband's State require the applicant for divorce to be domiciled therein, can the wife, relying on the rule that the domicile is hers, sue him for divorce in his own jurisdiction?"

That is, could Susan Ash go to the State of Massachusetts and, relying on the defendant's domicile being there, apply for a divorce on the ground that the original divorce was void?

"In principle he, denying the offence, cannot at the same instant maintain, should he be disposed, as he will not be, that the offence has qualified her to have a separate domicile. But there is a difficulty on her side. She alleging and proving his guilt, shows herself competent to have a separate domicile; and, when the fact appears also that she is abiding in the other state animo manendi, all ground for holding the husband's domicile to be hers is excluded. In fact and in law it is not hers. Such is the doctrine of principle. In authority, this question in most of our States is not settled. But where a husband deserted his wife in Massachusetts, in which State she continued to reside, himself removing to New Hampshire, the court of his new domicile refused to accept it as his wife's for divorce, holding in her suit there that it had no jurisdiction. 'When the husband,' said Fowler, J., 'abandoned his wife, necessity of separate and independent existence gave her a separate residence and domicile; and, when he came into this State, leaving her in Massachusetts, her domicile remained there with her, and there it still continues.' And so it has been held in North Carolina, in Missouri and in Wisconsin. A State ought not to forbid any person, wherever residing, to sue one of its domiciled citizens for a breach of the marital status, yet, in our country, for the same reason that plaintiffs are required to reside in the State a given number of years before the suit is commenced, so also should be defendants where a non-resident is plaintiff."

Mr. THOMPSON.

So that, according to the law of the United States itself, if this woman were able to establish that the second marriage was bigamous, that it gave her a right, under the laws of the State of Massachusetts, to a divorce against her husband, and the original divorce was void, as I have contended, for want of jurisdiction, she would be excluded from the courts of Massachusetts because she has her domicile in Canada and has no status to apply to the courts in Massachusetts. The same rule was foreshadowed by Lord Justice Brett, when he decided in 1878, in the case of Niboyet vs. Niboyet, that "The case of an adulterous husband deserting his wife by leaving the country of his domicile and assuming to domicile himself in another"—

As this man left Canada and assumed to domicile himself in Massachusetts—

"might seem to raise an intolerable injustice, but we cannot help thinking that in such case, if sued by his wife in the country in which he had left her"—

As he is now being sued by Susan Ash—

"he could not be heard to allege that that was not still the place of his married home, i. e., for the purpose of that suit, of his domicile."

If I am right in that, this is the only place to which an application could be made by her for divorce. The subject came indirectly under the notice of our own courts, on an appeal from one of the courts in the Province of Quebec; and a good deal has been said in another place in the course of the discussion of this Bill, as to the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, and the principles which it has been asserted were decided there—I refer to the case of Stevens vs. Fisk, in which it was decided, principally by the judgment of Mr. Justice Gwynne—that the foreign divorces obtained in the United States must be recognised by all Canadian courts. I am glad to say, for the safety of our own community, that no such principle was asserted or foreshadowed in any degree by the learned judge in his judgment, which I hold in my hand. It was the case of a marriage which took place in the State of New York. The two parties were citizens of New York, and were domiciled there when the application was made. All that the majority of the court decided, and all that Mr. Justice Gwynne decided in his elaborate and very able judgment was that, inasmuch as the domicile, at the time of the marriage and at the time of the application for the divorce, was the State of New York, the courts of New York had jurisdiction, and that the decree of that court must be recognised wherever it was produced. He says:

"Now, although the ordinary rule is, that the domicile of the wife is the place where her husband has his domicile, yet it is an established exception to this rule in American authority, that, for the purpose of instituting a suit for divorce, the wife may have a domicile separate from that of her husband."

I cite this case in order to show that, assuming that the other branch of the argument is correct, and she has established a case on which a divorce could be granted, this point is clear as to her right to apply here.

"In the case of Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wallace, 108, it was decided by the unanimous judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States that the rule is, that the wife may require a separate domicile whenever she may do so, that the right springs from the necessity of its exercise, and endures as long as the necessity continues, and that the proceeding for a divorce may be instituted where the wife has her domicile. In Harteau v. Harteau, it was said by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts (Pickering, 181-5) that the law will recognise the wife as having a separate existence and separate interests and separate rights, in those cases where the express object of the proceeding is to show that the relation itself ought to be dissolved or so modified as to establish a separate interest, and especially a separate domicile and home, otherwise the parties would stand upon very unequal grounds, it being in the power of the husband to change his domicile at will, but not in that of the wife.

"In Calvin vs. Reid (5 Smith, Pennsylvania) it is said: 'The unity of the person created by the marriage is a legal fiction, to be followed for all useful and just purposes, and not to be used to destroy the rights of either, contrary to the principle of natural justice, in proceedings which, from their nature, make them opposite parties.'

"Mr. Wharton, in his work on private international law, section 46, says:

"That the rule that the wife's domicile is that of her husband, it is now conceded on all sides, does not extend to cases in which the wife claims to act, and by law, to a certain extent and in certain cases, is allowed, adversely to her husband."

"Mr. Bishop, in his invaluable work upon marriage and divorce, states the rule, as collected from the decided cases, thus:

"When a law authorises a suit between a husband and his wife for divorce, and makes the jurisdiction over it depend among other things upon domicile, there is an irresistible implication that, if she needs a separate domicile to give effect to her rights, or if his case requires her to have one to make his effectual, the law has conferred it on her."

So far, the learned judge has referred to American authorities. He now proceeds to the case of Deck vs. Deck, which is an English authority, and he says:

"It has been decided in England that under the provision of the English Statutes, 20-21 Vic., chap. 85, it was competent for the divorce court there to entertain a petition for divorce at the suit of an English woman married in England to an Englishman who had left and gone to the State of New York"—

Transposing the words that decision means that it is competent here to entertain a petition for divorce at the suit of a woman as to a Canadian marriage between Canadians, when the husband has left her and gone to the State of Massachusetts—

"where he acquired a domicile, and had married again there, and upon service of process in the suit upon the husband in the United States to make a decree for the dissolution of the marriage."

Then, for the purposes of this application, there is the authority of Dicey, based on these decided cases, that the Divorce Court has jurisdiction to dissolve any marriage between English subjects, on the petition of a wife who has a residence, though not a domicile, in England; in other words, that the Canadian tribunal has, between Canadian subjects, a right to dissolve marriage on petition of a wife who has a residence here, though she were not domiciled here, as I suppose it can hardly be pretended this woman has not been. I have to ask the forgiveness of the House for having taken up so much time. My excuse has been a desire to ascertain in what way we should proceed in cases of this kind, and the sense of duty which was recognised by my learned friend who intimated the other day when the Bill came up, that I was expected to make a statement of my opinion, and I have no doubt that other hon. gentlemen will state their opinions. Without detaining the House any longer, I would state my opinion in brief to be this: That this was a Canadian marriage between Canadian citizens; that there is no evidence whatever that there was any domicile or residence in Massachusetts which had given any right in law to the court there to dissolve the marriage tie; that, therefore, for all the purposes of these proceedings, the court of Massachusetts had no jurisdiction and its decree cannot be recognised in this country; if it had no jurisdiction, Manton violated his marriage duties and incurred penalties by contracting a second marriage; that second marriage is the valid ground for her to apply for a divorce. I am merely giving, with regard to these points, my opinion as to the state of the English law. And it is of course entirely optional with every member of this House to vote as he pleases upon the question of whether any divorce ought to be given in any case. I only refrain from voting for this Bill for the reason that I should give for voting against any Bill for the dissolution of a marriage tie.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman needed not to have offered any apology to the House for presenting his clear and lucid opinion upon the Bill now before us. I have the misfortune to differ with him on some of the legal positions he has advanced; on others, I fully agree with him. Respecting the last proposition, that the wife has a sufficient status in this country, under the jurisdiction of this Parliament as a court of divorce, to maintain a petition for divorce against her husband, I concur. I think he has fairly laid down the law with respect to the domicile both of husband and wife. If I understand the hon. gentleman aright, he laid down the proposition that the domicile of the husband was, in law, the domicile of the wife, but that for the purpose of obtaining against her husband justice in cases in which she had been aggrieved, the court allowed her a special domicile in the country where he lived, whether her husband's domicile was there or not. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that we have jurisdiction to maintain her petition and pass this Bill on the ground that she has sufficient status here to justify her in bringing the action and solely upon that one ground. I find the law laid down in Phillimore's International Law, with the limitation that I have attached to it. Vol. 4, page 349:

"The general doctrine, that the domicile of the wife is legally that of her husband rests upon the basis that it is the legal duty of the wife to dwell with her husband wherever he goes; but if he commits such an offence against the marriage state as renders her cohabitation morally, and also perhaps physically impossible, he has destroyed the basis upon which the general doctrine rests, and has entitled, or rather compelled, her to establish, for the purpose of obtaining justice against him at least, if not a separate domicile, in the full sense of the term, a separate forensic domicile."

Therefore, assuming the hon. gentleman's first proposition that she was entitled to the divorce being correct, I think his second proposition is sound also, that she has established a sufficient separate forensic domicile which entitles her to bring suit in this country. But she has separate domicile from her husband only and solely to enable her to obtain justice against him in the case where he has violated those moral laws which violation entitles her to sue for a divorce in the country where she lives for the time being. Now, being at one with the hon. gentleman on that point, I will proceed to state wherein I differ with him, on another branch of the case. The hon. gentleman in stating the facts, left the impression that it appeared from the evidence that there was some fault on the part of the husband, to which fault might be attributed the separation of Susan Ash from her husband. I do not so read the evidence. The fact of the case is that Susan Ash was married to this man Manton about the year 1868; they went to his home and lived together for a period of six or eight weeks; that she then left him, so far as I can gather from the evidence, without disobeying him, she left him for the purpose of paying a visit to her parents in Montreal; that she returned after visiting her parents for two or three weeks to her husband again. In the meantime her husband had been unfortunate in circumstances, and his goods and chattels had been sold by the sheriff. He, nevertheless, provided a home for her in the hotel, where they lived for some time, and after living with him for some time, she left him without any apparent reason, except that she did not like him. The proposition to which the House is invited to give its assent in the face of the preamble of this Bill is one to which I think very few hon. members will consent. Looking at her own evidence, I find she is asked:

"Q. Why do you leave him? A. Because he has been cruel.

"Q. Will you please tell us how he was cruel? What do you mean by his being cruel? A. I cannot tell exactly; he had no sympathy for my youth—I was only sixteen."

Hon. gentlemen may say that that means nothing at all. "No sympathy for my youth." She may have thought that her husband had not as much sympathy, affection and love for her as she had hoped; but will that be held to be sufficient ground to entitle a wife to desert her husband? Then she is asked whether he used any personal violence towards her. She said he did not. She is asked respecting his habits. She says that he is addicted to drink to some extent; but it does not appear that he ever beat her or used violence towards her. Then, according to her own evidence, and it must be remembered that we have only her side of the case, she deserted her husband without rhyme or reason and went back to live with her father, without her husband's knowledge and without his consent. Yet we are asked in the face of this evidence to assent to the legal declaration in the Bill:

"Owing to the said William Manton's conduct it became impossible for her to continue to live with the said William Manton as his wife."

I say there is not one scintilla of evidence to justify that contention, and I will not give my assent to it. How has he conducted himself? As appears from the evidence, he never used violence towards his wife or did anything to justify her in deserting him. After she deserted him he went to live in the United States. He lived there for three years, and then he returned to Montreal with a view to induce her to return to live with him. She declined to do so and persisted in continuing her separation from him, and she again deserted him. He returned to his then home at Boston, and having remained there the necessary length of time to justify him in applying for a divorce, namely five years, he appealed to the court of Massachusetts for a divorce on the ground of desertion. She was served with the necessary papers calling upon her to show cause why he should not obtain a divorce. She did not show cause. She did not read the papers, but she gave them to her father who told her not to read them. She had full notice of the proceeding in Massachusetts, but she abstained from reading the documents served on her on the advice of her father.

Mr. THOMPSON. Where is that in the evidence?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) On page 6. Then we have the decree of divorce put in evidence by Susan Ash herself, and that decree recites on its face that for the period of five consecutive years preceding the time of application the applicant had resided in the city of Boston. As a fact he had resided there for five years previous to the decree, and that decree being granted on the 7th April, 1874, justifies me in the statement I made that after she had deserted him at the end of 1868 he had gone to Boston and had lived there up to the time of obtaining the decree of divorce. The only time he appears to have left Boston was when he visited Montreal for the very laudable purpose of endeavoring to obtain the consent of his wife to go and live with him, a consent which she refused. Up to this period I see nothing on the face of the evidence to justify in any way whatever the conduct of Susan Ash. She acted without just cause in a manner which I do not think hon. members of this House will desire to approve; she deserted her husband without good reason; she received notice of the application for a divorce, and when he obtained the decree she remained quiet for twelve years afterwards. In the meantime having obtained the decree Manton marries and gives notice to the woman whom he is about to marry that he is a divorced man. He took a second wife and continued to reside in Massachusetts; he has resided there for thirteen years since he obtained a divorce and has a family of five children, and as appears from the evidence on page 7 of one of the witnesses who lived in the same house with him for eight years, he is living a reputable, decent, honest life. His second wife has borne five children, and this House is asked now at the instance of Susan Ash, not merely to declare that her marriage with Manton shall be dissolved, but to declare that that man in the face of this decree dissolving his first marriage has been living in a state of bigamy and adultery, as the Bill declares it, with his second wife for the past twelve years, and by implication it declares the issue of the marriage to be illegal. I submit to the House that that is a statutory declaration which hon. members will hesitate a long time to make. The preamble of the Bill recites:

Mr. DAVIES.

"That the said William Manton, on the third day of September, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four, went through the form of marriage with one Mary Ford Hatch; that the said William Manton, since his pretended marriage with the said Mary Ford Hatch, has lived and cohabited with her in a state of adultery."

I submit that such is not the fact, and that is not the law, as I read it. I submit that under my reading of the law, if Manton returns to any one of the Provinces of the Dominion and was prosecuted for bigamy, the Dominion courts would hold that his second marriage was a legal marriage, and the decree of divorce, unless evidence was given to prove that the decree was obtained either by fraud or by collusion, would be declared to be a legal decree. I have read the position which those who support this Bill took in the other Chamber where the Bill originated, and I find that the argument addressed by the leader of the House in support of the Bill was a proposition which I am glad to see the Minister of Justice did not entertain. If I understood his reasoning it was this: that the law of the place of marriage was to govern, and that inasmuch as the marriage between Susan Ash and Manton took place in the Dominion of Canada, the statutes of those Provinces, no matter where they lived afterwards, would govern. Such is not the law of England, of Canada, or of the United States. There was a clear misunderstanding in the minds of many of the text-writers as to what the law was owing to the improper conclusion they came, to as to the grounds of the decision, in the celebrated case of Lolley. But since the case of Harvey and Farnie, first decided in the Probate Court, afterwards by three judges on appeal, and afterwards by the unanimous vote of the House of Lords, it has been clearly understood that when parties remarried their status is determined by the law of their domicile, wherever that domicile may be. They may be married in England, but if they make their domicile in France, in the United States or Canada, their rights as between husband and wife are to be determined entirely and solely by the law of their domicile. I do not want to weary the House by reading any portion of this decision at length, but I will read the head notes of the case, which show the principles which govern the English courts in deciding cases of this kind, and if hon. gentlemen appreciate correctly the principles of this case, they will conclude that the propositions I am submitting to the House are the law:

"The English Divorce Court will recognise as valid the decree of a Scotch court dissolving the marriage of a domiciled Scotchman and Englishwoman. Although the marriage was solemnised in England, and the marriage was dissolved upon the ground for which by English law no divorce could have been granted."

Here was a case where a Scotchman had gone to England and married an Englishwoman; they had gone and lived in Scotland, or at any rate that was the husband's domicile. An act was committed by the wife which would not have entitled him in the English courts to a divorce, but which would entitle him in the Scotch courts to a divorce. He applied for a divorce in the Scotch courts and obtained a decree. The case was carried to the highest appellate courts in Great Britain, and they held that the Scotch court had jurisdiction over the parties, because it was in Scotland that the husband's domicile lay. There are, therefore, only two principles upon which a court may act. They must determine, under the law of the country in which the marriage took place, or else under the law of the country in which the domicile of the husband was. Now, the law was misunderstood, until after the decision of the House of Lords in the case to which I have referred to mean that it was the lex loci contractus that governed the status and relations of the husband and wife forever after; but that is not the law to-day, and it has not been the law since this case was decided. In this case of Harvie vs. Farnie the notes go on:

"The question of divorce is not an incident of the marriage contract to be governed by the lex loci contractus, but is an incident of status to be disposed of by the law of the domicile of the parties—that is, of the husband's."

Now, I think it will be conceded, I think it has been conceded by the Minister of Justice, and if it were not, it would be easy to cite numberless authorities to prove it, that the domicile of the husband, actual and bond fide, is the domicile of the wife, and I did not understand the hon. gentleman to controvert the proposition of law which I lay down, and which I think is fairly deducible from that case. What I did understand him to deny is, that there is any evidence to show that the State of Massachusetts was really Manton's domicile. I understand him to assent to the proposition that, if it were affirmatively shown that Manton's domicile was in Massachusetts, the courts of that State would have jurisdiction. The hon. gentleman nods assent, so that the point between us is really a very simple one. The question is what weight you will give the copy of the decree of separation of Manton and his wife, which was put in evidence in this case. Is it prima facie evidence of the facts it sets forth? And if it is what are those facts? I submit, as a proposition of law, that in the absence of any evidence, direct or implied, attacking that decree on the ground that it was obtained by fraud or collusion, in the absence of any evidence to show that Manton went there simply to obtain that decree of divorce, that decree is evidence of the facts recited in it. The decree states in substance that he was there for the full time of actual residence which the law of Massachusetts required, that is five years, to entitle a person to apply for a divorce. The period required, therefore, by that law had elapsed, and it appears from the evidence before us that not only was he there five years, when the decree was issued, but that he has resided there for thirteen years since that date, and I submit to the House, as a fact fairly deducible from the evidence, that a man who has resided for eighteen years in the state of Massachusetts, and has married and brought up a family, and in the absence of evidence to show that he intends to change his residence, it is fair evidence that the state of Massachusetts is his domicile. I freely assent to the proposition that that decree is not binding absolutely, that it was open to Susan Ash to come to this or any court in the land and to say that that decree was void. The law throws every protection around persons who were absent when a decree was made; and she could set it aside in any judicial tribunal of our land, if she could prove that Manton simply went there to obtain a divorce, and not for the purpose, bond fide, of changing his domicile. The law does not allow a man to go from one country, where a divorce is difficult, to another country, where it is easy, simply for the purpose of obtaining a decree. The hon. gentleman cited one or two cases to prove that proposition. I think he cited Pitt vs. Pitt, which was decided some time ago in England. In that case Colonel Pitt had gone into the adjoining country and lived there, and his object was not bond fide to change his domicile, but to enable him to procure a divorce. In that case it was held that the one simple fact that you have not changed your domicile established that the divorce you obtained abroad is not binding. The hon. gentleman concedes that if the fact had been found the contrary way, if it had been found that Colonel Pitt had changed his domicile from England to Scotland, that one fact would have altered the decision, and the jurisdiction would have been complete and binding, not only in the Scotch but in the English courts. Then the case of Niboyet vs. Niboyet was one in which the two parties, who were French in origin, had gone to England. That case goes further than I am contending for in the case now before the House. It decided that even domicile was not necessary, but that bond fide residence in the country was quite sufficient, and I freely confess that that case ought not to be considered by us as an authority in this case, because it was decided on the construction of an English Act of Parliament which we have not in force in this country. It simply decided that the two facts of residence in England and proof of the crime which justified the divorce having been established in England, those two facts give jurisdiction to the court and entitled the parties to a decree of dissolution. But I am satisfied from the authorities, that even that divorce might not have been recognised in France, if the case had come up there. I do not go so far as that, but I simply go as far as the proposition laid down in Harvey vs. Farnie, in which the principle I contend for was assented to by the decision of the president of the Divorce Court, next by the Justices of Appeal and lastly by the House of Lords, so that I cannot see how there can be any doubt about what we should decide. I will venture to trouble the House with one or two quotations from the judgment. Lord Justice James observed:

"And, upon principle, I cannot bring myself to doubt that what Lord President has said is right, that if a domiciled foreigner comes here for the purpose of taking a wife from this country, the moment the marriage is contracted, the moment the vinculum exists, then the lady becomes to all intents and purposes of the same domicile as the husband, and all the rights and consequences arising from the marriage are to be determined by the law of that which by the actual contract of marriage becomes the domicile of both parties, exactly to the same extent as if they had both been originally of the foreign country. It seems to me that there is no qualification of that rule. A wife's home is her husband's home; a wife's country is her husband's country; a wife's domicile is her husband's domicile; and any question arising with reference to the status of those persons is, according to my view, to be determined by the law of the domicile of those persons; assuming always that the domicile is a bond fide one, not a domicile either fictitious or resorted to for the sole purpose of altering the status. I am not, however, prepared to say that an English husband could, by going to a foreign country for the sole purpose of domiciling himself in a place where a marriage could be dissolved at pleasure, be enabled to obtain a valid and binding dissolution of his own marriage. That point it is not necessary for us to decide. But where the domicile is the real bond fide domicile of the husband, and consequently of the wife, the court, the forum of the country of that domicile, is the forum which has to determine the status; and has to determine whether the status was originally well created, and whether any circumstances have occurred which justify that forum in deciding that the status has come to an end."

Now, nothing can be clearer, or plainer, or freer from doubt than the language used by the Lord Justice—the husband's domicile is the wife's domicile; the forum of the country where the domicile is, is the forum having jurisdiction over the parties, provided always that the domicile is a real bond fide one, and has not been sought and obtained simply for the purpose of procuring the divorce. Lord Justice Cotton, in giving judgment, took the same line. He says:

"Then we have to consider this question: Is this divorce an incident of the contract, and in any way to be governed by the law of the country where the solemnity took place, or is it a question of status?"

Now, hon. gentlemen will see that this case must either be governed by the law of Canada or by the law of the United States; they must hold that William Manton's domicile is either in Canada or in the United States. He has never been anywhere else; and this House is asked to decide that this man's domicile is not in Boston, where he has lived for thirteen years with his family, but is here. The hon. gentleman knows that the question of domicile is altogether a question of intention. That intention can be gathered as well after the residence began as before, and the fact that this man has been living in Boston since 1874 with his wife and family, is the best evidence that it was his intention in 1874 to remain there and make it his domicile. Lord Justice Cotton says:

"In my opinion is not a question in any way depending upon the rule that the lex loci contractus governs. That applies, as I have already stated, to the forms and solemnities by which the marriage is celebrated. When parties unite themselves in marriage, it is not part of this contract that, according to the laws of the country where that marriage takes place, they shall have the power or not to dissolve that marriage. Any act done in violation of the duties incident to the status is a matter which concerns the country of the domicile, and, in my opinion, the question of divorce is not in any way an incident of the contract so as to be governed by the law of the country where that takes place; but an incident of the status to be disposed of by the law of the domicile of the parties if they are subject to the tribunals of that country. Here we have a real domicile throughout in Scotland, and in my opinion the courts of that country, not only for the purpose of status in that country, but for the purpose of status everywhere, have the power to entertain this question, and if they think fit to decree a divorce."

Now, I could substitute the word Massachusetts for the word Scotland, and apply the language used by the Lord Justice to the case before the House. In this case we have a real domicile, it appears to me, in the State of Massachusetts, and in my opinion the courts of that State, not only for the purpose of status in that country, but for the purpose of status everywhere, had the power to entertain the question of William Manton's right to his divorce, and if they thought fit, to decree a divorce; and that court, having entertained the question and having decreed accordingly, and William Manton having acted on that decree, and having married an honest woman and lived with her in good faith, because the evidence shows nothing to the contrary, for thirteen years, and raised a family of children, I say that for this House to step in and declare that that marriage is a bigamous one, that that man is living in adultery, and that those children are illegitimate, is a proposition from which I shrink, and to which I shall not give my assent. I am not opposed to giving a divorce to Susan Ash, but I am against the propositions of law which she has set up, which are not only unjust, but opposed to the whole current of English decisions—propositions which cannot be fairly adduced from the facts contained in the evidence, but, on the contrary, are opposed to those facts. And I say that no man, be he layman or lawyer, can wish to insert in the preamble of that Bill a declaration that William Manton and the woman he married have been living in adultery for 13 years, and that their children are illegitimate. I for one will not commit myself to such a hideous proposition. Does this woman deserve anything at the hands of this House? She left her husband and deserted him without cause, so far as I can gather from the evidence. I have no hesitation in declaring my opinion that if the children of this second marriage came to this country, and the question of their legitimacy was tested, the courts of law, bound by the decisions of the English courts which I have read, would have to declare those children legitimate; and if that is so, I think we would be taking upon ourselves a great deal in declaring them illegitimate, unless some evidence were given to show either that that divorce of Manton's was obtained by fraud or collusion, or that he went to the States, not for the purpose of honestly changing his domicile and acquiring a domicile there, but for the sole fraudulent purpose of obtaining a domicile where he could easily procure a divorce. If I am right in that, what extraordinary consequences would follow from the course we are asked to take. These children are legitimate, that woman is an honest woman in the eyes of the law of the State of Massachusetts, and you are asked to declare that if she crosses an imaginary line she loses her legal status. She loses her position of honor, she becomes the mere concubine of this man, without having any legal right to his name, and these children, who are legitimate on one side of the line become illegitimate on this side. What does Lord Justice Lush say as to the aspect of the case in this decision I am reading from? He says:

"Now, to hold the consequence of what is confined to Scotland, and to hold that a Scotchman, who was released by the law of his own country from the marriage tie in the country where his home was, should as soon as ever he came over the border into England, be liable to be indicted for bigamy, is something that shocks all one's notion of morality and public convenience."

Mr. DAVIES.

Looking at the case from my standpoint, there is sufficient evidence, prima facie, to justify me in accepting the facts stated in that decree as correct. Admitting, therefore, that he obtained his domicile in Massachusetts and admitting it to be indisputable that the law of the country of domicile is the only law which can govern in questions relating to the dissolution of marriage, I cannot give my assent to the propositions laid down in the preamble of this Bill, and which are at direct variance with the decision in this case. The hon. gentleman asked me if I was reading from the appeal case in Harvey vs. Farnie. I was not reading from the report of the case in the House of Lords, but before the Lords Justices of Appeal, and I need not again quote it. The decision in the House of Lords confirms the decision of the Lords Justices upon the same ground. The head-note to that case says:

"The English courts will recognise as valid the decision of a competent foreign Christian tribunal dissolving the marriage between a domiciled native in the country where such tribunal has jurisdiction, and an English woman, when the decree of divorce is not impeached by any species of collusion, or fraud. And this, although the marriage may have been solemnised in England, and may have been dissolved for a cause which would not have been sufficient to obtain a divorce in England. When an English woman marries a domiciled foreigner, the marriage is constituted according to the lex loci contractus; but she takes his domicile and is subject to his law.

They went on to hold that in a word the law of Scotland governed. The hon. the Minister of Justice referred to a decision given by our own Supreme Court in the case of Stephens, and he rather, I think, stated that he understood that opinion did not lend countenance to the doctrine that the courts in this country would recognise the decrees of divorce granted in the United States.

Mr. THOMPSON. I stated that the decision was not what it was supposed to be, namely, that the decisions in divorce cases of the United States courts are recognised without enquiry as to the jurisdiction.

Mr. DAVIES. I quite assent to the proposition that it is perfectly competent for us to enquire, acting, as we are, as a quasi court, as to jurisdiction. We have a right to enquire as to the bond fides of the decree and domicile—whether the decree was obtained by fraud or collusion; and if we find any of those facts, we have the right to set aside the decree as valueless, just as a court of the land would. It appears to me, Mr. Justice Gwynne laid down the law very nearly as I understand it to be, according to the cases I have cited. He said in the decision to which I have referred:

"Mr. Justice Story, in his conflict of laws (Section 86) says:—'Of the nature, extent and utility of the recognition of foreign laws respecting the state and condition of persons, every nation must judge for itself.'"

Upon that the learned judge comments:

"Now, admitting this to be so, I must say that it appears to me very clear that if the husband in Deck vs. Deck, instead of going to the State of New York, had gone to the Province of Quebec and had married there, the courts of the Provinces of this Dominion should not hesitate to recognise the validity of the decree made in that case, so as to entitle the wife to maintain a suit like the present in her own name as a femme sole; and if we should recognise such a decree made by the divorce court in England, I can see no principle upon which we should decline to recognise a decree of the Supreme Court of the State of New York made under similar circumstances, for a cause which, by the law of the State of New York, is sufficient to justify a decree of dissolution of marriage."

In other words, if I understand the learned judge aright, he puts the decision of the court of the State of New York, or the court of the State of Massachusetts, in the same position as the decision of the courts in England. They are both foreign countries, as far as we are concerned, in the matter of divorce, and we give the same recognition to a decree of the court in one country as we will to a decree of the court in another country. He then goes on to quote with approbation the decision of the House of Lords in Farnie vs. Harvey, in which case it was decided that:

"The English courts will recognise as valid the decision of a competent foreign tribunal dissolving the marriage between a domiciled native in the country where such tribunal has jurisdiction, and an English woman when the decree of divorce is not impeached by any species of collusion or fraud."

To the principle of that decision he gives his unqualified assent, and I, therefore, understand the law, as he laid it down, to be that which I have been attempting to lay down to the House to-night. While I recognise that for the purpose of obtaining justice against her husband, if she can prove she is entitled to justice in the sense she asks it, we have jurisdiction to act in that matter, and while I hold that for that purpose she may have a forensic domicile in this country, still her legal domicile is the domicile of her husband, William Manton. When he removed to the State of Massachusetts for the purpose of residing there, that State became his domicile, and the courts of that State became the only courts which had jurisdiction over him and authority to decree a divorce. Having decreed that divorce, and that decree being in evidence and reciting the fact that he was there five years, and other evidence supplementing that by showing he has resided there ever since, I have come to the conclusion that Massachusetts is the state of his domicile, that the court of Massachusetts has jurisdiction, and its decree is binding not only in Massachusetts but in all the courts of this country. I recoil, therefore, with a shudder from the legal proposition this woman asked us to endorse; I object to this House bastardising these children and declaring that the second wife is living, not in a state of matrimony but in a state of concubinage. Though I would be willing to vote for the dissolution of the marriage, when the petitioner couples that dissolution with these facts, I am obliged to vote against the Bill.

Mr. O'BRIEN. If the hon. gentleman is correct there is no adultery, and, therefore, no ground for this divorce on the principle on which this Parliament has hitherto acted. That is the logical conclusion of his argument.

Mr. DAVIES. There is no law, as I understand, in our Statute-book or in the British North America Act, which defines the ground on which we may grant divorces.

Mr. O'BRIEN. True, but we have always acted on that consideration.

Mr. DAVIES. The proposition I lay down is this: that the man is legally married in the State of Massachusetts, that he obtained a legal divorce, and that if the woman were domiciled there she has the right to go there and obtain from the court leave to marry again; but, living in this country, she has obtained sufficient forensic domicile here to justify her coming to this Parliament for relief; and it is for us to grant a divorce on the ground that her husband has obtained a divorce abroad.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Practically the conclusion is the same, if the hon. gentleman's contention is correct, that there is no adultery, and in that case the ground on which this Parliament has granted divorces is cut away.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). No doubt the general principle hitherto laid down by Parliament, which, under the British North America Act, has power over marriage and divorce, is that divorces have been granted only for the cause stated by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), but there is no limitation of the power of Parliament to grant divorce for any cause, and, while we have laid down that general rule, there may be cases in which there may be an exception, and I think this is a case which may be taken out of the general rule, and where we may give this woman the relief she claims. While this question is an important legal question, I do not think there is much dispute as to the legal principles which are involved, but in my view it settles down largely to a question of fact. There is no dispute that, in the case of an English marriage between English subjects, if those parties subsequently change their domicile and become domiciled in a foreign country, it is through the tribunals of that country that a dissolution of the marriage shall be had, and, if the domicile is fairly changed from an English to a foreign domicile, and the decree of dissolution of marriage is made, even on a ground upon which our courts would not have granted it, that would be recognised by the tribunals of our country. This is a matter which, in consequence of the conflicting opinions upon it, has required a good deal of consideration. My mind fluctuated for a time in regard to this case, but, after looking into the authorities, I have come to the conclusion that we ought not to pass this Bill with the present preamble. In the first place, the preamble recites that this woman could not continue to live with her husband, so that in fact we are asked to decide that there was sufficient evidence to justify the Court of Probate and Divorce in England—which I take by way of analogy to the Parliament here—in granting a decree of judicial separation, not of a dissolution of the marriage. Without going over the evidence, which has been fully discussed by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice and my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), it is evident that the facts set out are not sufficient to justify a court in granting a decree of judicial separation, for it appears that she voluntarily left her husband without, I think, sufficient justification for any court to grant a decree of judicial separation. Therefore, so far as that is concerned, it seems to me that we have no right to make that statement because, dealing with this case, as we are for the time being, as a judicial tribunal, we ought to consider the rights and the status of William Manton, the husband of Susan Ash. I can find nothing in the evidence to justify us in coming to the conclusion that it was impossible for her to continue to live with her husband, and the test which I apply to that is that the court in England, under the facts which are proved, would not grant a decree of judicial separation. The next question is as to the effect of the decree. It seems to me that that comes to a question of fact. The principle laid down by Lord Justice James in the case of Harvey vs. Farnie, which was read by my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), seems to me to settle the question that, in regard to people married in England and going to a foreign country and acquiring a domicile there, the status of the marriage becomes subject to the judicial tribunal of that country. There is a case in which that matter was determined, the case of Shaw vs. Her Majesty's Attorney General. I will read the head notes of that case, and then will shortly give the facts:

"The petitioner, whose original domicile was English, and who married in England, resided for two and a half years in one of the States of America, and then petitioned the competent court in that State for a dissolution of her marriage on grounds for which, if proved, this court would also dissolve an English marriage."

I may say, that, although that is put forward in this case, I think we can deduce from the later cases, the case of Harvey vs. Farnie for instance, that, if the foreign court have jurisdiction, although the cause for which the marriage is dissolved by the foreign court might not be one which would authorise the English court to dissolve the marriage, it makes no difference as to the validity of the decree:

"No personal notice of the proceedings was given to the husband, who had never been within the State, and whose domicile continued to be English. The marriage having been dissolved, the petitioner remarried in America in the life time of her first husband."

"Held, that a divorce so obtained could have no legal effect upon an English marriage, and, therefore, the second marriage was invalid."

"It would appear that if the petitioner had been legally domiciled in the State at the time that the divorce was granted, the English courts would have recognised and acted on the decree."

Now as to the facts :

"The facts of the case are these : The marriage between the petitioner and William Suthers, as I have said, took place in August, 1851, at Halifax, in Yorkshire, near which place both parties up to that time had been resident. In 1853 the petitioner went to the United States by herself, and her husband followed her in 1854. In the following year they both returned to England, and continued to live together at Hebden Bridge, Yorkshire, until March, 1856, when William Suthers again went to America; the petitioner followed him in March, 1857, to America, but did not join him. She supported herself as a sempstress, and in August, 1859, she had been resident more than two years in the State of Iowa. In that month she commenced proceedings for a divorce in the proper court of that State. The court had no reason to suppose that the petitioner had any collusive object in going to reside in the State of Iowa. At the same time there is no evidence to satisfy me that she ever obtained a domicile in the State of Iowa. She always had an intention to return to England, and ultimately did so. The husband went to the United States in 1857, and then to Canada, and he was in Canada during the period in which the proceedings for a divorce were being carried on in Iowa. No notice of these proceedings were personally served upon him. The citation was by advertisement: it did not reach him, and did not come to his knowledge. Everything took place behind his back. He never had an intention to give up his English domicile. These are the facts upon which I must decide whether the divorce can be held valid in this country. The principles upon which the question here raised must be decided have been so recently discussed in several cases in the court of ultimate appeal that it is not necessary to enter upon a discussion at large on the present occasion. It may be sufficient to observe: first, that Lolley's case has never been overruled; secondly, that in no case has a foreign divorce been held to invalidate an English marriage between English subjects, where the parties were not domiciled in the country by whose tribunals the divorce was granted. Whether, if so domiciled, the English courts would recognise and act upon such a divorce appears to be a question not wholly free from doubt; but the better opinion seems to be that they would do so if the divorce be for a ground of divorce recognised as such in this country, and the foreign country be not resorted to for the collusive purpose of calling in the aid of its tribunals."

Now, in that case the question turned, as in this case, upon the domicile, but the facts there are very important to show that the petitioner had simply resided two years and a half in the State of Iowa, and that there was no evidence that she had not the intention to return, which was actually carried into effect afterwards by her returning to England. This case is one of fact, to be judged by the circumstances, and what are the circumstances? We find that this man had resided five years in the State of Massachusetts, the time which is required by their law before he could apply for a divorce. The decree of the court of Massachusetts states that he petitioned for that divorce, and sets forth the different facts which are stated in his petition, that he had been married to Susan Ash, that he had been deserted by her, and that he had resided for five years in the State of Massachusetts. Then the decree goes on and states all these facts which were proved to the satisfaction of the court. I take it my hon. friend the Minister of Justice will not undertake to impugn the validity of the decree, assuming the facts contained in it. We find throughout the whole facts that Susan Ash does not intend to impugn the decree in any shape. Although she was not at the time subject to that tribunal, was not in the State of Massachusetts, we would still have a right to say whether these facts were correct or not. But she has not attempted in the slightest degree to say that any of these facts were incorrect. Then we have a right to look to the subsequent conduct. The Minister of Justice will agree with me that we have a right to look at the facts regarding a domicile, and changing the domicile the husband goes there, as in the case of Pitt vs. Pitt, merely for the purpose of obtaining a divorce, he has not such a domicile as will enable him to obtain a divorce. Now, in this case was there any animus revertendi? We have the fact that shortly after his wife refused to cohabit with him, he went to the State of Massachusetts, and he appears to have remained there and engaged in some occupation to earn a living. During that period he returned to see if his wife would again cohabit with him and go with him to the State of Massachusetts, his adopted home. He returns there and remains five years, then he comes to Canada and marries, and returns to Boston, and there is not the slightest evidence that he ever intended to return to Canada. Now, it seems to me, in view of these facts, that the question is narrowed to one of domicile. Then I think that, viewing the decree of the State of Massachusetts, taking the fact that the onus of disproving the facts on which the decree is based were laid upon the petitioner in this case, she has no right to come here to impugn that divorce and to make the marriage with Miss Hatch a bigamous marriage and the children of that union illegitimate. It seems to me she ought to endeavor to show that that decree was obtained either by fraud or collusion, or that the facts were not correct. The decree was put in by herself, as part of her own evidence, without any attempt to invalidate it. Therefore, I take it we have the right to assume that she admits the facts stated to be correct. If the decree was invalid at the time, I admit that the subsequent residence, or subsequent facts that could not render it valid. But I have been looking at the subsequent facts regarding the whole question relating to the change of domicile by Manton. I want to see that he went there honestly, in good faith, for the purpose of acquiring a residence in Massachusetts. He abandoned his domicile in Canada and remained in Massachusetts, applied for the divorce, came to Canada and married again, and then returned to Massachusetts, where he remains to this day. Under these circumstances, it seems to me we ought to pause before we make a statutory declaration of certain facts. We all know that our decision will be held conclusive in a court of law. It has been pointed out by the hon. member for Queen's that if Manton came here and was indicted for bigamy he could not be convicted. Suppose he was possessed of real estate in this country, now, when time goes on, and he happens to die, and these children claim the property, we have got to see what the judicial tribunals of our country would decide. Taking a view of the facts, I believe Manton had acquired a domicile in the State of Massachusetts, that, by virtue of that domicile, the status of this marriage become cognisable by the courts of Massachusetts, and that, therefore, that divorce was valid and his subsequent marriage was legitimate. If that was the decision of the tribunal in this country, why should we make a statutory declaration, that that is not the state of the facts, that on the contrary this woman, Mary Forde Hatch, has no legal position as the wife of William Manton, and that the children she has borne to him are illegitimate? I must say that I would hesitate before doing that. If it was necessary for the purpose of giving this woman relief, and I should have to vote on that preamble, I should be constrained to vote against this Bill. But I think that under the power of Parliament we can afford relief to this woman without affecting the status of people who are not before us, affecting the status of William Manton, still more affecting the status of the woman he has lived with in marriage for his last thirteen years, and without branding the children of his last marriage with illegitimacy by Act of Parliament. But if the question is ever to be tried, let it be tried by the judicial tribunals of this country. I have spoken in this matter with diffidence, knowing the difference of opinion among legal gentlemen. But I believe we ought to recognise the divorce which dissolved this marriage and left Manton free to marry, to recognise that the marriage was legitimate, and that the children borne of that marriage are legitimate.

Mr. WELDON (St. John).

Mr. WELDON (Albert). There are two or three points of fact that I would like to refer to briefly. There has been such a striking unanimity of opinion as to the leading rules of law that are involved in this controversy, that almost nothing in that respect is left one to discuss. The hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I., (Mr. Davies) stated that he differed from the Minister of Justice, both as to the law and the facts. I followed his argument as carefully as I could, and I was not able to discover any material position advanced by the Minister of Justice from which the hon. member for Queen's dissented. There were one or two minor propositions of law in respect to which there was difference of opinion. The hon. member for Queen's, Prince Edward Island, has said that the recitals of the decree in Massachusetts must be held to be taken as evidence of jurisdiction. From that proposition I entirely dissent. Even if such jurisdiction, according to the constitutional law of the State of Massachusetts were established, we have not sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the Canadian law. A Scotch decree of divorce has been granted when the parties could only prove a residence of forty days; the requirements of the Scotch law have thus been satisfied. But the requirements of the English law when English courts have been called upon to pronounce on the validity of Scotch decrees have not been satisfied. Hon. gentlemen opposite must even go further, and face the fresh difficulty and show that the requirements of the law of Canada have been complied with. There is a great difference between hon. gentlemen opposite and the Minister of Justice in the interpretation of the facts. Hon. gentlemen opposite hold that a case of bona fide domicile has been made out. I will not marshal the evidence at length, but so far as I understand it a bona fide domicile has not been made out. The hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), said the best evidence on that point was that Manton had been in Boston for fourteen years after 1874, when the divorce was granted. It must be remembered that this is the case of a man who remained out of the country, and who if he came back to Canada would find himself liable to be indicted for bigamy. He might, if returning to Canada, meet the terrible fate which overtook Lolley, who was married in England, divorced in Scotland, and on returning to England, after a second marriage, was sentenced to two years' imprisonment. That would be a very good reason why Manton did not come back, without assuming that he had an animus manendi in Boston. The cases cited at considerable length by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) and by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) go to show this very clearly, that in some cases the English court will grant divorces where the parties are not domiciled within their jurisdiction; but the practice of the English courts in treating a foreign decree is illiberal, and they will not always respect foreign decrees under precisely the same circumstances where jurisdiction would be extended by their own courts. But I will not pursue this discussion, for I promised to speak but a moment. I say in conclusion that I will vote for this Bill following this simple rule: that whether the divorce of the Massachusetts court was good or not I think we are acting safely, fairly and wisely in voting for this Bill. If the divorce in Massachusetts is a valid divorce, if the parties were, as I think they were not, domiciled in Massachusetts at the time, we but affirm a possibly good decree. If the divorce granted by the Massachusetts courts is a bad divorce, then the facts before us as disclosed in the evidence taken before a committee of the other Chamber show that this is a case where relief is needed. As to the other fact, whether there was or was not jurisdiction, we are but doing a simple act of fairness and justice in granting this relief, and, therefore, I shall have pleasure in voting for this Bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to offer a few words of explanation. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) agreed with most of my propositions; but we differ as to the facts and the view we take of the evidence. The main difference is this: The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) contends that the decree pronounced by the court of Massachusetts is evidence of a domicile there, because it recites that the party making the application had lived there for five years. I admit that if he lived there for five years, he would probably have acquired a domicile; but the recital of that fact in the decree of the court is no evidence of the fact itself, because the decree is not of the slightest value until we have ascertained that the court had jurisdiction over the subject matter and the person. The hon. gentleman has stated that the document shows that the court had jurisdiction. The assertion made in the decree is held by the hon. gentleman as prima facie evidence that the applicant had resided in the State for five years, and that the court had jurisdiction, and, therefore, the decree must be held to be good unless it could be shown that it had been obtained by fraud. My proposition is, that a judge sitting in Massachusetts has no judicial authority whatever until it is proved that he has jurisdiction over the subject matter and person in the case. Until that has been done, he has no power whatever. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has contended that there is no evidence to show that the woman was justified in leaving her husband. The evidence shows, however, that he was addicted to drink, and that he was so much addicted to that habit that it would be a species of cruelty to compel her to live with him. But supposing she had no right to leave him, does that justify the husband in going to a foreign country, getting the marriage dissolved—she did not give him justification for obtaining a divorce in this country—and remarrying? As regards the horrible consequences of declaring the second marriage bigamous, I say this is simply declaring the marriage void, which he went to Massachusetts to have so declared. It is simply saying that the woman shall be relieved of the marriage of which he himself got relieved by the court of Massachusetts.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me that the doctrine of the Minister of Justice is a very extraordinary doctrine to lay down under the existing circumstances. This man is not before this court at all. He has had no opportunity, so far as we know, of appearing before Parliament. The hon. gentleman knows that so far as a foreign decree is concerned it is taken in a court of this country upon proof as a matter of fact. The statement here is that this man had gone to reside in Massachusetts and had resided there for five years, and had obtained a decree of divorce in a court having jurisdiction. The Minister of Justice says we have no evidence of that fact before us. But we are asked to assume by this Bill that it cannot be a fact. The House ought to be careful in pronouncing on a case in the absence of one of the parties. The evidence goes to show that this woman left her husband without adequate cause, or at all events the evidence does not disclose a sufficient cause to justify desertion. Subsequently to that the husband left the country and went to reside in Massachusetts. That is admitted by the applicant for divorce in this case. The hon. Minister asks this House to say that the court which granted that decree of divorce had not jurisdiction. Now, I say that before this House is asked to make a statutory declaration of that sort, there ought to have been some evidence going to establish that as a fact. But, in the absence of its being established, the hon. gentleman asked the House to assume it to be a fact. The hon. gentleman asks this House to do what the court in England, in the case of Shaw vs. the Attorney General, said that a judicial tribunal ought not to do. Now, we are proceeding in this matter, to some extent at all events, as a judicial tribunal. We are discharging what, in most countries, is the duty of a court, and we are asked to do so upon evidence which is altogether inadequate. Why should we be called upon to say that William Manton is living in adultery with this woman Hatch, in the State of Massachusetts? Why should we say that the children born to them are illegitimate children? There is no necessity to make that declaration. If it be true that Mr. Manton has resided in the State of Massachusetts for five years, that he made application to the proper tribunal to obtain a divorce, that he did obtain a divorce, that he has been a resident of the State of Massachusetts ever since, which would go to show that at the time he applied for the divorce he was a bond fide resident of that State, why should we be called upon to make a declaration in an Act of Parliament at variance with the facts, if they be as they are represented to us? Why should we assume that the court in Massachusetts had no jurisdiction, that his residence there was not bond fide, and that the marriage with Mary Ford Hatch is not a legal marriage? I say that the hon. gentleman, when he asks us to make all these declarations in a statute, is asking us to go altogether beyond the evidence; he is asking us to assume that which no court or judicial tribunal would assume under like circumstances. It would be quite as proper for this woman to have set out the fact that this man had gone to another country, had married, or professed to marry, another woman and apply for a divorce on that ground. Certainly the divorce of the one party has always been held in this country to remove the impediment to the marriage of the other party, and that being the case there was no difficulty whatever in a declaratory statute which would have recognised the facts as they are represented by the evidence which is before us.

House divided on motion of Mr. Small.

YEAS:

Messieurs

Bowell,	Lang,	Robertson (Kign's, PEI),
Bowman,	Livingston,	Ross,
Brien,	Lovitt,	Scarth,
Bryson,	MacDowall,	Scrifer,
Burdett,	McDonald (Victoria),	Shakespeare,
Cargill,	McDougald (Picton),	Smith (Ontario),
Carpenter,	McLellan,	Sproule,
Clayes,	Mara,	Stevenson,
Edgar,	Masson,	Taylor,
Ferguson (Leeds & Gren),	Mills (Annapolis),	Trow,
Foster,	Mitchell,	Tupper (Sir Charles),
Freeman,	Moncreiff,	Tyrwhitt,
Gordon,	Montague,	Weldon (Albert),
Hale,	Perley (Ottawa),	White (Cardwell),
Hall,	Porter,	Wilson (Elgin),
Hickey,	Putnam,	Wood (Brockville).—50.
Jamieson,	Reid,

NAYS:

Messieurs

Armstrong,	Dupont,	Langevin (Sir Hector),
Bain (Wentworth),	Eisenhauer,	Laurier,
Béchar,	Ellis,	McDougall (O. Breton),
Bergin,	Ferguson (Welland),	McMillan (Vaudreuil),
Bourassa,	Fiset,	Mallory,
Cameron,	Gauthier,	Mills (Bothwell),
Charlton,	Gillmor,	Platt,
Colby,	Girouard,	Rinfret,
Coughlin,	Grandbois,	Riopel,
Coursol,	Ives,	Ste. Marie,
Dawson,	Joncas,	Thompson,
Desjardins,	Kenny,	Vanasse,
Doyon,	Landry,	Weldon (St. John),
Duchesnay,		Wright.—42.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. RINFRET. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) has not voted.

Mr. GUAY I have not voted because I have paired with the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross).

DIVORCE—RELIEF OF WILLIAM ARTHUR LAVELL

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville) moved the first reading of Bill (No. 255) for the relief of William Arthur Lavell (from the Senate).

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time, on a division.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville) moved the second reading of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time, on a division.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

FREEHOLD LOAN AND SAVINGS COMPANY.

Mr. HALL. I wish to call the attention of the House to an error which has occurred in the Bill with reference to the Freehold Loan and Savings Company, by the omission from the second clause of the restriction as to the term for retaining real estate. The clause which the House has always insisted upon, and which the Banking and Commerce Committee has always inserted, provides that the retention of such real estate shall be limited to seven years. Such a clause was inserted by the committee in this Bill, but, by a mistake, it was not reported to the House. As the Bill has also passed the Senate, the only way of remedying the error is to introduce an amending Bill inserting the clause. The amendment which I propose to insert is an addition to the second clause: That the company shall sell any real estate acquired for the satisfaction of any debt within seven years after it is so acquired, otherwise it shall revert to the previous owner or his heirs or assigns. I may say that I have consulted the leader of the House and that I have his approval of the course I am adopting. I, therefore, move:

That all the rules and orders of the House be suspended in relation to a Bill to amend an Act of the present Session intitled: "An Act to enable the Freehold Loan and Savings Company to extend their business and for other purposes."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If I correctly understood the clause which the hon. gentleman submitted, it is not exactly in the form which has been customary. The clause I think provides that the property shall revert to the heirs or representatives of the party. My recollection is that the usual clause simply limits the holding of the property for so many years without the insertion of those last words. Undoubtedly whatever may be inserted should be in the usual form.

Mr. HALL. These are the exact words which the committee has put in every Bill which has come before them this Session, and every Bill which has been adopted by the House. The object is to make the provision uniform in all loan and building society charters.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think you will find that in the majority of loan bills passed in previous Sessions. Of course, however, if this provision has been inserted in other Bills which have passed this Session, and if it is the policy of the Government to insert those words, I will not press my objection.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) is quite right. I think it is only during the present Session that the addition has been made, and for a good propose—that the estate shall leave the banker.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then I have no objections.

Motion agreed time, and Bill (No. 156) was read the first, second and third time and passed.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 153) to amend the immigration Act (from the Senate).—(Mr. Bowell).

Bill (No. 154) to amend the Revised Statutes, chapter 51, respecting real property in the Territories (from the Senate).—(Mr. Thompson.)

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 115) to amend the Dominion Elections Act.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

IN COMMITTEE.—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 77) respecting the Oxford Junction and New Glasgow Branch of the Intercolonial Railway.—(Mr. Pope.)

CUSTOMS AND INLAND REVENUE.

The House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 41) respecting the Department of Customs and the Department of Inland Revenue.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This measure was discussed under the Bill establishing the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I shall ask the Committee to adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for South Oxford with respect to putting the Department of Customs and the Department of Inland Revenue either under the control of the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Finance, as the Government may from time to time direct.

Mr. MILLS. I believe it would be in the public interest if the hon. gentleman had united these two Departments into one, placing them under the control of one Minister, and allow the Minister of Trade and Commerce to control trade and commerce independent of the subject of the collection of revenue.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will not fight that out again. Whether you call him Minister of Trade and Commerce or Minister of Inland Revenue, the two sub-Departments will be under the one Minister.

Mr. MILLS. That would be true if the Minister of Customs were simply an administrative officer whose duty it was to collect revenue. But I understand that his duties are rather suggestive than administrative, and are quite distinct from the duties of an officer collecting revenue.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I was so much struck with the suggestion of the hon. member for South Oxford on that point that I put his suggestion in the Bill. There will be two Departments, the Department of Revenue and the Department of Trade and Commerce, and two sub-Departments.

Mr. MILLS. There will be four Ministers under the hon. gentleman's arrangement, and under the one I suggest there would be only three, the Minister of Finance, Trade and Commerce and Revenue. The hon. gentleman proposes there should be a Minister of Finance and a Minister of Trade and Commerce who are to be members of the Cabinet, and two other Ministers who are not to be members of the Cabinet.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. These men will be political heads; under the hon. gentleman's system, they would be permanent.

Mr. MILLS. I would suggest the complete merging of the two Departments of revenue, and making them a Department separate and distinct from that of commerce.

The committee rose and reported progress.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND SUBSIDY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 139) to provide for an additional subsidy for the Province of Prince Edward Island.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

FREDERICTON AND ST. MARY'S RAILWAY BRIDGE COMPANY.

House resolved itself into committee on resolution (p. 862), respecting a loan to the Fredericton and St. Mary's Railway Bridge Company.—(Sir Charles Tupper.)

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman had better explain the reasons for this.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is a similar case, and the Bill is based on precisely the same principles as one previously passed by the House in regard to the St. John Railway bridge, and the object is the same. It is to enable the company to construct this bridge, to give such assistance as to enable the bridge to be constructed in this way, and the security which was taken in this case, as in the other case, is believed to be ample. It is for a smaller amount than will be required to construct the bridge, and the Government will have a mortgage for the whole amount. The parties will pay 4 per cent. interest on the money obtained, in the same way as they pay on the bridge at St. John.

Mr. JONES. Is it a railway bridge?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is a railway bridge.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the estimated cost of the bridge?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. About $375,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What would we do with it supposing we resume it?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no probability of its being resumed, but if it were, of course, it would become the property of the Government, and parties would be enabled to use it as a railway bridge. In fact, it would be absolutely necessary for the railway to procure it, or to pay tolls for crossing it. We would be precisely in the same position that we are with the railway bridge that was constructed on the same principle at St. John, N.B., and which is now in operation.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Where is it placed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I believe a little below the present bridge.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What railway is it on?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is the railway from Fredericton to Chatham. This merely gives permissive power to the Government, if the works fail to be carried to completion, or for any other reason, to take over the bridge. It does not oblige them to do it, but it simply gives them the power to take the bridge out of the hands of the company.

Mr. CASEY. By paying the difference and 10 per cent. I think the resolution provides that in the event of a failure to pay the interest, then the Government can resume it on paying the difference in the actual cost without interest.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is on the same principle as the St. John bridge. The loan we authorise is a first charge on the undertaking. The company may pay off the loan at any time within 15 years after making the first advance. Then in addition to this being an absolute mortgage for 15 years, in the usual way, it gives power to the Governor in Council at any time, within five years, to assume possession of the undertaking by paying the difference between the two amounts then due to the Government for advances and interest, and the total amount expended by the company.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It would be well if the hon. gentleman could tell us what business is being done on the roads that are being connected by this bridge, so that we know what the profits are likely to be. It might be a fair investment on the $75,000, but not on the $300,000. It is on the amount of business that is likely to be transacted by the railway companies using the bridge, that we must rely for any chance of being repaid.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We only advance 80 per cent of the money expended during the progress of the work.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Still the Government ought to be able to show, before they ask the House to make such an advance, that it is going to be a fairly remunerative undertaking.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The roads have only recently been constructed.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The parties received within five years $375,000 as a sort of a bonus. The Government loan the money and run the risk of its being a paying property, but if they take it off the hands of the company, in five years, they receive 50 per cent. of the amount they put into the bridge. It seems to me a very large bonus.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is an option to take it, and it is merely giving additional power to the Government.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). If the Government are obliged to take it, they have to pay 50 per cent. upon their advance of $35,000. It is a large bonus for the Government to pay, where it assumes large responsibilities in advancing $300,000. The bridge has cost something like $650,000, and the Government advanced $500,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is aware that the bridge has paid the company, and the company have paid the Government the interest.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The cases are now that the companies are obliged to pay the loan, principal and interest, within 15 years. If, within five years, the Government choose to exercise the option of taking the bridge, they can do so on paying 10 per cent.

Mr. WELDON. On the Government advance?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If they do not exercise that option within five years, then the obligation to pay it within 15 years remains, and if it is not paid within 15 years, then the Government may assume possession in the event of the company failing to carry out the undertaking as provided by their charter, on payment by the company of the difference between the amount advanced and 10 per cent. of the outlay on the work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We understand that, but it does seem a curious provision that on an advance of $75,000 they should be allowed a premium of $37,500, and the First Minister did not deny this.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The 10 per cent. is only on the balance between what the Government have advanced.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The First Minister did not say that. I do not so read it. The words are "10 per cent. on what was expended by the company."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That does not mean the total expenditure by the company.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The company spends $375,000; you advance them $300,000 before they expend the $375,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. That should be amended by saying, "exclusive of the amount granted by the Government."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If you insert those words there can be no objection.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We will say the total amount so expended "exclusive of the advances by the Government."

Mr. EDGAR. The claim of the Government is that this amount is to be paid within fifteen years, but it is not so stated in the resolution. It gives the company the privilege of paying it within fifteen years, but they are not compelled to pay it at all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The mortgage will compel that to be done.

Mr. JONES. If the bridge should not prove remunerative, and the parties fail to pay interest, and the Government are obliged to take it over, what will the Government pay the owners of the bridge?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If they exercise within five years the option of taking it over, the Government must pay 10 per cent. on the balance between what has been expended and the amount the Government has advanced. If they take it under the mortgage, they will take it on the 80 per cent. advanced.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I presume the Minister means that at the end of fifteen years the Government will have a right to foreclose the mortgage?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Clearly, and it will be so defined in the mortgage.

Mr. CASEY. I do not see why the Government should not have the right to foreclose the mortgage before fifteen years, the same as any mortgage.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. So they will.

Mr. CASEY. The resolution does not say so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The mortgage will provide that if the parties fail to pay the interest, the mortgage will be foreclosed.

Mr. CASEY. Under an ordinary mortgage if the company fail to meet their engagement, the Government could assume possession without paying any deficiency. The Government is going to commit themselves to loaning money to companies at abnormally cheap rates for the purpose of building railway bridges in one particular section of the country, because they all seem to be in St. John and Fredericton, whereas the Government should take a mortgage on the ordinary terms.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. So they will do.

Mr. CASEY. But these points are not set forth in the resolutions. If the Government are going to furnish railways with money at 2 per cent. less than the companies could obtain it elsewhere, I think they should take the ordinary security.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They will.

Mr. CASEY. We are bound by the resolution and not by the hon. gentleman's words. The resolution does not say that we will take an ordinary mortgage.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The resolutions provide that the company shall have 80 per cent. of the amount to be expended advanced at 4 per cent. interest; and that being the case they would execute a mortgage as security. Under that mortgage it would be provided, as every mortgage provides, that on failure to pay interest the Government could foreclose the mortgage and take the property into their own hands. It also provides in addition that the Government may at any time exercise the right, under any circumstances, within five years to take the bridge into their hands by paying the amount expended over and above the advance of the Government at 10 per cent. on the balance they have expended over and above the amount.

Mr. CASEY. The terms are quite different to those of an ordinary mortgage, and when we are advancing money at an absurdly low rate we should have the same advantage as an ordinary mortgage. Perhaps the Minister will furnish us with some information as to the possible traffic?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid my estimate would not be of any great value. One hundred miles of railway have not been constructed from this point to Newcastle without expecting to have considerable traffic. It connects the whole of that country with the railway systems of the United States, by the railway now in operation from Fredericton, to the main line of railway between New Brunswick and the United States, and the Intercolonial Railway, on the one side; and running across one hundred miles from Fredericton, the line crosses this bridge and connects with a line of railway, which is a very good line, and it again connects with the United States. This would be a great advantage to that section of the country; it would be a very valuable bridge and very profitable. And the fact that Mr. Gibson and the gentlemen associated with him, have furnished the capital to build that road, and that they are prepared to assume this liability, is the best evidence as to the safety of the Government in giving this assistance for the construction of the bridge.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman was right in stating that he could not form any correct estimate with respect to the traffic over the bridge. This establishes a precedent which may prove useful to other undertakings and expensive to the Government. It is not only in St. John and Fredericton that railway bridges are required. There is one spoken of, in fact, I think it is arranged, across the St. Clair connecting more important lines than those just mentioned. It may bring demands on the Government for large loans on easy terms, and the hon. gentleman will find it is a precedent that will prove very embarrassing.

Resolutions reported.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. POPE moved that the House concur in the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 47) to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. EDGAR. Has the Minister of Railways read or considered the amendments which the Senate have taken the liberty to put in his Bill? I have the impression that he will hardly recognise his Bill. Besides other amendments, they have added a new and very important clause indeed, one which involves a change of the General Railways Act in an important particular. This clause repeals sub-section 2 of section 100 of the Railway Act, which was passed only three years ago. This clause provides that no person shall at any time be compelled to sell or convey to a company only a part of any house or other building, if such person is willing and able to sell or convey the whole of it. This clause of the Act is a very important change in the law with regard to the expropriation of private property, in the interests of the individuals whose property is to be expropriated, and no doubt against the interests of the railway. It was passed three years ago, and it has been consolidated in the Revised Statutes, but in this Bill the Senate have made an extraordinary amendment by repealing the clause of the railway act I have referred to, and I think the House is entitled to know the views of the Government upon such a change in their railway policy.

Mr. POPE. The Bill which passed the House three years ago was carried at the last moments of the Session, and it was not understood to have the meaning which has since been put upon it by the decisions of the courts in England, and that is the reason why this amendment has been made in the other House. As the matter now stands, the person whose property is expropriated would get all the damages which pertain to the property, or that he has any right to get by arbitration, or in some other way.

Mr. EDGAR. The Government assumes responsibility of making the change?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. EDGAR. I think the Senate has improved the Bill in another respect in taking away from the Railway Committee of the Privy Council the arbitrary power of imposing these new switches upon companies unless upon their application to the Government.

Motion agreed to, and amendments concurred in.

HARBOR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL.

Mr. FOSTER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 92) to amend the Acts relating to the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, and read the third time and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the second reading of Bill (No. 116) to amend the Act respecting the Department of Agriculture.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, and read the third time and passed.

YARMOUTH AND ANNAPOLIS RAILWAY.

House resolved itself into committee to consider resolution (p. 591) respecting the Yarmouth and Annapolis Railway.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. JONES. Do the Government propose extending the time provided in this agreement for the commencement of the work?

Mr. POPE. Yes, the Bill provides for that.

Mr. JONES. I suppose if the company do not commence within the time provided, the Government will proceed with the work themselves.

Mr. POPE. That is the intention, as provided by the Bill.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. POPE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 157) to confirm a certain agreement between Her Majesty and the Western Counties Railway Company and for other purposes.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

HARBOR COMMISSIONERS OF QUEBEC.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider resolution (p. 592) respecting the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec.

Mr. LAURIER. The documents promised on this subject have not been laid before the House.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have them here.

Mr. LAURIER. We should have had them before.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The documents are the same as those that were laid before the House last year. I thought the hon. gentleman wanted specially to see the plans.

Mr. LAURIER. What I asked for was the requisition of the commissioners for the present loan, and the report of the manner in which they have employed the former money advanced to them.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They simply ask that the money be advanced to them in the same way as it was advanced in previous years to complete their work. There is the report of the chief engineer showing the amount of money that is required and for what purpose. There was a statement made last year which showed that there would be required nearly $1,000,000 at that time to complete the docks, and the plan laid before the House showed three schemes. There were three lines to be followed from the gas works at the upper end of the docks down to the River St. Lawrence. One of those plans was to build a wharf from the gas works inside the dock, leaving south of it the wharves that are there alongside of St. Paul's street, and the other streets in the lower town. It was found that that scheme would entail a large expenditure for damages and for purchasing piers and wharves, and it was abandoned. It was afterwards thought that another line further north would meet the difficulty, by clearing the wharves and leaving a free entrance for them, but it was found that proprietors of those wharves would complain or claim damages for being deprived of a portion of their franchises by this wharf. Finally, it was decided that the third scheme, for a wharf coming from the gas works down to and through St. Andrew's street would be the best, and would not require a large purchase of property to come down to what is called the cross wharf between the tidal basin and wet basin. That plan was adopted last year. That work was put under contract, and the other works were also under contract, that is to say, the cross-wall and the dredging. The amount of money which the Government asked last year to borrow will cover all the expense that will be incurred this year and next year, and will be the last amount to be contributed by us to these docks. The same condition is to be imposed on this as on the other with reference to the sinking fund.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the receipts of those works?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The receipts by the harbor commissioners are from works outside these docks, because these docks at present give very little revenue, not being completed. The total revenue is this: They have a debt of about $900,000 on which they pay 4 per cent. to the Government and 1 per cent. sinking fund; and, besides that, all their expenses, after keeping up the wharves and piers, are paid out of revenue. Once these docks are completed they will be, I hope, in a position to pay 4 per cent. and 1 per cent. sinking fund to the Government. It is expected these docks, the completion of which is waited for with great anxiety by the trade of Quebec, will give such a revenue as will compensate for the outlay. The amount of actual revenue is about $60,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If I am correctly advised, the harbor trust owes us about $3,000,000. That would be an annual charge already existing of $150,000 with the sinking fund.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The total cost of this is only $3,191,000, when this amount is added.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In the Public Accounts the hon. gentleman will see that the harbor at Quebec and the graving dock figure together $3,000,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The total amount is $2,875,000. In the hands of the Government $190,000, amount advanced to date $2,685,000. Deduct amount applied in reduction of old debentures, $723,000, and the amount expended on these works is $1,962,000. The different amounts required to complete the works bring up the expenditure to $3,191,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman will look at our balance sheet, he will see that the Quebec harbor debentures are put down, the 1st July, 1886, at $2,389,493, and the graving dock at $724,000, which is under the same trust, making $3,113,000, on the 1st July,

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

1886. That means at 4 per cent. interest and 1 per cent. sinking fund $155,000 a year. Then you propose to lend them $1,250,000 by these resolutions, which would make $4,363,000. That is very hard on the trade of any one city of the Dominion.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is right in his calculation, but the graving dock is separate entirely from these works. It is on the other side of the river. The charge on the harbor commissioners cannot exceed $10,000 by the Act. In case the revenues of the graving dock are not sufficient to pay the interest, the harbor commissioners may contribute to the extent of $10,000 and no more. The figures I gave the hon. gentleman were the figures in connection with the dry dock and the wet dock on the River St. Charles, on the Quebec side.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The present revenue is scarcely adequate to meet the interest.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It meets the interest of the old debt of $724,000, but not the other expenses. They cannot have revenue from these works because they are only on the way, but in eighteen months they will be completed.

Mr. JONES. What is the cost of the tidal dock?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The tidal dock and the wet dock are going to cost, when completed, $3,180,000.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. LAURIER. I understand by what was said by the Minister of Public Works, that this grant of money is not made upon any application from the commissioners this year, but upon the report of the Government engineer.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, but the commissioners, without making application, came here, and at Quebec they called my attention to the fact that there was only the sum of $150,000, or $180,000 in the hands of the Government, and that to meet the expenses of the year and next year they would require an additional amount.

Mr. LAURIER. They made no demand except the verbal demand, and the amount was given on the report of the engineer.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. I suppose the report of the engineer will be laid on the Table, and I suppose the report as to the employment of the moneys given last year will be placed on the Table also.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 158) to authorise the advance of certain sums of money to the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec, to complete the graving dock, and other improvements in said harbor.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time.

SPEEDY TRIALS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. THOMPSON moved the second reading of Bill (No. 146) to amend the Speedy Trials Act, Chapter 175 of the Revised Statutes.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

EXPROPRIATION ACT.

House resolved itself into Committee on resolution (p. 952) respecting moneys payable by the Crown under the Expropriation Act.

Resolution concurred in.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What precise alteration does this make in the former practice?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is to be part of the Bill on the Order Paper which is to re-enact Chapter 39 of the Revised Statutes respecting the expropriation of lands, simply inserting, wherever it is necessary, the Exchequer Court instead of the Dominion arbitrators. As it is only a formal measure I would ask the House to read it the second time though it is only printed in French.

Bill (No. 141) to amend the Revised Statutes, Chapter 39, respecting the expropriation of lands, was read the second time, and considered in Committee.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12:40 a. m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 16th June, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

DISTRIBUTION OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 159) to amend chapter 2 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, intitled: "An Act respecting the publication of the Statutes." He said: The only object of the Bill is to further regulate the distribution of the statutes. Under the law a copy of the statutes is distributed to every justice of the peace in the Dominion. The number of justices is now from 20,000 to 21,000. A very complete and intelligent compilation of all Acts relating to the administration of justice by justices of the peace has been prepared. Copies are now being bound and will be ready for distribution in the course of three or four weeks. We are now corresponding with the different Provincial Governments, with a view to induce them to appoint from the commission of the peace in each of the different parishes—in Quebec there is a commission of the peace for each municipality—a president and secretary or custos to whom we would send the statutes, instead of sending statutes to over 20,000 justices of the peace. The present Bill is merely to get rid of the clause which compels the distribution to every justice of the peace in the Dominion.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Of course I am not going to oppose the motion for the introduction of the Bill, but I consider that the advantage of distributing the statutes among justices of the peace to be more than equivalent to any drawback on account of the expense. I believe very great benefit results from the distribution of the statutes. A large number of people become familiar with the law; it is one of the educational forces of the country; and if the hon. gentleman carries the Bill through the House, I am inclined to think the magistrates will not be so well informed as they are under the existing policy.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is an abuse of which we hear complaints everywhere—an abuse which would not exist if there was not the other abuse—the appointment of a large number of people as justices that are not required by the necessities of the Provinces. I spoke of the matter last year, and my views appeared to meet the approval of the House. Yesterday, in the Joint Committee of both Houses on Printing, I suggested that if we were to spare the 20,000 copies which are distributed, we might, perhaps, somewhat increase the number of copies which are given to members of the House, who can distribute them to greater advantage than it can otherwise be done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not going to oppose this matter, any more than my hon. friend, but I may say, that in the Province of Ontario, at any rate, I think the deprivation of this distribution will be seriously felt, and will excite some considerable and legitimate discontent. The hon. gentleman will find, I think, that the effect of this will be that a large number of persons, who have been in the habit of discharging the duties of justices of the peace, will be more or less seriously incommoded. I quite agree that the commission of the peace, in some cases, has been distributed far too profusely, but still there are a number of persons who render considerable service to the community, and, unless there is some provision made to supply those who act as justices of the peace, inconvenience will result.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in thinking that I am not distributing to these justices of the peace all the laws which concern them. We have been doing so for some time, and we are now doing it on a more extensive scale. But the hon. gentleman will see that justices of the peace will be provided, to the fullest extent, with what is necessary for the performance of their duty, and they will be the first to thank the Government for the action we have taken. I do not know how it is in other Provinces, but in our Province there are hundreds of copies of the statutes which are never used at all, whereas, if they had good compendiums for magistrates, they would be very useful.

Mr. TROW. Do I understand that the statutes will be distributed indiscriminately to all magistrates on the commission in the Provinces? In many counties there are numerous magistrates who are duly qualified, but who have no desire or use for the statutes, for the simple reason that a large proportion of the work is done by police magistrates in the towns and cities. Would it not be advisable to distribute an extra copy or two of the Revised Statutes to members of the House and members of the Senate, who now have twenty applications for the one or two copies with which they are supplied?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I may say that I received that suggestion yesterday, from the Printing Committee. I replied that the matter was in the hands of the House, but that if the suggestion was made by the Printing Committee, or by a resolution, we would be only too ready to comply with it. I may say, that the distribution has been done rather sparingly, though it is still very large, but if it is the desire of the House that a copy or two more be distributed to members of the House, it is for the House to say so, and I think they can be provided without much difficulty.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 160) to amend the Indian Act (from the Senate).—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

MILITARY DRILL AT OTTAWA COLLEGE.

Mr. WALLACE asked, 1. Are any arms and ammunition furnished by the Government to the students of the College of Ottawa? 2. What is the description and number of stands of arms, and amount of ammunition, so furnished; and have they any other than those furnished by the Government? 3. Are they uniformed? What is the description of uniform, and is the uniform in accordance with the regulations, and approved of by the Government? 4. Are they inspected by the Deputy Adjutant-General of the District? If so, why is his report not furnished? 5. Is there a drill instructor appointed to the students? Are they instructed according to the field exercise? Who is the instructor, and how is he paid? 6. Do they drill according to the tactics in use by the military forces of the United States?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I will read the following answers which has been communicated to me by the Deputy Adjutant-General of the district, Lieutenant-Colonel Lamontagne: 1. Arms were furnished to the students of the College of Ottawa, but no ammunition was issued. 2. Thirty short Enfield rifles and 41 Peabody rifles, and none other, were furnished to the college by its authorities or by the Department. 3. Yes. A cadet and Zouave uniform, not of Government pattern, or approved by the Department. 4. No inspection has been made since four years ago, but they were formerly inspected. 5. No instructor was asked for by the college since four years ago. Last April Captain Bliss volunteered as instructor, without pay, and acted for six drills only: the students not having time to attend regularly, drill was dispensed with. The instruction was according to our field exercise. 6. I cannot say if they also drill according to the United States military tactics, not having yet had an opportunity of seeing them.

SUPPLY—VALUATION OF CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY ROLLING STOCK.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MULLOCK. Before this motion is adopted, I wish to call the attention of the House to a matter that has already received some attention from the Committee on Public Accounts: I refer to an item which appeared in the Estimates for the year 1886, of $200,000 for the purchase of certain rolling stock upon that portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway known as the Yale and Savona's Ferry section. The first intimation that this House had in regard to this matter appears in the Official Debates for the year 1886, on page 1744. When the House was in Committee of Supply the then Minister of Finance asked for a vote of $200,000 to pay for the purchase of certain rolling stock that had been used on that section of the railway. The hon. Minister, on that occasion, was asked to furnish the House with some explanations, showing why that sum should be voted. His explanations were extremely meagre, as any hon. gentleman will see on referring to the report. But he informed the House that the Government of Canada was under obligation to purchase from Mr. Onderdonk, who had been the contractor for the construction of that portion of the railway, a certain quantity of rolling stock, consisting of 29 locomotives and 397 flat cars. On those representations the House voted the $200,000. Well, Sir, the explanations then furnished were wholly inadequate; they were not such as should have been furnished; and it became necessary for the Public Accounts Committee, this Session, to investigate that transaction. The first meeting of the Public Accounts Committee was held on the 28th day of April last. That was merely a meeting for the purpose of organisation, for the election of a chairman, and the committee decided to meet again the next day. The next day, the 29th of April, it did meet, and on that day I moved:

"For production before this committee of all books, letters, accounts, and other papers in connection with item $200,000 on page 45, part I, of the Auditor General's report, including instructions to valuers Hanney, Reed and Clark, and their communications, with any Department Mr. WALLACE.

or member of the Government, and of all communications sent by the Government or any Department to them or any of them, and also all reports and valuations made by such arbitrators, or a majority of them, concerning the rolling stock used in construction of the British Columbia (Yale and Savona's Ferry) section of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and resumed by the Government, and the evidence submitted to said valuers in connection with such valuation."

You will see that this resolution directed that all the valuations made by the arbitrators, or by a majority of them, should be submitted to the committee. That resolution was carried on the day on which I moved it. The committee met again on the 17th of May, and the order of the committee had not been up to that time fully complied with; in fact, what was done was a substantial, and, I believe, an intentional, evasion of the order of the committee. The only papers submitted to the committee, consist of a letter from the Department of Railways to the Auditor General, directing him as to the payment of the amount of a certain award, to which latter was annexed a copy of what purported to be a certain award. This paper, called an award, which was submitted to the committee that day, purported to be a valuation of certain rolling stock, namely, nine locomotives and 189 flat cars, and the amount at which the arbitrators valued that stock was $202,860. There is a memorandum at the foot—"Approved: C. S."—which I suppose means Collingwood Schreiber, the Government Engineer, deducting an item of $3,325, and striking a balance of $199,535 as the amount represented by this report as found by the arbitrators to be due in payment of this rolling stock.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What was the item deducted?

Mr. MULLOCK. One locomotive, said by the engineer to be unfit for service. You will observe, therefore, that on the day I mention, the 17th of May, the only document which was produced before the committee was the award, which I may refer to as the award of March, 1886, thus leaving the committee under the impression that this was the only and final award in connection with this matter. Well, Sir, it seemed incomprehensible that an award of this magnitude could have been arrived at, without there having been a report, or any papers, showing how the arbitration had been entered upon, or any correspondence in connection with the matter. Accordingly, I called the attention of the committee to what appeared to be a neglect to obey the order of the committee, and the committee, at my request, ordered that the Deputy Minister of Railways, Mr. Trudeau, should attend the next meeting of the committee, to be examined as to whether or not there were other papers in the custody of the Government. The next meeting of the Public Accounts Committee was held on the 31st day of May, and Mr. Trudeau attended on that occasion, in obedience to the order of the committee. At the same time there were presented to the committee the papers which I now hold in my hand, and accompanying those papers was the following communication:—

"OTTAWA, 8th May, 1887.

"SIR,—Referring to your letter of the 10th ult., I have the honor, by direction, to transmit to you herewith, copies of all documents of record in this Department on the subject of the valuation of the rolling stock used in the construction of the British Columbia (Yale and Savona's Ferry) section of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and resumed by the Government.

"I am, your obedient servant,

"A. P. BRADLEY,

"Secretary."

This letter was directed to the Auditor General, Mr. J. L. McDougall, and in the margin of this letter is a memo. setting forth the numbers of the documents in question, in all 14. You will observe that on the 8th May, the Department of Railways, through their secretary, certified that the documents which I now am about to quote from, were all the documents of record in the Department touching the valuation in question, and you will further observe that that letter is an answer to the order of the committee that there should be laid before the committee, not only all letters and correspondence, but every valuation, whether made by all the arbitrators, or by a majority of them. What was the case presented, according to the papers so produced? It appears that in the month of October, 1885, Mr. Onderdonk, the contractor, was in the city of Ottawa, and I should judge, from the language of the correspondence, had had frequent interviews with the Railway Department during that time. He pressed the Government to take over certain rolling stock, which he had used in the construction of that section of the railway, and he comes to Ottawa, apparently quite prepared to deal with that matter, because, in his letter of the 22nd October, 1885, he begs leave to name Mr. M. J. Haney as one of the arbitrators for the valuation of the rolling stock, and a number of letters passed between Mr. Onderdonk and the Department of Railways. There was great activity shown on this occasion by the Department in answering the letters, and the correspondence amounts to this: that the Government, represented by the Department of Railways, had decided to go into an arbitration to value this rolling stock, and Mr. Schreiber, acting for the Government, in a letter dated the 22nd of October, says as follows:—

"I see no reasons why steps should not at once be taken to have the rolling stock valued."

As the result of this movement on the part of Mr. Onderdonk, an arbitration was agreed upon. Mr. Onderdonk nominated Mr. Haney, who had been, I am informed, his manager in connection with that work, as his valuator. The Government appointed Mr. Reed, the mechanical superintendent of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Winnipeg, as their valuator, and these two parties chose a third valuator, Mr. Peter Clark, mechanical superintendent of the Northern Railway, Toronto. Mr. Schreiber, in his letter of the 24th October, to the Department of Railways, says:

"I desire to say that it is impossible for me, just now, to visit British Columbia for the purpose of making this valuation. I, therefore, suggest that the value be arrived at by three men, experts, one to be appointed by the Government, another by the contractor, and the parties thereof to agree upon a third man before the work of valuation is commenced."

Thus, you will see that the Government and Mr. Onderdonk had either verbally or otherwise, come to an understanding that there was to be an arbitration, that each was to choose an arbitrator, and that the two arbitrators were to choose a third. Well, that arbitration was entered upon on the 4th November, 1885. The Department of Railways, through their secretary, notified Mr. Clark that he had been nominated as third valuator, to proceed to British Columbia to value the Onderdonk rolling stock. On the 9th November, 1885, Mr. Schreiber writes to Mr. Reed, the Government arbitrator, giving him instructions as to the basis upon which he is to proceed, and after quoting from the contract, he says:

"You will perceive that the value is to be taken at the close of the contract, meaning the date of the completion of the contract, which date will be given you by the Hon. Joseph Trutch, Dominion Agent at Victoria, B. C., or by Mr. D. McLeod, and L. B. Hamlin, engineers in charge of the contract, if the three arbitrators are unanimous."

You will observe the Government consider they have entered into an arbitration—

"The amount of the valuation you will report to me conjointly with them, or if any of the two arbitrators agree upon the value the two will report to me conjointly, and I shall be pleased to receive a separate report from the other valuator, or, if none of you can agree, I will be glad to receive a report from each separately."

Then he goes on to speak of Mr. Clark making arrangements to meet them. What was the next communication, in order of time, produced before the committee, in obedience to the order of the committee that all awards, all valuations, all correspondence, all instructions, were to be produced before the committee? It is a document dated 13th March, 1886, and it reads as follows:—

"Sir,—In reply to your instructions requesting us to furnish the report showing our estimate as to the value of the rolling stock belonging to the contractor which was used in the construction of the British Columbia section of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Yale and Savona's Ferry, the date of the completion of the contract July, 1885. Taking into consideration the isolated position of the stock at that date and the expense involved in placing it there, in other words, what would be the cost of duplicating, because, at that date, we beg to submit the annexed statement amounting to $202,860.

"We are, Sir, &c.,

"W. H. REED,
"M. J. HANEY,
"P. OLARK."

Annexed to this communication are the details of their report, showing that they value the locomotives at $67,350, 189 flat cars at what is necessary with that $67,000, to make up $202,860. Annexed to that is the memorandum from the Government railway engineer, being his report on that valuation, and he reports as follows:—

"I consider this a fair valuation for the rolling stock in its present isolated position in July, 1885. Engine No. 2, however, should not appear on the list, as it is represented by experts not to be serviceable. This will reduce the amount from $202,860 to $199,835."

Then, there are subsequent departmental papers for the purpose of having that report passed through the various Departments, and finally acted upon. Therefore, you will see that, as a result of the efforts of the committee to obtain light upon this transaction, we began by moving for the production of everything, and the first thing we got was a statement that the arbitrators had valued the property at the sum I have named, and at last we know by the correspondence that there was only one award, and that all the papers were not produced. Any person, after perusing these papers, would have discovered from their imperfect character that documents were not submitted which were, or which had been in existence. Accordingly, on the 31st May, when Mr. Trudeau appeared and was examined by the committee, it came to the knowledge of the committee that the return was not complete. I pointed out to the committee on that occasion wherein it must be to some extent incomplete, and Mr. Trudeau said that he himself knew nothing about the production, whether the order of the committee had been obeyed or not, and the committee, at my request, directed Mr. Trudeau to see whether the return was complete or not. On the 8th June, the committee again met, and on that occasion Mr. Trudeau again appeared, and as a result, the bundle of papers which I now hold in my hands were produced to the committee in addition to those which had been already produced—some forty in all. Forty documents were produced on the 8th June, which, according to the certificate of the Department on the 8th May, had no existence at all. Now, what case do those papers disclose? Why were they withheld? Was it a pure accident, or was there a motive in it? I leave it to the House to say whether this was an accident or not? In my own heart I cannot believe it was. These papers show that on the 8th January, 1886, a communication was sent to the Department of Railways to the following effect—this letter is dated January 8th, 1886, is signed by Peter Clark, and is directed to A. P. Bradley, Secretary, Department of Railways and Canals:—

"Sir,—On the 9th November last, I received a letter from Mr. Schreiber, chief engineer of Government railways, advising me that I had been appointed as third valuator to appraise the engines and flat cars, the property of the contractors, used in construction on the British Columbia section of the Canadian Pacific Railway, between Yale and Savona's Ferry, the valuation to be taken at the date of completion of contract. The other valutors were Messrs. Haney and Reed. I left Toronto on the 17th November, and met Mr. Reed at Victoria, B.C. Mr. Haney had been suddenly called away to Ontario, so he instructed Mr. Armstrong, his assistant, to act in his stead. He, Mr. Reed, and self, examined the stock, which was massed at Port Moody and Yale. Mr. Reed made out statement of his valuation of the stock, which I brought on to Ottawa, where I met Mr. Haney. It was then arranged for Mr. Reed, who had remained over at Winnipeg, to come to Toronto to meet Mr. Haney. They had an interview, but found that they could not agree upon a joint valuation, the chief point at issue between them being, that Mr. Haney maintained that the stock, being in an isolated position, was enhanced in value, and, as it had cost the contractors heavy expenditure to get it there, therefore this valuation should cover a large proportion of this extra expense, over and above the actual value of the stock. Mr. Reed objected to this view of the case, and contended that any extra cost of getting the stock there must have been foreseen when the contract was undertaken; also the letter of instructions he received does not give him authority to entertain such views. The isolated position of the stock does not in any way enhance its value. I concur with Mr. Reed in his views on this matter, and his valuation."

Mr. Reed, the Government's valuator, and Mr. Clark, the umpire, both concur that the isolated position of the property does not enhance its value.

"Our examination of the stock was completed December 3rd, 1885, but I learned from parties to whom I was directed by letter of instruction from Mr. Schreiber that the contract was completed in July previous. I informed Mr. Reed of this, and he has made allowance for the time between inspection and completion of contract in the valuation. I suppose Mr. Haney will send a separate report to you."

You will thus observe that the arbitrators had before them on this first occasion this whole point as to whether the location of the rolling stock in any way affected its value, and they adjudicated upon that point. On that occasion, the two independent arbitrators agreed and signed the award, and annexed to that award is a schedule setting forth the rolling stock in question, and a recapitulation setting forth this finding; and what do you think that valuation shows? It shows that they valued the locomotives at $38,950, and the flat cars at such another sum as together would make $72,665. On this occasion they made a report that the property which they valued, being exactly the same property as they valued later on, was worth $72,665. Why was that paper not produced in obedience to the order of the committee that all valuations were to be produced? That report was sent to the Government on the 8th January, 1886. When did they receive it? I suppose we may assume that they received it on the 9th January. On the 9th January Mr. Schreiber, I presume, along with the head of the Department, learned that the arbitrators had valued this property at $72,665. What course do you think the Department of Railways adopted in regard to that matter. We find them suddenly awaking to the idea that the valuation is too low, and we find them moving and making every effort to show that the valuation is too low. The first intimation is a letter from Mr. Reed himself, which was produced on the examination of Mr. Peter Clark on the 8th June. Mr. Reed writes to Mr. Clark from Ottawa as follows:—

"January 11, 1886.

"DEAR CLARK.—Saw Mr. Schreiber this morning, also Mr. Pope. They appeared to be afraid to open the letter, and Mr. Pope sent for Mr. Schreiber. What was said I cannot say, but I have to be here on Thursday, when, I presume, a meeting will be held. This matter is a fizzle, and it appears to me that we are to be used as tools. Haney is not here. I told Mr. Schreiber I wanted to get away. You had better be here on Thursday sure, and we will wind the whole business up. I go to Montreal this p.m. Any messages you send in care of Brown & Co., will find me."

It appears from the evidence which I hold in my hand that Mr. Schreiber being examined on this point, admits that he objected to the award. It was too small, it did not amount to enough to please him; and he further stated that all he did in the matter was done with concurrence of his chief. We know that. I do not propose to attach responsibility to subordinates. They had to obey the orders of their chief, and their chief was cognisant of everything that took place in this matter. Therefore, when Mr. Schreiber asserts that he objected to the smallness of the award, coupled with the fact that he acted with the knowledge of his chief, he asserts that the Minister of Railways took the initiative in causing to be set aside an award which fixed the value of this property at $72,000 odd, which was substituted by another award which cost this country about $200,000. Well, they did not go into that second award all at once. In this second bundle of papers, which I hold, the papers which were not produced at first, are the following communications: Telegram from the Department of Railways, dated January 12, 1886, to Peter Clark:

Mr. MULOCK.

"The Minister would like you to be here on Thursday morning, without fail, to meet Mr. Reed and Mr. Haney."

On the 12th January the Minister manifested his desire to see Mr. Clark; I suppose in regard to this award; and on the same day Mr. Bradley writes a letter to Mr. Clark, as follows:—

"Referring to the report jointly submitted by you on the 8th inst., giving the value of certain rolling stock used on the Canadian Pacific Railway works in British Columbia under contract to D. O. Mills at the time the work was completed in July, 1885"—

They did in their report show its value in 1885, and Mr. Clark expressly states in his letter accompanying their first report, that they had made a discount from the value, having regard to the fact that they were told the value of July, 1885. The letter goes on to say:

"Taking into consideration the fact that it had already been brought into the Province, and the cost which would have been entailed had its transport to be provided at that date."

Mr. Clark telegraphed in reply:

"Will leave for Ottawa to-night."

That is the 12th. I also find a letter of 11th January, from Mr. Onderdonk to Mr. Bradley, as follows:—

"Agreeable to the request of Mr. Schreiber, Engineer in Chief of Government Railways, I telegraphed for Mr. Haney to meet Mr. Reed in Ottawa on Thursday, but, unfortunately, Mr. Haney is very ill with scarlet fever, and cannot come."

You will observe by the letter of Mr. Onderdonk to Mr. Bradley, that on the 11th January Mr. Schreiber had been urging Mr. Onderdonk to get Mr. Haney here. The Government had been anxious to speed this matter so as to do away with this old award and get a new one in its place. The next paper I propose to read is a letter from Mr. Reed, dated Winnipeg, 18th February, 1886, to Mr. Bradley:

"Mr. M. J. Haney notified me of his being in Winnipeg. I have had an interview with him, and have come to the conclusion to make no further report than what has already been submitted to you by Mr. Clark and myself on the 8th January last."

You will observe that the Government have been endeavoring to dragoon these men into making a new award.—

"My reasons for not complying with your instructions of 12th January, is owing to the fact that I cannot conscientiously submit a further report, not knowing the expenditure incurred for transportation. Mr. Haney, no doubt, can supply the information more correctly, having paid freight charges to the several companies for which he must hold vouchers."

Then we have a telegram from Mr. Reed dated at Calgary, 22nd February, 1886, to Mr. Schreiber, as follows:—

"I certainly don't know what charges were made for transportation to British Columbia, therefore fail to see how I can report per request received when Clark and myself were at Ottawa. Wrote Mr. Bradley on 17th instant."

Then Mr. Bradley telegraphs on the 23rd to Mr. Reed, as follows:—

"Your telegram to Mr. Schreiber and also your letters of the 17th received. I am instructed by Minister to say that it is not necessary that you should ascertain the cost to Onderdonk to take the rolling stock to British Columbia; the question being what was the value of the said rolling stock in British Columbia at the date of the completion of the contract."

You will observe that here, on the 23rd February, 1886, the Department of Railways again asserted that the true question is: What was the value of the said rolling stock in British Columbia at the date of the completion of the contract, and the two arbitrators, Reed and Clark, by their award of January, 1886, declared that the true value of that rolling stock in British Columbia on the date of the completion of the contract was $72,665. Well, you see that the way of putting it by Mr. Reed did not quite meet the case. They were bound to get a new valuation. They had to find a reason to induce, in some way or another, these valuers to make a new report. Mr. Bradley, on 22nd February, 1886, with most laudable energy, again telegraphed Mr. Reed as follows:—

"No reply to my telegram has been received. Seeing that you have undertaken to act on this arbitration, the Minister urges that a report be sent in at once, under the terms of the instructions sent to you."

"On the terms of the instructions sent you." They have certified that they had made a report on the terms of the instructions sent, which terms were confirmed by the letter of Mr. Bradley, which I have just read. Mr. Reed telegraphs in reply on the 1st March:

"Message received on my return from mountains. Have wrote you this afternoon."

Here is the letter from Mr. Reed to Mr. Bradley dated 1st March, 1886:

"DEAR SIR,—On my return from the mountains I received your messages of the 23rd and 27th ultimo. I wish to state that I have acted up to my instructions, received from Mr. Schreiber, Chief Engineer of Government Railways, to the best of my ability, which was jointly submitted to you on the 8th January, giving the value of certain rolling stock used on the Canadian Pacific Railway works in British Columbia."

On the 1st March, 1886, you will observe that Mr. Reed declared that he had then made his return, and he again confirmed the action which he and the umpire had adopted in January, 1886. Well, we then find a letter from Mr. Onderdonk to Mr. Bradley, dated 3rd March, 1886, wherein he says:

"I submit, herewith, a letter of even date just received from Mr. Haney, together with copy of letter and telegram received by Mr. Haney from Mr. Reed, all pertaining to the British Columbia rolling stock. I sincerely trust that the Government will deem it but just and fair to accord me prompt action in the matter, by appointing some one else without delay to fill the position to which Mr. Reed was appointed and which he has declined to fill."

Then we have a telegram from Mr. Reed dated 21st February, 1886, to Mr. Haney:

"I cannot see my way clear to report on that which I know nothing about. Still adhere to the contents of letter. Not necessary to wait."

Then on 18th February, we have a letter from Mr. Reed to Mr. Haney, which was submitted to the Department:

"DEAR MR. HANEY,—I called to see you at the hotel this afternoon, and waited over an hour, am sorry to say you did not return. I received your memorandum re rates, for which accept my thanks. At the same time I have concluded to make no further report or comply with Mr. A. P. Bradley's letter of 12th January. I have written to Mr. Bradley this p.m. regarding same.

Thus the House will see that Mr. Reed stands firm not to compromise himself by recalling, on his own judgment at least, the valuation at which he had arrived. Throughout the correspondence so far as I have gone hon. members will observe that Mr. Reed, the umpire, takes the ground that the whole subject of reference had been considered and adjudicated upon, and that he had nothing more to say. On 3rd March, Mr. Haney wrote to Mr. Onderdonk, urging him to take steps to have Mr. Reed displaced and a new arbitrator appointed. Mr. Onderdonk, you will observe, is an all powerful man, or he is supposed to have had great power with this Government. Mr. Onderdonk at last is appealed to to use his influence and get rid of the umpire who had up to that time acted and who had made an award. Then we have what seems to me incomprehensible—I believe there are other papers that have not been produced—we come to some telegrams and letters showing that those gentlemen are all to meet at Ottawa and enter into an award, at all events to meet in Ottawa. The next paper—I presume it is a telegram although it is not so marked—is from Mr. Bradley to Peter Clark, dated 11th March, 1886:

"Messrs. Reed and Haney meet here to-morrow (Friday) on Onderdonk rolling stock business. You should be present."

Up to 11th March, Mr. Reed refused to agree to be mixed up in this matter. He states to Mr. Haney, he states to the Government, by letter and telegram, throughout the whole month of February, that he had fully dealt with this whole matter, and he declined to withdraw his judgment and issue a new valuation; but, without any explanation showing how the change came about, we find, suddenly, the three arbitrators collected in the city of Ottawa, and then, as a result, we find them making the award to which I first referred, valuing this property at $200,000 odd. If any hon. member will look at the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee, he will find that Mr. Clark was examined, and when he was asked how he came to make valuations so widely apart, what was his explanation? He said that that second valuation of his was not made on his own judgment or responsibility at all, that he came to Ottawa, and the Government, through the Engineer in Chief, told him to make certain additions to it for cost of transportation, and he simply acted mathematically and obeyed instructions, and he declined to take any responsibility in connection with the second award. But the award was got, an award at least was signed by those three men. Hon. members may ask why Mr. Reed was not there. An application was made to the committee to have Mr. Reed summoned as a witness, and a telegram was read to the committee from him saying he was, I think, in St. Paul, that he could not come and if we desired any information to send the questions and he would answer them. Thus I have traced, so far as the facts before the committee enabled me to do so, how it came about that we have now a liability—if it has not been paid, I suppose it has been paid?—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It has been paid.

Mr. MULOCK,—of $200,000 odd, made really at the instigation of the Department of Railways for the payment of an account which could have been settled for $72,665. It is due to the country that that transaction should be explained. What do hon. members think the Government did with this rolling stock after they got it? The Government were apparently anxious to get it because they were hard up for rolling stock. Hon. members will observe that the first arbitration was made in January; but if we assume that they did not utilise the rolling stock till the second arbitration was arrived at and payment made, they were entitled to it at the time of the payment, which I understand was shortly after the House voted $200,000 last year. So in June, 1886, the rolling stock became the property of the country, the amount awarded having paid for it. What did the Government do? Look at the evidence of the Engineer in Chief and see how the property was taken care of. He tells us that when the property was bought it was lying along the line, cars and engines being on the sidings, and that for months, even until this enquiry commenced, the Government took little or no care of it; they allowed the engines to remain exposed for months without taking any steps to have them housed, for they did not appear to want them, they were in fact a burthen to the country, and with the exception of one locomotive which the Canadian Pacific Railway took without permission and used, and with the exception of some flat cars which for a short time the Government allowed the Canadian Pacific Railway to use. Even that little attempt to make use of the flat cars was not made until many months after the property was paid for. It was not even until the fall of 1886 that Mr. Schreiber or the Government, for I do not blame Mr. Schreiber, for I hold the Government responsible and he was only obeying orders, that the least steps were taken to make anything out of the property for which we have paid so dearly. Even then the Government made no definite bargain. They cannot produce any paper showing what bargain they made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the use of the property, and it looks as if that company had been allowed to help themselves to that property. But it came out in evidence that some of the rolling stock had now left the west and was going to the east. When did it go? Not until this enquiry was commenced, not until the matter was brought before the committee and before the public did the Government take steps to exercise their ownership of the property or protect it from decay, but they allowed the locomotives to remain exposed to the weather of the North-West or British Columbia, and I suppose if the committee had not moved in the matter they would still have been rusting and going to pieces on the prairies and in the valleys of British Columbia, I think it was due to the country that this matter should be presented to the House. I will call your attention to the fact that at the very first meeting of the Public Accounts Committee efforts were made to have the matter thoroughly sifted and that, with that skilfulness for delay which characterises committees under the control of a majority in this House, enquiry was postponed day after day until at last, at the very last meeting of the committee, this mere portion of the evidence to which I have referred was obtained. I fully believe that were this matter properly investigated by a proper tribunal it would be disclosed in a more serious light than has been given it by the evidence which was not taken under oath—the committee has no power to examine under oath—and, therefore, what we have is simply voluntary evidence from, in some cases, unwilling witnesses. Under these circumstances, I think it is due to the country that the Government should explain their connection with this transaction, and what is more important, take steps to have a proper enquiry made under oath. I may say, too, that I have received information since the committee closed the enquiry, to the effect that the Government endeavored to sell portions of this rolling stock to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that, with regard to the flat cars, the Canadian Pacific Railway were only willing to give some $60 apiece for cars which we paid some $200 apiece for, a few months before; and that as to the locomotives, they declined to take them at any price. I have been so informed by a source, which I consider sufficient to justify me in making this statement to the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As I had the honor of holding the position of Minister of Railways and Canals when this contract was entered into, the House will perhaps permit me to say a few words on the subject. I regret very much that the demands upon my time made it impossible for me to attend any meetings of the Committee on Public Accounts except the last, and I then made a great effort to attend in consequence of my hon. friend and colleague the Minister of Railways informing me that he was obliged to be in attendance at the Railway Committee at the same hour. I, therefore, have not that full information upon the subject that the hon. gentleman has who has just addressed the House, for he has, of course, watched these proceedings and been present from the first. But I think I know enough of the transaction, and I think enough was disclosed at the last meeting of the Committee on Public Accounts when I was there, to put any person who approaches this matter with an unbiassed mind in possession of the facts as they stand, and to lead him to a much more charitable conclusion than that at which the hon. gentleman has arrived. I may say, Sir, that when the question of constructing this portion of the railway in British Columbia was taken up, neither I or any other member of this House, nor any person in this country, supposed that for many long years to come—aye, Sir, at a much later date than that at which I am now speaking, there would be any communication by rail between British Columbia and this portion of Canada. I want the House to bear that fact in mind, because it is a most important fact in connection with this contract. I knew, as every person familiar with railway construction knows, that the cost of constructing railway works in one of the most difficult portions of any country in the world in which railway works were ever constructed, would be largely affected by the remoteness of the position and the difficulty of getting the railway stock, and the engine power, and railway cars, necessary for the construction of that railway to that portion of the country. And not only, Sir, was there no communication by rail between the other portions of Canada and British Columbia, but there was no communication by the Northern Pacific Railway to the Pacific coast, nor was there any expectation at that time that at any early day there would be railway communication, even by the Northern Pacific Railway. The mode by which I reached British Columbia when I first went to examine these works, a year after they were under construction, was by Chicago and the Union and Central Pacific Railway to San Francisco, and by steamer from that point to British Columbia. That was the only means by which you could send rolling stock or any other appliances from this portion of Canada, or from any portion of the United States to British Columbia—to send them by the Union and Central Pacific Railway to San Francisco, and thence by steamer to British Columbia. Now, Sir, I took this question up very seriously with Mr. Fleming, then Chief Engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, when these advertisements asking for tenders were first offered to the public, and upon his advice and with my hearty concurrence we came to the conclusion that it would be in the interest of Canada, in the interest of the economy of public money, if we were to state in the advertisements calling for these tenders that, at the conclusion of the work, the Government would be prepared to take off the hands of the contractors the rolling stock used in the construction of the road—and why? First, because we believed we would save a great sum of money which would otherwise be added to the amount at which they would tender, if they felt that this rolling stock, placed there at such an enormous cost as it must be placed there, would, at the conclusion of the work, be thrown on their hands. But that was not all. We expected that, for many long years to come, after the completion of the road, it would be operated as a Government work, and that, therefore, we would require for the operation of the road such rolling stock as would be left, or such of it as was in a condition to be of value, at the conclusion of the contracts. I do not believe there is a gentleman on either side of the House who will not say that the Government, that I, that the Chief Engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, exercised a wise forethought in placing it prominently before the public when we invited tenders, making it as we did a part of the contract with the contractors, that at the conclusion the rolling stock would be taken off their hands. And in what way? At the valuation of the Chief Engineer. The hon. gentleman knows that the public always assume, and rightly assume, that a high public officer, a qualified man, a man who can hold such a position as Chief Engineer of a great work like the Canadian Pacific Railway—will be accepted by the public generally as a man who will do that which is honest and straightforward between the Government he serves and the contractors who are employed by the Government; and consequently the contractors were willing that a condition of the contract should be that we should take over the rolling stock upon the valuation of the Chief Engineer. Now, Sir, there is the whole case. When this contract was made, as I have stated, no person believed that at this hour there would be any communication between British Columbia and this portion of Canada by rail. No person believed that the Rocky Mountains would be penetrated, and that the road would be completed. When we made a contract two years afterwards, for the completion of that road by 1891, and I brought that contract down to this House, we were met by hon. gentlemen opposite with the statement that we would not be able to secure the construction of the through line of the Pacific Railway by 1891. It is necessary to bear that in mind, because it has the most vital bearing upon the very question under consideration, that is, the value of this rolling stock. Now, Sir, when the road was completed, the contractor naturally asked my hon. friend who was Minister of Railways to carry out the contract by sending his chief engineer to value that rolling stock, paying him for it according to the terms of the contract. The House knows, that, at the time of the completion of the contract, there was no communication by rail between British Columbia and the other portions of Canada; and, even assuming that there had been, I say that an element that would enter into the calculation when valuing the rolling stock, would be the belief on the part of the contractor and on the part of the Government, when the contract was made, as to what the means of communication would be at the date of the completion of the contract. The Government assumed, and had a right to assume, that when the contract was completed the engineer would value that rolling stock according to its value in British Columbia unconnected by rail with any other portion of Canada. I think the House will agree with me in that position. Now, what took place? The chief engineer said: "I am not competent to put an accurate value on half worn rolling stock, or on rolling stock that has been in use; I am a railway engineer, but not a mechanical engineer"; and, therefore, he called upon the Government to furnish experts for the purpose of determining what the value of that rolling stock was. My hon. friend who has just resumed his seat said they were arbitrators, and he is warranted in saying so, because the instructions they received constituted them arbitrators. I am quite willing to concede that; but I will say that notwithstanding the fact that they were termed arbitrators, and that it was expected that their valuation would be accepted, that did not relieve the Government from the obligation to make such a valuation on such information as they could obtain as would commend itself to the judgment of the Government through their engineer at a fair and just valuation.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. MULOCK. You say he did not know what the value of such property was.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say what the Chief Engineer stated in evidence before the committee, and I was sorry to hear my hon. friend express his regret that the testimony was not sworn testimony, because Mr. Collingwood Schreiber, who gave his testimony before that committee, is a gentleman of very high standing, and holding a very responsible position in this country. He is a gentleman who enjoyed, and deservedly enjoyed, the full confidence of hon. gentlemen opposite and of the leader of the Government when those hon. gentlemen were in power, as a man entitled not only by his great attainments and his great ability to the position he occupied, but by the confidence that the Government placed in him as a man of integrity and personal character. I do not know the other gentleman; I do not know Mr. Clark; but I heard his testimony, and from the straightforward manner in which he gave it, I come to the conclusion that there is no reason to suppose that any testimony that that gentleman would give would be affected in the slightest degree if he had been under oath instead of speaking as he was in his position as an engineer.

Mr. MULOCK. As far as those gentlemen went, I did not say anything as to whether I doubted their evidence or not. What I said, and what I repeat here, is that I think it is unfortunate that examinations before the Public Accounts Committee are not taken under oath.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). You said in this special case.

Mr. MULOCK. I say in this special case and in all cases, and my reason for it is this: When you have witnesses under oath, and all the other concomitants that attend an examination under oath, you have a better plan of examining exhaustively into the whole work. It is felt when not examining under oath, that it is not of much use to call adverse witnesses.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not believe those gentlemen were adverse witnesses.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not referring to them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They were called there as public servants.

Mr. MULOCK. I am referring to those who were not there.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then, those I have nothing to say about. I am speaking of the gentlemen who were there, and I say that I believe they gave their testimony in a straightforward manner, and what was that testimony? It was this: Mr. Clark stated that the value they put on that rolling stock by their first report to the Government, was the value that, in its then condition, it would possess if it were here. Mr. Clark said, what would at once commend itself to the judgment of any gentleman, that he was speaking of the value of 8 engines, four of which had not been in use for a year, and 169 flat cars, 149 of which had not been in use for a year. It was easy to see that the valuation placed in the first instance on that property, $72,000 was an extremely low value for that property had it been in Ottawa instead of being on the shores of the Pacific in British Columbia, as it was. The hon. gentleman says that Mr. Clark stated that he took his instructions from the Government, and that he did it mathematically; but, Sir, he did not say that he had been induced or requested by the Government to put a higher value on that rolling stock than would be effected by adding the cost of placing that rolling stock in British Columbia.

Mr. MULOCK. Why could not Mr. Schreiber have done that?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not for me—it is for Mr. Schreiber to say why he did not do it, but as those gentlemen were called on to report to the Government, and they had made that report, I think it was proper for the Government to say to them: "Does your report mean the value of that property, adding the cost of transportation and placing it in British Columbia, which was in the mind of the Government and the contractors, when the contract was made, or have you placed a value on it according to what it would be worth here? Those gentlemen said: "We put a value on it such as we think it would be worth if it were here." They were asked by the Government or by Mr. Schreiber to add the cost of transportation of that stock to British Columbia, after ascertaining what the cost of transportation would be. The hon. gentleman heard Mr. Clark in the committee say—and I believe he told what was his own candid and honest opinion—that the increased amount fairly represented the cost of transport added to his original award.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is no such evidence.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I was there, and I understood him to say so. I asked the question, what the difference represented, and he stated that that represented their estimate of the cost of the transport. I do not hesitate to say that I regard, from what little knowledge I have of these matters, their first estimate as a very low one for such an amount of property as that if it had been here, and I am equally free to say that I regard their second estimate as a very large one, even taking into consideration the cost of transport. I do not hesitate to say that I think one was a very low estimate, and the other a very high estimate.

Mr. MULOCK. If Mr. Schreiber objected to accept the first because it was too low, why did he not object to the second because it was too high?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has himself given the reason, that is, that in appointing these parties to assist in carrying out the contract and to furnish the information Mr. Schreiber did not possess, and which he said he did not possess, the Government made arbitrators of these gentlemen, they gave them the character of arbitrators; their instructions placed them in that position, and Mr. Schreiber, when he got that first report as to the value of the rolling stock, said there must be some mistake. He knew enough of the value of rolling stock to know that could not represent the value, under the condition of the contract, and as the contract was understood on both sides, and the attention of the arbitrators was called to that fact. They were asked the question whether they had added the cost of transport. They said no. They were then called on to do that, as they had been put in the position of arbitrators, and the Government were in the position of being called on to act on the award. That is the whole story, according to the evidence I do not believe any fair minded man will see anything further in it, whatever may be his views with regard to the report of these gentlemen, Messrs. Reed, Haney and Clark, or with regard to their ultimate estimate of $199,000, because, under the terms of the contract, the useless locomotive upon which they had placed a certain value had to be set aside. I will leave it to my hon. friend, the Minister of Railways, to explain to the House why the Government did not take more prompt measures to deal with the protection of this rolling stock, in the first instance, and with bringing it down to the Intercolonial Railway, to make it useful, in the second instance. To my mind, the reasons were the great difficulty, the cost of housing things of this kind, the natural expectation that the Canadian Pacific Railway would be short of stock and would be obliged to buy this stock; but it appears that the Canadian Pacific Railway said: We cannot afford to duplicate our stock; we must have it all of one pattern, because if anything in a locomotive goes wrong we have not the means of replacing it, unless our engines and cars are all built on a particular pattern. It is, as the hon. gentleman knows, a great economy in a large railway enterprise to have, as far as possible, your locomotives, engines and cars, and everything of that kind built on a particular pattern, so that when any repairing is required you can do it at a much smaller cost. I dare say the Canadian Pacific Railway thought this valuation was a very high one, and that may have deterred them, but it is for my hon. colleague to explain that. I assume the rolling stock was kept there with the expectation that the Canadian Pacific Railway would be compelled to take it and would make a bargain for its value—not the price which was paid for it, having relation to a different condition of things, but the value it would be to the Canadian Pacific Railway in the existing condition of things, now that they can cheaply and safely transport railway stock from here. No doubt, the stock was held for months in the expectation that the Canadian Pacific Railway would take them, and that will explain why the stock was not moved when it could have been more profitably moved. The hon. gentleman heard the chief engineer say that the Government had rented a large portion of these cars to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Whatever stock they had, the Canadian Pacific Railway were charged for it; and as soon as my hon. friend found he was not going to effect the sale, he would naturally turn his attention to the next best means of using this property, that is, by bringing it down and putting it into use on the Intercolonial Railway. I do not know that it is necessary for me to say another word. I have simply stated the circumstances under which the contract was made in the way it was, and, I think, it will commend itself to the judgment of the House, as, under the circumstances the best that could be made as things then stood; and I have explained to the House the testimony, so far as I have had the opportunity of hearing it at the last meeting of the committee, when Mr. Schreiber and Mr. Clark were examined.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Surely the Minister of Railways will respond to the appeal of his colleague to give a little further information.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I refrained from rising to speak after the Minister of Finance had made his explanation in defence of the Government, because, as the hon. gentleman himself stated, his defence was quite incomplete, and he relied upon deficiencies being supplemented by the hon. Minister of Railways, who had the necessary information to give the House. The charges made by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) were several in number. He closed his speech with the charge that there had been gross neglect on the part of the Government with respect to this rolling stock, for which the Government paid such an enormous amount of money, and stated he had received certain information, which went to show they were now trying to take that rolling stock down to the Maritime Provinces, and it was worth nothing at all.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope my hon. friend did not understand me to say it was worth nothing at all.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No, I stated the hon. member for North York stated he had information to that effect, and that this stock had been allowed to remain on a siding of the Canadian Pacific Railway as flotsam and jetsam, unhoused and uncared for, although this country had paid some $200,000 for it to Mr. Onderdonk. As the Minister of Railways has not made any response to the appeal of his colleague, who, evidently, thought this was the fitting time to make an explanation, and who evidently was of opinion that a defence was required and that the Minister of Railways was the man to make that defence, I will refrain from indulging at present in any remarks on that branch of the case, in the hope that the Minister of Railways will yet reconsider his determination and deem it his duty to respond to the appeal of his colleague.

Mr. POPE. I did not say I would not respond.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No, but the question was put by the Chair, and the hon. gentleman showed no desire to take advantage of the opportunity which he would have lost had the question been allowed to be put. But in order that he may still have that opportunity, I will engage the attention of the House for a few moments on the other aspects of the case, so as to give the hon. gentleman time to collect his thoughts on the subject and examine the papers. The hon. the Minister of Finance has said that when this contract was made with Mr. Onderdonk, it was considered by the Government necessary and right that a clause should be put into the contract binding the Government to take over that rolling stock when the contract was completed. Well, I have referred to the contract, and I find there is a clause in it which permits the contractor to offer the rolling stock to the Government at the completion of the contract, if he chooses; and, on referring to the correspondence which the Minister of Railways has brought down, I find that hon. gentleman himself doubted what was the proper construction to be put on that clause. I find he thought it necessary to refer that clause to the Minister of Justice, to ascertain whether the Government was or was not bound to accept that rolling stock from the contractor, and I find a learned opinion from the Department of Justice, in response to that application, that the Government was not bound, in any sense whatever, to accept that rolling stock from the contractor. It is now generally admitted by hon. gentlemen who have heard the evidence before the Public Accounts Committee, and I am sure it will be admitted by all the members of this House before the debate is through, that the rolling stock for which we have paid such a large sum of money is practically useless. That is acknowledged on all sides. The hon. gentleman was advised by the Minister of Justice that he was not bound to take it at all, that, if he did take it, it would be a purely voluntary act on his part, therefore the reply on the part of the Minister of Finance, that this country was in some way or another bound to take this useless rolling stock, is refuted by the opinion given by the Minister of Justice before the rolling stock was taken over. But I will pass over that branch of the case at present and pass on to the other portions of the case. The hon. gentleman seemed to think he had answered every part of the case when he stated that it was desirable, in the public interest, to insert a permissive clause to authorise the contractor to give us this rolling stock. If I understood the charge which has been made by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), it was not a charge challenging the desirability of putting that clause in the contract, but that, assuming the construction which the Minister of Justice put upon it to be correct, even if we had a moral obligation to take it off the hands of the contractors, there was sufficient evidence before us to show that it was over-valued at least three times, and not only that, but that it was so over-valued in consequence of the influence and pressure of the Minister of Railways and the Chief Engineer. Can that be borne out by the evidence before us? I call attention for a moment to the two awards. We have the first one made by these gentlemen awarding $72,665 in full payment for this property. There was no intimation given to the Minister of Railways that these arbitrators had not included the cost of transportation in that sum. We find, after the award is made, the Government pegging away at the arbitrators, endeavoring to induce them to increase the award, on the assumption that they had not included in it the cost of transportation; but any hon. gentleman who refers to the letters which are in evidence, will see that Mr. Reed informed the Department time and again that he had put the full value upon it which he thought in conscience he was justified in doing. On the 1st March, he wrote to the Minister:

"I wish to state that I have acted up to my instructions"—

Which instructions were to take this question into consideration—

"received from Mr. Schreiber, Chief Engineer of Government Railways, to the best of my ability, which was jointly submitted to you on the 8th January, giving the value of certain rolling stock used on the Canadian Pacific work in British Columbia."

So I say the Government had no just reason to assume, there was nothing on the face of the documents before them to justify them in assuming, that the arbitrators had not acted up to their instructions. Per contra, they had the letter of the arbitrator stating that he had acted up to his instructions and could not conscientiously go further. Now I want to recall the attention of the House to the fact that, after that award was made, the Minister of Railways appears to have taken those arbitrators by the throat. From the date of the first award down to the time he succeeded in extracting another award from them, there is a perfect torrent of telegrams and letters pouring upon this poor man, Mr. Reed, insisting and demanding that he shall come to Ottawa in order to increase the award to Mr. Onderdonk. Mr. Reed, up to that time, as far as I can gather, did what was right and reported: "I have done the best I can; I have come to the conclusion not to make any further report as I have conscientiously awarded every dollar I can;" But the hon. gentleman some way gets him to Ottawa, and what is the impression left upon the mind of Mr. Reed, after his first interview with the Minister of Railways and Mr. Schreiber? He writes to his colleague the letter which my hon. friend read, stating that Mr. Pope and Mr. Schreiber appeared to be afraid to open the letter, that the whole thing is a fizzle, and that it appears to him that they are to be used as tools. That is the impression left upon the mind of the Government arbitrator after he had, time and again, persisted in refusing to alter his award; after being brought here, and after having his interview with the Minister of Railways and the Chief Engineer—"we are to be used as tools to do something which I have hitherto shrunk from doing," and he warns the other arbitrator not to yield. I submit to this House that there was evidence in the hands of the Chief Engineer, at the time he induced the arbitrators to sign a second appraisalment, which showed him that that appraisalment was out of all proportion and away beyond the value of the goods. Let us see exactly what they wanted the arbitrators to do. The Minister of Railways writes, by his secretary, to Mr. Reed and Mr. Clark, telling them that he wishes them to add the cost of transportation to the $72,000 they have already awarded. There is nothing else to be added. He is quite satisfied if the cost of transportation can be added to the $72,000. I say that the Minister of Railways and the Chief Engineer had written evidence over Mr. Onderdonk's own signature, at the time they forced these men to sign the new award, that the cost of transportation did not exceed one-third of the amount which those men were made to add to the award. How do I prove that? When Mr. Onderdonk submitted his statement to the Government as to his claim, he submitted a schedule showing what the property consisted of, showing the size of the locomotives, the names of the locomotives, the numbers of the flat cars, the places where they were built, the parties from whom they were purchased, the dates of the invoices, the invoice cost, the duty which he paid, and the transportation in a separate column; and the total cost, the total claim made by Mr. Onderdonk at that date, the whole sum he demanded of the Minister of Railways for original cost, for original invoice cost, with duty added, transportation, and every other conceivable thing, was $254,000. When we go to the column showing the amount paid by him for transportation, we find that that foots up to $27,075. And, as if to put the matter beyond doubt, Mr. Onderdonk adds a note: that these values are derived from cost invoices, freight and duty bills, all of which are on file in their original form (signed, A. Onderdonk). So that if the Minister of Railways wished only to do what he thought was simple justice, if he only wished to add to the award made by the arbitrators the cost of transportation, all he had to do was to take Mr. Onderdonk's statement, signed by his own hand, and add the $27,000 which Mr. Onderdonk claimed for that purpose. But what did he do? Why, before these gentlemen came to Ottawa to make up this cost of transportation,—they did make a statement; it is true they did not forward it to the Government, but they made it in detail; they signed it, and when they were examined before the Committee on Public Accounts the other day they produced it, and that statement shows that, in their opinion, signed by Mr. Reed and Mr. Clark, the total cost—and mind you they were only making estimates—the total cost would be $36,800, on the date of 14th January. Well, Sir, this sum which they estimated might be $36,000, Mr. Onderdonk, in his own statement, which the Minister did not submit to the arbitrators, showed was only $27,000. When these gentlemen came to Ottawa, what was the result? They had awarded $72,665, and they were asked to add the cost of transportation. The Minister knew, over Mr. Onderdonk's own signature, that the cost did not exceed $27,000 in Ottawa, but he induced them to sign an award for $100,000 more than the statement submitted by Mr. Onderdonk. Now, I submit, in the face of all the evidence—not the evidence which we produced, not the evidence which was extracted from the mouths of witnesses examined before the Public Accounts Committee, but the evidence which the hon. gentleman had under Onderdonk's own hand at the very time he accepted this valuation, the evidence which the hon. gentleman appears to have withheld from the arbitrators—notwithstanding the fact that he had that evidence, he accepted the award, and in a day or two afterwards he recommended to Council, of which he was a member, that these gentlemen should be paid the full sum, bar $3,000, which Mr. Schreiber deducted from an engine which he said was only fit for scrap-iron—and paid them $100,000 more than the evidence before him showed that they were entitled to. Assuming every position which the Minister of Finance to-day takes to be right, assuming they had a right to be paid, assuming that the property is not what my hon. friend says he is advised it is—utterly worthless—assuming that they should be paid the value of the property as it was before there was any railway communication there at all, the hon. gentleman, under every one of these facts, assuming them to be correct, has abstracted from the Public Treasury of this country, or allowed to be abstracted, a sum of $100,000 more than he ought to have done. It would be very interesting to know where that money has gone.

An hon. MEMBER. Elections.

Another hon. MEMBER. Boodle.

Mr. DAVIES. Now, the Minister of Finance stated his recollection of what Mr. Clark had given in evidence before the Committee on Public Accounts. My hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) seemed rather to limit his remarks, desiring that witnesses should be sworn on oath before being examined. I have no hesitation in saying that in an examination of this kind it is essential, in the public interest, that the witnesses should be sworn, and it would have been much preferable if the witnesses in this case had been sworn. I have yet to learn that because a man's private character is good, or because he stands high in public estimation, that when he goes into a court of justice he is relieved from taking an oath, or there is any opprobrium thrown upon him because he is compelled to take an oath. I think many of our examinations are farces, because they are not conducted under the solemnity of a judicial oath. But to come to Mr. Clark's evidence. I understood Mr. Clark to state most distinctly that neither he nor his colleagues held themselves in any way responsible for the increase of that award. I understood them to say that it was a mere arithmetical calculation which they made at the instance, and under the direct command, of the Chief Engineer of Railways and the Minister. Whether I am right or wrong, will be seen when I read the evidence. Mr. Clark was examined toward the close of the meeting. He produced the letter which my hon. friend has read. He is asked:

"Q. You are one of the arbitrators? A. Yes.

"Q. You joined in this first arbitration? A. I did.

"Q. And in the second arbitration? A. Yes.

"Q. And you made a new arbitration as directed by Mr. Schreiber? A. Yes.

"Q. In your new valuation, you included the one final value, and you added the cost of transportation? A. Yes.

"Q. It was no departure from your original judgment? A. No."

Mr. Mulock then refers to a letter which was produced. The examination goes on:

"Q. Do you take any responsibility on your own judgment as a professional expert, in saying that the property you valued was worth $202,000 at that time, or simply that it represented its value, plus what the Engineer in Chief told you he added to it? A. Yes, that is it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

"Q. So that you stood by your original figures, and you modified them by the instructions of the Engineer in Chief? A. Yes.

"Q. You do not admit that the first valuation was wrong? A. No; it is the cost of transportation added to the other."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say that shows conclusively that the addition of the sum between $72,665 and $202,000, the respective amounts of the first and second awards, was the sum for transportation which was added to the award—not by the judgment of the valuers, not by reason of any information they obtained on evidence, not, so far as it appears from the evidence, that they had any information on the subject whatever, but at the private instance of the Minister and his assistant, Mr. Schreiber. And as I have already pointed out to the House, the Minister was aware at that time that the amount he was forcing these men to add to the award was over five times the amount Mr. Onderdonk had himself submitted was the cost of transportation. I would like him to justify that. If I am wrong in the deductions I draw from these papers, I will withdraw my charge. But the papers are there—Mr. Onderdonk's statement, signed by himself, showing the total amount of transportation there. I have added the items up, I have gone over them two or three times, and there is no doubt in my mind that Mr. Onderdonk succeeded in getting this second award in abstracting from the people of this country $110,000 or $120,000 more than he was entitled to. By other negotiations which took place during the progress of this enquiry, it will be seen that the object of the Minister of Railways was not so much to protect the public interests, was not to get this property as cheaply as possible, but to see that Mr. Onderdonk was paid a larger sum than he ought to have been paid. Why, when Mr. Reed piteously, I might almost say, for the fourth or fifth time, begged to be excused from making a further award on the ground that he had gone to the limit of his conscience—what did the hon. gentleman do? He received a letter from Mr. Onderdonk asking him to dismiss Mr. Reed from the office and appoint some one else. The Minister was too shrewd to do that. He knew that if Mr. Reed was dismissed and a new man appointed, the matter could not be defended so easily; but when he reported to his colleagues he took care to report only the second award; and not the fact that a first award had been made. Those facts were withheld in the memorandum submitted to Council; first the fact that the first award was made; and, second, the order providing for the revision of the award. And it was only when Mr. Reed had refused to revise his judgment, or to take any responsibility, that he agreed simply to add a sum which the Minister and his assistant told him to add, which made the award $100,000 more than it should have been. If there is anything that will arouse the public conscience to the fact that in that Department there is a degree of carelessness and neglect in the public interest, unparalleled in the history of the United States and Canada, I think it is this very matter brought before us. I can see no justification or excuse. We have had the justification of the Minister of Finance, perhaps the ablest man in the Government ranks, and hon. gentlemen will remember that he devoted his attention to smoothing over the subject, avoiding the real charges made by my hon. friend, leaving the House under the impression that, although the second award was really too high in his own judgment, he did not seem to think anybody was to blame. The fact is, the Minister of Finance placed the whole responsibility on the shoulders of the Department of Railways, as conducted by the Minister and his assistants, and he asked the Minister to give an explanation, but the Minister has so far declined to give it. No doubt, he will yet furnish it to the House, and we hope he will be able to make such an explanation as will make it appear that his conduct was more satisfactory than, at all events, I think it was.

Mr. POPE. I have heard these charges for the first time, because I did not know that this matter was before a committee until the very last day, or almost the last day the committee sat, but I am not sorry it was brought before the committee, or that it has been brought before this House. I am asked how it was that the rolling stock was allowed to remain in that part of the country for some time until we brought it here. The reason it was allowed to remain there was simply this: that I intended, if possible, to dispose of it to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I had a partial offer, not a positive offer; but I was encouraged by a private letter from Sir George Stephen, to hope that they might take one-half of the stock at the valuation placed upon it. But, afterwards, I learned that it was decided by Mr. Van Horne, that he was afraid to bring on the road railway stock manufactured in different factories and of different patterns; and, consequently, the company declined to take the stock. Those negotiations were going on for some little time. Hon. gentlemen must remember that at that time it was impossible to bring the stock into this part of the country, we could not have it got here if we had tried; we had to leave it in British Columbia, and put it on the sidings, and it was for the purpose of taking care of it that we put it there. A considerable portion was rented out, and another portion remained there, and some was brought over here to the east as soon as we could conveniently do so. That is the position with regard to the rolling stock. The hon. gentleman has brought up a paper, which he says was a paper put in my office by Mr. Onderdonk, as the valuation of the cost of the transportation of the stock.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman brought the paper; I only read it. This is a return from the Department.

Mr. POPE. I did not say it was not a return; I say the hon. gentleman brought out the paper, and from what he said you would suppose that it stated the cost of the transportation of the whole stock. I can say to the hon. gentleman that it is not the cost of the transportation of one-fifth part of the stock; but whether it is or not, that is not my case at all. My case is simply this: That when this contract, as has been well said by the Minister of Finance, was taken, it was taken with the distinct understanding that the stock would be valued by the Chief Engineer, and upon his valuation it would be taken over by the Government.

Mr. MULOCK. Is that in writing?

Mr. McMULLEN. Read the contract; give us the wording of it.

Mr. POPE. Can the hon. gentleman contain himself for a few moments?

Mr. McMULLEN. I defy the hon. gentleman to produce the contract.

Mr. POPE. That was distinctly the understanding; and in the letting of the contract it was distinctly understood that the rolling stock would be taken over at a price to be fixed by the Chief Engineer. The Chief Engineer has, from the beginning, conducted this matter. I hold myself responsible, as I always hold myself responsible, for anything the Chief Engineer has done in this matter. I know he is a man who would do what he thought was right. The Chief Engineer found himself not in a position to go to British Columbia at the time the stock was about to be handed over, he was not in a position to go and value the stock—because he it was who conducted the whole thing—and he said it would be better that some men who were good judges of rolling stock should be appointed to go and examine and report to him as to its value; and so those gentlemen were appointed and went there. My hon. friend tells the House that Mr. Onderdonk's valuation was $250,000 or $260,000, my own impression was that it was $300,000; but, be that as it may, that was the price he put upon that stock. Those gentlemen appointed to assist Mr. Schreiber went out and gave as a valuation of the stock the figures which hon. gentlemen opposite have given, about $75,000. The stock it was clearly understood, as has been understood in every contract where the rolling stock has had to be taken over, was to be valued at what it was worth on the spot. Those gentlemen went and valued it. When they came back there was a protest, there was a row, not only with Mr. Onderdonk but with Mr. Mills, with gentlemen in New York and with gentlemen everywhere; I agreed with them. I confess, that according to my limited judgment and knowledge of these matters, that it was a very low price indeed. I said to them: "Gentlemen, you shall have fair play. I will ascertain how this is; but I suppose they must have valued the stock at what it would be worth here, I will find out." I asked Mr. Schreiber. He communicated with these gentlemen who had made the valuation, and they said—as I understood from Mr. Schreiber—they had valued the rolling stock at what it would be worth here. I said to Mr. Schreiber: "That was not the understanding. Is that the understanding you had?" He said: "No, it was not; it was understood that the rolling stock should be valued at what it was worth there." Then I said: "You had better explain it to those gentlemen." It is very well for hon. gentlemen opposite to say that Mr. Schreiber fixed the prices and we gave them. It is very well for hon. gentlemen opposite to make such an allusion, but it is a lie.

Mr. DAVIES. Mr. Clark said so.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman said so.

Mr. DAVIES. I repeated Mr. Clark's statement.

Mr. POPE. It is said that the value of this property was fixed by Mr. Schreiber, or that the price which was paid for it was fixed by him. The hon. gentleman thought he was catching us there, but I can tell him that the price was not fixed by Mr. Schreiber, but he simply said it was understood that they should take into consideration the cost of putting it there—the value on the spot. Does anybody believe that Mr. Clark signed that paper not believing it to be true? Does even the hon. gentleman, who spent three or four weeks mousing round after this matter, believe that? No, Sir, they know that Mr. Schreiber never fixed the price of that property to the extent of a dollar, but he said: We believe you do not understand that the price was to be fixed at the value on the spot. They said to him, as he informs me, that they did not understand it so. Then they were asked—and why not?—to investigate this, and to give the value of the stock there. Does anybody here believe that three honorable men connived at the signing of their names to a paper which they did not believe was true? Does anybody believe that, excepting those who want to drum up a charge? I have no doubt these hon. gentlemen are acting honestly, acting in the interests of the country; I would never accuse them of anything else; but I say that those who want to make a charge out of this are the only ones who will believe that Mr. Clark and these other gentlemen deliberately signed an award for $200,000, when the property was worth only something over $100,000. What possible interest could I have in inducing those men to give an award which was not a right one? The hon. gentleman speaks about beating these men down, and treating them badly, but I say to him that I had no intention of treating them badly or treating them otherwise than as an honorable man would treat honorable men. I say that in the whole work there never was a firm that carried out their contract better, or gave less trouble than those men did, and though they did not make a dollar, yet I believe that they acted in the most honorable way. I say it ill-becomes the hon. gentleman to say that these arbitrators signed an award which they did not believe, or that Mr. Schreiber told them the amount to fix, or that they took Mr. Schreiber's ipse dixit in the matter. There was nothing of the kind. What he told them was they were to fix the value of the property out there; in telling them that he was doing his duty, as he always does his duty, and I sustained him. The hon. gentleman says we were not obliged to take this property. Why, Sir, it was definitely and distinctly understood that we were to take back this property. No matter what construction my colleague put on the contract, or whether it said we might or should take it, it was the distinct understanding that we should take the rolling stock off their hands, and they got the contract so much the cheaper on that account, so that there was no loss to the country in doing this. I say that I was bound to carry out what was understood by every member of the Government, what has always been understood in other contracts, what has always been done in other contracts—that the Government should take the rolling stock off their hands. The hon. gentleman tries to make out that these men went so far from their line of duty as to get Mr. Schreiber to put on the price of this property, but I say that is impossible to believe, and it is something which I do not think any member of this House really believes. I could point to a man who has had more to do with these things, and knows more about them than all the other hon. gentlemen on that side put together, and who, if he happened to be in the House at the moment, and spoke his mind honestly, would tell these hon. gentlemen that they are making a great mistake about this matter. In conclusion, I would say that I feel that I have done my duty in this matter, that my Chief Engineer has done what any other chief engineer would have done, and that the arbitrators have acted as any arbitrators would have acted, in taking all the circumstances into account and signing their names to this award, and I am ready to defend their conduct anywhere and everywhere.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We are not disposed to impute any dishonesty of conduct to Messrs. Clark and Reed. It is our opinion that those gentlemen, as far as we could judge from the somewhat protracted examination in the Public Accounts Committee, did their duty honestly and honorably by the public, and that it was only after the most extraordinary, repeated and severe pressure which was put upon them by their principals in the Department of Railways, after many protests, after many struggles, after piteously begging, as my hon. friend said, that they should not be forced to go against their consciences, that they made the award under the circumstances disclosed in Mr. Clark's evidence which I shall presently read to this House. I think, when I have done so, the Minister himself will say that my hon. friend's contention was fully borne out, and that Mr. Clark did literally act as a machine, as the machine of the Engineer in Chief, in adding the sum of $128,000 for transportation to the previous award of $72,000. Here, Sir, is Mr. Clark's evidence as given to the committee:

"Q. I understand you stood by your original valuation?"

That is the valuation for $72,000, and Mr. Clark replies:

"We only added the cost of transportation."

Now, Sir, that shows that the cost of transportation was put at the difference between $72,000 and $199,000. That is to say, about $128,000 or $127,000. Then the questioner proceeds:

"Q. That was at the time the rolling stock went in at the commencement of the contract? A. Yes Sir. I enquired from our freight agent, and I got all information I could from different parties of that class to see what the rates were. We might be a little over or under, but we got as near as we could."

This, I believe, referred to the estimate put in by these two valuers, putting the cost of transportation at $36,000. Then the question goes on:

Mr. POPE.

"Q. When you three got together, although Mr. Reed took the ground that he would not value the property as worth more than $72,000, you felt you were simply obeying instructions when you were adding to it the cost of transportation? A. Yes, Sir.

"Q. Then that was a matter on which you had no discretion? A. We had nothing to do with that.

"Q. You were simply obeying the instructions of the Government through their Chief Engineer or Mr. Bradley? A. Yes.

"(By Sir Charles Tupper) Q. I understand that it was a letter from Mr. Bradley to them that they were acting upon? A. Well, from the Department—yes.

"(By Mr. Mulock.) Q. It was simply obeying instructions that you increased your award to your final figures—you added the cost of transportation to your original award? A. Yes.

"You simply made that addition mechanically—"

Mr. MULLOCK. "Mathematically."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, they are precisely the same. When the principals to an award instruct an arbitrator named by them that they consider his award too low, when they go out of their way to tell him that they think his award is one-third of what it ought to be, and the arbitrator, after repeated protests, complies with the principal's instructions, then I say he is acting mechanically.

"Q. You simply made that addition mathematically, not exercising judgment on the subject? A. No.

"Q. And acting on directions to do so from the Department of Railways and Canals? A. Yes, certainly.

"Q. That was the position you arbitrators found you were in when you made your final valuation? A. Yes."

Now, Sir, it is quite clear, I think, even to the Minister of Railways himself, that Mr. Clark utterly disclaimed all responsibility for this addition of $128,000, that he stuck to his original valuation, and that he only put on the $128,000 as the alleged cost of transport, acting under the instructions of the Engineer in Chief.

Mr. POPE. What I said was this: that he did not act under the direction of the Chief Engineer, so far as to add the cost of transport, not as to the price.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Which cost of transport the hon. gentleman and the hon. gentleman's Chief Engineer had evidence before them was $27,000, according to Mr. Onderdonk's own statement, that apparently having been the cost four or five years before, when transportation was a great deal more costly; and, according to the Minister of Finance, all they were entitled to add was the sum it would cost on the 1st of July, 1885, to put it there, which would have been, as I think the Minister of Finance will admit, very much less than it was four or five years before; for, in 1881, at any rate, the Northern Pacific Railway had been completed, and communication with British Columbia by the seaboard had likewise been completed. Now, Sir, I have heard various excuses set up at different times for various actions of the Government; but I must say it remained for the Minister of Railways to come here and tell the House that, having before him a formal contract, signed sealed and delivered, he prefers, in the public interest, out of a tender and delicate regard for the honor of the people of Canada, from motives of charity, as the Minister of Finance said, to disregard the written contract, and go back to a private understanding of which we have no evidence of any kind laid before the House or the Committee on Public Accounts; and he does that after having formally consulted the Minister of Justice, who sits beside him, and who, having examined this contract, has put it on record that Mr. Onderdonk had no right whatever, under the contract, to obtain any sum at all from the Government of Canada, but that it was purely optional with the Government to pay him anything. Sir, the case looked very bad in the committee, I must say, very bad, indeed; but I think it comes out far worse after the explanations which have been vouchsafed to us:

"With every feature of a job complete,
If it be honest, 'tis a devilish cheat."

Now, there are one or two points to which I wish to call the attention of the Government, and which bear on the very work we are now engaged in. It is perfectly clear that that vote of $200,000 was put through with precipitation; and the then Minister of Finance, now Postmaster General, did not condescend, when advising the House on that subject, to acquaint himself at all with the nature of the transaction he was recommending to the House. There is a vote of $200,000 for the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia which is stated to be on the Onderdonk contract. Then Mr. McLelan—he will excuse me for using his name—was asked what the quantity of the property was, and he declared that there were 29 locomotives—there being actually 8—and 397 cars, of which he gives the details, whereas there were really 189. Now, Sir, I call attention to that, not because I accuse the late Minister of Finance of deliberately misleading the House, but simply to show with what carelessness, what little attention this vote, involving $200,000, was put through. I acquit the then Minister of Finance of any design to deceive the House, because I see he has stated with sufficient accuracy the prices which were to be paid for the several kinds of cars; but it is quite clear that that vote was put through on information which was highly calculated to mislead the House, because the House listening to him would suppose that he had bought 29 locomotives and 397 flat cars, of the value of $200,000, whereas of the former we only bought 8, and of the latter less than half the number we supposed we were purchasing. Then, Sir, what is to be said—the Minister of Finance of course had nothing to say on that point, and the Minister of Railways did not allude to it at all—what is to be said of the conduct of the Department of Railways which having been ordered by a prominent committee of this House to bring down all the facts, to bring down all the details, to give us information as to the several valuations that have been made, first completely neglected to bring down any valuation; and then, after waiting several weeks, brings down one award, omitting some forty documents contained in some forty pages of very important documentary evidence, which only reached this committee within two or three days of the rising of the House. I say that the examination of items in the Public Accounts by the Public Accounts Committee is a mere farce, if important Departments are to be allowed to disregard the positive orders of that committee in the fashion which my hon. friend has pointed out. There is no use in our attending the committee, if, when we move for papers, as we did in this case, on the 29th April—papers of the utmost importance, papers bearing on one of the most extraordinary transactions, to use the mildest words that can be possibly used, one of the most unaccountable transactions that have ever engaged the attention of this House—we can only get them within a day or two of the time the Government expect the House to prorogue. Let us recall the facts and the prior circumstances; and here let me remark that Mr. Onderdonk, if my memory serves me rightly, is, of all men in Canada, the very last man who ought to complain if the strict law is applied to him, as it was recommended to be applied by the Minister of Justice. Has this House forgotten, how, on a most strained construction of the law, a Mr. Onderdonk—and, I believe, this Mr. Onderdonk, or a partner or relative of his—was allowed to obtain a contract for $209,000 more than the lowest tender? That was done by a strained and forced construction of a point of law; it was done in defiance of the protest of this side of the House. And are we to be told that, when he obtained advantages like those, by a strict construction of the law, now, when the law is clearly, according to the highest legal authority, against Mr. Onderdonk, the opinion of the Minister of Justice is to be set aside in order that Mr. Onderdonk may obtain $128,000 more than he is fairly entitled to. The Minister of Finance said, and it may be correct enough, that the first decision was, in his opinion, far too low, but that the second one, the award of $200,000, was far too high. Is this a game of "heads I win, tails you lose," in Mr. Onderdonk's favor? When the award is too low, when the arbitrators awarded Mr. Onderdonk less than the Minister of Finance thinks is justly due him, all the power and influence of the Department is brought to bear to compel these valuers, in spite of their protest and remonstrances, to depart from the valuation they have made. But when the award is far too high in the opinion of the Minister of Finance, who is a good authority on these subjects, the Department accept it without murmur. That may be charity for Mr. Onderdonk, but it is not charity to the ratepayers of this country. I am of opinion that, in the present state of our finances, a more ill-judged time, a more unfit occasion on which to exercise this extreme generosity, could hardly be imagined. Over and above that, we have here five separate and important facts. We have, first, the opinion of the Minister of Justice that there was no legal obligation on us to take one atom of this rolling stock. We have next the valuation made by Messrs. Clark and Reed, our arbitrator and the umpire selected, declaring that the real value was about $72,000. Then, we have, not once but half a dozen times over, the remonstrance of Mr. Reed, declaring that he could not conscientiously reverse his decision, that he had considered the whole case and taken into consideration all the circumstances referred to, and we have the letter produced by Mr. Clark, to which attention has already been called, in which Mr. Reed, after interviewing the Minister and the Engineer in Chief, has put on record his opinion that the thing is a fizzle, and that he fears he and his comrades are to be used as tools—for what? To take out of the public purse $128,000, and to award it to Mr. Onderdonk, who had already, by a most strained construction of the law, got $209,000 more than he was entitled to—to that Mr. Onderdonk, who by this ill-timed generosity on the part of the Minister of Railways, is to receive $128,000 more, or just three times as much as the arbitrators consider fit. Here is the clause from the contract, and it is interesting:

"It is distinctly declared that no implied contract of any kind whatsoever, by or on behalf of Her Majesty, shall arise or be implied from anything in this contract contained, or from any position or situation of the parties at any time, it being clearly understood and agreed that the express contracts, covenants and agreements herein contained and made by Her Majesty, are and shall be the only contracts, covenants and agreements upon which any rights against her are to be founded."

Now, was it ever heard before, in any case of any private party, that when three arbitrators have been appointed, when your own arbitrator, when the umpire selected by the two, brings in an award showing you are only entitled to pay a particular sum, and when you are the party to be benefited thereby, if you thought the award too low, you should tear up the award, fling it back in the arbitrator's face, tell him he must make a higher award, and, when he refuses, when he protests and declines, you go on, week after week, and month after month, from the 8th or 9th of January to the 13th of March, in order to compel this unfortunate man and Mr. Clark, who also protested, to do, as they say they were compelled to do, to disregard their judgment, their own written opinion, and put their signatures, under that pressure, to a document by which $128,000, more than they thought right were taken out of the public purse.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

CANADIAN WORKINGMEN IN THE U. S.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex) asked, Is the Government aware that attempts are being made on the part of the United States authorities to enforce their Act to prohibit the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, as against Canadian citizens resident in our border towns, but engaged throughout the day in the adjacent cities of the United States? And if so, what course does the Government propose to take for the protection of our citizens or for the prevention of the competition of residents of the United States with our workmen in Canada?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The attention of the Government was first called to this matter the other day by my hon. friend from Welland (Mr. Ferguson). We were informed by these gentlemen—we were uninformed before—that the Act preventing the reception in the United States of immigrants under contract to perform work in the United States was being put in force along our inland waters and on our frontier. It is well understood that that Act, when it was passed by Congress, was intended to prevent an influx of immigrants from Europe, but I suppose, though I have never seen the Act of Congress, that by the terms it would apply to all immigrants as well from Canada as from Europe. It seems to us to be a very forced construction and a very unfriendly course, and the Canadian Government will make enquiry to see whether the Act will really be pressed by the United States Government. The impression we have is that it is over zeal on the part of the officers of the United States Government on the frontier. Of course, what Canada may do in the matter will depend very much on the result of the communications with Washington.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You will require legislation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

VALUATION OF C. P. R. ROLLING STOCK.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not purpose to detain the House at any length. I wish to recall their attention in the first place to the fact that the Minister of Justice, as is indeed admitted in the report of the Minister of Railways, had declared that there was no legal claim on the Government. That is repeated, I perceive, by the Minister in his report to the Privy Council. I do not find in these papers, though it was quoted by one of the gentlemen who spoke, the report of the Minister of Justice. I do not know whether the Minister has it or not.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is on the file.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I did not find it. However, there appears to be no dispute as to the fact that there was such a decision given. The other points to which I would call the attention of the House are briefly these. In the first place, we are informed, and I believe that point will hardly be disputed, that, from various causes, this stock was practically of small value. I believe, at least I have been so informed, that the Canadian Pacific Railway refused to have anything to do with the locomotive engines, considering them as practically worthless to them, and that they were willing to give only a small sum, stated at $60 a car, for the flat cars; and, further, that when these cars had been hauled across the continent to Montreal, the Grand Trunk Railway thought the cars and locomotives of such very small value that they were disposed to insist on the Government guaranteeing the freight before they would pay anything over to the Canadian Pacific Railway on account. Now, the practical result of the transaction appears to be this: The cars which were valued to us at $72,000, had they been here, would probably cost, along with the engines, from $25,000 to $30,000 before they reached the Intercolonial Railway, so that, to all intents and purposes, this stock, for which we paid some $200,000, and which was reported by our own arbitrators as worth $72,000, will entail the further charge of $25,000 to $30,000 to bring it to the Intercolonial Railway, and will then, suppose it was originally worth $72,000, be worth only some $42,000 or $47,000. It may impress on the mind of the House still more forcibly what, sort of a transaction this is if I read very briefly to the House the valuations which were put in the first report submitted by Mr. Clark and Mr. Reed on these same flat cars. I find that sixty-five of these first-class flat cars were valued by these gentlemen, in the first instance, at $205 apiece. I find that we were obliged to pay for them, ultimately, $735, very nearly four times the price that they were originally valued at. I find that the cars which were estimated in the first report at $13,120, cost the country, $48,320. Coming down to second, third, fourth and fifth classes, we find the same results. We find that what was valued in the first report at $195 is paid for by the second report at $745. What was valued at $175—that is the fourth class flat cars—were paid for at $725 under the second report, and so on all through. I shall not detain the House by reading the whole, but the practical result appears to be that at least three or four times as much are paid for these, (which I may further inform the House were largely constructed in British Columbia, and were made of inferior timber) than they were valued to us by our own arbitrator and the umpire who was appointed. In the case of the locomotives, the discrepancy is great, but not quite so great. In one case, what was valued at $2,975 in the first report, is paid for, according to the second report, at $6,325. What was valued in the first report at $3,870, is paid for by the second report at $6,450. What is valued at $3,535 in the first report, is paid for, under the second report, at $7,075. What is valued in the first report at $3,330, is paid for at $7,000. Now, so far as it is possible for me, who listened to the evidence, to judge from the minutes I have here, the utmost amount that they could have cost for transport—it is all that Mr. Clark in his evidence declared that he understood was to be allowed—was $36,800. According to the statement made by these parties, which is substantiated by Mr. Onderdonk's statement, about $27,000 was paid for the freight of such as were imported, and I, therefore, fail to see how—by any possibility, adding the total cost of the transport, which I contend must have been much less on the 1st July, 1885, than it was in 1880 or in 1881—more than a sum of $100,000 could have been arrived at under these valuations. The other points I will not now stop to repeat. It is quite clear that the several arbitrators—at least Mr. Reed and Mr. Clark—were most reluctant to make this award, and we have their evidence, to which I called attention before we rose, to show that they remonstrated again and again, and that it was only under the extremest pressure of the Department, and acting, as they say, under the responsibility of the Department, and not their own responsibility, that they consented to raise the amount from $72,000 to $199,000. I cannot conceive how, with any regard to the public interest, or with any regard to the ordinary rules which govern the public service, in a case where the Minister of Justice expressly declares that there is no legal claim, this disregard of the first award and the payment of a sum almost exactly three times as much as the original sum can be for a moment justified.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex).

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he has not got Mr. Clark's statement that he valued these cars and locomotives as if they were in the eastern States, and that his second valuation is arrived at by adding the freight and duty to his first award. I have not been able to give much attention to it, but I am told that among the papers is Mr. Clark's own statement that his second report was arrived at and the figures placed at that amount by adding the freight and duty to the cost of the locomotives and cars as first valued as if they were in the eastern States.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I read his answers to the questions which were made, before the House separated, but in these he expressly cleared himself of responsibility in the matter. What he states here in reply to the questions, appears explicit enough, and I will read it to the hon. gentleman again if he wishes :

"Q. I understand you stood by your original valuation? A. We only added the cost of transportation."

Then he goes on to reply, being asked :

"Q. That was at the time the rolling stock went in at the commencement of the contract? A. Yes I conferred with our freight agent, and I got all the information I could from different parties of that class to see what the rates were. We might be a little over or under, but we got as near as we could."

He then submitted his estimate of $36,800, signed Reed and Clark, in which he shows all that he appears to have believed the cost would be of transportation, and in that he expressly gives so many flat cars, $7,200; iron works for balance of flat cars built at Yale, so much; freight, $16,100; nine engines, $13,500, in all $36,800. He says nothing about duties in these cases. Then he is asked :

"Q. When you three got together, although Mr. Reed took the ground that he would value the property as worth more than $72,000, you felt you were simply obeying instructions when adding the cost of transportation? A. Yes."

"Q. That was a matter in which you had no discretion? A. We had nothing to do with that."

"Q. That is to say you were simply obeying the instructions of the Government through the chief engineer or Mr. Bradley? A. Yes."

Then Mr. Mulock says :

"Q. You simply made that addition"—

Referring to this $120,000.

"mathematically, not exercising your own judgment on the subject? A. No, we did not exercise any judgment."

That is all I perceive affecting that point.

Mr. McCARTHY. Did you see Mr. Clark's letter on the 10th February, 1886? It is on tissue paper.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I perceive no tissue paper except one here. It appears to be an unsigned letter.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is the one I refer to.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In which he says :

"We beg to submit the annexed statement"—

But it is not signed at all, nor does the other appear to be signed. I observe a number of pencil memorandums—

"in reply to your letter of the 12th ultimo, requesting us to furnish a further report showing a further estimate as to the value of the rolling stock belonging to the contractors, which was used in the construction of the British Columbia section, taking into consideration the isolated position of the stock at that date, and the expense involved in placing it there. In other words, what would be the adjudicated cost."

But that is not signed at all.

Mr. McCARTHY. The statements which were made from the opposite side of the House this afternoon, were of so startling a character, that I think they require the consideration of members on both sides of the House. Of course we who do not belong to the Committee on Public Accounts, or who have not had an opportunity of attending that committee can hardly be expected in a moment to grasp, by a glance at those voluminous documents, the full history of the case which has been brought before the House by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock). But I understand the position of the case to be this: the contractor had a right, as he supposed, at all events, to call upon the Government at the end of his contract to take the plant and rolling stock that he had in use in the construction of this work, off his hands. I understand, further, that the question as to whether upon the terms of this contract, the Government were bound to take that stock off his hands, was submitted to the Minister of Justice, and his opinion was that under the terms of the contract, it was not binding upon the Government, but was merely optional. Now, Sir, I only had an opportunity just now of seeing the clause of the contract upon which this question turns, and it would be presumptuous to speak with regard to the contract as a whole, having merely had an opportunity of reading one paragraph of it. But with all deference to the view the Minister of Justice took of it, I should rather be inclined to say that that was not the true construction of the contract. It appears to me to be a well understood principle of law, and a well understood principle of the construction of contracts, that effect must be given to all that appears in the document. It is absurd for the Government to contract that they may buy from the contractor his plant at the end of his contract. It required no contract for that purpose. It did not require that the contractor should contract that the Government might buy, nor did it require that the Government should agree that they might buy. That was a matter which did not require to be contracted for one way or the other. The true effect of that contract, I take it, the reasonable construction, might be to read this way: that the Government were bound to buy—it was quite insensible, otherwise, to put these words in the contract. However that may be, the Department reported upon the contract in that sense. They said, as dealing on behalf of the country and dealing in an honorable spirit between the country and the contractor, that that was the true meaning of this contract, and the contractor, no doubt, who entered into this agreement in 1879, had a right to assume that, at the termination of his contract, he would be relieved of his plant by the Government, in accordance with those terms. If that was the true sense of the bargain, who was to determine the amount according to the contract but the Chief Engineer? We all know that while we may be willing to enter into a bargain and submit to the valuation of one individual, we may not be willing to enter into a bargain or contract and submit to a valuation made by another; and a familiar instance of that kind will occur to everyone. You make a contract for the building of a house. It is agreed between you and the builder that the value of extras is to be determined by the architect and that his valuation shall be conclusive, so long as there is no fraud; whether he over-values or under-values, his valuation is conclusive between the parties so long as there is no fraud. In this case, as I understand it, the Chief Engineer did not find it convenient to go to value the rolling stock, and so he deputed Mr. Haney, Mr. Reid and Mr. Clark of Toronto.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, it was done by the ordinary arbitration method; one arbitrator was appointed by each party and an umpire was selected.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not know how that was. Mr. Haney took one view, that the stock should not be valued at its intrinsic value or worth when the contract was taken out of the hands of the contractor, which was in 1885, but that it ought to be valued with respect to the cost to the contractor if the contractor had brought it in; in other words the cost of the material, less the deterioration for usage. Mr. Reed, on behalf of the Government, took the opposite view. It appears from the letter I saw—and I have only seen a portion of the correspondence—Mr. Clark sided with Mr. Reed. The result was that they agreed that the true value of the stock on the ground was $72,000. When it was reported to the Government that that was the sum at which the arbitrators had arrived, Mr. Schreiber, the person who was to place a value upon this material, being appealed to, as I understand was the case from the statement made by the Minister of Railways, said: "I do not understand that this is the principle on which the value is to be arrived at. I admit that the arbitrators have determined the true value on the ground; but I understand that this value is to be arrived at, not according to the intrinsic value on the ground but with regard to the cost to the contractor in bringing the material in. That may be right or wrong; that was a matter in my judgment—in the absence of all imputations of unfair dealing—simply and solely in the hands of the Chief Engineer, to whom both parties by the contract had agreed to leave the valuation. The arbitrators were called together again. They were told: "You have proceeded to value those articles on a wrong principle. We do not quarrel with the amount at which you have arrived; but you have proceeded on a wrong principle." It was wrong according to the view of Mr. Schreiber, to whom the matter was referred to determine, because it was for him to determine the principle on which the value should be arrived at. And so they were instructed to do what? To reconsider the matter, and adopt a different principle. All I can say with regard to this is: While a good deal may be said on both sides as to Mr. Schreiber's opinion, while it may be said that, perhaps, it would have been a proper thing for Mr. Schreiber to have determined the value of that stock in another way. The other view is equally open, and after all it was for the Chief Engineer, and for him alone, to determine the principle on which the valuation was to take place. He called the arbitrators together, and they were instructed to revalue upon that principle. Here, I have a right to find fault with the statement of the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I., (Mr. Davies) for his statement was highly misleading. I do not think the statement of the hon. gentleman was a fair statement, and, as I understand he was present throughout the investigation by the committee, I am surprised that he only told us part of what took place before the committee, and if he had told us the whole, the statement would have been very different. It is true there was but $27 000 for freight paid; but the hon. gentleman did not tell the House that a great proportion of the rolling stock had been made at a vastly increased cost in British Columbia itself; and, upon the principle laid down, either that cost should have been allowed the contractors or the course followed by the arbitrators should have been followed—to have assumed that the stock had been imported or had come from eastern Canada and had been transported there.

Mr. DAVIES. I could not assert anything of the kind because Mr. Onderdonk expressly said those flat cars were built at Yale, B.C., and cost so and so.

Mr. McCARTHY. I must have been very unfortunate in my statement because that was exactly what I said. The hon. gentleman was unfair in withholding that fact from the House: that those cars were said by Mr. Onderdonk to have cost $800 a piece. The arbitrators did not allow them at that rate. They said: No; we cannot allow you the cost of the cars in British Columbia when, by buying them in eastern Canada and transporting them here, you could have laid them down in British Columbia at a less cost.

Mr. DAVIES. Where do you find that in the statement? Did the arbitrators say that?

Mr. McCARTHY. No; but the result of their finding is that. The statement of Mr. Clark is that the cars were valued at less than $800. The hon. gentleman did not read a letter dated 10th February, 1883, and addressed by the arbitrators to the secretary of Railways and Canals:

"In reply to your letter of the 13th ult., requesting us to furnish a further report, showing our estimate as to the value of the rolling stock belonging to the contractors, which was used on construction of British Columbia section of Canadian Pacific Railway between Yale and Savona's Ferry (on which we previously reported) on date of completion of contract, July, 1883: taking into consideration the isolated position of the stock at that date, and the expense involved in placing it there—in other words, what would be the cost to duplicate the stock there at that date, we beg to submit the annexed statement."

If the arbitrators had taken Mr. Onderdonk's statement, and allowed the amount to the contractor, the award would have been more. But I think they took the proper course, and they said: We will allow the contractor not what the cars actually cost, but what they would have cost if bought in the cheapest market and laid down on the ground in the cheapest way. No lawyer who understands what he is talking about will pretend to say that this question of value has to be determined by any other person than Mr. Schreiber.

Mr. McCARTHY.

Mr. DAVIES. Does not the contract say "the value at the completion of the contract?"

Mr. McCARTHY. By the Chief Engineer.

Mr. MILLS. But that was modified by mutual arrangement.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Schreiber or the Chief Engineer is to determine the value. The contractors agreed that whatever the chief engineer might award, they were willing to accept. It is well known that if an arbitration is left to a particular man some one else is not to be substituted. When those gentlemen visited British Columbia to report on the stock, they did not value it on the principle which Mr. Schreiber said was the right one. I am not saying whether it was right or wrong, for a good deal is to be said on both sides; but I say it is a question for Mr. Schreiber and for him alone, and when he said that, in his opinion, regard should be had to the fact that when the contract was entered into in 1879 it was never supposed that the Canadian Pacific Railway would be completed before 1891, and regard should be had in the valuation as to the cost of bringing the cars there, duty, freight and soon. So the arbitrators were called together and requested to reconsider their award on that ground. Would any court of law have done differently? I want to know if it appeared that the arbitrator had proceeded on an erroneous principle of calculation and had arrived at a wrong result, and a court had said that that was not what you should have done, it would not have been reasonable for the arbitrators to say what the true amount was on reconsidering the question. But hon. gentlemen opposite say that in returning that amount they acted mechanically. That is not a fair reading of the evidence. Mr. Clark says they acted mechanically to this extent, as Mr. Clark says: I decline to accept all responsibility for the second award, and in arriving at this amount I have acted under the directions of the Government engineer. Having taken up that line I adopted it for my guidance in determining the amount, and then I calculated (the hon. member for South Oxford, Sir Richard Cartwright read a portion of the evidence to that extent) the freight to the best of my ability, the duty paid when they were brought in, and I arrived at the following result. What is it? Here we have got under Mr. Clark's own hand, produced by Mr. Clark, but not signed, a statement showing that the amount of the valuation thus made was $193,940. In pencil opposite those figures is an increased amount which, I understand, though I have not added the items together, will make the same amount as the second award, $199,000. I am not to be misunderstood. I am not here—because I have not read his evidence and I have not read the contract with sufficient care—pronouncing an opinion as to whether Mr. Schreiber is right or wrong. All I mean to say is, that I understand the well-known rule of law, it was Mr. Schreiber, and he alone, who had to pronounce upon the principle of value. I say, therefore, that when those three gentlemen were called together they were bound to obey his directions in that regard, if fair play and good faith were to be kept with those contractors. I will also add this statement, that I do not think this country or this House requires the Government to act in a dishonorable way by any man with whom it deals. I do not think it is expected that the Government of this country should, in their capacity of the executive of Canada, do what, as honorable men, they would be ashamed to do in their private capacity; and I mean to say that any man who would take advantage of the technical reading of this contract, which was said to be the true meaning by the Minister of Justice, but which could not be the intention of the parties—else, why insert these words?—would have been doing what no honorable man would like to do, or to have done, in his own case.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) will say that he would not have taken advantage of a technicality of that kind, if the matter was his own, and I do not think that he would ask the people of Canada to be guilty of a dishonorable thing, which the hon. gentleman would be ashamed to do in his own case.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that statement which the hon. gentleman read was an unsigned statement.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes, I said so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is another statement signed by them, in which they declare the cost of transport to be $36,000.

Mr. McCARTHY. There is no doubt that the figures show that, because the bulk of the material was made in British Columbia.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a special allowance there of $16,000.

Mr. McCARTHY. Well, it is said that figures can be made to prove anything, but I think it is a fair calculation to say that if so many cars were imported into Canada, and the duty and freight cost so much, the rule of three will enable us to say what the balance were worth at the same rate. Now, was Mr. Onderdonk, who built so many cars at Yale, British Columbia, at a greatly enhanced cost to what he could have got them for in eastern Canada and transported them there, or in the United States and transported them there, and paid the duty—was he to be allowed that extra charge?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Certainly not.

Mr. McCARTHY. What, then, was he to be allowed?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The market value.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And Mr. Schreiber said that he was incompetent to value, and referred them to those gentlemen.

Mr. McCARTHY. He said he was not able to go, as I understand.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He said he did not feel himself competent to value, and that he would refer it to those gentlemen.

Mr. McCARTHY. But did Mr. Schreiber ever say that he was not competent to lay down a rule for valuing?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He could not import a new rule into the contract.

Mr. McCARTHY. He was the man to lay down the rule of value. Now, Sir, I have been furnished with some figures, and I will give the House the result of this calculation, and hon. gentlemen can, if they please, check the valuation. I think it will be found that the freight upon the eight engines as near as can be arrived at, would be something like $16,000 odd. I think it will be found that the freight upon 135 flat cars or box cars, those which were brought in, would be about $78,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) From where?

Mr. McCARTHY. Either from the eastern part of the country or from the United States. Of course this calculation is based upon bringing them from the other side, but the freight would be the same as bringing them from eastern Canada.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the amount you calculate for each car?

Mr. McCARTHY. $423 would be the freight for each car, and that comes to $78,000 altogether. The duty upon the engines would have been nearly $12,000; the duty on the cars nearly $22,000; and adding these together we find they came to $128,124. Now, you have the actual value of the cars, besides the value on the spot, the allowance made for wear and tear or deterioration, $72,000, and there you have the amount awarded. Therefore, it all comes down to this:—whether Mr. Schreiber was right or wrong in the principle he laid down for the valuation of those articles. That those gentlemen were entitled to that view, I think is perfectly plain. They claim, I find from the figures, $235,000, after deducting from their bill the portion of their rolling stock which was not assumed by the Government. For that claim they were allowed something less than $200,000, after arriving at it in the way I have said. I merely rose to point out what I have been able to glean from these papers, and it appears to me, therefore, to be plain enough that the responsibility properly rests on Mr. Schreiber for taking this view of the contract.

Mr. JONES. This question has so far been discussed by legal gentlemen in this House, and, as there are many laymen in the House like myself, I venture to submit the view in which these transactions would appear to a layman, stripped of legal technicality and phraseology. Now, according to the way I understand the transaction, it is simply this: The Government entered into a contract with Mr. Onderdonk, and in that contract it was provided that they might, at the close of the contract, take any engines and platform cars which might be considered by the engineers fit for further use. The Minister of Finance says that that clause was put in the contract in the interest of the public service, because the contractor, feeling that the stock might be taken by the Government at the close of the contract, would consider that point in making his tender for the work. Now, I do not dispute that point. I think, perhaps, that it is quite reasonable that the contracts undertaken at such a distance might possibly be undertaken on more favorable terms, if the contractor was under the impression, or had it provided in the contract, that at the completion of the contract the Government were obliged to take his rolling stock for what it was worth, if it was of any use. But, Sir, the contract before us reads in this way: That at the close of the contract the engines and platform cars, which might be considered fit for use, might be taken by the Government. Well, at the completion of the contract, Mr. Onderdonk called upon the Government to take the rolling stock which they considered fit for use. Now, the hon. the Minister of Railways, in his explanation, said that there was an understanding that it was to be taken. Is it possible that an understanding of such magnitude could have prevailed and could supersede the strict terms and conditions of a formal agreement? Is it possible that in undertaking a public work of this nature, with so large an amount of public money involved, a public contractor and the head of the Railway Department could arrive at a private understanding which was to supersede the direct and positive conditions of a contract? But supposing for one moment that such was the case, and supposing that the hon. gentleman considered that that understanding compelled him to adopt Mr. Onderdonk's view, why, I ask, did he then submit that question to the Department of Justice on its merits? And, why when the Department of Justice had given their opinion, did he not act upon that opinion? Now, Sir, it would appear that the Minister of Railways addressed a letter to the Department of Justice, dated the 23rd of October, 1885, and the Department of Justice answered that letter in these words:

"I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23rd inst., enclosing contract No. 62, for the construction of part of the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia, and asking the opinion of this Department as to the legal construction of section 75 of the specifications attached to the contract, and relating to the transfer of cars and engines to the Government upon the completion of the contract and the valuation of the same.

"Section 75 of the specifications, which with the memorandum thereto annexed, by the provisions of the contract, forms part of the contract, provides that 'at the close of the contract any engines and platform cars which may be considered by the engineer fit for further use may be transferred to the Government on the valuation of the engineer.' I am of opinion that the expression 'engineer' in clause 75 means 'engineer' as defined in the latter part of section 1 of the contract, namely, the chief engineer for the time being having control over the work, and shall extend to and include any of his assistants acting under his instructions, and all instructions or directions or certificates given or decisions made by anyone acting for the chief engineer, shall be subject to his approval.

"I am further of opinion that the word 'may' in the section in question is merely permissive, and that there is no obligation on the company to transfer the cars and engines to the Government, nor on the Government to purchase the same, but that if such purchase be made it can only be made on the valuation of the engineer."

Here the legal officer of the Crown says in the most emphatic terms that he is of opinion that this clause is merely a permissive one, and that there is no obligation on the part of the Government or the company, unless they come to an understanding, the first to dispose of, and the other to take those cars on such terms as may be agreed on. This is not the opinion of an outsider, or even of an hon. member of this House who is either on one side or the other, but the deliberate legal opinion of the Department of Justice, that that clause did not compel the company to sell nor the Government to purchase these engines and cars unless they were disposed to do so. Therefore, I think the Government cannot, in whatever way they may endeavor to twist this argument, get rid of the position that this contract places them in, both from the common sense and the legal aspect. They inserted the clause no doubt in the interest of the country, as laid down by the hon. Minister of Finance, and the only complaint we have now to make is that when the contract was fulfilled, and the contractor asked them to take this stock, they did not act according to our view in the interest of the country. Now, Sir, the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) who has just addressed the House, says that Mr. Schreiber, the Chief Engineer, proceeded on a wrong principle. Who was Mr. Schreiber that he should step in between the Government and the contractor in this matter? What position does Mr. Schreiber hold in this country that this House would accept his opinion on a point of law in preference to that of the Minister of Justice? The hon. member says that Mr. Schreiber was to decide on what principle the arbitration was to take place. Mr. Schreiber told us before the Committee on Public Accounts, that not being a mechanical engineer he could not himself fix any value on this property, and that he necessarily, as a matter of course, had to select men of practical experience who could make a just valuation of the property which, according to the decision arrived at, the Government were going to take over from the contractors. But did that give Mr. Schreiber any right to alter the terms of the contract? Did that confer on Mr. Schreiber any authority by which he could contravene the terms of this agreement? Not at all. There is nothing in the original contract, directly or indirectly, to imply that this stock was to be taken over at its value in British Columbia. There is not a word in that contract, directly or indirectly, to lead to the conclusion that the location of the rolling stock in British Columbia was to be a factor in deciding its value at all. But if Mr. Schreiber, under the head of his Department, chose to put that interpretation on the contract, I ask is this House to be bound by it? By what right has Mr. Schreiber adopted a different principle for the valuation of that property? I contend most strongly that Mr. Schreiber and his principal—because we must hold his principal to account, and I should not refer to Mr. Schreiber had not the hon. gentleman attempted to put him forward as a buffer in this transaction—I say the hon. Minister of Railways was bound not only by the legal construction of the Act, but by the opinion he himself had obtained from the law officers of the Crown. The hon. gentleman was careful enough to say that he would not venture an opinion whether Mr. Schreiber was right or wrong; but the hon. gentleman should have been prepared to say whether Mr. Schreiber, or rather the Minister of Railways, was right or wrong. That is what we are endeavoring to arrive at. We are not here discussing an abstract question, but we are discussing the question who was right and who was wrong in this matter; and it was the duty of the hon. gentleman defending the Government to have taken the position boldly at once and say that Mr. Schreiber was right, and that his superior, the hon. Minister of Railways was right in directing him to take that course. If he had done that we should have been able to meet him on that ground, with the terms of the contract; but it is a credit to the hon. gentleman's ability, and he had that regard for his professional standing that he would not risk his reputation to express an opinion whether Mr. Schreiber or the Minister of Railways was right or wrong. Now, the hon. gentleman endeavored to point out that we were arguing on wrong premises, because some of these cars were built in British Columbia. Even if we were to take that view, the hon. gentleman's arguments would not hold; but we do not require to enter into that argument at all. My contention is that that forms no important consideration in this discussion. The contract does not provide that they were to be valued at their worth in their isolated position in British Columbia, and Mr. Schreiber, or the head of his Department, the Minister of Railways, had no right or authority to act contrary to the legal opinion of the law officer of the Crown. They had, therefore, no right to enforce upon these arbitrators the terms under which the valuation was to be arrived at. The hon. gentleman says that the public interest does not suffer. We have seen, by the evidence before the committee, what a discrepancy there is between the estimate made by the late Minister of Finance, when he asked this House to pass an appropriation for the $200,000, and the account which has been brought down on this occasion. The hon. member who preceded me showed that the Minister of Finance led the House to believe that we were paying money for 29 engines when there were only 8, and that we were paying for 397 flat cars when there were only 180. This is a very grave misrepresentation of the facts, but it is only in accordance with the whole transaction. These arbitrators, appointed by the Government and Mr. Onderdonk, and the umpire appointed by the two arbitrators, made a valuation and submitted it to the Government. Why should Mr. Schreiber or the Minister of Railways take exception to the award? Were these gentlemen representing the people of this country? Or were they acting in the interests of a foreign company? I have always been under the impression that the Ministers of the Crown were appointed as an executive of this House, to carry out the well understood wishes of the people, in the interests of the people; but it would appear that in this case the Minister of Railways is acting, not in the interests of the people of Canada but in the interest of an American company, of a company which is endeavoring to abstract a larger amount out of the taxpayers of this country than, according to the arbitrators, it is entitled to. One would naturally suppose that when this award came before the Government they would acquiesce in it. But such was not the case. Mr. Schreiber has told us that he raised the objection, doubtless by order of his Department, because the Minister of Railways said he assumed all the responsibility, and urged these men to make a new valuation. What does this correspondence disclose? It discloses the fact that orders went from the Government to the arbitrators, from time to time, to reconsider their decision. The answer came from the arbitrators that they could not make any alterations in the award. Mr. Clark gave his evidence that the whole valuation was based on a fair estimate of the value of the property. When the Government called on the arbitrators to reconsider the award, their own arbitrator, from week to week, and from month to month, not only refused, but refused in the most positive and direct terms. He said he could not, without violating his conscientious objections, reconsider or revalue the property. When Mr. Schreiber, or the Department, called his attention to the fact that the Government desired him to take into consideration the element of transport, those men with the responsibility of their position, men, doubtless of high reputation, considered that point, and according to the best information they could obtain—and doubtless they could obtain as correct information as anyone in the country—declared that it only required $36,000 to pay the transport of that rolling stock to British Columbia. That, added to the $72,000, would make the award $108,000, from which must be deducted the value of the locomotive that the Government did not take. In corroboration of that we have, as has been shown by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), the estimate of Mr. Onderdonk himself. In the case he submitted to the Government, he placed all the different amounts under different heads, and his own estimate of the cost of placing the rolling stock in British Columbia was only $27,000, or $9,000 less than Mr. Clark and Mr. Reed, the arbitrators, were of opinion it could cost. That was not satisfactory to the Government, and the Government continued to urge their own arbitrator, Mr. Reed, who, to his credit, refused, again and again, to consider the matter, and Mr. Reed wrote the letter to Mr. Clark which was inadvertently handed in by Mr. Clark among the bundle of papers he put before the committee. In this letter it would appear, Mr. Reed shows the position in which he stood, by saying that the Government were bringing pressure upon him. Unfortunately, in the end, he succumbed to their pressure, and the Government were enabled to obtain from the arbitrators the award they desired. Mr. Reed writes to him to say that the whole thing was a fizzle; he says: "We are being used as tools by the Government." Doubtless the Government had confidence in the men they appointed, but imagine—if one could imagine such a transaction were it not in black and white before us—imagine that the man they themselves had appointed, Mr. Reed, their own arbitrator, says that they were only being made tools of by the Government; and, by implication, we may infer it was to place more money in the hands of a foreign company. They came to Ottawa, they were brought here, and negotiations went on, and Mr. Onderdonk was here, and in the end this award was given of $202,000. I was present when Mr. Clark underwent his examination before the Committee on Public Accounts, and I was pleased with the frank and candid manner in which he made his statement of the case. He said: "We made our award according to our judgment of the value, and, when the Government insisted upon adding the expense of transportation, we put down the amount they gave us and added that to the original valuation," and that made the estimate $202,000 instead of $72,000. This is, perhaps, one of the most glaring cases of impropriety that has ever been brought to the notice of a deliberative assembly or of the public in this or any other country. I say that there seems to have been an evident intention on the part of the Department of the Minister of Railways to put in the pockets of a foreign company an amount of $202,000 instead of $72,000, and to place that on the shoulders of the taxpayers of this country. I think, when this thing comes to be thoroughly understood in all its bearings, when it comes to be realised throughout this Dominion that the Government have been guilty of such an improper act, it will be visited by the just indignation of an outraged people. I am glad that we have this opportunity, though late in the Session, and after great difficulties in procuring all the necessary papers, to establish the proofs in connection with this nefarious transaction, to bring sufficient papers on the floor of Parliament to condemn the Minister, and to condemn the Government who have acted upon the recommendation of the Minister of Railways, for having been guilty of an act which is the worst in its character, though they have been many and numerous, that has ever disgraced the annals of any legislative assembly in British America.

Mr. JONES.

Mr. TUPPER (Pictou). I only want to occupy the attention of the House for a moment or two, to point out two or three inaccuracies in the statement of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), who just addressed the House, and to call attention to the splendid example he has given to the House of the rule he has laid down on one or two occasions during this Session, that it is unwise for any member to speak on a subject he does not thoroughly understand. The hon. member seems to think that no man has a right to talk on the subject of fish unless he sells fish; or unless he owns schooners he must not discuss the trade in which schooners are engaged; or unless he has a claim against the Government for overpaid duties on sugar, he must not go into the question of the sugar duties. I think, if he had this evening observed the rule he laid down, it would have been better for the House and for the country, because in my humble judgment he has taken up the time of the House by misstating, I believe unintentionally, through his not understanding the question, the arguments which have been placed before the House much more forcibly by gentlemen who are associated with him on that side. He stated correctly that this was a legal question, but that he was going to treat it from a different standpoint, that he was going to treat a question involving the construction of contracts, correspondence and submissions to arbitration, from the standpoint of one who did not understand law or the construction of the agreement or papers now before the House. I think he eminently succeeded in one respect, and showed that he was entirely unacquainted with any rule of legal construction. The hon. gentleman has asked the House what had Mr. Schreiber to do with this contract? I should have thought that even he, ignorant though he was of rules of construction and unacquainted with legal questions, having the contract before him, would have understood that the clause to which he drew the attention of the House required particularly the attention of Mr. Schreiber and the exercise of the discretion of Mr. Schreiber, as the engineer who was particularly alluded to and to whom direct reference was made in that contract.

Mr. JONES. I said in changing the contract.

Mr. TUPPER (Pictou). The hon. gentleman says Mr. Schreiber intervened improperly in this matter. Mr. Schreiber, in my humble judgment, from the construction of the contract and under the merits of the case, had great responsibility as regards not only the Government of this country but as regards the contractors, who had vested rights, and rights under that contract, and were entitled to the benefit of those rights; and Mr. Schreiber, unable himself to exercise the power and the authority given to him under that contract by the sanction of the Government, deputed to certain gentlemen called arbitrators, but who were really commissioners in this case, the duty of arriving at a proper estimate of the value of this plant to which reference has been made. Certainly he did not in this way wholly discharge, as regards these contractors, the responsibility which rested upon his shoulders. No matter what action Mr. Schreiber may have taken, or what the facts may be in regard to the arbitrators, Mr. Schreiber was responsible under the terms of the contract, as the engineer in question, for a proper valuation and appraisalment of that property; and, when Mr. Schreiber found that these gentlemen had acted, in his opinion, upon a principle which was entirely erroneous and contrary to the spirit of that agreement, no matter what hon. gentlemen may think, or what legal gentlemen may think as to the construction of that contract, he was conscientiously bound to see that what, in his opinion, was a true construction of that contract and of his duties under it was carried out. On his authority and on his views, no doubt, the Minister of Railways authorised a certain letter to be written. I do not believe it was read to the House, but I took the trouble of looking at it, and I think it bears very pertinently upon the question which has engaged the attention of hon. gentlemen this evening. Mr. Bradley, as secretary of the Department, wrote on the 12th January, 1886, this letter:

"Referring to the report jointly submitted by you on the 8th instant, giving the value of certain rolling stock used on the Canadian Pacific Railway works in British Columbia, under contract to D. O. Mills, at the time the work was completed in July, 1885. I am directed to request that you will be pleased to furnish a further report showing your estimate of the value of this stock in July, 1885, taking into consideration the fact that it had already been brought into the Province, and the cost which would have been entailed had its transport to be provided at that date.

That letter was written, and the evidence of Mr. Clark, one of the arbitrators to whom reference was made more than once this evening, has not shown that in any particular he violated the duty imposed upon him in connection with that letter, and the duty he assumed. He acted under the authority of that letter, and he has not stated, directly or indirectly, that he took the figures from the Department of Railways or from the engineer of the Department of Railways, or that the arbitrators acted in any respect in regard to that valuation of the cost of transport other than upon their own individual judgment. I challenge the statement that was made, perhaps not directly, to the contrary of what I am now stating; I challenge the argument directed to that end most positively. I have read the evidence of Mr. Clark from beginning to end, and in no respect does he say more than this: that he did not exercise his judgment as to whether that valuation should enter into the consideration, that he accepted the instructions from the Department of Railways and Canals, but in no respect does he say that in arriving at the amount they took figures from any source except after proper enquiry made by them. There is nothing to impugn the conduct of the arbitrators in this connection in that matter; and if hon. gentlemen had directed the whole of their argument towards the propriety of the Department authorising this letter to be written, or towards the right of the Government to have this matter taken up and reconsidered, I think their position would have been much more reasonable. But, going further than that, they are forced to overlook much of the evidence given by Mr. Clark, and to place before the country arguments which should properly have been heard, and were no doubt used, at the time of the investigation. It is idle, in the case of any report of this kind, for the hon. gentlemen to undertake to examine and cross-examine the arbitrators, to enquire into the merits of the case de novo. It would strike at the utility of arbitration in anything. It does not matter whether those arbitrators, so far as they are concerned, were too generous to the claimants or whether they gave them less, so long as they acted in a bonâ fide manner; and so long as they acted under the instructions of that letter I say they did their duty. I cannot appreciate the argument that has been addressed to this House that the engineer and the Department having undertaken to direct their attention to the fact that they had overlooked a most important principle in getting the exact amount of the valuation of this plant, should have instructed the arbitrators to name a certain sum. So far as the argument of the hon. gentleman goes, one would suppose the Government was guilty for not having instructed the arbitrators to name a small sum for that transport, to put into those papers the claim, and to say that on no account should the arbitrators give more. Now, I undertake to say if the Department of Railways had taken that course, and had stated that in no case was the claim to exceed such and such a figure, we would have been occupied far longer this evening by an indictment against the Government for daring to state to the arbitrators what the exact amount of the award was to be. So far as I listened this afternoon to the reading of the evidence, I felt that hon. gentlemen were, perhaps unwittingly, trying to make this House believe that the Government had given the figures to Mr. Clark, or his co-arbitrators and that they had put that amount down. Now, I have seen no evidence to that effect. There is not before this House a single sentence to corroborate that position. The hon. gentleman from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), as I understood his quotation, misquoted—I do not say intentionally—some of the evidence of Mr. Clark. At least, as I understood him, he quoted that the arbitrators in this case, in regard to the valuation of that stock and that plant, had not exercised their own judgment. Now, I say there is no such statement as that.

Mr. TUPPER (Pictou).

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). The hon. gentleman is mistaken. He said the arbitrators had exercised their judgment in valuing the plant, but in adding to the valuation the amount of transport they had only acted mathematically under the direction of the Chief Engineer.

Mr. TUPPER (Pictou). Then, if I understand my hon. friend, he establishes the proposition that I have been endeavoring to make. We concede the proposition that the Government, through its officers, did intervene, and stated to those commissioners or arbitrators: "You proceeded upon an entirely erroneous principle, you have neglected to consider an element which we think, in justice to these contractors, should be considered." Further than that they did not go. So far as I understand the interruption of my hon. friend, he agrees with me that they did not go further than that. Then as we are really at one upon that point, what is all this talk about? Are we going to have this arbitration over again? It was conceded by some hon. gentlemen to-day that they did not mean to impugn the character of any one of the arbitrators, that they did not mean to say that Mr. Clark had not acted honestly.

Mr. DAVIES. Did not the arbitrators at the direction and instance of the Chief Engineer, add $100,000 to the award more than Mr. Onderdonk claimed for transportation?

Mr. TUPPER. That has been denied absolutely by the Minister of Railways.

Mr. DAVIES. No, it has not.

Mr. TUPPER (Pictou). I was sitting near the Minister of Railways and heard him distinctly—he can correct me if I am wrong—he stated distinctly that the amount mentioned did not represent anywhere near the real amount of the claim by the Messrs. Onderdonk, that the papers my hon. friends were in possession of were not the full papers, nor did they show the full amount of the claim. I think the Minister of Railways stated that the amount mentioned by the hon. member for Queen's did not represent more than one-fifth of the amount claimed by D. O. Mills, or whoever the contractor was. Therefore, I say that hon. gentlemen opposite appear to be bringing their researches to bear upon a phase of that case that does not concern this House. We cannot rip up these awards. The only point involved in this case that we can discuss is, as to whether the Government acted properly or improperly in not accepting the first report of those arbitrators who went out to do a duty that the Chief Engineer was unable to discharge at the time. I say that this is the question before the House, and it seems to me the reasons given from this side of the House have not been met on that point. I say that the action of the Government when that contract was made, the circumstances under which that contract was made, the circumstances which it was supposed by the contractor and by the Government would exist when that contract terminated, all go to show that, had the Government taken any other course, they could have been charged, not only with having acted unfairly, but with having acted in a most shystering mean way in their dealing with these contractors. It has not been denied that these contractors had a right to be treated fairly and considerately by the Government in connection with the contract, and it has not been shown that they made a profit to any amount. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), who took up so much time in the discussion and showed how little he understood this question, and how much his mind had been turned towards questions of sugar, schooners and steamers and the election contest in Halifax, said, before he sat down, that the arbitrators stated that they put down the amount for transportation which the Government gave them. That shows how little the hon. gentleman knew of this subject. There is not an hon. gentleman who can point to a particle of evidence to show that that statement is correct. It was never made before the committee; but the Government did tell those commissioners or arbitrators the principle on which they were to proceed, and, so far as the evidence goes, the arbitrators did their duty. Hon. gentlemen do not deny that they acted honestly; they made a calculation—a mathematical calculation, as the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), has termed it—and the result is what is before the House.

Mr. McMULLEN. I happen to be a member of the Public Accounts Committee, and was present during the investigation in connection with this matter. I gave particular attention to the evidence of the different parties who were examined. But before proceeding to deal with the matter under discussion, I will make a short reference to a remark dropped by that hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Tupper). In the course of the debates, I notice that that hon. gentleman is in the habit of assailing hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), and I have been rather surprised to find the amount of cheek he assumes, and to-night he said that hon. gentleman was ignorant and knew nothing about the question. I contend that any layman in this House has just as good a right to address the House on a question in which both he and his constituents are interested as any legal mind in the House. I do not think it is right, simply because a few lawyers undertake to deal with important questions of this kind, that persons not lawyers, and not, perhaps, so well versed on legal points, should be prevented from offering any remarks from our standpoint on such questions. It ill-becomes, particularly, a young member, a man of youth, such as the hon. member for Picton, to use such words as he did towards the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), a man of experience and who has been in Parliament for many years. That hon. gentleman is not likely to gain either popularity or credit by adopting that course in addressing this House. There are some plain facts in connection with this case that we should view not altogether from a legal but a common sense standpoint. There are very few persons who have not been interested in contracts, and any man apart from legal qualifications would come to the conclusion that there was, at least, very strong evidence of impropriety, of collusion, for a purpose in connection with this whole matter. A perusal of the contract does not show anything to warrant the conclusion at which hon. gentlemen opposite have arrived. It contains this clause:

“At the close of the contract any engines or platform cars which may be considered by the engineer fit for further use may be transferred to the Government on the valuation of the engineer.

Those are all the words in the contract upon which this whole argument is based; it is all the grounds on which the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) based his argument to-night. I was quite amused to listen to the way in which he endeavored to turn the matter and to put the best front upon this barefaced transaction. He has a great legal mind and a world-wide fame for being able to put a good face on a bad case. We have too much of that kind of thing in this House. We have the fact that the Chief Engineer was to value this stock. It appears he could not go, for some reason best known to himself. Three arbitrators were chosen to do the work. They did not start out without having received something in the way of information as to what they were going to do and how to do it. They went there and made a valuation, and they reported to the Minister of Railways stating that $72,000 was the amount at which they valued the stock. After having done this, fault was found with the valuation. The Minister of Railways, in order to satisfy himself as to how far the Government really were responsible for taking this stock over, referred the question to the Minister of Justice. That Minister, who is the legal adviser of the Crown, and by whom the Minister of Railways should be guided, declared, I understand, that the Government were not bound to take the stock, that it was optional whether they took it over or not. In the face of that, and without referring the matter further to ascertain whether the country could not be relieved from the responsibility of taking over that rolling stock, the Minister went on, not only with regard to paying $72,000, but he increased it very largely, and eventually a settlement was made for $200,000. Any one will see the position of the Minister to the contractor. He said to the contractor: “Your position is this—the Minister of Justice says I am not responsible under the clause of the contract to take over the stock; but we may possibly be able to patch the matter up so as to do good to you and to me. An election is coming on, and we are wanting funds. There are $72,000 as the award which the arbitrators have arrived, and you, Mr. Onderdonk, claim $27,000 as the amount of transport, which would make $100,000. The Minister of Justice says we are not bound to give you anything. However, we will make it $200,000; $100,000 for me and $100,000 for you.” The result is that they put their heads together. Mr. Onderdonk got $100,000 and the Minister of Railways $100,000, for purposes best known to himself. At all events, the sum has been paid and the country has lost the money. In order to strengthen their position, and, if possible to mystify the transaction so that it would not come out as an open, barefaced scandal, they got the arbitrators to agree to increase the amount. Under the pressure of Mr. Onderdonk? No. Under the pressure of the Minister of Railways backed by the Chief Engineer, by his own man. Those two men joined together, and urged strongly, pointedly, and forcibly on the arbitrators that they should do a certain thing. One of those arbitrators, according to the evidence before the committee, positively refused. He refused to be made a tool of, and stated so in his letter, in which he said he was afraid they were being made tools of, and now it turns out he was right in that suspicion, because it is quite evident that the arbitrators were used for a purpose in that transaction. The whole thing bears that appearance on its face to any honest-minded man apart from legal points, because if you take twelve honest-minded men I will venture to stake my seat in Parliament that not one of them will fail to declare that this matter bears on its face evidence of being a fishy transaction from beginning to end, that it was evidently put through for a purpose, that the whole thing was completed undoubtedly with the intention that there should be a considerable sum made out of it. And we can honestly say, I think, after a full revision of the whole transaction in relation to Mr. Onderdonk, that it was conceived in sin and closed out in political iniquity. It bears that face from beginning to end, and I hold that the effort made by the Government to turn the point of the thrust which has been made at them by the plain statement of facts which has been made to the House, has utterly failed, even when made by the best legal minds in the House, save and except the Minister of Justice himself. We have not heard from him but possibly we shall have some efforts made by that gentleman to try and mystify the whole transaction. The Minister of Finance commenced this afternoon and tried to mystify it as best he could. He began to offer some remarks with regard to the transaction to try and show that the Government were, in some way, in honor bound to accept this rolling stock from these men. He said we ought to view this question from a charitable point of view. Well, he undoubtedly commenced very charitably with the man we are dealing with, for he gave him $200,000 at the start of the contract by giving that much more than he could have let the contract for to another firm. And his charity had not worn out when they came to close the contract, because, whether through his charitable disposition to him or the charitable feelings produced in the mind of the Minister of Railways, through the influence of the Minister of Finance, his charity enabled him to deal out $100,000 at the end of the contract. But I have grave doubts whether that money found its way into Onderdonk's pockets, and if Onderdonk were put in the witness box, under the pressure of sworn evidence, I think he would be compelled to admit, if he was an honest man, that the money charged to the country in this transaction never went to the credit of Mr. Onderdonk but went in some other direction. Now, I say the whole transaction bears a suspicious character from beginning to end. I was amused with one thing in connection with this transaction. I was present when the engineer was being examined. During his evidence he admitted that, although he is the servant of the people of this Dominion receiving $1,000 a year as Chief Engineer of Government Railways, and $2,000 a year as Government Engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, making $6,000 a year altogether—he admitted that it was in the interest of the contractors that he had made the suggestion of the additional valuation. He admitted that it was not in the country's interest, although he said he considered the country was to a certain extent in honor bound in connection with this transaction. But from beginning to end he showed clearly that he was laboring in the interest of Mr. Onderdonk, whether from any kindly feeling towards that gentleman or whether it was the Minister of Railways, from whom he was receiving his extra allowance each year, that was urging him to consent to those things, we do not know and cannot tell. But from the beginning to the end of the whole transaction, it showed that the hired servant of the country, in place of laboring in the interest of the country and saving its money, was endeavoring, on the other hand, to press to an issue a question which would put $100,000 in the pockets of somebody else. I doubt if there is any man in this House who, if he had a servant who frankly admitted that in place of working in his master's interests, he was working in the interests of those who were contracting with his master, or were against his master, would keep him any longer in his service. Now, if the hon. Minister of Railways was at all anxious to settle this question with regard to the liability of the Government, why didn't he refer it to the courts? Why was the matter put through as quickly as it was? Why were these men instructed so hurriedly to immediately go back and amend the report which they had sent in? Why was such haste made to close out the transaction? We find that, in many other things, the Government have delayed months and years in winding up such matters, but in this case there appears to be an anxiety to hurry it through. They would not wait until the arbitrators could conveniently come here, but they were telegraphed for and urgent appeals were made to close the matter up. All this shows there must be some ground for the suspicion we have as to the manner in which the money was used. Now, Sir, I do not wish to occupy the time of the House any longer after what has already been said, but I do say that any unbiassed man who will take up the evidence and read it carefully over, can come to no other conclusion that there has been a huge transaction of a secret character carried through in connection with this matter, and evidently some person has pocketed the money which the country has lost to the amount of $100,000 and over. I say that if there was any municipality in the country that elected a council and, at the end of the year, it was shown they carried through a fishy transaction of this kind by which the municipality lost one thousand dollars or two thousand dollars, they would never elect those men to office again and give them their confidence. There is not another case in which men would receive the confidence of the country if they had to submit to an investigation and answer charges of the kind preferred here to-night. I do say I hope the country will waken up to their own interests. I do not know how long they will bear with evidence of the kind shown to the country to-night and allow themselves to be literally robbed and fleeced, but I hope that before long they will waken up and say that the men who engage in or back up transactions of this kind, the Government who are caught in actions of such a fishy character, should be hurled from their positions, and see if they cannot, at all events, get more honest men to put in their places.

Mr. McMULLEN.

Mr. THOMPSON. Although I am aware that this matter has been so fully discussed that it is impossible for any person to speak upon it now without repeating what has been said before—and perhaps better said—I feel especially called upon to say a few words before the debate closes, in consequence of some observations made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) before dinner, which surprised me very much. I was relieved, however, from the surprise I then felt, at the resumption of the debate, when that hon. gentleman said he had not seen the opinion from the Department of Justice, and had merely spoken of it from his recollection of hearing it read on a previous occasion. The hon. member for South Oxford declared that the course pursued by the hon. Minister of Railways in this case was most extraordinary, inasmuch as he had proceeded to get an award made for about $200,000, in spite of the fact that the Department of Justice had advised him—and the hon. member referred to the Minister of Justice as sitting beside him—that there was no legal liability on the part of the Government. Now, it happens that the Minister who advised the Minister of Railways was not the person sitting beside him at all, and that I had not assumed the duties of the office of the Minister of Justice at the time that opinion was given. That, however, is not material to the present enquiry, and I merely state it to remove an erroneous impression from the mind of the hon. gentleman who took so prominent a part in the debate. At the same time, the impression on my mind is in the direction of approving of that opinion, although I was not concerned in any way in the giving of it, and I am inclined to the opinion that the clause in the contract which has given rise to so much discussion to-night gives merely an option to the Crown to purchase the rolling stock which remained at the termination of Mr. Onderdonk's contract. The Minister was so advised, and now the advice so given to him is taken by the hon. member for South Oxford to mean that in this claim there was no legal liability on the part of the Government, and that the $200,000 was paid against the advice of the Minister of Justice that there was no legal liability. The question submitted to the Department of Justice by the Department of Railways was not whether there was any legal liability to pay $200,000 or not, but whether we were bound to purchase the rolling stock mentioned in the contract, and the Minister was simply told that there was not a legal liability to make that purchase. Now, the Minister of Railways laid before the Privy Council a statement of what that answer had been. He cited the report of the Minister of Justice as well as the clause of the contract on which it proceeded. But what I want to call the attention of the House to is that his action was based on the view he took, that although there might not have been any legal obligation on the part of the Government to purchase that rolling stock, there was a moral obligation to do so. Now, Sir, this question has been put before the House this evening as if that was a most absurd delusion on the part of the Minister of Railways—

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. THOMPSON. And my hon. friend who says "hear, hear" seems to be under the mistake some of his friends made when they addressed the House on this subject, of supposing that there was nothing on which to base the opinion of the Minister of Railways that there was a moral obligation here, except the mere insertion in the contract of those terms which I shall presently read. Before this contract was made at all, and when Mr. Onderdonk and everybody else were invited to send in their tenders, a specification was put before the public as clause 75, in these words:

"At the close of the contract any engines and platform cars which may be considered by the engineer fit for further use may be transferred to the Government on the valuation of the engineer."

Now, it may be that as a question of contract, there was no obligation on the part of the Government to purchase that rolling stock. But the intimation was held out that at the close of this contract there might be a transfer of this rolling stock to the Government; and when we received Mr. Onderdonk's tender based on that intimation, there was a moral obligation, if not a legal one, to give him the benefit of that provision. That is all the Minister of Railways decided to do, and that is precisely the case put before the Government. Now, Sir, I want to call attention to this fact, although I admit that I am repeating what has been well said by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Tupper) as regards the authority that was to determine its valuation: By the express terms of the contract, the valuation of this rolling stock was to be determined by the engineer. A great deal has been said by the hon. member for Halifax in the way of interrogation as to who is the engineer? and who is Mr. Schreiber? and who is this one, and who is that one, and what right has he to change the contract? Let me tell the House, after glancing at this contract, who the engineer was; he was the supreme authority agreed upon between Mr. Onderdonk and the Government of Canada as the person to determine not only the valuation, but the question of the interpretation of the contract from one end of it to the other. By the contract, which both the Government and Mr. Onderdonk executed, it was agreed that every question from beginning to end was to be left to the determination of the engineer, and it was for the engineer to determine not only what was the value of the rolling stock as rolling stock, not only what was the value of the transport to a given point, but what principle should be acted on in making the valuation. Now, it was said by the hon. gentlemen on the other side that that condition of the contract was altered, inasmuch as subsequently it was dispensed with, and that instead of the engineer exercising his functions, he transferred them to Mr. Reed and Mr. Clark. I beg to say, after looking at the papers as well as I have been able to do during the short time at my disposal—for I had not heard of this question before it was brought up this afternoon—I come to a very different conclusion as to what was the effect of the appointment of Mr. Reed and Mr. Clark. Mr. Schreiber, in his letter to the Minister, declares that it is expedient to appoint Mr. Reed and Mr. Clark to make the valuation, not because he is incompetent and they have to be substituted for him as the authority for interpreting the contract, but simply because it is inconvenient for him to visit British Columbia at that season of the year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, expressly so. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island said that what Mr. Schreiber said before the committee was that he did not feel himself competent. What has that to do with the case? The contract made him, whether competent or incompetent, the judge, and nobody else; and the question that was before the Minister, when Mr. Schreiber recommended the appointment of Mr. Reed and Mr. Clark, was not the question of Mr. Schreiber's competency, because that had been settled by the contract, but the question whether it was convenient for Mr. Schreiber to go to the spot and investigate the details, or to be informed by experts who would go to the spot to examine the details. Well, those gentlemen went out to British Columbia, and they made a report to Mr. Schreiber. That was not a report that bound the Government or Mr. Onderdonk, unless it proceeded on the principles that ought to regulate the valuation, and the valuation they made showed on its face that they had awarded simply the value of the rolling stock as it stood there at that time; and the engineer, who alone was competent to judge this question, said that in fairness to the contractor he was entitled to be paid on a different principle from the mere value of the rolling stock as it stood there, and he said to them: "You are entitled to take into consideration the isolated position of that rolling stock in British Columbia as it stood when it was placed there by Mr. Onderdonk, subject only to depreciation in value." Now, my hon. friends on the other side say that this is a mere question of transportation, and I was very much impressed with the remarks of my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island this afternoon when he said: The full effect of the change which Mr. Schreiber instructed the valuers to make was to add to the $72,000, which was the value of the rolling stock, the cost of transporting it there. The House will find that the word "transportation" has nothing to do with it whatever, but that the valuers were instructed by Mr. Schreiber to consider what compensation Mr. Onderdonk was entitled to, in view of the difficulties of placing that rolling stock in that position. Now, the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) referred to the memo. signed by those valuers, in which they showed that $36,800 was the sum which they would add to their valuation of the rolling stock, on account of the cost of transportation; but let me call the hon. member's attention to the fact that the memo. includes simply transportation, and that did not, by any means, cover the whole principle on which the arbitrators were instructed by the engineer to report. Let me show how their report is made up. They allowed for transportation of 24 flat cars at $300 each, for the reason that those cars were transported from the east. They allowed for 161 flat cars, which were built at Yale, $100 each for transportation from Yale. But the transportation from Yale would not cover the principle on which they were instructed to report at all, the fact being that those cars had to be built at Yale under most disadvantageous circumstances, entailing great expense on the part of the contractor, and yet these valuers allow $100 simply for each car to be transported from Yale, on the same principle as if Yale were a place at which cars were built all the year round, and the order only required to be given for flat cars to have them constructed without delay, and rolled on to the site of the Onderdonk contract. The fact is that in Yale nothing was to be found fit for the purpose of building the cars except the labor and the wood. Everything else that entered into their construction had to be transported from the eastern Provinces and the eastern States, and the transportation had been made so difficult by reason of the desire of the American railways to prevent and hamper the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that, in many instances, the machinery and the locomotives, and the material for construction, had to be carried by water. Machinery that was actually constructed and put up in Philadelphia, had to be transported by water around Cape Horn in order to reach British Columbia. Yet the only addition these valuers were willing to make, was the cost of bringing the cars from Yale to the site of the contract. Under those circumstances, Mr. Schreiber believed that, in adding the simple transportation from the place at which the cars were constructed, to the site of the contract, they were not fully and fairly estimating what Mr. Onderdonk was entitled to be compensated for, namely, the difficulty of placing rolling stock in that position at the time it was placed there; and, they had to act on that principle, no matter with what reluctance, for the engineer was the person who was to decide whether the additional valuation was to be made or not. Then the valuers made the statement appended to the evidence showing their estimate as to what it would cost to replace the rolling stock, previously reported on, at the completion of the contract in July, 1885, taking into account the duty and other charges to place them in that isolated position—not based on the mere question of transportation, but based on the position of that rolling stock in that difficult place, and making the sum total the award subsequently reached by them. I say with the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) that it is not for me or this House to decide whether the engineer was right or wrong in adopting that valuation and insisting upon that principle. The fact was that the two contracting parties made him the judge, and, in acting on the decision arrived at by him, under the instructions to the subordinates he sent out to report on the details of the case, the Minister of Railways was simply acting on a decision of the person who was to be the sole judge between him and the contractor. My hon. colleague entered into the matter, as I have said, in the first instance, from a sense of moral obligation imposed upon him by the fact that he had invited the contractors and every person who would tender to consider the fact, in making a tender, that, in all probability, this rolling stock would be taken off his hands. I would not detain the House in making any statement on the subject, if I did not think that, in some respects, it had been misunderstood by hon. gentlemen opposite, and that, in other respects, the case had not been fully stated. When the public come to examine the case and to read, not the biased statements addressed to the House this afternoon by hon. gentlemen opposite, but the evidence in the papers, they will see very little foundation for the insinuation thrown out this afternoon that the Government have acted in a manner that was impure and corrupt in connection with this transaction, and with a view to their own personal advantage.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I shall follow the example of the Minister of Justice, and occupy the attention of the House but a very few moments. I have very little to say that is new with regard to this matter, but the observations I purpose making are rather intended to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the character of the charge made. The hon. the Minister of Justice admits that there was no legal liability. He said his predecessor in office so advised the Government, and in the opinion of his predecessor he concurs, and not in that of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy); but the Minister of Justice at the same time informs the House that, although there was no legal liability in the matter, there was moral liability. Now, I confess my inability to discover how there could be any moral liability in a case of this sort, where there was no legal liability. The contract expressly provides that there is to be no incidental contract for claims arising, by inference, out of the express terms of the agreement. The terms of the contract are such as to exclude the possibility of any moral liability, if there was not in the provisions of the contract expressed legal liability; so that the wording of the contract, it seems to me—the moment the Minister of Justice admits that there was no legal liability under the contract—precludes the possibility of any such pretension as that which he puts forward on behalf of the contractors in this matter. The whole argument of the Government, the whole defence of the Government in dealing with the contractors for the purchase of this plant, is based upon the assumption that, in making the tender for the construction of this portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the contractors acted upon the assumption that the Government were to take off their hands this plant after their work was completed. Now, if there was no legal liability on the part of the Government, if there was no provision in the contract that the Government were under legal obligation to accept the plant at its valuation, when the work was completed, by what means can the Government, or hon. gentlemen on that side, come to the conclusion that the contractors tendered for a much smaller amount, because they assumed that this purchase was to be made? Why, the very terms of the contract, the mere permission to make the purchase, would not permit the contractors to proceed on any such assumption. On the contrary, they took into consideration, in making their tender for the construction of this work, the cost of obtaining plant to carry on their operations and doing the work they had contracted to perform; and, having taken that into consideration, their estimated cost of the construction of this portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway embraces also the cost of the plant they required for this purpose. That being the case and the terms of the contract and the construction put on the terms by the Minister of Justice precludes any other conclusion—then there was no moral obligation whatever on the part of the Government to make this purchase, and there was no diminution in the contract price in consequence of any understanding or expectation that the Government would make such a purchase. Then there is a provision in the contract that, in case there is a sale made by the company to the Government, the engineer shall be the party to estimate the value of the plant, and not, as the Minister of Justice said, at its cost when coming into the country and its actual deterioration from that cost. There is no such provision. It is the value the plant has when the contract is completed, no matter what that may be, and wholly irrespective of what it may have cost the parties who own it. That was the position of things. That is the provision of the contract if the purchase is to be made. What did the Government do? The engineer said, the Minister of Finance has said that the engineer was otherwise engaged, and further that he was a railway engineer and not a mechanical engineer, and, therefore, it did not fall within his special qualifications to estimate the value of this plant; and, therefore, he preferred that it should be done in another way. What did the contractors, Onderdonk and Co., do? They agreed that the matter should be left to arbitrators, and it seems to me preposterous to argue here as to the terms of the contract and to refer to the engineer as if he were the party and there could be no other party to fix the value of the plant. The fact is that the terms of the contract were superseded by a subsequent arrangement between the Government on the one side and the contractors on the other. That arrangement was that they should appoint arbitrators, that the arbitrators should choose an umpire, and that the two arbitrators and the umpire should decide the value of this plant, wholly irrespective of the contract. There is no provision in this subsequent arrangement that the engineer shall override and supersede the judgment of the arbitrators, and shall fix the value independent of them. He started out with a declaration that he was not qualified, that it was not within his special functions. It was because he was not specially qualified that he recommended another mode of procedure from that which is found in the contract, and that other mode of procedure was agreed upon between the Government on one side and the contractors on the other, and the arbitrators were appointed. They proceeded to enquire into the value of this plant, not into its original cost less the deterioration which had taken place from wear and tear, but its actual value when the work was completed. That was their instruction according to the terms of the agreement. The only change made since the option to purchase was exercised was that the engineer was superseded by this board of arbitrators; and they said it was worth $72,000. Who says that they did not take into consideration the cost of transportation? What evidence is there that they did not take into consideration all the elements which go to make up the value of the plant when they fixed the value at $72,000? I say it is perfectly clear from the declarations made by Mr. Reed again and again, that they did take into consideration that cost of transportation. They took into consideration the necessity of importing materials and everything necessary to determine the value those cars had in the place where they were found. That is perfectly clear, and, after taking into consideration all these matters—and they were appointed on account of special fitness—they said that $72,000 was the value of this plant. Then Mr. Onderdonk objected on one side, and the engineer and the Minister of Railways also objected. They both concurred in dissenting from the view of the board of arbitrators, and they worried them, and they pressed them and bulldozed them into a reconsideration of the contract. These men refused again and again, and then what did they do? In the end, not altering their judgment as to the value, they allowed the Minister and his engineer to intervene, and to say there should be added a certain sum for the cost of transportation. What appears? That the cost of transporting these materials, from abroad into British Columbia, was $27,000. That was Mr. Onderdonk's own representation to the Minister, and that representation was concealed from the arbitrators, and another and a different value was arrived at, of which we have no means of knowing until we had the declaration from the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) to-night as to how it was made up. Then we have the statement made by these gentlemen that they themselves had made an estimate independent of this, and, making all due allowance with the view of meeting the views of the Minister of Railways and the engineer, they estimated the value at $36,800. If we add that $36,800 to the $72,000—and that would be estimating for the cost of transportation twice over—we will see that we are still over $100,000 short of the amount which the Minister of Railways has seen proper to allow to these parties for this worthless railway plant. The hon. gentleman admits that it is valueless, or has but little value. He admits that more than $700 was allowed for cars that the parties valued at $60. He admits that more than twice the amount that those parties were, in the estimation of competent specialists, entitled to receive for those cars and those engines was paid. He admits that they have paid $100,000 and upwards to them in this way. It is impossible that such a transaction can be successfully defended, and so we find the Minister of Finance taking one view, we find the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) saying that the hon. gentleman is all wrong, and taking another view, and making a defence which is worse and more serious than the charge which has been made by the hon. gentlemen from this side of the House, and then we find the Minister of Justice presenting a third view of this transaction. The transaction has been defended from all points, and it has been unsuccessfully defended from every possible ground chosen with the view of making out a case, not, perhaps, to exculpate but to extenuate the offence which has been committed by the Minister of Railways. It is impossible that this transaction can rest here, it is impossible that this House can allow, with respect to itself, such a transaction to pass without further investigation. It will be necessary that further enquiry shall be had, and that the public should be thoroughly aware why the Government had paid to a contractor more than $100,000 beyond the sum to which he was entitled if they were disposed to act upon that provision of the contract.

Mr. THOMPSON.

Mr. McLELAN. The figures which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) gave, were evidently a misprint, because I remember the hon. gentleman stating that the prices reported are the correct prices, as the price given very much exceeded the $200,000.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Maintenance and repairs of Government steamers...$149,750

Mr. FOSTER. The increase, $19,750, is almost entirely accounted for by the repairs and improvements made on the steamer Napoleon. The old engines and boilers were in use for about 30 years and were no longer safe.

Rewards for saving life in the life-boat service..$3,000

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I wish to call the attention of the Minister to the case of a young man at Port Stanley. I am informed that the captain of that life-boat was absent for a period. The Department was aware of his leaving, and they deducted the amount of his, the captain's, salary for three months. The second in command, or the other individual who took charge of the crew and the drill, attended to the service during this time, and he made application for an increase of salary during the time the captain was away. The Government did not seem disposed to allow him any consideration other than the ordinary pay that he received as a member of the crew. He complained, and, I think, justly, that he ought to be allowed something in consideration of his taking charge of the crew during the absence of the captain. These are the statements he has made to me. I have been to the Department on several occasions and could get no satisfaction, further than that the Department had not appointed this young man to take charge of the boat during the absence of the captain. Although the Government deprived the captain of his salary for three months, they did not give the young man any extra consideration for his having taken the captain's place. I understand he performed the duties with perfect satisfaction to the Department, and, therefore, the Minister ought to pay some attention to the claims of this young man, who is very respectable and has performed his duties satisfactorily.

Mr. FOSTER. I will take note of that.

Subsidy to a line of steamers to run between France and Quebec.....$50,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It depends upon the circumstances how long the subsidy will run. If the service is not performed in a manner satisfactory to the Government, it can be terminated at any time. It provides for steamers of a sufficiently large size and good class to perform the service for two years, and after that they are obliged to put on a better class of steamers and to make more frequent trips. The service also calls occasionally at St. Pierre et Miquelon, on the way. In the event of an arrangement being made to obtain a fast line of steamers between France and Canada, this arrangement can be terminated at the end of two years; but if the service is satisfactorily performed, it will go on for five years.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) So that after we have tried the experiment, whether we are satisfied with the results or not, we are not in a position to terminate the contract until five years have elapsed? We are trying an experiment. We may find at the end of two years that the experiment is useless, and then we have no power to terminate the contract at that time, but we must go on paying $50,000 a year for five years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not in the event I have mentioned, of getting a fast line of steamers.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Whether any trade is brought by the subsidising of the steamers or not, we are not able to withdraw until the end of five years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; but the hon. gentleman will see that it will be quite impossible for the service to be efficiently performed unless there is considerable trade. The subsidy would not maintain the line and in that event it would not be able to perform the service effectually, and the Government would at once terminate it. If the service is satisfactorily performed and we do not secure a line of fast steamers within two years, the arrangement will run then five years. If an arrangement is made for a fast line between France, England and Canada, it is provided in that event that we can terminate the contract. It is impossible to obtain such a service for a single year. Arrangements cannot thus be made; there must be a certain term of years in order to warrant parties in preparing such vessels as are required to efficiently perform the service, and for that reason it was considered that five years was as short a period as we could propose, with the contingency I have alluded to of having a fast line established.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was not criticising as regards the period and the terms of the contract, but I was seeking information. I understand that the company does not contract to carry a certain amount of freight. That is a contingency we have to risk; they may have freight or not. This arrangement means a payment of $250,000 for this service.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Winter service, P.E.I. $5,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has it been reported to the Minister that the number of boats requires to be increased?

Mr. FOSTER. No. We now have all the boats necessary, and extra boats as well.

Lighthouse keepers, including Cape Race $180,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the increase represent additional lighthouses or increases of salary?

Mr. FOSTER. Partly increases of salaries and partly due to new lights.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In what proportion?

Mr. FOSTER. In Quebec there is an increase of $468. Of this amount $150 is for new lights and the balance for Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

increase of salaries. As the officers become older in the service and work well, they are occasionally given small increases. In Nova Scotia the total increase is $1,325, of which for new lights there are $100, $400, $100, $120 and $400—nearly the total amount.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe that the figures given do not conform with the details given in the estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. They do not exactly agree, but the difference is very slight.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I observe there are $40,000 appropriated for Nova Scotia. I should like to draw the Minister's attention to the petition sent to him from the county I have the honor to represent for an automatic buoy to be placed at the entrance of the harbor. Last year two vessels were lost on entering the harbor. One vessel was lost with its entire cargo, and very nearly loss of life to those on board. A very large number of vessels enter Lunenburg harbor, and it is very important that a buoy should be placed there, otherwise if any disaster occurs the Government will be responsible. Although the county formerly sent a supporter of the Government, who, the hon. Finance Minister stated a few evenings ago, represented the county so ably, a buoy was not placed there.

Mr. FOSTER. The attention of the Department has been called to that and a great many other points in Nova Scotia, the coast of which extends over so large an extent. It is impossible to cover all those applications in a single year, but as rapidly and efficiently as the Department can do so they are meeting the wants, from year to year, out of the appropriation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why does Cape Race light require an additional $1,000?

Mr. FOSTER. It is not an additional sum. That light was taken over from the British Government somewhat recently, and this is the first year we have had to pay the salary for its maintenance. The salaries paid by the British Government was $1,944; under our arrangement we have the whole taken care of for $1,000.

Mr. JONES. I have received a letter from the county of Cumberland respecting the appointment of two lighthouse keepers in that county, which I will now read:

"Some time last fall an old gentleman by the name of Robert Ward was appointed to take charge of Cape Sharp lighthouse. He is an old gentleman of about seventy-five years; he has been a cripple for years, using both a crutch and a cane. After he received this appointment he went to Cape Sharp lighthouse and remained there about two days, and finding he was too old and infirm to attend to the duties of the lighthouse he deputed a man by the name of Finney to attend to the light for him."

The other appointment to which I refer is that of Andrew McCullough, of Apple River lighthouse. He is likewise a cripple over seventy years of age. I am informed that no man over sixty years of age can be appointed a lighthouse keeper, and further they must be smart and be able to manage a boat in case of accidents, which neither of those old men is capable of doing. If this statement is correct, and I am giving it according to my information, it appears to me a very improper appointment that two men over seventy years, both of them cripples, should be appointed lighthouse keepers, and have to delegate the duties of their position to other people. They were appointed last summer. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can explain the matter.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am extremely obliged to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), for the kindly interest he has taken in the county of Cumberland. I confess that the county has not had representation either at present or for the last thirty years that was sufficient to secure care of all the various interests of the country, and I am extremely grateful to the hon. gentleman for lending me his assistance. I can only tell him that the parties to whom he referred are parties who enjoy the confidence and respect of all classes of the community. Captain McCullough who has been appointed at Apple River, is an old sea captain. He has lived in a remote section of the county, he has spent his life there, and I am quite certain that while that light is under his management—a short time it may be—there will be no failure on his part to have the service efficiently performed. As far as Mr. Ward is concerned and the duties confided to him, I may say that he has engaged a vigorous and athletic young man to act under his immediate superintendence in discharging his duties, and there has been no complaint whatever with reference to either of these lights. I again tender my most grateful thanks to my hon. friend for his kind assistance in endeavoring to secure for the county of Cumberland due consideration from this House and from my colleagues.

Mr. JONES. I am glad the Finance Minister appreciates my kind interest in the welfare of the people in the county of Cumberland, but I think it will be observed that the people of that county have not for years had the benefit of representation by that gentleman in this House. He has been employed doubtless in a more congenial atmosphere, where, perhaps, he did not pay much attention to these matters; having such large interests to represent he possibly did not consider these matters worthy of his royal attention. However he has not disputed the information conveyed to me in this letter. I said I knew nothing about it myself, but I thought it my duty to inform the Minister of Marine of the representations made to me, and if the statements here made, which the Minister of Finance has not pretended to deny, that two men, both cripples, seventy to seventy-five years of age, have been appointed, I do not care where it may be, to take charge of the lighthouses, considering the large interests involved and which generally require the services of younger and more active men, I must join with my friend who has written the letter, but who is entirely unknown to me, in thinking that it was a highly improper appointment.

Mr. FOSTER. I may say that there has been a great deal of correspondence, and my hon. friend may have received his letter from a person who was interested in the appointment. I doubt if the statements there made are correct; no complaint has been received from shippers or sailors with reference to those lights.

Mr. JONES. The Minister of Finance does not dispute the facts.

Mr. FOSTER. I am simply giving the hon. gentleman what I know about the matter. I have received no complaint. Our inspector of lights has been lately at one of those places and has made a report, stating that the lighthouse is properly cared for. If we have any complaints from shippers, or if our inspector reports that any lighthouse is not being cared for, of course the Department takes immediate action. But the letter which the hon. gentleman has read is one of a great many of that kind of letters which have been received with reference to many appointments, and which are sometimes found not to state the facts exactly.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman states that he has received a lot of letters with regard to those appointments. I would ask him what objections were raised to the appointment?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I cannot tell from memory. I only know that there is a great deal of correspondence about it, as often takes place when there are many aspirants for an office.

Mr. MULOCK. It is satisfactory to know that the Minister of Marine, who has not himself attained the age of an octogenarian, should have so great respect for men of that age. It is right to have respect for them, but it would be interesting to the country to know if it is his regular practice to appoint to positions where great activity is necessary, or, at all events, should be within reach of the occupant, persons of these mature years?

Mr. FOSTER. It remains to be found out whether the information is correct. The hon. gentleman himself did not say it was. He said he merely gave it as he got it, and it may not be correct.

Mr. MULOCK. Is there any information in the Department touching the age and alleged infirmities of those two officials?

Mr. FOSTER. I have no doubt there is.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the hon. gentleman know whether these statements are substantially correct?

Mr. FOSTER. I have said before that I did not think the statements would be found to be correct.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I call the Minister's attention to the fact that the Finance Minister, whose memory of his constituency is good, and who apparently knows of one of the men personally, did not dispute the statements as to the matter of age. Now, I know nothing about the age of those gentlemen, but I take it for granted that the Minister could obtain from his Department, and should do so now that his attention is called to the matter, evidence of the age of these men. The age of lighthouse keepers is an important element in their efficiency, and I call attention to the matter for this reason: that it is within my own knowledge, and I dare say within the knowledge of other members of the House, that what I regard as a vicious practice has sprung up, that there is a habit creeping into this service of appointing men who proceed to farm out the duties of a lighthouse keeper. I have known of cases where the men that were appointed have regularly farmed the thing out—appointed one man one year, and, finding that the service could be got for $25 less, have displaced this man and put in another, and so on until in one or two cases, about one-third of the salary paid by the Department goes to the man who really does the work. Now, that is not the intention of this House; we do not propose to create a number of employés, small or great, who are to farm out their appointments to other men to do the work, and pocket one-third or one-half of the salary, or whatever proportion it may be. And I take it for granted, if my hon. friend is correctly informed, if those two gentlemen are of the age and infirmity he describes them, we are practically pensioning them, and they are paying only a small proportion of their salaries to do the work. I submit that the practice is vicious and dangerous, more particularly in the case of lighthouse keepers, where there is the strongest possible reason for seeing that the men appointed are able personally to do the work. There is not merely property but life, and sometimes an immense number of lives, involved in the proper attention to lighthouses, especially on the Atlantic coast. Of course, I know nothing of the facts, but I think after the statements which have been made enquiry should be had in the Department, and the hon. gentleman should bring down a statement of real age and physical condition of those men.

Mr. FOSTER. I have made a note of the matter, and I may say that I quite agree with my hon. friend in the position he takes. We have some 600 lighthouse keepers, and it may happen once in a while that the Department may get imposed upon by a man who farms out the work. I am investigating two or three such cases now; and it is the rule of the Department—which I intend vigorously to apply, that the salary shall go to the person who takes care of the light, and that it is not proper to give appointments to men simply to farm out the service.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not at all sympathise with the statements made by some of my hon. friends on this side, and I do not know that I altogether agree with the last remark of the Minister. I do not think that men should be appointed to farm out the lighthouses, but we know that in our maritime country there are generally a lot of maritime people where there are lighthouses, old ship captains, old mates, old seamen who are unable to make a living in any other manner, but who often make very good lighthouse keepers. I made it a rule when I was Minister of Marine, and I state this for the benefit of the hon. gentleman, that the age of a man in the position of lighthouse keeper was not so much a matter of consideration as his fitness otherwise for the performance of the duty. I recollect that on one occasion a gentleman who did not support the side of the House I was on—and it was charged against me that I had a sympathy for this side of the House even when I was a Minister—urged me very strongly to get an appointment for a person who he said was well capable of performing the duty out west. I spoke to one of my colleagues who had the patronage of that section of the country, and as he did not seem to object very much, I gave the man the appointment. When the time for the annual return of the inspector came round, and the oil vessel that visited the different lighthouses returned from her trip, the inspector came to me and said: "Did you see that man you appointed at Blue Bonnets?" I said: "No, what is the matter with him?" He said: "When we got to Blue Bonnets we had to hoist him up and place him on the rock on which the lighthouse stood." I said: "We will have to look into that;" but he said: "He has a daughter with him who is quite able to take care of the lighthouse." So I think it is only right to give those old seamen, who are probably quite unfit for anything else, these appointments. It is true, in dangerous places, persons should not be selected who are physically unable to get out in time of distress; but there are a very large number of lighthouses throughout this country which are more for the sake of guiding ships in ordinary commercial operations than where there is actual danger of shipwrecks; and whenever an old pilot, or an old captain, or mate, or seaman turns up, I made it a point to protect that class and give them the appointments wherever I could do so, and in cases like that I would impress on my hon. friend not to lay down too strictly any limit as to age or physical ability. The question is, is the work to be performed by him or a member of his family, his wife or his daughter, well done? And if it is, I think the rule should not be too strictly laid down. I acted on that principle, and it worked well, and I think that during my administration of the Department there were few complaints on that account.

Mr. FOSTER. You would not call that farming out, though?

Mr. MITCHELL. No, farming out is quite a different thing. Where a man gets the lighthouse for party service, and simply farms it out to somebody else, I would put my hand on that sort of thing. But in regard to these old pilots and seamen who are not able any longer to follow the pursuits of the sea, and who are always looking for these stations, I urge the hon. gentleman, if he finds that the work can be done by the man or by a member of his family, not to draw the line too strictly.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I would like to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that the lighthouse keeper at Mahone

Mr. FOSTER.

Bay, in the county of Lunenburg, a very old man, is farming the lighthouse out at about one-fourth of the salary. I just draw the Minister's attention to the matter.

Mr. JONES. There is another case which I would like to bring to the notice of the Minister of Marine. He may remember a pilot in Halifax called Bernard Gallagher, who was suspended by the Halifax commissioners for having gone in a steamer to Boston, instead of leaving it at the mouth of the harbor. He subsequently brought letters from the captain to prove that, owing to the condition of the weather, it was unsafe for him to attempt to land. The pilot commissioners suspended Gallagher, and his case was for some time in abeyance. They had the right to suspend or to fine him, but they had not the right to do both and withhold his salary. Subsequently, when the matter was brought to the attention of the Department, Gallagher was restored, but the pay he would have earned during the time he was suspended was withheld from him. He made a claim, very properly, I think, that, having been found in the right, he was entitled to be put in the position he would have been in had the commissioners not exerted their authority over him, and he lost six or nine months of his pay. I think it is a case that the Government should have entertained, and they should have put Gallagher in the position which, according to the ultimate decision, he was improperly deprived of. If the hon. Minister remembers the case, perhaps he can tell me what he will decide to do.

Mr. FOSTER. The case has been before me and the Department has decided it. Gallagher did go against the rules, and was suspended in consequence, and there were certain other actions of his. Taking all into consideration, I thought the commissioners were perfectly justified in suspending him, and when he was restored he had, of course, to lose the salary that had accrued on account of that conduct.

Mr. JONES. The hon. Minister will remember that he was suspended not for any other cause than having gone to Boston in that steamer. I am aware that the commissioners said he had done something irregular on a previous occasion, but that charge was not made against him, and I think the Minister will agree with me that if the board had condoned any previous dereliction of duty they could not act as they did, and that Gallagher should have received his pay.

Mr. FOSTER. It was not owing to previous, but to subsequent transactions.

Mr. GILLMOR. I would like to enquire of the Minister why the lighthouse keeper on the sand reef at St. Andrew's was suspended?

Mr. FOSTER. Who was the keeper?

Mr. GILLMOR. John Connolly. There are two lighthouses in my county, and three men have to be accommodated. There is the lighthouse at Blissess Island, kept by Mr. Hugh Maloney, who is about 65 years of age; there is the lighthouse at Sand Reef, kept by John Connolly, a man about 45 years of age. There is an ardent supporter of the Government living near Blissess Island, by the name of Cornelius McNicol, about 50 years of age. Mr. McNicol wanted Mr. Maloney's position, as he lived near Blissess Island, and Mr. Maloney resided in St. Andrew's, 30 miles away. In order to provide a light for Mr. McNicol, a superannuation had to be made; so the youngest man of the three was superannuated, Mr. Maloney was transferred to the lighthouse at St. Andrew's, and Mr. McNicol was given the lighthouse at Blissess Island. Mr. Connolly, who was superannuated, and who was 10 or 15 years younger than the man who took his place, now walks about at an expense of $10 to $15 per month to the Government.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You do not charge any politics to the Government?

Mr. GILLMOR. I do not. Perhaps the Minister may be able to give some reason why John Connelley was superannuated. I agree with the hon. member for Northumberland that mariners of advanced years, who have been pilots, should get these positions. The interests of the marine are consulted by putting these men into lighthouses, even if they are advanced in years, because they know the importance attached to the duty of lighthouse keepers. There are many places in which they are not called upon to man boats, in which there are no life-boats, and these men will attend to the work better than younger men.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has gone to ancient history in the case of Connelley, for he was dismissed before I became Minister, and I cannot answer the hon. gentleman on that point. He was taken away from the island, I believe, because a fog alarm was put there and it required an engineer to run it, and he was put on another light, from which he was removed because he became a cripple.

Mr. PLATT. This system of superannuating old and decrepit lighthouse keepers, because they are old and decrepit, and of putting others in their places for the same reasons, reminds me of a cartoon I saw a few days ago, of two old and decrepit gentlemen—the one about to leave an exalted position in this country on account of his ill-health, and the other about to assume that position for the same reason. It may be very well, in the system of lighthouse keeping, that old persons, having a knowledge of marine matters, should be appointed, where they run little or no risk of being called on to save lives or property. There is a case in point more recent than that mentioned by the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor). I refer to the change made with regard to False Ducks Island lighthouse. Mr. Swetman, an old gentleman advanced in years, who had kept that light for nearly a quarter of a century, without any complaints having been made against him, who was thoroughly competent to perform his duties, and was exceedingly anxious to continue performing them, was replaced by a man nearly as old as himself, who was not able to work his farm, and is totally incapable of managing a boat. Mr. Swetman, finding himself not at all at home on the mainland after he had left the island, sought among his friends to obtain some influence with the Minister, to restore him to his position. He even offered $500 to Mr. Lane, the new occupant of the position, if he would resign in his favor, and failing to succeed in getting back his old place, he and his family left the country, and are now in the United States. The gentleman appointed is nearly 70 years old, ill in health, and unable to do the work alone. But he has been an active politician all his life; and I am told he was in a position to pay $500 or $600 to influential parties to secure the coveted position. That, of course, is mere rumor, and perhaps the Minister will busy himself finding out if it has any foundation in fact. I would ask the Minister, speaking of the responsibilities of lighthouse keepers, if he is in the habit of naming several keepers to one light? Who is responsible for keeping the Deseronto light, which the Rathbun Company has charge of? I do not know who the Government would superannuate in this case, as the company is composed of some 10 to 15 persons, or who would be the first superannuated. Perhaps it is the best way to manage a light to give it in charge of several keepers, but that is contrary to the principle laid down, that these positions should be given to deserving mariners, be the salary ever so small; and I am confident that the Rathbun Company could very well dispense with this emolument. In fact, it seems to me strange that that rich and influential company should receive such an appointment.

Mr. FOSTER. As to the displacement of the keeper of the light at False Ducks Island, that was done on the recommendation of our officers that he was incompetent, as an improved light was put there and he was unable to take charge of it. The report of our officer stated that he was incompetent, and on that ground he was removed and another put in his place. As to the Deseronto light, we pay the company to take charge of it, and we find that to be a cheaper way than otherwise. As to which one of the members of the company should be superannuated, that, of course, is another matter, and it will be time enough to decide that when the occasion arises.

Mr. PLATT. Will the hon. gentleman say that, in the case of Mr. Swetman, demands have not been made of the same kind ever since he has been in office, and that in many cases it has not been stated that Mr. Swetman was willing to accept superannuation, and was unfit for his position before the new light was put there. If Mr. Swetman is incompetent to perform the duties, certainly the present man is totally unfit to perform them, because everyone who knows the two men is aware that Mr. Swetman is the stronger and abler man of the two, and is only two or three years older than his successor.

Mr. JONES. At the risk of incurring the displeasure of the Ex-high Commissioner and future High Commissioner, if he were here, I have another letter to read to the House. These letters have been sent to me. I do not vouch for their accuracy, but I feel that it is my duty to bring such letters to the notice of the House:

“SYDNEY, CAPE BRETON.

“Capt. John Lorway, who had been port warden of this port since 1874, has been in the most ruthless manner dismissed recently, if not in whole, at least in part, from that position. This port of Sydney includes the piers of the Sydney and Louisburg Company, the International Coal and Railway Company, and also the Victoria pier. By some inexplicable edict of the Government, Capt. Lorway's services have been dispensed with at the Victoria and International piers, at which points Mr. Barrington, at the Victoria, and a Mr. Stirling at the International, have been appointed.”

Now, it would appear from this that Captain Lorway, whom I know by reputation, though I think he is known better by my hon. colleague (Mr. Kenny), is a very energetic man. It seems that he has been discharging the duties of port warden there since 1874, and that he has been dismissed in a most summary manner in order to provide appointments for two other parties. This is multiplying offices. Instead of one port warden at the port of Sydney, it appears they are to have three port wardens. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the trade of that port to express any opinion in regard to that, but it seems to me that, if Captain Lorway has been able to discharge the duties of his office since 1874, it was a fair argument in favor of his being able to continue to discharge them for the future. I believe the information I have received to be strictly accurate.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman's information, in regard to the other matters on which he has spoken, is no more reliable than that, I think I am safe in saying it will not be found to be true. Mr. Lorway has not been dismissed.

Mr. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). In reference to the statement of the hon. gentleman, I desire to inform the House of the particulars in regard to this official. Capt. Lorway has been the port warden for Sydney for many years, his duties extending to Victoria mines, the shipping pier of which was established a sub-port of entry last year, and Capt. Lorway, who lives eight miles from the port, has been in the habit of farming out his duties to Mr. Barrington, who is now appointed on the recommendation of the manager of the mines, and sent through my hon. colleague and myself to the Minister of Marine. It is the same case in regard to the International pier, where Capt. Lorway has been in the habit of transferring his duties there to Mr. Stirling, if I mistake not, who has been appointed on the recommendation of the manager of the mine, who was interested in the duties being conducted by a person who was in a position to suit the convenience of the shipping, so that it would not necessitate the shipmasters travelling two miles in one case, and eight miles in another, in order to go to Sydney. Capt. Lorway is still port warden of Sydney, but not for these other places, because these other gentlemen have been appointed.

Mr. JONES. Then, what the Minister of Marine stated was correct in one part and not correct in another part. Mr. Lorway has been dismissed to the extent of not having the same jurisdiction as before. If the hon. gentleman thinks it was wrong that Capt. Lorway should have farmed out his office in the manner he has explained—upon which I offer no opinion, and in regard to which I am inclined to agree with him—that would place the Government in an awkward position in regard to the lighthouse keepers, who have, as I understand, farmed out their positions.

Agencies, rents and contingencies..... $20,160

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before this vote is granted, I desire to call the attention of the Minister to some curious items of expenditure which occur from time to time under the head of that remarkably elastic word "contingencies." It is a very curious and interesting study to take up the blue-book and go through the items of contingencies. They cover a multitude of sins. I had the curiosity the other day, just after an interesting debate in this House, in which the hon. gentleman from Queen's, N.S. (Mr. Freeman), whom I now see in his place, took a very leading and prominent part, to examine some of the items in the report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries with reference to these contingencies; and, knowing the Minister to be an apostle of temperance principles, and not only to be a very consistent temperance man himself, but to be possessed with a strong mania for enforcing his principles on others—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Am I mis-stating the hon. gentleman's position? I have been here for four or five years, and I do the hon. gentleman the justice to say that I have heard him make speeches, sometimes very long speeches, endeavoring to prove that it is right and just that his peculiar ideas on the temperance question should be rigidly enforced upon all people in this Dominion.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they different from yours?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is not the question we are discussing now. We are coming to the question of how he applies his principles when he has the control of public moneys. Looking down the list of contingencies, I found the name of Thomas Furlong, a name which is not unfamiliar to many of us. My hon. friend from St. John has heard of him before. I saw opposite to the name of Mr. Furlong the word "supplies," and that is a word which is almost as elastic as "contingencies." On page 147 of the report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, I found an amount of $266.26 for supplies. No more information was given. I knew that Mr. Furlong was a gentleman who supplied a very excellent character of wine, good brandies and high-wines.

An hon. MEMBER. Dry wines?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And dry wines too, and excellent beer. I pursued my enquiries a little further, and, as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was so reticent in his report, I thought it wise to refer to the report of the Auditor General, where all these matters are given. I turned to that report and after a good deal of research I found the $266.25 which the hon. gentleman had expended of the public moneys of this country, had gone for the purchase of brandy, wine and cigars. That will be found on page 358 of the Auditor General's report, I thought it must be some mistake, and I brought it to the attention of the hon. gentleman in order that he might rate the Auditor General for having, in his report, stated that the apostle of temperance in this country,

Mr. McDougall (Cape Breton):

as soon as he became Minister of Marine, had appropriated $266 to purchase brandy and wine to destroy the morals of the men under his command. I am not quite sure whether I am correctly quoting the language used by the hon. member for Queen's, N. S. (Mr. Freeman), but if I understood him correctly the other day, he contended that any man who used wine, or who put wine to his neighbor's lips, was destroying the morals of that man; and he contended that no man could be a Christian who would countenance, openly or indirectly, this, what he was pleased to call, accursed traffic. Now, that hon. gentleman is one of the strongest supporters of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries who appropriates the public money of the people for the purpose of dealing in this accursed traffic, for the purpose of supplying the steamers under the Marine Department with brandy, wine and cigars—raising a storm at sea—

Mr. FOSTER. It was to calm a storm.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Brandy, wine and cigars supplied by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the men and officers—I suppose it was for the officers, because if he was giving it to the men, it would have been ordinary grog. The only suggestion I have to make to the House is that it would be more in keeping with his own principles if he had paid for that wine and brandy out of his own pocket.

Mr. FOSTER. I never do that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He prefers to take it out of the pockets of the public. It is a matter on which people may differ. However, I would like the Minister to give some explanation to the House, and especially to his earnest and consistent supporter from Queen's, Nova Scotia.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend was no doubt actuated by curiosity in looking over these items. But his course and his remarks resemble a good many of the attacks which have been made upon my temperance principles. His whole animus to-night has not been so much to condemn the waste of public money, as to point out that the gentleman whom he chooses to call the apostle of temperance, buys brandy, wine and cigars for the officers in his Department. I have nothing to say but this: that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as at present constituted, bought no wine, no brandy, and no cigars, and he does not intend to, with his own money or with public money. My hon. friend is merely quoting ancient history.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has evidently explained this matter thoroughly to the satisfaction of his supporters. I beg leave to tell them that the quotation I gave is from the report of George E. Foster, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that the expenditure is made under his administration and charged by him in the report submitted to this House.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend ought to be honest enough to state that that report goes from the first of July, 1885, to the first July, 1886; that I took this office on the 10th December, 1885, and I assumed it about the middle of January, 1886.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do I understand the hon. gentleman to deny that the money was paid? Does he deny that I was correct in reading from his report, that it appears on the face of his report? There is no date, no explanation has been given at all yet. I want to know whether the money was spent in the purchase of wine, brandy or cigars. If the hon. gentleman thinks he closes the whole matter by stating that it was purchased before he took charge of the Department, he can say so, and disavow personal responsibility. His accusation that I was animated by animus is entirely uncalled for. It does not appear from the report when the liquors were purchased. Nobody could tell whether they were purchased by the hon. gentleman personally, or by his orders.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend had merely stated that there appeared an item in the report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for 1886, a charge of $266 for liquors that ought not to have been paid, and had asked an explanation, he would have been entirely within his province. But he did not do that. He took occasion to state, and to have his words placed in the Hansard, that this apostle of temperance who has been trying to enforce his opinions upon both sides of the House, has been guilty of an extreme inconsistency. Well, I leave the question of my consistency to the House on both sides of it. But when he asks if it is right that public money should be expended in this way, that is quite a different thing. If the hon. gentleman will stand up here and state that he is not prepared to take my word for it, I leave him to take that course if he pleases. If he wants an explicit denial, I give it to him now in plain English. I have never bought any intoxicating liquors of any kind since I have been Minister of Marine and Fisheries, nor have I allowed it to be bought for the use of the marine service.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) So far that is satisfactory, but the hon. gentleman has withheld the fact that he paid the bill since he came in himself.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman does not admit the fact that he paid the bill since he came in.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does he deny it?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do that that account runs from 1st July, 1885, to 1st July, 1886, and I was not in the office until January, 1886. I want to ask my hon. friend now if he will do me the justice to state before this House and the country that he was wrong in charging me with inconsistency.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the hon. gentleman says that the bill was not paid since he took charge of the Department, very well.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). How could he help paying it?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to know whether the hon. gentleman will deny that the bill was paid since he took charge of the Department. If he says it was not paid since he took charge, I am perfectly prepared to say that he is not open to any charge of inconsistency.

Mr. McLELAN. This bill was incurred during the time I had charge of the Department. It was paid by my order. It was incurred without my knowledge by some person connected with the Lansdowne at or about the time she was launched. We have some seven steamers in all running, and the agents at the different ports have strict orders not to furnish wines, brandies or liquors further than may be necessary in case of sickness, and as they may be prescribed. Some one connected with the Lansdowne at the time of the launching gave an order for liquors to Messrs. Furlong. The agents refused to pay the bill—that was in 1884. The bill stood till sometime in the summer or fall of 1885.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) After the hon. gentleman left the Department?

Mr. McLELAN. No, the bill had been sent there. The firm was continually pressing for payment. An error had been made by some officer connected with the Department in making such a purchase, and I thought that as those dealers had been kept out of their money so long, they should be paid, and I ordered the bill to be paid. It was impressed on the officers and all connected with the Department, that the orders of the Department had been violated in procuring wines and liquors. I ordered the bill to be paid. My successor I think knew nothing about it, either as to when it was contracted or when it was paid.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Withdraw what?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Your statement.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have already stated that if the hon. gentleman would state to this House that that bill was not paid since he took charge of the Department—

Some hon. MEMBERS. He has.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He has not said so. He has said it was paid on the order of the ex-Minister—he does not say since he took charge of the Department.

Mr. BROWN. Withdraw.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What does the hon. member for Hamilton mean? Does he not understand the meaning of the English language. My statement was quite sufficient. If this money which was paid under the ex-Minister of Marine by his orders—

Mr. McLELAN. It was paid by my order.

Mr. DAVIES,—and before he left the Department.

Mr. McLELAN. I was acting either as principal or Acting Minister, I do not know which, when I gave the order to close this up.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am quite aware that the hon. gentleman gave the order, if he gives his word that such is so. That is quite enough as regards the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Hon. gentlemen opposite evidently approve of the whole of this expenditure. The cheers with which they greeted the statement that the account had been paid by the ex-Minister is sufficient evidence of that. There were two points we were considering: Whether this expenditure is justified, and whether the Minister of Marine is open to the charge of inconsistency for being a party to it. If he says he was not a party, then he is not open to the charges of inconsistency.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell.) Why cannot you honestly withdraw it?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Because there is not the slightest occasion for the hon. gentleman doing so.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not know what the hon. gentleman wants. I take up the estimate of the Minister of Marine, showing that $266 were paid by his Department for brandy, wine and cigars. I make the charge that this is a queer item for an apostle of temperance. The hon. gentleman, the ex-Minister, then says that he paid the amount, and he is also a great apostle of temperance, and the inconsistency must therefore rest upon his shoulders. If that is so, the present Minister of Marine is free from it. But that does not clear the Department of the charge. Is it not equally as worthy of condemnation if this money was spent, and is not the Minister called upon to condemn it just as strongly, whether the amount was paid by his predecessor or not? Certainly it is; and it is all nonsense for hon. gentlemen to say that because the Minister of Marine has cleared his own skirts in the matter, therefore the expenditure is not in itself bad. It is bad and ought to be condemned.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is another question.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is the question we are discussing now. I still understand the ex-Minister of Marine to say that the account was paid by him after he ceased to be Minister of Marine.

Mr. McLELAN. I do not remember the date. I know I was in charge of the Department when I gave the order to have the bill paid. I disapproved of the expenditure, and the account was unpaid for more than a year after it had been incurred. The agents refused to recognise the account, knowing their general instructions, and referred it to the Department, and I refused to pay it, and it finally stood for a year or eighteen months, when I ordered it to be paid.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think this is quite a tempest in a tea-pot. An amount of fuss has been made about this matter that it does not deserve. I do not think more of the two hon. gentlemen who have occupied the position of head of the Department because they have taken this ground, and have given orders not to allow any brandy, wines or cigars to be used on Government vessels. I recollect when I happened to occupy a position on the other side of the House, or, I believe, on the same side on which I am now, when my friends who are sitting here were sitting on the Government benches—I recollect that they attacked me because there was brandy, wine, champagne and cigars furnished to the steamers Napoleon and Lady Head during a period of seven years, when those vessels were used by the right hon. gentleman opposite, by myself, by the late Sir George Cartier, by the railway commissioners taking trips—in the public service—and those expenditures during eight or nine years were grouped together and made quite a large sum. I did then what I would do to-day if I were Minister of Marine. If I had a commodore, as the hon. gentleman has, in charge of a fleet of vessels, a gentleman who necessarily must be brought in contact with people of his own standing, connected with the American and British fleets, and who invited him on board their ships and extended hospitality to him, I would be perfectly ashamed if he could not provide himself with the necessary means of returning their civility. I must say that, perhaps, the hon. gentleman's temperance principles prevent him from carrying that out; but it is much more in accord with what is due to persons occupying those positions in command of vessels owned by the Government. They should be placed in such a position as to be able to return their hospitality, such as the admiral of the fleet, for the Lansdowne was, no doubt, the flag-ship.

Mr. FOSTER. The admiral agrees with me.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have had many a glass of wine with him. He might agree with you to your face, but I have no doubt behind your back he would say: "I wish we had a Minister who was not a temperance man." While I am not going to enter into any controversy and attack the temperance principles of the present Minister of Marine, I will say this: that I would deal with the public service as I would if on board my own ship. I would place commanders in the position to treat gentlemen occupying similar positions to those they occupy themselves, as is the custom all over the world, and give them a glass of wine when they visited my ship. I never found fault with officers on this account, and the service was not less satisfactorily performed than compared with to-day. I deprecate the idea of finding fault with the Minister because this item is in the estimates. The hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) has forgotten—perhaps he was not here—how I was assailed on account of an accumulation of expenditures during several years for stores put on board the Government ships, not for my own use but for the use, as I said before, of the right hon. gentleman, the Premier, and occasionally of his colleagues, when they wanted a vessel to go down the river or to go to Cape Breton or Prince Edward Island as they often did. I was delighted to have it in my power to take the responsibility of placing everything on the vessel tending to the comfort and convenience of those gentlemen and their friends. I never shirked that responsibility, and I would like to see the fleet, or at all events the flag-ship and those vessels used in that way, when the Ministers want to go and take a cruise around for the purpose of seeing the position of the country, or benefiting their health—I would like to see them fitted out in a way that would conduce to their comfort and happiness. For instance, if the Premier wanted to take a trip, would I like to see the vessel go off without a little champagne for him? Certainly not. I suppose the hon. gentleman would object to a little marmalade and jelly but I don't think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would object to those articles, nor do I object to the other luxuries, and as there has been a sufficient explanation of the item, I think we should now let the matter drop. I would just say, however, to the hon. gentleman, let him shut his eyes and say to Capt. Scott: Do what is customary in the position in which you are, I will take the responsibility for infringing on my temperance principles; do what is necessary in order to treat as gentlemen the people who come on board; do not restrict your natural instinct as an old naval captain—

Mr. McLELLAN.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) An old salt.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes; an old salt. I would tell him not to restrain those instincts altogether—and I know what are his natural instincts—but I would allow him to have a little of those luxuries that are expected by gentlemen in his own station when they go on board his vessel.

Mr. FREEMAN. I would not have attempted to occupy the time of the House only that I have been misrepresented, and I wish to correct that misrepresentation. The hon. gentleman representing Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), has thought proper to attribute to me words I never used. I was going to say I was surprised at his doing so, but I am not greatly surprised, after listening to the manner in which he tries to blacken the character of the Minister of Marine, for that certainly was his object; and I never saw an attempt in a police court made more persistently to blacken a character than his attempt to-night. I did not say a man could not be a Christian if he drank liquor at all, I believe that the hon. gentleman passes for a Christian—I am told he does in his own county, on his own island—and also for a temperance man. I do not know how correct that is, but I am told so.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I never—

Mr. FREEMAN. You do not pass for a temperance man. Then you pass for an apostle of the rum interest. You say that because I pass for a temperance man I am an apostle of temperance, and I presume, in the same way, the hon. gentleman is an apostle of the rum interest, and is quite willing to accept the position he has chosen for himself. But I wish to state distinctly that I did not say, nor do I believe or think, nor have I ever intimated, and I should be sorry to intimate, any such sentiment as that a man cannot be a Christian and take liquor. There was nothing in my speech to lead any person to state anything of that kind. I am sorry I touched the hon. gentleman by my vindicating, as I was privileged to do, the cause of prohibition. I am sorry to have touched him so keenly that he should call me into this debate. Was it so trying to him that I should say the Minister of Marine was a true temperance man? If I had been aware that that statement would touch him so keenly, I would not have made it; I hope he will forgive me for that, and he may preach his anti-temperance principles as much as he pleases. I will not trouble him in his apostleship. He can go on to any extent he pleases; I will not cross his path. But at all events he has undeceived me; I had a different opinion of him from what I had heard. I have not had the honor of the hon. gentleman's acquaintance, but it was reported to me that he was not only a Christian man but a temperance man in the county in which he lived. I presume his constituents will now be enlightened as to his position.

Maintenance and repairs to lights, fog whistles, buoys and beacons, and humane establishments, &c. $323,000

Mr. PLATT. I wish to call the attention of the Minister to an important matter with regard to the rearrangement of the range lights at Weller's Bay. Two or three years ago representations were made to the Department to have the lights moved so as to afford proper protection to vessels entering the channel to Weller's Bay. Nothing has been done further than to send an engineer to that locality and have a survey made. I have not seen his report, but I was told by an official of the Department two years ago that the lights would be so arranged as to afford proper protection to mariners. It will take but a small amount of money and but very little time to accomplish what sailors think is very important, and I trust the Minister will make a note and see that this matter is attended to without delay, now that the sailing season is fully open and the dangerous season will soon approach. It has been said by those who were saved by the life-saving crew at that place two years ago, that had those lights been higher, and had they afforded a proper range, they might have succeeded in making the harbor without their vessel being wrecked. I trust the Minister will not allow the summer to pass without attending to this matter.

Mr. CAMPBELL (Kent). Under this head I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Marine to the great necessity for providing some facilities for helping vessels in distress along the shores of Lake Erie. Last year, I believe, a promise was made by the Government that they would establish a life-boat service along those harbors, but whether they intend to carry out that promise I do not know. I think that a life-boat would not be as serviceable as a wrecking tug, and I think a wrecking tug should be put upon that coast. Every year a great deal of property is destroyed by vessels being driven on the shore, and not a summer passes in which a great many lives are not lost. I trust the Minister of Marine will give his attention to this matter, especially as in the western part of Ontario there is not a dollar being spent for these purposes. We hear of thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars being voted every night for Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. It is all right in its place if it is needed there; but they must recollect that there are other parts of this Dominion than Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Not a year passes in which there are not thousands and tens of thousands of dollars worth of property lost, and valuable lives lost there, and if a wrecking tug were sent to ply along that coast, which would be available in case of storms to go to the relief of vessels in distress, it would be the means of saving a great deal of property and a great many valuable lives every year, and would, I believe, be self-sustaining. I think the matter is of sufficient importance to demand the attention of the Department, and I trust the Minister will give his attention to it.

Mr. JONES. This item embraces a very large expenditure. I gave some attention to this matter in the Committee on Public Accounts. I noticed in the report of the Minister of Marine large accounts for supplies of coal and other articles, and I had the accounts produced before the committee. Now, I am not prepared to say that the charges made for general supplies were exorbitant, because I am not in a position to express an opinion on that subject; but there was one charge there which attracted my attention. Having occasion to purchase a large quantity of coal for the use of steamers with which I am connected, I found that the Government were charged for coal at the rate of $3.10 per ton, when we were purchasing coal from collieries of Nova Scotia at the same time at $2.80, a difference of 30 cents per ton. The hon. gentleman stated before the Public Accounts Committee that the Government had invited tenders from the various companies, and had accepted the lowest tender; but it appeared to me a very strange circumstance that private individuals could purchase coal for 30 cents a ton less than the Government. With reference to the accounts generally, I said then what I desire to repeat now, that there appears to be a looseness in the management of that Department which, to my mind as a business man, was very extraordinary indeed. A large number of accounts were brought down without a voucher or certificate from the storekeeper or the superintendent at Halifax of the goods having been received, and the prices having been regular. The hon. gentleman might say that the Department at Halifax who paid the accounts would know whether they were correct or not. To that extent he might be correct, but the hon. gentleman will admit that these accounts should have attached to them, like the accounts of the other Departments, a certificate from the proper officer that the goods were received, and that the prices were regular. There was a want of arrangement and method about those accounts which showed a lack of business capacity which was not very creditable to the head of the Department, and greatly in contrast to the accounts in the Railway Department, which I found all regularly kept and accompanied by the certificates of the storekeepers or superintendents that the goods had been received and the prices had been regular. On the part of all the officers of that Department there was an evidence of carefulness and supervision, which was lamentably wanting in the case of the Marine and Fisheries Department. One of the clerks of that Department also sent in an account for about $120 a month, including truckage, labor and incidental expenses. That account should have been certified by the head of the Department. An account sent in in that way by a clerk of the Department is no voucher; he is not the man the public look to; we must look to the head of the Department there. And here I venture to suggest to the Minister of Marine that it would add much to the credit of his Department if the accounts were conducted in the same way as in the Railway Department, all the accounts certified by the officers on the spot, so that when called on by the Committee on Public Accounts, they could be presented in proper form. Certainly it would save the Minister a great deal of trouble, and it would be more businesslike in every way.

Mr. FOSTER. I may say, as I stated at the Public Accounts Committee that the coal was tendered for, and we took it at the lowest tender. Of course, we have to obtain tenders at the beginning of the season for our whole season's supply. We do not get a very large quantity of coal, but the fact remains that we got it by tender, and that we accepted the lowest tender.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Is the work of repairing on the lighthouses done by tender?

Mr. FOSTER. Wherever it is possible to have plans and specifications, so that tenders can be taken, the work is done by tender. But the hon. gentleman will see that there are a great many repairs that cannot be done by tender. In such cases work is done under the supervision of our agent, who is responsible.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In the Province of New Brunswick, iron work on these lighthouses, which could be done by tender, I find is done by one individual; and a very large amount of money is paid to this individual, who lives in St. John, for the repair of lighthouses all over the Province. It appears to me that if these works were let by tender, persons in the trade would be glad to tender for them, and a great deal of saving would be effected. I presume, if that were the case, my hon. friend would lose at St. John the valuable services of this individual, who took an active part in the elections, and distributed tickets entitling men to employment on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. JONES. The hon. the Minister says he received tenders for the coal. Well, it seems strange he could not buy coal on as favorable terms as private individuals. Of course, I accept his statement, but it appears to me there must be some consideration attached to it, that would make the mining companies charge the Government 30 cents per ton more than they would the public. The hon. gentleman says this is not very much, but it is sufficient to give rise to the reasonable suspicion that the same discrepancy would be found with general supplies. The hon. gentleman does not take tenders, I believe, for supplies for the steamers? One need only look over the accounts to see the same names recurring continually, and to find ground for the boasts made by parties from Halifax, who had the supplying of the public Departments, particularly Marine and Fisheries, that they made large sums of money from the Government during the past three years. I caution the hon. gentleman in this respect, because it is desirable that we should avoid a reputation of the Fraser-Reynolds scandal we had in Halifax a few years ago under the previous Administration.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has not shown a single instance in which market prices have been exceeded. He has given a good deal of advice in repeated doses, but he has not shown an instance of the rates being higher than the market rates.

Mr. JONES. I did.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman mentioned coal; but the Department called for tenders, and accepted the lowest tender. The hon. gentleman may not find it difficult to explain how it is he has got coal cheaper. There may have been a difference in the coal, or in the place of delivery, or in some other respects.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). I wish to point out to the Minister that in all the repairs made to lighthouses in Shelburne county, the carpenters are sent from Halifax and their travelling expenses paid, when just as good men could be found in the county to do the work. I desire to draw attention to the fact that Shelburne light is not now in the condition in which it should be. I do not know whether the fault is in the lantern or in the keeper, but seafaring men have desired me to draw the attention of the Minister to the matter. I would also ask, what is the intention of the Department with regard to placing an automatic buoy at Lockeport?

Mr. FOSTER. No provision has been made for that so far.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). As far back as 1881, I directed the attention of the Department to this, and forwarded to it a petition numerously signed by the residents of the county, and by leading merchants in Halifax interested in the trade of Lockeport—a petition asking that an automatic buoy be placed there. The Minister of Public Works in 1882, who was then putting through the estimates of Marine and Fisheries, said he would take the matter under consideration. Again, in 1884, the Postmaster General, who was then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, said he would consider the matter. This port is one of the most important outside of Lunenburg, in western Nova Scotia. It is frequented by a large number of fishing vessels, schooners and brigs, and I trust that, after these repeated promises to take this subject into consideration, the Government will find means to meet the wishes of the people of that county. Just now, I may say, it will be to the advantage of the Government to have a buoy placed there, as a bye-election will shortly take place there, and the Government might benefit by this work.

Mr. BRIEN. I agree with all that has been said by the hon. member for Kent, with regard to putting a wrecking tug in that portion of the western part of Canada. I am glad that Ontario is heard from once in a while, for, during the last four weeks, having listened to the eloquent dissertations from the members of other Provinces, I began to fear that the people would think Ontario had gone out of the Confederation altogether. The Chairman will pardon me if I depart somewhat from the main point of the discussion, and draw the attention to the Minister of Public Works to the petition from the people of Pelee Island, asking that that island may be connected with the mainland by means of a cable. It is important that a life-saving station should be established there, as many wrecks occur in that vicinity.
Mr. WELDON.

Mr. FOSTER. A life-saving station has been established at Pelee Island.

Mr. BRIEN. A lighthouse should be established in connection with it, not only on account of the wrecks that take place, but also on account of the great disadvantage to the inhabitants in reaching the shore, and communicating the news of any disaster, so as to get assistance. This district, I may add, did good service for my opponent in the last campaign, and he stated distinctly that he had the promise of the Minister of Public Works, that an amount would be placed in the Estimates this year for making that cable. This has not been done. I thought, until the Supplementary Estimates were brought down, that the amount would be placed in them, but the county which I represent returned a Liberal instead of a supporter of the Government; still, I thought it was in accordance with the policy of the Government, as announced the other night,—that where a Liberal was returned they would consult their own friends, and I thought I would allow them to consult their friends, and, if we can get a cable, I would be more satisfied no matter at whose suggestion. This matter is of great importance. I think it has been represented to the Government already. The Americans have three islands there, and I have it on good authority that, if the Government will connect Pelee Island with the mainland in South Essex, the Americans will carry the cable on to their mainland. The island is one of the richest in Canada. It has almost a monopoly of grape growing, and a trade of great importance could be established there. The Ministry have constantly stated that it is their desire to foster and protect native industries and prevent their going to the other side, but at present the connection of that island is better with the American side than with the Canadian, as the boats arrive there more frequently, and the consequence is that the greater part of the trade goes to the United States. It is one of the best wine producing countries, but it suffers from a great disadvantage, owing to its isolated position, not having proper communication with the mainland. The principal production is that of fruit of a perishable character, and competition, by means of telegraph, would enable them to market their fruit more readily, in the fact that almost all the productions of the island are grapes. It is well adapted for that sort of trade. It would be a good investment for anyone to go there now, as the property is valuable. If they had communication, they would be enabled to make their market at a proper time. During the winter season, however, they are practically shut off from the rest of the world, but if they had telegraphic communication they could transact business which they cannot do now. Many lives have been lost in trying to reach the shore. That has happened on many occasions, and, though the Government has decided not to place a cable this year, I hope they will give the matter their earnest and serious consideration, and will also establish a lighthouse upon the island, which would be of great advantage to the people, not only of that section of country, but of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. HESSON. Order.

Mr. BRIEN. Less noise and better manners would be more proper. I do not desire to delay the House. I am as anxious as any other man to get home, but I think south Essex should be heard from as well as any other constituency, and these frequent interruptions are very objectionable. There seems to be a disposition on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to prevent junior members of the House from being listened to. If parliamentary experience causes a man to forget to extend that courtesy which is due even to a political opponent, then, I hope my parliamentary experience may be short. The result of that will be that they will cease to exercise the courtesy which should be exercised towards a political opponent, and, for my part, if hon. gentlemen will not show good manners, I hope my political career will be short. I trust that the Government will give this matter their very serious consideration, and that they will fulfil in this case, as they have in many cases, their pre-election promises.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). I desire to call attention to the manner in which the buoy service is carried out. These buoys are placed under the care of the harbor masters, and in many cases a large sum of money is paid out, and the work is inefficiently performed. I have directed the attention of the Deputy Minister to the condition of the buoys in some parts of the county I represent. I presume the Department will make some enquiry into that matter. I believe it would be to the advantage of the service if it were placed under the inspector of lighthouses or some other competent person. There is a dangerous ledge at Seal Island, opposite the waters of Shelburne county, which is known as Blonde Rock, and the buoy has been off for six months, and perhaps longer. It is said that the buoy breaks away. What can you expect? The Department sends down a steamer, and places the buoy. They never look at the buoy or sight the chain until it breaks away. They should do what they do on the American coast. These buoys should be sighted every three months, or at least every six months. That is the only way in which they can be kept in place. I trust the Minister will make some enquiry into this. Then, again, there is the harbor of Lockport, which is one of the most difficult harbors for entrance—that is the inner harbor—and last year the Department expended $6 for the purpose of looking after the buoys. I have directed the attention of the Department to this, and the harbor master tells me that he has done so also. I went to the Department the other day, and asked for the report of the harbor master, but no such report could be found. He gets a salary of $200 for this purpose, and he sits in his office and acts as a bank agent, and he is not in a position to look after a work like this. Six or seven buoys are required there, and for some years I have been trying to get something done, but, of course, I am on the Opposition side of the House, and that seems to have some weight. I do not come here to support the general policy of the Government, but I come to represent my constituency and its interests; and, in a matter affecting the people of Shelburne county, I wish to see their interests attended to. It has been stated that, in regard to such matters as this, they would receive attention. I trust that these proposals will be adopted by the Minister. I have had no personal intercourse with him, but I have directed the attention of the Department to the matter in other ways.

Mr. FOSTER. If I am correctly informed, the harbor master has met and effectually disposed of the objections which the hon. gentleman has made.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Some time ago I sent to the Minister a petition, signed by parties who were interested in the navigation of the Sydenham River, which is in my constituency; and as to the importance of a lighthouse being erected at the entrance of the river. The hon. gentleman knows that the trade of the port in that river is one of the most extensive in the Dominion. I received from the hon. gentleman's deputy a letter informing me, first, that enquiry would be made by certain parties and further information would be required as to what action the Government would take, but a second letter was sent to me stating that some captain who had forty odd years' service had reported that a lighthouse or a range light was unnecessary at that point. The petitioners are all parties who are more or less interested in the navigation there. Capt. Ribble, whose name is at the head of the petition, for twenty years has every week during the season of navigation sailed in and out at that point, and he has had probably more experience in a single year than the party the hon. gentleman consulted has had in his life. And that is true of other parties. If the hon. gentleman were to consult those people who frequent that river, they would tell him that vessels are often obliged to lie at the mouth of the river and wait for daylight before they can venture to enter. Then there is the Custom house officer, who is a friend and zealous supporter of the hon. gentleman, Mr. Fraser, of Wallaceburg. If the Minister would consult him, he could give him information of value, but, because a man has been a captain on the lake for many years, it does not follow that he would be able to give any reliable information. I am sure that none of those parties who signed this petition have another interest than that which arises from the advantages to navigation. They would not have asked for this improvement if experience had not pointed out that it would be advantageous.

Completion and construction of lighthouses and fog alarms $40,000

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Marine to the fog alarm at Quaco. Some years ago I called the attention of the Department to the situation of the lighthouse there. Since the light has been taken off there and put on the highlands, several wrecks have occurred, and the last one was accompanied with a melancholy loss of life. Last year, when tenders were put out for a fog alarm, I asked whether it would be built on the reef instead of the mainland. I understood the Minister then assured my colleague and myself that it would be put on the reef. I am told that the present fog alarm is of very little use where it is placed, and I am surprised now to find that it is being placed on the reef.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is mistaken in saying that I stated that it would be put upon the reef. Though I did not state that, I think some members in the House did say so when the question was asked if it would be placed on the reef. But it was not to be put on the reef. It would be difficult to have a fog alarm on the reef because there is no supply of water. I think if either of the buildings were to be differently placed, the light should be upon the reef, rather than upon the mainland. The light is now upon the mainland, and we have supplemented it by a fog alarm.

Mr. KIRK. I think it has been customary for the Minister to place in the hands of members a list of the lighthouses intended to be built during the year.

Mr. FOSTER. I will lay it on the Table.

Mr. KIRK. A number of years ago a petition came from the county of Guysboro' asking for a lighthouse on a certain island there. This petition was reported upon favorably by the officers of the Government, and the Government decided to build a lighthouse there. The fact was made known in the list which was placed in the hands of members, that the lighthouse was to be built on Goose Island, in the county of Guysboro'. It was not built, however, as promised, and the next year I asked the then Minister of Marine why the lighthouse was not built according to the vote which was passed. He answered me by saying that the parties who owned the land were asking for it more than the Government were willing to pay, and that they intended to take steps to expropriate the land and build the lighthouse; but it has not yet been built. Does the Minister intend to build it this year?

Mr. FOSTER. The land has not been secured, and it is not the intention to build this year. There is some difficulty about the title.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). I would like to ask the Minister what he proposes to do towards replacing the lightship at Barrington in my county? The repairs that have been put upon it are simply trifling.

Mr. FOSTER. The repairs have been slight for a purpose, because we do not intend to utilise it except for this season. Tenders have been called for and a new lightship will be put upon the station.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). I would like to ask if the erection of a lighthouse on West Head, Barrington Harbor, comes out of this $40,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, it does.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne.) The answer which was given the other night across the House was quite satisfactory to myself. Of course, I know that the distinguished gentleman whom I had the honor of defeating the last election, had nothing to do in recommending it; though, upon the face of the answer made by the Minister, it might be supposed that nothing had been heard of this West Head light until it was brought to the attention of the Department by a Major General and his (the Minister's) officers. I desire to state, that in 1881, a petition was presented to the Department for this light, and that petition was signed by the master mariners, the shipowners, and by people who know something about the locality. But these gentlemen had no weight or influence with the hon. gentleman's predecessor, and it was left for a gentleman who, by accident, happened to be a political supporter of the present Government, to bring this to the attention of the Department. In 1882, Sir Hector Langevin, then Acting Minister of Marine, told me he had this light under consideration, that his officers had reported favorably upon it. The present Postmaster General told me, in 1884, that he intended to visit the western section of Nova Scotia, and examine this place, and if he found that the statements in the petition were correct, the lighthouse would be built. Now, it seems that because Major General Laurie saw fit to recommend or urge upon the Department this light, it is proposed to be placed there in the public interest. I am glad to have the light placed there, and I am glad to have the assistance of any person possessing influence with the Department. I have done my duty in pressing the wants and claims of the constituency I represent on the various Ministers who have presided over the Department, and I must say that from them I have obtained very little satisfaction. But two or three Ministers have treated me very courteously, and I will say that the Minister of Agriculture, when Postmaster General, treated me, although a political opponent, as a gentleman; he listened to my representation and complaints, and, as far as possible, endeavoured to remove them. I do not expect to obtain the patronage of the county—I do not want it; but fair representations of matters of public interest and matters of necessity should be attended to, no matter from whatever source they come. In regard to the Minister of Customs, whenever I have visited the Department, he has always treated me as one gentleman should treat another. He has not always complied with my requests, but he has gone as far as possible, perhaps, in that direction. I am glad the Ministers are beginning to take some little interest in the county of Shelburne. A bye-election is approaching, and I shall be opposed no doubt. I hope the Minister of Finance will take a hand in the election contest. He went down to the county in 1878 to drive me out of public life, which I had just entered. I hope that, as he takes an interest in Major General Laurie, he will do something for Shelburne. The wants of the county are many. Situated as it on the south-west shore of Nova Scotia, on a rocky and dangerous coast, the wants of the constituency, especially such as come under the Department of Marine are not so much those of my own constituents as those of the marine of Canada and of the world, and I hope and trust that the present Minister, now that he is acquainted with the duties of his office, will give all these matters attention, and when he really knows what our wants are he will attend to them. With respect to the request for buoys at Lockeport, if it has been complied with, it has been done very recently. The hon. gentleman made no answer to my remarks in regard to a buoy on Blonde Rock light, which is a very important point, and on the route of the steamers from Yarmouth to Halifax. A buoy should be placed there. The fact that a buoy has not been on that rock for eight or nine months shows negligence on the part of the Department. If the Government do not look after my county with the object primarily of meeting its wants and necessities, they may do so to assist themselves politically.

Mr. KIRK.

Meteorological Observatories..... $61,250

Mr. FOSTER. This is an increase of $5,000, rendered necessary by the proposed establishment of some additional stations in the Rocky Mountains and British Columbia.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How far north are the stations at present?

Mr. FOSTER. We have one station on James' Bay. Generally we have stations no farther north than the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but we wish to establish new stations in the Rocky Mountains and British Columbia, and the increased expense explains the larger vote.

Mr. JONES. What is the experience of the Department in regard to these signal stations. Are they generally found valuable?

Mr. FOSTER. The report of the Marine Department contains a full explanation in regard to them. I think I had better refer the hon. gentleman to that. He will see all about the probabilities and how they have been verified.

Marine Hospitals..... $56,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Some particulars are wanted on this item.

Mr. FOSTER. The details are fully given in the report of the Marine Department, each one of the hospitals and all the items of expenditure in reference to it.

Steamboat Inspection... $25,000

Mr. EDGAR. In connection with that grant there is a matter that has been brought before the notice of the Minister before now. In 1885, the attention of the hon. gentleman acting as Minister of Marine was directed to the fact that while engineers may obtain certificates to act upon Canadian steamers, whether they are British subjects or not, there is a provision in the American Inspection Act which prevents any but American citizens obtaining certificates and acting as engineers on their steamboats. That is a very unreasonable condition of the law. I remember the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. McLelan), who was then Acting Minister of Marine, said that now the matter had been brought to his attention the Government would look into it, and they would see if they could not alter the law so as to place our people on the same footing as the Americans. The result is that Americans come here, and are able to get certificates just as easy as our citizens. I have a copy of the American law. It provides that none but citizens of the United States and those who have permanently resided there for six months prior to the granting of the license, may be licensed as engineers. The Dominion Government, who have prided themselves on the National Policy protecting the interests of Canada, should look after this matter, and it is one which is very considerably felt by the engineers in the frontier towns. There are plenty of Canadian engineers to do the work, but they find Americans come in and have equal rights with them in regard to passing examinations and obtaining certificates.

Mr. FOSTER. I will take a note of what the hon. gentleman says. There are two sides to this question. This has been the practice of the Department under both Governments. It is quite possible it should be changed; it might be changed perhaps with advantage.

Mr. EDGAR. It is the law under the Steamboat Inspection Act, and that Act will have to be altered. It is perfectly clear that Canadians are at a great disadvantage along the lake shores.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the revenue derived?

Mr. FOSTER. We expended over and above the revenue about $15,000. Taking all the years together the return shows a small surplus.

Salaries and disbursements of Fishery Overseers and Wardens	$249,500
---	-----------

Mr. KIRK. I wish to ask the Minister whether the fishway which was erected at Fisher's Dam, in Guysboro' county, has been placed in such a position that the fish may ascend. It got out of order and was in such a condition that when the water was allowed to come into the dam it did not keep its place. I think there has been a good deal of carelessness in the building of the fishway, and I would like to know whether it has been repaired.

Mr. FOSTER. I will get the information for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. JONES. I hope the Government will see that their overseers will carry out the regulations of the Department strictly. I know that considerable improvement has been made, notably in Nova Scotia, with regard to the obstructions which have existed and the regulations which have been made under successive Governments, but still there is a considerable amount of inattention by these overseers, and, in many cases, fish which were formerly abundant in streams are rapidly being driven out of them. Then, with regard to these fish-breeding establishments, though I do not find fault with the expenditure, I would like to know whether the result has, on the whole, been as satisfactory as was contemplated when these establishments were started. With regard to the fish-breeding establishment near Halifax, which was built during the time I was in the Government, I am told by a number of people in the neighborhood that up to the present time no apparent advantages have been realised from it, although a large number of young salmon have been distributed in the neighborhood. Then, as to fishways, I am informed that there is a good deal of complaint on the various rivers regarding them. I believe the Government have been issuing a patent fishway, patented by one of their own officers, Mr. Rogers, and those who use the fishway have to pay for his right under the patent. Now, while expressing no opinion as to the merits of this patent, would it not be better for the Government to buy it out if it is as valuable as it is represented, as in that event they would be able to use it more frequently than they are now using it, because it is stated that Mr. Rogers says he is unwilling to recommend it in many cases, simply because he is interested in it himself. I think it would be in the interest of that branch of the service if the Government would acquire the patent rights, if the patent is as valuable as reported. Then, it is stated that Mr. Rogers has not been in the Province of Nova Scotia, and notably on the south shore, as much as those people who are interested think he should be. I am told that he spent a good deal of the earlier part of the season, which is a very important time for that service, in the United States attending to his own business in connection with this patent.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman asked a question with reference to whether fish-breeding had proved successful or not. Without taking up the time of the House, I think it would be well to refer him to the departmental report of 1884, in which Mr. Wilmot deals especially with that subject, and collates the results so far obtained. I would also refer him to the report of 1886.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Mr. Witcher had contrary views.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the hon. gentleman will find in those reports that fish-breeding has been productive of good results.

Mr. JONES. The reports of the hon. gentleman's Department have been presented so late in the Session that, with so many other duties to attend to, I have not been able to give to them that attention which they deserve, and that is the reason I asked the question. I know the hon. gentleman has made explanations with regard to the matter, but it is unfortunate that his report should be so late in being brought down.

Mr. MITCHELL. I intended to put a similar question to the Minister to that which has just been asked by the senior member for Halifax, as it is a subject in which I take a great deal of interest. I believe I was the means of inducing the Government to assume the responsibility of taking up what some of them thought was a fad—and some of them were kind enough to tell me so—in trying this experiment. I have heard so many people say that it was a mistake, that, though I still believe I was right, I am beginning to have doubts whether I was right or not. I have suggested that the hon. gentleman should make a specialty of making a proper enquiry into the results of the numerous hatcheries established in various parts of the country—I believe about twelve in all. I notice that the amounts of money vary considerably from $1,100 or $1,200 a year, up to something like $5,000 or $6,000, for the expense of the different hatcheries. I do not know why there should be such a variation. Some of the hatcheries may be larger than others, but I think that after some fifteen or sixteen years of experimenting we ought to be able to tell whether those hatcheries are really of benefit or not. One thing that shook my confidence in them was the change of opinion on the part of Mr. Witcher, for whose opinion I have great respect. Whenever I could get the opportunity I visited those hatcheries. They certainly produce fish in hundreds of thousands up to a certain stage; but it appears to me that there is something about the operation that we do not quite understand. Sending out these infant fish is very much like turning out babies three months old to forage for themselves. It is true, nature provides them with natural food that keeps them in existence for nine or ten days. The question is whether we should not keep these young fish in the ponds of the establishment and feed them for a time as is done in the United State. I think it is a matter worthy of enquiry by my hon. friend, whether the expenditure on these fisheries is of real benefit or not, or whether there are some things in the operation we do not understand. I throw out that suggestion in good faith, and in a friendly spirit.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). Like my hon. friend, I have not had the advantage of reading the report of the gentlemen in charge of the hatcheries this year. But in all previous years I have followed those reports very closely, and judging from them and my own observations I have come to the conclusion that it is very doubtful whether our experiment is a success or not. In the Province of Prince Edward Island we have a hatchery which is very well attended to, and millions of those little fish are deposited in the rivers every year; but I never heard anybody yet who was able to say that there was any appreciable increase in the quantity of fish in the rivers where those young fry were placed. This is a question one does not like to express an opinion upon. It is a very important experiment which we hope may be successful, and I am inclined to believe with my hon. friend that there is something about the system that we have not yet discovered and that we do not understand. We have been accustomed to depend very much on Mr. Wilmot, who is a very experienced man; but I am inclined to think that possibly these specialists may mislead even themselves. Practical men who have given a good deal of thought to this subject, and whose observations are worth a good deal, do not coincide with his conclusions. I think the Minister would do the public a service by making a special examination of this subject during the coming year when he goes around, as I understand he intends to do, to the different Provinces where hatcheries exist, and determine in his own mind whether the results are at all commensurate with the expenditure we are making.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would not have it go forth that I had ceased to have faith in the system. That is not the case, but I think there is something in it that our specialists and the gentlemen in charge of the establishments have failed yet to comprehend. I believe it is—I merely give it as my opinion—that the fish are sent out too young, and that they should be kept for a year and artificially fed before being sent out; and then, when they are put out, they will be able to defend themselves against the rapacious fish which are likely to attack them.

Mr. BURNS. For the information of the committee I may state that in the constituency I represent the opinion is very favorable as to the results of the deposit of fry in rivers there. Persons who resort to that river, and who give matters of this kind a great deal of attention, have informed me that the supply in the river has been very largely increased since fish fry have been placed there. The other day a gentleman who visits the river every year, strongly urged that the Department this year should again place some fry in it, because, as he said that it is quite apparent that good results had followed from those which had been placed there before. No doubt a good deal depends on the kind of bottom in the river. With regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) as to the absence of results from those placed in the river in his constituency, if I understand rightly the rivers in the Province of Prince Edward Island are not, generally speaking, what are called natural salmon rivers. I think what I have said with regard to the rivers in Gloucester may be said of those in Restigouche. There I think the general opinion is that the deposit of the fry has been productive of good. While I have no practical knowledge of this subject myself, I speak from what I have heard from others, and I am satisfied that this is a wise expenditure.

Mr. KIRK. I notice that the Government have a vote of $2,000 to provide for the expense of a commission to enquire into and report upon the lobster and oyster fisheries. Would it not be advisable for this commission to enquire at the same time into the question of the fish hatcheries? With regard to them, my impression is that the amount expended is not very well expended, and that the money would be better expended in improving the fisheries in another way. It is only rivers which have been entirely fished out, into which it is necessary to put fry. In rivers which the salmon and trout naturally ascend, it is only necessary to protect them. I do not care how few go up, if they are properly protected, there will be plenty very soon. It is only necessary to protect them. First, clean out the rivers; give the fish an opportunity to ascend to their spawning grounds, and then protect them, and you will very soon have the rivers overflowing with fish. There are rivers in Nova Scotia it would require but a small sum to clean out; and there are other rivers in which it is necessary to erect fishways, where the dams are across the rivers. In my county the fishery overseer reports obstructions in two cases, and I hope the Minister will, by the expenditure of a small amount, have Indian Harbor and Country Harbor rivers cleaned out. There ought to be a fishery warden or some one appointed to look after the Indian Harbor River every spring, and this would not cost the Government more than $20 a year.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How are these fish distributed? I had a request from my constituency, and I was told if I applied to the hatchery I would get some trout. I went there and was kindly received, and every effort was made to oblige me, but I was told I had come too late. On what system are the fish distributed?

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to the general distribution of fish, that is done upon the report of Mr. Wilmot, after consultation with the overseers, as to what are the most suitable waters for the fish. Of course, when parties apply, their applications are considered in the general distribution. 76,000,000 fry were distributed last year. With reference to speckled trout, we have had a very small number, for they are rather a fancy than a commercial fish. We have never gone to much trouble in procuring these. They are difficult fish to procure and we generally give them to clubs or associations who protect the streams.

Mr. MALLORY. With regard to speckled trout, I fear that these fry are sent out when too young. In the section of the country I come from a great number of the fry have been put in the trout streams, but the experiment has not been as favorable as I would like. I fear that in many of the streams lumbermen and those who have small mills are not careful to keep the sawdust out of the streams.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Minister state to what extent the Department has yielded or proposes to yield jurisdiction over the inland waters? How far do they consider riparian rights obtain in the Provinces?

Mr. FOSTER. That introduces a subject which might lead to a pretty wide discussion. So far as possible we endeavor to keep from giving licenses to fish in the smaller inland waters. We exercise the right of saying what should be the modes of fishing, and the close season. Correspondence is now going on between the Ontario Government and this Government with reference to this matter. It is important that some agreement should be arrived at, and thus prevent clashing of jurisdiction of the two sets of officers.

Mr. MITCHELL. It will be well, in order to put a stop to this doubt in relation to the fisheries, to consider whether the Dominion Government should not take upon itself, by arrangements with the several Provinces, to take over these rights, because the people will some day or other object to paying money out of the Dominion revenue to protect the rivers in the Provinces.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I join with the hon. member for Northumberland in saying that this is a matter of serious importance. The hon. gentleman's suggestion is a valuable one, and the idea is largely entertained that it is advisable for the fisheries to be under the one control; and the only way for us to obtain that control would be by the Dominion Government acquiring the provincial rights.

Mr. DAWSON. In connection with the inland fisheries, I may draw the attention of the Minister to one point. In the inland lakes, the Indians were secured in their treaty rights, and given the right to fish, as they had been accustomed to do. I may call the attention of the House to one treaty by which the Indians of the country to the west of the Height of Land on Rainy River, and in the neighborhood of the Lake of the Woods, relinquished their lands, but reserved their right to fish in the rivers and lakes of the district they occupied. Now, licenses have been issued by the Department of Marine to people to catch fish in the Lake of the Woods. They go there with all their improved appliances—pound nets, seine nets, and all sorts of things which were never heard of at the time these treaties were made. They scoop the fish out of these lakes. They sweep off the food supply of the Indians, and the question arises is that keeping up the spirit of the treaty which was made with the Indians? They were allowed the right to fish in the waters of the territory they relinquished, and yet we, by giving out licenses to fish in these lakes, render that privilege absolutely valueless, because, with these improved appliances, which were never dreamed of in those times, people go and absolutely destroy the fish; they sweep them out completely with these pound nets, and nets of all kinds. I say it is not fair to these people with whom we make treaties. It would make no great difference after the country was settled, but until they have become practiced in agriculture we are depriving them of their food supply, and leaving them to apply for assistance to the Government, when they could support themselves very well if their treaty rights in regard to the fisheries were preserved inviolate.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not understand that the Government can make any claim for fish and fisheries within the limit of a Province where the proprietary interest in the soil is in the Crown represented by the Province. The rule in England, which is recognised by the Supreme Court here, is that the ordinary proprietor of the soil is the proprietor of all the fish running through his property, and a Province which is proprietor of the soil would have as great a right to those fish as any private individual similarly situated. I do not understand that the Government claim to grant licenses to fish in the waters of the Province where the proprietary right would be in the Province. They might, of course, make laws regulating the catch, but they could not interfere with the proprietary right of the Province, and I was not aware that any such claim had been put forward or that there was any dispute in regard to the matter.

Mr. JONES. What is this vote of $1,500 for the Canadian fisheries exhibit intended for?

Mr. FOSTER. That is for the exhibit which is now in Ottawa. It was at the exhibition in England last year and has been returned, and now we keep it here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In regard to this vote of $6,000 for services performed by persons in the Customs and Fisheries Departments, and other expenses in connection with the distribution of the fishing bounty and collection of statistics, I think the Committee on Public Accounts some time ago requested that an audit should be made in connection with that. That was agreed to be done but it has never been done.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is no doubt that the amount of work involved in paying these bounties is very great, especially when it is added to the ordinary work of the Departments. Whether the amount which is asked is necessary or not I do not know, but I am satisfied that these gentlemen should be paid for the extra work they do.

Mr. FOSTER. All the extra clerks who are engaged in that matter are kept very busy. The accounts have to go through a good many hands and to be carefully examined, and they require a great deal of work.

Mr. JONES. Where is this production of cod liver oil and fish guano carried on?

Mr. FOSTER. That amount of $4,000 is a revote.

Mr. KIRK. Was nothing paid last year?

Mr. FOSTER. Nothing.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then why should it be kept up? It was regarded on this side of the House, when it was introduced, as a very objectionable vote. It was a proposition to grant a bounty to parties who were doing very well under the law as it was, and I did not see any ground upon which this bounty should be given to them any more than we should grant a bounty to farmers to raise wheat.

Mr. JONES. This is an article of commerce, like cod oil or whale oil, and so on, and I do not see why this bounty should be given.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not see why we should give a bounty to enable people to produce cod liver oil in this country. It is an article of general consumption, and is produced for the open market. It seems exceedingly strange that we should be asked to give a bounty of this kind.

Mr. BURNS. This was asked for at the instance of a deputation composed of the representatives of the cod fishing constituencies. It was urged that it was very desirable that the amount of offal which is now going to waste should be utilised by conversion into guano, and also that, instead of importing the cod liver oil which is now used in the country, it could be refined from the cod oil which is so largely obtained from the fisheries. Although no factories have been established yet, there is a probability of this vote leading to such establishments. I think it is very desirable that this vote should pass, as a large industry may grow from it. To-day we have not in the Dominion an establishment of that kind.

Mr. MITCHELL. Pass it for another year, under the understanding that, if it is not begun by that time, we will drop it next year.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) To provide for the expenses of a commission to enquire and report upon the lobster fishery, $2,000—has the hon. gentleman chosen the commission?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not yet. I shall try to get the most suitable men to represent the different interests.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is desirable that some man should be got to visit the scene who would not be himself interested in the recommendations he has to make.

Mr. FOSTER. The intention is to have three men on this commission. Whilst, of course, their views may be colored according to their interests, it will be well to have the different interests represented on this commission.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think it would be well to get some scientific and practical information in reference to the oyster and lobster fisheries. We ought to have from Baltimore or Maryland some one connected with the oyster fisheries, who is a scientific and practical man, to examine the deposits along our coasts and report upon the subject. I think it would pay us well to do it. Our oyster fisheries are going to ruin and waste as they are now cultivated.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The planting and drawing of oysters is much better understood than lobster fishing. The late Hon. Judge Pope, of Prince Edward Island, planted a very large bed of oysters, and the system he adopted has been most successful. There is no difficulty about making an oyster fishery successful; a little knowledge and care of fish will enable one to do that, and I am sure the Department will be able to get proper information on the oyster fishery without resorting to scientific men from the States. But on the subject of lobster fishery there will be more difficulty. I have never yet been able to get many of the lobster men to agree when the season should be called close, and when open. Those on the south side of the island have one view, and those on the north side another view. What we need to understand about that fish is where it comes from, where it goes to, and what its habits are.

Mr. MARA. Is it intended that the commission shall confine the enquiry to the Atlantic coast, or will it be extended to the Pacific coast.

Mr. FOSTER. The commission with reference to the lobster and oyster fishery will not be extended to the Pacific coast. We are going to attempt this year an experiment in lobster planting on the Pacific coast.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I would like to call the attention of the Minister to the lobster fishery on the Bay of Fundy coast. There has been some complaint on the part of some fishermen on that coast with reference to lobster fishing driving away the herrings. Some fishermen state that the traps, or the rope with which the traps are bound, have a tendency to drive away the herrings. The herrings are scarce where these lobster fisheries are. Some experienced men in that matter have come to the conclusion that it must be the tarred rope which is used in connection with the traps. The Minister might extend his investigation to that matter.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I would like to say that, in view of the fact that the Finance Minister has been increasing the taxes so heavily on many of the articles the fishermen use, it would be only fair to increase this vote. While the fishermen are assisting to pay other subsidies given by the Government, the other classes in the Dominion are not at all assisting towards paying the fishery bounty that is authorised by statute. There were four millions and a-half paid into the Treasury by the United States on the Fishery Award, for the use of fishing on our coasts for 12 years. We have received the interest on that amount for a number of years, which amounted, according to my calculation, to a million dollars more. But even at the present time you are not giving the interest on this award to the fishermen. The interest would be something over $1,000,000 per annum, and you are only paying in bounty $150,000. I think it would be only right that the fishermen should receive, at least, the interest on the award received from the United States. On the one item alone of iron, the Government will take more from these fishermen, in the shape of increased duties given to the manufacturer, than the fishermen will receive. A schooner of 80 tons now receives $80, and the crew will receive $4 or $5 per man. Now, the $80 will not pay the difference in duty on the iron that will go into the construction of a fishing vessel, and the chains and anchors and other iron articles used in a fishing vessel; and the $4 or $5 a man will not pay the additional duties that has been imposed upon many of the articles that these people consume. The Finance Minister, a few evenings ago, so far as I could understand, tried to belittle the fishing trade and those engaged in it, and intimated that fish should not be shipped by steamers; and the hon. the junior member for Halifax expressed great sympathy for the Cunard steamboats that were lying idle. I think the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) showed clearly that subsidising these steamers would tend to lay up the schooners now employed in the West India trade. I think some consideration should be given to these fishermen, because, as far as wealth goes, they cannot be at all compared with the bulk of the manufacturing classes of the Dominion. The most of the latter are wealthy, while the fishermen, as a class, do not more than make their living. I think this matter should be taken up and fully considered by the Government, and the amount should be increased, at all events, to the interest on the $4,500,000 which was received from the American Government. I hope the Minister of Finance will not encourage the subsidising of steamers to interfere with the present mode of shipping our fish. I was going to say a few words on that subject the other evening. While even admitting that the subsidising of a steamship line from Halifax to the West Indies might be a good project, it could be of no benefit to the western counties, for the steamers would not touch at Lunenburg or Yarmouth, and, therefore, would not benefit the trade of those counties. Unless the shippers of those counties sent their fish down to Halifax it would not benefit them, and to do that would not pay. I, therefore, hope the Government will refrain from subsidising those steamers, which they are asked to do by a number of gentlemen from Halifax.

Mr. MARA:

Mr. ELLIS. I should like to ask the Minister of Marine, not so much with regard to what the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) has stated, as to whether he has considered the effect of the policy of bounties? It seems to me that the effect of the bounties—I do not object to them—is that we are driving out the schooners and larger vessels, and gradually the ordinary shore fishermen are obtaining the bounties. I observe the tonnage of the larger vessels is decreasing. The effect of a bounty ought to be to increase the tonnage of the larger vessels. Everybody can secure a boat, fish near the shore and get a bounty in that way. I presume the policy of bounties should be rather to increase the larger vessels, so that the business would be carried on more effectively and at greater profit. Our exports of fish declined $1,750,000 in 1884, 85 and 1886. Did the bounties affect that? My hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) says there is an increased value of catch. But I do not think you can rely on the statistics as to the value of the catch as fully as on the statistics of exports. That is the true measure of the trade that is done, and the exports have fallen off—we are not selling as much fish as we did—we have not as many vessels, we have not as many men employed on the larger vessels; and, therefore, there is a question as to whether the bounty is doing what hon. gentlemen opposite intended it to do.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman urge that the bounty should be taken away?

Mr. ELLIS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that the hon. gentleman's remarks tended in that direction.

Mr. ELLIS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like it to be noted by the fishermen of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, the peculiar way which the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) takes to protect them. He has taken strong ground against protecting our rights to our fisheries, and if his remarks to-night mean anything, they are that we ought to take away the bounty from our fishermen.

Mr. ELLIS. Is that a fair kind of remark to make after the way I have spoken of this matter as one of public policy? Is it quite fair that, when I discuss the effect of the bounty system with respect to the fisheries, the hon. gentleman should endeavor to put me in a false position? I consider it an exceedingly mean thing to do; but I will not press it further.

Mr. KIRK. My hon. friend did not complain of the bounty, but he thought it would be better to give a larger proportion of it to those who owned vessels, who fished in vessels, and not so large a proportion to those who fished in small boats. That was his opinion; but I do not think he was right. My impression is that the men who own vessels receive too large a proportion, and an increased proportion should be given to the small boat fishermen, who are poorer men, and not able to build large vessels. I maintain my hon. friend is wrong on that point.

Mr. ELLIS. I did not express any opinion, but I merely pointed out what was the effect of the bounty.

Mr. KIRK. That is my opinion—that a larger appropriation should be given for the purpose of encouraging the poor fishermen, those who are obliged to fish within the three-mile limit, in small boats. It is for their right to fish within the three-mile limit that the money was obtained; therefore, those who fish there should be benefited by the bounty. They are the poorer class of the people, and are unable to purchase large vessels, but are obliged to remain at home and fish in small boats.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The system of bounties is entirely wrong and very mysterious, and hon. gentlemen opposite cannot confer a greater favor on the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces than by withdrawing the bounties, and in place of granting them relieving the fishermen of the taxes they pay in other directions. They are entitled to the bounties, but I do not think they obtain them, because they go into the hands of middle men, and a large proportion never reaches the poor fishermen.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not rise to pursue the argument which the Minister of Marine adopted towards the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis). It was an exceedingly unfair argument, and on consideration he will see he was placing the hon. member in a false position in giving to his words a construction he never intended. I rather agree, however, with the remarks of the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk) that instead of giving the bounties to owners of large vessels and not to owners of small boats would be rather a mistake. There is a good deal to be said on both sides, but where there is one owner of a large vessel there are one hundred to two hundred boat fishermen, and they require greater aid than do the men who are able to build and work large vessels. As stated by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) in regard to the bounty, I must say that it has always been a very serious question with me, from the time that appropriation was first made, whether it was in the interest of the fishermen or not. I come from the seashore, and I am not afraid to express my opinion, and it is, that it is not a beneficial way of helping the fishermen. If they were relieved from the duties which, under the increased tariff, will still further be increased on the articles which go into consumption and which are necessities, it would be better.

Mr. DAVIES. Corn meal.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, corn meal, and the outfit of their vessels. That, it seems to me, would be a better way of assisting them. If we cannot obtain all these changes we have, of course, to take what we can get. The men by the sea do not get justice. The modesty of the representatives they send here, who do not assert the rights of the people they represent—and I, myself, feel that I fail to do so—and I hold that it would be more for the benefit of the fishermen if these duties were removed than if they received the bounty at present given them. However, we will accept what we can get.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is beyond the power of Parliament to confer that power on the members of the Government.

Mr. JONES. There are two grounds on which an increase of bounty would be quite justifiable. First, on the ground that there is a large amount of money received from the American Government for the use of our fisheries. That privilege belongs to the fishermen who are interested in that grant, and, therefore, any interest derived from that sum should be fairly claimed by those interested in the fishing interests in the country. Again, the articles which the fishermen require to use have been so largely increased in cost by the fiscal policy of the country, in the last five or six years, they have been such large consumers of dutiable articles, and such large users of those dutiable articles which enter into the construction and equipment of their vessels, that they pay, pro rata, a much larger proportion than those who follow agricultural pursuits. I think, on those two grounds, that the fishermen of the Dominion have a fair claim on the Government for an increase of the subsidy, at least to the extent of the interest on the amount received from the Americans for the use of our fisheries.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask at whose expense the fisheries are to be protected and the vessels to be fitted out. Are they to be maintained at the expense of the entire community? Are we, who live inland, to pay any portion of the taxes by which this protection is to be afforded? If we are to be exempt from those liabilities, I think it would be reasonable that any profit or advantage derived from the sop which the Americans have paid into the Treasury for the privilege of fishing in our waters, should go to the improvement of the fishermen. But it does seem to me that it is an extraordinary system, one which has been introduced by the present Minister, to grant bounties to men in the pursuit of the ordinary calling in life in which they are engaged. Who is going to grant a bounty to the carpenters? Who is going to confer a bounty upon blacksmiths, or any other body of men who are engaged in mechanics? Who is going to give a bounty to the farmer for cultivating his land and producing his crop? Why should one class of the community—deserving and highly useful, no doubt—receive a bounty in order to encourage them to pursue that business in which they are engaged, any more than any other class of the community? Now, there is no doubt that that is the way the bounty was given. We know it was given just preceding an election, and no one can question that it was given for the purpose of influencing the votes of the fishermen, and while the fishermen were apparently benefited by the grant or bounty, there were imposed on them taxes in excess of any favor which was conferred on them. If the hon. gentleman is disposed to favor the fishermen, let him have his clothing, his outfit and his food at a low rate and exempt him from taxation and then he will be aiding him more effectually than under the present arrangement, and in a way not inconsistent with his manhood and independence.

Mr. MITCHELL. If you can get that done I would be willing to wipe out the bounties.

Mr. JONES. I would say to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken that the fishery question has been the great factor whereby the Government of this country, since Confederation and before Confederation, have been able to obtain reciprocal relations with the United States, by which the products of the old Provinces of Canada were admitted duty free into the United States. Therefore, to-day, our claim for the fisheries are kept up from a national point of view, and not from a view as affecting the fishermen alone. We are maintaining our rights to our coast fisheries on the ground that they may be utilised—I do not know how soon; I hope very soon—by obtaining the largest measure of reciprocal trade with our American neighbors. It is all we have to give; it is all they desire, and if we had not our coast fisheries to offer as a return to the United States for reciprocal trade relations with that country, there would be no possibility of having those relations with them at all. Therefore, the hon. gentleman will see that this is a question more important in a national point of view than he is disposed to regard it, and that it is not merely in the interests of the fishermen.

Superintendence of Insurance—expenses..... $5,500

Mr. PLATT. I would like to ask why the report of the Superintendent of Insurance is not down? I do not know whether the year terminates on the 30th June last, or at the end of the calendar year, but at any rate there is sufficient time for the report to be brought down.

The CHAIRMAN. Carried.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the hon. gentleman's question should be answered by somebody.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will make an enquiry.

Geological Survey.....$55,000

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to ask when the report of that Department will be brought down, and while I am on my feet I would just say that it is one of the few Departments from which I have received what I conceive to be discourtesy. One of my constituents wrote me the other day—

Mr. HESSON. We heard that before.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then you will hear it again, and hear it as often as I like. The less of your interference we get the better.

Mr. HESSON. Who is wasting the time of the House?

Mr. MITCHELL. I applied to that Department—

Mr. HESSON. Go and pay like the rest of us do.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am always ready to pay what I have a right to pay, but if the public—

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Mr. Chairman, these interruptions are most unfair.

Mr. JONES. And they all come from one man, from one hon. member.

Mr. MITCHELL. He is noted for his impertinent interruptions.

Mr. KIRK. Hear, hear.

The CHAIRMAN. Order, order.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, as I thought, in a courteous and civil way, I asked that Department to please send me a copy of their report. I said if they had the annual report I would like to get it, but if I was refused that I said they could give me the report of last year. They said I could have another report by paying for it, but I managed to get one from a friend. I think when we pay $55,000 for the support of a geological establishment, there ought to be placed at the disposal of the members of this House, such a number of reports that when one of their constituents wants to get a single report he ought to be able to get it. We know very well that some two or three years ago the efficiency of that Department was a subject which was seriously enquired into by a committee of this House, and that very serious reflections were made on that Department. Up to this time I have not heard of anything special being done by the executive of the country in relation to the matter, and I think it is time that they should be commonly civil to a member of Parliament who applies in a bonâ fide way for the purpose of giving to his constituents the benefit of a share in the large sum of money which the country votes towards that service.

The CHAIRMAN. Carried.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think we should stop now.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, I was going to suggest that the Committee should report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House. He said: I must, I fear, give up all hope of carrying out the expectations I indulged in a few days ago that the House would be prorogued on Saturday. All hope of that is gone, but, perhaps, we may be able to look for prorogation on Saturday week.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose Tuesday is to be a holiday?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I presume so.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1:45 a. m. (Friday).

SIR CHARLES TUPPER.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 17th June, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

REPRESENTATION OF DIGBY, N.S.

Mr. Jones moved:

That Mr. Speaker do issue his warrant for a new writ for an election in the electoral district of the county of Digby, N.S., vacated by the death of the late member, Mr. John Campbell.

Motion agreed to.

INDEXING OF SESSIONAL PAPERS.

Mr. BERGIN. With the permission of the House I desire to call attention to the remarks made by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), with regard to the indexes of the sessional papers. I was astonished, the other day, when he made the remarks he did in connection with the sessional papers, but not having a copy of any of the indexes by me, I allowed the matter to go until I should have them before me. I think the hon. gentleman must have referred to the indexes previous to 1885, because from 1885 until now, I think the indexes are as nearly perfect as they can be. I do not know of any papers, on any subject printed in the sessional papers, but can be found in almost a moment, by a reference to the indexes for 1885 or 1886; and a very great change was made since 1884 by the officer who has charge of the preparation of the sessional papers, and I think that the attention of the House should be called to this reflection upon a deserving officer, one who has very much improved the service.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I may say that I had not the slightest intention of making a reflection on any particular officer, because I did not know who the officer was, and I have not the faintest idea at this moment who he is. But I know that the opinion I expressed is shared in by a large number of members on both sides of the House, with whom I conversed on the subject both before and since I mentioned the matter in the House. I have not examined the index for the year 1886, which the hon. gentleman says may be correct, and I hope it is; but I know that the indexes of previous years were very bad indeed. Those who understand them thoroughly may be able to follow them, but a person who has been accustomed to ordinary indexes by subjects finds it difficult to understand the manner in which the old sessional papers have been indexed. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman say that an improvement has been made.

Mr. BERGIN. I may say that the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), was so pleased with the change made and the state of perfection at which the index had arrived, that he wrote to Mr. Romaine expressing his thanks and his satisfaction. The index is not only an alphabetical one, but it enables you to ascertain in a moment on whose motion a paper was ordered, the date at which the House ordered it, and the date at which it was brought down to the House—everything in connection with it.

Mr. DAVIES. I am very pleased to hear it.

NORTH-WESTERN COAL AND NAVIGATION COMPANY.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 161) to amend "An Act to authorise the grant of certain subsidies in land for the construction of the railways therein mentioned." He said: This Bill is merely to correct an error. The Act authorising a grant of land to the North-western Coal and Navigation Company fixed the quantity at 3,840 acres. The Order in Council granting the land put the quantity at 3,804 acres, and this Bill is simply to make the correction, so as to make the Act conform with the Order in Council.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THREATS AND INTIMIDATIONS.

Mr. THOMPSON. I would ask the House to suspend the rules for the purpose of enabling me to introduce Bill (No. 162) to amend the Revised Statutes, Chapter 173, respecting "Threats, intimidations and other offences." I will explain briefly the purpose of the Bill. My attention was, the other day, called by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) to the circumstances which, in his judgment, required the urgent disposition of his Bill (No. 142) entitled "An Act for the protection of laborers on board vessels;" and in giving attention to the hon. gentleman's suggestions I was only able to acquiesce in his suggestion for the removal of certain defects in the present law, which are of the nature of technical defects; and when I read the one clause which this Bill contains, I will explain briefly what the alterations are that it proposes. It repeals section 11 of the Revised Statutes, Chapter 173, and substitutes the following section for it.

Mr. MITCHELL. What was the effect of section 11?

Mr. THOMPSON. Section 11 is to prevent intimidation, threats and other offences against persons working on board ships, and it has certain defects which it may be necessary to remove as quickly as possible. The clause I propose to substitute is this:

"Every person who unlawfully and by force or threat, or any other means, hinders or prevents, or attempts to hinder or prevent any seaman, stevedore, ship carpenter, ship labourer or other person employed"—

The present law says "usually working," and, therefore, confines the protection to persons who are accustomed to engage in that employment, whereas the protection should be extended to all those who are actually employed in the work—

"—to work at or on board any ship or vessel, or to do any work connected with the loading or unloading thereof"—

The present law restricts the protection to any person actually at work on board of any ship or vessel—

"—or to do any work connected with the loading or unloading thereof, from working at or exercising any lawful trade, business, calling or occupation in or for which he is so employed; or beats or uses any such violence to, or makes any threat against any such person, with intent to hinder or prevent him from working at or exercising the same"—

This is new—

"—or on account of his having worked at or exercised the same, shall, on summary conviction before two justices of the peace, be liable to imprisonment, with hard labor, for any term not exceeding three months."

The penalty remains the same, and the summary conviction before two justices of the peace is the same as before. The three principal new features introduced are these: First, to extend the protection of the Act to persons actually employed, although they may not be persons usually engaged in the business; second, to extend it to all persons employed on or about any ship or vessel, even though not working on board the vessel; and, third, to make it illegal to beat or use any violence to, or make any threat against any person by reason of his having worked at any vessel, or loading or unloading thereof. The present law does not extend the protection to those who were engaged in work that has been completed. I ask leave to introduce this Bill now, so as to expedite its passage as much as possible.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. THOMPSON. I would, with the permission of the House, ask that the Bill be now read the second time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that ought to be considered a little. I understood there were deputations and some remonstrances addressed to the House about this, and it may be a measure of some importance. I did not understand the hon. gentleman to say he was about to put the Bill through completely to-day.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is a subject which, when I was Minister of Marine, occupied a good deal of attention, and a Bill was brought in of a very stringent character to relieve certain abuses which occurred during that time. The rowdy element of Quebec had obtained the mastery to such an extent that they had actually gone on board vessels and turned men out of the fore-castle, and in one case actually shot a man, so that it was necessary to bring in a stringent law. The present law is one bearing in a similar way on the attempt to prevent people exercising the right of free labor. I entirely approve of the principle of this measure. I understand difficulty exists at present in Quebec, that ships cannot get loaded there, and that this is destroying the trade of the port. It is important the law should be maintained, and the Bill meets with my hearty approval.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I have examined this Bill and see no objection to it. I believe it will meet all the demands of the trade of Quebec.

Mr. EDGAR. Without seeing the Bill it is impossible to judge of its effects. The only thing I notice in it, as the Minister of Justice read it, was with reference to intimidation and threats, in which there is a decided distinction compared with the other clauses of the same Act. In the other clauses of the Act, where threats are made punishable, it is "threats of violence." As I heard the language used in this provision, the word introduced is simply "threats" and not "threats of violence." In that particular alone, we should not make a distinction in respect of one class of workmen and ship laborers that is not made in respect of another. If threats of violence are the only kind of threats which should be put down by the strong arm of the law, in other cases, I do not see why any difference should be made in the case of the ship laborers.

Mr. THOMPSON. As the Bill will come up for its second reading to-morrow, it will be more convenient that I should give any explanations required then.

NORTH-WEST COUNCIL ELECTIONS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will ask the House for leave to suspend the rules and to introduce Bill (No. 163) respecting the Council of the North-West Territories without notice. I believe there will be no objection from hon. gentlemen opposite. It is with respect to the elections of the North-West Council, which are to take place in October next. I am informed by hon. members from the North-West that, in consequence of the influx of settlers, fully half of the settlers, under the present law, will be practically disfranchised, and have no opportunity of voting in October next. The Council is elected for two years. It is the object of avoiding this disfranchisement that my hon. friend the member from Saskatchewan (Mr. McDowall) has a Bill on the paper, which is not likely to be reached, subdividing the whole of the North-West into new constituencies, doing away, among other things, with the prohibitory clauses in the present law, and dealing with the question of nomination and several points of importance which cannot possibly be discussed, even should we reach the Bill this Session. It would, however, be mockery to have an election in October when the majority of the people who ought to have the right to vote will practically have no vote. I, therefore, propose to ask the House for leave to introduce a Bill continuing the North-West Council until the end of the next Session of this Parliament. They will hold one Council more in October or November, and the Government will be prepared next Session to bring down a measure redividing the whole of the North-West, and making the necessary alterations consequent upon the increase of population of that country. I merely ask the House to do away with the necessity of notice. I wish to have the Bill before the House now, so that, if possible, it may become law this Session. The Bill is a short one, and it reads:

Notwithstanding anything contained in the North-West Territories Act, the members of the Council of the said Territories shall continue as such until the end of the next Session of the Parliament of Canada, and no elections will be held before then except for the filling up of vacancies in the Council.

Mr. MITCHELL. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman would consider the advisability, when preparing that Bill, of making the mode of voting out there as it is all over the Dominion, viz., by ballot, instead of by open voting.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have not the slightest objection. The reason open voting was adopted from the commencement of the Council was, I think, to have the voters come in anyhow or no how, so that they might record their votes; and as the population was scattered, there was a sort of ambulatory returning officer who got the votes of the people wherever they could be found. It was impossible to know where the ballot boxes should be sent, or how many. Now that the country has become more settled, the same mode of voting that exists in the rest of the Dominion ought to be adopted there.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not suppose there will be any objection, at this late period of the Session, to the suspension of the rules, as far as the introduction of the Bill is concerned, but I do not think, at present, any one would be disposed to admit anything further. Perhaps it would be more fitting the Bill of the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. MacDowall) should be placed on the Orders of the Government, and thus have a chance of passing this Session. It is a serious thing to deprive the people of elections this year.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is only putting them off for a few months. The Government cannot adopt the measure of the hon. member for Saskatchewan, and there are a good many points to be discussed to which the necessary attention could not be given this Session.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman spoke to me, and I told him that, speaking for myself I would not object to his introducing the measure without notice, but, of course, I did not bind myself to accept his proposition. Now, this Bill proposes to do what was done in the time of Queen Anne, it proposes to extend the period beyond that for which the Legislature was elected.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is seven months instead of seven years.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That was an extension from three years to seven years, and this is an extension from two years to three and half years.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, to two and half years.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Well, the time will be up in October. Does the hon. gentleman suppose it will be possible to have a Session of Parliament and then to hold an election before the October following.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). So it is really extending the period for a year beyond the period for which the House is elected. That is one objection to the Bill which the hon. gentleman has introduced. I called the attention of the House to the fact that a large portion of the population of the North-West would be without representation when we were discussing the subject of the representation last year, and it seems to me that this is a matter that the Government ought to have been ready to deal with this Session. Then the hon. gentleman knows that certain members from the North-West proposed to him a measure which, he says, the Government cannot accept. There were many propositions in that measure which, I think, very few members of the House would be willing to accept, such as those provisions relating to the sale of liquor in the North-West, which were very foreign, indeed, to the subject of representation; but I understood that those gentlemen were ready to eliminate everything of that sort. The question is whether the Government could, during this Session, make a division of the territory of the North-West into electoral districts so as to give to the whole population a fair representation. It seems to me that the Government being in possession of the census, any one Minister who would devote his attention to that for an afternoon could lay before the House a plan of representation for the Territories, and especially could he do so with the aid of those who represent that territory, and the hon. gentleman could get that measure through the House with almost as much facility as he can the Bill now before us.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not without the hon. gentleman's assistance.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would feel, and I am sure hon. gentlemen on this side of the House would feel, more inclined to support a proposition of that kind than this proposition, which nothing but the inability to deal with the matter in another way can justify, that is, the extension of the period for which a Parliament is elected. I think, rather than deprive two-thirds of the population of the right of voting at the next election, I would support the hon. gentleman's proposition if we had no alternative, but I think there is another choice open to us, and that is dividing the North-West into electoral districts, and permitting everyone who has voted for members of this House to vote for members of the North-West Council.

Mr. EDGAR. What difficulty is there in allowing the election to be held and dealing with this matter next Session? I cannot see any objection to allowing the local House to expire in the natural way between the present time and the next Session, and dealing with the matter, and taking time to deal with it, next Session, and then, if it is an urgent matter, and this Parliament has jurisdiction, shortening the period then would not interfere with the period for which the Council was elected, and we are acting far more constitutionally and avoiding a bad precedent, and are not doing harm to anybody or disfranchising anybody under the sun.

Mr. DAVIN. I should, myself, have preferred if a measure had been introduced at an earlier part of this Session, but, as it has not been introduced, I think the proposal of the right hon. gentleman is one which is most in the interest of the North-West. I think it would be very undesirable that, at this period of the Session, we should go into a matter which would require a great deal of consideration which cannot be given to it at a time when we are all hurrying to close things up here, and, therefore, for my own part, I will support the proposal of the right hon. gentleman. No harm can be done, and, if another Council is elected, what will happen will be this: that you will have these persons disfranchised for a considerable period longer.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Two years.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes; two years. Therefore, I support the proposal of the right hon. gentleman as being most in the interests of the North-West.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that when the House adjourns this day, it do stand adjourned until Saturday, at three o'clock p.m., and that Government Orders have precedence on that day.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that, as probably he is well aware, unfortunately very little business, as a rule, is done on Saturday evenings, and certainly last Saturday was no exception to that general rule. • Would it not be better—would it not increase our facility for despatching business, and probably conduce to the convenience of the hon. gentleman, and of the members generally, if we were to meet at 1:30 and adjourn at six? It would give nearly the same time in point of hours, and a more effective time than we would have by meeting at 3 and adjourning at 12. Of course, it is only a matter of convenience.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will accept the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, but say that we meet at one and sit until 6. My experience, however, is that, in morning sessions, members are much more talkative than they are in the evening.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I wish to make a very brief statement to the House before the Orders of the Day are called. The House will remember that, on a recent occasion, when the question arose of the policy of various Governments in regard to the action of subordinate officers, I read a letter to the House which was handed to me by an hon. member who sits behind me from a printed paper published at the time, which was some time ago, and which I had no idea was not authentic. It purports to be a letter written by Mr. Wm. Ross, then a member of this House, and at one time a member of the Government; and when I read that letter to the House I had entirely forgotten that when it was originally produced its authenticity was challenged. That statement was made by an hon. gentleman opposite, and I think it is right that I should say that I have received a letter from Mr. Ross calling my attention to the fact of his having denied the authenticity of the letter, and assuring me that the letter was a forgery. I take this opportunity of stating to the House that I accept that statement. I have not the slightest doubt of the accuracy of the statement made by this gentleman, who at this moment holds a very high and important office under the Government. I have very great pleasure in making the fullest amends to the hon. gentleman, and in expressing my regret that I should have forgotten, what I now remember, that, at the time the letter was produced, its authenticity was denied.

PRESCOTT AND RUSSELL COUNTY COURT.

Mr. LABROSSE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before the order is called, I desire to call the attention of the Government, and of the Minister of Justice, to the state of the court at L'Orignal, in the judicial district of Prescott and Russell. It seems that the court is open since last Tuesday; consequently the jurymen and witnesses have been there for three days, and nothing has been done, owing to the absence of a judge. Mr. Maxwell, the county attorney, has written to me that no less than $300 additional expenses will be caused by this delay. I desire to know whether means have been taken to appoint a temporary judge to this court, or whether a new judge has been appointed to take the place of Judge Daniels, lately deceased.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would say to the hon. gentleman that in consequence of the regretted death of Mr. Justice Daniel, a deputy judge has been appointed to go down and hold the present Quarter Sessions, Judge Lyon, of Ottawa. The appointment of a county judge will be made in a few days

SUPPLY—M. F. O'DONOGHUE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Before you leave the Chair, a matter has been brought to my notice which I consider of sufficient importance to be brought to the notice of this House. It is in reference to an agreement that was entered into by the First Minister with one M. F. O'Donoghue, in reference to a claim of the late W. B. O'Donoghue, Manitoba. A gentleman has placed in my hand a statement of that agreement, which I will read to the House. He makes a statement, too, about the Premier of this country, on the 14th January, 1887, in which he says:

"Whereas, on the 29th of last January, the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, leader of the Government, made me the following proposition, which was accepted on the 30th of the same month, to wit: That in case he had a majority in the next House of Commons, he would have a decent sum granted by Parliament to the representatives of Professor O'Donoghue for losses sustained by him."

I find in reference to this agreement made by the Premier with M. F. O'Donoghue, certain letters which are placed in my hands, or copies of letters, which lead to the inevitable conclusion that Sir John A. Macdonald, Premier of this country, did enter into this agreement with Mr. M. F. O'Donoghue. I find that he addressed a letter to the Premier on the 24th January, and in this letter he relates several matters in regard to the claims of his late brother. He draws the attention of the Premier to these claims and to the statements made, not only by the Premier, but by the Minister of Finance, in reference to this claim some years before. The importance of the letter seems to have been acknowledged by the Premier, for I find in the letter he gives me that we have a letter from the Premier to him, which is dated at Earncliffe, Ottawa, 28th January, 1887:

"DEAR SIR,—If you call upon me to-morrow morning, say at eleven o'clock, I shall be glad to see you.

"Yours truly,

"JOHN A. MACDONALD.

"To M. F. O'DONOGHUE, Esq.,
"Ottawa."

Then we have this letter:

"OTTAWA, 30th January, 1887.

"To the Right Hon. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, "Premier of Canada.

"SIR,—I beg to inform you that I accept your proposition of yesterday, that in case you have a majority in the next House of Commons you would have a decent sum granted by Parliament to the representatives of Professor O'Donoghue for losses sustained by him, deeming the sum sufficiently satisfactory to his relatives and to his fellow countrymen in Canada, with whom his memory and his interests are a sacred trust. On the strength of that proposition and of the interest manifested by yourself and your colleagues, both in and out of Parliament, in the case of Professor O'Donoghue, and the Irishmen of Canada as represented in him, I deem it my duty to do all in my power to see you triumphantly returned to the next Parliament, and shall be happy to accompany you to Toronto, as you requested, and take part in the present campaign, with pen and tongue, wherever my services may be deemed most valuable. Kindly inform me when you start, and any further details you may consider advisable.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,

"Your very obedient servant,

"M. F. O'DONOGHUE."

"ALBION HOTEL."

Then we find that for some reason or other, Mr. O'Donoghue did not turn up at the station the next night, and we find a letter written by the secretary of the Premier of this country to Mr. O'Donoghue, which is dated, Union Station, Ottawa, 11 p.m., 31st January:

"DEAR SIR,—Sir John A. Macdonald desires me to say that he expected to meet you at the station to-night to go up to Toronto on the night train. He thinks you had better follow up to-morrow morning.

"I am, dear Sir, yours truly,

"JOSEPH POPE,

"Private Sec'y.

"M. F. O'DONOGHUE, Esq., Albion Hotel."

From the agreement which he says was entered into between himself and the Premier of this country, which I have read to the House, and from the letters I have read, it was apparent that there must have been something of that kind. That agreement shows that Sir John A. Macdonald, the Premier of this country, had entered into an agreement with this M. F. O'Donoghue, and copies of the letters that I have read would indicate that such was the case. Hon. gentlemen will probably say that the copies of the letters are not sufficient, that I should have read the original letters. If there is any doubt on this point, I have the original letters here also, and I can read them for the satisfaction of hon. members. In regard to the claim of the late Mr. O'Donoghue, speaking for myself, I know nothing; but I remember, and every hon. member who occupied a seat in this House in 1877, will well remember, how his claims were advocated by the present Minister of Inland Revenue and by the present Premier of this country. To show the House that they believed his claims were right and just, I will read what was said by the Premier on that occasion. He complained very bitterly because the Government that was then in power had not granted an amnesty to Professor O'Donoghue. He complained also bitterly because he was kept out of the country whilst unscrupulous men were taking away his property in Canada, and he led the people to believe that O'Donoghue was very much injured by the course pursued by the Government led by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie). He stated in the House at that time that Professor O'Donoghue was banished for the term of his life from his home, that it was an act of injustice, and there was no excuse for it, that this man had been left out in the cold, while others obtained permission, after three years, to return to this country and assume the privileges of British subjects as freemen and enjoy their property. Speaking in reference to this at Barrie, in 1878, the First Minister said:

"Mr. O'Donoghue wants to return to this country, not for the purpose of living in Canada, but for the purpose of recovering his lands in Winnipeg, which some unscrupulous men are trying to get hold of."

Then we find that the Minister of Inland Revenue, speaking in regard to the late Professor O'Donoghue, in the Session of 1877, said, I read from Hansard:

"What reason would justify the fact that he was banished for all time out of this country and his property, a large amount, is wrested from him and enjoyed by others?"

Now, we find those gentlemen believed, or stated at all events, that he had rights, that he had property, and he was kept out of the country by the action of the Government of Mr. Mackenzie, and prevented from getting his property. After a length of time Mr. Mackenzie's Government went out of power and Sir John A. Macdonald's Government came in. It was eight or nine years since they came into power, and I understand while negotiations have taken place between the heirs of the late W. B. O'Donoghue and the Government that as yet nothing had been arrived at. But we find that immediately before the elections the Premier entered into an agreement with M. F. O'Donoghue that if he would assist him in the elections, if he would go into the elections with him, he would have a decent sum placed in the Estimates for the purpose of paying off the claims of the late W. B. O'Donoghue. M. F. O'Donoghue believed that statement. He entered into the campaign with the hon. gentleman. He did not, it is true, accompany him to Toronto; I do not know what were his reasons for declining to go up in the same car, but when the hon. gentleman reached the station a note was sent by his secretary asking Mr. O'Donoghue to go up in the morning. He goes up in the morning. He there is told a telegram is sent by the Premier to the Minister of Inland Revenue telling him he had made a settlement with the heirs of the late W. B. O'Donoghue and asking M. F. O'Donoghue to go to the editor of the Irish Canadian and inform him that he had made a just and equitable settlement of the claims, and that he would see justice done in the matter. He goes into the elections with the hon. gentleman. He visits several constituencies where he is requested to go. The Premier at that time had trotted out the Protestant horse, he was riding it triumphantly; but he was using the back stair influence of other parties in order to secure the Irish Catholic vote. He was willing to enter into negotiations and an agreement in order to secure the cooperation and assistance of those men by fair promises. Mr. O'Donoghue entered into the campaign with him. He went into West Peterboro' and exercised his influence there, also into East Peterboro' and rendered assistance there, he also visited South Victoria, Algoma, East Assiniboia and East Northumberland and aided the Government, and he believed when he was doing this that he was going to get justice done to his brother's heirs. He relied upon the promises made by the First Minister of Canada; he believed that the promises made by the First Minister would be kept, and he worked on behalf of that Minister as far as he possibly could. When the elections were over and the First Minister had been returned to power he had no further need for that person who had assisted him; and the estimates have come down, but no sum appears in them to meet those claims, claims which the First Minister had admitted when out of office, claims which the Minister of Inland Revenue admitted when out of office; but after they got through the elections they placed nothing in the Estimates. I do not know whether there should be anything in the Estimates or not; but the arrangements was that there would be. If not, the First Minister should never have entered into an agreement to place a sum in the Estimates merely for the purpose of getting support. We find that this O'Donoghue had been courted by other Ministers. We find that the Minister of Railways sent for him; I have a note from his secretary desiring a conference with him. This was in December. What for? To go into the Ontario elections in order to defeat the Mowat Government. We find that others made application to him, and every means have been used for the purpose of securing the support of this Mr. O'Donoghue, who, I understand, is a very clever and able man. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) undertook to establish the claims and work out the claims of W. B. O'Donoghue.

Mr. LANDERKIN.

Mr. MITCHELL. They are on different sides.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Yes, they were on different sides. But there was a beautiful blending of the orange and the green. There was the canter on the Protestant horse in daylight and the auxiliary means used, but after taking up that bold platform it was not very good policy for them to make it known. In the letters which I hold here, written by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), he seems to admit that Mr. O'Donoghue had claims. He placed a notice on the paper asking for papers in the year 1879. Whether those papers were brought down or not I cannot say, but at all events he gave notice before the election, and he was also somewhat enthusiastic over those claims. But after the elections were over, his enthusiasm, like that of the First Minister and like that of the Minister of Inland Revenue, died away. It was no longer necessary to keep the promises they made and the assurances they gave to Mr. O'Donoghue, because their object had been served. Some other means, some other device, could be raised, probably, to assist them at some future time. Now, I have felt it was my duty to bring this matter before the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I believe it is the duty of every member of this House to see that if a pledge is given with a view of securing assistance or support at an election that it should be attended to.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LANDERKIN. And if a pledge is given which is not properly given—that should not be properly made, which had no right to be made, and I say that the First Minister, after making a pledge of this character, if this gentleman had no claims, was not justified in making pledges or leading the heirs of W. B. O'Donoghue to believe that the claims would be attended to if he had a majority at the elections. I have brought the matter before the House, and I leave it for the House to say whether it is in the interests of this country that the First Minister shall endeavor to succeed in maintaining power by making pledges which he does not perform. But if it is satisfactory to the House that such a state of things should exist, why I will have to bow to it as best I can.

Mr. McCARTHY. Will the hon. gentleman read the letter which he says he has from me? I have no recollection of having had any correspondence with Mr. O'Donoghue.

Mr. MACKENZIE. You were loaded up the other way.
Some hon. MEMBERS. The letter, the letter.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman wants the letter.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is a very long letter and probably it would do if I would hand it to the reporter.

An hon. MEMBER. He cannot read it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read, read.

Mr. LANDERKIN:—

“BARRIE, 26th March, 1879.

Mr. McCARTHY. 1879?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh; read, read.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. gentleman was loaded up the other way at that time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read, read; dispense.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). 1879?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Yes; the speech of the First Minister which I read was in 1877—he was in Opposition then—and the speech of the Minister of Inland Revenue was made in 1878. You would not expect those gentlemen to remember a promise they made so long ago. No, of course not.

“DEAR SIR,—I found yours of the 20th inst. on my arrival home this evening. On Saturday last Mr. Costigan and I had a long interview with a Mr. Spence.”—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Dispense, dispense.

Mr. LANDERKIN —

“—and went fully into the whole subject of his and your late brother's claim to the Winnipeg property.”

Some hon. MEMBERS. Give it up.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think I can make it out without a cipher.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Spell it.

Mr. LANDERKIN —

“His position is that he has the claim, but that he is willing to share it or go halves with your” —

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McCARTHY. Who is willing to go halves?

Mr. LANDERKIN —

“—he does not think that the entry of your brother's name in pencil gave him any claim, but he states the he (Spence)” —

An hon. MEMBER. Put your specs on.

Mr. MITCHELL. It cannot be copperplate surely.

Mr. BERGIN. Let the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) read the letter, and then let him be forgiven.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Send it over to him to read.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) would read it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Question, question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read, read.

THE IRON DUTIES.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. While the First Minister is considering his reply to my hon. friend, I will have a conversation with the Minister of Finance, which will give the First Minister time to recall all those interesting transactions to his memory, and, perhaps, the Finance Minister will give us some information. The point that I wanted to call his attention to was this: I am informed that the decision at which the Government arrived, that they would grant a certain indulgence in the matter of the duty on iron, in the case of goods brought into this country before a certain time, from some cause or other, to me unknown, had leaked out, and that in London, Manchester, Birmingham, and other places, some considerable number of days before the matter was announced in Canada authoritatively, the thing appears to have been known. With the permission of the House, I will read briefly the facts, and will leave it to the Finance Minister to say whether he thinks any further length of time can be granted, or whether any means can be devised to put all these people on an equality. I express no opinion as to the wisdom of the course adopted with respect to granting this indulgence. That is a question apart, which I am not going to raise now. But it is pretty clear, I think, that, as far as possible, all the trade should be put on the same footing. I will read this statement, and the hon. gentleman can correct me if it is wrong:

“On the 7th of June a notice appeared in the Toronto Mail that all goods purchased previous to the 13th of May and arriving in Canada before the 1st of July would be allowed to be entered at the old rate of duty. That was the first intimation the Toronto merchants had of the order.”

I think that was the date if I remember aright —

“From information received from England and France, that information must have been obtained by one or more Montreal importers before it was known to the general public. We have before us a letter from my firm's buyer at Manchester on the 28th of May, stating that it was reported there that the new duty would not be exacted before the 1st of July, and that Montreal houses were hurrying forward their goods so as to have them in Canada before that date. I have also a letter from London showing that it was known there, and I enclose one from Rouen, in France, dated on the 3rd of June, which will explain itself.

That letter simply states that it was known there that this tariff was not proposed to go into force until the 1st of July.

“No information was received at the Custom house before the morning of the 7th of June that goods were to be passed at the old rate of duty up to the 1st of July. On the 7th of July we cabled to ship everything which had been ordered, but fear it will do little good as the time was too short.”

Now, as I said, I say nothing at all about the policy of the matter. But it is tolerably clear, I think, from these statements which have been made to me, and which I now communicate to the Minister of Finance, that the intentions of the Department had got out; and it is quite clear, if he proposes to grant an indulgence of this kind, that as far as possible the various merchants affected should be put on the same footing. Having been absent from the House, I had no opportunity of discussing the way he proposed to do it, and I am not quite sure whether I would be free to make a suggestion; but I feel it my duty to call his attention and that of the House to the matter, because it is quite clear that when you depart from a former custom and grant an indulgence of this kind, unless the greatest possible precaution is taken, some merchants will obtain an incalculable and unfair advantage over others. I am not prepared to say that the Minister of Finance is to blame in the matter, but I think some pains should be taken to endeavor to put all these parties on an equality, and I might add that in the case of merchants living at a distance from the seaboard, as in Toronto, some advantage will be given to their competitors in Halifax and St. John if they are not allowed to consider their goods as practically entered when they reached this Dominion. One or two days will make a very great difference in those shipments, and he should make some time or allowance to merchants of Toronto and the interior in the matter of invoices arriving on or about the 30th of June or the 1st of July.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very glad the hon. gentleman has called attention to this matter in the way he has done. I am quite sure it is not necessary for me to assure the House that no information was given by the Government in any way to any person in advance of the communication that was made to the public. The question that arose was a very difficult question, and very strong representations were made to us as to the effect of the very great change that was made in the tariff, and as to the hardship that would arise if it affected purchases made on contracts entered into before the change in the tariff was made. Under those circumstances the Government came to the conclusion that in cases where undoubted evidence was given to the Government or the Customs Department that clearly established the fact of purchases having been made in England or elsewhere out of Canada previous to the change in the tariff being announced, all such purchases should be allowed to be entered at the old rate of duty down to the 1st of July; and I took a very early opportunity of announcing that the Government would take measures to relieve parties who had made contracts previous to that date, from the effects of the large increase in the tariff. The statement was made on the floor of the House in the Committee of Ways and Means at a very early period after the tariff was announced, and, subsequently, having had all these representations before us, the Government decided to apply that not merely to existing contracts which parties who are obliged to fill, but to allow all purchases made previous to the announcement of the changes in the tariff on the 13th of May to be entered up to the 1st of July. There is no doubt that a certain amount of difficulty will arise in putting every person on exactly the same footing in relation to it. The hon. gentleman says that merchants in Halifax and St. John would have an advantage of a day or two in entering their goods, which would arrive a little sooner than the goods of the merchants of Toronto; but, on the other hand, the merchants of St. John and Halifax have made a very strong representation to the Government, that as the season is earlier in Montreal and in Toronto than it is in Halifax and St. John, they are placed at a disadvantage by not having ordered their goods to be delivered, although the purchases were made previously, in time to receive them and have them entered by the 1st of July. They claim that the cities of Montreal and Toronto will in that way have a great advantage over them. There is a good deal of difficulty in arranging these matters so as to put all upon a perfectly equal footing; but the object the Government had in arriving at the determination to allow goods to be entered where undoubted evidence was given of the purchase having been made before the announcement of the changes in the tariff, or where the goods were actually in bond, ready for entry, previous to that announcement, was one that I think commended itself to the House when a rather unusual and certainly a very unexpected change was made in a number of items in the tariff.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On what day did the hon. gentleman make that statement in the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The first statement was made at a very early period, and the Minister of Customs communicated it to the various Customs officers immediately on the Government having arrived at the decision and announcing it to the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the information given me correct, that it was only announced in Toronto on the 7th of June?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That must be incorrect, because the announcement was made on the floor of the House about a month ago.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, I can quite understand that the hon. gentleman announced that some measure of relief would be taken, but it would be difficult for merchants to act upon that until some measure was definitely announced, and that is the reason, I understand, for the statement that the formal order fixing the 1st of July was not known in Toronto until the 7th of June.

M. F. O'DONOGHUE.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Read the letter.

Mr. McCARTHY. Do you want the letter?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, no.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read it, read it.

Mr. McCARTHY. If the Chairman will allow me I will read the letter.

"BARRIE, 26th March, 1879.

"M. F. O'DONOGHUE, Esq.,
"Collingwood.

"DEAR SIR,—I found yours of the 28th inst., on my arrival home this evening.

"On Saturday last Mr. Costigan and I had a long interview with Mr. Spence, and went fully into the whole subject of his and your brother's claim to the Winnipeg property. His position is that he has the claim, but that he is willing to share it or go halves with your brother's heirs. He does not think that the entry of your brother's name in pencil gave him any claim, but he states that his (Spence's) name was entered in ink—which, so far as my memory serves me, for the papers are in Ottawa, is correct—and that he staked out the land, that is, planted stakes at the four corners of the lot or parcel of land, and his contention is that under the Manitoba Act he was in 'the peaceable possession' of his land, and is therefore or was therefore entitled to the 'preemption.' My opinion is that this could hardly be called 'peaceable possession' or possession at all, within the meaning of the Act. But it may be, as Mr. Spence says, that according to the manner of locating and dealing with lands in the North-West, this (that is, the staking and the entering of the name in the Hudson Bay Company's register) might be considered possession. If so, he would have a good case to set aside the patent to the Hudson Bay Company in a court of law, and the Manitoba courts are the only courts that would have jurisdiction in the cases."

I hope my hon. friends are taking advantage of this opinion, because they ought to contribute something for it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You were paid for that before.

Mr. McCARTHY. Pardon me, I was not paid. I am getting paid now.

"But he misinformed Mr. Long, as after a good deal of cross-examination I expected from him, in saying that any such claim has as yet been recognised. He admits that so far none have been—but he says that numbers of half-breeds hold their lands or claim title on similar title—and that they must be recognised—or there will be another rebellion. How far he may be correct in this I don't know, for I must tell you Mr. Spence did not impress me as either a very intelligent or a very reliable person, and his real or pretended notion of his claim is of the most hazy kind.

"One thing is clear that while aware, as he admits he is, that his only redress is by proceeding in the courts of Manitoba against the Hudson Bay Company, that he has no intention of so proceeding, nor any means to proceed with nor any friends to help him. This of itself shows the obstruction his claim is held in, and I came to the conclusion that he has not the slightest intention of proceeding but is merely desirous of making a fuss so that some person may buy him off.

"Finally, we determined that we would move for the papers in connection with the sale or the patenting of the land to the Hudson Bay Company. This may help us—though I don't think it will, but we may jointly get some more light on the subject. And, at all events, it will be opening the matter and to some extent bringing the case to the notice of the House and the country. On my return to Ottawa I shall at once put a motion on the paper if you don't disapprove of it.

"There is no ground for a committee until the papers are brought down, and I fear then we will be met by the argument that the courts of law are open to us."

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Fishery protection steamers and vessels.....$125,000

Mr. DAVIES. I do not propose to enter upon a lengthy discussion of this important item. I recognise the fact that the Session is drawing to its close, and, however important the subject may be, I do not wish to detain the House by discussing the very important questions of an international character which are more or less involved in the vote the House is now asked to take. I merely wish to express my personal disappointment at the House being asked to vote this sum without having submitted to it the report of the officer in charge of the service during the present year. This service is a most important one. We may have different opinions as to the causes which brought about the necessity for voting this money. I, myself, believe that if the Government had taken the proper course in the matter years ago, which I invited them to take, of opening negotiations with the Government of the United States, we would have had no occasion to commission a number of cruisers to protect our fishery interests. I believe that if the proposition then submitted by the Opposition had been accepted, and if the Government had taken steps to open up negotiations with the United States, we would, to-day, be enjoying the benefits of a partial, if not complete, reciprocity treaty with the United States. Our proposition was however rejected; and, I believe, it was rejected, not on its merits, but through party feeling, which was so strong that the Government felt bound to reject any proposition that came from this side of the House. I have a suspicion now that the right hon. the First Minister is aware that, if he had acted on our advice, we would now be enjoying at least a partial measure of reciprocity. He is, therefore, very much to be blamed for not having taken steps at the proper time to open up negotiations with the United States, but that is a past matter, and I am not disposed to reopen it. My intention is simply to discuss this question in the light of the facts, as they exist at present. The Government having, as I said, neglected their duties, and being now, through that neglect, brought face to face with the present condition of affairs, namely, the expiration of the Washington Treaty, I think I express the opinion of both sides, that, in taking steps to protect our fisheries, the Government carried out the wishes of the very large majority of the people. I am quite sure that, under the then circumstances, that was the only proper course to be taken; and, so far as they have taken that course, they have my cordial support. I am not going to open up those grave questions, which have been, in my humble judgment, discussed with very great ability by the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Marine and Finance. I have given a good deal of time to the reading of the papers on those questions, and I think that, so far as the controversy is concerned, between Mr. Bayard and Mr. Phelps the American Minister to England, on the one side, and the gentleman who acted for Canada on our side, our case has been very well presented. I will not now go into the discussion of that case, but will only submit what seems to me to be a great weakness in the manner in which the Government are carrying out the protection of our fisheries. On the principle of a protecting service, I am thoroughly in accord with the Government; they were right in commissioning cruisers, but I do think those cruisers, acting under instructions, no doubt of the Department of Marine, have not taken the proper course to efficiently protect our fisheries. We have not before us any reports that we ought to have. I think the First Minister will agree with me on that point. We have no report from the gentleman called the admiral of the service, Capt. Scott. We ought to have a complete report from the responsible head of the service, telling us how many American vessels frequented our bays during the past year or two, what portions of the bay they frequented, and the difficulty, if any, he experienced in effectually carrying out the protection of our fisheries. We are furnished simply the bald copy of the boarding books of the different commissioned schooners. It is too much to think that Mr. Scott, who has this large number of vessels under his charge, made no official report to the Marine Department. I think he must have made a report, and, possibly, owing, if not to the negligence of the officers of the Department, to some other cause, it has not been brought down. We have had to complain more than once that the reports of that branch of the Marine Department have been very late in being laid on the Table, and it was only the other day we were furnished any information as to the work done by the officers of the Government in the this connection. It is to that work I will shortly call the attention of the House. We have had under commission, during the past years, six or seven of these fast sailing cutters, and one or two steamers. Hon. gentlemen who have followed the history of this protective service will recollect that, during the past year, we have seized only three American vessels. One vessel, and one only, was seized for actually fishing within the three-mile limit. That was the Highland Light; the other two—the Ella M. Doughty and the David J. Adams—were seized for obtaining bait, or attempting to buy bait within the limits, and also for violating the Customs regulations, as I understand. It would strike those who know something about the habits of the American fishermen as very singular that if the poachers were watched, only one was seized for fishing within the three mile limit. The charge which I make—and I do that without making any charge of improper conduct against those who are carrying on the service—is that their time was devoted too much to the boarding and taking control of American vessels in harbors, while they did not give the proper protection they should have given to the sea coast fisheries outside. It was a matter of public notoriety, it was talked of at every fireside, it was talked of at every dinner table, it was talked of in every exchange in the Maritime Provinces, that the cruisers were almost all the time in harbor. It may be that it was necessary for them to be in harbor; it may be that it was necessary for them to watch these vessels, but my experience, and the information I have derived from those who have the best knowledge of the subject, leads me to believe that it was altogether improper for them to remain in harbor for the time they did. I find, taking up the copies of the different boarding books of these different vessels, that the information I had, and the facts which were generally known in the Maritime Provinces are endorsed by the official statement which is obtainable here. I find, in the first place, that the schooner L. Houlett, under command of Capt. Lorway, boarded 264 vessels; and one would suppose, in looking at this book, that this gentleman and his vessel had been exceedingly active in looking after these poachers and protecting our fisheries, but a critical examination of the paper will show that there was nothing of the kind. Why? Because, of the 264 vessels that he boarded, 259 were vessels lying at anchor in the different harbors of the Provinces, and he only boarded five vessels outside of the harbor. One of these five vessels was that which was seized for an actual fishing within the limits, the Highland Light, and she has been condemned and sold; and the other four vessels he boarded outside of the harbor while they were supposed to be trespassing within the bounds. Hon. gentlemen will see at once that this was a very small proportion. Then, we have the Critic, commanded by Captain McLaren, which boarded 135 vessels in all, but 132 of these were at anchor in the harbor, and only three outside. The F. E. Conrod, Capt. Smeltzer in command, boarded 48 vessels, and of these seven were outside a harbor, at the mouth of the Baie des Chaleurs, and he reports that he boarded them and warned them not to enter the bay; but, outside of these seven, he does not seem to have boarded a single American fishing craft when it was engaged in prosecuting the fishing business in the Maritime Provinces. The Terror, Capt. Quigley, boarded 73 vessels in all, and all of these were in the harbor except one which he boarded at the mouth of the harbor of Shelburne. Then we have the General Middleton, that vessel was more concerned in the Bay of Fundy, with the fishing of which I am not very well acquainted, but they appear to be all small boats of two tons, three and six tons and so on, so I will not refer to that. They are not what we call fishing vessels at all. The Lizzie Lindsay, Capt. Pouliot in command, boarded 27 vessels in all. Two of these were outside and the other 25 were in the harbor. The Lansdowne, commanded by Captain Dakins, boarded 93 vessels in all. Nine of these were at sea and 82 were in harbor. Hon. gentlemen would imagine on a first glance that a man who boards 72 vessels has evidently done a good deal of work, but, if you examine the return, you will find that as many as 40 of those were lying in the same harbor at the same time, and were all boarded on one day.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. What of that?

Mr. DAVIES. I say that these vessels were in the same harbor, and the work done consisted of boarding them in that harbor. I think he should have devoted more time to sailing along the coasts and boarding them there.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If they were in the harbor, he could not board them outside the harbor.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman knows that they entered the harbor simply for the purpose of shelter, and that they would prosecute their fishing along the coasts and not in the harbor, and it seems to me that, if the captains of these cruisers were doing their duty, they would be following these fleets as they pursue the mackerel going along the coasts. Every experienced fisherman knows just where the mackerel will be at a certain time in a given month, whether they will be off Cape Breton, or off the north point of the island, or off the Magdalen Islands, or off the north-east coast of New Brunswick. I say that, if these cruisers had followed the fleets along the coast and had endeavored to keep them in sight and prevent their entering the fishing grounds, they would have been doing more effective service than they did by staying in the harbors and boarding vessels there. At least that is my humble judgment. I may be wrong, but it seems to me that they would have done more effective service in that way than by boarding the vessels in the harbors and ordering them out after twenty-four hours. Further, my judgment in that respect was borne out by the ultimate judgment of the Department of Marine, because, before the season was over, when complaints had been made, the Department directed these cruisers that they were not to remain in the harbor, and that they were not to go into the harbors except once a week. The remaining steamer to which I have not yet referred to was the Acadia, which boarded 43 vessels, every one of which was in the harbor. I may say to the hon. gentleman that this matter which I am bringing to the notice of the House is not a matter of party politics at all. It is simply a question of how we shall best carry out the protective service, whether by keeping our vessels in the harbors and ordering the American vessels out and preventing them from remaining more than twenty-four hours in the harbors, or whether we would not perform it more efficiently by keeping our vessels constantly cruising along with the fleet as they go from one point to another. My judgment is that it can be more efficiently done if we adopt the latter course. I will just read a short extract from the Government paper in the Province from which I come, to show that I am not presenting any party aspect of the case whatever, but I am voicing the general opinion of the people who live on the spot. On the 19th August the Examiner, the Government paper in that Province, in its leading article, says:

MR. DAVES.

"The contention that the reports concerning the cruisers are due entirely to the desire of the Grits to make political capital is not true. We have heard some of the strongest supporters of the Government in this Province say that they have seen the United States seiners fishing within the three mile limit day after day—undisturbed by cruiser or Custom house officer. That the Grits are trying to make capital is no doubt true; and that they will succeed to some extent, if the people are not convinced that they are in error or if a change does not take place is certain."

About the same date an important meeting of fishermen, numbering over 400, was held at one of our fishing stations in Prince Edward Island, at which resolutions were passed, condemning the manner in which the cutters were carrying out their work. The resolution runs as follows:—

"Whereas, we have been led to believe that the Dominion Government had made ample preparations to protect our mackerel grounds from American poachers;

"And whereas, to our own knowledge during the past week, Americans have seined inside of the limit off here.

"Be it, therefore, resolved, That we—the fishermen of Miminigash—call upon our Government either to remove their sham cutters or compel their captains to do their duty."

Concerning this resolution, of course, hon. gentlemen, who are practical men, know that it may or may not have been stronger than the facts required. I merely give it as the resolution passed at a meeting of 400 fishermen, called, not by party men, but by men of both parties. On the same date the Morning Herald, of Halifax, published the following:—

"We have been shown a private letter from an officer on the cruiser Houlett, in which he says the Houlett was off Miminigash, P.E.I., the very day that 150 sail, two-thirds of whom were Yankees, were alleged to have been there. The actual number of fishing vessels in that locality that day was 44, of which 20 were Nova Scotia and P.E.I. crafts. Instead of fish being plenty, they were very scarce. Instead of being close inshore, the Yankees were four to six miles off shore, and, therefore, all outside the limit."

That was the answer to the resolution passed by the 400 fishermen. Well, a reporter of the Halifax Herald waited upon Admiral Scott and called his attention to this statement, that the fishing coasts of Prince Edward Island were not being protected by the cruisers; and in answer to a question of how much truth there was in the published statement that of 150 sail of fishermen off Miminigash, P.E.I., within the three-mile limit, two-thirds of them were Yankees, the gallant captain replied:

"That statement is absurd on the face of it; it is utterly untrue. It is made by persons who are poor judges of distances, who can't distinguish between a line two or four miles from the shore—men who are partisans, and who grossly exaggerate, if they do not actually invent the alleged facts for partisan purposes. These vessels didn't show their colors, and American and Nova Scotia fishing vessels are now so much alike that it is very difficult to distinguish between them."

Now, I presume the statements made by Capt. Scott to the reporter of the Halifax Herald, were similar to the official reports he made upon these facts to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I wish to remark that while Capt. Scott is very dogmatic, he could not possibly have a knowledge which justified him in making these assertions. He, was not there himself, he knew nothing of the facts, and therefore, when we give weight to his statement, it must be with a proper appreciation of the chances he had of forming a proper judgment. In reply to him a letter was published in the Halifax Herald from one of the strongest supporters of the Government in Prince Edward Island. After quoting the question put to Capt. Scott, and the answer which I have read, it states:

"Now, with all deference to Capt. Scott the report is true, is not tances two or four miles as Capt. Scott or the commander of any of the exaggerated, and is made by one who is as capable of judging of dis-cruisers; and is made by a partisan, but one who has never cast a vote but for the Conservative party.

"I can also state that on Tuesday evening, the 10th inst., at 7 30 o'clock, I counted no less than one hundred and seventy-six sail of schooners from Seal Point, Lot 7, to Miminigash Reef. At least two-thirds of these were American, as there are not over fifty Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island vessels in the bay now. These vessels were anchored within a mile of the shore. These facts I am prepared to swear to, and the meeting of about 400 fishermen at Miminigash, will bear them out.

"Yours,

"JOHN HUGHES."

Now, I quote this to show that these officials are very ready to give what would seem to be a plausible explanation, but the explanation given by Capt. Scott, when it is sifted, is found to be worth very little. He spoke dogmatically upon facts of which he could not possibly have had personal knowledge, and he is contradicted emphatically by gentlemen who were present, who saw the fishing fleet, and who told him that they were partisans only in the sense of being supporters of the Government, and who had never cast any votes but in favor of the Government in their life. I have a number of other extracts in the same line, but it is quite unnecessary to read them because the object which I had in view was to bring to the notice of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries this fact, that the people along the coasts believe that the cruisers last year did not make any attempt—or, at any rate, until later on, in the last part of the year, a very feeble attempt—to watch American vessels to prevent them from actually fishing within the three-mile limit; that they devoted nearly all their time to watching schooners when they entered the harbor, and to trying to prevent these schooners from committing breaches of the Customs law. I believe that more irritation was caused last year by the attempts of the officers to enforce the strict provisions of the Customs law than was desirable. I think that if the energies of the captains of these cruisers had been devoted to watching the vessels within the limits, and not been too strict in the enforcement of technical rules, which are of no very great practical importance, the object which we have in view would have been better attained, and there would have been less irritation to-day, and the bad feeling exhibited by so many of the American people would not exist. I am free to say that having read the correspondence published by this Government, I think a great deal of that irritation is unjustifiable; I am free to say that the facts which were described by Secretary Bayard were ex parte facts, reported by persons who were in many cases very hostile; and I am free to say that when explanations were given by the officers, they put a different color upon some of these facts. But it is not necessary, it is undesirable, I think, to go into detail, or even to express my opinion upon cases where I think the officers acted, at any rate in some cases, harshly, and beyond what was judicious and right. I simply content myself with submitting to the Minister that a different policy should be adopted this coming year, that we should have less boarding and enforcing of Customs laws in the harbors, and a more efficient protection of the coasts outside, so that the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces and the people generally will come to the conclusion that this service, which was not what many of them think that it ought to be last year will henceforth be a reality. I recognise fully the importance of that phase of the case which the Minister has enforced by memoranda so strongly, that we should protect our fisheries not only from Americans actually fishing there but protecting them in the sense of preventing Americans making our harbors the basis for their operations. I recognise the importance of that branch of the case; but that should be subordinated to the main feature of the protection service, which, I think, should be the guarding of the coasts so as to keep Americans out of the three mile limit. While I do not wish to put entirely out of view the importance of guarding our harbors against being made the basis of operations for American fishermen, it should be subordinated, I say, to the other policy, that of protecting the general line of the coast and making harbor seizures a secondary consideration.

Mr. FLYNN. I can scarcely allow this item to pass without saying a few words in regard to the view propounded by the last speaker. It was simply this: That while we believe the treaty should be carried out in its entirety, still I believe during last season a great deal of unnecessary annoyance was given to American fishermen by the unnecessary exaction of Customs duties. Those fishermen, before the termination of the treaty, were in the habit of coming into our ports, and within twenty-four hours they reported. In the meantime they went on shore and did what they liked; but after the treaty was abrogated—last year I speak of—if they came in and landed without reporting to the Customs house, the vessel was liable to seizure. I will give an instance which occurred in the town of Arichat, which bears out the views of the last speaker. An American fishing vessel came in from sea. A great many of her crew belonged to Arichat. One of them, unfortunately, was drowned. The vessel was laden with fish, and the captain wished to land the effects of the drowned seaman. The vessel anchored between ten and eleven o'clock. As she was going to leave next morning some of the men landed to see their friends. Next morning the Custom house officer went on board and seized the vessel. He telegraphed the seizure to Ottawa, I understand, and the result was a fine of $200 on the vessel. When the captain found that he had been fined he offered to give a draft on the owner in Provincetown. The collector refused to take the draft. The captain of the American vessel had no money and the collector had refused to take the draft. His vessel was lying there, detained at considerable expense. After some time he found a generous friend who advanced $200 in order to relieve the vessel from its position.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you know the name of the vessel?

Mr. FLYNN. I forgot the name of the vessel, but I remember that the name of the captain was Kent. The captain gave $200 cash to the collector of Customs, and, of course, when the vessel reached its destination in Provincetown, the money was remitted to the lender. The feeling in Gloucester and the eastern States naturally became high. While a good deal of irritation was aroused on this fishery question, it was intensified by such acts. What was the result of this case? On application by the owner to the Government at Ottawa, the fine was remitted, and the owners received back their $200. Here, then, the captain was wrongly detained, and, in proof of that fact, was the further fact that the money was afterwards refunded. While I believe it is the duty of the Government to rigidly and on every point enforce the treaty, I quite agree with the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) that those petty Customs exactions should be carefully made by those who administer the law. American vessels were formerly in the habit of visiting our ports. They were not seized by the Customs officer, and if the crew landed a vessel was not subject to seizure. When the vessels came last year they thought that so long as they did not attempt to violate the Customs laws and land any goods they would not violate the treaty. Here is a further fact. This generous American captain, knowing that the drowned seaman had a large family, was willing to make a present to his widow of flour and other goods, but the Custom house officer would not permit it. I draw the attention of the Minister of Customs to these facts, for it is desirable that instructions be given to the officers at the different ports of the Maritime Provinces, that a more generous construction of our Customs laws should be given in regard to American vessels.

Mr. EISENHAUER. In my opinion, the Department has shown harsh treatment, not only to American vessels but to our own vessels, and I will refer to one or two cases in point. One of our schooners happened to loan two barrels of salt to an American schooner the year previous to the abrogation of the treaty. The following year the captain called with the same American vessel and returned two barrels of salt. The vessel was seized for that offence, which was interpreted to be a violation of the Customs Act. After considerable time had elapsed, a portion of the fine was returned. Again, last year the same schooner happened to fall in with an American schooner, 12 miles off land. The American schooner was short of provisions, bound on her way home, and she bought some from the Canadian vessel. Yet the collector of the port seized the vessel and called upon it to pay a fine of $400. I took the trouble to obtain the affidavit of the captain that he was 12 miles from land, and I waited for some time to get the decision of the Department, and to my surprise after waiting nearly two months I was told that the burden of proof fell upon the owner. I was told there was no affidavit submitted to the Department. This seemed a very strange circumstance, indeed—I handed that affidavit to the Commissioner with my own hand, and yet I was afterwards told that there was no affidavit. I think under the circumstances that the fine should be returned. I find by the instructions given to captains of cruisers this year that their instructions are to do everything they did last year, if I read the instructions aright. I do not know what the decision of the Department in the latter case was; but in the first case, in which the Government retained part of the fine, $100, there was certainly harsh treatment, especially as this was one of our own vessels.

Mr. JONES. It was natural that a vote of this kind should invite a good deal of discussion, because this is the only occasion this Session when this question regarding our fisheries has been brought properly before the House. It was natural, because this is a subject of so much interest to the country, that it is desirable in the interest of the Dominion that the fullest information should be obtained from the Government, and the whole question discussed in a fair and candid spirit. My only cause of complaint against the present Administration is, as indicated by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I., (Mr. Davies), is their failure to negotiate with the Americans before the treaty expired. It would appear, from all the circumstances which have since transpired, that the Americans were under the impression that we would not enter into negotiations with them unless on the basis of the old treaty, that is to say unless there was a clause in the new treaty providing that a money compensation was to be given, as under the Washington Treaty. I am not going to offer any opinion on that subject, nor do I desire to say anything now which would prejudice the position of the Government with regard to the important negotiations which they have in hand. But I do think if the Government had been in a position to have informed the American Government, in an indirect way, that it was possible or probable that a new basis of treaty might be arranged, a good deal of the difficulty might have been removed, and the cause of the present irritation might have been avoided. I desire to say nothing which would embarrass the Government, because I recognise the difficulty in dealing with a subject of such great importance. I have, on all occasions, sustained the Government in the position they took in regard to the defence of our fisheries. Before the Government sent their cruisers into our waters, I was interviewed by the correspondent of an American paper, who wished to ascertain the views we held in Nova Scotia with regard to the course which should be adopted. I was referring to the renewal of the treaty and the desirability of having a treaty which would be fair to both countries, and then I went on to say:

Mr. FLYNN.

"Should the American Government, however, decide against negotiating a new treaty we must, of course, maintain our rights. To be driven to this would, I consider, be a national misfortune to both countries. If we have rights, which the Americans themselves, by their own estimate, have valued at $15,000 or $25,000 a day at one single point of our extensive fishing coast, it will be the duty of our Government to see that those rights are maintained and respected. Nothing but mutual concession, and a determination on the part of both Governments to avoid cause for open disagreement, can prevent the most irritating consequences, and our present friendly relations might be strained to a degree that would scarcely bear further tension. An eminent American statesman is reported to have said in Congress that our geographical position placed us under bonds to keep the peace. This may be true or it may not. We think it is not, if the power and prestige of England is to count for anything in the discussion. There is no man with any responsibility who would not deprecate and deeply regret serious disagreement with our neighbors, but if we have rights they must be defended, if assailed, if we would preserve our own self respect or the respect of the world."

Now, those were the views which I entertained before the Government sent their cruisers into our waters, and I think that the Government adopted a very proper course with regard to guarding our line of sea coast against the encroachments of the American fishermen. In regard to the treaty, I think it is very undesirable that here or elsewhere any expressions of opinions should be given as to the great desirability or necessity of a treaty with the United States. Shortly after the treaty expired there was a meeting held in the Chamber of Commerce in Halifax, when a resolution was moved calling on the Government to take immediate steps to renew a reciprocity treaty. On that occasion I said I thought that, while it was so well known throughout this country that our people were anxious for the renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty on equal terms, it was not wise or judicious that we should publish to the world, from every commercial standpoint, the opinions we entertained on that subject. I am aware that that expression of mine was quoted on a recent political occasion in my own Province, but I expressed it there in the same sense in which I would express it here, because I believe the Government, recognising their responsibility in dealing with a matter of so much importance, would be freer to act on behalf of our country, if there was not brought to bear, from the other side, expressions of opinion from our own people that we could not live or prosper without trade relations with that country. I remember that, during the sitting of the Washington Commission at Halifax, when the American case was presented to that Commission, the largest part of the case consisted of quotations from the speeches of the present Minister of Finance and the leader of the Administration, showing the advantages we would derive from the Washington Treaty; and, therefore, I thought it was unwise on the part of any public man to put words in the mouths of American statesmen which might be used against us in any future negotiations. Now, Sir, the question regarding the work which has been done is fairly a matter for difference of opinion. I do not mean to say that the cruisers may not, on the whole, have fairly discharged their work, but there has been very considerable complaint from various parts of the Provinces that these vessels have remained in port at times when they should have been at sea. I do not speak from any personal knowledge; I only gather my information from sources such as are open to the hon. gentleman himself; but I noticed, no longer ago than yesterday, a dispatch from Halifax which was published in the Ottawa Free Press, and which will bear out that contention. The dispatch is under the heading: "Where are the Cruisers? Americans fishing within a mile of the Cape Breton shore."

"HALIFAX, N. S., 16th June.—(Special.)

"Advices from the Cape Breton coast state that the shore is swarming with American fishermen who are taking mackerel far within the three-mile limit. There are not half enough cruisers to watch them. Twenty Americans were fishing away a short distance from Neil's Harbor, C. B., yesterday. The steam cruiser Acadia has gone to swoop down on them.

I saw a somewhat similar statement made at various times this year, and it would almost appear as if the Government had given the captains of those cruisers instructions not to be so vigorous in the prosecution of their duty as they seem to have been last year. Of course, I am not aware that such instructions have been given; but if those statements are correct it would appear that this year, up to the present time, they have not been as anxious to keep the Americans from our coast as during the previous year. Now, the question of the renewal of the treaty may come up before this House is again called upon to express an opinion, and I would take this opportunity of bringing to the attention of the Government some very important matters which will have to be considered in that regard, when those negotiations are entertained. For instance, there is the question with regard to the right of fishing on our coast, which the Americans claim they had under the treaty, as differing from our own fishermen. Our own fishermen are governed by our local law, and there are certain times when they cannot fish. There are certain places where they cannot put their nets; but the Americans claim as in the case of the Fortune Bay difficulty, that the treaty between Great Britain and the United States took the precedence over all local legislation, and consequently they could fish wherever and whenever they liked. The hon. gentleman is aware that this led to the difficulty at Fortune Bay, in Newfoundland, when the Americans took bait there at a time when the Newfoundland people could not set their nets, and those of the Americans were destroyed, resulting in a claim put in by the American Government for $25,000 for one day's bait fishing, and their claim was paid by the British Government, $15,000, at a subsequent date. The American fishermen should have no advantage in this respect over our own fishermen. There is another matter which I would also refer to, and that is the question of bait so far as the French fishermen are concerned. The House is aware that the Government of Newfoundland passed a Bill prohibiting the selling of bait in Newfoundland to the French fishermen. That Bill was refused at first by the British Government, but, subsequently, it was approved of, to take effect next year. Therefore, next spring the French fishermen will be unable to secure bait in Newfoundland to the extent to which they have been in the habit of securing it heretofore, and I am informed that the French fishermen are already looking to Nova Scotia as a field for supplying them with the bait which will be denied to them next spring by the action of the Newfoundland Government. Therefore, I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he should take some authority from this House before the Session is closed, for placing the French fishermen in the same position with regard to bait as the American fishermen are in under the laws of this Dominion to-day. We know that the Americans value this privilege very highly, and it is one of the most important factors in the success of their fisheries. I am discussing this subject free from all party bias at all. I am merely giving the hon. gentleman the result of such information as I have been able to collect on the subject, and drawing his attention to some points which may be worthy of his consideration if an opportunity arises for negotiating a new treaty with the United States.

Mr. ELLIS. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has referred to the report on the fisheries which has been brought down to the House. It appears to me that that report, after having passed through the hands of the printer, suffered from mutilation by somebody. It is quite possible that the report from Capt. Scott was printed, and was torn from the book, because I observe that the last page of the book is missing, and the reports of all the officers are there, signed, except that of Capt. Scott. Now, I would like to see the public opinion of this country take a somewhat different direction from what it has taken in reference to the fishery question. I never agreed with the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government but once, and that was in 1871, when I was entirely at variance with my party in regard to the treaty he negotiated at that time. I believe that in making arrangements with foreign countries, we have to make the best terms with them that we can. The right hon. gentleman did that, and I was glad to give him my support, and I was glad also to see that the Conservatives of my Province came to agree with me. Of course, I have been charged sometimes with being too friendly towards the Americans, but I believe my view was in the public interest. None of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken this afternoon have touched on the main point at issue at the present time. I apprehend, from reading the papers, that the gravest question that can affect the future of this country is before the country to-day in connection with the fisheries. I find fault with the Government for the extreme course they have taken to protect the fisheries. I presume that they have been driven to that course by the expression of feeling in the Maritime Provinces, in regard to the rights of the fishermen of Canada. It is well known that there is a difference of opinion as to the construction of the treaty of 1818—that the Americans take one view and our people another. The Government have endeavored to enforce the very stringent Canadian view, while the Americans contend that outside of the Treaty altogether there have grown up a series of commercial rights between the two countries with regard to the exchange of products, and that, therefore, leaving out the question what particular rights they have under the treaty, we are doing them an injury, and bringing upon ourselves serious difficulties by refusing to the fishermen of the United States commercial rights in our ports, such as, for instance, the selling of bait and the purchase of coal and other articles. I can, perhaps, join in the compliments to the Minister of Justice on the able way in which he has prepared his papers; but, as one leading London newspaper remarks, it is not, after all, legal arguments which will settle this diplomatic business. I observe, however, in one of the papers which he has put before the country, he lays down the principle that the point at issue is, that we should not sell bait, or anything else, to the Americans to enable them to carry on the deep sea fisheries. I do not believe that is a position that we can maintain. The Minister of Finance recently took off the duty on American coal to encourage the manufacture of Canadian iron in this country. The Americans might turn around on us and refuse to sell us any hard coal because we use it in our fishery protecting steamers. Therefore, I think, we shall have to come to the point of regarding the selling of bait, or the selling of coal, as commercial rights which we shall have to allow to the American people. If we do not, what are we face to face with? The Congress of the United States has passed a retaliatory bill, and the President of the United States can at any moment, if he deems it justifiable, put it into effect. What does it mean? The hon. Minister of Finance says there is a silver lining to the cloud that hangs over the country. I say there is none. It is one of the darkest clouds that threatens the country—the interruption of our commercial relations with the United States. Nothing at all could compensate for the breaking up of those relations. I observe, of late, that there is a disposition on the part of the British Government to say that we have gone too far, at any rate far enough. I regret that the Government did not deem it advisable to bring down one of the most important despatches sent to them, the despatch of the 27th of Decr., in which the Colonial Office advised the Canadian Government to be careful with reference to its proceedings. It is quite true, it is referred to in a Minute of Council of the Government; but they have not put that despatch in their book. I observe, further, that the Americans made a proposal containing five articles with reference to the settlement of this question. Special negotiations have been going on. The Government of Canada, so far as I can make out, is not willing to accept article three; but I observe the British Government telegraphed on the 8th of March the Canadian Government that they were prepared to accept article three with some modification.

An hon. MEMBER. Carried.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think we have the right to ask that hon. gentlemen on the other side should allow the hon. gentleman, the member for St. John (Mr. Ellis), to state his case. He is doing it in a proper manner, and is giving information Parliament ought to have.

Mr. ELLIS. What I was proceeding to say was that, on the 8th March, the British Government telegraphed the Canadian Government that they were prepared to accept article three; that is the article providing that an American ship and a British ship shall be sent to these waters to exercise joint control, but they would only accept it subject to the alternative that, in case of difference of opinion with regard to a seizure, instead of an umpire being chosen, as provided in the article, the vessel seized should be sent to Halifax for adjudication. I observe that is in the British papers, but is not in the Canadian return. I only call attention to this to show that the opinion of the British Government is that we have gone far enough, and it seems to me that we ought to face the situation fairly. There is no use, on the one hand, of maintaining the opinion that these fisheries must be protected to the extreme extent of our interpretation of a treaty which is in dispute; and, on the other hand, we must admit that we have a great deal to gain by extended commercial relations with the United States. Of course, we want to have our fisheries protected against American fishermen, within the three-mile limit; but it is absurd for us to insist on standing by the clause of a treaty, made seventy years ago, which excludes American vessels coming into our ports for the purpose of purchasing bait and coal. It is evident that our Government, backed by the public opinion of Canada and relying on the public feeling of the Mother Country, has gone too far, and that the British Government is now backing down, in view of the strong pressure brought to bear upon it by the Government of the United States. The conclusion I draw from this state of affairs is, that it would be far better if the Dominion had control of its own affairs entirely. If such were the case we would not, on the one hand, have gone to the extreme course to which we have gone in this matter; and then, on the other hand, we would not be likely to be let down so easily. We have acted on the assumption that we could force the United States to make a treaty. That time has passed. No one who reads the debates on the Retaliatory Bill in Congress can fail to come to the conclusion that, whatever is to be done in that view, must be done simply by means of commercial relations alone. There is no use in our attempting to make a further treaty. I advert particularly to the remarks in the Senate on 25th February in the debate on a resolution offered by Senator Hoar, that, under present circumstances, no negotiations should be undertaken with Great Britain in regard to existing difficulties with the Provinces of Canada, which has for its object the reduction, change or abolition of any of our existing duties on imports:

"Mr. Morrell expressed doubts as to the rights to make treaties which would not include the most favored nations, and objected to a treaty with Canada, inasmuch as the privileges given to her would have to be given to England. Therefore, any possible treaty of advantage with Canada will be out of the question.

"Senator Hoar said: There are a great many persons who suppose that our existing difficulties with Canada, growing out of their treatment of Massachusetts and Maine fishermen, are occasioned by a desire on our part to intrude ourselves into the waters adjacent to those shores for the purpose of obtaining fish. There is no such desire on the part of any number of American citizens.

Mr. ELLIS.

These difficulties are created for the purpose of compelling us to open our ports to Canadian fishermen; and within a few days there has been an election in Canada which has resulted in the support of the Premier, Sir John Macdonald, and he has declared, in a speech made since the election, that the significance of that election was a confidence in his policy, that his policy was to compel the United States to open her markets, and that if he persisted in it, the Canadian people might confide in him, and that that result should be accomplished. Now, Mr. President, I say again, I challenge any contradiction here in the presence of the Senate, that I do not believe there is a single senator in this body, on either side of the Chamber, whether he favors reciprocity treaties or not, in general, who will not indignantly spurn the notion that the United States will change, alter, repeal or in any degree modify by a hair's breadth her domestic legislation on the subject of duties upon imports as a means of settling a controversy growing out of such a threat, or as a means of buying peace for the American fishermen or respect to the American flag in foreign waters. If there is any senator who will controvert that statement, I ask him respectfully to do it now, and I will pause for that purpose—(a pause)—No senator undertakes that, and I therefore feel entirely justified in affirming and in asking the authorities of Canada, and the authorities of Great Britain, who take heed of the declaration made in the Senate of the United States on this subject, to take it for granted that it is absolutely impossible to be expected by any sane or sensible man that there is to be any repeal or modification or change in any duty upon American imports as the result of the present difficulties or the result of the regulations which may compose them."

I feel that the country, that the people of the Maritime Provinces ought to endeavor to take a common sense basis on this question. It is to be regretted that the matter has reached the position it has, but we will have to face that situation of affairs. We will have to endeavor to do the best we can, and I would respectfully suggest to the Government that it would be far better for it to take the House into its confidence and state the exact position of affairs. It is well known that the hon. the Minister of Finance went to Washington during the last recess, and it was well understood that he would not be received by the American authorities, because he had no power to negotiate on the question at all. That statement has been made in the New York papers, and it has not been denied. Whither are we going? What is to be the result? I do not rise for the purpose of blaming the Government, but to call the attention of the House to the situation, and to ask hon. gentlemen opposite, who are so very anxious to act hastily in this matter without calculating the result, to consider whether it is not time we should take a different view of the whole situation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the First Minister, if he possibly can, ought to avail himself of this occasion to inform the House and the country of the position in which these negotiations are. He is aware that, whether rightly or wrongly—and, certainly, in my opinion, wrongly—the President of the United States used very strong language, indeed, as to the strain upon the relations between Canada and the United States, caused by last year's proceedings. The hon. gentleman will understand that I do not at all blame the Government for what they have done, but it is a matter of very grave moment that Mr. Cleveland should have felt himself justified in using the language he did. Since that time he has been armed with very extraordinary powers, which, as I understand the case, he may put in motion at any moment. We have also had some despatches from the Home Government in which Lord Salisbury made several very important suggestions to the Canadian Government. I think, without trespassing on diplomatic reticence, that it is very desirable, indeed, the First Minister should inform the country of the position in which the matter stands; and this moment, when we are voting $125,000 for the protection of our fisheries, appears to be the proper time for making that request.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There can be no objection, certainly, to the hon. gentleman making that request. It is a matter of great interest to Canada, of course. The hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), was good enough to say that he had read the correspondence and the despatches which had passed between the two Governments, and that he could not disapprove of the position taken by the Government of Canada. We stood simply on our rights. We stood simply on the Convention of 1818. We stated, and we hold to it, that the change of years and the commercial treaties that had been made between England and the United States did not, and could not in any way, in the most remote degree, affect the terms of the Convention of 1818. That Convention was made with due deliberation, as a matter of mutual concession, and in which a good deal was given to the United States, as well as something given up by England. It was a bargain with consideration on both sides. We hold to that, and we hold, further, that the contention that it has been in any way altered or given up, or that it could be altered, or could in any way be denounced, to use the diplomatic phrase, is out of the question. It could not be, and I have no doubt it will not be; and the United States, in 1854, and again in 1871, have recognised the existence of that treaty; they have recognised it in expressed terms, as hon. gentlemen will see by looking at the Treaty of Washington. We hold that, in watching our waters, we are only defending our rights; and, indeed, we may go still further, and we do contend that, if there was no convention, we are an independent country, independent of the United States, and that it is understood that every country has a territorial jurisdiction and control in every way, administrative, executive and legislative, over the in-shore, over the three miles; that it is necessary to the independence of Canada as a portion of the British Empire, and, therefore, there can be no compromise on that point. There are only two questions on which there can be any contention. The first is the headlands question, which we are all acquainted with. We all know what that means. We adhere to the position taken by the British Government from the time of Lord Bathurst until now—that the three miles is to be taken from the headlands and not from the sinuosities of the bays. I believe that all the constitutional writers in the United States, dealing with that question in the abstract, agree with us.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And the courts.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And the courts, as my hon. friend says—both as to the Chesapeake and the Delaware bays—there can be little doubt about that.

Mr. MITCHELL. And these several States do the same thing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. These several States contend that they have their rights within the bays. Then the only other question is as to bait; whether under the treaty the American fishermen cannot enter into our harbors as traders, and purchase bait and deal generally as traders. We have taken the position that a fishing vessel is one thing and a trading vessel another, and that a trading vessel cannot, simply by getting a trading permit from an American collector, change its character and be a fishing vessel when it likes and a trading vessel when it likes. We hold that on that question of bait, holding to the decision of Chief Justice Young, the fishermen have no right to come in and make Canada or any portion of Canada the base of their fishing operations, by which, while we are excluded from the American market, they are to supply the American market and keep us out through being able to supply the demand themselves. There is no doubt in my mind that on that point too, we are in the right. I am glad to say that Her Majesty's Government have fully sustained us. There has not been the slightest degree of expression of a disinclination to sustain the legal rights of Canada. In the meanwhile correspondence has been going on of which we are duly informed. I do not think there has been a single step taken, nor do I believe there will be a single step taken at Washington by Her Majesty's Government, without consultation and conference with the Canadian Government, and I may say further without our assent. At all events, hitherto there has been no step taken without our assent. I think it would not be well that I should go any further in speaking of this matter. I believe that the Government of the United States are friendly in the best sense of the word. Of course, a democratic Government of this kind depending very much—every four years, at all events—upon the popular voice, is obliged, perhaps, to take courses not so direct as governments which are otherwise situated; but I believe that the Government of President Cleveland is exceedingly friendly to Canada, is exceedingly friendly to extending the commercial relations with Canada, and I can only say that the Canadian Government, as advised by us, is doing all it can to foster that feeling and to expedite the time when we may hope, perhaps, that there may be enlarged commercial relations between Canada and the United States.

Mr. JONES. Is the hon. gentleman in a position to inform the House whether any answer has yet been received to Lord Salisbury's despatch?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not in a position to state that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have just a word to say on this matter, and I say it now because I think this is a discussion in which quite enough has been said in the interest of Canada. I may not agree in every particular in the conclusions to which the right hon. gentleman has arrived, though I agree with him in the main. In some small particulars I cannot agree with him, but it is certain that it is in the interests of this country to maintain the most cordial and friendly relations with our neighbors in the United States. I think the interests both of Canada and of the United States call for the maintenance of those friendly relations, and at the same time for the maintenance of our rights. I think the Minister, under whose responsibility this matter is principally carried out, ought to give instructions to his officials to avoid these irritating circumstances which characterised the seizures of last year. I will not refer to them individually, because some are before the courts, and I think it would be unwise to discuss them further. I think the statement of the right hon. gentleman ought to satisfy the House, and for my part I shall be satisfied to let it rest where it is, leaving it to the Government to deal with it to the best of their ability and on their responsibility, and afterwards we may discuss their action if there is anything to find fault with.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to say a word or two in reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies). The chief fault he found was that the cruisers confined themselves to the harbors and to boarding vessels in the harbors. I wish to state, in reference to that, that the instructions given to the fishery cruisers were explicit from the first, and were not altered from first to last, that it was their duty to keep cruising on their various beats, and to keep out of harbors as much as the weather, or the necessity for obtaining supplies, would allow them to do. So long as they were outside of a harbor and following up a fishing fleet, as it was their duty to do, they could not board United States fishing vessels outside the three-mile limit. These vessels, of course, would not be within the limit when the cruisers were near and could not, therefore, be boarded, and when they came within the harbor they were followed there by our cruisers, and they were boarded in the harbor and just off the harbor, and when boarded off the harbor they were put down in their books as with reference to the harbor. I think that fully explains it, and if my hon. friend will read the log of the Acadia and the log of the Lansdowne, he will find there, detailed, day after day, the course taken by these two vessels; and if I had brought down the logs of the cruisers the same would have been shown. First, then, I wish to say that it was their duty, and they performed it, as the records in my office show, to keep continually upon the cruise; secondly, it was their duty to keep vessels outside the three-mile limit. My hon. friend seems to think there was a failure, because there were only three seizures. It would have been still better had there been no seizure at all. It was the object of our cruisers to keep American fishing vessels from fishing inside our limits, and it would have been a happy thing if they had been able to do it without being obliged to make a single seizure. We have thousands of miles of coast along which mackerel trend; it is impossible to undertake to have a vessel at every particular point, at every particular time, and, consequently, it will happen that foreign vessels will sometimes find their way into the grounds in spite of our cruisers. But they have been diligent in cruising. I think there is no shadow of doubt about that. Newspaper reports do not always count for true, and these notices that come from various points, these rumors as to the vessels not being near, and as to United States fishing vessels being within the limit, are almost always unreliable and untrustworthy, and should not be taken as against the records of our officers, which are shown in the Department. Take the very case of which my hon. friend has spoken, that at Miminigash. I think, if I remember rightly, that the very day on which it was reported there were so many sail of American vessels fishing off Miminigash within three miles of the coast, the Houlett was upon that very part of the coast, and Capt. Lorway gives his statement which entirely contradicts the statement made by the newspapers. I will cite another instance that occurred. A telegram came to me from a certain point that a certain number of American vessels were fishing within the three-mile limit. We had it investigated at once, and it was found that they were not United States fishermen at all, but proved to be Nova Scotia fishermen. If my hon. friend will turn to page 147 of the Fishery Report, he will find what Mr. Duvar says with reference to those cruisers. Mr. Duvar sent out a circular to all the keepers of lights and overseers of fisheries around the whole coast of Prince Edward Island, giving them a number of questions with reference to this, and asking their answers. He has collected those answers, and the document is in the office, and I have an abstract of it here. My hon. friend from Halifax said he was afraid that owing to these newspaper reports we had ordered our cruisers this year not to be active in the pursuit of trespassing vessels. That is not so, the orders have not been changed, and they are being correctly carried out.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

PONTIAC PACIFIC JUNCTION RAILWAY CO.

Mr. BRYSON moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 102) to amend the Act respecting the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee).

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I wish to say a word or two with reference to the first clause, and the powers asked for therein. The Committee will observe that it is provided in this clause that the company shall have full authority, in addition to the power which at present exists, of constructing a line of railway to the town of Pembroke, to cross the Ottawa River at Allumette Island; and it would be necessary, for the purposes of my argument, to show the power that was granted to the company in its original Act of incorporation, which gave them power to cross the Ottawa River. The Act of incorporation was passed in 1880. The clause is this:

Mr. FOSTER.

"The said company and their agents and servants may lay out and construct and finish a line of railway of a gauge of 4 feet 8½ inches from a point on the line of the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway, at or near the city of Hull, or the village of Aylmer, to such point in the county of Pontiac as may be found most suitable for crossing the Ottawa River."

I wish particularly to draw the attention of the Committee to this clause:

"Such point in the county of Pontiac as may be found most suitable for crossing the Ottawa River, and then through the Province of Ontario to some point at or near the town of Pembroke, which may be selected to connect the railway with the Canada Central Railway, either to the east or the west, in the said town of Pembroke."

Now, if this additional power given in this clause means anything, it means that the company will be empowered to cross the Ottawa River in the county of Pontiac, because I may say to you, Mr. Chairman, that Allumette Island lies wholly within the county of Pontiac, at some place that is not the most suitable for crossing into the Province of Ontario. I hold that is the meaning of the power which is proposed to be conferred upon this company by this clause, and in view of that fact I think it will be necessary for me to say a word or two in reference to what has been shown, both by the action of the company itself and by the action of the Legislature of the Province of Quebec, as to what has been considered to be the most suitable point for crossing the Ottawa River. It is, perhaps, necessary for me to draw attention to the fact that in 1875, the Quebec Legislature passed an Act authorising the Government of the Province to construct a Government railway, and the first clause of that Act reads thus:

"There shall be a railway constructed, commencing at the port of Quebec, and extending from deep water in said port via Montreal, to such point in the county of Pontiac as may be most suitable for connecting hereafter the said railway with the subsidised portion of the Canada Central Railway, and with any other railway."

Under the provisions of that Act work was proceeded with by the Government of the Province of Quebec and the railway was constructed as far as Ottawa, I think in 1879. At all events, during the Session of 1879 the Government of the Province of Quebec applied to this Parliament for power to construct a bridge at the city of Ottawa; and they obtained that power, and the bridge was constructed and connection made with the Canada Central, but not with the subsidised portion referred to in this Act at Ottawa, the subsidised portion commencing at a point much further west. In 1880 the Pontiac Railway Company obtained an Act of incorporation, the empowering clause of which I have just read to the Committee; and the Government of the Province of Quebec having formed their connection, having carried that road into Ontario at Ottawa, practically abandoned the construction of the road west of the village of Aylmer. I say they practically abandoned it, because, in 1881, very shortly after the passage of the Act incorporating the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company, the Local Legislature of Quebec passed an Act in which they gave the Lieutenant Governor the following power:—

"The Lieutenant Governor in Council, in lieu of constructing that portion of the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway between the village of Aylmer and that portion of the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway, to connect the same with the subsidised portion of the Canada Central Railway, may guarantee a bonus not exceeding $6,000 per mile, for a length not exceeding 851 miles, for each mile the company shall construct between Aylmer and Hull and the town of Pembroke."

There the Legislature of the Province of Quebec admit that it was not their intention to carry on the construction of the road beyond Aylmer, but in lieu they grant this bonus of $6,000 per mile to the Pontiac Pacific Railway. Sometime after that the railway company applied to the Government of Quebec for an allotment of that bonus, and an Order in Council was passed on 6th February, 1882, approved 8th February, 1882, allotting this subsidy of $6,000 per mile to the Pontiac Pacific Railway. It was deemed by the shareholders of that company more advantageous to them to avail themselves of that provision which exists in the Quebec law of converting the subsidy provided into a guarantee of interest of bonds than to claim the $6,000 per mile in cash, and an application was made to the Government, shortly after the passing of this Order in Council, asking them to make the conversion which the Government had a right to do by the Act of the Local Legislature passed in 1875. I propose to show that, in the opinion of the railway company themselves, and of the Government of the Province of Quebec, the point at which the company has asked power to cross the Ottawa was not the point most suitable to cross the river into the Province of Ontario. I shall be able to show that from the action both of the company and of the Government. The company, at a meeting of the directors held in Ottawa on 11th April, 1882, resolved:

"In the location and construction of the said Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway, from a point at the crossing of the Ottawa River, in the county of Lanark, near the confluence of the Coulonge with the Ottawa, in the township of Mansfield."

That is a point considerably east of where it is now proposed, under this amending Act, to cross the Ottawa River, and in the opinion of the company that was the most suitable point at which the Ottawa could be crossed. Not only was it the opinion of the company, but I shall be able to show by the Order in Council which was passed by the Local Government at Quebec, converting the subsidy of $6,000 per mile into a guarantee of interest upon the bonds of the company, that they held the same opinion. This Order in Council, to which I refer, was dated on 8th April, 1882, and received the assent of the Lieutenant Governor in Council on 9th April, 1882. In the Order in Council this fact is recited:

"That whereas the said Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway, at a meeting of the directors, held in the city of Ottawa on 11th April, 1882, resolved, that in the location and construction of the said Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway, the point of crossing the Ottawa River, in the county of Pontiac, be near the confluence of the Coulonge with the Ottawa, in the township of Mansfield, which point of crossing is hereby approved."

And then it goes on to recite the terms upon which the subsidy has been converted into a guarantee of interest upon the bonds of the company. So the Committee will see that on 18th April, 1882, the Government of the Province of Quebec also deemed that point the most suitable one for crossing into Ontario. But in addition to that, let me say that after some considerable time the railway company, finding that they were unable to dispose of their bonds as advantageously as they thought they would be able to do, with the guarantee of interest of the Local Government of Quebec on those bonds, found it desirable, in their interest, to have the guarantee of interest reconverted into the original cash subsidy. An application was made to the Government of Quebec to so reconvert the subsidy allotted to them, and I find that, on 5th July, 1884, an Order in Council was passed, approved by the Lieutenant Governor on 7th July, 1882, which recites as follows:—

"The hon. Commissioner of Railways in the report of 3rd July, 1884, sets forth that in the Order in Council of 9th April, 1882, a subsidy of $6,000 per mile granted the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway by Order in Council of 18th February, 1882, was converted at the request of the railway company, with a guarantee of interest on issue of bonds for $20,000 per mile, that the company has not made the contemplated issue, on the contrary the converted subsidy for payment into a guarantee of interest was never acted on; that the company have requested the Lieutenant-Governor to revoke the order converting the subsidy into a guarantee of interest and be authorised that the matter be replaced in the same state as before such order was passed."

Then the order goes on to say:

"The hon. Commissioner, therefore, recommends that the Order No. 107, of 9th April, 1882, be revoked to the end that the subsidy be payable in money, it being, however, understood, that the revocation shall in no way affect the resolution adopted by the railway company, that in the location and construction of the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway the point of crossing the Ottawa River shall be near the confluence of the Coulonge and the Ottawa, and in the township of Mansfield."

There the Committee will observe that first, the railway company declared that to be the point which, in their opinion, was most suitable for the crossing of the Ottawa River and, second, the Government of Quebec in their Order in Council approved of that provision, and thereby declared that, in their opinion, it was the most suitable point for the crossing. But, in addition to those facts, I believe it will be admitted by those promoting this Bill that the crossing proposed, Allumette Island—although that is a very indefinite term, as the island is 14 miles in length, and it is impossible to tell at what point they propose to cross the river on that island or in its vicinity,—but taking the most favorable point the Allumette Rapids, it is admitted by the promoters of the Bill themselves, or, at all events, it is reported by Mr. Peterson, an engineer of considerable eminence, that crossing at that point would lengthen the railway by some 6 miles, and that it would entail an extra expenditure over the cost at the point fixed by the resolution of the directors of the railway company, and approved by the Government of the Province of Quebec, of over $300,000. So you will see that, in addition to the extra cost of constructing the road, there would be the extra cost of operating some six miles of railway for all time to come. I think, under those circumstances, I am justified in saying that the point at which the company asked power to cross the Ottawa River is not the most suitable point to cross, and is not in accordance with the terms of the original Act of incorporation. I do not know what arguments will be adduced here tonight in support of this proposition, but in another place where this Bill was under consideration—if I am permitted to make reference to the discussion which took place in the Committee on Railways and Canals—it was urged by one of the gentlemen who supported this Bill that it would be in the interest of the Province of Quebec that this road should be extended to the point to which it is proposed to extend it by the clause which is now under consideration. I would like, however, to draw the attention of my hon. friends from the Province of Quebec to the fact that, in addition to the powers which were granted under the original incorporation, this Bill—and I do not propose to take any exception to that portion of the clause—provides for the extension of a line on the north shore, through the whole length of the county of Pontiac, beyond any point to which continuous settlement has reached up to the present time. So, I think I am in the judgment of the House when I say that, in asking the Committee to fix the point of crossing—if they fix it at all—at the place that was originally fixed by the directors of the company, and approved of by the Government of the Province of Quebec, and which, in the opinion of those gentlemen—and that opinion has not been controverted so far—was the most suitable point to cross into the Province of Ontario, the interest of the Province of Quebec will be in no wise injured, because it is proposed by this Bill to extend the road as far up through the Province of Quebec as the mouth of the Mattawa. Without saying anything further on this subject at present, I would ask the Committee to amend this clause; and, inasmuch as I do not believe that the power to cross at this point, not being the most suitable point, ought to be conferred on the company, if it does not exist in the original charter, I would move:

That the clause be amended by striking out the words "at Allumette Island" and substituting therefor "near the confluence of the Coulonge with the Ottawa River, in township of Mansfield."

Mr. BRYSON. As this is a matter which materially affects my constituents, I think I may fairly crave the indulgence of the House for a few minutes, while I set forth my views from my standpoint. I must, at the outset, however congratulate the hon. gentleman upon his very able advocacy of the matter from his standpoint. He has very fully gone into the measure which has been before the Legislatures of the Province of Quebec at different times. He has told you, at the outset, that in 1872 the Government of the Province of Quebec undertook the construction of a line of railway from deep water at the city of Quebec to the mouth of Deep River in Pontiac. We are not asking at the present time to do anything beyond what was originally contemplated by this Bill. We are now willing to accept the conditions that the road shall touch Pembroke and then extend westward to Sault Ste. Marie, on the south side of the Ottawa River, and as far as Mattawa on the north side. I contend that the Province of Ontario has contributed nothing by way of local subsidies to this line of railway; that, in the Session of 1884, the hon. gentleman who represents the riding of North Renfrew in the Local Legislature, applied to the Hon. Oliver Mowat for a subsidy for this railway from the point of crossing at the confluence of the Coulonge River to the town of Pembroke, and this subsidy was refused. Mr. Mowat at that time not thinking the road of sufficient importance to warrant him in giving a subsidy to the line of twenty-one or twenty-two miles from the town of Pembroke, believing as he did—and I congratulate him on that view—that if the road was subsidised from Lapasse Crossing to the town of Pembroke, it would be running parallel with the Canadian Pacific Railway for about half the distance to the town of Pembroke. I think it is not wise to subsidise a road in addition to the one which is now running to the town of Pembroke. The Provincial Government of Quebec, on the other hand, has subsidised the entire line from Hull or Aylmer to the town of Pembroke vid Allumette Island; and although the contention of my hon. friend is that this distance is six and a-half miles longer I may say that, according to the report of the chief engineer, it would be only two and a-half or three miles longer than by the Lapasse route, and we have the proud satisfaction of knowing that by having that road built by Allumette Island, at least seven thousand of the people of the county of Pontiac will be served by the railway who would otherwise be deprived of railway facilities; while if the road goes by the other route it will only meet with the approbation of about three thousand people in the hon. gentleman's county. I think, under the circumstances, as the Quebec Government has subsidised the road to the extent of half a million, we will have sufficient subsidy to build that line in its entirety through the county of Pontiac. I contend, besides, that the words to which so much weight and responsibility have been attached, the words "near the confluence of the Coulonge River," are very vague, and I think the hon. gentleman himself will agree with me that the phraseology is somewhat vague. The question was asked last year, in the Railway Committee, what the words "at or near" meant, and it was perfectly understood, I think, that they should mean a distance of ten or fifteen miles from any point, while we were only asking to make it ten miles west of the point contended for by the hon. gentleman. But, Sir, there is another matter much more important with reference to this Bill. The people of the county of Pontiac were induced to vote a subsidy or bonus to this line of railway through the county; they have voted $100,000 to assist this company in constructing that line through the county, and we would only be keeping good faith with them, and with the letter which was written by the vice-president of the company—in the absence of the president—to induce the ratepayers of Pontiac to vote for this bonus, that letter having been published in the journals of my county, stating that the crossings of the Ottawa had been narrowed down to two; namely, the one at the mouth of the Coulonge River and the other at Allumette Island—I say we would only be keeping good faith with those people by adopting this route. We are now contending for the western crossing, and we hope this honorable House will be pleased to grant the people of the county of Pontiac that measure of consideration which is due to them. As our time here is important, and as there are other hon. gentlemen who will doubtless discuss this matter, I think I may safely leave it in the hands of hon. gentlemen of this House to stand by me, by saying that the crossing of the Ottawa shall be at Allumette Island, and not tie the railway company down to a particular crossing, especially as Allumette only extends a distance of 12 or 14 miles, and as the company now has the power of going either east or west of the town of Pembroke, so that whichever way they go they will at the outside be a distance of only six or seven miles from the town of Pembroke. I think the hon. gentleman's contention is unfair to the people of my county, and I hope he will see fit to withdraw this amendment and allow the Bill to go through as it was carried in the Committee the other day.

Mr. BRYSON.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I notice that this railway is regarded as a road of considerable importance to the constituency of the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the committee. It would seem from a report of a meeting of the council in the hon. gentleman's county, which is reported in the Pontiac Advance of Thursday, 26th May, that the hon. gentleman, during the election, promised his constituents that, if they returned him to Parliament, he would secure a subsidy towards the construction of this road, and would also secure the relief of his county from the obligations into which they had entered with the company. Now, if we can credit the report of the proceedings of that meeting, he proposed that the obligations into which the county voluntarily entered are to be paid, not by the county whose inhabitants are to be especially benefited out of the construction of this road, but out of the public Treasury of Canada; and I suppose that the hon. gentleman, in pressing this measure upon the attention of the House, is doing so for the purpose of attaining that end. He also informed the members of the council that he had not been able to persuade the company to agree to this arrangement; while they are quite ready to take any bonus that the Government may recommend and that Parliament may vote, they are not willing to release the county from the obligations into which it has entered. Now, it would be interesting to this House and the country to know what success has attended the negotiations of the hon. gentleman since the 26th of May. Whether he has yet come to an understanding with Mr. Church and the other parties connected with that enterprise, and how far the Government has given the hon. gentleman assurances that their liberality in dealing with this company will depend on the liberality of the company in dealing with the constituents of the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman in his numerous addresses to the council on that occasion said that he felt his responsibility very greatly—so much so that he was not disposed to go on with this matter, without taking them into his confidence and securing their cooperation and support. He wished them to advise as to the course he should take. We have had to-day one very extraordinary revelation connected with the First Minister, and now we have another with which the hon. member for Pontiac is associated. As the hon. gentleman has taken his constituency into his confidence, and explained with so much frankness his anxiety to relieve them of the obligations into which they have entered, he ought, I think, before he calls on us to vote on this Bill, to tell us what success has attended his efforts, and what assurance the Government has given him in regard to this transaction? It does seem to me a very extraordinary course that an hon. gentleman should say to the free and independent electors of any constituency in this country: Gentlemen, if you return me to Parliament, I will enable you successfully to repudiate the obligations into which you have entered; you have given certain assurances to a corporation that if they go on and construct a certain railway you will contribute a certain sum; you believe that the advantages and the benefits which it will confer upon you are so great that you can venture to do this to aid the company, and at the same time promote your own interest; but if you return me to Parliament, I, having the ear of Government, will secure for this railway so liberal a subsidy that the company will be ready to relieve you of all obligations into which you have entered.

Mr. BRYSON. I deny that absolutely. That statement was never made by me on a public platform. It is made by the editor of the Liberal press of my own county, a disappointed office-seeker who continually agitated the signing of those bonds, while I repudiated the responsibility of the county for them. If the hon. gentleman can take any satisfaction out of the statements of the Liberal press of my county, he is welcome to it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The words of the hon gentleman as reported—

Mr. BRYSON. I am not correctly reported.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the hon. gentleman did not tell his constituents that if he could not make terms with the railway company, he would seek to prevent their obtaining a subsidy here. The hon. gentleman who sits in front of him, for instance, was possessed of a great deal of influence, and it might be that upon this line he would not succeed, and, therefore, it was better that they should express no opinion on the subject.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There is no use of rubbing that match so much as that. I do not think the hon. gentleman is speaking to the question at all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. Minister thinks that a little attention given to this subject would be quite in order, but to discuss it fully, so that the House could understand exactly what the position of the hon. gentlemen is, is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the hon. gentleman should confine his remarks to the question, recollecting that we have only an hour for Private Bills.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Well, I am not going further to trespass on the indulgence of the House, and I only hope you will be quite as strict in other cases as you are in mine.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I have a few words to say in reply to the hon. member for Pontiac. I understood him to say that the Act of 1875, empowering the Province of Quebec to build this line of railway, provided for its construction from deep water at Quebec to Deep River, a stretch of the Ottawa. There is not a single word in that clause referring to Deep River, and, as a matter of fact, I believe the intention of the Government of the Province of Quebec was to make connection with the subsidised portion of the Canada Central Railway at a point east of that proposed by the company in April, 1882. It has also been stated that the county of Pontiac granted a subsidy of $100,000 to this company, on the understanding that the road was to run to this point at Allumette Rapids. Now, I have here the by-law itself, passed by the corporation of the county of Pontiac, and I will trouble the House with reading but one clause of it, which will show what the meaning and intention of the municipal council of the county of Pontiac was in regard to this matter, and their intentions in regard to this matter received the approval of the majority of voters in that county who voted on the by-law. The by-law recites that:

"Whereas, in the opinion of the municipal council and corporation of Pontiac, the inhabitants of the said county are sufficiently interested in the railway which the Pontiac and Pacific Junction Railway Company is authorised to construct between the city of Hull or village of Aylmer, in the county of Ottawa, to such points or portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway (heretofore known as the Canada Central Railway) at or near the said town of Pembroke, in the county of Renfrew, Province of Ontario, which may be found most suitable to make a connection between the aforesaid points, to warrant the said corporation in granting a bonus to the said Pontiac and Pacific Junction Railway Company to the extent of $100,000 currency."

Then, it goes on to say what are the terms and conditions.

"The warden of the county of Pontiac is hereby authorised and shall be hereby required to enter into a contract for and on behalf of this corporation with the Pontiac and Pacific Junction Railway Company, to grant and pay to the said company a bonus of $100,000, and for that purpose to have prepared debentures of this corporation to the extent or value of $100 each, and so on."

Now the condition is this:

"It is provided that a sum not exceeding $2,500 per mile be granted for each mile of the road that is constructed in the county of Pontiac, but that the whole sum shall not exceed $100,000."

That would be a payment of $2,500, upon the length of 40 miles of road in the county of Pontiac, and I believe that the road, from the point at which it was originally proposed by the company to cross the Ottawa, would run through the county over 50 miles. I happened to be at the meeting of the county council of the county of Pontiac at which this by-law was passed. The representatives of the company, who attended that meeting, were willing to have the point of crossing fixed at Lapasse, which was afterwards fixed by the company as their point of crossing; but some of the members, who wished to have the crossing further east, declined to put this condition in the by-law, and, as a matter of fact, the company were in no wise bound to cross any portion of the county of Pontiac at all. In that case, however, they would receive only $2,500 per mile for the length of the road in the limits of the county. If it was the intention of the county of Pontiac to impose on the company the condition of extending their road to a point which would cost them $300,000 more than it would cost if the crossing were at the point at which I asked the company to fix it, they did not put it in their by-law, and there is no such condition imposed on the company. My hon. friend for Pontiac has drawn attention to the fact that the Ontario Government refused to grant a subsidy to this road. I would inform the Committee that the refusal was not based on the grounds my hon. friend stated to the Committee. It was based, as many members have heard iterated and reiterated from the Province of Ontario, on the ground that as the Government of the Dominion had, as alleged by the Government of Ontario, seized upon all the railways in the Province of Ontario, the Ontario Government would thereafter grant no subsidies to any line of railway in the Province. It was on that ground that the refusal to grant a subsidy to this railway from a point of crossing at Pembroke was made by the leader of the Government in Ontario. I do not propose to take up the time of the Committee further. I think it my duty to the people I represent and to myself that I should make known the facts as they actually exist in regard to this road; that I should point out to the Committee that, in asking to take this power, the company are asking to take power to cross the Ottawa at a point which is not the most suitable point for making the connection that was asked for in their original Act of incorporation. I leave it for the Committee to decide whether this amendment shall be accepted or not.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). If you, Sir, declare the amendment lost I would like to move another amendment, and I will say very little about it. In this clause, you will find the expression to cross the Ottawa River at Allumette Island, which stretches 14 miles up and down the Ottawa; and, according to all the engineering information I am able to obtain, there is only one point, if this company proposes to cross and connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway, through the whole length of Allumette Island, from east to west, at which a practical crossing can be made, and that is at Allumette Rapids. I would ask leave to strike the word "Island," which my hon. friend from Pontiac says is a very indefinite term, and to insert in its place the word "Rapids."

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Really my hon. friend is not reasonable. He knows that the company which is building this road, after having made three or four different surveys to cross the Ottawa, have decided, being obliged to deposit plans in the Railway Department, to cross at the point which is advocated by the hon. gentleman. My hon. friend has that guarantee. What necessity then is there to force the company, by enactment, to go there, when, perhaps, by accident or after further surveys, it might be found that some deviation for the crossing of the road would be necessary. By the charter, the company is obliged to go from Hull to Pembroke, and by this amendment we oblige the company to go to the town of Pembroke, and this is the important point for the member for Renfrew. The site the most suitable for all interests has been decided for the company by the Government of Quebec, which is giving the largest subsidy, and by this Government who is also granting a subsidy. I think my hon. friend should be satisfied with the assurance that he has, and may further have, by going to the Department of Railways, that most likely, unless there are insuperable difficulties, the bridge will be built at the point which he really wants for his county and constituents. It will be built at the most suitable point for all interests. I think the hon. gentleman is not fair in putting that amendment.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The hon. gentleman himself has given the best evidence to the Committee that I am both fair and reasonable in asking what I ask to be inserted. He stated that, after careful examination and several surveys, the company has decided the best crossing is the very point I ask him to fix in the Bill. But he adds, although the company know it to be the best point, and although they have deposited their plans with the Government fixing that point, they do not wish it to be inserted in the Bill. You will remember, Sir, that the company has also deposited their plans with the Government fixing the other point, to which I asked the Committee to assent a short time ago. Two or three years ago, at the time they entered into the contract for which this subsidy was allowed to them, they deposited with the Government their plans, fixing the point of crossing at the mouth of the Coulonge River. Now, the hon. gentleman says they have deposited plans with the Government fixing the point at Allumette Rapids, and they have done that after three years examination, after having had the fullest opportunity of deciding as to where was the best point of crossing. Yet my hon. friend says I am not reasonable in asking to have that inserted in the Bill. I think there is the strongest possible evidence in his own statement that it is reasonable to ask that, instead of having the crossing made at Allumette Island, which is 14 miles long, as the hon. gentleman knows, instead of having it made at that indefinite point—if I may be allowed to use a contradiction in terms—it should be fixed at the only point, as I think the engineers will agree with me, which can be substituted if you go west of the mouth of the Coulonge River. Therefore, I think, I am both fair and reasonable in asking that these words should be inserted.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We can change it when we have deposited the plan at any time of the year. If a difficulty is met with it can be changed by the consent of the Government, but, if you define it by Act of Parliament, we would have to wait a year before we could make the change. We have decided to do it—

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). You have had an examination, and what more do you want?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We do not want to have to come to Parliament for power to make the change if found necessary. Amendment negatived.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew).

On section 10,

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). By this, the time is extended for constructing the road. I have no objection to the extension of the time for the construction to Sault Ste. Marie, but I ask the Committee to fix an earlier date for the completion to the town of Pembroke, and I do it on this ground: In the first place, I think about 40 miles of the road have been constructed in the last eighteen months, and there are only about 20 miles now to be constructed. It is asked by this clause that the time be extended to the 1st September, 1890. That would be considerably over three years to construct the 20 miles, whereas, as I have stated, 40 miles have been constructed in eighteen months; and, as this company has a subsidy of $9,200 from Quebec and from the Dominion, I think it would not be unreasonable to ask that an amendment which I have prepared should be introduced. I move that the tenth clause be amended by striking out the word "September" in the third line and substituting the word "December," and by striking out the word "ninety" in the fourth line and substituting "eighty-eight." That would give the company until the end of the year 1888 to complete the 20 miles of road yet to be constructed. In addition to what I have already said, I have an agreement here made by a gentleman who, I believe, is the president of the company, in which he undertakes to complete the road to Pembroke by the 1st December, 1888. There appears to be a mistake in the notice of this amendment, which should read the 1st December, whereas it reads the 1st September. I propose also to ask that the following proviso be inserted:—

Provided always that the work of building the bridge or bridges across the Ottawa River—

Because it will require bridges if the road is to go in the direction this Bill fixes—authorised by the Act 43 Vic., cap. 55, shall be commenced within three months after the passage of this Act, and shall be completed on or before the 1st December, 1888.

That will reduce the time for completing the road to Pembroke to the end of 1888, and will fix the time for the commencement of the work within three months after the passage of the Act.

Mr. BRYSON. I think an amicable solution would be arrived at if the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) would consent to say that operations for the building of the bridge shall be commenced within one year after the passage of the Act, and completed within two years. If he will make that change I will accept it.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Very well.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I think it might go as it is. The road will be profitable to the company only when it reaches Pembroke. The ambition of the company is to reach Pembroke, and putting longer delays in the way is not calculated to advance the company's interests nor Pembroke's, because, as long as they do not reach Pembroke the road is not likely to be profitable. It would be better to leave the clause as it is, leaving as a guarantee the fact that the company shall go to Pembroke as soon as they possibly can. I would suggest, however, that the hon. gentleman should consent to go half way, and to that end I would substitute the word "eighty-nine" for the word "ninety."

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Say one year for commencing the bridge and two years for building the road to Pembroke. That will bring it till June, 1889.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I move in amendment to that amendment that the word "1889" be put instead of the word "1890." That is going halfway of the hon. gentleman's offer.

Amendment to the amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think, with the consent of the House, we might give a little more time for Private Bills, in order that they may pass this evening and go to the Upper House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hour is fully up, and there are several Bills here upon which we may spend the whole of this evening, judging from what happened the other evening. The other evening we sat till 11 o'clock discussing Private Bills. I have great respect for the rights of private members, but it is not quite fair that those of us who have to stay here to see the Estimates through, should be kept up till two or three o'clock in the morning to give precedence to these Private Bills.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Estimated grant to supplement the Indian Fund...$40,725.50

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Indian schools, $14,287.50. I observe in this vote, which is an exceptional vote, no doubt in itself, that there is a decrease of $4,700. I desire to know what is the reason of that, whereas $19,000 were required last year, $14,000 are supposed sufficient this year. Has the number of schools been reduced, or what is the state of the cause?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The additional amount required last year over this year, was for the erection of schools.

Payment of annuities under the Robinson Treaty....$15,588.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. To provide a salary for Chief Angus Cooke, $50—What is the object of this little special vote?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman will remember the troubles about the Oka Indians. There was a great deal of difficulty, and the seminary, in order to settle matters, bought a large tract of land in Gibson, Ontario, for the Oka Indians. A good many of them have gone there, and we hope the whole of them will go there. Angus Cooke is the Indian reeve of the township. He is a poor man, he is not like a white man with means, and this small amount is to pay his expenses there while he is acting as reeve in Gibson.

Mr. DAWSON. I would like to ask the Minister what progress has been made with the Ontario Government in settlement of the large amount due the Indians. The question was lately brought up by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), and I merely rise to say that it is highly desirable that some settlement should be come to whereby the Indians might, at least, get the advantage of a portion of the very large amount due them. Under the Robinson Treaty the amount due is very large, and in the meantime the Indians are in many cases suffering. If the arrears due were at the disposal of the Government, it would enable them to provide for the maintenance of schools in different parts, and ameliorate the condition of the Indians generally. I must say that, as regard the Indians in Algoma, a great deal has been done for them of late years in the way of establishing schools, and the Department of Indian Affairs has shown a very great desire to assist them, and has been very successful in ameliorating their condition. From one end of the district to the other, you never see a drunken Indian now, or at least very rarely. In former years wherever you went you found Indians in a state of intoxication about the landing places. That is never seen now, and the Indians have become a very law-abiding and well-behaved community in the district which I have the honor to represent; and all my regret is that the Government has not more means at its disposal to provide schools among them, and if the large amount due them under the Robinson Treaty, I cannot say the sum, were paid, it would be very much to their advantage. In the meantime the Indians should not be kept without it. If there is a dispute between the two Governments, let the Indians be paid in the meantime, and I would suggest that when the next Session comes round an appropriation should be asked for, for the purpose of settling those Indian claims.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman should inform the Committee as to how the Oka Indian matter stands.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The matter stands in the same position as it did last Session. The hon. gentleman will remember the unhappy trouble in Oka. The seminary, a body which always acts within its rights and according to law at all events, agreed to assist in the purchase of a tract of land in the township of Gibson, bought from the Province of Ontario. It was hoped that the whole of the Indians would allow themselves to be transferred from Oka to Gibson, where I think they are much more prosperous and happy, if they would only think so, than they were at Oka. Those who have been transferred are quite satisfied. Still for some cause or other, perhaps from the natural adhesion of men to the places where they were born, a considerable portion of the Indians of Oka still remain there. We voted $5,000 to assist them in their transfer from one place to another. They have not taken advantage of it. The vote has not been used; but we desire to keep the vote still, so that if the Indians or any portion of them go they will be transferred. It is really a very small matter as regards the number of Indians, but it has been a sore question. We will keep this vote so that if the Indians will leave Oka and go to Gibson, we shall be able to pay their expenses and conclude that long-suffering evil.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Has there been any progress made in getting Indians out of Oka who were there last year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman knows that the difficulty was a religious one, that a number of the Indians have given up the faith to which they were converted by the early missionaries, and the proprietors of the seminary regarded their remaining there as in a great measure using the funds of one church to support those who were really adherents of another church. Which class has remained behind?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Those who remained behind are, I think, Protestants, as well as those who have gone to Gibson.

Mr. DESJARDINS. They are mixed. There is a certain number of families Catholics.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are mixed perhaps, but there they are. I think it would be of very great importance, and would settle the question, if the whole of them were removed to Gibson. I may take this opportunity of saying that I believe the seminary has acted altogether within their rights by law. I know they have acted most generously, and have spent large sums of money for the purpose of settling this question. They have their own peculiar views, and those views can be carried out under the law and within their rights, and so we cannot dispute them. But in order to settle this question they have spent large sums of their own money; they have put up houses for the men at Gibson, and are still willing to do all in their power to conclude this religious war in a small way by contributing liberally of their money for the transfer of the Indians.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am not making any criticism on the conduct of the seminary. I dare say they are acting strictly within their rights; at all events that was the advice the Department received, and I think the hon. gentleman had an elaborate opinion from Mr. Laflamme and from ex-judge Badgley with regard to the respective rights of the seminary and the Indians. All I desired was to elicit information with a view to seeing what progress had been made in persuading the Indians to go elsewhere. Of course the seminary will have very much less objection to those of their own faith remaining with them than to those of the opposite faith, and that was the reason I asked the hon. gentleman which class of settlers remained on the land.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I think it is very desirable that the Government should take some further steps towards settling this question. I know it is understood that if the Government showed its willingness to aid in this matter, it would go very far towards settling the question in a peaceable way.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This vote shows the willingness of the Government to assist in transferring such Indians from Oka to Gibson. They will be helped whenever they choose to go.

Nova Scotia Indians $5,032

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The only fact that is noteworthy is the disappearance of the item for schools. I do not know enough about the situation to be able to judge whether it is possible to send the Indian children to school or not; but it is rather curious that the item should disappear altogether, although it is a small one. Is any effort being made in Nova Scotia to educate the children of Indians?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is being done in that direction, for I think the Indians have no funds of their own?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The item of $400 last year was for a school house at Schubencadie, which has been built.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that the $90 formerly voted for schools in Nova Scotia is dropped. Is there no provision of any sort for Indian schools in that Province?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are not, in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, regularly established Indian schools, but there are a number of teachers who receive regular salaries for teaching the Indians.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. From what fund are they paid?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Some from the school funds, but generally, in the lower Provinces, from the parliamentary grant. In Ontario, as the hon. gentleman knows, the Indian fund is rather a rich fund. In Quebec it is not so valuable, and in the Maritime Provinces it is almost nil, and, therefore, the Indian schools have been supported by Government grants.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman, I think, has never taken any steps to extinguish the Indian title, and secure a fund.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think we had better let sleeping dogs lie.

Indians, British Columbia $78,425

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here the sum is nearly doubled. What is the cause of the increase?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The salaries in 1886-87 were $19,780, and there is an increase of $40, making $19,820. Relief of distress, $1,000 last year and the same this year; seed grain, agricultural implements, &c., $1,200 each year; medical attendance and medicine, $1,800 last year, and $2,400 this year, an increase of $600. Day schools, last year, $2,150; this year the estimate is $3,350 making an increase of $1,200. Last year there were no industrial schools, as we are only commencing the system in British Columbia and we ask a vote of $17,250.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many industrial schools is it intended to establish for this sum, and in what fashion are they to be worked?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are two industrial schools to be established. The Indians of British Columbia are of quite a different race from those in the North-West and in the east. There is a good deal of Mongol blood in them, and they are more industrious and self-reliant than the Indians farther east; they work in the mines and on the railways, and they are, as I am sure my hon. friends from British Columbia will say, a hard-working people. They do not ask for anything but schools, and they have been asking for schools, and especially industrial schools, for some time.

Mr. SHANLY. They get no rations?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh no, they earn their own living in every way. The Government think it well to establish one industrial school on the Island of Vancouver and another on the mainland, after the fashion of the industrial schools which have been in successful operation for the last two or three years in the North-West. I believe, and in fact I am sure, that this experiment will be a very successful one, because they are a fine people with a promising future before them, if their education is promoted.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is true that they cost very little in the way of maintenance, but there are two points to which I would like to direct the hon. gentleman's attention. One is that an immense proportion of the sum paid appears to go for the salaries of a few white men, and it is not easy to see what these persons can do for Indians of that type. I should think the Indians would rather prefer having the money spent in some other way than spending $30,000 of this amount in paying some half a dozen Indian agents, though, not having visited the country, I cannot speak with authority. With regard to the industrial schools, is it proposed to take a number of Indian pupils into the schools, and support them and teach them trades, or will they attend there as day scholars?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As regard the expenditure for officers, the hon. gentleman must remember that British Columbia is a very large country. We scarcely appreciate the enormous area it covers. With regard to the salaries, they have not been increased in our time, nor has the number of officers been increased. They are there, but perhaps by degrees they may be reduced in number. The expense is not very great. I think the hon. gentleman will admit that. All of the salaries in the Province of British Columbia are included in the sum mentioned in the Estimates.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Indians of that class hardly require protectors.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, we find that when there is no Indian agent there is trouble. I must confess that we have great difficulty in getting the right kind of men to be Indian agents in British Columbia, though we have some very good men there. With regard to the industrial schools, the building for the one on Vancouver Island is not yet put up. It will cost $2,500, and will accommodate twenty-five pupils at a cost of $130 each per annum. On the mainland there will be two schools; the buildings will cost $5,000, and the cost of teaching twenty-five pupils there will be $3,500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are these Indian children to be taught trades—carpenters, blacksmiths, &c?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, that is the meaning of industrial schools.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are they to be sent back to their tribes afterwards, or will they become a portion of the white population?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I fancy that the Indians in British Columbia taught in the schools could be safely allowed to join their tribes. They will work like white tradesmen. In the North-West, where we have several industrial schools, we have found, on the recommendation of all the heads of those schools, and of the different religious denominations who have taken charge of them, that it is hopeless to expect to reclaim a young man, even if he is taken to an industrial school and educated, if he goes back afterwards to his tribe and marries an Indian who is uneducated. We have, therefore, established at Qu'Appelle a women's school, and we have another at Battleford, which the outbreak caused an interruption of; and it is hoped, by educating Indian women and Indian men in those industrial schools, that both will be drawn from the domestic influences of their tribes, and will intermarry, so that we shall have a valuable class of educated and industrious children.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In British Columbia are the pupils to be all boys?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As yet we do not propose to establish a women's school.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I suppose the hon. gentleman does not propose to go so far as Frederick, King of Prussia, and provide for compulsory marriages.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman may, of course, get an ideal system without any coercive measures, but that portion of the hon. gentleman's scheme remains yet to be tested. I see that he is taking a vote of upwards of $25,000 for British Columbia more than he took last year, and I believe the greater portion of this $52,000 voted for Indians is expended on white people. It would be interesting if the hon. gentleman had laid a statement before the Committee showing how this money was applied. British Columbia stands in a different position from the North-West and Ontario. There was no purchase of public lands there from the Indians by way of extinguishing the Indian title. The most that was done was to set apart certain reservations for the occupancy of the Indians under the Crown. For the purpose of setting apart those reservations, there was in 1875, I think, a commission appointed by mutual understanding between the Government of British Columbia and the Dominion Government to locate those reservations. It was supposed that that work would take about three years, but twelve years have gone by and the hon. gentleman has just as large a sum this year as ever for the payment of those reserve commissioners. Surely the work of those commissioners must have been completed years ago. There are less than 40,000 Indians in British Columbia, and if a reservation were set apart for each Indian, and the whole Province were hunted over for reservations, in twelve years this work ought to have been done.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a different question from the one we are discussing. I am afraid I cannot hope that the expenditure on surveys will be stopped yet a while. The hon. gentleman ought to remember that there was an arrangement between the Dominion and Provincial Governments for a joint commission to lay out those surveys. From the difficulties that arose the Provincial Government refused to go on with that commission, and they repudiated all the surveys that were made by the Hon. Malcolm Sproat. All those surveys are valueless, unless they are sanctioned by the Provincial Government. I tried to induce them to sanction those surveys, and they positively declined to recognise any of the surveys made by Mr. Sproat. Since that time Mr. O'Reilly has been, by mutual consent, appointed commissioner in place of the two commissioners. He has been acting for both Governments, and the leader of the late Government, Mr. Smyth, agreed with myself that he would confirm any and every survey made by Mr. O'Reilly. I have reason to believe that was done with the sanction of Mr. Davie, who was the attorney general, and who is now the Premier, so that I have no doubt all those surveys of reserves that were made by Mr. O'Reilly will be confirmed. The hon. gentleman must remember it is an enormous country, and Mr. O'Reilly is going on from year to year, as it is thought well, assigning the Indians to their reserves. He is going on very well, and it is satisfactory to know that all these surveys have been confirmed. There was some trouble, I may say to the hon. gentleman, not only some trouble but serious trouble and apprehension in the minds of the Government of British Columbia, as to disturbances up in the Metlakatla country. We are trying to deal with that as best we can. The Indians complain that the allowance of land under their reserve is insufficient. I am at this moment in communication with the Provincial Government, and the Provincial Government are willing to allow the Indians a larger reservation. I hope, therefore, that this matter, which was really threatening two weeks ago, will be settled.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The commissioners who were appointed to make this survey, in the first instance, were appointed with the consent of the Local Government, and the Local Government, of course, bound itself to abide by the decision of the commissioners, just as they have now bound themselves to abide by the decision of Mr. O'Reilly.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They agreed to do so.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes, it was binding in the one case as in the other. Those commissioners went on and made selections of land. They chose reservations, in some cases not larger than the Indians demanded. The hon. gentleman knows that there was a correspondence between the Indians of Washington Territory and the British Columbia Government, and if it had not been for the defeat of the Nez Percés by the American army, there would, in all probability, have been an Indian war on the Pacific slope, embracing Washington Territory and British Columbia. It was with the view of conciliating the Indians that the commissioners dealt with them in the way they did. I do not think the quantity of lands granted the Indians was extravagant at all. On the contrary, looking at the mode of life of the Indians as a pastoral people, the amount was very moderate. The whole Indian population is less than 40,000, and those commissioners, although the territory is large, should require but a moderate time to make the selection. The numbers of reserves at most would be very few to meet the wants of all the Indian tribes, and yet this commission has taken 12 years to mark out reservations for the Indians. Now, the hon. gentleman says that the Government repudiated the work done by Mr. Sproat and the other gentlemen associated with him. Supposing that were the case, the Indians had their reservation marked out; and, although the Government might not agree with them, until the Local Government indicated what change they desired, the Indians would continue to occupy those reservations, and I think we ought to see what these commissioners are doing for the salary they receive. How many reservations were set apart last year? Where were they marked out? For what Indians? What progress has been made? Or has Mr. O'Reilly simply been drawing a salary and waiting for the Local Government to agree to set apart these reservations.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. Are these industrial schools to be under any particular denomination?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, I should think not. I think those industrial schools should be secular in British Columbia. In the North-West, matters were otherwise. There is a large number of Indian bands who are Catholic Christians. At Qu'Appelle, for instance, the Christian Indians are all Catholics. There we have an industrial school for both men and women, under the charge of Father Hugonnard. Then we have, at the foot of the Rocky Mountains, a school under charge of Father Lacombe. At Battleford, we have a Protestant school under the charge of the Rev. Mr. Clark, who is a clergyman of the Church of England. It is, however, in no respect a Protestant school, but is open to all. In fact Mr. Clark was there at the time, and was a teacher among the Indians. He is very much esteemed by them and knows the language well, so that, practically, it is an Anglican school, though all the Indians can go to it. Then, there is an industrial school in charge of the Methodist conference lately established, and there is a Presbyterian school as well. That is in the North-West, because the various missions of these various religious denominations have established their missions there, have had a very large number of converts, and naturally these industrial schools have fallen into their hands. So far as I can learn, in British Columbia, that is not the case. The two schools on the mainland and one on the island, will be secular. If it should prove that a particular clergyman from any denomination has particular aptitude to be the master of an industrial school, he will be appointed; the fact of his being a clergyman would not be a reason for his not being appointed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman did not reply to the question of the hon. member for Bothwell as to what had been done by Mr. O'Reilly. Is it not the case that Mr. O'Reilly, some two or three years ago, was incapacitated by some accident for doing work at all?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is quite true.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has he not been unable to do work since?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, he is doing work now. Mr. O'Reilly suffered a very severe accident, and it was thought at one time he would be incapacitated for life. He has, however, thanks to a good constitution, survived that serious accident. Previous to the time he was incapacitated, he had laid out sufficient surveys on the ground, so that he could wait until the surveys made on the ground were completed by the surveyors. He is now completely restored, and I hope will long continue to carry on that work, and the chief reason why I wish that he should be so employed is this: that he is agreeable to the British Columbia Government, and can always get them to assent to whatever he does. And from his manner and adaptation to that work, he is agreeable to the Indian tribes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to have some information from the hon. gentleman with regard to the reservations in British Columbia—the one at Metlakatla, formerly under Mr. Duncan. I understand Mr. Duncan had some misunderstanding with his bishop, and that Mr. Duncan, who was, perhaps, the most successful of all our white men in dealing with the Indian population, had the Indians with him in that dispute. That these people, from a condition of barbarism, became, as compared with other Indians in the surrounding country, an industrious, thriving population, and had been self-sustaining, and in no way were dependent upon the Government. I understand that the Government interfered against the Indians and against Mr. Duncan on behalf of the bishop, and that the property that the Indians claimed there was taken possession of, and that the Local Government were authorised to transfer that property, with the honorable gentleman's consent, to other parties, and that the result is that arrangements are being made to voluntarily remove these Indians to a portion of Washington Territory in the United States, in order that they may get rid of the injurious surveillance of the Government and the meddlesome oversight of the Protestant Episcopal Bishop there. There is another reservation in that Province—and I mention both now in order to facilitate the progress of the hon. gentleman in his work—the reservation in the immediate vicinity of the city of Victoria. Certain parties were anxious to get possession of that reservation and to remove the Indians to another portion of Vancouver Island, and to place them in possession of property far less valuable than that which they actually occupy. Hon. gentlemen know—I believe the hon. gentleman from the city of Victoria knows—that this reservation in the immediate vicinity of Victoria is especially valuable, and I understand that this property was transferred, or is about being transferred, to certain parties for a mere fraction of its actual value, and that the Indians, contrary to their wishes, are being pressed into accepting property elsewhere in lieu of that which they have long held in the immediate vicinity of the city of Victoria. The hon. gentleman can tell us, with regard to both these matters, what the actual situation is.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In regard to Metlakatla, the survey was made by Mr. O'Reilly some years ago. I believe it was made on the most liberal scale, and until late years no objection was made to that survey. There is a question which has arisen with which the Government have nothing in the world to do. It is a question as to the title to the two acres at Metlakatla which are claimed by the Anglican church—I suppose the bishop may be considered the representative of it—I do not know how the statute stands, but that title is recognised by the Government of British Columbia; they say that the Church of England has a title to these two acres that are disputed by Mr. Duncan, who poses as the representative of the Indians at Metlakatla. That is a question with which we cannot interfere.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Indians built the church at all events.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, the Indians built the church, but there is at this moment a division amongst the Indians themselves. There is a not inconsiderable minority of the Indians at Metlakatla who are Anglicans and do not go with Mr. Duncan. Mr. Duncan and the majority, perhaps, acting under the idea of right, have interfered with that property. The Provincial Government have protected the right of the proprietors of these two acres. We have nothing in the world to do with that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Will the hon. gentleman say when the British Columbia Government gave the title to these two acres?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is believed that the title was given by Governor Douglas. Mr. Duncan went there originally as a lay reader of the Missionary Society. He has been a man of great merit, of great administrative talent, of great enthusiasm, and I understand and believe that he has been of great service among the Indians there; but he is a man, I fear, who cannot brook control of any kind. For some theological reason or other, he severed himself from the church of which he was a lay reader, and has established a religion of his own, perhaps as good as the religion that he left, but, at all events, he started a religious system of his own, and he resists the claim of the church, of which he was once a member and an officer, to this property. While he was a member of the church, of course he would defend the rights of the church. Now he has taken a different course. I am afraid there is a little of human ambition mingling with his desire for the advantage of the Indians, but, however that may be, it is a matter that we have nothing whatever to do with. The Canadian Government neither admits nor denies the claim of the Church of England to these two acres. They have not anything to do with it. All they want to do is to have the Indians living quietly on their reserve, and we shall try, as far as we can, to protect the Indians, and, at the same time, to prevent them from breaking beyond their bounds, and, under mistaken advice, becoming disturbers of the public peace. Then, with respect to the reservation in the vicinity of Victoria, that is a very valuable property, and the Indians make no use of it at all, they are living there in the immediate vicinity of a large town in which there is a seafaring population. I believe my hon. friend from Victoria will be able to speak as to the demoralisation of these Indians from that. The intention of the Government and of the Department is to get the full value for that land, and out of the sale of that land to purchase in the first place a habitat for these Indians at a considerable distance away from the seductions of a town and the degradation which results both for men and women, and to fund the balance of the money, as has been done in the older Provinces, for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The sale has not taken place yet?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It has not taken place yet.

Mr. MARA. In reply to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) in his remarks as to the two acres at the Mission Point, I may say that that reserve was made in 1864. Here is the letter:—

“COLONIAL SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
“27th September, 1864.

“SIR,—I have the honor to acquaint you, with reference to your letter of the 30th May last, that the Government Reserve at Metlakatla has been, by direction of the Governor, extended to a distance of five miles on each side of the Mission Point, and five miles back from the coast-line.

“His Excellency has also directed that the two acres of land known as Mission Point is to be held in trust by the Government for the benefit of the Church Missionary Society.”

Those are the two acres that have been in dispute for some time. The dispute between Mr. Duncan and Bishop Ridley has been altogether of an ecclesiastical character. The Provincial Government appointed a commission to enquire into the whole matter, and they found that Mr. Duncan was altogether wrong, and ordered a survey of the two acres, which settled Bishop Ridley and the society in their rights. I was glad to hear the First Minister pay a compliment to the British Columbia Indians, as compared with the Indians of the other Provinces. They are thrifty, self-relying, and self-supporting. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the last report of the Department of Indian Affairs, he will find that whilst the administration of the Indian Department in British Columbia cost only $1.25 per head, that of Manitoba and the North-West, $35.90; Nova Scotia, $2.79; New Brunswick, $3.41; Prince Edward Island, $6.17. Of the whole sum of $48,283.69 expended in British Columbia, a very large portion was paid for laying out and surveying the reserves. Now, the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is wrong when he states that these reserves were settled some years ago. Many of the reserves laid out by Mr. Sproat at that time were not satisfactory to the Provincial Government, and in some cases they were not satisfactory to the Indians. In addition to that, his work was not completed, and although it may seem a long time to lay out a few reserves, the hon. gentleman ought to bear in mind that those reserves are not laid out in large blocks. They vary in extent from 10 to 300 acres along the coast line, many of them including fishing stations that belong to different tribes, and each tribe wishes to have its particular fishing station laid out as a reserve by itself. Now, when we look at the small cost per head of administering the Indian Department in British Columbia, I think it speaks a great deal for the economical manner in which that Department has been managed; it also speaks well for the Indians. Taking this statement in connection with the tabular statement of agricultural statistics, it shows that the Indians there depend altogether upon themselves and not upon the Government. I am, therefore, very glad to know that the Government have, even at this late day, decided to establish three agricultural schools, two on the mainland and one on the island. For some years past the Government have been giving small sums to missionary societies to assist the Indians in day schools. Experience has taught both the missionaries and Indian Department that the Indians learn very little in these schools. They are, to a certain extent, still nomadic, at all events they have their hunting seasons and their fishing seasons, and when the head of a family goes hunting or fishing, he takes the whole family with him; so that an Indian lad who may have gone to school for two months is absent for two months more, and forgets all he has learned. In the industrial schools, I take it for granted that the Indians, besides being taught the three R's, will be taught both farming and trades.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The trades, principally.

Mr. MARA. Then all the better. After those Indians have returned to their homes, they will be the best missionaries and the best civilising agents the Government can possibly have. In looking at the small amount of $17,000 that the right hon. gentleman says he intends to set aside for that purpose, I cannot help but contrast it with the amount devoted to industrial schools in the North-West Territories. In the North-West Territories, where there are only 30,000 Indians, the sum of $53,929 is set apart for industrial schools; but in British Columbia, with over 38,000 Indians, only $17,000 are allowed for that object. In the one case the schools are all in operation, but in the case of British Columbia the cost of building is to be taken from the appropriation. It is but tardy justice done to the Indians, and I only regret the sum is not larger, and that there are not more schools. As British Columbia covers a large area, and the Indians are scattered all over the country, there should be at least five or six industrial schools, because you cannot expect the Indians to go more than 100 miles to a school. Now, with regard to the amounts paid to the Indian agents, exception has been taken by the hon. member for Bothwell that these are too large, and that the Indian agents are not required. I say they are required for several reasons: they are required to teach the Indians habits of thrift, to teach them, to a certain extent, in farming, to prevent their reserves from being encroached upon, and more than all, to settle disputes that frequently arise between the neighboring whites and the Indian tribes. From my knowledge, both of the Indian tribes and the Indian Department in British Columbia, I have no hesitation in saying that I believe it is well and economically managed.

Mr. BAKER. I wish to refer to a remark of the right hon. gentleman in reference to the Indian reserve of Victoria. I have no doubt that he spoke unwittingly, but he said that the seafaring population would have a tendency to demoralise the Indians, because of the close proximity of the reserve. Well, Sir, being a seafaring man myself, and a representative man, I hope the hon. gentleman did not apply his remark to me; at the same time I think that reserve should no longer be an Indian reserve. It could be better utilised for the terminal point of the Victoria and Esquimalt Railway, or other beneficial use. Perhaps the hon. member for Bothwell is not aware that the reserve to which he refers forms part of Victoria Harbor. It is situated at the left hand entrance to the harbor, and only takes five minutes to go from there to the densely populated portion of the city. On frequent occasions these Indians have a ceremony of what they call making a medicine man, or a medicine dog, and the noise they create on that reserve, when they are there for such an occasion, is exceedingly disagreeable to the citizens. I should be very glad to see said reserve turned to some better purpose, and a more suitable one found for the Indians much more remote from the city of Victoria. I hope the leader of the Government will have in view the offers that have been made for that reserve in the past, as I have no doubt he will, and see that the Indians get a fair price for their property, and that a suitable one is purchased in place of it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I was not objecting at all to the sale of this reservation. I quite admit that it is right that the Government should dispose of it, but I do not think they ought to make a private sale of some part of this reserve for far less than it is worth. It was to considerations of that sort that I directed my observations. I did not know how far the hon. gentleman had carried out the negotiations, or at least had accepted the offers which had been made, but it did not seem to me the proper way of disposing of lands which the hon. gentleman holds as trustee, so to speak, for the Indians. Now, I have just one word to say with regard to the observation of the hon. gentleman. If he examines the Auditor General's report he will find that a large portion of this $48,000 spent last year, was not spent for the Indians in any proper sense at all. Now, for the Kamloops agency, there was $905 spent, of which $120 only was spent for medicine, and $360 for seed grain; the remaining part, more than one-half, went as salary to the party in charge. At the next agency where the amount expended was $412, there was expended for supplies only $34.36, all the rest of that sum went to the agent for the payment of his salary and matters of that sort. When only $34 out of $412 goes to the Indians the hon. gentleman will see it is a very small proportion, and it is questionable whether the Indians might not be more benefited by an expenditure of a much smaller sum than Parliament appropriates if it was spent in some other way. Out of $477 for Okanagan agency only $28.87 were received by the Indians as supplies. All the rest was appropriated by officials.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says certainly. If the organisation is such that less than nine per cent. of the appropriation goes to the Indians and 91 per cent. is spent on the organisation itself, I would be inclined to think, as the public will be, that the scheme is a failure.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is not serious in talking that way. The hon. gentleman says there are 91 per cent. of the appropriation spent in keeping up the establishment. These appropriations are not to help the Indians; the Indians can help themselves. There is a certain number of officers to look after them, just the same as in the North-West, there is an agent, clerk and inspector. You might just as well point to Prince Albert where there is an agent, two or three other collectors, an inspector, an excise officer and a number of officials, and say that they spend all the money and the people got none. It is merely the organisation of society. These men are sent to the districts of British Columbia occupied by the Indians, and they of course receive salary, but the money is no more to be divided than it might be expected that Mr. Mowat, who has been appointed sheriff at Toronto at a very large salary, ought to give a certain amount of it to the people of Toronto. Those officers are sent to the different places to do their work. They are part of the organisation, and the hon. gentleman had the organisation when he was Minister.

Mr. BAKER,

Mr. MILLS. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I beg your pardon. The organisation has not been altered in any way.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes, it has.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not from the doctor to the lowest agent has it been changed since the hon. gentleman was head of the Department.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman is mistaken. He came down and proposed to the House to divide British Columbia into districts, and he established separate agencies. The hon. gentleman certainly ought to be better informed with respect to what he has done himself.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not understand where the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) got his calculation.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I read them from the Auditor General's report.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We have in the Estimates under our hands asked for $52,520. Of that sum $20,620 is for salaries. We have relief of distress, $1,000; seed grain, agricultural implements and tools, $1,200; medical attendance and schools, $3,350; industrial schools, $17,250; travelling expenses, $4,200; office expenses, $2,500—total, $52,000. There is no percentage as the hon. gentleman has said. Out of $52,000 there was $20,620 paid for salaries.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I read from the Auditor General's report, but I could give the hon. gentleman further details.

Mr. GORDON. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) seems to think those agencies are an unnecessary burden on the country, and he complains with respect to the division of British Columbia into agencies. If there is one thing in the administration of Indian affairs that reflects greater credit on the Government than another, it is the division of that Province into agencies, and the appointment of agents at the different points. One who has lived in British Columbia for 27 years, who remembers the condition of the Indians at that time, how unsafe a man's life was in travelling along the coast before the Indian agents were appointed, can all the more readily recognise now how much those agencies have effected in affording peace and security to life and property. Time was when a gunboat was frequently required to bombard the Indian camp, to punish murder, and to enforce regard for the constituted authority. I may say in regard to Vancouver Island, take the west coast, since the agent was appointed there has not been a single murder along that coast. In the district of Cowichan, where there is an agent stationed, 27 years ago the Indians were in a savage state. I desire to ask a question of the First Minister with respect to some of the agricultural communities of Indians. Last year a sum of money was given for prizes for the Indian agricultural exhibition at Cowichan. The effect on the Indians has been very marked, and will tend more than anything else to do away with the bad system of potlach which previously was one of their savage rites and debaucheries. I hope the First Minister will continue that policy and extend it as far as possible to every agricultural Indian settlement, for it will tend, in conjunction with experimental agricultural schools, to elevate the Indians at a very rapid rate. In fact, to-day, as already stated, they do not require the support of the Government in regard to food or raiment; they can earn enough to procure their own clothes, and some of them wear as good clothes as do members of this House, and they live as well as most of the people. But those agencies are essential in order to settle disputes, not only between white men and Indians, but between the Indians themselves. More than that, they are always on the spot, and when men in small boats come from the American side with whiskey and proceed to sell it to the Indians, the agent takes the first opportunity to punish those parties. In that way the Indian agents have effected a great amount of good along the coasts, especially in the district that I have the honor to represent.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think the hon. gentleman who has last spoken has afforded the strongest evidence that an increase in British Columbia is not called for. The hon. gentleman has shown that heretofore the Indians were in a demoralised state, so unruly as to require an organisation of this kind to preserve life in some localities; but now the Indians are in a very much improved condition. If that be so, and the greater portion of the money, according to the Minister's own statement, is for the purpose of keeping up the organisation, and does not directly benefit Indians, there is no reason why the Government should make this increased appropriation annually. If at the expiration of 1886 the sum of $48,000 answered the purposes of the Indians, if they have improved wonderfully since that time, if they are much more civilised now than they were then, if there is less danger of their doing any serious mischief to the inhabitants there, why, I ask, is it necessary that there should be now over $78,000 required for the same purpose? I hope the First Minister and the Government will take the advice of the hon. gentleman, and will say that there is no longer a necessity for this large expenditure and that they will accordingly reduce it.

Indians, North-West Territories.....$843,195

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Before we enter on the discussion of the separate items, I think the First Minister will agree that, perhaps, now is the best time to enter upon the discussion, which I mentioned before, when this subject was broached, of discussing at some length the question of Indian management in the North-West Territories.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think we took the item over in the general Indian discussion. I was asked when we came to the subject of Indians in Civil Government not to pass the item, and it has not been passed. It was understood that the general discussion should be taken up when we came to that item. I think, therefore, that it would be better to confine this discussion to the question contained in the Estimates and keep the general discussion, as was originally proposed, on the item we have reserved for that purpose.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If we did, I think we were unfortunate in doing it, as that item will pass, of course, so that it will make no difference.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was at the request of the hon. gentleman that we passed by that item, and it was understood that the discussion should take place upon it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I dare say it was, but, as far as I am concerned, I shall not make any discussion of that item. But as the First Minister is in his place, and it is early in the evening, I think it will be better to discuss it now than at another time. I think it is necessary that something should be said upon this question, because it was a common subject of discussion in the House last Session, but, unfortunately, the First Minister took sick—a fact which we all regretted—and was not able to be in the House all the time, although he was in the House when I made my last speech on that occasion. He then referred to the speech of another hon. gentleman, in which very specific charges were made, and I see he has issued, or some one has issued, a pamphlet with the authority of the Indian Department, and in that pamphlet they put some remarks or statements I made, and I do not propose that the accuracy of any statements I made in a previous Session shall be called in question, without my endeavoring to substantiate them, when I believe them to be correct. I call the First Minister's attention to the fact, which I mentioned before in the House, at a time when he thought it was not a proper time to discuss it, that in his reply to the speech of the other hon. gentleman and myself—though he had more particular reference to the statement of the other hon. gentleman—he had replied to the challenge that a commission be appointed by saying that he would accept the challenge and appoint the commission. He pledged himself that it would be an impartial commission, which would go into the whole facts of the case, and he would abide by the result. I called his attention to that statement, and to the fact that a commission has not issued. The reason he gave was that he found all the charges made were so absolutely incorrect—false, I think was the term he used—that it was not necessary to have a commission at all. At the same time he stated that he had documentary evidence bearing on this question, and he would submit it to the House, and have it scattered and put in the hands of hon. members. Well, there was a document prepared and sent out some time in the year—I do not know when—but it bears the imprint of the Department of Indian Affairs. It has no date upon it; it has no signature attached. I do not know when it was issued; I do not know who compiled it; I do not know who is responsible for it, but I know that it charges inaccuracy, and seeks to fix the charge of falsehood upon one who was a member of this House, if not upon one who is now a member of the House. I think the Committee are entitled to know who assumes the responsibility for this pamphlet, and the statements it contains. I think we should know who issued the pamphlet, who compiled the pamphlet and I think we are also entitled to ask the First Minister why another promise that he made is not fulfilled, as far as I know, that is that all the evidence he had should be laid before the House. We have been in Session some months; he said it was too late last Session to bring the evidence down, because it was still coming in, but he said that even then there was enough to disprove the charges which were made. But I have missed the evidence which is reported to be in this book, if it has been handed in. This book does not cover the First Minister's promise. Here are extracts taken—I do not know by whom, or on whose responsibility—extracts from certain letters and speeches and reports—little extracts or paragraphs. I remember that the hon. member for West Huron was charged with garbling, because he did not then give the whole context of a subject. The same argument would apply with reference to this, because I do not think the hon. gentleman will say that the reports of clergymen, or officers, or others who were asked to report are to be found here. We have these cullings and selections from those reports. We want the reports; we want to know where they are. The statements which were given by gentlemen on this side of the House were from official reports to which, if anything was left out, hon. members could refer and find what the context was. But here is a book which obtains circulation, which bears the imprint of the Department of Indian Affairs, which is sent broadcast over the country, which assumes to involve the charge of falsehood as regards other men, and still this charge is based upon selections made from documents which are not before us. I am not prepared to accept it in that way, and still less when the First Minister was so distinct in his promise with reference to the whole matter being put before us. Here is what was said:

"Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman issue this document over his own signature, or does he propose to make use of the officers of his Department? Because I can see that rather serious inconveniences will arise if gentlemen at the head of Departments call upon their officers to issue what is, to all intents and purposes, a political pamphlet. I do not object to the hon. gentleman making any speech or using any declarations when he sees fit, but I do not think his officers should do it.

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will take my own course about that; and it will be under my responsibility it will be issued. The hon. gentleman says the answer ought to be made here. It could not be given here, because we have to trace up the facts and the evidence of the statements of sundry agents which the hon. member for West Huron quoted."

Then he goes on to recite some information, and he concludes:

"I would have been very glad to have laid the evidence before the House, but it was only the day before yesterday that I received it from the far North-West. It will, however, be published and distributed.

"Mr. BLAKE. We will all be anxious to receive the exculpatory or explanatory statement of the hon. gentleman, but why should he not lay the material now on the Table before publishing it, since he has the material? The hon. gentleman had the right to make, from the evidence that reached him, what charges he chose, but on examining it we find the evidence altogether fallacious."

There is evidently a little misprint there, I think it should be "might" find it fallacious, because the documents were not on the Table—

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I must analyse it.

"Some hon. MEMBERS. Let us analyse it.

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I must classify it under the different charges. You shall get the whole of the evidence, I can assure you of that. I shall have it carefully prepared in narrative form and distribute copies to every member, besides furnishing copies to the constituencies."

Now, I say that we were entitled to have this, and we have not got it. Here are extracts, apparently selected from it, just the course they blamed members here for. They said the hon. member from West Huron had not given the context. Here is precisely the same thing. The hon. gentleman will not pretend to tell me that the little extracts which we have here are all the report that has been made. How do I know that the context would not affect the meaning of them? I should not be any more unfair in assuming that than hon. gentlemen opposite were in assuming the other, and I should be still less unfair, because they had the opportunity of referring to the reports which we quoted from and seeing the context, but I have not had the opportunity of seeing the documents from which they quote, because they have not been laid on the Table, as the First Minister promised they would be. Therefore, I say it is not fair that judgment be asked on this question upon the recital in this document. But I want to say this: I suppose this document answered the hon. gentleman's purpose politically, which it was intended for; but I think the First Minister will admit that it is not the proper way to answer statements and charges made on the floor of Parliament that there should be no answer given at the time, but that he should instruct his officers, if that was the way it was done, or that he, even if he did it himself, after Parliament rose, should prepare a document from information which he had received, but which were not public and open to everybody else—that he should select from that certain cullings, place them in narrative form and send them to the country, and say: "Judge from that how false was the judgment against us made by gentlemen opposed to us." I think the First Minister will not contend that that would be a fair method of parliamentary procedure at any rate, whatever object it might serve in a political campaign. It is on the floor of Parliament where charges should be made, and it is there that the answer should be given, and in this case the answer was not given. But the House must remember that I said that I do not make a charge against the First Minister, because he was very ill at the time; but it seemed to me that when he recovered sufficiently to be in the House, and had a certain amount of evidence in his possession which, he said, would refute those charges, we should have had that evidence placed before us. At any rate, we should have the evidence before us that was promised by the First Minister before we came to discuss this item to-night. I will not attempt to go into a criticism of all the speeches of other gentlemen. Another gentleman made a speech, in which he took up the contents of this pamphlet, and gave his version of it. I have not the least doubt that if he were in the House he would be prepared to substantiate what he believed to be the correct statements he made at that time. But I will say emphatically that I will not allow the First Minister, or any member of this House, by himself or through any of his officials, to cast doubt or discredit on statements I made here, without giving me the opportunity to show that I was correct in what I said, or having found that I was incorrect, to say so and express regret. I am not in the latter position; I have not found that the statements I made were incorrect. I maintain that the statements in this pamphlet with reference to what I said—and the only question dealt with in it is the flour question—are incorrect. This pamphlet has this motto on it: "Every breach of veracity indicates some latent vice or some criminal intention which the individual is ashamed to own." They then take an extract from my speech and place it inside the cover that bears that motto. I do not propose to rest under this imputation. When I made my comments on the Indian Department I made them realising that those who criticise that Department must remember that it is a difficult Department to manage, that they are dealing with a class of individuals very difficult to manage, and I never did desire unduly to press the Department in these matters. I was calling the attention of the Government to the fact that it seemed to me that, in some cases, our officers in the North-West neglected their duty and were careless in the performance of their duty, to the great injury of those poor ignorant wards of the nation, thus imperilling the peace of the country; and it was with the view that the good name of Canada, enjoyed in the past for fair dealing with the red man, should be maintained, that I spoke with reference to these matters. I pointed out that with reference to some of the officers of the Minister in that country, that there had been gross negligence, and that suffering and even death had occurred in consequence, and I made those statements on the authority of the reports of their own officers. If the First Minister will look through the remarks I made at that time he will see that I expressly bore testimony to the kindly feelings shown by the Deputy Minister of his Department. My charge was not against the officers of the home Department, but against the officials in the North-West, whose conduct I thought should be investigated, and if those charges were found to be true, other men should be put in their places. But I found my remarks were not received in the same spirit, and an effort was made to show that the report from which I quoted did not bear out my statements. They say here:

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

"THE QUESTION OF FLOUR.

"Having dealt with the speech of Mr. Cameron, it may be proper to consider that of Mr. Paterson of Brant, respecting flour of inferior quality delivered to Blood Indians in 1883. His text was a report made by Dr. Girard, who said:

"Since the 27th of September, over twenty deaths occurred on that (the Blood) reserve, and most of them from the same complaints—erysipelas, swelling of the glands of the neck, dyspepsia, &c. On all the reserves, except that of the Stonies, I found the houses of the Indians too close one to another, and on the first occasion I shall advise them to pull them down another year and have a space of about 100 feet between each house. The beef issued is of first quality, but the supply of flour is very poor and of bad quality. The instructor told me he used some of it and the dough, though prepared with hop yeast, made a poor and doughy bread. The quantity now on hand will just last till May or June next. I pity them."

"On the strength of this testimony, Mr. Paterson argued at great length that the Government was supplying the Indians with food which caused sickness and death.

"It will be noticed that there is some disagreement between Mr. Paterson and Mr. Cameron. The latter says they could not get beef and were forced to eat pork. 'The beef,' says Mr. Paterson's witness, 'is of first rate quality, but the flour is bad.' 'The flour,' says Mr. Paterson, 'spread disease and death among the Indians of the North-West Territories.'"

Now, you see how manifestly unfair that is. The member for Huron was probably speaking on some entirely different points from what I was speaking of. I was not bound to make my statement regarding Treaty No. 7 harmonise with the reports made by the hon. member for Huron about Treaty No. 4. Yet, we are here in this document, which is said to give the people full knowledge, placed in the position as if we were speaking with reference to the same band of Indians, dealing with the same subject. I am dealing with the report that came under my own notice, with reference to the Indians under Treaty No. 7. The writer of this document does not give the full report, though he must have had access to it, because it was in the speech I gave the House. I gave the whole text of the report, and it was not on Dr. Girard's letter that I based my charge. I did not base my charge solely on this testimony. I gave other testimony which is reported in Hansard. On referring to that report, the First Minister will find I was justified in the statement I made, not alone from what Dr. Girard says, which alone is quoted in this document, but from other testimony. I quoted the statement of the Deputy Minister that such was the case. Here is the memo. which the Deputy Minister sent to the First Minister with respect to this flour :

"Department of Indian Affairs.—In connection with the report of Dr. Girard, the medical attendant upon the Indians interested in Treaty No. 7 North-West Territories, to the effect that he considers the sickness that has prevailed among these Indians during the past year, which resulted in many cases fatally, is attributable to the quality of the flour the undersigned begs to report "

He then goes on to report that he submitted samples to experts who condemned the flour as unwholesome. There is what the Deputy Minister wrote, and, as I stated in my speech on that occasion, there is another report of Dr. Girard's giving more express testimony. I referred also to the fact that the Deputy Superintendent General was among the Indians, and that he stated the sickness and death among the Indians was attributable to the bad quality of the flour. In the concluding part of his statement, after detailing to the First Minister the steps that had been taken to recover the amount of money illegally got by these contractors for the delivery of this flour, the Deputy Superintendent General adds these sentiments which do credit to his heart :

"But the suffering which the poor Indians have endured from sickness by feeding on this unwholesome flour, and the number of deaths which have occurred are above all considerations of loss of a monetary value being such as cannot be remedied, but can only be deeply deplored by the Department which has just been unwittingly used as an instrument for contributing towards this suffering and mortality."

The gentleman who compiled this pamphlet states that the charge that the flour was unwholesome and the cause of death was a charge made by myself, who never saw the flour, and knew nothing more than was gathered from the official report; and he adds that the Indians died from disease not occasioned by bad flour, but by their living in overcrowded houses and so on. Now, the only statement which I made, which is called in question, is with reference to flour; and my statement has been borne out by the Deputy Superintendent General. Samples of flour were brought down to Ottawa, and submitted to experts there, who reported that it was unfit for human food. There is also the testimony of the medical superintendent, and the deduction drawn from it by the Deputy Minister, and the further fact that he states expressly that the sickness which resulted fatally was caused by the unwholesome flour. It is evident from the correspondence there were other reports from Dr. Girard which are not given. The matter was one which should fairly be brought before the House. It was not brought, not for political capital, but for the purpose of showing the Government the necessity there was for greater vigilance and care. I asked at that time whether the agent Denny, who subscribed his name to the statement that that flour was correct, was in the employ of the Government, and I said I was glad to find that, though his name appeared in the pay list of that year, it was dropped the subsequent year. I hoped he had been discharged altogether, but I find that another officer, who had also certified to the flour, was still retained. I mention this because, when it is brought to the notice of the Department that officials have neglected their duty, or been guilty of connivance, or proved themselves unable to tell good flour from flour like that, should be removed from the Department. On a subsequent occasion I referred to another report respecting the management of the Indians, showing that there were some 2,000 of a band, for some months, without hardly any attention at all being paid to them. The First Minister did just touch upon that charge, and said they were Sioux Indians who should have been on their reserve, and the policy of the Department was that they would not obtain rations until they would go on the reserve. There may be something said on that, as it is the policy of the Government to force them to go on the reserve; yet, after all, we find that the Government did not intend to let them starve. The point, however, to which I call attention is that Mr. Dewdney did not seem to pay any attention at all to the remonstrances sent him. Colonel Irvine telegraphed him on the 23rd of September, 1882, the state in which the Indians were. Mr. Frank Norman, on the 2nd of October, sent him a communication making strong representations to a like effect. Then, Fred. White, on the 19th of October, nearly a month after the first dispatch, sends a very pressing telegram representing this condition of affairs. So that the letter of the 23rd of September, from Lieutenant Colonel Irvine, who feared danger from the Indians, and asked for an immediate answer, was not answered until the 27th of October by Lieutenant Governor Dewdney, though other officers had reported in the meantime. Even then, there was no relief given until, I think, about the 26th of February, when there were instructions given to increase the rate. At that time, I called attention to the fact that, if the First Minister's explanation that it was a part of the policy of the Department to force the Indians to go on the reserve, and therefore, to make them starve, in order to compel them to do that, was correct, and his statement that, if they went on the reserve, they would be attended to and their wants supplied, was true, another medical officer reported from the reserves that there was a state of destitution and starvation there also, which made the Indians reckless. I may repeat it, so that the First Minister may see for himself that the charges which I made from reports which were brought down to the House, I was warranted in making, and that some explanation should have been given. The officer of the Government on the reserve of Pi-a-pot and the Assiniboines, in 1884, made a report, not in reference to the Sioux, who would not go on the reserve, but in reference to those who were there, and who, according to the policy of the Government, were entitled to be attended to. After enumerating a number of diseases from which they were suffering, he adds :

"And starvation, if the last can be recorded as a disease. I find that in the last three months, thirteen deaths have taken place in each reserve, in all twenty-six, a very heavy death rate, and from all I can gather, death has been accelerated, if not immediately caused, by the scant supply of food served out to these Indians. At the present time, this condition of starvation is more evident among the Assiniboines, as the Crees have lately obtained supplies by cutting wood. I saw several children in the Assiniboine camp worn and wasted, and unless properly fed must die in a few days. The old medicine man asked me if I could give him some medicine to have by him, that would be helpful when the Indians fainted, as from their scanty and insufficient rations a number of them suffer in that way. It may not come within my province to report this condition of starvation, but I am well satisfied that if they were sufficiently fed, there would be less tendency to illness among them. I may also add, that from the way they have been allowed to starve, a firm determination was expressed by both Pi-a-pot and Jack, that as soon as they could travel they would forsake the reserve and go west again."

I have read that from Hansard, but I have the document under my hand of the officer of the Minister who reported that, I think that hon. gentlemen will agree with me that, when reports come down and come under the observation of a member, when they are brought before the attention of the House, they are not to be met by a statement that it is not so, or by being ignored, or by saying that a pamphlet which has not been submitted to Parliament or scrutinised, the contents of which are taken from documents not before us, is to be alleged as a proof, and we are to take it for granted that the matter is thus proved. I called attention to that because the First Minister said he would attend to the Indians when they were on the reserve, and these Indians were on the reserve, and the effect of the treatment was such that they had become dissatisfied with the reserve and told this Government officer that, as soon as they could, they would leave the reserve and go west again because of this condition of things. I made this statement without wishing unduly to press a charge against the Government, because I recognised that it is a difficult matter to administer this, but it seems to me, as I said a moment ago, that, when we have such an item for general expenses as we have here, $125,000, when it is remembered that out of a total of $843,000, there is only about a half that goes to the Indians, and that a large sum of tens of thousands of dollars of this money which is voted by Parliament goes for officers who are appointed for the very purpose of looking after and attending to these matters, I claim that, when they are found to be neglectful of their duty, as is abundantly proven by these reports, their conduct is to be reprobated, and that, if they are allowed to remain in their positions, and no cognisance taken of their action, it would do harm, and the record which the Canadian people have had, as distinguished from the people to the south, would be in danger of being marred. That was my justification for bringing forward this statement, and I do not feel that it was proper that a pamphlet should be issued in this way, when the documents from which this pamphlet is in part compiled were not laid on the Table of the House, so that we might have an opportunity of investigating them. I do not say that there was the same sweeping assertion in regard to myself in this pamphlet as in regard to another gentleman. He has not asked me to enter into the defence of his statements, but there was a document issued from the Department charging a member of this House with having made statements which were false and incorrect, charging that in some cases he had not given the full text but only a selection, while the Department itself was giving only selections, and those not from documents which were accessible to others than those in the Department itself. That was not a fair way of discussing public questions. It may serve political purposes, but it will not serve the interests of parliamentary discussion and parliamentary investigation to conduct our affairs in this way. I have trespassed thus far upon the time of the Committee, and for doing so I make no apology whatever, because the First Minister expressed a desire that this matter should be talked over when the opportunity presented itself.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can have no objection to the hon. gentleman making the statement he has made, or to the tone and temper in which he has made it. He has spoken of a reference made to his speech in a previous Session in this pamphlet. I say at once, without any hesitation, that that pamphlet was issued by the Department of Indian Affairs, and I have no hesitation in taking the whole responsibility for that pamphlet. I have no hesitation in saying that that is the statement which I desired to make in reply to the speech of Mr. Cameron when he was a member of this House. The hon. gentleman has stated truly that I could not answer the statement of that hon. gentleman, because for nearly two months I had been confined to my house; but, if I had been here and had heard his speech and that debate, I could not have answered it any more, I could not have answered it at all, from the fact that his speech was an elaborate excerpt from statements of various officers in the North-West, compiled carefully and astutely from a series of reports covering several years. Those were the reports and statements of officers and others from different points in the great North-West, spreading from the foot of the Rocky Mountains to Port Arthur. I had no means of answering any of those charges had I been in my place, had I heard the charges which were made against the Government. All I could do, as the head of the Department was to send that speech up, marking the charges which were made against the several officers and affecting several reserves and several bands of Indians, and to call for a full report. That was a matter of necessity; and when those replies were received, I felt it my duty to myself, my duty to the officers, my duty to the Department, my duty to the North-West, to state, as I believe, calmly, candidly, and without violence, the answers that had been furnished to the Department by the various persons who were charged in the North-West. That pamphlet was published, it had to be published. The Hansard was published, the papers in the interest of the Opposition were loaded with these charges brought against the administration of Indian affairs. It was absolutely necessary, in self defence, that that pamphlet should be issued, and I say that that pamphlet has never been answered, and cannot be answered. It is a truthful pamphlet. There may be, in going over a statement of an infinity of details, small errors of date, and small particulars, but I believe that that pamphlet is an honest, a truthful, a satisfactory answer to the speech that was made by Mr. Cameron. Mr. Cameron is not here, so I shall not characterise, in his absence, as I have done elsewhere, his speech. I have not the same charge at all to make against the hon. member who has just spoken. The hon. member is, I think, an ardent politician, and would be just as glad to make an effective attack upon the Government as Mr. Cameron. But I draw a great distinction between the hon. gentleman and Mr. Cameron. I believe the hon. gentleman is incapable of making a statement that he does not believe to be true. I believe that the hon. gentleman, who has taken a great interest in Indian matters, felt it his duty—I have a right to suppose and believe that he felt it his duty—to bring up that subject about the flour that he now speaks of. The answer which is published in that pamphlet, is the reply given by the officers of the Department. I do not think it would be necessary, I do not think the Committee would listen with patience if we entered into a re-discussion of that question about Indian matters. Let us have a field day, if we are both spared, early next Session, but not as we are approaching the dog-days.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Mr. Cameron might possibly be here from some constituency.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If Mr. Cameron is here, then I shall be able to state more strongly my opinion about what he has stated than I can do in his absence. I do not think it would answer any good purpose; I will only say one thing about what the hon. gentleman has said. He says these Indians on the reserve have suffered, that we allowed them to starve. Well, with regard to the Indians that were not on the reserve, I stated before in Parliament what the policy of the Government is, what it will be as long as I have anything to do with it. The Indians like to hang about—and I would ask my hon. friends from the North-West if it is not so—they like to hang about the police stations, the land agencies, wherever there is a chance to get food. They will beg from the employés, and if there are but few white men there, they will threaten them in order to get food. We will not allow them to congregate in large bodies, especially in the vicinity of the boundary, where they can slip across from one country to another, and where they are a source of danger. In the case of the Indians to which the hon. gentleman has alluded, there was a large body of them there. They were a source of very considerable uneasiness, they were communicating with the Indians across the line, they had no business there, they ought to have gone to their place which was reserved for them and where they would be taken care of. But they would not go, and day after day we had to put them on half rations, on quarter rations, and we had to reduce them to starvation point before we could get them to go to their reserve. And then the hon. gentleman says they were not treated well on the reserves. Why, an Indian who is healthy is a strong man, and just as able to work as a white man. The white man goes up to the North-West and works for his living. What does the Government do? The Government gives the Indian a reserve, he has lands reserved for him, he has seed grain given to him, he has implements of husbandry given to him, he has cattle given to him in order to plough his land, he has everything requisite to start in the successful cultivation of the land. The white man goes there and has to furnish all these things for himself. But because these Indians are too lazy to work, they eat the cattle instead of ploughing with them, they throw themselves upon the provisions they have a right to get, they eat the seed grain, and then they say they are starving, and they won't work, and they are made the object of sympathy by people who do not know anything about them. Those are the real facts. The reserves are carefully chosen, the Indians are consulted in the selection of the reserves, the Indians are carefully taken care of. We have an Indian agent on every reserve of any importance. If they are small ones, an agent will attend to two or three of them. We have farm instructors, carefully selected, and, on the whole, the selection of these instructors has been very successful. Occasionally they have broken down, occasionally they have proved unworthy, and they have been dismissed, and others have been employed in their places. But, on the whole, I say that the administration of Indian affairs in the North-West has been exceedingly successful. I have lately received the strongest means of saying so, because I have the communications, which I need not trouble the House this Session to read, but which I may lay before the House next Session, with reference to the conduct, for instance, of Lieutenant Governor Dewdney, who has been attacked most severely for his administration of affairs; I have documents signed by every man of importance in the North-West, commencing with Bishop Grandin and with Father Lacombe, with the Anglican and Methodist clergymen, with the members of the Council, all speaking with the greatest gratitude of the manner in which Indian affairs have been managed during the last two, or three or four years. Hon. gentlemen who come from that country, and who can speak with some knowledge, can say that the administration of Indian affairs in the North-West has been careful, has been humane, but has been firm, and whenever complaints have been made it is because that firmness did not suit the lazy, indolent Indians set up by interested parties who desire to have confusion instead of peace and order. During the troubles that arose in the North West there was no discontent among the Indians. I have no hesitation in saying there was no discontent among the Indians. They were coaxed by those who took up arms, for various causes to which we need not refer just now, the savages were coaxed to resume their old habits of warfare. Warfare was the delight, the game of the redmen. The young men were animated by the stories told by their fathers and grandfathers, the old warriors, who could count their scalps and call the young men of the present day women. The Indian tribes could only be restrained by kindness and firmness, and those have been successful, and not a shot would have been fired by the Indians on account of discontent on the part of the Indians themselves. I must refrain from entering into this subject at greater length, because it is not exactly germane to the questions that are before the Committee to-night. Whether the Government of the North-West has been good or bad, we must pass these votes. These are the annuities granted by treaty, these are supplies which must be given to the Indians; and, therefore, I will say no more. But I repeat that if we are favored with the presence of Mr. Cameron in Parliament next year, and he is a very able man, and I dare say will be an efficient addition to the ranks of the hon. gentlemen opposite, I have no doubt this subject will be up. I can only say that I believe and know that the Department of Indian Affairs has been managed honestly, with an earnest and sincere desire to do good to the Indians. I believe that the staff of officers, both at headquarters and on the plains in the North-West, is as efficient as any Department that can be found, consisting of so many men with so many characteristics, and with so many extraordinary duties—I believe that, on the whole, we have got a body of men of whom we may be proud. There are men of different degrees of capacity, there are different degrees of smartness and tact in the management of Indians; but I can only say this, whenever they hear any statement at all authentic respecting any men employed in the North-West, that either from bad conduct or from indisposition to do the work, or inability to do it—and there I think, want of tact and ability to manage the Indians is just as bad as if an officer had committed a positive fault—we transfer him to some other place where he can be useful, and if he cannot be useful he is dismissed. The result is that we have an efficient and good body of officers. Of course, the Committee are aware, I understand, that mistakes may occur and unfortunate mistakes. A misapprehension on the part of an Indian or Indian tribe may cause most serious consequences. We, therefore, take the greatest pains in weeding out men who, for want of temper or ability, cannot manage the Indians. I am glad to speak in the presence of hon. gentlemen who come from the North-West and who know the Indians, and the services of the Indian Department; and I can confidently leave to them, if this debate is to be continued, the vindication of the general conduct of the Indian Department in the North-West.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is one point which the hon. gentleman has not touched and which I think it would have been well he had alluded to, and that is this: When last year the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) made a series of charges against the hon. gentleman's Department, the hon. gentleman on his return to the House, to the best of my recollection, took the occasion to state formally in his place that he proposed to cause an impartial commission to be issued, before which commission he invited Mr. Cameron to appear and prove his charges. That was, I think, the right way to meet charges made with the circumstantiality that Mr. Cameron made them in his place in the House. The Minister did not do that. He has caused his Department, on his own responsibility, to issue a sort of polemical reply to Mr. Cameron. We cannot accept this statement made by the accused parties, that is to say by the Indian Department, as at all equivalent to such a commission as the hon. gentleman proposed to issue. Those who know Mr. Cameron know perfectly well that he would have been sure to have taken advantage of that commission, and even at considerable personal inconvenience would have appeared before it and there substantiated, to the best of his ability, the charges he made. Before such a commission, where witnesses could have been examined if need be on oath, these matters could have been properly investigated, and if, after the evidence was published, it appeared that the Department was free from blame in these matters, the Prime Minister and the Department might have been held fairly exonerated; but I do not think the mere issue of a reply from the Department is at all a satisfactory answer to charges preferred by an hon. gentleman in this House. Either they should have been dealt with by a committee of this House, or before such a commission as the hon. gentleman proposed. I have had not had time to examine into this pamphlet minutely, but a considerable number of the statements relied upon appear to me to be fragments from letters, and from reports, of which the House is not in possession, of documents in the hands of the Department itself. That is not the way in which I think such charges as Mr. Cameron made should have been dealt with. Moreover, the House I think should have had that information before it in full, not mere extracts of it. The whole matter cannot be dealt with to-night, it would be too late to go into it; but in common justice to Mr. Cameron it must be observed that as yet no such opportunity, as the First Minister has proposed to give him, has been granted to that gentleman of proving those charges he thought fit to make, and until this is done no one can say that Mr. Cameron has been unable to prove what he alleged in his place in this House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is quite true that I did make that statement that a commission would be issued, and that commission has not been issued. One of the reasons, as I have stated already, was this: that I did not think any person who read Mr. Cameron's speech and who read the pamphlet would ever think of asking for a commission, the answer was so complete and thorough. I do not think the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has read the pamphlet; he heard the speech. The hon. gentleman said, and so did the hon. member of Brant (Mr. Paterson), that this pamphlet contained a number of extracts. They were to meet other extracts made by Mr. Cameron. You take extracts that are pertinent out of a report. You do not publish the whole report. Mr. Cameron made a number of extracts and quotations, some I was going to say garbled, but I will not say garbled, but, at all events, they were not literal; and the pamphlet, if it is to be read at all, must pursue the same course. I look upon it in this way: if I had been present when Mr. Cameron made his speech containing an infinity of quotations from the reports made by the officers of the Department covering many years, and if I had been supernatural as regards information I would have arisen and met the quotations, and with the answers the House would have been satisfied. Mr. Cameron made an attack on the Department; he made certain quotations and extracts from the reports, and if I had arisen and made an answer, and quoted such portions of the various reports as would be a sufficient answer, the House would have accepted it. But as I could not do that, as no mortal man could do it, a pamphlet was written in answer to the speech of the hon. gentleman, just as if I had delivered it in this House. If any hon. member will think next Session, after considering the whole matter, that the country should be put to the expense of a commission of enquiry into the workings of the whole machinery, the Government will not object to it. But I think it will be money thrown away. We all know the spirit in which the attack was made by Mr. Cameron. Mr. Blake, whose absence I greatly regret, whose ill-health I, as a Canadian, deplore—Mr. Blake, in the electoral campaign which preceded the election, at one place quoted two grounds of attack upon the Government, upon the Indian Department, from Mr. Cameron's speech, and he said that on those two grounds he was satisfied to rest the indictment against the Indian Department. Then, afterwards, when he saw that pamphlet he stated that those quotations which he made, those subjects of attack which he made, were made on the responsibility of Mr. Cameron, and that he would not be responsible for them, that he had no wish, or desire, or inclination, to follow the matter further, because he saw—it was patent in the evidence to Mr. Blake—that that statement was untrue.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT;

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, he did not say that.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD. I do not say that Mr. Blake said so, but I say so. I say it was so patent to him that he stated he threw the responsibility of the charge he brought against the Indian Department upon Mr. Cameron, and he had no desire or inclination or wish to follow it any further. He cannot follow it further, because the evidence was clear, and beyond the possibility of a doubt, that Mr. Cameron made a statement which was at variance with the facts of the case.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is the point at issue. Mr. Cameron makes certain assertions, and the Indian Department makes certain assertions. It is true, I have not verified the statements in the pamphlet to which the hon. gentleman refers; it would take some time to do that. I did not say that I had not read it, but I said I had not had time to read it carefully. I examined it, and I saw that there were gross contradictions between Mr. Cameron and the Department, or the hon. gentleman at the head of the Department, whichever it be; and the position I took was this: that where two hon. gentlemen, the Premier on the one side and Mr. Cameron on the other, are practically contradicting each other in this House, the proper way to deal with those matters is either on the floor of this House, if they happen to be here, or through a commission, as the hon. gentleman proposed fairly enough, or before a committee of this House, if the subject is too tangled or intricate to enter upon here; and I agree with the hon. gentleman that, if we were to enter into that discussion here, it would not be this night, or the next night, or the next night again, in all probability, that we should be able to thresh it out. We cannot go into this discussion at this stage of the Session, nor could we well do it this Session if it is to be done before a committee or a commission. But the hon. gentleman may remember that he used very strong language indeed about Mr. Cameron, and Mr. Cameron, no doubt, used pretty strong language about him. In that respect I may say, without offence, that there was a pair of hon. gentlemen; they bestowed very strong terms on each other's conduct in the matter. But as Mr. Cameron is not here and the commission has not been granted, I take the point that it would be necessary, in common fair play and justice, that Mr. Cameron should have an opportunity, at any rate, of making good his charges, if he can make them good; or else, until that opportunity is given him, it is not reasonable or fair to condemn him for stating what he could not prove.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have been very guarded in my remarks about Mr. Cameron.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not propose to enter into a lengthy discussion on this matter to-night. As the hon. gentleman has said it will probably take many nights to thresh it out, and as the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) says, we could not think of entering in the dying hours of the Session, upon an examination of the speech made by Mr. Cameron, and the reply issued from the Indian Department, and endeavor to draw conclusions which of these statements is the true one. But I may say this very frankly, that I have also read the speech made by Mr. Cameron with great care, and I have also read with great care the reply which issued from the Indian Department. I took the trouble to compare the citations made in the Indian Department pamphlet with the original from which they were supposed to have been taken, and I also compared the citations made by Mr. Cameron in his speech, with the reports from the Indian Department from which they purported to be taken; and, after spending a great deal of time over it, I came to the conclusion that as Mr. Cameron was not in the House it would be nothing but fair to him that I should take advantage of a few hours to explain the conclusions I came to as to who was telling the truth. And I may say frankly, while Mr. Cameron's quotations in one or two respects, and those of a trival character, are not correctly reported in the copy of the Hansard from which the Indian Department quoted when they published this document, still, substantially, every quotation made by Mr. Cameron in his speech is correctly transcribed in the corrected copy of the Hansard. Hon. gentlemen know well that when the Hansard is first issued, after a long speech has been made, particularly when that speech bristles with quotations, there are often verbal inaccuracies and mistakes; and when the Indian Department came to reply to Mr. Cameron they took care not to take the corrected copy of the speech in Hansard, but the original and uncorrected copy of Hansard and hold him bound by that. Now, hon. gentlemen will see that that was an unfair way of treating the question, I have taken the corrected copy of Hansard, and have compared Mr. Cameron's corrected copy of his speech with the Indian Department reports from which he purported to make the extracts, and I find in every case where he has made a substantial charge, the proof can be produced from the departmental reports themselves.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They cannot; I deny it entirely.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Well, the hon. gentleman says himself he has not taken the trouble to do that and I have taken the trouble. That is the difference between us.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. To do what?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) To verify the accuracy of Mr. Cameron's quotations from the Indian report.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have gone over every paragraph in the pamphlet.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Hon. gentlemen may differ as to the deductions to be drawn from certain statements, but I am speaking with reference to the statements themselves. Whether Mr. Cameron drew proper deductions from them or not, will be a matter we will discuss at length when this question comes up. I hope sincerely that the Opposition will have the advantage of Mr. Cameron's presence at the beginning of next Session, when the hon. gentleman says he proposes to have a field day upon this question; and I promise him that if he does, Mr. Cameron will be enabled to take the documents themselves and read from them and prove that the citations he made at the time are correct citations, in every substantial case. There are one or two little inaccuracies which do not affect the charges he made, but substantially the charges are supported by the citations he made, and those citations are correctly transcribed in a corrected copy of the Hansard. It would take a long time to go into this to-night. I do not propose to do so, as I am sure the House would not like to have a two or three hours speech on the subject. I do not wish to take up the time of the House, but I have the material and I have spent a good deal of time over it, because of the strong charges which the hon. gentleman brought against a man whom I respect very highly, and who, I believe, proved his case. I will say of the hon. gentleman that I had the honor of sitting with him in this House for four years, and while he struck hard against his opponents, he always struck straight from the shoulder and not below the belt. He was a gentleman with whom I, at any rate, was proud to be associated in political life. I will not go into a lengthy discussion; but, after having examined the charges made against him, I have no hesitation in saying that, in very many instances, these charges will be found to have been deliberately falsified in this book which is not signed by anybody.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is not the case.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I can prove that some of the quotations here are incorrectly copied from the books they purport to be copied from.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is not the case.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I can produce the book, and I promise the hon. gentleman that when his field day comes, if my hon. friend from Huron is not here to do it, I will do it for him.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think the point I brought before the First Minister ought to receive attention. What I say is this: The First Minister said he would give a commission; he did not do it. He said he would lay all the evidence before the House; he has not done that, and I want him to do that. We do not want extracts; we want the whole evidence before us; we want to know where these quotations are from, and I think we are entitled to know it. Our statements are made from reports of the Department brought down from the House and accessible to everyone, and the supposed refutation of them comes in the shape of extracts from documents that the House is not in possession of, that we never saw, that we have only the word of the Department for. I do not doubt it, but I want to see the documents.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I do not desire to take up the time of this Committee at any great length, but having lived in the North-West some four years, and having been intimately acquainted with the treatment of the Indians there, I may be allowed to say a word or two. I went into the North-West Territories in the spring of 1883, and since then I have been closely associated with four or five reserves—that of Chief Piapot, who as you are aware, has been reported a troublesome Indian, and he no doubt is; Jack's reserve, which is close to my place; the Crooked Lake reserve, the reserve north of Regina, and the File Hills reserve. Now, I state here from my own actual knowledge that the statements made by the First Minister are in every respect correct, so far as these reserves are concerned; every letter of them is correct; and it is fair to infer that when they are correct as to those reserves, they are correct in regard to other parts of the country. I say that this talk about bad flour and bad meat is also incorrect. I have been on those reserves, and I have found that the Indians are getting good meat and good flour; the officials are a gentlemanly and well-conducted class of men; and the Indians, I think, are treated as well as Indians ought to be treated. I can tell you this: in that country the general opinion is that the Indians are treated too well; many have felt that they are treated better than the white settlers are. The statements made and circulated throughout the country about the Indians being starved are entirely incorrect, and I would not be doing my duty as a representative of that country, knowing the Indians as I do, if I allowed these statements to go uncontradicted. I do not want to take up the time of the House more than simply to say that the statements made by the hon. leader of the Government are correct in every particular.

Mr. DOYON. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to make a speech—I do not wish to take up the time of the House—but I only wish to make a few remarks on certain facts which are probably unknown to the Government. The hon. Premier said, a few moments ago, that the Indians were able to work, and that the Government had even furnished them with seed grain. I would like to know whether seed grain is distributed to the Indians of the North-West with as much impartiality as is shown in the distribution of seed grain among the tribes of the Province of Quebec. The Government are aware that, in the county of Laprairie, which I have the honor to represent, is to be found a rather numerous tribe, which is composed of rich people only. Some few weeks ago the Government caused to be distributed $100 or $150 worth of seed grain in order to aid the poor people of that tribe in sowing their fields, and in order to help them in supplying themselves for next winter with good bread and good meat, as the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Perley) has just put it. But if my information is correct, it would seem that these grains, potatoes, &c., were distributed to the friends of the Government only, that is to say, to the people who at the last election voted in favor of the ministerial candidate. For the last few days I have heard hon. members accusing the Government of favoring their own political friends by giving them offices and grants for public works in their counties. I have, myself, charged the Government with dismissing, for political reasons, people who faithfully fulfilled their duties. For all of this the Government have found an excuse, but I would like to know whether the Government will find an excuse when it is a question of humanity, and when they take the people's money to distribute it to the poor and give it to the rich, as I will prove to this House. The list of distribution was not prepared by disinterested parties, it was prepared by one of the chiefs, who was the right hand of the ministerial candidate at the last election, it was prepared by the agent of the Government himself, and, subsequently, it was found impossible to have it approved of by other chiefs. They refused to approve this list of distribution because they found it was unjust, because they found it was iniquitous. And you will be able to judge of the matter, Mr. Speaker. Grain was given to Mrs. Michel Nolan, whose husband is employed by Mr. Jockes and earns $2 per day, and they have a son who is sixteen or seventeen years old and who also works every day. I ask whether these people had any need of the help of the Government to procure seed grain? But we have better still. Help was given to the chief's brother, Mr. Jockes; a bag of potatoes was given to him. It appears that he was ashamed to take it.

Several hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DOYON. (Translation.) I am not making a joke; I am stating a fact. This man has been selling potatoes all winter. Well, I ask the Government whether they distribute seed grain in the North-West as equitably as they did with regard to the tribe at Caughnawaga, whom I represent and who are perfectly known to me. Such are the remarks which I take the liberty of making. Mr. Louis Beauvais, who is the present chief of the tribe, was requested to approve the list and he refused. It was not through party spirit that he was unwilling to approve this list, for he refused to vote, either for my opponent or for myself, but he refused to approve it because he found it unjust. I make these remarks to the Government, because I say that when the Government distribute money, or grant offices, to encourage people to support them, people may complain, but others may approve them. But, when it is a question of humanity, there should be but one voice to blame the Government for pursuing such a course.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the Minister how many Indians have withdrawn from the treaties in Manitoba?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Altogether about 2,000.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask how many have withdrawn from Treaty No. 1, and Treaty No. 2, and if any Mr. DOYON.

applications have been made by the Indians who have withdrawn to be reinstated? I also see that a number of the Indians who have withdrawn from Treaty No. 2 have asked to be allowed to keep their old holdings which they have held for years under the Manitoba Act, and I would like to ask if it is the intention of the Government to allow the Indians now classed as half-breeds to retain these holdings?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will get the information.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Those who have withdrawn from the treaties are in exactly the same position as other settlers who go into the country, except that they get their scrip.

Mr. WATSON. I find that the agent on the Fairford Reserve, Treaty No. 2, says:

"This reserve continues to be one of the largest and most prosperous in my agency, although several half-breeds have withdrawn from the treaty. These half-breeds, before entering the treaty, resided upon the reserve, and were in occupation of the same previous to the transfer to Canada, and in many cases have made valuable improvements, which they state they claim under the Manitoba Act, and they ask to be allowed to remain undisturbed on the reserve."

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is an entirely different question, and it is under the consideration of the Government at this moment, how they can arrange with these people.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I notice that there is a reduction of $8,615 in annuities.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That decrease in annuities is caused by the withdrawal of Indians under Treaties Nos. 1, 2 and 5, which affects a reduction in the amount of $8,615.

Mr. SCARTH. I can corroborate what the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Perley) has said with regard to the Indian reserves in his vicinity. I have visited all these reserves, and not only these but the Touchwood Hill reserves, the reserves near Carlton, and the reserves in the Edmonton district. In every instance I can corroborate what the hon. the First Minister said. I have found these Indians contented and satisfied with their instructors, and improving their position. I wished to add my testimony to that of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Perley), as I have visited so many reserves, and I found them all in the same position.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am not going to enter into a discussion of the abuses which have grown up on these reserves, but the quotations made by the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), and those made in the speech of Mr. Cameron, were quotations from the reports of the Indian Department; and I must say if those gentlemen had read the report of the officers of the Department, they would have seen it was not just the thing to say the Department was all right, that there had been nothing to complain of, and to bear personal testimony in this kind of way. If these statements made by the hon. gentlemen are correct, and no doubt they are, so far as they come under their own personal observation, it is clear everything is not right, because an officer who would deliberately convey to the head of a Department information representing that dishonesty had been practiced by certain parties connected with the public service, is not himself a fit man to be retained in the public service, if he is bearing false testimony. If the testimony of these hon. gentlemen is correct, the testimony of the public officers with regard to the Department with which they are associated, is false. If it is, they should not be retained in the public service.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I was in hopes we had got through and would have a few estimates passed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman's friends have been making statements, and I refrain from taking up the time of the House, beyond what is barely necessary to answer them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has just made a counter statement.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have here a circular issued by the Department, and this circular is based on the fact that information of the kind I have mentioned was given by the public officers, and the Department warns its officers, on pain of dismissal, not to put in an official document any information of the sort :

" You will, however, confine yourself simply to a narration of such facts as should appear in a report to be made public, and refrain from suggesting therein any policy which, in your opinion, the Department should adopt in the management of Indian affairs ; as suggestions which may or may not be approved of and acted on by the Department should not be made in an agent's report which it is proposed to publish. Failure to comply with instructions in this respect will hereafter be regarded as an act of insubordination on the part of the reporting officer."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. With regard to the item, agricultural implements $26,511, the different reserves are now tolerably well supplied. The amount asked for is to provide against wear and tear and to supply new tools.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is the same rule followed of calling for a special make of certain instruments, for instance, John Deer plough, Emery binder, or is it open to any maker to compete ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will make a note of that.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is the last we will hear of it. The hon. gentleman has more notes than he can read over.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As respects the decrease in the item, seeds and grain $15,674, I have no objection to the hon. gentleman trying to practice a much needed economy, but I doubt very much, in some of these cases, whether the actual results will correspond. The reduction in this case is enormous, being from $20,000 to $4,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is a gratifying decrease.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have seen these decreases over and again put down on paper in the Indian estimates, and then had $300,000 or $400,000 taken out by Governor General's warrants and other means of the same description to make them good. I doubt from what we know of the extent to which cultivation has progressed on these Indian reserves whether the Government will be able to supply the Indians with the requisite seed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is quite true there was great discrepancy between the amount taken out and the amount required, and that the Governor General's warrant had to be resorted to, and I drew the attention of the officers of the Indian Department and of my right hon. friend to it. I am assured these estimates have been made up with the most careful attention to that point, and it is believed that they will not require to be supplemented.

Mr. MITCHELL. When these Indian estimates were up in the last two or three years, I always took occasion to call the attention of the right hon. the First Minister to the fact that I thought the manner of letting these estimates and the delivery of the goods in bulk quantities was scarcely the course that ought to be pursued. And I think, on the last occasion that I called the attention of the right hon. gentleman to that fact, he stated that, while he quite approved of the suggestion made, he thought the time had scarcely arrived for it. I ask now whether the system is observed of letting the amount in bulk quantities to large contractors, or whether the system is pursued of allowing the delivery on different reserves or at given points, and so allowing the people of the country the facility of delivering them? There was a kind of pledge given that the system suggested would be adopted at an early day, and I would like to know whether that system is now being adopted or not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think that the hon. gentleman quite apprehended what I said on that occasion, because I did not at all wish to be understood to say that the contracts should be given out to large contractors, and that they should send their supplies to central points, and that the local transport should be used. I think that would be a mistake. We are obliged to economise, and it is quite clear that the present system of making contracts with parties who will deliver the articles at the place where they are wanted for consumption is an economical course. If, for instance, you were to make contracts to have supplies delivered at some of the principal points along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, you are to be at the mercy of the casual transport which you can get from those points over the whole of the prairie, and it would be found greatly to increase the expense. Of course it would be a good thing for the people in the vicinity of the various points if they could get their ponies and their little carts employed, but it is not in the interests of economy and certainly not of delivery. When you get large quantities—and our contracts are for large quantities—it is well that you should deal with large firms who can give substantial security, and whose names without security are sufficient of themselves. It is much more economical to get them to deliver the articles at the different reserves or at the points where they are required.

Mr. MITCHELL. I perfectly understood what the right hon. gentleman said. He may have misunderstood the proposition which I put forward on the several occasions to which I referred, which was exactly what I have stated now, and I understood the hon. gentleman approved of the suggestion, but said that the time had not arrived and the country was not sufficiently advanced to carry it out. As he says I misunderstood him, I am bound to accept his explanation, and that compels me to call attention to the reasons which justify the suggestion I have made. I thought, when quantities of flour, of bacon, of fresh beef, of clothing, of boots and shoes, and all that kind of thing are required, the advertisements should not be in bulk. For instance, it puts the clothier out of the market. He cannot go in and tender for flour or bacon or fresh beef and that kind of thing. One tender should be for fresh beef, another tender should be for clothing, another for boots and shoes, another for bacon, and so on for the different articles. This would give the advantage to our own people, and would enable the merchant in Ottawa, or in Toronto, or Montreal, or Quebec, if a tender for clothing is wanted, to tender for that clothing, and the goods may be delivered along the line at three or four central points. The same thing would apply to flour and to the other articles I have named, and the advantage of it, as the hon. gentleman admits, is that it would give the advantage of employment to our own people instead of letting it go into the hands of two or three large firms in that country. We know what immense sums have been paid to I. G. Baker & Co. and the Hudson's Bay Co. They have received large contracts each year. They have, no doubt, performed their work well. I have nothing to say to that, but we ought to give our own people an opportunity of, at all events, doing a portion of that work in the western country which they ought to do, that is the transport portion of it ; and I think we ought to give our own manufacturers in Canada the right to deliver these goods at given points, without allowing them to go through the hands of middle men, such as the Hudson's Bay Co. and I. G. Baker & Co. I have made this point before, I have made it in three successive years, and I understood the First Minister to approve of it. He says I misunderstood him. I do not think I did. But now I do not want to misunderstand him. He says the present system is an economical one. No doubt it is one that gives less trouble to the officials of the Department, but I have yet to learn that the country is made for the officials. I think the officials are made for the House and the country. If it gives them the greater trouble, that is what they are paid for, and, if this will give an opportunity to our people to obtain some return for the great outlay they have made in that country, the principle ought to be adopted, if it is a right and fair one. So far from increasing the expense, I believe it would decrease the expense though, I admit, it would not pay such large profit into the hands of the large operators. I do not believe there would be any difficulty in getting perfectly responsible people in this country to do the business, and I do not see why two mammoth corporations in that country should have the monopoly of that work and make the whole people of that country subservient to their interests and under their control. I think these points are well taken, and I believe that the people of the country will approve of this proposition, which I think deserves more consideration than the Department seems to have given it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think we are at cross purposes. I thought the hon. gentleman was speaking merely of transport, —

Mr. MITCHELL. No, I meant the whole.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, — but he went on further, and stated that contracts could not be given for any particular article, that, for instance, a man could not make a tender for cloth or saddlery or anything else, but must tender for the whole. That is a mistake. Any party can tender for any individual article mentioned in the advertisement. That is a mistake of the hon. gentleman. No doubt that was the mode in earlier days, but now the tenders are received for any given article in the advertisement. As to the question of transport, the Government cannot be going round making contracts at every station where there is a delivery of supplies. It would be an interminable business, and not only troublesome but very insecure. The contractors who agree to deliver flour, or pork, or anything else at any particular place furnish the transport. It makes no difference whether the Government or the contractor pays the carter to take the goods to the point where they are to be delivered. The market price is paid just the same for the carriage of these goods. They do not lose it at all. It would be really a trouble and an insecurity if at every station from Port Arthur to Calgary where they may be delivered, there must be a separate contract, first for the Government themselves, and, second, at every station for the transport of the goods to the reserve which is nearest that station.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do I understand the right hon. gentleman to say that there is a separate contract given? For instance, a separate contract for clothing, or for boots and shoes, and a separate contract for agricultural implements? That separate tenders are received for these leading articles.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then thus far the principle I have advocated has been adopted.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. That portion of what I have been advocating for three or four years has been adopted. On the question of transport, of course, there may be a difference of opinion. I want to see the people of our own country get the preference in availing themselves of these contracts, so far as they are accepted, for this reason: A man in dry goods may get a contract, a clothier may get a contract, and he has to deliver it on the different reserves. Now, I contend that the effect of its being required to deliver it on the different reserves, still throws the contract into the hands of other large dealers who have monopolised it for years, and it places the manufacturer and the small dealers at the mercy of those middle men. I can see no great difficulty in having three or four leading stations along the line at which goods might be delivered. Of course, if the Department refused to avail themselves of that suggestion, I shall still feel that I have done my duty.

Mr. MITCHELL.

Mr. WATSON. I, as well as my hon. friend, have brought this matter to the attention of the Government on previous occasions. My attention was first called to it by some small traders in the city of Ottawa. They claimed to be able to furnish goods much cheaper to the Government than is done to-day, if they could deliver them at some important station along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have been told that certain traders could carry these goods as cheap, if not cheaper, than they are carried to-day, and there would be a great deal more competition for the trade if the merchants had simply to deliver their goods to any station. But a person taking a contract for goods to be delivered at a certain reserve, suppose the contract amounts to a couple of thousand dollars, it does not pay him to go to the far west and secure freighters to carry the goods to the reserve. I think the system shuts out all the smaller dealers, and the goods furnished to the Indians to-day are nearly all furnished by large corporations who, practically speaking, have a monopoly of this business. While I am on my feet I would like to ask the Minister if there has been any application on the part of Indians or half-breeds who withdrew from the treaty to go back to the treaty again?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I believe there has been.

Mr. WATSON. In what district?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I could not tell. I know there are half-breeds who are considered as Indians. They lived with their tribes for years, and when they heard there was a chance of getting scrip, they immediately declared they were not Indians and became half-breeds. They got the scrip, and now they are going back to the Indians again.

Mr. WATSON. I am informed that even the Indian agents have advised these Indians that unless they went out of the treaty before the 1st May, 1886, and took their scrip, they would be shut off from any chance of ever getting scrip when they did go out of the treaty.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They were either Indians or they were not.

Mr. WATSON. They were led to believe that the treaty would be cancelled in a short time, and unless they went out of the treaty at that particular date they would not be entitled to scrip.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A treaty cannot be cancelled.

Mr. WATSON. I have been informed that an Indian agent or an instructor of Indians around Lake Manitoba, informed them that they would not receive the scrip unless they withdrew at that particular time. I would also mention that this was done for a special purpose. I am informed that quite a number of those Indians are now asking to be reinstated on the reserve and to receive the treaty. I also desire to inform the Minister that there is no protection to the Indians on the shores of Lake Manitoba from receiving liquor. I am informed that large quantities of liquor are taken up there every winter and traded off to the Indians for fish. I know for a fact that during the Local elections some 60 or 70 of these gentlemen who had gone out of the treaty, received a bounty and were placed on the voters' lists for the Local elections, and there was a most disgraceful scene took place on the reservations on polling day.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope the hon. gentleman did not countenance that.

Mr. WATSON. I did not countenance it. During the Local elections I was not there; but I am informed that large quantities of whiskey went there. I think there ought to be one or two mounted police placed in that district in order to protect those Indians from liquor being distributed amongst them.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to ask if the hon. gentleman could give us the names of the party who supplied canned beef to the Indians last year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No canned beef has ever been purchased by the Department for the Indians. After the outbreak, some canned beef was taken over from the Militia Department, and I suppose that is used up.

Mr. McMULLEN. My reason for asking the question is this: when I was in the North-West last year, I stopped at one of the stations where there were a few Indians. I noticed that they had canned beef, and that it came from Chicago. I want to know whether it was supplied by the Department or whether they had supplied it themselves?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Most likely the Indians bought it themselves.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to the item of $33,122 for farm instructors, what is really being done in the way of improving agriculture among the Indians by the farm instructors?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are farm instructors on all the important reserves. I think now we have got, on the whole, a very good body of men. At first when the system was established, there were some mistakes; men were appointed who did not turn out to be very efficient and they were rapidly removed. The present instructors have not been selected for high scientific farming, because that style of men would be useless, but they are rough and ready men, accustomed to work on a farm, and they have more than sufficient agricultural knowledge to be efficient instructors of the Indians. I believe they are very good men.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much land is under cultivation?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that will be found in the report of the Department.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Are any of those instructors working on the plan which the hon. gentleman first adopted, or are they all on reservations?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are on reserves now. It was found when the first instructors were outside of the reserve, they thought more of their own farms than of instructing the Indians. The instructors are now working on the reserves with the Indians.

Mr. TROW. Are any of those self-supporting or likely to be so in a short time? I have not heard anything of the products and results of these farms.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman will find all that fully stated in the report of the Indian Department, for everything is charged against the instructors, and credit given.

Mr. TROW. I find an amount in connection with annuity payments to Indians. I presume the Indians, particularly along the line of railway, and in fact throughout the North-West and Manitoba, with the exception of Peace River, are gathered on reserves, and there should be no difficulty in paying them their annuities without making provision for their having a general wake. Is the system followed of the Indians gathering together and having a jollification for several days, and thus consuming a large quantity of provisions?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is thinking of gatherings that are now almost of the past. Formerly, when the Indians were about to receive their provisions, they assembled in great meetings, first under the Hudson Bay Company and afterwards under the Government, and had their jollification and their sun dance. This has been by degrees altered, and at this moment on all the important reserves, if not on all the reserves, payments are made to the Indians there instead of allowing them to assemble at a central point.

Mr. WATSON. With respect to the item for Sioux, I wish to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that I mentioned last year that there is no sum placed in the estimates for schools. I again call attention to the fact that in Portage la Prairie some charitable women have established an Indian school, and I think they have memorialised the Government to give them some assistance to get teachers. They have been doing this by the contributions of citizens, and they have not only been teaching a day school but they have been keeping a kind of boarding school, taking Indian children and keeping them there all the time. I am glad to inform this House that the school has made wonderful progress since last year, and it is worthy of some encouragement at the hands of the Minister. There has been a lady teacher kept in that school for the last eighteen months, and the children have been given meals and encouraged to dress well and keep themselves clean, and the effect of the children going to school is being shown among the older members of the tribe. I say this is a matter well worthy the consideration of the Government, because these Indians I speak of never receive a dollar from the Dominion; they are self-sustaining in a sense, but they do not care to spend any money on educating their children. It is a matter well worthy of the consideration of the Government to assist those ladies who have been in the past endeavoring to educate the Indian children.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is an increase in the vote this year of $370. That is for the purpose of supplying a school among the Sioux. These are American Indians, who were driven to this country in consequence of the massacre of 1860. They are not treaty Indians, and they do not obtain supplies from the Government in any way, yet they are self-supporting. It is rather a caution to the Government that these Indians who have not received supplies, but have been treated as the Sioux have been treated, should be self-sustained.

Mr. WATSON. Is that amount to be expended?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is to provide a school building at Buffalo's Band.

Mr. WATSON. That is not the band at all. I hope the Minister will make a note of this point, and will see that this school, which is worthy of the consideration of the Government, will receive some assistance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give some explanation in regard to the item $125,953 for general expenses.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It arises from increases of salary, $19,997; for medical attendance, $3,400; printing and stationery, $1,017, and other amounts making altogether an increase of $33,539.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How is this increase of $19,000 required?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will read the memorandum furnished by the Department. The increase in this item provides for the salaries of the officers in the Territories who have entered the service since the estimates for the current year were prepared, and for whom consequently no estimates had before been made. The only exception to this is the item of $2,500 providing for new clerks in the Regina office, as those now employed there in training are sent to other places. A list of the names of those clerks and their salaries is submitted, together with a list of the employés in Manitoba and the Territories, and the salaries having increased since the 1st of July last, provision must be made for them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is simply saying that the Department wants $20,000 more for salaries, but how should that come about? The number of Indians is about the same, the work in connection with distributing annuities and such matters is less than heretofore, owing to the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and, as my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson) remarks, living is cheaper than it used to be, so that I fail to see that there is any reason at all for the increase of nearly fifty per cent. on the salaries paid. An increase of the salaries from $48,000 to well nigh $70,000, there being no apparent additional work thrown on these officers, certainly does seem to require more explanation than that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The explanation is, I am instructed, that it is found that a considerable number of additional agents were required. Where an agent was employed for a certain district, it was found necessary to have two or three to discharge all the duties. There was not sufficient assistance, so this amount was found to be necessary after the estimates previously prepared.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I understand that, in 1885, at the time of the outbreak, one of the great difficulties in dealing with the bands was just this: that there were not a sufficient number of persons in the position of officers to look after them. For instance, at Qu'Appelle there was only one man employed there—a very efficient man, it is true—but he had charge of fifteen reserves, and it was physically impossible for him to attend to all the duties of his position. I had personal experience of the work he had to do, and when any real trouble arose, so that when he had to move from one place to another, it was impossible for him to discharge the duties imposed on him. I understood at the time that a change was about to be made, by which a much greater number of officials should be employed, so that on every important reserve there should be some one residing there all the time, and if this is the cause of the increased number of officials, I think it is a wise and prudent step on the part of the Department. The expense, no doubt, is great, but I am satisfied that something of that kind is essential. I think the number of persons in charge of these reserves was not at all sufficient to meet the necessities of the case. Of course, when everything was quiet, and there was no trouble, it might be all right, but the moment any dissatisfaction or discontent arose it was physically impossible for the agent—at that particular place, at any rate—to discharge the duties which fell upon him.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I wish to ask a question with reference to one other subject, and then I shall be done as far as this item is concerned. I wish to ask the First Minister if he could tell how much it cost to bring down the chiefs who were brought down last summer to Ontario and the other Provinces? In asking that question I desire to say, in anticipation of the answer, that I consider, that even if the amount is somewhat large, it seems to me it was a happy thought on the part of the First Minister to bring them down. I do not know whether I voice the sentiments of all hon. gentlemen on this side, but I unhesitatingly say that is my own opinion, and I am pleased to say that in that matter, at any rate, I think the Government have acted with a good deal of forethought. We give the Indians schools and all that, but it seems to me there was in that visit an education given through the eye to these chiefs that could not be given in any other way, and when we remember—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You mean Crowfoot?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Yes, Crowfoot and the other Blackfeet, the Crees and the Bloods—the prominent men of those tribes. We know the influence they have among their own people, and I feel sure that this money was money well expended. I think four or five of them had an opportunity of being present when we unveiled the Brant Monument at Brantford, and I think it will not require a great deal of thought on the part of any hon. gentleman present to imagine what effect an event like that would have on these Indians of the North West, who came down to a Province like Ontario; and in the heart of one of the cities of Ontario, found a monument, which is not exceeded for its beauty anywhere, erected to one of their race. I think the effect must be good, and, therefore, I ask the question with regard to the expenditure in no captious spirit. I would like also to know if the Department have heard from their officers whether the reports that these men took back to their tribes had a beneficial effect, as I feel almost sure they would have.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say, in reply to the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), that it will be observed that on the whole this estimate for Manitoba and the North-West shows a net decrease of $7,589.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I may say, in answer to my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson), that the reports as to the effect of the visit of these chiefs are, as he may well anticipate, very pleasant. It is pleasant to know that Crowfoot, who is not only a great chief but a great man, a man of great ability and one who, under other circumstances, might perhaps be concerned in the government of a greater people than he is now—is, I believe, thoroughly convinced of the power of the whites; he is thoroughly convinced of the necessity of his being friendly with the whites and with the Government. I believe, too, that he is very grateful for the kindness which has been shown to him. The whole expense I am told—though it is merely an approximation, for I have not the accounts before me—of bringing down these Indians and letting them see Canada is about $2,000.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Can the hon. gentleman say whether anywhere in the North-West the farm instructors are utilised as Indian agents?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, the instructors do not act as agents.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Because I think where you have Indian instructors there is no reason why they should not sometimes act as agents on the reserves.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that would be rather starving the service. The agent has work to do and the instructor, if he does his duty, should be employed de die in diem in his own work. We can afford to pay for both men.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many reserves are there?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Between eighty and ninety.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Because that bears materially on the point raised by the hon. member (Mr. O'Brien) who spoke before him and who supplied an argument which the Government themselves did not supply. It may be a very good argument, but if eighty or ninety are the total number of reserves, that would not require a great number of additional officers to look after them, I should judge.

North-West Mounted Police.....$763,426

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As this force has now, I suppose, become a permanent regular force, I want to enquire whether the Minister has under his consideration any project for retaining the men for a somewhat longer period than was at first contemplated, or whether any allowances in the way of gratuity or pensions are likely to be made for those men who may remain, say 20 or 25 years.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am very glad the hon. gentleman has asked me that question. It is a question of a very great importance, and if I had all the information which was necessary I would most likely have come to Parliament this Session with a measure for a regulated scale of payment or pension to the Mounted Police force. It is a most invaluable force; I do not think there is a finer force in the world than the 1,000 men who form the Mounted Police. They are pretty well paid; but they have exceedingly hard work to perform. They are now patrolling night and day from the Red River to the foot of the Rocky Mountains, and there is now a requisition from British Columbia to send some men there, and I have a body of men ready to march night or day in case of disturbance among the Indians, of which the Local Government has some apprehension. The work is so hard that very many of the men are invalidated, young, healthy fellows going up apparently fit for their work break down; they have not the fibre to stand the work; and we find that after two or three years' service they are unwilling to remain. The consequence is that we have too many recruits, and it is of very great consequence that we should keep the men who have been well trained. A man who has been trained and has been in the force for five years is worth five men who have been there one year. The continual complaint of the commandant of the force is that he cannot keep his men. It is of great importance that these men should be thoroughly trained, not only in a military sense, but as a constabulary. I propose, if I live, to submit to Parliament, next Session, a scheme for inducing the men to remain in the service. There are a great many educated men, men of university education, who one would say are fitted for superior stations in life, and we are promoting the best of them as they rise to be non-commissioned officers by giving them commissions in the force. But we find it difficult to get men. This year about 300 men will leave the force of 1,000, a most serious depletion, because most of these are men who have served from three to five years, and who are perfect soldiers and perfectly understand their duties.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many horses does the force maintain?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are 850 horses for 1,000 men.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On a good many occasions in former years I called the attention of the First Minister to the expediency of having a reasonable number of light pieces of artillery provided for the use of this force. I would like to know how the force is provided for in that respect, and what arrangements are made in the way of training the men for artillery practice, if any.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The artillery force consists of four 9-pounders, six 7-pounders, and two mortars.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You have no gatling guns?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you employ Indian scouts at all?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are some Indians and some half-breeds. Ten Blood Indians were employed this year near the Rocky Mountains.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the number of men?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are 45 men in the force, including medical men. The officers consist of a commissioner and an assistant commissioner, eleven superintendents, 32 inspectors, one senior surgeon, six assistant surgeons and two veterinary surgeons.

Mr. WATSON. I notice a charge of 15½ tons of coal at $16 a ton, purchased at Medicine Hat. These figures are very exorbitant for coal in that region.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman may depend upon it that purchases are made as cheaply as possible. The supply may be wanted in a hurry, and it may be hard coal. At any rate, the supplies for the Mounted Police are all got by tender, and the Government accept the best article they can get at the lowest price.

Mr. WATSON. It is a mistake to furnish hard coal at $16 a ton when soft coal can be had so much cheaper. Soft coal is sold in Winnipeg at $7 a ton, and what is good enough for the city of Winnipeg ought to be good enough for the Mounted Police.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Surely the Government may be trusted for buying coal for their own corps.

Mr. WATSON. They are trusted with paying $16 a ton for coal to supply the police barracks in a coal region.

Unforeseen expenses, expenditure thereof to be under Order in Council, and a detailed statement to be laid before Parliament within the first fifteen days of the next session. $25,000

Mr. MILLS. I remind the hon. gentleman it is most desirable, with a view of bringing the matter before the Committee, that we should have the judgments given by the judges in the various contested elections in the various Provinces, reported to Parliament, as well as the ordinary report or the conclusion that is made for the Speaker. That is done in England. They are published in one volume, and are easily accessible to the members of the House and to the country. Under the present system, the judgments in the different Provinces are published in the law reports of those Provinces, and as we are administering all over the Dominion the same election law, it is desirable to see what opinion the courts express in the interpretation of the law in all the Provinces. In order that we may have that, it is necessary this House should take some steps with a view to the publication of those judgments. They might be published in the same form, the octavo form, as the Statutes; that would be only one volume for five years. The expense would not be very great. There is just one matter I would suggest to the First Minister and the Minister of Justice, and that is how far the evidence should be included along with the judgment. Of course, if the judge is not careful and does not fully state the reason for his judgment, it may be necessary to have the evidence; but if an opinion be expressed by the Minister of Justice on that subject, perhaps the judgments would be made sufficiently full to dispense with publication of the evidence. It would be very convenient if this were done, and I avail myself of this opportunity to bring it before the Committee.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman spoke to me about this the other day, and showed me the report of an election case in England. It is important on every ground that all the decisions connected with controverted elections should be collected, and I have no doubt the Minister of Justice will agree with me it is exceedingly expedient that all the reports of the various election trials should be grouped together, published from time to time in a volume and laid before Parliament. The Minister of Justice will consider the point raised by the hon. member, as to whether, not only the judgment, but the evidence should be published.

Commutation in lieu of remission of duties on articles imported for the use of the army and navy.....$2,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe that in the the Auditor General's report of 1882, quarterly allowances of $15.62 are made. What is the principle on which that is arranged?

Mr. BOWELL. They are the different officers belonging to the different corps of the Imperial army that are stationed in the different stations of the Dominion from Victoria to Halifax. The commutation is made upon the presumed duty that they pay upon the articles imported for the use of the mess. It is the sum arrived at some years ago, and it covers as the hon. gentleman is aware, the wines and such articles as are required in the daily mess. Formerly it cost $4,000 and $5,000. Gradually it has been diminished, until now, I think, it is $2,000.

Expenses of Government in North-West Territories..... $96,707 29

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not see any memorandum as to this.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There is an increase of $1,500 for the cost of elections, an increase of $200 for stationery, telegraphing, postage, &c, an increase of $8,000 for roads and bridges, an increase of $12,507.29 for schools, an increase of $300 for legal advice, which was formerly given to Judge Richardson. The sum now proposed is $500 instead of $300 as formerly. There is a decrease of $500 in the rental allowance to Lt.-Col. Hugh Richardson in lieu of the free residence he had formerly at Battleford. There is also a decrease in regard to the vaults which were built last year, and the amount for which is not required to be repeated. There is a decrease in the matter of the safes and indexes, and so on, in the registry office at Edmonton. There is an increase for the clerical assistance in connection with the North West Council amounting to $1,600. There is an increase of $500 for law books and subscriptions to newspapers for the North-West Council, and there is an increase of $500 for contingencies. I could give the hon. gentleman further details in regard to this as furnished by the Lieutenant Governor.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This expenditure which is thrown upon us now amounts to about $100,000. Has this Government in the North-West, as now existing, any revenue of its own at all, or is it expected that it will have any revenue of its own, or are we, as the wants of the country increase, to go on increasing this vote ad infinitum, because it may come to be a very formidable item in a few years?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There is a revenue, and a growing revenue from licenses and permits, and, as hereafter the Territories become Provinces, they will have the same sources of revenue as they have in Manitoba.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman assign to them—it might fairly, I think, be assigned to them—any portion of the revenue derived from the lands which the Government own, from timber limits and so on?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There is nothing of that kind.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask whether any steps have been taken—it always seemed to me that such steps should be taken—to keep any account of the expenditures made that a Province would make on its own behalf, so that, when the time comes to admit these Territories as Provinces into the Union, they would be in a position to state the amount to be allowed to them for their debt and their obligations. I should like to know whether there is any account kept of the moneys expended on roads and bridges, on court houses, on works of a character such as those that would be built on behalf of a Province, or on local railways.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There are full accounts kept. For instance, I can give every item with regard to education, the number of schools and everything of that kind. There is no difficulty about that. The accounts are kept as they are in any Province, and the statement could be made up at any time.

Expenses of Government in the District of Keewatin..$1,500

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is a bad spelling.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; it should be Keywaydin. That is a very pretty name, but Keewatin is as ugly as possible. That had better be amended.

Extra clerks, for preparation of returns ordered by Parliament..... $10,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there any real necessity for this extra vote?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The vote was taken to meet the possible expenditure of last Session and of the Session before, when we had rather a long Session. This vote is merely taken, but I do not suppose it can be all used up.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should think it could not. This vote crept in under exceptional circumstances, and I do not think it is much wanted, and it is rather a temptation to put the money in the way to be spent, if you take the vote. Last year, 1886—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will reduce this to $5,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think you may very well. The amount spent last year was only $1,376.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think $5,000 will be ample.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, I should think so.

Mr. WATSON. I desire to call attention to an item which has been dropped, for exploring the Hudson's Bay. I am informed that the Northern Light is doing nothing at present, and that the captain of that vessel is not engaged, and that for an expenditure of about $3,000 one of the geological engineers might make a trip, and might make some valuable explorations, and ascertain the state in which he finds the straits and the bay, and I think it would be well for the Government to put a vote in the Supplementary Estimates and make use of this steamer which is now idle. For an amount of $6,000 an engineer could make a trip of three months and gain valuable information.

Commercial agencies$10,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do the hon. gentlemen propose to do with this money?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is very desirable to have a certain amount for matters of that kind. A gentleman was sent to the West Indies and has just returned, and there is an agent in Australia making a report upon the prospects of establishing increased trade with Australia. There was an agent also sent to the Sandwich Islands.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that Colonel Walker Powell made a voyage to the Sandwich Islands. He is a very good officer. He is the Adjutant General I suppose?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should think he was a queer person to send to the Sandwich Islands to examine into the merits of commercial agencies.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Colonel Powell, besides being a very good Liberal, has been a merchant, and is a commercial man, and the Government took advantage of his going there to appoint him for this purpose.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have a good opinion of Colonel Powell as chief officer of the Militia Department, but I should say it was rather out of the way to assign him that particular duty.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He wanted to go there, and we employed him. He did good service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If you put it as a reward to a deserving and meritorious officer, that is one thing; if you put it on the head of commercial agencies, that is another. I find in the Public Accounts: "A. Spencer Jones, writing and publishing in newspapers of Jamaica, Ontario, and London, 100 columns of original letters and articles, setting forth the advantages of closer and more extended relations between Canada and Jamaica, at $4.50 per column—$450." I suppose an original article ought to be worth $4.50 if it is really original. Then I see writing 60 letters to members of Jamaica Legislature and other prominent persons on the same subject, at $1 per letter. Two trips to Ottawa to meet Sir John A. Macdonald, and Hon. Mr. Solomon, of Jamaica, $40." This may be of considerable service, but I do not think that either of these items are likely to produce a very great spread of commercial relations.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Jones is a Jamaican, and a very intelligent person. He has taken a very great interest in the matter, and has written a good many letters, both in Canada and Jamaica. His letters excited so much interest in Jamaica that two members of the Jamaica Government came to Canada in consequence of his letters, in order to see whether there could be any arrangement made with the island in the way of commercial affairs. So really he did some good service.

Mr. MILLS. Was he in favor of political union?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know that he wrote political union, but I know others did.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not.

Cost of organising Printing Bureau$2,500

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is under the Act of last Session, and is for general organisation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is it for? How do you mean to use it?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is in the Department of the Secretary of State. We will give that information on concurrence.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When matters of this kind are allowed to pass, I think the hon. gentleman had better bring the information down the next day.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That shall be furnished to-morrow.

Cost of plant required for Government Printing Office$107,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It strikes me this is going to be a very expensive hobby.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is getting under way. You have considerable outlay to start it, after that the saving will come in.

Intercolonial Railway $2,600,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why is this large increase required?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The amount of the estimate last year was $2,400,000, this year $2,600,000. The details of that sum as are follows:—locomotive material, $893,000; cars, repairs and running, $624,300; maintenance of way, $645,000; stations, &c., $325,000; general charges, $165,300.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is an increase of 10 per cent. on the whole. Is that caused by supposed increased business, or what?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is caused by increased business.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the deficit expected for the year?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope there will be no deficit for this year. There will be a considerable deficit owing to the extreme difficulty of working the road.

Eastern Extension Railway$90,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In all these sums there are considerable increases.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is an increase of $15,000 on this, it is for renewals.

Canals$471,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are considerable increases here.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The amount varies from year to year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The deficiencies appear to be getting always larger. What were the receipts for the current year?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We hope they will be fully as good this year as last.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That will be a deficit of how much?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have not the information at present, but I will furnish it to the hon. gentleman.

Salaries and contingencies of Canal Officers $37,236

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice in the report of the Auditor General that there are a large number of people set down here as salaried officers, who receive large sums of money for their services. Here is one man named Morley who is paid for 365 days work at $3 a day. Here is another man, J. W. Burke, employed for 365 days at $3.50 per day—every day in the year—for which he was paid $1,277.50. Here is R. C. Douglas who is paid for 365 days at $5 a day. I think we should have some explanation why these men are paid these large sums.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman say what information he wants?

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to know what they are doing and how they are employed every day at these large sums, for Sundays as well as other days. I simply want to know if they are working every day and how they are paid.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can only say with reference to those officers that they are professional men and their salaries are not at all inordinate. I take the case of Mr. Douglas. Anybody who has read his reports knows that he is probably second only to Mr. Page in the Department. His salary is here stated to be $5 a day, and suppose it does include Sundays. It amounts to $1,825 for the year, for a man of the highest professional attainment, who is charged with very important work in connection with an important branch of the service. I say that the salary he is paid is one as to which nothing can be found fault with, considering the work he does, and I know personally what that work is from having been Minister of that Department. I see gentlemen paid here at the rate of $2.50 per day, able accountants, painstaking and laborious officers, and I do not think there is anything extravagant in those figures, as these gentlemen are either professional accountants or professional men in other capacities.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Are they engaged on Sundays, or do they work on Sundays?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It makes a portion of the year's salary.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But the hon. gentleman might take a less offensive way of making the charge.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). They have to eat on Sundays.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And support their families, and put something in the poor box.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to know simply —

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman will tell me what he wants to know, I will give the information. I think I have satisfied him that the salaries, instead of being excessive, are extremely low. I say that if ever I have any fault to find with my successor in that Department, it is as to his extra economy of the public money—his unwillingness to make the smallest addition to the salary of any officer in the Department. I can only say that I have exhausted all my powers of persuasion to do what I thought was only justice, to get him to make a slight increase in the salaries of some of those officers, whom I left in the Department and in whose success I naturally felt interested.

Mr. McMULLEN. I simply want to know how it is these men are engaged—whether by the month or the day, what they are doing, and how they are engaged?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has the information under his hand. It tells him they are employed by the day.

Mr. McMULLEN. No, it does not.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The report states 365 days at so much per day.

Mr. McMULLEN. What are they doing? Here is F. J. Lynch, who is getting $200 a month. What is he doing?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He is an engineer of high attainments, a man of great ability, employed by the Railway Department and engaged in professional work all the time.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is he permanently employed at $200 a month?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, and a very reasonable salary it is.

Mr. McMULLEN. He must be a very clever man to get that amount continuously, for I know that engineers do not usually get that sum. I know that some men of great ability and extended experience might possibly get that salary—

Mr. BAKER. Yes, $400 a month.

Mr. McMULLEN. In some cases, but I know engineers who do not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You do not know Mr. Lynch.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can assure the hon. gentleman, and I speak from personal knowledge, that there is not a professional man engaged in the Railway Department, from the highest to the lowest, who is not receiving a very much smaller salary than gentlemen of the same attainments and abilities are receiving from private companies.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then, undoubtedly, salaries must have increased of recent years, because I know that on a railway with which I was connected, we paid an eminent man, who is now chief engineer of the city of Toronto, Mr. Sproat, $1,800 a year, or $150 a month.

Mr. BAKER. He should have had more professional pride than to take it.

Mr. SHANLY. Might I ask the hon. gentleman what railway that was?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Cheap and nasty.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Georgian Bay and Wellington.

Mr. SHANLY. What length of line?

Mr. McMULLEN. The branch he was connected with was 30 miles long,

Mr. SHANLY. I think $150 a month is not an extraordinary salary anywhere, but I think for a road 30 miles long it is enough. Mr. Lynch's duties are very different from building a road 30 miles long. He is a man of high attainments and very moderately paid at this salary.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am simply stating the fact, and the road to which I refer was not too small for the hon. gentleman to get a little salary out of the building of it.

Mr. SHANLY. What did the hon. gentleman say?

Mr. McMULLEN. You professed to belittle the undertaking because it was only 30 miles long.

Mr. SHANLY. I did not belittle the undertaking, but I say if you build a road 30 miles long, you do not require to engage an engineer of very high character, or at a very high salary. It is not at all necessary to do so. Mr. Sproat is not paid at that rate in the city of Toronto, because he has much larger duties than he would have upon a road 30 miles long.

Mr. McMULLEN. Perhaps this discussion may be a little away from the point, but I say that you require in some places on roads 10 miles long an engineer of the same capacity as you would for 100 miles in others. It all depends on the character of the work to be done.

Telegraph lines, British Columbia.....$6,500

Mr. BAKER. Why is there any expenditure for this service now, since all the telegraph lines have been transferred to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is a portion that has not been transferred in the upper country from Caribou downwards, and there is also a small line at the mouth of the Fraser River.

Agent and contingencies, British Columbia.....$4,000

Mr. BAKER. I would like to ask when this is likely to be discontinued.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is the agent at present?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Trutch has been the agent. His general service expires on the 1st of July, but I understand that the Department of Railways desires, for special reasons connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway construction on the Pacific coast, to have his services until the first of September next.

Mr. EDGAR. Is not Mr. Trutch one of the officials paid by the Canadian Government at a certain sum?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is suspended during this term, so that he is in receipt of a comparatively small sum beyond what he would have received at any rate.

Excise..... $339,485

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are there any special increases here ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The increase of $5,452 in the salaries of officers and inspectors is principally made up of statutory increases, and there is an increase of four officers altogether throughout the whole Dominion. The increase of $2,600 for increased pay of officers at large distilleries and factories, is owing to the fact that the work in the distilleries, under the new system, will require the officers to be at work from seven in the morning until six or seven in the afternoon, instead of from nine or ten until four, as in the case of ordinary offices. The increase of $3,000 in the preventive service, is represented by the reports of the commissioner as necessary, owing to the restrictions imposed throughout the country, partly on account of the enforcement of the Scott Act, which has produced a tendency to illicit distilling. The increase of $3,000 to enable the Department to purchase wood-naphtha and similar articles for issue to bonded manufacturers, is really not an increase, because it is repaid by the manufacturers. The only reason we ask for the increase, is that we purchase the articles in Europe rather than in the United States, and, consequently, require to lay in a larger stock.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would ask the hon. gentlemen opposite if they will take short notice to move that Monday be Government day ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Very well.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) Does the hon. gentleman propose on Monday to take up Mr. Jamieson's Bill, and put it on the orders of the day as suggested.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is en délibéré. There are two measures, the first on Public Bills and Orders which, with the assistance of the hon. gentlemen opposite, I would like to move up and make Government Bills, if necessary. One is Mr. McCarthy's Bill to enable companies to borrow on debenture stock, and the second Bill is one of a similar nature in the hands of Mr. Hall, the hon. member for Sherbrooke. I am told they are really valuable in a commercial point of view. In answer, I should ask the House to allow them to be put on the Government papers.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) My attention was called by one of the police magistrates of the county to the decision of Mr. Justice O'Connor, in which he denies the right of a magistrate of a county to take any notice of the violations of the Canada Temperance Act in the towns or villages that are without police magistrates, and insists, before the Act can be enforced, that it is necessary appointments should be made for those towns. This, in a great measure, renders the Act nugatory. My attention being called to the subject, I was asked to call the attention of the Government to it, that they might take such measures as might be necessary to bring the Act into operation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No doubt the Minister of Justice will take the matter into his consideration. I never heard of it before. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What business tomorrow ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Bills first and then Estimates. It is understood that we sit from one to six.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 2 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 18th June, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at one o'clock.

PRAYERS.

RULES RESPECTING PRIVATE BILLS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Special Committee appointed by the House, in accordance with the report of the Railway Committee, to assist Mr. Speaker in revising the rules respecting Private Bills, in so far as they relate to the incorporation of, and the amendments of Acts incorporating railway companies, have reported, and the report, with the rules and model bill, has been published. The Special Committee, as well as the Railway Committee, were unanimous, and the report is in accordance with the wishes of the Railway Committee. It is recommended that there be a model Bill composed of all the clauses to be found in every Bill, that passes the Railway Committee, and those will be the standing clauses of the Bill. It will save a great deal of trouble to the members of the committee, and will make uniform the legislation on railways. The petitioners will fill up blanks, giving the names of the proposed incorporators, the capital that will be required, the time and places where meetings of the shareholders will take place, the number of shares necessary to qualify a director, the amount of bonds to be issued per mile, which depends on the length and cost of the railway, the time to be given for beginning the railway, and the time within which it must be completed. Then, we have recommended these three rules, which I will read :

" All Private Bills for Acts of incorporation of, or in amendment of Acts incorporating railway companies, shall be drawn in accordance with the model Bill adopted by the House on June, 1887, copies of which can be obtained from the Clerk of the House; the provisions contained in any Bill which are not in accord with the model Bill, shall be inserted between brackets, and when revised by the proper officer shall be so printed "—

So that the officer of the Railway Committee will always have to examine Bills before they are laid before the committee, and certify that they are in accordance with the rules.—

" Bills which are not in accordance with this Rule shall be returned to the promoters to be re-cast before being revised and printed; and any sections of existing Acts which are proposed to be amended shall be re-printed in full with the amendments inserted in their proper places and between brackets; "—

We have found that some promoters of Bills come down with amendments to a long clause of the Railway Act, such as leaving out one word, so that one cannot tell what the provisions of the Act are unless he has it before him. Therefore, we provide that both the clause that is wanted and the clause that is proposed to be amended must be printed in full.—

" and any exceptional provisions that it may be proposed to insert in any Bill shall be printed in the notice of application for the same."

We find also that promoters of Bills, after having given general notice, sometimes ask for special powers, which are refused, and this causes disappointment to them and delays their undertaking; but we must look to the interest of the public before the interest of private individuals; and so we propose as the second rule :

" No Bill for the incorporation of a railway company, or for changing the route of any railway company already incorporated, shall be considered by the Railway Committee until there has been filed with the committee, at least one week before the consideration of the Bill, a map or plan, upon a scale of not less than half an inch to the mile, showing the location upon which it is intended to construct the proposed work, and showing, also, the lines of existing or authorised works of a similar character within, or in any way affecting the district, or any part thereof, which the proposed work is intended to serve; such map or plan to be signed by the engineer or other party making the same; "—

We find frequently that Bills are asked for lines which interfere with some other line, or which occupy the same ground, and so we propose to require promoters of a Bill to lay before us a plan showing the proposed location of their line, and the direction of the line must be settled before the Bill comes before the committee.—

“and an exhibit showing the total amount of capital proposed to be raised for the purposes of the undertaking, and the manner in which it is proposed to raise the same, whether by ordinary shares, bonds, debentures, or other securities, and the amount of each, respectively.”

By this means we expect to prevent bogus companies being incorporated—companies that do not intend to build the railway they are promoting, but who wish to have a charter which they may sell afterwards. This will be prevented if we require them to show us what are their means and what are the prospects of building the railway. In that way I think we shall be rendering a service both to the country and to the committee and this House. The last rule is this :

“Before any Private Bill is considered by the committee to which it may be referred, a report shall first be submitted to the committee by the examiner, stating that he has examined the same, and has noted, opposite each section, any variations from the provisions contained in the model Bill, and, to insure uniformity, the examiner shall revise and certify every Private Bill passed by the committees, and the reports thereon, before they are presented to the House.”

Therefore, I move, seconded by Mr. Edgar, that the report of the committee be adopted, and that the said resolutions be made Standing Orders of this House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would suggest that although that is a very desirable object and of great importance, it ought to be in the hands of hon. members before this passes. It has not been distributed as yet.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is printed in the Votes and Proceedings.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have not had time to read it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Let it be left as a notice for Monday.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But there is another matter I wanted to call attention to. It has been suggested more than once in this House, and I believe it would be a great improvement in our practice, if, in the case of these railway charters, a substantial deposit, in proportion to the magnitude of the work, were required to be made before any party was permitted to obtain a charter from this House. The practice of obtaining bogus charters, to which the hon. gentleman alluded, has been of too frequent occurrence; and although the suggestions made by the hon. gentleman are useful and valuable, I doubt whether they would completely check that practice, unless before any party gets a charter from this House, substantial deposits are insisted upon and rules are laid down which will involve forfeiture if the work is not proceeded with. This is done, if I am not mistaken, more or less in other countries, and in this country it will be very valuable.

Mr. EDGAR. It is high time that something of this kind should be done, because, during this Session, the work that came before the Railway Committee was so heavy, that, unless it had been for the very assiduous and almost daily attendance by the members of that committee, assisted by their indefatigable chairman, we could not possibly have got through the work; and the great cause of our labor was that each charter was brought in with clauses drawn up at haphazard, and we had to try and bring uniformity out of that chaos. By proposing a model Bill, the clauses of which would apply to all, that portion of the work of the committee would be greatly facilitated. Another thing which occupied a great deal of time, was that there is no requirement that any plan whatsoever should be brought in by the promoters, to commit themselves to the location of a railway, and they would ask power to wander all over the Provinces with their railway charter. Their notices are of a most general character, and we would have to decide, on almost every Bill, as to where the termini of the road should be, and what part of the country it should run through. That would be entirely unnecessary if the promoters had made up their minds, in a business-like way, before they came to Parliament. It occurred to some of us, before the end of the committee, that this sort of thing was undesirable. I suppose we may, as long as the Dominion has control of nearly the whole of the railways under the Act of 1883, expect a great deal of railway legislation every Session, and it will be impossible to face it another Session until we have such rules. The rules, of course, are not nearly as stringent as they are in England, but it would not do for us, in this country, to be as strict as they are, in any particular.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would move the adjournment of the debate until Monday next and make it the First Order.

Mr. EDGAR. While it is compulsory that the Bill should be submitted in that form, it is not compulsory that the committee should pass it in that form.

Mr. McCARTHY. Certainly not, but if this is to be the model Bill, we should see that it is the best of the kind.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved :

That, on Monday, Government measures and orders have precedence after Routine and Private Bills, and that Orders 31 and 32 be transferred to Government Orders.

I mentioned this last night, and I am only moving with the consent of hon. gentlemen opposite. If Monday is given to the Government, they will press their measures with all due zeal. I mentioned last night that the two first orders on Public Bills and Orders are of a very great commercial importance, the first (No. 31) is an Act to amend the Companies Act, as amended by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. Its main object is to enable the companies to borrow on debentures of stock as well as on other debentures. The other is an Act to empower the employes of incorporated companies to establish pension funds societies. I hope my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, will second the motion.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman has given me a title to which I am not entitled. The hon. gentleman is enough of a parliamentarian to know it is not safe always to trust to newspaper articles. Speaking for my friends, however, I may say there is no objection to these measures, and I suppose the Government have nothing new to introduce at this period.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have exhausted our repertory except that we will ask some very modest votes in aid of railways.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does “very modest” mean?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It means what it says. There is not millions in it.

Motion agreed to.

LAND SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS—N. W. T.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolutions:—

(1.) That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant to the "Alberta and Athabasca Railway Company," Dominion lands to an extent not exceeding six thousand four hundred acres for each mile of the company's railway from some point on the Bow River or the Canadian Pacific Railway, at or between Calgary and Crowfoot Creek, to a point on the Athabasca River, crossing the North Saskatchewan near to the town plot of Edmonton, a distance of 300 miles.

(2.) That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant to the "Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway and Steamboat Company," Dominion lands to an extent not exceeding six thousand four hundred acres for each mile of the company's railway from the northern termination of the portion of that railway already completed to a point at or near where the 52nd degree of latitude crosses the South Saskatchewan, a distance of about 130 miles, and from thence to the elbow of the North Saskatchewan, a distance of about twenty-five miles, with a branch to Prince Albert, a distance of about eighty-five miles, and also a branch to Battleford, a distance of about eighty-five miles, making a total of about 325 miles.

(3.) That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant to the "Medicine Hat Railway and Coal Company," Dominion lands to an extent not exceeding six thousand four hundred acres for each mile of the company's railway from Medicine Hat Station, on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to the Medicine Hat Coal Mines, on the south bank of the Saskatchewan, a distance of about eight miles, to be selected out of such lands as are at the disposal of the Government in the proximity of the line of the company's railway.

(4.) That it is expedient to provide that the said grants shall be free grants, subject only to the payment by the grantees respectively, of the cost of the survey of the lands, and incidental expenses, at the rate of ten cents per acre in cash on the issue of the patents therefor.

He said: If the House is willing, I would like to go into committee on these resolutions now. I laid on the Table last night the papers connected with these proposed grants so that hon. gentlemen will have an opportunity of seeing the grounds on which they are to be made. There are only three; one is for the construction of a railway from a point near Calgary to Edmonton. Hon. gentlemen will admit it is of great importance to get a line between these points as soon as possible. And we are assured that the gentlemen who have this enterprise in hand, are actively engaged now in floating it, and that we are likely to have the construction without delay. The next is the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway and Steamboat Company, who propose to continue their road from its present point to Saskatoon on the Saskatchewan or to some point near that, with branches to Prince Albert and Battleford. The third is for a short line which has been petitioned for from all parts of the North-West, from Medicine Hat, from Regina, from Moosejaw, from nearly all the points in the North-West. It is practically to assist in the development of important coal interests near Medicine Hat. These are the only three grants which are proposed at this time, and, with the consent of the House, I move that the House go into committee upon them.

Mr. EDGAR. I have gone hastily through the papers which were brought down yesterday by the hon. the Minister of the Interior to explain the reason for these grants, and I find that only in one case, that of the Alberta and Athabasca Railway Company, has the Order in Council been brought down. In the Medicine Hat case there are a lot of petitions but there is nothing on earth to show that an Order in Council has been passed, and, worse than that, among the Qu'Appelle papers which are brought down there appears to be the wrong file, because there is an Order in Council referring to the former grant, with the conditions of which they had not complied, and asking that they should be relieved slightly from the conditions, but the application brought down is not for a grant of 6,400 acres a mile, but for a grant part in money and part in land. At least, that is one of the petitions. The other is for an annual guarantee of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on, I think, \$16,000 a mile. These are not the papers or the Order in Council upon which this grant is proposed.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman is quite right in regard to the application for the Regina, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company, asking for a guarantee of bonds on the basis of the land grant proposed to be given; but the Government did not see its way open to adopt a new policy in regard to the North-West, which might result in serious consequences, and that was not adopted. The reason why an Order in Council was not brought down is that an Order in Council was not passed, and the final conclusion was only arrived at the day before yesterday in the hurry of work; but it seems to me that Parliament may grant the lands if it so chooses without a previous Order in Council. The provisions as to the conditions are the same as those which have been embodied in other Acts heretofore, and in the Bill which I will introduce we will take power to give the land in townships instead of in sections if the Government so desire, but the terms of the charter granted by Parliament limit the time for construction, and no grant can be made in the case of the Long Lake Railway until 50 miles are completed.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this Long Lake Railway to be of the ordinary gauge of 4 feet 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ inches?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On resolution 1,

Mr. EDGAR. As the hon. Minister proposes to make these grants in townships, how is he going to get rid of the school land reserve and the Hudson's Bay reserve? Is he going to do it in the same way as last year?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes, the Bill proposes to get rid of these reserves and also of the trails for the settlers.

Mr. EDGAR. I see that the Act of last Session, which was brought in to get over that difficulty, required that such an exchange of lands had to be assented to by the Hudson's Bay Company. Does not that make the grant rather uncertain and practically useless?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). If the hon. gentleman will let the resolutions go through and discuss that point on the clause in the Bill I think it would be more convenient.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has this Alberta and Athabasca Railway Company done any work at all up to the present time, or is it a new company?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That company has done no work, except in regard to the ordinary exploration of the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have had a great deal of trouble in other cases by giving these lands to companies which turned out to have no means whatever of going on with the work except what they derived from selling the charter and the land grant. Before we give 2,000,000 acres—for that is practically the amount—to this company, I think we should be careful, and I desire to ask the Government what security they have taken that this work will be bond fide proceeded with in the event of this grant being made to the company.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). They will get no lands at all until fifty miles are built, and I think they have to be constituted within twelve months. That is pretty good security that they will go on with their line.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is, if the gentlemen stick to their bargain, but next year, if there should be any inconvenience in getting the money out of other pockets, the probability is that the time will be extended and extended again, if possible, and I really do think, having in view the transactions which are already well known to the House in connection with these lines of railway, some substantial deposit should be insisted upon to ensure that these men are really honestly intending to go on with the railway. I would not be disposed to insist on an unreasonable deposit, but there should be such a deposit as would enable the Government to inflict some penalty if these people practically lock up this land, and this route for a considerable term without doing anything in return.

On resolution 2,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the position of this Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway and Steamboat Company; is it also a railway which has done no work?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell.) No, there are about twenty-five miles built.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who are the parties concerned in this company?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell.) Mr. Pugsley was the chief promoter of the railway. He is still in it, and Mr. Fuller, of Hamilton, is still in it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this the company in which Mr. Maynard is interested?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell.) I think so. I would not like to say.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I repeat the caution which I gave with respect to the other one, that, although it differs materially from the Alberta and Athabasca Railway Company, I really think that where millions of acres of the public domain are parted with, parties should be compelled to make some deposit, or do some work. Here the extent of twenty miles of railway, which the hon. gentleman states is completed, is, of course, a reasonable guarantee.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) I think these appropriations, and the immense amount of legislation proposed during the past two Sessions, shows the propriety of not continuing the system of reincorporation. The hon. gentleman proposes here to make an appropriation to certain railway corporations. Those companies may never undertake the work, and this legislation may be to no purpose. If we had a Bill going through Parliament, proposing to grant this aid to any railway company that would undertake the construction of either of these lines, and if it provided, as I proposed to provide at one time, that when parties deposit their plans with the Minister of Railways, or the Minister of the Interior, and deposit a certain amount as a guarantee of good faith, they would be entitled to incorporation as a matter of course, and they would receive this grant. A great deal of time would be saved in Parliament, and a check would be given to this business of charter-selling. I do not think there is anything more discreditable than the system of a company obtaining charters here, and then going to New York, London, or elsewhere, with a view to selling them at a profit. Now, that is discreditable to this Legislature and to this country, because it is a thing that cannot be done without the connivance of Parliament. Wherever Parliament grants charters in this way, it is actually conniving at proceedings of this sort. Certainly if there are capitalists ready to undertake the construction of these lines of railway, and they pay something to these charter-holders for the privilege of doing so, they will be all the more ready to undertake the work if no such burden was imposed on them. It seems to me that it is the duty of the Government to submit to Parliament a well-considered plan of free incorporation. They can decide where these railroads can be built that are entitled to aid, and whether the road is built or not, should depend upon the profits that the party sees are likely to be derived. It would leave them to be undertaken the same as any other commercial enterprise. The hon. gentleman who has no doubt, given some attention to this question, knows what a revolution the adoption of this plan has worked in railway incorporation on the other side, and how completely the Legislatures have been relieved from all pressure from lobby men and others, and how the credit of the Legislatures has been preserved by this change in their public policy. Now, I say that we are getting very much into a condition of things such as prevailed in some of the American Legislatures before the change in their policy took place. We know that many parties are expecting to profit by obtaining charters of this kind. Men without capital, men without any resources, without any money to invest in railway enterprises, come here and obtain charters, and stand in the way of those who have money to invest, by the possession of those charters. I do not think there is any subject to which hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches could turn their attention to more advantage to the people of this country, than this subject of free railway incorporation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. EDGAR. I think before the House is asked to make a grant of 6,400 acres per mile, they ought to know that the company expects to be able to construct the railway with that assistance. Surely that is a self-evident proposition. Well, from all I can see in these papers that have been brought down, the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company do not even suggest that they can construct the railway with land grant alone. On the contrary, you cannot help inferring from the papers that they do not think themselves able to do it, because, in one section, they ask for $3,000 in cash and 3,400 acres per mile, and they say that, if they get that, they can go on. Then a little further on they seem to have had another scheme in their mind, because they ask a guarantee from the Government of 3½ per cent. on a bond issue of $15,000 per mile, for a period of 20 years; and they think then that they can build the railway if they get that. Now, in these papers, there is no application to the Government, that I can find, for the 6,400 acres per mile merely, much less is there any statement or allegation on the part of the railway company that if they do get that they can build the road. Well, why should we give a grant and tie up a lot of land in that country in favor of that company, unless they say that it affords them a reasonable basis of going on and constructing the railway? There is another course proposed. I see, in a letter from another railway company altogether from the South Saskatchewan Valley Company, asking, in a letter to the Minister of the 6th of June, 1887, that the land grant of 6,400 acres which has been promised to them, and not to the Long Lake Company, should be given to the Long Lake Company, because they are going on. Now, the Long Lake Company does not seem to have been a party at all to the application of this grant.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell.) The question raised by the hon. member for Bothwell is, of course, a very large and important one, and no doubt deserves great consideration. But just at this moment, Parliament having chartered these railway companies, I do not think it would be worth while detaining the House to discuss that at this time. Then as to the general question raised by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), I wish to point out that there is no land locked up in any way whatever. All the lands these companies can get for constructing a railway are such as are available by the Government; but, in the meantime, all this land is open for homesteading and for sale, if the Government choose to sell it. It is quite in the hands of the Government, and is no more locked up than if these resolutions had not passed at all. The only thing is that as soon as the company build 50 miles they will be entitled to a grant of such lands as are at that time unappropriated, in payment of the subsidy; if they do not build 50 miles they get nothing. Of course, it is for Parliament, from year to year, to determine whether they will extend the time, and whether the company have shown such good faith as to justify an extension. We have often done the very same thing. People come here from year to year to get their railway charters extended, and it is scarcely within my recollection that an extension has been refused them. The only case in which it was refused was in the case of the railway at which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) evidently hinted, and in that case it was extended only up to a certain date, and then to lapse unless certain things were done. Those things were not done and the charter lapsed.

Mr. CHARLTON. With respect to the proposed grant to the Medicine Hat Railway and Coal Company, I may say that this is a short line of railway, a mere spur to a coal mine, and to be built for the express purpose of making the coal mine more valuable.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). For the purpose of developing and giving the people cheaper coal.

Mr. CHARLTON. It might be questioned whether that is a work of public utility in a sense to justify the Government in making a large appropriation to a mining company for the purpose of making their property valuable.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The property is only made valuable by its development as a means of increasing the supply of coal to settlers all through the North-West, and the competition created in that way will be the means of giving them cheaper coal. We granted, a year or two ago, a subsidy to another railway and coal company in the same way, and great advantage has resulted from it. This particular grant is petitioned for by people in all parts of the North-West. Perhaps no grant to a railway in the North-West seems to be so earnestly desired by the people of the country themselves as this is, and they believe it will develop the coal mines, increase the coal supply, and, therefore, cause lower prices.

Mr. CHARLTON. If that was the only source of coal supply, there would be more force in the hon. gentleman's arguments than they really possess. It strikes me, on the face of this proposition, that this is a company owning a coal mine eight miles from the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in order to develop the property and render it valuable, it is necessary to have a short line to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the company feel that it will be more to their advantage to obtain it from the Dominion Government to render valuable this particular property, than to expend their own money for that purpose. This House should not grant 6,400 acres per mile to aid the building of a short line of railway the benefit of which will accrue to the coal mine owners. I do not apprehend that it will make very much difference to the North-West. There are a great many coal mines, and they are being constantly opened. It is not stated to be essential that this particular mine should be opened, but it would undoubtedly be a great benefit to the owners of the mine, if the Government would build this railway. I question very much the propriety of this grant. It is not a road for the general benefit, but it is a short line for the purpose of reaching a coal mine and rendering the property more valuable.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). With respect to this particular mine, I may say that, when in the North-West last fall, I visited Medicine Hat, and I know the people there felt very much the want of some competition that would open communication with that coal mine. Furthermore, I was informed that petitions had been sent here asking the Government to make a grant either of land or cash subsidy, in order that the company might construct a road from the Canadian Pacific Railway to their mine. I see no reason why a company of this kind, formed to develop a coal mine, ought not to receive a subsidy just as much as a railway company organised to run through any part of the country. I have no interest whatever in the Medicine Hat Coal Mining Company, but, having conversed with many of the residents of Medicine Hat, and the people above and below, I know as a matter of fact—and my testimony is of an independent nature—that the people there are very anxious that this particular subsidy should be given and this particular mine opened up.

Mr. DAVIN. I have no interest whatever in this company further than that of a property owner in Regina, but I may tell the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) that he is under a misapprehension in supposing that this line can be looked upon only as a means of improving the property of the coal mining company. The fact is the problem of cheap coal in the North-West has not yet been solved, and, as a consequence, in a country where there is so little timber as in the whole of Assiniboia, there is a strong desire that there should be more competition in coal. The competition between the Anthracite Coal Company of the States and the Galt Company has not brought down the price of coal so as to secure coal at a reasonable price. What it has done is this: the Galt Coal Company lowered the price from the exorbitant figure of $17 a ton, first to $15, then to $14, and last year to $13.50 at Regina; it was higher at Medicine Hat of course. That is an enormous price to pay for fuel. The price paid for Galt coal is $7.50; that is, I need not say, too high a price to pay for soft coal. So we have not yet got the competition that will bring down coal to a price that will enable the settler to have the full advantage of our splendid coal fields, and I think it is a very wise act for the Government to help this railway company.

Mr. SCARTH. Unlike some of my hon. friends, I have a very great interest in this grant; I have the interest of the citizens of Winnipeg in this matter. Petitions have come from citizens of Winnipeg, as well as from the people of many other places in Manitoba, asking that this grant should be given. Winnipeg wants cheap coal, and the more bituminous coal mines you open up, the cheaper the citizens of Winnipeg, the principal city of Manitoba, will get their coal. I hope, therefore, in the interest of Winnipeg, as well as in the interest of Manitoba, there will be no objection to this grant.

Mr. CHARLTON. Perhaps the hon. Minister will inform me as to who the owners are of this coal mine, and the projectors of the short line to the mine?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The owners are gentlemen in Toronto and some parties in the North-West; I cannot remember their names.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it an incorporated company?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. Will the hon. gentleman inform us where the Act of incorporation is to be found. I have a little curiosity to know the names of the gentlemen.

Mr. WATSON. At a previous Session, when the House was passing a resolution for the Galt Company Railway, I called the attention of the House to the importance of the Government, in order to regulate the price of coal, giving other companies power to carry coal over that railway. The apparent danger I pointed out at that time has proved to have had an effect on the price of coal. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), has said that the competition they have to-day between Galt coal and American coal has not brought down the price as low as it should be. The land grant given to a private company for the purpose of opening up and developing their own coal mine had not the desired effect of reducing the price of coal, because they control the railway carrying the coal from the mine, and, consequently, they control the price of coal. We find that coal is at a very high price in the North-West, as stated by the member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). He spoke of the price of coal at Regina, and I see that the price paid by the Government at points farther west, at Medicine Hat, is, I think, $16 per ton. I had hoped that the opening of railways and the Government giving a large grant to railways, would have enabled, not only the settlers to obtain their coal at cheaper rates, but also the Government. I find the Government are paying $16 a ton still for coal at Medicine Hat.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is for hard coal.

Mr. WATSON. For anthracite coal. I say that this western coal, if it is worth opening up and developing by such large assistance as this House has granted, ought to be coal suitable for the police force of the North-West, and should be good enough for them to use. I would suggest to the Minister that, when this Bill is introduced, he should take power to give running powers to any company for the carrying of coal over this road. When the coal fields are opened up and developed in that country, it might be necessary to grant a subsidy to another coal company running parallel to this, for the purpose of giving us competition and cheaper coal. Coal should be much cheaper in the North-West than it is to-day, and the reason that it is high is not that we have not an abundance of coal, but on account of the rates charged by the railway, and if the Government have power to regulate rates over those roads, and if they have power over the Canadian Pacific Railway to regulate the freights on coal, it is their duty to reduce those rates so that Manitoba and the North-West may have coal much cheaper than it is to-day.

Mr. EDGAR. There is no doubt that this coal company is a very philanthropic concern. I see that they propose, in their prospectus to deliver coal infinitely cheaper than it is now delivered in the North-West. I notice that the document is signed by a number of gentlemen in Toronto belonging to the same profession that I do.

An hon. MEMBER. That is the only objection to it.

Mr. EDGAR. I see also a number of other Toronto gentlemen who are sacrificing themselves for the benefit of the public, among them being Hector Cameron, barrister; Arthur A. Boswell, barrister; John Small, Esq.; W. G. McWilliams, barrister; Thomas Davies, brewer; Charles McMichael, barrister, and a number of others. Now, I dare say, they will get the coal out as well as anybody else. I am glad to see them developing the country, but when you come to give a land grant to a short line of eight miles, I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), that the Government should make some conditions in connection with running powers over that railway, is a very prudent and proper one. This is not a railway company, it is a coal company, and it merely has incidental rights to build a line to the mines.

Mr. SCARTH. I may tell the hon. gentleman that, as far as Winnipeg is concerned, it is fully prepared to take the benefit of the philanthropic views of the barristers of the city of Toronto, whom the hon. gentleman has named; and we are glad that members of the same profession as my hon. friend are so philanthropic as to go up there and sell us cheaper coal. We are glad, also, that the Government are joining with them in endeavoring to get us cheaper coal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think, however, the Government would do that more effectively if they would act on the suggestion of my hon. friend from Marquette.

Mr. WATSON.

(Mr. Watson), and insist on the road so subsidised granting similar powers to other companies, if they have occasion to run over it. If I recollect aright the geographical position of the mines, they extend for a long distance from this particular locality at Medicine Hat; and it is quite true, as the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) observed, that a little further on other coal mines might be developed, so that I think it would be both convenient and proper that on this subsidised road we should reserve running powers.

Resolutions reported and concurred in.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 164) to authorise the granting of certain subsidies in land for the construction of the railways therein named.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved the second reading of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

FREDERICTON AND ST. MARY'S RAILWAY BRIDGE COMPANY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House concur in resolution reported from Committee of the Whole, respecting a loan to the Fredericton and St. Mary's Railway Bridge Company.

Motion agreed to, and resolution concurred in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 165) to provide for advances to be made by the Government of Canada to the Fredericton and Saint Mary's Railway Bridge Company.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second times, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 152) to amend the General Inspection Act.—(Mr. Costigan.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. LAURIER. This is according to the resolution of the Montreal Board of Trade, is it not?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the object of it?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The object of this is to add the following as a sub-section to sub-section 30 of the Act:—

"Whenever flour is sold by sample and the inspector or deputy inspector is requested by the owner or the purchaser of such flour to inspect the same by such sample, he shall, notwithstanding anything in this Act contained, inspect the same accordingly."

At present a good deal of flour is sold by sample. Millers send their agents with samples of flour, and agree to deliver say a thousand barrels according to the sample. When the flour is delivered, if a dispute arises, as the law now stands the merchant who receives the flour cannot avail himself of the services of the inspector to see whether it comes up to the standard of the sample or not; and this clause will give that power to our inspectors. That is for the convenience of trade between the millers and the wholesale trade particularly.

On section 2,

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is to repeal the old classification of flour and to substitute the classification in the section. At present most of the flour manufactured in the country is manufactured by what is known as the roller process, and our inspectors have no power to grade that flour, which is admitted to be of superior quality; and the object of this clause is to give that flour a grade. This provision has been approved by a meeting of delegates representing the Chamber of Commerce of Montreal, and the different boards of trade of the different cities, held in Ottawa last fall.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

EXPROPRIATION OF LANDS.

Bill (No. 141) to amend the Revised Statutes, chapter 39 respecting the expropriation of lands, was again considered in Committee, and read the third time and passed.

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL.

Mr. THOMPSON moved the second reading of Bill (No. 42) to make provision for the appointment of a Solicitor General.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time, on a division.

House resolved itself into Committee to consider a certain proposed resolution (p. 191) respecting the salary of the Solicitor General.

Resolution reported and concurred in, and referred to the Committee on the Bill.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 42) to make provision for the appointment of a Solicitor General.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed, on a division.

LICENSING OF WEIGHERS.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 136) to confer certain powers on Boards of Trade as to the licensing of weighers.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee).

Mr. JONES. This is not intended to apply to Custom house weighers?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; it only applies to the weighers at the grain elevators. I have prepared a clause by which the boards of trade are empowered to license weighers for the purpose of weighing grain in elevators.

Mr. EDGAR. Can the Boards of Trade appoint any number they like.

Mr. COSTIGAN. At present there is no system. Any clerk may be engaged to do the weighing. We simply want to put it in the hands of the board of trade to say who these weighers may be. The reason for this is that in the old country the weighers are sworn, and naturally their statement, in case of dispute, is taken in preference to that of our weighers here, who are not sworn. This is to put them on the same footing, but we make it optional with the board of trade to adopt the system of sworn weighers.

Mr. EDGAR. But anybody can weigh, whether sworn or not?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No, after the board of trade has provided for that, we put a penalty on the weigher who is not sworn; for instance, if the Board of Trade in Toronto decide to leave things as they are, then anyone can weigh, but suppose the Board of Trade in Montreal decide to have sworn weighers, then the elevator company would be compelled to take the sworn weighers.

Mr. EDGAR. How far does the jurisdiction of the board of trade extend?

Mr. COSTIGAN. In this Bill, we simply refer to the board of trade, to the district for which the board exists for other purposes. I suppose that is provided for by some other Act.

Mr. JONES. This is intended to apply to grain only?

Mr. COSTIGAN. To grain only.

Mr. JONES. In the case of vessels loading grain where there are no elevators—in Prince Edward Island, for instance, where large quantities of grain are shipped for the English market—what would the result of this provision be?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It would not apply there, because it has only reference to elevators.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How are they to be paid?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I presume the board of trade will regulate that by a fee. We do not propose to pay them. At present the elevator company pays them.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Have the board of trade any power to impose any fee?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Those who employ them will pay them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The parties who employ them pay them.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is a voluntary matter?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, but they can only employ a licensed weigher.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Mr. THOMPSON moved that the Order for the second reading of Bill (No. 137) respecting the payment of interest by the Crown, be discharged and the Bill withdrawn.

Motion agreed to, and Bill withdrawn.

Mr. EDGAR. I would ask the Minister of Justice whether it is not necessary that some provision should be made for the payment of interest by the Crown, in view of the decision given by the Supreme Court in the case of MacLean against the Crown, in which interest was allowed by Mr. Justice Henry upon the damages found by him, but on appeal the Supreme Court disallowed the interest on the ground, I understand, that they could not award interest against the Crown. When I saw this Bill, I supposed it was in order to meet that case. If it is the intention that the Crown should be placed on the same footing as subjects in petitions of right as they are in reference to damages, contracts, costs and all that sort of thing, I think legislation is necessary in reference to interest.

Mr. THOMPSON. No doubt a statute is necessary to give a right against the Crown in matters of interest, but I think, in conferring any right of that kind, it should be very carefully guarded, and I would rather not proceed with the Bill this Session.

PUBLICATION OF THE STATUTES.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved the second reading of Bill (No. 159) to amend chapter 2 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, respecting the publication of the Statutes.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. EDGAR. Is not this the Bill which the Secretary of State told us would relieve the Government from distributing the Statutes to the magistrates throughout the country?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. In a certain measure; that is from distributing them to each of the justices of the peace, as I have already explained. The Department over which I preside is now in communication with the Local Governments with a view to issuing these Statutes not to each justice of the peace but to one or two members only of each commission of the peace, and that will limit the distribution to 3,000 or 4,000 volumes instead of some 20,000 as at present.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I expressed my opinion in regard to this matter when the hon. gentleman introduced this Bill. I do not know how it affects the other Provinces, but in the Province of Ontario these Statutes are found to be a very great convenience. They are distributed among the magistrates throughout the rural districts, and in fact they are used not so much by the magistrate in his official capacity, as for the purpose of furnishing information to the community, generally, with regard to what the law is. It is always convenient, where the Statutes are thus distributed, for parties who want to know what the law is, what changes have been made, and so on. They go to the magistrate in the locality where they reside, and examine the statute for themselves. The general advantage to the public is very considerable, and I think, as we are supposed to legislate and to incur whatever expense we do for the general interests of the community, there is no expenditure which we make that is of greater convenience to the community than that which we make for distributing the Statutes among the population in this way. It seems to me, however it may be in other Provinces, that in the Province of Ontario the public are benefited by the expenditure that has been incurred.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I want to repeat that the gratuitous distribution of the laws in this country, strange to say, is more than double what it is in the United States, with a population of 60,000,000. There is no comparison to be made between Canada and England, because in England there is hardly any gratuitous distribution. As to my hon. friend's remark about distributing the Statutes to justices of the peace, I may say that, in my own county, for instance, there are eight or ten justices of the peace for each parish, and where there are 20 parishes, you have 200 copies of the Statutes for one county. At that rate we might as well distribute them to every elector.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I think it would be a retrograde movement to restrict to such an extent the distribution of the Statutes. I think the Secretary of State is mistaken in his estimate of the number of the justices of the peace. The distribution of the Statutes, of course, is confined to magistrates who have qualified, and as a great many of those whose names appear in the official Gazette have not qualified, the number of those entitled to receive the Statutes would be very small.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There are 21,000 names of justices of the peace which we have received from the clerks of the peace.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I do not know how it is in the other Provinces, but in Quebec, according to the statements of the clerks of the peace, the list of magistrates who have qualified does not exceed a few hundred. In a large district like the district of Quebec, there may be thousands appointed, but very few of them qualified. I know, for a fact, that we have great trouble, in many cases, in finding justices of the peace who have qualified at all. I entirely concur with the Secretary of State, that the distribution should not be made to those who have not qualified, because they have shown that they do not appreciate the appointment except as an honor. But it is quite a different thing with those who take that trouble, intending to act as justices of the peace, and it is of great utility to them and to their neighbors to have the Statutes. Not only the criminal laws, but many other laws would be of great use to them. When we are expending $35,000,000 a year, I think we might better make economy in some other direction, than in the direction of restricting the distribution of the Statutes.

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

Mr. EDGAR. I really think that this change in the law will not only be very unpopular, but it is very unwise. One would imagine by reading this report, that there was some great change proposed in the law, and that it was proposed for the first time to print two separate volumes, one containing the public Acts and one the private Acts. That is all provided for now, and it is provided for already that the private Acts shall not be distributed to justices of the peace. They have been bound in one volume hitherto, and that is why we have not sent so large a volume to the justices of the peace. The law says it shall not be done. As the present law stands, it says that these Statutes shall be sent, just as section seven of this Act says:

"To such public departments and administrative bodies and officials throughout Canada."

Then this is the part which the hon. gentleman proposes to leave out—

"including justices of the peace, in the distribution of the first, but not of the second volume."

Now, I may say that there is nothing in the public Statutes in the first volume of our Acts of Parliament, that is not useful, and in fact necessary, for the justices of the peace who have qualified. I am sure that there would be almost a rebellion in Ontario among the justices of the peace who have qualified, if they find that they do not get, at least, the public Statutes. It is a retrograde movement. It is an unnecessary movement, and it is a grossly unpopular movement, and I warn hon. gentlemen of that fact to-day.

Mr. WALLACE. I am not surprised that the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), has shown so much indignation. In the Province of Ontario, out of 7,000 magistrates, I have no hesitation in saying that at least 6,000 of them are members of the Reform party, and many of them are totally unqualified to perform the duties of the office. They were put there for partisan services, and the hon. member for West Ontario now wants to reward them with two copies of the Statutes. I quite agree with the purpose of the Bill, and I think, after the explanations made by the Secretary of State, that they get all the laws they require for the purpose of performing the duties of their office. Many of them, to my own personal knowledge, never undertook to perform those duties, because some of them cannot sign their own name, and the most of them are utterly unqualified for the position. I think it would be a farce to send them these Statutes, as is proposed by the hon. member for West Ontario. Out of an exceedingly large number of magistrates appointed, there has not been a single member of the Conservative party appointed in the west riding of York during 16 years, and the men who were appointed, the most of them, I do not think would be a credit to any political party, as far as the qualifications for the office are concerned. I think the Bill is in the right for direction.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am surprised at the statement of the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace). I know that in my section of the country, as a rule, the Ontario Government has appointed gentlemen generally considered to be fit to discharge the duties of magistrates. Usually the Government appoint as magistrates men who have occupied the positions of reeve and deputy reeve. In my section I know that in every single case those who were placed on the commission of the peace, were appointed because they were considered capable of performing the duties of magistrates, and not because they belonged to the Reform party. I think it is unfair for the hon. gentleman to make that statement. He possibly may have some reason for it in his own locality, of which I know nothing, but I can say that in the district of Ontario where I live, the Government have invariably appointed men capable of discharging the duty, regardless of politics.

Mr. SPROULE. No.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). If the statements made by the hon. gentleman for York (Mr. Wallace) are correct, and I have no doubt that he believes them so, the Tory Governments of Quebec have improved a good deal upon the action of the Liberal Government of Ontario. It appears that the only fault of which the Liberal Government of Ontario has been guilty, is appointing their own friends, but in Quebec the Tory Governments have done better than that. Not only have they been in the habit of appointing their own friends, but they did away with all previous commissions of the peace, and they removed the justices appointed in 1863 when we had a Liberal Government, and in 1878-79 when another Liberal Government was in power. Then Liberal justices of the peace were rari nantes in gurgite vasto. The Conservatives wiped out all previous commissions of the peace in order to have good sound Tories appointed. The old justices included members of the Local Legislature, and others, possessing some qualifications for the office, and I know some of them to have held office for some twenty-five years, men who have rendered great service and actively engaged in the performance of their duties. Their commissions were revoked, and they were not reappointed until we obtained another Liberal Government in Quebec a few months ago. Previous to that time I do not think one Liberal could be found on the commission of the peace in Quebec. So while I am speaking in favor of the distribution of the Statutes, I am speaking in a disinterested manner. The Secretary of State knows that it is an actual fact that the Government which followed his own, the Government of the late Mr. Mousseau, struck off all previous commissions of the peace. So while I am speaking in favor of the justices of the peace, I am speaking in favor of the Tory justices of the peace of the Province of Quebec. I understand the laws are different in the other Provinces, where there are many more justices. In Quebec a justice of the peace has to be qualified in real estate to the value of $1,200, and he has to take an oath that he possesses such qualification; but a great many of those appointed, who are proud to see their names appear in the Official Gazette, never take the oath of qualification, and to them it is surely unnecessary to send the Statutes. In Quebec the number of justices is very small indeed, and a trifling expenditure of money would be involved to send the Statutes to every one of them.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman is right in one way: Quebec has comparatively a very small number of justices of the peace. But it is not attributable to what the hon. gentleman has stated. He stated that the last Liberal Government of Quebec, against which I have nothing to say at the present moment, had not issued a large number of commissions as justices of the peace.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not know why the hon. gentlemen opposite should laugh because I say nothing against that Government; but I can say all I want, if I want it, and even unpleasant things, but I am not called on to do so at the present time. The present Government has not appointed a great number of justices of the peace.

Their time has all been taken up dismissing sheriffs, and other officers because of their political opinions. The number of justices in the Province of Quebec is comparatively small, the names in my Department not exceeding 1,700. There are about 4,000 in New Brunswick, 4,000 in Nova Scotia, and 7,000 in Ontario. In communicating with the Liberal Local Governments, I propose to ask them to appoint in every locality a president of the commission of the peace and a custos, to use an old English name, and to each of those two the Statutes would be sent, and I think that would be sufficient. Quebec has 900 municipalities, and between 1,700 and 1,800 justices of the peace.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). That shows the great zeal of previous Governments in appointing Tories to the commission of the peace—dead men were appointed.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It was better than what the present Government has done, for the late Government thus appointed men who could do no harm.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the Minister say that there are 4,000 qualified magistrates in New Brunswick entitled to receive the Statutes?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. About that number. I do not know whether they are all qualified, but their names are regularly in my office to receive the Statutes.

Mr. TEMPLE. Every other man in New Brunswick is a magistrate.

Mr. ELLIS. It would be well to remember that New Brunswick was in the hands of Conservative Governments from 1867 until within the last four years. That accounts for the number.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) The Secretary of State I understand, has 200 or 300 magistrates in his own county. So the hon. gentleman must have made a very liberal provision for the administration of justice there.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I said that in each of my parishes there were five magistrates, but that number multiplied by twenty does not make three hundred.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) has a perfect right to speak for his county. If he finds that the population of his county is illiterate and that the people are unable to sign their names, of course he is the best judge. Perhaps that might account, to a certain extent, for his presence here. It is very unfair that the Dominion Government, because the Local Governments have the power to appoint magistrates, should seek to deprive the justices of the regular means of obtaining information with regard to the performance of their duties. Are we to understand that the Government are offering this proposal on the plea of economy? They really desire to attack the Local Governments, and through them the various magistrates throughout the Dominion. Whether there be or be not a large number of magistrates, the information they receive from the Statutes is a great benefit to them and is money well invested. Although the Government may feel a disposition, because the various Provincial Governments are under the control of Reformers, to take the action proposed, they may hope that, at some future day, their friends may be in power and then every other man may be appointed a magistrate, and they will have something to hold out as an inducement to the people to retain them in power besides the efficient manner in which Conservatives perform their public duties. It is unfair and unjust to the magistrates who have been in the habit of receiving the Statutes, and from them obtaining information as to their duties, that they should be deprived of them. They will resent it. Can the Government say, on this occasion, that it is on account of economy? Are we not familiar with the way in which the Government give contracts and enormous amounts to which people are not entitled?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Hon. gentlemen say "no." All they have to do is to refresh their memories with the events of two or three days ago and they will find something to cause them to say "yes" to the words I use. They know full well it cannot be proposed on the score of economy. We know full well that the Government are not economical, but that they are economical in so far as trying to enlighten the electors. It is not economy they are contending for, and I say it is unfair and ungenerous that they should have made the proposition they have made to-day, while they are spending the public money so lavishly.

Mr. WALLACE. With regard to the intelligence of the electors of West York, a matter which was referred to by the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Wilson), I have to inform that hon. gentleman that those Grit magistrates who cannot read or write do not vote for me; they vote the other ticket.

Mr. WILSON. Because they are intelligent.

Mr. WALLACE. The men who vote for me can read and write and are intelligent men. With regard to what the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Edgar) has said, that if they did not get these Statutes there would be a rebellion among them, I would just say that there are no disloyal men in the ranks of the Conservative party, and we look for rebellions only among gentlemen of the other party.

Mr. GILLMOR. I think the hon. gentleman who has just sat down is responsible for all this waste of time. He could not let the thing go through without giving an insult to the great Province of Ontario; that was the cause of this quarrel, and no good will come out of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I may say that I made enquiry from a gentleman who was qualified to speak, and I believe that instead of their being 7,000 qualified magistrates in the Province of Ontario the number is about 1,400 or 1,500. I think, myself, the qualified magistrates are entitled to receive the Statutes, though I entirely agree with the hon. gentleman that it is not necessary to send them to those who do not qualify.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not think my hon. friend is fair with me. We have already communicated with the Attorneys General of the different Provinces, asking them to give us the names of two persons in each municipality, who are qualified magistrates, to whom we will send them in future; but I wanted to avoid the useless expenditure which has been carried on for long years. That is what I said, and when I say that the number in Ontario who will receive the volumes under that arrangement will be over 2,000; I think he will see that we are not acting unfairly.

Mr. EDGAR. Take the case of the municipality of Toronto with a population of over 100,000; will there be only two copies distributed there?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not mean such places as that.

Mr. BRIEN. I may say that, in the Session of 1886, one of the most enthusiastic Conservatives in my constituency was appointed a police magistrate, and I think there are several other Conservatives who have lately been appointed to the commission by the Ontario Government. I may say that I have had communications from a large number of those men, asking if the Dominion Government are not going to distribute the Statutes to each one of them, and I know there will be great disappointment if that is not done.

Mr. WALDIE. Before this Act is passed I hope an amendment will be made to equalise the distribution according to the population of the different municipalities.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin).

In my own county there are townships in which the population is five times as large as in others, so that, unless the distribution is made according to population, it will be very unfair.

Mr. LANDRY. If the method is adopted of sending only two copies to each municipality it will be unfair to my own Province. In New Brunswick a county constitutes a municipality, which, I think, is not the case in the other Provinces, or at any rate in Ontario and Quebec, where each county comprises a number of municipalities. I draw the attention of the Secretary of State to the matter, so that if the distribution is made in that way by the direction of the Attorney General, the matter may be arranged, in the case of New Brunswick, for a larger number to be sent than would be sent if this rule were adhered to. For my own part, I see no objection to continue sending the Statutes, as in the past, to all magistrates whether they qualify or not. I do not understand what is meant by qualifying, unless it means taking the oath of office, but I think that in the Province of New Brunswick they nearly all take the oath of office, and are therefore qualified.

Mr. LAURIER. If the hon. gentleman meant, as I understood him, that there were something like 20,000 qualified justices of the peace in the Dominion, I think he is mistaken, as I have information coming from the Attorney General, who I do not think could be misinformed as to the number. I am not aware, however, if any list of the qualified justices of the peace are sent to the Attorney General's office, and it seems to me that there are a large proportion of them who never qualify and never act as magistrates. They are simply appointed, their names appear in the Gazette, but they never act. I think if the hon. gentleman enquires at the different court houses in the Province of Quebec, he will find that the number in that respect is very much lower than he said, and that if the distribution was made only to those who are qualified the same object would be attained as that which he is now seeking to accomplish.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I may say that I am in actual communication with the Local Governments, and the distribution is intended to cover something like 1,700 or 1,800 in the Province of Quebec, 2,500 in the Province of Ontario, and 1,300 or 1,400 in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. The distribution will be very large, but it will not be made uselessly, as with the present system.

Mr. PERRY. The hon. gentleman proposes to send two copies to each municipality, but this would be very unfair if carried out with regard to Prince Edward Island, where we have no municipal institutions, outside of Charlottetown and Summerside. Of course, there are a number of justices of the peace appointed, for having been blessed with a Conservative Government since 1879, justices of the peace were very lavishly appointed there.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When I spoke of the municipalities I spoke of Quebec, but regular means will be taken to make a fair distribution.

Bill reported, and read the third time, on a division, and passed.

HARBOR COMMISSIONERS OF QUEBEC.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 158) to authorise the advance of certain sums of money to the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec to complete the graving dock and other improvements in said harbor.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I would like to ask for information on some points. What is the total amount of the advance made by the Government to the Quebec Harbor Commissioners, including the amounts proposed in this Bill?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The total cost of the graving dock will be about $910,000, and of the dock of the River St. Charles about $3,300,000, including the amounts proposed in this Bill; and these will complete the works.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I understood that the graving dock was completed. Last year there was a great celebration on the opening of that dock, when it was considered to have been completed, and a steamship actually went into it. What kind of work is proposed to be done with the $160,000 now asked for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is to complete the payment for work done by the contractors. There were extras claimed by them, which the engineers could not decide upon just at the moment. They would take everything into consideration, go over the whole work, ascertain what had been done and strike a balance to be paid to the contractors. There were also contractors for the machinery whose accounts have to be settled; there were certain other works that had to be proved to be properly constructed, and the levelling of the ground had to be completed. The sums provided for in this Bill are to cover the balances that are now due, and not for any new work.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). What is proposed to be done with the $1,100,000 now asked for improvements at the mouth of the St. Charles River? Last year we voted $750,000 for the completion of that dock. I would like to know what that money was used for.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Last year we thought that, by obtaining $750,000 with the small balance then in the hands of the Government, we could tide over the year up to the 1st July. We have not been disappointed in that. The balance stated then was for the purpose of completing the cross-wall from the Louise embankment to Dalhousie street, for dredging outside of the cross-wall, for dredging the wet dock inside of the cross-wall, and for completing the wall on the city side by St. Andrew's street from the gas works down to the cross-wall, and a little further down to carry out the drain from the city. All these sums make up the sum of about $1,220,000 or $1,230,000. From that we deduct a balance in the hands of the Government from previous votes of about $140,000 or $150,000, which, with the $1,100,000 now asked for, will cover not only all these things, but also the claims of the previous contractors under the late Government, Messrs. Peters, Moore & Wright. They made a claim, which the commissioners refused to pay in full, because they thought it was excessive. The commissioners made an offer at the time, which was refused; I no not know whether it will not be accepted now. The amount now asked from Parliament will cover every claim and expenditure.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I see that it is estimated that $80,000 will be required to meet the claims of the contractors, Messrs. Peters, Moore & Wright.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Not to exceed that, I think $52,000 was the offer of the commissioners.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). As I understand, a terrible blunder was committed by the commissioners some three years ago, when an arbitration took place between them and the contractors. The contractors being much shrewder than the commissioners—

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps, as the matter is en litige, the hon. gentleman had better not discuss it, so that the case of the commissioners will not be prejudiced by anything that takes place here.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I wanted to know whether the amount in the Estimates is going to be for a final settlement between the Harbor Commissioners and the contractors?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, this will settle it.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). There is another point to which I wish to refer. Last year, when we were asked to vote $750,000 for this work, I asked the hon. gentleman to explain in what way he intended the money should be expended. He said he would put on the Table certain plans which had been prepared. Those plans suggested three different schemes, and he said the scheme which had been adopted was scheme No. 3, namely, that of building an embankment at a certain distance from the wharves, thus avoiding the necessity of having to expropriate any property, and the risk of any consequential damages for property which would be deprived of its value. A contract, however, has been awarded and is now being carried on, based on a plan entirely different from that which the hon. gentleman explained the Government had adopted, and for which the money was voted. I am not going to discuss the merits of the several schemes, but only mention the fact, which may not have come to the notice of the Minister. It is important that, when we vote money for a particular purpose, it should not be used for a different purpose, and perhaps entail the payment of large damages.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I do not see how it can be avoided. A necessary feature of the plan adopted is the building of a large sewer in St. Andrew street, and a wall to close up the dock on that side is being built. This will prevent access to all the wharves along St. Andrew street and the Palais. Schooners and other small craft will not be able to reach them unless they pass through the opening which will be left for the wet dock. According to the reports of the engineers, especially the report of Mr. Perley, the Chief Engineer, it will be entirely impossible for those small craft to frequent the wet dock, as it will only be opened for an hour at each tide, viz., twice a day, which is barely sufficient for the accommodation of the large shipping. Practically, therefore, all the wharves belonging to private individuals will become useless unless they can be utilised for large ships, and there is not sufficient depth of water for that. This will entail claims for heavy damages. There was a scheme proposed to build a small lock which would have cost $180,000, to permit the passage of these small craft, but I understand this idea has been given up. If it has, I do not see how it will be possible for the commissioners to avoid having to pay heavy land damages and consequential damages.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The money voted last year was voted towards the completion of these works, and this is to complete them. The scheme of last year, as of this year, was to give us a tidal wall on the south side as well as on the other side. That was the object of the money voted. There were three schemes proposed, as the hon. gentleman has just said. One was to build a wall about the middle of the dock, and thus clear the end of the wharves. Another was to put the wall on the old commissioners land. That would have come just at the end of these wharves, and in two or three cases would have cut a portion of these wharves that have been built on the commissioners land, and, therefore, on property that does not belong to the riparian proprietors. The other scheme was to build a wall in St. Andrew street, but we thought that wall would cost too much, and the only alternative scheme was to build a wall in the wet dock. When these plans were considered by the harbor commissioners of Quebec, the city council asked to see them; and they were put also at the disposition of the city council so that the harbor commissioners might have the benefit of their views. After considering the whole matter the general opinion was that the best scheme and the one which would cost least was the first scheme. This was the scheme by St. Andrew street, where we had no land damages, and would be an improvement to the city as well. By this scheme we would avoid an expense of $200,000, and give the benefit of these improvements to small craft as well as to large ships. At all times, from the first hour of the day to the last, schooners may remain loading at those wharves, and go out and come in at a longer period than now. These wharves will be thus doubled in value. As to the second lock, the small lock of which the hon. gentleman was speaking, the harbor commissioners and the board of trade thought it was better not to build it, as the other was sufficient; and if, at any time, there was a necessity for a small lock it could be very easily built. I am sure from what I know of the place, and from the reports and consensus of opinion down there, that the scheme finally settled on is the best and the least expensive, and the land damages will be a minimum.

Mr. AMYOT. I suppose the Government is very well intentioned in lending this money to Quebec city, but there is a wrong principle in all that. For many years we have given the Quebec commissioners loans, and we do not consult the city of Quebec in regard to the choice of plans or of contractors or of engineers. The Quebec commerce is taxed for that, and it has not a voice in regard to the employment of the money. We have seen these works going on for any number of years, and they are now nearly useless and are not yet completed, and now we are again asked to borrow over $1,000,000 in order to ameliorate them before their completion, and we are threatened that the smaller vessels will not be able to use the wharves which are surrounded by the embankments. I hope the Government will give instructions to the harbor commissioners, the majority of whom are appointed by the Dominion Government, to come to an understanding with the city in reference to these works. We could find any number of engineers in Canada who could perform this work better than those from abroad, who do not know our climate or our soil, and have no experience as to our waters or our land. We have in the city of Quebec any number of engineers who could have done the work much better than it has been done, and if we compare the plans of those engineers in the city of Quebec with those under which the work is being executed, we will find that they are far superior. More than that, there is a great deal of cement employed in these works. This is a most important question. I speak as a man who is in favor of the National Policy. We have the Canadian cement. Any engineer who has employed the cement from abroad and the Canadian cement, will tell you that the Canadian cement is far superior to that which comes from abroad. We never could obtain from the contractors, or from the engineers, or from the harbor commissioners, the employment of Canadian cement. What is the consequence? Our working population is being kept idle, and we send our money to other countries and pay two or three times the price. We pay three times the amount for an inferior cement that we would pay for a cement which would employ our Canadian workmen. This fact may be surprising to you at first, but if you knew that the party who furnishes that cement from abroad is one of the harbor commissioners, you would be less surprised perhaps, because you would guess that there is a nice commission connected with it. This is detrimental to Canadian interests, it is against the principle of a National Policy, it is against the interests of the city of Quebec, it is against the interests of Canadian laborers, it is against the principle that we should employ as much as possible Canadian products, and that we should encourage home industry, instead of sending so much money abroad in order to make profits for one or two individuals. We have often called the attention of the interested parties to that point. We were received with very nice words, but, when it comes to a practical point, the Canadian cement is left where it is, and the cars and the ships are filled up with cement from abroad. Lately, in Quebec, they were trying to change some part of the water works where Canadian cement had been employed some fifteen or twenty years ago, and they had to break the stones, but they could not break the Canadian cement where it was employed. Of course, there is a way of employing cement. When you give it to a contractor who is badly disposed, he will use it in such a way that it will not be a success, but a disinterested party, an honest engineer, will find it superior to any other cement; and the proof is that, when they employed large quantities of cement from abroad, they covered it with a little coating of Canadian cement in order to protect the other, and now we find many points where the walls on which this foreign cement has been used are giving way. I do not suppose that the Government is badly disposed towards Quebec, but the Government is deceived, and we who remain there see that every day. The cement employed costs dearer than the Canadian cement would cost, and the latter has a better chance of solidity and is a greater success than the other. However, when the interests of that part of the country are at stake, everything seems to turn against Quebec. I hope that, when the attention of the Minister is drawn to these facts, they will see that, at least for the rest of the works, these faults will be remedied, and that they will give instructions to the harbor commissioners to come to an understanding with those who represent the city of Quebec, and will see that the Canadian cement is employed wherever it can be employed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I mentioned to the Minister the danger which there is in the adoption of the plan which is now being carried out there. In what I may call damming up St. Andrew's street, there is the danger of having to pay very heavy land and consequential damages. He stated that his scheme was adopted on the recommendation of men who knew much better than either he or myself did. Well, they are not the Government engineers. I have here the report of the Government engineers, and I will read the report of Messrs. Fleming and Perley. Both of these gentlemen are well known, and Mr. Perley is the Chief Engineer of the Department of the hon. Minister. Here is what they say in the report which the Minister himself has put in our hands. It is dated some time in 1886, I think in August, 1886. Here is what they say as to the scheme adopted and now being executed:

"As the gates in the cross-wall cannot be kept open for more than one hour at or near high water, it follows that the whole of this schooner traffic, as well as the legitimate traffic of the wet dock, will have to be passed in and out during that time; and, when there is a large number of schooners to be passed, a block must ensue, and a difficulty will then arise between the harbor commissioners as to the rights they possess to pass vessels from which they derive tolls and benefit, and the owners of private ships and the vessels which frequent them, from which, it is assumed, the commissioners cannot exact a toll."

This is putting the difficulty exactly as it is. Here is the plan which it has been proposed to adopt. The difficulty will certainly take place. It is out of all question to pass in one hour at each tide all the large ships that are expected to come into that dock, and the large number of small schooners which now frequent the wharves and slips, and for which there will be no other entrance but that for the large ships. Here is the plan proposed by these gentlemen to overcome that great practical difficulty. They say:

"As against the adoption of scheme number one, we (Mr. Fleming and myself) referred to the difficulties which must arise in dealing with the schooners which now use the slips on the northern side of St. Andrew's street, difficulties which it is absolutely necessary should be grappled with at once."

You see they state their opinion that these difficulties should be grappled with at once. The Minister says that it will be time enough to grapple with the difficulty when it occurs. The difficulty is already foreseen.—

"And for the avoidance of which we propose to recommend the adoption of scheme number three."

The Government knows that scheme number three has not been adopted, and scheme number one, to which the objections apply, has been accepted and is being executed.—

"There is one way by which, if scheme number one should be adopted by the commissioners, these difficulties can be overcome, and that is by the construction of a lock from the harbor into the wet basin in the position shown on the accompanying plan, such lock to be only large enough to pass the largest schooner which can frequent the slips referred to; and I may here state that the desirability of constructing this lock was brought to the notice of the commissioners early in 1884."

I do not know on what advice this plan has been given up, but I am quite sure that if it is not accepted, the commissioners will have to come back to this House and get more money to build a lock. It will have to be built, and if it is not built, much heavier damages will be claimed than the cost of the lock. I agree with the Minister, that if communication with the wet dock is left open for schooners, not only these private wharves and slips will not suffer any loss, but they will be increased in value. But it is conditional upon their having free entrance to the dock, which entrance they are not going to get, according to the reports I have quoted. They will have to pass through an entrance which will be opened only twice a day when the tide is high, and it is perfectly impossible for the big ships and small craft to pass through that in two hours each day; it will give hardly time enough to allow the passage of the large ships that will frequent the dock. As to the schooners and small craft, the entrance communicating with the dock will be practically closed to them, and, therefore, we shall have to meet a claim for damages by the owners in St. Andrew's street. I am of the opinion of the engineer, that it would be much better to grapple at once with the difficulty, to which it is useless for us to shut our eyes. The difficulty will arise as soon as the work is in operation, and why not at once build that lock and avoid the difficulty?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. After consulting with the engineer and the boards in Quebec, it was found that it would be better not to build the lock, at all events, for the present. After the remarks of the hon. gentleman I shall not fail to call the attention of the commissioners, and especially of the engineers, to what he has said, in case there might be a necessity for the lock now. In that case the commissioners will construct it, and the amount of money voted now will cover that.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). The Minister will understand the importance of this question by consulting the documents which have been distributed to members of this House, among which is the report of the conference between the harbor commissioners and the members of the city council and the council of the board of trade. He will there see the remark of Mr. Perley, Chief Engineer of his Department, who says that he does not think entrance into the wet dock will be sufficient for big ships, though it may be sufficient for the small craft. If that be so, it will become necessary to construct a large lock, which will be a very expensive affair, and will cost three quarters of a million. But he says that, for the present, as long as the traffic is not larger, that entrance will do for large ships.

Bill reported, and read the third time, and passed.

REPRESENTATION IN HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. THOMPSON moved the second reading of Bill (No. 140), an Act in addition to the Revised Statutes, Chapter 6, respecting representation in the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. THOMPSON. The object is to correct a clerical error in the Revised Statutes. Notwithstanding the addition made of the four members for the North-West, under the act of last Session, the representation Act was carried forward into the Revised Statutes, with the word "211." The object of section 2 is to preserve the representation Acts as they existed prior to the Revised Statutes. Of course, the Revised Statutes repealed the previous legislation. It is not intended that the boundaries, as previously established, shall be changed.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

THE-QUEBEC JUDICIARY.

Mr. THOMPSON moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider a certain proposed resolution (page 862) respecting the salary of an additional judge of the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. THOMPSON. The Legislature of Quebec has made provisions for the appointment of an additional judge in that Province for the district of Terrebonne, and this is to make provision for his salary.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 166) to amend chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes representing judges of the Provincial Courts.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

WESTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 157) to confirm a certain agreement between Her Majesty and the Western Counties Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. This Bill, according to the declaration of it, is intended "to confirm a certain agreement between Her Majesty and the Western Counties Railway and for other purposes." There has been a Bill already passed through this House by the company, and some exception was taken to the passage of that Bill before the Railway Committee, and I was not aware until to-day that it had passed its final stage in this House. I was requested by the Government of Nova Scotia to have a clause inserted in it to provide that the rights which the Nova Scotia Government possess, under their mortgage on the Western Counties Railway, should not be affected by the legislation of this House. There was a clause added to that Bill which, in the judgment of the Minister of Justice and other legal gentlemen, was considered sufficient to provide for the protection of those provincial rights. But that clause having been submitted to the Government of Nova Scotia, they did not appear to be satisfied that it is sufficiently distinct and explicit under the terms on which they hold a mortgage on that property. The Government of which the Minister of Justice was Premier in Nova Scotia, loaned a certain sum of money to the Western Counties Railway Company, and it was provided in one of the clauses, clause 14 :

"That in the event of the interest on the debenture stock guaranteed by the Government of Nova Scotia as hereinafter provided for the interest to the said municipality of Digby and Annapolis as hereinbefore provided for being unpaid by the said company for six months, after the same shall become due, the said Government may sell the whole or any part of the securities in its possession or under its control and deal in such a way with the proceeds thereof as will best protect said Government and said counties from any future demand in respect thereof, either by the redemption of the debenture stock or otherwise, and may also sell the western division of the said company's railway without foreclosure, and in such manner and after such notice as to said Government shall seem most convenient."

This is a mortgage with power of foreclosure, according to the agreement, which the Government of Nova Scotia desires should not be interfered with by any legislation in this House at the present time. I have received a telegram from the Premier of Nova Scotia, saying that the Nova Scotia Government are practically the owners of the road, and it is monstrous that the company should seek this Bill without the consent of that Government. It was in consequence of receiving that communication that I gave notice of an amendment, which I placed on the paper last night and which I will now move. I move that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole to amend it by adding the following clause, which was telegraphed to me by the Government of Nova Scotia asking that it be inserted in the Bill :—

Nothing herein contained shall be held to abridge, restrict or in any way affect the power of sale or any other power, right or privilege given to the Government of Nova Scotia by the Western Counties Railway Company under and by virtue of a certain agreement made on the 16th day of August, 1879, between Her Majesty the Queen, represented by the Hon. Samuel Greelman, Commissioner of Public Works and Mines for the Province of Nova Scotia, and the Western Counties Railway Company.

I think there should be no objection to the insertion of this amendment as a clause of the Bill at this stage of the Bill. The Act is intended to confirm an agreement made by the Company with the Government, and of course with the insertion of this amendment it would provide all securities necessary, because by the agreement with the Government in clause 24, which we are asked to confirm to-day it says :

"The company shall on or before the 1st day of July, A.D. 1887, complete all arrangements to the satisfaction of the Government for the settlement of all existing liens on its property, its indebtedness, whether to the Government of Nova Scotia, to municipalities, to existing debenture stockholders or otherwise, and shall, within a reasonable time thereafter, pay, settle or procure a discharge of the same, and of all existing liens on its property."

It confers on the Government the power, which seems a very excessive power, of disposing of debenture mortgages on the road to the extent of $50,000 per mile, and provides that the money shall be placed in the hands of the Government and be disposed of and appropriated as follows :—first, to the payment of interest; second, to the building and completion of the line; third, to the payment or satisfaction of the existing obligations of the company. Here, according to the way I read it, it would appear that the payment of existing obligations of the company come in after all those payments are completed; after the interest on the debentures is provided for and after the road is built. I think this is rather inconsistent with the original clause, though I am not prepared to put the proper legal construction upon it, I admit. I would ask the Minister of Justice whether, taking it altogether, it would not appear that "the possessors and owners of existing obligations, &c.," are the only persons to be paid off out of the moneys realised under the authority of the Act. However, if the amendment is incorporated in the Bill, as I now propose, it would obviate all difficulty in the matter and give it a clear and distinct understanding.

Mr. JONES.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not understand whether this is the amendment of which the hon. gentleman has given notice, which relates to a private Bill of the Western Counties Railway Company, or one relating to this Bill.

Mr. JONES. The hon. gentleman will see that while the number is wrong the description is right.

Mr. THOMPSON. I was not thinking of taking advantage of any objection of that kind, but I really thought that he intended that this should apply to the private Bill.

Mr. JONES. To both.

Mr. THOMPSON. The company proposed that they should have the right to issue new debentures to displace the old ones, and that in order to have the right to do so, they should get the assent of 80 per cent. of the holders of the old debentures. That proposition was opposed, and very properly, and the matter was corrected in committee, so that the Bill now requires that all existing liens must be satisfied before these debentures may issue. I think, therefore, that the claim of the Nova Scotia Government, which is a lien on the property, and a lien which has arrived at such completeness that they can sell the property, is completely protected by this provision. In other words, a necessary part of the company's scheme is to raise a large sum of new debentures on the railway, but they cannot raise a dollar until the Nova Scotia Government is satisfied. The hon. gentleman is not quite correct, I think, in his apprehension of the effect of this Bill, and I think it would be quite out of place to insert such a provision as he proposes—a provision for protecting the rights of the Nova Scotia Government. The whole tendency of this Bill is to aid the Nova Scotia Government and enhance the value of its property. It has the effect of giving $500,000 upon a portion of the railway, so that, so far from impairing the security of the Nova Scotia Government, it adds to it, and there is no provision in the Bill which has the effect of placing the lien of the Nova Scotia Government to any extent in the position of a second lien. The objects of the agreement which we affirm by this Bill are these: The Government appropriate $500,000, and the company pay into the hands of the Government all they raise on their own debentures, and that joint fund is appropriated for the completion of the 18 miles between Annapolis and Digby, and for the other liabilities of the company after making provision for the interest which is to be guaranteed. But the company cannot raise money on the debentures until the liens now existing are satisfied, and if the company fail to discharge existing liens to the satisfaction of the Nova Scotia Government, or the municipalities, then that portion of the scheme falls through, and all the Dominion Government could do would be to expend on these 18 miles the grant of $500,000.

Mr. JONES. I am quite willing to accept the opinion offered by the Minister of Justice, who is also quite right in saying that the expenditure of the money on this portion of the road will improve the security of the Local Government on the property generally. For these reasons I shall not further press the motion. I will say at the same time, however, that I regret that this expenditure has not been combined with some system of consolidating all our roads, which was an object we have all desired to arrive at. That is the object the people of Nova Scotia are aiming at, perhaps even more than at the completion of this link, important as that link may be. This arrangement would hardly secure that, although no doubt it could be done by an arrangement between the different companies. I would suggest to the Minister of Railways that it might be well to take power to deal with the Windsor Branch, in the event of the Government finding it convenient to negotiate with any company regarding a future consolidation of the railway system of the western counties.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is aware that the Government always have power, subject to the approval of Parliament, to make any arrangement of that kind. It is not necessary to provide for it specifically by a Bill, and in fact that would be rather objectionable. If the Government find, in the interest of the country, that they can effect the consolidation of those roads they would have power to enter into a contract, simply requiring the approval of Parliament, such as any arrangement or consolidation would necessarily require.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Department of the Interior.....$121,115

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that there is an increase of no less than eight officers demanded in that Department, although the expenditure is already very large.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This increase is for forty statutory increases at $50, two at $25, two promotions from $750 to $1,100, besides the appointment of eight permanent third-class clerks.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My objection is this: that judging from our census returns and the number of sales, I see no just cause for any increase in the number of officers. It seems too bad that we should go on and spend $10,000, exclusive of very large votes for extra clerks of $30,000, and for extra services of $7,000. Here is a total expenditure of about $160,000 for that Department, and, looking at the receipts we get and the very small increase in our population, it does seem to me that it is monstrous to spend such a sum as that.

Mr. SPROULE. While this item is under consideration I think it would not be amiss to say a word or two in regard to the Civil Service at Ottawa. I think it would be wise if a change were made in the office hours during the Sessions of Parliament. As a general rule, in the mornings, we come here between 9 and 10 o'clock, and then if we go to the Departments before 10 or half past 10 we can get very little work done because very few of the clerks are to be found in the offices. During the rest of the morning we are engaged in committees, and at noon most of the clerks are away for an hour. We come back here at 3 o'clock to see what is the order of the day, and after the House is open for a short time, if we want to go back to the Departments to get some work done, it is 4 o'clock and the clerks are all away. Virtually the hours for the Civil Service are from 10 in the morning until 4 in the afternoon, while the members are engaged all hours of the day and night. I think if a change were made so that the offices would be open from 9 or half past 9 in the morning until 6 in the afternoon during the Session when we rise, it would greatly facilitate the work members have to do. These officers receive a fair remuneration for their labor, if you compare their hours with any other line of life. If you take the hours, from 10 to 12, with an hour's intermission, and from 1 to 4, you find they have only five hours a day, and on Saturday afternoons they are off. Saturday is a day on which most of the members are disengaged, and on which they could do a good deal of work; but if you go to the offices between 12 and 1, you will find the clerks preparing to leave, and after 1 they are out of their offices. Therefore, I think that these officals receive fair salaries, as their hours are very short, and as they have a great many holidays, the offices should be kept open, at least during the Sessions of Parliament, more hours than they are now. In the winter, perhaps, it might not be well to keep them open until 6, but I think they might be kept open until 5, and at this time of the year they might be kept open until 6 in the evening.

Mr. WELSH. I do not agree with my hon. friend at all. I would like to see him in those offices from year's end to year's end, and stay there from 10 to 4; he would not then like us to give him longer hours. I find that they are always in their offices at 10 o'clock in the morning and up to 4 in the afternoon, and if we cannot get all the information we want in that time, we are better away. I am not under any compliment to those officials, but I think their hours are long enough. It becomes monotonous from year's end to year's end, and if you would keep those men there until six o'clock, it would be a hardship. We are only here for a short time, two months or so, and if we do sit up for a few hours, what is the harm? If you did that all the year round, you would want shorter hours.

Mr. SPROULE. I can only say that our hours are from 17 to 20 in a day; and if we are kept here for only two months, it only means a short time for them to have their offices kept open during the Session.

Mr. WELSH. Yes, but we can go down and get a drink and something to eat, and they cannot.

Mr. SPROULE. I think they do very often.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If my recollection is right, it was the rule that those gentlemen should attend until 4 o'clock on Saturdays during the Sessions. I think the hon. member is right enough, that during the Sessions of Parliament those gentlemen should be at their offices for several hours on Saturday.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think so, too.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Members of Parliament have very great difficulty in getting at them even on other days than Saturday, and certainly some members of Parliament are much more hardly worked than the clerks, though perhaps not all. What is the rule?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. From half-past 9 to 4. At most of the offices I think they remain until 4 on Saturdays. I think that is the rule.

Mr. MILLS. That is the rule but it is not the practice.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, it is not the practice.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The item of $8,300 expenses of North-West Mounted Police is made out by three statutory increases and a new third-class clerk.

Customs$337,665

Mr. BOWELL. There is an increase of $3,000 in travelling expenses of the inspectors. There has been, since the last estimates, a new inspector appointed, which consequently adds to the contingencies of that branch for the Quebec district. Also the duties of inspector have been given to an officer in Manitoba, who is on the retired list. By adding a small sum to his superannuation allowance he attends to that duty. Mr. Mingay is the officer superannuated, and is now acting as inspector.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have reason to believe that Mr. Mingay, whom I knew well, was a very competent officer and well fitted to discharge his duties. This is rather a new departure, superannuating a gentleman and then employing him in a separate capacity. That is rather contrary to the statute.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite the reverse. The statute provides you may call them back to the public service, but you suspend their superannuation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is not what has been done. You may call them back to the service but the new office and salary are not to be inferior to the former one. As I understand, the Minister superannuated Mr. Mingay and then gives him another position, with a small addition to his superannuation allowance.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is quite correct. Mr. Mingay was in the past, and is still, if his health would permit, one of the best officers in the service, and I thought it well, if he would accept it, to give him the position of inspector. There is not a sufficient number of ports in the Province of Manitoba to justify the appointment of an inspector at an inspector's salary, and Mr. Mingay, who is well fitted for the work, accepted the position with the small increase to his superannuation allowance. The Act says you cannot call back a person to the service and compel him to accept an inferior position, but there is no provision to say that he may not accept a position.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is one of those cases in which, though Mr. Mingay is a good officer, and will do his duty well, a precedent will be established which will lead to abuse. It would have been much better to have appointed him at a salary equal to the amount he now receives, and to suspend his superannuation allowance.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no principle that cannot be abused. On this particular occasion, the action of the Government, is the best that could be taken. We could not give, under the Act, Mr. Mingay the same salary as an inspector as that which he received as collector, and so we made the arrangement I have mentioned. I was going on to say that the increase of $3,000—

Mr. WELSH. Carried.

Mr. BOWELL. I believe my hon. friend would carry all my estimates.

Mr. WELSH. I believe I would.

Mr. BOWELL. The Board of Customs has increased by $3,000, owing to the adding of some salaries which were formerly paid out of contingencies, and one or two of which were charged to the different ports. Then, the $3,000 for Chinese immigration is not an increase, because it was voted last year among miscellaneous items. It is added here, as the Finance Department contended that the carrying out of that law was in the hands of the Department. That accounts for $9,000 of this increase, and the others are minor increases in the different ports. At Berlin it is proposed to give $50 in addition to the collector. He has $800 now, and that place is growing very rapidly.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will not trouble the hon. gentleman to go through all these in detail.

Mr. BOWELL. That is what you asked me.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I asked for some general statement of the cause of the apparent increase. I wanted specially to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that in Montreal $14,000 was added to our total expenditure, which seemed a very large figure. In the case of the port of Montreal, I would like to hear some explanation.

Mr. BOWELL. The only explanation I can give is that last year the estimate for Montreal was not sufficiently large, and the great increase of labor, or rather the increase of the duties, which are increasing continuously, in proportion to the increase of the shipping and the opening up of every new railway station, necessitates the putting on of two or three men, or three or four men, to look after the night trains as well as the day trains. The opening up of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the establishment of another station necessitates the putting on of almost as many men as there are at the Bonaventure station, and so with regard to almost every station in every part of the country. I may add, in connection with the Montreal service, that there is a proposition to increase the salaries of some of the ordinary officers, some receiving $550 and some $600, by giving them an additional $50 or $100 as the case may be, and as we think they deserve it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. JONES. There would be no objection, of course, to increasing the expenditure at a large port like Montreal, if the result would be to prevent such irregularities as we have discovered there to such a large extent. I took the opportunity to refer to that the other night, but since then we have seen another case of irregularity by which, according to the statement in the newspapers, the Government has been defrauded of a large amount of duty arising out of some transaction connected with coal, substituting English or foreign coal for American coal. This was reported in the newspapers the other day.

Mr. BOWELL. I have not heard of it. I do not see how there could be a fraud in substituting one quality of coal for another, unless it was by substituting anthracite for bituminous coal, the one being at 50 cents and the other 60 cents, or in ex-warehousing lower ports coal instead of the imported article and then selling the imported coal.

Mr. JONES. It was reported as English coal, and I saw it so reported in the newspapers. I am glad to hear that it is not true.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say that. I do not say it is not true; but the only way in which that could be done would be by importing the coal in bond, ex-warehousing it, and then allowing it to go into general consumption, but it could not make any difference where it came from.

Mr. JONES. That is what was reported to have been done. As to the general expenses in regard to the Custom house, I made up the average expense of collection, and I find it is 4·10 for the Dominion, 5·10 for St. John, 6 for Quebec, and 4·4 for Halifax. It would, therefore, appear that the expenses at the port of Halifax are very much smaller than they are elsewhere, and there is a great deal of work done there in the winter in forwarding goods to the upper Provinces. In regard to a matter which was referred to the other day, as to travelling Customs detectives, I would ask, if they are in a position to make these seizures, whether the fines imposed by these inspectors are imposed and collected by themselves? The hon. gentleman in answering my hon. friend before me the other day, gave us to understand that Watters, one of these inspectors or agents, had received $6,000 within a short time of two or three years. I would be glad to hear what the arrangement is with this gentleman, because, as I said before, while I have no objection whatever to their visiting these various places of business and detecting any irregularity, I think it is not exactly in the interest of the public that they should have the power themselves of imposing a fine, and compromising with the parties on the spot. My view would be rather that they should report it to the Minister, and that the Government should deal with it according to their view of the public interest. There is another matter to which I was going to ask the attention of the Minister, and that is with reference to the surveyor of Customs in Halifax. I took occasion the other day to refer to this, and I suppose that appointment has not yet been made.

Mr. BOWELL. You spoke to me privately about it.

Mr. JONES. Yes. I hope the hon. gentleman will not appoint the person who is publicly spoken of there as likely to get that position. I have nothing whatever to say against Mr. Garrison, because I believe he is a very deserving young man, but a few years ago he was assistant to the gaugers in Halifax, and occupied a position which was not a very important one. Since that he has been doing in-door duty, and he has done it very satisfactorily, but he is not a man who, by training or any other qualifications which may be necessary, should be placed at the head or in the position of surveyor of Customs in Halifax. That is my judgment, and I have heard it spoken of by a great many people in Halifax as well. The only ground upon which he had or was supposed to have any claim was a ground which I hope will not be adopted as a qualification for an important position like that. I have no doubt that there are men in the Customs Department who would be very much better qualified than this person is, and I hope the Minister will think very carefully before he appoints a person to such an important position without the necessary qualification. I am informed that he has failed to pass the necessary examination. That may not be anything against him, but he is not a person for that office. You want a man who can go about among the merchants and to whom the lockers, the employés and the tide-waiters will look up to; you want a man of a different type entirely from this person.

Mr. KENNY. I have no personal knowledge of Mr. Garrison, and I do not presume to dictate to the Minister of Customs who shall be appointed to that important position. On the general question of Customs, I may say that according to a letter from Halifax, from a copy of which my colleague appears to have quoted, Halifax is the third port in the Dominion as regards the amount of duties collected. From 1st November, 1886, to 1st May, 1887, 474 steamers and sailing vessels were entered in the port of Halifax, with a total tonnage of 343,143 tons. I mention this so that gentlemen from the rural districts will recognise the importance of that port. I do not believe there is a port in the Dominion where the duties are more regularly and more satisfactorily paid to the Department than in the city of Halifax. All we desire there is that we shall have perfect uniformity. We realise that in our system, where there are so many different appraisers, differences of opinion will occasionally arise. I know that in the United States there is a frequent conflict of opinion between an appraiser at Chicago and another one at New York, and this leads to representations to Washington, and to great differences of opinion among the merchants. I mention this because I wish to remark to the Minister that I consider the scale of salaries paid these officials in the city of Halifax a very small one, and I hope he will see his way clear to revise it, and make the remuneration, to some extent, proportionate to the work, and to the commercial importance of that port. As regards the detective service to which my colleague has referred, that is a very vexed question, one which I can understand that differences of opinion should exist. But I will draw his attention to the fact, which I dare say has not escaped his memory, that during the days of the Administration of Mr. Mackenzie, it was stated that great irregularities existed in the collection of the revenue in Nova Scotia. I know that idea was entertained by a gentleman prominent in commerce, a very prominent supporter, and one of the most influential political friends of my colleague. I know that when the late much-respected and much regretted Mr. Burpee, the Ministers of Customs of that day, visited Halifax, his attention was drawn to these matters by my friend. I know it, because I have had frequent conferences with my fellow-merchant on that subject. The Minister of Customs of that day sent for my friend who brought these irregularities to his notice. He brought them in this way: he expressed very strongly the opinion that, in certain localities, the revenue was not fully and properly collected. He was asked by the Minister of Customs to give him a specific case, and he gave a very characteristic answer. The answer was: "I am not a Customs' detective for the Government, that is your business and that of your subordinates." As we have so great a number of ports of entry in Canada, it is impossible to have, at all these points, competent appraisers, and, consequently, I think it is necessary that there should be close inspection and close supervision of the collection of the revenue all over the country. We cannot reduce the number of ports of entry; the people have enjoyed the present number and would resent any reduction. I recognise that we cannot keep at all these places competent appraisers, and the only way to have the work carried on properly is by a close system of inspection. As regards the detective service, I have heard of certain cases which, if they are correctly reported, show that great hardship has been suffered, and that there has been a very arbitrary use of power. I do not express an opinion upon these cases, because I have no knowledge of them, but I think we all recognise that the revenue should be fairly collected and the law fairly and equitably enforced, and I am afraid we cannot do that without some system of detective service.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is it the duty of these inspectors of ports principally to see that goods are not smuggled into the country?

Mr. BOWELL. Certainly not.

Mr. McMULLEN. Whose duty is it?

Mr. BOWELL. Every officer who is paid a dollar.

Mr. McMULLEN. Could the Minister of Customs say whether smuggling has been on the increase or not, along our border?

Mr. BOWELL. I could not say.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are there no returns that would show that?

Mr. BOWELL. There may be the number of seizures, but that is no evidence. The number of seizures may be greater, but that is not evidence that smuggling is increasing.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am unwilling to detain the Committee for a moment in passing these Estimates, but I cannot allow the remarks made by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), to pass without a word of comment. The members of this House are under a great responsibility and are clothed with great power. They occupy a position which enables them to assail the characters of private individuals who are not in this House, and to do so without being responsible for their statements in the manner in which persons are responsible who make statements outside of this House. My hon. friend behind me (Mr. Kenny) says he does not know Mr. Garrison. I do. I had the honor of placing Mr. Garrison in office many years ago. The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) intimates that he is not sufficiently aristocratic, that he has demeaned himself by performing duties of an inferior character, when he was connected with the Excise, in carrying rods, whatever that may mean, for the officers who were over him. Now, I wish to say that Mr. Garrison is the son of a highly respected Wesleyan clergyman. He was appointed many years ago in a very subordinate position. By attention to his duty, by his high personal character, and from having discharged his duties in a very efficient manner, he has risen step by step until he is now acting surveyor of Customs, the next position to that which reference has been made. I have not had the pleasure of seeing him for many years, but I have learned, and been very much gratified to learn, that no person has done greater credit to the office to which he was appointed, no person has risen more regularly step by step by the efficient discharge of his duties. I think it is an abuse of the power possessed by a member of this House, under those circumstances, to single out a public officer by name, where he is not known, and a thousand miles from where he resides—for the remarks made by the hon. gentleman would not have injured him in the slightest if made in Halifax where he is known—and hold him up as unworthy of filling a public position. I do not want to detain the House, but I feel it incumbent upon me to say this much, knowing, as I do know, that Mr. Garrison is deserving of the very highest favor and consideration at the hands of the head of the Department. There is no qualification held to be so great for the performance of duties of that kind, as the fact that a man has risen by his own industrious and painstaking attention to the duties of his office from the very lowest grade to the highest. It is the boast of the man who, at this moment, is receiving the largest salary of any official in Canada, that he has risen from the very lowest position in the service up to the position he now occupies; and I have always regarded the fact that a person passing through every grade in that commendable way, that enabled him to be advanced from one step to another, as forming a claim, rather than placing him in a position to be reproached for having performed duties of a subordinate character many years ago.

Mr. JONES. I am not disposed to allow the Minister of Finance, high as his position may be in this House and in the country, to put words in my mouth that I never uttered. I said nothing with respect to Mr. Garrison regarding his position, want of aristocratic or social position; I said nothing about his having demeaned himself by his previous occupation; I said nothing but what was respectable and proper.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What did the hon. gentleman mean by saying that Mr. Garrison carried rods for the officers of the excise?

Mr. JONES. I will tell the hon. gentleman. Hon. members know that for a person to be a surveyor at a large port like Halifax, he should be a person who has had some experience in the in-door work of the Department, that he should be accustomed to deal with tide-waiters and lockers, and that branch of the service generally; and having mixed with the mercantile community be able to make such arrangements with his subordinates as would meet the requirements of the port. I merely mentioned that Mr. Garrison had no such training. All the hon. gentleman has said with respect to Mr. Garrison's good behavior, I thoroughly believe; I have never heard anything whatever against him; I believe he is a young man of excellent quality and behavior in every respect. But he may be all that, and yet not be suitable for the higher position in which, I understand, the Minister of Customs intends to place him. That was my argument, and, therefore, the Minister of Finance need not have shown the unbecoming temper he did show in regard to my remarks, because I said nothing with respect to Mr. Garrison but what was directly in the public interest. I do not expect the Government to appoint anyone on my recommendation, or any one on my side of politics; but I only ask them to appoint someone who will have sufficient knowledge of the out-door business in a large city like Halifax, and be able to discharge those duties efficiently. We have had men heretofore in that position who have discharged the duties of it very satisfactorily, who were for a long time in the higher branches of the Department, which Mr. Garrison has as yet never reached. It was only in that view of the case I ventured to ask the Minister of Customs to consider well the question and make a selection from those men who are in the Department, or, if he thinks better to take someone from outside, who will be looked up to more by those older servants in the Department than, in my humble judgment, Mr. Garrison will be. That is the only reason why I brought this matter before the Committee; and, therefore, the hon. gentleman, in attempting to put words into my mouth which I never uttered, and seeking to cast a stigma on Mr. Garrison which I never intended, is utterly out of place and out of order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. McMULLEN. My reason for asking with regard to smuggling is this: I am satisfied, from what I have heard, that a good deal of smuggling is going on between Buffalo and Detroit and other points in Canada, and large quantities of goods are being received into this country. That is because goods are cheaper in many lines in the United States than they are here. This accounts for the fact that so many goods are sent in here, and there are more goods being received from the United States which have been smuggled over than for many years past, simply because the goods there are cheaper, notwithstanding the statements of hon. gentlemen opposite that goods would be low in Canada under the operation of the National Policy. Prior to 1878, the duty of preventing smuggled goods being taken across the boundary fell largely on the Americans, simply because the goods were higher there than here. But the tide has turned, times have changed, and smuggled goods are being sold here to a larger extent than ever before. I have heard this from those who live in the border towns and who know whereof they speak, to some extent.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Will the hon. Minister give the Committee the information which he promised the other day, with regard to the special detective force; how many there are, their salaries, and how much their salaries have been supplemented by their share of fines during the past year?

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman has asked for a little more information than the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) desired the other night. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) at the same time asked if I would give the names, and I said no. I desire, however, to say before reading the information asked for by the hon. member for South Oxford, a word with regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones). I was strongly reminded of an observation made by the Minister of Finance some years ago. When he was endeavoring to save some half million on the running and managing of the Intercolonial Railway. He said he found it much more difficult to secure the approbation of the House for the reduction of the expenditure by $500,000 than for an increase of $1,000,000. I think we have had a very fair illustration of that principle to day. I have endeavored since I have been in the Department, with a view to its efficiency, to keep down the number of officials as much as possible. With regard to Halifax, I have had repeated applications from the junior member for that city, with reference to every official in Halifax. In fact, ever since he has been here he has been one of the ghosts who have been haunting me, in order to raise the salaries of the officials of that port. Howsoever these hon. gentlemen may disagree about the West India trade, or the subsidies to steamships, they agree upon one thing—to get as much money as possible out of the Treasury, in order to pay the officials of the city of Halifax.

Mr. JONES. I did not ask any for Halifax.

Mr. BOWELL. Well, the hon. gentleman has a peculiar way of putting a question and then declaring that he never said so and so. He drew a distinction between the expense in different ports of the Dominion, and pointed out that Halifax did not get her share.

Mr. JONES. No, not that Halifax did not get enough, but that the others got too much.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman did not say so.

Mr. JONES. That was the whole tone of my remarks.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman should have said so, but he did not. I will say, however, for Halifax that whilst there are a great many difficulties which present themselves in enforcing the laws in the different ports of the Dominion,

I think as a whole, considering the importance of that port, we have had less difficulty with Halifax than with any other port in the Dominion; and as I have said before—and I have no hesitation in repeating it now—the merchants of that city are men as honorable as any with whom I have come in contact in the administration of the law.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Which means that they are all rascals, according to the hon. gentleman's reasoning.

Mr. BOWELL. If that is the hon. gentleman's opinion of them, they can accept it if they please.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am adopting the hon. gentleman's reasoning towards the hon. member for Halifax. I am drawing the inference.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is too philosophical and metaphysical for me. I admit that I was not brought up in that particular school, and I yield the palm to him, as I yield the palm to the senior member for Halifax, in desiring that these positions should be occupied by men of more aristocratic minds and more aristocratic bearing. My own experience is that a man can be a gentleman, no matter how humble he may have been; the man who acts the part of a gentleman, in his intercourse with those with whom he comes in contact, is better than those who simply put on airs, and wear such stiff collars that they can never look around them. With regard to Mr. Garrison, the hon. gentleman made one insinuation which I think he might just as well not have made. He intimates that there was a certain reason, or that there might be a certain reason—of course he put it in that parliamentary style, so that you could not put your finger upon him; like a certain class who put a finger on the flea but it wasn't there—he has studied that particular kind of argument, I think—he intimated that there was some reason why Mr. Garrison was selected—some reason which was not on the surface, and that other people didn't see. I understood the hon. gentleman—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the reason?

Mr. BOWELL. I have no doubt the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), will tell you, but if he says he does not know what he means himself I can't tell him. For my own part, I repudiate any such insinuation. After my eight years of administration of a Department, no man can lay it to my charge that I have ever allowed either creed or nationality to interfere with the discharge of my duties, and having said that much I desire to say no more. If the hon. gentleman wants evidence on that statement, he can get it from the highest class of officials, from persons in the highest positions, both in church and state. Mr. Garrison is a young gentleman with whom I have come in contact many times. He is represented to me as one of the best clerks at the port of Halifax. I have the inspector's report in which they pick him out as the best man on the whole staff for the position of surveyor. When recommendations were made to me, it was that when promotions took place, Mr. Morris, a gentleman whom I do not know very well, though I have met him occasionally, should be made chief clerk, Mr. O'Brien cashier, and that Mr. Garrison should take the place of surveyor, he being the best fitted for that position. When my inspectors make this report, and when the collector, who is a Liberal—who belongs to the Liberal party, and was appointed by my hon. friends opposite—represent to me that this man is one of the best clerks he has, and the best fitted for the position, I think if I carried out their suggestions I would not be doing very wrong. It is true that Mr. Garrison failed in one of the subjects before the board, and, consequently, could not receive the appointment. He is now acting surveyor, and if he continues to pursue the course he is now pursuing, continues to prove that he is fit for the position and able to control the officers under him, continues to act the part of a gentleman to merchants and others whom he meets with in business, nothing will give me greater pleasure than to carry out the recommendations made to me by the inspectors and by the collector, and confirm him in his position. I should dislike very much to lay down the principle, particularly in a country like Canada where some of our best men have risen from the lowest positions in every line of business, commencing at the bottom and going up to the top, I should dislike to lay down the principle that because a man was a printer's devil once he is not able to conduct a newspaper, or to reach any position to which he may aspire; that because a young man goes into the Department and commences at the foot of the ladder he should not rise to the top; or that because a man had once assisted a gauger he is not fit for a collector. In my own experience in my Department there are young men who commenced at $300 a year, and I propose, in the Supplementary Estimates which are now before the House, to give them the highest salary I can give them under the Civil Service Act, simply because they have worked from the bottom to the top and are now the best officers we have; and it is a matter of no consequence to this House or the country whether or not those young men carried coal scuttles when they began their career. With regard to this question of seizures which has been commented on a great deal in the newspapers, I desire to say to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), that those officials have no power to compromise or settle any seizure. They can, under the law, make a seizure; they can say to the man, the law provides for such and such arrangements, and if you like to comply with them and make deposit I will make a report to the Department for approval, and if it is approved that is an end of it, but if not you will have to submit to whatever the decision may be. If, on the contrary, the deposit is not enough you will have to pay more, but if they should reduce the amount, the proper proportion will be paid back to you.

An hon. MEMBER. What proportion do they get?

Mr. BOWELL. That depends on circumstances. By a regulation on the Statute-book, and acted upon while hon. gentlemen were in power, there is a distribution of one-third to the seizing officer and one-third to the informer. Then there is a special provision that, if extraordinary exertions are made or special ability displayed, beyond the ordinary, it is in the discretion of the Minister to give the seizing officer the whole two-thirds. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) asked me the number of seizures and the amounts paid to the officers, and in reply I may state that the number of seizures for the year ending 30th June, 1884, was 692; 1885, 741; 1886, 775. The amount deposited to the credit of the Receiver General on account of seizures in 1884, was $110,758.73; in 1885, $127,046.76; and in 1886, $222,029.71. These sums represent the gross deposits, and not the net sums realised from the seizures, because in some cases upon investigation the whole or part of the amount is remitted, in other cases the whole amount, less the expenses, is remitted. The number of seizures reported by the special agents was, in 1884, 66; in 1885, 64; and in 1886, 147.

Mr. JONES. Does the hon. gentleman remember whether the fine imposed on Dennis Smith, of Halifax county, was returned?

Mr. BOWELL. I think not.

Mr. JONES. The hon. gentleman in the course of his remarks the other night said that the present system of testing sugar was giving very general satisfaction. So far as the accuracy of the test is concerned, merchants have no cause of complaint, but the hon. gentleman was not quite right in saying that the system of sending samples to Ottawa to be tested was satisfactory to them. The time lost in sending our samples to Ottawa is sometimes very considerable. This was notably the case last year, during the interruption to traffic on the Intercolonial Railway, when we were a fortnight or three weeks without any communication, and during all that time our samples of sugar were on the road, and the sugars from which the samples were taken were on the wharves at Halifax, because under the Customs regulations they are not allowed to be removed until the result of the test comes from Ottawa, so that if there is any dispute as to the test the sugar can be re-sampled. The hon. gentleman is aware that in the United States, sugars are tested at all the large ports of entry. I think the merchants of Halifax were dissatisfied on this ground. They were afraid, in view of irregularities at other ports, notably at Montreal, that possibly some such irregularities might occur again, and, therefore, they were disposed to put up with the inconvenience of sending their sugar to Ottawa to be tested, rather than incur the danger of having those irregularities occur under the new system.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is strictly correct in reference to the detention of the sugar on the wharves, for a week or two, not through the action of the Department, however, but through the action of the collector. Instructions were given that as soon as the samples were sent and the deposits made, the merchants should be allowed to take possession of their sugar, and I am informed that they now receive their sugar subject to the test made in Ottawa. I admit that there was a detention, but the telegraph was used to enable the merchants to take their sugar out. If my recollection is right, when this matter was brought under my notice, I said there was no necessity for keeping the sugar, because three samples are taken at the same time—one to be kept by the importer, one by the collector at Halifax, one to be sent to Ottawa; and if there is any dispute as to the accuracy of the test it is re-tested from the other samples.

Mr. JONES. The testing is satisfactory.

Mr. BOWELL. I am very glad to hear that. Even the merchants of Halifax, I am quite sure, would not like to revert to the old system.

Mr. JONES. No.

Mr. BOWELL. Although in the United States there are three or four ports where the sugars are tested, that is, Boston, New York, and I think Philadelphia and Baltimore, when you compare the 60,000,000 people, and the quantity of sugar they use, with our 5,000,000 people and the quantity of sugar we use, you will recognise the importance of having perfect uniformity.

Mr. JONES. I admit that.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The question of the hon. member for South Huron was not my question. My question was more definite, and was given to the Minister early in the Session. When the votes for the Department of Customs came up, I said that when we came to consider the question of the revenues, I would suggest that the Minister should state who are the special detectives he employs, the amount of salary they receive, though supplemented by their share of the seizures made during the year. I think it is a question I am entitled to have answered.

Mr. BOWELL. Of course you are, but I told you at the time that that portion of the question regarding the amount each one received I could not answer, and I stated why. If a detective receives the information that smuggling is taking place, we never ask him who his informant is, because if the detective acts on the information and makes a seizure, the net proceeds of which would be $9,000, and we gave him $6,000 out of that, he has to pay all the expenses attending the seizure, including a third to the informer. Although the $6,000 would stand as a debit against him on the books, he would probably have given one-third of it to the informer, so the hon. gentleman will see that I cannot give him the information that he asks for. Mr. Wolff is at the head of that staff for the whole Dominion; Mr. O'Keefe occupies a similar position for the Maritime Provinces, and reports to Mr. Wolff; then there are others. If they want a man or a number of men to assist them, they take them out of the port nearest to where the seizure takes place, and employ them for the time being, and the expense of employing these men is deducted from the amount of the seizure.

Mr. JONES.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is not an answer for the hon. Minister to say that if he gives some of the money to the informer, he cannot tell what the amount was. I do not care what he gives to the informer, I want to know the gross amount he receives. He can give me that information, and I am entitled to have it. We pay this Mr. Wolff a salary of $1,600 as well as expenses, which I see last year amounted to $944.51, and among those expenses $20 is charged as "expenses of informer," which the hon. gentleman says is paid out of the detective's share. I want to know if that officer has made $10,000 in a year, over and above what he is paid in salary and expenses. If he is, I think the country ought to share with him. I think it is rather too much to give him, and that is the reason I want to know the gross amount that he is paid.

Mr. BOWELL. I cannot give the gross amount. There may possibly have been $20 paid out of the contingent fund for information given to the Department, that Mr. Wolff or the detective knew nothing about. I go further than that. If Mr. Wolff or any other man, whether he be in the service or not, made $20,000 out of seizures, the revenue profited to an almost equal extent, because if he made a seizure two-thirds went to him and one-third to the revenue, in addition to the duty. The question whether the system should be continued is a separate question altogether, and a fair subject for discussion if the House thinks that it ought to be discussed; but if the House decided to repeal the law we would have to give the Customs Department what the law gives the Customs authorities in the United States, a large sum to compensate men over and above their salaries for doing this kind of work. If the hon. gentleman will look at the evidence on this question given in the United States, he will find that, in reply to a number of questions put by Mr. Manning, nearly every answer shows that the repeal of the moiety system has been disadvantageous and ruinous to the revenue; and, notwithstanding the abolition of the system, $150,000 is placed in an Act of Congress to compensate officers who make seizures.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). A knowledge of the facts I have asked for would enable us to determine what is the best system. The hon. gentleman's whole argument proceeds on the assumption that an officer, in the receipt of $1,600 a year and travelling expenses, will not discharge his duties efficiently, unless he is given the chance of making an additional amount by a more zealous discharge of his duty in the way of making seizures. We are entitled to know how much these officers have made in the course of the year. I do not want to go into an argument on the whole question. There are two sides to it, but at the same time, it seems to me that if we knew all the facts, we would find cases of hardship in which these officers, induced by the desire to participate in the seizures, have given a strained interpretation to the law.

Mr. GORDON. I would ask the Minister of Customs if the return of Chinese immigration has attracted his particular attention. The number of Chinese admitted into the various parts of the Dominion during the last 15 months was 797. Of that number, 127 paid the duty, realising to the Department $6,350; 227 were admitted on return certificates; 443 were admitted either as merchants, men of science, students or travellers, showing that of the entire tax of $39,850, which should have been paid to the Government, the Treasury received but $6,350. I simply wish to call the attention to this fact: that, while I do not for a moment insinuate that any fraud has been perpetrated by any officer of the Department, anyone living on the coast of British Columbia, would be impressed with the fact, on seeing this return, that some fraud has occurred. This may have occurred, as it did in the United States, where it was found utterly impossible to enforce the restriction without fraud being perpetrated by the Chinese immigrants who resorted to all sorts of schemes to deceive the Government officers. No doubt, similar devices were resorted to to deceive the officers of the Dominion. I ask the Minister to give his attention to this matter, as this is a large sum for the revenue of Canada to lose. If a merchant violates any of the Customs laws of Canada, he is supposed to make it good, and if any officer or the Chinese themselves have deceived any officer of the Customs of Canada, some investigation should be made, or the officer's attention drawn to the fact.

Mr. BOWELL. I can assure the hon. gentleman the point to which he has referred will receive the attention of the Department, and its officers will be instructed to guard against fraud. The hon. gentleman knows the difficulty of dealing with the Chinese, and the matter has not been, and will not be, overlooked.

Mr. McNEILL. There is a good deal of force in the observation of the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson). I cannot but think that the fact that the officers of the Department, or some of its officers, share the fines, has the effect of inducing them to view these matters with, perhaps, not as much leniency as they otherwise would. I had to bring under the notice of the Minister of Customs, this Session, a case of very great hardship. The correspondence, which I placed before the Department, shows very distinctly indeed, that the person who was fined had been acting in the strictest good faith. This fact was demonstrated in the correspondence, but it was impossible to have the fine remitted. I was not aware, at the time, that any of the officers of the Department shared in these fines, but I learned it afterwards, and it occurred to me that this custom might explain the fact that it was impossible to get the money refunded. It may be the system is the best one to adopt, but I agree with the hon. member for Brant, that it is a matter which should be most carefully looked into. It does seem a very strange thing if an officer of the Department, with a salary of $1,600 a year, and whose duty it was to perform this work, at any rate, can obtain these fines, amounting to $8,000 or $9,000, or $10,000 or $20,000, for aught I know. I think this matter ought to be investigated.

Mr. HOLTON. Special mention has been made of the chief detective, Mr. Wolff, and the amount of plunder which he has handled in these seizures. I would say that, in the city of Montreal, it is generally believed that, as his share of the loot, Mr. Wolff has received, in the last three years, from $35,000 to $40,000; and it is also generally believed, among the mercantile classes, that a large proportion of this was simply blackmail.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not think the hon. gentleman should accuse any gentleman of blackmail, and I am surprised, knowing his general courteous demeanor, to hear him speaking of plunder and loot and blackmail. Let the courts decide that. With reference to the case referred to by my hon. friend from Bruce (Mr. McNeill), the letters prove that these goods were being sent into this country at a much lower valuation than that in the United States, and the intimation of my hon. friend implies that the head of the Department would have given his decision in a different manner, but that he was acting with a view to put money into the pockets of his officers.

Mr. McNEILL. I would be the last person to imply anything of the kind with regard to the Minister of Customs, as I think he knows, but I consider it my duty to bring this matter before the House, as the correspondence distinctly shows that the man who was fined had been acting bond fide throughout the whole transaction.

Mr. HOLTON. Last Session I discussed this matter at length, and I stated that the system pursued was a system of blackmailing, and I adhere to that charge.

Collection of Revenues, Post Office.....$2,945,870

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am certainly not going to review the whole administration of the post office, but I must call the attention of the House again to the fact that, when, to this amount of $2,945,000, you add the expenses of the head office, the sum total amounts to $3,160,000, and the deficit is becoming worse and worse every year. It must amount to something like a million of dollars by this time. I want to know from the Postmaster General, if he can give me information, what is the amount of the charge now paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway on its main line from Callander station, say, to British Columbia. I do not want the information from him as to the lines in Ontario or Quebec, but as to the amount paid on the main line from the point where it commenced. Can he give me that?

Mr. McLELAN. We are paying for railways in Manitoba and the North-West—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not want the information which is communicated in the Estimates which we have, of course. If the hon. gentleman cannot give me the information which I ask for now, perhaps he will let me have it the next time we meet. I want to know what is the sum paid on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Callander station, or some point close to that, to Port Moody.

Mr. McLELAN. I will get the information.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With the branches in Manitoba, of course.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It would really be from Montreal to Vancouver.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would be reasonable enough, although I would prefer it along the original main line, if I could get it. The other increases, I see, are spread pretty equally all over, but I must call the attention of the Postmaster General to the very considerable inequality which appears to exist in regard to some of the city post offices. I will give him an illustration. I notice, for instance, that in London there are twenty-eight letter carriers required, and in Kingston only seven. London is larger than Kingston, I know, but it is not so much larger as to require twenty-eight letter carriers in proportion to seven for Kingston, and I notice that in the city of Quebec, which is considerably larger than London, about two and one-half times as large, twenty-one letter carriers are sufficient to perform the service for the twenty-eight that are required in the city of London. That seems prima facie to be a very gross inequality.

Mr. McLELAN. In some of the cities they have increased the number of deliveries during the day, and the deliveries in London are more frequent than they are in Kingston.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here is Quebec with a population of 60,000, and London, I think, has a population of about 25,000.

Mr. CARLING. There is a population of 35,000 in London and the suburbs which are supplied with free delivery by the day—London south, London east and London west—and I am sure that the receipts in the London post office are very much larger than they are in Quebec.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may possibly be, but even then that would show an enormous disproportion. In Kingston, if we were to include the suburbs in the same way, the population would range to about 20,000.

Mr. CARLING. I think the receipts in Kingston do not amount to $20,000, while in London they are about $50,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Even so, that would not account for having four times the number of carriers in London that we have in Kingston.

Mr. CARLING. London is a great railway centre. We have some six different roads running in there, and we have mails at all hours of the day.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the real reason which the hon. gentleman forgot to mention, is that London had the benefit of a Postmaster General all to itself, and that may account for the difference.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think the Minister had a request from the publishers to allow periodicals to be mailed by them at a cent a pound, did he not?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Would he please say whether it is his intention to agree to their request?

Mr. McLELAN. It is not proposed to make any change this Session.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I see that there was an estimate taken for a post office in Brantford in 1886-87, on the basis of a city post office. It is not being taken this year. I would ask the reason why Brantford has not a city post office?

Mr. McLELAN. In 1886 the salaries in Brantford amounted to $7,060. The office is now run at a cost of $4,600. As it was not necessary to incur an additional expense, I have dropped the item for the present year.

Mr. JONES. I desire to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to a memorial lately presented to his Department, very numerous signed by the merchants of Halifax and Montreal, respecting a mail subsidy to the White Cross Line of steamers, calling at Halifax for New York, bound to St. John's, Newfoundland. There is an arrangement made with the Allan Line for the conveyance of the mails, and it often happens that these steamers come in in the intermediate week, and the agents there, desiring to accommodate the public, have carted the mails at their own expense from the post office to the steamers, and have never been able to obtain any remuneration from the Department. It is said that the Government of Newfoundland do not give them any assistance either, and, consequently, as happened quite recently, when an accident occurred to the regular Allan boat, the mails lie over in Halifax for an indefinite time, because the agents have positively, and very properly, refused to do public work unless they had a fair remuneration. I think it would be in the public interest, not only of Halifax but of the whole country, that some arrangement should be made with that company, and such a moderate allowance made them as would compensate them for carrying the mails between these points, without interfering, of course, with the Allan boat which sometimes arrives at the same time.

Mr. McLELAN.

Mr. McLELAN. My attention was called to this yesterday, by a telegram addressed to both representatives from Halifax. I may say that when the junior member for Halifax spoke to me some time ago, I misunderstood him. I thought it was in reference to the line that is now subsidised, and I was not aware until last night what was really intended by the remarks made to me previously. I have not had an opportunity of looking into the matter yet.

Mr. JONES. There is another matter I wish to mention. It has been a frequent subject of complaint in respect to our postal arrangements, and I remember it was a subject of discussion in old times, that, under the system of compulsory prepayment of letters, when a letter happens to be short stamped, or when, as sometime happens, the stamps drop off, and some cases where they are not stamped at all, through negligence, these letters are sent to the dead letter office at Ottawa, instead of being forwarded, as is done in England, and the receiver made to pay double postage. I think that it is very desirable that some such system should be reverted to here. It has frequently happened that stamps have dropped off these letters, and they have been sent to Ottawa and detained for a long time, at great loss to the parties interested. I think it would be in the public interest if this regulation of the Department were changed. I am aware it is of long standing, I think it was brought in under the Administration of Mr. Mackenzie. I always took exception to it, and the result has proved, I think, that the exception was well taken.

Expense in connection with Dominion Lands.....$178,505

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice a very considerable increase in this, which was large enough already.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). In British Columbia, we have dispensed with the service of Mr. Trutch who, for some time, acted as agent, and Mr. Aikman, who was formerly classed as a clerk, is now agent at Westminster, and a member of the Land Board. For some years past the amount estimated has never filled the amount expended and the deputy thought it was better this year to put into the estimates what we intended to spend.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In addition to that very large charge of $30,000 for extra clerks at the head office, which ought to go somewhere else than here, I see you want $70,000 more for advertising and copying.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The explanations I gave a moment ago will apply here. I have taken the sum of $30,000, but it is because the advertising now is much heavier. We have now adopted the principle of giving timber limits by competition, of giving grazing lands by competition, in fact we give nothing of that kind but by competition, except the ordinary settlers' homesteads, and all this involves a considerable amount of advertising.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Although the colonisation companies are being wound up, the most of them, the office of Inspector of Colonisation Companies remains.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). It is necessary that the arrangements for winding up the colonisation companies should be completed, and I think that after they are completed, we shall be able to do the work through our homestead inspectors.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved:

That when the House adjourns it stand adjourned until Monday, at one o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 6:10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 20th June, 1887.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

DIVORCE—RELIEF OF WM. ARTHUR LAVELL.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 155) for the relief of William Arthur Lavell (from the Senate).—(Mr. Ferguson, Leeds and Grenville.)

Bill reported.

Mr. TAYLOR moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think this is a Bill the House ought not to allow to pass, as it is. It marks a step downward in our legislation on the subject of divorce. No one who has read the evidence can fail to come to the conclusion that the whole subject, as there dealt with, is one which should have induced the House to hesitate before adopting the Bill. I do not say that, in some respects, it is not on the same footing as other Bills with the same object, but, in many other respects, it is not. I do not propose to take up the time of the House, but, having read the evidence, I must enter my protest against the passage of the Bill, because, in my opinion, it is a step in a direction we should by every means avoid, that of making the marriage tie less secure and less inviolable than it has been made in the previous legislation of this country.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed on a division.

DIVORCE—RELIEF OF SUSAN ASH.

Mr. TAYLOR moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 135) for the relief of Susan Ash (from the Senate).

Mr. McCARTHY. With regard to this Bill, I desire to draw the attention of the House to what appears to me to be a very extraordinary statement in the preamble. The House will have observed, perhaps, from the discussion that took place on the second reading, that the circumstances of this case are very peculiar. The petitioner, Susan Ash, who applies for relief here, was married, it appears, as a very young girl in 1863. She lived with her husband for seven weeks, and, on returning to his home at Kingston, she found his property had been sold, and he had given up house-keeping. She resided with him at his boarding place a little while, when, without rhyme or reason, she abandoned her home, and, from that time out, does not seem to have ever met her husband except on one occasion, when he came to see her and asked her to return. He went to the States, when, does not distinctly appear, beyond this fact that is stated in the decree of divorce, which he afterwards obtained in the States, that he had resided in the city of Boston, or some place in the State of Massachusetts, for five years before he obtained that decree. That is stated in the decree of divorce itself, and we are bound, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, to give effect to that statement, and not to assume it is untrue that he obtained a divorce in 1874. He came back to this country, and married a young woman at Sterling, having first satisfied her parents that the divorce was valid and that he was competent to marry. He returned to his home in Massachusetts, and has continued to live there ever since with his second wife, by whom he has several children. Now, what I object to in this legislation is that, as it appears to me, without sufficient evidence at all, contrary in point of fact, to what I understand to be the rule of law, it characterises the second marriage as an adulterous one, and, in point of fact, bastardizes the children. I am not prepared to say positively—and I do not think, upon the evidence, that this House is—that the divorce was a good divorce, and, therefore, I would not deny to Susan Ash the Bill which she seeks, that is, to be divorced in 1887 from this man. Her petition to have the Parliament of Canada, upon the material before it, declare that the divorce was null, that the second marriage was null, and that the intercourse since that is an adulterous intercourse, and that we should bastardize those children, as far as we can, does appear to me to be simply a monstrous proposition. It is said, I believe, why did not Mr. Manton appear, in answer to the notice that was given, and show the facts connected with the divorce and with his second marriage? I do not know why he did not appear. We are not dealing with his case, but simply with the circumstances and the facts before us, and every court ought to feel that it should not go further in an ex parte case than the evidence warrants. I agree in the law which has been laid down on each side of the House: first, that we ought to respect the right of the woman to come here and ask for such relief as she shows herself to be entitled to, and also that the change of her husband's domicile does not prevent her from coming to get relief from the marriage at the only place at which she could get it. I also agree that we are bound, in view of what is due to the comity of nations, to recognise the divorce pronounced in a foreign country, provided it is on the petition of a person domiciled in that country, and that no collusion is shown. There is no pretence of collusion here, and the only doubt is whether Manton, who was the petitioner there, was domiciled in the State of Massachusetts in such a way as to entitle him to apply for a divorce. The evidence on that point is very meagre; but are we to say that, because we have no evidence, the court had no jurisdiction? The court has recited in its decree that it appeared in evidence before it that Manton had had five years of residence in Massachusetts, and having been married, he returns, and has been living there ever since. Surely we cannot disregard that as to the intention of this person to change his domicile. Then, if this divorce was valid according to the English law as expounded in the House of Lords, we are bound to give effect to it, even though it were granted upon a ground which we are not bound to respect. Instead of doing that, we go out of our way to stigmatise the marriage as null, and the subsequent intercourse as adulterous, and to cast this stigma upon the children of this man by his second wife. If there were nothing to be considered but the relatives of this woman, who are still Canadians, the father of this woman, who thought this divorce was valid before he allowed his daughter to marry, we should be very careful in the course we take. I have given notice that in the Committee stage I will move to alter the preamble by asserting facts as they appear in the evidence, and by striking out that portion of the preamble to which I have referred as exceedingly objectionable.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On the preamble,

Mr. McCARTHY moved to strike out all after the words "sixty-eight" in the twelfth line of the preamble down to the word "that" in the nineteenth line, and to insert the following in lieu thereof:—

And it has been made to appear that on or about the said fourth day of September, the said Susan Ash became separated from and has ever since lived separate and apart from him, the said William Manton, and that the said William Manton, on or about the seventh day of April, in the year 1874, on his petition, obtained from the Supreme Judicial Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, holden at Boston, in the county of Suffolk, in said State, a decree of divorce from his said marriage with the said Susan Ash, on the ground of her desertion from him, whereas the said marriage between them was, or purported to be, dissolved or annulled; and further, that the said William Manton, on the third day of September, 1874, was intermarried with one Mary Ford Hatch, and he, the said William Manton and the said Mary Ford Hatch have ever since lived together as man and wife; and whereas doubts have arisen as to the validity of the said decree of divorce, and as to the right of the said Susan Ash to marry again; and whereas the said Susan Ash has, by her petition, set forth.

Mr. TUPPER (Pictou). It seems to me that the amendment, which is substantially the same as that which was proposed in the Standing Committee and rejected there by a large majority, brings up a very important question, because, under the words in that preamble, so amended, the House would be giving relief to a party who would not be entitled to it, because it proposes to grant a divorce, not on the ground of the adultery of her husband, but on the ground of the desertion by herself. To my mind, the evidence which was taken before the Senate shows that that desertion was never committed by her. The evidence denies distinctly that she deserted her husband, and I do not think the Parliament of Canada—certainly, no court in England—would grant a divorce for desertion, even if it existed. Now, the House is asked to take virtually a new departure, that is, to grant a divorce to Susan Ash in this case upon a ground which would not enable her to obtain a divorce in the Divorce Court in England. I think that is virtually the proposition before the House, as contained in the hon. gentleman's proposition. It is to disregard the charge upon which she has approached Parliament, that that second marriage of her husband was improper and illegal according to the laws of this country. I think that her position, under the argument which was addressed to the House by the Minister of Justice, and the evidence submitted, has been established; and I think, if that position is not sound, as my hon. friend suggests, there is no way by which she can obtain the redress which she seeks at the hands of this Parliament. In fact the only ground upon which she comes here is taken away. Without desiring to weary the House—and I understand that, at this time of the Session, and after the very elaborate argument which took place the other evening and in the Private Bills Committee, it would be highly improper to go over the question which has been raised by the hon. gentleman, and over the Bill itself—I may say that the hon. gentleman seeks to urge that this House is made aware to some extent, whether in a legal sense or not, that the court in Massachusetts proceeded in this matter, in granting the judgment of divorce, on proper grounds of jurisdiction, that it had jurisdiction over the case, and that it was a valid judgment. This is not a technical point, but I think it is a very proper point that we should look into the recital in this document, where facts are alleged which I believe the parties producing that judgment and relying upon it were bound to show outside of that judgment. They wished to put this in evidence and to show that that was a valid judgment. It may be said that before the document is produced, the burden of proof is upon the husband to show that the court pronouncing that judgment had jurisdiction. But if that position does not meet with the approval of the House, I would call attention to the fact that in the debate the other evening, according to the English cases produced here, the recital in that judgment in reference to jurisdiction is entirely insufficient. Residence for a longer period than five years in Massachusetts, according to the English cases, in the case of a man who had left England or Canada for ten years, would not enable a court in Massachusetts to pronounce judgment divorcing parties to an English marriage in a court of justice in England. I do not think a single authority can be found to controvert that proposition. Now, I will mention a case which I brought before the Private Bills Committee, bearing upon this point—the case of Spicer and Spicer. It was tried only a few weeks ago in the Divorce Court in England, before Mr. Justice Butt. In that case there was an English marriage. The husband went to California and resided there three years. He sent for his wife and she came to him, and while she was in California he obtained a divorce in the court of that State. In England the court refused to recognise that judgment on the ground that though there was evidence of continued residence of both parties within the jurisdiction of the court in California, the strong evidence required to rebut the presumption that a national domicile is not taken away, had not been adduced.

Mr. McCARTHY.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Where is that reported?

Mr. TUPPER. In the Times newspaper report, and I don't think it is yet published in the Law Reports. In reference to that strong presumption, in regard to which, in this case, we have not the slightest evidence to show that the national domicile had ever been changed, I would cite from Taylor on Evidence, who says:

“The presumption, too, against the acquisition of a new domicile will be stronger in the case of a person who is alleged to have gained such a domicile in a foreign land, than it would be were the domicile in a country where the party would not be a foreigner. For instance, the court would more readily decide that a Scotchman had acquired an English, or an Anglo-Indian domicile than a French one: for a man's acquisition of a domicile in a foreign country is obviously a most serious matter, since it not only renders the validity of his testamentary acts, and the disposition of his personal property, liable to be governed by foreign laws, but it is calculated to involve him in a conflict of national duties, and to subject him to the embarrassments of a divided allegiance.”

Now, in regard to that, there is not a particle of evidence in this case. I do not think that my hon. friend's position is a sound one, when he says that because this man did not choose to give in evidence what he might have given, we are to hesitate in passing an opinion upon the evidence before us. If this leniency is to be exercised in the case of this defendant, we will lay down the proposition that when a party who has appeared before a committee of this House, and it does not appear that his side of the case will be taken up, then every effort will be made to supply the evidence that he does not choose to supply. The judgment says that Manton has for five consecutive years next preceding the date of filing this Bill of Divorce in Massachusetts, resided in the city of Boston. That is the only evidence to show that he had acquired a domicile in the State of Massachusetts, and the English authorities say that is not sufficient, and if that is not sufficient, that judgment is not valid, and should not be recognised by this House.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would look at this matter in the light of the facts. This man Manton may or may not have acted in such a manner as to justify a suit for divorce. I do not care anything about that. They are separated. The man has gone to the States and has got married again, and whatever may be the grounds which may have justified Susan Ash in asking for a divorce before the man got married, surely there is no doubt that there is ground now, when he has got married in another country—whether legally or illegally, I care not. He has married again, and that is sufficient ground for this woman to come to this House and ask for a divorce. I understand the only difficulty is about the allegation in the preamble of the Bill. I quite concur with the remarks of the hon. gentleman whom I have in my eye, and they are following out the objections taken by the member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) and the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon). I quite agree with them that while we are doing justice to Susan Ash, we ought not to do injustice to the issue of a subsequent marriage on the part of her former husband in the United States. I would suggest that we make the allegation in the preamble read to the effect that the former husband has since got married in the United States, which is the fact. It appears to me that if this were done there could be no objection to passing this Bill, and allowing this woman to get another husband if she wants to.

Mr. TUPPER. On what ground will that grant a relief to Susan Ash?

Mr. MITCHELL. On the ground that the husband has got married in another country. That is sufficient ground.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) has intimated that if we state the grounds truly we put ourselves out of court in regard to this matter. The hon. gentleman cannot successfully deny that Mr. Manton has obtained a divorce in the courts of Massachusetts.

Mr. TUPPER. Which is not a divorce here.

Mr. MILLS. I dissent from that opinion. According to the recent decisions in England, if he is domiciled in Massachusetts, there can be no question that the divorce granted by the courts of Massachusetts is legal.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). What case supports that proposition?

